THIS WEEK'S UNMISSABLE TV

DAVID BROWN

'Ted a criminal – can this be true?'

TED HASTINGS HAS always been the moral backbone of AC-12, but it's now starting to look as though he's a criminal mastermind. Mother of God, can this really be true? Will the finale of Line of Duty (Sunday BBC1) give us an answer? I can't say whether this will definitely, sorry, definitely happen. But expect that police interview tape-recorder beeeeeep to get a heavy workout, and for Anna Maxwell-Martin's silky but steely DCS Patricia Carmichael to continue to be a worthy opponent in the interrogation room.

Jed Mercurio builds tension like no other TV writer, and you can get an insight into how he does it on The South Bank Show (Sky Arts), which follows straight afterwards.

We also have the end of the most dimly lit drama in recent years as Trust Me (Tuesday BBC1) reaches its climax. I'm not sure why everything had to be so dark. Maybe it was a comment on NHS spending cuts that went completely over my head? But the second series of the medical thriller has had its terrifying moments and, at this late stage, virtually everyone on the staff appears, at best, shifty and, at worst, homicidal.

FOR A BIT OF UPLIFT, there's the The All New Monty: Who Bares Wins (Monday and Tuesday ITV). The men go first, followed by the women and, as ever, the celebs bare as much soul as they do flesh. Among those peeling off the layers are former snooker player Willie Thorne and tennis champ Martina Navratilova. And even if your instinct is to ignore a primetime TV strip show, I guarantee that the emotional pull of the cancer stories will get to you in the end.

WHAT WE'VE LEARNT THIS WEEK

Line of Duty is the king of TV cliffhangers – and perhaps it’s something to do with one of its directors. Helming this week’s finale is Sue Tully who, when she was known as Susan Tully, had her share of shocks playing rebellious teen Suzanne Ross in Grange Hill and then Michelle Fowler in EastEnders (right). Since giving up acting, Tully has directed many TV dramas, including Silent Witness, The Musketeers and The A Word. Now she’s one of the few people who can order Ted Hastings around...

WHAT GETS US TALKING...

THE LAW IN ACTION

Historian, barrister and former Supreme Court judge Jonathan Sumption delivered the first of five Reith Lectures on the relationship between the law and politics in London earlier this month. It sparked lively debate from the great and good present, but there were some light-hearted moments, too, particularly when Lord Sumption was asked by moderator Anita Anand who had been the "most difficult client" in all his many years practising the law? He plumped for Tony Blair's former PR man and sometime Radio Times contributor, Alastair Campbell. "All clients have their idiosyncrasies but I'm sure Alastair will not object if I disclose that he is the only person who could eat spaghetti while speaking into a mobile phone," Lord Sumption said. Less spin doctor, more spag doctor, it seems.

WHO'LL HEAD UP RADIO 4?

The Reith Lectures (to be broadcast from 21 May) will be another feather in the cap of Radio 4 commissioning editor Mohit Bakaya, who has long overseen the Lectures in the schedule. Both his name and that of the BBC's head of current affairs Joanna Carr have been mentioned in connection with becoming new Radio 4 controller when current incumbent Gwyneth Williams leaves in the coming weeks. Whoever gets the nod, the new boss will have a tough job dealing with continuing budget cuts and the steady advance of James Purnell's BBC Sounds empire.

Jack's no lady...

A little-known story about a real-life Regency adventurer is about to get the epic TV drama treatment. Written and directed by Sally Wainwright and starring Doctor Foster's Suranne Jones, Gentleman Jack (coming soon to BBC1) follows the charismatic Anne Lister who, in 1832, after years of exotic travel, returns to Yorkshire determined to transform her fortunes and her ancestral home in Halifax.

Lister was no ordinary Regency lady: she walked like a man, dressed head-to-foot in black, and breezed through high society – hence the nickname Gentleman Jack. She also planned to marry a wealthy woman, and the time she took communion with her partner Ann Walker in 1834 in a ceremony at a York church has been described as Britain's first lesbian "marriage".

Every part of Lister's story is based on fact, recorded in the four million words of her diaries that were written in a secret code that has now been broken. As Wainwright told the recent BFI and Radio Times Television Festival, when she first pitched the drama in 2003, "nobody was interested at all", but added that it was only when the BBC asked her what she'd like to write after the success of Happy Valley that she was able to get the project commissioned.

"The time is right now with the conversations about sexuality and gender that people are articulating," says the writer. BEN DOWELL

A glorious summer of cricket

And thanks to Kerry Packer you can follow it on TV, radio and online

FORTY YEARS HAVE NOW passed since the naive world of cricket, whose players were grateful for their meagre rewards, was brutally gripped by the power of hard cash. Kerry Packer, the Australian television magnate, finally broke the stranglehold the Australian Broadcasting Corporation had over the right to broadcast the game. He did so by signing up the best players on the planet to play in his World Series in direct competition to the Australian Cricket Board, which eventually had no choice but to yield and sell out to Packer's Channel Nine.

It was no bad thing. I was an 18-year-old professional cricketer at the time, and the Packer revolution transformed cricket. Although the benefits to the players took longer to filter through, longer contracts and eventually better pay were all due to Packer, along with the day/night cricket, coloured clothing and white balls that we take for granted these days.

However, it was the first example of money talking within cricket; and particularly television money. In the original dispute, Packer offered the ACB A$1.5 million over three years, which was eight times what the ABC was paying. In the end he paid A$3 million, a staggering amount at the time, and the eyes of cricket's administrators all round the world were immediately opened wide to the potential fortunes to be made.

The England and Wales Cricket Board has now secured a broadcasting deal worth £1.1 billion, which starts with the launch of a new competition, The Hundred, in 2020. Bidding was competitive but in an interesting twist to the Packer dispute, central to the ECB's strategy was the return of cricket to terrestrial television after a 15-year absence. This must be the first time cricket administrators have given such weight to accessibility to the public over nothing more than the size of a broadcaster's cheque.

Here, at least, the ECB has now realised that if cricket is to grow, people must be able easily to follow it. Rights-holders, such as BBC and Sky, are treated as partners rather than merely cash cows and they play a crucial role in spreading the word. It's worth comparing the relationship between a cricket board and its own broadcasters with those from overseas. Every board is now almost entirely dependent on broadcasting revenue to survive, and this winter, Sri Lanka Cricket and Cricket West Indies both sold their radio rights to TalkSport. Who can blame them? It's an open market, and TalkSport won the rights by paying more money than anyone else. It's a bonus income stream for the boards, and ultimately TalkSport must decide if the extra cost makes it a viable exercise.

'Every board is almost entirely dependent on broadcasting revenue'

THE INTERVENTION BY TalkSport prompted BBC Radio to set up an online cricket programme, The Cricket Social, which was available on the BBC Sport website.

The alternative was to ignore the matches altogether because commentary from the television was not permitted. However, such are the commitment and scale of Test Match Special's loyal fan base that every day, tens of thousands of listeners chose to follow the cricket chat on The Cricket Social.

This summer is unprecedented in the history of English cricket, which first hosts the World Cup and then the Ashes. Every match will be live on BBC Radio as rights-paying broadcasters do their bit to ensure that this unique opportunity to showcase the game is not missed.

WHAT WE WATCHED

That's Life! host Esther Rantzen was returning to work for a new series with her (and husband Desmond Wilcox's) baby daughter Emily in tow. "I am determined not to turn into a baby bore," said Rantzen, as she retook the reins of the consumer affairs show, which regularly pulled in 15 million viewers with tales of disappointed shoppers and dogs that said "sausages". "Every day I remind myself that I'm not the first to give birth. It's just that it feels that way." Things have moved on since then – Wilcox died in 2000, Emily has changed her name to Miriam and Rantzen returned to TV on Channel 5's Do the Right Thing.

WHAT YOU SAID

You were exercised by Clive James's interview with American polemicist Gore Vidal in the discussion show Cross Question, where Vidal pooh-poohed Christianity's contribution to world civilisation. D Johnson from Bucks found Vidal "supercilious" and Michael Gorman wrote to complain in the strongest possible terms: "Christianity is by no means 'dead' as was glibly assumed and Mr Vidal should have been interviewed by somebody who would have questioned much of what was said instead of agreeing with it."

‘We decided it would be useful

Catholic in the RUC

ADRIAN DUNBAR

‘Jed has put the sword through so many brilliant actors’

What does the final episode of Line of Duty hold in store for Ted Hastings? Ginny Dougary interrogates Adrian Dunbar about the future of the head of AC-12

WITHIN TEN MINUTES of talking to Adrian Dunbar, I find myself channelling Superintendent Ted Hastings, the chief of police anti-corruption unit AC-12 and most popular character in the BBC's wildly successful TV drama Line of Duty, which is heading for its feature-length series finale this week.

The actor, a Catholic brought up in Northern Ireland – like Hastings – is talking about whether his character will find love again. Our man is still in love with his wife Roisin but she has found someone else and wants a divorce.

“That’s probably something that people might be interested in. There’s a site, I think... What do they call them – Silver Singles?”

Noooooh, please, for the love of God, don’t have upright, uptight, old-fashioned Hastings going on a dating app! “You never know,” the actor says, in his wry, understated way, “Jed [Mercurio, series creator] might decide to have a bit of fun with him.”

This is the first time in my life that such an antique, deity-summoning phrase has come out of my mouth, but then the LoD effect is sweeping the nation. We are all talking in acronyms now – blithely referring to AC-12, the OCG (organised crime group) and SCG (serious crime group); DNA, DIs and DS-es tripping off our tongues with ease. And, above all, H. Please Jesus, Mary and Joseph do not say our guy, our beloved Hastings, is the most bent of bent coppers.

Dunbar is, of course, not saying a word. He and fellow regulars Vicky McClure (DI Kate Fleming) and Martin Compston (DS Steve Arnott) are well-practised – five seasons in – at the Seamus Heaney line, “Whatever you say, say nothing.” But they also like to tease...

We’re discussing a long scene that features in the finale, with Hastings (last seen banged up in a prison cell, shouting “I am not bent!”) the subject of a lengthy interrogation, when Dunbar adds: “I don’t know how you’re going to put that in your article?” I’ll just say that there’s going to be a long scene of interrogation. “There could be...” Ha, here we go. “You always have to do that with Line of Duty. ‘There’s a possibility of...’”

