EDITORIAL

JOURNAL OF CARBOHYDRATE CHEMISTRY - CHANGES IN FORMAT BEGINNING WITH VOLUME 20, 2001

Beginning with this issue, the Journal of Carbohydrate Chemistry is being published both electronically and in print. These changes are accompanied by a typeset format that is common to all Marcel Dekker, Inc.'s journals. Additionally, the electronic version will be published on the web before the print. Journal contents will still be Original Articles, Communications, and Review Articles, and published manuscripts will still contain the same sections as in the past. The big differences occur in manuscript formats which have been somewhat revised to accommodate the change to a typeset standard.

The above are welcome changes for the Journal of Carbohydrate Chemistry and should provide contributors and readers with improved accessibility to the journal and all the other advantages of modern web based publications. At present the direct web address for the Journal of Carbohydrate Chemistry web page that connects you to the latest information on the Journal is:

As the new publishing process evolves, look to this address to answer questions or provide updated information. If that fails, don't hesitate to contact any of the Editors and we'll do our best to help you. It's been great watching the journal become established and grow over the past nineteen years, but this change to typeset and electronic versions signals a monumental improvement in our ability to serve our readers and positively impact the field of carbohydrate chemistry. As Editors we are confident that the best is yet to come.
