SILENT POWER

Flowing steadily, smoothly, sustainedly through your set, the silent power of the Lissen Battery gives you a conception of radio at its best. The Lissen Secret Process generates pure D.C. current: it packs the big cells full of energy; it yields power that has never a trace of ripple in it, never a sign of hum.

Music is sweeter because of it, speech is clearer, and the sharper definition that it gives is noticeable in every item of the broadcast programme.

Obtainable at all good radio dealers.

JULY 5, 1929

I HAVE heard a poet and a Philistine agree upon this question: Poetry can never be a success on the wireless, they both have said. 'Can poetry be satisfactorily broadcast?' asks the poet, and the Philistine, by way of a retort, asks: 'Is poetry worth broadcasting?' It may be interesting to consider these questions once more.

Many will say, as I said at first thought, that broadcasting can do nothing with poetry. You see a roomful of people, of whom you are one. The impersonal music stops, and it is announced that somebody is to read poetry. Awkwardness enters. Poetry demands complete surrender, and complete surrender is as offensive to most people as undressing in public would be. There is an element of absurdity in allowing yourself to be moved, in public, too, by a thing that is only a loud-speaker. Poetry demands the closest attention, and it is almost impossible to give close attention when the room is full of loud-speaker. Often the strain of listening is itself enough to spoil the poem, or, if the reproduction is good, it is still almost impossible to give close attention when the room is full of imperfect sympathies. You cannot help growing self-conscious, and so again wrecking the poetry.

Yet poetry claims to be the highest literature; it has value for men; it depends upon sounds, and it ought to be read aloud. What are the conditions which poetry demands, and can a broadcast poem enjoy these or not?

Much lyric poetry is of too intimate a nature to bear public recital. If such poetry is to be broadcast it must be listened to almost alone. The success of the experiment of listening in darkness will surprise those who have not tried it. Darkness is an isolation; when the eyes have nothing, the imagination works at once, more vividly and less incongruously. But some people are afraid of performing the act of switching out the light, as though it would brand them in others' eyes as highbrows. An Englishman hates it to be thought that he takes anything too seriously. But either the thing is worth hearing, or it is not. You cannot sit and sew, or eat, or do a crossword puzzle, and listen to a poem. It must have undivided attention, or it is nonsense and is better not heard at all. If radio plays are better, experienced in darkness, so must poetry be, which is, indeed, a drama in yourself.

POETRY AND BROADCASTING

By FRANK KENDON

A lyric is not a declamation, it is a dance of words in the heart, one man's skilful expression of his own deep feeling. It need not be declaimed or intoned or recited. It is best (as friends know) read aloud with one other person (three, said Lamb, is an audience). Now, this is just what broadcasting can do. Microphones do not need shouts, nor 'cultured elocution,' nor declamation; they can catch the quieter tones of fireside talk. There is a sense in which it can be said that the microphone abolishes the audience; variety artists and orators naturally find this a serious disadvantage, but for the reader of poetry it must be an advantage.

Nobody can read poetry at all times; it needs a certain frame of mind, a quietness that is not weariness; and this is where broadcast poetry often fails. It must fail climax of a carefully planned period not interrupted by announcements, or by an account of the setting or the events which led up to, and partly explain, the poem. There is nothing worse than having poetry thrust upon you when you are unready.

Poetry can also create its own atmosphere, but the huge audience is a chaos of listeners who must first of all be brought under its spell. In a short lyric, which is a poetical moment only, the poet does not write a word more than is necessary to the exact expression of his moment of vision; but in narrative poetry he has considered the preparation of the reader's mind, and takes it as part of his job. If the whole of the 'Ancient Mariner' is read, every listener, when its greater moments arrive, will be in exactly the right mood for them, brought into that mood by Coleridge himself. It has been my own experience that long poems are better for broadcasting than shorter poems, and that a short poetical recital can be not merely a waste of time, but a positive annoyance. They should be longer, if possible; and more sustained poems should be read at the beginning, so that the poetry itself may have time to create a mood in which the listener will willingly submit himself.

Again, poetry nearly always requires to be re-read. It is its nature that, although many of its effects depend upon delightful surprises, surprises of rhythm upon metre, surprises of metaphor, likeness in unlikeness, surprises of word and epithet, yet its power increases as it becomes better known. It might taste too much of the classroom to read lyrics over twice, though I think the experiment would be worth trying; but certainly the text ought to be available in the programmes wherever possible, so that before or afterwards the listener may be able to make himself familiar with its delights. You cannot exhaust the pleasure of a great poem. This plan, indeed, the B.B.C. carried out in their readings of the Foundations of Poetry, by publishing an anthology.

Poetry, then, asks sympathy, intimacy, a quiet mind, undivided attention, and a certain familiarity. This is a lot to ask. What does it give for this?

BRITISH WAVELENGTHS

As already announced, the application of the new scheme of wavelengths for European broadcasting, known as the Prague Plan, involved some rearrangements of B.B.C. frequencies. As a result of further study and testing, particularly in connection with the reception of the alternative programmes provided by Daventry (5GB), the B.B.C. decided to defer some of the changes announced for June 30. Below is the complete list of British frequencies as operating to-day:—

1500 kh. (200 metres) is not a British exclusive wave under the Prague Plan, but special arrangements have been made for its use by the Leeds transmitter.

* It should be noted that later in the year night effect may cause such mutual interference between Langenberg and 5GB that it may become necessary to reallocate the frequencies of 5GB, Manchester, and Glasgow.

'The Broadcaster's' Notes on Coming Events:

BOTH SIDES OF
THE MICROPHONE

A New Game.

OUR ears being strained towards the New World, we heard the other day of the 'signatures' which sponsors of advertising programmes are now attaching to their efforts. The 'signature' is an appropriate piece of music which is played at the beginning and end of the advertiser's programme. After a while, listeners begin to associate the signature with what lies between—and so arises what We Big Business Men call a 'property.' A firm of dressmakers uses the song 'Alice Blue Gown,' and the Fisher Body Company's item in the General Motors' Hour was prefaced with 'Coming through the Rye' (the point lying in the words of the first line). We amused ourselves the other evening inventing signatures for the use of various British firms on that glorious day when American radio methods are adopted over here. The game is a good one. For fishmongers we suggest O Sole Mio. Perhaps our readers have brighter ideas on this subject.

'O Sole Mio!'

Launching a Battle Cruiser.

THE ceremony of the launching of H.M.S. Exeter from H.M. Dockyard, Devonport, on Thursday afternoon, July 18, will be relayed to Daventry Experimental. H.M.S. Exeter is a 'B' class cruiser of 8,550 tons and mounted with six 8-inch B.L. guns, together with the usual secondary and subsidiary armament. The launching will be performed by Lady Madden, who, at the naming ceremony, will break a bottle of Colonial wine over the ship's bows—in place of the customary champagne—cut the cord which releases the dog-shores, and so, to the strains of 'Rule, Britannia!' launch the ship. From the moment when the Admiral Superintendent escorts the First Sea Lord and Lady Madden and the Commander-in-Chief on to the launching platform, to the final moment when Lady Madden calls for three cheers for the men who built the ship, there should not be a dull moment for the listener. Commander Stephen King-Hall, R.N., will give a commentary

'The Only Pretty Ringtime.'

ENGLAND has no equivalent to the Lieder of Germany. They are as peculiar to that land, as much its essential voice, as, let us say, coloratura opera is of Italy, or madrigals of England, or guitars and castanets of Spain. They sing the romance of youth and adolescence. That is why Schubert was so constant to the Lied: he never grew up. And that is why the lyrics of Heine were such favourites with Schumann, in his Lieder: they hold the bitter-sweet of the maytime of youth captive in their lines. The singer of Lieder must hide her sophistication under a simplicity that shall not mock the green sorrows and joys of youth. Elena Gerhardt achieved this art superbly, and a few other singers—among them Olga Lynn, who is to give a broadcast Lieder recital on Sunday afternoon, July 14 (London).

Alhambra Memories.

THE Alhambra, from which 'turns' have lately been relayed during our vaudeville programmes, appears in the programmes on Thursday, July 18, in another and remoter capacity. The occasion is the broadcasting of a studio programme entitled 'Music in "the Eighties": Alhambra Ballets by George Jacobi.' Jacobi was musical director of the famous theatre between 1871-1890. The Alhambra has been in its seventy-five years the home of many kinds of entertainment. It began in 1854—a new building in the Moorish style—as 'The Panopticon,' established by Royal Charter for the purpose of producing classical music and improving lectures on scientific subjects. In 1861 the Panopticon was bought up by a showman, who sold the grand organ to St. Paul's Cathedral and opened the place as a circus. Next followed a period of ballet, until the performance of the Can-Can led to a suspension of the dancing licence. It was not long, however, before ballet again claimed chief place in the programmes of the Alhambra. The original theatre was burned down in 1882—and a palace more gloriously Moorish built in its place. The golden age of Alhambra ballet was that during which Jacobi directed the orchestra. Jacobi, prizewinner at the Paris Conservatoire and friend of Offenbach, composed one hundred and eight ballets for the Alhambra, movements from nine of which will be heard on the 18th. Prodigal though he was, he never, till the day of his death, lost his genius for composing swinging melodies. We are dazzled today by the 'super-productions of our own impresarios,' yet at the Alhambra of the 'eighties' there was a corps de ballet of a hundred dancers and one 'transformation scene' after another. The promenade at the back of the stalls was a favourite haunt of Bohemian London and provided Phil May with much material.

The Dear Old Days.

WE think of ourselves as living in a sensational age of showmanship. A glance at the history of the Alhambra, admirably compiled in 'tabloid' form by T. McDonald Rendle, will convince the sceptical modern that there were 'thrills' in entertainment for many years before the 'talkies' were dreamed of. We read of the big fight, 'Tom Sayers v. John Carmel Heenan—the Bernicia Boy,' forbidden by every Chief Constable in the country but finally fought at the Alhambra when Sayers had been smuggled into London in a horse-box; of Blondin walking on his rope above the auditorium with the theatre-manager on his shoulders; of Lulu, who appeared first at the Alhambra as a tiny boy trapezist, later as a beautiful Circassian girl, and was made the subject of a political cartoon in Punch; of Herr Dowe of the bullet-proof cuirass, who invited the Duke of Cambridge to shoot at him. A great chapter in the history of entertainment (a history as yet to be recorded in all its lively detail). We must not forestall the writer of an entertaining article in our next issue. The programme of Jacobi Ballets will be conducted by the composer's son, Maurice Jacobi.

Melsa Recital.

MELSA, a favourite with all listeners, is to broadcast a violin recital from 5GB Daventry Experimental on Saturday evening, July 20. His programme, on this occasion, is a popular one, and includes (besides the Kreisler arrangement of the Londonderry Air) pieces by Mozart, Brahms, and Sarasate.

The Stuff Men Die For.

THERE was an announcement in these columns some weeks back of Ingredient X, a new play for broadcasting by L. du Garde Peach. Fuller details of this production are now available. We have seen the author's script, and at a rough glance would say that listeners are in for a couple of rousing evenings—July 31 (5GB) and August 1. Ingredient X may be termed a 'satirical thriller' on the not-too-well worn lines of 'the truth behind the news' (see C. K. Monro's The Ramour and The Forest by John Galsworthy). The secret of a new Synthetic Rubber Company lies in a mysterious ingredient known as 'x,' which has made the product possible. Everyone—rival firms, City men, society ladies—is talking about this substance. We hear the proceedings at a meeting of the company's board of directors. The atmosphere is one of bland optimism. We hear of the fortunes which are to be made from the company. In between the happy speeches of the directors we are whisked away to the African forests, where men are dying for 'ingredient x,' and to the high seas, where a too-heavy cargo of the stuff is sinking a tramp steamer. The play is ingeniously constructed, with a nice balance kept between satire and adventure. Mr. Peach (under his own name as well as various pseudonyms) has given us many types of programme in the past. In Ingredient X his experience of the microphone technique has proved very useful.

Chamber Music.

ON Thursday evening, July 18, the Brosa String Quartet will broadcast a recital of chamber music from London. Their programme is one of exceptional interest, containing, as it does, two infrequently heard works for oboe and strings: Arnold Bax's Quintet for Oboe and Strings and Mozart's Quartet for Oboe, Violin, Viola and Cello. In addition, Lilius Mackinnon will play two groups of pianoforte pieces, one of which is to be devoted to Scriabin.

Versailles as Subject for a Programme.

THE French national fete of July 14 is to be celebrated (though on Monday, July 15) with a programme entitled 'Versailles,' in which the famous palace will stand as symbol of the greatness of France. The great days of the Roi Soleil, the terrors of the Revolution, the tragedy of Marie Antoinette—these will be among the memories recalled in music and drama. The author of 'Versailles' is Miss Cecilia Hill, an authority on the Palace, whose book, 'Versailles, its Life and History,' is one of the best English contributions to the story of France. Miss Hill is a privileged person. When she goes to Paris she does not stay, like you or me, in the hotel opposite the railway station (pension 35 francs). She has a room in the Trianon and so is able to walk in the gardens, among the fountains, in the early morning, long before we and our sort have boarded the charabanc marked 'Versailles.' That is what is called 'good fortune.'

'Terrors of the Revolution.'

BOTH SIDES OF THE MICROPHONE

Our Talkative Friends.

THE Talking Films improve every time we see them. History in this new branch of Art and Commerce is made in a day. In one recent 'talkie,' though, we were a little pained to have to watch a shot detective dying for ten minutes to a perfectly gratuitous accompaniment of 'English rustics in perfect harmony.'

Hawaiian guitars, but in another we were frankly delighted with an old English inn, 'near Godalming,' where the rustics sat round in a saloon bar, twice as large as the Ritz, singing snatches from The Beggar's Opera in perfect harmony.

A Notable Anniversary.

ALMOST a year ago now—on July 13, 1928, in fact—the first 'Surprise Item' was broadcast. The idea was a good one—that there should be each week at least one unannounced programme of, possibly, a 'red hot topical' nature. The weekly quarter of an hour has brought us a variety of surprises. We have heard a gramophone playing backwards, a French clown and his 'radio circus,' a railway signal box in action, London's theatre-queue singers, a 'thriller' by a Labour M.P., a tabloid revue of sixteen items, 'Beach-comber's,' Mr. Thake and Saunders, A. J. Alan, a scene from Journey's End, another from Porgy, the Test Match cricketers, a trip round a film studio, a phenomenal choir boy, and two hundred canaries. A 'surprise item' is always a surprise in the sense that it is unannounced; the best are those which surprise as we hear them. It is none too easy a task, though, to find a real novelty each week. Sometimes those responsible have had to rely upon old favourites. It is always a delight, however, to come upon an unannounced story by 'A. J. A.' or the voice of Mrs. Buggins.

From Studio to Music-Hall.

VAUDEVILLE programme on Tuesday evening, July 16, will include Tommy Handley, Gwen Henry, Teddy Brown and a relay from the London Coliseum. We were talking yesterday with a lady who remarked with surprise that, when the vaudeville bill 'faded over' to an outside music-hall, the orchestra was always playing in the same key as Jack Payne. Our friend imagined this to be a piece of sustained good fortune, whereas it is actually part of the careful organization which makes music-hall O.B.'s artistically possible. The key in which the theatre orchestra will be playing, the length of the 'act' to be relayed and of the one preceding it, these facts must be carefully noted in advance, and once the 'stand by' warning has been given, men in the wings of the theatre, at the Outside Engineers' control-point, in the Control Room at Savoy Hill as well as in the Studio from which the rest of the programme is coming, are listening intently so that the change-over may be accurately and artistically carried out. The stage-staffs of the various theatres also cooperate closely.

Thieves Among the Flowers.

ONE of the less obvious tragedies of England's disappearing countryside is the speed with which certain species of wild flowers are being uprooted from their localities and gradually exterminated. We remember a small copse, not thirty miles from London, where, as a boy, we used each year to find lilies-of-the-valley in quiet profusion. We were there this spring, too, but found no lilies at all. Similarly, the last year or two, we have watched a dwindling daffodil wood in Essex. It is not so much the indiscriminate, thoughtless plucking of the flowers that people indulge in, as the wholesale uprooting of roots and bulbs that gives one pause for the future of our wild acres. Garden flowers are lovely, no one would deny, but they are, after all, 'private property'; and the best of wild flowers is, surely, that they are for all alike to enjoy. It is not a day we, at any rate, look for with pleasure when all the best wild flowers shall have been lugged away and set in the privacy of gardens. On behalf of the Society for the Promotion of Nature Reserves the Rt. Hon. Viscount Ullswater, G.C.B., will broadcast on Friday, July 19, a talk entitled 'Vandals of the Countryside.'

Finland's Great Composer.

SIBELIUS' Fourth Symphony in A Minor is the outstanding work in the 5GB concert on Sunday evening, July 14. Though trained for the Law, Sibelius early decided to devote himself to music. After studying in Berlin and Vienna, he returned to his native country in 1893; by 1897 he had won such fame as a national composer that the State gave him a grant, thus enabling him to retire into the country and devote himself to creative work. Sibelius' work is the highest possible compliment that could be paid to the cultured and sane democracy of Finland. He is, before everything, a nationalist, though utterly without the vainglory that so often goes with nationalism. His fiftieth and sixtieth birthdays were celebrated in Finland as national events, and were marked by productions of the fifth and seventh symphonies. From time to time the composer has written work of 'public' import—including the well-known Finlandia, a March for Finnish Infantry, and a Carillon for the opening of a church in Helsingfors. But without doubt his greatest works, and those by which Finland (and all the world) will immemorally honour him are his seven symphonies: they are not yet heard frequently; but it needs no oracular power to prophesy the great place they must one day occupy in the world's music.

Records for Gramophone Enthusiasts.

DURING the luncheon hour broadcast of new gramophone records on Thursday, June 27, Mr. Christopher Stone played Old Time Songs, Jack Hylton's Orchestra, H.M.V. C1681; Rimsky-Korsakov's Capriccio Espagnole, Hallé Orchestra, Col. 9716-7; Toreador Song from Carmen, Rudolf Bocklemann, H.M.V. C1680; Grieg's Sonata in C Minor, Kreisler and Rachmaninoff, H.M.V. DB1259-61; Isolde's Narrative and Curse, Frida Leider and Martei-Wagner, H.M.V. D1667; Albert Sandler and Orchestra in Las Lagerteranas, Col. 5386; Harry Shalson in Deep Night, Col. 5383; and dance records of The Toy-maker's Dream (Winner 4919), When the Curtain Comes Down (Col. 5389), Ever so Goosey (Homochord D1344), When Little Children Smile (Col. 5387), and Four or Five Times (Parlo. R365).

The Canterbury Festival.