I wonder whether he is as discreet in his private life? “Yeah, I can keep my counsel. Absolutely. A friend needs to be able to confide in you and to be confident they can do that. Those things are important; they’re the bedrock of most friendships.”

MERCURIO ORIGINALLY INTENDED Hastings to be a shambolic genius, in the Columbo mould, whom everyone underestimates, but in the audition process, this changed. “That’s a very attractive type of character, absolutely, but we all came to the decision that it would be useful if the character was from outside the police system, making him a Catholic in the RUC [Royal Ulster Constabulary] – so he was an outsider within an organisation.”

This also meant Dunbar could keep his own accent. “I come from that generation where we really love the likes of Bill Paterson and Pete Postlethwaite and Alun Armstrong – all working-class guys who kept their accent. So I think where you can keep your accent you should, ▷

◁ for greater authenticity,” he says. “But I did The Hollow Crown [as Plantagenet], for instance, and that was definitely not my own accent!”

Martin Compston, by contrast, speaks pure Estuary for the duration of Line of Duty filming, including when he’s not on set, when in real life he actually has a broad Greenock accent. “Yeah, he keeps his accent going and then now and again we might have a party and at about one o’clock in the morning, he just goes into Scots.” That must be a bit weird. “It is weird because we can’t understand a word he’s saying by then!”

We all have our favourite Hastings-isms. Mine is, “I am calm! I am bloody calm!” Although it’s a close-run thing with “Now we’re sucking diesel”, with “I didn’t float up the Lagan on a bubble” close behind. He was fortunate, he says, that Mercurio was receptive to his suggestions as to how Hastings could be. “People start to get involved with the character,” he explains, “and you start adding little bits of characterisation, with both myself and Jed putting in these little Northern Irish-isms and people get interested in that.”

BUT DO YOU actually use those expressions yourself? “Not necessarily, no,” he says. “Those were phrases, I have to say, that my father used.” Dunbar decided that Hastings would be a good man manager – “not necessarily a good woman manager [cue “She’s a great wee girl doing a bang-up job”]. When everyone is in uniform, he treats them all the same – as though they are all men.” He gives a big laugh. “He is a bit old school. I think people understand that about him. He’s a bit Bill Shankly and Alex Ferguson.”

Is he surprised that Hastings has become a heartthrob figure? “Yeah, well, that’s a subject of some amusement, obviously,” he says, as dry as can be. That wasn’t intended in the script? “No, we didn’t expect for any of that to happen.” You must have a laugh about it? “We do, we do – I mean obviously there’s the Gill Biggeloe thing and all that to-do,” he says, referring to AC-12’s legal counsel, played by Polly Walker, who managed to get Ted into bed.

He was even asked onto Woman’s Hour to explain Hastings’s homme fatal appeal. “They were asking me why I thought women responded so much to Ted and I think it’s because they all realise they could have him round their fingers within 20 minutes. Women like that. ‘Oh, Ted, he’s so easily led.’ In personal relationships I think that’s where he’s at.”

Hang on, Ted did resist Gill’s charms for a time. “He did, yes – he was trying to hang on to his marriage for as long as he could.”

WHALE OF A TIME
With his band, Adie Dunbar and the Jonahs

Dunbar is the eldest of seven children – he has two brothers and four sisters, none of whom has followed him into the arts – and was born in a working-class area of Enniskillen in 1958. His father was a joiner and the actor has spoken about his regret that they were never able to talk in a meaningful way. The family moved to Portadown, which he has described as “the most marginalised of all the Nationalist communities in the North... if you were Catholic, you literally couldn’t walk up the street without getting into some kind of conflict... Everyone on our estate was living in fear.”

‘His heartthrob status is the subject of some amusement’

He himself was dragged out of a shop because of his school uniform and beaten “while the RUC strolled by”. Elsewhere, Dunbar has talked about seeing the RUC as a “sectarian” and “oppressive force” when he was growing up. The family moved back to Enniskillen when the Troubles became too intense.

As children, he and his siblings watched the Ealing comedies on television and there was a piano in the house and always music. “My mother was a wonderful singer and we listened to lots of tenors, Mario Lanza and Josef Locke [Dunbar co-wrote and starred in the 1991 film Hear My Song about the great Irish tenor] but also Kathleen Ferrier and D’Oyly Carte and Gilbert and Sullivan. All of it was accessible and fun.”

While working in an abattoir in his teens, he played bass guitar and sang back-up vocals with an Elvis impersonator. “It was a very good job at the time, I really enjoyed it.” He later became lead singer in his own band – Adie Dunbar and the Jonahs, playing a style of music he describes as “folk jazz”. They released an album called Two Brothers with some songs written by him, including Turn Me Around, about a forlorn, boozy tumbleweed of a man. He has a beautiful voice. The night of our interview, he is performing jazz standards in a Pizza Express in central London.

HE STARTED ACTING and was encouraged to apply to the Guildhall School of Music and Drama in London. He was awarded a place, graduating in 1983, and fell in love with the city where he still lives with his Sydney-born wife, Anna Nygh (they have been married for 33 years), describing his Crouch End neighbourhood in north London as a “fantastic part of the world”.

Their daughter, Madeleine, 32, works in New York and in the UK, writing rap songs with kids who are struggling and getting them back into school. His stepson, Teddy, from Nygh’s first marriage, runs his own film company, Fully Focused, working around issues such as knife crime and homelessness among the young.

He has appeared in terrific films like My Left Foot and The Crying Game, and in the television series Inspector Morse and Cracker. He has played Oscar Wilde and Brendan Behan on stage, often performing at the Abbey Theatre in Dublin and the Lyric in Belfast. He writes, directs, acts, sings – what more could a creative man want?

Well, he wouldn’t say no to a London play. “I end up working in Ireland the whole time,” he says, “which I love and I can go home and ▷

THE WONDERFUL EVERYDAY

◁ see everybody, but it would be nice to be like other people who live in London and just head down town every day and feel like a proper actor working in the West End.”

When I ask him who he would like to work with now, he checks that the Line of Duty audience will have been introduced to the new star character – his chief interrogator, played by Anna Maxwell Martin, who has made it her mission to bring Ted down: “She’s very funny and I’d love to do a sitcom with her.”

He reveres Jimmy McGovern and Paul Greengrass as writers and also Lisa McGee, the writer and creator of Derry Girls. “What’s interesting about her writing is that she manages to shed light on a period that was very, very difficult without explicitly referring to it.”

Dunbar goes on to talk about the two education systems in Northern Ireland: one is state-run and largely Protestant; the other is run by the Catholic Church (he was educated by the Christian Brothers). “I don’t think the people in the rest of the UK really understand this. You might be in a kindergarten with your best friend who lives next door, then at the age of five you’re made aware that that person is different, and they head off in one direction and you head off in another. And that is basically where the dysfunction within Northern Ireland starts. In the 1960s in America, they had bussing – and in Northern Ireland, they still have bussing. They are bussing children from one side of the city to the other.” He is passionate about introducing integrated education, and has said: “You can’t make someone fear another person if they shared a desk for seven years.”

As for the recent tragic murder of journalist Lyra McKee amid rioting and fires, he is not at all surprised. “This is the result of Brexit. Brexit has destabilised Northern Ireland terribly. And we can’t go back to a hard border. If we did I’m afraid there will be civil disobedience, which could lead anywhere, really. It doesn’t bear thinking about. It certainly didn’t bear thinking about when everybody was campaigning to leave the EU. No one gave a thought to Northern Ireland and what might happen.”

With our time coming to an end, we discuss Mercurio’s ruthless dispatching of even the biggest stars on his shows, making him the serial killer of screen-writing – the latest victim being Stephen Graham’s undercover officer John Corbett.

We know there will be a sixth series. The big question is, will Hastings be in it? “If you think about it, Jed has put the sword through so many brilliant actors. You just think, ‘None of us are safe. It could happen at any time.’”

I accuse him of being disingenuous when he affects vagueness about the ending of this season. Come on, Adrian, of course you know what’s going to happen! “Well, yes, I do know what happens in the last episode. I don’t know, however, what the edit of it is like, and the edits do throw up different things. Bits you thought were going to be in sometimes aren’t.”

In this context, I bring up The Big Chill – it turns out Dunbar was unaware that Kevin Costner was supposed to be in the 1983 film in flashback but ended up just being a corpse in a coffin. That was certainly an edit that Costner wasn’t expecting! “They probably made a wise decision there,” he says cheekily.

HE IS REALLY grateful for this plum of a role. “Obviously, it’s brilliant for an actor at my stage in my career to get a part like this. I’ve been banging away at the coalface, if you like, for many years now, and I’ve done some really wonderfully interesting work, I’ve been very lucky. But I’ve never had a character that I could really throw my stuff at.”

I persist and put it another way. Is there an element of the LoD actors putting their careers on hold waiting for Mercurio to reel them back in for the next season? Isn’t it conceivable Dunbar might get a more attractive offer – let’s say, that longed-for role on a West End stage?

“Oh, I see,” he says. “Well, I’m sure Jed would find a way to say, ‘Poor old Hastings, that was terrible that car crash, wasn’t it?’ But I’m not going to get anything better than Ted. That’s not going to happen, so don’t worry. And I’d miss everybody too much.”

Is Hastings

H?

AC-12's top cop appears to be guilty of something,
but is he bent?
Mark Lawson
examines the case...

THE FIFTH SERIES of Line of Duty has tormented the audience with the possibility that H, the senior police officer running a network of corrupt cops, is Superintendent Ted Hastings (Adrian Dunbar), the head of anti-corruption unit AC-12. DCS Patricia Carmichael (Anna Maxwell Martin), the commanding officer of AC-3, which polices AC-12 for corruption, certainly thinks he is. But while Hastings clearly seems to have something to hide, viewers would be hugely shocked if, in this week's 90-minute finale, the apparently incorruptible Ulsterman turns out to be rotting the organisation from the top. And it might be just as surprising if showrunner Jed Mercurio, given his record of jaw-dropping plot twists across Line of Duty and Bodyguard, gives the audience the solution they are being nudged to suspect.

