So, we want to celebrate in style. With our cover star, Sir David Attenborough, who reflects on the early days of TV and his hopes for its future. With Michael Caine, Joanna Lumley, Keeley Hawes, Paul Merton, Claudia Winkleman and many more who tell us about their favourite Radio Times moment. There's lots more special birthday content, too – look out for the logo at the top of this page as you journey through the issue.

'I started to watch Trust, the high-octane drama about the kidnapping of J Paul Getty's grandson, because when we were young my wife and I knew Penelope Kitson, Getty's mistress-in-chief. We're now totally hooked. And Ben Elton's Upstart Crow, with David Mitchell as Shakespeare, is probably my favourite sitcom ever. Comedy heaven.'

WHAT GETS US TALKING...

BONNIN – LET'S BAN PLASTIC

This Wednesday, Liz Bonnin (below) presents the BBC1 documentary Drowning in Plastic, which takes an unflinching look at the impact plastics are having on the environment. She is, of course, following in the footsteps of our cover star Sir David Attenborough, who led the charge in Blue Planet II. But, speaking for herself, Bonnin wants legislation: a ban on plastic bags and water bottles. "When it comes to all single-use products, I just think if we can live without them, we should live without them. There's no kind of middle ground any more."

BLICK OF THE BBC

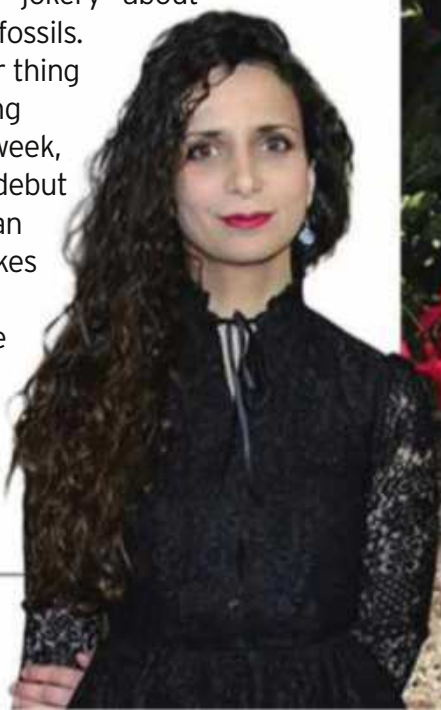

The BBC is worried about Netflix snapping up series two of Bodyguard. In fact, it's very worried about Netflix full stop. But it can at least rest easy that there are people like Hugo Blick around. The writer, director and producer of Black Earth Rising tells me: "I have an incredible fidelity to BBC2. Black Earth Rising could have gone to Netflix alone, but because of my longstanding relationship with the BBC it didn't. Netflix is the vast financial partner on this particular project, but I think that what Netflix gains, and what we gain culturally, is a depth of editorial knowledge that the BBC has that goes beyond pounds and dollars."

AND SPEAKING OF THE BBC...

With Newsnight's main presenter Evan Davis taking over from Eddie Mair on PM later this autumn, the musical chairs at BBC news and current affairs continues apace. I understand that the BBC will fill the Question Time role at the end of next month – with Kirsty Wark, Emily Maitlis and Julie Etchingham the frontrunners. This decision will then impact who replaces Davis as Newsnight's main presenter. If Maitlis doesn't get QT she's a shoo-in for that job I'm told.

SUNNY SIDE UP

Comedy fans know Ella Al-Shamahi (below) thanks to her fine line in "jokery" about her favourite subject of fossils. Anthropology is also her thing – she's currently studying for a PhD at UCL. Next week, she makes her Horizon debut in a film about the human body clock. So what makes her tick? "What the programme shows is the importance of sunlight in the morning," she tells us. "But I admit I'm terrible with my sleep."

Good news for fans of the cult comedy This Country – the BBC is lifting the “Kurtan” on a special episode of the Bafta-winning sitcom about Cotswolds cousins Kerry and Kurtan Mucklowe.

A 40-minute special, it’s set eight months on from the end of the second series, which ended in a bit of a cliffhanger with Kerry accused of hoarding stolen vacuum cleaners, all thanks to her terrible father, Martin, who had stored the goods in a lock-up hired in her name. So will Kerry save her dad – or herself?

‘We’ve never had it so good’

Women need to stop whingeing and get on with their lives

IT'S THE AGE of the whine and the whinge, of the moan and the groan, of grievance and offence. And, oh, do the women know how to milk that for all it's worth, while the men, poor wimps, stand by and meekly watch.

Women have never had it so good. We have a woman prime minister (again) and a woman in charge of the Metropolitan Police; and we have women chief executives, women judges, women running media. Here a woman, there a woman – but everywhere a bleat, bleat.

The particular bleat now dominating the airwaves is that women, particularly older women, are discriminated against in the media. Take Maureen Lipman's recent lament in Radio

‘The reality is that it’s a positive advantage to be a woman in the media’

Times. She says she is terribly tempted by Strictly but oldies have no chance.

“The fact is that the person who's pretty is going to win. It ain't gonna be Ann Widdecombe,” she proclaims with all the certainty of a pope pronouncing doctrine.

Well, no, of course I was never going to win, but that had nothing to do with my age, sex or looks. It was because, to state the bloomin' obvious, I couldn't dance. A “dalek in drag” was one of the kinder comments from the judges. Being 63, a woman and tubby did not stop me getting to week ten out of twelve, but nobody with two left feet can credibly expect to win.

Being 70 didn't stop me coming second on Celebrity Big Brother either, nor did being 82 stop Amanda Barrie from lasting nearly till the final. Similarly, being 67 didn't stop Kim Woodburn coming second in I'm a Celebrity... Get Me Out of Here! nor other women such as Jan Leeming, Britt Ekland and Stefanie Powers entering that contest in their 60s. They won't have me, not because I'm old and female but because I hate heights.

Once, older women had a whole show devoted to them: Grumpy Old Women. Female oldies are also the undoubted stars of the reality series The Real Marigold Hotel.

The reality in real life is that it's a positive advantage to be a woman in the media. Almost all the successors talked of in terms of taking over David Dimbleby's chair on BBC1's Question Time and Chris Evans' breakfast show on Radio 2 are women. Why, BBC? Why, when Strictly Come Dancing is predicated on teams of men and women, do we have two women

ANTON AND ME

presenters? It's all part of the pattern of quotas and all-women shortlists that pervades not just the corporation (unofficially, of course, and definitely in practice) but also politics both with a big P and a small one.

UNTIL THE 1970s it was lawful for employers to advertise a job with two rates of pay, one for men and one for women. It was likewise lawful to refuse a job, finance, property rental and mortgages to women on no grounds other than their sex. The feminists of those years yelled that all we wanted was equality. Now that has turned into a pathetic whine for special privileges.

No, thanks, sisters. I'll do what I've always done and compete on merit.

Nay, so keen are women to embrace victimhood that members of the #MeToo movement wail about flirtatious conduct decades ago and even a cabinet minister whimpers about an off-colour joke of several years earlier. It's enough to make one wonder if we should have stayed at home darned socks.

The biggest mystery of all, however, is why the men so cringingly put up with it all and why institutions bow the knee so humbly to it. Get a life, girls!

FROM THE RT ARCHIVE... 1-7 OCTOBER 1983

WHAT WE WATCHED

With his studio packed with characters like Gervais the Hairdresser and Damian the Social Worker, Steve Wright has a good claim to be the pioneer of zoo radio. Our cover marked the decision to start his five-day week on Sundays – a traditionally peaceful day without this sort of thing on the airwaves, as he admitted.

“When I first heard of the idea I thought it was bizarre. But it gives me the opportunity to apply myself to a day that has a slightly different mood,” Wright told us. “Sunday's show won't be so manic, but the mucking about will not cease.” Nor has it. Wright is still a Radio 2 fixture.

WHAT YOU SAID

Many of you were outraged that The Noel Edmonds Late Late Breakfast Show had shown a car accident where a stuntman was injured during one of the show's daredevil sequences. “It is immoral that men and women should be given the opportunity to maim or even kill themselves for the sake of entertainment,” wrote Mr and Mrs PA Seery from Northants. Tragically, these predictions came horrifically true following the death of Michael Lush in 1986. His fatal bungee jump led to the show's immediate cancellation. BEN DOWELL

Our greatest star

INTERVIEW BY KASIA DELGADO

THE DOORBELL RINGS, and seconds later Sir David Attenborough bounds out of his front door in his trademark light-blue, safari-style, short-sleeved shirt and stone-coloured chinos. I've come to Attenborough's home – the large but unflashy house in Richmond, south-west London, where he's lived for 60 years – to whisk him to the Radio Times photoshoot for this 95th-birthday issue. I'd imagined that I might have to wait while he took his time, but the 92-year-old strides down the path like a man two decades younger. Just back from a trip to Africa for a new BBC series, he shows no sign of travel weariness.

I stand aside for him to get into the taxi – after all, he is Sir David Attenborough – but he insists I get in first. Later, when we get out to walk from the car to the studio, he opens doors for me, while I – 63 years younger – stumble on a small pothole. I feel he's going to tell me to take care.

Very few people working in broadcasting today can claim to be able to recall six decades of RT's existence, let alone have been central to so much of the magazine's coverage. His career is unique in UK broadcasting – behind the scenes as a producer, the controller of BBC2 and the man tasked with introducing colour TV to the nation; and in front of the camera, inspiring and educating us in hit series after hit series from Zoo Quest to Blue Planet II. Indeed, Attenborough has been such a fixture of British broadcasting that he and his shows have been on the cover of Radio Times more than anyone else except the Queen. How apt, then, that he's happy to grace the cover as the magazine turns 95.

You might expect that inviting Attenborough to a photoshoot for the cover would involve calls to agents, dozens of emails and a very long wait for a response. Yet he has neither an agent nor an email address, and he responds to my letter three days after I've posted it to his home. He rings my mobile and says, "It's David here, David Attenborough. I'd be delighted."

In the back of the car it becomes clear that Attenborough doesn't do small talk – he's uninterested in chitchat about the heatwave, and goes quiet about his recent Africa trip when I tell him that I haven't even been to that continent. He's kind, but he doesn't want to chat for the sake of it. Instead, I ask about the bittersweet reality of living into your 90s – of being one of the last ones standing. Instantly much warmer, he talks about losing most of his friends – "I have only two or so close friends left" – and notes how many funerals he goes to now. He happily adds that he feels lucky not only to be in good health, but also to be working at his age. There's a sense of surprise at his own longevity, both on Earth and in television.

AT THE PHOTOSHOOT he says no to face powder but says he'll tidy his hair. Before the make-up artist can hand him a brush, he reaches into his pocket and pulls out his own comb. "I love that. A real gentleman always carries a comb," she says. "Oh, I know," he replies with a wry smile, adjusting his parting. He poses for photographs without a fuss and is visibly touched when the photographer thanks him for commissioning The Old Grey Whistle Test in the 1970s, as it was his favourite programme as a child.

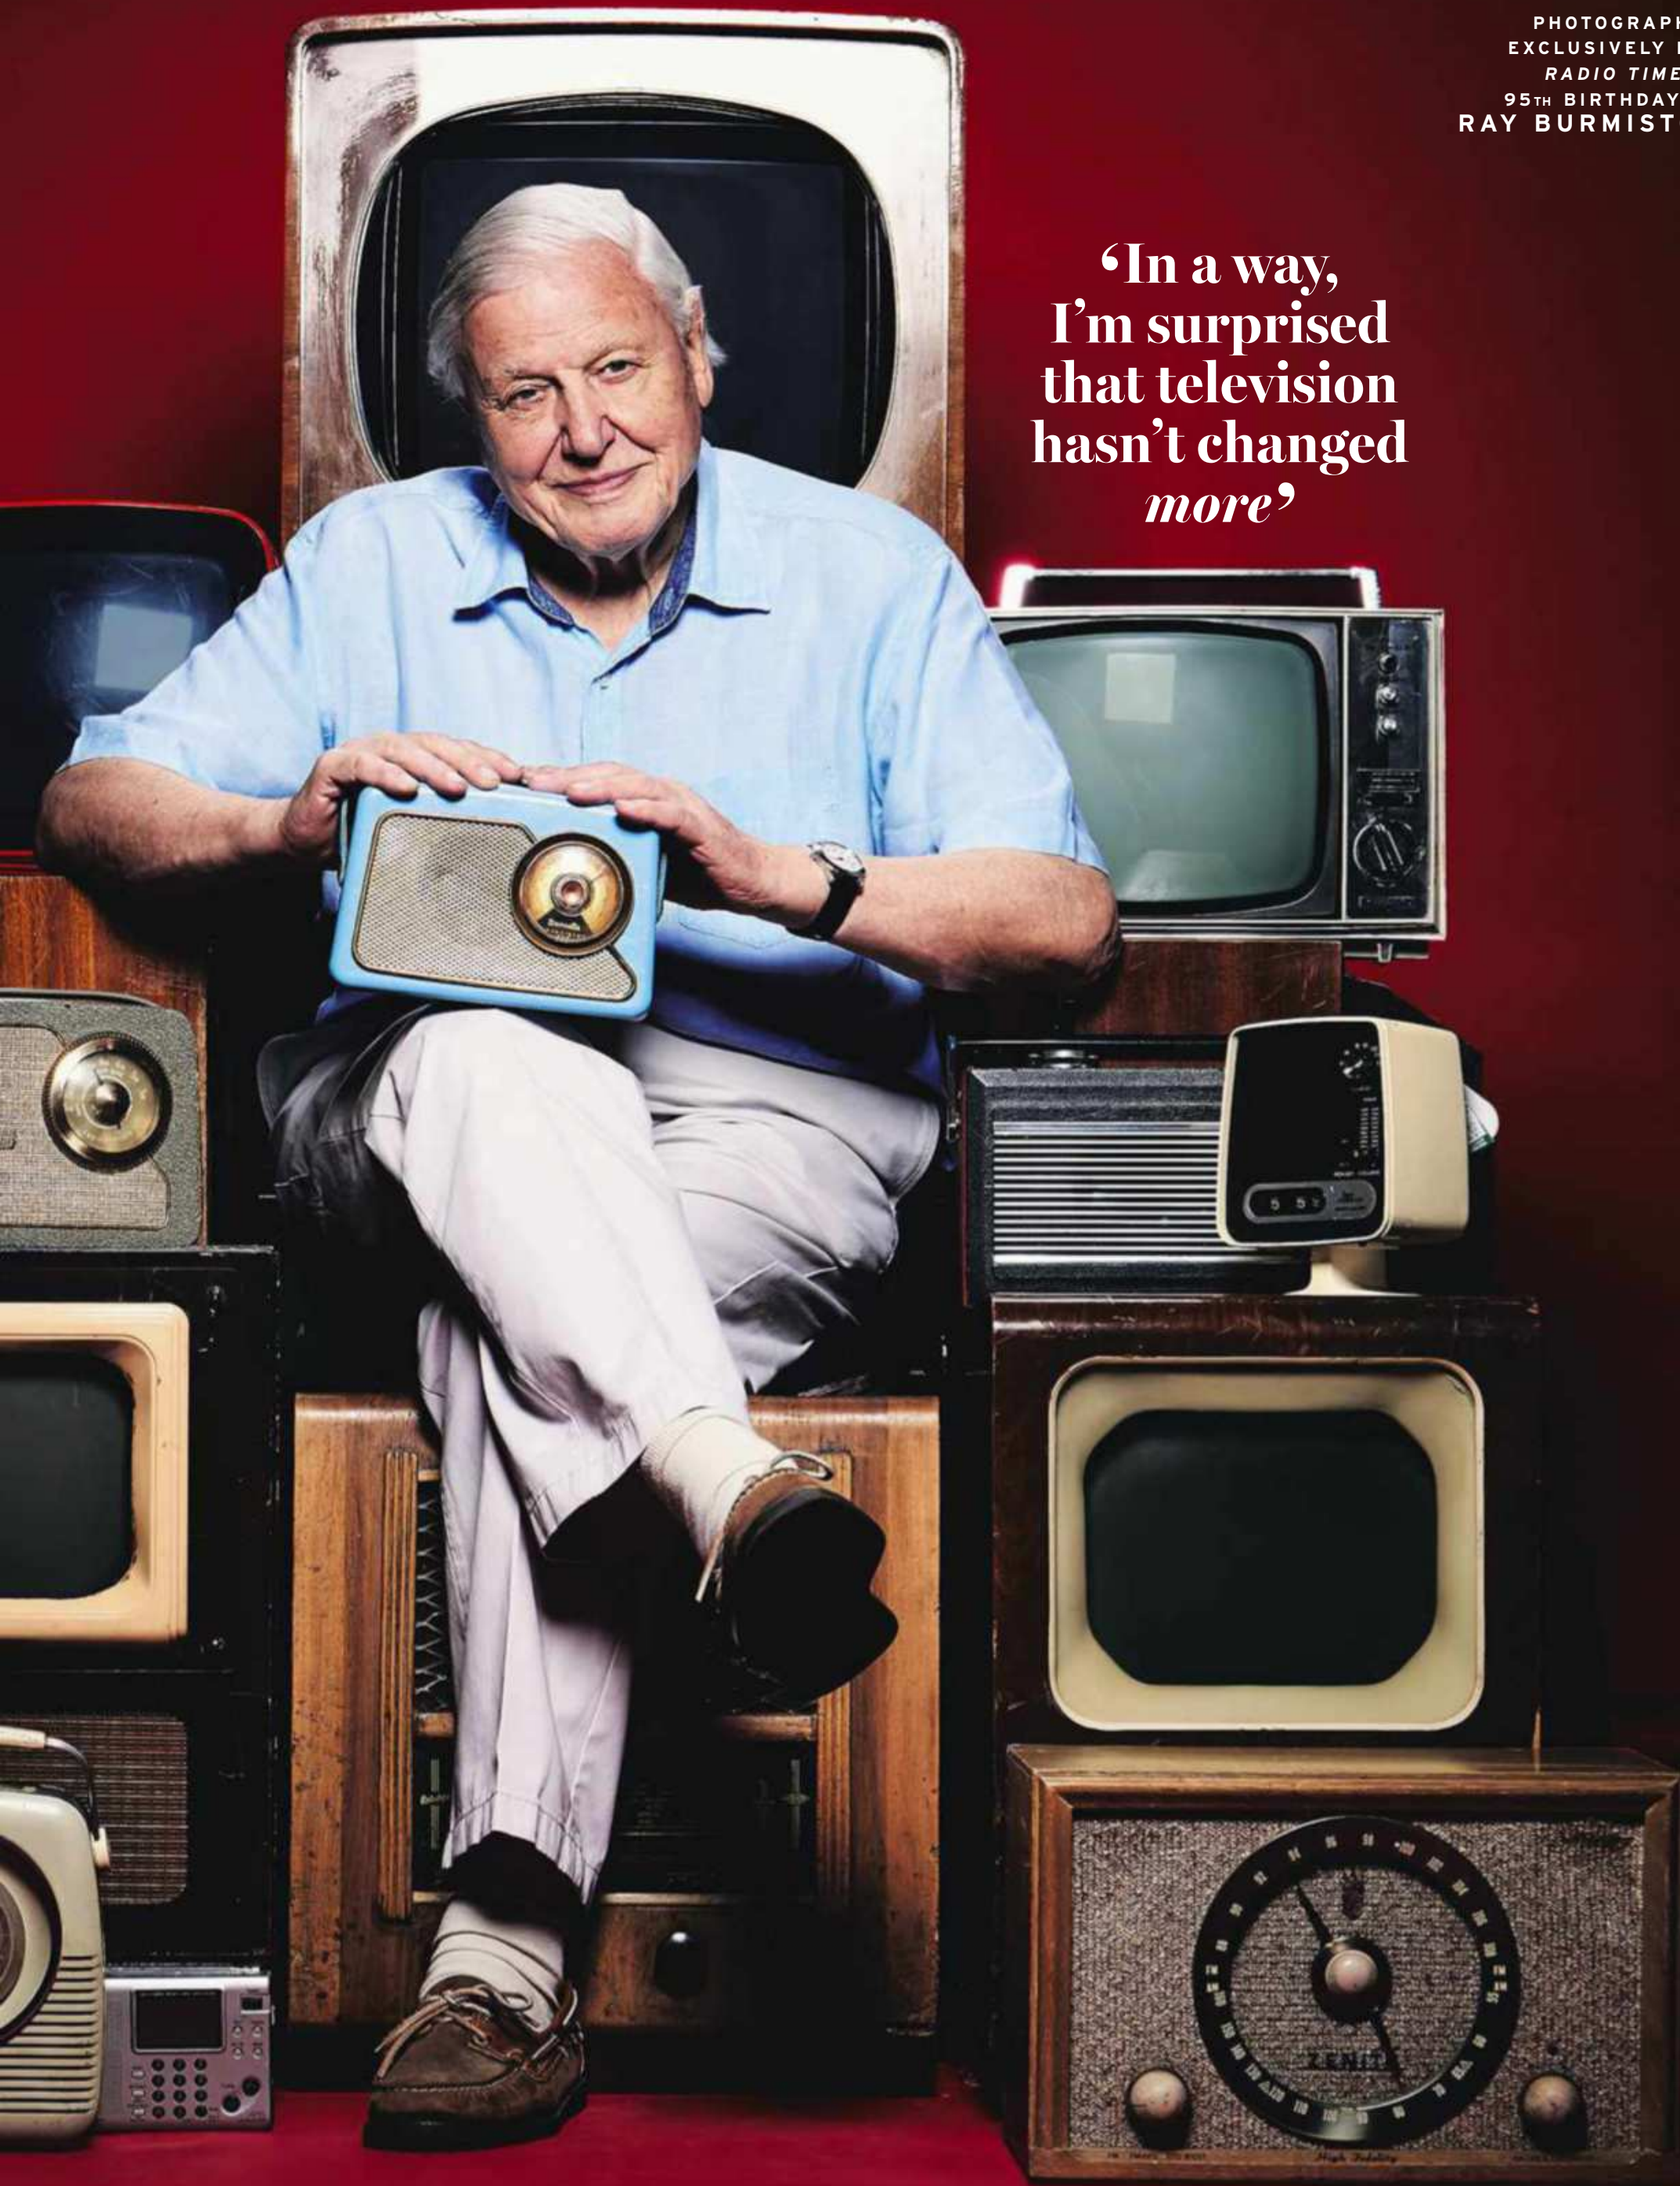

When we sit down to talk, it's clear that although Attenborough has travelled all over the world and seen some of the rarest and most ▷ ◁ magnificent animals on the planet, it's his time as a young BBC producer that gave him some of the biggest thrills of his life. It's television itself, as much as the natural world, that feeds his imagination.

"I didn't get a television set until I joined the BBC in 1952, so I'd already been married for a couple of years," he says, recalling the days when owning a television was rare. The BBC supplied sets to its producers, and lucky Attenborough, working in the factual broadcasting department (then called the Talks Department), was given one.

"All the programmes came from two studios in Alexandra Palace in north London. We produced (I say 'we' - I was a junior squirt) - but the big guys, they produced opera, Shakespeare, just unbelievable things. It was very exciting, because it was all live and you felt at one with viewers. The BBC had a bus that drove through north London dropping staff off, because once we had finished producing it was late at night and there wasn't transport. And when you travelled along in the bus and you saw that sort of electronic glow on the windows of people's houses, you knew that they'd probably been watching your programme.

"It was like drinking champagne: you didn't want to go home after you'd done a production, the adrenaline rush was so huge. The producer I worked with at the start had a faults book and he would make notes after each production on the mistakes he had made deploying the cameras, how things had been done. It was all very experimental. Really extraordinary things, we did. We were encouraged to try new things all the time."

How did it feel to be involved in creating some of the first TV programmes? "Oh! There were only 20 people, 30 people who actually directly produced programmes in the whole of western Europe, and they were all in Alexandra Palace. And I was one of them. We used to sit and argue in the canteen about how we would use new technology, and simple things like what to call the person who's in the programme and talking about things. I mean, do we say 'introduced by'? No, he isn't exactly introducing. 'Described by'? And then someone said, 'How about presented by?' These days, the presenter is now a category in an employment agency, but you didn't know even how to describe the job in those days."

TELEVISION HAS CHANGED beyond recognition, with hundreds of ways to watch thousands of programmes every minute of the day and night. Does Attenborough lament the way new generations of children watch catch-up TV and online channels, rather than sitting down on the sofa for a BBC show? "In 1952, you made an appointment with television and shaped your evening around that. You'd paid your licence money, and so you felt that you'd better watch it all - you had, as it were, bought it. But the way that television is used now is transforming. The mere fact you've got these various devices for catch-up television is comforting in a way, because you can dial up a programme that you heard someone talking about. I read the reviews in the press and think, 'Why haven't I watched that?' And so you catch up. In a way, I'm surprised that television hasn't changed more. There's quite a lot that people hang on to. Not only people that are antique like me, but also other people make an appointment with the news." Attenborough says he reads several newspapers, but the BBC news is his main source of information about world events.

Not a drama or quiz show fan, Attenborough watches documentaries. He thought BBC2's documentary Travels in Trumpland with

'You didn't want to go home, the adrenaline rush was so huge'

Ed Balls was "remarkable". "I thought that was a very bright idea, and I thought he did very well. Maintaining integrity, and at the same time not being objectionable to his hosts." He cites slow TV, such as BBC4's two-hour sleigh ride through Norway, as among his favourite types of programme. "The BBC is commendably experimental with things like that. The long look, as it were." ▷

Without action now the Grauer's gorilla could be gone forever – cut the coupon or go to www.savegorillas.org.uk to help protect the remaining 3,800 gorillas.

Population plummets by 77% from 17,000 to around 3,800

Consumed by conflict and caught in the grip of a severe conservation crisis, the Grauer's gorilla – the world's largest gorilla – is fighting for survival.

Fauna & Flora International (FFI) has put out an urgent call to the global community to save the remaining 3,800 or so Grauer's gorillas.

Funds are sought immediately to help protect new community nature reserves that are essential to the survival of the remaining gorillas between the Maiko and Kahuzi-Biega National Parks in the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC). It is a crucial step towards protecting these elusive and Endangered apes from complete extinction.

The Grauer's gorilla faces multiple threats to its survival – all of them due to human activity. A major expansion of agriculture and pastures in the DRC in recent years has put enormous strain on the gorilla's shrinking habitat. Industry, too, has taken its toll, with natural habitats squeezed by extensive mining for gold and coltan – a mineral used in making mobile phones. Hunting and the continuing consumption of illegal 'bush meat' have also caused many apes to be killed. What's more, continuous conflict has made it incredibly challenging to enforce wildlife protection.

As a result, numbers of Grauer's gorillas have plummeted. Just 15 years ago there were around 17,000 Grauer's gorillas in the wild. Today, scientists believe that at most 3,800 may still remain alive.

Conservationists have just reclassified the subspecies as Critically Endangered. We must act as quickly as possible to save the remaining gorillas - and FFI needs your urgent help to do it.

FFI wants to protect existing gorilla families in a vulnerable – currently unprotected – area between the Maiko and Kahuzi-Biega National Parks. These families are vital to saving the remaining Grauer's gorillas from extinction.

This gorilla protection has only become possible in recent years. Since the elections in the DRC in 2006, and the increased stability that came with them, conservation teams are starting to consolidate a series of community reserves to ensure the gorillas are fully protected.

"The Maiko and Kahuzi-Biega National Parks in the DRC are home to some of the most endangered species in Africa, including the Grauer's gorilla. However, as human populations in the region expand so too does the risk from habitat loss. A participatory form of conservation is giving these communities a means to exist and is helping the Grauer's gorilla and other wildlife. Time is short and I urge supporters of FFI to quickly back this vital work that is crucial to the survival of the Grauer's gorilla."

Sir David Attenborough, Fauna & Flora International vice-president

For the subspecies to remain genetically viable, it is crucial that the gorilla families can interbreed and are not separated by deforestation and agriculture expansion in an unprotected area. FFI knows community managed land is a sustainable way to achieve this.

These community reserves are absolutely vital to the future of the remaining Grauer's gorillas – because they will prevent the gorilla population becoming fragmented.

To do all this FFI needs to raise £130,489.56 to protect 10,847.67 km² of forest, where the gorillas are at risk. The £130,489.56 must be raised as soon as possible so that the team at FFI have time to plan ahead.

Meanwhile unprotected gorillas are dying from the threats they face every day. The Grauer's gorilla is on the very edge of survival. Together we can save it. Please send your gift by 8 October at the latest.

