LOGISTICS DATA BOOK

This LOGISTICS DATA BOOK (formerly "BLUE BOOK") is designed to assist Hewlett-Packard's government customers with their logistics needs associated with the support of HP Products.

There are five main sections to this publication, in the form of cross-indexes as listed on the front cover. Information is drawn from HP records and is not official DOD information. It reflects logistics actions through the end of 1976.

The types of HP products covered in this publication include electronic components, medical instruments and systems, computer equipment, calculators, instruments and systems for chemical analysis, and electronic test and measuring instrumentation.

Now, a word about HP products supplied with optional capabilities or modified for specific tasks, and how they are identified in this publication:

Options are usually identified in our product literature with two or three-digit numbers following the product model number (e.g., Model 1234A Opt. 003). Some original two-digit options have now been changed to three digits, but in all cases the non-zero digits remain the same to define the specific option (i.e., a detector now identified as Model 423A Opt. 001 is the same item as was originally identified as Model 423A Opt. 01).

Modifications are usually identified in our product literature with a single alpha and two digits preceding the model number (e.g., E12-1234A). It is important to note, however, that a particular modification identifier on a given product does not define the same modification on a different model product (i.e., the "E12" above may appear with several different models, but signify different types of modifications to each.).

To facilitate machine processing, Option and Modification numbers are both shown following the model number in this publication. The model numbers themselves are arranged in typical computer sequence format (i.e., left justified alpha-numeric sequence so that all the "1's" (Model 1, 11, 111, 1111, 11111, etc.) are listed before the "2's" (Model 2, 22, 2222, etc.).

The Hewlett-Packard office nearest you (see complete HP field office listing on the last pages of this publication) will be pleased to work with you on procurement matters. Also note that most currently-produced HP products are on GSA federal supply schedule multi-award contracts, and that GSA catalogs are available from your HP field office.

Index of HP Model Numbers to Military Nomenclature and to National Stock Numbers

This index provides a cross-reference between a Hewlett-Packard product, its military (MIL) nomenclature and its National Stock Number (NSN). Each HP model number may have more than one nomenclature or NSN. Refer to the next two indexes (MIL/HP and NSN/HP) for detailed explanation of MIL Nomenclature and NSN's as they relate to HP models. The column showing "I" for identical or "S" for similar is also described in the MIL/HP index.

Index of Military Nomenclature to HP Model Numbers

This section provides comparison information relating to nomenclature products. Many Hewlett-Packard products have been assigned a military nomenclature to define a specific model number. These identical products are identified as "I" in the code column. There are many HP products which perform an equivalent or similar measurement function as the nomenclature product. These similar products are identified with an "S" code. In cases of an "S" code, the HP product may not be identical to the nomenclature item. It may have added or reduced capability. The "S" product is listed only to provide some guidance relating to the nomenclature product's capabilities.

This section should be used only to determine what HP product might be a suitable substitute for a nomenclature item and not the other way around (since the nomenclature item usually will not be a direct replacement for an "S" coded HP product). In the case of "I" listed items they are the same item subject to minor product improvement changes, over time, which are clearly documented on errata sheets attached to the applicable Operating and Service Manual.

Nomenclature designators appear in two forms, a "system designator" and a "component designator."

System designators consist of an AN, slant bar, three letters, followed by a dash and a number. The number may or may not be followed by a letter to designate different versions of the same basic item. The letters following the slant bar indicate the type of equipment. (e.g., USM means general utility (U), special type or combination of types (S), and maintenance (M) equipment.).

Component designators consist of one or two letters and a dash, a number, a slant bar, followed by the system indicator letters and numbers of which the component is a part. (e.g., OS-189(P)/USM-281) is the oscilloscope portion of the AN/USM 281 oscilloscope system. The (P) indicates the unit accepts plug-ins which change or modify its use.

More information about this Mil Nomenclature System is contained in MIL-STD-196B, the Joint Electronic Type Designator System.

Index of National Stock Numbers to HP Model Numbers

This section lists National Stock Numbers (NSN's) and the HP products to which they have been assigned. The listing is in National Item Identification Number (NIIN) sequence (see below) since the NIIN on a particular item will remain unchanged even if the Federal Stock Class (FSC) is changed for management purposes.

The first two digits of the NIIN grouping are called the "National Codification Bureau" (NCB) code. It designates the central cataloging office of the NATO or other country which assigned the NIIN. Since conversion is underway from FSN to NSN only the "00" NCB code, listed below, is shown on this listing.

NCB Code:	Country

Index of Provisioning: HP Model Numbers to Contracts

This section contains a list of products for which provisioning information, in some form, has been supplied. Provisioning relates to actions which provide a government agency lists of spare parts for HP products. Your Hewlett-Packard representative should first be consulted on the availability of this provisioning information to help support your HP products. Further information regarding specific government provisioning data can be obtained through the contracting agency, which can be determined from the applicable contract number as described below.

A uniform procurement product identification system is used to identify contract numbers, as described in Section XX (Part 2) and Appendix N of the Armed Services Procurement Regulations (ASPR). See the example below in which the first six digits identify the procurement facility within a particular service branch issuing the contract. The next two digits show the federal fiscal year in which the contract was awarded. The remaining characters identify the type of contract and the specific related documents.

Index of Discontinued HP Model Numbers with Replacement Recommendations

This index lists only those products shown elsewhere in this book as discontinued, with an asterisk beside their HP model numbers. HP realizes that many of its older products are still called out on government procurement lists, even though that item may have been discontinued from normal production. Some of those discontinued products can be obtained on a special basis but, in general, improved performance and reliability will be realized through adoption of these recommended replacements on government listings. Furthermore, many of the replacements are available on the various GSA contracts between Hewlett-Packard and the government.

Additional information can be obtained by contacting your local HP sales office, listed at the back of this document.