Using no information not so far available to viewers of the BBC1 show, here is the evidence for and against – and a haul of possible other Hs.

THE EVIDENCE FOR

1 Hastings is a senior police officer whose surname begins with the suspicious letter, and in series four he was addressed as “H” by Assistant Chief Constable Derek Hilton.

2 During AC-12 investigations, Hastings has more than once made the point that the police officers most vulnerable to corruption are those with debts or secrets. The superintendent is clearly short of cash and has an impending divorce from his wife Roisin. The scene in which Hastings rushed to have his laptop wiped, soon after undercover officer John Corbett seemed to communicate with H via an online audio link, suggests that he is hiding something.

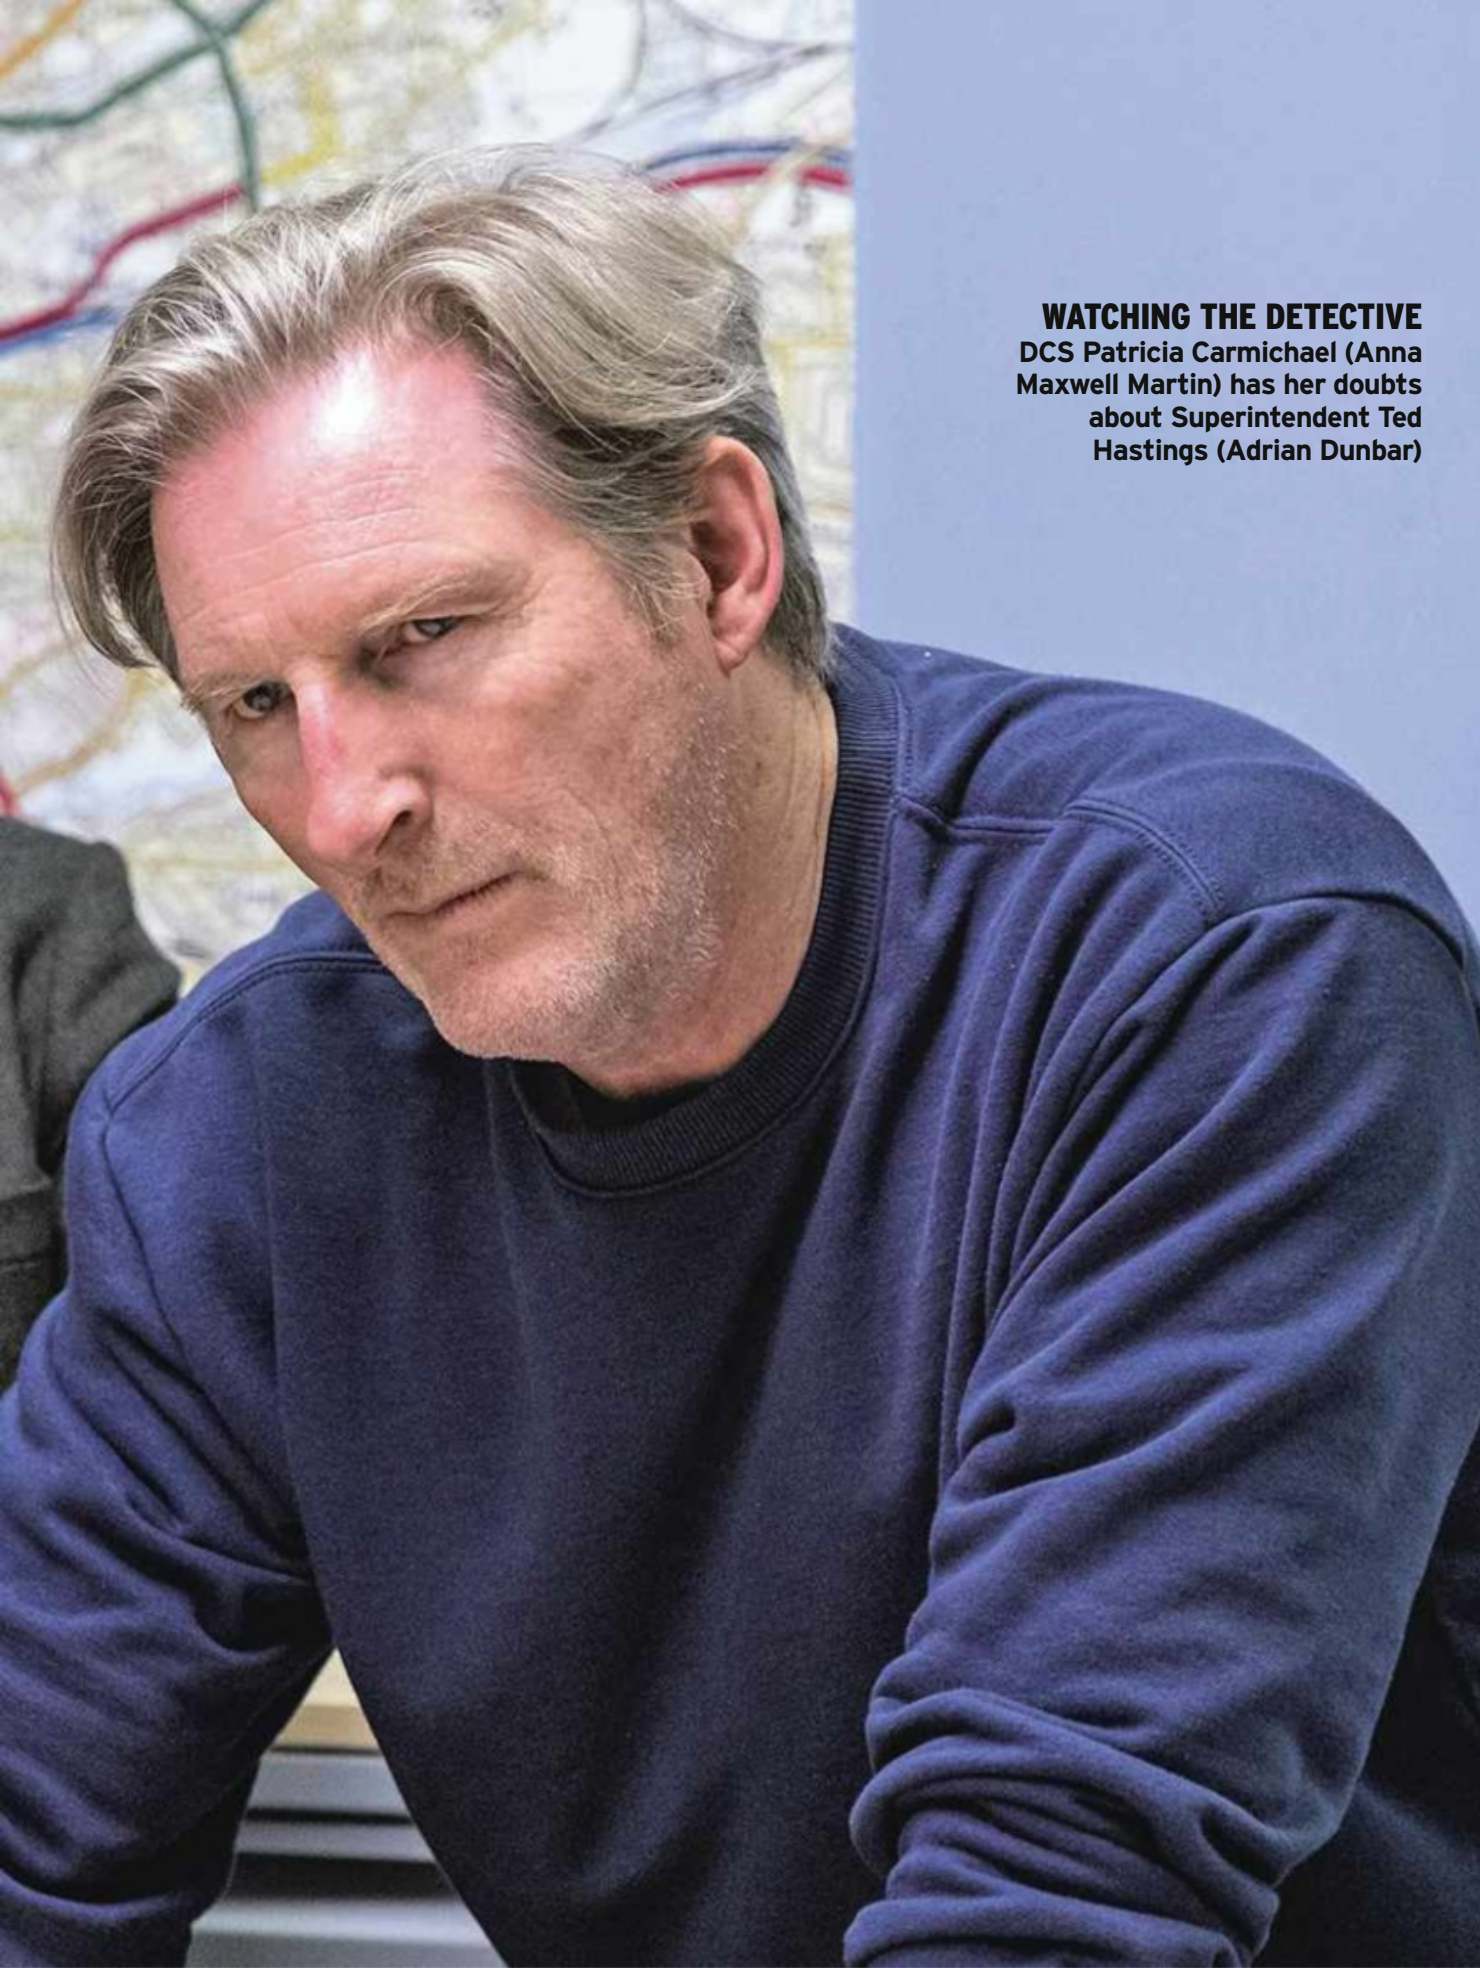

In recent episodes, Dunbar has also offered an impressive repertoire of guilty and shifty looks. In interviews, the actor has suggested that Mercurio specifically directed him towards using such expressions.

