Improved European Listening.

New Wavelengths for British Stations on January 13.

THE RADIO TIMES attempts to keep listeners in touch with the broad outlines of what has been called the international situation. A series of six articles, entitled 'Taking Stock,' published in our columns last summer, drew attention to the fact that the most serious obstacle to the progress of wireless broadcasting was the lack of wavelengths available for broadcasting. Nothing that has happened since belies the statements made in those articles; the situation today is even worse than was anticipated last summer, and hardly a day passes without a B.B.C. station suffering interference. There is, of course, a definite policy of action to combat the growing seriousness of the problem. The three main points of the policy are as follows:—

(1) To seek, by every available means, to arrive at an agreement as to the allocation of wavelengths between all authorities responsible for the working of broadcasting stations in Europe.

(2) To frame the British system so that it gives satisfactory service to the maximum number of listeners.

(3) Out of fairness to other nations, to attempt to make the maximum use possible of the limited facilities available.

The most important of these points is probably that concerned with arriving at an agreed plan for the allocation of the 113 available wavelengths among European stations. Month by month and year by year certain of the members of the technical Committee of the Union Internationale de Radiophonie have attempted to show their colleagues that the work of the Committee should be directed towards giving the best European service. The Committee room does not, according to enlightened opinion, exist as a market place where wavelengths are sold to the highest or most persuasive bidder. Under the inspired, tireless, and suave chairmanship of M. Braillard much has been done, and, had the Committee not been formed, unimaginable chaos would now reign. Unfortunately, a few recalcitrant, mitted to the Council of the Union a plan for the allocation of wavelengths, called the Plan de Genève, which was agreed to by 80 per cent. of the stations of Europe. That plan exists today, but many new stations have grown up since March, 1926, and the plan is not working well. It became obvious last year that a new plan based upon the old was necessary. The Governments at the World Wireless Conference at Washington in 1927 cut down the total allocation of wavelengths for broadcasting, new stations grew up and new authorities clamoured for a better place than had been given to them in the original Plan de Genève; particularly the long waves were cut down at Washington, and so a new plan became imperative. It is important to realize that the original Plan de Genève took account of the situation in 1925, and although it left place for all nations, it gave the better places to those who were then working and did not, for example, force British stations to take inferior waves because Ruritania might one day want to broadcast. A place for Ruritania was left free, but it was not a good place. The new Plan, then, had to be negotiated in terms of sacrifice on the part of the pioneers who held, force priorité, a place in the sun while giving a better place than originally proposed to the newcomers. The higher the wave the better, of that there is no doubt, and it is indefensible to maintain the attitude that the powerful nations first in the field should for ever guard the lion's share. Had such a policy been adopted no agreement would be achieved and in place of agreement there would be interference. It is better to have misinformed or ignorant authorities, by refusing positively or casually to adhere to a plan, produce an apparent chaos, albeit their number is small. Discouragements are many, but persistence alone can win, and gradually the worst equipped, most casually run stations will come into line; the fact of their backsliding must not deter the enlightened from pursuing a sane and definite policy of struggling to secure agreement both in Committee and in action.

In March, 1926, the Committee sub-an agreed plan and no interference than all the best places for a few countries but wholesale interference.

After protracted negotiation there has emerged a majority agreement between the nations of Europe for a new plan called the Plan de Bruxelles. It is agreed upon not as a fixed and right plan for ever, but rather as an amicable adjustment of station wavelengths for the benefit of all. As has been indicated above, it implied sacrifices from all those unduly favoured by priority in the Plan de Genève. Britain among the rest had to give up waves.

On the previous page is tabulated the new allocation of wavelengths for Britain.

The B.B.C.'s sacrifice, in order to make this new Plan possible, has been to exchange 850 kilohertz (353 metres) for 1,230 kilohertz (243.9 metres). The change in kilohertz per station will be as under:—

Daventry 5XX	nil
Daventry 5GB	plus 12
Glasgow	8
Manchester	13
London	8
Cardiff	78
Aberdeen	384
(But gets exclusive wave.)
Belfast	11
Bournemouth	120
(And goes on to a national common.)
Newcastle	plus 270

The B.B.C. average frequency at present is 790.2 kilohertz; the new average will be 834.6 kilohertz. The mean of the European allocation is 920.

The new plan will be put into execution on January 13, 1929. The situation is so serious that immediate action is imperative, hence the absence of longer notice.

Under point (2) above is meant simply that the national systems must be based on fewer stations of higher power rather than on the present system of many stations of low power. The B.B.C., realizing the implications and possibilities of the international situation, framed proposals three years ago to meet the impending difficulties. These proposals finally became known as the Regional Scheme. Permission to go ahead with the Regional Scheme has been delayed so long that interference everywhere is now much aggravated. Had a start been made much earlier, as and when first proposed by the B.B.C., the situation need not have become as acute as it is at present. In this respect Germany has gained the reward of foresight, that country now being in a vastly superior position because of ability to act very much quicker. Today the Regional Scheme in Britain is in hand two years late.

Meanwhile under point (3) all that is possible is being done to bridge the gap between the present and the future. To this end all B.B.C. relay stations and Bournemouth will be put on a common or same national exclusive wave. It had been hoped to start this arrangement in November, but unexpected difficulty delayed the scheme. The B.B.C. will be ready, however, to start on single wavelength working early in the New Year. The delay is due solely to manufacturing difficulties. It should be remembered that the apparatus is unique and the scheme ambitious. It is impossible to foresee every difficulty; one can only generalize from experiment and say that, humanly speaking, the scheme seems bound to work.

Finally, as in the case of almost every past improvement of the service as a whole, a partial dislocation for a few listeners will be unavoidable. Previous experience encourages the hope that this will be intelligently accepted in the interests of the majority.

INFORMATION FOR MARINERS AND OTHERS.

For the benefit of those who find them useful, a table giving exact details of the Shipping Forecasts, Gale Warnings, Weather Bulletins and Time Signals broadcast daily as from 1st January, is given below, with notes appended, referring to these services.

NOTES.

- The above services are all broadcast from Daventry 5XX, which has a present wavelength of 1,362.5 Metres, or 192 Kilocycles, and a power of 25 Kilowatts.
- Gale Warnings are always repeated at the next regular time of broadcast, e.g. a gale warning broadcast at 1 p.m. is repeated at 4.45 and 6.15 p.m., and any fresh information, if received, is given at these times.
- Time Signals consist of the automatic transmission by the Standard Clock at Greenwich Observatory, of six dots, representing successive seconds. The final dot is the Time Signal. The amount of lag is less than 0.01 second. The Time Signals will, when necessary, be superimposed on programmes, but the signals will be loud enough to be easily discernible.
- Variation of some of the above services is bound to occur from time to time, in accordance with the exigencies of our programmes. The 9.30 p.m. Shipping Forecast particularly is liable to be varied, but such alteration is advertised in the RADIO TIMES and in the newspapers, and we also give microphone announcements on the previous day. Also, every morning, after the morning Shipping Forecast, we announce the time of the evening Forecast, whether it is regular or not.
- The punctuality of Gale Warnings cannot be guaranteed, but it is very rarely that they vary by more than three or four minutes.

'GOOD NIGHT, EVERYBODY—GOOD NIGHT!'

By a Lonely Listener.

THERE is something very intimate about this nightly courtesy, something that is missing from the impersonal opening announcements. 'This is London calling the British Isles' means anybody and nobody. It is abstract, incomplete. We are not expected to respond, but only to listen for what follows, while the farewell, on the other hand, demands a response and invariably gets it. Though the announcer doesn't hear it, we find ourselves involuntarily saying 'Good night'; but not after the first one; we wait for the repeat with its friendly, heart-warming inflexion.

It is delightfully personal. 'Good night, everybody'; that means me, one of the thousands of solitary listeners whose world has been made infinitely larger by the B.B.C. Were it not for this homely touch the size and range might have made it more lonely than ever. It would be so easy to fade away as we do from a concert hall or a theatre, and be lost and forgotten in the crowd. But this human way of closing makes the larger world very friendly. No other ending would do as well. Somehow the National Anthem isn't at home in the home; even the Benediction would be a dismissal; but 'good night' isn't good-bye, at least not in the way the announcer says it. He has taught us how it should be said with that subtle, sorry-to-go-but-shan't-be-gone-long sort of inflexion.

If radio has done nothing else it has, by this little friendliness, brought us into a very big brotherhood. Special items are selective. Music, science, social topics and the rest find an audience that is limited by the interest of the listeners. The topics divide us into groups and viewpoints, but the cheery 'good-night' brings us together in a final agreement. It goes not to the head but to the heart; we close on the common ground of humanity.

Thank you, Mr. Announcer, on behalf of thousands of lonesome people who have nobody to bid them good-night, whom you have made to feel that in a not too friendly world there is at least one who vocally tucks them up and hopes they will sleep well.

Good night, Mr. Announcer—good night.

FAVOURITE PROGRAMMES OF 1928.

Which Programmes have you enjoyed most this year? Do you agree with the accompanying articles on the year's programmes, which were submitted at the Editor's request by four regular listeners?

By Eric Arnold.
THE B.B.C. has arrived. The year 1928 has seen a definite establishment of standards and programmes have been on the whole more assured, more solid, and more satisfactory.

Radio artists have become familiar with the microphone and listeners no longer merely 'listen-in' to the 'wireless'; they listen to programmes.

Not the least interesting of wireless events have been several articles in The Radio Times, notably 'Savoy Hill with the Lid Off' and the technicalities without tears of Captain Eckersley. We have been led to see the difficulties and complexities which bother the producers, not that we might excuse their shortcomings, but that we might appreciate their triumphs.

But the greatest advance has been made in the production of Radio drama. From Pursuit, in January, to X, at the end of October, there has been steadily growing a real Radio drama, distinct from adaptations of stage plays and illustrated readings of novels; a drama with its own technique, its own limitations, and its own freedoms.

Pursuit, cutting clean away from all tradition foreign to its element, rushed us hither and thither, made us feel the motion of high-speed motor-cars, of aeroplanes, of the Channel, and left us wondering at its success. Except that it lacked 'soul,' a compelling reason for its production, it might have ranked with the Timon of Marlowe, that burst upon the Elizabethan audience and precluded Shakespeare.

Followed Speed, where the mechanical and ages-old device of using celestial characters to comment upon the follies of mankind redeemed what was else mere sensationalism.

Of the real Radio plays that have been broadcast since Speed, The Crossing and X stand out as significant. The Crossing took us gently from the humdrum bustle of ordinary railway travel to the mysterious realm of spirits, and gave us to think of the passage of death and the possibility of communion with the dead.

X was even more ambitious. There was more than a touch of piquancy in the theme—a radio play expressing the dangers and futilities of the mechanical progress which alone had made radio drama possible. As a play—technically—it had few faults, though some of the action inside the 'chamber of horrors' was difficult to follow. The comment—our old friend, the chorus—was well supplied in the vignettes from the lives of those who risk all for the increase of mechanical knowledge—in commerce, in motoring, and in flying.

Yet the radio drama has still to make good its promise. Technical difficulties overcome, and actors adapted, await the dramatist. X left us startled and unsatisfied. It ended abruptly, inartistically. All accidental limitations imposed by the microphone are as nothing before the genius of a real dramatist. Rampa, adapted and produced in the Spring, stands out before all the new plays, despite the awkwardness of the necessary inter-

By Gordon Oakes.

WHEN one calls to mind the programmes given by the B.B.C. during the last eleven months, when one thinks of all the silly little people who have grumbled at them so heartily, when one realizes that the broadcasting machine has become an enormous power for good or evil, one cannot but recall Nietzsche's Superman and wonder whether the species has not arrived in the shape of the Programme Department Staff. The year has shown that the individuals who control broadcasting are very alive to the importance of their job and that, despite the minor terrors of a Tory Press who imagine that broadcast may become greater than news-sheet, they will tolerate none of the baseless nonsense in the cry of 'entertainment only.'

Of all the items, the talk has had the most criticism fired at it, probably because the critics have not done full justice to the talks by listening to them properly, and more probably because the average Englishman so loathes the word 'education' that he is liable to knock one down if one mentions it—a state of things brought about by the national assumption that we know everything and are vastly superior to everybody else, a survival of pre-war thought which unfortunately is still prominent. But it is in the talk and educational policy that the sober and intelligent citizen realizes that broadcasting was not created entirely for the benefit of Mr. Art Damoise and his Ten Jacks, and the Saucy Sisters in Syncopation, excellent as those entertainers may be in their right place.

It has been said that education plays a great part in the B.B.C.'s general policy, a fact which fortunately is true, but, dear fellow listener, do not blame the B.B.C. for it because you cannot listen to Wagner or Shakespeare, or Euripides or Goethe, without being educated while listening. All great art is essentially didactic; and during 1928 we have been treated to a number of great works of art by the Promenade Concerts, Opera, and the commencement of the Great Play series. But the balance has been maintained admirably, the variety broadcasts for the most part having been good and the dance music, when provided by Mr. Jack Payne's band, excellent.

ruptions. The cry of the 'bear-man' was probably even more effective from the loud-speaker than it would be on the stage.

Perhaps the radio dramatist may be influenced by the debates. When the topic is important and the debaters speak clearly, as in the Benn v. Maxton debate, nothing more is necessary to rouse the emotions of the audience—to anger, contempt, excitement, and pity. But unfortunately the end is exasperation. The dramatist who can stage a debate that will lead to a soothing or a purging of the emotions thus roused will have done his work.

In comedy and light relief the most assured success was probably Charlot's Hour. Uncle André developed such a personal manner that, almost unconsciously, one began to mark off Thursday evening as engaged. Of Tommy Handley the only thing to be wished is that the amusement of his companions in the studio might be restrained so that the audience might catch all the jokes.

Personal References.

YOU are a clever man,' writes a lady in Lincolnshire, 'and I expect there are very few of your readers who can understand the symbolism of the Dogsbody fable. Dogsbody, of course, represents the Devil and the Powers of Evil. A "bird-seed factor" you call him; the seeds he scatters are seeds of Revolution and Discontent. You, yourself, as his bitter opponent, stand for Good. A few of us here in Lincolnshire are grateful for this twentieth century "Pilgrim's Progress." When we are alone we refer to you as "The Bunyan of Broadcasting." This is the way aspiring authors are ruined. I had no idea that I was 'The Bunyan of Broadcasting.' I am afraid that I shall never be able to forget my devoted public in Lincolnshire; my style will become self-conscious; I shall end up by writing like Gertrude Stein.

Strange Instruments.

IF you listen to the Indian programme, sponsored by the India Society, which is being broadcast from London on Friday, January 11, you will hear several strange instruments of music. Part of the programme is to consist of Indian music played on the instruments for which it was composed—the sarangi (a sort of viola with three strings played with a bow), the sitar (the instrument of Bengal, seven strings and plucked with the fingers), and the tabla (a small drum, held, when sitting, in the crook of the knee). The sarangi is played for dancing and is, therefore, of low caste among instruments. The rest of the programme will include a recital of Indian folk songs, a reading of poems by Rabindranath Tagore, and a talk on 'Life in India' by Edward Thompson, author of 'An Indian Day,' etc. Several distinguished Indians, resident in London, will take part. Lord Ronaldshay, who is introducing the programme, will be remembered by listeners for his admirable talk on the late Lord Curzon.

Vaudeville.

FORTHCOMING Vaudeville programmes will include Hilda Glyder (January 7), Wish Wynne, John Henry, The Three Irresponsibles, and Yvette Darnac (January 8), Jack Morrison and Clarice Mayne (January 12). Wish Wynne has just published a book of verses and short stories with the characteristic title of 'Ere!' (Skeffington, 3s. 6d.).

'Brother Wolf.'

ON Sunday afternoon, January 6, the University, College Dramatic Society will broadcast from our London Studio Brother Wolf one of Laurence Housman's 'Little Plays of St. Francis.'

BOTH SIDES OF THE MICROPHONE

Compton Mackenzie in 'Carnival.'