FURTHER details are now available concerning this Festival, which takes place during the week August 19 to 24 (inclusive), and for which the B.B.C. are supplying the orchestra and solo artists. On two evenings, programmes, called 'Serenades,' will be given in the Cloisters. Included in these 'Serenades' will be works by Purcell, Wagner, Parry, Ethel Smyth, Delius, Holst, Wolf, Warlock, and others. This feature, though only one out of many, including chorals and dramatic performances, should be exceedingly popular: it is not often we are given the opportunity of hearing good music in a setting so charming as is provided by the Cloisters of Canterbury Cathedral.

Early French Music.

EXAMPLES of Early French Keyboard Music, played by Reginald Paul, constitute the 'Foundations of Music' for the week beginning July 8. Mention of the French harpsichord composers of the seventeenth century inevitably calls to mind the music of Couperin, type and peer of them all. To understand his music thoroughly, one should, presumably, hear it played on the harpsichord itself; but we confess we are romantic, and for us enough survives of those amusing airs and graces when they are played upon the pianoforte. Something of the delight of musical-boxes (those converted gold snuff-boxes, watches, and cane-heads) is in the harpsichord music of such composers as Couperin and Rameau—iridescent bubbles of sound in which our mind's eye seems to see fountains and peacocks, and carven trees and silken ladies dancing on the lawn. Some will say we give our romantic mind too free a rein; but what other attitude is possible before music that boasts such titles as, for instance, 'The Cherubim of Heaven's Blue'?

About Toys

THE next 'Growth of the Child' talk, number twelve in the series, will be given by the Hon. Mrs. St. Aubyn at 10.45 a.m. on Thursday, July 18. Her subject will be 'Toys and Recreations'—one about which many parents are vaguer than vague. We are acquainted with a small girl to whom doting parents have given, from time to time, toys of the most elaborate description—item, a Teddy Bear which says 'Wow!';

'A Motor Car with Pedals.'

item, a motor car with pedals; item, a French doll with a worldly leer; item, a miniature jazz-band outfit which would turn Jack Payne green with envy. These splendours lie discarded on the nursery ottoman. Our friend attaches far more importance to a creature called 'Fruity,' which the gardener carved from a clothes-peg.

'The Broadcaster.'

5GB Calling!SIR FRANK BENSON AS RADIO 'STAR'

In Birmingham's Shakespeare Feature Programme—A Successful Village Band—More Vaudeville—A Deserving West Country Charity—Light Music and Plays.

The Amington Band.

MANY listeners will, no doubt, wonder where Amington is situated. The same question is often asked when the band is fulfilling an engagement or attending a contest. Amington is a small mining village bordering on the north of Warwickshire, near Tamworth. The band which, under its conductor, Roland Davis, provides 5GB's afternoon concert on Wednesday, July 17, was formed in 1918, and claims to have a record unequalled by any other village band in the country. In addition to having won numerous cups and trophies throughout the Midlands, the band won the Daily Telegraph Cup (1921) and the Grand Shield (1923) at the Crystal Palace Championship contest. In the Belle Vue championship, September, 1925, it was successful in securing the fourth prize. Through the generosity of the Miners' Welfare Committee the band has been equipped with one of the finest band-rooms in the country, opened in October last.

Vaudeville.

TWO vaudeville programmes are included in the week under review. In the first, on Monday, July 15, we find Myles Clifton, perhaps the finest delineator of 'G. P. Huntley' character parts in the country; Dorothy McBlain, the siffleuse who is now well-established in the hearts of listeners; Mark and Alma Vane, whose light duets 'come over' so successfully, and Mina Taylor, who presents a sketch, details of which are not yet to hand. Philip Brown's Dominoes Dance Band, under the leadership of James Donovan, is in support.

Helena Millais.

IN the second vaudeville programme on Wednesday, July 17, we find Helena Millais, the well-known actress-entertainer. Like many other versatile and successful entertainers, Helena Millais has had a varied and interesting career. She was leading woman in plays for some years, and as a girl of fifteen and sixteen she played emotional parts of the Mrs. Patrick Campbell type; then she ran sketches in vaudeville, playing American parts for three years. After that, for further experience, she played in and wrote some successful films, and then became a concert entertainer, creating her popular character, 'Our Lizzie.' This led to broadcasting, and she was one of the first B.B.C. 'stars,' having broadcast regularly since 1922. Miss Millais has just made her first 'talkie,' and her broadcast and gramophone experiences should make her a valuable 'talkie' recruit.

Stainless Banjo Impressions.

I'M afraid that title is somewhat mixed, but the hot weather coupled with the dazzling galaxy of talent also in the bill with Helena Millais, to use a colloquialism, rather 'fogged the issue.' What I intended to convey was that also included in the same programme is our old friend Stainless Stephen, with his partner in patter Oscillating Oscar, Will Van Allen and Bert (banjo duo), and Kathleen Hamilton, whose impressions of certain well-known radio voices are the best of its kind I know. In addition to impressions of 'people I have heard but never seen,' she makes a feature, as many know, of 'people I have seen but never heard.'

'Black Arts Ltd.'

ONE day last week we received the card, a facsimile of which is reproduced on this page. We frankly admit that the immediate effect upon us was somewhat frightening, but we quickly regained our composure and agreed to see the gentleman in question. The result has been that we are arranging a programme on novel lines, as we are anxious to leave no avenue unexplored which may aid in the establishment of radio drama as an art with new possibilities. It presents, we think, some claims to novelty, inasmuch as it interposes an additional stage between the artist and his audience. It is always interesting to hear what the other listener thinks, for no two human intelligences react quite in the same way to a common stimulus. If we can receive the reactions of another intelligence to the programme to which we are listening, it may add great interest to even such a simple programme as we have selected for our experiment. Whatever measure of success may attend our effort, we are sure of a warm welcome to an illustrious recruit to radio productions, Sir Frank Benson, whose appearance will give our endeavour its best possible chance of a successful issue.

Gloucester Samaritan Fund.

THE Gloucester Samaritan Fund and Guild is the subject of 5GB's appeal on Sunday, July 14. The fund, which is controlled by a small committee, was founded by the Rev. G. Milford Barnes, who has made a close personal study of the subject and devoted his life to work among the poor and physically defective. He has spent much time labouring for this wonderful work in hospitals, missions, and in the homes of the patients with whom he has come into contact. The object of the guild, which has the full approbation and support of many well-known medical men, is to do everything in its power to advance the special and prompt treatment and after-care of urgent cases, to prevent needless suffering and total disablement, and to cater for the social, moral, and religious education of the physically defective. The scheme is a very comprehensive one, and it is realized that it cannot immediately be fulfilled, but the committee is confident that it is practical, and when placed on a sound financial basis will meet a long-felt need in the West Country. The appeal will be made by Mr. A. J. Dennis,

In Time with Summer-Time.

THE light touch which has been given to the summer programmes this year by the B.B.C. has been markedly acceptable, particularly by the listener in possession of a portable set. On Tuesday afternoon, July 16, I find a little programme I should like to listen to in a punt, say, amongst the rushes under the quivering willows of the Avon. The melodies of the Norris Stanley Pianoforte Sextet would effectually cause business worries and the thought of bricks and mortar to fade away through the reeds amongst which I should be lying. They would form a background for the baritone songs of Bernard Ross, and the humorous touches given by Edith James to her songs at the piano—Edith James, who although one of 5GB's favourite lady entertainers, has broadcast from many other B.B.C. stations. Yes, I should just lie there and think . . . but most of the time just lie.

'Followers.'

TWO one-act plays fill an hour on Friday, July 19. The first is Followers, by Harold Brighouse. In it we are taken back to Cranford in the year 1859 to the type of parlour one used to find overcrowded with fragile furniture, antimacassars, and china ornaments. It is a delightful comedy, but that does not mean that the audience will rock themselves with laughter. Indeed, there is a streak of pathos running through the story, and one part at least will bring sorrow rather than amusement. The second play is an adaptation by Mr. Stuart Vinden of Charles Dickens' story, 'Hunted Down.'

Singer and Pianist.

THE Light Music on Friday, July 19, is provided by Jan Berenska's Pianoforte Quintet, Marjorie Hazlehurst (pianoforte), and Mary Maddock (soprano). The latter began her musical career as a pianist, studying at the London College of Music, securing her diploma there before she was thirteen with full marks for interpretation and sight reading. She then studied at the University of Wales, where she discovered that she had a voice. It is very nice to feel that one has two strings to one's bow, but on one occasion her versatility was responsible for a most unpleasant (to her) quarter of an hour. While at a dinner in London, at which there were several Cabinet Ministers, she was asked at the last moment to accompany a leading tenor who was one of the guests of honour.

The Pleasures of Transposition.

MISS MADDOCK consented, and on taking her place at the pianoforte was astonished to find she had to play from memory. For You Alone was the first item, and she was about to begin, when she was still further unsettled by the singer's request to transpose the song into another key. The second song she had never even heard at that time, and found that again she was expected to accompany without a copy. However, she firmly insisted that one be provided. This was done, and then again it was a case of transposition. If I were Miss Maddock, I think I should be ignorant on such occasions as to which are the bass and treble clefs.

'MERCIAN.'

H. G. WELLS

is to make his first appearance at the microphone this week at 9.15. on Wednesday next, July 10. Here is one of his famous short stories.

'THE STOLEN BACILLUS'

'THIS again,' said the Bacteriologist, slipping a glass slide under the microscope, 'is a preparation of the celebrated Bacillus of cholera—the cholera germ.'

The pale-faced man peered down the microscope. He was evidently not accustomed to that kind of thing, and held a limp white hand over his disengaged eye. 'I see very little,' he said.

'Touch this screw,' said the Bacteriologist; 'perhaps the microscope is out of focus for you. Eyes vary so much. Just the fraction of a turn this way or that.'

'Ah! now I see,' said the visitor. 'Not so very much to see after all. Little streaks and shreds of pink. And yet those little particles, those mere atomies, might multiply and devastate a city! Wonderful!'

He stood up, and releasing the glass slip from the microscope, held it in his hand towards the window. 'Scarcely visible,' he said, scrutinizing the preparation. He hesitated. 'Are these—alive? Are they dangerous now?'

'Those have been stained and killed,' said the Bacteriologist. 'I wish, for my own part, we could kill and stain every one of them in the universe.'

'I suppose,' the pale man said with a slight smile, 'that you scarcely care to have such things about you in the living—in the active state?'

'On the contrary, we are obliged to,' said the Bacteriologist. 'Here, for instance—' He walked across the room and took up one of several sealed tubes. 'Here is the living thing. This is a cultivation of the actual living disease bacteria.' He hesitated. 'Bottled cholera, so to speak.'

A slight gleam of satisfaction appeared momentarily in the face of the pale man. 'It's a deadly thing to have in your possession,' he said, devouring the little tube with his eyes. The Bacteriologist watched the morbid pleasure in his visitor's expression. This man, who had visited him that afternoon with a note of introduction from an old friend, interested him from the very contrast of their dispositions. The lank black hair and deep grey eyes, the haggard expression and nervous manner, the fitful yet keen interest of his visitor were a novel change from the phlegmatic deliberations of the ordinary scientific worker with whom the Bacteriologist chiefly associated. It was perhaps natural, with a hearer evidently so impressionable to the lethal nature of his topic, to take the most effective aspect of the matter.

He held the tube in his hand thoughtfully. 'Yes, here is the pestilence imprisoned. Only break such a little tube as this into a supply of drinking-water, say to these minute particles of life that one must needs stain and examine with the highest powers of the microscope even to see, and that one can neither smell nor taste—say to them, "Go forth, increase and multiply, and replenish the cisterns," and Death—mysterious, untraceable Death, Death swift and terrible, Death full of pain and indignity —would be released upon this city, and go hither and thither seeking his victims. Here he would take the husband from the wife, here the child from its mother, here the statesman from his duty, and here the toiler from his trouble. He would follow the water-mains, creeping along streets, picking out and punishing a house here and a house there where they did not boil their drinking-water, creeping into the wells of the mineral-water makers, getting washed into salad, and lying dormant in ices. He would wait ready to be drunk in the horse-troughs, and by unwary children in the public fountains. He would soak into the soil, to reappear in springs and wells at a thousand unexpected places. Once start him at the water supply, and before we could ring him in, and catch him again, he would have decimated the metropolis.'

He stopped abruptly. He had been told rhetoric was his weakness.

'But he is quite safe here, you know—quite safe.'

The pale-faced man nodded. His eyes shone. He cleared his throat. 'These Anarchist—rascals,' said he, 'are fools, blind fools—to use bombs when this kind of thing is attainable. I think—'

A gentle rap, a mere light touch of the fingernails, was heard at the door. The Bacteriologist opened it. 'Just a minute, dear,' whispered his wife.

When he re-entered the laboratory his visitor was looking at his watch. 'I had no idea I had wasted an hour of your time,' he said. 'Twelve minutes to four. I ought to have left here by half-past three. But your things were really too interesting. No, positively I cannot stop a moment longer. I have an engagement at four.'

He passed out of the room reiterating his thanks, and the Bacteriologist accompanied him to the door, and then returned thoughtfully along the passage to his laboratory. He was musing on the ethnology of his visitor. Certainly the man was not a Teutonic type nor a common Latin one. 'A morbid product, anyhow, I am afraid,' said the Bacteriologist to himself. 'How he gloated on those cultivations of disease-germs!' A disturbing thought struck him. He turned to the bench by the vapour-bath, and then very quickly to his writing-table. Then he felt hastily in his pockets, and then rushed to the door. 'I may have put it down on the hall table,' he said.

'Minnie!' he shouted, hoarsely, in the hall.

'Yes, dear,' came a remote voice.

'Had I anything in my hand when I spoke to you, dear, just now?'

Pause.

'Nothing, dear, because I remember—'

'Blue ruin!' cried the Bacteriologist, and incontinently ran to the front door and down the steps of his house to the street.

Minnie, hearing the door slam violently, ran in alarm to the window. Down the street a slender man was getting into a cab. The Bacteriologist, hatless, and in his carpet slippers, was running and gesticulating wildly towards this group. One slipper came off, but he did not wait for it. 'He has gone mad!' said Minnie; 'it's that horrid science of his,' and, opening the window, would have called after him. The slender man, suddenly glancing round, seemed struck with the same idea of mental disorder. He pointed hastily to the Bacteriologist, said something to the cabman, the apron of the cab slammed, the whip swished, the horse's feet clattered, and in a moment the cab, and Bacteriologist hotly in pursuit, had receded up the vista of the roadway and disappeared round the corner.

Minnie remained straining out of the window for a minute. Then she drew her head back into the room again. She was dumbfounded. 'Of course he is eccentric,' she meditated. 'But running about London—in the height of the season, too—in his socks!' A happy thought struck her. She hastily put her bonnet on, seized his shoes, went into the hall, took down his hat and light overcoat from the pegs, emerged upon the doorstep, and hailed a cab that opportunely crawled by. 'Drive me up the road and round Havelock Crescent, and see if we can find a gentleman running about in a velveteen coat and no hat.'

'Hullo!' said poor old Tommy Byles; 'here's another bloomin' loonatic. Blowed if there ain't.'

Poetry's function is to delight the soul and the mind together. For an instant, it will lift a man out of time and give him the wings and the joy of greatness. Those who are dead to poetry are mere eaters and drinkers, but there are few such monsters in the world.

I can imagine some sturdy and inquiring Philistine here protesting against a pulpit manner. These are broad, general statements, not arguments at all. Something more logical in the way of a defence is needed, and it will do no harm to attempt to give it. Here, therefore, are the facts for which I should beg admission:—

I. Men have a spiritual faculty, by which, while they are alive, they delight to perceive and share in a life greater than their own.

II. Different men differ in their powers of spiritual perception.

III. This power of perceiving spirit is a noble and distinctively human power, and gives a noble and distinctively human delight, one which, as it turns a man from matter and mortality, ought to be treasured and practised and thereby increased.

Where one man may see a tree, another may see a living tree, and another a creature manifesting a life and a beauty of life which, as men can share it, must be an expression of the same spirit as that which moves man to delight in beauty. This power of seeing deeply, and of enjoying deeply, varies in individuals; but the poet is one who possesses it (or some related spiritual power) in a large degree. He may fall short of other men in other ways, but in this he is definitely in advance of them. (I do not see how the sturdy Philistine, if he is honest, can wish to deny this. All men, in all their faculties, do differ. Some are hard-headed business men, some are not; some are hot, some are cool; some are clever, some are slow. It is not a question of who is the better man, but who is the better business man, the better statesman, the better seer.)

IV. Everyone must know the desire which urges him, when he has found or seen or heard or felt some new and keen delight, to rush away and bring some friend to share it, or, if this is impracticable, to tell of it afterwards, and to tell of it so successfully that others shall enjoy the shadow of his experience. I think this is a universal human impulse. The keener the emotion the stronger is the need we feel to share it.

Outside my window a white butterfly (a London butterfly) has just carelessly fluttered across the new and very living leaves of a lime tree, and has settled in sunshine upon one of the leaves, where it waves with the leaf in the light and air. This is a delightful experience, and it appeals to me in some particular way because of my own private associations, and because of the contrast of lives suggested by its city surroundings. To Blake or to Keats, or to Shelley or to Shakespeare, it might have brought a particularly keen in-seeing delight, so keen that they would have been able to express that living delight in words, and anyone reading their words would in some measure have shared for that moment the spiritual insight of the poet. They would have opened our eyes, and increased our own natural faculty of seeing the spiritual significance of the commonplace. We may be better business men or statesmen than these, but we are not better poets. In this, therefore, if we give them their way, we can learn a new delight from them. Life is not so overcrowded with joys that we can say it is no honour to have added one; nor is there anything unnatural or effeminate or highbrow about poetical delight, it is only the delight resulting from the right exercise of a universal human faculty.

The expert golfer can broadcast his enthusiasm and perhaps some explanations of his skill which will be useful to the less expert. A poet is only an expert in spiritual delight, in which we all have some skill, too; but the poet is in a better case than the golfer, because he can broadcast his actual performances, and in such a way that anyone can take part in their virtuosity. It would be a thousand pities if the poet and the Philistine had their way, and cut out poetry from the programmes altogether. Poetry is undoubtedly worth broadcasting, for the delight it gives and for the capacity for delight which it fosters; and I see no reason to agree with the sensitive, conservative few who say that poetry can never be successfully broadcast. I remember Mr. Squire's reading of the 'Revenge,' and of the 'Ancient Mariner,' and I am sure of its success.

In the rush of modern life, when we are so much occupied with the process of supporting life, we are in danger of forgetting that life is also a spiritual experience, and that we are less than human if we forget it. Boredom is a hateful disease from which men fly to the most outrageous pastimes in a wild endeavour to forget themselves in externals. But boredom is only inability to be delighted by ordinary things. Poetry can be an entertainment, but better than this is its power of increasing the skill of the spirit, so that by the practice it gives a man, he may himself be able to see the inexhaustible wonder of common life, fill his own days full of it, and only be sorry to die.

