Thank You

Effective January 1, 2001, I will warmly welcome Professor Richard Eisenberg as the new Editor of Inorganic Chemistry. Consequently, I wish to avail myself of this last opportunity to thank all of the readers, authors, reviewers, past and present Advisory Board members and Associate Editors for their productive and consistently high scientific and ethical standards. Their hard work has been characterized by a general attitude of collegiality and mutual purpose. All of the scientific information available to Inorganic Chemistry would have been impossible to disseminate without the consistently strong and generous support of the American Chemical Society Publications Division and the many caring individuals who have served the journal throughout the years in a variety of capacities.

Chemical publishing is changing rapidly in the 21st Century and Inorganic Chemistry will be at the forefront of this process. The new Editor is ideally suited to meet the challenges of the future with ingenuity and determination. I wish him the very best and I look forward to an even brighter future for Inorganic Chemistry.