A FEW weeks ago I mentioned in these notes that it was hoped soon to be able to broadcast a play by Compton Mackenzie. This hope has, I am happy to say, been realized. On January 8 (5GB) and 9 (other Stations) we are to hear a radio version of Mr. Mackenzie's famous novel 'Carnival.' The book has been adapted by the author himself, in collaboration with Holt Marvell. The method used is, I understand, similar to that of Cecil Lewis's Lord Jim; that is, of narrative fading into dramatic dialogue, though in the case of Carnival there will be much less spoken story. Compton Mackenzie himself is to take part in the production. He will be heard as Michael Fane, who tells the story. The participation of so famous a novelist in a dramatic version of his most popular book is no small landmark in the history of broadcasting. As to Mr. Mackenzie's prowess as an actor, we need have no doubts as to that. He comes of a famous theatrical family (which has in our own time given us Fay and Ellen Compton), and before the war played, in New York, the part of Maurice Avery in Columbine, the stage version of 'Carnival.' The play which we are to hear on January 8 and 9 bears no resemblance in construction to Columbine. It will tell the story of Jenny Raeburn in the same sequence as the novel, taking the form of some sixty scenes from her life. A young actress has been specially chosen to play the leading part; in Jenny she has the chance of a lifetime (as far, at least, as broadcasting is concerned).

The Story of Jenny.

ICAN think of no story more suited to broadcasting than 'Carnival.' I read the book on its publication in 1912, and have re-read it many times since then. In Jenny Raeburn its author created one of the most living and delightful characters in all fiction. I understand that 'Carnival' is still a 'best-seller.' There is little to wonder at in this, for among the wan and blasé heroines of today Jenny, with her gay slang, her unquenchable love of life, her so-thin protective armour of cynicism, her fugitive happiness and her final tragedy, stands out as vivid and impalpable as a daffodil among orchids. Her history, crowded with characters, belongs to before the war, though it is none the less enchanting when we read it today. In their work of creating a radio play, the authors have had the assistance of an intensely 'atmospheric' story. The dancing-school, the pantomime, the ballet, the studio in Grosvenor Road, the sea-shore in Cornwall make a background for the tale, full of music and dancing, laughter, and the sound of the sea. A tragi-comedy of youth as youth was before the war. After the appearance of 'Carnival' and 'Sinister Street,' Henry James wrote to their author: 'You have emancipated the English novel.' There is all the surprised happiness of a new freedom in those early Mackenzie novels, the development of which into a saga which would have outstripped Mr. Galsworthy's in size and scope was interrupted by the war and has not since been renewed.

Contemporary Music.

THE next recital of 'The Contemporary Chamber Music' season will be relayed from the Arts Theatre Club, Great Newport Street, on Monday evening, January 7. This will be given by Steuermann, the pianist, and Claire Croiza, soprano. Details of their programme have not yet reached me.

The Sunday League.

THE London Palladium, which has during the last few weeks given us Jackie Coogan, Van and Schenk, Naughton and Gold, and other variety acts, is to give us on Sunday afternoon, January 6, the first National Sunday League Concert ever broadcast. The work and history of the League is familiar to most Londoners, but for the benefit of those who are not acquainted with them, let me append a very brief account. The National Sunday League was founded in 1855 by the late Mr. R. M. Morrell, its original object being to agitate for the Sunday opening of museums, art galleries, and libraries. Having achieved this, the League devoted its energies to the promotion of Sunday recreation—including concerts and excursions to the seaside. Its principal concerts today are held at the Palladium, though on Sunday evenings it also gives concerts in twenty-one London halls. The large proportion of the League's income goes to charity. Membership is open to everybody, the minimum subscription being 2s. 6d. per annum. Londoners owe a great deal to the National Sunday League. The programme on January 6 will consist of an orchestral concert by the New Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Malcolm Sargent, with Prince George Chavchavadze, solo pianist.

'The Food of Love.'

COMPOSERS of almost every nationality have written incidental music to, and settings of the songs in, Shakespeare's plays. Thus Shakespearean music will form the subject of a programme entitled, 'The Food of Love,' which will be broadcast from London on Monday, January 7. The composers represented are Sullivan, Humperdinck, Balakirev, German, Mendelssohn, Vaughan Williams, and Quilter. The 'incidental music' will be played by the Wireless Orchestra, and the songs sung by David Hutchinson.

Of Syncopation—and Bowler Hats.

IAM not one of those who dislike, or disapprove of, modern dance music. It seems to me full of rhythm and, as orchestrated by Jack Payne, humour. There are one or two mysteries of the profession which still puzzle me. Why, for instance, to achieve a particular wailing note, was it necessary to dress your saxophone in a gilt bowler hat? Was there any special musical virtue in a bowler, or was it merely 'correct wear'? Did French saxophonists use top hats, Egyptians fez, Hawaiians crowns of hibiscus blossom? Was it done to raise your saxophone's bowler hat when you met a lady also carrying a saxophone? Did saxophones go to bed in their hats? Pen, halt! About turn! At 8.30 on Tuesday, January 8, Billy Mayerl, with the B.B.C. Dance Orchestra, will give an illustrated talk on 'How to Play Syncopated Music.'

'Correct wear!'

Strange Saturdays.

ON Saturday evening, January 12, Holt Marvell is to tell the first of a series of light-hearted stories entitled 'Six Strange Saturdays.' Mr. Marvell, author of 'Husks in May' and 'The Passionate Clowns,' and part-author of the radio play The Crossing, is also partly responsible for next month's dramatization of Compton Mackenzie's novel 'Carnival' (see opposite page). Saturday is a strange day. Statistics show that on Saturdays the consumption of winkles rises 25 per cent. and the vitality of men engaged in manufacturing rocking-horses is at its lowest.

'Manufacturing rocking horses.'

For the Miners.

WHATEVER our views on politics and economics, we cannot but be moved by the distressed condition of the miners in certain areas where the pits are closed. Some of these men have not been able to find work for two years or more. Many families are starving. The winter promises to be a hard one. Last April the then Lord Mayor of London, Sir Charles Batho, opened a fund for providing the wives and children of these men with warm clothing, etc., and to facilitate the transfer of lads to other parts of the country where work could be found for them. A subscription list of £100,000 was headed by their Majesties the King and Queen. This money had all been spent by the time the present Lord Mayor took office. Sir Kynaston Studd has opened a new fund to which their Majesties have again subscribed. On Sunday evening, January 6, he will make an appeal for contributions to this. Donations should be sent, addressed to him, to the Mansion House, London. Here is a cause which needs no recommendation.

Rameau and Gluck.

AN orchestral concert of music by Rameau and Gluck (5GB, Thursday, January 10) should be specially interesting, for Gluck was Rameau's successor as a composer of popular operas. Both adorned the eighteenth century, and were educated by the Jesuits. Gluck was trained from earliest years as a musician; Rameau had first to fight his parents' intention of making him a magistrate. Rameau subscribed to the purely artificial convention of opera; in which the story was a mere excuse for fireworks from the prima donna; Gluck revolutionized opera by making 'music drama' of it (earlier in the year we heard his Armida broadcast).

Songs by Strauss.

NEXT week's 'Foundations of Music' recitals will consist of songs by Richard Strauss, sung by Keith Faulkner. These songs match those of Schubert, Schumann and Wolf in beauty.

'What is a Good Novel?'

OUR article by Mrs. M. A. Hamilton on 'What is a Good Novel?' aroused great interest. One fiery gentleman, I see, from our Letter Page of this week, objected strongly to the editorial recommendations of 'Jew Süss,' 'Jude the Obscure' and 'Madame Bovary,' which he understands from reference to the newspapers, are 'repulsive and immoral in tendency.' Where great art is concerned, it is just as well 'not to believe all you see in the papers.' Mrs. Hamilton tells me that she has received many inquiries as to the authors and publishers of the half-dozen novels which she recommended in her article. For the information of those interested they are: 'Against the Sun,' by Godfrey Elton (Constable); 'St. Christopher's Day,' by Martin Armstrong (Gollancz); 'The Silver Flame,' by James Hilton (Butterworth); 'General Crack,' by George Preedy (Lane); 'Red Rust,' by Cornelia Cannon (Hodder); and 'Charlotte Löwensköld,' by Selma Lagerlöf (Werner Laurie).

—And Some New Novels.

ON December 12, Mrs. Hamilton reviewed the following: 'The Crime and the Confessor,' by Horace G. Hutchinson (Murray); 'Hogmanay,' by Christine Orr (Hodder); 'Show Girl,' by J. P. McEvoy (Brentano); 'The Transgressor,' by Anthony Richardson (Constable); 'Pilgrims of Adversity,' by William McFee (Heinemann); 'The General's Ring,' by Selma Lagerlöf (Werner Laurie); 'The New Temple,' by Johan Bojer (Hodder).

The 'Rider Haggard Touch.'

THE history of Nyasaland, our Central African Protectorate, is bound up with the names of Dr. Alexander Hetherwick and Dr. Robert Lort, two Scottish missionaries. Dr. Hetherwick, who is to give a missionary talk, S.B. from Aberdeen, on Sunday January 6, started work in Central Africa in 1883. His first job on arriving in that then savage territory was to act as mediator in a bow-and-arrow battle between two villages. He witnessed fierce warfare between the Yao and Angeni tribes. It was he who distributed to the natives the first seeds of the tea-plant—from which Nyasaland's most prosperous industry has sprung. His has been one of those most devoted and romantic careers connected with the exploration and development of dark Africa.

O'Donnell's Men.

THE Wireless Military Band, under B. Walton O'Donnell, will broadcast three concerts next week: from 5GB on Monday, January 7 (with Wateyn Wateyns, and Antonio Pini, the 'cellist); from London on Wednesday, January 9 (with Eileen Pileher and Walter Glynn); and Saturday, January 12 (with Suzanne Bertin and Joseph Farrington).

Rugger Commentary from Wales.

IT is always encouraging to find that the ban against broadcasting has fallen in yet another quarter. Hitherto, the Welsh Rugby Union has not permitted the broadcasting of commentaries on their 'home' matches. I now hear that their objection has been withdrawn and that we are to hear, on February 2, an account of the Wales v. Scotland International at Swansea. This news will be welcomed by Rugger enthusiasts all over the country who, for various reasons, may not be able to make the trek to South Wales.

Moonshine and Pretty Language.

ON January 15 and 16 comes the fifth of the Great Plays, Rostand's The Fantasticks. This delicate and artificial comedy was its author's first play. Better known to our English public are his Cyrano de Bergerac, L'Aiglon ('The Eaglet'), and Chanticleer. Edmond Rostand was the arch-Romantic. To him life and the theatre were worlds apart, without connection; the creation of a character, like the creation of a play, a matter of pure artifice. He was the only Romantic of a generation which produced Ibsen and Strindberg. Wit, good manners, romance and colour counted for all; realism was not in question. This fantastic tale of the neighbours, Bergamin and Pasquin, who simulated a quarrel in order to add fuel to the passion of their son and daughter, and when that passion was declared, became so bored with the young people's air of romance, that they revealed the plot, is pure moonshine and pretty language. But the microphone favours moonshine and pretty language, and The Fantasticks is likely, therefore, to be not the least successful of the Great Play productions.

A Hallé Concert.

ON January 10, a Hallé Concert will be relayed from Manchester. Sir Hamilton Harty's programme on this occasion will include Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony, Svendsen's Carnival in Paris, and the great Brahms' Violin Concerto in D (soloist, Arthur Catterall). At the same concert Eric Fogg, a member of the staff at our Manchester Station, will conduct his own work, June Twilight.

A Cautionary Poem.

LAST Christmas we published a brief anthology of poems inspired by broadcasting. 1928 however, seems to have produced no addition to that slender, though charming, collection—except the 'Cautionary Poem' by a Dulwich boy which his mother recently sent me. This naïve masterpiece begins:—

'Once there was a girl called Kate
Who always used to oscillate.
Discontented oft was she
With 2LO and 5GB.'

'Her oscillation annoyed the neighbours.'

and goes on to relate how, Kate's oscillation annoying the neighbours,

'They seized her in their righteous ire
And hanged her from her aerial wire.
And now the bones of nasty Kate
The neighbours' dogs do masticate.'

The last two lines have the stark brutality of really great art.

"The Announcer"

One of the most interesting items during the year was Mr. Cecil Lewis' play, The Night Fighters, which indicated quite clearly that an art form may very soon develop under the title of Radio Drama. Apart from the fact that this play was beautifully done, it must have been one of the finest pieces of peace propaganda the nation had received for some time, and it seems that it only remains for some mercenarily disinterested genius to arise to make the radio play an immense medium for good.

The Shaw-Chesterton debate was undoubtedly the most interesting and important debate ever broadcast, even if only for the fact that Mr. Shaw speaks English not quite like anybody else for its beauty, and G. K. C. is one of the most picturesque men in the land.

That the controversy ban had been lifted was poignantly evident, for the Shavian thunder at the Postmaster-General seemed to send one's 'anti-pong' valve-holders into a fit of violent mechanical oscillation.

Those programmes which have been bad have been monstrously bad, but only in so far as individuals are concerned. There is always the possibility of a bad turn in a variety broadcast as there is in the fact that one of the juvenile 'leads' in a revue may possess sickeningly thick ankles and a too positively hideous face.

But whether one is the owner of a cat's whisker and a piece of graphite or of fifteen L.S. 5a's in parallel, with a moving-coil loud-speaker in every room in the house, one is forced to admit that for ten shillings (you may, of course, gentle reader, be a scoundrel and not have paid your licence fee) a year the B.B.C. has provided the finest symphonies, the finest vocal music, the very best of a bad job in jazz, and the best procurable authorities on their particular subjects for the talks.

In short, a standard has been set which superficially may seem didactic but which in truth means art and knowledge before entertainment, thereby tending to instill an appreciation of a higher cultural level—to the great benefit of the millions of listeners and the nation as a whole.

By David Edge.

THIS year has not been specially noted for any startling developments in the Broadcasting Service—great improvements in any direction are possible only where the general standard of quality is low, but where it is already on a quite high plane, such improvement as can be made is necessarily of a less perceptible nature.

We take as commonplaces the excellent outside broadcasts and commentaries of sporting events, such as the Cup Final, and the Gene Tunney—Tom Heeney Fight, which were of superlative interest to us who had to stay at home. What need then had we of newspapers, when we could follow the match kick by kick, and the fight blow by blow? Alas for our patriotism! The White Rose wilted, and Tommy's nose soon became, literally, a bloody mess.

Full-length radio plays have won on their merits during this past year an important and welcome place in the programmes. The Mayor of Casterbridge was great, and Kaleidoscope interesting as an experiment. X was a successful thriller, and The Greater Power was also supposed to grip us.

In music, we have had almost everything from My Blue Heaven, which sounds like a wet day in 'digs' at the seaside, to the Hallé and Promenade Concerts, which even to a musical barbarian, have appeared exceptionally 'popular.'

An outstanding feature has been the failure, in many cases, of the variety hall artists and producers to put across anything of great entertainment value, although Charlot, in his weekly 'Hour,' did have one consistently good feature in his 'Limericks.' The variety stars may twinkle brightly enough where they can be seen, but often their lack of 'microphone personality' has shown that their chief claim to inclusion in the programmes has been in their names and reputations—that is, their stage reputations!

The converse has been true of the radio variety turns, which generally have amused, this being probably due to the fact that they have won to success solely via the microphone, and if they had been 'du.d' they would have 'flopped' long ago.

The 'Surprise Item' has been a pleasing innovation, and if it has not always appealed—well, it would be a very surprising 'Surprise Item' if it did.

The controversial matter, introduced chiefly in the form of debates, has not proved really exciting, and this is, perhaps, due to the present-day blasé attitude of people who are not very enthusiastic even about themselves.

The talks have been of a high standard throughout, assuming that only those of personal interest have been listened to—and the range has surely been wide enough, extending from 'Stamp Collecting' to 'Finance in the Modern World.' In 'Ourselves as Others See Us,' M. Theodore Komisarjevsky was delightful, and Mr. Ratcliffe in 'America Today' helped us to understand the people and institutions of a land of such cities as Boston and Chicago.

At one time we were even treated to 'Foundations of Poetry,' which was, naturally, a Sunday afternoon item. Why is it that poetry needs, as evidently it does, a 'greenery-gallery' voice to do it justice? Why not try the Hyde Park orator style of declamation for a change? Or is this plea another unfortunate indication that we in the rude and crude North are not quite—well 'not quite'?

The best aspect of all of the programmes, however, is that it is we listeners who determine what they shall be. We can 'barge' into the studio with no more trouble than is entailed in clicking on the control switch of our set, and when we are 'fed-up' we can go home as easily.

By Alfred Dunning.

NOT long ago The Radio Times published a suggestion which I have half a mind to carry out next year. This was that listeners should keep diaries of the year's broadcasts, noting 'all-wireless thrills, memorable events and plays,' and recording the talks, sayings and jokes with their authors' or perpetrators' names.

Now if I had kept such a log this year, my business of reminiscing would have been easy. A few pages torn out and printed would have served. For the truth is, the B.B.C. has allowed no week to pass without broadcasting at least one item into memory.

