A New Sunday Feature.

On Sunday, May 20, will begin from London, Daventry, etc., the great series of Bach's Church Cantatas, which are, to quote the accompanying article by Mr. Filson Young, 'the supreme contribution of Art to the Protestant Religion.' Since Bach performed them himself, the complete series of cantatas has never been given in this or any other country. This new venture is, therefore, one of international importance.

VERY few people, apart from those intimately connected with it, can have any idea of the wide and far-flung extent of the work of the Programme Department of the B.B.C. Even to one who sees it at work, and works with it, the courage, the talent, and the knowledge that are the mainspring of these activities are continually surprising and refreshing. The good word 'broadcast' comes from one of the oldest fields of man's activity—the seed field; and, applied to one of his newest and strangest activities, it is almost uncannily expressive.

The parable of the sower holds good. Where the seed falls is a matter of intention and of hope; the great thing is that the seed is being scattered, wafted by the wind of the ether into we know not what furrows. All we know is that more and more of it falls on good ground, and that there is a steadily increasing harvest.

Into the seed field of the listeners' homes more and more, and better and better, selection, quality, and execution are being cast. The B.B.C. has its failures; it would be a calamity if it had not. The essence of broadcasting is generosity, courage, and vision; and to do nothing unless you can be certain beforehand of success would be to limit effort to the known and the ascertained. The great thing is to be experimental, and not to be afraid of being daring on a liberal scale.

Music is one of the richest and most fertile grounds in broadcasting; and so, in adding another hour to Sunday broadcasting (from 5.30 to 6.30) the Corporation has decided to inaugurate this addition with something that is beyond controversy, that is the very best of its kind, and that is otherwise unobtainable. At 5.45 every Sunday (hitherto a silent hour) there will be broadcast from 5XX and 2LO, and from every main station in the country, the complete series of Bach's Church Cantatas—a body of music monumental in its grandeur and its variety, unexampled in the history of art and, except for perhaps a dozen examples, hitherto almost unknown to the ordinary listener.

THESE Church Cantatas have a place that is quite unique in music. One might describe them as miniature oratorios, but that would not be quite true. They may have been the germ of the oratorio, but they are far greater than any of the oratorios, except, perhaps, the greatest of Handel's. They represent Bach's regular work as Cantor of the Thomasschule in Leipzig, when it was one of his duties to provide, as part of the service on Sundays and Feast-days, a cantata on the subject of the day. They were performed with the regular resources at his command—a choir of twelve, an orchestra of from twelve to twenty, and an organ or clavichord.

I believe that as a series they have never been publicly performed in their entirety in this country, or, indeed, anywhere, since they began to be heard under Bach's own direction two centuries ago. In thus performing them in series, the B.B.C. is doing something which no other musical organization has done or could do. The preparation in the way of translation (only a small proportion have been hitherto translated from the German), copying of scores and parts, to say nothing of the training of choirs and orchestras in an idiom that is quite unlike anything else, has been for months occupying, and for years may continue to occupy, the musical staffs at London, Birmingham, and Glasgow. For the work is far too heavy for one chorus and orchestra to undertake weekly, in addition to other work; therefore it has been decided to distribute the performance of the Cantatas among three stations. Mr. Stanford Robinson, with the London choir and orchestra, will be responsible for a Cantata once a fortnight, while those on alternate Sundays will be undertaken by the Birmingham Station, under the direction of Mr. Lewis, and the Glasgow Station under Mr. Carruthers respectively.

Popular as Bach is, I venture to predict that when this great series has been in being for a little while, those who listen to the Cantatas will find them more wonderful and artistically stimulating than anything of Bach's with which they have been hitherto familiar. The hour when they will be performed is not one at which any broadcasting has hitherto been done, so they will not encroach on programme time that has become associated with other and popular features. Those who are not interested in them will be as they were before; those who are will find that a delightful addition has been made to the Sunday broadcasting, which has already come to be counted on by many for some of the best music of the week.

It is not only from the musical point of view that these Cantatas are interesting, but also from the religious and poetic. Because Bach wrote them, and because they were part of the religious life of Germany in the eighteenth century, they combine the greatest elements of musical art with that poetic renaissance which marked the Reformation in Germany. For that movement, whatever it may have created or destroyed, had one supreme quality: it released contemporary poetry and art to adorn the new Lutheran religion which, while retaining in ritual and ceremony its connection with tradition, admitted a living, regenerating stream of artistic inspiration and adornment which irrigated the liturgy with the refreshment of a new and poetic life. And Bach's Church Cantatas are its supreme achievement and remain the supreme contribution of art to the Protestant Religion.

ALTHOUGH many of these Cantatas are within the resources of a good church choir, their adequate performance as a whole by any such body is impossible, owing to the fact that in the whole two hundred of them there is an almost infinite variety in the orchestral and vocal combinations. Some of the instruments on which the peculiar colourization depends are either obsolete or have to be studied and played by experts; other instruments are used in such a way that only the very best performers can do justice to them. The parts for the solos and choruses make the most exacting demands on the voice, and the poetic treatment of words and music is so close and exact as to require the most minute care in translation.

The first performance of this great and monumental series from 2LO and 5XX will be on Sunday, May 20, at 5.45; and I am thus drawing attention to them so that the thousands of listeners who will appreciate them may arrange and prepare their listening time so as not to miss them; and also to put on record the quiet inauguration of an artistic service of a kind that is almost unprecedented, and yet which is characteristic of the steady expansion of the B.B.C.'s achievement in the pursuit of its broad and high ideals.

What the Listener Thinks About It.

A First Selection of Extracts from Letters in reply to Mr. France.

The Editor has received many hundreds of interesting letters from listeners regarding Victor France's article, 'From Morn to Midnight,' which appeared in The Radio Times for April 27. A further selection of extracts from these will appear in next week's issue.

As a Socialist I am taking the privilege of answering for tens of thousands of listeners of the working class. Victor France quite forgets that in the towns and cities there are hundreds of thousands of people who are called upon to work on the 'shift' system. If his ideas were put into operation, only one week in three would they have the pleasure of listening to 'the very best that you can give us.' What is really wanted is an education in the art of listening.—W. H. H., Bristol.

As a great admirer of the B.B.C. may I say that I agree entirely with Victor France? My motto would be 'little and good.'—S. D., Doncaster.

Do we think the ideas of the B.B.C. will dry up? Never! Wireless is but on the verge of what it will be.—F. V., Bolton.

I WONDER if Mr. France has ever realized the number of lonely and invalid people to whom the afternoon broadcasts are the great relief from and antidote to boredom?—M. M. B., S.W.5.

Most heartily do we endorse the opinions set forth by Victor France. We would rather there was less broadcasting. So many appear to be drugged with listening, though the term 'listening' for many is a wrong one, for they do not really listen.—A. W., Birchington.

PLEASE do not shorten your programmes. They are the only thing I have to live for.—'LONELY LISTENER,' Wembley.

Assuming that it is possible that ideas will eventually run dry, how can this time be put off as long as possible? By a repetition of programmes? Let us hear the really outstanding programmes twice—three times—fifty times. I recall that most wonderful of broadcast plays, which concerned the flooding of a mine and a man's sacrifice—a play that every person, young or old, should listen to. You have, I believe, sent this over three times. But how many of my fellow-listeners have heard it?—A. C. H., Leyton.

Does Victor France think we are all novelists? I work on the iron road during the hours of 7-11, week in, week out—and thousands of others do likewise. What chance should we have of getting our ten bob's-worth?—W. B. W., Upton Manor.

As it is possible to have too much of a good thing, Mr. France's suggestion is distinctly sound. But programmes from 7 to 11 p.m. would only give one hour to those in hospitals, etc., and only two hours to old and delicate people who have to go to bed early. His idea could easily be tried as an experiment in another way—by allowing a quarter or half an hour to elapse between various programmes during the day.—M. R., Hampstead.

MR. FRANCE makes the same mistake as Herr Feuchtwanger in wishing to force on us what he thinks we ought to have, instead of leaving us free, as the B.B.C. does, to choose for ourselves. Do they forget that we are not all children?—W. C., Teddington.

From Midnight to Midnight—if Necessary!

Val Gielgud's reply to Victor France—The Abnormal Listener—B.B.C. not a Nursemaid—Mr. France's 'Turnip-headed Bogey'—The Public's Contribution towards Broadcasting's Future.

IN his recent article in The Radio Times, Mr. Victor France raised an issue which is of vital interest to every listener. No doubt he will find some support for his contention that there is too much broadcasting, for his demand that the hours for broadcasting should be limited, and the Programmes themselves reduced in quantity that they may be increased in quality. But his argument must not be allowed to go uncontested.

Where I think that Mr. France is wrong, is that he, like so many people, misunderstands the duty of the Broadcasting Service of this country. I use the word 'Service' advisedly. Broadcasting may be an Industry, as for example in the United States of America. It should be an Art everywhere. But above all—and this, as I see it, is the ideal set itself by the B.B.C.—Broadcasting is a Service.

Some may agree with Mr. France that those hours between seven and eleven at night—the ordinary hours for entertainment in this country—would be the most suitable time during which to supply the daily programmes. But he forgets that the B.B.C. in the first place is not simply an entertainment source, like a theatre; and in the second place that it caters not only for the ordinary person whose day's work finishes on the stroke of six, but for every other possible sort of individual in the British Isles who has paid his ten shillings for his receiving licence.

There are all the people whose work only begins with the fall of night. There are all the children who go to bed about six in the evening. There are all the invalids, the occupants of nursing-homes, the crews of lightships, railwaymen, all the hundreds of inhabitants of out-of-the-way villages, and the other hundreds engaged in slightly abnormal occupations, who want to listen when Mr. France may not. It is more likely in the future that the B.B.C. will never sleep, than that it should rest idle for two-thirds of the day.

A group of listeners on board the Breaksea Lightship. There is an abnormal occupation which would make regular hours of listening impossible.

Further, Mr. France neglects the obvious cure for the ills he dreads. No one but a moron or a half-wit listens to everything for every minute that the B.B.C. is working. There may be a crank here and there who will write proudly announcing that out of last year's 65,000 hours of broadcasting, he or she heard 64,999. But such cases are symptomatic of nothing but a mental kink; the desire to be peculiar at any price—and what a price! Again and again it has been urged—I have urged it myself in these columns—that the first duty of the intelligent listener is selection. Choose your programme, your items from programmes, your hours of listening—and listen! That attitude is growing with every day that proves more conclusively that Radio can be and is an Art—a subject for serious appreciation.

THE ARGUMENT:

VICTOR FRANCE, author of 'The Carved Emerald,' and other mystery stories and a keen listener, contended in a recent article that there was too much Broadcasting and that the B.B.C. ran a risk of both wearying the listener and exhausting its own material.

VAL GIELGUD, author of 'Black Gallantry,' who has written many articles on Broadcasting and its future, replies that the B.B.C. must broadcast twenty-four hours a day if necessary in order adequately to serve all those who look to it for entertainment and education; and that the field of Art is so wide as to be inexhaustible.

I think that Mr. France's apprehension of the appalling temptation offered to every owner of a listening set by more or less continuous programmes is considerably exaggerated. Listeners will learn, and in fact are learning, to 'give themselves a chance,' without calling upon the B.B.C. to nursemaid them into doing so by definitely curtailing its activities within certain specified hours.