3 When Hastings offered to “pretend to be H” (a layered scene, even for Mercurio) during an online sting operation, he mis-spelt “definitely” in the same way that the “real” H had while communicating with Corbett. Is this deliberately incriminating or detailed impersonation?

4 Hastings's back story includes serving in Northern Ireland during the Troubles, where he was one of the few Catholic officers in the predominantly Protestant Royal Ulster Constabulary. The revelation of John Corbett's family links with Northern Ireland encourages the view that Hastings's background is crucial to the revelation of H's identity.

Intriguingly, the eighth letter of the alphabet has a particular Northern Irish history. In the traditional local dialects, Catholics usually pronounce it “haitch”, while Protestants say “aitch”. This was such a reliable signifier that paramilitaries would reputedly ask potential victims to recite the alphabet to identify their religion. So the nickname “Haitch” could have been used in the RUC to warn unknowing colleagues of Hastings's Catholicism.

WATCHING THE DETECTIVE
DCS Patricia Carmichael (Anna Maxwell Martin) has her doubts about Superintendent Ted Hastings (Adrian Dunbar)

THE EVIDENCE AGAINST

1 Hilton, who taunted Hastings as “H”, was himself a senior police officer whose name began with H. So were DCS Les Hargreaves – killed in the third episode of the current series after turning up during a sting designed to catch H – and DCI Roz Huntley, who went to jail at the end of series four. And they are only some of the alternatives (see panel, right). In a session at the recent Radio Times Television Festival, Mercurio admitted: “I think there are about six of them whose names begin with H. And I had some fun with other people who might have ‘H’ as a nickname.”

2 If a senior police officer was running a web of corrupt officers, the only point of taking over the running of AC-12 would be to prevent other rogue cops being caught. But, on Hastings’s watch, the unit has exposed a vast number of bent cops. You can argue that officers Fleming and Arnott do the leg work. But why would Hastings protect and promote officers who keep inconveniently uncovering more of H’s hidden operators?

3 Given the inevitable lengthy prison sentence if discovered, H’s reward for running a treacherous network would surely be vast financial rewards from backhanders and bribes. But as Hastings has ended up living in a grotty hotel and being tempted by dodgy investment schemes, he would have to be a notably incompetent Mr Big.

4 Apparent attempts to frame Hastings are a strong sub-plot in the fifth series. There is the feel of a honey-trap to the attempted seduction of Hastings by lawyer Gill Biggeloe, who also has form in obstructing previous investigations. The investment scheme offered by former DCI Mark Moffatt also looks like an attempt to compromise Hastings, including giving him an envelope full of banknotes. Mercurio may want us to think that Hastings is H, but that doesn’t mean he is. In fact, with Line of Duty’s record, it may mean he almost certainly isn’t.

ALTERNATIVE SUSPECTS?

TOMMY HUNTER

The gangster was killed in series two from wounds sustained as a prisoner under escort. Mercurio has always suggested that the solution will include threads from all series. Maybe Hunter was in fact an undercover officer who went rogue, later replaced by John Corbett. But perhaps too convoluted? H-Probability rating H

HARINDERPAL “HARI” BAINS

Jailed for corruption in series three, Bains wouldn’t fit the description of H as a senior police officer. But the actor who played him, Arsher Ali, has since become a star, which might make a comeback attractive. H-Probability rating H

DCI ROSEANNE HUNTLEY

The only major H-surname character still alive, though in jail. DCI Mark Moffatt, another series 5 returnee, was Huntley’s Police Federation rep, in scenes in which he appeared to be trying to pervert the course of justice, suggesting that Huntley may be coming back into play. And what a coup it would be were Thandie Newton to return. H-Probability rating HHH

ACC DEREK HILTON

Another very likely runner, identified as H at the end of season four. However, both Hilton and Hargreaves seem disqualified by the writer’s preference for unusual suspects, and the fact that, being dead, they are unavailable for a climactic interrogation scene. H-Probability rating H

DCS LES HARGREAVES

Surname and rank fit, and by turning up at the Eastfield depot shootout, he seemed to identify himself with H. The obvious candidate, but when does Mercurio ever do the obvious? H-Probability rating HH

ANOTHER H COMPLETELY

There are several script references to the infiltration of the police by Freemasons. Two key figures in the founding legends of freemasonry were Haram Abiff and Hiram, King of Tyre. Did a masonic police officer pay tribute by adopting their initial? In which case, it could be almost anyone. H-Probability rating HHHH

THERE IS NO H...

It remains possible that the alleged presence of H at the centre of the web may turn out to have been misinformation, designed to intimidate and incriminate Hastings and distract from what is really going on. H-Probability rating HHHH

“I miss being loved”

He's a TV drama mastermind, but Russell T Davies says his greatest work will always be caring for his dying husband

THE RT INTERVIEW BY GINNY DOUGARY

RUSSELL T DAVIES arrives slightly breathless and immediately friendly. He is tall (6ft 6in), dressed in a plaid shirt, jeans and hiking boots with a rucksack slung over one shoulder. In a single bound, he enfolds me in the warmest of hugs and pours himself a cup of tea.

We're in the boardroom of the company that's publicising his new BBC1 drama, Years and Years, which starts next week – his last was A Very English Scandal, with Hugh Grant as Jeremy Thorpe. It's intended to be set in a dystopian future but feels anxiously all too recognisably like today. Did he feel that he could write quickly enough about the future to be ahead of the material he was creating?

“The world is now so mad that it's faster than my imagination,” he says. “I mean, at no point could I have imagined Donald Trump standing in a gold room full of hamburgers. It's impossible to predict.”

The six-part series, which spans 15 years from 2019, has a terrific roll call of British actors, including Anne Reid, Russell Tovey, Jessica Hynes, Rory Kinnear and, in a splendidly splenetic role, Emma Thompson. With the exception of Thompson, who plays populist celebrity-turned-politician Vivienne Rook – think Katie Hopkins meets Nigel Farage – the others are members of the Lyons family who live in Manchester. It's an epic drama, with a shocking finale in the first episode, but at its centre lie the ties and tensions of family life.

As Davies says, it's quite tricky to describe, “which is almost a worry when you're pitching and selling to people because I like a one-line pitch”. I say it's Peter Watkins's 1965 The War Game meets Davies's own Queer as Folk meets Doctor Who... “meets Cold Feet,” he adds. “The nice Manchester happy people. I love Cold Feet. Please bring back Cold Feet. PLEASE! This year was SO brilliant. Do I write a letter? Do I join that bandwagon?”

The futuristic elements in episode one of Years and Years are tweaks of what exists now. Mobile phones are not triangular or circular or crazily different, but you can just tap one to another and contacts are miraculously transferred. The family talks regularly to one another in a big simultaneous conversation, walking around the house – not trapped by a screen on their mobile phone – “It's a conference call, in a sense, but an updated one.”

Vivienne Rook's political rise comes on the back of her deliberate provocation on the panel of Question Time, where she uses a four-letter expletive to express her lack of concern about Israel and Palestine. “She's very aware of what she's doing. It's that modern trickster who knows how to play the media machine – it's Trump, it's Johnson, it's Farage.

“In fact, by the time this interview sees print, Boris Johnson might be Prime Minister. It's absolutely possible. Why? Because he's so entertaining, because he's so funny. This is what Trump is. The whole world has been Apprentice-d.”

“Anne Reid does a speech where she says, ‘Beware the tricksters. The clowns. They will laugh us into hell.’”

Davies wants to stress the warmth and strength of the family in his drama because “don't we all turn on the news now and say, ‘Oh for God's sake!’ and turn it off? I can't bear hearing all those people – on all sides. And as for ‘You pass my deal and I will resign...’ The lack of sense in that makes my head boil.

“So, I don't want to present this as a drama that will make your head boil. It's about people dealing with those issues, but it's not about the issues themselves. It's about how to survive.”

Is it the Philip Larkin line about all that survives of us is love? “Oh yes, yes, yes! Wait till you see the ending. Yes!”

ALTHOUGH DAVIES IS at his saddest when we meet – the week marking six months since his husband and partner of 20 years, Andrew Smith, died – he is like a geyser erupting with many wild bursts of laughter and hilarity. Just turned 56, he and his two sisters were born and brought up in Swansea by Vivian and Barbara, who were both classics teachers. He is curious and generous – with his time, with himself. His voice is extremely musical, tilting up and down like the hills and valleys of Wales, and he can talk at a gallop.

In the late 90s, after years of being frugal and saving (£20,000 by 1995: “because people said, ‘As a writer you're going to be poor, you're going to live in an attic and you'll need money to fall back on’”), Davies – then in his ▷ ◁ mid-30s – had a party animal phase, which came to an abrupt end when he suffered an accidental overdose.

Were you actually close to death? “I think it was pretty bad. Yes.” Were you taken to hospital? “No, so it wasn’t that bad, obviously. But if I’d gone a bit further... Anyway, it was an exaggerated version of the moment everybody realises, ‘Time to stop going out now and settle down.’”

Davies then set out to find The Boyfriend: “I thought, ‘I’m going to go out and if I sleep with a hundred men, one of them will do.’ I went out ferociously – five nights a week, looking for the one. And it worked. Andrew was number 35. I’m going to write a self-help book about this one day.”

ANDREW AND RUSSELL met in a club “at ten to two in the morning”, Davies recalls to the minute. What initially attracted you to him? “Handsome. He was so handsome. Across the club I could not believe that there was this handsome man and he was looking at me. I literally did this [swivels around assuming it must be someone behind him]. All the time I was going out with him, I thought, ‘How did I get such a handsome man?’”

In his communicative way, Davies searches for a photograph of his late husband on his phone and presents an old picture of a dreamy-eyed Adonis in a black leather jacket. But, as he says, for the long term it’s got to be about more than the good looks, so what qualities was he looking for in The Boyfriend? “Well, you don’t know till you find him. Someone to have a laugh with, someone to be relaxed with – that’s all.

“Because my job is high-pressured. It’s tough. I have to have opinions and express what I want and be prepared to fight for that all day long. We both loved television and watched it all the time and we properly laughed. We used to laugh night and day.”

‘I could not believe this handsome man was looking at me’

It helped that Andrew worked in a completely different world as a customs officer: “He had no idea that people wrote things. He said, ‘What do you mean, you write?’”

