Art is about emotion; if art needs to be explained it is no longer art

- Pierre-Auguste Renoir

On November 27th, 1904, Pierre-Auguste Renoir wrote to young Jeanne Valéry: “Would you care to come [to my studio] starting Tuesday morning, if there’s not too much fog?” A gentle request from one of the best-loved Impressionists of all time, Renoir’s calling upon Jeanne that late November day would yield this remarkable composition of his adopted daughter.

This portrait captures the visage of Jeanne Valéry, née Gobillard, the wife of French poet, essayist and philosopher, Paul Valéry. An orphan at the tender age of 16, Jeanne was the niece of famed Impressionist Berthe Morisot. The artist took Jeanne and her sister Paule into her family when their mother died, but Morisot’s sudden death in 1895 left the young girls without a guardian once more. Renoir, who had been an extremely close friend of Morisot, became the guardian of Morisot’s daughter Julie and the Gobillard girls, inviting the three to join his family.

Julie, Jeanne and Paule became very attached to each other and to Renoir, who often entertained them with art lessons. In 1900, Jeanne married Valéry in a double ceremony with Julie and Ernst Rouart, the son of Renoir’s good friend and fellow artist, Henri Rouart. This portrait was the first documented portrait Renoir completed of Jeanne, making it quite an exceptional composition.

Pierre-Auguste Renoir was born in Limoges, France and began his career as an apprentice to a painter of porcelain wares. He then moved to Paris at the age of 21, enrolling at the prestigious École des Beaux Arts. It was here, while studying under Charles Gleyre, that Renoir met Claude Monet and several other classmates who would later become the celebrated French Impressionists.

Working closely with Monet, Renoir began experimenting with the portrayal of light and its effect on his canvases. The youngest member of the Impressionist movement, an astute Renoir embraced working en plein air, or out in the open, recognizing how a subject constantly changed through the dynamism of light. Capturing a particular moment in time, or an “impression,” rather than a subjective scene, was central to the group’s philosophy which became the most important artistic phenomenon of the 19th century. Relying heavily upon composition, lines and descriptive details, Renoir distinguished himself among his contemporaries. His intuitive use of color and expansive brushstroke, along with an acute attention to his subject, has placed him among the finest painters in history.

Madame Paul Valéry is accompanied by its letter of authenticity by the Wildenstein Institute, dated February 27, 2006, and the painting will be included in their forthcoming catalogue raisonné on Renoir. • come and pronounce it a masterpiece. Once in the Salon among the other canvases, it's not at all the same thing any more, and it doesn't bowl anyone over. So it's also a lesson in modesty. But there really are too many exhibitions and it seems to me quite sufficient to bother the public once a year.⁵²

Many favorable reviews of the Salon d'Automne appeared, including one by Gustave Babin that compared Renoir with Fragonard, Watteau, and Lancret.⁵³

Around this time, Gallimard brought Maurice Gangnat, a retired industrialist, to Renoir's studio. He soon became a devoted companion and frequent house guest at Cagnes. Like other close friends, he purchased directly from the artist.⁵⁴ His first acquisitions, in 1904, were twelve paintings, for which he paid 26,000 francs. For the next fifteen years, Gangnat was the most important collector of his new works.⁵⁵

In spite of Renoir's dire predictions, during his paralysis in August and September, that his career was over, by November he was painting again. On November 27, he asked Jeanne Gobillard Valéry to come for a portrait sitting in his Paris studio: "Would you care to come starting Tuesday morning if there's not too much fog? You will stay for lunch. That will be easier."⁵⁶ And on December 24: "You'll have to sacrifice yourself and come and get your slice of bread and butter (read portrait)."⁵⁷

It is poignant that once Renoir was able to paint again after months of paralysis, he created the most sensual nudes of his entire career—voluptuous women who lift their hair to reveal their bodies or lie alluringly in bed. Nude in the Sunlight (1875–76) has been transformed by 1905 from the elusive woman of Renoir's youth, whose presence is like a whiff of perfume, into Bather: The Source, the tangible, rich-fleshed nude of his old age.

Mlle JEANNIE GOBILLARD (Mme PAUL VALÉRY)

J. Baudot, Renoir: Ses Amis, Ses Modèles, 1949, p. 83-82

J'éprouve encore même ravisement, même détente quand je franchis le seuil de cette demeure enchanteresse où Berthe Morisot telle une fée, vous introduit dans son royaume.