But I am no-keeper of logs. To take one of the Yuletide variety, to put it on the fire, turn off the light and turn the studio, is my only concern with them. That, with modifications, is the way I have done my listening this year. In the year's radio stream, I have, if I may be allowed the pun,

WHAT THE OTHER LISTENER THINKS.

The Editor welcomes expression of opinion from listeners. He is always prepared to print on this page forceful extracts from any letters received. Reasoned appreciation or criticism is assured of a place here.

I FAIL to see how the advent of a Radio Bishop would help. Much could be said for, of course, and much against. The wireless audience is too large and varied for the one-man preacher to be a success. The eloquent sermon would be welcome and appreciated by some; to others it might not be understood, and therefore uninteresting.—E. E., St. Neots.

I WISH to utter a strong protest against any such project as a Bishop of Broadcasting—of a one-man preacher. There are thousands among your listeners who belong to every possible phase of religious thought. Why should they all be tied to hear only one aspect of truth?—E. J. S., Colchester.

YOUR article, 'Should there be a Bishop of Broadcasting'—an excellent idea, and an excellent man to be the one in charge—'Dick Sheppard'.—E. R. C., London, S.W.17.

A misnomer (whether in name or fact) implies, as the Rev. John Mayo admits, 'The Church.' Would you willingly cut off all the other sects, denominations and undenominational Christians?—K. S., Fakenham, Norfolk.

I HAVE had rheumatoid arthritis for thirty years, and you may imagine what broadcasting means to me, as I am in bed. I am not discontented though things are sometimes very difficult, and I cultivate happiness. It is better, surely, to be broadminded and to listen to different views than to have a Bishop of Broadcasting.—G. A. W., Tilford.

R. T. H. is surely wrongly thinking about Armistice Day. The horrors of war should not be forgotten, but remembered. A lesson forgotten has to be re-taught. Can we afford, mentally or morally, to forget? The B.B.C. will never, I hope, help us to forget, but rather the reverse.—R. J. R., Trowbridge.

HAVING read the items in The Radio Times, 'What the Other Listener Thinks,' we wish to pass our opinion. My father, sister, and myself all think the programmes are perfect. With regards the broadcast from the Cenotaph on Armistice Day, although we lost a near and dear relative, we listened to it from beginning to end, and thought it just splendid.—C., Ulverston.

I NOTICE in your issue of November 16, page 435, that Mr. Scholes says, 'If things were as they should be our this year's commemoration would be carried out in our country under the direction of an enthusiastic special committee of the National Union of Teachers.' I think it only right to inform you that a Schubert Commemoration Festival was carried out by the London Schoolmasters' Association at the Memorial Hall on November 10, 1928.—S. TAYLOR, Hon. Sec., Treasurer and Conductor of Festival, 56, Casewick Road, West Norwood.

I READ your article, 'What the Other Listener Thinks,' every week with interest, but I have not yet seen a request letter for Wurlitzer Organ music from one of the broadcasting cinemas, to be given in the evening.—W. C. P., Meltham, near Huddersfield.

WITH reference to recent correspondence regarding speakers on the wireless, a large number of people here, about twenty-two, decided to take a vote and see the result. Each person was asked to write the names of the four persons he or she considered possessed the most agreeable and interesting manner in speaking on the wireless. I here give you the result in order of votes: Two of the Announcers, Mr. C. E. Hodges and Mr. Vernon Bartlett. When asked to vote for a lady speaker eight voted for Dame Rachel Crowley. I hope this little experiment will prove interesting to you. We live in a remote country place in Ireland and feel thankful for wireless. No one in a city can realize what wireless means to us, and I think they should be very slow to criticize the B.B.C. when they consider what a blessing it is rendering to humanity.

I KNOW that heaps of listeners like the classical music, but when we have the good old choruses and marching songs it cheers many a working-class home, and listeners in our bar quite enjoy it.—L. W., Bagshot.

Of Dance Music—In General and on Sundays.

A Selection from Listeners' Replies to Recently Published Letters.

I DON'T expect the B.B.C. to broadcast dance music from 12 a.m. until 12 p.m. as some listeners would like them to. I think it would be a wise thing if some of the listeners did not study themselves quite so much, as there are thousands of others to be pleased. I have now taken out my fourth licence and have always derived the greatest of pleasure.—E. A. F., Farnham.

IN reply to C. R. T., Petersfield, may I remind him that thousands of listeners turn on their sets when dance music commences. Also how does C. R. T. know that the majority objects to dance music? I cannot see why broadcasting dance music on Sunday should be any worse than playing tennis or golf on that day. What about the thousands of motorists who go out for pleasure on Sundays? Is that out of place? Let C. R. T. and E. N. J.—the latter was merely amusing in his remarks—and others be more tolerant. I am sure the weekly programmes could not be arranged better to suit the majority than they are today.—J. A. B., Oxford.

WITH reference to a recent letter appearing in The Radio Times signed R.W., and appealing for brighter music on Sundays, he quoted the Continental stations. I wonder if he tuned in Berlin last Sunday, November 25?

Berlin, Königsplatz.

5.0 Talk: 'Forgotten German Graves.'

5.30 Talk: 'Death and Dying as Comprehended by the People.'

6.0 Memorial Service.

Berlin, Voxhaus.

3.0 p.m. 'Wreaths and Flowers in Cemeteries.'

4.0 Recitations: 'When Great Men Die.'

6.0 Talk: 'Death in German Folk Superstitions.'

Carry on with the good work. If anyone doesn't like the English Sunday programmes, then he must buy a valve set and tour Europe.—E. D. H., Leeds.

PRAY pander a little to the thousands of young people of England and have less boring Scot 'comedians' and more syncopation.—R. S., London, W.1.

I BEG to protest against the recommendation as a 'good book' on page 587 of The Radio Times of 'Jude the Obscure,' 'Madame Bovary,' and 'Jew Süss,' without any indication of the kind of book each is, apart from artistic or literary merits. I read 'Jew Süss,' and was disgusted. The other two I have not touched, having understood from references to them in newspapers, etc., that they were repulsive and immoral in tendency. Yet you allow them to be recommended to your immense number of readers, simple and ignorant, young and old, of all classes and degrees of susceptibilities!—F. E., London, N.W.6.

I PLEAD for 'gramophoned' opera at least once a week, not to fill in an odd half-hour but as the principal part of the evening programme. (If we cannot bring the mountain to Mahomet, etc.) The present gramophone broadcasts from 21.0 do not enter into the question, of course. These are reviews—just as a newspaper gives book or theatre reviews. And what applies to Grand Opera applies equally to some of the world's best orchestras (Philadelphia, Berlin, etc.).

READING the different opinions of listeners in The Radio Times on the subject of the B.B.C. programmes, I thought it might be interesting to readers to know what we think in Switzerland about this matter. I am not intending to fight with R. W. of Chelsea whether dance music should be played on Sundays; I just want to give you an idea of what Swiss people are talking about English broadcasting, sitting round a loudspeaker on a cold winter evening. My loudspeaker could tell you that about eighty per cent. of all the music he is playing is coming from England. There is no doubt that the programmes of the B.B.C. are not to be beat by any of the Continental stations. Apart from the programmes, the purity of the sounds, the modulation is perfect. I like your concerts, your talks, as well as your vaudeville; and whatever I hear from England, it is always worth the great power you put in your station aeriols. We appreciate especially your good classical music; we appreciate it perhaps more than your English listeners. Regarding the B.B.C. programmes, I would call England the most musical country; but as I know England personally, and I have read all the protests against the good music, I know it is not quite so.—R. WEISBROD, Affoltern, a/A., Switzerland.

IN a great many cases, all that one hears in a classical orchestral concert (with due respect to certain compositions and their composers) is a rasping ferment of trumpets, strings and, if I may say it, hacksaws, at certain intervals blaring out into a horrible crescendo, which gives a most remarkable imitation of a moonlight sonata by the neighbours' cats. Give me a Dance Band first!—F. H. S., Market Harborough.

I HEARTILY dislike the empty brazen nonsense which, in 1928, passes for dance music. 'Dancing' and 'dance-music' should be synonymous with 'grace and charm.' Jazz possesses neither. Weekdays or Sundays, it is an intrusion on the programmes.—G. R. N., Purley.

GIVE us peace on Sundays. If you must make an innovation, let it take the form of light music at lunch time.—E. M., Battersea.

Round and About the Programmes.

ENGLAND'S LAST TRIAL.

On Saturday afternoon, January 5, Captain H. B. T. Wakelam is to give, from Twickenham, a commentary on the trial match, England v. the Rest. This is the last trial before the Rugby Internationals begin.

ENGLAND'S Rugby Union goes team-building again on Saturday at Twickenham. Captain H. B. T. Wakelam will be there with his enthusiasm and a B.B.C. microphone.

It is the last trial—England versus the Rest—before the International matches begin, as we say, in earnest. But these Trials are just as much 'in earnest.' You can follow them year in, year out with as great a zest as ever you bring to the tournament of the five nations itself. A player's life in first-class Rugby has in these fast-moving days become so short. The University Blue of today is the International of tomorrow, and in his turn the International of today is the touch-judge of tomorrow. So the wheel swings round, and thus each year all lovers of the game regard the 'young entry' at the National Trials with a special eye. It is in these games that the Selectors seek for that type of football genius which, for want of a better word, we call 'class.'

And in these years there is plenty of 'class' in England's Rugby—and, indeed, in the sides of all the five countries. The new speed of movement and the new emphasis on tactics makes this the Rugby era of youth and enterprise. Some still say that you cannot put an old 'Rugger' head on young shoulders—but then who wants to? The Selectors search at the Trials for dash and verve, and that strong, unselfish individualism which blends a National side, into a great attacking force.

Thus it will happen at Twickenham, on Saturday, that some of the old guard who have fought England's battles so well during recent years, will be every bit as much on their mettle as many of the newcomers—England's side does not pick itself nowadays when there is such plenitude of Rugby talent. Here and there, of course, the obvious may be made yet more plain. C. D. Aarvold, of Cambridge, for example, is the greatest centre three-quarter in the game today. Whatever else may happen, we shall see him again this year as the main inspiration (by precept and example) in England's attack. One special point of interest on Saturday will be to see how his thrustful partner on the right wing—R. W. Smeddle—performs in this more exalted company.

The other half of the three-quarter line is a more tentative affair. In the end it may be G. M. Sladen and H. P. Jacob. Perhaps the pace of W. Wallace may bring him back into the National side. Perhaps some other may arise to gain distinction and a 'Cap' on this day. Captain Wakelam's account of the three-quarter play will be vastly illuminating.

Then there are the 'halves.' Arthur Young retains his exuberance at the base of the scrum. He has the figure of the true inside-half. You must picture for yourself, as you listen to the match, his stocky figure weaving in and out of the game. He has the art of always being where least expected. He has the knack of exploiting 'the blind side,' and of making the illusive cut through. Indeed, it is Young's very capacity for surprise which creates one difficulty. In the old days (for, as I have said, six years since are 'old days' in modern Rugby) of the great Kershaw and Davies partnership the method was different and the problem did not arise. Here was a perfect partnership whereby Kershaw dominated the scene through sheer strength, and always Davies was there waiting exactly where he was wanted. The more tempestuous Young has found no such partner. Thus the fly-half position remains open.

Forward, perhaps, there is not much need to worry. There are some grand warriors left from other years who are still full of vigour and fight. Then, let us hope, some members of that splendid Oxford 'pack' who made such a gallant fight of it in the 'Varsity match will be given a chance. By way of leader there is still R. Cove-Smith—as dour and militant a scrummager as Rugby has ever seen. There are others who have formed down with him in a dozen International games of the past—folk like the hard-working H. G. Periton of Lancashire and J. S. Tucker, as good a 'hooker' as the modern school has produced, for he has an aptitude for using both his speed and his weight. For all that, there are vacancies in the pack, and you will be listening specially on this afternoon for the names of any forwards that Captain Wakelam may tell you are playing specially well.

WHAT IS WHITEFIELD'S?

A Service is to be relayed from Whitefield's Tabernacle, Tottenham Court Road, on Sunday evening next. This is the story of the historic church, told by Mr. H. E. Gaze, Secretary of the Whitefield's Mission.

THE great religious revival of the eighteenth century is forever associated with the names of John and Charles Wesley and George Whitefield. The Wesleys have perpetuated their name in connection with the Wesleyan denomination. John Wesley was a great organizer as well as preacher. Whitefield, probably the greatest pulpit orator this country has produced, was a preacher, the flaming evangelist whose influence was perhaps a predominating factor in the first instance, but he founded no sect. After attracting great crowds to the London churches, Whitefield preached in the open air in Moorfields (then an open space just outside Moorgate) to vast congregations, and as a result, founded the Moorfields Tabernacle, now demolished but still existing as a church in Leonard Street. He then preached in Long Acre, but the continuous and violent opposition experienced compelled him to go afield, and in 1756 he was granted a 70 years' lease, by Earl Fitzroy, of a piece of ground near the 'Crab and Walnut Tree,' in the open country, on what is now known as Tottenham Court Road. The illustration on page 866 shows the adjoining farm buildings. The church was a large square building of the simplest character. It soon proved too small for the great congregations. On one occasion Queen Charlotte, passing to her carriage, noticed the crowds waiting in the rain, and herself joined in the subscriptions for the erection of a large addition, which was made three years later, when the building accommodated 5,000 persons, and was the largest Nonconformist Church in England. It was known as Tottenham Court Chapel, and is perpetuated in the great Institutional Church, familiarly known today as 'Whitefield's Tabernacle.' In this church George Whitefield preached with wonderful eloquence, and gathered not only the multitude of the common people, but many illustrious visitors. Lord Chesterfield, on one occasion, listened spellbound as Whitefield described a blind man nearing the edge of a cliff in imminent danger, and at last exclaimed audibly 'My God! he will fall over!'

Whitefield laid the foundation stone of the church in November, 1756. The building collapsed about 40 years ago, and when the present church was erected, the stone relaid by Dr. Parker, then at the City Temple, was replaced where it may now be seen on Tottenham Court Road.

At the beginning of his career Whitefield acted as chaplain in the then new Colony of Georgia, and there founded an Orphanage, which was the centre of his work, and collecting funds for this, he travelled all over England and throughout the United States, making in all thirteen voyages across the Atlantic. He died just after preaching at Newburyport, Mass., where his remains are buried beneath the pulpit of the church.

During his frequent absences in America, the pulpit in Tottenham Court Road was occupied by Toriel Joss, a sea captain, whose preaching gifts had been recognized by Whitefield, and he became a worthy successor. Thereafter, for fifty years, the minister was the Rev. Matthew Wilks, one of the founders of the London Missionary Society. On the expiry of the original lease, the Church was dissolved in 1862, and was then reopened under the aegis of the London Congregational Union, and the association it had hitherto held with the Tabernacle at Moorfields was discontinued.

Among the many notable ministers since that time have been Dr. Ll. Bevan, afterwards Principal of Adelaide University, and the Rev. J. Jackson Wray, who for eleven years drew crowded congregations, but the building collapsed in 1889, and temporary erections were used until it was rebuilt in 1898. Three years later, the Rev. C. Silvester Horne, M.A., M.P., undertook the Superintendence of the work, and Mr. W. H. Brown erected a large institutional building in the rear, which has since been the centre of one of the most vigorous and progressive social and religious efforts in London.

Among many relics of interest preserved in the church are the pulpit from which Whitefield preached, and from which John Wesley preached his funeral sermon; a chair, cabinet, and Communion table, used by Whitefield—a chair belonging to Augustus Toplady, and memorial tablets of much interest.

HOME, HEALTH AND GARDEN

A weekly page of special interest to the housewife and the home gardener.

Cakes, Puddings, and Timely Hints.

Scotch Bun.

Ingredients for Paste: 6ozs. lard or margarine; 1lb. flour; 1 large tablespoon baking powder; pinch of salt.

Ingredients for Filling: 1lb. currants; 2lbs. seedless raisins; 1lb. flour; 6ozs. Demerara sugar; 1lb. mixed peel; 2ozs. almonds; 1/2 teaspoonful ground cloves; 1 teaspoonful cinnamon; 1 teaspoonful ground ginger; 1 teaspoonful pepper; 1/2 nutmeg grated; 2 teaspoonfuls baking powder; 1 gill milk.

Method for making Scotch Bun: First make your paste. Rub lard into flour, then add baking powder and salt. Mix to a stiff dough with cold water. Roll out thinly and line a greased baking tin with it, reserving enough of it to make a lid, to cover the cake.

