

Golf Trophy Won by Tulane Professor

THE great efficiency of the New Orleans members of the Golf Committee is demonstrated by the fact that perfect weather greeted the golfers and some of the members availed themselves of the opportunity of playing the fine Metairie golf course every day that they were in New Orleans.

The golf tournament was very popular this year, there being a total of 26 entries in competition, besides a gallery of members. The Nuchar Challenge Trophy Cup was won in hard competition by Prof. C. S. Williamson, head of the department of chemical engineering at Tulane University, New Orleans, with an 83 gross. He and L. B. Forbes of Little Rock, winner of last year, were halved going out and the match was not finally decided until the 18th hole. Prof. C. S. Williamson was also presented with the permanent gold medal by the Industrial Chemical Sales Co., Inc., of New York. Mr. Forbes received the handsome elk golf bag presented by the Colgate-Palmolive-Peet Company. Third low gross was won by J. N. Pless of Memphis with an 89. He received five beautifully matched irons, presented by the Filtrol Company of California. W. H. Irwin of Chicago won the Jung Hotel Trophy Cup, with a fine 70 net, and J. Pelofsky of Chattanooga with a 71, won the second low net, which was the Bennett-Clark prize of 3 matched woods. R. C. Hatter of Louisville won the third low net which was a Gladstone bag, presented by Mr. Arbeiter of the American Can Company, with a 74 net. G. W. Agee of Memphis won the Peerless Clay and Mineral Company golf bag with a 46 gross, which was the low gross for the second 9 holes and Dr. Freyer of Houston won the Pomeroy & Fischer golf bag for the low gross for the first 9 holes. C. B. Cluff of Cincinnati won the 4th low net, consisting of Silver King golf balls, presented by the Laboratory Construction Company of Kansas City. L. C. Haskell of Savannah, Ga., won the fifth low net, consisting of a pair of golf shoes presented by A. S. Richardson of Procter & Gamble Company of Cincinnati, president of the A. O. C. S. E. R. Barrow won the 6th prize consisting of a dozen Puritan golf balls presented by the Cudahy Packing Company. N. C. Hamner of Dallas won the 7th prize consisting of a driver, presented by L. C. Haskell of Southern Cotton Oil Company. H. M. Shilstone of New Orleans won the 8th low net, consisting of a golf bag presented by the Emil Greiner Company of New York. A. S. Richardson won the 9th low net prize consisting of a slide rule, presented by John J. Vollertsen of Armour & Company of Chicago.

All of the prizes were presented at the banquet on Friday night. Everyone present agreed that they were the finest lot of prizes ever presented at any tournament and the members feel deeply indebted to the donors of these fine prizes.

Special prizes were presented by W. H. Irwin of Chicago to the following:

Alfred Kramer of New York, one shovel, and it was recommended that Alfred add this to his set of clubs in order to assist him in keeping out of the sand traps next year.

Dr. Freas of New York, one box of dominoes. Dr. Freas turned in a score of 154 gross and it is believed that he should be a wonderful domino player.

E. R. Barrow of Memphis was presented with a boat to assist him in recovering balls from the water.

J. J. Vollertsen of Chicago was presented with special rubber golf balls to increase his distance.

E. A. Sigworth of New York was presented with a handsome teething ring and J. J. Ganucheau of New Orleans was presented with a baby carriage.