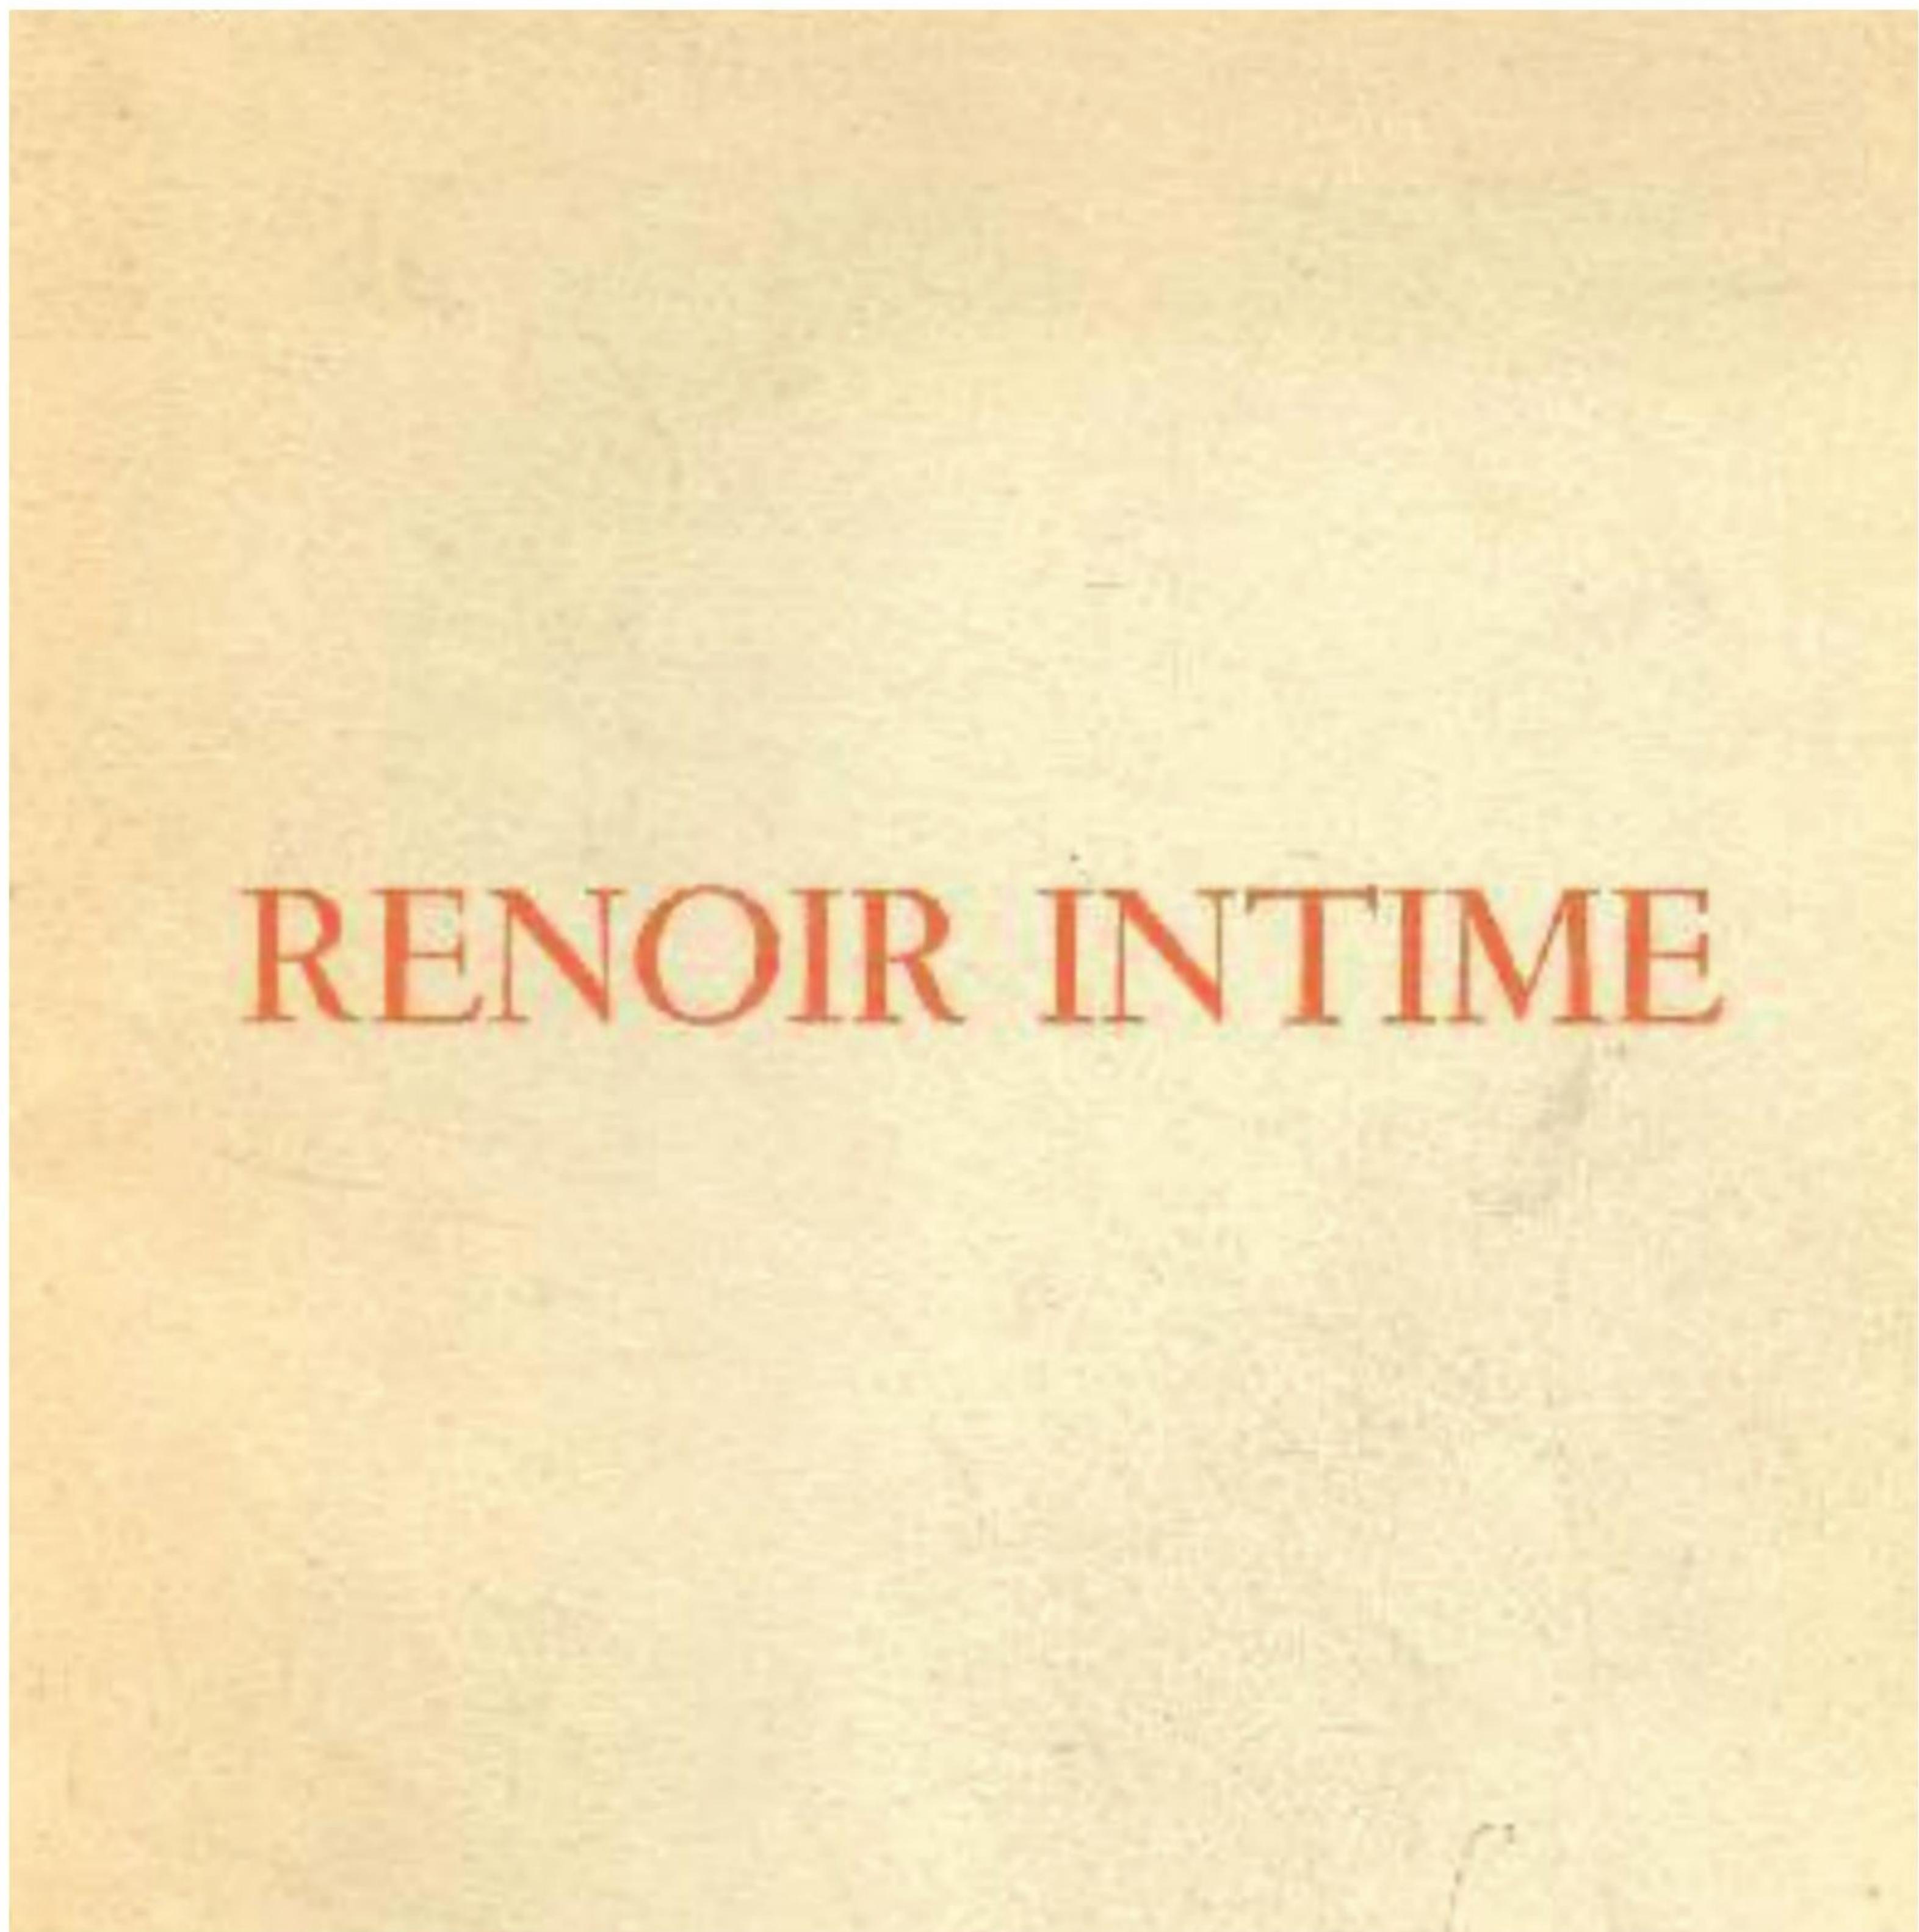

Dans cette habitation, après le mariage de Jeannie, j'assis-tai à une discussion philosophique entre le Père Janvier et Paul Valéry. Je ne pouvais suivre tous leurs arguments quand ils s'élevaient à des considérations trop abstraites pour mon débile cerveau ; toutefois je les écoutais avec avidité, j'admirais la vivacité de leurs répliques : il me semblait assister à une joute entre Athéniens.

A l'automne, Renoir recevait le jeune trio Manet-Gobillard dans sa maison d'Essoyes. C'est là qu'en 1898, une triste nouvelle leur parvint et répandit la consternation : Mallarmé avait été terrassé par un mal imprévu. Une lettre de Jeannie Gobillard (Mme Paul Valéry) témoigne du déchirement de tous.