For the Filling: Mix all dry ingredients together then pour in milk and beat all together, until it is thoroughly mixed.

Put this filling into your pastry-lined tin and cover with the piece of paste left over for a lid. Prick the top well with a fork before putting into oven.

Bake for 2 1/2 hours in a moderate oven. This cake will keep for months if stored in an airtight tin.

Mother Eve's Pudding.

1 breakfast cup of suet; 1 breakfast cup of breadcrumbs; 1 breakfast cup of Demerara sugar; 1 breakfast cup of apples cut into dice; 1 breakfast cup of chopped raisins, sultanas and currants (mixed); 3 eggs; a little grated lemon peel and nutmeg.

Mix all ingredients together and steam for four hours in a buttered mould.

No moisture is required for this pudding as the juice of apples supplies it. Service with white or custard sauce.

Baked Cabbage.

Cut a medium-sized cabbage into quarters, cook rapidly for 15 minutes in boiling salted water—without covering. Drain and chop finely, season with salt and pepper.

Make a white sauce, using 1 1/2 cupsful of milk and 2 tablespoonfuls each of flour and margarine. Just before removing from the fire add 2 well-beaten eggs.

Mix sauce with the cabbage, and put into a greased baking dish. Sprinkle with fine breadcrumbs, dot pieces of margarine on top, sprinkle with salt and pepper, and cover top finally with 1/2 cup of grated cheese. Bake for 20 minutes. This dish makes a very excellent and satisfying meal.

Orange Cookies.

Mix the grated rind of two oranges with 2ozs. of caster sugar, add 2ozs. butter and beat to a soft cream. Beat 2 eggs till frothy, then stir them into the butter and sugar and beat the mixture well. Add 4ozs. of cornflour very lightly, next the juice of 1/2 orange. Grease some patty or fancy tins and half fill them. Bake carefully in a moderate oven 15 minutes. Allow them to cool a little before lifting them out as they break easily.

To 'Cure' a Ham.

(Season, November to March.)

1lb. bay salt (powdered); 1lb. black treacle; 1oz. saltpetre (powdered); 1/2pt. vinegar.

Mix the ingredients in a large earthen pan. Rub the first 3 days, afterwards turning and basting every day. Leave in pickle for 5 weeks.

Next, hang up to let moisture drip off, and when moderately dry, place in muslin bag and cover with paper (it can be sewn on).

The ham does not require "smoking," but a covering is necessary to prevent the attack of flies whilst hanging to mature in a dry place.

Icing Hint.

If the icing is too thin, and you have used all your icing sugar, stir in a tablespoonful of flour to thicken it. Two tablespoonfuls may be added if necessary without spoiling the flavour of the icing.

Tightening a Candle in its Socket.

When a candle is too small for socket of candlestick, roll round the bottom pieces of silver paper saved from wrappings of chocolate or tobacco, and it will be found this will not ignite when the candle burns down to level of silver paper, as is the case with ordinary paper, which is frequently used.

To Light the Christmas Pudding.

Cut a small tangerine orange in half, scoop out the pulp, and put a lump of sugar in the little orange cup, fill it up with brandy, place this on the top of the pudding and set the brandy on fire just before sending the pudding to table. This takes much less brandy and burns longer, than when it is poured round the pudding on a shallow dish.—From Listeners' Talk, December 17.

Quilt Wives and their Work.

EVER since the days of Queen Elizabeth—and perhaps long before—the wives and daughters of farmers and miners in the North of England and the South of Wales have been making beautiful quilted coverlets for their beds. The designs which are worked on these quilts have been handed down from mother to daughter, through many generations, and the skilful workmanship, too, has been handed on.

It is fascinating to watch the Quilt Wife—as she is called in Wales—at her work. The upper and lower covers of the quilt are carefully stretched in the big wooden frame, with the sheep's wool, already washed and carded, spread evenly between. Then she gives her mind to the design, which is to be stitched all over the quilt. This stitching, of course, fulfils the practical purpose of holding the wool firmly in place, so that it will be of even thickness throughout, and not go into lumps when the quilt is washed. But the expert quilter, with the true instinct of the craftsman, loves to elaborate the stitching in the intricate designs which constitute the great charm of the work.

The worker scratches the pattern on the material with the point of the needle, perhaps using a few shapes cut out in paper, a ruler for the straight edge of the border and a plate or saucer for making curves. To draw a big circle, she will thread her needle and, stitching the end of the thread to the centre of the circle, use the needle as a compass to draw the outline.

When the pattern is sketched out, she stitches quickly and surely along its almost invisible lines, holding her left hand underneath the quilt, to make sure that every stitch goes right through. Much of the special skill of the quilter consists in keeping the stitches small, and even, and exactly in line with one another.

The different parts of the pattern—called the 'units,' and known by their names as the 'fan,' 'leaf,' 'tulip,' 'chain,' 'feather,' and so forth—are traditional; but they are preserved only in the quilts themselves, in the memories of the workers, and sometimes in a few outline patterns cut out in stiff paper.

The older generation of dressmakers in Wales learnt quilting as part of their trade, and they still get orders from their neighbours, and from friends who have emigrated to the Dominions and who long for the comfort of a home-made quilt to keep out the chill of a Canadian winter.

But hard times have come to the mining villages, and the woman who wants to make a quilt for her daughter's wedding present finds it difficult to afford the money for the materials. Already the industry shows signs of having fallen upon evil days. The quilt wife has not been able to give as much time to each quilt as she would like to.

The Women's Institutes have taken an interest in the quilting industry—particularly in the northern counties—and through them a great deal is done to encourage the best work.

And now the Rural Industries Bureau has also come to the rescue of the industry. A number of quilts have been made to the order of the Bureau, by some of the best workers in Wales and County Durham.

Every quilt sold brings a few shillings—or, if it is a big one, a few pounds—to some worker in those desperately hard-hit coalfields, and helps her and her family to face the future with new courage. And if you are inclined to think that nothing beautiful could come out of a mining village—just go and look at the quilts!—From a talk by Miss Hay on October 26.

More Small Cakes.

Ginger-Bread Fingers.

7ozs. flour.
Pinch of salt.
1/2 tablespoonful ground ginger.
3ozs. crystallized ginger or peel.
5ozs. treacle or syrup.
3ozs. brown sugar.
2ozs. lard.
1 egg.
1/2 gill milk.
1/2 teaspoonful carbonate of soda.

Grease a square tin. Sieve flour, cinnamon, ground ginger, and salt into a basin. Add chopped ginger or peel. Warm the treacle and lard together until both are melted, but do not allow to become hot. Stir into the dry ingredients; then beat the egg and sugar together and mix into the flour. Dissolve the carbonate of soda in the milk and stir in, mixing all thoroughly. Pour into the prepared tin and bake in a moderate oven of 340° F. for thirty to forty minutes. When cold cut into fingers.—From Mrs. Cottingham Taylor's Talk on Nov. 5.

This Week in the Garden.

WHEN weather interferes with work in the open ground, the garden-maker must not be idle. It is the time to make plans, to draw up a list of things to be ordered, and to form good resolutions. What can be done, for instance, to make the outdoor garden more interesting in the dull months from November to March? Can we

The Midlands Calling!

Some Future 5GB Events from Birmingham.

'Art in Industry.'

A PROGRAMME with this attractive title is due at 10.15 p.m. on Tuesday, January 8. It is described as 'a pause in the rush of modern industrial life when Industry will pay tribute to the Arts.' In the old days the two were considered as the poles apart, but the last twenty years have brought them together, and we now find Art definitely ensconced in the Palaces of Industry, particularly in the publicity departments. This programme can therefore also be taken as a gesture of grateful friendliness from Art to Industry. In it listeners will hear the Amington Band, a well-known Midland colliery band. Amington is a small village on the Northern borders of Warwickshire, near Tamworth. The band, consisting of employees of the local collieries, was formed late in 1918 and claims to have a record unequalled by any other village band in the country. In addition to having secured numerous cups and trophies throughout the Midlands, the band won The Daily Telegraph cup in 1921 and the Grand Shield in 1923 at the Crystal Palace Championship Contest, while it was fourth in the Belle Vue Championship in 1925. It is now 'fortunate' in having one of the finest bandrooms in the country. The Coombs Wood Works Male Voice Choir, which has won many Senior Trophies and is the present holder of the 'Novello Shield,' will be in the programme, while the Bournville Dramatic Society will give two excerpts from The Rivals, by Sheridan. The Bournville Dramatic Society is composed entirely of employees of Cadbury Brothers at Bournville, its members being drawn from all grades—operatives, tradesmen, foremen and forewomen, and members of the technical and administrative staffs. This is the Society's seventeenth season. Each year they produce two or three plays from Greek tragedy to Shakespearean comedy—from Sheridan to Shaw. Their recent productions included an old eighteenth century ballad opera, No Song, No Supper.

A Symphony Concert.

THE weekly symphony concert takes place on Saturday evening, January 12. The chief work is Tchaikovsky's Sixth Symphony (The Pathetic). This was the composer's last symphony, and it was given its title at the suggestion of his brother. Written between bouts of depression and restlessness, and produced in England about the time of his death, the work enjoyed an extraordinary vogue in this country in the years following 1893. Tchaikovsky himself looked upon it as his greatest work, in one letter stating 'I have put my whole soul into it' and was bitterly disappointed that its first performance in St. Petersburg was almost a failure. However, a few weeks later it was given again, and this time with great success. The singer in this concert is Leonie Zifado (soprano), and William Primrose (violin), will play Elgar's Violin Concerto, first played by Kreisler at a Royal Philharmonic Society Concert in 1910.

The Birmingham Military Band.

THIS band, under Mr. W. A. Clarke, broadcasts on Sunday afternoon, January 6, and will include in its programme a selection from Mignon and Massenet's Alsation Scenes. The artists are Phyllis Peck (soprano) and J. William Dunn (piano).

Starting Young.

THE City of Birmingham Police Band, under Mr. Richard Wassell, will be heard again on Wednesday afternoon, January 9, when Margaret Wilkinson (soprano), who has broadcast several times from 5XX and 5GB, will be the soloist. Her career as a singer began early. When five years of age she was on a visit to a seaside resort in the North of England, and her parents one day missed her. She was found in the centre of a Salvation Army ring rendering a solo about 'Up Jumps the Ghost of Sarah Porter,' with actions. Her uncle, a frequenter of music-halls, had taught her the song. She was hurriedly removed and so did not reap the reward of being allowed to go round with the hat. I understand that this moving ballad is not included in Miss Wilkinson's songs for January 9. I am sorry—I should have liked to hear it.

NORRIS STANLEY AND HIS ORCHESTRA who are giving a New Year's Party at Pattison's Restaurant, Corporation Street, Birmingham. Excerpts from their programme will be broadcast from 5GB between 9.15 and 10 p.m.

'For the Old Folks.'

A WELL-KNOWN London revue producer told me the other day that he could not understand why listeners were so partial to the old musical comedy and revue melodies, rather than preferring something new in their light programmes. I advanced the opinion that when anybody goes to the theatre to hear a light musical show he is living very much in the present—he has probably had a meal which puts him in the right humour for it—whereas the average listener goes home tired, sits there in the gloaming seeing pictures in the fire, and his mind immediately turns to memories—hence the popularity of the 'reminiscence' programme, whether it be light or classical. A programme of this nature 'for the old folks' is being broadcast from Birmingham on Friday evening, January 11, presented by the Birmingham Studio Chorus and Orchestra.

From the Operas.

THERE is always the glamour of the stage about an operatic programme—a glamour which makes itself felt even over the microphone. The last 'Wagner and Verdi' programme from 5GB was full of atmosphere, and another is due on Thursday evening, January 10. The artists are Eric Greene (tenor), Marjorie Parry (soprano), and Toplis Green (baritone), while the composers whose works will be heard include Meyerbeer, Mascagni, Wagner and Mozart, with excerpts from The Huguenots, Cavalleria Rusticana, Tannhäuser, The Valkyrie, and The Marriage of Figaro.

A Ballad Concert.

THE programme of Saturday, January 12, concludes with a ballad concert provided by the Midland Quartet. This combination of vocalists is well known to 5GB listeners. Consisting of Emilie Waldron (soprano), Alice Vaughan (contralto), Geoffrey Dams (tenor), and James Howell (bass), the Quartet has not only taken part in similar concerts, but has also appeared in special musical feature programmes, when the brunt of the vocal work has fallen upon its members. Also in the programme is Margaret Ablethorpe (piano), who is one of the accompanists at the Broad Street Studios. She will play Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsody No. 12 and a Tango by Albeniz and Gavotte by Glazounov.

The Birmingham Citizens' Society.

THE Birmingham Citizens' Society, for which Mrs. Agnes Taunton is appealing on Sunday, January 6, is the recognized Charitable and Social Service Organization of the City, and is affiliated to the National Council of Social Service. The Society exists to help Birmingham citizens in illness and distress. In addition to the Head Office organization, there are twelve district committees, and attached to each is a group of voluntary social workers. In 1928 the Society assisted over 6,000 families. Convalescent treatment was provided for 309 men, women and children and over 1,900 grants were obtained and administered for ex-service men. The Lord Mayor of Birmingham has issued an appeal for funds to enable this work to be carried on through the present year.

Spanish Music.

ANOTHER recital of this series with the title of 'Spain in Music of the Twentieth Century,' will be presented by H. G. Sear on Wednesday evening, January 9, when he will have the assistance of Michael Mullinar, accompanist to the City of Birmingham Orchestra, who will illustrate Mr. Sear's remarks with works by Turina, Joaquin Nin, and de Falla.

'Money Makes a Difference.'

F MORTON HOWARD specializes in West Country life, and Money Makes a Difference is a delightful comedy of life in a Cotswold village—a comedy which chiefly concerns Peter Barton, a typical farmer from the Gloucestershire hill country, and his somewhat shrewish sister, Louisa. This one-act play will be broadcast from Birmingham at 8.0 p.m. on Friday, January 11. The cast is largely made up of West Country artists, Charles Wreford, Victor Fawkes, Daniel Roberts, and Daisy Cull being all specialists in Gloucestershire parts.

MERCIAN!

A Ghost Story
By E. F. BENSON

ATMOSPHERICS

Mr. E. F. Benson will be known to many listeners as the author of many charming novels. He is perhaps not so well known as a writer of ghost stories. His most celebrated collection of these tales is The Room in the Tower, from which he broadcast a story on Monday last. In Atmospherics Mr. Benson tells of ghosts of the ether, of a set which was guaranteed to 'get anything' and got—the Past.

THERE is nothing more delightful to the thoroughly unscientific mind than to control some scientific machine which yields entertaining results, and which one does not in the least understand. That, so I concluded, was, at any rate, one of the reasons why I neglected all other duties, and most other pleasures in order to enjoy my new wireless. 'Ad Astra' was the name of it, and a very suitable one, for it put me into communication with places that seemed as remote as the planets, and evoked from them the very music of the spheres. It had eight valves (whatever 'valves' might be) and two switches and two dials, and an index which made it perfectly easy to choose, as in a dinner at a restaurant, whatever one liked. Daventry and London, and Hilversum and Paris, and Berlin and Vienna were waiting with their dishes. A little adjustment of the switches and manipulation of the dials was all that was necessary, and then, after a few loud howls and whistlings, I could get into touch with singers and pianists half-way across Europe.

This was all romantic enough for a prosaic age, but secretly I cherished even wilder romances in connection with my 'Ad Astra.' It was, I am proud to say, the very last word in wireless, and every now and then it seemed, to my ignorant view, to emit noises that came from none of the localities on its sumptuous index. Below the blare of an orchestra from Berlin, I sometimes caught the sound of a human voice; below a lecture delivered in the studio in London, I caught the sound of singing. Scientific friends who also heard these mutterings appeared to me to be a little puzzled about them, but they bravely asserted that they were 'atmospherics.' Yet they did not seem quite casual enough for mere accidents of the ether; voices certainly made coherent remarks, unexplained instruments, of music played fragments of tunes, and somehow I had got into my head that this wonderful 'Ad Astra' could, intermittently and fortuitously, catch sounds that were outside the range of its professed radius. After all, as Mr. Einstein has proved to those who are able to understand what he says, time and space are both dimensions of the same huge whole, and I wondered whether it was not possible that 'Ad Astra' was reproducing sounds not only distant in space, but distant in time. But I have no scientific attainments, and the professors, though sometimes a puzzled look furrowed their serene brows when they heard these extraneous noises, continued to say 'Atmospherics.'

