

PREFACE

Pharmacology Biochemistry and Behavior was established to disseminate new information resulting from original research on problems of pharmacology, biochemistry, toxicology and behavior where the major emphasis and primary interest is in behavior. The growth of human resources, increase in physical facilities and proliferation of data in these scientific areas during the past fifteen years substantiate the need for expanded and rapid publication in a field where the relevance to problems of society is obvious. The Editors and Publisher hope to focus the attention of research workers in all parts of the world on some of these important problems and to facilitate the application of science to life in general by the publication of this new journal.
