

This graph shows the PPS difference between two Thunderbolts running at the same location. Since the units are viewing the same constellation of GPS satellites at the same time, the error from Selective Availability is minimized. As the units are moved further apart Selective Availability will begin to increase the error between the two units. As a rule of thumb 100 miles (120 km) equals a 1% change in the view of the sky.