

To our authors, we extend appreciation for the time and effort spent in preparing manuscripts which have transmitted valuable contributions to the advancement of technology. We are particularly grateful for their helpfulness during the period of experimentation with Synoptics, and their tolerance with some of the inadequacies of the publications system, which we are endeavoring to correct.

Perhaps our greatest debt is to the reviewers, anonymous and unpaid, who have given generously of their time and professional talents in aiding the editors to present material in the Journal which is useful, relevant, and accurate. They remain the primary arbiters of quality, without which an archive publication could not stand the test of time. We are pleased to have this opportunity to give them recognition.
