

GEORGE G. LORENTZ

Foreword

The present volume of this Journal is dedicated to Professor George G. Lorentz on the occasion of his sixty-fifth birthday.

The work of Professor Lorentz, so significant to contemporary mathematics, has been a particular source of inspiration to the contributors and readers of the Journal of Approximation Theory. They, together with the rest of the mathematical community, thank him for his work, and await his future contributions. His many friends wish him good health and happiness, and look forward to his continued enjoyable and rewarding association.