'PRIMAVERA': BOTTICELLI'S LOVELY ALLEGORY OF THE SPRING.

Botticelli's famous picture in Florence, depicting the flower-garlanded Flora, the Graces, and other symbolical representations of the coming of Spring, is as near music as painting can be: it is no wonder, therefore, that a romantic composer like Respighi, the young Italian whose 'Pines of Rome' and 'Fountains of Rome' are well known, should have found inspiration in it for a musical work. His 'Three Botticelli Paintings' ('Primavera'; 'The Adoration of the Magi'; and 'The Birth of Venus') will be performed at a concert by the London Chamber Orchestra on Wednesday evening, July 10.

THEATRE-GOING IN ANCIENT GREECE

Plays which Began at Dawn—The Unimportance of Scenery—Actors Concealed Behind Masks and Wearing Thick Boots—Murders and Suicides 'off,' but they Brought on the Body—Tickets Fourpence or Free.

A CITIZEN of ancient Athens in the time of Euripides, unlike ourselves today, could not go to the theatre whenever he happened to feel disposed for it, or to have the price of a ticket in his pocket; he had to wait for the fixed season to come round in which plays were exhibited. But that season, when it came, amply rewarded him for the troubles of waiting, for it was a time of general merriment in a city which was never disposed to gloom. There were, indeed, several festivals at Athens during which plays were acted, but the most important of them was the festival of the City Dionysia, held, as its name shows, in honour of Dionysus, god of wine and protector of theatres. At this festival, celebrated at the beginning of spring, the whole city went on holiday. On each successive day great crowds of people, the citizens of Athens, with women, boys, and even slaves, and numerous foreign visitors from other parts of Greece, would leave their houses at early dawn, and make their way to the theatre on the southern slopes of the Acropolis, ready to spend the whole day there listening to the various plays which were to be presented in competition, and to enjoy themselves in the way nearest to their hearts.

Melpomene, the Muse of Tragedy.

A play in progress in the theatre at Athens must have presented a remarkable spectacle: the vast audience, numbering some seventeen or twenty thousand people: the sense of the bright Ægean Sea beyond, and overhead the clear Grecian sky; and that fine and subtle air which, as Cicero thought, was not the least amongst the causes of the quick intelligence of the old Athenians.

The theatre itself was unlike any theatre of the modern world. It was, as I have already indicated, entirely in the open air, and presented the appearance of a huge natural amphitheatre. On the level ground, at the base of the steep rock called the Acropolis, was a circular floor of earth, beaten and trodden hard, in the middle of which stood an altar, and at the southernmost edge, facing the hill, was a wooden building, long and narrow, probably of two storeys high; this was the stage, on which the chief actors performed, and the circular floor was the 'orchestra,' or dancing place, where the chorus, so strange and yet so important a part of all Greek plays, danced its dances and chanted its odes. Then, rising upward from the edge of the orchestra, tier upon tier in a great semi-circular sweep, were the seats where the spectators sat, the front row being reserved for priests and officials, and perhaps also for distinguished visitors, whom Athens, as the 'school of Hellas,' was always glad to welcome and to show the splendours of her art.

The stage arrangements were in the main simple, and governed by certain conventions which, when one takes into consideration the conditions under which the plays were produced—the immense size of the theatre, the fact that it was entirely in the open, and the ritual nature of ancient drama—are not so strange as they seem at first sight.

Scenery of a kind was first introduced by Æschylus, and throughout the best period of Athenian drama remained much as he made it, and consisted of painted backcloths of a formal and conventional nature, to represent the normal setting of the various types of play. Tragedy, for instance, would usually have a scene representing the outside of some palace, with columns and battlements, and perhaps a suggestion of trees and hills in the distance; and the same scene would serve for many plays in succession. The Elektra of Euripides is peculiar amongst Greek tragedies in the fact that it is set before a poor man's hut in the mountains, and would, therefore, have required a special scene of its own. It is unlikely that any curtain, or drop-scene, was employed, and it was very seldom that a change of scene was made during the course of a play. The dresses of the tragic actors had little regard for period or verisimilitude, but resembled in the main the ordinary costume of contemporary Athens, but with an added dignity obtained by greater length and sweep of mantle, and by more brilliant colouring. The effect of grandeur was sought also by the addition of a peculiar boot (the cothurnus) with immensely thick wooden soles, to give the actor increased height, and by what seems to us the oddest of all the ancient dramatic conventions, the mask. There were many of these masks, each one fashioned to portray some particular character that regularly occurred in the various sorts of play, such as, in tragedy; the cruel tyrant, or the wronged and suffering girl, or the noble hero. The use of the mask must have rendered the subtleties of acting impossible, but one must not forget the size of the ancient theatre, and the fact that the expression of an actor's face, even had he worn no mask, would not have been visible to a large part of the audience. A Greek drama was a poem; its strength was in itself, and, provided that it was well spoken, it could dispense with much that is often necessary to a modern play.

The members of the chorus also wore masks, but differed from the chief actors in their clothing, which was simpler and less brightly coloured. The chorus for the most part kept to the orchestra, but there was a connection between orchestra and stage, for the occasions on which the leader of the chorus might have to pass from one to the other.

There was a convention amongst the Greeks that deeds of violence should not be represented on the stage: at the same time, the story of a play constantly made it necessary that the results of such things should visibly appear. For this purpose, a peculiar device was employed, a sort of platform on wheels, and if, for example, the bodies of Clytemnestra and Ægisthus after their murder had to be shown on the stage, they were arranged on the platform 'off,' doors in the back of the scene were thrown open, and the whole platform, together with its burden, pushed through on to the stage. One other device deserves mention: the theologeion. This was a means whereby gods could be represented as holding converse with men and yet remain in a sense remote. It also was a movable platform, set somewhere in the upper part of the stage buildings, and capable of being thrust forward into prominence with the god standing upon it, above the heads of the other actors. In the event of a god, or divine messenger, having to fly down to earth, or up to heaven, the méchanè was used, a crane-like structure by which a man could be raised or lowered.

'Elektra,' the famous tragedy of Euripides, represents Greek drama in the Great Plays Series on July 16 and 17. The play was originally performed in the manner described in this article.

These, in brief, were the conditions under which the masterpieces of ancient Greek dramatic art were originally performed. The Athenians had a strong passion for the drama. Admission to the theatre was originally free, but scrambling for seats amongst that excitable people rendered advisable the issue of tickets, which were sold at two obols (about fourpence) apiece, while those who could not afford that small sum were given tickets at the public expense.

And all the time we must remember that these exhibitions of drama, for all the high spirits and delighted enjoyment which they occasioned, were an integral part of a religious festival, and that it was the worship of Dionysus that gave them birth. The authors of the plays produced them in competition, and during the course of a day many plays were acted; for hour after hour that vast audience remained seated, watching and listening with alert and delighted minds to plays which have proved, in many instances, to be still amongst the finest literary achievements of the world.

AUBREY DE SELINCOURT.

Hero of The Squirrel.

FIRST ON THE UNCHARTED SEAS

by Milton Waldman

In the saga of the Tudor Travellers is to be found some of our most stirring history. 'The Literature of Travel in Tudor days' is the subject of Mr. T. S. Eliot's talk, on July 9.

TWO factors, one of them more or less an accident, largely determined the part which Tudor England was to play in the exploration of the unknown world. Had Bartholomew Columbus, on his way to offer his immortal brother's services to Henry VII in 1488, not been captured by pirates, it is quite possible that the most important discovery in the history of the world would have been achieved under English auspices and exploited by English sailors. As it was, Bartholomew returned to Spain bearing Henry's eager acceptance of Christopher's services, only to learn that Ferdinand and Isabella had at last agreed to finance the voyage.

Breaking Through to Cathay.

Following upon Columbus's return, Pope Alexander VI, a Spaniard, promulgated the Bull of Demarcation, whereby all the unknown world was divided between Spain and Portugal, the latter of which had a few years before discovered the route to the Indies by the Cape of Good Hope. The line of demarcation ran through the eastern end of Brazil and through the Poles to meet in some vague spot on the other side of the earth. Unless, then, some other power was able to discover still another route to the fabled and yet authentic wealth of Cathay, all of Christendom was thenceforward prohibited from the enjoyment of this golden expansion.

It was Elizabethan England which made the most determined effort to discover this third route. During most of Henry the Eighth's reign the Papal Bull was, of course, binding; thereafter England was too unsettled, too poor, to risk the chances of war by encroaching upon putative Spanish territory toward the setting sun. A tentative effort was made in 1553 by Sir Hugh Willoughby and Richard Chancellor to find the goal by a North-East passage through Russian Arctic waters, but this resulted only in a languid trade with Muscovy, which faded when the great Elizabethans turned their attention to that most stirring series of exploits known as the search for the North-West passage.

As early as 1527 English geographers had been engrossed with the fascinating idea that all complications might be avoided if a way could be found through the American continent to the Pacific Ocean. It seemed inconceivable to these people that one continuous body of land could extend almost from Pole to Pole; they argued that what seemed like an interminable continent must in reality be a series of islands of greater or lesser size, and probably of inconsiderable depth—after all, Balboa had crossed the isthmus of Panama, and Magellan had sailed through the straits which bear his name, in a comparatively few days. Robert Thorne, the first Englishman to write on the subject, brings numerous arguments to prove this theory, and to the objection that this way, if found, might be impassable because of ice, he returns the immortal answer, 'There is no land uninhabitable, nor sea unnavigable.'

The first actual explorer to take the matter in hand was Sir Humphrey Gilbert. He himself never lived to carry the undertaking very far, though his 'Discourse to prove a Passage by the North West to Cathaia and the East Indies,' published in 1576, did much to stimulate Frobisher and Davis, and later Hudson and Fox, on this fascinating and futile quest. Gilbert himself undertook two voyages to the New World. The first, in 1577, proved abortive because of dissension in the crew, a common failing in Elizabethan voyages, and an unsuccessful fight with the Spaniards. His second, in 1583, was ostensibly undertaken for the colonization of Labrador. But the English were not yet ready for colonization, and Gilbert was forced to turn back. He never returned, however; on the homeward journey his two vessels, The Golden Hind, of forty tons, and The Squirrel, of ten, ran into a terrible storm off the Azores. Gilbert was on the smaller because, as he said, 'I will not forsake my little company going homewards with whom I have passed so many storms and perils.' When presently it was seen that The Squirrel could not possibly survive the storm, the officers of The Golden Hind attempted to come alongside so as to bring him aboard; they saw him calmly reading a book, and his only reply to their warning and invitation was, 'We are as neare Heaven by sea as by land.' At midnight the little frigate disappeared for ever, a not unfitting end for a great and reckless soldier who had written at the end of the Discourse mentioned above, 'He is not worthy to live at all, that for fear or danger of death, shunneth his Country's service and his own honour, seeing Death is inevitable and the fame of virtue immortal.'

The Irascible Frobisher.

The most formidable of the Argonauts, and amongst the most persistent to go in search of the elusive Passage, was Martin Frobisher, one of the magnificent trio of admirals, with Drake and Hawkins, who so brutally shepherded the Armada down the Channel in the summer of 1588. In 1576 a company of London merchants financed a fleet of tiny vessels, and Frobisher set sail for the ice-bound regions of the north. He had plenty of adventure, made a number of discoveries, ran his vessels on to icebergs and pushed them off again, but came home with no more tangible result than a chunk of black stone which an assayer accidentally dropped into the fire and decided to be gold when he looked at it again. This error attained for Frobisher the capital to undertake two other voyages in the two following years, but no gold was found, and no passage. Frobisher thereupon turned his abilities and his morose temper upon the Spaniards in the West Indies, with more substantial results.

His superior officer in this business of 'singeing the King of Spain's beard' was that most celebrated and beloved of English sailors, Sir Francis Drake, with whom the irascible Frobisher became involved after the conquest of the Armada in a feud whose echoes have not died down yet. Shortly before Frobisher returned from his third Arctic voyage, Drake, who would never have dreamed of attempting anything so abstract as exploration when there were Spanish treasure ships to be captured and storehouses to be raided, embarked quite by accident on the most splendid journey ever undertaken by an Englishman.

The Lust for Spanish Gold.

Having found the Spaniards in the West Indies becoming too wary and cautious, he set out in Magellan's wake to find his loot at its source, namely, the west coast of America. He succeeded richly, beyond his most fantastic expectations, but finding the way home rendered difficult by the season and the waiting Spaniards, he coolly set off to bring his treasures home the long way about, and in September of 1580, rolled into Plymouth Harbour, the first commander ever to have circumnavigated the globe. Magellan, who had made the attempt fifty-nine years earlier, had not lived to complete his voyage. Five years later, Thomas Cavendish repeated the feat and for somewhat the same reason. Cavendish was the typical Elizabethan adventurer; exploration for discovery's sake, colonization for the future's sake, conversion for Christianity's sake, were all secondary to the principal objects of travel by sea—to lay his hands on Spanish gold, to devastate Spanish cities, to demolish the symbols of Catholicism, all in the name of his Queen (when she did not disavow him) and militant Protestantism. He was a harsh disciplinarian, violent of temper, impatient of restraint—the one kind of man he could not bear was his subordinate, John Davis, the simple-minded, kindly, earnest sailor who explored the North-West Passage after Frobisher because he had a thirst for knowledge and thought it would do the Indians good to make Christians of them. Like Drake, Hawkins, Frobisher, and their like, he was more capable of destroying empires than of founding them—that talent in his countrymen was to be developed later.

All the genius of the Elizabethan traveller is summed up in the name of Sir Walter Raleigh. No one of his contemporaries' talents was completely denied him; yet he was an exception to every rule by which they were guided. He raided the harbour of Cadiz with the inspired strategy of a Drake, and explored Guiana with the persistence of, and greater success than, a Frobisher or a Davis. But in addition he possessed a vision of an English empire far more grandiose than

THE AIR FORCE SHOWS ITS PACES

A Commentary on the Royal Air Force Display is to be relayed from Hendon on Saturday afternoon next.

IF a prize was offered to the readers of The Radio Times for the name of the annual outdoor event which attracted the largest number of paying spectators on any one day, I wonder how many would give the correct answer. There is little doubt that the Royal Air Force Display, which this year celebrates its tenth birthday at Hendon on Saturday, July 13, has advanced to the premier place, and that the numbers attending exceed even such a popular attraction as the Cup Final. The annual paying attendance is now approximately 100,000 spectators, a figure which takes no account of the vast numbers who witness the Display from vantage points for miles around Hendon.

All in the Day's Work.

It is all the more noteworthy, also, when it is remembered—a point often overlooked—that the Display is entirely an exhibition of service exercises forming a normal part of the training of Air Force pilots. It is true, of course, that in the presentation of the different events an attempt is naturally made to hold the sustained interest of the onlookers, but at no time in the history of this annual demonstration has the service aspect been subordinated to mere showmanship. No item of the programme is admitted, indeed, unless it illustrates an essential requirement in the training of individual pilots or in the combined exercises of flights, squadrons, or wings.

When you see two pilots cavorting in mid-air at the tail of a heavy bomber like a pair of gerfalcons swooping on a stately heron, they are not a couple of madcaps at large from some celestial Bedlam, but two well-trained pilots who probably only a year or so ago were cadets at the Royal Air Force College, demonstrating the latest method of attack on the type of aircraft which, in the unhappy event of another war, might well raid these shores.

A Display of Efficiency.

Again, when the 'crazy' flying pilots, after amazing feats of wizardry, suddenly bow to you over the fence and appear to desire closer acquaintance they are not out of hand, but are demonstrating the perfect control which skilled pilots possess in the handling of modern aircraft.

When you see, also, squadron after squadron dive earthwards with majestic grandeur and awe-inspiring roar, they illustrate not only the efficiency of squadron training, but they teach you as well the immense progress made in producing high-speed fighters and bombers.

It is only a few weeks now until the Schneider Trophy race takes place, when speeds of 300 miles an hour may be expected ;

but it should not be forgotten that as late as 1923, when the race was last held in this country, the winning seaplane, designed only for racing purposes near sea level, gained the victory with a speed of 177 m.p.h. Today the latest type of single-seater fighters in the Air Force which will take part in the Display at Hendon are capable of speeds in excess of this when carrying their full war load, both near the ground and at great altitudes. Not only must they do this to keep pace with a corresponding development in the speed of day bombers, but they are able to climb five miles high in a few minutes and possess all these powers of manoeuvre which are so important in aircraft of this type.

It used to be said that the race was to the swift. In the realm of the air this is not the whole truth. If the steed is not good the pilot is handicapped, but if the pilot is not the complete airman, then the speed and manoeuvrability of his aircraft will be of little avail. It is a prime duty of the Air Force to ensure, on the one hand, that the steed is of the first quality and, on the other, that the pilot is so efficiently trained that in his hands the machine will be capably used.

Piloting the Premier.

The other day the Prime Minister travelled in an Air Force machine from his home at Lossiemouth to London. I have little doubt that many readers said to themselves: 'Who is the pilot to whom has been entrusted the duty of flying the head of the Government on a long cross-country journey? Was he specially chosen from the whole body of Air Force pilots for the task?' The answer is that he was not. He is a pilot of the Communication squadron, whose daily work consists of similar classes of duty, and was posted there in the ordinary way.

At the Display each year one finds the same sort of comment being made: 'These are the star pilots who have been specially selected!' Well, that also is not correct. They are good pilots, but so are all, or nearly all, the pilots in the service. They have not been specially chosen. They are the regular members of the service squadrons to which they have been sent in the ordinary run of duty. Some are recent graduates from the Royal Air Force College, some are short-service commissioned officers not long down from the flying training schools, and others are non-commissioned officer-pilots. The flight and squadron commanders are, of course, officers of long experience. The Air Force aims at having a body of pilots whose standard of skill is high, rather than having a limited number of star pilots, whose names might become as much household words as the names of our leading cricketers.

I have had an opportunity of seeing an advance copy of the Display programme, and I find, to take one instance only, that the names of the pilots who are carrying out an exhibition of flight aerobatics from the Central Flying School does not contain the name of one pilot who gave a similar demonstration from the same school two years ago. This is representative of the rest of the units taking part.

Where are the Pilots of Yesteryear?

Where are the pilots of last year and the year before? Many are on the overseas tour of duty in India, in Iraq, in Egypt, in Hong Kong, and elsewhere; others are at home in squadrons not taking part in the Display or have been transferred to different duties. Some, of course, are old hands, but they are not many. This constant flow of pilots between home and overseas, and between squadrons in this country, makes for the efficiency of the service. The greatest 'handyman' of the services today is the individual Air Force pilot who is at one time a mainstay of the home defence force and at another is keeping the peace on the N.W. Frontier or patrolling the Soudan or the lava plains and mountains of Iraq.