The fear that the B.B.C. may run short of ideas, of material, of the wherewithal to supply their insatiable public, is another question. I think it is a more urgent question, and one most seriously to be considered. But here, too, I think Mr. France is terrifying himself with a turnip-headed bogeyman! Like many other people, mostly of the old conservative school, Mr. France fails in imagination. Myself, I think that the danger to the B.B.C., and indeed to all broadcasting, lies not in any possible exhaustion of material, but in the fact that its material is boundless. Mr. France quotes Mr. Bennett as saying that he only gets one good idea a year, and draws an easy conclusion. But there is at least one novel a day published every year in this country, and in each is at last the germ of an idea.

And the B.B.C. is not drawing on novelists alone, nor even principally, for its ideas. There is no artist in literature, music, the drama, upon whom it should be unable to draw. It possesses everybody as a potential producer of an idea, just as it possesses everybody as a potential listener.

Nor is this all. In spite of the past five years of 'too much broadcasting,' according to Mr. France, have programmes got worse or better? I doubt if the harshest critic of the B.B.C. would deny a definite, even a remarkable improvement. Why should the improvement not go on? Because the great classics in all the other arts have been accomplished, because Beethoven has composed, Tolstoy written, Rembrandt painted, people still compose, write, and there is no end to progress in Art. And as for Radio we are still far from the achievement of Radio classics. There, too, is the stupendous opportunity of the Education problem. The even more vital question of International Friendship, to which, in the opinion of many competent judges, Broadcasting can give more aid than any other single factor except perhaps common sense.

Mr. France has underestimated his human factors in his argument. People are not really so stupid, or so limited, as he fears. They want Broadcasting, and they want Broadcasting to improve. Quality is achieved by selection from quantity, not from its limitation. And demand creates supply, rather than supply regulates demand, so long as the supply is unlimited. Demand will probably create a supply of programmes almost from one midnight to another, if the B.B.C. is to live up to its unwritten motto 'I Serve.' And it remains for the public so served to maintain the quality of the service by unsparing criticism, appreciation, interest, and active participation.

Headphones at Charing Cross Hospital. Mr. France's suggestion of 7-11 p.m. broadcasting would rob the sick and suffering of the greater part of their pleasure in the programmes.

THE story of the pleasure-loving Manon Lescaut and her lovers was written in 1763 by the Abbé Prevost. It was taken as the basis of an Opera by various composers—Halévy, Auber, Massenet, Puccini, and our own Balfe. Massenet's and Puccini's proved by far the most popular versions of the story.

ACT I.

Scene: Amiens, a hostelry in a square near the Paris Gate.

Edmondo, a student (Tenor) amongst his friends, is flirting with the girls in the strolling, chattering throng. The Chevalier des Grieux (Tenor) walks apart. His friends chaff him about love, and he, rousing up his spirits, chaffs the girls in turn.

A coach arrives, and from it alight Manon Lescaut (Soprano), her brother, a Sergeant of the King's Guards (Baritone), and Geronte de Ravoire (Bass), Treasurer-General, an elderly roudé. Lescaut is escorting his sister to a convent school. Des Grieux is fascinated by Manon. He talks to her, and finds that she does not wish to go to the convent. Geronte, having got rid of the girl's brother for a moment, privately orders the landlord of the inn to have a coach with swift horses ready in an hour. Edmondo, who has overheard the conversation, guesses that the Treasurer-General intends to take Manon away. He informs des Grieux; they plot to outwit the old man. Manon shows little hesitation when des Grieux suggests that she shall run off with him instead. This they do, and Lescaut consoles Geronte with the reflection that Manon may be enticed from her lover when his purse is empty.

ACT II.

Scene: A room in Geronte's house in Paris.

Lescaut's prophecy was a shrewd one. His sister has tired of des Grieux and gone to Geronte. Her brother praises her beauty whilst she is having her hair dressed, and applauds her change of lovers. Manon confesses that she would like to have tidings of des Grieux. She recalls her happiness with him and longs to taste it again. Lescaut tells her that des Grieux is growing rich by gambling. Singers enter and perform a madrigal composed by Geronte. Manon is bored. Geronte and others come in and dance a minuet. Manon is the centre of admiration.

When she is alone again, des Grieux, brought by Lescaut, comes to her, and after first reviling her, is moved by her repentance, and falls once more under her spell. They are reconciled, swearing to part no more, when Geronte, returning, surprises them. Reproaching Manon for her ingratitude, he leaves the lovers. Manon is sorry to give up her splendours, but swears she will be true to des Grieux.

Now Lescaut rushes in, with the tidings that Geronte is coming with police to arrest the two. He begs them to flee, but they procrastinate, Manon trying to collect some of her jewels. The police arrive and burst open the door. Manon is dragged away.

There is here an Intermezzo, during which we are to imagine the scene of Manon's trial and condemnation to exile as a danger to society. Her lover has determined to follow her.

ACT III.

Scene: A square near the harbour of Havre.

Des Grieux and Lescaut have come to see Manon, who is to be deported to America at daybreak. Lescaut has bribed one of the guard, who is to help Manon to escape. The plot appears to prosper, and des Grieux secures an interview with Manon through her prison bars; but suspicion is aroused, the alarm is given, and soldiers are called in as a special guard to ensure that the prisoners do not escape in going aboard the ship. They pass along, Manon among them. She has but a few moments with des Grieux before she is compelled to go on board. Her lover, distracted, succeeds in persuading the captain to give him a passage in the ship.

ACT IV.

Scene: A vast bare plain on the borders of the territory of New Orleans.

Manon and des Grieux, weary and ill-clad, appear. She is feverish, and her lover tries to comfort her. He goes to seek help, and Manon sings of her wretchedness and grief. Des Grieux returns, having found no succour in that arid land. They bid each other farewell, and Manon, assuring him that her love will never fade, dies in his arms.

The 'Great Adventure' of Broadcast Education.*

G. D. H. Cole reviews a recent B.B.C. Publication.

IN the early days of broadcasting, there were plenty of people who prophesied that the wireless set would turn out to be a passing craze, of which the great mass of listeners would soon tire. The set would survive, may be, but the interest in it would die out, and the dust cover it. How far are these prophets right? There has hardly been time yet to bring them to the test of actual experience, but it seems safe, by now, to say that they will turn out right or wrong according to the success of the B.B.C. in meeting the exceedingly varied needs of different types of listeners. Wireless programmes are far more varied now, and cater effectively for far more different tastes than they did even a year or two ago. And, if broadcasting is to live as a really potent force in the nation's life, it will have to carry this adaptability to varying needs a great deal further still.

Apart from that elusive person, the 'general' listener, I think one of the most important groups of patrons of the wireless is the group that comes to it for some sort of educational programme. This group is itself wide and elusive. Its needs range from the simplest sort of talks on hobbies or housekeeping to fully developed lectures of half an hour or more on a wide variety of subjects. Of late the B.B.C. has done steadily more to meet the growing demands of this section of its public; and every step taken to meet the need has created fresh demands. The work has now grown to such importance that it can only be effectively planned and carried out by the B.B.C. in the closest contact with the voluntary educational bodies and the Universities, with which the main groups of interested listeners are already connected.

SOME people have been inclined to fear broadcasting as a possible—and inferior—substitute for the earlier forms of educational work. It is not a competitor, but a valuable complement to the existing forms of educational effort.

As the Report points out, co-operation is urgently needed. As soon as possible we need a big national body, whose business it would be to develop the policy and resources of educational broadcasting, and representing the various educational bodies as well as the B.B.C. There would also need to be local bodies to work with and advise the national authority—and, if and when technical considerations allow, there should be a separate educational wave-length, with a radius covering listeners throughout the country. But—and here again I agree with the Report—it would be a mistake to wait until this scheme can be carried out in full.

I have been so intent on briefly discussing the problems raised by the Report that I have said little about the Report itself. Jointly produced by the B.B.C. and the British Institute of Adult Education (which in turn may be taken as representative of most of the educational bodies in which listeners are enrolled), it is a really competent survey of the field, and also a very valuable book which every keen listener (and certainly every educationist) would be well advised to get. I hope the B.B.C. will lose no time in acting on its proposals, and that listeners will take heart from it to make full use of the educational opportunities which the B.B.C. already provides, and therewith to prepare the way for much bigger developments.

The Talk of the Week, No 17.

A Tale of Tea.

The story of the introduction of tea into England and its rise to popularity is a fascinating one. Mr. J. Page-Croft who gave the accompanying talk from London, on Wednesday, April 18, is a member of one of the leading firms of tea-brokers and has much that is amusing and interesting to say about the beverage.

I AM addressing my remarks chiefly to the ladies, appreciating them as among my most ardent supporters in their love for a cup of good tea, but anyone noticing the crowded state of the City tea rooms on any afternoon, would at once observe that the so-called lords of creation are not nearly so indifferent to the charms of the 'cup that cheers' as they would have us believe!

So, as everyone drinks tea, everyone, of course, is interested in tea, and those great countries, with their millions of people, from which we obtain our teas also interest us.

In Noah's Vineyard.

Now the original home of the tea plant is a matter of some doubt; no wild plant has been discovered in China, but a tea tree is found in India, considered by many botanists to be the parent of the present variety, which was undoubtedly first cultivated in China; the Chinese claiming to have been growing tea when Noah was planting his vineyard! It's therefore astonishing that the Chinese managed to keep the knowledge of tea to themselves so long. They thought it too good to be given to the outer barbarians on account of its miraculous origin which is traditionally reported to have been as follows:—

A noted Chinese saint, through his prolonged vigils, became so overcome with drowsiness as to drop off to sleep, and on awakening, suffered such remorse from having given way to the weakness of the flesh that, as a punishment, he cut off his eyelids and threw them to the ground. When again passing the spot, he noticed two shrubs had sprung up, and on examining the new plant, he found the leaves fringed, like the human eyelid, with lashes. He then made a decoction of the leaves, and found that this liquor had the power of keeping him watchful and wakeful. Having experienced the benefit himself, he taught his fellow Celestials the art of tea cultivation.

Tea is now a daily necessity for all classes, which is the more surprising when we consider it was only at a comparatively recent period introduced into this country, and for many years the price was so high that it was a luxury which could only be indulged in by royalty or those of equal wealth.

A Tea Sandwich?

It wasn't until the middle of the sixteenth century that tea became at all known in Europe, when it was introduced by the Dutch traders, who made a good bargain by bartering sage leaves in exchange for tea. A few samples found their way to England, but a misconception as to the way in which the leaves should be cooked hindered the popularity of the drink. It was supposed that the boiled leaves were to be eaten with salt and butter, or spread upon bread, and the liquor thrown away like cabbage water. Of course, these first trials did not turn out satisfactorily, and so the new herb was not popular.

After a time, however, a reaction set in; and Lord Ossory, who had lived in Holland for some time, on returning, taught the English how the beverage should be made. Several foreigners about this time opened coffee-houses, at which tea was sold as it was intended to be drunk. A fresh impetus was given to the introduction of tea by Queen Catherine of Braganza on her marriage with Charles II. The Queen had been used to the cup that cheers in her own country, and continued the custom always of an afternoon upon her arrival here.

The first tea and coffee house in England was started by one named Garraway, who opened his establishment in 1651, in Change Alley, Cornhill, as he advertised, 'for the sale of tea in leaf, and drink, made according to the directions of the most knowing merchants and travellers into Eastern countries.' This attracted many noblemen, physicians, merchants, and gentlemen to his shop.

Garraway was also the first English dealer who retailed tea to the public—at prices varying from 15s. to 50s. per pound—and also sold it ready made to drink. In 1660, a duty of 8d. a gallon was imposed on the liquor of ready-made tea prepared for sale.