When the men met, Davies was already successful, working on Queer as Folk, which was to be his ground-breaking series for Channel 4. This preceded his even bigger hit, the revival of Doctor Who (a passion since childhood) into the must-watch Saturday-evening family show.

Back in 2011, the couple were living in Los

I surprised myself because I thought my work was more important to me. I thought I’d have got a nurse in – I would never, ever have done that. He was a bit disabled but quite able-bodied so I didn’t have to do the dirty end of caring, but nonetheless I was there. He wasn’t steady on the stairs, so I was with him night and day to help him and get every meal ready.

“I was surprised by my patience and I’m surprised by how much I miss it. I knew I would miss him. I knew I would miss the love. But, actually, I loved caring for someone. There’s not enough written about carers. I never resented it but you would think, ‘Well, if this is over one day, I’ll be free.’ I imagined there would be a great freedom. I imagined I would run off to New York, but I’m here because I only want to go to New York with him, really. All that freedom that I imagined would exist means nothing.

◁ he would die one day. We had 13 years before he was ill but it's hard to remember that at the moment. I'm stuck in the last four weeks of him dying.

"Little by little, I know it will pass. I knew I would miss loving him, but what I didn't know I would miss is being loved. That's quite hard. That's hideous, actually. No one warns you about that. I didn't expect that to vanish but it's just gone."

A PART FROM HIS home in Manchester, the city he's lived in since he was 24, Davies still has a house in Mumbles, Swansea, and he gets out his phone again to show the view across the whole bay, the curve of sand and sea, from his kitchen window. His sisters, both teachers like their parents, live there and he considers it to be his home also.

When he was growing up, the television was always on. "My parents were war children so it was almost like an extension of the radio that you kept on during the war." In the 70s living-room, all brown furnishings and art works made of string, the family would watch shows like I Claudius. "I was about 12 and it was full of orgies and stuff. The first men I saw kissing were on I Claudius."

"My mother was always in the kitchen and she was a phenomenal cook: she would do osso bucco and make real rum babas. They travelled a lot. On the day she died, the oven broke."

From the age of 11, he knew how he felt about boys. You weren't the only gay in the village, so to speak? "You were at that age, yes," he says, "in the 60s." John Inman and Frankie Howerd were on the telly... "You didn't discuss them being gay – they were just 'elaborate.'"

His father was a keen rugby player who came close to being capped for Wales and was chairman of Swansea Rugby Club for many years. Kingsley Amis, who wrote Lucky Jim when he was a junior lecturer at Swansea University and later The Old Devils, could have been writing about Davies's parents since they were in the same set of friends.

"When it was on television, people were phoning me up and saying: 'That's your mum and dad on television!' All those drunk people having gin and tonics, pissing in the garden and the women clinging to each other with laughter."

Davies didn't share his father's enthusiasm for rugby and when a PE teacher at his vast school (with some 2,000 pupils, from which he got a place at Oxford) insisted that he play because he was "Viv's son", his father intervened. He picked his 11-year-old son up from school and they went for a walk. "He gave me the most fantastic little speech saying, 'I do not expect you to love rugby. I see fathers bringing up their sons, making them play rugby and I think it's wrong – you do whatever you want to do.'"

"Little did he know! I took that to heart! HA-HA-HA-HAH. But what a wise thing for him to say. He was a good person and brought me up properly."

He came out as gay to his parents when he was a punk in his teens. "You rehearse it but it doesn't come out exactly as you imagine it," he says. "I did my mum first and my dad second. My dad's was like a rollercoaster of a sentence. I started over there [pointing to the right] – talking about France, and this sentence literally went up and down, over the hills and over the dales, and came back round through the corkscrew to say, '...and by the way, I'm gay.'"

"Dad was very relaxed and said, 'I thought so.' Same with my mother. Because they watch you night and day. And you never stop coming out, do you? I come out every day."

Davies didn't talk about his job with Andrew, but his husband always watched his programmes on transmission. "That's why I'm quite sad about this one. As he was dying, he said: 'I'll never get to see Years and Years now.' And I said: 'Oh, don't worry, it's rubbish.' I thought it might make him feel a bit better. That's terrible, isn't it? Bless him."

There is no comfort for him in the hope of rejoining him in the afterlife: "I don't believe in it for a second, I'm afraid. My sister was with me as Andrew died and she said, 'He's here now. He's looking down at us,' and I said, 'Stop. Stop now. Don't do that.' It was really nice of her, but it's just not true. She said it for the love-liest reasons."

DAVIES, LIKE THE writers he admires, is able to create worlds for everyone from children to knowing adults; fantasy to gritty reality and sometimes where they overlap. He holds no truck with the idea that you can conjure a way of being only if you have been that way yourself.

He quotes the example of Ricky Gervais's Netflix series After Life, in which he plays a man dealing – badly – with life after the death of his wife. "It's a fantastic piece of work and, as far as I know, Ricky Gervais has not experienced that sort of grief, and I have. I watch it thinking, 'You have imagined this perfectly.' His insight into your life alone once your partner is gone is horrifying and I think he has imagined it. Well done."

Davies says that something may have been experienced but that doesn't mean that it has merit if the person expressing it can't write. "A sentence that has sustained me through all my writing is: 'A moment's imagination is worth a lifetime's experience.'"

MILO PARKER PLAYS GERRY

What was it like filming the final series and saying goodbye to Corfu?

Leaving the house and the island was emotional. But it's bittersweet because we've really seen Gerry grow up this year and it's a nice place to end the family's story.

Do you remember when you first got the part of Gerry?

I would have been 12 – I'm 16 now. I'd done a couple of acting bits and bobs already – I was in Mr Holmes with Ian McKellen – and I went for an audition. I hadn't read My Family and Other Animals at the time, but I knew of Gerald Durrell.

What was your first impression of Corfu?

It was my first time in Greece and getting off the plane felt like stepping into an oven. I was in awe. On the way to our flat I kept thinking, "Wow, I'm here for free!" and pinching myself!

Your dad, Ray, has accompanied you on set from the beginning.

He's retired, so he's been my full-time chaperone, but he loves it... he really got a free holiday! He's brilliant, I don't know how I'd do it without him. He's so supportive and really looks after me when I'm away.

How did you manage filming around school?

I have a tutor, Katharine, who came to Corfu with me to keep me up to date with all my work. I'd actually go back ahead of all my mates because I had one-to-one tuition, but I did miss them, and my mum and my little sister Amelie who's 13, but they always came out for a visit. I've also got a little dog called Sybil who I didn't get to see and missed terribly.

What's it been like playing Gerry?

He had a brilliant childhood; I'm very jealous of him. It's not quite the same as my childhood in Suffolk. I mean, I've got a good life, nice mates, lovely family, but if they all fancy moving to Corfu, I'd be up for that!

So what's next?

I've got my GCSEs in a couple of weeks, so I've got my head in the books. And I'm doing auditions for work after my exams. Fingers crossed they'll go all right and I'll be able to do something in the summer. But it's important to have that back-up, so I'll do my A-levels as well, then decide whether I want to go to uni or drama school.

It's tricky to make the transition from child star to adult actor...

It is. I think it's important to try to do something different next. I'd love to take on a serious role – show a bit of variety. A role in a crime drama would be great – Gerry the serial killer, that would surprise the viewers!

DAISY WATERSTONE PLAYS MARGO

What was it like filming the last series and saying goodbye to Corfu?

It was sad knowing that it was the last time we'd be out there, but it was just as amazing as it always was. And we all know we're going to come back eventually, it's not the end. It's like closing a door to a room filled with sunshine and bliss and happiness, but not slamming it, just leaving it ajar. And, in the meantime, I'm going on holiday to Corfu later this month!

Do you ever watch back that first series?

My niece is four and whenever I visit she wants to watch it with me. But I was just 21 when I first flew out and it feels like I'm watching a different person because I've gone through so much since then – I was a girl and now I feel like a woman.

How has The Durrells helped you develop?

We were all really young and inexperienced but we were so looked after and cradled. Keeley [Hawes, who plays their mother, Louisa] has been amazing to work alongside and gives the best advice – she's always so professional, always knows her lines, yet she's not intimidating at all and it's always very relaxing acting alongside her. She has made us better actors.

How does Margo's childhood compare with your own?

I grew up in London, as the youngest of eight – my dad married three times. And while Holland Park isn't quite Corfu, my family is similar in that we are all very different, big personalities but, on the whole, we get on well.

Goodbye Corfu

The young stars of The Durrells reflect on how they've grown over four series

And what's next?

Nothing at the moment – I was thinking of putting my headshot on one of those big advertising billboards on Oxford Street saying “Actor Available”. It would be great to get a script I feel connected to, like I did with The Durrells.

CALLUM WOODHOUSE PLAYS LESLIE
What was it like filming the last series and saying goodbye to Corfu?

Very sad, but I've made such strong connections and we've shared something so special, that however tricky it is, I know we will still get together. It's just a shame it won't be every morning in the Corfu sunshine.

What was your first impression of Corfu?

When I left college, I went straight to drama school. A lot of my friends went on gap years, and everyone said, “Do you not want to see the world?” I remember hoping I would one day go to exciting places through work. Then the first job I got was on this beautiful island. I was 21 and I fell in love with everything about it!

How does Leslie's upbringing compare with yours?

I grew up in Stockton-on-Tees, in Teesside, with an older brother and sister, which was very different. I wasn't allowed guns, for one thing! But me and my friends were always down the quarry on our bikes fooling around, so we had that freedom.

How has The Durrells helped you develop?

The thing that I've learnt from Keeley over the years is not to be so impatient. I wanted everything immediately – the West End play, the Marvel comic-book movie, the HBO series... Sometimes, in getting that, you forget to appreciate where you are, and I've definitely been guilty of that in the past.

And what's next?

I don't know, really. I've got a few little bits... I'm hoping there will be more Cold Feet and I did an episode of Father Brown, which was really fun. But will any job be as amazing as this one? Perhaps Leslie and [housekeeper] Lugaretzia could get their own spin-off?

JOSH O'CONNOR PLAYS LARRY
What was it like filming the last series and saying goodbye to Corfu?