When the first Display, then called the Pageant, was inaugurated, there was some doubt whether the public would really welcome a new service exhibition in addition to the Royal Tournament and the Aldershot Tattoo. The first display answered the question beyond doubt, and this annual flying demonstration has gone forward from strength to strength.

In the Eyes of the World.

The programme is once again a notable one, and should certainly maintain the reputation of the Air Force for the excellence of this annual event, which is, without question, the outstanding flying exhibition in the whole world of aeronautics. The truth of this will be apparent when it is mentioned that each year all the leading countries in aeronautics send important missions from their own country to witness the Display, and this year will show no falling off in foreign interest.

There may be one slight disappointment at the absence of the parade of experimental aircraft, which has been a striking feature at all past Displays.

The reason for this departure from precedent is due to the fact that the International Aero Exhibition is opening at Olympia on July 16, and all the new types of aircraft (and many others), which would otherwise have been at the Display, will be at Olympia instead.

FINANCIAL BROADCASTING.

I HAVE just read the article 'Financial Broadcasting—Realism and Reality,' in The Radio Times for June 21. It concludes by asking which condition is preferred. I can hardly exaggerate how very much I prefer the present condition. The quiet dignity and good manners which the B.B.C. broadcasts exhibit, harmonize perfectly with the thoughts that are generated by their matter, but what can be said in praise of announcing the virtues of X's toothpaste immediately after a symphony by Beethoven? The better the matter of the broadcast the more unpleasantly violent would the contrast be.—J. B. Colbran, Strand Hotel, Builth Wells, Breconshire.

AN APPALLING SUGGESTION.

THE idea of exchanging the (to me) perfectly satisfactory method we now have for the method advocated by the 'Realist' and of which I have had some experience in France, is appalling.—E. M. Bremner, Buckhurst Park, Ascot.

TYPICALLY ENGLISH.

MY wife and I have been listening over a period of from four to five years and would be sorry to have to listen to anything which savoured of commercialism. Our system is typically English—please keep it so.—A. H. Day, Hill Crest, The Ridgeway, Felcham, Leatherhead.

AN AMERICAN VIEW.

AS an American (though privileged to live in England) I most earnestly beg that you will not in any way follow the methods or the examples of the programmes of the American Radio.—C. B., Wills.

THE WISDOM OF SINCLAIR LEWIS.

I DO not want my programme conducted on American lines. The following quotation from 'Dodsworth,' by the American author, Sinclair Lewis, seems appropriate. The speaker is an American living in England and he is made to say—'Our greatest American myth is that we're so much more efficient than these Britishers and the folks on the Continent. All this high-pressure salesmanship bunk! Why, say, I'll bet that stuff antagonizes more customers than it ever catches. And over here, they simply won't stand for it! An Englishman knows what he wants to buy, and he don't intend to be bullied into buying something else. And a Scotsman knows what he doesn't want to buy! Half our efficiency is just running around and making a lot of show and wasting time!—W. A. R. Black, Nettleworth, Glos.

A DISAPPOINTMENT.

I CAN quite sympathize with your correspondents 'G. W. H., Rotherham,' and 'Tifferari,' in their references to the programme of music by young composers. I also had been gardening and was rained off, but on referring to The Radio Times I quite looked forward to hearing this concert, as I always feel that youth, like spring, augurs of hope and brightness. As a lover of music, never was I more disappointed, as work after work was presented, absolutely void of music beauty or even rhythm. After the glorious evenings of Grand Operas, etc., that we have had lately, this was a terrible 'let down.' Having a family growing up, I am naturally always inclined to encourage youth, but at the same time I like to discourage any nasty ideas that may become apparent, and I think this should also apply to your young composers.—C. J., Thornton.

A LACK OF UNDERSTANDING.

MR. G. W. H., of Rotherham, was rather sweeping in his statement that each performer was improvising in a recent programme of young British composers. He was rather unfortunate in not being in a position to understand the works rendered. I am also one who is not a lover of this modern music, and Stravinsky and Bartok are not joyful to my ears, but that is merely because I do not understand the modern method of music construction. In the same way, I do not understand Einstein or Epsstein, but Relativity is not essential to my well being, and I don't place myself continually in front of 'Rima,' saying 'You're exceedingly ugly and I hate you.' After all, G. W. H., can always switch off or tune in another station.—H. W. Blogg, 3, Hyson Road, Berrymansley, S.E.16.

FROM 'TWO COUNTRY MICE.'

THE B.B.C. is good enough to invite criticism of its programmes, and perhaps you will be kind enough to allow us, who are dwellers in a very quiet district amongst the hills of the Upper Tweed country, to say a few words. We get much that charms and interests us over our wireless; for that we are grateful, and, we hope, appreciative. But there is another side. We sometimes feel that, after making allowance for the demands of continuous programmes (which must be very exacting and difficult to satisfy), and also for the fact that there are varying tastes to cater for, it seems rather sad that so much pitiful stuff in the shape of 'Vaudevilles' and 'Revue' is broadcast. Of course, we can always switch off, and we do; but it is with a sense of grievance that for so much of the quiet time after 8 or 9 p.m. we are debarred from listening. We gladly admit that there are days—many days—when the evening programmes are very good, but one wonders why the B.B.C. should provide so much that is the reverse of good! The 'Dance Music' is in a category by itself, and we should not venture to criticise it!—Two Country Mice.

A SPLENDID IDEA!

IN opposition to all the 'satisfied and disappointed' listeners of your programmes, may I suggest that one day a week be devoted to no wireless at all? Monday for preference.—J. King, 6, Medora Road, Brighton Hill.

MILITARY BAND MUSIC.

I WAS pleased with your special number devoted to Military Bands. They suffer from the fact that their literature is largely made up of transcriptions, but this is due to popular prejudice rather than to any intrinsic demerit in some of the transcriptions. A lot of pedantic nonsense is talked about the 'sin' of recasting or modifying a composition from the form the composer originally gave it; though it often seems to me, when I listen to some of the fine versions of popular pieces given by the Wireless Military Band, that the composer who originally scored the piece for symphony orchestra in the conventional way missed his true goal.—W. F. Wallace, 31, Hurlingham Court, Hurlingham.

'GEORGE ELIOT' ON MUSIC.

APROPOS of fine music in general, and the Bach Cantatas in particular, it would not, I think, be amiss if the wise words of George Eliot—herself a keen lover of the best in music—were taken to heart. 'We must learn to accommodate ourselves to the discovery that some of those cunningly-fashioned instruments called human souls have only a very limited range of music, and will not vibrate in the least under a touch that fills others with tremendous rapture or quivering agony.'—Felix White, 28, Hilldrop Crescent, N.7.

A HEAVY POST-BAG.

Two features in our issue of June 21 drew the special interest of our readers.

FINANCIAL BROADCASTING.

The first of these was the article 'Financial Broadcasting—Realism and Reality,' in which was discussed the British as opposed to the American system of Broadcasting control and management.

Up to the time of going to press, The Radio Times has received more than 120 letters, which, almost without exception, support the view expressed in the article, that to allow advertisers to monopolize British broadcasting would be a catastrophe.

THE CHILDREN'S HOUR.

The second contribution in this issue which has increased our post-bag is a letter which appeared on our correspondence page headed 'That Dreadful Children's Hour.' As a result over 170 correspondents have written to The Radio Times alone, declaring their admiration for the Children's Hour and their firm opinion that it is anything but dreadful.

THE APOLOGY.

The Editor would thank all these correspondents. Letters from readers of The Radio Times are always welcome. In this instance, however, he regrets that he can only print so small a selection from the many communications received.

THE IMMORTAL FRITZ CHARLEY.

I HAVE been ill or something for the last six months. Anyhow, I do not think that I have laughed during this time. Tonight I read Mr. Harvey Grace's article on Fritz Charley, and wiped out about five months and three weeks' arrears. My wife's unusual cautions hearing assumes I have hysterical received and to room imburses conveying sal volatile. But no. It is simply the effect of the delightful Charley. And so, like Orsino and Cesares, we are once more becomes happier coupled pairs. Can I get a copy anywhere?—Clifford H. Pye, South View, Elmtree Avenue, Esher.

COPIES of this masterpiece are scarce and extremely difficult to find. Two copies are known to be in London; the owner of one (not Mr. Harvey Grace) confesses shamelessly that he stole it.—Musical Editor, 'The Radio Times.'

'WHAT YOU LIKE.'

MR. HARVEY GRACE'S recent article introducing us to Mr. Fritz Charley is distinctly amusing. And there is a lesson to be learned from it also, for in his enthusiasm for pointing out the faults in Charley's English, Mr. Grace makes a small 'howler' on his own account. Mr. Grace cheerfully refers to 'Cesario' as 'Tauber's version of As You Like It,' when he should have known that the play in which Cesario, Olivia and Sebastian, Toby, Maria and Orsino appear is Twelfth Night. So poor maligned Charley is translating not As You Like It but 'What you Will' with his phrase 'What you Like'—and a very good translation it is!—Beaver, 43, Oakington Road, W.9.

MR. B. E. Stanley, 6, Henry Street, Keighley, also points out this slip on the part of Mr. Harvey Grace.

SACRED MUSIC.

I KNOW that 'the B.B.C.' welcomes 'constructive' criticism. May I therefore suggest that from one of your stations (which could be used alternately) the Sunday programmes be confined to sacred music. There must be thousands who listen and enjoy the religious services but who feel that the programmes immediately following tend to destroy the atmosphere created and are not at all to their tastes. Those who do enjoy a mixed programme will, of course, be served by the other stations. I know I am expressing the view of a great number which is, I think, worth your serious consideration.—Bristol.

THAT DREADFUL CHILDREN'S HOUR.

TO me, there is a certain amount of pathos that two letters in this week's issue of The Radio Times should have severely criticized the Children's Hour, which lasts forty-five minutes. Do these people realize that the organization is remarkable in that it has procured the patronage of hundreds of thousands of children, who send their subs, of 9d. upwards annually, to become members of the Radio Circle, save silver paper, and send incidental donations, either coin or kind, all of which has one common thought, 'Their Sick Friends.' Many of these small helpmates trust to the Birthday wish from their favourite Wireless Auntie or Uncle to crown one day's happiness yearly. I am a mother of a Radio Circle member and none could be more truly grateful to the inspiration of those wonderful ladies and gentlemen who broadcast the Children's Corner.—5GB Listener, Warwickshire.

THE SPIRIT OF YOUTH.

TO appreciate the wonderful freshness, originality, and humour of the Children's Hour, one must be blessed with the greatest gift of all—the Spirit of Youth. That is why I am so sorry for 'Five Bored Listeners.'—June.

REAL, JOLLY PEOPLE.

WHAT can the 'Five Bored Listeners' mean? To call the gay, bright 'Children's Hour' dreadful! To my sister and myself, it is delightful, from the first cheerful 'Hullo, children,' to the last happy 'Good night, children.' We love to picture the dear children 'listening in' to their birthdays, and when 'Hullo, Twins' come, their chuckles of glee. The Uncles and Aunties are real, jolly people, we think.—A Cheerful Old Maid.

TO THE CONTRARY.

ALL thanks are due to H. E. Granger, of Hammersmith, for drawing attention to the futility and tediousness of 'Birthdays' in the Children's Hour. I am sure that were it possible to take a referendum amongst all the children who regularly listen, one and all would only too gladly substitute a continuation of the remaining delightful items typical of this 'Hour' for the (doubtful) pleasure of hearing his or her name read out once a year—which is what it amounts to!—P. H. S. H., S.W.10.

THE GREATEST DAY OF THE YEAR.

IF 'H. B. Granger' really loves children, let him watch a kiddie, towards evening, on the greatest day of his year and listen to the excited speculation as to which of that beloved band will read his name! Personally, I am longing to reach ninety!—Ellen Guthrie, Brancaster Station, Norfolk.

WHAT SPLENDID PROGRAMMES.

I'M no chicken, but I often listen to the Children's Hour and thoroughly enjoy it. The last word I would use in connection with any of those cheery Aunts and Uncles, is 'Inebecle.' English listeners are much given to complaining. I sent a copy of The Radio Times (an ordinary copy), to Ottawa, Canada, and the comment I received was 'Quels beaux programmes vous avez en Angleterre.'—C. P., Berks.

THE OWL AND THE PARROT.

BEING a bit of a highbrow, I was somewhat amused at the 'Four University Collegiates,' although I quite agree that the song of the nightingale should never be ruined by any intrusions of Dance Music. Perhaps the 'Four University Collegiates' would find it a little difficult to ruin a symphony concert with anything that is pure music. As for the hoots of the owl, or a little back chat from the parrot, they are always included in the Dance Music, through the medium of the Saxophone.—One 'Uneducated Musician,' Shotton Colliery.

'GOOD MORNING' IN SINGAPORE.

HAS it ever struck any listeners (at the conclusion of the daily wireless programme) how cheerfully the London announcer wishes his unseen audience 'Good night' or to be more precise, 'Good morning'? To support this, it may be of interest when you learn that he has a great admirer at Singapore! who regularly gets up in the early morning to hear 'Big Ben' strike midnight, and to hear our charming announcer wish him 'Good morning.'—A London Listener.

A DREADFUL SHOCK.

10.45-11.0 Mrs. Doreen Kempster; Simple Home Dying (vide The Radio Times programme for June 22.)

I'VE listened to talks on 'How to keep fit,'
On 'How to preserve one's good health';
To talks by great men who are certainly 'it';
On 'Good lives are a Nation's best wealth.'
But today I have had the shock of my life
And my heart below zero is lying,
For I'm asked to listen to somebody's wife
On the art of 'Simple Home Dying.'
—Beatrice A. Eyre, Ibbotson, Whitty, Cheshire.

YOUR correspondence page makes sad reading for anyone who cares for the good name of his countrymen. We find there week after week the expression of crass ignorance, of sheer selfishness, of undismayed intolerance, and of bare ingratitude. One does not forget that the evidence of knowledge, of disinterestedness, of thankfulness, and of consideration, is also to be found there, but the letters framed in this spirit are always in the minority. If the page can be taken as a true epitome of the mental characteristics of our people, what a bitter comment it is on our boasted civilization and the millions spent on national education; and what a pity that The Radio Times should be read by many foreigners!—Anglo-phil.

RAYMOND MORTIMER regrets 'THE TALKIES,' while admitting that the possibilities of this new invention are already enormous.

THE Talkies have come in for a lot of silly abuse. They have been nicknamed 'The Squeakies,' and then dismissed as if there were nothing more to be said. It is true that the sounds which emerge are often blood-curdling: the loud-speaker attached to the apparatus distorts further voices which are ugly in themselves besides being absolutely untrained. Angel-faces make donkey-noises, and beauties who used to make us flutter only make us laugh. Caterwaulings emerge from lips that have inspired our dreams, and the desire of the mouth for the Star has been obliterated. But remember the first phonograph, the first bioscope. An invention must be placed on the market before it is perfected, or it would never be perfected. We may take it as certain that the Talkies will very soon attain as high a standard as the best wireless sets. Mechanically, voices will be as well reproduced as faces now are, and the actors will be chosen who can woo our ears as well as our eyes. A Talkie Star with an ugly voice will be as inconceivable as a Greta Garbo with a squint. So far as sound goes, the Talkie will be as good as the ordinary stage play.

The possibilities are already enormous. To begin with, every successful play and opera can be given innumerable performances on the Talkies. Every village in Australia can see nightly the best shows from Shaftesbury Avenue and Broadway. Coloured films, at present so hideous, will also improve, and stereoscopic effects will heighten the illusion. A certain glamour will no doubt always be absent: the most perfect mechanical reproduction cannot be the same as the original. It is useless to wait at the stage door of a cinema. The theatre will continue, though the fifth-rate touring company may disappear. A good Talkie will do greater justice to a play than a bad stage performance. The tragedies of Shakespeare and Ibsen, the comedies of Bernard Shaw and Somerset Maugham will be available in every village, and the golden voices of the Bernhards of the future will quickly become familiar from New Guinea to Labrador.

The only objection to this engaging programme is that though possible, it is improbable. Silent films are for the most part manufactured by persons who have one desire—to make money. And not only is it their one desire, it is their one ability. They have taken for granted that the taste of the public is as degraded as their own. I am not at all sure that so cynical a view is true. The man in the street has, at least potentially, better taste than the man in Wardour Street. Hoxton has certainly a truer sense of values than Hollywood. After all, Shakespeare is popular in the Waterloo Road. But the financiers who shape our films needs must love the lowest when they see it, and the unhappy public has to take what it is given. Some of the most popular films have certainly been very bad. But it was not their imbecile sentimentality or vulgarity which made them popular. It was their exciting or spectacular qualities. There is no doubt they could be made infinitely better without a penny's loss to the box-office. But so harmless an improvement is unlikely to be effected. And the Talkies, I suspect, will reach depths of horror that no silent film could ever reach. For sentiment is far more nauseous in words than it is in pictures. Even the silliest story, if well photographed, can give pleasure. But if accompanied by equally silly words it would become utterly intolerable. Anyone can enjoy the photographs in The Daily Pictorial: it takes a strong stomach to stand Auntie Amy's Advice to Girls.

A minor problem of the Talkies is, of course, that of language. The Movies have been marvellously international. Charlie Chaplin delights the Esquimaux and the Patagonians, Ronald Colman thrills the flappers of Fiji, and Greta Garbo is adored even by the grave economists of Moscow. At the same time the most interesting films shown in England have, for the most part, been German, and the best film I saw in America came from Russia. But the Talkies can only be shown in the country of their origin, with one exception. The English and American languages are very similar, and there is no reason why Talkies of English life made at Elstree, and Talkies of American life made in Hollywood, should not be popular in both countries. But when a lady, as in The Terror, announces that she is the daughter of a Kentish squire in an accent derived from Dakota, a London audience naturally hoots with laughter. It is a pity that we cannot retaliate by producing English films in which the cowboys of Arizona employ the dialect of Aberdeen. However, the English spoken on the New York stage is usually excellent, and, except for purposes of local colour, Hollywood may in time exact a similar standard.

And yet I wish that the Talkies had never been invented. They may be good in themselves, but they seem likely to crush the silent films almost out of existence. It is silence which had made the cinema an art. The best producers have developed a technique for telling the story not only of the characters' actions, but of their varying states of mind, without a word said. Actors have renewed the art of miming. Authors have collaborated with photographers in inventing stories peculiarly appropriate to this medium. Moreover, some of the best cinematographic effects come from variations in the speed at which the photographs are taken. The films of Charlie Chaplin, Eisenstein, and Harold Lloyd are the magnificent result.

