OBITUARY

Dr. William L. Rodman, president of the American Medical Association, died at his home in Philadelphia, March 8.

Dr. Rodman was born in Frankfort, Ky., in 1858, the son of General John Rodman, who for many years was Attorney-General of that state. He took his M.A. and then began the study of medicine with an uncle and cousin, later coming to Philadelphia and receiving his diploma from Jefferson Medical College.

Then he served a year's internship at Jefferson, leaving there to serve two years in the U. S. Army Medical Corps at Fort Sill, in the then Indian Territory.

After that he married, his bride being the daughter of Dr. J. Q. A. Stewart, a noted alienist and an ex-president of the Kentucky Medical Society.

Two years of practice in Abilene, Tex., followed, and then he went to the University of Louisville to be a demonstrator in surgery. In 1898 he took the professorship in surgery at the Kentucky School of Medicine; resigning that, he came to Philadelphia, where he accepted the Chair of Surgery in the Medico-Chirurgical College.

The numerous honors which the research work and his position in the profession brought to Doctor Rodman were worn modestly. He was much sought after as a speaker, and his address in 1904, before the British Medical Association, on cancer of the breast, attracted world-wide attention in the medical profession. He was the author of several books and monographs.

Dr. Rodman is survived by his widow and
