

A Journal of the Gesellschaft Deutscher Chemiker

Angewandte Chemie

50
YEARS

International Edition

www.angewandte.org

2011–50/17

Semiconductor anisotropic nanocomposites ...

... are promising materials for the use in organic–inorganic nanohybrid solar cells. In their Communication on page 3958 ff. Z. Lin and co-workers report such nanocomposites synthesized by a catalyst-free click reaction. In these architectures, CdSe nanorods and poly(3-hexylthiophene) are in intimate contact.

WILEY-VCH

Inside Cover

Lei Zhao, Xinchang Pang, Ramkrishna Adhikary, Jacob W. Petrich, and Zhiqun Lin*

Semiconductor anisotropic nanocomposites are promising materials for the use in organic–inorganic nanohybrid solar cells. In their Communication on page 3958 ff. Z. Lin and co-workers report such nanocomposites synthesized by a catalyst-free click reaction. In these architectures, CdSe nanorods and poly(3-hexylthiophene) are in intimate contact.