Fauna & Flora International (FFI) have launched an emergency appeal to raise £130,489.56 that will enable them to push ahead with the protection of new Community Reserves in the Democratic Republic of Congo. This is crucial to the battle to save the now Critically Endangered Grauer's gorilla from extinction. You can contribute by cutting the coupon, visiting www.savegorillas.org.uk or calling 01223 749019. Please respond by 8 October.

How you can help save the Grauer's gorilla

£130,489.56 is sought by 8 October to urgently protect a series of community nature reserves that will safeguard the gorillas in unprotected areas - where they are at risk of losing their habitat and being killed by hunters. These are a few of the items needed:

£19,180 could fund the entire DRC conservation team for 6 months.

£679.15 could pay for a satellite phone, to help the teams report and respond to emergencies

£258.72 could pay for a GPS unit and batteries, to help the teams locate gorilla families in the dense rainforest

£129.36 could pay for fuel to run the team's off-road vehicle for a month

£40.10 could pay for rations for a gorilla survey team

Any donations, large or small, will be received with thanks and could go a long way to helping us to save the Grauer's gorilla.

Cut the coupon below and return it with your gift to FFI, to help save the remaining 3,800 Critically Endangered Grauer's gorillas. Alternatively go to www.savegorillas.org.uk or call 01223 749019. Thank you.

THE EXPLORER
Attenborough's first series Zoo Quest was broadcast in black and white in the 1950s, but colour footage survives

◁ Most programmes he watches are made by old friends of his. “You want to see what they’re doing from a professional point of view, and you think, ‘How did he get that shot? I was planning to use that in the next series!’ I’m in the studios every week or so, so I meet my pals and say, ‘How did you get that shot?’”

Since Attenborough’s life has revolved around the BBC for almost 70 years, I ask whether he feels we should worry that the corporation comes under fire so regularly. From criticisms of impartiality to resentment of the licence fee, and the pay gap revelations, the BBC is never out of the papers.

“Yes. There are newspapers where you open the pages and you know that there’s been an editorial command: ‘I want a story knocking the BBC every day, please. Find it, knock it.’ Sections of the press have always seen the BBC as the enemy and competitor, because it takes away from their advertising, and it takes away from their news. But at the moment there are things that the BBC does that nothing else does. There is such a thing as public service, no matter what you think. There are things that only public service can do and will do, and the BBC does them, and the moment it stops doing them you might as well write it off, because there’s no point to it.”

WHAT SORTS OF things can only the BBC do? “Trying new programmes, new attitudes, new writers, new voices, putting in little-heard voices, tackling new subjects, finding new ways of doing things at more times when people can see them. I mean, all sorts. The very political discussions on the BBC news, for example – you would think the whole of television would do it, but they don’t. Where are they on the other networks?”

But the BBC isn’t perfect – considering it’s a public service broadcaster, what is lacking in its schedules? “The cultural, the arts programmes,” says Attenborough. “I don’t think the BBC does enough. It’s not enough simply to say, ‘Well, it doesn’t get a big enough audience.’ If you’re a public service broadcaster, what you should be saying is, ‘We will show the broad spectrum of human interest.’ People of all kinds should be catered for. You can measure success not necessarily by the maximum size of the audience, but by the maximum width of the spectrum, and see whether there aren’t any gaps in it and how you’re filling them. There are lots of gaps in the BBC’s coverage now, in my view, and that’s because they are harried and badgered by all sorts of people. But if the BBC was to disappear from our homes one morning, surely we’d miss it desperately? You’ve only got to go to America to know that.”

As technology has advanced with ferocious speed, there’s been a monumental shift in the way television is made. I wonder whether Attenborough sees TV as part of humanity’s future. Is it here to stay? “People are going to be using the techniques with much more freedom.

In the 1950s, there was only a handful of people who knew how to produce television. There was a sort of bogus magic to it – we were the priests who were explaining that we knew how to handle these things. People would come to the studio absolutely terrified, their tongues would cling to the roofs of their mouths, they wouldn’t know what to say. But now the technology is so versatile, so small, anybody can make a natural history programme. It’s just a matter of time. When people say, ‘How do I become a natural history filmmaker?’ – the answer is, ‘Do it! It couldn’t be easier.’ Make a programme about a mouse if you’ve got one coming into your house, make one about a pigeon, make it about anything. And you’ll discover how to do it, how to put it together, how to tell a story.”

HE MAKES IT sound easy, but I suspect a YouTube video of a mouse in my kitchen has some way to go before it entrances the nation like the racer snakes did in Planet Earth II. He may encourage new film-makers and marvel at the shots his documentary producer friends achieve, yet I can’t imagine anyone, except perhaps the Queen, having the effect on the general public that he has.

As Attenborough leaves the studio, I ask the bunch of builders on their tea break outside to make room as we walk past. There’s a faint grumbling, a half-hearted shuffle to the right. But when they see who they’re making way for, they fall silent, their eyes widen and they straighten up. One of them stubs out his cigarette. I almost expect them to salute.

The respect is palpable. This is the king of the broadcasting jungle walking by, having reigned over the land of television for nearly seven decades. And from the way Sir David paces back to his front door, I suspect he’ll be surveying his kingdom with pride.

THE COMPARTMENT | AUGUST 1961

Early in his acting career Michael Caine appeared in a BBC play, The Compartment, a 1961 two-hander penned by the then drama-writing debutant Johnny Speight. Caine starred as a troubled and troublesome beatnik alongside Frank Finlay's highly strung businessmen, sharing an uneasy train journey in a single compartment.

At the time Speight told Radio Times: "I've often thought that a nervous type could get into quite a state of twitch if he found himself alone with some dubious-looking character, knowing there was no chance of getting out until the next station."

The play was to prove fairly pivotal to Caine's career; some said it should have won him awards, but the performance certainly landed him more TV work. Not that the BBC appreciated the significance of their archive gem.

"You know what the BBC did with it?" Caine tells us. "I was writing an autobiography and rang them and said that I'd forgotten about it and could they let me have a tape of it. I was told: 'We don't have one. We don't have anything on the show.' They were going through an economy drive and had re-used the tape. I just thought, 'Bloody hell – taping over a great little drama just to save a few quid.'"

The Compartment

WHEN scriptwriter Johnny Speight takes the train to London from his home at Northwood in Middlesex he travels on a line which still uses outdated non-corridor coaches. 'Between stations,' he says, 'you're completely isolated in your compartment. I've often thought that a nervous type could get into quite a state of twitch if he found himself alone with some dubious-looking character—knowing there was no chance of getting out until the next station.'

Therein lies the germ of his first play, The Compartment, which will be televised tonight.

Best known to radio and TV audiences as a writer for such comedians as Peter Sellers, Cyril Fletcher, Frankie Howerd, and Eric Sykes, Johnny describes The Compartment as 'comic, but also frightening.'

The play has a cast of two: a young musician and a middle-aged businessman, played by Michael Caine and Frank Finlay. Explains Johnny: 'The businessman is one of those people who would never talk to anyone in a train, and are so engrossed in themselves they resent even sharing a compartment. The boy is a sort of beatnik, a drummer in a jazz band—a mixed-up lad who has so often run into self-satisfied people while being interviewed for jobs that he has a terrible obsession about important-looking faces.'

When these two are thrown together on a half-hour journey, with no way of escape from each other, and the youth begins to resent the man... well, if you've ever felt a fiendish itch to prick the bubble of someone else's pomposity, you'll enjoy The Compartment.

ABSOLUTELY FABULOUS | OCTOBER 2003

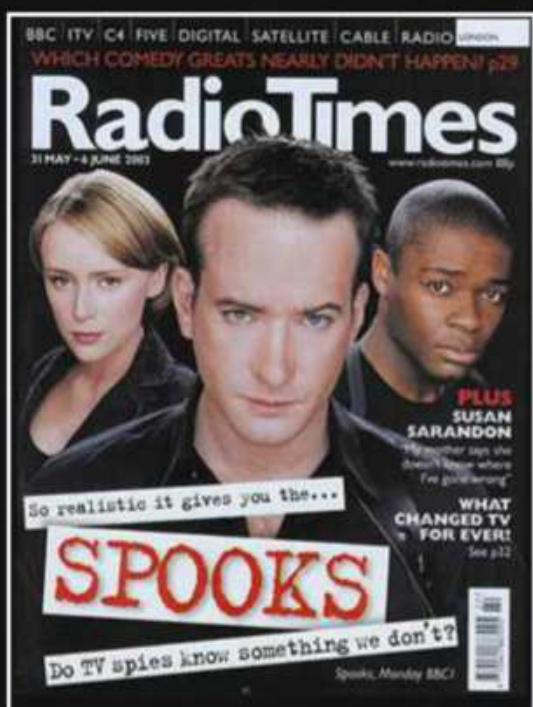

"One of my favourite cover pictures is Jennifer Saunders as Edina and me as Patsy looking grotesquely happy to be flanking Elton John, no less, who had just starred in one of the shows. The sense of pride of being on the cover is difficult to describe: something about being singled out for that week's edition amid all the other dazzling contributions. Each new programme I do keeps its fingers crossed: 'Maybe it will be us!' "Long live Radio Times and a thousand thanks for all your kindness to me." ▷

THE GREAT BRITISH BAKE OFF / THE CHRONICLES OF NADIYA | AUGUST 2016

"I love this shoot. I want all of these pictures in my downstairs toilet. At first I was really worried because of the wastage. I thought, 'If we're going to throw all these spices around, what'll happen to them afterwards?' and then 'Oh my goodness, have they been daft enough to get chilli powder?' Imagine throwing it in the air and it all lands in your hair, your eyes and your face! Luckily, there wasn't chilli powder but there was turmeric. I was like, 'Come on guys, that's worse than chilli powder because it stains and I'm going to get that everywhere!'"

"What was lovely about this shoot was there were racks of clothes with loads of prints – and I love a good print. I wore things I wouldn't normally wear because I've not always been confident with my clothes or my own body. So sometimes when somebody else says, 'I think that will look good on you,' it makes you feel confident. As a result, I definitely think that over the last three years my style has changed. I used to wear a lot of black because it made me feel safe. I felt hidden. But now I wear lots of colour and prints, and I put my own stuff together and I'm really happy with that now."

"Being a huge fan of the Beatles' LP Sgt Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band, I experienced mixed emotions when approached by Radio Times to reproduce the album cover. First I thought it was a terrible idea and would look awful, but I was persuaded it would work. Thanks to the brilliant photographer Andy Earl, the results were absolutely extraordinary. So much so that in my fading years I may well come to believe that I was actually all four Beatles and it's a shame I split up." ▷

Whenever I've been asked, I've just sat, mouth agape, body covered in goose bumps and then skipped about all day. Over the years I've been lucky enough to take part in two – one without a fringe and one holding a spatula. The shoots are properly fun (and this is major as I'm allergic to having my photo taken) and the whole team are so lovely, kind and clever. You're brilliant, RT. Happy, happy birthday!"

THE APPRENTICE | MARCH 2012

"I can remember being in the Radio Times offices when I was a guest editor for an issue back in 2012. The Apprentice was about to enter its eighth series, and I took charge of the magazine for a week to celebrate. I can't quite believe the 14th series will be on BBC1 this week!

"In my role as editor, I interviewed Harry Redknapp, who was managing Spurs at the time, down at the training ground. I enjoyed meeting with the editorial team and making the decisions about what we should cover in the magazine that week.

"Radio Times is one of those trailblazers of British media – the first TV listings magazine, which has gone from strength to strength in a tough market. I'm grateful for the continued support they've given myself and The Apprentice over the years. Even if they didn't keep me on as editor!"

LENNY GOES TO TOWN | SEPTEMBER 1998

"My favourite Radio Times cover is the one of me in a red suit with the tyre marks for a TV show called Lenny Goes to Town. We'd shot a pilot Lenny Henry Gets Wild in Northampton and had Mica Paris singing the Northampton anthem but made in an R&B style. I did a Fugees rap about Northampton and lots of jokes about the show coming from Northampton that week. Surprisingly, they gave us a series.

"Radio Times has always been very supportive and they liked the whole idea – 'Hey, let's literally get Lenny on the road. Geddit?' and so the photograph is me on my back pretending that I've just been run over. Unfortunately, while it was being taken I was having flashbacks to when I was run over in Dudley. Once, outside my primary school, I was knocked down by a double decker bus. Thankfully, Jamaican food breeds hardy children. Although I flew head over heels and landed hard on my back, I got up without a scratch. I was also knocked down by a coach on Dixons Green Road in Dudley – once again, although I performed a perfect somersault, I wasn't hurt.

"So there I am having my photograph taken lying on my back and imagining a big tyre mark over my new red suit... praying for the whole thing to be over soon..."

BBC NEWS | JULY 2004

"The first time I appeared on a Radio Times cover wasn't long after I'd been given the job of presenting the six o'clock news. It felt like the royal seal of approval. I've not seen the picture for years, but I remember we all posed around the news desk and I looked around me and could hardly believe I was there. Radio Times is something I grew up with – my parents bought it every week without fail and my dad highlighted programmes they wanted to watch. Every time I've appeared on the cover, it's felt like a real honour."

"This is the coolest picture ever. We've got a big print of it in our office, in the Delia Smith Meeting Room. Like most of Britain, I love Delia. She was very well established when this was taken – probably winding stuff down a bit – but still the matriarch, and still is. I love the fag in her mouth – I'm sure Radio Times wouldn't shoot that now. It was in a café called the Shepherdess, an old institution next to Fifteen, my first restaurant.

This was just after Jamie's Kitchen, our documentary series about training young people for the new restaurant.

"Radio Times came up with the scenario. We were told, 'Delia, this is your gaff, you're the governor and this little st has come in. He's on your turf and asked for fussy, fancy stuff. Give him a bit of grief.' She played the part brilliantly. She looks superior, chin stuck out.

"There's another side to Delia that people haven't seen: she is really funny. She's got banter. She and her mum together are the best company – I got sandwiched between them a couple of times at dinners, and it's, like, the best night out ever! That's why I've asked every year for probably ten years, 'Can I direct your Christmas special?' Even for us to do it together. I'd love to bring that side out. But I always get a polite no!"

PHOTOGRAPHED EXCLUSIVELY FOR RADIO TIMES BY ANDY EARL

"WE'RE TWO BUTTRESSES and an arch short. No, make that three arches short." It's late afternoon, and things are getting tense at the Basingstoke and North Hants Model Railway Society. Robin Gilchrist, a well-built 60-year-old Yorkshireman with a deceptively light touch, hovers over the delicate houses, bridges and track of a once-in-a-lifetime railway layout that's nearing completion.

Around him, team members are gathered like operating theatre nurses around a surgeon. Gilchrist holds up his hand, and silence falls across the scout hut that is the club's HQ. "Gentlemen, I'm going to need more parapets."

It would be easy to poke fun at six middle-aged men, all with varying degrees of hair loss or tummies that long ago took the southern branch line, who have been obsessed, often since childhood, with re-creating large stretches of railway line on a much smaller scale. But railway modelling has its share of glamour. Tom Hanks, Roger Daltrey, Rod Stewart (who had a layout on the cover of US magazine Model Railroader in 2007), Pete Waterman and Neil Young are all enthusiasts, as were Johnny Cash, Frank Sinatra and, before them, Buster Keaton.

The Basingstoke club, one of 15 teams from across the UK that are competing in Channel 5's new six-part show The Great Model Railway

'The real point of a model railway is the making of it'

CLIVE ESSERY

Challenge, are good at this. They have displayed at the annual model show at the NEC, Birmingham, and their layouts have featured in Railway Modeller magazine – a bit like winning the FA Cup and the Premier League in consecutive seasons.

But this is the big one: the Radio Times 95th-anniversary model railway layout.

The challenge began when the RT team discovered a remarkable series of photographs that had lain unnoticed in our archives for more than half a century. The pictures show goods yards and streets outside London's Waterloo Station in the early 1950s where a fleet of Radio Times vans has gathered to collect copies of the magazine sent by rail from the printer's and then distribute them across the capital. It's a snapshot of a different age. The Queen's coronation in 1953 was about to become the first truly national broadcast TV event; Radio Times cost 2d [two old pence] and sold more than eight million copies a week (1955 would see record sales of 8,801,895) and the yellow livery of our delivery vans was a familiar part of the landscape.

So, we were naturally intrigued when the club offered to interpret the pictures using not only its modelling expertise, but also the sense of tradition that comes naturally when you've been handling ◁ replica LMS steam locomotives in the British “N Gauge” scale since you were six years old. We were even more intrigued when they said they could build it in just two days.

Making model railways is a slow business; layouts usually take three years, or even longer. “We’re working on a layout of two railway lines joining in the West Country,” says Clive Essery, a 67-year-old with a white beard who used to put computer systems in Harrier jump jets. “It will probably take ten years before we’re finished.” Perhaps an ambitious undertaking for a man his age? “Well, I’m hoping to see the end of it,” he says. “But the real point of a model railway is the making of it. I’m comfortable with the idea of it living on when I’m not around.”

ESSERY’S JOB TODAY is vital. He makes the stream of tea that, along with plates of shortbread biscuits, fuels the team. In fact, the team drinks so much tea that Channel 5 provided them with an urn during filming of the series earlier this year, at the Buckinghamshire country house of the late Sir William McAlpine. McAlpine had his own private railway in the grounds.

A love of trains, perhaps more than any other hobby, attracts devotees from across the social spectrum. Gilchrist is a retired managing director. John Smerdon, a 53-year-old presently cleaning the rails with a glass-fibre rod, delivers “overalls, laundry and workwear to various companies”. That, says Gilchrist, is the beauty of the club. “You could be Little Lord Fauntleroy, it doesn’t matter who you are. When you come through these doors we’ll shake your hand, make you a cup of tea and ask you which bit you’re interested in.”

Although exceptionally welcoming (and the club say they’d love to see new members from any gender or background), there are no women here. “It might be that it’s just something that interests guys more than women,” ponders Peter Thorpe, a 60-year-old who first took up the hobby when he joined his school railway club in 1970, and later came back to modelling after ten years in the merchant marine. “But there’s also the possibility that this is our way of creating things. Women produce children, which we can’t do, and this is a poor substitute for that.”

Railway modelling is a male world and, at the risk of gender stereotyping, many of its attributes – repetitive tinkering, a love of obscure gadgetry and, possibly, a desire to render the world little and therefore controllable – seem to be male ones. I do find myself fascinated by the mini-hopper that Smerdon is running over the rails, a device the size of a matchbox with the very specific purpose of delivering just the right amount of ballast onto a length of track. Then there’s the ballast itself – not just coloured sand, I’m assured, but a specialist product manufactured, marketed and sold as model railway ballast – though I suspect laboratory tests would confirm it’s just coloured sand.

Meanwhile, Gilchrist is taking orders for the chip shop and, on a side bench, Ian Morgan is painting tiny lampposts and human figures. The 62-year-old has been a member since 1988. His speciality is very early period railways, “painting Victorian ladies in their crinolines”. Beside him, Thorpe is creating – from paper – the garage for the front of the layout, and becomes irritated with himself when the roof doesn’t fit. Between attempts I ask him what he gets out of such a frustrating hobby.

“It’s being able to make something, then show people and say, ‘Look what I’ve done.’ Maybe I sound a bit old-school, but people get onto computers and it’s, ‘OK, you’ve done that for three hours, what have you got to show for it? You’ve upset a few electrons.’”

For some, the camaraderie and calm of modelling can be a life-saver. Basingstoke trustee Dave Richards is 65 and spent much of his working life as a police road accidents investigations officer, surveying crash scenes. “For years, you think you’re fine dealing with all the horrible things in life,” he says. “But there comes a point when you think, ‘Actually, if I carry on doing what I’m doing, I’ll go under.’ So, I needed a hobby that would take me away from that.”

IT’S EARLY EVENING NOW, seven hours since I joined the team. At that point, they had made only the base – a piece of bare plywood propped on trestle tables and bearing a tangle of tiny sleepers and track connected for power. Now, six portions of fish and chips, 11 refills of the glue gun and much fiddling about later, I’m looking at a 3-D version of our original photographs, re-created in enchanting detail. I peer beneath a railway bridge bearing a Radio Times advert, there’s a newsagent’s on a street corner, workmen are digging up the tarmac and a red Routemaster double decker is coming down the road. The last lamppost has been screwed in and the Radio Times delivery vans put in position. We’re ready to turn on the current.

“As soon as that train moves,” says Essery, “everything else will stop. I can’t explain it but a moving model train has a strange power.”

Serdon picks up a control box, flicks a switch and, to everyone’s delight, it works. A locomotive comes around the corner pulling carriages. It’s an early autumn weekday in 1951, and the nationwide delivery of Radio Times has begun. Now, have I got 2d on me?

TELEVISION DRAMATISTS ARE good at preying on our darkest fears, and what can be worse than your child vanishing into thin air? From Kiri to Stranger Things and The Missing, the abducted child storyline keeps returning to our screens. BBC1's new drama, The Cry, opens with the mother of a missing baby stepping out of her front door into a scrum of journalists and TV reporters.

The parallels with Madeleine McCann's disappearance jump out of the screen. The couple involved are attractive, middle class and articulate, but they left their child alone, they say, just for a moment, and he vanished. The young mother – played by Jenna Coleman – is beautiful, tragic and dignified, perhaps a little too controlled. Here viewers are left to ponder whether she might have had a hand in her own child's disappearance.

It's radically different from anything Jenna Coleman has done before. After cutting her teeth in soaps including Emmerdale and Waterloo Road, she went on to make her name in Doctor Who, and after that the young Queen in ITV's successful Sunday-night drama, Victoria.

"The Cry is a real contrast to Victoria and Victoria was a contrast to Doctor Who," says Coleman. "That was the attraction for me. If I'd been offered something sci-fi after Doctor Who I probably would have turned it down. I've never done anything like a psychological thriller before, so that made it interesting."

COLEMAN IS CURRENTLY shooting the third series of Victoria, and when we meet during a break in filming she expresses relief about not being in a corset. Instead she's wearing a large white ruffled collar under a velvet trouser suit. She's petite with huge eyes and sits on the chair opposite me with her back ramrod straight, feet in black strappy high heels. She's 32 but looks younger.

She's keen to know what I thought of The Cry and whether I had figured out the plot after seeing the first episode. I outline my theory about whodunnit and she smiles. "There are a lot of red herrings," she warns. "The challenge is trying to be truthful to the audience while hiding stuff at the same time. The performance you are giving has to be seen from several different perspectives so it's like acting under a microscope – playing the plot without giving away the plot."

Filmed in Scotland and Australia, The Cry is a four-part series adapted from the novel by Helen FitzGerald. It's similar to other popular psychological novels-turned-films such as Gone Girl or The Girl on the Train that feature unreliable narrators and the same story being told from multiple perspectives, leaving the viewer or reader wondering who to believe.

'PEOPLE CONFUSE YOUR PERSONAL LIFE WITH THE ROLES YOU PLAY'

INTERVIEW BY KIRSTY LANG

In the first episode, Joanna (Coleman) and her husband Alistair (Ewen Leslie) travel with their baby from Scotland to Australia where he is to attend a custody hearing for his daughter from a previous marriage. The baby screams during the entire flight. Joanna paces up and down the aisle while the other passengers make clear their disapproval and her husband sleeps soundly thanks to his eye mask and headphones.

"We filmed the airplane scene in a hanger in Maidenhead with an adapted plane. After two days with these twin babies in an enclosed space, we all felt like we had been to Australia and back. The babies were genius actors, they would cry as soon as the director called action. I have seven children on Victoria in the new series, so I know how difficult it can be to film with young kids."

I confess an urge to berate Jenna's fictional husband for sleeping through the nightmare flight to Australia. Why does your character put up with him? "Joanna has lost her confidence and her identity since the baby was born, she doesn't have family around and she's isolated. When a friend asks why he doesn't help with the baby, she says, 'He earns the money, he goes to work, he needs the sleep and I've got the boobs'."

As the pressure on Joanna's mental health mounts, the viewer senses something awful is going to happen. Sure enough, a few hours after they land in Australia, baby Noah vanishes from the couple's hire car. They had left him momentarily as they popped into a convenience store in the small town where his ex-wife and daughter are living. A massive police search follows, with all the attendant pressures on the couple including a storm of media interest.

Does Coleman find it easy to cry on demand, like her baby co-stars? "No, not really, but fortunately there isn't a lot of crying in this. That's where the shock comes in, but then again because Joanna doesn't cry a lot, people pose questions about how a grieving mother should behave."

The shy fragility of Coleman's character in The Cry is in contrast to Victoria. She portrays the young Queen as someone in control of her emotions. "She was a tough nut to crack. It was hard to get access into her but once I started reading the books and doing the research, I was surprised at what I didn't know. In her diaries, she writes about her violent fits of temper and how as a child she once threw scissors at her governess." ▸

◁ It's a testament to Coleman's confidence that she turned down the role of Victoria twice before finally agreeing to do it. "I had just finished doing nearly four years on Doctor Who and I didn't want to do another long TV project. I wanted to do lots of different things, but now I'm doing Victoria, I find her quite addictive."

How long will she carry on doing it? "We're deciding on a series-by-series basis. In the next one [which is due to be broadcast next year], she's starting to look a bit more matronly, she's had six or seven children, so a bit wider, bit more of a bust, the make-up is more drawn... but there will come a point in her story when no amount of prosthetic make-up or me lowering my voice will be convincing enough."

BORN IN BLACKPOOL, Coleman got her first professional acting role, aged 11, in the stage musical Summer Holiday starring the TV presenter, singer and panto favourite, Darren Day. She looks slightly embarrassed when I ask about it. "Yeah, Peter Capaldi (her co-star in Doctor Who) found that piece of information hilarious."

Was that the moment she decided to become an actress?

"No, I wasn't a child actor. I just did it over the course of a summer holiday, and it was wonderful. I had always liked dancing and I loved being on the stage of the Blackpool Opera House, which is huge and beautiful. But it wasn't until I was about 15 at secondary school that I got interested in acting."

'I want to know if Doctor Who is going to be Northern...'

Her school drama teacher, Colin Snell, gets the credit for that. "He set up a small, semi-professional theatre company within the school and we would take shows on tour from a basement in Buxton to the Edinburgh Festival Fringe. There's a lot of us actors from up North who have been taught by him. He's a great teacher."

She was on the waiting list for a place at drama school when she was offered her first professional role in Emmerdale aged 19. She did four years playing schoolgirl Jasmine – a character who made headlines due to a lesbian kiss, and battering an off-duty policeman to death with a chair leg.

"Emmerdale was great training, but I do sometimes feel like I missed out by not going to drama school." It's the reason she'd now like to do theatre. "I

NO HIDING PLACE
The private nightmare of Joanna and Alistair (Ewen Leslie) is played out in front of the media missed the opportunity to have that rehearsal-room training time to explore."

She was still only 25 when Steven Moffat cast her as Clara, the companion to the 11th and then the 12th Doctor (Matt Smith and Peter Capaldi, respectively).

"I had no idea what to expect. I hadn't watched it. I remember getting the audition and thinking this could be interesting. But nothing really prepared me for what it would be like. Then I read Steven Moffat's script and it was like being a child again and stepping into a fantastic storybook. The sci-fi aspect was a mystery to me. I had to use Google a lot during the first script to find out what all the jargon meant."

She's excited about the prospect of the 13th Doctor Who, the first female incarnation with Jodie Whittaker, which will also air on Sundays when it launches on 7 October. "The thing I most want to know is if she's going to be Northern, if she's using her own accent, whether we're going to have another Northern Doctor Who." [We can confirm that she does.]

I'd been warned that Coleman was reluctant to talk about her boyfriend and co-star in Victoria, Tom Hughes, who plays Prince Albert. An innocent inquiry from me about whether they'd met on the set of Victoria is rebuffed with "I won't talk about him in interviews".

UNDETERRED, I ASK about a previous boyfriend, Richard Madden, who at the time of our interview is starring in Bodyguard. The actor's buff good looks and naked posterior have been the subject of many column inches. I want to know whether she thinks, in light of the #MeToo movement, it's OK for the media to objectify a man's body but not a woman's? However, the moment his name passes my lips, a press officer – one of two in the room, sitting behind Coleman during our entire conversation – interrupts and brings the interview to an end.

As I get up to leave, I ask Coleman about her 773,000 followers on Instagram. Does she have to post all the time to maintain her profile as an actress, or does she do it for enjoyment? "I love photography and interior design so that's what I post. It's an interesting dilemma for an actress. You don't want people to know too much about your personal life, because they can confuse that with the roles you are playing. I think there is a line about how much you reveal."