One cause of the growing popularity of tea was through the numerous tea gardens which sprang up in many parts of London. It must, of course, be remembered that the outings of our Cockney ancestors were extremely limited owing to the difficulties of locomotion, and also the risk of robbers on the road.

While the upper classes patronized Belsize, Ranelagh, and Vauxhall Gardens, the middle classes went to Hampstead. It also became the fashion for private families to give garden tea parties.

Tea 'Caddies.'

Owing to the high price of tea our ancestresses kept it in a special receptacle called a caddy. This word caddy is derived from the Chinese word 'pound,' viz., 'catty.' These first caddies were wide-mouthed bottles of blue and white porcelain, similar in shape to the ginger jar. After a time they were fitted into dainty little boxes provided with lock and key, to safeguard this expensive store. Tea caddies, however, were not confined to porcelain only; fancy woods, tortoiseshell, enamel, Sheffield plate, pewter, and silver, all being employed in their production. The custom was for the boiling water to be brought in on a tea-tray by the maid, the mistress herself making the tea. So the tea caddy had to be an ornament fit for display among visitors, but as the price of tea became lower, the quality of the tea caddies deteriorated.

Doctors vied with poets in the praise of tea, and we find that the epicure, Samuel Pepys, in 1660, made special reference to the drink in his diary.

The great Dr. Johnson—great in more ways than one—was sometimes accustomed to drink twenty cups at a sitting, which he considered good for the intellect.

When the Cup Did Inebriate.

In bygone days, the Russian soldiers were said to live and fight almost wholly upon tea. The Cossacks carried it about dried, in the shape of bricks, which before hardening, were soaked in sheep's blood and boiled in milk, with the addition of flour, butter, and salt, so as to make a kind of soup. The passion of the Russian soldier for this beverage

BOTH SIDES OF THE MICROPHONE

What It Is.

IN last week's issue you no doubt noticed a picture of a mysterious carved figure—alongside which was printed the question 'What is it?' It is a well-known fact that Editors, when they have some particularly good feature coming along, delight in mystifying their readers—and I, for one, was completely mystified. But a joke is a joke, and I feel that it is now due to our Editor to come out into the open and confess what he is up to. I have his authority to reveal to you that the Hamden Figure which you saw in last week's Radio Times is one of the principal actors in a strange story, entitled 'Old Magic,' which begins in the special Whitsun Holiday Number on May 25. The author of 'Old Magic' is Bohun Lynch, who wrote that most thrilling of scientific romances, 'Menace from the Moon.' A serial story in The Radio Times is something very new—and 'Old Magic,' of which I have seen the first part, is also something very new—a romance of the Future, of strange adventurers in an England of a hundred years hence, when London is a towering city like New York, and all broadcasting is in the hands of the C.O.R.T. Thrilling though the story is, it is never anything less than beautifully written.

The Man Who Fought Fitzsimmons.

THE author of 'Old Magic' has written many books—novels and works on old furniture, boxing, caricature, etc. In 1905 he won the Inter-Varsity Middleweights for Oxford. He once boxed two rounds with the great Bob Fitzsimmons and came away with a black eye and a 'tapped claret' to write a column on his experience for the Daily Mail. He has been writing for twenty years and contributed to most periodicals and newspapers. Of his novels, the best known are 'A Perfect Day,' 'Respectability,' and 'Menace from the Moon.' 'Old Magic' is in the style of the latter book—which I personally like best of all the Lynch novels. It is a scientific romance—such as H. G. Wells might have written in his heyday—about a contemplated attack on the earth by some English settlers on the moon. I used to see a lot of Bohun Lynch at one time, but since the war he has lived largely in Italy—like so many sensible people; and his characteristic brown bowler hat, bird's-eye tie, and checked overcoat are no longer to be seen along Adelphi Terrace. Look out for 'Old Magic.' It is a story with a fascinating idea behind it.

From Morn to Midnight.

THE recently-published article by Victor France on the advisability of reducing the hours of broadcasting has brought a flood of letters to the Editor of The Radio Times. Rarely has any article, however controversial its character, excited a more vigorous and intelligent correspondence—an encouraging sign of the interest which the listener of today takes in the problems and the future of broadcasting. There will be only a limited space for extracts from these letters, the bulk of which, suitably arranged, would make a most interesting book, for they reveal an extraordinary diversity of opinion. Mr. France does not lack supporters—but he is defeated by a heavy majority. The attitude of most listeners is that of Val Gielgud, who this week replies to him—that broadcasting is a service, and must have at heart 'the greatest good of the greatest number,' and that to limit the hours of transmission in the way Mr. France suggests, would be to rob a large number of listeners of their chance of listening.

The Art of Talking.

I EXPECT you have found that most of the really interesting people you ever met were much more interesting when you had them to yourself and could find out all that you wanted to know of their wisdom or experience, than when they were perched on some state occasion on a platform or in a pulpit or broadcasting studio. The most interesting evening of my own life was spent outside a café in Paris with a man who had been for four years on intelligence work in Russia and Poland. In a halting but vivid fashion he told me stories of adventure which had fiction beaten to a frazzle. I begged him to write them down, promising to send them to a London publisher. He did so, but, to my disappointment, they seemed flat and tepid when told in the stereotyped English of a man whose job was to act rather than to write. So it is with a lot of the broadcast talks. Broadcasters who, if they were chatting with you in your own home could make their subject fascinating and unconventional are, so to put it, 'chilled' by the formality of a written manuscript. Their talks are without life and vigour. There is possibly a wonderful future for the impromptu talk, for the talker who can capture in the studio the atmosphere of the study or the drawing-room and allow some friend, equally skilful at his side of the job, to 'draw him out.'

Conversations with Nemo.

AN experiment in this direction will be made from 5GB on May 23 with the broadcasting of the first of a series of 'Conversations with Nemo.' Nemo is the anonymous conversationalist who will, in theatrical parlance, 'feed' the talker of the evening. He will know the subjects in which his companion is most interested, and how best to encourage him to talk interestingly on them. I must not tell you who 'Nemo' is, but I can tell you that for this first experimental talk he will have with him Father Bernard Walke, Vicar of Marazion, from whose church the Cornish Nativity play has been broadcast at Christmas time. Bernard Walke is a delightful conversationalist as well as a brilliant preacher and scholar. I understand that he will talk about donkeys. The subject may seem to some of you a trifle empty of interesting possibilities—but Nemo assures me that it is a real experience to hear the vicar of Marazion on the matter of donkeys. This experiment, if successful, may influence the whole future development of the broadcast talk.

Doctor and Organist.

DR. SCHWEITZER, whose organ recital is to be relayed from the Bishopsgate Institute on Monday evening, May 21, is of special interest in connection with the first of the new series of Bach's Church Cantatas which are to be broadcast every Sunday afternoon. Dr. Schweitzer is the leading Continental authority on Bach, and it is largely his work which has made possible the broadcasting of the Cantatas. It is hoped he may be at the organ for the performance of the first. Dr. Schweitzer is an amazing person. In addition to being a composer, organist, and writer on music, he is an eminent doctor and spends much of his time at the hospital which he has founded in French Equatorial Africa. He will remain in England until the beginning of June and give organ recitals in various parts of the country. Next week I have something further to say about this very picturesque figure.

This 'Education.'

MENTION the word 'education' in connection with broadcasting and immediately half the listeners in the land will cry out in terror lest the powers that be should intend to allow educational transmissions to encroach too heavily on the time devoted to musical and vaudeville programmes. Listeners who care to read 'New Ventures in Broadcasting' (recently published by the B.B.C. at the price of 1s. 3d. post free) will be pleased to find that the claims made upon programme space by the Hadow Committee on Adult Education are moderate in the extreme. Altogether this report, a review of which by Mr. G. D. H. Cole, who adds to his prowess as a writer of detective stories that of being one of our leading educationists, appears on another page, is refreshingly unlike the general run of official pronouncements. It is full of human touches, plentifully illustrated, and altogether most readable for the man in the street. There is something really exciting about the stressing by eminent authorities of the 'adventurous' side of education. If radio can transform the meaning of that generally mistrusted word, it will have done one great work.

The Rebel Maid.

A CONCERT version of Montague Phillips' comic opera The Rebel Maid is to be given from 5GB on Whit-Monday evening and from London, Daventry, etc., on the following Wednesday. Both performances will be conducted by the composer. The artists taking part are Clara Butterworth, Winifred Davis, James Topping, Thorpe Bates, Kingsley Lark, and Stanley Riley, supported by the Wireless Chorus and Orchestra. This melodious English operetta had a long and successful run at the old Empire Theatre shortly after the war.

The Legend of Lord Curzon.

ONE of the strangest figures in contemporary politics was the late Lord Curzon. However much his critics may disagree, there are few who would deny that he was a man of great dignity and attainments who exercised an outstanding influence over the foreign politics of his day. What was the truth about this curious mixture of arrogance and kindness, pomposity and humour? Was Lord Curzon's haughtiness assumed to conceal a natural timidity and a secret life of physical suffering? Much has been written about him—including a mischievously delightful study of the Foreign Minister and his valet in Harold Nicholson's 'Some People'—but the most veracious record of Lord Curzon is the lately-published official biography by Lord Ronaldshay, who, when he comes to Savoy Hill on May 21 to give, in the 'I Remember' Series, some recollections of his distinguished friend, may be certain of a large audience.

The Story of Bob Compton.

A PLAY by Edwin Lewis, entitled Progress and the Builder, is to be broadcast from 5GB on Wednesday, May 23. It is a Lancashire story of the 18th century, actually founded on fact. It introduces Bob Compton, the celebrated weaver of Burnley who invented the 'mule' in secret. Those were the days when the hand-weavers of Lancashire went in fear of the devilish machinery which was to rob them, so they thought, of their livelihood. They caught Compton at work and wrecked his machine.

BOTH SIDES OF THE MICROPHONE

The Open-Air Cathedral.

BEFORE the war, in the days when the seaside was blessed with pierrots and 'niggers,' when summers were really hot and you had to be careful eating Victoria plums (at 2d. a pound) in case there might be a wasp in one of them, one used on the beach to come across a crowd of bare-headed children standing in a sand cathedral of their own construction, joining in a service conducted by a hearty young man in flannels and a faded Varsity blazer. It must have been fun to interrupt stump-cricket and take part in these services—especially as you were allowed to decorate the pulpit with seaweed and white pebbles. Years have passed—and, alas, I have not since then been able to spend my holiday by the seaside, in England. I hear now that the Children's Special Service Mission still holds its services—and I hope that the kiddies of 1928 enjoy them as much as the kiddies of 1908 used to. A typical C.S.S.M. Service is to be broadcast from London, etc., at 5 p.m. on Sunday, May 20. If the children hear that it is the same sort of service as that with the sand-castle pulpit, they will want to listen to it.

A North-Country Sunday.

LISTENERS in the Lancashire and Yorkshire 'region' will hear on Sunday evening, May 20, a concert S.B. from the Leeds-Bradford Studio to all North-Country stations. The programme is to be similar to that given from Manchester in March, consisting for the most part of famous hymns sung by the Bramley Choral Society, conducted by George Holgate. The Band of the First Battalion of the Border Regiment, which is stationed at present at York, will make its microphone debut in this concert.

Poster Artists!

AS last year, the Radio Manufacturers' Association is offering £100 in prizes for the best poster to advertise the National Radio Exhibition which will be held at Olympia in September. Conditions, etc., of this competition may be secured by sending a stamped addressed envelope to the Secretary, the Radio Manufacturers' Association, Astor House, Aldwych, W.C.2. The competition closes on May 28. So that those of you who intend to compete will have to hurry.