Just now 'Ad Astra' was clad in its neat serge travelling-suit, and placed on the seat next me in the train that was taking me to the old Cinque Port town of Tillingham, where I was to spend a week-end with my friend Harry Armytage in his house called 'Mayor's Orchard.' He had just bought this house, I had never been there before, and knew nothing whatever of it and its surroundings, except that I was aware that the sea had retreated, and that Tillingham, which was once a port, was now a couple of miles inland. As I approached my destination, it looked as if I should not for the present get any clearer idea of it, for we slid into a thick sea-fog, and after innumerable hootings and stoppages, I stepped out into the most impenetrable mist I have ever encountered. Harry had sent down a servant to meet and conduct me, who told me that 'Mayor's Orchard' was but five minutes' walk from the station, and I followed him through the dense white dusk up the hill. I carried 'Ad Astra' myself, and presently he threw open a door, and I found myself in a delicious Queen Anne interior. In a little parlour off the hall I found them at tea, Harry and his wife Evie and her sister and brother-in-law, all old friends.

I consented, of course, without any pressing at all, to demonstrate the marvels of my new toy, but never have I experienced a greater fall to my 'Olso, it is most kind of you, Mr. Mayor. That goddam fog, terr-rible, and a fool of a captain!'

pride. We got a little scrannel jazz music from London, but no other station would come through at all. The fog no doubt was thick in the Channel, and the Channel was populous with fog-bound ships, and we could get nothing whatever except the incessant dot-and-dash of Morse-code, ship calling to ship. Paris and Hilversum and Berlin and Vienna were all as mute as mackerel; there was nothing but this silly, unintelligible gabble.

'Frightfully interesting,' said Harry at length, 'but a shade monotonous. How about bridge?'

'I don't want to play,' said Evie. 'You four play.'

That was amiable, but false: Evie always wants to play bridge. Besides, every now and then, through this silly babble, I knew I had heard something, which was not Morse code, and I only wanted to be left with 'Ad Astra,' and find out what it was. So after a few politenesses on the part of the others, I found myself alone with my machine.

I could cut out these tiresome noises altogether, but I found that when I did that, I also cut out the intervening something, which I so much wanted to catch, and that when the dot and dash of this inter-ship signalling was most audible, so also was this unexplained impression of what sounded sometimes like a voice, and sometimes like faint musical notes. Wholly unscientific as I am, I realized that it was not far distant in space, at any rate, from these stupid cacklings. It had something to do, in space if not in time, with them. And then as, hairbreadth by hairbreadth, I shifted the dials, I heard, not from the machine at all, but from close outside, the sound of wind: a strong breeze was rising, and the fog no doubt dispersing, for almost immediately these dot-and-dash noises completely ceased. And now that they were silent, I knew that I was right in thinking that there was something going on below them: it emerged, growing gradually louder.

There was the noise of a drum and of a fife, and of a cornet, and they were playing 'God save the King,' in a windy and elementary manner, but surely with enthusiasm. Then there was the sound of a door opening, and the tune swelled out suddenly, as if the door of the house where I sat had been opened, and the players were just outside. The door shut again, the tune ceased altogether and I heard a man's voice speaking in English, but with a strong guttural German accent.

'Olso, it is most kind of you, Mr. Mayor,' he said. 'To be sure, I shall be very comfortable. That goddam fog, terr-rible, and a fool of a captain. Yes; a little supper; very pleasant. I will first to my room go.'

ATMOSPHERICS

E. F. Benson's Wireless Ghost Story.

The voice ceased, but surely there were steps in the hall just outside and on the stairs. I looked out, but there was no one there, and now, not a whisper came from my apparatus. This way and that, hairbreadth by hairbreadth, I moved the dials, but there was nothing of any sort audible.

Presently Harry came in from the room where they were playing bridge, and found me still endeavouring to recapture that strange intrusion. Where had it come from? And when (so I could not help asking myself) had it come from?

'Still tinkering?' he said. 'The stars seem to be a bit in eclipse tonight. A rocket went up just now from the sea. There must be some ship run aground in the fog. I'm dummy at the moment, so I came to see if you would like to be shown your room. You're in the King's room, Evie said.'

I made a final attempt, and got up.

'Yes, do show it to me,' I said. 'But why the King's room?'

He led the way upstairs.

'Oh, an old story,' he said, 'but I believe quite authentic. George the Second was once visiting the Cinque Ports in his yacht, and there came on a thick fog just like there was tonight, and he ran aground in shoal-water opposite Tillingham. He was brought to land in a small boat, and came up to the town. The mayor met him with all the pomp that could be arranged at a moment's notice, and they brought him along here, with a fife and a drum playing 'God save the King.'

'And then?' I asked.

'He slept here: the house belonged to the mayor. Mayor's Orchard you know. There are some extremely old apple-trees in the garden—'

'Interesting,' said I. 'And I'm going to sleep in the room he had?'

'Yes. Here it is. Jolly panelling, isn't it? There's a picture of the King. Thoroughly German. But, after all, he was German. He spoke English, though, which his father couldn't do, but with a strong German accent.'

Harry went back to his game, and it is hardly necessary to state, I instantly fetched 'Ad Astra' up to my room. Berlin was ready to my summons now, and Vienna and Paris had never been so splendidly audible. But not a whisper more could I catch coming across the years from the night when the King slept at Mayor's Orchard. 'Ad Astra' nobly vindicated its ability to give me all that it professed to give, but gladly would I have sacrificed all that for a few whispers more in that guttural voice, or a few more bars of that very imperfectly-rendered National Anthem. Atmospheric, indeed!

WANTED—A NEW KIND OF RELIGIOUS SERVICE

Editorial Note:—While not necessarily agreeing with its argument we are glad to publish this short article on Broadcast Religion by one of our readers.

NO one will deny, I suppose, that one of the most praiseworthy activities of the B.B.C. has been its broadcast Religious Services. Such broadcasts must, without doubt, have meant the enrichment of the lives of thousands of listeners. This article, therefore, must not be construed as being, in any sense, an adverse criticism of broadcast Religious Services as they already exist; it is intended, rather, as a tentative suggestion towards what I feel might be a purposeful enlargement of their scope.

In many of us—admittedly—the Religious Service of our churches and cathedrals today finds very little response. Yet I maintain we may not necessarily be the less religious for that. It is merely that we feel that such services belong to another day, another point of view, another approach to the manifold and constant need for some interpretation of life. They demand an acquiescence in things about which many of us are still in doubt. We lack, in a word, faith.

Set us on some bare hill at sunset, however, and we shall feel more than a merely aesthetic response to certain manifestations of beauty. Show us Fra Lippo Lippi's painting of the Annunciation and we shall come at least a little nearer to some comprehension of the divine mystery of birth. Play us Beethoven's Ninth Symphony and we shall mutely proclaim (just as fervently as those who proclaim it aloud on bended knees), 'For Thine is the Kingdom, the Power and the Glory.'

No, it is not, I think, that we are less religious. It is, rather, that we are growing increasingly cerebral in our attitude: we strive to find an interpretation of life that shall satisfy brain as well as heart, intelligence as well as emotion. 'As well as,' I say; because the sure end of any purely cerebral approach to life is cynicism. I ask a harmony of heart and brain. Look at it this way: the heart is the horse, the brain is the reins; one supplies the motive power, the life-force, the other the check and goad and control. Brain as well as heart, then, must be satisfied if many of us, today, are to answer the call of religion.

But the majority of religious services in our churches and cathedrals are hardly designed to satisfy this dual need.

Their very foundation rests upon a dogma and a ritual that were the flower of another age, not ours. Our response, therefore, to such services depends not a little on our acquiescence with that dogma and ritual: and too often we cannot give it.

The churches themselves, and cathedrals, are architecturally designed to stage that ritual. Take away the setting and the services must necessarily lack something of their true significance. Centuries have made of them a complete entity in themselves, dependent on many things other than just the spoken word: the rhythm of the service, its systole and diastole, its music, its punctuated readings, its setting of pillar and glass and cope and surplice—all these make the service what it is. They are it: and without them the service is but a framework into which you must let your imagination fit the picture—if it can and choose.

The broadcasting of such services must necessarily rob them of very much that is inherent in their vitality. Only when the 'inward eye' can and will supply the 'trappings,' does that vitality remain quite intact. For invalids, and for all those whom circumstances prevent from attending the actual service, such broadcasts fill an undoubted need.

But it seems to me that in this matter of religious services, wireless presents a further possibility of tremendous import, and one of which it has not yet availed itself.

Studio services are, as I see them, a sort of compromise. They neither embody a satisfactory echo of the Church service, nor constitute a new entity of their own. Might it not be possible, then, to introduce another kind of 'service'; one that shall be utterly independent of any remembered setting, any traditional background, or any (often sentimentalized) recollection; one for which the listener's brain is alone the 'church'? Such a service would be more likely to meet the needs of the manifold un-church-going public of today.

The occasion of Christmas, for instance, is one celebrated, in one form or another, by most people. Why not use this occasion for a service (apart, of course, from the normal relay of a church or cathedral service) which shall appeal to the self-excluded congregations to whom I specially refer? Milton's 'Ode on a Christmas Morning' would make an admirable prelude; Bach's Christmas Oratorio could be drawn upon; there should be a sympathetic and dramatic reading of the story of the Nativity as told in one of the Gospels; and, if there were prayers, they should rather be like those by 'R. L. S.' than those in any church service book.

Music, song, poetry, prose—these could all be welded into a crescendo of approach towards what should be the focus-point and climax of the service; a ten-minute 'talk' (or 'sermon,' if you like) by someone who briefly would treat of the Nativity from all aspects, pagan, Christian, symbolic, and so on.

Such a service, you may object, is only a concert 'with a difference.' In a sense the criticism is true—of this particular instance, anyway. But these projected services are for all occasions and any; not only for festivity use. Thus, at another service, the focus-point could very well be a 'talk' by some eminent scientist, psychologist, or sociologist. In which case the whole 'key' of the service would be different; scientifically instead of romantically inclined. . . . But the effect so far as my contention is concerned, would be the same.

A 'service' would be achieved whose entity, although religious, would be devoid of those things which prove, in the usual church service, a stumbling-block to so many today. It will trust the imagination of the listener; it will, without recourse to dogma, ritual, or any preconception of religion whatever, lend some interpretation of life; and it will appeal to the intelligence as well as to the emotions. Further, this is a kind of service which the wireless alone can adequately supply—for it draws on no other setting than the mind of the listener, its appeal being purely subjective.

HOW DOES THE ANNOUNCER PRONOUNCE IT?

The pronunciation of English by the B.B.C. Announcers has set a new standard among the many millions who listen. The B.B.C., in deciding what pronunciation to adopt, has the assistance of its distinguished Advisory Committee on Spoken English, portraits of four of the members of which appear on this page. In the accompanying article, Mr. A. Lloyd James, secretary of this Committee, gives a list of its most recent decisions.

THE work of the B.B.C. Advisory Committee on Spoken English continues to interest the Press of this country, and is being followed with interest by the foreign countries of Europe, in most of which English is the first foreign language taught in the schools. There can be no doubt that the pronunciation of our language is a formidable difficulty for the foreigner, and one that may have a decisive influence upon the future of the English language in the world. It is not the actual technical difficulty of the English speech sounds that is the obstacle, for, apart from the two sounds represented by the letters 'th' (as in thick and then), we have no really difficult sounds like the German 'ch' sounds, the French nasalized vowels, the Spanish 'j,' or the extremely difficult sounds peculiar to Arabic. Our trouble lies in the peculiar nature and distribution of our stress accent, in our very strongly-marked rhythm, and, above all, in the hopeless chaos that reigns in the relationship between our spelling and our pronunciation. It is certain that anything we can do to instil order into the chaos will have a definite influence upon the future history of the English language in the world, for, however we may care to view the problem, it is moderately certain that the world of the future will speak one language, and that language may be a variety of English. This future may be remote, and the variety of English may be one that we should neither recognize nor forgive, but we must not forget the possibility; languages have a way of dying, and nations have a way of acquiring new ones. We know less than nothing of that aspect of human behaviour that we call speech, or language; all that we have done is to observe what has happened in the past; of the conditions, the individual human circumstances that caused the happening we know nothing.

If, then, it appears to any reader that the B.B.C. is wasting the time of the eminent members of its Advisory Committee in asking them to determine whether 'anchovy' shall be pronounced with the accent on the first or the second syllable, or whether 'margarine' shall have a hard or a soft 'g,' it would be well for him to remember that the history of great languages, like that of great nations, is, in the end, a multiplication of small details, each of which, considered by itself, would appear to be unworthy of serious consideration.

So much for the broader view of the subject. The details of the latest list of words considered by the Committee are often amusing, but, above all, they serve to bring home once again the fact that even the simplest words in our language are a source of anxiety. Nevertheless, there are bold spirits who never have any doubts! A very distinguished academic man told me recently that he had never had a doubt about the pronunciation of any English or foreign word! What he said was, apparently, bound to be right. Unfortunately this confidence is not shared by the English-speaking world, and so doubt persists; there only remains to record the fact that the scholar in question invariably uses the so-called intrusive 'r,' in such expressions as the 'idear of it,' from which we may all learn the inadvisability of being pontifical.

The accompanying list contains very few rare English words: many of us get through life without using such words as 'corrigenda,' 'ghoul,' and 'paleography,' but we see them, and occasionally have to pronounce them. The foreign words are all familiar, and very careful consideration has been given to each one. If the Committee recommends, for instance, that the Indian word 'thug' shall be pronounced with the 'th' as in 'thin,' it is not to be presumed that the Committee is ignorant of the Indian pronunciation of this word, which more nearly resembles the English word 'tug.' Every foreign pronunciation, whether Asiatic, European, or African, is reported to the Committee, who then decide what pronunciation shall be adopted. And if the Committee decides that 'pathan' is to be pronounced 'pâthân' and not 'pâythan,' it is not to be assumed that the decision has been arrived at hastily, or without regard to the fact that it is apparently not in keeping with the principle followed in the case of 'thug.'

Proper names, such as St. John Ervine, Synge, Rimsky-Korsakov, are pronounced as nearly as possible as their owners pronounce them; where two families bearing the same name pronounce it differently, the fact is noted.

Words such as 'gratis' and 'cul de sac' are not handy words to use, and many readers will be thankful for a ruling; 'gratis' is so commonly used that we must admit it into our language and grant it letters of naturalization. But 'cul de sac' is unnecessary, and we should be doing our language a service if we refused to admit it, as an undesirable alien. We have an excellent native, quite capable of doing the work, in 'blind alley.' Another word that has earned a place in English is 'fracas,' but the French pronunciation still clings. Nevertheless, 'fraycas,' as they call it in America, would be a magnificent addition to our language.

Settling the pronunciation of our mother tongue is not an easy matter, and readers of The Radio Times may rest assured that it is not lightly undertaken by the Advisory Committee.

Hymn (Tune, Special)

Great Lord of the Ages, Thou Master of Men,
Thy voice shall be heard in our warfare again,
Once more we invoke Thee, Who only can save,
To strengthen the free and the brave,
Hall! Hall!

Leader Who never shalt fail!
Though long be the fight
For God and the Right
Thy Love and Thy Truth shall prevail!

O give for the conflict the faith that is sure,
The aims that are selfless, the love that is pure,
With hearts Thou hast hallowed, a sanctified band,
For Thee and Thy Kingdom we stand,
Hall! Hall! etc.

Thy Kingdom remains with the makers of Peace
The strife and the hatred together shall cease,
And they who for righteousness witness and dare,
Thy Glory and honour shall share,
Hall! Hall! etc.

IN 1756 George Whitefield built his church, which was for many years the centre of crowded congregations under a succession of great preachers. Its fame was renewed in 1902, when Charles Silvester Horne pioneered on its premises the idea of the Institutional Church. Since then the historic church has been a Central Mission under the auspices of the London Congregational Union, and the Rev. Albert Beldon became its Superintendent just over a year ago. THE WEEK'S GOOD CAUSE:
Appeal on behalf of the Society for Promoting the Training of Women, by Lady BERTHA DAWKINS

THE society for which Lady Bertha Dawkins will appeal tonight was founded in 1850, and is almost the oldest Loan Training Society in the country. Since 1894 it has, by means of its loans, helped over 1,000 women to get a business or professional training that they would otherwise have been quite unable to afford. Of late years training fees have risen in proportion to the cost of living, and many applications have had to be refused. The Committee feel confident that, if they could raise a really substantial sum, they would never need to make another appeal, as the money that they lend is constantly coming back to be lent again.

