MENDELEEV COMMUNICATIONS

Mendeleev Communications is a prestigious primary journal, produced as a collaborative venture between the Russian Academy of Sciences and The Royal Society of Chemistry. Mendeleev Communications is NOT a translated journal. It publishes original papers directly in English, giving the international chemical community rapid access to important new research from Russia and the other states of the former Soviet Union in the shortest possible time.

The journal contains preliminary accounts of novel and significant results of wide general appeal or exceptional specialist interest and covers all branches of chemistry. In format and range of subject matter it closely resembles its 'sister' publication, ChemComm.

Key features and benefits include:

- Fosters international communications and co-operation
- Provides preliminary accounts of important new work of general appeal, or exceptional special interest from all fields of chemistry - you won't find this information anywhere else!
- Rapid publication - within 12 weeks of receipt in the UK
- Keeps you informed of important developments in chemical research from a major world region - the former Soviet Union
- Has none of the delays associated with translated journals
- Refereed and edited to the same high standard as all other RSC journals. A panel of experts ensures that only the very best communications are published
- Low subscription rate for individuals
- NEW! easily scanned illustrated contents pages