If this interview is anything to go by, that defensive line is maintained at all costs. She's clearly determined to maintain a sense of glamorous mystery about her personal life. Many will say, "Who can blame her?"

Living the dream!

RT's new Strictly columnists take to the floor. But how do you practise in A&E? And who's the dance whisperer?

DR RANJ SINGH

EVERYONE LOVES STRICTLY. Kids, grown-ups, even the Prime Minister (apparently) all look forward to seeing the latest bunch of contestants don their sequins and shimmy onto the dance floor. As a superfan, I had dreams of maybe one day getting that special call... but dismissed them quicker than one of Donald Trump's advisers.

Then it actually happened. After screaming in a train toilet as my agent broke the news over the phone (I dread to think what the other passengers thought), the reality started to sink in. How could I possibly do this? I had already organised the next six months of my life, including starting my new NHS job in a major trauma centre in London as a paediatric emergency medicine physician! But there was no way I could pass this up.

After a couple of weeks of nervous trepidation, I finally got the go-ahead from my bosses. Soon after the public announcement came the filming of intro sequences, trying on of outfits (I asked for extra rhinestones, of course) and the exciting launch show. I was genuinely stoked to be matched with Janette Manrara. The two pocket rockets of Strictly 2018 were ready to launch!

'I've looked a right plonker practising in hospital corridors'

Before I could say paso doble, we were learning cha-cha-cha steps in my local gym. Not only is dance choreography totally out of my comfort zone, but going from six hours of exhausting rehearsals straight into a 13-hour night shift at the hospital has definitely taken it out of me. There have been times when even standing up on my ward rounds has been a struggle, as my legs felt like jelly. And I've looked a right plonker trying to practise my steps down the corridors when nobody's looking.

I can't describe how electric and simultaneously nauseous I feel about our first live dance together. It's been a tough start, and I realise it's only going to get tougher, but I'm so glad I gave my dream a cha-cha chance.

SUSANNAH CONSTANTINE

FOLLOWING MY INITIATION into the world of ballroom dancing, the rest of my world collapsed. I'd been so thrilled to be asked to take part in Strictly that I'd forgotten I'd actually have to learn to dance. On the first day, in among the wonderful pro dancers and my youthful fellow contestants, I'd never felt so ungainly, uncoordinated and, yes... old. I was appalling. I looked and felt like a mad woman fleeing her burning home. I'd made a terrible mistake.

That night I called my husband [businessman Sten Bertelsen] in tears. He told me I was being negative: "You've forgotten all the great things." He was right. There are too many wonderful aspects to Strictly to let fear get in the way.

'I looked like a mad woman fleeing her burning home'

The class of 2018 bonded immediately. It was as if the gods had brought this eclectic group together, knowing we'd been a family in a past life. I'd assumed that the pros would be serious, with no time for fun. Oh my, how wrong I was. They're wild! Funny, kind, full of unbridled energy and genuinely excited to be back on the show. I would have been delighted to be paired with any of them, boy or girl, but I had my heart set on Mr Du Beke. He's the boss and I knew he would take no whingeing.

When Anton announced our first dance was to be the samba, I spat out my tea. It's fast. Really, really fast. Usain Bolt would have trouble keeping up with Tico Tico sung by Carmen Miranda, the song chosen for us on the first live show. Didn't the producers witness the carnage of my contribution to the first group dance? I told Anton I couldn't do it, but the word "can't" isn't in his vocabulary.

Wind forward a week and this incredible dance whisperer has got me to a place where I've learnt enough not to embarrass myself irreparably... I hope. I've got a long way to go, but my home is no longer ablaze.

A fairy-tale beginning

Only dragon-slayers triumph in the Champions League

HERE BE DRAGONS. That's what it said on ancient maps, but that didn't put off the gallant knights of old. It had the reverse effect: the one place every storybook knight longed to go was the land of the dragons, so he could take on the mightiest beast of all in single combat, free the princess and win for himself eternal glory.

It's all very well winning every jousting tournament at home, but it's only out in dragon country that a knight can really prove himself. Are you a lightweight, a poser, a person of limited ambitions? Or are you the real thing – a very parfit gentil knight? The dragon will answer those questions for you.

The same system operates in the Champions League. Glory at home is OK, but we measure the lasting greatness of a team by their successes outside our own islands. In Europe there are dragons with names like Juventus and Real Madrid and Bayern Munich: it's by your success against them that you will be assessed. This week four English clubs are in action in the group stage of Europe's top club competition, and although victory is important, what really matters is not losing – at least it does when you're facing the hottest dragons of all.

Liverpool had a glorious romp to the final last year, but in the group stage they won only three of their six matches, with three draws. This week they take on Napoli, riding high in Serie A (Wednesday, kick-off 8pm, BT Sport 3). It's about knowing when to stick and when to twist. Typically, Liverpool secured a late win in their first match against Paris Saint-Germain.

Tottenham face an apparently eternal struggle to secure their position among the grown-ups, and they have an alarming tendency to shout "pass" when the hardest questions are asked. Two weeks ago they lost to Inter Milan after leading 1-0 on 85 minutes; now they have a visit from Barcelona (Wednesday, kick-off 8pm, BT Sport 2/5 Live). They badly need to assert some sort of authority over the game. And not lose, of course.

Manchester United look as if they have a comparatively easy option this time round – which is welcome in a season that, even in this early stage, has not been without its troubles. They play Valencia (Tuesday, kick-off 8pm, BT Sport 2/5 Live), who are struggling in La Liga. They look less alarming than other dragons, while Spurs have drawn the footballing equivalent of Harry Potter's Hungarian Horntail.

THE COMPETITION IS restricted to subscription television in this country, which is a sadness for many, and perhaps a false move from the sport. Another change to note is kick-off times. The tradition of the 7.45pm start is no longer – marketing beats sporting excitement once again – so keep an eye on timings: 1899

Hoffenheim v Manchester City

Harry Kane's Spurs meet Lionel Messi's Barcelona
in this week's Champions League fixtures

kicks off at 5.55pm (Tuesday, BT Sport 3/5 Live).

City – the last of the English quartet – were impossibly good last season; no one else was even close. In the Premier League, that is. But when they got deep into the Champions League, they found that Liverpool had transformed themselves into fire-breathing dragons, and in the quarter-finals, City, full of frailty and self-doubt, were overwhelmed. This time they've already stumbled, losing to Lyon at the Etihad. That's the sort of thing that this competition can do: all limitations are ruthlessly exposed – but also, sometimes, unsuspected levels of brilliance are revealed.

So we have reached the point when the season really begins; when every opponent is more used to winning than losing and scraping draws. And there's still a feeling that English clubs are slightly overawed by it all – as if they feel in their hearts that they're not really supposed to win. Perhaps this is the year that will change.

Up Close & personal

Glenn Close tells Andrew Collins why, at 71, she has no regrets – except for her bunny boiler performance in Fatal Attraction

I'M PLAYING A parlour game with Glenn Close. We were discussing acting technique and I asked if she had a secret for making herself cry. She revealed that while shooting the 2016 British zombie-apocalypse horror The Girl with All the Gifts, she challenged co-star Gemma Arterton to a crying contest, “to see who could cry the most, the fastest. Gemma won.”

At which juncture, she introduced me to another acting game: “One of you thinks of a colour. Then you put an expression on your face, which is your idea of what that colour is. The other person has to guess the colour.”

All right, I think, you’re the six-time Oscar nominee, three-time Tony and Emmy Award winner... “You go first.” She centres herself facially, muttering, “OK, let’s see,” then assumes a serenely meaningful expression, which she holds as if freeze-framed.

I gaze at her, nervously, then I make my guess. Blue? Without breaking the spell, she shakes her head. Yellow? Another shake. Now I feel bad, as it can’t be Glenn Close’s acting that’s at fault – it must be my own failure. I give in; she tells me it was white. Gamely, she pulls another face. This time I get it: black. Her guffaw resounds around the high-ceilinged Palladian meeting room at Somerset House in London. She gives me a third expression. Purple. Yes! Two out of three! I’d assumed she’d be an ice queen; in fact, she’s closer to a Play School presenter.

Now 71, Close is Hollywood royalty – a theatrical dame in all but crusty honorific, and an Oscar winner in all but the detail of having had her name chiselled into the plinth of an actual statuette. (Her six nominations without a win is the most of any living actress.)

CLOSE COMBAT

Born and raised in rural Connecticut, Close grew up communally after her parents joined Moral Re-Armament, a multifaith crusade that, with the benefit of hindsight, many now regard as a cult. A peripatetic, dictatorial childhood (when her father, a doctor, worked in Congo, the family moved to MRA’s HQ in Switzerland) drove her to self-expression through drama in her 20s. She also studied anthropology, and found her feet in open-air theatre.

TO THE POINT

It transpired that the movie camera loved Close as much in contemporary stories (The Big Chill, Jagged Edge, The Paper) as it did in middlebrow costume dramas (Albert Nobbs) and in Franco Zeffirelli’s Hamlet, giving her the leverage to take on curveballs like Mars Attacks!, 101 Dalmatians and, more recently, Guardians of the Galaxy. She also ennobled early box-set TV by appearing in The Shield and all 59 episodes of legal saga Damages, while maintaining a garlanded stage career, starring in Sunset Boulevard and A Streetcar Named Desire.

HER LATEST FILM is The Wife, a Swedish-British-US co-production (in UK cinemas from Friday 28 September). Close plays Joan Castleman, the seemingly devoted spouse of Jonathan Pryce’s patriarchal literary giant Joe Castleman, as the couple’s fragile union is threatened at a Nobel Prize-giving in Stockholm.

For fans of Close’s detailed facial expressions, it’s a masterclass, with all the work going on behind her impassive eyes as Joan wrestles with the “loyal wife” archetype. I ask if the subtlety of the characterisation is what drew the woman who’s played larger-than-life characters Cruella De Vil and Norma Desmond to the part.

“Yes, I like the fact that she’s in the background. One of my favourite scenes is when they arrive for a reception at the hotel and he [Pryce] gives her his coat!” She squeals with glee. “There’s nothing more powerful in life than two eyes; the close-up makes the audience enter the film.”

The Wife is almost a theatrical piece, with lots of pairs of people talking in rooms. Was that an appeal? “The fights were very organic. Last time I saw it with an audience, I found the scenes at the Nobel dinner excruciating – I felt this thing in my chest. It was extraordinary to act. I felt that it was only Jonathan and I in that room. I knew what he was thinking.”

IF THE HAT FITS...

ANDREW COLLINS

Unlike Joan, I say, you don't strike me as someone who fades into the background. "I love fading into the background," she announces. She's dressed all in black, as if to make the point. "I'm not an extrovert. Most actors aren't. If you're an introvert, it's easier to perform in front of 1,500 people than two people."

CLOSE DRAWS NO artistic distinction between working in different media. Having debuted on the silver screen in The World According to Garp, she then took on a TV movie, Something about Amelia, with Ted Danson. "It was a script about incest," she recalls with mock horror. "My agent said, 'It will ruin your movie career.'" It didn't.

Close claims she has no regrets. But as an activist for greater understanding of mental health issues (her sister has bipolar disorder), she has re-evaluated her own portrayal of the mentally ill Alex Forrest in Fatal Attraction, the highest-grossing film of 1987, in which a woman scorned after a fling with a married man turns into the "bunny boiler" of legend.

"That did nothing but feed into the stigma," she says now. "They made her into a psychopath. But people who suffer abuse can end up abusers. More interesting now would be the story from her point of view." Did you have reservations at the time? "I had a reservation about the bunny."

Talking of abuse, do you feel that Hollywood is going through a reckoning in the #MeToo era? "Yes, and I welcome it. I think of it as a cultural revolution." When I mention that US comic Bill Maher has said that all men are now on notice, she responds with another shriek: "You don't want all of us to get angry at the same time!"

When a knock at the door signals our time is up, she shows a sense of humour as black as her choice of wardrobe: "Someone is coming with a straitjacket!"

'The fight scenes were very organic... it was extraordinary to act'

Despicable Me ★★★★★
3.55-5.50pm ITV2 U

COMEDY Those of us with longer memories than the target demographic for the franchise-launching animation Despicable Me will have experienced a sense of déjà vu on its release in 2010.

Its protagonist, the top-heavy supervillain Gru (voiced by Steve Carell), with his cue-ball noggin, black attire, scarf and vampiric appearance, looked for all the world like a direct hybrid of two existing characters. One is Uncle Fester from The Addams Family, a harmless ghoul who could light a bulb by putting it in his mouth; he graduated from the pages of the New Yorker to TV and films. But long-lived fans of British comics will recognise a prototype Gru in Grimly Feendish, the "Rottenest Crook in the World!", created by artist Leo Baxendale in the 60s and featured in strips in Wham!, Smash! and Shiver and Shake. I'm not suggesting m'learned friends need get involved; let's just say that Gru is not without ancestral precedent. In any case, he's a fabulous character who, in a sitcom, would never change his nefarious ways but, in what turned out to be the first Despicable Me movie, he undergoes a complete about-face.

Locked in a cold war with rival baddie Vector (voiced by Jason Segel) and unable to get a loan from the Bank of Evil, Gru adopts three orphan girls named Margo, Edith and Agnes. It's their selling of cookies door-to-door that provides Gru with the perfect distraction to infiltrate his nemesis's lair.

Having duly exploited the girls' better nature and stolen a shrink ray from Vector, Gru plans to lose his three charges at a fairground. But – and upon this the entire franchise pivots – he discovers that he's not heartless after all and vows to parent them, leading to plenty of what was famously banned from TV's Seinfeld: hugging and learning.

The dialogue is knowing ("When we got adopted by a bald guy I thought it would be more like Annie"), thanks to Cinco Paul and Ken Daurio, who've written all three Despicable Me films. Its distinctly spongy look is testament to the visual imagination of directors Pierre Coffin and Chris Renaud.

But the movie's secret weapon remains the incomprehensible, loyal yellow Minions, whose antics steal scenes throughout.

And for those of us with little grey cells working overtime, the franchise's continuing good health is very much down to its comic roots. (US 2010, HD)

Earth to Echo ★★★★★
1.35-3.25pm 5STAR PG

SCI-FI ADVENTURE This kids-help-an-alien adventure borrows wholesale from ET, Super 8 and The Goonies, and while it isn't in the same league, it does make for fun viewing for young audiences. On the eve of eviction from their homes, three boys find their mobile phones picking up mysterious interference that leads them to stranger things in the desert. But there is a sinister group of grown-ups on the alien trail, too. The special effects are decent, the pacing fast and frantic, and aside from some heavy-handed philosophising, this is a superior junior sci-fi yarn. DA (US 2014)

Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire ★★★★★
5.55-8.35pm ITV 12

FANTASY This fourth instalment of the series offers genuine scares alongside the magical mayhem as Harry Potter (Daniel Radcliffe) is mysteriously entered into the Triwizard Tournament, which features treats like a brilliant CGI dragon and creepy mermaid creatures. Director Mike Newell stamps his mark on the movie, making Hogwarts seem like the most fabulous school ever, although his vision is pretty frightening, with Ralph Fiennes as Potter's nemesis, Lord Voldemort, adding particular intensity to events. SF (US 2005, violence, HD)

Lucy ★★★★★ 9.00-10.45pm C4 15

ACTION Director Luc Besson deals in the mind-blowing as much as the physical in this crazy-quilt collision of Limitless and 2001: a Space Odyssey. Scarlett Johansson plays an American everywoman abroad who accidentally ingests an experimental substance, causing her cerebral capabilities to expand towards the godlike. Morgan Freeman adds his usual gravitas as a scientist and, although this isn't a patch on Besson's best work – Nikita, Leon – there are plenty of enthralling moments as action clichés (fights, car chases) are turned on their head. JA (Fr 2014, violence, HD)

In Bruges ★★★★★
9.00-11.10pm Film4 18

BLACK COMEDY Violent, foul-mouthed and very politically incorrect, this dark comedy manages the miracle of actually being original, as a pair of professional killers (Colin Farrell, Brendan Gleeson) lay low in the medieval city of Bruges following a horribly botched job. Gleeson and Farrell are both excellent, and it's their relationship and philosophical musings that give the film its drive, making for a lurid but affecting tale about despair and the possibility of redemption. DW (US/UK/Ger 2008, violence, swearing, drug abuse, HD)

Non-Stop ★★★★★
10.45pm-12.45am C4 12

THRILLER Liam Neeson stars as a veteran air marshal tasked with finding the killer among his 200 fellow passengers on a flight from New York to London in this solid but workmanlike thriller. Aided by frequent flyer Julianne Moore and plucky flight attendant Michelle Dockery (Downton Abbey), Neeson plays a cat-and-mouse game above the Atlantic while trying to keep the body count to a minimum. Director Jaume Collet-Serra (Unknown) delivers intermittent claustrophobic thrills, but this is not Neeson's most convincing action-hero performance. TeS (US 2014, violence, swearing, HD)

Dangerous Beauty ★★★★★
11.25pm-1.40am Drama 15

ROMANCE Catherine McCormack co-stars with the city of Venice in this feminist fable, based on Margaret Rosenthal's biography of 16th-century poet Veronica Franco. McCormack plays Veronica, who lusts after an aristocrat (Rufus Sewell) and an education – but is denied both. Director Marshall Herskovitz splashes out on atmosphere and McCormack delivers her witty lines with aplomb, but the climax of the film is too melodramatic to be credible. TH (US 1997, violence, swearing, sex scenes, nudity)

FILM OF THE DAY

The Bucket List ★★★

11.30pm-1.15am C5

COMEDY DRAMA Terminal illness is usually the cue for a weepie, but not in this 2008 buddy movie from director Rob Reiner. It follows a welcome millennial trend of putting the elderly up front, in this case both literally – in co-stars Morgan Freeman and Jack Nicholson – and narratively, as both play patients diagnosed with cancer. Blue-collar worker Freeman and billionaire Nicholson find common ground in a quest to achieve a catalogue of ambitions before they “kick the bucket”.

Globetrotting, sky-diving thrills ensue as the likeable pair travel to Egypt, France, India and Africa to fulfil their wildest dreams. The multiple-divorced magnate's loneliness is counterpointed by the poorer man's family life, but there was no way they were going to let you enjoy a film about codgers having fun without an underlying lesson. You might not guess the ending, however. And if you don't get something in your eye before then, you're a tougher nut than I. (US 2008, swearing, sexual references, HD)

DID YOU KNOW?

Morgan Freeman almost had a different bucket-list buddy – Clint Eastwood was initially offered the role that went to Jack Nicholson

EVENING

Robin Hood: Prince of Thieves ★★★★★ 6.50-9.55pm C5 PG

ADVENTURE Buckles are truly swashed in this 12th-century adventure, which sets out to entertain and does so with a great deal of dash and panache. Kevin Costner is more “Indiana Hood” than the Locksley lad of yore and Alan Rickman is a joy to behold as the panto-styled Sheriff of Nottingham, while Morgan Freeman's cultured Moor is a commanding, though unlikely, medieval presence. But it's director Kevin Reynolds who deserves the most praise for disguising such overfamiliar events with imaginative staging, and turning in such an enjoyable popcorn epic. And, yes, this is the film where Bryan Adams sings (Everything I Do) I Do It for You during the final credits. AJ (US 1991, nudity, edited for violence, language)

Pineapple Express ★★★

9.00-11.15pm Universal

COMEDY Director David Gordon Green cranks up the action for this stoner comedy from the production house of Judd Apatow (Knocked Up, Superbad). Seth Rogen plays a process server whose world revolves around smoking marijuana. After his friendly dealer (James Franco) sells him some ultra-high quality “Pineapple Express” reefer, the dope ends up being traced back to them in a gangland murder. Soon the buddies are on the run. Between moments of drug-addled glee, the plot thickens to involve a cast of other misfits. It's well paced and absurd (the final shoot-out doesn't know when to quit), but the characters are hard to warm to. The plot may not hold up to close scrutiny, but that doesn't stop it from being a fun ride. KK (US 2008, violence, swearing, drug abuse)

LATE NIGHT

You Again ★★

11.50pm-1.30am BBC1

COMEDY This virtually mirthless family comedy sees Kristen Bell's ambitious PR executive returning home for her brother's wedding, only to discover he's marrying the cheerleader (Odette Yustman) who ruined her school years, and who appears now to be a reformed character. It's a convoluted set-up that fails to deliver on its promise, combining vindictive characters with regular doses of queasy sentiment. Thankfully, Jamie Lee Curtis (Bell's mom) and Sigourney Weaver (Yustman's aunt) are on hand with a few scores of their own to settle, and their presence makes the movie moderately tolerable as they show the younger set how it's done. TJ (US 2010, HD)

Before I Go to Sleep ★★★★★

12 midnight-1.35am C4

MYSTERY In Brighton Rock director Rowan Joffe's second feature, Nicole Kidman plays the mentally unstable amnesiac who records her memories every day lest she lose further track of her former life. Her hunky husband

(Colin Firth) fiercely protects her, unaware that Dr Nash (Mark Strong) has other ideas. Based on the best-selling thriller by SJ Watson, this home-grown sensation is also a memorable example of fine British film-making. Joffe conjures superb performances from the perfect cast: this is Firth and Kidman at their best. A sexy, chilling and stylish trick of the light, this psychological thriller knows exactly what it's doing. KK (UK 2014, violence, swearing, sexual references, HD)

A Private Function ★★★★★

12.55-2.55am Film4

COMEDY With its gentle, witty portrait of postwar Britain, this comedy has the stamp of Ealing about it. Scripted by Alan Bennett, it is an often hilarious mixture of social comedy and earthy humour, much of the latter being inspired by a pig being fattened for a feast to celebrate the 1947 royal wedding. Michael Palin does a nice line in mortified meekness, but he is upstaged by Maggie Smith, as his scheming wife, and Liz Smith, whose eccentric antics provide some of the highlights. DP (UK 1984, some swearing)

WESTERN In this warm-hearted, sprawling western, widow Maureen O'Hara imports a prize Hereford bull to the Old West for breeding purposes. The pleasure's really in watching the languid by-play between O'Hara, lovable drifter James Stewart and rugged cattle baron Brian Keith, and enjoying a supporting cast that looks like it stepped out of a John Ford movie. Novelty is provided by Juliet Mills, Hayley's sister, and jolly pretty she is, too, in cinematographer William H Clothier's landscapes. Director Andrew V McLaglen brings out the best in his actors, and if it is all a bit jovial, well, that's no bad thing. TS (US 1966, HD)

Bend It like Beckham ★★★

12.55-3.10pm C4

COMEDY DRAMA This feel-good teen-orientated comedy drama from director Gurinder Chadha (Bhaji on the Beach, Bride & Prejudice) has two things going for it, besides its opportunistic title: it's set in the world of female football (hardly a subject that's been done to death at the cinema) and against a background of intransigent first-generation Indian tradition in suburban Britain – giving it the flavour of the superior East Is East. Parminder

Nagra is skilled in both acting and ball-control as the teen who “worships” David Beckham. It's the crushing predictability of the footballing storyline (nail-biting finish resting on a penalty kick, anyone?) and her wooden co-star Keira Knightley that let her down. Clashes between Indian and English culture are played with knowing humour, and Juliet Stevenson is hugely entertaining as a Hounslow mum, but too much of the plot hinges on misunderstandings and, if you're over 17, you may find the romance a little fluffy. AC (Ger/UK 2001, swearing, sexual references, HD)

Ace Ventura: Pet Detective

★★★★★ 5.25-6.50pm C5

COMEDY Doctor Dolittle meets The Crying Game in this smash-hit comedy that made Jim Carrey an overnight sensation. The rubber-faced star plays a bumbling detective hired to find a kidnapped dolphin, and your reaction to this fast and furious farce will depend on whether you find Carrey's style of physical comedy hilarious or annoying. It's directed with anarchic energy by Tom Shadyac (Eddie Murphy's The Nutty Professor), and Carrey's co-stars Courteney Cox (from Friends) and Sean Young (in surely one of her most bizarre screen roles) had the good sense not to reappear in the unfunny sequel When Nature Calls. AJ (US 1993, edited for language)

The Swimmer ★★★★★
9.00-10.50pm Talking Pictures TV PG

DRAMA A cult among connoisseurs, The Swimmer does as advertised: follows a middle-aged man (a fit Burt Lancaster in perma-trunks, in one of his oddest roles) as he attempts to swim home via back-garden pools in well-to-do Connecticut. Adapted from a John Cheever short story by Eleanor Perry, with hubby Frank Perry directing, it starts as a kind of sexy 1960s picaresque marked out by bright Technicolor, slow-motion, swirling music and chaste meetings with women in bikinis. Symbolising, perhaps, the soullessness of moneyed ennui, its trajectory is never predictable. I would actually call this curio unmissable. (US 1968)

ADVENTURE Ghost director Jerry Zucker focuses on another doomed romance in this retelling of the spiciest of Arthurian myths. If Kevin Costner can play Robin Hood with an American accent, then what's to stop Richard Gere giving Lancelot a Philadelphia twang? Gere is suitably dashing as the most independent knight of the Round Table, while Julia Ormond is ravishing as the constantly imperilled Guinevere. Stealing every scene, however, is Sean Connery, who, as a legend in his own lifetime, has no difficulty conveying the regal bearing of the once and future king. DP (US 1995, violence)

SCI-FI The presence of the distinguished Hume Cronyn and Jessica Tandy makes this saccharine retread of Cocoon worth watching. They play residents of a doomed New York block of flats who find the unlikeliest of allies in the shape of a group of alien space creatures. It's made by Steven Spielberg's production company Amblin but, sadly, there is little of his magic touch here (even though it's based on one of his scripts for the Amazing Stories TV series), and director Matthew Robbins lets sentimentality run supreme. But Cronyn and Tandy effortlessly rise above it all, and children and soft-hearted adults will be enchanted. JF (US 1987, edited for language)

FANTASY This bewitchingly oddball fairy tale from director Tim Burton is a masterpiece and one of the best fantasy films ever made. Johnny Depp's sensitive performance as scientist Vincent Price's "Punkenstein" creation is a revelation, with humanoid Edward's inability to touch the things he loves because of his razor-sharp fingers making for potent symbolism of the highest mythic order. The finale packs an unforgettable emotional wallop, assisted by Danny Elfman's gloriously magical score. AJ (US 1990, some violence, HD)

The Island ★★★★★

THRILLER Transformers director Michael Bay is a master of high-octane kicks, but often falters when it comes to story development. So it's not surprising that this sleek action thriller plays like a series of chase sequences dressed up with flimsy sci-fi. Yet Ewan McGregor is engaging as a survivor of an ecological disaster that wiped out most of the planet's inhabitants. Sadly, Scarlett Johansson is reduced to the role of ineffectual love interest and, while the film hits the spot as an adrenaline fix, Bay frustratingly squanders its true potential. SF (US 2005, violence, swearing)

DOCUMENTARY Health and safety violations have never looked so stylish as in this story of the daredevil biker. Evel Knievel's first jump was over snakes and cougars; soon it was the Grand Canyon. Some of the footage of him being smashed around is wince-inducing, so what motivated Knievel to put his life on the line? As a portrait unfolds of a charismatic rebel who never came to terms with his past, his own words sum up his predicament perfectly: "Nobody wants to see me die, but they don't want to miss it if I do." GR (US 2015, col/BW)

CRIME Playing as part of a Nic Cage triple bill with The Trust and 8mm, this is writer/director Paul Schrader's reteaming with Cage following 2014's Dying of the Light. Adapted from ex-con Edward Bunker's 1995 novel, its unfocused crime charade centres on a trio of released prisoners led by Cage, who intend to pull off one last job or die trying. ANDREW COLLINS FILM OF THE DAY

Regarding Henry ★★★
6.40-8.50pm Film4 15

DRAMA Consciously releasing equity from existing franchises (Star Wars, Indiana Jones, Blade Runner), Harrison Ford maintains a certain single-earring cool in his 70s. He got stuck in an action rut in the 1990s but Regarding Henry bucked that trend. A Mike Nichols-directed yuppie nightmare/recovery-of-the-week movie, it sees Ford's Manhattan lawyer injured in a robbery that leaves him in a childlike, amnesiac state. Rather than take revenge as per a more typical Ford, he changes his mercenary ways and discovers there's more to life than work. Annette Bening is solid as his wife but it's Ford's measured performance that keeps you watching. (US 1991, violence, swearing, HD)

DID YOU KNOW?
The script was written by JJ Abrams, who would reunite with Harrison Ford 24 years later as the director of Star Wars: the Force Awakens