Contributions should be sent to the Hon. Treasurer, The Lady Bertha Dawkins, Prince of Wales's Court, Kensington Palace, W.8.

WHITEFIELD'S CHOIR

Sermon by Rev. A. D. BELDON, B.D.

Hymn, Congregational Hymnary 653 (omitting Verses 4 and 5) (Tune, Eventide)

Lift up your hearts! We lift them, Lord to Thee;
Here, at Thy feet, none other may see;
Lift up your hearts! Even so, with one accord,
We lift them up, we lift them to the Lord.

Above the level of the former years,
The mire of sin, the slough of guilty fears,
The mist of doubt, the blight of love's decay,
O Lord of light, lift all our hearts today.

Above the swamps of subterfuge and shame,
The deeds, the thoughts, that honour may not name,
The halting tongue that dares not tell the whole
O Lord of truth, lift every Christian soul.

Lift every gift, that Thou Thyself hast given,
Low lies the best till lifted up to Heaven,
Low lie the bounding heart, the teeming brain,
Till, sent from God, they mount to God again.

O if the hopes which thrill our hearts today,
Foreshadown aught that shall not pass away,
And we may trust that all our days shall be
Round each to each by natural piety.

Then, as the trumpet-call, in after years,
'Lift up your Hearts' rings pealing in our ears,
Still those hearts respond, with full accord,
We lift them up, we lift them to the Lord.

Introduction and Triumphal March ('Sigurd Jorsalfar' Suite)
FROM the incidental music which he composed for the drama, Sigurd Jorsalfar, by Bjornson (author also of the poem 'Bergliot' included earlier in this programme), Grieg made a Suite, from which the first and third movements are now to be played. Sigurd was a Crusader and in the introduction a scene of real pomp and splendour of those old days is presented. The third movement is a triumphal march. At this point in the tale the two brothers Sigurd and Eynstein, once rival kings of different parts of Norway, have made peace and amid the joyful acclamations of the people go together in solemn procession to the law-giver's house, to inaugurate a new era of prosperity.

'DON'T BEGGAR-YOUR-NEIGHBOUR!'

A Plea for Tolerant Listening.

By 'ASTYANAX.'

THE various attributes of 'the good listener' are continually emphasized, very properly, in the columns of The Radio Times. But it seems to me that there is one on which it is impossible to lay emphasis too heavily or too often: the duty of 'the good listener' to read and ponder the extracts given weekly from the editor's correspondence under the heading 'What the Other Listener Thinks.' It is so very easy to judge—and to criticize—wireless programmes from one's own point of view. It is so hard to consider it from the angle of the other listener round the corner. That is presumably why the editor of The Radio Times—who has his own likes, dislikes, and prejudices in common with all other men—invites general correspondence and prints all he can fit into his columns. He is holding up a mirror to broadcasting opinion, and if your own personal opinion of wireless is to have any breadth or value, it must be formed in relation to general opinion, and based on careful and consistent peering into that mirror.

Of course, the picture in the mirror is not entirely comprehensive. It leaves out—for obvious reasons—rank prejudices, mere abuse, unstudied or fulsome praise. But it does show the extent and the variety of the listening audience: the bewildering combination of mental reactions and points of view.

Briefly, it is the most convincing plea, and proof of the fundamental necessity, for toleration in listening. I do not mean casual acceptance of this, that, and the other thing. I do not mean the stifling of criticism, however harsh. But both acceptance and criticism should depend, not on the individual's taste, but on his taste considered in combination with that of his neighbours. And his wireless neighbours are several million in number.

The ferocious demands that are so continually being voiced—'less jazz,' 'more talks,' 'less chamber-music,' 'grand opera every night,' 'abolish comedians,' 'educate, don't entertain!' and the rest of the slogans—are actually only a demonstration of the childish game of 'beggar-my-neighbour.'

In listening, as in commerce, and, indeed, in all co-operative activities, the admirably fascinating game of begging your neighbour won't pay in the long run. Even if you succeeded in abolishing items you dislike from the programmes, you would also have succeeded in abolishing thousands of listeners, and preventing the renewal of their licences. The revenue of the B.B.C. would be diminished, and your own programmes, with equivalently less money to pay for them, would suffer acutely.

Modern society is built on mutual dependence. We cannot live, except under conditions of sheer primitive savagery, without the aid of the multifarious activities of our neighbours. And the same applies to our neighbours, who, in one way or another, are dependent upon us. So it is with the society of listeners. If you feel that you are helping to pay for hours of dance music, of which you disapprove, think of the bright young people who are helping to pay for your educating talks, which they dislike, or your chamber music which they abhor!

Besides, there is a further point. The best things in life may be free, but many of the good things of life are an acquired taste: caviare, old prints, Tokay, the stories of Chehov, the music of Delius. These things are only preserved for your gradual recognition and enjoyment by older or more cultivated neighbours. You will come to them in time; and it would surely be a pity to beggar your neighbours of these good things, simply because in a less developed state, whether of age, culture or education, you prefer the 'Ramona' Waltz, chocolate cream, orangeade, and the works of Mr. Kirchner.

This Week's Bach Cantata.

Church Cantata, No. 28.

'Gottlob! nun geht das Jahr zu Ende.'
(O praise the Lord, for all His mercies.)

THIS Cantata, to a fine text by the poet Neumeister, is rejoicing not so much in the departure of the old year as in the coming of the new. Bach introduces it with a really joyous orchestral prelude, almost like a ballet, and the merry figure with which it begins persists almost all the way through the opening number, a fine aria for the soprano. The second number here, not the first as is usual, is the most important choral movement, so big and impressive as to be outstanding even among Bach's big choral movements. Although the instruments are used, it is practically a purely choral movement, as the orchestra simply doubles the vocal parts.

The soprano has the hymn tune throughout, one in which the first line has a striking likeness to the Old Hundredth, and the other voices, along with it, build up a very big and majestic Motet.

No. 3 is a fine melodious arioso for the bass, fully accompanied, and then after a short recitative for the tenor, he and the alto sing a duet, in which the same sense of rejoicing as in the first number is eloquently carried on both by voices and by the orchestral accompaniment.

The Choral at the end is simple, and here again the instruments merely reinforced the voices.

The score includes, besides the usual strings and organ, two oboes, a taille (tenor oboe), now usually replaced by the English horn, and three trombones.

The text is reprinted by courtesy of Messrs. Novello and Co., Ltd.

I.—Aria (Soprano).

O praise the Lord for all His mercies, The passing year His grace hath shown, sing praises, With joyful song His goodness own, His loving hand, thy footsteps guiding, Doth lead to His eternal throne, O sing a joyful song of praise. The Lord delights in them that fear Him, and put their trust in His great mercy.

II.—Chorus.

My soul, O praise the Lord thy God, O praise for aye His Holy name; He crowneth thee with mercies, His benefits forget thou not. Thy sin hath He forgiven and aided thy sore distress. His works the earth have filled. Green herbs He bringeth forth, and corn for all man's service, That they may furnish food. O praise the Lord of harvest, sing praise unto His Holy name.

III.—Recitative (Bass).

The Lord thus saith, Yea, o'er my people I rejoice, goodness ever will I show them, And I will plant them in this land. My heart and soul uphold them.

IV.—Recitative (Tenor).

God is a fount whence goodness floweth pure, God is a light where mercy shineth clearly, A jewel rare whose lustre doth endure, God is the Lord, Who loves His children dearly; Who in His faith doth live, and honours His decree, Who holdeth fast God's word, and from the tempter's wile doth flee, to him is Life eternal given, The Lord's belov'd shall dwell in Heaven.

V.—Duet (Tenor and Alto).

The Father hath crowned the year with His blessing, The needs of His children He holds in remembrance. O honour and love Him and humbly implore Him to grant us His grace in the new year approaching. We trust in Thy mercy, O Father Almighty, and render Thee praises with hearts ever grateful.

VI.—Chorale.

All people sing Thy praises, O Lord on Heaven's high throne, For all Thou hast ordained, Through Jesus Christ Thy Son, O hear Thy children's prayer: A year of blessing send us, From ev'ry ill defend us, And keep us in Thy care.

The Cantata for next Sunday is:—

No. 190.—'Singet dem Herrn ein neues Lied.'
'Sing to the Lord a glad new song.'

HOME, HEALTH AND GARDEN.

find a place for hardy winter-flowering cyclamens, or even for the lovely foliage of the autumn-flowering species? Is there a spot for the winter-flowering crocuses—or for Christmas roses, or for early-flowering snowdrops—which ought now to be opening their flowers? Can we find room for the winter-flowering jasmine, the beautiful witch-hazel, or the autumn-flowering Japanese cherry? Is there a way of arranging dogwoods, barberries or white-stemmed brambles against a background of yew, or other dark evergreens, so as to show the coloured barks of these shrubs? Can we put an evergreen here or there to give variety in the shrubbery? Is there a corner where we may plant a sweet-scented thing so that it may give us pleasure as we pass it in our walks?

Or, going to the most utilitarian part of the garden, how can we prepare for better supplies of vegetables next year? It is plain, of course, that nothing really good can be got without really good cultivation; that we must see to. And it is equally plain that everything must be done at its due date, if we are to have constant, as well as plentiful, supplies. That also we must see to—not slavishly following the calendar, but taking that as a guide, and modifying our work according to the conditions of soil and weather.

But, given good cultivation, and timely treatment of our crops, are we getting the best that is possible in quality and yield? For those who are not satisfied with their experience, and for those who like the evidence of independent witnesses, the reports of trials carried out by competent authorities will be a good guide. Many of the county councils now arrange such trials, and trials are carried out in the gardens of the Royal Horticultural Society at Wisley. The list of awards made at these trials is published widely in the gardening papers, and all who can should consult these reports when making out their seed orders.—Royal Horticultural Society's Bulletin.

SAMUEL PEPYS, LISTENER.

By R. M. Freeman.

Part-author of The New Pepys' Diary of the Great Warr, etc.

Dec. 9 (Lord's Day).—To Church to Mr Blick, where Admirall Norker, in thinking he was singing the base part to the hymn 'On Jordan's Banks' (New Winchester) did rumble out some of the strangest noyses that ever I heard in my life allmost. Moreover, do, as it were, chase the noats upp and down the scale with his chinn, burying it in his collar when he tries to fetch the low noats and thrusting it upp towards the roof after the high ones. Yet all the noats he rumbles rumbled alike from the pitt of his stomake, the ridiculouse old chinn-wagger.

A stranger, who made the Sermon, did rather strangely compare church-worshipp with wireless, being, says he, a sort of broadcasting of prayer and prayse from earth to Heaven. Comes to me to ask myself what shall they make, upp in Heaven, of Admirall Norker's base rumblings out of his stomake?

Listening in, this night, my wife and I, to the Caerdydd Singers from Cardiff, with the greatest possible joy in hearing so manie mine old favourites—to wit, 'The Banks of Allan Water,' 'Robin Adair,' 'Barbara Allen,' 'Drink to me only,' and 'Integer Vitae': which (the last of these) my wife, having noe Latin, cannot understand. So presently did sing it very slowly over agayn to her, with great pride in remembering every word of it—ever since they made me write it out, at school, 50 times, for damning a boy that horse-bit me in chapell—and afterwards to translate it for my wife's benefit. But when I come to the passage where Horace did put the monster-wolf to flight by singing the charms of his innocent Lalage, all I get for my payns is my wife's saying, no wonder the wolf fled, if Horace sang to it as throatily as I do. Which vext me, so that I was minded to pinch her in the soft of the arm. But, upon a consideration of how easily my wife bruises and our going a-dancing tomorrow to Jimble's, rather than she sh^d have the fayr whiteness of her arms spoyled by finger-pinches, I did, out of my love to the wretch very thoughtfully refrain.

 'Some Aspects of the Problem of Education in India'
 From the Great Hall, University College of London.

THE education question in India is one of an importance that can hardly be exaggerated, and one that presents enormous difficulties. A vast country full of different races, different religions, different languages, where large sections of the population have no tradition of education and on the other hand, the universities are crowded with students eager for knowledge, provides the educationist with a new set of problems. Lord Lytton has been Governor of Bengal, so he has had exceptional opportunities of judging the situation about which he will talk this afternoon.

A YEAR may be an arbitrary division of time, but there is (for most of us) a real and unique experience in the passing from the Old Year to the New. In these few moments of transition, we run through the whole gamut of emotions—remembrance, always a little solemn, of the year that is going, with all the joys and sorrows that it has brought; recollection of old friends, again only too often tinged with sadness; the thrill that comes with the moment when the New Year is born, and the wild hilarity that always springs up to greet it. Some such swift sequence of moods will find its reflection in the programme that will usher in 1929.

9.15 A New Year's Party

Here's happiness and prosperity for you and yours

£250 a Year For Life—from Age 55

Think of it! A care-free life from age 55. An income of £250 a year absolutely secure to you for the remainder of your days—even if you live to be a centenarian. An income irrespective of business or other investments, and not subject to market fluctuations, trade conditions, or political troubles. What a boon to you and yours! What a burden off your mind!

The plan devised by the Sun Life of Canada, the great Annuity Company with Government-supervised assets of over £82,000,000, makes this splendid prospect possible for you. You deposit with them a yearly sum you can well afford out of your income, and the money, under the care of this most prosperous company, accumulates to your credit and to it are added extraordinarily generous profits. Thus you share in the company's great prosperity.

The figures here given assume an age of 35, and are estimated on present profits, but full details of other ages and amounts will be sent upon request. Here is how the Plan works out:—

£250 a Year for Life

From 55 years of age you will receive £250 a year for life. If you prefer it a cash sum of £3,000 will be given you instead of the yearly income.

£20 a Month if Unable to Work

Applicable to residents in the British Isles, Canada, and the United States.

Supposing you adopted this new plan now, and next week, next year, or any year until you are 55, you become—through illness or accident—permanently incapacitated for earning a living, £20 a month will be paid to you until the £250 a year becomes due.

Income Tax Rebate

If Income Tax remains as now, you will save nearly £250 during the run of the arrangement. This is additional to the profit you can make on the transaction.

£2,000 for Your Family if Anything Happens to You

Should you not live to the age of 55, £2,000 plus accumulated profits will be paid to your family. Should that be the result of an accident the sum would be increased, to £1,000, plus the profits.

Any Age, Any Amount

Though 35, and £250 a year for life have been quoted here, the plan applies at any age and for any amount. Whatever your income, if you can spare something out of it for your and your family's future, this plan is the best and most profitable method you can adopt.

£82,000,000 Assets

The Sun of Canada has assets of over £82,000,000 which are under Government supervision.

Relayed from the National Museum of Wales
NATIONAL ORCHESTRA OF WALES
(CERDDORFA GENEDLAETHOL CYMRU)

Overture, 'The Merry Wives of Windsor' Niccolai
Suite, 'Children's Corner' Debussy
Two Aubades Lalo
'Peer Gynt' Suite, No. 1 Grieg

EDOUARD LALO, best known to us in this country by his sparkling 'Symphonie Espagnole,' is recognised abroad as having blazed the trail for that modern French school of which Debussy, Dukas, and D'Indy were the illustrious founders. All three acknowledged his great influence, and all of them paid him the sincere tribute of studying his work deeply: it is recorded that each of them knew by heart his masterpiece, the opera Namouna, produced in Paris in 1882.

Falling on the ear always with a happy sense of freshness, Lalo's music has those qualities of vivid colour which are proof against the staleness which repetition may involve, and does indeed involve with music of less intrinsic charm.

The two Aubades, intended for performance either by ten solo instruments, or by a small orchestra, are both, though slight in structure, happy examples of his art.

The first, after a brief introduction, begins on the basses with a bustling theme in the softest tone, rising soon to a climax, and making way then for a long, suave melody, which bassoon and viola begin together.

The second, in slower tempo, begins, after four bars of introduction, with a tune of the daintiest grace given to the first violins.

Aubade, of course, is a song for the morning, as a Serenade is, literally, evening music.

Ten Little Nigger Boys.

THERE was once a conscientious actor who felt he could not play Othello properly unless he blacked himself all over. Such a drastic proceeding will not be necessary for the ten artists who are taking part in the programme 'Ten Little Nigger Boys' on Friday evening, January 11. They resemble the ten of the nursery rhyme in that they unaccountably disappear one by one. The pianist, one of their number and almost the last to go, will point the resemblance—there is happily no moral—by playing the air, pensively, after each casualty. The ten open the programme with Blow the Man Down. The nine sing Clementine, the eight give the opportunity for a very fine unaccompanied octet, Feasting I Watch. The other numbers include two short sketches, a sextet, a quartet, a trio, vocalist and piano, and lastly the vocalist left alone. After he has disappeared in his turn they all come back at once and sing the nursery rhyme they have illustrated. The soloist will be David Brynley (tenor) assisted by the Lyrian Singers.

