Publisher's Note

The Journal of Structural Geology has had a team of five Editors for the past few years. Before that, the journal used to be run by an Editor-in-Chief, supported by a team of six Editors.

The Electronic Editorial System for the Journal of Structural Geology has been operational now for more than one year. Experience during this year has taught us that the system has great added value. Nevertheless, it has become obvious that the journal would benefit from returning to a system with a formal Editor-in-Chief, supported by a team of editors.

It is my pleasure to announce that Professor Cees

Passchier has agreed to become the Editor-in-Chief of the journal. Professor Passchier is of course very well known to the field and the journal, as he has been an Editor for JSG for many years now. In his new role, Professor Passchier will chair and co-ordinate the team of editors, which shall remain unchanged. I would like to extend a word of gratitude here for Professor Passchier's willingness to take on this challenging job. I am confident that this change in editorial structure will benefit the journal and its authors.