Now, all art flourishes upon limitations. The painter only uses flat surfaces, the sculptor, usually, does not employ colour. The future of the wireless play is likely to be especially interesting just because its message is only to the ear. The greater the demands which a form of art makes upon the ingenuity of the artist, the more dazzling the results are likely to be. It is a commonplace that it is easier to write a tolerable sonnet than tolerable blank verse. Moreover, in the arts realism is constantly a danger. There is always a tendency to make art imitate Nature, whereas it ought only to express or interpret it. Realism was the death of Victorian painting. It is likely to be the death of the modern cinema.

We enjoy using our imagination—that is the fact which financiers will not realize. A girl in the same railway-carriage who never speaks may leave an impression upon us which a short conversation with her would have destroyed immediately. It is a pleasure to exercise the fancy as well as the more solid parts of the body. The Announcers of the B.B.C. gain a glamour from being, like the singer of the bird music in Siegfried, invisible. I have no doubt they are more handsome than John Gilbert, but even so, we should certainly be disillusioned. Knowledge kills romance. The grey figures that flit across the screen, exchanging silent kisses under spectral trees and walking with inaudible steps beside tempestuous seas that make no sound—they are delicate phantoms in an imaginary world. To enter it for us who live in the din of cities is a miraculous refreshment. The Talkies are creating a second world, as noisy and as unpoetic as our own.

But such regrets are futile. It is as absurd to throw stones at Talkies as at aeroplanes or Socialists or short skirts. They have come to stay. Artists and critics are fond of

*Home, Health, and Garden.SOME JAM RECIPES AND SEASONABLE FRUIT DISHES.

By Mrs. D. Cottington Taylor.

A New Recipe for Strawberry Jam.

2lbs. small strawberries.
2lbs. sharp cooking apples.
1 lemon.
4lbs. sugar.

To make the apple extract, wash the apples, remove the stalks. Slice them without peeling or coring, cover with cold water and simmer gently until they are well pulped. Then strain through a jelly cloth. Put the extract with the strawberries into a pan and simmer slowly for twenty to thirty minutes with the juice of one lemon. Add the sugar, boil for ten to fifteen minutes, test for jelling and pot when half cold.

Cherry and Gooseberry Jam.

3lbs. Morello or May Duke cherries.
1½lbs. gooseberries.
4½lbs. sugar.
½oz. tartaric acid.
1 gill water.

Put the gooseberries, cherries, tartaric acid and water into a pan and simmer slowly for twenty minutes. Add the sugar, bring to the boil and test for jelling after the preserve has been boiling for five minutes. Pot immediately it jells.

Raspberry Jam.

3lbs. raspberries.
3lbs. sugar.
Juice of 1 lemon.

Put the raspberries and lemon juice into a pan, warm slowly and simmer for about five minutes. Add the sugar, bring to the boil and boil for ten minutes. Test for jelling and pot immediately.

Red Currant Jelly.

Gather the fruit when it is just ripe. Pick it and put into a preserving pan with a little water (approximately 1 pint to 6lbs. of fruit). Place over a low heat and simmer gently until the fruit is pulped and all the juice extracted from it. Strain through a jelly bag, allow to drip overnight, weigh the extract and allow 1lb. sugar to each pound of extracted juice. Put the sugar and juice into a preserving pan, bring to the boil, stirring meanwhile. Cease stirring as it reaches boiling point. Simmer for a few minutes, or until the jelly sets when tested on a cold plate. Pot and cover in the usual way.

Apricot Jam (from dried fruit).

1lb. dried apricots.
3 pints cold water.
3lbs. preserving sugar.
2 or 3ozs. blanched almonds.

Wash the apricots thoroughly, put them into a basin with cold water, cover, and soak twenty-four hours at least. Then turn all into a preserving pan, bring to the boil, and boil for half an hour, stirring occasionally. Add the sugar and almonds, finely shred, and boil another half hour, or until the jam is set. Stir almost constantly after the sugar is added. Pour into pots when ready and cover when cold.

Strawberry Short Cake.

½lb. flour.
4½ozs. margarine.
2ozs. sugar.
1 yolk egg.
½oz. ground almonds.
Pinch of baking powder.
Strawberries.
Sugar.
Whipped cream.

Cream fat and sugar, add yolk of egg, mix; work in the flour, baking powder and ground almonds; divide into three, roll into rounds about ½in. thick, prick. Bake in a moderate oven till a golden brown; crush the strawberries slightly, add sugar and a very little cream, spread on to a round of short cake; cover with the next round, and so on, finishing with a layer of strawberries. Pipe whipped cream on top and round the edges where strawberries show. Decorate with pistachios.

Gooseberry Fool.

1½lbs. gooseberries.
3 tablespoonfuls water.
½ pint cream or custard.
8ozs. sugar.

Prepare gooseberries, cook in water; when nearly tender, add sugar; when soft, sieve, allow to get quite cold. Whip cream slightly, fold into the sieved gooseberries, pour into glass dish.

Cream Raspberry Pie.

Puff paste.
Quart raspberries, sweetened.
Teacupful milk.
Teaspoonful cornflour.
1 dessertspoonful sugar.
Whites of 2 eggs.

Line pie dish with paste, and fill with raspberries. Cover with paste. Grease edges to prevent adhesion, and bake. While cooking, heat milk and stir into it the cornflour, previously wetted, add sugar, cook for three minutes, pour into basin, beat whites of eggs stiff and add to mixture. Whip to cream, stand till cold. When pie is baked, remove top and add cream, replace top and set aside till cold. Sprinkle with sugar before serving.—Mrs. Nicol, 65, Brinkburn Road, Darlington, Durham.

THIS WEEK IN THE GARDEN.

HOLIDAY time for many amateurs who grow window plants is a time of anxiety for their plants. They have learned that to stand the pots in water for the holiday period is not good. It is not too much to condemn the practice utterly, for while the roots are in water they cannot get air and they are suffocated, so that the plants suffer severely. The better plan is to soak the pots thoroughly and then to plunge them just below their rims in a shady place sheltered from winds in the garden.

Most daffodil bulbs will be ready for lifting when they have become overcrowded. Leave the bulbs in the ground until the foliage is quite yellow.

Beds of pansies and violas should be examined frequently, and the dead flowers and seed pods removed, otherwise the flowering periods will be considerably shortened and the blooms much smaller. It is also advisable to cut back all long straggly growths on old plants.

Herbaceous borders call for constant attention to keep them in good condition. As the early plants pass out of bloom, cut the withered flower-heads off before the seed is set. Do not cut the plants unduly hard; the flowering spikes only need be removed, cutting the highest leaves.

Strawberry runners, to supply plants for early forcing or for planting new beds, are best obtained from young plantations made the previous year. The best method is to layer the runners in three-inch pots which have been filled with a compost of good turfy loam. Secure each plantlet by a peg or by placing a stone over the runner to hold it in position until it is rooted.—Royal Horticultural Society's Bulletin.

HOW TO DRESS YOUR BABY.

THE question of what is the best way to dress your baby is answered by the following rules:—

1. The best clothes for your baby are those which give him three layers of warmth.
2. Those which distribute the warmth equally over his body.
3. Those which allow the air and sun to reach his skin and which also allow the evaporation of poisonous matter from his body by perspiration.

Woollen goods are worn to allow free ventilation and are warm. Woven cotton and cellular clothes allow ventilation and are worn next the skin, as they can be boiled.

Mackintosh and rubber and chamois leather do not allow of the evaporation of perspiration, therefore, obviously, wool, wool and silk or flannel, are the most suitable materials to use for a baby's layette.

Two more facts further to remember when making your baby's clothes are:—

1. That you do not choose material with fluff on it.
2. That ½lb. good wool makes three garments which it would take 6 ozs. of cheaper wool to make.

For the first garments two-ply wool is best.

If you knit the garments too loosely they are apt to stretch out of shape. If too tightly, they shrink.

The best way to wash them is to squeeze them out in warm, soapy water, and to then dry them flat, as, if hung up, they are so small that they pull out of shape.

Draw strings and buttons are not necessary in woolly garments. In fact, draw strings should never be used.

Be sure you really clean your pram and don't just dust it. Crumbs and all sorts of things are apt to collect in the well of a pram and cracks where, though you can hardly believe it, they may breed maggots. The same care to ensure cleanliness in the pram as in the cot should be adopted.

When older children sit up, allow the legs to hang down in the well. Imagine sitting up—barely supported—in bed. You'd soon get aches and pains in your legs and back.

If your pram is a good one, it's worth keeping smart. To clean the coachwork, clean off all the dust and mud with cold water. Polish only with a chamois leather. You can also rub it over with a good carriage polish.

The hood and apron should be kept extended at night to prevent them cracking. They can also be rubbed very occasionally with oil, to prevent them wearing out. Those of uncrackable material can be done with boot polish. Nickel plating needs plate polish. You can patch a leaking hood with a bicycle tyre patch.

When tightening straps, be sure you get the hole in the centre or the whole pram hangs unevenly. The wheels need oiling, too. If ball-bearing wheels, remove the hub cap with a spanner. Drop the oil down the middle of the wheel spindle, tilting the pram on one side.

Mackintosh covers should never be put on except for a downpour. You would not care to have your mackintosh coat on in the boiling sun! They are easily kept rolled up at the end of the pram.

Except in an east wind, don't put the hood right up. No air gets in under it and so your baby is in a stagnant atmosphere and would be far better indoors by an open window. You have only to put your head in under the hood for a few minutes to realize this.—From a talk by the Hon. Mrs. St. Aubyn.

In the second B.B.C. Household Booklet, which is now ready, listeners will find lengthy extracts from the Household Talks of 1929. The scope has been enlarged this year and now includes sections on poultry and rabbit-keeping, as well as those in the previous year's book. All the old favourites who have given popular talks will be found there, and both the home decoration and dressmaking sections contain much useful advice which will help the housewife to stretch her purse strings to their utmost capacity. The recipes are all tried and tested either by the speakers or, in many cases, by listeners themselves. In preparing the booklet the B.B.C. has had the co-operation of the Empire Marketing Board, who are also responsible for many of the delightful illustrations.

DOLCISSIMO

THE throbbing notes of the harp were heard in the courts of the Pharaohs —enjoyed beneath the sunny skies of Greece; the harp has provided music throughout the ages, and now its exquisitely sweet—dolcissimo—tones are broadcast to a myriad homes.

Does your set reproduce truly these delicate notes?

If your set is a good one with general purpose valves, a Siemens Popular type battery will give perfect reception.

If, however, your set is provided with a power valve, a Siemens Power Battery is the most economical, and the music will be translated pure in tone and with full, undistorted volume.

Siemens Power Batteries are designed to provide a large output over a long period at a comparatively low price.

With the sure FOUNDATION of a good set and a Siemens Battery, the dolcissimo notes of the harp will charm you as they have charmed the world since the dawn of melody.

'The Second Spring'
A Sermon preached on July 13, 1852, in St. Mary's Oscott, in the First Provincial Synod of Westminster, by John Henry, later Cardinal Newman

In the course of time, centuries, like individuals, get labels attached to them. Thus the nineteenth century, superficially considered, has fallen into the category of an industrial age, distinguished from the growth of a scepticism originating in the triumphs of scientific speculation. The numerous sources of spiritual renaissance which irrigated this desert are either neglected or studied without much reference to the 'climate of opinion' which surrounded them.

One of the most isolated, but one of the most vigorous, of these springs, was the Oxford Movement. And the most striking individual amongst its leaders, by virtue of the vigour of his thought and the quality of its expression, was John Henry, later Cardinal Newman.

As a man, Newman was chiefly distinguished for his personality, which gave unity to his religious development and all its forms of expression. In his lifetime he exercised an attraction which continues to emanate from his writings. As a preacher, he was distinguished for the extraordinary range of his eloquence, which combines irony and tenderness with sympathetic intuition. He excels in his ability to present clearly and nobly the conflicts of sensibility. The sermon called 'The Second Spring' fully illustrates these qualities. It was preached at Oscott, while he was still suffering under the tribulations due to the famous Achilli libel trial.

CARDINAL NEWMAN

whose sermon on 'The Second Spring' preached in St. Mary's Oscott when he was plain John Henry Newman, will be read in the English Eloquence series this afternoon.

THE Overture is made up of themes taken from Berlioz' opera Benvenuto Cellini, an opera which was doozed by dismal failure wherever it was produced. The Overture, on the other hand, has always been successful. It begins with the whirlwind Allegro to which Berlioz refers, and then there is a melody which, in the opera, Benvenuto sings to his beloved Teresa; here it is played first by English horn and then repeated by the strings. It makes way for another bustling Allegro, and towards the end the Saltarello from the opening returns.

Today's Thanksgiving Service for our King
THE FORM AND ORDER OF SERVICE to be used in Westminster Abbey at 11 o'clock this morning, in Thanksgiving to Almighty God for His Good Providence whereby our Most Gracious Sovereign has been delivered from severe illness to the comfort of the whole Realm and for the signal love and loyalty of his people made manifest in the time of trouble.

 [The Radio Times has been enabled to print the complete Order of Service by courtesy of the Dean of Westminster, the Oxford University Press, and the Church Assembly, Westminster.]

While the King and Queen are being conducted to their places, the Choir shall sing:

Hymn

I vow to thee, my country—all earthly things above—
 Entire and whole and perfect, the service of my love,
 The love that asks no question; the love that stands the test,
 That lays upon the altar the dearest and the best;
 The love that never falters, the love that pays the price,
 The love that makes undaunted the final sacrifice.
 And there's another country, I've heard of long ago—
 Most dear to them that love her, most great to them that know—
 We may not count her armies: we may not see her King—
 Her fortress is a faithful heart, her pride is suffering—
 And soul by soul and silently her shining bounds increase,
 And her ways are ways of gentleness and all her paths are peace.

When all have taken their places, the Hymn following shall be sung.

All people that on earth do dwell,
 Sing to the Lord with cheerful voice;
 Him serve with fear, his praise forth tell,
 Come ye before him, and rejoice.
 The Lord, ye know, is God indeed;
 Without our aid He did us make;
 We are His flock, He doth us feed,
 And for his sheep he doth us take.
 O enter then his gates with praise,
 Approach with joy his courts unto;
 Praise, laud, and bless his name always,
 For it is seemly so to do.
 For why? the Lord our God is good;
 His mercy is for ever sure;
 His truth at all times firmly stood,
 And shall from age to age endure.
 To Father, Son and Holy Ghost,
 The God whom heav'n and earth adore,
 From men and from the Angel-host,
 Be praise and glory evermore. Amen.

Then shall the DEAN say, the people standing:—
GOD SAVE THE KING
 GOD SAVE THIS REALM
 GOD GIVE US THANKFUL HEARTS.

And all the people shall make reply with heart and voice.

God save our gracious King,
 Long live our noble King,
 God save the King!
 Send him victorious,
 Happy and glorious,
 Long to reign over us;
 God save the King!

Thereafter, the people still standing, the following Invitation to Prayer and Thanksgiving shall be said:—

O COME let us rejoice in the Lord our Redeemer.
 THE merciful and gracious Lord hath so done his marvellous works: that they ought to be had in remembrance.
Psalm 111, 4.
 O that men would therefore praise the Lord for his goodness: and declare the wonders that he doeth for the children of men!
Psalm 107, 8.
 O Lord, thou art my God; I will exalt thee, I will praise thy name; for thou hast done wonderful things: thy counsels of old are faithfulness and truth.
Isaiah 25, 1.
 I will go into thine house: and will pay thee my vows, which I promised with my lips and spake with my mouth when I was in trouble.
Psalm 66, 12.
 O come hither and hearken all ye that fear God; and I will tell you what he hath done for my soul.
Psalm 66, 14.
 Thou hast delivered my soul from death, and my feet from falling: that I may walk before God in the light of the living.
Psalm 56, 13.
 Thus saith the Lord: In an acceptable time have I heard thee, and in a day of salvation have I helped thee.
Isaiah 49, 8.
 Now know I that the Lord helpeth his Anointed, and will hear him from his holy heaven, even with the wholesome strength of his right hand.
Psalm 20, 6.
 The King shall rejoice in thy strength, O Lord: exceeding glad shall he be of Thy Salvation.
Psalm 21, 1.
 Thou hast given him his heart's desire; and hast not denied him the request of his lips.
Psalm 21, 2.
 Blessed be the Lord God of Israel from everlasting and world without end: and let all the people say, Amen.
Psalm 106, 48.

Then shall the people kneel, and the ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY shall say:—

Let us pray.

Lord, have mercy upon us.
 Christ have mercy upon us.
 Lord have mercy upon us.

Then shall all say the Lord's Prayer.

Our Father, which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name; Thy Kingdom come; Thy will be done; In earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our trespasses. As we forgive them that trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation. But deliver us from evil. Amen.

O Father of mercies and God of all comfort, we thank thee that thou hast heard the prayers of thy people in this land and across the seas in the day of our trial. We praise and magnify thy glorious name for that thou hast raised thy servant GEORGE our King from the bed of sickness: And we pray thee to perfect his recovery and to crown him day by day with more abundant blessings both in body and soul, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

ALMIGHTY and merciful God, who art the author and giver of all good things, we praise thee for the gifts of strength and courage wherewith thou didst uphold our Gracious Queen Mary; and for the guidance of thy holy and life-giving Spirit in the counsels and endeavours of all who watched around thy Servant in his time of sickness.

We thank thee that thou hast given our King the joy and comfort of knowing that he possesses the hearts of his people: and we pray that the remembrance of him in thought and prayer made by folk of many races and in many lands may give the promise of a time when all the peoples of the world shall share their joys and sorrows as members of one family in thee, who art the Father of all.

These our thanksgivings and prayers we offer and present unto thee through Jesus Christ our Lord, to whom with thee and the Holy Spirit be all honour and glory, world without end. Amen.

Then shall the DEAN say:

Let us pray for the Sick and Suffering.

ALMIGHTY God, whose blessed Son Jesus Christ went about doing good, and healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people: Continue, we beseech thee, this his gracious work among us, especially in the Hospitals and Infirmaries of our land; cheer, heal and sanctify the sick, grant to the physicians, surgeons, and nurses wisdom and skill, sympathy and patience: and send down thy blessing on all who labour to prevent suffering and to forward thy purposes of love; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Let us pray for the British Empire.

ALMIGHTY God, who rulest in the kingdom of men, and hast given to our Sovereign Lord, King GEORGE, a great dominion in all parts of the earth: Draw together, we pray thee, in true fellowship the men of divers races, languages, and customs, who dwell therein, that bearing one another's burdens, and working together in brotherly concord, they may fulfil the purpose of thy providence, and set forward thy everlasting kingdom; through Jesus Christ thy Son our Lord, to whom with thee and the Holy Ghost be all glory and dominion, world without end. Amen.

Then shall be said by all A General Thanksgiving in the words following.