The Home in the Middle Ages.

'CITY LIFE IN THE MIDDLE AGES' is the general title of a new series of talks by Mrs. D. Portway Dobson. She has done much research work in Mediaeval History and her special subjects are Prehistoric Archaeology and Mediaeval Churches. During the War Mrs. Dobson taught history in the University of Bristol, and she still teaches and examines. On Monday, January 7, at 4.45 p.m., she will deal with the houses and defences of the mediaeval city. She will give a vivid picture of the contrast between the hovels of the poor and the mansions with fine oak-panelled rooms of the rich. Yet she will show that there was a poor standard of comfort all round and that the streets were narrow and neglected.

'New Year's Song.'

THE first Sunday of the year, January 6, is chosen for a New Year Programme at 3.30 p.m. Schumann's Choral Work, New Year's Song, will be given as the central feature. David Hutchison will sing two groups of songs, including Twelve Days of Christmas, As Joseph was a-walking, and many other favourites. Mr. Hutchison has had many amusing experiences in touring the country for the Carnegie Trust Village Concerts. On one occasion only seven people turned up. They were taken into the Green Room and an informal concert was given. Mr. Hutchison made his first appearance in Cardiff on Thursday, November 22, in one of the City Hall Concerts. It was during the Schubert Centenary Celebration, and he sang many of Schubert's most charming songs. The queue waiting in the rain before the doors opened felt that they were rewarded when they heard the new tenor.

Of the Making of Many Books . . .

ONE of the happy band of people who find the correspondence columns of the daily Press a safety-valve for their grievances wrote a little time ago on the subject of borrowed books. He suggested that a day should be set apart each year—appropriately enough during Lent—on which all borrowers should consider their faults and make amends. In the series of talks on 'Everyday Things,' the first talk deals with the story of the Home, and the second on January 8 with the Story of Books. Mr. Joseph Jones, who gives this talk, 'knows his way about books,' old and new, first editions and friendly paper-covered ones. Ruskin said that a room without pictures was like a house without windows, and we may add to that, that a room with books is like a 'room with a view.'

Music in the Museum.

ONE of the most gratifying results of the formation of the National Orchestra of Wales is the increased daily attendance at the National Museum. Visitors take up their points of vantage before the concerts and afterwards wander round to find exhibits which appeal to them. An exhibit of great interest is the Roll of Honour, a volume bound in vellum, presented to the Prince of Wales when he unveiled the Welsh National Memorial. This volume was officially opened on Saturday, December 8, by a sergeant of the Welsh Field Brigade of the Royal Artillery. One page is to be turned daily (except Sundays) at 11 a.m. The volume is exhibited in a glass case in the Museum, and the daily opening will be performed by a member of a local military unit. The roll has been illuminated by Mr. Graily Howitt. The free concerts in the Museum will be discontinued from December 24 to December 31.

In Marble Halls.

WITH the first concert of the third season of the National Orchestra of Wales in the Assembly Room, City Hall, many music lovers will feel that they have developed a habit which it will be difficult to break. It is not easy to get into the concert-going habit if concerts are held only rarely and in out-of-the-way uncomfortable, unsuitable halls, and such has been the lot of concert-goers in Cardiff until the scheme for weekly concerts in the City Hall took effect. Elijah was given once in a chapel not far from Cardiff, and well-known singers were engaged as principals. Unfortunately they were requested to sing from the pulpit, a very small one, and when the lady singer in a period dress with a billowy crinoline turned upon her colleague with What have I to do with thee, Thou Man of God? he appeared acutely uncomfortable, and looked as if he were having a real curtain lecture. The first Symphony Concert of the third season will be given on Thursday, January 10.

Not in the Programmes.

POSSIBLY it is because many of the artists chosen for the concerts are experienced broadcasters that very few contretemps occur. Broadcasting time-tables do not make allowance for lost trains or missed connections or music left in a waiting-room. The few difficulties that have happened have been accidents which made the audience applaud the courage of the performers, for we have all been brought up on the story of the little Spartan boy whose fortitude was commended to our notice in our reading books. A solo pianist slipped on some steps just before playing at one concert and his right arm had to be strenuously massaged in the intervals. A solo violinist had a poisoned finger—the first finger of the left hand—and her dressing-room looked like a surgery. Perhaps the palm should be given, however, to the singer who went on to the platform immediately after seeing a rat!

Famous Welsh Women.

MRS. GRUFFYDD, wife of Professor Gruffydd, who is well known to listeners for his talks on Welsh Literature, gives the first of a series of talks on 'Famous Welsh Women' on Thursday, January 10. The title of the first talk will be 'Warrior Women of History.' Mrs. Gruffydd has published a volume of Guy de Maupassant's stories translated into Welsh. She is now engaged in translating some Breton stories. Her husband is the Professor of Welsh at the University College, Cardiff, and she herself is greatly interested in the teaching of Welsh.

When the Iron Duke was Afraid.

WHEN the Duke of Wellington was travelling in Wales he made a bet with a friend that he would reach Holyhead by the old road through Cerniogau more quickly than his friend who was to take the coach road. He ordered horses to be in readiness at each stage, but the horses trotted so fast down the slope from Pen-trevoelas to Bettws-y-Coed that near the Conway Falls the Duke disregarded the wager and called out: 'For goodness sake do take time!' In spite of this caution—or perhaps because of it—he reached Holyhead first and won his bet. Mr. W. H. Jones, who has given many talks which throw unusual sidelights on History, will give a talk on Saturday evening, January 12, on 'Old-time Travelling in South Wales.' He will deal with the hardships and excitements of the road before the days of coaches.

The Red Planet Mars.

ON Saturday, December 8, a programme of Echoes and Harmonies was given, and the fount and origin, or at least the presiding divinity, was Venus. This programme brought so large a number of appreciations that a second will be given on Thursday, January 10. This time inspiration will come from Mars. This programme will in no wise follow the lines of amateur transmitters who seek to get the wavelength of Mars, but will give all the most popular musical items which the red planet has inspired. Venus and Mars have very often appeared on the scene together, and although Venus has already had her innings, it may be rather difficult to keep her out of this programme.

Pirates of Penarth.

PENARTH has come to be regarded as a residential seaside resort, but in the days of Queen Elizabeth it was an excellent jumping-off place for pirates. Miss Hilda Isaacs, who has written a thesis on the History of Wales in the days of good Queen Bess, is the author of a sketch entitled The Pirates of Penarth based on some thrilling incidents which she has brought to light in her researches. The names are those of well-known families in South Wales, and the atmosphere of danger and excitement inseparable from law-breaking and subsequent pursuit will be conveyed to listeners whose sympathies, like those of mine host's wife and the pretty serving-maid, will probably be with the dare-devil Captain in his attempts to evade Her Majesty's Commissioners. The Pirates of Penarth needs an appropriate setting of wind and waves and tempest. First, the calm of the sea will be shown in Outward Bound, sung by Kenneth Ellis and the Station Male Voice Choir, and this will be followed by sea shanties after an orchestral interlude. Then follows music suggesting piracy, and the stage is set for the hoisting of the black flag. This programme, under the general title of 'On the High Seas,' will be given on Tuesday evening, January 8.

'Snow Flakes.'

LATER the same evening comes another feature programme of a contrasting nature entitled, 'Snow Flakes.' Laurence Housman's one-act play The Snow Man will be the central feature. The merging of fantasy into reality makes the microphone a peculiarly sympathetic medium for this charming little work, for the dream and the vision are realities which the theatre would turn into cumbersome matter. Margaret Wilkinson will return to Cardiff to sing in this programme. For many years Miss Wilkinson lived in Cardiff and visited London; now she reverses the process. Debussy's Snow is Dancing will be played by the Station Trio just before the play begins.

NEW YEAR resolutions are a subject fairly well-worn, but this evening Mrs. Mc-Corquodale (who is better known to the public by her own name, Barbara Cartland, under which she wrote her novels 'Jig-Saw,' 'Sawdust' and 'If the tree is Saved') will introduce a new and more attractive theory. Her idea is largely to do good to others by doing good to oneself. Nothing is so depressing as a plain woman. It is possible, by making up one's own face, to confer a good deal more gladness in the New Year than by giving up smoking or getting up early in the morning. This comfortable doctrine should appeal to most people who listen to this evening's talk.

THE first day of the New Year is an occasion for looking backward as well as forward, and when one gets to the evening of life, looking back becomes more worth while. Sir Alfred Yarrow can look back for more than eighty years; he was born in 1842, into an England that many of us can hardly visualize now. He founded the great shipbuilding business that is now world famous, in Poplar, in 1886, and in tonight's talk he will give some exceptionally interesting reminiscences of the changes that he has seen in the world at large.

A GREAT deal of nonsense is talked about appreciation of pictures by people who seem to believe that an intricate knowledge of the technique of painting is necessary before one can recognise a great picture, or distinguish it from one that is fairly good. Mr. Barton is a firm believer in the 'common-sense' view, and has done great things with it at the Bristol Grammar School, whose headmaster he is. His talk tonight will be especially appropriate in view of the Dutch Exhibition which opens later in the week, and on which Mr. Wilenski will broadcast a talk on Thursday night.

If the Zest has gone out of Life!

If you feel worn-out, depressed, unable to concentrate on your work, too weary for the fun of life, start taking 'PHYLLOSAN' to-day! In a fortnight you will find there is a new zest in work, a new joy in living.

Drugs and stimulants are no use to you. 'PHYLLOSAN' is not a drug. It contains no strychnine, no animal extracts. It is a preparation in medicinal form of the basic substance of all vital energy, described by Sir ARTHUR SHIPLEY, F.R.S., as "the most wonderful substance in our world." It is derived from vegetable sources, and is as natural to your body as the air you breathe.

'PHYLLOSAN' is not a "patent medicine." It is the result of many years of research conducted by an eminent medical scientist of international reputation. Its potentialities have been proven by the most exhaustive clinical tests in hospitals, sanatoria, and private practice.

These tests have established that 'PHYLLOSAN' revitalizes the whole human organism. It renews and reinvigorates the blood, fills every body cell with new energy, fortifies the heart, and increases all the physical and vital forces of the body, irrespective of age.

Of particular importance to men and women over forty is the power of 'PHYLLOSAN' to restore the elasticity of hardened arteries, thereby preventing and reducing high blood pressure, and fortifying the action of the heart.

Just two or three tiny tasteless tablets three times a day before meals will make a new man of you. Start to-day. Get a 5/- bottle. It contains double quantity and is sufficient for three weeks.

Overture, 'Caliph of Bagdad' Boieldieu
Suite, 'Russian Ballet' Luigini
Symphony in D (London) Haydn

THIS Symphony is full of Haydn's inimitable good humour and cheerfulness. It begins with a slow introduction, which seems at first as though it would be a mere flourish of trumpets, but a more melodious section follows. It is in minor. The main quick part of the movement changes to the major, and the first merry tune is given out at once. The Symphony has the unusual feature of making use of the same main tune twice over in its first movement, instead of giving us a new one; there is another tune, but it is not used in the way in which a main second theme usually is.

The slow movement is Haydn at his very best; it is made up very simply of a fine melody which is not really developed, but simply presented in various guises.

The Minuet is at once dainty and vivacious, with a hint of mischief in its emphatic third beat of the bar at the outset, and the Trio, in minor, has only the slightest suggestion of the wistfulness that the minor mode can so often mean.

The last movement is almost boisterous in its good spirits.

THE Rhapsody, founded on tunes which may well be actual Breton folk songs, is in two distinct movements, of which the second undergoes a good many changes of speed and rhythm. The first begins in an easy-going pastoral way with a tune for one clarinet alone, a happy, ambling tune. Other instruments join until the whole orchestra is busily engaged, but the first tune really forms the basis of the whole movement. The second begins very simply with a tune on the strings and from it the whole of the first section is built up. Then there is a brief return to the speed and something of the melody of the first movement, and it and the simple tune from the beginning of the second alternate one with the other for a time. The end is formed by the pastoral tune from the beginning; it fades away very softly at the close.

The Play produced by HOWARD ROSE

There are some plays which grow old very gracefully. In their heyday they held the glass of fashion; in the course of time they resigned their places at the demand of a changing mode, but by then had made for themselves an assured position which they owe both to their good qualities and to the style of a bygone day which they recall.

The Passing of the Third Floor Back was first performed in 1908, with Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson as the Stranger who is a messenger of light to a Bloomsbury boarding house; it has since been many times revived, and is being broadcast tonight not for the first time.

FROM the hygienic point of view, the Port of London must present one of the greatest problems in the world. Into it come ships from all over the globe, bringing with them men of all nationalities, and the possibility of infection with any of the terrible diseases known to mankind, particularly the plagues of the East—cholera, typhoid, Yellow Jack. To prevent these diseases from being brought ashore is a work that demands all the ingenuity of medical science, and how it is accomplished Dr. C. F. White, Medical Officer of the Port of London, will explain in this evening's talk.

1.15-2.0 A Symphony Concert

Relayed from the National Museum of Wales
NATIONAL ORCHESTRA OF WALES
 (CERDDORFA GENEDLAETHOL CYMRU)
 Overture, 'Euryanthe' Weber
 Theme and Variations (Symphony No. 6 in C Minor) Glazounov
 Symphony No. 41 in G Minor Mozart

THEME AND VARIATIONS is the second movement of Glazounov's sixth Symphony, and takes the place of the customary slow movement. The theme, a very simple tune, is played by the strings. The first variation, slightly quicker, simply sets forth the tune with a fuller and more elaborate accompaniment, and the second, again a little livelier, transforms it into a dainty dance movement with three quick beats in the bar. The oboes begin the melody here. Variation three is called 'Scherzino,' a little Scherzo (or Jest). The rhythm is in 6-8 and flutes have the first share of the merry tune made of the original theme, the whole orchestra joining in it later. A short Fugato is the fourth variation, in a slow tempo, played softly and with a sense of mystery. The violoncello begins the theme, followed in turn by second violin, clarinet and first violin.

Number five is also in quiet mood, a Nocturne, of which the clarinet begins the melody. The sixth returns to a more vigorous rhythm. Oboes and clarinets join, to play versions of the theme over a tremulous accompaniment from the upper strings. This movement is worked out at some length and there is a short, silent pause before the last begins. Up to this point the variations have succeeded one another without breaks. The seventh and final variation begins with an impressive statement of the theme by the brasses, and from that a movement is built up in which the theme often seems to disappear, although fragments of it are almost always being played by one or other of the orchestral groups.

Time: 1800

THE book of this 'Wayside Episode' is by a sister of the composer, already known to wireless listeners as author of Shepherd's Delight and other plays which have been broadcast. It is really a miniature operetta, with spoken dialogue and songs and duets for the two characters. There is a flute part, played by a third character whose voice is not heard, but whose flute music has a symbolic meaning.

'THE BALLAD OF BLACK-EYED-SUSAN'
—John Gay's engaging words set to music—is part of the programme of Alfred Reynolds's works which, with the composer as conductor, London is broadcasting at 8.0 tonight.

The playlet and its music were specially written and composed for broadcasting.

'The Ballad of Black-eyed Susan'
Words by JOHN GAY
Black-eyed Susan OLIVE GROVES
Sweet William HAROLD KIMBERLEY
Chorus of Sailors

MR. REYNOLDS has set this old-time ballad for two voices, with a chorus of sailors, and orchestra. The scene is 'All in the Downs,' and at the beginning there is a merry hornpipe, in which bassoon, oboe, and other instruments share, each playing a little solo. The tale of the tender parting of William and his Black-eyed Susan is unfolded partly by the voices of the two themselves, partly by the chorus of sailors, and at one point there is a quartet of four men's voices, which breaks in with half-whimsical, half-pathetic, effect. At the end, when Susan cries 'Adieu' and 'waves her lily hand,' the hornpipe is heard again, but now like a phantom, in which the mocking spirit of the sea laughs at lovers' vows. It is played by solo flute.

9.15 Mr. R. H. WILENSKI: 'The Dutch Exhibition'

MUCH has already appeared in the newspapers about the loan exhibition of Dutch masters that will be open to the public tomorrow at Burlington House. For mere size and scale and the staggering value of the pictures brought together, the exhibition is an epoch-making event. Artistically it is also a rare opportunity of studying the whole pageant of the Dutch school. Mr. Wilenski, the art critic, who will talk about the exhibition tonight, has just published an 'Introduction to Dutch Art.' Listeners will remember that he edited the special photogravure supplement on 'The Nativity in Art,' which appeared in the Christmas Number of The Radio Times.