In Memory of a Great Queen.

THOUGH we no longer have with us that most gracious and smiling of ladies, the late Queen Alexandra, there still remains Alexandra Day, June 13, when roses are sold in honour of her memory in aid of hospitals and charities for the sick. Miss May Beeman, who has been responsible for the organization of the 'day' since its inception in 1912, will broadcast an appeal for this cause on Sunday, May 20. Last year £52,800 was raised. This year it is hoped to achieve the round £60,000. Altogether, since 1912, £1,000,000 has been realized by the annual sale of roses, some of which are real June buds, others artificial flowers made by cripple girls. Do listen to Miss Beeman, please. You may be able to lend her a car or your help as a rose-vendor; a tiny contribution may be the most you can afford. Offers of help and donations should be sent to Miss May Beeman, Alexandra Day Office, 33, The Grove, The Boltons, London, S.W.10.

Rotary Music.

CARDIFF may have its National Orchestra of Wales, but Bristol has its Rotary Club Concerts! The local branch of the Rotarians has taken the Glen Pavilion, Durdham Downs, for the summer and autumn, and will give a concert there every evening, Sundays not excepted. The Musical Director is Richard Austin, son of Frederick Austin, of the B.N.O.C. He was Conductor of the Bristol Opera Season in 1927. The Rotarians have done a great deal for music in Bristol. This new venture is the fruit of experience gained at their Exhibitions and at the Sunday Concerts which they held at the Little Theatre. A pavilion has been built on Durdham Downs, where the ugly scars left by the old quarries have now been healed. On May 23, and once a week thereafter, these concerts will be relayed to Cardiff.

Harold Samuel from 5GB.

THE soloists in the Symphony Concert which 5GB is putting out on May 26, at 9 p.m., will be Odette de Foras (soprano), and Harold Samuel, our greatest exponent of Bach. Joseph Lewis will conduct the Birmingham Studio Symphony Orchestra in Granville Bantock's 'Poem' Dante and Beatrice, etc., while Harold Samuel will play the solo part in Bach's D Minor Pianoforte Concerto, and Odette de Foras will sing arias from Don Giovanni, the charming Mozart opera from which two extracts are to be relayed from Covent Garden this season, and Tristan and Isolde.

Post Office Humour.

IF one has only a sense of humour, the dullest working day becomes tolerable. To the observant man the foibles of his fellow creatures are perpetually entertaining. A number of observant people have already contributed to Cardiff's series of talks on 'Humours of the Professions,' the next of which is to be given by Mr. Philip Smith, who has been for many years Postmaster of Weston-super-Mare. Mr. Smith has seen many changes in the postal system—the transfer of the telegraph service to the Crown, the introduction of the 6d. telegram and the ½d. postcard and their subsequent disappearance, etc. I expect he will have some good stories to tell, for there are many people who become entirely irresponsible once they are in a post office.

Why He Stayed Away.

SOME of you will have heard Holt Marvell's description of the French Riviera last week, and probably made up your mind to try the South of France for your summer holiday. Almost as eloquent a 'publicity agent' for the Riviera is Will Evans, the celebrated comedian, who went there in 1924 for a brief holiday (as he thought) and remained for four years. He loved the sunshine and the tables—at which he must have played with some success, for the salary which he could have earned in London is pretty considerable. Mr. Evans is back in Town again with his wife, Norah Emerald. His first engagement of any kind will be to broadcast from London on Tuesday, June 5. During his absence abroad he has kept in touch with the stage by giving performances in aid of various English and American charities. He has never previously broadcast, but he need not be afraid that his easy genial humour will not 'get across.'

Will Evans' 'Farcical Tragedy.'

WILL EVANS, with 'Valentine,' was the author of Tons of Money, one of the most successful of modern farces. 'I have just completed a new farce,' he tells me. 'It is called The Black Cat, and contains what I believe to be an absolutely original idea. It is a "farcical tragedy." As far as the characters in it are concerned, the story is tragic. But the audience knows the truth, it sees the mistake which the actors are making, and the more seriously the piece is played, the more ludicrously funny it will appear. I have not relied upon mistaken identity for my "situation." It so happens that I have in my own life been too often mistaken for someone else for the situation to have any more humour for me. Once, on arriving in Manchester, I was mistaken for the late Captain Scott, and, despite my protests, dragged in a carriage through the streets to Owen's College, where the heroic explorer was to have given a lecture to the students. Every time I tried to explain, my voice was drowned by cheering. At length I did manage to clear up the mystery and was released. We had some packed houses at the theatre that week, though.'

The Tale of Two Bets.

HE once bet the maitre d'hotel at the Criterion that he would come into the restaurant disguised as a woman without anyone recognizing him. He won the bet. Later he was telling this story to the manager of a provincial music-hall who offered to take on a similar bet himself. Will Evans won his money by turning up in the foyer of the theatre dressed in woman's clothes and demanding a complimentary box in the name of a friend of his wife who was appearing on the same bill. He made such a fuss that the manager went round to Norah Emerald to protest against her 'lady friend's' behaviour. 'He had his revenge, though,' said Will Evans. 'Before I left, he nailed my clothes to the walls and ceiling of the dressing room and my boots to the floor!' Listen to him on June 5. It will be something of an occasion to have so great a comedian with us again.

Sidney Baynes Again.

THOSE of you who heard Sidney Baynes's Band on Sunday, April 1, will be interested to hear that this dance orchestra, which plays light classical music, is to broadcast again from London on May 27. I, personally, was very impressed with the ingenuity with which Mr. Baynes scored various light classics for his band. For the benefit of those who did not hear the first broadcast, let me briefly explain that Sidney Baynes's Band is one of the most expert of modern dance orchestras, and is at present appearing in the revue, Clowns in Clover. It consists of violin, saxophones, banjo, drums, etc.

The Army and Navy Show.

THOUGH it will most likely not be possible to broadcast it this year, listeners will be interested to hear that the Royal Tournament opens at Olympia on May 24, and continues until June 9. Those who heard last year's relay from the Tournament and have never witnessed the actual event, should not miss this great display, which is an astonishing mixture of colour, pageantry and sheer skill.

CLAUDE DEBUSSY.

the Manet and the Mallarmé of Music, who painted for us in his brilliant compositions the glamour and colour of submerged cities, the gleam and whisper of rain in summer gardens and the shimmering restlessness of a Southern afternoon.

AT the end of the nineteenth century there came into music, in a limited yet fairly extensive way, a new style, distinctively French in its origin, which, by analogy with the corresponding movement in French Painting, we call 'Impressionism.' It may be looked upon either as a revolt against Romanticism or as a mode of Romanticism. Personally I prefer the latter.

In reading the chapter on 'Music as Romance' it must have occurred to many readers that the early nineteenth century brought into musical activity a new factor—a fertilization of music by contact with literature. We know little of what Bach and Mozart read, and if we did it would not throw a great deal of light upon their music. We do know what Weber and Schumann and Berlioz and Liszt read, and if we did not we should lack something that is very helpful in understanding their music.

Similarly we do not know what pictures Bach and Mozart looked at (if any). But we do know what pictures appealed to Debussy, and with what painters he associated—with what painters and with what poets. And to know this helps greatly to the forming of a clear conception of his aims and musical style.

Debussy was a Frenchman, and the painters and poets who most influenced him were the French poets and painters of his own day and the day before—the Symbolist poets and the Impressionist painters.

The Symbolist Writers.

The 'Symbolist' Movement in poetry, and the 'Impressionist' Movement in painting were at their height when Debussy, returning in 1887 from study in Rome, settled again in Paris. Baudelaire, the chief precursor of the Symbolist Movement was dead twenty years before, but Verlaine was alive, as also Mallarmé and a group of younger poets who gathered at Mallarmé's house and looked to him as their leader.

Impressionism in Music.

The Sixth Chapter of Percy A. Scholes' History of Music—Debussy and Ravel—The Influence of Symbolist Poetry and Impressionist Painting on Music—Musical Tone-Painting—The Portraying of Atmosphere—John Ireland, Delius, etc.

Debussy frequented this house and imbibed the ideas there current, so it is of interest to us to get as clear an idea as possible of the nature of those ideas.

To describe in a few words the Symbolist Movement in literature is not easy. On its negative side it was a reaction against the big-bow-wow style of the French Romantic poets, and especially of the latest group of them who were known as the 'Parnasseans.' The Symbolists attempted a product altogether more delicate. To an English reader the change of feeling and method from Byron to Rossetti may convey a rough-and-ready idea of the change of feeling from, say, Hugo to Verlaine. And, too, as to 'content,' the comparison between Ruskin and Pater may help. Ruskin was the apostle of what has been called 'moralized beauty'—a sort of moralist-statesman-critic. Pater was æsthetic and a frank hedonist—not the fruit of experience, but experience itself is the end. 'A counted number of pulses only is given to us of a variegated and dramatic life. How may we see in them all that is to be seen in them by the finest senses?'

There was, then, a good deal of the sensuous and the voluptuous about the Symbolist group, but it was a delicate sensuousness and a refined voluptuousness, expressed with an aristocratic grace.

Nothing was coarsely or bluntly expressed. Indeed, what a poem said was almost less important than what the reader was led to think between the lines. There was a constant stimulus to the imagination, and there comes in the force of the title the Movement adopted. Words were used as symbols. They suggested rather than expressed.

This often led to obscurity, and in some cases obscurity actually seemed to be the object. Until last year nobody has ever attempted to translate into plain English Mallarmé's L'après-midi d'un faune, and probably nobody will succeed either in translating it really adequately into any language or in rendering a satisfactory prose paraphrase. But Debussy has, so to speak, 'translated' it into music, and as music, The Afternoon of a Faun gives frequent delight to thousands of broadcast listeners.

Poetry like this approaches the quality of music. More than any other art, music (at its best) is the art of the sub-conscious.

The reader who is pretty well acquainted with even three or four of Debussy's compositions, but has not previously grasped the connection between his style and the aims of the Symbolist poets, must surely now see a little light. The Symbolists were attempting a poetry like music, and Debussy, inspired by them, attempted a music more musical than had previously (or, at any rate, recently) been written, in that it eschewed, as far as possible, those Beethoven-like, or Wagner-like complexities of development of theme which resemble argument of rhetoric, those Lisztian emotional passages that can easily be re-expressed in words, and those 'programmatic' attempts at description of action which belong most properly to the short story or novel.

*From the conclusion of Pater's Renaissance. He omitted it from the second and third editions, as he 'conceived that it might possibly corrupt some young men into whose hands it might fall.' In the fourth edition, somehow reassured, he restored it.

The Impressionist Painters.

So much for the Poet-Symbolists; now as to the Painter-Impressionists, a closely allied group. Their aims differed from those of the Symbolists, one may say, merely as the art of painting differs from the art of poetry. Sir Edmund Gosse has said of the Symbolist poets that their verse was 'a murmur of waters flowing under a veil of rushes,' and we may say of the Impressionist artists that their painting was a play of light. Like the poets, they shunned drama ('Light is the chief personage in a picture' was one of Manet's maxims), 'literary' subjects, classical formality, and all established conventions, and sought to make out of the representation of effects of luminosity a kind of beautifully painted music. A technical procedure which is of interest, because in a moment we shall find a slight musical analogy to it, is the process of painting in pure, unmixed colours in such a close juxtaposition that at the proper distance the eye sees them merged into their intended composite. Like the poets, they tried to achieve delicacy of nuance; as an example, they discovered that shadows are not necessarily black, but have their varying colours.