Hot Fuzz ★★★★★
9.00-11.25pm ITV2 15

COMEDY The second in the comic series for Simon Pegg, Nick Frost and director Edgar Wright – the team behind Shaun of the Dead – was this pastiche of American action movies. Pegg stars as a top London policeman transferred to a crime-free village where all is not as it seems. What begins as a very funny murder mystery eventually mutates into an ironic action spectacular that blows up half of Gloucestershire (or rather, Wells pretending to be Gloucestershire). More smart than silly, this is self-confident comedy that's proud to be British. JR (UK/US/Fr 2007, violence, swearing, HD)

Snake Eyes ★★★
9.00-11.00pm 5Spice 15

MYSTERY The US Secretary of Defense is assassinated at a boxing championship in an Atlantic City casino. Can detective Nicolas Cage use his own recollections and those of key witnesses to find out whodunnit? Although a visual tour de force by director Brian De Palma (a virtuoso opening sequence, split screens, acrobatic cameras), this jigsaw mystery lacks suspense and disappoints as a thriller, with the expected slam-bang finale never materialising. De Palma fans will love it, but others may think it's rather pointless. AJ (US 1998, violence, swearing)

The Running Man ★★★★★
10.45pm-12.50am Talking Pictures TV

CRIME DRAMA This is one of those cinematic sleights of hand that only exceptional film-makers could hope to pull off. Armed with a clever script by John Mortimer (of Rumpole fame), director Carol Reed turns a run-of-the-mill potboiler into a hugely entertaining three-handed thriller thanks to his ability to conjure up atmosphere, the striking photography of Robert Krasker and the canny performances of his splendid cast. Laurence Harvey is gleefully extravagant as a cocky conman, Alan Bates doggedly decent as the insurance assessor on his trail and Lee Remick beguiling as the "widow" caught between them. DP (UK 1963)

The Place beyond the Pines ★★★★★ 12.50-3.10am C4 15

CRIME DRAMA Ryan Gosling exploits his pin-up status in this often surprising melodrama about the relationships between fathers and sons. He opens the story as a stunt rider who turns to crime in order to raise his son, but then writer/director Derek Cianfrance (Blue Valentine) changes lanes in an unexpected way for a smart, sprawling and beautifully crafted morality tale. DW (US 2012, violence, swearing, drug abuse, HD)

ANDREW COLLINS FILM OF THE DAY

Joy ★★★★★ 9.00-11.25pm Film4 12

COMEDY DRAMA Your appreciation of this biographical comedy drama will rest upon: a) the depth of your devotion to the ubiquitous Jennifer Lawrence, and b) your interest in home-shopping gadgets. Joy is the inspirational story of Joy Mangano, a struggling single mom of two in Suffolk County, New York, who experiences an epiphany while clearing up some broken glass after a wine spillage and, assisted by her dad (Robert De Niro), builds a prototype self-wringing "Miracle Mop" which lights up the phones on shopping channel QVC in 1992. Lawrence's energy convinces us of her natural salespersonship and you'll buy her rise to entrepreneur with over 100 patents (Huggable Hangers, Performance Platforms). Director David O Russell (who co-writes with Bridesmaids' Annie Mumolo) is besotted with Lawrence and so is his camera, but the inevitable fall after her rise is predictable and it doesn't have the heart of their previous outing, Silver Linings Playbook. (US 2015, swearing, HD)

You couldn't make it up, p110

DID YOU KNOW?
Jennifer Lawrence wore wigs for most of the film. In a haircut scene, however, she accidentally snapped off some of her own locks

3.05-5.00pm 5Spike PG

WESTERN This grim yet gripping prairie tale reunited the star and director from 3:10 to Yuma, taciturn Glenn Ford and talented Delmer Daves. It's the story of a young tenderfoot (the excellent Jack Lemmon) and his relationship with tough trail boss Ford. The atmosphere is thoroughly authentic – listen to Ford's description of the intelligence of a cowboy's horse – and the photography is particularly sharp. TS (US 1958)

They Were Sisters ★★★★★
9.00-11.20pm Talking Pictures TV U

DRAMA The marriages of three sisters, whose husbands range from the tolerant to the tyrannical, are the focus of this quintessential Gainsborough film. The sisters are played by actresses who epitomise a bygone era: Phyllis Calvert, Dulcie Gray and Anne Crawford. Today, though, the stand-out character is Geoffrey, a sadist who causes untold misery to Gray's sweet Charlotte: he's played by a young James Mason, giving a performance every bit as vicious as his work in The Man in Grey. TS (UK 1945, BW)

Little Miss Sunshine ★★★★★ 15
11.30pm-1.40am Sony Movie Channel

COMEDY Greg Kinnear leads the dysfunctional Hoover family on an eventful road trip from New Mexico to California in this sparkling indie comedy. He plays an increasingly desperate motivational speaker whose seven-year-old daughter (Abigail Breslin) has been invited to compete in the "The Little Miss Sunshine" beauty pageant. Also along for the ride in a VW van are his wife (Toni Collette), father (Alan Arkin), son (Paul Dano) and brother-in-law (Steve Carell). Every role is brilliantly cast, but it's a toss-up for best performance between Kinnear, Arkin (who won an Oscar as a junkie pensioner) and Carell. SP (US 2006, swearing, drug abuse)

ANDREW COLLINS FILM OF THE DAY

Superbad ★★★★★ 9.00-11.20pm 15
Sony Movie Channel

COMEDY The first feature script by Knocked Up star Seth Rogen and co-writer Evan Goldberg sees two high-school seniors plan a send-off involving booze, dope and virginity-banishing sex, giving deadpan Jonah Hill (adept at stoner-style improv) his break-out role, while Arrested Development star Michael Cera plays his gauche pal and Christopher Mintz-Plasse is the nerd whose fake ID is their pass to adult pleasure. It's puerile wish-fulfilment for teens of all ages, but the clever performances guarantee it wider appeal. (US 2007, swearing, sex scenes, drug abuse)

Before she was famous, p120

DID YOU KNOW?
Seth Rogen and Evan Goldberg began the script when they were just 13 years old: "We just wanted to see if we could write a movie"

A Good Day to Die Hard ★★ 12
9.00-11.00pm E4

THRILLER The rule of diminishing returns bites hard in Bruce Willis's fifth outing as New York cop John McClane. Trouble follows him to Moscow where he teams up with his CIA operative son to thwart Russian mobsters. McClane junior (Jai Courtney) is tasked with protecting an informant who could bring down an underworld kingpin, but believing his son is himself in danger, dad has to break out the fists. Director John Moore lazily stitches together a series of shootouts, car chases and explosions, while Willis seems lost without the verbal sparring partners of the superior earlier instalments. TeS (US 2013, swearing, violence, HD)

Windom's Way ★★★★★ PG
9.00-11.10pm Talking Pictures TV

DRAMA This neglected gem stars a charismatic Peter Finch at the height of his heart-throb powers. He plays Alec Windom, a doctor full of confident dedication, toiling away in a remote Malayan village and helping the locals resist a rebellious takeover. It's a very powerful, tightly directed film with some stunning supporting performances from the likes of Mary Ure and Michael Hordern. What could have been a cliché-ridden outing and a one-man demonstration of star ego emerges as a simply great movie. SH (UK 1957)

Rush Hour 2 ★★★★★ 12
11.15pm-12.50am ITV

ACTION COMEDY Jackie Chan reteams with motormouth Chris Tucker as the chalk-and-cheese cops who, this time, find themselves in Hong Kong battling a murderous Triad gang – but with the added spice that chief villain John Lone was involved in the death of Chan's dad. Chan's trademark stunts and Tucker's slick one-liners guarantee that if you enjoyed the first film, you'll like this one, too. And make sure you stick around for Chan's trademark end-credit out-takes. DA (US 2001, edited for violence, language, HD)

I Give It a Year ★★★★★ 15
12.40-2.20am C4

COMEDY The directorial debut of writer Dan Mazer (Borat), this will-they-won't-they divorce romp has everything you want in a relationship comedy, with Rose Byrne and Rafe Spall starring as hopelessly mismatched newlyweds. The only downside is the occasional lapse into sleaze, but happily that doesn't last long. Watch it, and laugh at the truth about love. KK (UK/Fr/Ger/Lux 2013, swearing, sexual references, sex scenes, nudity, HD)

Final thoughts

From Monday Sky Store, iTunes

DRAMA Dylan Thomas's Do Not Go Gentle into That Good Night fittingly provides the title for this character study, which marks John Hurt's final screen appearance.

Hurt is indeed impeccable to the last as a cranky screenwriter facing his own battle with mortality in the sun-splashed surroundings of his Algarve villa. It should be a time for making peace with his estranged son (Max Brown) and resolving discontents in his marriage (Sofia Helin, star of Nordic noir The Bridge, plays the long-suffering spouse), but Hurt's character isn't a man to compromise. He's plotting his own ending in cahoots with Charles Dance's white-suited visitor.

This screen adaptation of a play creaks a bit, but Hurt is by far the best thing in it, drawing out the humanity of a resistible individual. It's probably not the film for which he will be remembered but, obvious physical frailty notwithstanding, there's no dimming of his powers. Trevor Johnston (UK/Por 2017, HD)

PICK OF THE REST

📺 You Me and Him ★★

From Mon Sky Store/Virgin Movies

COMEDY Lucy Punch and Faye Marsay play a gay couple and David Tennant their neighbour in this sometimes cute, sometimes crass comedy. When Alex (Marsay) learns her partner Olivia (Punch) has started an insemination programme without telling her, she has drunken sex with John (Tennant). Both women then find themselves pregnant. It's an occasionally amusing confection with some powerful moments. DA (UK 2017, HD)

Skate Kitchen ★★★★★

DVD OF THE WEEK

Show Dogs ★★★ PG Released 1 October on DVD and Blu-ray

A gruff NYPD rottweiler and his handler must infiltrate the preening world of a Las Vegas dog show to investigate a panda-smuggling ring in this special effects-assisted combination of goofy comedy and canine cop movie. Unheard by the human cast, the dogs converse among themselves and other members of the animal kingdom.

Detective Will Arnett is adequate enough as straight man to the rottweiler (voiced by Chris "Ludacris" Bridges) who learns to appreciate the show dogs' skill set in the course of the case, helped by a plot that takes the material seriously and a splendid turn by Stanley Tucci as a wily papillon. This is unassuming but effective family fare. TJ RT Offer To order the DVD for £13.99, call 0844 848 7300 (charges apply), quoting ref RT1663. A workshop of dreams

Missed The Repair Shop? Catch up now, says David Butcher

YOU'D BE SURPRISED how often, when I meet someone socially and tell them where I work, their genuinely astonished response is, "Radio Times! Is that still going?"

After grinding my jaw for a few seconds and salvaging a thin smile, I reply that yes, it is – and still thriving after 95 years, thanks for asking...

It's a comment I get mostly in London, to be fair: elsewhere people are more tuned in. I was at a do in the West Country recently and gathered that several fellow guests were not just RT readers but devoted, cover-to-cover, wouldn't-be-without-it readers. And when they'd finished enthusing about the magazine, they started telling me about the TV show they adored more than any other. It was, of course, The Repair Shop on BBC2.

If you haven't discovered The Repair Shop yet, you need to seek it out on iPlayer.

You really should, it's a treat. The whole production radiates care and skill and warmth, like an enchanted hot water bottle of loveliness. It's perfectly formed TV, full of nice people doing nice things, nicely. ("Balm for a frazzled world," as one fan sighed on Twitter.)

I'VE LIKED IT since previewing the very first episode, when I half-expected it to be another slightly contrived daytime-ish show mining a great British natural resource, antiques. What took me by surprise was how the show made a simple premise – people bringing their careworn family treasures to be fixed – into something ridiculously touching.

Like a lot of viewers, I can't help getting dewy-eyed when the "reveal" arrives. Why is there a lump in my throat watching a couple return to a thatched barn in Sussex to collect their old rocking horse, or carriage clock, or piano stool? They see it restored to its former glory and they're visibly moved. And, regular as horologist Steve's clockwork, so are we.

Of course, a central plank of the show is the fact that the value of heirlooms is never

COUNT ON THEM
Repair Shop experts Jay Blades and Steven Fletcher with an old cash register

FIDDLY
Steven Fletcher at work

'Stephen Fry calls it the best programme on British television'

mentioned – or even hinted at. This is not Antiques Roadshow, for heaven's sake; these are not items anyone would sell. It's a show about memories, not money. And the craftspeople give the same care to a magnificent antique sleigh as they would to a broken plate.

Those experts (Will Kirk, the furniture restorer, Kirsten Ramsay, the ceramics whizz and the rest) are stars in their own right, the self-effacing surgeons of stuff, with manual skills learnt over decades. I doubt I'll ever need to make, say, a brass ferrule to put on the handle of a Victorian toy, but I'm glad the series showed me how.

It's easy to see why The Repair Shop strikes a chord with people – a big, sweeping Elgar power-chord (though possibly played on an old accordion whose keys need fixing up). Loss and sadness colour everyone's lives. Having objects that connect to our family history isn't just nostalgia, it's keeping the past warm, doing right by memories.

And the "Workshop of Dreams" is more than an old barn down a dusty track. It's a postcard from a world before digital technology and throwaway consumerism, where people are polite and meticulous and modest. No wonder Stephen Fry recently called it "the best programme on British television". I know a lot of people who would agree.

THE FLOOD GATES ARE OPEN

All summer, drama lovers have been wandering a barren shore, pausing to pick up the odd clam. Now, come the autumn season, we're spoilt for choice. A flood tide of drama has swamped the schedules and left an embarrassment of riches, too much to keep up with. Is there any chance in future years the broadcasters could even things out and scatter their goodies a bit more evenly?

1 THEY'RE BACK! Norsemen

Netflix

It looks and sounds convincingly like Vikings or Game of Thrones, but this English-language Norwegian series is a fine comedy based on one inexhaustibly funny gag: these 9th-century pillagers kvetch, fret and self-analyse like 21st-century sitcom characters. Expect more deftly written, drily performed silliness in series two.
Available from 26 September

5 DIY SOS: Grenfell

iPlayer (BBC1)

Nick Knowles and his team deliver a two-parter with an emotional pull well beyond that of an ordinary DIY SOS episode (although it's always pretty emotional anyway): they're working in the shadow of Grenfell Tower, helping the healing process by building two new community hubs. The importance of the task is powerfully underlined by interviews with survivors of the fire and relatives of those who didn't escape.
Ep1 available until 10pm 5 October

CATCH UP

6 No Activity

iPlayer (BBC2)

BBC2 is burning through this Australian sitcom, which aired there in 2015 and 2016: series two starts this Sunday. So catch up quick with the first run of a rewardingly low-key comedy centred on two cops enduring a stakeout in which virtually nothing ever happens. That leaves them free to ramble and argue, painting a very funny picture of male vanity, childishness and self-delusion.

PROPER DRAMA, ON YOUR PHONE

7 Sorry for Your Loss

Facebook Watch

Facebook's new video service, Watch (find it on the app by tapping the icon made of three horizontal lines) is mostly just existing content from your feed, re-organised, but it has original series too. One of the first is surprisingly excellent: Elizabeth Olsen plays a young widow in a drama that forensically examines what grief does to a spouse and a family from every angle, and does it so sensitively that it becomes a deep, cleansing catharsis.

NEW EPISODES TO STREAM

2 Hannibal

Netflix

The addition of the third series means Netflix has every episode of the prematurely cancelled TV version of the Hannibal Lecter story – it's one of the most imaginative, wickedly clever dramas you'll ever see. Joining the fabulously horrible Mads Mikkelsen in the last run is Gillian Anderson as a psychiatrist who takes a rather keen interest.

3 We Are British Jews

4 Alex

Walter Presents/All 4

There's a palpable sense of bristling threat to this Swedish cop thriller, which you can binge on via Walter Presents once C4's shown the first episode late at night on Wednesday 26 September. Dragomir Mrsic (above) plays a corrupt cop who vows to clean up his act when he's struck by tragedy – but his criminal associates aren't willing to let him go. It's grittily real and often shocking.

SPOOKY DRAMA

8 Somewhere Between Netflix

Not a groundbreaking or award-winning US drama, but one to maybe stick on your watchlist if you like a story full of emotion and twisty surprises. Based on a series made in South Korea (where they like their frantic melodramas and complex sci-fi), it concerns a woman who travels back in time to a week before her daughter was murdered. Can she change history?

Available from 28 September

9 Chef's Table Netflix

A fifth season of the visually opulent series that celebrates food pioneers. This time they're unsung heroes: profiled are Cristina Martinez, who introduced Philadelphia to barbacoa while living as an undocumented immigrant; Albert Adrià, whose contribution to his brother Ferran's restaurant El Bulli is underestimated; Turkish food expert Musa Dagdeviren; and Thai cuisine purist Bo Songvisava.

YOUR NEXT BINGE

New Doctor? There's also a new head writer...

Jodie Whittaker is soon to make a splash as the first female Doctor in Doctor Who – but if you really want to know what to expect, you should (and, thanks to all the modern-era Who episodes being on iPlayer, you can) look at the back catalogue of writer Chris Chibnall, who's been contributing episodes for more than a decade and this year takes over the reins as showrunner.

Chibnall's pledge to keep the series accessible and relatively grounded can be seen in his previous work on Who, especially in episodes like two-part story The Hungry Earth/Cold Blood, which re-introduced classic foes the Silurians while also delving into the competing loyalties of family/friends versus the greater good – classic Who stuff, in other words.

The bones of one of Chibnall's innovations for the new series – a large, diverse team of companions – can be spotted in Dinosaurs on a Spaceship, a fun romp that saw Matt Smith's Doctor team up with an Egyptian Queen, a Victorian game hunter and one of his usual companions' parents in a quest to save some captured creatures.

Even one of Chibnall's less fondly remembered episodes, 2007's 24-inspired thriller 42, combines terrific sci-fi ideas with relatable human problems (Freema Agyeman's Martha struggling to involve her mother in her life) in a way that's always central to Doctor Who and which, rumour suggests, we can expect to see continued with Whittaker's new Time Lord.

Then there's 2012's The Power of Three, which sees Smith's Doctor live with his human friends for a few months. Ostensibly about a "slow invasion" of mysterious cubes, the episode finds pathos in the cooling relationship between the Doctor and his companions, and was one of the best "kitchen-sink" Doctor Who episodes in years.

We'd say the new Doctor is in safe hands. HUW FULLERTON

Whitehall Snr wants it to be a culturally enriching odyssey, but his feckless son has other ideas.

DOCTOR DIGITAL

Has Ultra HD arrived?

Like flying cars and the end of the world, 4K or Ultra HD television has always been just around the corner.

There have been a series of obstacles to overcome.

First, people needed to buy 4K-capable televisions. Then the only way of watching 4K content was to buy Ultra HD Blu-rays (which need a special player) or stream it from a service like Netflix (which needs a beefy internet connection and a streaming box like an Apple TV).

However, UHD straight to your television is slowly getting here. BT started broadcasting sport in 2016, and the other broadcasters have since followed. But now Virgin has a new channel that features normal TV shows and movies.

Launching this week, the literally named Virgin TV Ultra HD (channel 999) still has the feel of a proof of concept: it only broadcasts from 8.15pm and much of the line-up – stacked with nature docs and concert movies – is the kind of thing they use to sell televisions in Currys. But there are also some proper dramas you might want to watch, like Masters of Sex starring Michael Sheen or Start Up with Martin Freeman.

You need to be a Virgin TV Full House or VIP Customer with a top-of-the-line V6 set-top box. But it's a sign that the future might, finally, be here. JONATHAN HOLMES

PICK OF THE DAY Strictly Come Dancing 6.30pm BBC1

ENTERTAINMENT Having survived last week's turn on the dancefloor, the 15 celebrities now face the possibility of being the first to be voted out. The bruised ego from leaving first will be more painful than any blisters or pulled muscles, even though Iwan Thomas (a 2015 alumnus) jokingly said they should simply "go home, don't moan" in the recent Strictly the Best.

Unusually, it's difficult to predict who might be waltzing out the door first. There are a few celebs whose strong fanbase will compensate for any spatula hands and stiff-as-a-board hips; conversely a few who do have rhythm may not go down well with voters because of their attitude, nationality or personality. Those things seem to count as much as good footwork when it comes to avoiding being in the bottom two tomorrow. And one should never overestimate the importance of the professional dancer's popularity. As Anton Du Beke knows very well. But surely Vick Hope, Katie Piper and Ashley Roberts will be with us for a bit longer? JANE RACKHAM See page 9 and 33

Pointless Celebrities

5.40pm BBC1

QUIZ A special edition celebrating yesterday's BBC Music Day, pairing radio hosts Suzy Klein, Clara Amfo, Chris Hawkins and Shaun Keaveny with singers Lesley Garrett, Lianne La Havas, Amy MacDonald and Ella Eyre. What you don't want is to give an answer so embarrassing you end up crouching with your hands over your face. Tragically, that calamity strikes one hard-working pro here. It's painful to see. After that it's a hard-fought scrap between knowledgeable players, but regular viewers will enjoy bridling at a round with two obvious and virtually identical best options, such that the teams might as well toss a coin. A poorly written Pointless question! That's rarer than a 99-point answer. JACK SEALE

Dad's Army

5.55pm BBC2 (not N Ireland; Scotland: 6.55pm)

SITCOM And so to the very last episode, first seen by 12.5 million people on Remembrance Sunday, 1977. It was the favourite episode of actress Pamela Cundell, who played the infamous Mrs Fox. And as director David Croft remembered, "We were very sad. There was hardly a dry eye in the house." It turns out Jack Jones has proposed to Mrs Fox, and has the jitters as he awaits her reply. What follows is relaxed and heartfelt, with a breaking of the fourth wall that may leave you with a lump in your throat. MARK BRAXTON

The RT bookazine, Dad's Army at 50, is available from WH Smith

Casualty

8.35pm BBC1

DRAMA I think we need to prepare for an incoming Important Issue storyline as Duffy looks worried, clutching a prescription after her visit to the doctor and later hiding her medication from Charlie.

There's a Sixth Sense scenario in the emergency department when a woman is brought in after a road accident. She was on her way to hospital with a heavily pregnant neighbour who's about to have her baby, and a passenger that no one else can see. And surely it's time for lain to start being nice to hopeless dork Ruby, who is weepy and miserable yet again in the thinly staffed paramedic department as lain has a go at her just for being in his eyeline. ALISON GRAHAM TV EDITOR

The X Factor

8.35pm ITV

ENTERTAINMENT The X Factor is jumping straight from arena auditions to the Six Chair Challenge this year, with Bootcamp having been given the boot. This is no bad thing, because not only does it streamline the whittling down process of the acts, it also means the axing of the hideous Wall of Songs.

But we haven't escaped gimmick-free. This year, they've introduced "the Golden X", where every judge will have one guaranteed safe seat to give to a singer, securing their place at Judges' Houses and ensuring they won't have to go through the theatrical, musical-chairs rigmarole that ensues. But surely there's a catchier name to be had: "the Golden Stool", perhaps? FRANCES TAYLOR

TV CV GARETH DAVID-LLOYD

He's portraying the rather regal title role of Albert: the Power behind Victoria (8.35pm Channel 5), but the Welsh star's breakthrough, and the part he is still best known for, is fan favourite Ianto Jones in BBC's Torchwood (2006–9).

In an interview earlier this year, the 37-year-old said the Doctor Who spin-off "will always be the turning point in my career and life in general". He also appeared in a couple of episodes of Doctor

Who in 2008 playing the same character.

His other TV credits include Rosemary and Thyme, The Bill, Holby City and Waterloo Road, and when asked what made him want to become an actor, he amusingly cited "at first, a desperate need for attention. Later, a love of telling stories that change the way people think. And a desperate need for attention." He has also said he'd love "a professional crack at Macbeth" on the stage. FRANCES TAYLOR

Albert: the Power Behind Victoria

8.35pm Channel 5

DOCUMENTARY By the time Prince Albert died at the age of 42, he'd become one of the most powerful men in the world. However, until the time of the Queen's first pregnancy, he wasn't involved in any government issues, mainly because the British were suspicious of a foreigner's interference but also because Victoria was reluctant to relinquish control and give him any authority.

This straightforward drama-doc, starring Olivia Hallinan and Gareth David-Lloyd (sporting luxuriant wig and whiskers), takes us through the events that brought about Albert's changing role and helps us to understand his astonishing contribution to modern society. JR

Mystery Road

9.00pm, 9.50pm BBC4

DRAMA Detective Jay Swan (Aaron Pedersen) has a stare that could stop a dingo in its tracks. His brooding intensity gives him the silent dignity of an upstanding sheriff in a 1950s western rather than just another maverick cop with a disastrous personal life. Yet when he snaps, beware anyone in the firing line...

After a slow-burning start, the hunt for two teenagers who've gone missing in the outback in suspicious circumstances flares into life, with multiple suspects and revelations, and sparks flying between Pedersen and Judy Davis as redoubtable police chief Emma James. "Getting giddy up there on your high moral perch?" she mocks Jay over his ethical stance.

CHAT SHOW Parochial as it is these days in its choice of guests, Jonathan Ross's chat show still knows how to have fun. So do the now well-established presenting/judging quartet on The Great British Bake Off, 75 per cent of whom are on the sofa here: Paul Hollywood, Prue Leith and Noel Fielding should bring us the inside line on the current series, perhaps with the odd bit of gossip about this year's cult hero (in my house, anyway), Rahul.

The line-up's completed by rising comedy star and Big Narstie Show co-presenter Mo Gilligan, while music comes from the singer and Voice UK judge, Olly Murs. JS

ALL ABOUT EVE

Life becomes increasingly perilous for agent Polastri (Sandra Oh)

Killing Eve

9.25pm BBC1

DRAMA This black comedy is like the bitterest dark chocolate, and becomes more chilling now that Eve (Sandra Oh) is on the trail of assassin Villanelle (Jodie Comer). They are in Berlin, where Villanelle's latest victim, a Chinese hacker, meets a nasty end while undergoing a procedure at a sex fetish clinic. Yes, nothing is ever straightforward with Villanelle, who chooses the most outré and bleakly imaginative ways of bumping off her victims.

Her pursuers, Eve and her colleague and great friend Bill (David Haig), share some warmly funny moments as Bill lets drop a few incendiary details about his private life before they go to work.

The episode has some terrific characters, including a flirtatious Chinese attaché who takes a shine to Eve, and a delighted, baffled American tour guide who falls into Villanelle's orbit. But the tone changes dramatically as the killer locks on to her next target. AG

The Dude still abides

The Big Lebowski ★★★★★ 1.05am Film4 FREEVIEW

Twenty years after first bowling into cinemas, the Coen brothers' wacky caper is back on the big screen. Though in a sense it never went away. After a so-so initial release, the film became a cult favourite, and since the early 2000s regular midnight movie screenings have been augmented by a string of Lebowski Fests (star of the film Jeff Bridges attended LA's in 2011). The film has even spawned a religion, Dudeism, with a holy day on 6 March, the Day of the Dude. Like, wow, as the man himself might say. STEVE MORRISSEY

About a boy

Wonder ★★★★★ Netflix

A ten-year-old boy with a congenital facial disfigurement confronts the challenge of settling into a new school in this recent addition to Netflix. Young actor Jacob Tremblay (Room) cuts a touching but rarely self-pitying figure behind the prosthetics, and he's ably supported by Julia Roberts and Owen Wilson as his parents. Stephen Chbosky's take on RJ Palacio's novel may tug a little too vigorously at the heartstrings, but there's enough empathy and insight here to forgive its desire to play to the gallery. TREVOR JOHNSTON

Back to the beginning

Insidious: the Last Key ★★★★★ 8.00pm Sky Premiere

The fright franchise reaches a satisfying conclusion as the story comes full circle, in director Adam Robitel's teasingly twisted nightmare. Here we learn about the troubled childhood of ghost whisperer Elise Rainier (a superlative Lin Shaye), as she returns to her New Mexico family home to exorcise a demon. ALAN JONES

Ryder Cup Golf

9.30am Sky Sports Ryder Cup/ Main Event/7.30pm (h'lights) BBC2

SPORT Following the last two days' four balls and foursomes, this deciding day has 12 singles matches, with each featuring one player from each team. Strategy is vital for the captains and their backroom teams. Do you load the top order with your best players in a bid to blow away your rivals early, or hold your nerve and keep back your headliner for what could be a decisive final putt?

