

Bailey Award presented to Chang at North Central Section dinner

Stephen S. Chang, professor, Food Science Department, Rutgers University, receives the Alton E. Bailey Award for 1974 from Louis Goodman, North Central Section president. Chang's scientific contributions in the field of fats and oils are well known. He is advisor to the Food Industry Research and Development Institute, Republic of China, and is a consultant to many domestic and international companies. He is the recipient of the special award of the Potato Chip Institute International and the Putman Food Award. A past president of AOCS, he was instrumental in beginning the Honored Student Award Program.

Louis Goodman, president of the North Central Section, addresses participants at the Section's Fourteenth Bailey Award Presentation Dinner which was held in Rosemont, Ill., in March. Frank Norris, immediate past national president, and L.H. Wiedermann, Bailey Award Committee chairman, look on. The North Central Section established this Award to recognize outstanding research and exceptional service in the field of lipids and associated products. The medal commemorates Alton E. Bailey's contributions to the field of fats and oils as a researcher, as an author, and as a leader in the Society.