« C'est gentil de nous plaindre, et de nous le dire, nous sommes bien peinées, en effet, vous comprenez tout ce que nous perdons. Julie surtout peut-être. Il y a des souvenirs de sa mère que personne ne saura jamais dire comme M. Mallarmé. Lui disparu, il semble que tante Berthe soit encore plus morte. Mais on n'a pas le droit de se plaindre quand on pense à ce qu'est maintenant la vie de la pauvre Geneviève, anéantie et comme révoltée sous ce coup inattendu. En deux jours cela a été fait. Il est resté dans les bras de sa femme et de sa fille dans un spasme nerveux qui le serrait à la gorge, le médecin présent, éperdu, ne comprenant rien. Il n'avait jamais vu chose pareille. Tous ses papiers sont sur la table : notes prises pour ce travail d'Hérodiade qui le préoccupait tant et qui restera inachevé. Sa chatte noire refuse de quitter sa chambre. Par toutes les portes, on croit le voir apparaître. Les murs résonnent de sa voix, et les deux pauvres femmes, la main dans la main, évoquent leurs souvenirs, sourient presque à certains, et de temps en temps, pleurent. C'est navrant. Nous sommes restées avec elles toute la journée du lundi, puis nous avons dû les laisser, nous demandant réellement ce qu'elles vont devenir, Geneviève surtout, pour qui cet homme était tout : le père, l'ami, on pourrait presque dire le mari, puisqu'elle a refusé bien des prétendants, ne trouvant pas en eux ce qu'elle avait en son père.