Manet may be considered the founder of the School, other members being Monet, Degas, Renoir, Pissarro, and Cézanne.

The comparison between the Impressionist painting and Debussy's music is quickly made. Debussy, too, as has already been said, avoided the dramatic, the narrative, the formal, the conventional, the involved. The preoccupation of the Impressionist painters with light quâ light had its parallel with this Impressionist musician in a pre-occupation with tone quâ tone.

Debussy's Harmony.

To take an example, frequently his chords are separate entities, their notes chosen and spaced on the piano (or distributed in the orchestra) in such a way as to produce the desired momentary tonal effect, and with little or no regard to their neighbours in such matters as the 'preparation' or 'resolution' of discords. This is a technicality, but some readers will have enough knowledge of harmony to grasp it.

For the most part the harmony of Strauss is an extension of that of Wagner, whose harmony is an extension of that of Beethoven, whose harmony is an extension of that of Haydn. But Debussy's harmonies very frequently indeed can be derived from nothing heard from previous composers. Gifted with a very keen ear, he had listened to bugles and particularly bells, and had studied the "overtone," the composition of what we wrongly term a single note—those overtones the particular character and relative strengths of which, in any particular performance of a note, give that note its 'timbre.' And often he reinforced some of those overtones by the addition of actual notes, and so arrived at tonal effects by a synthetic process somewhat similar to the technical process of the Impressionist painters above referred to.

'Design' in Debussy.

Like the Poet-Symbolists and the Painter-Impressionists, Debussy is generally very 'atmospheric,' and so, like them, he has been charged with vagueness. There is abundant design in a picture of Monet or a composition of Debussy, but (to quote The Times obituary notice of Monet in 1926, for the sake of its interesting allusion to Debussy):—

'It stands to reason that if an artist is designing in atmospheric values, in veils of light, the design will not be so emphatic, so easily grasped as if he were designing in solid forms, but nobody can look with attention at a picture by Monet and regard it as a mere representation of the facts and conditions. In this respect his work might well be compared to the music of his countryman, Claude Debussy, in which under an atmospheric shimmer, the melodies are not so immediately recognizable as they are in the works of Bach and Beethoven, but are nevertheless present to an attentive ear.'

The Impressionism of Ravel.

Debussy and Ravel are both 'Impressionists,' but Ravel is less truly so than Debussy, inasmuch as his music is less 'misty' or 'atmospheric.' Put Franck and his pupil d'Indy on one side and Debussy and Ravel on the other and you seem to have just two styles; then take Franck and d'Indy out of the discussion altogether, and look only at Debussy and Ravel, and their distinction of style becomes clear enough. (Put red on one side and various blues on the other and you have an evident contrast; put red out of sight and your various shades of blue begin to sort themselves into classifications of their own.)

Comparing any sufficiently large body of mature work of the two composers, it will be realized that Debussy's is more 'fluid' and Ravel's somewhat more 'solid,' i.e., more firm and clear in its outlines. Or Debussy's work is rather more 'subjective' and Ravel's more 'objective.' Partly this is due to differences of harmonic idiom. A good way of realizing the difference would be to hear, on consecutive evenings, Debussy's Opera, Pelleas and Mélisande, and Ravel's Opera, L'Heure Espagnole. It would then be found that Debussy was much more occupied in evoking emotional 'atmosphere,' and Ravel in musically characterizing the sense of words which expressed clear thoughts or described dramatic 'events.' To this the rejoinder may be made that the literary subjects are very different and call for widely differing treatment, but to that may be re-joined that nobody imposed these subjects upon the respective composers, and that their very choice of them emphasizes the psychological difference between the two men.

The Italian composer, Casella, has drawn a fairly apt parallel by suggesting that as Schumann stands to Mendelssohn in German Romanticism, so does Debussy stand to Ravel in French Impressionism.

Other Impressionists.

Debussy and Ravel are to be looked upon as the leading composers of the 'school' now under discussion, but, in a greater or lesser way, many other composers have submitted to the 'Impressionist' influence. To take an example from our own country.—It is impossible to hear one after the other three or four of the delicious piano pieces of John Ireland, without realizing that consciously, or unconsciously, he is, in part, an 'Impressionist.' There is, too, a good deal of Impressionist influence in some of the work of Delius. And so one might go on. Pure musical Impressionism is now perhaps a waning force, but it is a force nevertheless. The Italian composer, Respighi, has alluded to Debussy as follows: 'The spirit, the æsthetics and the technique of modern music were not established in a precise, lasting and definite manner until the appearance of the orchestral Nocturnes, The Afternoon of a Faun, and Pelleas and Mélisande Debussy's work represents the greatest revolution in modern musical art.'

A Tale of Tea.

was simply astonishing. In the depth of winter he would empty twenty cups in succession, at nearly boiling point, until he perspired at every pore, and then, in a worked-up state of intense excitement, rush out, roll in the snow, get up, and repeat it all over again at the very first opportunity.

The Tea You Buy Today.

The purest China tea which is least touched by the human hand in its manufacture, is the virgin tea of China; it is prepared exclusively from the youngest, and so the choicest, leaves of the plant, and is used principally at Chinese marriages. The leaves are tied together with silk thread in tiny bundles, and when the tea is to be brewed, a bundle of the leaves is held in a large crystal cup of very thin glass, by means of a small ivory or silver skewer, and the boiling water poured in. The infusion is of a pale amber colour and drunk directly (from the leaves), the aroma and odour thus being obtained in perfection.

Most of our tea to-day comes from India, in which country plantings were made in 1833; and in 1838 the first consignment of Indian tea, consisting of 488lbs., was sent to London, the price obtained being 9s. 3d. per pound! In Ceylon, tea was only planted after the plague, which ruined the coffee plantations in about 1860, but owing to the warm, damp climate of the island, has proved an unqualified success.

The chief characteristics of tea are:—Indian—strength and pungency; Ceylon—flavour and aroma; China—extreme delicacy. Its most valuable property is the theine, which is the flavour, and as this is practically extracted in five minutes, a longer period merely results in an accumulation of the tannin, which in some cases is apt to hinder digestion; a simple but effective plan is, after the five minutes, to pour the tea from one pot to another.

Good tea will draw a rich red brown liquor, and not a dull dirty brown, as is the case of the lower grades; while, after infusion, the leaf of good tea is of a golden brown, and that of the cheaper descriptions ranging from dark brown to nearly black.

Drink Good Tea!

As tea is not a food, but a stimulant, the pleasure, of course, is in the flavour, which is only in the better qualities; and as a pound of tea will make from two hundred to two hundred and fifty cups, and the difference in price only a few pence, say a penny for thirty cups, it is in every way the cheapest to drink the best.

Considering the care that is taken in the cultivation and manufacture of our tea, it is surely worth more attention and greater discrimination, especially as medical and expert opinion is unanimous that good tea, as compared with the ordinary, is, in taste, preferable to the palate, in cost more profitable to the pocket, and in health most desirable for the digestion.

THE background of the story is this: King Laius, the husband of Jocasta, and father of Œdipus, was told by an oracle that his death would be brought about by his own son. When Œdipus was born, therefore, Laius sent him away to be got rid of; but the child was taken by a shepherd to Polybus, King of Corinth, who brought him up as his own son. Œdipus, ignorant of his parentage, has been told by an oracle that he will slay his father and marry his mother. Already part of the prophecy has come true, for he has met his father and, all unknowing, killed him in a quarrel. He goes to Thebes, and is given the kingdom by Creon (Bass-Baritone), brother of Jocasta, who, unknown to Œdipus, is his mother. Her he marries.

ACT I.

At the beginning of the Opera the people beg Œdipus to free the city from pestilence. He promises to do so, and consults Tiresias (Bass), the blind soothsayer. This oracle tells him that the murderer of Jocasta's late husband, King Laius, is himself a king. The city, he says, can only be freed from the plague if the murderer be banished. The Act ends with a chorus of the people, who acclaim Jocasta.

ACT II.

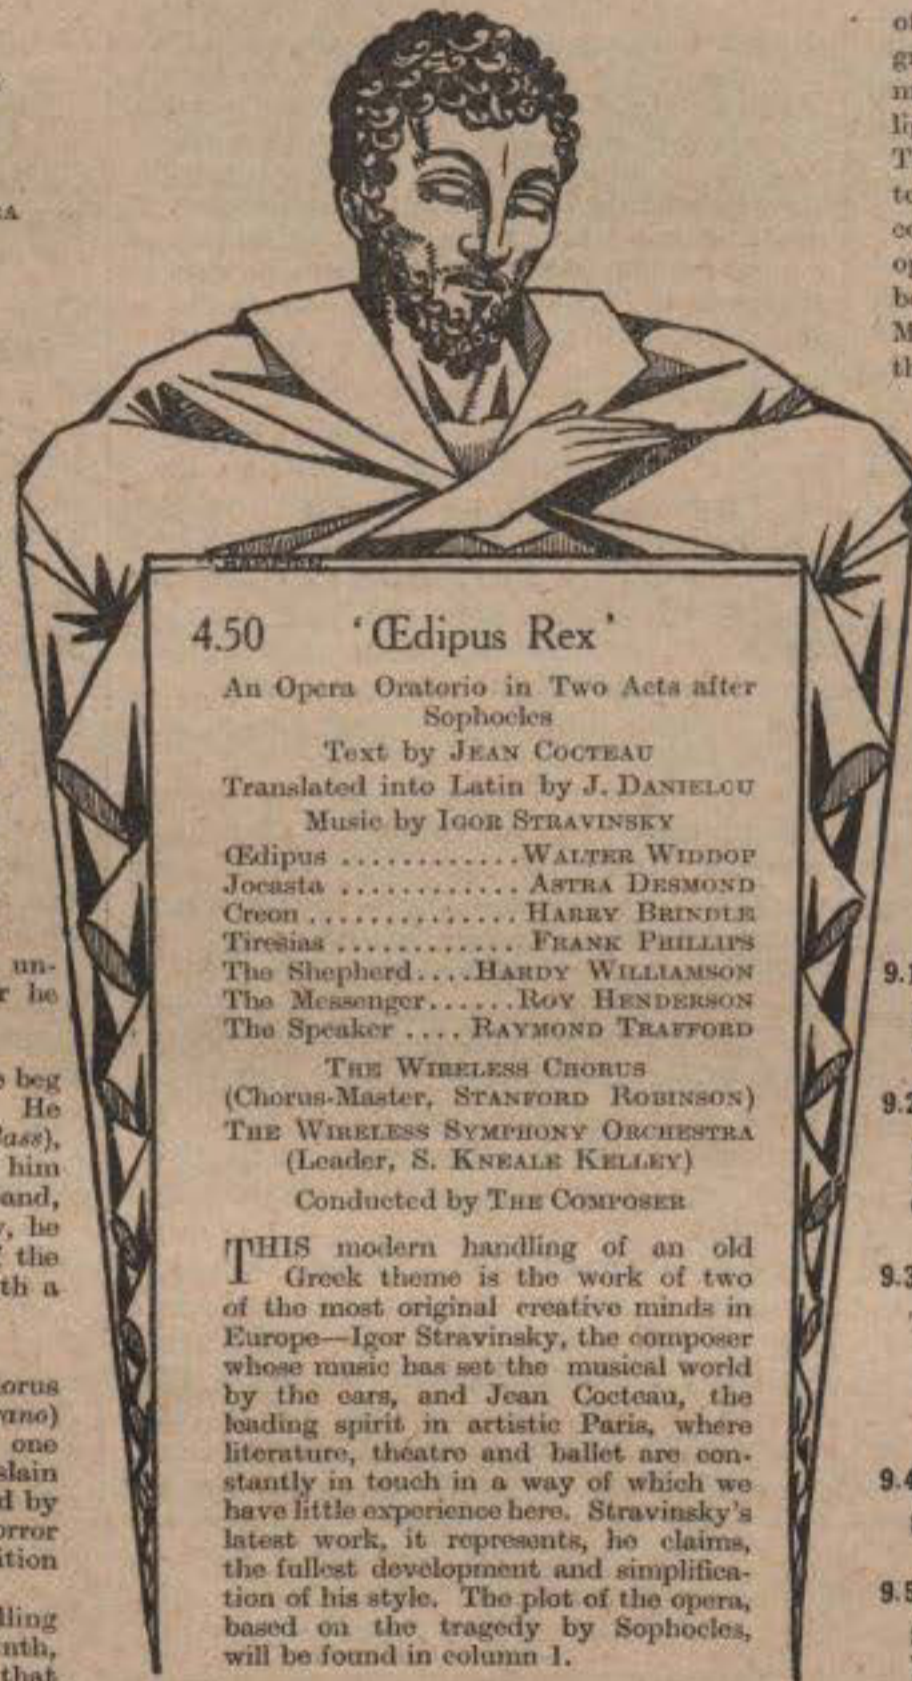

This opens with a repetition of the chorus that ended Act I. Jocasta (Mezzo-Soprano) does not believe in oracles, for did not one predict that her husband Laius would be slain by her son, and was not the king killed by robbers, far from Thebes? Œdipus with horror begins to realise the horrible truth of his position and relationship.

