E.S.O. EUROPEAN SCHOOL OF ONCOLOGY

1984—Seven full-immersion courses of five and a half days each.

Open to doctors already experienced in oncology, the courses are disease-orientated and well supported with printed and video teaching material. Lectures given by highly qualified and carefully selected specialists from the foremost cancer centres and medical institutions throughout Europe.

Courses are held in a tastefully restored XII century castle within easy reach of Milan, Como and the Lombardy lakes. The number of participants is restricted to 40 to give maximum opportunity for mutual exchange and discussion of problems between lecturers and students. In 1983 participants came from 17 different European countries and there was general consensus and enthusiasm over the quality and benefit deriving from this new educational formula.

The official language of the school is English.

Founded in 1981 by the European Society of Surgical Oncology as a non-profit-making and non-Government-aided institution, the European School of Oncology is guided by a Scientific Committee and an Advisory Board who decide the overall policy and the scientific syllabus.

Members of the Scientific Committee are: I. Burn, London; S. Eckhardt, Budapest; J. Einhorn, Stockholm; J. Garas, Athens; Y. Kenis, Brussels; F. Krauer, Geneva; M. Peckham, London; G.