(First performance at these Concerts)
(Soloist, GORDON BRYAN)

ARTHUR HONEGGER, born in France in 1892, of Swiss parentage, is counted as belonging to the modern French school, of which he is one of the most interesting and original figures. In spite of dissonances which are apt to strike the older listener as harsh and, at times, needlessly painful, Honegger's music is really based on the old classical forms, and verges occasionally on scholastic pedantry. It is full of life and colour, and has a robust strength of its own which contrasts strongly with the somewhat light and airy fabric of much modern French music.

Speaking of this Concertino, and of Honegger's Symphonie Movement, 'Rugby,' a French critic has said that even more than Pacific 231, they are both stages in the 'march of the composer towards a former sobriety, and particularly towards an exclusive return to the classic tonality. While some would merely lend their works an appearance of simplicity, Honegger knows, by slow but certain steps, how to achieve that.'

PATRICIA ROSSBOROUGH, the syncopated pianist, will be heard in the Vaudeville programme from Birmingham tonight.

Scene: A quiet room—the only quiet room in a country house where most of the guests are enjoying life. The Maid, having quarrelled with the Man, who departed for ever (sic) yesterday, has stolen away from the Charlestonians to this haven of rest in order to be thoroughly miserable with the help of a piano.

The Maid's sense of humour being temporarily in eclipse, she replies that:—

Sonata in A Beethoven
Allegro ma non tanto; Scherzo; Adagio—
Allegro vivace

BEETHOVEN left five Sonatas for Violoncello and Pianoforte, two belonging to his early period, one in the middle of his career, and two quite late works. This is the middle one, written when he was at the very height of his powers, and before there had begun to be in his music anything of that sombre and mysterious order which makes such things as his last string quartets a little terrifying.

This Sonata is throughout melodious and good-humoured. The first movement begins with the violoncello playing the first tune alone. The pianoforte takes it up and it is concisely set forth. The second principal theme is a double one, in which the two melodies are interchanged between the instruments; one is a series of scales and the other a slower moving tune, beginning, as many of the world's great tunes do, with the notes of the common chord.

The Scherzo, which comes next, is meant, like many of Beethoven's, to be repeated twice, so that the first part is heard three times, and the alternative section, the Trio, twice. The feature of the first part is the way in which the instruments play the theme one a note behind the other.

There is a very short, slow movement which is really no more than an introduction to the bustling and light-hearted last movement.

PARKINGTON QUINTET

'THE CHARCOAL BURNER'S SON.'

This absurdly humorous 'operetta for children,' having been a great success on its first appearance in the Children's Hour, will be broadcast to a wider audience tonight at 8.15.

6.0 MR. W. POWELL OWEN: 'The Small Poultry Keeper—I, Winter Eggs from Backward Poultry'

POULTRY-KEEPING on a small scale is apt to lose a good deal of its appeal in winter, and to the ordinary amateur nothing is more depressing than the sight of four bedraggled hens in a dripping backyard on a foggy day. Mr. W. Powell Owen is, however, an expert, and in the series of talks, of which this evening's is the first, he will give some very valuable advice as to how to make backyard poultry-farming enjoyable and profitable all through the year, and how to induce backyard fowls to yield winter eggs.

9.15 Captain HARRY GRAHAM: 'Good Resolutions'

THE end of the fourth day of the year may seem rather late to talk about such notoriously transient (not to say embarrassed) phantoms as New Year resolutions. But those grim and steadfast people who have not yet fallen from grace will be immensely heartened by Captain Harry Graham's talk, and the backsliders may even be encouraged to start again.

Without a loud speaker, TOMMY HANDLEY'S set is in a state of low tension.

That gay spark had been on the anode bend and at last found himself short-circuited in a dry cell.

The following morning he was charged with unlicensed interference at high frequency with the laws of gravity, or, in the alternative (2LO), with being a dull chatter and bobbing the cat's whiskers.

The detector, giving evidence, said that the accused after being run to earth oscillated and blasted but offered no resistance.

Tommy, after hearing a long talk, promised in a fit of re-morse that he would revise his programme and turn over a new leaf at a ridiculous rate of resolutions per hour, perhaps.

Can you Watch over 700 Investments?

If you were able to distribute your Savings among 700 investments, you would have neither the time nor the facilities for watching over them. Only if you were able to entrust your savings to experts would this be possible. It has actually been done by some 30,000 small investors pooling their resources in the First, Second and Third Co-operative Investment Trusts. With a Board of Experts (Chairman, Ald. A. Enal Davies, L.C.C.) in touch with conditions in every important country, these Associations of small investors have funds invested of over £3,000,000—risks spread over 700 different investments in 37 countries—reserves built up out of profits—and are able to pay dividends of 7 per cent. per annum without deduction of tax.

James WillinghamGEORGE H. HOLLOWAY
Dora Willingham, his wife DOROTHY HOLLOWAY
James and Dora Willingham have everything in the world to make them happy. They have been married for five years and tonight, the anniversary of their wedding, they are having a quiet little celebration at home. Their happiness is not an accident; it is the result of a system which they recommend to their less fortunately-mated friends. Yet in spite of the system—or because of it—things go wrong on this anniversary for the first time in their married life.

drifted with the current. I have invited all and sundry to come out of the ether and live in my memory.

Whim has played its part with merit in ordaining which of the items should linger in my mind; the song which I best remember is the one which I best enjoyed, and not necessarily the one which I heard 'at my mother's knee.'

Of all things which have come to my ears, none has been quite so welcome as the broadcast of Hamlet.

But it was not the deep philosophy of Shakespeare which caused me that night to neglect the fire and rise into a heaven of darkness. It was because I was drinking in what I think must surely be one of the finest pieces of voice artistry ever displayed. Mr. Isham (the actor), who played the part of Hamlet, appeared to speak—I had almost said 'with the tongues of men and of angels'—at least with an inspired timbre and clearness, and his intelligence in interpretation seemed for the moment to settle the whole problem of Hamlet's character. The other players, too, were real creators, and the whole performance remains vivid as a remarkable piece of team-work.

Another series of broadcast items which carried the light of inspiration was the 'Foundations of Poetry.' It is not always possible to read poetry aloud, as it should be read. Yet even when this can be done, its full significance is only brought out by such reading as one heard on these Sunday afternoons.

Now amongst other things, it seems to me that the B.B.C. have discovered this year a new type of broadcaster, one whom I must call a radio-essayist. He has something of the style which (in written matter) is seen in Mr. Robert Lynd and Mr. E. V. Rieu. It is a style intimate, personal, and novel, and the author of 'The Way of the World' talks seems to display it to fine advantage. I have been able to discern more than a grain or two of wheat among his light, but consequential talks on world-politics, fashions and the idiosyncrasies of monkeys.

Among the year's new loves, it is good to recall some of the old loves which have not been lost. Sir Walford (must one add 'Davies'?) has brightened some of the year with his 'Good evening, listeners all!' Somehow it sounds as though he had said, 'God rest you merry, gentlemen!'

Was it this year that there was carried out a repetition of the way broadcasting was done in the early days? Do you remember those dawn-days when, through a maze of writhing wires and coils, and over a view of chaos as represented by an exposed baseboard, there used to come the 'Hullo-hullo-hullo-hullo!' of the calling station? And then, after you had read through the paper by the light of the bright emitter valves, you heard something else, and jiggled and juggled and held your breath and finally produced the tinkle of a piano—the ghost of a badly-made spinet. I should like another of these reminiscent broadcasts.

There is one more memory before space compels me to 'close down.'

This is the memory of one we shall not hear again. Someone much nearer the top of Savoy Hill than the ordinary listener condemned her to death by neglect. And her song is still. But I think that in some heaven beyond the ether, where the sounds of yesterday are perhaps all gathered in, there will be found a place of honour for The Daventry Tuning Call, deceased.

Some Future 5GB Programmes From Birmingham.

The Children's Hour.

EDITH JAMES, who has now appeared many times in plays and Vaudeville programmes, broadcast from 5GB, will give songs at the piano on Monday, January 7, when that mysterious personage, the Housemaster, will also read another page from his diary.

A Nursery rhyme play—Mary had a little Lamb, by Gladys Ward—is in the programme for Tuesday, January 8, in addition to songs from Mary Pollock (soprano) and Harold Casey (baritone).

The Fairy Train makes another journey on Thursday, January 10. Its mileage must be now simply colossal.

Bert Copley, well known in the Midlands and the North, is taking part in the proceedings on Saturday, January 12.

High-Power Short Waves.

THE Service on Sunday, January 6, at 8 p.m., comes from St. Martin's Parish Church, the preacher being the Rev. F. C. Spurr.

Charles Hill (tenor) and Isabel Watling (contralto) are the artists in the broadcast programmes from Lozells Picture House on Monday and Thursday, January 7 and 10, respectively.

Aubrey Millward (baritone) and Hilda Watkins (pianoforte) appear in the Light Music programme at 6.30 p.m. on Monday, January 7.

Gladys Parr (contralto) will be heard in the afternoon orchestral concert at 4 p.m. on Tuesday, January 8.

'Rin-Gin-Gin'

Without a loud speaker, TOMMY HANDLEY's set is in a state of low tension.

That gay spark had been on the snode head and at last found himself short-circuited in a dry cell.

The following morning he was charged with unlicensed interference at high frequency with the laws of gravity, or, in the alternative (5GB), with being a dull emitter and bobbing the cat's whiskers.

The detector, giving evidence, said that the accused, after being run to earth, oscillated and blasted, but offered no resistance.

Tommy, after hearing a long talk, promised in a fit of remorse that he would revise his programme and turn over a new leaf at a ridiculous rate of resolutions per hour perhaps.

POINTS ABOUT MET-VICK ALL ELECTRIC VALVES

THE VALVES WITH THE INDIRECTLY HEATED CATHODES

Why have so many of the leading manufacturers of wireless sets adopted as standard Cosmos All-electric Valves? A few reasons are here given indicating that for successful operation of sets completely from the electric light supply mains, these Valves are indispensable.

All valves with directly heated cathodes ("Raw" A.C. Valves as they are called) operate with Hum. This hum even if small, makes them quite unsuitable as detectors—the most critical position. Cosmos All-electric Valves do not Hum, and are suitable for all stages.

By reason of their big cathodes and great cathode-emission, Cosmos All-electric Valves are robust, strong and long-lived.

A valve that emits from the grid, cannot be used in R. C. C. Sets, nor, if serious, in transformer coupled Sets. Grid emission is a more serious defect than "softness," and no one would dream of using a "soft" valve. Cosmos All-electric Valves do not grid emit.

Cosmos All-electric Valves give great amplification per stage. They are extremely sensitive and by reason of low impedance values, give high tone quality of reproduction and handle power volumes with ease.

Special capping and the use of disc adaptors enable Cosmos All-electric Valves to be used in existing battery sets without re-wiring. The extraordinarily good characteristics of these valves, however, may render a slight modification to some circuits desirable.

The prices of Cosmos All-electric Valves are comparable with the prices of ordinary battery valves. Why use any less satisfactory?

SUPER POWER AMPLIFICATION

WITH ONLY 200 Volts

THE NEW MAZDA PX650 is the only valve available, at the present time, capable of giving 1,000 milliwatts undistorted output with only 200 volts on the anode. Its filament consumption, too, is about half that of previous heavy duty power valves—and this is a Super power valve. In the output of a correctly designed amplifier the PX650 will handle all the volume necessary to drive a moving-coil speaker. It will give all the sudden passages, all the booming of the drums without a movement of the millimeter needle.

The PX650 can be operated satisfactorily with only 100 volts on the plate, so that even on low voltage D.C. supply advantage can be taken of the wonderful amplifying properties of this valve. There is no need to step up A.C. to 300 or 400 volts, 200 volts on the PX650 is ample.

Filament Amps	0.5

Peep into the Cabarets of the Continent on Sunday

This distance-getter built in 6 Simple steps

— or you can buy it completely assembled for

If you prefer it, you can buy the Lissen S.G. 3 Receiver, factory assembled and factory tested in handsome wood cabinet, big enough to hold batteries and accumulator, as illustrated, for £8. (This price includes everything except valves, batteries, accumulator and loudspeaker.)

There are brighter programmes for you on the Continent on Sundays—dancing, variety, humour—programmes with the carnival spirit in them; and you can get them all on the Lissen S.G.3 Receiver. Night after night you can tune in distant stations at full loudspeaker strength all around the dials of this receiver. It gives you selectivity such as you have never known before, so that you can cut out the local station at will; it gives you volume and purity on distant stations that you would never have believed possible with a 3-valve receiver.

BUILT IN 6 SIMPLE STEPS!

Merely follow the plain and easy instructions and chart which Lissen have published, which makes failure impossible and which you can get from your nearest radio dealer or procure by filling in the coupon below and posting direct to Lissen. Your dealer can supply you with an envelope, price only 10s., which contains panel, baseboard, screen and all the sundries you require for this receiver. In addition you use the standard Lissen parts specified. You are not tied down to any particular make of valve nor to any special cabinet. But a suggestion for a suitable cabinet is given to you and that cabinet will hold batteries and accumulator so that the receiver, when built according to the Lissen instructions, will be a self-contained set, with nicely finished wood cabinet.

Remarkable range reproduction that's alive!

It is a revelation in modern reception to hear the world's broadcasting come in station after station as the tuning dials glide round. The new Marconiphone 44—using two Marconi Screened Valves—enables the most distant stations to be located quickly and easily by means of twin dials calibrated into wavelengths. The long and short wavebands are covered by two sets of tuning coils both controlled by a transfer switch. As for the reproduction, its vividness will surprise you unless you are already familiar with Marconiphone performance. Reaction is not employed, though the set is highly sensitive, and the specially designed circuit handles frequencies over the entire audio range with consistent effect. Even the most elusive harmonies are faithfully interpreted.

CLARITY

BETWEEN the far distant broadcasting station and your own fireside, Mullard P.M. Valves form the perfect link.

The tone they give you—the volume—the sensitivity to distant stations—Mullard P.M. Valves make an old radio set modern and a modern set perfect.

Your receiver is as good as your valves; your valves are as good as their filaments—and the Mullard P.M. Filament is unique.

Get a set of Mullard P.M. Valves to-day—all radio dealers sell them.

Brandes Radio Products

Dry-Charged Accumulators with a Slow Discharge.

The Brandes dry-charged accumulators are eminently suitable for Dull Emitter Valves and are specially designed to hold their charge over long periods. Carriers are included with all accumulators.

H.T. BATTERIES
It's the cells that count.

The old flash-lamp type of cell in ordinary batteries cannot even guarantee you the usual term of service expected of the 60 volt Battery. The Brandes B.S. 60 with the new large capacity cell goes further—it gives even longer life than you expect of it.

ARE YOU A WIRELESS ENGINEER?

Do you understand the ins and outs of Wireless? When you buy a Fellows Little Giant Set you can get perfect reception without any knowledge of wireless whatsoever. Not only are they exceedingly simple to operate, but each set is installed absolutely free of charge by one of our electrical engineers who will call on you immediately your set is delivered. A few days later he will again call on you to see if you are satisfied. He will always be at your service should anything go wrong. These wonderful Little Giant Sets are sold direct to you through our Head Office and Branches, thus cutting out all middlemen's profits. They are delivered immediately to your home on receipt of cash price or first instalment.

Fellows Sets are complete, including valves, batteries, loudspeaker, aerial equipment and Royalties, in fact everything except the aerial mast. They are constructed of the finest material by skilled British labour in our three huge factories.

Remember all sets are sent on 7 days' approval on receipt of cash price or first instalment.

REGENERATOR H.T.

The Fellows "Regenerator" H.T. Battery is made by a process known only to Fellows. Our own chemists found the formula that gives the "Regenerator" Battery a lower internal resistance than any other. So time and again after the hardest work the "Regenerator" regains its power.

Dramatic suspense. They call it

IN the broadcasting of drama—or its modern version, the thriller—clever use is made of silence to produce an atmosphere of tense excitement. Dramatic suspense, they call it.

You can get the full effect of these silences only if you are using the right H.T. current. For these "thrillers," therefore, use Lissen Battery power—notice the volume produced by this power, noiseless, steady at every dramatic pause. You can get no smoother, no quieter, no better power for radio, than that given to you when you use a Lissen New Process Battery.

10,000 radio dealers sell it. Ask for Lissen in a way that shows you will take no other