For now... We could do a Downton and make a movie. Or a Christmas or Easter special. I know we'd all come back immediately if there was a chance to. But for now, we've created an ending that is so beautiful, every single one of us cried.

Were you surprised by the instant fame the show brought?

I was 25 and the first time I was recognised was at Glastonbury. It was 3am and a guy just ran over to me and went, “Durrells!” And ran off. Since then, I've had a lot of people say, “Don't be so nasty to your brother.” But he has to be a bit nasty, that's what brothers are like. And he's also full of love.

How does Larry's childhood compare with your own?

I grew up in the Cotswolds with two brothers and our family dynamic was actually quite similar; my little brother's a lot like Margo and my older brother – I was Leslie to his Larry.

Do you ever watch back that first series?

Me and Callum [Woodhouse] went to the White House in Kalami [Lawrence Durrell's home in Corfu] and they play The Durrells there on repeat. We were having dinner and started watching ourselves. Then Call went, “Just brilliant, this bit!” and we started complimenting each other – until we realised that everyone was watching us praising ourselves on screen! I'm really proud of what we've done.

How has The Durrells helped you develop?

Nobody in my family has ever been involved in this industry. I left drama school and slugged away doing bit parts and theatre, but I had no idea if I was good enough to make a career of it. The Durrells gave me that confidence. I would never have got the part in [award-winning film] God's Own Country without it.

And what's next?

I went straight from The Durrells to The Crown [the Netflix drama about the royal family, in which he plays Prince Charles]. The funniest part was the two make-up departments having to remember that Larry's parting goes this way, and Charles's goes that way. My hair was all over the shop!

Another famous man who's part of a big, important family!

Yes, it is kind of nerve-racking but, again, I've been surrounded by really great people. I worked with Olivia [Colman, who plays the Queen] on Les Misérables, and so I immediately felt safe with her.

Minutes from meltdown

A new drama brings to life the chilling events of April 1986 in Ukraine...

THE OFFICIAL SOVIET death toll for the disaster at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant is 31. Two people were killed on 26 April 1986 when the reactor exploded during a safety check, and 29 died of acute radiation sickness in the following weeks. The radioactive fallout released was 400 times that of the Hiroshima bomb, but none of the 50,000 people who lived nearby nor the estimated 600,000 "liquidators" who either volunteered or were volunteered to clean up the site are included, despite thousands later dying of cancer. There is huge uncertainty surrounding the actual total number of casualties, with estimates ranging from 4,000 to 250,000.

Neither does the official figure factor in Valery Legasov, a scientist who hanged himself in his apartment two years and a day after the explosion. Recruited to tackle the incident and oversee the clean-up alongside Soviet minister Boris 'Soviet authorities lied about radiation levels on the roof'

Shcherbina, Legasov was forced to participate in what was perhaps the last Soviet show trial, a cover-up scapegoating a few individuals for a catastrophe whose roots lay deep in the arcane workings of the Soviet state.

"Legasov was the story's Cassandra who understood the dangers and how bad it could go," says Jared Harris, who plays Legasov to Stellan Skarsgard's Shcherbina in Sky Atlantic's new five-part drama, Chernobyl. "Everyone knew it could happen but no one had planned what to do if it did, so they had to figure out how to fix something completely unprecedented more or less on the spot."

"The Chernobyl story shows both the absolute worst and absolute best of humanity," adds series creator Craig Mazin. The two men are speaking at Ignalina, Chernobyl's sister nuclear power station in Lithuania, where part of the series was filmed. Once the source of 75 per cent of Lithuania's energy, Ignalina is now being decommissioned as a condition of the country joining the EU. Up close, it's easy to see why the programme makers wanted to use it as a set. Its gigantic aerial walkways, monolithic concrete buildings and towering chimneys lend authenticity, and corridors a mile and a half long could never have been replicated with CGI. Access was even briefly granted to the reactor room itself.

Security at the plant feels positively Soviet, with passports confiscated on entry and armed patrols escorting cast, crew and visiting journalists through approved areas.

"This place is weird," says Harris. "These weren't normal shoots. People went in through a door just to be filmed coming out and they got wanded every time to see if they'd picked up any radiation."

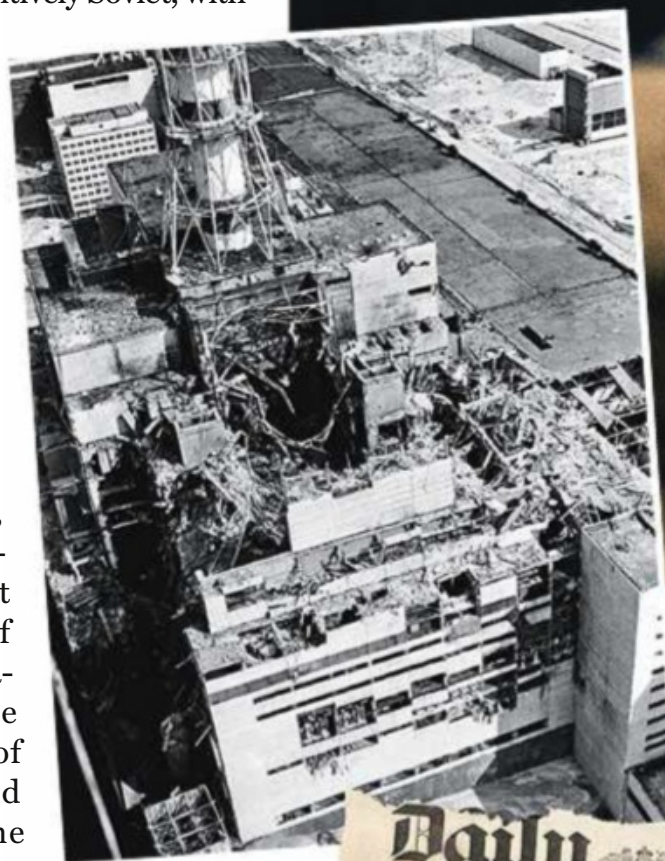

It was Legasov's instinctive, apparently sensible prioritisation of putting out the fire that inadvertently took half of Europe to the brink of apocalypse. Damping down the inferno with aerial dumps of lead, sand and boron would have eventually caused the reactor core to melt down into water tanks beneath it. The resulting explosion would have destroyed the remaining three reactors and left eastern Europe uninhabitable for at least a century.

Once that had been recognised, three divers were recruited to navigate a nightmarish vascular system of pipes in pitch darkness, opening the sluice gates by hand and allowing the water to be pumped out. The tanks were drained with just hours to spare. Equally humbling risks were taken by more than 3,000 "bio-robots": soldiers who cleaned the radioactive debris from the roofs of Chernobyl's other three reactors. Each soldier worked for just 90 seconds but received a lifetime's dose of radiation in the process.

Mazin wanted to ensure these extraordinary sacrifices were recognised just as clearly as the

institutional failings that had made them necessary. “Those in charge were all too willing to expend the lives of others to solve a problem,” he says, “but there was also a spirit of brotherhood among people on the ground.”

The bio-robots were drafted following the failure of three actual lunar robots designed to work in low radioactivity. Soviet authorities had lied about radiation levels on the roof, their stated estimate being 90 per cent lower than the reality. Even the Moon was a more hospitable environment than Chernobyl’s roof. Having managed information for so many years, it was obvious the Kremlin’s attempt to control radioactive fallout in the same way was costing lives.

SO WHY WAS Mazin, a screenwriter better known for frivolous comedies, drawn to the story? “My love of science, history and the absurd has served me in writing this,” says Mazin. “The first lie is that everything is fine: [Soviet leader] Mikhail Gorbachev is told there’s been an accident involving a hydrogen tank, a roof fire and minimal radiation. The Soviet system was soaking in this cult of narrative where facts didn’t matter, so he may have thought it was worse than he’d been told, but not that bad...”

It was Legasov who spotted exposed graphite rods on the roof and forced the authorities to come clean, before staff at a Swedish power plant observed a surge in radioactivity and raised the alarm. But the nearby town of Pripyat, built for plant workers and their families, wasn’t evacuated for 36 hours, shortly before citizens as far away as Frankfurt were told to stay indoors. Pripyat remains a ghost city.

Gorbachev, writing in 2006, conceded that “Chernobyl... even more than my launch of perestroika, was perhaps the real cause of the collapse of the Soviet Union five years later.”

Mazin explains: “Chernobyl wasn’t a new kind of Soviet failure, but it was a very public one. It was the first time they were forced to admit that not only had this happened, but that they had tried to hide it. That was deeply humiliating, and like any system of control, it’s a magic trick. Once people realise the magic can be disrupted, they stop believing in it.” And therein, for Mazin, lies the story’s relevance. “People seem to be re-embracing the notion that what we want to be true is more important than what is true. If this story were about a reactor exploding, I wouldn’t know what the point would be. But it’s about lies and the cost of lies. That’s more relevant now than ever.” GABRIEL TATE

A law unto themselves

Spurs are on the brink of greatness – but they never make it easy

Champions League: Ajax v Tottenham
Wed 7.00pm (k/o 8pm) BT Sport 2, Radio 5 Live

THE BIG FOOTBALL clubs of England are forever in hot pursuit of their own identity: Manchester United seek that ancient relentlessness, Arsenal the lost swagger of the Invincibles, Manchester City the new dream of perfection, Liverpool that sense of age-old entitlement. Tottenham Hotspur are different. They are a team in flight from their own history.

The last thing that Spurs want is to be “Spursy”. That is an adjective that has come into vogue in recent seasons, and it is used when Spurs are too much like themselves. A precise definition is elusive, but everyone in English football knows what it means.

“Spursy” is about being brilliant rather than great. It’s about decorating a season rather than defining it. It’s about being perpetually on the verge of something unforgettable and never quite getting there. A run of serious success always means that the next banana skin isn’t far away. Perhaps, above all else, it’s about never quite believing that you belong at the very top.

Now, as Spurs face their two-leg tie against Ajax in the semi-finals of the Champions League, they have the perfect opportunity to show that Spursiness has been left behind, that this is, at last, after more than a century of football, Tottenham Unbound.

