THE EDITOR'S CORNER

Changing of the Guard

This month marks Larry White's last issue as Editor of JCO. For more than 13 years, he has served the profession with distinction in that position. He has written countless editorials, interviews, and book reviews, some of which appear in this issue. He has made substantial contributions to the literature, especially in the areas of diagnosis, TMD therapy, bonding, non-compliance treatment, patient motivation, and staff management. He has encouraged innovators with new ideas and breakthrough technologies to introduce them in these pages. He has traveled around the world as an ambassador for JCO and American orthodontics.

In his writing, editing, and lecturing, Dr. White has placed particular emphasis on correcting misconceptions of form and function that continue to hold sway in dentistry. His last Editor's Corner, "Thinking Outside the Box" (JCO, September 2001), was a prime example, although his wide-ranging editorial on "The Past, Present, and Future Perfect Profession" (JCO, August 2001) may be considered his valedictory address.

We expect to complete our search for a new Editor by the spring of 2002. In the meantime, our capable Senior Editor and staff, supported by the outstanding orthodontists whose names appear on the left, will continue to bring you the latest developments in clinical orthodontics each month. DSV

Applications are being accepted for the position of Editor-in-chief of the Journal of Clinical Orthodontics. Duties include solicitation, evaluation, and production of clinical articles, editorials, interviews, book reviews, and other material; editing and proofreading in cooperation with JCO staff; supervision of editorial board; representing JCO at meetings and conferences. Applicant must be a practicing, Board-eligible orthodontist. Computer literacy required. Dental journalism experience helpful, but not mandatory. Editor not required to relocate. Compensation commensurate with duties. Send C.V. and supporting material to David Vogels, Managing Editor, JCO, 1828 Pearl St., Boulder, CO 80302. All applications will be held in confidence.