Almighty God, Father of all mercies, We thine unworthy servants do give thee most humble and hearty thanks For all thy goodness and loving-kindness To us, and to all men; particularly to him who desires now with his people To offer up his praises and thanksgivings for thy mercy vouchsafed unto him. We bless thee for our creation, preservation, and all the blessings of this life; But above all, for thine inestimable love In the redemption of the world by our Lord Jesus Christ; For the means of grace, And for the hope of glory. And, we beseech thee, give us that due sense of all thy mercies, That our hearts may be unfeignedly thankful, And that we shew forth thy praise, Not only with our lips, but in our lives.

By giving up ourselves to thy service. And by walking before thee in holiness and righteousness all our days; through Jesus Christ our Lord, to whom with thee and the Holy Ghost be all honour and glory, world without end. Amen.

Then shall follow these Versicles and Responses:—

V. Lift up your hearts;
 R. We lift them up unto the Lord.
 V. Let us give thanks unto our Lord God;
 R. It is meet and right so to do.

Then shall the people stand to praise the Lord, and the Hymn Te Deum Laudamus shall be sung as follows:—

We praise thee, O God: we acknowledge thee to be the Lord.
 All the earth doth worship thee: the Father everlasting.
 To thee all Angels cry aloud: the Heavens, and all the Powers therein.
 To thee Cherubin, and Seraphin: continually do cry.
 Holy, Holy, Holy! Lord God of Sabaoth.
 Heaven and earth are full: of the Majesty of thy glory.
 THE glorious company of the Apostles: praise thee.
 The goodly fellowship of the Prophets: praise thee.
 The noble army of Martyrs: praise thee.
 The holy Church throughout all the world: doth acknowledge thee.
 The Father: of an infinite Majesty.
 Thine honourable, true: and only Son;
 Also the Holy Ghost: the Comforter.
 THOU art the King of Glory: O Christ.
 Thou art the everlasting Son: of the Father.
 When thou tookest upon thee to deliver man: thou didst not abhor the Virgin's womb.
 When thou hadst overcome the sharpness of death; thou didst open the kingdom of heaven to all believers.
 Thou sittest at the right hand of God: in the Glory of the Father.
 We believe that thou shalt come: to be our Judge.
 We therefore pray thee, help thy servants; whom thou hast redeemed with thy precious blood.
 Make them to be numbered with thy Saints: in glory everlasting.

The ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY shall then give a Benediction.

And thereafter shall be sung:

Praise, my soul, the King of heaven;
 To his feet thy tribute bring.
 Ransomed, healed, restored, forgiven,
 Who like me his praise should sing?
 Praise him! Praise him!
 Praise the everlasting King.
 Praise him for his grace and favour
 To our fathers in distress;
 Praise him still the same as ever,
 Slow to chide, and swift to bless.
 Praise him! Praise him!
 Glorious in his faithfulness.
 Father-like he tends and spares us;
 Well our feeble frame he knows;
 In his hands he gently bears us,
 Rescues us from all our foes.
 Praise him! Praise him!
 Widely as his mercy flows.
 Angels, help us to adore him;
 Ye behold him face to face;
 Sun and moon, bow down before him;
 Dwellers all in time and space.
 Praise him! Praise him!
 Praise with us the God of grace.

As the King and Queen leave the church, the Hymn following shall be sung.

CHOIR.

And did those feet in ancient time
 Walk upon England's mountains green?
 And was the holy Lamb of God
 On England's pleasant pastures seen?
 And did the countenance divine Shine forth upon our clouded hills?
 And was Jerusalem builded here
 Among those dark satanic mills?

CHOIR and PEOPLE.

Bring me my bow of burning gold!
 Bring me my arrows of desire!
 Bring me my spear! O clouds, unfold!
 Bring me my chariot of fire!
 I will not cease from mental fight,
 Nor shall my sword sleep in my hand,
 Till we have built Jerusalem
 In England's green and pleasant land.

DON'T RISK BREAKING FALSE TEETH

CLEAN THEM WITH MILTON

If you hold your false teeth in one hand and the brush you are cleaning them with in the other there's always liable to be a slip—and then smash goes an expensive plate. What is more, it's an unsatisfactory way of cleaning them—you can't possibly get the crevices quite clear, and the plate never feels or tastes clean. And then again it's not a very pleasant job. But with Milton there are none of these difficulties and disadvantages. You just leave your plate in a ½-teaspoonful of Milton in a ½-tumbler of water overnight or while you dress, and the result is astounding. Without any bother, without any chance of bending or breaking it, you have a clean spotless plate. Just Milton 6d, 1/-, 1/6 and 2/6 a bottle of all chemists.

Allegro con brio; Adagio ma non troppo; Scherzo—Allegro; La Malinconia. Adagio—Allegretto quasi allegro

THIS is one of the famous early set of Quartets, six in number, in which the youthful Beethoven gave at the age of thirty such emphatic and unmistakable assurance to the musical world of his intention to surpass all that had previously been accomplished in works of this class. For though they are all, naturally, in the style of his first period, reflecting the influence of his models, Haydn and Mozart, it is possible to point in each one to passages, not to say whole movements, which neither of those great masters could conceivably have written, and which proclaim the opening of a new chapter in the history of the String Quartet.

Romance*Svendsen*
- SVENDSEN was the son of a military bandmaster, and himself held such a post while only in his teens. He had some experience, too, as an orchestral musician, and when only twenty-one set out on a tour of Sweden and northern Germany. No great good luck attended him, until, two years later, he obtained a grant from Charles XV to enable him to carry on his studies of the violin. Again misfortune overtook him and paralysis of one of his hands brought his career as a violinist to an end.
Turning his energies to composition, he produced some quite interesting chamber music and a symphony, travelling in Denmark, Scotland and Norway, introducing his own works. For two years, 1868 until the war of 1870, he was in Paris, and thereafter his life was a succession of journeys, in the course of which he held posts as conductor in many centres of music. He enjoyed the friendship of the greatest men in the world of music, and had opportunities of hearing many of his own works performed under the best possible conditions.
His music, though reminding one pretty often of Grieg's, does not concern itself so constantly with Norway, partly, no doubt, because of his own wide experience of many different lands. But it has the same finely melodious qualities and this piece is admirably laid out for the violin, as not even pieces composed by violinists always are.

MIND-TRAINING IN SUMMERTIME

"Little Grey Books" Which Transmute Spare Moments Into Gold.

THOUSANDS of men and women are reading the "Little Grey Books" this summer. And very profitable reading they are too.

Miss Lillah McCarthy

"Pelmanism," says the famous actress, Miss Lillah McCarthy, is now my Sunday recreation — twelve Felman books and a garden chair. After this pleasant exercise I feel braced up, ready for my week's work, and sure that I shall be able to do my best.

"That is the secret I have learnt from Pelmanism — it makes you do your best."

"Moreover, it makes your best better than you thought it possible to be."

"I am now a Pelman enthusiast, and am prescribing my remedy whenever I encounter a friend who would be the better for it—there are many who would."

"Pelmanism," she continues, "is a most absorbing game. At any convenient moment one may take up the 'Little Grey Books' and enjoy real mental recreation. Pelmanism re-creates the mind, fills one with a new energy for work, stimulates one to a greater determination of Will-Power, and increases the capacity for Concentration."

A Clerk writes that as a result of practising Pelmanism he has become more Optimistic, has improved his Memory and his Observation, and has become less Self-Conscious.

An Engineer writes that he has strengthened his Will-Power, overcome Shyness, and increased his Self-Confidence.

A Secretary and Cashier reports an increase of £80 in salary.

A Lady Student writes that she has passed an examination "with great success, and attributes this honour to the Felman Course."

A Doctor says that he has steadily increased his practice.

An Accountant reports a "substantial increase" in salary.

A Student of Music reports that he has gained immensely in Self-Confidence, Efficiency and Quickness of Understanding.

A Salesman writes: "Since taking the Course my salary has been increased by over 100 per cent."

A Manager states that he has increased his salary from £230 per annum, first to £400, then to £800, and now to £1,000 in two years. "During this time," he writes, "I continually referred to my 'Little Grey Books' for inspiration and confidence, and with astonishing success."

The Pelman Course has been fully revised in the light of the latest discoveries in Psychology, and the "Little Grey Books" enable you to make use of the results of these discoveries for your own personal advantage. The mental exercises are a delight to practise, and the Grey Books are a source of fascination from the first page to the last. They will help you to double your Efficiency, to increase your Earning-Power, to win your way to a higher position and to get more happiness out of life.

Pelmanism takes up very little time. You can practise it in the train on the beach, or, as Miss McCarthy does, whilst sitting in the garden.

A little book has been published, entitled "The Efficient Mind." This book contains a full description of the Pelman Course and shows how you can enrol on the most convenient terms. You can obtain a copy free of charge by writing for it to-day to the Pelman Institute, 95, Pelman House, Bloomsbury Street, London, W.C.1. Write or call to-day for a copy of this book—it will be sent you by return, GRATIS AND POST FREE.

BRAMHS' two Serenades for Orchestra appeared in 1860, when he was only twenty-seven. In the previous year he had brought out his Piano-forte Concerto in D Minor in Leipzig, and had met with a perfect storm of opposition. His own playing, more concerned with the bigness of the conception than with accuracy in detail, has been blamed for the failure of the Concerto, but its departure from tradition, and its own uncompromising earnestness, had probably more to do with that. Not until Madame Schumann and Brahms himself had played it again and again did it win its way to favour, and even now it is easy to realize that some of its passages must have sounded a little uncouth.

The two Serenades are so much simpler and slighter, both in texture and in character, that some have thought Brahms must have been trying in that way to overcome the prejudices against his Concerto. But it would be easy to make too much of that; he was not one who was easily swayed by popular verdicts, favourable or otherwise, and it is much more probable that the simple and straightforward melodiousness of the Serenades was a perfectly sincere expression of what he meant them to tell us. The one in A is remarkable as requiring no violins in the orchestra; the team employed is throughout quite a small one.

This effective ballet music has very little to do with the story of 'Philemon and Baucis,' but in the age in which it was produced, no French opera dared dispense with a ballet, and this intrudes on the action of the tale appropriately enough. Listeners will remember that the little opera tells how Jupiter and Vulcan come down from Olympus, and, overtaken by a storm of Jupiter's own devising, seek shelter in the house of the aged couple, Philemon and Baucis. In gratitude for their hospitality, Jupiter grants them a renewal of their youth, with results which not even he had foreseen. Baucis becomes so charming a maid that the god loses his heart to her, until Philemon, foreseeing disaster to his happiness, begs that they may once more be made old. Jupiter, swayed by a generous im-their combined imaginations could ever have encompassed, and devoted a considerable portion of his extraordinary energies and ill-gotten fortune to its realization. He was instrumental in obtaining from the Queen, Gilbert's patent for the establishment of the first English colony in America; he even accompanied his illustrious half-brother part of the way on the latter's fatal last voyage. He supplied all of the inspiration and most of the funds for the successive attempts to colonize Virginia in 1584, and the immediately succeeding years; the failure of the Grenville-Lane expedition can hardly be attributed to him since there were so many elements of ignorance, discontent, and the hostility of the natives to contend with. Perhaps the result might have been different had he gone himself, but no doubt that was too much to ask of the handsome, quick-witted courtier who was rapidly building up a fortune because his face and his tongue delighted his Sovereign. When he himself set out, as a partial result at least of having been supplanted by the Earl of Essex in the Queen's affections, to explore the upper regions of the Orinoco, it was with the serious intent of planting firmly and for ever the English flag in El-Dorado, the city of gold, to which he deemed his country to have at least equal title with the Spaniard. In this spirit he conciliated the Indians, who long after remembered the English in favourable contrast to the Spaniards who had treated them so brutally; he took careful note of the topography, flora, fauna, and mineral resources of the country, and wrote a book, 'The Discovery of the Large, Rich, and Beautiful Empire of Guiana,' in which he attempts to infuse into his countrymen his own unquenchable enthusiasm for this future Britain beyond the seas. This little book is, without question, the prose masterpiece of that epic of English travel, 'Hakluyt's Voyages,' as its author was the most gifted of all the contributors whom the Reverend Richard Hakluyt assembled into his glowing pages. No thought of gold-weighted Spanish galleons lured Raleigh, as he amply proved in his last desperate voyage to that same Guiana in 1617, though a cowardly and dishonest king imputed the intention of mere piracy to him, and sacrificed his head to the Spain he had long tormented and laughed at. It mattered little to him, for he was old and tired, and had left his dearly beloved son behind dead in the swamps of the Orinoco. King James's silly and craven act of policy was merely a definite sign that the great age of Tudor travel was over.

'Six Types of Tudor Prose'
V, 'The Literature of Travel,' by Mr. T. S. ELIOT
For the Elizabethans the world was, in a sense it is not today, their oyster. From the comparatively narrow confines of Europe (with occasional expeditions, such as the Crusades provided, into remoter regions) the popular imagination was suddenly invited to widen out to new continents, new seas, new peoples. The effect of such a stimulus on the thought and literature of the time is incalculable. Only by the use of the most fantastic facts (and fictions) can the travel writer of today hold the popular interest in the world outside our ken; it was enough, in Tudor days, however, to set before the reader the simple facts themselves. To this simplicity must be added the native dignity of Elizabethan prose.
For his fifth talk Mr. Eliot takes this literature travel as his illustration of Tudor prose, emphasizing especially Raleigh's account of the Revenge and Hakluyt's famous Travels.

subject of the foundations of human character periods in the achievement of character and some of the common faults—with attention

9.40 A RECITAL

by
MYRA HESS (Pianoforte) and
JELLY D'ARANYI (Violin)
Sonata in C Minor, No. 4 Bach
Siciliano (Largo); Allegro; Adagio; Allegro
It does not always follow that when two great solo artists combine, the result will be great ensemble playing. The soloist is often inclined, and very naturally, to forget that he, or she, is for the moment not an individual, but a member of a team. The two distinguished artists who are to give this recital, however, play together with that complete mutual understanding which is born of real sympathy and frequent practice together.
The listener knows by now that Bach's music for even one instrument is very seldom strictly in one part, but that it is built up on melodic threads which run side by side to form a pattern, often intricate in design, until repeated hearings have made it clear. In the sonatas for violin and pianoforte, there are often three parts to be heard simultaneously, each of the pianist's hands having an independent strand of melody, with all three voices having equal shares in the effect of the whole. But the melodies themselves are so fresh and wholesome, and the music as a whole so thoroughly happy and good-humoured, as to call for little more in the way of guidance; all that need be pointed out in this Sonata is the fine expressiveness of the slow Siciliano with which it begins. A 'Siciliano,' as listeners will remember, is closely akin to a pastoral movement, and as a rule is in a rather flowing measure, at a fairly quick speed. This slow one is in that way a little unusual.

French Suite.....Foulds

THERE are four movements in this bright and vigorous Suite by a composer who has shown that he is equally at home in the graver aspects of music. First is a stirring March, which he calls 'The Zouaves.' Those who know these wonderful troops will best appreciate how well Foulds has caught their amazing zest and spirit, but even without such associations, the piece has a splendid march tune, admirably set forth.

The second movement, often played apart from the Suite, is 'The Fairy Tarapatapoum,' a dainty and delicate piece which presents the idea of its subject with real charm.

The third movement, in more serious vein, is called 'Heroic Hymn of France.' There are two interchanging moods, one solemn, and one heroic, the latter being introduced on its first appearance by a big melody for the trumpet. The violins have it when it appears after the next solemn Interlude, and, at the end where the whole force of the orchestra is employed, listeners will feel that the term 'Heroic' is indeed a fitting one.

The last movement is as merry as the third was serious. The composer calls it 'The Joy of Life,' and the vivacity of the hurrying tune which runs almost all the way through could not easily be better described.

The beautiful air which is known the wide world over as 'Handel's Largo' was composed as a song for a contralto voice. In this country, where we like to draw a hard-and-fast distinction between Sunday and week-day music, this has always been regarded as suitable for playing or singing on the most solemn occasions, although it comes from a secular work and the words have nothing to do with any religious subject. It is a stout witness on behalf of the plea that any good music which is not frivolous in its intention is also sacred music.

It is so universally known, that the following little misunderstanding has very likely happened more than once. A well-known fiddler had been engaged as soloist for a concert in a little country town which boasted an enthusiastic, though not very efficient, amateur orchestra. Among the pieces he proposed to play he had included a Largo (the word, of course, simply means 'broad,' and is used for any very slow movement), by Boccherini. But when he arrived he was kindly but firmly told that even there they knew better; even in so remote a part of the world they did at least know that 'Largo' was by Handel. The orchestra had practised it zealously in order to accompany the soloist, in a key which was wholly unsuited for his instrument, but he had to play it; and he was not unkind enough to disillusion the enthusiastic local team.

ANTHONY BERNARD with his London Chamber Orchestra has often earned the gratitude of listeners by presenting fine old music which had been forgotten until he brought it again to the light of day. He begins this programme with such a piece, composed by an Englishman whose name is unknown at the present day to all but enthusiasts on behalf of such buried treasure.

Peter Warlock, who has arranged it for modern concert use, is another to whom the present day is indebted for the fine use which he makes of his musicianship in resurrecting such melodious old music.

Charles Avison was a native of Newcastle-on-Tyne, and was born somewhere about 1710.
He learned his art in Italy,
which accounts for his preference for Italian music, notably that of his master Geminiani, and for his professed lack of interest in the great Handel.
None the less, his pieces have something in common with Handel's, as listeners may hear for themselves in this Concerto.
It is one of no fewer than sixty-four which he published in his lifetime, along with eighteen sonatas for strings with harpsichord. Avison, after his Italian studies, became organist of St. Nicholas Church, in Newcastle—now the Cathedral; had he lived in London instead of at a distance, which was then so much greater than now, his music might well have held the place to which its originality and beauty entitle it.

VILLA-LOBOS was born in Rio de Janeiro in 1890 and has taken a keen interest in the native music of his own country. He spent some years travelling all through it, taking down the strange, weird music of the Indians, but, though his own work is naturally influenced by that intimate knowledge of a very unusual idiom, it is all as original as anything which the present day has given us, as audacious in its departures from tradition as anything in modern Europe.

He tells us that the Choros presents in a new form something of the different features of Brazilian native music, having for its foundation very strong definite rhythm, allied to typical popular melody. But all the material is treated freely, in the composer's own individual manner.
He suggests that 'Serenade' might give some idea of the meaning of Choros.

Ninety-nine people out of a hundred have to provide for their own future. They have no rich relative to take the burden from their shoulders, and no business pension scheme to fall back upon. Are you satisfied with the progress you yourself are making? Have you saved anything like enough to justify a belief that at, say, 55 years of age you will be in a position to take things easier? What about your family, should you, the breadwinner, be taken from them. The plan about to be explained, will, if adopted without further delay, relieve you of all anxiety about the matter.