To be considered a cup team was once a thing of honour, but the structure and emphasis of football has changed. Spurs have won the FA Cup eight times and the League Cup four times, but the league just twice – and these days, consistency is prized more than achievement in the more chance-driven competitions. Tottenham’s record reflects their nature: often superb but never wholly substantial.

The tie against Ajax will be instructive. Ajax, led by their 19-year-old captain Matthijs de Ligt, have been irrepressible in the Champions League this season, beating Real Madrid and Juventus in successive rounds: adventurous, unafraid, showing no self-doubt when drawn against clubs dripping with footballing history.

The first thing you need if you want to beat an upstart team like that is authority. A sense of self-certainty: sorry, son, but today you’re playing a real football team. That isn’t a Spursy trait, but if Tottenham can play with that confidence over two legs, it will be incontestable proof that they have abandoned their traditional flakiness.

It’s time they did so. A few weeks ago, after a long wait, they moved into their new stadium, and it looks like the sort of ground that the champions of Europe would play in. The architecture seems to impart a kind of authority, but can the team live up to it?

THEIR DEVELOPMENT UNDER their astute Argentinian manager, Mauricio Pochettino, has been impressive: a team with a sense of identity and purpose, in which discipline is mixed with invention. The player who routinely gives me the most pleasure is Son Heung-min, a South Korean international (serving a ban in the first leg) who plays with the sort of joy that makes even the most jaded spectator turn once again to the sport of football.

“I hope we keep going, getting the same result,” Pochettino said. “It’s going to be fantastic and it’s going to be very helpful for us to play in our stadium in front of our fans.”

Among the many routine cruelties of sport is that at the end of a long, hard, desperately demanding football season, you need to be at your peak, better than ever and filled with new energy and intent. Spurs’ reward for completing two very hard tasks – a good season in the Premier League, and reaching this semi-final – is to take on two more, even harder things: hold down that top-four place, and reach the final.

Manage that and the world will have to accept a new reality: that Spurs are now un-Spursy. Taking their place at the top table as of right.

Beating the curse

Child stars often blossom then crash. So how do actors such as Natalie Portman steer their way through the traps and become adult stars?

PHENOMENAL KIDS
From the top: Macaulay Culkin, Shirley Temple and Natalie Portman (in Leon, 1994)

THINK OF LEONARDO DiCaprio, Christian Bale, Ryan Gosling or Scarlett Johansson, and it's easy to overlook the fact that many of the biggest names in Hollywood today got their breaks as kids.

So, what of the curse of the child star? Why haven't they followed the likes of Judy Garland, Lindsay Lohan, River Phoenix and Corey Haim into drug or alcohol addiction, rehab and, in the most tragic of cases, early death?

It seems that those who survive the system draw a distinct line between their childhood and adult careers, exploring their demons on screen rather than off, often making canny career choices that are far from safe. Someone who has weathered the challenges of junior stardom with poise is Oscar winner Natalie Portman. An only child, she formed a strong bond with her parents, her mother acting as her agent. In a 2018 BuzzFeed News interview, Portman reflected on the shoot for debut film Leon in 1994 when she was 13, saying, "I feel lucky that I had very protective parents, because I had a positive, wholesome experience." When I talked to Chloë Grace Moretz last year, the teen star of 2010 film Kick-Ass echoed Portman's sentiments, that having her family around her sheltered her from the worst effects of stardom: "It gave me an insulation, to ask questions and figure out who I am in a safe space."

Portman famously put her film career on the back burner to attend Harvard University, where she gained a BA in psychology, exhibiting a level of nous and indifference to stardom that can only have helped her. In her latest film, Vox Lux (in cinemas from Friday 3 May), Portman revisits the perils of childhood fame as Celeste, a singer plunged into the public eye when a song she writes about surviving a high-school shooting becomes an anthem for societal soul-searching. Celeste is seen being introduced to sex and drugs at an early age, and Portman plays her years later, by which time she's both mother and megastar, but burned by her experiences.

Portman's own experiences haven't all been plain sailing. At the Women's March in 'The bigger the childhood fame, the harder it is to shake'

Washington last year, the actress spoke candidly about her unease: "I understood very quickly, even as a 13-year-old, that if I were to express myself sexually I would feel unsafe and that men would feel entitled to discuss and objectify my

A victory for truth

For an actor who cemented himself to the national consciousness as Barry the big-hearted Brummie builder in Auf Wiedersehen Pet, Timothy Spall has never cruised on his bloke-next-door laurels. A go-to favourite of Mike Leigh, he's also played in his time Britain's last hangman; the fattest man in Britain; Ian Paisley; a sclerotic JMW Turner; and Winston Churchill in The King's Speech. In this 2016 film, he added Holocaust denier David Irving to his CV.

Irving is a pantomime polemicist, in that his gainsaying theory rules out an atrocity otherwise accepted as historical fact. To be in denial is one thing, but to try to recruit others to your cause under a flag of convenience is another.

Since a lifestyle change in 2014 (based on "not eating rubbish") transformed Spall's physical presence, he may struggle to fill his old trousers but certainly not larger-than-life personalities. In last year's rather self-indulgent Stanley: a Man of Variety, he played a parade of stars including Tony Hancock, Max Wall and James Finlayson.

Here Spall brings calm dignity as well as purple-faced incandescence to the part of the historian who, thanks to a 2000 libel case that was challenged by American academic and Penguin author Deborah Lipstadt, can now legally and properly be called anti-Semitic and racist.

With Lipstadt played with initial reluctance then strident verve by Rachel Weisz, yes, it's a courtroom drama with a known outcome, but it's an unmissable one, thanks to its two principled principals. Which is not to dismiss Tom Wilkinson, whose QC Richard Rampton (in a moving scene shot on location) visits Auschwitz with Lipstadt.

I read a lot of history books, and applaud a bracing editorial line. But Irving crossed one, and only national treasure Timothy Spall OBE could make you almost care about this thundering baby who was once a highly regarded expert on German military history. Almost.

film Lords of Chaos and TV's Succession respectively), Macaulay's time may yet come again. But perhaps the bigger the childhood fame, the harder it is to shake.

That was certainly true for Shirley Temple. As with Culkin, Temple was the bona fide phenomenon of her era, with films built around her carefully cultivated curls. But although she was groomed for stardom and began her screen career aged three, Temple always remained loyal to her parents and to her original employers, Fox, in her recollections.

America's top box-office draw from 1935 to 1938, Temple struggled to establish herself as an adult actor and later became a US ambassador (to Ghana and to Czechoslovakia). Speaking to American radio talk show host Diane Rehm following the publication of her memoir in 1988, she described her mother as "wonderful". And despite her father losing almost the entirety of her fortune, she told Rehm she harboured no resentment towards him.

FAST FORWARD TO today, and more fool anyone who tries to pigeonhole Twilight's Kristen Stewart. With showbiz coursing through her veins via her script supervisor mother and producer father, with whom she attended auditions aged as young as eight, she shot to attention aged 11 opposite another former child star, Jodie Foster, in the mother-daughter thriller Panic Room (2002). Like the Harry Potter films, the Twilight franchise was arguably bigger than any individual actor. But Stewart has cast off the stigma of her early success with a certain élan, reinventing herself as an arthouse darling through collaborations with French director Olivier Assayas.

If Portman rises above the somewhat sleazy Hollywood playbook, Stewart actively rejects it. Her visible discomfort with her celebrity is intrinsic to her appeal; in an industry that still expects female stars to smile obediently as they work the red carpet and coo into branded microphones about who they're wearing, Stewart is all about the nonchalance. She told Vanity Fair in 2012, "I have been criticised a lot for not looking perfect in every photograph... I'm not embarrassed about it. I'm proud of it."

Portman, Moretz and Stewart show, in their different ways, that the key to continuing success is seizing control of your story. Able to sidestep the fate of studio-engineered prodigies with a short but lucrative shelf life, they refuse to conform to the narrative of the tragic former child star – or to succumb to self-parody like the 38-year-old Culkin sending up Home Alone in an advert for Google Assistant. Instead, they are part of a generation who are rewriting their careers on their own terms. EMMA SIMMONDS body to my great discomfort." Despite the unsavoury nature of some of the attention she received and projects she turned down (1997's Lolita, for one), Portman has gone from strength to strength artistically. But contrast her career path to that of her peer Macaulay Culkin.

The Home Alone superstar retired from acting aged just 14 and was granted emancipation from his parents two years later. Despite an attempt to re-establish himself with the provocative 2003 film Party Monster followed by well-publicised drugs charges, Culkin has existed on the peripheries of stardom ever since. Seemingly bemused by his former life, he told Ellen DeGeneres in 2018 while promoting his parody of celebrity lifestyle blogs, Bunny Ears, "I felt like some kid worked really, really hard, and I inherited all of his money."

With his ex-child-star brothers Rory and Kieran currently riding high critically (in the

ANDREW COLLINS FILM OF THE DAY

Baywatch ★★★
9.00-11.20pm C4

ACTION COMEDY Bodies litter the roadside in the world of feature-film revivals of nostalgic TV shows, despite the underlying commercial imperative of a captive audience and fun kitsch appeal. Hence unnecessary and awkward do-overs for Starsky and Hutch, Charlie's Angels, Yogi Bear and CHiPs. However, the recent movie attempt at reviving Baywatch, a near-eugenic cult smash on the box that ruled the 90s with its permanent swimsuit issues, seems somehow to have made its money back in 2017. A knowing, meta-spoof from director Seth Gordon (Horrible Bosses, Pixels), it was nominated for Razzies and Teen Choice awards. Dwayne Johnson is the lead lifeguard and Zac Efron plays a disgraced ex-Olympian, and there are sly cameos for original TV stars Pamela Anderson and David Hasselhoff, who perfected "knowing" over 20 years ago. The plot, such as it is, involves Johnson's maverick tendencies, a drug-smuggling ring and a sea urchin. It's not quite camp enough, but its base charm gives it bounce. (US 2017, violence, swearing, sexual references, nudity, HD)

DID YOU KNOW?

