Cornell's Nutrition School Raised to Graduate Status

Cornell University's school of nutrition has officially become a graduate school. Richard H. Barnes, who joined the Cornell school in July as director, will become dean of the school. Established in 1941, it will have a program including course work and research in animal and human nutrition and in food technology, supply, distribution, and economics. It will grant master's degrees in food science and in nutrition science. Leonard A. Maynard, who retired in 1955, had been director of the school since its founding.

Olin Mathieson Grants $7500 to U. of Missouri for Soil Study

A project to determine through physical chemistry the difference in energy by which chemical reactions send nutrients from the soil to the plant root and back again is being supported by Olin Mathieson at the University of Missouri.

The company has granted a total of $7500 to the university for the three-year project. C. Merrill Woodruff, associate professor of soils, will direct it. Dr. Woodruff said an understanding of the process would make it possible to direct and maintain the most favorable flow of nutrients from the soil to the plant.