Two years ago Patrick Reed and Rory McIlroy played out an instant classic in the opening match, with the American eventually winning the match 1-up and smothering hopes of an unlikely European comeback. Will we see a rematch today? JAMES GILL

FACTUAL Wildlife needs a little help sometimes. Sean Fletcher is at Bodenham Lake, Herefordshire, this week, where a habitat creation project will provide a new home for otters, bitterns, water rail and grass snakes. How many grass snakes do they have so far? If they can find them, they can count them.

Elsewhere in the county, Margherita Taylor has the plum job, or rather the apple job, of sampling a new foodie craze. Verjuice was popular in medieval times and is popular now with the owners of an orchard that was previously struggling: made from unripe apples, it adds a sour note to sauces and dressings. Chefs love it. JACK SEALE

Antiques Roadshow

8.00pm BBC1

FACTUAL When the Roadshow visited Leicester's historic Abbey Pumping Station a few weeks ago, viewers were shocked to watch Fiona Bruce gingerly hold up the decapitated and stuffed head of a dog that allegedly chased down the last man to be hanged in Leicester. "It's not nice," she said with remarkable understatement. Nothing quite so gruesome this time, you'll be pleased to know.

Instead, Leonie Orton, younger sister of controversial playwright Joe, brings in the old manual typewriter he used to write his scripts. And elsewhere, the dapper Amin Jaffer examines what appears to be a collection of old snuff boxes and discovers there's something much more interesting about them. JANE RACKHAM

PICK OF THE DAY The Cry 9.00pm BBC1

DRAMA OF THE WEEK New series Joanna is exhausted and sleep-deprived, driven to distraction by her fractious, crying, three-month-old baby, Noah. While she's at home, battling her fatigue and anxiety, her partner Alistair is at work, where he's a smooth-talking spin doctor for a government minister. The couple face a wave of hostility from other passengers as poor Noah screams endlessly during a torturous flight to Australia, where Alistair (Top of the Lake's Ewen Leslie) plans to fight for custody of his teenage daughter.

An air of foreboding hangs over this enthralling adaptation of Helen FitzGerald's novel and a first episode that roams across a string of different time frames, set both before and after the crime at the heart of the story.

But The Cry's pulse is Joanna (a very effective Jenna Coleman) who finds herself embattled and beleaguered as she faces a world that judges and finds her wanting. ALISON GRAHAM The RT Interview: Jenna Coleman: p28

NEW SPORT DEALS

Eight years after first winning the China Open, Caroline Wozniacki (right) hopes to regain her title at this year's championship, with matches airing on BT Sport 3 (from 5.30am).

There are changes on the horizon for televised sporting events, with several new deals recently being signed by both free-to-air and subscription broadcasters.

Amazon Prime drew criticism for its coverage of the US Open (poor picture quality and awkward camera angles), but it will air 20 live Premier League games a season from 2019. It's the first time an online streaming service has secured live football rights in the UK. As for Formula One, Channel 4 struck a deal with Sky to show highlights from every F1 race next year (see page 160).

C4 will also air Ireland's autumn rugby internationals, taking the rights from Sky. FRANCES TAYLOR

Farther and Sun: a Dyslexic Road Trip

9.00pm BBC4

DOCUMENTARY Film-maker Richard Macer has a bright 11-year-old son with a vivid imagination. But Arthur has dyslexia and struggles at school. As he prepares for his 11+ SATs, Arthur and his dad go on a journey to explore whether dyslexia is a curse or if there are any benefits.

There's a lot to unpick. Do people with dyslexia think more creatively? Picasso, Walt Disney and Einstein were dyslexic. If they do, is that because their brains are wired differently or is it a learnt behaviour?

It's a charming, intimate film freighted with emotion as Richard and his wife fret about Arthur, and Richard wells up remembering his own difficult time at school. DAVID CRAWFORD

Stephen King: Master of Horror

9.00pm Paramount Network

DOCUMENTARY As Stephen King has sold more than 350 million novels (many of which have been made into blockbuster movies), there can't be many people who haven't read or seen one of his horror stories. He was, according to the friends, associates, fans and film critics interviewed here, a prolific writer from his college days. "A writing machine," they say. But it wasn't until Carrie, a book he nearly gave up on, that his publishing career was launched.

Even if you haven't worked it out from his books, it's clear from this documentary profile that Stephen King has an alarmingly dark imagination, that was once fuelled by drugs and alcohol. JR

Feud: Bette and Joan

10.00pm, 10.55pm BBC4

DRAMA What Ever Happened to Baby Jane?, a ludicrous, overwrought 1962 horror movie starring Joan Crawford and Bette Davis, is a camp classic. Here, Ryan Murphy digs behind the melodrama for more melodrama, the epic feud between its two stars (played by Jessica Lange and Susan Sarandon).

In the opening double bill (first shown last December on BBC2) the pair are on the slide, getting on in years, and Hollywood, with customary chivalry, is losing interest. Baby Jane is one last throw of the dice.

Though Feud: Bette and Joan looks fabulous, with its sumptuous production design, and the leads give their all, it's nowhere near waspish enough. AG

Vanity Fair

9.00pm ITV

DRAMA "Striving for what is not worth having" leads our anti-heroine Becky (Olivia Cooke) this week into moral squalor, as she executes a plan to tease cash out of the randy, vulpine Lord Steyne (Anthony Head). Not just money, but social status, too, although what use are parties with the King if there are no loved ones left to share the glow? This dramatisation is good at juggling the fizzy thrill of playing the society game with the bitter consequences of losing it.

The fate Becky wants to avoid befalls Amelia (Claudia Jessie), whose home life moves from a domestic sitcom vibe to something sadder: in the earlier sequences, Claire Skinner's self-martyring mum is, in a cast full of great comic actresses doing a lot with not many scenes, a stand-out.

Exposing the Church

Spotlight ★★★★★ BBC iPlayer FREE TO VIEW

In 2001, The Boston Globe ran a story about a priest accused of child abuse. After more digging, the paper's Spotlight team unearthed a number of similar stories. Their investigation is brought vividly to life in a serious-minded drama that sticks mindfully to the facts and is reminiscent of All the President's Men. Rightfully winning Oscars for best picture and screenplay (with Mark Ruffalo and Rachel McAdams nominated for their performances), Spotlight is available to stream until Monday 8 October. STEPHEN CARTY

Anyone for tennis?

Battle of the Sexes ★★★ 8.00pm Sky Premiere

With the tagline "He made a bet. She made history," the story of tennis's gender issues are entertainingly outlined in this colourful take on the historic match between women's tennis great Billie Jean King (Emma Stone, see also p120) and ex-men's champion Bobby Riggs (Steve Carell). Little Miss Sunshine directors Jonathan Dayton and Valerie Faris keep the tone perky and light, even when exploring Riggs's unhappy marriage and King's extramarital affair with a hairdresser (Andrea Riseborough). KAREN KRIZANOVICH

Fiennes does funny

The Grand Budapest Hotel ★★★★★ Netflix

Wes Anderson's weird, wonderful and star-studded comedy drama arrives on Netflix today. Ralph Fiennes plays the concierge at a five-star establishment who becomes the prime suspect when a wealthy matriarch (Tilda Swinton) is murdered, in a colourful yarn that becomes increasingly wild.

RUBBISH LEGACY
Liz Bonnin investigates the plague of plastic detritus littering our oceans

PICK OF THE DAY Drowning in Plastic 8.30pm BBC1

DOCUMENTARY OF THE WEEK Liz Bonnin explores the huge problem of plastic waste choking the world's rivers and oceans in a one-off special that is almost too distressing to watch. In the opening scenes, she joins rescue teams in the Tasman Sea between Australia and New Zealand as they help seabirds whose parents have unwittingly fed them plastic: the record is 260 pieces (often bits of bottle tops) in the stomach of a single shearwater chick. Bonnin also witnesses a mile-long raft of plastic waste on an Indonesian river and sees whales in New England caught in fishing gear.

There are more positive stories, too – including fascinating attempts to clean up our oceans using a sort of giant Pac-Man. But then she hits us with another dizzying statistic, such as the fact that every minute around the world we buy a million plastic bottles and two million plastic bags. In the end, the picture is overwhelming, almost despair-inducing, but as Bonnin says, almost weeping, "This is real. This is what's going on." DAVID BUTCHER

Who Do You Think You Are?

2.45pm BBC2

DAYTIME CHOICE Jerry Hall reckons "the pioneering spirit is in my genes". But although she knows that her family started out in Oldham, Lancashire, before emigrating to Texas, and that her great-grandmother had the exotic name of Parthenia, she knows little else.

Tracing the movements of her pioneer ancestors in this edition from 2015, she learns they were farmers, often fighting native Americans to hang on to their newly acquired land. The trip brings out the Texan in her. The drawl gets more pronounced and the outfits change from raincoat and flat shoes in drizzly Oldham to Stetson and cowboy shirt in Kentucky. JANE RACKHAM

Decoding the Weather Machine

7.50pm PBS America

DOCUMENTARY It's a shame that this wide-ranging film on climate change is scheduled against a BBC1 programme about a different, daunting environmental issue. Inevitably, fewer viewers will see this US-made production, but as a useful overview full of back-to-basics science, it's worth seeking out.

The first section sets out the case for climate change caused by human activity: "We're poking at the climate system with a long, sharp, carbon-tipped spear," says one scientist. The second part looks in detail at that system; the third explores possible solutions. "It's a planetary crisis," says one contributor, "but we're clever enough to think our way out." DB

Monkman and Seagull's Genius Guide to Britain

8.00pm BBC2

DOCUMENTARY Eric and Bobby continue their tour of the invention-themed attractions of Northern Ireland. After learning about the birth of the fighter-plane ejector seat and looking at a 19th-century telescope in Armagh that helped to map the cosmos, the egghead pals visit an Enniskillen barber shop that's also a railway museum. And they take a trip on the Nomadic, the smaller craft that ferried excited passengers to the waiting Titanic.

It's all jolly, but M&S are a diffident pair. You know how presenters build a slightly cheesy rapport with the experts who explain things? Cheesy chat is, it turns out, better than awkward pauses. JACK SEALE

Black Earth Rising

9.00pm BBC2

DRAMA Tonight, we begin with what feels like an ending. That French general comes clean over the conspiracy to frame Alice Munezero. Suddenly that whole storyline is tidied away – where to next?

The answer brings in more rafts of exposition and quirky dialogue. But for actual meaty drama we have to wait for a new character, a sneering creep played by... Hugo Blick. Yes, not content with writing, producing and directing the series, Blick has nabbed one of the best roles, too, as a war criminal's lawyer, swapping legal trash-talk with Michael (John Goodman).

It puts the latter in a quandary: "My moral compass is spinning so fast Chuck Yeager would bail out." DB

Soaps love a happy/sad counterpoint. You know the type of thing: there's a birthday in the pub, but a murder is being committed next door. Someone passes their driving test, but a beloved pet ends up under the wheels of a car. Well, Emmerdale (7pm ITV) is now doing the mother of all merry/tragic contrasts. We end the week with Robert and Aaron's big wedding (see Friday for more of that), but we start in the hospital delivery room, where Aaron's mum Chas has to say goodbye to the baby girl she's just given birth to. As partner Paddy starts to imagine a trip away with their daughter, viewers can expect Emmerdale to depict his and Chas's grief using unusual (and heartbreaking) means.

Meanwhile, it's the first day of the Minor Surgery Unit on Doctors (1.45pm BBC1) and Heston is very excited. Well, wouldn't you be? An ingrowing toenail, a ganglion cyst, a lesion! Sign me up. Where do I go to take that Hippocratic Oath? DAVID BROWN

Strangers

9.00pm ITV

DRAMA Hapless Jonah (John Simm) has bad dreams about his murdered wife, who sends him creepy messages in his sleep along the lines of "He got me and now he'll get you". But Jonah won't heed any warnings and keeps running headlong into trouble in Hong Kong. Maybe he's found an ally in that enigmatic PR chief Rachel (Raquel Cassidy). And maybe she isn't all she seems.

Everything is thrown into the mix in this messy thriller including, inevitably, triad gangs. There's also something about illegal fishing, bribery and corruption. But worst of all is a journalist who messily eats cereal as he talks to a contact on his mobile phone. Unforgivable.

ALISON GRAHAM

Joel & Nish vs the World

9.00pm Comedy Central

COMEDY This travelogue always finds a good balance between curiosity and hilarity, mainly because Joel Dommett and Nish Kumar never disrespect the unusual people they've travelled thousands of miles to meet. Quite the reverse: they're in awe, making jokes at their own expense.

This week they're on Sado Island, Japan, to train with the Kodo – an elite group of drummers, playing the physically demanding taiko. The boys try sitting on a hard floor, hitting the 4ft drum between their legs for as long as possible while staying upright by using their abdominal muscles. Nish, a shambling slob of a man, is soon in agony ("My whole body caught on fire"); Joel, a sculpted workout addict, is soon in agony. JS

QI

10.00pm BBC2 (N Ireland: 11.15pm)

QUIZ Former shadow Chancellor Ed Balls continues in his mission to Hoover up BBC light-entertainment formats as the latest new guest on QI, where he kicks things off with a remarkable pig impression that he definitely should have shoehorned into a Strictly routine somehow.

And of course, as he and fellow panellists Johnny Vegas, Sara Pascoe and Alan Davies grapple with themed questions about "parts" (of the human variety), he endures some good-natured ribbing about his own name – even when it comes to the noise his buzzer makes.

He's as good value as ever, especially when he explains how a paunch actually helped him with ballroom dancing... HUW FULLERTON

Richard Ayoade and Morgana Robinson explore designer shopping in Milan

Travel Man: 48 Hours in Milan

8.30pm C4

TRAVEL Morgana Robinson joins Richard Ayoade to explore that "hotbed of finance, fashion, football and foodstuff". Yes, it's a Milanese mini-break where the pair manage to squeeze in a few of Italy's cultural experiences amid Ayoade's avalanche of stats.

Of course, they take an irreverent look at that "famous, flaky fresco" of Leonardo da Vinci's, which leads them to consider what they'd like to eat for their last supper. And they visit what's apparently the third largest cathedral in the world.

However, Robinson's highlights include the smallest cocktail bar in the world (where you must tell a story before the mixologist serves you a personalised alcoholic concoction) and a pasta-making class (where Ayoade suggests the chef could make a killing if she could do alphabetti spaghetti).

So you like the comestibles, Ayoade asks a confused Robinson. "The quaffing and the troughing," he explains. The man's a poet as well as a statistician. JR

DOCUMENTARY OF THE WEEK

8.30 Drowning in Plastic
RT Plastic waste is devastating the Earth's oceans, but can the tide be turned back before it's too late? Liz Bonnin travels to a remote island off the coast of Australia where newly hatched flesh-footed shearwater chicks, unable to regurgitate effectively, are filling up on deadly plastic. She also visits the Coral Triangle that stretches from Papua New Guinea to the Solomon Islands to find out more from scientists trying to work out why the material is so lethal to the reefs, a fragile ecosystem that contain 25 per cent of all marine life. As the world wakes up to this crisis, Liz looks at possible solutions such as a monumental 600-metre construction that will travel across the ocean's "garbage patches" collecting millions of pieces of plastic, and an alternative kind of packaging made from seaweed. See page 72.

One of Burt Lancaster's oddest outings, existential suburban allegory The Swimmer (review, p42) also marked the feature debut for composer Marvin Hamlisch. It's said producer Sam Spiegel heard him playing at a party, where he offered the 24-year-old his big break. Hamlisch went on to score The Way We Were, The Sting, Sophie's Choice and The Spy Who Loved Me, and he is one of only 15 recipients of an Emmy, Grammy, Oscar and Tony. He died in 2012, aged 68, after five decades of composing and conducting. ANDREW COLLINS

Dusty and Me ★★★★★ Sky Store/Virgin Movies

A misfit teenager bonds with a dog in this serio-comic coming-of-age tale set in Yorkshire in the 1970s. Having been away at boarding school on a scholarship, geeky Luke Newberry almost feels like a stranger when he returns home to his working-class family. Things look up, however, when he befriends a greyhound and wins the attention of the cute girl from the chippie. This modestly budgeted British charmer may not offer too many surprises, but the cast is endearing and it ultimately wins you over. TREVOR JOHNSTON

ICING ON THE CAKE
Prue and Paul are pursuers of perfection in the Tent of Dreams

PICK OF THE DAY The Great British Bake Off 8.00pm C4

FOOD "Pastry: you turn your back on it and it will eat you alive," says one of the remaining seven bakers. A worrying image, that. But even though they all keep their attention firmly on their samosas (this week's signature challenge), someone's fried triangles give the judges' jaws a bit too much of a workout.

Despite a technical challenge that's met with blank looks and rolled eyes, Paul Hollywood doles out several congratulatory handshakes this week, while Prue Leith gives one contestant a "well done" hug. Is this the new thing for the bakers to aspire to?

Those viewers who have already decided they know who will be in the final should perhaps stop feeling smug. The competition is still wide open, with one former star baker having a terrible first day: "I'm embarrassed. It looks like I can't bake!" Will that person's showstopper creation of a majestic pie fit for a banquet be enough to keep them in the running? JANE RACKHAM

This Morning: 30 Unforgettable Years

7.30pm ITV

ENTERTAINMENT What do Corrie's Kym Marsh, gardening genius Monty Don, chef John Torode and the late Caroline Aherne have in common? They can all attribute at least a little of their success to ITV's This Morning. Here we're taken back to Liverpool's Albert Dock, where Richard Madeley and Judy Finnigan helmed the first edition on Monday 3 October 1988.

From there we embark on a thoroughly entertaining journey through the show's archives, with plenty of familiar faces revealing what really happened behind the scenes. From Mr Bean's kitchen mishap to Madeley's Ali G moment, expect plenty of priceless blasts from the past. SARAH DORAN

Saving Lives at Sea

8.00pm BBC2

DOCUMENTARY We're reminded again tonight of the hugely impressive way that RNLI volunteers give up their free time to be on call. I know this is well-trodden ground, but it's still extraordinary when you meet, say, Adam, a young doctor who works 60-hour weeks at a hospital in Truro, then returns to London to do shifts as a volunteer on the Thames lifeboats.

Adam has to help rescue a man who is in the water clinging to a wooden post as the current swirls around him. But the most dramatic challenge tonight is in Cardigan Bay, where a runaway motorboat is out of control, spinning in circles near a beach. How on earth do you stop it? DAVID BUTCHER

Wanderlust

9.00pm BBC1

DRAMA Ha! So you thought this was a lively, occasionally sexy drama about middle-class adultery in Manchester? Not so fast. This week, for the penultimate episode, writer Nick Payne takes us on a detour, and a great big, indulgent detour at that.

After the fireworks last week, as Joy and Alan's experiment in infidelity reached a crisis, we take a step back from the story and go on a trip into Joy's psyche, via a session with her therapist.

At first you assume that this talky, meandering two-hander will be just the opening scene: no, it's the whole bleeding episode. For a cultish HBO or Netflix drama, that would be a brave move; for a 9pm BBC1 show, it's nuts. DB

Queen of the World

9.00pm ITV

DOCUMENTARY Students of the Netflix drama The Crown, and the liberties it may or may not take with the early years of the Queen's reign: prick up your ears. The Queen herself reminisces here about those early ventures around the Commonwealth, in the second half of a documentary that looks both back and forwards.

The future of the British monarchy's relationship with the rest of the world lies, of course, in the Queen's children and grandchildren. They are all on duty at Buckingham Palace as it prepares to host 53 world leaders at an event where only world-class hospitality will do. Before that, the Prince of Wales embarks on his own tour of India, with somewhat unpredictable results. JACK SEALE

On EastEnders (7.30pm BBC1), Linda leaves jailbird Mick (right) to rot in prison because she suddenly now believes that he's guilty of trying to shoot Stuart. After always being loyal to her husband, I'm looking forward to seeing how she sells this to the rest of the Carters: "Look, you're just gonna have to accept that he's out of my life. And if he thinks I'm going up west to see him in Nativity! the Musical and that Harold Pinter thing while he's off screen, then he's got another thing coming!"

TODAY IN SOAPLAND

Hannah Daniel (seen in both Keeping Faith and Hinterland) arrives on Holby City (8pm BBC1; Scotland: 10.45pm) as new F1 Leah Faulkner. She quickly proves herself to be a welcome addition – particularly for Serena. I shall say no more. Elsewhere, we have Sacha doing a bowel transplant in the memory of a fallen colleague. I can't reveal who has died, in case you haven't seen last week's episode. But I'm sure you'll agree that this is the kind of epitaph we're all hoping for, right? DAVID BROWN

First Dates Hotel

9.15pm C4

REALITY The pain and sadness lurking behind the plastered-on smiles of some daters can be heartbreaking.

Sharon, 43, and "King of the Forecourt" Kenny, 47, roar with laughter throughout their meal but when they confide in each other how their previous relationships ended (so harrowing that Kenny can barely get the words out), you'll be as overwhelmed as them.

Ash and Rachel are much too young to have a history of trauma or turbulent romance. They are the cutest couple – shy, giggly and sweet. Meanwhile, trendy Shane is the owner of a sweet soul (and some impressive facial hair) according to fellow beardie Roberto. But behind the beard lurks more emotion and distress. JR

Ben Fogle: New Lives in the Wild

9.15pm Channel 5

DOCUMENTARY The only feature more special than the scenery in this inspiring episode is the family Ben meets. New Zealand neo-nomads Andy and Amber live with their kids on a cool, retro school bus. It's not your typical hippy wagon, though. It's quite... middle class. The couple spent £20,000 on renovating it after quitting their stressful office jobs.

It all looks idyllic, tootling around Hobbiton from Lord of the Rings, stopping off for a quick surf and a barbie. But it must also be hard work. And, as is usually the case, this drastic change of lifestyle was born out of (near) tragedy. "Once you figure out time is so valuable, nothing else matters," says Andy. GARY ROSE

Later Live... with Jools Holland

10.00pm BBC2

MUSIC I wonder if Muse will be chewing the fat about theoretical physics between tunes tonight. That'd be nice. The band's previous album titles have referenced black holes, thermodynamics and symmetry. Their new one, Simulation Theory, continues the thematic trend, while its cover boasts retro-futuristic nods to Blade Runner and Tron.

And while Muse like to inhabit the future, young Leicester band Easy Life are the sound of the present. Their eclectic combo of urban beats and wonky indie pop has garnered them praise from the likes of NME. Also, will Jon Cleary join Jools for a duet of boogie-woogie ivory tinkling? It'd seem foolish not to. GR

Following on from Hull's Headscarf Heroes – also leaving iPlayer tonight – is Maxine Peake's film about a woman who campaigned for workers' safety after 58 lives were lost in trawler disasters in 1968. Archive footage, scenes from Peake's play about Bilocca (starring Helen Carter) and interviews with locals form a sharp picture of a community heroine.

MELTDOWN
October 2008, the month of the global financial crisis

The Bank That Almost Broke Britain

9.00pm BBC2

DOCUMENTARY We've seen documentaries before that explore and explain the financial crash, but this is one of the best. It takes us back to October 2008 and the day that Royal Bank of Scotland ran out of cash and the Government had a very hairy 24 hours in which to stop that wrecking the economy. A BBC correspondent at the time, Robert Peston recalls it vividly: "It could have been one of those moments when you turn the lights off, get under the duvet, buy a shotgun and some baked beans."

As well as charting the course of a fateful day at the Treasury ("It was terrifying... disaster-movie-type stuff," says one adviser), Leo Burley's film explores how Fred Goodwin's "catastrophically hubristic" leadership made RBS (briefly) the biggest bank in the world. It's all elegantly laid out, crystal clear and as absorbing as a thriller. DB

Hollywood feuders Joan Crawford and Bette Davis have got nothing on the stars of this 1991 comedy (review, p42). Richard Dreyfuss described its filming as a "terribly unpleasant experience", referring to co-star Bill Murray as "a despicable pig" and "an Irish drunken bully". Playing an insufferable patient to Dreyfuss's psychoanalyst, Murray set out to do all sorts of annoying things on set. And it worked. Even 20 years later, Dreyfuss said, "I don't like him... but he makes me laugh even now." ANDREW COLLINS

Queen of Katwe ★★★★★ Netflix

Added to Netflix late last month, this brilliantly uplifting tale is like a feel-good Disney classic set in a gritty Uganda slum. It's based on the true story of Phiona Mutesi (played by Madina Nalwanga), a girl living in poverty who discovers she has an aptitude for chess. Anchored by terrific performances from David Oyelowo and Lupita Nyong'o, the film offers a more nuanced depiction of Africa than we normally see on screen, though it still includes some heart-stopping moments of tragedy and tension. HUW FULLERTON

This Oscar-nominated film documents events from the closing stages of the Vietnam War, when American soldiers tried to evacuate Vietnamese citizens fleeing the advancing Communist forces. With testimony given by everyone from Henry Kissinger to a local Saigon student, this has a moving story to tell. JAMES LUXFORD

The pick of today's TV

Television Wednesday

PICK OF THE DAY The Apprentice 9.00pm BBC1

REALITY New series Yes, it's that time again. Lord Sugar is back to audition a fresh intake of shouty plonkers so that he can invest in one – or, as happened last year, two – of them. In the 2017 final, you may recall, Sugar decided he simply couldn't pick between Sarah Lynn and James White, so he invested £250,000 in each. I bet you're struggling to recall either of them, or what their business plans were (an online sweet shop and an IT recruitment firm, respectively), but rest assured that over the next 12 weeks, the business folk arrayed above with all their quirks and character flaws will become gratingly familiar and in some cases, as they're tested to breaking point, curiously likeable. Series 14 starts with a surprise: the first challenge is a trip to Malta where the go-getters have to go get. It's the buying task, so they must source oddments like sea salt and a model boat as cheaply as possible. Look out for one candidate shouting at bemused Maltese market traders, "A boat! A boat! A filigree BOOAT!" DAVID BUTCHER

Bad Move

8.00pm ITV

SITCOM Jack Dee's not-very-affectionate caricature of rural life has the "sit" part of sitcom nailed. Once again, Steve and Nicky find themselves in a brilliantly awful bind of their own making.

The village is up in arms over the possibility that a drilling firm might be allowed to start fracking nearby; our transplanted townies are right behind the protesters until they read the small print. It could be just the get-out-of-jail-free card they crave.

All of which unfolds enjoyably enough, but the "com" part of "sitcom" is let down by a definite lack of jokes. The cast are so good, it barely matters: Miles Jupp as virtue-signalling neighbour Matt rings horribly true. DB

The Supervet

8.00pm C4

DOCUMENTARY Helen is trying to be brave, but she suspects that even Noel can't fix her pet's problems. After rats attacked him, Hermes has only one complete leg left. It's a massive surgical challenge to give him three prosthetic limbs because... Hermes is a tortoise. However, all life matters to a vet, so as far as Noel is concerned, a tortoise deserves a chance just as much as a dog or cat does. "It requires a gigantic leap of faith and there's a very high chance of failure," he tells Helen.

Noel's other patient is Dave, a rottweiler that needs hip surgery. Dave's owner has six kids and runs marathons. "Boy, do I feel inadequate!" says Noel.

Upstart Crow

8.30pm BBC2

SITCOM Anyone who knows anything about Ben Elton's sitcom writing will appreciate that it can turn sombre and serious on a sixpence. And anyone who knows anything about William Shakespeare will know that he saw a lot of darkness during his lifetime.

The plot details are being kept a secret – but suffice to say it's all brilliantly done, with shades of the moving climax to Blackadder Goes Forth. And fear not, for there is still a lot to laugh about along the way, with many of the usual familiar jokes (and heavy use of the comedy suffix "-ington") peppering a plot that revolves around Will's (David Mitchell) hopes at a theatre awards ceremony. BEN DOWELL

Trust

9.00pm BBC2

DRAMA The problem with having someone as great as Donald Sutherland in the cast is you can't take your eyes off him, and you don't want to. His performance as cruel, stingy billionaire John Paul Getty steals this drama from under everyone else, whether he's setting the dogs on his own gardener ("He certainly runs like a queer," Getty muses) or suspecting that Penelope (Anna Chancellor) is cheating on him – "We do not entertain you as we did?" he enquires, slyly.

