The University of Miami School of Medicine Announces a New Award for Diagnostic Research

In the interests of furthering research in the area of early disease diagnosis, $40,000 is now being offered annually by the Adolph Rosenberg Foundation through the University of Miami School of Medicine.

The award will be presented to the medical researcher who submits the best paper on a new diagnostic test procedure for the early detection of a disease. The paper must have been previously published, or accepted to be published, to be eligible for the award.

Application forms are available from