A Messenger (Bass-Baritone) comes telling of the death of Polybus, King of Corinth, Œdipus' adopted father, and saying that Œdipus was not really Polybus' son. A Shepherd (Tenor), who accompanies him, brings out the truth—that Œdipus is the son of Laius and Jocasta.

Soon the Messenger re-enters to tell how Jocasta, on hearing the dread news, hanged herself, and Œdipus put out his eyes. The Chorus closes the work with a sad song of farewell.

5.50-6.10 THE FOUNDATIONS OF ENGLISH POETRY—VII, Poems by Dryden and Pope and others read by Miss EDITH EVANS

THE present generation is very far in spirit from the Augustan Age with its classical felicities, though indeed there are signs of a reaction towards it. In any event, there can be no two opinions about the claim to a place among the great English poets of Dryden and Pope, whose works will form the greater part of this afternoon's reading. Amongst the poetry included in it will be Dryden's 'Song for St. Cecilia's Day,' Pope's 'The Dying Christian to His Soul,' and extracts from 'Absalom and Achitophel' and the 'Essay on Criticism.' They will be read by Miss Edith Evans, the actress who has excelled most notably in speaking the lines of those Restoration and eighteenth-century dramatists who were the contemporaries of Dryden and Pope.

THIS modern handling of an old Greek theme is the work of two of the most original creative minds in Europe—Igor Stravinsky, the composer whose music has set the musical world by the ears, and Jean Cocteau, the leading spirit in artistic Paris, where literature, theatre and ballet are constantly in touch in a way of which we have little experience here. Stravinsky's latest work, it represents, he claims, the fullest development and simplification of his style. The plot of the opera, based on the tragedy by Sophocles, will be found in column 1.

Appeal on behalf of the National Association of Boys' Clubs by Mr. J. HERON-ECCLES, J.P., Chairman of the National Association of Boys' Clubs, and of the Liverpool Boys' Association.
S.B. from Liverpool

IN the squalid and unhealthy surroundings of our big cities, in which so many boys of the 'working classes' are now compelled to grow up, the boys' club can be a centre not merely of comfort and recreation, but of enlightenment and education in the fuller sense. The National Association of Boys' Clubs exists to establish and develop clubs throughout the country, to provide them with a means of co-operation, act as their agent towards outside bodies, and generally extend and aid their work. More than 500 clubs are affiliated to it, either through local federations, or direct.

Contributions should be sent to the Secretary, National Association of Boys' Clubs, 66, Avenue Chambers, Vernon Place, Bloomsbury, W.C.

THE BIRMINGHAM MILITARY BAND, conducted by W. A. CLARKE

Overture to 'Euryanthe' Weber
Gavotte from 'Mignon' Ambroise Thomas

THE plot of the Opera Euryanthe was made out of a thirteenth-century tale of knightly doings, full also of ghosts, fairies and such-like legendary folk. The work did not hold the stage; its libretto was too silly, even for those days. But the Overture found and retained a place on the concert platform. In it, Weber strikes the notes of chivalry and mystery. According to his characteristic plan, it contains fragments of leading airs from the Opera.

THE Finale actually grows, in the most exciting way, out of a mysterious whispered passage at the end of the Third Movement, the Scherzo. Japanese Suite Holst Prelude, Song of the Fisherman; II, Dance of the Marionettes.
Interlude, Song of the Fisherman; III, Dance under the Cherry Tree.
Finale, Dance of the Wolves.

THIS was written as a series of short dances for a ballet produced by the Japanese dancer, Michio Ito, at the London Coliseum in 1916.

He supplied all the themes (which are from native sources), except that of the Marionettes' Dance, which is of the composer's invention.

The Song of the Fisherman. This is a plaintive melody, which the Harp denotes.

Dance of the Marionettes. This has an appropriately jerky rhythm in two-time, three bits to a beat.

Interlude. A short slow section, founded on the Fisherman's Song.

Dance under the Cherry Tree. A dainty, light Movement started by the Flute.

Finale, Dance of the Wolves. This works up to a fine climax of excitement, the Xylophone and Gong helping things along.

9.5 A Sullivan Programme
Sullivan was born on this day in 1842
THE AUGMENTED STATION ORCHESTRA
Conducted by T. H. MORRISON

Overture, 'In Memoriam'
Suite from 'The Merchant of Venice'

THE Overture was inspired by the death of Sullivan's father, in 1866. It opens 'At a steady pace, with religious feeling.' A simple tune is given out by a Woodwind quartet,

TWO 'FOUNDERS OF ENGLISH POETRY'

John Dryden (right) and Alexander Pope (left) are two of the poets from whose works Miss Edith Evans will read in the series of 'The Foundations of English Poetry' this afternoon. These are contemporary portraits of them.

Oboe playing the tune. This is well known as a hymn-tune. After this has been repeated, there immediately follows the main body of the piece, marked 'Very quick.' This is very dramatic music. Many distinctive tunes are introduced, and treated with great variety. The prevailing mood is forceful.

The Overture ends with the hymn-tune melody, played by the whole Orchestra and full Organ, a great triumphal hymn.

Sullivan's stage music was not confined to Comic Operas. He tried his hand at more serious Opera, and also wrote incidental music to several of Shakespeare's plays, putting into this much excellent craftsmanship.

The music for The Merchant of Venice was written in 1873. There are in the usual selection from it, five pieces: (1) Introduction; (2) Barcarolle (Serenade); (3) Introduction and Bourrée; (4) Grotesque Dance and (5) Waltz.

SULLIVAN wrote some incidental music for a production of Shakespeare's Henry VIII in Manchester about fifty years ago, and it immediately became very popular. The four items that make up the set are a March, a song for King Henry ('Youth will needs have dalliance'), the Graceful Dance that was once very frequently heard at the Proms., and elsewhere, and the Water Music.

7.15 THE FOUNDATIONS OF MUSIC
BRAHMS' VIOLIN and PIANO SONATAS
Played by WILLIAM PRIMROSE (Violin) and
VICTOR HELY-HUTCHINSON (Pianoforte)
Sonata in G (Op. 78), First Movement

THE three Sonatas by Brahms for Violin and Piano are all mature works, the first (Opus 78) not appearing until after his first two symphonies (1876-8).

Each has its individual beauty, and all three are well contrasted and highly original.

It is notable that in them Brahms was one of the first composers to pay special attention to the principle that the material should be well suited to each of those widely different instruments, the Violin and the Piano.

The First Sonata (the one that made for Brahms many of his best friends) is in three Movements only, of which the First is fairly lively, but also thoughtful, perhaps at moments wistful.

Mr. GEORGE GROSSMITH
'From My Dressing Room at the Theatre'
Relayed from Daly's Theatre

TO the last three generations of theatre-goers
the name of Grossmith has been a household word, and it has lost none of its lustre during the reign of the second George. His own stage career goes back to the early nineties, and in the course of it he has played in some of the best-remembered of musical comedies—The Gaiety Girl, The Shop Girl, Our Miss Gibbs, and Tonight's the Night, to name only a few; and more recently he was in No No Nanette, that record-breaker of the post-war stage. Besides his activities as an actor and manager, he has from the first taken a keen interest in broadcasting, and his experience has been of much assistance to the B.B.C.
Tonight, from his dressing-room at Daly's Theatre, where he is now playing in Lady Mary,
he will give some reminiscences of his stage career.

Overture to 'The Count of Essex' .. Mercadante
THE Operas of Mercadante (1795-1870) were long popular in Italy and Vienna. Besides his stage works (about sixty in all), he wrote masses and other sacred music. He was music director at two cathedrals in turn, and in 1840 was elected Director of the Naples Conservatoire.
He gradually went blind, but dictated his operas after 1862 when his sight was completely gone.

MAKING-UP IN FRONT OF THE MICROPHONE.

The little white microphone is an unusual intruder into an actor's dressing-room, but here it is installed amongst the grease-paint on Mr. George Grossmith's dressing-table at Daly's Theatre. It will be in use at 9.30 tonight when he broadcasts some reminiscences of his stage career. 'G. G.' will face it as tranquilly then as he is doing in the photograph, for he is a veteran broadcaster, and the microphone has no terrors for him.

MENDELSSOHN several times put into his music the impressions that scenes of nature made upon his mind. His popular Hebrides Overture, for example, was the result of his visit to the wild, rugged scenery of the Scottish islands. In Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage we have his interpretation of another's thoughts about the ocean, as well as of his own impressions. His chief inspiration was a poem of Goethe, which depicts the sea in two moods, first, sleeping, smooth as a mirror, and then stirred by a favour-

- ing breeze, before which the ship flies homeward. There are two separate Movements in it, a slow one, suggesting the Calm at Sea, and a lively one, inspired by the second part of Goethe's poem, The Breeze.

ARE YOU A PELMAN?

Mind-Training Method Which Takes You to the Top.

"A GENERATION ago there were a thousand men to every opportunity, while to-day there are a thousand opportunities for every man." So says Henry Ford, one of the greatest business geniuses of our time. This is where Pelmanism comes in. There are a thousand opportunities around you. Yet you do not see them. In other words, you lack Observation. Therefore, unless the thing is actually thrust beneath your nose you do not see it. Pelmanism trains your powers of Observation. It enables you to see the Opportunity whilst it is yet a long way off. You see it coming, and are ready for it when it arrives. That is the first thing that Pelmanism does.

A Shop Assistant writes:
"My observational powers have increased immensely. I am always noticing something new, and, what is more important, understanding it."

But it is no use seeing an Opportunity unless you have the courage to seize it. Many fail in this respect. They see the Opportunity, but they are afraid to take it. They lack Initiative, Courage, and Self-Confidence. They are nervous. They have got into the rut of custom. So the Opportunity passes them by. Here again Pelmanism helps. Having developed your Observation, it now strengthens your Self-Confidence. Having shown you how to see, it now shows you how to seize. It enables you to overcome that Timidity, that Shyness, that lack of Self-Confidence which keeps you down below your rightful level. It develops Initiative. It gives you that confidence in yourself which wins the confidence of others. Being confident in yourself you seize the opportunity when it comes. Thus you win a victory over your weaker self and over your surroundings. You plant your feet upon a higher rung of the ladder which leads to Success.