Assuming your age to be 35 and you would like to provide for a private income of £275 a year for life commencing at 55, this is how the plan works out. You make yearly or half-yearly deposits to the Sun Life of Canada (the great Annuity Co.) of an agreed sum. And this is what you get in return.

£275 a Year for Life.
At 55 years of age the Sun Life of Canada will start paying you an income of a fixed sum—about £275 per annum—and you'll receive this income every year as long as you live. Or, if you prefer it, you can have a cash sum down of about £3,400. Of course, you haven't deposited anything like that sum. It's the profits that make it so large—profits heaped upon profits, accumulated over the entire period of the arrangement.

Income Tax Saved.
For every deposit you make you receive rebate of Income Tax—a concession which will save you over £200 during the period, assuming the present rate of tax to continue.

£20 a Month if Unable to Work.
(Applicable to residents of British Isles, Canada and United States.)
If through illness or accident you are permanently incapacitated from earning a living, you cease making deposits and £20 per month will be paid to you until the £275 a year for life becomes due.

£2,000 for Your Family.
Should you not live to the age of 55, £2,000 plus accumulated profits will be paid to your family. If death results from an accident, the sum would be increased to £4,000, plus accumulated profits.

Any Age, Any Amount.
Though 35 and £275 a year for life have been quoted here, the plan applies to any age and for any amount. Whatever your income, if you can spare something out of it for your and your family's future, this plan is the best and most profitable method you can adopt.

£100,000,000 Assets.
The Sun Life of Canada (the Company which, in co-operation with employers, is responsible for protecting thousands of men and women under its Group Life and Pension Policies) has assets of over £100,000,000, which are under Government supervision. It is in an impregnable position. Do not, therefore, hesitate to send for particulars of this plan, which may mean great things for you and yours.

Has Catarrh made you DEAF?

How frequently is that query raised amongst the deaf? It is such a common cause of that most distressing disability. Just a little cold (of which no notice is taken), then another comes along, and, in spite of care and the Doctor's every effort, deafness (middle-ear) results, and increases, often causing perforated drums and mastoid trouble. If deafness has overtaken you from this or any other cause, whether slight or acute, it is important to avoid STRAIN. The effort of "trying" every time you wish to hear causes the auditory nerve to overwork; on the other hand, the auditory system must be worked to avoid atrophy. The safest and surest way to remedy this defect is the World Famous "ARDENTE" — The Aural Masterpiece.

Small, simple, safe, and satisfactory, your hearing gets just that help it needs, enabling the auditory system to function naturally—helping, saving strain, and relieving head-noises. Users who had given up hope of hearing or relief report wonderful results. TRUE-TO-TONE from varying angles and ranges for conversation, wireless, church, shopping, music, etc., both indoor and outdoor.

Suited to YOUR Individual Needs

—that is the secret of the universal success of "ARDENTE"—it is the ONLY INDIVIDUAL Method—entirely different, uncopyable, and guaranteed—not mass production. You will see how essential this is when you realise that every case is different—even your own two ears differ—and human afflictions do not lend themselves to mass production methods. CHOSEN for use by Prof. Sir AMBROSE FLEMING, Kt., F.R.S., M.A., B.Sc.; Col. Sir HENRY KNOLLYS, K.C.V.O.; and the late Gen. BRAMWELL BOOTH, C.H., men of wide experience and knowledge, able to recognise and have the BEST, who on comparison chose "ARDENTE." "ARDENTE" Distinguished Users (themselves deaf) are not staff members, but lend their names for the benefit of others similarly affected without pay or profit.

COME IN AND ASK TO HEAR!

"ARDENTE" success is achieved on merit—on merit your ears must judge.

THE STOLEN BACILLUS.

'Velyeteen coat, ma'am, and no 'at. Very good, ma'am.' And the cabman whipped up at once in the most matter-of-fact way, as if he drove to this address every day in his life.

Some few minutes later the little group of cabmen and loafers that collects round the cabmen's shelter at Haverstock Hill were startled by the passing of a cab with a ginger-coloured screw of a horse, driven furiously.

They were silent as it went by, and then as it receded—'That's 'Arry 'leks. Wot's he got?' said the stout gentleman known as Old Tootles.

'He's a-using his whip, he is, to rights,' said the ostler boy.

'Hullo!' said poor old Tommy Byles; 'here's another bloomin' loonatic. Blowed if there ain't.'

'It's old George,' said old Tootles, 'and he's drivin' a loonatic, as you say. Ain't he a-clawin' out of the keb? Wonder if he's after 'Arry 'leks?'

The group round the cabmen's shelter became animated. Chorus: 'Go it, George!' 'It's a race.' 'You'll catch 'em!' 'Whip up!'

'She's a goer, she is!' said the ostler boy.

'Strike me giddy!' cried old Tootles. 'Here! I'm a-goin' to begin in a minute. Here's another comin'! If all the kebs in Hampstead ain't gone mad this morning!'

'It's a fieldmale this time,' said the ostler boy.

'She's a followin' him,' said old Tootles. 'Usually the other way about.'

'What's she got in her 'and?'

'Looks like a 'igh 'at.'

'What a bloomin' lark it is! Three to one on old George,' said the ostler boy. 'Next!'

Minnie went by in a perfect roar of applause. She did not like it, but she felt that she was doing her duty, and whirled on down Haverstock Hill and Camden Town High Street with her eyes ever intent on the animated back view of old George, who was driving her vagrant husband so incomprehensively away from her.

The man in the foremost cab sat crouched in the corner, his arms tightly folded, and the little tube that contained such vast possibilities of destruction gripped in his hand. His mood was a singular mixture of fear and exultation. Chiefly he was afraid of being caught before he could accomplish his purpose, but behind this was a vaguer but larger fear of the awfulness of his crime. But his exultation far exceeded his fear. No Anarchist before him had ever approached this conception of his. Ravachol, Vaillant, all those distinguished persons whose fame he had envied dwindled into insignificance beside him. He had only to make sure of the water supply, and break the little tube into a reservoir. How brilliantly he had planned it, forged the letter of introduction and got into the laboratory, and how brilliantly he had seized his opportunity! The world should hear of him at last. All those people who had sneered at him, neglected him, preferred other people to him, found his company undesirable, should consider him at last. Death, death! They had always treated him as a man of no importance. All the world had been in a conspiracy to keep him under. He would teach them yet what it is to isolate a man. What was this familiar street? Great Saint Andrew's Street, of course! How fared the chase? He craned out of the cab. The Bacteriologist was scarcely fifty yards behind. That was bad. He would be caught and stopped yet. He felt in his pocket for money and found half-a-sovereign. This he thrust up through the trap in the top of the cab into the man's face. 'More,' he shouted, 'if only we get away.'

The money was snatched out of his hand. 'Right you are,' said the cabman, and the trap slammed, and the lash lay along the glistening side of the horse. The cab swayed, and the Anarchist, half standing under the trap, put the hand containing the little glass tube upon the apron to preserve his balance. He felt the brittle thing crack, and the broken half of it rang upon the floor of the cab. He fell back into the seat with a curse and stared dimly at the two or three drops of moisture on the apron.

He shuddered.
'Well! I suppose I shall be the first. Phew!

Anyhow, I shall be a martyr. That's something. But it is a filthy death, nevertheless. I wonder if it hurts as much as they say.'

Presently a thought occurred to him—he groped between his feet. A little drop was still in the broken end of the tube, and he drank that to make sure. It was better to make sure. At any rate, he would not fail.

Then it dawned upon him that there was no further need to escape the Bacteriologist. In Wellington Street he told the cabman to stop, and got out. He slipped on the step, and his head felt queer. It was rapid stuff this cholera poison. He waved his cabman out of existence, so to speak, and stood on the pavement with his arms folded upon his breast awaiting the arrival of the Bacteriologist. There was something tragic in his pose. The sense of imminent death gave him a certain dignity. He greeted his pursuer with a defiant laugh.

'Vive l'Anarchie! You are too late, my friend. I have drunk it. The cholera is abroad!'

The Bacteriologist from his cab beamed curiously at him through his spectacles. 'You have drunk it! An Anarchist! I see now.' He was about to say something more, and then checked himself. A smile hung in the corner of his mouth. He opened the apron of his cab as if to descend, at which the Anarchist waved him a dramatic farewell and strode off towards Waterloo Bridge, carefully jostling his infected body against as many people as possible. The Bacteriologist was so preoccupied with the vision of him that he scarcely manifested the slightest surprise at the appearance of Minnie upon the pavement with his hat and shoes and overcoat. 'Very good of you to bring my things,' he said, and remained lost in contemplation of the receding figure of the Anarchist.

'You had better get in,' he said, still staring. Minnie felt absolutely convinced now that he was mad, and directed the cabman home on her own responsibility. 'Put on my shoes? Certainly, dear,' said he, as the cab began to turn, and hid the strutting black figure, now small in the distance, from his eyes. Then suddenly something grotesque struck him, and he laughed. Then he remarked, 'It is really very serious, though.'

'You see, that man came to my house to see me, and he is an Anarchist. No—don't faint, or I cannot possibly tell you the rest. And I wanted to astonish him, not knowing he was an Anarchist, and took up a cultivation of that new species of Bacterium I was telling you of, that infest, and I think cause, the blue patches upon various monkeys; and like a fool, I said it was Asiatic cholera. And he ran away with it to poison the water of London, and he certainly might have made things look blue for this civilized city. And now he has swallowed it. Of course, I cannot say what will happen, but you know it turned that kitten blue, and the three puppies—in patches, and the sparrow—bright blue. But the bother is, I shall have all the trouble and expense of preparing some more.'

'Put on my coat on this hot day! Why? Because we might meet Mrs. Jabber. My dear, Mrs. Jabber is not a draught. But why should I wear a coat on a hot day because of Mrs. —? Oh! very well.'

WHETHER from the point of view of its new social developments or of its historic associations, few countries have as great an appeal, at the moment, as Palestine. The new Zionist movement is still in its early stages, and, like all things 'in the making,' it offers unusual opportunities to those who are interested in watching social and economic experiments. Then, too, side by side with the Jews live the Arabs, and this juxtaposition alone provides an interesting social situation. Mrs. Eder, who is one of the Presidential Board of the Women's International Zionist Organization, is often in Palestine and is in close touch with developments there.

XI, 'China Today: 'Commerce and Industry'
by C. O. LIN

PREVIOUS talks on this series have emphasized the change that has come to China by virtue of its contact with the West. What is to be the result of this development? It is a question urgent with all today who are alive to the trend of social and political and economic international affairs. The rise, in China, of a new industrial order has not, so far, completely driven out the old order. Will it eventually? Will China, in time, become completely industrialized and join hands with the great industrial nations of the world? This is the main question to be discussed in tonight's talk—the next to last of this most interesting series.

South African Oranges in Summer-time

The S.S. Carnarvon Castle from Cape Town landed the first South African oranges of the year at Southampton on May 13th. They were examined at the ship's side and found to be of splendid quality.

Thousands of boxes of oranges and naartjes (tangerines) and supplies of excellent grape-fruit will now be arriving every week from South Africa. Before the season ends, in November, over one million boxes of oranges are expected—a record year.

The trees from which these oranges were picked flowered last February. The oranges were ripening in South African sunshine through March and April, until gathering began in May. They passed an official test for quality before they left South Africa: and now they are ready to be bought in the shops, where you can judge of their quality for yourself.

"ALL POSITION"

NON-SPILLABLE

PORTABLE
RECEIVERS

The electrolyte in C.A.V. non-spillable batteries differs from all previously known jellied-acid electrolyte, in so far that it is not a solid mass but possesses a cohesive honey-comb-like structure, whereby free distribution of the gases evolved during charge and discharge is ensured.

The introduction of the C.A.V. "All Position" Jellied-Acid Battery has removed, once and for all, the consideration of battery position in Portable Set design. No longer is it necessary to ponder over the various positions in which the set may be placed, for with this battery it may be used in any position, with perfect safety, for any length of time, and with the assurance that no acid will be spilt. All parts of the plates are always surrounded by electrolyte, a condition which is impossible in a battery containing free acid. It is therefore the only class of battery which will give its full rated capacity at any angle.

This class of battery is the result of lengthy and intensive research in our laboratories; it overcomes the difficulty of total plate immersion in all positions, an essential feature with all portable receivers of the suitcase type.

Mozart's Symphony belongs to one of the times when things really were conspiring to be kind to him. As listeners know, his life was often beset by difficulties and trials, although the music he left is almost all so melodious and wholesome that for generations it has had a large share in the world's happiness and brave good spirits.

The production of his opera Figaro in Prague was one of the great successes of his career, and at the time Mozart was the hero of the day. The Symphony, composed soon after, has traces not only of the happiness with which Mozart conceived it, but even of Figaro itself. We can hardly be astonished, when we remember how Mozart wrote at that time to a friend, telling him that 'nothing is being played or sung or whistled in Prague but Figaro'. The Symphony is in only three movements, there being no Minuet. It is scored for a comparatively small team, flutes, oboes, bassoons, horns, trumpets, drums, and the usual strings, there being no clarinets. It begins with a full-sized slow introduction, and the bright quick movement which follows is worked out at important length and on strictly orthodox lines.

The slow movement which follows is also fairly long, a fine example of Mozart's gift of inventing beautiful melody, and the Symphony comes to its end with a quick movement in the gayest possible spirits.

7.45 An Orchestral Concert NATIONAL ORCHESTRA OF WALES (Cerdorfa Genedlaethol Cymru) Conducted by WARWICK BRAITHWAITE Overture, 'The Fairies' Wagner

THIS is a very youthful work of Wagner's, and in later life he very likely looked on it as a youthful indiscretion. He was only twenty, and had just been given his first post—chorus-master in one of the smaller German Opera Houses. Weber's operas were very much in the air, and, like other young people, Wagner was naturally a good deal influenced by their romantic ideas.

The plot is based on an old legend which can be found in one form or another in most parts of the world. It tells of a fairy who fell in love with a mortal, and who was given leave to become a mortal herself so that she might wed him, only on the stern condition that his love remained constant, even though she were turned into some repulsive shape. In most versions of the legend she becomes a snake, but Wagner altered it and made her become a stone, which her lover restored to life and beauty by his passionate love song. And, instead of making the fairy become a mortal, Wagner has her lover admitted to fairyland as her bridegroom, by special decree of the King of the Fairies.

The opera is now quite forgotten except for this Overture. It is bold and vigorous, and there is one upsoaring tune which is rather like Weber. It comes from the second act of the opera, where the fairy herself sings it. And there is another theme which is very like a part of Elizabeth's greeting to the Hall of Song in Tannhäuser.

WILLIAM PARSONS (Baritone) and Orchestra
Vision Fugitive (Fleeting Vision) ('Hérodiade')
Massenet

MASSENET's opera Hérodiade, though founded on the Biblical story of John the Baptist and Herod, takes considerable liberties with the original. When it was produced at Covent Garden in London, the authorities insisted on some changes in the names of the personages and in the setting. The story is even more grim in its tragedy than in the Bible version, but Massenet's music is, as always, melodious and effective.

In this beautiful air, taken from the second act, Herod is singing of a vision of Salome which never leaves his thoughts by day nor by night.

The Yeoman's Wedding Song Prince Poniatowski

A NEPHEW of the French marshal who lost his life at the battle of Leipzig, Prince Poniatowski found time, amid the affairs of State to which his station in the world called him, to become a thoroughly equipped musician. His was by no means the usual amateur's equipment. After the disaster to the French arms in the Franco-Prussian War he came with his Emperor to London and took an important place in its music, producing more than one of his big works in the London theatres. Most of his operas and other music on a big scale are already well-nigh forgotten, and he is remembered almost solely by this one breezy and wholesome song.

V. Gladstone and the Modern Cabinet Ascen-

THE effect of Gladstone's (and his Cabinet's) relation to the rank and file of his party and the House did much to bring about the most serious change of all in the making of modern politics—the domination of the House and of its time by the Ministry of the day. Whatever other circumstances contributed, this change may rightly be associated with Gladstone, because he is the typical example of that direct appeal and of that platform leadership of them by Ministers, upon which the GREAT man though he was, in every sense of the word, shaping his own career with sturdy confidence, Haydn more than once held posts of service, with all the dignity which good and faithful service really means. And, of course, he owed some of his opportunities of composing, and of hearing his music performed, to the enthusiastic patrons on whose behalf he worked. In 1759, at the age of twenty-seven, when fortune was beginning to smile on him, and his great gifts were beginning to be recognized, he was appointed

Director of Music and chamber music composer to Count Ferdinand Maximilian Morzin, who had a country seat near Pilsen. A small private orchestra was maintained there and for it Haydn composed a number of his earlier orchestral pieces, including this happy Symphony. Like several others, it has been given an affectionate name—'Le Soir' (The Evening)—although it is in no sense descriptive music. It is among the first Symphonies in which each of the movements has its own distinct character, and all are melodious and simple, full of Haydn's unfailing good humour.

BORN in Monaco in 1878, Schreker studied in Vienna and lived there until 1920. In 1911 he founded the Philharmonic Choral Society, becoming its first conductor, and in the same year was appointed Professor of Composition

at the Royal and Imperial Academy. In 1920

he was called to Berlin as Director of the Hochschule (High School), one of the leading teaching institutions, not only in Germany, but in the world. As a composer, he has already given us much in many different forms, and in Germany they think of him as having a big influence on the course of present-day music. He is specially interested in dramatic subjects, especially those of mystic, fairy-tale order, and most of all, those which have some underlying symbolic meaning. He has a real gift of big, flowing melody, and a liking for effects of strong contrast.

This Suite has the special interest for wireless listeners that it is one of a number of works which the German broadcasting authorities commissioned from eminent composers of the day.

UNLIKE the dance tunes of the present day, many of those of a former generation can still be played and enjoyed simply as music, without much thought of the dances for which they were written. The waltzes of Johann Strauss are among the best examples of such music, and there are many others scarcely less worthy. Joseph Gung'l, at one time schoolmaster, then a soldier, and latterly a famous bandmaster and composer of marches and dance tunes, left some three hundred pieces, almost all full of delightful tunes and vigorous rhythm, many of which still figure from time to time in light and popular programmes. The family tradition was carried on as it was in the Strauss family; his nephew Johann also composed many popular dance tunes, and, like his uncle, made successful tours in Europe with them.

Selection, 'Haydn Wood's
'Popular Songs'

ONE of a family of musical brothers, Haydn Wood has earned the sincere gratitude of all whose task it is to provide light and cheerful music. Born in Yorkshire, he was a brilliant student at the Royal College of Music, and afterwards carried on his studies of the Violin in Brussels. He visited most countries of the world as a soloist, in a company which included the great Albani.

