

From Washington

sources cited in the Sept. 7, 1987, issue of Chemical Marketing Reporter.

Lovastatin is classified as an HMG Co-A reductase inhibitor. Reductase inhibitors work by inhibiting the activity of enzymes necessary to cholesterol production. E.R. Squibb & Sons and American Cyanamid's Lederle Division are working on similar kinds of drugs, Chemical Marketing Reporter said.

Meanwhile, FDA has announced plans to remove the antioxidant and stabilizer hydrogenated 4,4'-isopropylidene-diphenolphosphite ester resins from the list of approved indirect food additives because studies indicate the substance has adverse neurological effects in animal studies. The agency also is proposing to list the substance under Substances Prohibited from Indirect Addition to Human Food Through Food Contact Services.

In 1968, FDA approved the use of the ester resins in vinyl chloride polymers used in the manufacture of bottles meant for contact with edible oils and salad dressings. Comments were accepted until Oct. 9. Details: Federal Register, Sept. 9, 1987, pp. 33929-33930.