But the fascinating madness of life at Sutton Place takes a back seat to life among the kidnapers in the hills of Calabria. Getty still believes the kidnap of his grandson was a hoax. How do they convince him? DB

Joanna Lumley's Silk Road Adventure

9.00pm ITV

TRAVEL The final leg of Lumley's 7,000-mile journey seems to involve places with almost unpronounceable names. She starts off trekking through Uzbekistan's Kyzylkum desert, then learns about Khiva's distinctive chugirma hats before riding on one of the most splendid metro systems imaginable in the country's capital, Tashkent. But while the vast turquoise domes of the Registan, Shakhi-Zinda and Bibi Khanum and the Kyrgyz tradition of eagle hunting leave her awestruck, it's the Sogdians who impress her most. "They're my new heroes," she decides, because they were the "enablers" of the Silk Road. As always with Lumley's travelogues, it's been a charming experience. JR

Taskmaster

9.00pm Dave

ENTERTAINMENT Taskmaster is, of course, a great improvement on panel shows, but this doesn't mean it can't share some of that old format's strengths: routinely, the studio segments where the five comedians riff off the video clips and each other are the funniest bits. So it is tonight, as James Acaster repeatedly scores bullseyes with rapidly calculated callbacks (in other words, references to things said earlier). They go down well with his fellow pros, and will do with comedy connoisseurs at home.

The improvised wit compensates for a clutch of relatively dull tasks, although one of them – you've got 20 minutes to cheer up this retired traffic warden, in that caravan – is a peach.

JACK SEALE

TODAY IN SOAPLAND

Sinead (above) on Coronation Street (7.30pm, 8.30pm ITV) is one of those characters who's had so much misery heaped on her that it's a wonder she hasn't thought to herself, "Do you know what? In the light of me almost losing the use of my legs in a minibus crash, being dumped at the altar by Chesney and getting forced into having an abortion by Ken, I think I might try my luck living elsewhere. I hear Didsbury's nice." Recently, of course, she's found out that she's expecting Daniel's baby, but there's no way the scriptwriters are going to let the two of them go off to book NCT classes. Enter a doctor with news of a possibly cancerous lump that could necessitate Sinead having to terminate her pregnancy.

Over on Emmerdale (7pm ITV) Joe is at loggerheads with Graham. But instead of taking time to reflect, he orders Graham's death! Seems a bit extreme. What would he do if he was served a dodgy pint in the Woolpack? Firebomb the pub? DAVID BROWN

11.00pm C4

DRAMA Our titular hero is very jumpy this week – and with good reason. Having accidentally killed his partner and best friend, he now finds that criminal mastermind BG is promising to murder him and his family unless he identifies a mole within the police. With fellow cop (and old flame) Frida also on our antihero's tail, his options are shrinking in a Scandi import awash with mood, menace and a fabulously dark visual palette.

You may feel we've seen some of the tropes and set pieces before, and it's stomach-churningly violent at times, but Dragomir Mrsic's growly charisma and a pacy and bold script will keep you rooting for the main man till the bitter end. BD

iPlayer (expires today)
A celebrity-confessional documentary that could change lives. Adrian Chiles's alcohol consumption might be well beyond yours, but the point about being dependent on booze to the point of risking one's long-term health but without fulfilling the stereotype of a shambling alcoholic is extremely valuable. Chiles goes further, bringing in issues around how alcohol consumption interacts with mental health problems.

8.00 DIY SOS: the Big Build

Nick Knowles, Laurence Llewelyn-Bowen and volunteers are in Avening, in the Cotswolds, to help Ben whose life was changed by an accident on holiday in Cyprus in 2016, in which he broke his neck in three places. After months of treatment abroad, he was flown back to Britain, where the Salisbury spinal unit helped him progress. But Ben's home needs to be adapted, with a two-storey extension including a lift. The community-spirited people of Avening have already helped break ground on the project so the team is joining in to finish the build, which will include a three-metre bespoke bridge and landscaping, and that will help Ben be reunited with his family. Happy birthday, Clive!

To mark the 54th birthday of suave, Coventry-born Clive Owen, Sky Thriller has five of his movies showing back-to-back. In The Bourne Identity, he plays a hitman assigned to bump off Matt Damon; Children of Men (pictured) casts him as a post-pandemic activist; in Spike Lee's Inside Man, he masterminds a heist; The International sees him play an Interpol agent; and in the Sky-financed Anon he's a cop in a post-privacy future. Though action-packed, this birthday blowout allows Owen's roguish charm to shine through, as it did in ITV's Chancer back in the early 1990s. ANDREW COLLINS

Operation Finale ★★★ Netflix

Oscar Isaac stars here as a Mossad agent who heads to Argentina to capture former Nazi Adolf Eichmann (Ben Kingsley), one of the architects of the Final Solution. The gravity of the story is lost as the plot descends into a straightforward heist movie, but the scenes where Isaac and Kingsley are given space to debate Eichmann's crimes give the film some intrigue. Isaac simmers as a man driven by personal revenge, whereas Kingsley is staggeringly good as a man justifying the unthinkable. JAMES LUXFORD

Man on the run

The 39 Steps ★★★★★ BBC iPlayer

Robert Donat is dragged into a conspiracy after an outing to a London music hall in this Alfred Hitchcock classic, which is available on iPlayer till Saturday. The chemistry between Donat and Madeleine Carroll is a rare treat – particularly when they are forced to share a room (shocking stuff in 1935). AC

CHILL PILLS
Dr Michael Mosley wants to find out if placebos can help to relieve pain

PICK OF THE DAY The Placebo Experiment: Can My Brain Cure My Body? 9.00pm BBC2

HEALTH We're a nation of pill-poppers, swallowing five billion over-the-counter painkillers every year. But scientific experiments have shown that chronic pain can be treated with the power of the mind. So Michael Mosley "tricks" a group of volunteers who have been suffering with back pain for years into taking a strong "analgesic" placebo rather than their prescription drugs – and gets some impressive results.

The trial must be set up carefully if it is to work: the right colour and packaging of the pills as well as consultation time spent with a GP help to ensure that the patient believes the medication will work. And Mosley takes us through other studies where a placebo has had a remarkable effect.

Mosley admits that in the excitement, it's easy to forget that these are real people who have endured real pain: Jim, for instance, who is on morphine for his cancer. But if a placebo can give someone like Jim both pain relief and a new zest for life, it's got to be good. JANE RACKHAM

Eat Well for Less?

8.00pm BBC1

FOOD Poppy and Emma reckon that being parents to boisterous three-year-old twins means they're too busy (and tired) to eat healthily. Judging by the contents of their kitchen cupboards, they do seem to live on biscuits, crisps and cured meats.

Most nights after putting the twins to bed, Emma says, "We go, 'Er, shall we just have..?'" and the pair end up eating a plate of nachos rather than a proper meal. Although Gregg Wallace and Chris Bavin can't do their usual trick of jumping out at the checkout, because the couple prefer online shopping, they manage to surprise them in other ways – even getting the twins to eat up their vegetables. JR

Canada: a Year in the Wild

8.00pm Channel 5

NATURE New series A serene look at the colourful, semi-frozen giant at the top of North America begins in the autumn, when Canadian animals need to get stuff done before the ice comes. A black bear hopes to catch a caribou, rather than having to settle for blueberries to fill his belly before hibernation; an arctic fox finds some land crawling with tasty voles, but then has to cede it to a more powerful red fox.

Meanwhile, for mountain sheep – fitted by conservationists with tags that look like statement earrings – it's mating season, which means fighting season for the rams. It's all crisply filmed and efficiently presented. JACK SEALE

DRAMA Mike Bartlett's drama can be sparky and sharp one minute (usually when Ben Chaplin as tabloid editor Duncan is on screen) and dreary the next. Overall, it's a good watch but the idea of dividing the story between two papers based on the same London square has given it a split personality.

Tonight's edition is very much a game of two halves, but – loud klaxon alert – don't read on if you haven't seen last week's developments yet: there was a plot twist that promised to kick the drama up a gear. It fulfils that promise, with crackling scenes between Holly and Duncan as she gets a taste of his macho management style. DAVID BUTCHER

Manson: the Lost Tapes

9.00pm ITV

DOCUMENTARY Fear. It's a word that crops up a lot in this chilling two-part doc made from original footage and rarely seen interviews with Charles Manson's notorious Family. Manson taught that fear, love and awareness were the same thing. But Bobby Beausoleil – who is still in prison for the murder of Gary Hinman – says, "When fear sets in, things get out of control, as they certainly did with Charlie and me."

The concluding edition explores how a bunch of peaceful hippies embarked on killing sprees (clearly mind-bending drugs played a part) and why they were prepared to kill again, if it meant that Manson would be released once his trial started in June 1970. JR

The wardrobe budget must have been slashed on EastEnders (7.30pm BBC1) because I can't for the life of me think of another reason why the six-packed Keanu Taylor (Danny Walters, right) is wandering around shirtless all the time, despite it now being autumn. Can you imagine those conversations with the director? "Danny! Loving your work. Really feeling Keanu's angst. But I think viewers will be more involved if you get your pecs out again." This evening, we have some added jeopardy for the sartorially challenged mechanic when his lover Sharon discovers that there's been a car accident at the very location where he's having a job interview. Is he lying unconscious, a kindly passer-by having whipped his top off so it can be used to staunch the blood flow?

Back on the Square itself, Tiffany is impressed when Jagger takes her to Walford East and, after the meal, presents her with a necklace. What a charmer. If only we could all have moves like Jagger. DAVID BROWN

Rich House, Poor House

9.00pm Channel 5

REALITY A fourth series of the reality show where a very well-off family swaps lives for a week with a household that struggles financially, sometimes to no obvious end.

The experiments do highlight the extremes of income inequality, particularly the stark grind of living on low wages, but really each episode is a prurient human drama that wonders how each set of individuals will cope with the culture shock.

Tonight the rich couple are Ladislav and Qi, both enjoying board-level jobs that fund a lavish lifestyle in Rickmansworth. Eight junctions clockwise round the M25, in Enfield, barmaid Tracey and middle manager Ed are scratching for every penny. JS

Succession

9.00pm Sky Atlantic

DRAMA Never mind King Lear, Jesse Armstrong's towering family saga about a billionaire patriarch and his offspring is getting all Oedipal now. Estranged son Kendall is mounting a hostile takeover of the family business and has to plunge the metaphorical knife into his father's back amid the (admittedly pretty warped already) celebrations for his sister Shiv's wedding. This all unfolds at a castle somewhere in England where other subplots are going off like fireworks.

As scripted by Armstrong, it's hilarious and awful at the same time – and there's good news for fans: series two, which this finale tees up nicely, is already in the works.

Sick of It

10.00pm, 10.30pm Sky 1

COMEDY DRAMA This series is at its best when star/co-creator Karl Pilkington is just allowed to let rip with his misanthropic musings, a highlight this week being his diatribe against going out with large groups of friends for a meal. Sure, you see some people you like – but why not spread them out over the week? Why bother cultivating friendships on the off-chance you might need their help one day when you can just call the AA? And don't get him started on splitting the bill...

As a response, in the first episode of this double bill Karl goes away on his own for the weekend – while the second episode features his struggle to rescue some accidentally binned treasures. HUW FULLERTON

ON THE CASE

DI Vivienne Deering (Joanna Scanlan) has a theory about last week's shock killing

No Offence

9.00pm C4

DRAMA Some procedural cop shows like to string things out. They coast along like a well-signalled ride on a double-decker bus. Not this one. No Offence is more like being driven around hairpin bends in a go-kart while somebody pulls party poppers in your face. That makes it wearing sometimes, but tonight the drama is at its frantically plotted best.

Don't read on if you haven't seen last week's episode, but our heroine Viv has had a revelation on why her favourite detective sergeant was killed in that shocking opener. She thinks smiley local politician Caroline – just elected mayor of Manchester – faked her own assassination attempt.

Meanwhile, newly promoted Dinah's teenage daughter is caught peddling pills at a party, and no one has spotted yet that Miller framed someone. In Manchester policing, it never rains but it pours.

8.00 Back in Time for the Factory 5/5. The final instalment of the social time-travelling experiment switches focus to the real-life experiences of the original factory girls. They recall their working life in south Wales, where female workers started straight from school at 15 and were poorly paid and badly treated, but also talk fondly of the camaraderie on the production line. And while conditions began to improve in the 1980s, the loss of government subsidies led to closures and the end of a whole way of life. Alex Jones also reveals how the factory was lovingly brought back to life using the testimony of the original workers as inspiration. Series producer Catrin Griffith (S) (AD) (HD)

9.00 The Placebo Experiment: Can My Brain Cure My Body?

RT In an ambitious experiment for Horizon, Michael Mosley recruits 117 people who suffer with backache to take part in Britain's largest ever trial to investigate the placebo effect. The volunteers include a wheelchair-user who longs to get back on a boat and a poker player who is looking for a painkiller that will not affect her game. Michael also discovers a German placebo that works even though you know what it is, and tests out a fake treatment on himself. See page 102. Director/Producer Joe Myerscough (S) (HD)

Joy ★★★★★ 9.00pm Film4 FREEVIEW

The mop's for real – all 300ft of its continuous cotton fibre head – but this “true-life” story about Joy Mangano and her Miracle Mop doesn't quite come clean about the inventor's background. Did Joy forgo university to raise her siblings? No. Did her mother do little more than watch daytime soaps? No. Did Joy have a jealous half-sister? Absolutely not. Nevertheless, Mangano loved David O Russell's film (see review, p44). Don't sell the sausage, sell the sizzle, as they say in ad land, and clearly Mangano is a great self-publicist as well as inventor. STEVE MORRISSEY

A timeless classic

Gone with the Wind ★★★★★ 4.40pm TCM

Forever dividing critics, this American Civil War epic will remain an audience favourite for all time. A war picture with a beating female heart, thanks to the bestselling source novel by Margaret Mitchell, it was, in 1939, the most expensive film ever made. Key to its enduring appeal is Vivien Leigh's Scarlett O'Hara, a wilful but resourceful southern heroine who meets her match in Clark Gable's raffish Rhett Butler. Where's the slavery, you could ask. But this isn't a history lesson, it's a love story, and one of the best. ANDREW COLLINS

STILL LAUGHING
Ian Hislop and Paul Merton return for a 56th series of current affairs comedy

PICK OF THE DAY Have I Got News for You 9.00pm BBC1

COMEDY OF THE WEEK The world isn't an especially jovial place at the moment, so what better cheer-me-up for a rainy autumnal Friday than the return of the BBC's satire – now in its 56th series. Our host for the opening salvo is Alexander Armstrong – seemingly the favourite of team captains Paul Merton and Ian Hislop, who actually wanted him to get the gig permanently before they chanced upon the rather clever wheeze of rotating the job, which helped it emerge from its post-Angus Deayton slump all those years ago. AA's always been a safe pair of hands, someone to be enjoyed like an old pair of slippers, but with the occasional naughty streak.

Our guests are BBC Breakfast's Naga Munchetty and affable observational comedian Josh Widdicombe. And our topics? Well, that's anyone's guess. Though I wouldn't rule out a steady dose of Boris, Brexit, Barnier (of the Michel variety) and more Brexit. See, I told you we needed jolly along...

BEN DOWELL

The Debt Saviours

9.00pm BBC2 (not N Ireland)

DOCUMENTARY Across Britain more than four million people have debts that are unsustainable. Here, film-maker Phillip Wood follows the work of Christians Against Poverty, a charity trying to tackle the problem through counselling, financial advice – and prayer. In their daily office meetings and at the end of each session with indebted clients, we see CAP staff break into prayer – which feels, in the context of a fairly bleak, no-frills documentary about poverty, disconcerting.

The film leaves us in no doubt that the work CAP does is badly needed, but it also touches on whether steering clients towards Christianity is a happy accident or the charity's main aim. DAVID BUTCHER

The Big Audition

9.00pm ITV (10.45pm on STV)

REALITY New series This isn't a poor man's version of Britain's Got Talent, but auditions for real jobs, whether that's as a circus performer, a stunt double, a dog model or Beatles lookalike. Whatever the job is, they must impress a panel of professionals who might employ them.

Unsurprisingly, most of the auditionees are larger-than-life characters: there's tour guide William, who's been eating extra burgers to bulk up for a possible role as Henry VIII at Hampton Court Palace; Daisy-May, a one-eyed rescue dog that isn't keen on posing for photos; and Linda, trying out as a fitness presenter on the Shopping Channel, who's a laugh a minute.

JANE RACKHAM

A Discovery of Witches

9.00pm Sky 1

DRAMA Once upon a time a boy and girl fell in love. In the normal scheme of things, meeting each other's parents for the first time is nerve-racking, but the relationship between witch Diana (Teresa Palmer) and vampire Matthew (Matthew Goode) is anything but normal.

To protect her from other witches, Matthew's brought her to his family home in France, presided over by his mother Ysabeau (Lindsay Duncan at her steeliest). But their troubles are about to get even worse. The supernatural powers-that-be are incensed that Matthew has broken the rules, and they want to nip things in the bud, sharpish. It's like a gangster drama, with fangs.

GILL CRAWFORD

The Art of Drumming

9.00pm Sky Arts

MUSIC Who's your favourite drummer? Chances are they're featured in this final episode, where the series' contributors list their top 20 snare smashers in what's more or less a recap of the other episodes.

Part of the joy of the countdown show is guessing who'll be featured. So rather than spoil it for you, here are a few clues. "X played like a five-year-old jumping on the drums, but with complete musical ability." "There was not a funky drummer who could play what Y was playing." "Z was like a jazz drummer, playing in the heaviest band ever."

If you manage to guess all three, award yourself a golden drumstick. GARY ROSE

So the day has finally arrived: it's the big #Robron wedding on Emmerdale (7pm ITV). Never have two soap characters been obsessed over and fantasised about like Robert and Aaron (Ryan Hawley and Danny Miller, right). Don't believe me? Check out the erotic art of them together on Twitter. Or rather, don't.

I got a small taste of this lusty hysteria when I happened to announce on social media that I was there on set on the day of the nuptials (to the right of the pagoda, out of shot, behind the tea boy). In came the messages: what are the boys wearing? Does it go ahead? Can you take a picture so I can sketch them naked walking up the aisle?

Well, all that I can really report is that it's very lovely and that I now know the reading Victoria makes off by heart because I watched her film it 98 times. For everything else, you'll have to watch the episode. And check Twitter, of course, for charcoal drawings of the wedding night. DAVID BROWN

Can You Feel It: How Dance Music Conquered the World

10.00pm BBC4

MUSIC This celebration of DJs begins in sombre mood, reflecting on the death in April this year of Avicii, whose mental health issues were exacerbated by a near-constant global gigging schedule. Yet the point is there was an outpouring of grief in his native Sweden, normally reserved for royalty. In dance music, the DJ is now king.

As various DJs recount how their job has changed from being comperes in high-street clubs to selling out stadiums, what the programme makes clear, through a bit of witty editing linking the two extremes, is how much DJs have always been crowd-pleasing entertainers. DAVID CRAWFORD

My Favourite Sketch

10.00pm Gold

COMEDY New series Fresh from his riverbank banter with Bob Mortimer, Paul Whitehouse selects his favourite comedy sketches as the first guest of host Sally Phillips in this genial six-part series. Despite the faltering intro and awkward finale – a Smell of Reeves & Mortimer skit of weird folk duo Mulligan and O'Hare, re-created by Phillips and Whitehouse – it's a pleasing and sometimes revealing format.

Although Whitehouse thinks some Monty Python routines are "a bit indulgent and, in a word, crap", the troupe have still been his main influence. Other inspirations include Alan Partridge and Laurel and Hardy. And good on him for reminding us of a duo that have been "a bit forgotten about": Fry and Laurie. MARK BRAXTON

The Graham Norton Show

10.35pm BBC1

CHAT SHOW There's something special about a guest's first appearance on Graham Norton. You're never quite sure if they'll effortlessly settle into the swing of things or feel like a duck out of water.

Rowan Atkinson and Jamie Lee Curtis both make their Norton debuts this evening as he prepares to reprise his hapless spy role in Johnny English Strikes Again and she brings Halloween back to the cinema screen 40 years later. They share the spotlight with Gary Barlow and the always entertaining Jeff Goldblum, who'll be showing off his musical talents when he performs Straighten Up and Fly Right with the brilliant Imelda May. SARAH DORAN

The Great Model Railway Challenge

8.00pm Channel 5

DOCUMENTARY New series Don't let the generic title put you off, this is a lot of fun, and you don't need a love of railway modelling to enjoy it. In the first heat of the competition, teams Strangers on a Model Train, Team Porthcawl and the Missenden Modellers have three days to construct layouts based on "classic movies".

The judges – modeller Kathy Millatt and journalist Steve Flint – patrol with gimlet eyes, and there's an early scandal when one group is ticked off for bringing in too many pre-built pieces. But there's real ingenuity in the builds and there are even a few tears when a captain is overcome with emotion as he marvels at his team's creation. It's all so well mannered, too – one contestant offers his home-baked Welsh cakes to everyone, including his rivals. ALISON GRAHAM

Superbad ★★★★★

9.00pm Sony Movie Channel FREEVIEW

Superbad may have confirmed the big-screen potential of stars Jonah Hill and Michael Cera, but it also marked the film debuts of Christopher Mintz-Plasse and more notably Emma Stone. A former child stage star in Phoenix, Stone measured her career in failed TV pilots (The New Partridge Family) and near-miss auditions (Heroes). But after Superbad (review, p44), life became supergood with Crazy, Stupid, Love, The Amazing Spider-Man, an Oscar nomination for Birdman and an Oscar win for La La Land. ANDREW COLLINS

A little big adventure

Downsizing ★★★★★ 8.00pm Sky Premiere

In this inspired but melancholy comedy from Alexander Payne (Sideways), the world's overpopulation crisis has been solved by shrinking human beings to a fraction of their normal size. Blue-collar worker Matt Damon thinks that "going small" will finally give him and his wife (Kristin Wiig) the lifestyle they want but can't afford. Instead, guided by a cast of colourful characters, Damon navigates a new world that turns out to be just as fraught with disillusionment as the one he thought he'd left behind. DAMON WISE

Lennon's on sale again

iTunes

Remastered and restored for another generation of fans, this film directed by and starring John Lennon and Yoko Ono was first broadcast on TV in its original form in 1972. Essentially a video promo for Lennon's second album, it captures him and Ono partying, protesting and larking about with famous pals, including fellow Beatle George Harrison. JAMIE HEALY

Poetry has been part of Radio Times for 95 years...

Gyles Brandreth dives into the archive to celebrate

Gyles Brandreth's Poem by Heart

Sunday 1.30pm Radio 4

POETRY IS THE spontaneous overflow of powerful feelings," said William Wordsworth, the English Romantic poet who wandered lonely as a cloud and, famously, gave us all those golden daffodils. Wordsworth went on: "It takes its origin from emotion recollected in tranquility."

This week I will be celebrating the importance of learning poetry by heart with the Duchess of Cornwall, Judi Dench and other poetry lovers on Poem by Heart. But, knowing that I have powerful feelings about poetry and that "spontaneous overflows" come to me quite naturally, Radio Times put me in a tranquil room with a cup of tea and every copy of the magazine there has ever been. That's 4,918, including this issue that you're holding. It was a fitting way to mark their birthday (this week) and National Poetry Day (next week).

Radio Times, described as "the official organ of the BBC", was born 95 years ago, in September 1923, a year after the advent of BBC radio itself. What today's Radio Times team know, but I didn't until just now, is that poetry has been part of the Radio Times story from the start.

In the very first issue, at the front of the magazine, in pride of place, is a poetic epic entitled Adrift. Apparently inspired by a celebrated Chinese song cycle, it begins:

"We cannot keep the gold of yesterday;
Today's dun clouds we cannot roll away..."

I'll spare you the rest because it's not a very jolly verse and, frankly, I'm not sure it has stood the test of time, but it does show that Radio Times had its heart in the right place from the get-go. In the early days, the magazine republished work by much-loved poets like Wordsworth and Robert Burns and commissioned new stuff, too. In 1933, for example, Walter de la Mare contributed a new poem exploring "love's gaze", the "heat-struck swoon of desire" and "the vineyards of romance". The pre-war poetic offerings are mostly in a serious vein, and quite high-flown, but happily lighter verse does get a look-in:

Poets' Corner

POETRY PLEASE
Gyles Brandreth in heaven, surrounded by bound volumes of past issues of Radio Times

"Many an evening, in the twilight, you shall listen to a song,
If you've got a wireless set,
and if the tuning be not wrong"

In the pioneering days of radio, getting a good signal was a challenge for many listeners and Radio Times did its best to help with technical advice – in verse.

From 1923 onwards, poetry was a particular feature in the weeks running up to Christmas. Radio Times devoted whole pages to Yuletide poems, sometimes humorous ("Oh! Hoppety, skippety, poppety, pippety..."), sometimes sacred ("I wish that I had kept that inn, that inn of old, in Bethlehem...") and, in 1939, at the beginning of the Second World War, stirring:

"The spirit of our England lives in courage and in laughter,
In saving what is good and true for those who follow after,
But peace at last will crown the brave, and so, until that day,

God rest you merry, gentlemen,
let NOTHING you dismay."

EXACTLY 70 YEARS later, the magazine commissioned a poem from the newly appointed poet laureate, Carol Ann Duffy who, over two pages, in a variety of styles, provided her own take on the 12 Days of Christmas, reflecting on the issues of the day, from the war in Afghanistan to the role of bankers (especially Scottish ones) in the 2008/2009 financial crisis:

"We paid the bluddy pipers
But we dinnae call the tune."

There have been seven different poets laureate in the 95-year history of Radio Times and every one of them has featured in its pages. In 2006, Carol Ann Duffy's predecessor, Andrew Motion, celebrated the centenary of Sir John Betjeman, probably the most popular poet laureate of all,

PICK OF THE WEEK

The Documentary: The Children of Belsen Sunday 2.05pm World Service

Hetty Werkendam (below) is a remarkable woman. Born in 1930, she was living in Amsterdam when the Germans occupied the Netherlands. She and her family were sent to the Bergen-Belsen Nazi concentration camp in 1943. Two years later, when the camp was liberated, she was interviewed by the BBC reporter Patrick Gordon Walker.

Hetty was 15 at the time and sounded unbelievably upbeat and perky. This is even more astonishing when we listen to the conditions in which she was found. They are simply too distressing to talk about here but this documentary, quite rightly, pulls no punches when it comes to depicting the atrocities conducted at Bergen-Belsen.

In this programme, Mike Lanchin catches up with Hetty, who now lives in Australia, on what will probably be her final trip to the concentration camp site, and she is as ebullient, sparky and eloquent as she was in that original interview. She has made it her mission that no one should ever forget the Holocaust, but she's not a bitter preacher: her joie de vivre is both intoxicating and inspiring.

There are other BBC archive clips from incarcerated children at the moment of liberation. This is a really tough listen, but the programme would have failed if it was anything else. And the sound of these young people singing for the British troops who put an end to their living hell is one of the most uplifting sounds that I've ever heard on radio.

AMBRIDGE DIARY

The Archers this week...

Freddie's sentencing is the talk of the village, with the hot topic being whether the judge made the correct decision. Elizabeth, for her part, is making plans for the future, but finds herself locking horns with a close relative. As for Freddie – well, his behaviour continues to be a cause for concern, but will he eventually come clean about what's really been going on?

On to cheerier matters now, the Flower and Produce Show, where we'll discover whether Brian's plotting will bear fruit. There's also the danger of young Poppy being disappointed if Nic's harvest pie doesn't make the grade.

Finally, the Aldridges are horrified to find what one prospective buyer has in store for their beloved home. DAVID BROWN and defended him against the charge of being a lightweight jingle-spinner. "Take him seriously," said Motion.

Betjeman was as popular on radio and television as he was on the page. As a teenager in 1968 I remember watching a wonderful documentary on BBC1 called Contrasts in which the poet took us on an evocative journey across London, from Marble Arch to Edgware, and provided the commentary entirely in verse. (The programme was shown on a Wednesday night at 10.45pm, just before The Weather Man and Close Down.)

John Betjeman was a true national treasure. Another, of course, was Terry Wogan. In 2010, when Radio Times asked Terry to choose his favourite poem, he picked Thomas Gray's Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard (1750). He simply "loved the language". In the same issue, Spice Girl Geri Halliwell picked Phenomenal Woman by Maya Angelou (1978). "It's pure girl power," whooped Geri. "Maya Angelou is pure inspiration – I love, love, love her."

I love poems and I love the way Radio Times has featured them at every opportunity for almost a century: love poems for Valentine's Day; war poems for Remembrance Sunday; even, in 1969, in the Wales edition, a special poem in Welsh by E Gwyfad Evans to mark the investiture of Prince Charles as Prince of Wales.