Although best known as a purveyor of popular music,
like the songs of which this melodious selection is made up, he has written more serious works, such as a Pianoforte Concerto, a Suite, and Orchestral Variations,
as well as a String Quartet
which had the distinction of winning one of the prizes given by Mr. W. W. Cobbett.

appealing to posterity. In fifty years, we are told, only the best of our books and pictures will survive. Our hideous war memorials and the new Regent Street will be regarded with the contempt that they deserve. The National Gallery will contain the contemporary pictures which people of taste admire and which the man in the street does not yet appreciate. Ella Wheeler Wilcox will be forgotten, and schoolchildren will learn by heart the poems of the Sitwells. I can see little ground for this pleasing assumption. It is really just as likely that the taste of the future will grow steadily worse.

Then the works of Milton and Jane Austen will join Beowulf in the dust of obscurity. The public will know no more of Mozart and Beethoven than we do of the music of the Ancient Greeks. St. Paul's Cathedral will be replaced by a more useful building in the Corner House style, and the Poets' Corner will contain a memorial to Wilhelmina Stitch. Cinemas more regal and capitoline than anything we can imagine will tower and cluster in our streets. And in these cathedrals of a prosperous and developing civilization men will spend the almost infinite leisure that improved machinery has brought them in rapture before talking films distinguishable from stage plays only by their more perfect realism. An unpleasant picture? Not for those who have chosen to bring it about. And, after all, we shall be sleeping where the most powerful transmitter cannot reach us, and listening only to the Music of the Spheres.

A SPEECH BY JOHN BRIGHT.

JOHN BRIGHT, whose speech on the negotiations at Vienna is to be given as the extract from English Eloquence on Sunday, July 14, was one of the most powerful and vigorous orators who have spoken from the English Houses of Parliament.

History couples his name with that of Cobden, for their united antagonism to the Corn Laws; and perhaps it was to Cobden that Bright owed something of the simple, almost home-spun, quality of his words. Phrases coined by him in moments of eloquence became the property of the man in the street: 'Force is not a remedy.' 'A free breakfast table.' 'The party of two reminds me of a Scottish terrier which was so covered with hair that you could not tell which was head and which was tail.'

Bright, who was the second son of a family of eleven, gained his first lesson in oratory as a youthful member of the Rochdale Juvenile Temperance Band. The youthful John was down to speak. He got his notes hopelessly mixed and sat down in confusion. The chairman, to cover the hiatus, started a temperance song and, during the singing, told Bright to put aside his notes and speak what was in his mind. He did so, and made an excellent address as a result. The speech that will be read on Sunday was delivered in the House of Commons during the Crimean War, which, almost alone, he had opposed from the beginning. Some men live in their deeds; others in their books. 'My life,' said Bright, 'is in my speeches.'

FREE CONCERTS IN THE DISTRESSED AREAS.

National Orchestra of Wales at Ferndale and Merthyr—Sunday Programme from Mumbles—Band Music at Bath—The Museum Concerts—All About Penillion Singing—Forthcoming Talks.

Music for Miners.

THE first of a series of free concerts by the National Orchestra of Wales, arranged in conjunction with the National Council of Music, to be given in distressed areas in South Wales, took place in the Judge's Hall, Trealaw, in March, when about eighteen hundred unemployed men attended. The second free concert will be given in the Miners Hall, Ferndale, on Tuesday, July 16, at 2.30 p.m. This concert will not be broadcast, but on the evening of the same day the third free concert, an orchestral and choral one, will be relayed from the Drill Hall, Merthyr, at 7.45 p.m. The choral part will be given by the Merthyr Choral Society, whose members, like those of the Orchestra, give their services free.

A Welsh Singer.

A CONCERT relayed from the Mumbles Pier Pavilion, Swansea, will be heard by listeners to Cardiff and Swansea on Sunday afternoon, July 14. Watcyn Watcyns (baritone) is the vocalist and the National Orchestra of Wales will play. Mr. Watcyn Watcyns was a miner at Ton Pentre, and like many other young Welsh singers, attracted notice by winning Eisteddfod competitions. His opportunity came during the War, however, when he joined the Welsh Guards, and his company commander, Captain Crawshay, hearing him sing in the Regimental Choir, arranged for him to attend the Royal Academy of Music. After the War, Captain Crawshay made himself entirely responsible for Mr. Watcyns's musical education.

Mumbles Point.

THE name Mumbles is now generally applied to the residential and holiday resort of Oystermouth, popularly believed to be named after its oyster beds. This resort straggles picturesquely along the curving coast under the lee and along the side of a bold limestone ridge that reaches in Mumbles Hill a height of 253 feet. The real Mumbles, however, are two rocky islets off Mumbles Point, the outer of which—Mumbles Head—has a lighthouse, under which is a cave called Bob's Cavern—one of several to be found on the Gower Coast. It is probably not a coincidence therefore that the first item in the programme is to be Mendelssohn's Overture Fingal's Cave.

From Bath.

A CONCERT by the Band of the 1st Battalion The Duke of Wellington's Regiment (West Riding) will be relayed from the Institution Gardens, Bath, on Friday, July 19, from 8-9 p.m.

Concerts in the Museum.

THE National Orchestra of Wales will give a concert in the Museum on Monday, July 15, from 1.15-2.0 p.m., while on Wednesday, July 17, from 1.15-2.0 p.m. there will be a symphony concert when Beethoven's Eroica Symphony will be played. On Saturday, July 20, there is to be a popular concert from 12.0-12.45 p.m., when items will be played from Mozart, Saint-Saëns, Bizet, and others. The Museum concerts will be continued until the end of July, and after a short break they will be resumed on Monday, August 19.

The Quiet Friendliness.

THE Silent Fellowship which is broadcast to Cardiff and Swansea listeners every Sunday evening and relayed to Daventry (5XX) on the second Sunday of each month, will be given from the Swansea Studio on Sunday, July 14, from 10.40 to 11.0 p.m. A regular listener from Cardiff was motoring recently in North Wales and his number plate attracted the attention of a policeman off duty. 'You come from Cardiff, I see,' he said. He then began to speak of Cardiff Station, 'for,' he said, 'there is no crime here and I make wireless sets for many of the neighbours.' He spoke of the Silent Fellowship and gave a Welsh name for it of which a free translation is 'The Quiet Friendliness.'

Cardiff Central Boys' Club.

AN appeal on behalf of the Central Boys' Club and Hostel will be made by the Chairman, Lady Robinson, at 8.45 p.m. on Sunday, July 14. Lady Robinson was Lady Mayoress of Cardiff in 1913-14, and her husband was to have been knighted, but he died before the honour was conferred. The King, however, was graciously pleased to allow his widow to bear the title. Lady Robinson was appointed chairman of the Boys' Club in succession to her husband. She is also chairman of the Women's Section of the British Legion, and is one of the Vice-Presidents of the Cardiff Women's Citizens Association.

Polly Peachum.

MISS MAI RAMSAY (mezzo-soprano) will be the vocalist in a concert from the Studio on Wednesday, July 17, from 10.20-11.0 p.m. Miss Ramsay lives in London, but her home is near Cardiff, and when she visits her parents she is in demand for concerts in the area and is specially popular in Weston-super-Mare. While she was a student at the Royal Academy of Music, she played in Sylvia's Lovers, produced by Nigel Playfair at the Kingsway Theatre. This was her first show in London. After that she went touring with the Beggar's Opera, playing Polly Peachum.

Down on the Farm.

THE third of her talks on her experiences as a land-girl will be given by Mrs. Dorothy Howard Rowlands on Monday, July 15, at 4.45 p.m. Many people have asked Mrs. Rowlands how she, a townswoman, was able to write of country folk as if she had been born and bred amongst them, and she claims that this war-time experience gave her all the insight she needed. 'You can't grub along like a lot of starlings in the same soil for days without eventually meeting on the same footing,' she declares. 'One has to become part of the landscape, as it were, in order really to know the English peasant.'

Other Items.

CARDIFF listeners will have an opportunity of hearing the Northern Command Tattoo broadcast from Manchester on Tuesday, July 16, from 11.30 p.m. till midnight.

A Talk by Mr. W. H. Jones on 'Rhosilly in Gower,' arranged for May 31, but postponed owing to the broadcasting of Election Results, will now be given on Friday, July 19, at 6.0 p.m.

Mr. J. Maddox Yorke gives the fifth of his series of talks on Rural Community Councils on Tuesday, July 16, at 5.0 p.m., when his subject will be 'Music and Drama.'

Dr. Stephenson, of the Technical College, Cardiff, gives the second talk on 'Commerce' in the series on 'Careers,' on Friday, July 19, at 6.0 p.m.

Mr. Eddie Williams takes 'Java' as the subject of his third talk on his travels on Saturday, July 20, at 7.0 p.m. Following this, at 7.15 p.m., comes a talk from Swansea on 'Outboard Motor Racing,' by Mr. Percy Bevan.

'STEEP HOLM.'

THE NATIONAL MUSEUM OF WALES.

From where regular midday concerts by the National Orchestra of Wales are broadcast to Welsh listeners. Our photograph is reproduced by courtesy of the Cardiff Corporation.

Rogues and Vagabonds.

ROGUES AND VAGABONDS' is the title of a popular vocal and orchestral concert arranged for Saturday, July 20, at 9.35 p.m. Ronald Chivers (baritone) will sing the Credo from Othello with the orchestra, and he will also be heard in a group of light songs including The Rebel, by William Wallace.

Penillion Recital.

APENILLION Recital by Gunstone Jones accompanied on the harp by Nan Davies will be the feature of the Welsh Interlude on Tuesday, July 16, at 7 p.m. Mr. Gunstone Jones is an extremely versatile artist and can interpret many different characters in an evening's performance, but his chief delight is penillion singing. By the old laws of Wales, a harp was a necessary possession for anyone claiming to be recognized as a gentleman or even as a freeman. And it was not liable to be seized for debt, for the lack of it would have reduced a man to the rank of a slave. In penillion singing the air is not sung by the voice but played on the harp, the vocalist singing a simple counterpoint to it the while, only very rarely doubling the air. No penillion singer is regarded as competent unless he can sing in triple time against double time in the melody. This form of singing was extremely popular during the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, which may be the reason why the Welsh take so kindly to part-singing.

SAMUEL PEPYS, LISTENER.
 By R. M. FREEMAN.

Part-Author of Samuel Pepys' Diary of the Great Warr.

June 14.—Listening-in Circle this night was at Mr. Blick's, the first time of having it at his vicarage. Very well diverted I was with 'More Djinn and Bitters,' yet even better allmost by the way the Fripp woman puts on churchiness for old Blick, passing everything but the water-biscuits, the same as he does, in virtue of the Friday, and, for a like reason, noe sugar to her coffee. Speaking hereof with Jimble, he asks me have I noticed she is also wearing violet garters to match all the Church's seasons, even to green for Trinity, and, when Blick is by, always sits to show them. Which, if true, is a very prophane as well as sly thing, to set about seducing a celibate priest from his vows by flaunting churchy garters at him.

June 15.—Pall writes to my wife from Huntingdon that she believes her time is now neare and prays (rather simply, methought) for a boy to continue the Nubbins name, Azarias being the last of his line. Yet why anyone should be set upon continuing the Nubbins name, God knows.
 How much better a girl that it should either die with or she some day marry out of it.

Snigsby comes to the Clubb this forenoon, the first time of his coming since he was brought to bed of the sciatique. He walks on 2 sticks and very gingerly lowers himself into his chayr by the arms; so as Gen^l Pottleton did pleasantly rally him on sitting down 'by numbers,' as the soldiers say. Anon proceeds to tell Snigsby of his once being catcht of the sciatique himself, but his wife cured him summarily by ironing the leg downwards (through his pants) with a taylor's goose; and is, says he, an instant remedy for it.

Strange how many instant remedies there be for the sciatique, gooses and other, yet how many men go on being tormented with it. A thing Snigsby mentioned was how he had blessed the wireless while he lay abed, and the musique often to tame his pangs the same as Orpheus did the tigers. Goes on to tell of his very particular listening-in on Friday nights and with our Circle in spirit. Moreover shall so continue, till he can rejoin us in the flesh. Whereto I did straitly caution him, for all our sakes, on noe account to adventure him abroad at night, till he be quite himself again, and having rubbed the dangers thereof into him by severall very terrifying instances within my knowledge, so parted from the fool.

LAUNCHING OF H.M.S. 'EXETER.'

Running Commentary on Ceremony at Devonport Dockyard—Sunday Concert from Leamington Spa—Interesting Talks for Plymouth and Bournemouth Listeners.

ON Thursday, July 18, at 3.5 p.m., listeners to Plymouth and 5GB will hear a running commentary on the launching of H.M.S. Exeter from H.M. Dockyard, Devonport. The commentary will be given by Commander Stephen King-Hall, who is known to many listeners for his series of talks on China, broadcast recently from London.

ONE of the charms of the New Forest is that it provides, ready to step into, all the scope for adventurous exploration that the veriest romantic could desire within the limits of progression prescribed by a well-stocked luncheon basket. Unfortunately there is a marked reticence regarding the Forest's hidden beauties on the part of those who know it best. To many, therefore, the talk which Mrs. E. Gee Nash is broadcasting from Bournemouth on Tuesday, July 16, entitled 'Little Lost Valleys in the New Forest,' will be in the nature of a disclosure.

THE 5GB programmes of Sunday, July 14, open with another relay from Jephson Gardens, Leamington Spa, when the Band of H.M. Royal Marines (Plymouth), conducted by Lieut. G. W. E. Grayson, will be on the air. This band, which is one of the finest combinations of instrumentalists in the Services, will be paying its first visit to Leamington. This relay will be followed by an instrumental programme in which the artists are Luigi Gasparini (violin), Edith Penville (flute), and Claude de Ville, till recently the accompanist at the Belfast Station of the B.B.C.

THE service for 5GB listeners on Sunday evening, July 14, is to be relayed from St. Martin's Parish Church, Birmingham, and is being arranged by the Birmingham Co-operative Society. The address will be given by the Rev. Canon Guy Rogers.

UNTIL the Reformation, Cornwall, like Brittany, was a land of 'Pardons' and Pilgrimages. Nearly every Cornish parish kept a feast and its local Saint, and pilgrims flocked thither, their numbers depending upon the fame of the Saint's sanctity and of the healing virtues of his Holy Well. These pilgrimages were a delightful feature of English country life—as we know from the pages of Chaucer's 'Canterbury Tales.' In Tudor times, these pilgrimages were abolished, but they have gained great popularity since their recent revival. On July 31, the Truro Diocesan Pilgrimage to St. Germans will take place, and it is of this that Mr. Charles Henderson will speak in the Plymouth Studio at 7.0 p.m. on Tuesday, July 16, in the first of his series of talks entitled 'Three Cornish Ceremonies.'

THE Light Music programme for 5GB listeners on Monday, July 15, comes from Pattison's Restaurant, Corporation Street, Birmingham with solos from Daisy Neal (contralto), Norris Stanley (violin), and Harry Miller (violin). Dudley Stuart White (baritone) will sing in the relay from Lozells Picture House on Wednesday evening, July 17, while Winifred Payne (contralto) will be heard in the relay on Thursday afternoon, July 18.

TRAVELLERS passing through the clean, cheerful town of Lymington, on their way, perhaps, to the enchanted glades of the New Forest, may have time to glance at a dignified and gracious building of red brick in its pleasant quadrangle in St. Thomas' Street, and be told, in answer to inquiries, that it bears the quaint name of Quadrille Court. It is a place of many memories, for there the 'Loyal Emigrants,' French refugee soldiers, who were quartered in Lymington just before the ill-fated Quiberon Expedition, used to foregather over the then popular card game of quadrille. On Thursday, July 18, at 3.45 p.m., Miss Ethel M. Hewitt will tell the story of the 'Loyal Emigrants,' whose memory still lingers in the Churchyard of St. Thomas, where many of them are buried.

ON July 15, Mary Haras will tell another of her interesting animal stories, entitled 'Zeebo the Zebra' for listeners to the 5GB Children's Hour. On the following day there will be a play by Bladon Peake, entitled Rodrigo the Doubter. This tells how Christopher Columbus tricked the crews of three vessels with which he made his first voyage, so that their fears and doubts might be allayed, and the discovery of America made possible; how the trick became known, and land was sighted just in time to prevent a mutiny. There will also be songs by Edith James (soprano) and Harold Casey (baritone).

Make YOUR DEAFNESS DEAFNESS DEAFNESS DEAFNESS DEAFNESS Diminish!

You can make the strain and embarrassment which your deafness inflicts upon you disappear like magic. YOU CAN SO INTENSIFY SOUND (without in the slightest degree distorting it) that YOU CAN MAKE YOUR EARS HEAR AGAIN!

And you can overcome your deafness in this way with so tiny, so comfortable and so unobtrusive an instrument that you will forget you are wearing it and only the closest scrutiny will reveal its presence to others.

THE HIDDEN EAR

The masterstroke which has made the SILVER ANNIVERSARY ACOUSTICON the most widely talked of, most widely recommended and most remarkable hearing aid ever invented, is its inimitable earpiece—which is smaller than a sixpence. Here, in itself is a tiny mechanical wonder—a scientifically operated midget, moulded to the shape of the ear so that it actually becomes part of the ear, and so powerful is its transmission that it has been known to convey even a whisper and the sound of breathing to a very deaf person. And yet this enormous power can instantaneously be controlled and regulated to suit any degree of deafness, and at any intensity the absolute purity and naturalness of the transmission never varies.

The new B.T.H. Pick-up and Tone-arm is now provided with a ball-bearing swivel joint which greatly reduces friction on the edge of the record groove, thus minimising wear and ensuring more perfect reproduction.

The B.T.H. Pick-up is regarded as a leader of high-class pick-ups. Its ability to respond equally at all frequencies is an outstanding feature. To quote an authoritative radio paper "in every way a first-class job."

The new B.T.H. Pick-up and Tone-arm retains all those features which have contributed to its success, and the mechanical part of the instrument has been further improved by:—

- (1) A Ball-bearing swivel joint.
- (2) The off-setting of the Tone-arm enabling 97% perfect needle tracking

With these two improvements a new and higher standard of reproduction efficiency is obtained, and the minimum of record wear is assured.

IT'S RESEARCH THAT BREAKS RECORDS

Because months of patient research have been devoted to their perfection, Mullard Pentode and Screened Grid valves break all records for super-efficient performance. They have the lowest current consumption combined with the highest efficiency of any valves of their type on the market.

We have never used the public as our research department. We wouldn't risk losing even one of our friends to satisfy an experiment, certainly not after all the years we've been together, up and down every European broadcasting station.

You can take our word for it, Mullard P.M. Pentode and Screened Grid Valves are perfect to the last detail, modern to the minute. Otherwise they wouldn't be stamped with the Mullard P.M. monogram.