A Writer reports:
"I managed to secure a good post in my own profession at my own terms a week ago without any question. I believe it is the confidence and mental alertness born of Pelmanism which enabled me to tackle a manager and persuade him that I was the man he needed. I only heard of a possibility of there being a vacancy half an hour before I was given the job."

Pelmanism first enables you to see the Opportunity. Secondly, it gives you the Confidence and Initiative to seize it. Thirdly, it gives you the Ability to make the most of it when you have secured it. It enables you to hold the Job. This is the most important thing of all. Pelmanism doesn't develop one quality at the expense of others, but gives you an all-round efficiency. By increasing your Efficiency it increases your Earning-Power. It makes you resourceful and full of energy; it develops your Organising Power and Business Acumen; it strengthens your Personality and gives you just those qualities which will enable you to undertake more responsible and more highly-paid work.

An Accountant writes:
"I am convinced that anyone of average mental ability can, by taking the Pelman Course, train his or her mind into a state of efficiency beyond all expectations. I now find myself on a level with others with whom I had never even hoped to compete."

The Pelman Course has been thoroughly revised in the light of the latest Psychological knowledge and contains the cream of the experience gained by the Pelman Institute in the course of training the minds of over 500,000 people. Pelmanism is simple and easy to follow, and takes up very little time. You can practise it in the evenings or at odd moments during the day. Full particulars are given in a little book entitled "The Efficient Mind," which should be read by every man and woman who wishes to get on in life. Get this book to-day and learn to be a Pelman. Just send your name and address to the Pelman Institute, 95, Pelman House, Bloomsbury Street, London, W.C.1, and a copy of this interesting and useful book will be sent you by return, gratis and post free. Write or call to-day.

Relayed from the NATIONAL MUSEUM OF WALES

THE NATIONAL ORCHESTRA OF WALES

Overture to 'The Bohemian Girl'..... Balfe
Symphonic Poem, 'Phaeton'..... Saint-Saëns
Dance Suite..... Finck

THE dashing youth Phaeton, having been permitted by his father the Sun to drive the fiery chariot, loses control of the horses. The car of flame is approaching the earth, and must set it on fire if nothing can intervene. At the last instant Jupiter hurls a thunderbolt, saving the universe, but destroying the rash youth.

This is the story Saint-Saëns illustrates in his Symphonic Poem.

A dignified introduction of four bars prepares us for the magnificent scene of Phaeton's ride. The galloping horses are heard, and a bold, imperious theme on the Trumpets and Trombone presumably stands for the youthful ardour of the charioteer.

A broadly melodious passage played by four Horns, may suggest either the Sun, or the lament of Phaeton's sister (who had harnessed the horses, and so had a part in the disastrous adventure). The pace increases and the excitement is worked up. Phaeton's theme is heard, agitatedly, and then the thunderbolt falls, and the end comes with the Sun's lament for Phaeton.

THIS one-movement work has four pretty definite sections, a little like those of a Symphony, and each of them grows out of some famous old Welsh melody or melodies.

The FIRST (a stately one) is based on 'Loudly Proclaim.'

The SECOND (a skittish one) is made out of 'Hunting the Hare' and 'The Bells of Aberdovey.'

The THIRD (a tender one) brings in 'David of the White Rock.'

BRANCH JOHNSON: 'Alsace'

THE French Riviera, which Mr. Holt Marvell described in last Tuesday's talk, is well known as a holiday resort, and so is Brittany, with which Miss Maxse will deal next week. Today Mr. Branch Johnson will talk about a part of France less known than it deserves to be—the border-land where France and Germany meet, where the historic towns of Strasbourg and Colmar look down on the broad waters of the Rhine. He himself knows Alsace well, and he is an expert on the folk-lore of the French countryside.

THE VANISHED ELEGANCE OF REGENT STREET.

The Quadrant, at the Piccadilly Circus end of Nash's Regent Street (the last vestiges of which have recently disappeared), was a fine example of the decorous, unassuming town architecture of the Regency, of which Mr. Towndrow will speak in his talk from London this afternoon.

Something New Something "Different" in MUSIC

Choice and beautiful selections not often heard—some unpublished before in this country. Use the coupon below and learn the facts.

Being a collection of the lesser known works of the Great Masters, and the best works of the lesser known Masters. For Pianoforte and Voice.

Variety is the spice of music, as well as of life itself.

You love the oft-played classics, but you long for new musical sensations.

Here is a collection of pieces for pianoforte and voice that have been selected for two qualities—beauty and comparative rarity. All the second-rate hackneyed pieces have been left out. Every selection is a classic, and many will be new to you. We offer you Schubert songs specially translated for us from the German, we give you Brahms' selections never before published in this country.

We give you selections from "The Beggar's

Opera," with our own copyright musical setting.

From a 17th Century gem by Couperin to Brahms' "Maiden's Curse," from a Scarlatti selection written for the harpsichord to Borodin's intensely Russian music, from a charming Spanish study by Jensen to a drinking song by Chopin (probably you have never heard of this last), there is originality of selection, sparkling beauty and true musical interest.

The pieces are bound in four volumes de luxe, and would cost an enormous figure if you tried to collect them separately. You may have them on very easy terms.

Just a Few of the Selections for Piano and Voice.

BRAMMS'S VIOLIN and PIANO
SONATAS
Played by WILLIAM PRIMROSE
(Violin) and VICTOR HELY-
HUTCHINSON (Pianoforte)
Sonata in D Minor (Op. 108)
First and Second Movements

THIS is the last of Brahms's
Violin Sonatas (his Op. 108).
It was written in 1889, when the composer was fifty-six, and is a mature, thoughtful work, with little suggestion of display.

The First Movement is powerful and expressive by turns.
In the Pianoforte part syncopation is a striking feature; it will be felt how much of mood can be conveyed by the musicianly use of a device that in the hands of some is merely vulgar and tedious. Note, too, at the beginning of the middle

The Hon. R. H. BRAND

will give the third talk in the series on 'Finance in the Modern World' this evening, from London at 7.25.

(development) portion, how the Pianoforte repeats one octave chord for nearly fifty bars in the bass.
The Slow Movement is slow, very short, and simply eloquent, a soothing pendant to the First Movement.

7.25 The Hon. R. H. BRAND: 'The Federal Reserve System'

THE third in the series of talks on 'Finance in the Modern World' will be given by an authority as eminent as his predecessors, Sir Henry Strakosch and Mr. J. M. Keynes. Mr.
Brand is a director of Lloyds Bank, and he has acted as financial adviser to more than one Government and to Lord Robert Cecil when he was Chairman of the Supreme Economic Council at the Peace Conference in 1919. This evening he will describe the Federal Reserve System, which is the keystone to the whole banking and financial organization of the United States.

Overture to 'Lestocq'Auber

AUBER became one of the most popular writers of French Opera in the nineteenth century, but he had to make several attempts before he had any success in that side of composition. His first Opera was such a failure that he would not try again for six years. He really got into his stride, however, when he became associated with the clever playwright, Scribe.

Lestocq, or Intrigue and Love, produced in 1834, was one of the numerous works in which Scribe collaborated with him. Their partnership of some forty years was only terminated by Scribe's death in 1861. Auber lived ten years longer, dying at the age of nearly ninety.

8.45 Mr. H. S. EDE, reading from Edward Marsh's translation of La Fontaine's 'Fables'

ONE of the most interesting translations published in recent years was Mr.
Edward Marsh's version of the Fables of La Fontaine—a work that he had long intended to execute, but for which he only found time during his trip to Africa with Mr. J. H. Thomas, whose private secretary he then was. Mr. Marsh is, of course, well known as the editor of Rupert Brooke and of the series of 'Georgian Poetry' which first introduced many modern poets of the first rank to the notice of the literary world.
In these translations he has succeeded admirably in re-creating the original without any symptoms of its having been conceived in a different language and in a different age. Since they were published he has made many changes, to satisfy more fully his own sense of style, and the final version from which Mr.
Ede will read this evening differs in many respects from that published in book form.

Read this letter from a big Contractor.

10th Feb., 1928.

Gentlemen,
I have intended for some time writing to tell you my opinion of the Fortiphone which I purchased some nine months ago. You will no doubt be as pleased to hear, as I am to say, that it has given me 100 per cent. satisfaction.

In my business as a Contractor I am every day handling affairs of great financial magnitude and interviewing a large number of people; without your deaf aid this would be utterly impossible. By the use of your wonderful Fortiphone my hearing—which is extremely bad—is as near as possible normal, and I consider the tremendous power of the Fortiphone, concentrated in such a minute and compact space, is nothing short of marvellous.

I may say that part of my business deals with electrical engineering and as the result of my experience, I have put my Fortiphone through every test my brain could conceive—not to try and discover if lacking efficiency, but so that I should be familiar with its weak points should occasion arise. When I say, therefore, that I consider the Fortiphone one of the most marvellous inventions of the present age, I am stating, without exaggeration, what is undoubtedly a fact; it is faultless.

Yours faithfully (Signed)

BATTERIES AT 7/- FOR 7 MONTHS OR "EKCO" AT 7/- IN 7 YEARS

At a very low estimate a good 60v. H.T. Battery costs 7/- every 7 months, and this where used but moderately.

An "EKCO" D.C. Model selling 17/6 complete costs only 7/- in 7 years to maintain when used 4 hours a day. Furthermore, at the end of the 7 years you still have left your "EKCO" as sound as when it was first purchased.

Cost is, however, but one of the great advantages of using "EKCO" instead of batteries and accumulators. "EKCO" is no trouble whatsoever. At a touch you have Mains Power and your set gives perfect, humless reception. There is no messiness, wire-ugliness, recharging, arm aching shop-renewals week by week. Instal "EKCO" in a few minutes and for years you will forget it is there.

Save money, save time, save worry — "EKCONOMISE" NOW.

MUSIC-LOVERS prize 'the G Minor' for its originality, depth, and weight of expression. Of its four Movements, the FIRST is quick and bustling—full of restless energy and dramatic fire, with an under current of anxiety and mystery running through it. The SECOND MOVEMENT comes as a beautiful, restful relief after the agitation of the First. The THIRD MOVEMENT is a cheerful, rather ceremonious Minuet. The FOURTH MOVEMENT is the sweeping, rushing Finale, whose speed never slackens, though there are moments of tranquillity.

CHARACTERS from DICKENS

MRS. NICKLEBY on APPETITE

"You have no appetite, my dear Miss Bray, and upon my word I really think you ought to take something that would give you one. I am sure I don't know, but I have heard that two or three dozen native lobsters give an appetite, though that comes to the same thing after all, for I suppose you must have an appetite before you can take 'em. If I said lobsters, I meant oysters, but of course it's all the same."

Iron Jelloids encourage the Appetite.

Iron Jelloids are exactly suited to such cases. They give that sweet health and help you to hold your own. If you would have radiant health, an elastic step, and well-braced nerves, you must have strong blood. To improve and strengthen the blood, take Iron Jelloids—commended by Medical men and the Medical press. Iron Jelloids are palatable, reliable and easy to take, and inexpensive—ten days' treatment only 1/3—for five weeks 3/-. Everyone should take Iron Jelloids now and again. They are great BLOOD ENRICHERS. Ask for Iron Jelloids No. 2. If you suffer from NEURALGIA, ask for Iron Jelloids No. 2A.