For several years, the magazine had its own in-house poet (Roger Woddis) and, later on, a "poetry doctor" (Daisy Goodwin) who prescribed poems to help people with predicaments. I recall the year Daisy chose to publish Ogden Nash's A Word to Husbands on what happened to be my wedding anniversary:

"To keep your marriage brimming
With love in the loving cup
Whenever you're wrong, admit it;
Whenever you're right, shut up."

My wife loved the poem so much, she made me learn it by heart. Thank you, Radio Times.

SOUND BITES

BY DAVID HEPWORTH

Her voice lives on

My tribute to the inimitable Fenella Fielding

I'VE WRITTEN HERE before about the joys of audiobooks read by people with distinctive voices. You can read the books by Sir Michael Caine and Sir Roger Moore but you're only re-creating their voices in your head. Why not cut out the middleman and have them read for you?

And so it was in sunny Corsica a few months ago when the delicious tones of Fenella Fielding OBE transported me to the London of the 1960s. Entitled Do You Mind if I Smoke? – after her most famous line in Carry On Screaming – it was the most exquisitely delivered memoir. Tender, sometimes bitchy, but as warm as the beach I was lying on. I almost fell off the lilo, when in a late chapter Fenella mentioned me and Paddy O'Connell, my old pal from Radio 4's Broadcasting House.

Paddy has used Fenella's talents several times on his show, and my very loose association with her dates back to 1993. At the time, I was about to launch a phone-in show (does this sound familiar?) and someone had the splendid idea of asking Fenella to record some idents for us, announcing the phone number, etc. She graciously agreed and perfectly recorded everything we asked, including silliness such as the phrase: "Eddie... it's time to get the bucket under the cow."

We knew that even if all else on the new show failed, at least we'd have the sheer class of Fenella to lift it. In my head I can still hear her saying, "Call Eddie now... 041 338..."

Fast-forward to the summer of 2018. On the Corsican beach, I realised we simply had to have Fenella for my show on LBC. We were honoured when she agreed – at the age of 90 – to come into Global's global headquarters in London a few days before our launch to record more words. "Call Eddie now... 0345 60 60 973." It being 2018, we also wanted her to record phrases such as, "Brexit: it's going to be great!" and "Brexit: it's going to be awful!"

On her arrival at the studio, not having seen her for a long time, it was a shock to see her moving so slowly – as if a puff of wind might topple the great star. But once she'd made it to the studio chair, grasping the script and poised at the microphone, the years fell away. The creamy caramel of her unmistakable voice enhanced every word and number on the page. She was professional to her fingertips. Afterwards, a hug, and she made her way out of the studio with her friend Simon McKay, who took such care of her. I understand she enjoyed a good lunch.

A COUPLE OF DAYS later, a note from Simon. A severe stroke had snookered Fenella. As the days went on it was clear, and she understood, that this was it. With sadness, we decided not to use the recordings.

After her death earlier this month, we played some of her recordings for LBC listeners, and asked if they felt it would be appropriate to use Fenella's voice in future. They told us yes. So we will, for a while at least.

As the obituaries correctly observed, she was a fine, underrated, actor who should be remembered for far more than simply appearing to be on fire in front of Harry H Corbett. I will also remember her grace and kindness. She didn't have to associate with the likes of me, but I'm thrilled to bits that she did.

And, in the nicest possible way, whenever I see someone milking a cow, I will think of Fenella.

Eddie Mair is on LBC, weekdays from 4pm to 6pm

There's no such thing as new music

I don't believe in "new music". There's no such thing. There's just old music you haven't heard before. People on the radio talk about new music as though it's a self-evidently wonderful thing, a bit like fresh air or free speech. Most of the time the music they're bigging up isn't even particularly new – it's just old music played by new people who they happen to have booked.

It's not a competition

Furthermore, despite what radio says, music is not something you should pursue. It's not some kind of treasure hunt. People often say to me "What should I be listening to?" as though there was some kind of competition going on to find the person who has listened to the most music. The winner of any such competition would be miserable because they would have spent so much time pursuing the music that they wouldn't have had time to enjoy any of it. What matters is not the music. What matters is how receptive you are to the music. How much emotional bandwidth do you have? Are you in when the music comes calling?

My latest discovery

For instance, half an hour ago I discovered, via a tip from a friend on social media which led me to the podcast Spinning On Air, the songs of a woman called Connie Converse. She lived in New York in the 1950s, played the guitar and entertained her friends with songs she composed herself. At the time, there was no precedent for what she did and so the only recordings that remain were done by friends. She made one brief TV appearance, never had a record issued, moved to Michigan and in 1974 she disappeared.

Heaven sent

It was Dan Garland, the presenter of Spinning On Air, who brought her music to a wider public in 2004. It's only taken another 14 years for it to reach me. But I don't mind. There's no hurry. I might not have been ready 14 years ago. Right now, it sounds like some of the most striking music I've heard in a while. I'm not surprised somebody put the best of it on an album and somebody else is making a film about her. My belated discovery of her carries my mind back to my favourite saying about music, which came from the leader of Ladysmith Black Mambazo: "Music is a thing you cannot hinder. It rises from here all the way to heaven."

Cowan's Classics with Rob Cowan

7.00pm Classic FM

Begun on the eve of the First World War, and light-years ahead of anything else being written at the time, Gustav Holst's The Planets was first heard exactly 100 years ago today – in a private performance conducted by the young Adrian Boult (on just two hours' rehearsal) before an invited audience of friends and critics, plus several generations of pupils from St Paul's girls school in London, where Holst – the above statue can be found in his birthplace of Cheltenham – was for three decades director of music. While Rob Cowan plays Charles Dutoit's Montreal recording on Classic FM, Radio 3 offers a live performance by the BBC Symphony Orchestra (of which Boult was the founding conductor). It's introduced by the scientist Brian Cox, who will deliver an astronomical update on Holst's astrological musings.

Drama: Pearl: Two Fathers, Two Daughters 2.30pm Radio 4

The disappearance of three-year-old Madeleine McCann from an Algarve holiday apartment in 2007 gripped the public imagination like no other missing-persons case. Now comes this reflection on loss through poetry, featuring an interview with Madeleine's father Gerry McCann, and the dramatisation – by Simon Armitage – of the Middle English poem Pearl in which a father laments the loss of his daughter. Desert Island Discs

11.15am Radio 4

Starting in 1942, the list reads: Roy Plomley, Michael Parkinson, Sue Lawley and Kirsty Young. And that's it. Four Desert Island Discs presenters in 76 years. And now Lauren Laverne (above) makes it five. Except, not quite. She is only standing in while Young recovers from the condition fibromyalgia, though we're told that this could take "a number of months". Laverne is best known as a 6 Music voice but she's heard increasingly on Radio 4. She says it's "a huge honour to be asked to cover my favourite programme on behalf of one of my heroes". Her first castaway is Olympic diver Tom Daley. How much of a deep end Laverne is jumping into remains to be seen. SIMON O'HAGAN

Private Passions

12 noon Radio 3

As change comes to Desert Island Discs, let's hear it for Michael Berkeley, host of the Radio 3 DID and a constant presence since it first aired in 1995. His is a prodigious feat of longevity since, unlike DID, Private Passions never has a week off. There's much greater emphasis on music, and by tapping into his guests' enthusiasms, Berkeley invariably succeeds in eliciting nice personal nuggets from them. Today's guest is journalist Bel Mooney. SIMON O'HAGAN

All in the Mind: Loneliness Results

8.00pm Radio 4
 "We all feel lonely at certain points in our lives, but for some people that loneliness becomes chronic," says All in the Mind presenter Claudia Hammond (above). In the world's largest ever survey of its kind – the work of researchers at the University of Manchester, Brunel University and the University of Exeter – the BBC Loneliness Experiment received more than 55,000 responses from around the globe. While loneliness can be cruel and devastating to one's health, it can also be liberating. Hammond's series The Anatomy of Loneliness begins on Tuesday on Radio 4 at 9.00am, and Friday's afternoon drama Me Myself I (2.15pm) continues the theme.

Could Do Better

1.45pm Radio 4
 The dream of the radical career change has a powerful hold over many people. And it can make a great story. That's the case with this one, in which Lucy Kellaway tells of how, in her late fifties, she abandoned her comfortable, well-paid job at the Financial Times and embarked on a crusade – to not just become a teacher herself but to persuade others of similar vintage and status to likewise reinvent themselves. Now Teach, the project is called, and each of the five programmes across the week reflects a different stage of the process. The internal drama Kellaway and her cohort experience – the nerves, the setbacks, the exhaustion – is engrossing. If there's anyone left who still thinks teaching is a cushy number, they should listen to this. SIMON O'HAGAN

1/5. From Scotland to Paris. All this week, Donald Macleod is in conversation with Thea Musgrave as the composer celebrates the year of her 90th birthday. Born just outside Edinburgh, she studied medicine before realising that she wanted to pursue a life in music. A composition prize took her to Paris to study with Nadia Boulanger, who spotted her potential. Back in Britain, she started to receive commissions. A dream about a subversive clarinettist led to a commission from the CBSO for her ground-breaking Concerto for Orchestra, and in 1970 she was offered the post of guest professor at the University of California at Santa Barbara. She has lived and made her life as a composer in the US ever since.

In The Studio: Conserving the Works of the Van Gogh Museum

11.30am/10.30pm
BBC World Service

Inside the Van Gogh Museum in Amsterdam, senior conservator René Boitelle restores masterpieces for the benefit of future generations. Karl Bos watches as Boitelle uses solvent on a cotton swab to remove yellowing varnish from a canvas by Van Gogh's contemporary Jacob Maris (1837–1899). Boitelle is also at work on The Furrows (1888, detail above), one of the representations of wheat fields by Vincent himself. His original colour scheme is emerging. But the restoration will not be completed until late 2019. Inevitably the months spent lavishing attention on a work of art produces a bond between conservator and painting. At the end: "Hmmm. I have an empty easel now."

The Full Works Concert

8.00pm Classic FM

In celebration of World Ballet Day, Jane Jones's selection tonight opens with the concert suite from Tchaikovsky's ever-popular Christmas ballet The Nutcracker – a toe-tapping selection of great tunes, from the magical Miniature Overture and delectable Dance of the Sugar-Plum Fairy to the irresistible sway of the concluding Waltz of the Flowers. And, to match Tchaikovsky's sequence of Russian, Arabian and Chinese dances, the programme ends with the foot-stomping Peace Pipe Dance from Rameau's mini-opera Les Sauvages, inspired by the actual dancing of six Native American "savages" who visited Paris in 1725. 9.00am Radio 4

Charlotte Church (above) has been busy in the decade since her Channel 4 chat show came to an end. From quietly releasing new music to taking up political causes, the classically-trained Welsh soprano turned pop star has never been afraid to reinvent herself. So it's no wonder that this episode of Gemma Cairney's four-part series finds Church eager to record a song with a polyphonic choir in the city of Kutaisi, Georgia. "It's almost painful that it's so beautiful," she explains of her love for Georgian folk music. This melancholia is underscored by the fact that 2018 also marks ten years since the country's short, brutal war with Russia. The juxtaposition makes for an astute documentary on the impact music can have on national and individual identity.

Ken Cheng: Chinese Comedian

11.00pm Radio 4

The late-night comedy slot is a tough gig for a newcomer – you have 15 minutes to introduce yourself and then get some decent gags in, too. Ken Cheng, the Chinese comedian, handles the first task wittily by deconstructing the "does what it says on the tin" title of the show – carefully explaining he's not Phil Wang, the Malaysian comedian. As for the second bit... I found a lot of Cheng's routine about the stereotype of Chinese educational success a bit stilted. Not quite A*. Though his comparison between parents paying for their children to go to private school and people playing Candy Crush is inspired. DAVID CRAWFORD

Cook eschews a traditional documentary approach, instead using 57 samples of classic rock and pop, classical, folk, hip-hop and soul. Today's Choices

Drama: Hi Spec 2.15pm Radio 4

I have a confession to make. I am an audio dinosaur. I still prefer to listen to radio at the time of broadcast, especially live programmes. I have nothing against podcasts (apart from the often questionable sound quality, that is) and have really appreciated such successes as Serial and Radio 5 Live's You, Me and the Big C. But I am also struck by a sense of dread if anyone sends me a press release announcing that their intention is to "hit the top of the podcast charts". Seriously, who cares? This drama features an avariciously ambitious podcaster who is looking into the disappearance of her boyfriend on a gap-year adventure. But does her desire to find him stem from concern or ego? A clever and well-executed concept.

Assignment: Don't Shoot, I'm Disabled

10.05pm BBC World Service
Horror stories reach the UK about the disproportionate number of people with mental illness, learning difficulties and physical disability killed by police in the US. In 2016, a report by the Ruderman Family Foundation found that almost half the victims in 2013-2015 had some kind of disability. One of the most disturbing cases concerned a 26-year-old man with Down's syndrome who was asphyxiated while being dragged out of a cinema. A Maryland jury refused to indict the officers involved. BBC North America correspondent Aleem Maqbool analyses some of these cases, talking to eyewitnesses and officers involved.

Jean-Paul Gaultier

4/4. French singer and actor Vincent Niclo celebrates talented artists who are beloved in France and around the world, and invites them to open up. He concludes with Paris-born Jean-Paul Gaultier, the fashion enfant terrible turned national treasure who has penetrated the world of haute couture but perhaps remains best known for the cone-bra corsets he designed for Madonna for her 1990 Blond Ambition world tour. The programme explores the distinctive career arc of the maverick Gaultier, from his 1976 Paris entrance to his kilt-like skirt for men, his fragrance line, his role as creative director at Hermès and other ventures that underscore a fearless and irreverent attitude towards bourgeois society's taboos. Gaultier invites Radio 2 into his Paris studio - where he's preparing for his next project, Fashion Freak Show - and talks candidly about his colourful life.

2.00 Afternoon Concert

Opera Matinée. Tom McKinney presents Mozart's satirical and sparkling opera Così fan tutte in a performance recorded in 2017 at the Enescu Festival in Bucharest. Today's broadcast concludes a series of Mozart's Da Ponte operas. This one was not particularly well-received at its premiere in 1790, and the subject matter remains divisive today, as Don Alfonso tries to prove that no woman can be faithful to her lover. But romantic cynicism aside, the music brims with sublime arias and vocal fireworks, and in the end everyone agrees that it's better to laugh than to cry.

Today's Choices

7.15pm Radio 4

The visual style we associate with the great children's illustrator and writer Quentin Blake is so instantly recognisable that it's a surprise to discover that the image above is also one of his. It comes from an exhibition at north London's House of Illustration called 100 Figures: The Unseen Art of Quentin Blake, featuring 100 large-scale oil paintings, drawings and prints created over 50 years between 1950 and 2000, none of which have been exhibited before. In tonight's Front Row, Blake – now 85 – explains how this sometimes darker work has co-existed with the wit and ebullience so evident in books of his own like Mister Magnolia and in the illustrations that grace many a Roald Dahl volume.

SIMON O'HAGAN

Drama: Me Myself I

2.15pm Radio 4

Time on one's own can be a blessed relief – ask any working parent. But it can also be a crippling, destructive and even frightening experience (see Monday's All in the Mind review, page 130). In this drama by Esther Wilson and based upon true stories, a teenage girl, her mother and grandmother struggle to confront their feelings of isolation. Each of them delivers their own individual account and, of course, has a very specific tale to tell: social media/school bullying; a desperately unhappy and unfulfilled marriage; and the move to what sounds like an appalling care home for the elderly. Sue Johnston shines as the distressed grandmother, but all three actresses deserve credit for their empathetic performances. JANE ANDERSON

Face behind the voice

Thordis Fridriksson BBC Radio Cambridgeshire

Age 32
Current job Presenter of BBC Radio Cambridgeshire's weekday Thordis at Drivetime (4.00pm) and

BBC Radio Norfolk's The Garden Party (Saturday 12 noon).

CV Born and brought up in Norwich of Icelandic/English parentage ('I'm half Norfolk dumpling, half Nordic wench, but speak no Icelandic and boast few overly itchy jumpers!'). She studied music at Trinity College, Cambridge, first broadcasting on Norwich's community radio station Future Radio in 2007. Joined BBC Radio Norfolk in 2008 and both BBC Radio Suffolk and Radio Cambridgeshire in 2016.

Best moment "Reporting from the Chelsea Flower Show – the scents, the colours. Last year I managed to get a quick interview with one of my broadcasting heroes, Chris Evans."

Worst moment "I was pleased to get a long and interesting interview with Kim Wilde at the Chelsea Flower Show. Unfortunately, somebody back at base had turned the recorder off!"

Off air "I live in Norwich and divide my time between Norwich and Ely with my partner, fellow broadcaster Peter Swan. In my spare time I ride my parents' two horses."

First radio memory "I got my first radio at the age of seven and was an immediate dial-twiddler. Radio Broadland and Classic FM are early memories."

Favourite broadcasters "Chris Evans and Jane Garvey, for their wit, humour, eccentricity and irreverence."

Dream job "Co-presenting Radio 4's Saturday Live – 90 minutes of great stories, features and conversation."

Secret skills "I video and direct Get Gardening on YouTube – I'm self-taught about plants and flowers. I also love to crochet – I find it very therapeutic and have made everything from blankets to a colourful lamp shade. And I really should take up the piano again."

BBC Local Radio

Face behind the voice

Thordis Fridriksson BBC Radio Cambridgeshire

Age 32

BBC Radio Norfolk's The Garden Party (Saturday 12 noon).

CV Born and brought up in Norwich of Icelandic/English parentage ('I'm half Norfolk dumpling, half Nordic wench, but speak no Icelandic and boast few overly itchy jumpers!'). She studied music at Trinity College, Cambridge, first broadcasting on Norwich's community radio station Future Radio in 2007. Joined BBC Radio Norfolk in 2008 and both BBC Radio Suffolk and Radio Cambridgeshire in 2016.

Best moment "Reporting from the Chelsea Flower Show – the scents, the colours. Last year I managed to get a quick interview with one of my broadcasting heroes, Chris Evans."

Worst moment "I was pleased to get a long and interesting interview with Kim Wilde at the Chelsea Flower Show. Unfortunately, somebody back at base had turned the recorder off!"

Off air "I live in Norwich and divide my time between Norwich and Ely with my partner, fellow broadcaster Peter Swan. In my spare time I ride my parents' two horses."

First radio memory "I got my first radio at the age of seven and was an immediate dial-twiddler. Radio Broadland and Classic FM are early memories."

Favourite broadcasters "Chris Evans and Jane Garvey, for their wit, humour, eccentricity and irreverence."

Ambition "I'm desperate to own a dog – I'm torn between a little fluffball and a springer spaniel."

Dream job "Co-presenting Radio 4's Saturday Live – 90 minutes of great stories, features and conversation."

Secret skills "I video and direct Get Gardening on YouTube – I'm self-taught about plants and flowers. I also love to crochet – I find it very therapeutic and have made everything from blankets to a colourful lamp shade. And I really should take up the piano again."

BBC Local Radio

Face behind the voice

Thordis Fridriksson BBC Radio Cambridgeshire

Age 32

BBC Radio Norfolk's The Garden Party (Saturday 12 noon).

CV Born and brought up in Norwich of Icelandic/English parentage ('I'm half Norfolk dumpling, half Nordic wench, but speak no Icelandic and boast few overly itchy jumpers!'). She studied music at Trinity College, Cambridge, first broadcasting on Norwich's community radio station Future Radio in 2007. Joined BBC Radio Norfolk in 2008 and both BBC Radio Suffolk and Radio Cambridgeshire in 2016.

Best moment "Reporting from the Chelsea Flower Show – the scents, the colours. Last year I managed to get a quick interview with one of my broadcasting heroes, Chris Evans."

Worst moment "I was pleased to get a long and interesting interview with Kim Wilde at the Chelsea Flower Show. Unfortunately, somebody back at base had turned the recorder off!"

Off air "I live in Norwich and divide my time between Norwich and Ely with my partner, fellow broadcaster Peter Swan. In my spare time I ride my parents' two horses."

First radio memory "I got my first radio at the age of seven and was an immediate dial-twiddler. Radio Broadland and Classic FM are early memories."

Favourite broadcasters "Chris Evans and Jane Garvey, for their wit, humour, eccentricity and irreverence."

Ambition "I'm desperate to own a dog – I'm torn between a little fluffball and a springer spaniel."

Dream job "Co-presenting Radio 4's Saturday Live – 90 minutes of great stories, features and conversation."

Secret skills "I video and direct Get Gardening on YouTube – I'm self-taught about plants and flowers. I also love to crochet – I find it very therapeutic and have made everything from blankets to a colourful lamp shade. And I really should take up the piano again."

BBC Radio Scotland

Face behind the voice

Thordis Fridriksson BBC Radio Cambridgeshire

Current job Presenter of BBC Radio Cambridgeshire's weekday Thordis at Drivetime (4.00pm) and BBC Radio Norfolk's The Garden Party (Saturday 12 noon).

CV Born and brought up in Norwich of Icelandic/English parentage ('I'm half Norfolk dumpling, half Nordic wench, but speak no Icelandic and boast few overly itchy jumpers!'). She studied music at Trinity College, Cambridge, first broadcasting on Norwich's community radio station Future Radio in 2007. Joined BBC Radio Norfolk in 2008 and both BBC Radio Suffolk and Radio Cambridgeshire in 2016.

Best moment "Reporting from the Chelsea Flower Show – the scents, the colours. Last year I managed to get a quick interview with one of my broadcasting heroes, Chris Evans."

Worst moment "I was pleased to get a long and interesting interview with Kim Wilde at the Chelsea Flower Show. Unfortunately, somebody back at base had turned the recorder off!"

Off air "I live in Norwich and divide my time between Norwich and Ely with my partner, fellow broadcaster Peter Swan. In my spare time I ride my parents' two horses."

First radio memory "I got my first radio at the age of seven and was an immediate dial-twiddler. Radio Broadland and Classic FM are early memories."

Favourite broadcasters "Chris Evans and Jane Garvey, for their wit, humour, eccentricity and irreverence."

Ambition "I'm desperate to own a dog – I'm torn between a little fluffball and a springer spaniel."

Dream job "Co-presenting Radio 4's Saturday Live – 90 minutes of great stories, features and conversation."

Secret skills "I video and direct Get Gardening on YouTube – I'm self-taught about plants and flowers. I also love to crochet – I find it very therapeutic and have made everything from blankets to a colourful lamp shade. And I really should take up the piano again."

Face behind the voice

Thordis Fridriksson BBC Radio Cambridgeshire

Age 32

BBC Radio Norfolk's The Garden Party (Saturday 12 noon).

CV Born and brought up in Norwich of Icelandic/English parentage ('I'm half Norfolk dumpling, half Nordic wench, but speak no Icelandic and boast few overly itchy jumpers!'). She studied music at Trinity College, Cambridge, first broadcasting on Norwich's community radio station Future Radio in 2007. Joined BBC Radio Norfolk in 2008 and both BBC Radio Suffolk and Radio Cambridgeshire in 2016.

Best moment "Reporting from the Chelsea Flower Show – the scents, the colours. Last year I managed to get a quick interview with one of my broadcasting heroes, Chris Evans."

Worst moment "I was pleased to get a long and interesting interview with Kim Wilde at the Chelsea Flower Show. Unfortunately, somebody back at base had turned the recorder off!"

Off air "I live in Norwich and divide my time between Norwich and Ely with my partner, fellow broadcaster Peter Swan. In my spare time I ride my parents' two horses."

First radio memory "I got my first radio at the age of seven and was an immediate dial-twiddler. Radio Broadland and Classic FM are early memories."

Favourite broadcasters "Chris Evans and Jane Garvey, for their wit, humour, eccentricity and irreverence."

Ambition "I'm desperate to own a dog – I'm torn between a little fluffball and a springer spaniel."

Dream job "Co-presenting Radio 4's Saturday Live – 90 minutes of great stories, features and conversation."

Secret skills "I video and direct Get Gardening on YouTube – I'm self-taught about plants and flowers. I also love to crochet – I find it very therapeutic and have made everything from blankets to a colourful lamp shade. And I really should take up the piano again."

BBC Radio Wales

Face behind the voice

Thordis Fridriksson BBC Radio Cambridgeshire

Current job Presenter of BBC Radio Cambridgeshire's weekday Thordis at Drivetime (4.00pm) and BBC Radio Norfolk's The Garden Party (Saturday 12 noon).

CV Born and brought up in Norwich of Icelandic/English parentage ('I'm half Norfolk dumpling, half Nordic wench, but speak no Icelandic and boast few overly itchy jumpers!'). She studied music at Trinity College, Cambridge, first broadcasting on Norwich's community radio station Future Radio in 2007. Joined BBC Radio Norfolk in 2008 and both BBC Radio Suffolk and Radio Cambridgeshire in 2016.

Best moment "Reporting from the Chelsea Flower Show – the scents, the colours. Last year I managed to get a quick interview with one of my broadcasting heroes, Chris Evans."

Worst moment "I was pleased to get a long and interesting interview with Kim Wilde at the Chelsea Flower Show. Unfortunately, somebody back at base had turned the recorder off!"

Off air "I live in Norwich and divide my time between Norwich and Ely with my partner, fellow broadcaster Peter Swan. In my spare time I ride my parents' two horses."

First radio memory "I got my first radio at the age of seven and was an immediate dial-twiddler. Radio Broadland and Classic FM are early memories."

Favourite broadcasters "Chris Evans and Jane Garvey, for their wit, humour, eccentricity and irreverence."

Ambition "I'm desperate to own a dog – I'm torn between a little fluffball and a springer spaniel."

Dream job "Co-presenting Radio 4's Saturday Live – 90 minutes of great stories, features and conversation."

Secret skills "I video and direct Get Gardening on YouTube – I'm self-taught about plants and flowers. I also love to crochet – I find it very therapeutic and have made everything from blankets to a colourful lamp shade. And I really should take up the piano again."

Have you got a jar of coppers just gathering dust? Paul Lewis knows what to do with them...

IN MARCH, THE Government announced it was looking at the future of 1p and 2p coins. Within a couple of days it said it had no plans to scrap them – and that is still the official position. Not least, I suspect, because the English penny dates back around 1,300 years and there could be a campaign to keep this symbolic coin.

Nevertheless, two economists from the Bank of England have looked at whether getting rid of the two lowest value coins would cause inflation by encouraging retailers to round up prices. They concluded it would not. In other countries where it has been done, items are still priced in pennies but the final bill is rounded to the nearest 5p.

But if we are to be stuck with small change for at least the near future, what can we actually do with our jars full of coins when most of our spending these days is on cards?

On average, a jar of mixed coins is worth around £40. CoinStar, the main change machine operator, charges a hefty 9.9% of what you pour into it. So for a typical £40 jar of coins you would get a voucher to spend in the host shop of barely £36.

A better option is Metro Bank, which has a free Magic Money Machine in every one of its 60 or so branches, although these are mainly found in the south of England. Metro Bank customers can have the value of the coins credited to their debit card. Non-customers get banknotes and big coins. There is no charge for either service.

If you have an account with one of the other High Street banks, they may let you pay coins into your account if you have enough saved up to sort them into denominations and then put them into the official coin bags. A few even have coin sorting machines. But they will not usually accept coins from non-customers.

ABETTER WAY TO deal with change, of course, is not to hoard it in the first place. Instead, spend it at the self-service tills many shops and supermarkets now have. Put your shopping through, insert all your small coins then press “card” and pay the balance by plastic. Job done!

Easy does it

Yotam Ottolenghi creates sophisticated dishes perfect for dinner parties. But in his new recipe book he keeps it Simple

Plum, blackberry & bay friand bake

FRIENDS ARE THE light, moist almond cakes popular in Australia, New Zealand and France.

Whisked egg whites and very little flour make them wonderfully light, and the ground almonds make them really moist.

You can make the batter well in advance here, if you want to get ahead – it keeps well in the fridge up to a day ahead – but don't macerate the fruit for this amount of time as it will become too juicy. Serve with custard, vanilla ice cream or cream. The fruit can be played around with, depending on the season. Raspberries and peaches can be used in the early summer months, for example.

SERVES SIX, GENEROUSLY

- 200g blackberries
- 4 ripe plums, stones removed, cut into 1cm wide wedges (360g)
- 1 tsp vanilla extract
- 60g caster sugar
- 3 fresh bay leaves
- 1 tsp ground cinnamon
- 60g plain flour
- 200g icing sugar, sifted
- 120g ground almonds
- 1/8 tsp salt

- 150g egg whites (from 4-5 large eggs)
- 180g unsalted butter, melted and slightly cooled

1 Place the blackberries and plums in a bowl with the vanilla extract, sugar, bay leaves and 1/2 tsp of cinnamon. Set aside for 30 minutes. Don't be tempted to leave them sitting around for longer than this, as the fruit will become too juicy.