The NURSING TIMES: "Iron Jelloids have won the approval of the Medical Profession, and are a real advance in Tonic medication."

THE HOSPITAL: "They deserve wide popularity."

7.25 Professor HAROLD J. LASKE: 'Social Purpose No. III, The Importance of Government'

WE live in a big world about which, at our peril, we have to find our way. And we find our way in so far as the mechanisms of society make increasingly possible, for an increasing number of people, a response to their desires. Every part of our social system—its religions, its way of holding property, its method of government—is an attempt to this end. Since it is Government that ultimately controls all the mechanisms, it is fundamentally important in social theory to understand its nature. These debate this vital subject than Sir Ernest Benn, the publisher, author of 'The Confessions of a Capitalist,' and the leading spirit of the Individualist Bookshop, and Mr James Maxton, the chairman of the Independent Labour Party, and the most prominent of the group of Clydeside Socialists who came into Parliament in 1922. They have, in addition, met on more than one occasion in platform debates, and they are therefore all the better fitted to undertake the difficult task of debating before the microphone.

PERCY FLETCHER, well known for many years as Conductor at His Majesty's Theatre, is largely a self-taught musician. He is best known, perhaps, for his incidental music to spectacular plays, such as Cairo, produced at His Majesty's. He has written four Orchestral Suites and a good many popular Choral pieces, besides some Pianoforte and Chamber Music.

He is one of the few composers of today who have written large-scale works for the Brass Band. His Epic Symphony was written as the test-piece for the chief competition at the annual Brass Band Festival at the Crystal Palace.

His Suite Famous Beauties, contains three pieces, thus entitled: (1) A Vision of Aphrodite; (2) In the Palace of Old Versailles; (3) At the Court of Cleopatra.

He had a BAD LEG

Nobody is exempt from the danger of a neglected sore—A little Germolene rubbed on the place at once will ensure that ugly developments, such as blood-poisoning, do not take place. The up-to-date aseptic action, and the tissue building properties of Germolene ensure rapid healing. Germolene constantly heals when other ointments have proved useless—read the letter below. Germolene does not smart. No household is complete without a tin.

"AS A LAST RESOURCE"

Mr. E. P. Dibley, of Gunthorpe, West Stockwith, Doncaster, writes: "About three years ago a running sore started on my left leg. I tried nearly all sorts of ointments and lotions, but all of no avail, the sore never healed up. As a last resource a friend advised Germolene. The best part of the thing is, I have only used a box and a half; the sore is healed, and all the pain gone!"

8.0 'Götterdämmerung'

(THE TWILIGHT OF THE GODS)

Act II
From the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden

Cast:
Siegfried
RUDOLF LAUBENTHAL
Brünnhilde
FRIDA LEIDER
Gutrune
GÖTA LJUNGBERG
Hagen IVAR ANDRESEN
Günther
HERBERT JANSSEN
Alberich
EDUARD HABICH

SIEGFRIED, the fearless hero (Tenor), has won his bride, Brünnhilde (Soprano), but becomes the victim of a plot made by Günther (Baritone), and Hagen, his half-brother (Bass). These two seek to win Brünnhilde as Günther's bride. They give Siegfried a love-potion, which causes him to fall in love with Günther's sister, Gutrune (Soprano), and to forget all about Brünnhilde.

He is to wed Gutrune if he will bring Brünnhilde from the mountain for Günther. This he does. Disguised as Günther, he returns to Brünnhilde, and regarding her as a stranger, tears from her finger their betrothal ring, and in spite of her protests, carries her off. So runs Act I.

By courtesy of Messrs. Heinemann ALBERICH AND HAGEN,
from Arthur Rackham's illustrations to 'The Ring of the Nibelung.' Act II of Götterdämmerung will be relayed from Covent Garden tonight.

In Act II we find the dwarf Alberich (Baritone) exhorting his son Hagen to steal the ring. To them enters Siegfried, returning victorious with his prize.

He has now assumed his own form again; and when Brünnhilde sees him, she cries out that he is false to her.

Poor Siegfried remembers nothing of his love for her, and will not believe her. He swears his innocence, and goes off with Gutrune. Hagen insists that Siegfried, for his treachery, must be killed, and thus the Act ends.

WHY REMAIN GREY?

FREE TREATISE.

How Society men and women guard against the social and business handicap of Grey Hair is revealed in a dainty little Boudoir Book just published.

It discloses the secret by which you can grow glossy, abundant and silken hair, and—most important of all—preserve it from the greying and disfiguring touch of time.

Remarkable results follow this method. Right from the first your hair becomes less and less grey; No matter how long the greyness has existed, the lost colour is restored.

The Folly of Dyes.

Dyes and artificial hair paints are, of course, strictly tabooed by men and women of refinement. This is not only good taste, but good sense as well. Dyed hair is always conspicuous. It literally shouts the embarrassing information that its colour came out of a bottle. Further, dye ruins the hair's structure and health, rots it away and causes it to fall out.

There is only one satisfactory method of curing greyness and hair loss of colour. This is to re-create, naturally, your hair's real colour from root to tip. You will find how to do this between the gold and ivory covers of the book mentioned above.

Improves Hair-Health and Beauty.

Besides restoring the lost colour, this treatment improves and tones up your hair in every way.

It removes all accumulations of Scurf or Dandruff. It invigorates and vitalises the hair and promotes a strong, luxuriant growth.

It prevents the hair falling out and baldness.

Finally, by restoring your hair to exactly the same shade and depth of colour as it possessed before it became faded, dull or grey, it makes you look years younger, and even takes as much as 10 to 15 years from your apparent age.

BOOK OF HAIR-HEALTH AND BEAUTY FREE.

Should you be troubled with white, grey, greying, faded or otherwise discoloured hair, you should write to-day to the "Fackative" Co. (Suite 29), 66, Victoria Street, Westminster, London, S.W.1, for a copy of their book describing how to cure grey or falling hair without the use of dyes or stains.

Just mention your address and a copy of this book will reach you by return, gratis and post free, in plain sealed envelope, free from observation.

Varicose Veins

Invisibly Supported

Without Rubber

Perfect Comfort! Easy to Wash!

At last every sufferer from Varicose Veins can obtain a stocking which, whilst giving full support to the weakened veins, is perfectly comfortable in wear, does not heat or give off any odour. Has not the unsightly appearance of the usual bandages or elastic stockings. On the contrary, the New Compri-Vena stocking makes ungainly legs slim and shapely, and is undetectable under even the finest silk hose.

Owing to their perfect scientific construction, Compri-Vena stockings exercise the correct amount of pressure, and maintain their elasticity throughout long and constant wear. Write to-day for full particulars and self-measurement form, or call Compri-Vena, Ltd., R.T.I., Evelyn House, 62, Oxford Street, W.1.

BRAHMS' VIOLIN and PIANO SONATAS
played by WILLIAM PRIMROSE (Violin) and
VICTOR HELY-HUTCHINSON (Pianoforte)
Sonata Movement (Scherzo) in C Minor

BRAHMS once collaborated with Schumann and another composer in writing a Violin and Pianoforte Sonata. The third man was Dietrich, a pupil of Schumann. It was Schumann who, in 1853, proposed that the three of them should compose a work specially for a concert that the violinist Joachim (always one of Brahms' greatest friends) was to give. Dietrich wrote the first Movement, Schumann the second, Brahms the third (the Scherzo we are to hear) and Schumann the last. At the head of the work Schumann wrote 'In anticipation of the arrival of our beloved and honoured friend Joseph Joachim, this sonata was written by Robert Schumann, Albert Dietrich and Johannes Brahms.'

Joachim kept the manuscript; the Movement by Brahms was not published until over fifty years later.

DIVING can, according to the skill of the diver, be anything from a convenient way of getting into the water to a performance rivalling tight-rope walking in dexterity and ballet-dancing in grace. Mr. Coyne is a prominent member of the Amateur Diving Association—one of those people whom we have all seen on the news films doing jack-knife and swallow dives from incredible heights; in fact, he is so eminent amongst them that he will probably represent Great Britain at the Olympic Games.

Consolation, No. 3 } List
Tenth Hungarian Rhapsody }

A DETAILED note of all the numbers in the Oratorio has been given in previous issues. It will suffice now to remind listeners that the work is in three parts, and that after the Overture (in two sections, one broad and dignified, the second quicker, strong, and spirited) the first few solos and choruses in PART ONE consist of Isaiah's prophecies of the coming Messiah, this section culminating in the jubilant outburst of 'For unto us a Child is born.'

Then comes the beautiful, restful contrast of the Pastoral Symphony, an interlude preparing us for the Annunciation solos. The First Part ends with the well-loved solos 'He shall feed His flock' and 'Come unto Him, all ye that labour,' with the Chorus 'His yoke is easy.'

The opening of PART TWO speaks of the Atonement, and goes on to rejoice in the triumph of God's power—'Lift up your heads, O ye gates!' 'Who is the King of Glory? ... The Lord strong and mighty ...'

At No. 37 ('The Lord gave the word') begin the 'Missionary' sentences. 'Why do the nations' follow, and 'Thou shalt break them.' The great 'Hallelujah' Chorus concludes this part of the work.

PART THREE. After 'I know that my Redeemer liveth' comes the most dramatic part of the Oratorio. The solemn, subdued 'Since by man came death' is answered triumphantly with 'By man came also the resurrection of the dead'; similarly, 'For as in Adam all die' is answered by 'Even so in Christ shall all be made alive.'

Follows 'The trumpet shall sound,' and the solos and chorus affirming the glorious certainty of the victory over death.

The two final choruses are an ascription of praise—'Worthy is the Lamb ... Blessing and honour be unto Him.' 'Amen'

It is the Second of these Suites that will now be played. It is made up of four separate pieces. Most of the tunes in them are old English. The FIRST piece is a lively, swinging March. Two old tunes appear—Swansea Town and Cloudy Banks. The SECOND is a pensive Song Without Words. The tune is I'll love my love. The THIRD is the bluff Song of the Blacksmith. The anvil is very aggressive. The FOURTH is an exhilarating Fantasia on The Dargason, and introduces the lovely old tune Greensleeves.

THE NEW METHOD - TRICKLE CHARGING!

Trickle charging means a continuous, consistent and automatic supply of current to L.T. Accumulators.

It is far and away the surest and cheapest method. Philips Trickle Charger is the unit to use and gives a charging rate varying with the size of your battery from 150 mA to 195 mA. Philips Trickle Charger is doubly economical. Not only is the running cost almost negligible, but the size of the L.T. Battery may be reduced to a minimum. One of 3 or 4 actual ampere hours capacity is fully sufficient. Post the coupon below now for full details.

OPERA STARS AT COVENT GARDEN

Great artists are assembled at Covent Garden. They are going to broadcast to you. You will hear singers you have never heard before, and you may never hear them again. Take full advantage of your present opportunities therefore. Be sure you use pure H.T. current in your set for the forthcoming opera broadcasts—such pure D.C. current as you will get if you use the Lissen New Process Battery. You will start listening earlier—you will continue listening longer if you have a Lissen New Process Battery in your set. Because the song is clearer, the music sharp and wonderfully distinct, and you will get true light and shade in the reproduction. This fine quality lasts right through the longest programme.

No other battery gives the same fine current—the same sustained power as the Lissen Battery because in no other battery do you get the new process and new chemical combination which is used only by Lissen, and which is now such an established success that it is in practically universal use wherever fine broadcast reproduction is appreciated.

10,000 radio dealers sell the Lissen Battery—ask for it in a way that shows you will take no other.