2 Preheat the oven to 190°C fan.

3 Mix the flour, icing sugar, ground almonds, the remaining 1/2 tsp cinnamon and salt in a separate large bowl. Set aside.

4 Lightly whisk the egg whites by hand for 30 seconds, so they just start to froth. Stir into the flour mixture, along with the melted butter.

5 Tip the batter into a 20 x 30cm parchment-lined baking dish and top evenly with the fruit and juices. Bake for 40 minutes, covering the dish with foil for the final 10 minutes, until the batter is golden-brown and the fruit is bubbling. Set aside for 10 minutes before serving.

Hot charred cherry tomatoes with cold yogurt

ONE OF THE BEAUTIES of this dish lies in the exciting contrast between the hot, juicy tomatoes and fridge-cold yogurt, so make sure the tomatoes are straight out of the oven and the yogurt is straight out of the fridge. The heat of the tomatoes will make the cold yogurt melt, invitingly, so plenty of crusty sourdough or focaccia to mop it all up with is a must alongside.

SERVES FOUR AS A STARTER OR MEZZE

- 350g cherry tomatoes
- 3 tbsp olive oil
- $\frac{3}{4}$ tsp cumin seeds
- $\frac{1}{2}$ tsp light brown sugar
- 3 garlic cloves, finely sliced
- 3 thyme sprigs
- 5g fresh oregano: 3 sprigs left whole and the rest picked, to serve
- 1 lemon: finely shave the skin of $\frac{1}{2}$ to get 3 strips and finely grate the other $\frac{1}{2}$ to get 1 tsp zest
- 350g extra-thick Greek-style yogurt (such as Total), fridge-cold
- 1 tsp Urfa chilli flakes (or $\frac{1}{2}$ tsp regular chilli flakes)
- flaked sea salt and black pepper

1 Preheat the oven to 200°C fan.

2 Place the tomatoes in a bowl with the olive oil, cumin seeds, sugar, garlic, thyme, oregano sprigs, lemon strips, $\frac{1}{2}$ tsp of flaked salt and a good grind of pepper. Mix to combine, then transfer to a baking tray just large enough to fit all the tomatoes together snugly. Roast for 20 minutes, until the tomatoes are beginning to blister and the liquid is bubbling. Turn the oven to the grill setting and grill for 6–8 minutes, until the tomatoes start to blacken on top.

3 While the tomatoes are roasting, mix the yogurt with the grated lemon zest and $\frac{1}{4}$ tsp of flaked salt. Keep in the fridge until ready to serve.

4 Once the tomatoes are ready, spread the chilled yogurt on a platter (with a lip) or in a wide, shallow bowl, creating a dip in it with the back of a spoon. Spoon over the hot tomatoes, along with their juices, lemon skin, garlic and herbs, and finish with the picked oregano and chilli flakes. Serve at once.

EREBUS MICHAEL PALIN

Book of the Week Monday–Friday
9.45am Radio 4

We're currently watching Michael Palin playing a writer in Vanity Fair (Sunday 9pm ITV), but in fact it's a real-life role he's had for decades – he authored his first book, Bert Fegg's Nasty Book for Boys and Girls, alongside fellow Python Terry Jones, in 1974. Since then his oeuvre has expanded to include accounts of his international travels, personal diaries, more books for children and works of adult fiction. His latest combines a fascinating episode of naval history with his flair for storytelling: Erebus (£18, incl p&p) recounts the tale of the ill-fated HMS Erebus, which disappeared on an Arctic expedition in 1848.

A KEEPER GRAHAM NORTON

Saturday 10am Radio 2,
The Graham Norton Show
Friday 10.35pm BBC1

Norton's debut novel Holding was released in 2016, to great acclaim – and no little surprise. Because it was a far cry not just from the usual literary fare from celebrity authors, but also from his irreverent TV persona. The tender story of a quiet Irish town and the secrets its inhabitants were concealing, Holding was described by The New York Times as "a Miss Marple mystery written by Colm Tóibín". Norton's follow-up, A Keeper (£18, incl p&p), has a similar setting, but this time focuses on one particular woman's mysterious past, which is unearthed by her daughter after her death.

MOSCOW, MIDNIGHT

JOHN SIMPSON

In his three-decade writing career, journalist John Simpson has become known for his memoirs, which bring to vivid life the most dramatic episodes from his 50-year career as a BBC reporter and, later, world affairs editor. But did you know Simpson was also the author of two spy thrillers, published in the early 80s? Moscow, Midnight (£18, incl p&p) – a contemporary, topical murder mystery – marks his emphatic return to fiction, and follows journalist Jon Swift as he attempts to find the truth behind the bizarre death of a government minister. HANNAH SHADDOCK

PLANTING SPRING-FLOWERING BULBS in the autumn is surely a seasonal highlight. It's such a creative thing to do: planning an imaginary coloured picture of your garden, either in the ground or in pots. Nothing matches the excitement in spring when green shoots begin to nose their way out of the earth.

But which bulbs to plant? There are so many to choose from in a huge range of colours, and at this time of year, garden centres lay them out like temptations in a sweet shop, often offering packs in foolproof complementary colour combinations to set you on your way. But it's your garden – and this is your chance to do your own thing. Don't forget to look at online retailers, too, as they can offer good value, especially if you're ordering substantial amounts.

Bulbs such as Chionodoxa (glory of the snow), irises, crocuses, daffodils, grape hyacinths, large-flowered scented hyacinths, Scilla, fritillaries, Dutch irises and Allium (inset) can all go in now, as long as the ground is soft enough to plant. Once you've bought them, don't leave bulbs hanging around too long before planting – but if you have to, store them in a cold, dark place.

YOU MAY SEE packs of snowdrop bulbs on sale, but snowdrops are best bought and planted “in the green” (that is, just after flowering, with leaves still on) in late winter, as the bulbs are small and tend to dry out. Tulips are best left until November to avoid the damaging fungal disease “tulip fire”. On wetter soils, consider planting the beautiful blue and white Camassia or some snake's head fritillaries.

To begin planting, first make a hole in the soil with a trowel or bulb planter to around three times the height of the bulb. Ensure the bulb doesn't rot – especially if you have heavy soil – by putting a layer of grit or gravel in the bottom of the hole for it to sit on. Most bulbs look better when planted in blocks of odd numbers. You could also dig one bigger hole and plant several bulbs in it. For a really natural look, drop the bulbs on the ground and plant them where they land.

Once the bulbs are in, cover them up to the level of the surrounding ground and firm over a little without compacting the soil. Now just sit back and wait for spring's lovely surprises.

BRIGHT BULBS

Glory of the snow (Chionodoxa) is one of the bulbs to get in the ground now for a great display next year

Spring surprises

Plant bulbs now and forget about them – they'll pop up and make you smile come spring, says Joe Swift

3 TIPS FOR COLLECTING SEEDS

Most of us sow seeds in spring from glossy packets – but the garden right outside your back door is currently stocking nature's bounty free and ready for collection. The seeds and fruits of many plants can easily be harvested and stored for spring sowing, and some can be sown straightaway.

1 SEEDS TO COLLECT

Species plants will “come true” (be the same as the mother plant) from seed, but those collected from a hybrid are extremely variable. Experimenting can be fun, though, and you might even find a new plant that you can name yourself. Annuals that give good results include Calendula, cornflowers, foxgloves, honesty, morning glory, nasturtium, Nigella, poppies, sunflowers and sweet peas. Among the perennials to try are Agapanthus, Allium, Delphinium, hollyhocks, grasses and sea holly, as well as Aquilegia and hellebores (which can be sown straightaway).

From the vegetable patch, collect seeds from beans, beetroot, carrots, lettuces, onions, peas, tomato, peppers, courgettes or squash.

2 THE BEST TIME TO HARVEST

When you're in the garden, keep an eye out for ripe seedheads and pods that have dried and are brown but are yet to split open. Timing is everything. If you collect seeds too early, they won't have developed fully so are unlikely to germinate successfully or store well. But if you leave it too late, they'll have dropped onto the ground.

3 HOW TO GATHER THEM

On a dry day, place a paper bag over the top of a seedhead (to save losing anything) before snipping it off. If the seedheads don't open naturally, crack them open gently. After extracting the seeds, clean off any chaff attached to them as this can harbour disease. Lay the seeds out to dry on a warm windowsill or in an airing cupboard for a few days. Once fully dried, put them in labelled paper bags then place in an airtight container and ideally in the fridge (or a cool, dark and dry place)

The art of Venice

The National Gallery's new Bellini and Mantegna exhibition will be a feast for the eyes. But nothing beats seeing their masterpieces in Italy – without the crowds

DON'T BELIEVE IT when people tell you that Venice is entirely swamped with visitors. The tourists may be packed in like anchovies on St Mark's Square, but let 15th-century artists Giovanni Bellini and Andrea Mantegna, the subjects of a major new exhibition at the National Gallery in London, be your guide and you'll find that "La Serenissima" has pockets of peace, beauty and wonder.

The 14th-century Basilica di Santa Maria Gloriosa dei Frari, in the San Polo district in the heart of Venice, is home to Bellini's sumptuous 1488 Frari Triptych altarpiece. It's also stacked with masterpieces, such as Titian's towering altarpiece The Assumption and the astonishing pyramidal monument to Canova – designed by the 18th-century sculptor himself, originally as a resting place for Titian's heart. Stand in front of Bellini's glowing altarpiece as the soft Adriatic light bathes a sacristy that you pretty much have to yourself, and you'll forget this city has 20 million visitors a year.

Bellini and his brother-in-law Mantegna were pioneers of the Renaissance, and they have left their mark across the churches, palaces and museums of the region of Veneto in the north-east of Italy. At the Chiesa di San Zaccaria, a 20-minute walk away from the Basilica di Santa Maria, on the other side of the Rialto Bridge, you'll find another Bellini altarpiece, Madonna Enthroned with Child and Saints. You may well be in shorts and sandals – and why not, you're on holiday – but the robes and cloaks of figures before you, the Virgin and Child have an almost sculptural depth and a dizzying intensity of colour, delivered by an artist smitten with his own powers. There is another Bellini "sacred conversation" painting at the city's Gallerie dell'Accademia and much more, including works by Titian, Bosch and Tintoretto, and Leonardo da Vinci's Vitruvian Man, which may, I admit, draw a crowd – although it's now only rarely on display.

There is a vaporetto (water-bus) stop directly outside the gallery, and no visit to Venice is complete without a trip on the Grand Canal. Likewise, you can't really come here without visiting St Mark's Square. If you find yourself overwhelmed by the selfie stick-wielding crowds then slip into the Museo Correr, opposite St Mark's, and go upstairs to the first-floor café where the windows look down directly onto the façade of the famous church and its campanile. You can have a drink and, perhaps, ask yourself where on earth Mantegna has got to.

Happily, you can find his St George in the Accademia, but for the full Mantegna experience, you need to drive two hours inland to the city of Mantua, and the still-intact house the artist designed and built himself over two decades at the end of the 15th century. (Mantegna didn't enjoy it for long – debts forced him to move out five years after completion.) The remarkable design arranges the house around a central, round courtyard, but then balances a rectangle on top of that. Look up, and you see a square of sky.

THE MOTIF IS reversed in the circle of painted sky in the middle of the ceiling of the Camera degli Sposi, the reception room Mantegna designed for Duke Ludovico Gonzaga between 1465 and 1474 in Verona's Ducal Palace. Mantegna used his mastery of perception to create a dazzling series of wall frescoes; in one, Ludovico sits by the side of his wife, Barbara of Brandenburg, among the courtiers who enforce the duke's will. Gimlet-eyed and iron-jawed, you really wouldn't want to mess with them (the effect is enhanced by Ludovico's close resemblance to Vladimir Putin). Lighten the mood by looking up at the ceiling, where cherubs grin and pull faces.

A 45-minute train ride away, the crowds look up in Verona as well – at the balustrade of dubious provenance known as Juliet's Balcony – or they flock to the Roman amphitheatre. But bypass them and visit the Basilica di San Zeno, another astonishing church you'll have to yourself, which houses Mantegna's San Zeno altarpiece. Finished between 1457 and 1460, it's one of the first pieces of Renaissance art in the city and so significant that Napoleon's troops took it away in 1797 (it was returned in 1815).

Wondering where Bellini went? Visit Verona's Castelvecchio museum, a medieval castle renovated and re-invented by the architect Carlo Scarpa in the 1960s and 70s – it's one of Europe's most striking galleries.

Here hangs Bellini's Madonna and Child as well as work by his brother Gentile and his father Jacopo. Lean on battlements that look over the River Adige and the 14th-century Scaligero bridge, destroyed by the Germans then rebuilt after the war, and you'll have to admit that Bellini and Mantegna have set you up very nicely again. MICHAEL HODGES

Why do we talk about being as drunk (or similar) as a newt? Why a newt? Vicki Crofton by email

We have been using newts to express extreme drunkenness since at least the middle of the 20th century. The choice of creature seems to be entirely arbitrary, as there have been many others implicated in English slang over the centuries.

As drunk as a skunk has obvious rhyming value, but we can also be as "tight as a tick", "drunk as a loon/salamander/mouse", and even as intoxicated "as a boiled owl". The more unlikely, the better.

In Roman times, things were even stranger, as it was thrushes that became the yardstick of how drunk a citizen could become. The reason? Thrushes were often seen in the autumn tottering around vineyards after eating partly fermented grapes.

LETTER OF THE WEEK

Gospel according to Corrie

For years I've been irritated by Coronation Street's often blinkered attitude to Christianity. I remember when someone once asked David Platt if he went to church, he replied, "Do I look like a saddo?" (Actually, he did – maybe he should try it.)

I felt some hope when the only church-goer, Emily Bishop, was joined by young, gay Sophie Webster and then forward-looking vicar Billy Mayhew. But surely Billy wouldn't introduce the idea of faith to blinded rapist Josh by reading him the King James Bible, full of "thees" and "thous", rather than a contemporary version? And when Sophie's new lover says she doesn't know how she can bear going to church as a lesbian ("All those disapproving faces"), surely this was a cue for Sophie to respond, "Blimey, my church isn't like that – everyone's welcome." Instead, the writers gave her no response.

There are still so rarely any positive glimpses of church life.

EARLY EXIT

Much has been written about Jed Mercurio's decision to kill off a major character early in Bodyguard (BBC1). However, there is at least one precedent for such an early disposal – in the film Psycho (1960), Alfred Hitchcock famously killed off Marion Crane (Janet Leigh) in the shower scene only partway into the film.

WHO'D YOU WAKE UP TO?

The person I'd like to see replacing Chris Evans on the Radio 2 breakfast show (Feedback, 15 September) is Sara Cox. Her presenting style is extremely professional yet she's so friendly and empathetic with a lovely sense of humour, too. She's a real pleasure to listen to and seems very genuine and down to earth. Jane Clarke Cirencester, Gloucestershire

...Trevor Nelson would be an excellent replacement – I love his sunny disposition and attitude. But if Sara Cox gets the job, I'll definitely be switching stations. I find her annoying, sorry!

Jill Berry Taunton, Somerset

...Can I nominate the irrepressible, hilarious tour de force that is Liza Tarbuck? Funny and witty, with an eclectic musical taste – yes please! Julie Amour Swadlincote, Derbyshire

...Could the BBC consider having guest presenters for a period of time, before making a permanent choice? This would give new voices and talent a chance.

Brenda Robson Holmfirth, West Yorkshire

Speculation continues, but no news yet as RT goes to press on when the new presenter will be announced.

TIGHT SQUEEZE

Ancient Invisible Cities (BBC2) was fascinating. I'm full of admiration for Michael Scott and his team, none of whom presumably suffer from claustrophobia! I enjoyed the first programme on Cairo and the Pyramids (7 September), but then the next week to watch Michael squeezing through the narrow silver mines near Athens, and then the Roman aqueduct under the city, was quite scary. And the camera team and laser scanners had to go through all that as well.

I hope we'll see more ancient cities investigated in the future.

95 AND COUNTING

I guess I fall into your regular reader demographic: I'm a woman of a certain age, who watches TV live, for the most part (though iPlayer has been a boon), and turns first to the puzzles when the magazine arrives in the mail every Tuesday. But, if asked why I've continued to buy or subscribe to RT every week since I left home aged 18, I'd say that it's because I hold a little piece of history in my hands. What magazine has consistently been published, been useful and entertaining on a weekly basis since 1923?

What's more, RT continues to be lively and informative. Those who think they can plan their viewing and listening from a quick

'He had total mastery of his material'

Denis Norden, 1922–2018, remembered by his friend Barry Cryer

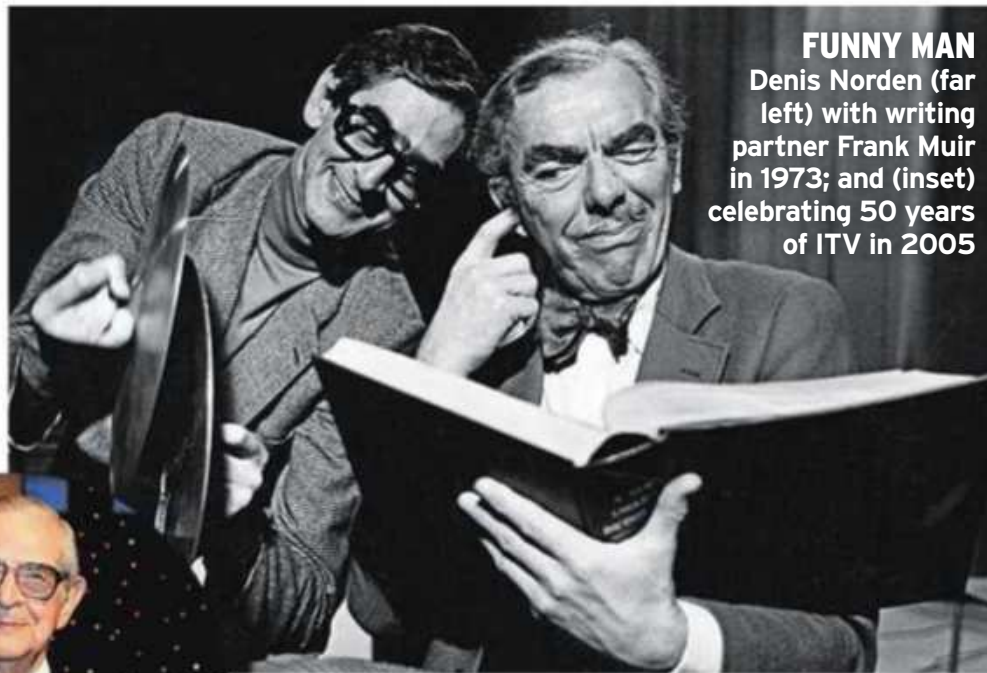

In the pantheon of great comic writers and performers, Denis Norden was right up there – absolutely one of the very best. He was also a dear friend.

I knew Denis for more than 50 years and we never lost touch. We'd run across each other at the BBC and go and have a drink in Marylebone. Right to the end, he'd ring me up with ideas for Radio 4's I'm Sorry I Haven't a Clue. He went blind towards the end of his life and was devoted to radio.

One of the last jokes he gave me when I was on Clue was for the Dictionary round – "Subordination: installing a priest under water." He rang me up with that one and I got a great laugh out of it. Denis's humour was all verbal – he had a deep love of words.

We met when we were both writers on The Frost Report back in the 1960s. I was in a younger group from Denis, making my way in comedy writing. He was much more established, but in spite of that he never looked down on us. He treated us as equals. He was warm, modest, without a trace of ego. That's quite unusual in comedy. He had this tremendous bond with Frank Muir. They had amazing telepathy. They'd been through the war together and I think that was crucial. Then they went down to the Windmill Theatre and wrote jokes for comedians like Jimmy Edwards. Their own act grew from there. It wasn't that one was the straight one and the other was the funny one. They were both just really funny.

FUNNY MAN
 Denis Norden (far left) with writing partner Frank Muir in 1973; and (inset) celebrating 50 years of ITV in 2005

When it comes to writing duos, I tend to think of "the sitter and the walker". I don't know how Denis and Frank worked together, but I can picture Frank walking about being more of the performer, and Denis sitting down, jotting down the jokes. I don't mean that he was just writing down Frank's jokes. He was writing down all his own jokes as well.

With It'll Be Alright on the Night on ITV, there was a whole other phase to Denis's career. He delivered his lines so beautifully. He took his time. Today's comedians talk so much faster. I want to tell them to slow down. That wasn't Denis's way at all. He had total mastery of his material, and he was lovely with it.

MISSING THE LEEDS

I've enjoyed watching the Leeds International Piano Competition on BBC4 for many years. Imagine my disappointment when the live finals weren't listed on BBC4 in RT. Why has the BBC chosen not to continue broadcasting this three-yearly event?

Margaret Evans Loughborough, Leicestershire

For 2018, it was shown on subscription channel Medici TV.

YOU ASK US

Is another TV free-to-air sport vanishing?

What Formula One racing will we be able to see on terrestrial TV next year? I understand Sky has all the rights.

John Cox, Howden, East Yorkshire
For the past three years, Channel 4 – following a similar arrangement with the BBC – has been able to show ten of the annual 21 Grand Prix live and free-to-air, thanks to a deal with Sky Sports F1. But this arrangement finishes at the end of the season. Thereafter, Sky has exclusive rights to show Formula One from 2019 until 2024, and that means live F1 racing will largely disappear from free-to-air TV.

This is a sad prospect for sports fans who aren't (or can't afford to be) pay-TV subscribers. After all, in recent years they've been losing more and more live action from terrestrial TV – starting with Test and county cricket, then golf and now (almost entirely) F1.

There is one small consolation, however. Included in the F1 deal is a stipulation that the British Grand Prix must be shown live on free-to-air TV, as well as highlights of all the other races and all qualifying sessions. From 2019, these will again be on Channel 4.

The migration of live sport to pay-TV seems inexorable, as sports ruling bodies look to increase their income. But surely they must have been given pause for thought by the BBC and ITV's high viewing figures for the football World Cup this year. What ruling bodies lose in hard cash when striking deals with hard-pressed free-to-air broadcasters, surely they gain in mass popularity when much of the nation is watching? This summer, it felt like we were all winners.

AHEAD OF ITS TIME

I'm loving the modern music used in Vanity Fair (Sunday ITV), but why do writers of period dramas insist on using modern colloquialisms? In episode one we had an "OK" and a "moving on" and in episode three we had Becky's new husband Rawdon calling her "babes".

When Andrew Davies scripts a period drama, he seems to manage very well without it!
Sharron Rennison York

...Of all Becky Sharp's undoubted talents in Vanity Fair, the one I most admire is her ability to predict the future. She suggests to her husband, Rawdon, that after the battles to come he can regain his aunt's affection by showing her his medals.

Before the Battle of Waterloo, medals were very rarely awarded and then generally only to high-ranking officers. It's inconceivable Rawdon would fall into this group. Still, Becky correctly predicts that he will get the Waterloo Campaign Medal some years before anyone else had thought of it. Well done, Becky!

RELEASE CASH FROM YOUR HOME FOR A BETTER RETIREMENT

Request your free guide to unlocking the cash from your home, written by Radio Times money expert Paul Lewis

Whether it's existing debt, day-to-day living expenses, or needing a lump sum for home improvements, holidays or helping the family, many find their pension is not providing the income they hoped to have in retirement.

Lower interest rates and increasingly flexible products have made equity release much more desirable. It offers a stress-free alternative to downsizing, allowing you to stay in your own home near family and friends, while freeing up a tax-free sum from your property to give you financial stability – and even the chance to do some of the things you've always dreamt of.

Meanwhile, product features such as inheritance protection will provide you with peace of mind that, should you wish, you can still leave money to loved ones when you pass away and the plan comes to an end.

Freedom from financial worries

While the key to financial stability could well be unlocking the cash in your home, knowing where to start can seem daunting and complicated, so it's vital to take good, independent, advice.

Equity Release could involve a lifetime mortgage, which is a loan secured against your home. It will reduce the value of your estate and may affect your entitlement to means-tested benefits. You should always think carefully before securing a loan against your home.

There are typically no monthly repayments to make, as the loan plus compound interest is repaid when the plan comes to an end. This leaves you free to relax in retirement, without worrying about having to make monthly repayments.

There are many options to consider to ensure you're getting the plan that's most beneficial for your individual needs, and the one that allows you to take control of your finances – and life. That's where Key comes in.

READER OFFER

Radio Times has partnered with Key to produce a free guide written by Paul Lewis. Our free guide provides information to start you on your equity release journey.

Unless you decide to go ahead, Key's service is completely free of charge, as Key's usual advice fee of 1.99 per cent of the amount released would only be payable on completion of a plan, subject to a minimum advice fee of £1,499.

GOOD ADVICE IS KEY

If you're considering equity release to fund a better retirement, we can guide you through your options. There is no obligation or pressure to go ahead if you book an appointment with Key; our job is to give the expert advice and information you need to make the decision that meets your individual needs.

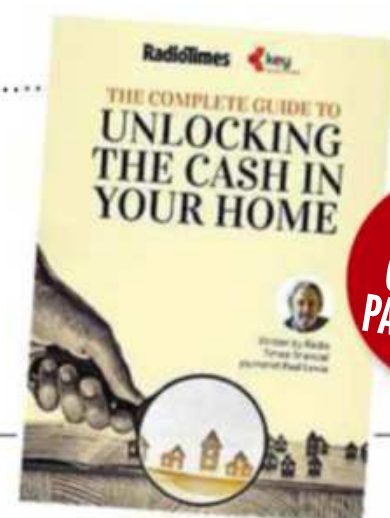

Features:

- Accredited Independent Advisers – we are not tied to any lenders
- Face-to-face appointments – in the comfort of your own home
- Whole of market comparison – we consider all equity release providers

After talking through the options with you, we will make a personal recommendation, and if equity release isn't right for you, we'll tell you.

WOODY HARRELSON

‘I could have been a criminal’

The Hollywood star on box-set bingeing and what might have been

What are you watching, Woody?
My favourite shows are Westworld, The Handmaid's Tale and The Young Pope. Oh, and Peaky Blinders! I like to wait until a whole series has aired before I watch it, because it's just too frustrating to wait. I watched all of Mad Men, all of The Sopranos, all of Breaking Bad. Man, I just sit and binge.

As a fan of Westworld, was it exciting to work with Thandie Newton on Solo: A Star Wars Story earlier this year?

I knew Thandie before she was on Westworld, and what an amazing lady. She's a great actress, but she's also one of the funniest people I ever met. We had long days making Solo: A Star Wars Story, and just spent them laughing. What an awesome person.

What can you see from your sofa?

You can see a beautiful view of Maui [a Hawaiian island in the Pacific]. That's what you see from my couch. I don't have a traditional set-up.

What's your sofa like?

Er, why does it matter? Come on, what's next?

OK, let's try this – what do you think you would have been if you hadn't been an actor?

A criminal. I just know me, I know how I think. I would have wanted to have this lifestyle, but I probably wouldn't have done all the work necessary. And so I would've become a thief. Or a drug dealer. Playing a thief in Solo did feel like putting on a glove that really fits.

You're in the new superhero movie, Venom – do you think there are too many films like that these days?

I don't mind if they make a million of them, what do I care? But I do think there is a trend now for the movies that people see to be these kind of giant superhero movies. So I don't know if that squeezes out some of these smaller films. It's very hard to get an independent film seen in this day and age. Very, very difficult.

Speaking of indies, were you happy with the reception given to Three Billboards Outside Ebbing, Missouri?

That's a good example, because it's an indie that actually a lot of people did see [it won numerous awards – including two Oscars]. So that's a rarity. It was great, you could just feel it – when we took it to the Venice Film Festival, the response was outstanding. That's when we all thought, “Mmm... people are gonna see this movie!”

You got your start in Cheers on television and you made True Detective a few years ago – do you ever think about returning to the small screen?

I am coming back! I have two TV projects I want to do. Better not mention them because nothing's real yet, but there's two things I think are great that I'll probably do.

What are the advantages of working in television compared with film?

Well, the advantage of TV filming is that you're in one place for a while. And that's cool if you're going to be with your family. And you get to explore a character for a little deeper and longer. I know as a viewer there are these characters you fall in love with, and if it was just two hours and then you didn't ever see them again, it'd be a drag. Like The Handmaid's Tale – if that was two hours I'd feel cheated!