Dwayne Johnson isn't the first star of Baywatch to come from the wrestling world – the original series featured Ric Flair, Hulk Hogan and many more creativity versus commerce, often resting on the fractious relationship between reluctant mogul Harrison and his more combative business partner Denis O'Brien. TeS (UK 2018)

Friends with Benefits ★★★

9.00-11.20pm Dave

ROMANTIC COMEDY Justin Timberlake and Mila Kunis team up as work professionals who test out whether a friendship can survive the addition of sex, minus the emotional involvement. It's a well-worn furrow, ploughed in the very same year by Natalie Portman and Ashton Kutcher in No Strings Attached. But Timberlake and Kunis are likeable leads and they handle their banter with ease. Director Will Gluck (Easy A) wanders off track a little towards the end, but this is still smarter, funnier and more rewarding than average. DA (US 2011, swearing, sex scenes, HD)

Studio 54 ★★★★★

9.00-10.50pm Sky Arts

DOCUMENTARY If Saturday Night Fever epitomised disco culture, the Manhattan nightclub Studio 54 defined its social hedonism. For three years from 1977, the glamorous watering hole was the eighth wonder of the world, with party animals desperate to dance the night away. Matt Tyrnauer's superb film charts all the dazzling disco facts and commemorates the urban legends behind college friends Steve Rubell and Ian Schrager's mirrorballed brainchild. AJ (US/UK 2018, col/BW, HD)

DRAMA This typically enigmatic movie from Michelangelo Antonioni stars Jack Nicholson as a burnt-out TV reporter who adopts the identity of a dead gunman and loses himself in Africa's civil wars. Antonioni's favourite theme of the emptiness of existence is examined here, along with a visual debate about the exploitation of the Third World. Like his preceding movies Blowup and Zabriskie Point, it's a meandering experience. However, the film has a wonderful hypnotic atmosphere, thanks to Nicholson's excellent performance and the magnificent cinematography. AT (Fr/It/Sp 1975, swearing)

ROMANCE Director Lasse Hallström followed Salmon Fishing in the Yamen with this slick, solidly acted but daftly plotted romance based on the novel by Nicholas Sparks (The Notebook). Julianne Hough stars as a "person of interest" in a crime case, who flees Boston and the cop (David Lyons) obsessively hunting her. She holes up in a sleepy coastal town where she falls for hunky Josh Duhamel, a widower with kids who runs the local store. DA (US 2013, some violence, swearing, HD)

The Indian in the Cupboard

★★★★ 1.05-2.55pm Film4

FANTASY Combining culture-clash comedy with Honey, I Shrunk the Kids-style special effects, this assured version of the Lynne Reid Banks novel from director Frank Oz is low-key fantasy with a high-grade impact. It's an enchanting family fable about a young boy who discovers that an old cupboard can animate his playthings. Ultimately he must learn responsibility when he brings his toy Indian (well played by rap artist Litefoot) to life. It's a wondrous and winning experience that every age-group can share. AJ (US 1995, HD)

Nim's Island

★★★ 2.15-4.05pm C5

ADVENTURE Abigail Breslin (Little Miss Sunshine) lights up the screen in this tropical escapade. Breslin plays Nim who lives with her scientist father (Gerard Butler) on a remote island, and spends her days with exotic animals and reading the adventure stories of Alex Rover. When her dad doesn't return from a boat trip, Nim looks to Rover for help, but what she doesn't realise is that the author is actually Alexandra Rover (Jodie Foster), a phobia-ridden woman who hasn't left her home in months. The film is rather disjointed, but the sheer pluckiness of Breslin keeps proceedings fun. SP (US 2008, HD)

FILM OF THE DAY

War Horse ★★★★★
 3.35-5.50pm BBC1 12

WAR DRAMA Last year's centenary of the armistice of "the war to end all wars" reminded us that the trenches seem always to be with us, never more so than in Peter Jackson's stunning 2018 documentary They Shall Not Grow Old. Of the fictional accounts, Steven Spielberg's dramatisation of Michael Morpurgo's War Horse, crucially written for children, carves an unforgettable journey through the quagmire. The story begins with farmer's son Jeremy Irvine raising a colt, Joey, only to see him sold to the army in 1914, where he progresses from a hellish, machine-gun-strafed battlefield to a French farm and the German trenches. Spielberg doesn't flinch from the horror, and the required happy ending is hard won. Those in two minds about the heroism of animals in war – horses didn't volunteer – will be deeply moved. The novel has a low opinion of humankind and, though the war sequences are not in the Saving Private Ryan league, this bucolic film is not without its beauty. 102 Dalmatians ★★★★★
 4.30-6.30pm C4 U

COMEDY Glenn Close returns as villainous Cruella De Vil in this follow-up to 1996 live-action hit 101 Dalmatians. This is as much fun as the first film, with supposedly reformed fur-lover Cruella released after a spell in prison and funding an animal rescue operation. Before you can say "cutesy woosy puppies", she's got dodgy designer Gérard Depardieu preparing to make a dalmatian overcoat. Ioan Gruffudd and Alice Evans provide the romantic interest but it's Close and Eric Idle (voicing parrot Waddlesworth) who provide the laughs. JB (US 2000, HD)

Jurassic Park III ★★★★★
 6.15-8.00pm ITV2 PG

ADVENTURE Steven Spielberg allowed Jumanji director Joe Johnston to take the reins for the third instalment of the mega-bucks franchise. It's basically a retread with some new set pieces thrown in, but Johnston does a decent job. We're back on Isla Sorna, where genetically engineered dinosaurs eye up another band of packed lunches: divorcees William H Macy and Téa Leoni looking for their 14-year-old son; palaeontologist Sam Neill (from the first film); and his protégé Alessandro Nivola (star of C4's Chimerica). It's familiar ground, but those set pieces (particularly the pterodactyl attack) are excellent. AC (US 2001, may be edited for violence, HD)

Ender's Game ★★★★★
 6.50-9.00pm E4 12

SCI-FI This adventure takes place in a future where Earth is under threat from alien attacks, and the military grooms genius children with exceptional gaming skills to man interplanetary weapons. The most talented wunderkind discovered by colonel Harrison Ford is Ender Wiggin (Asa Butterfield), but do his clashes with authority and fellow cadets mean he's too sensitive to lead a team of his peers into life-or-death battle? The special effects dazzle throughout, and Ford and Ben Kingsley add gravitas, but the assured Butterfield is the true star, as the reluctant teen who carries the survival of humankind on his shoulders. TeS (US 2013, violence, swearing, HD)

The Other Woman ★★★★★
 9.00-11.10pm Film4 12

COMEDY Cameron Diaz and Leslie Mann are a bubbly double act in this battle-of-the-sexes comedy. Game of Thrones star Nikolaj Coster-Waldau is the man who inadvertently brings the pair together, initially at loggerheads, when it becomes apparent he's dating Diaz despite being married to Mann. Then up pops Kate Upton who proves to be a bit of a gooseberry as the third conspirator in a mission to bring the love rat to his knees. Director Nick Cassavetes is certainly guilty of dragging out the action, but this still makes for good naughty fun. SP (US 2014, swearing, sexual references, HD)

21 Jump Street ★★★★★
 9.00-11.10pm 5STAR 15

COMEDY Though it shares the same title and premise as the cheesy 1980s TV show, there's not much else that this update has in common with the series that rocketed Johnny Depp to stardom. Channing Tatum and Jonah Hill play the dimwit cop duo who are sent back to their high school to pose as students in order to root out a drugs ring. While the original series had pretensions to drama, here the set-up is strictly for broad laughs. Jonah Hill is a lot of fun as the needy nerd, but it's pin-up Channing Tatum who really shines as the jock cop who believes arrested criminals should be informed that they "have the right to be an attorney". AS (US 2012, violence, swearing, sex scenes, drug abuse, HD)

Get Hard ★★★★★
 10.00pm-12.05am C5 15

COMEDY Prison looms for Will Ferrell's millionaire in a broad comedy that squares up to every penitentiary stereotype going and stays standing. Kevin Hart plays his "urban" partner in crime, except that he lies about doing time in jail, profiting from the white man's prejudice to take a lucrative job training the wealthy wimp to withstand the rigours of San Quentin. But Ferrell is also a patsy after being framed to take the fall for a scam at a big-name corporation. For every joke that trades on the colour of Hart's skin and his perceived "hardness", Ferrell always looks the bigger fool, which is just how he likes it. SP (US 2015, swearing, sexual references, HD)

LATE NIGHT

Maps to the Stars ★★★★★
 11.00pm-12.45am BBC2 18

DRAMA David Cronenberg's film initially appears to be an acerbic swipe at Hollywood excess, along the lines of Robert Altman's The Player. But it soon sheds its superficially satirical surface to reveal a fiercely original take on the nightmare that lurks beneath the Hollywood sign. An excellent Julianne Moore plays a fading star who is desperate for a role in a remake of a film that originally starred her abusive actress mother. Meanwhile, kiddie sensation Benjie Weiss (Evan Bird) is visited by his previously incarcerated sister (Mia Wasikowska), who tried to kill him in a house fire. From then on, all manner of ghosts appear with disquieting regularity in this gleefully perverse, haunting film. AS (Can/Fr/Ger 2014, violence, swearing, sex scenes, nudity, drug abuse, HD)

Coogan's Bluff ★★★★★
 11.00pm-1.05am ITV4 15

CRIME DRAMA Clint Eastwood still wore a cowboy hat in his first attempt to move from westerns to urban dramas, but under Don Siegel's taut direction he carried off the switch successfully. In many ways the forerunner of Dirty Harry, Eastwood's laconic Arizona sheriff tracking down a murderer in Manhattan was his first character to tackle big-city sleaze. This gritty film set the seal on Eastwood's screen persona for decades to come and later inspired the McCloud TV show. AJ (US 1968, violence, swearing, nudity, HD)

Fading Gigolo ★★★★★

COMEDY John Turturro writes, directs and stars in this feather-light New York tale about a middle-aged guy who decides to sell his body for sex. Woody Allen plays the shady friend who convinces him to give it a go, presenting him with his first client (a ball-busting Sharon Stone) for a cut of the action. Stone's doctor is certainly drawn to him, as is her gal pal (Sofia Vergara), but their characters are sketchily drawn. Turturro has better chemistry with Allen, and it's their scenes together that really bring the film to life. SP (US 2013, swearing, sex scenes, nudity, HD)

Sherlock Holmes ★★★★★
10.45pm-1.00am ITV

MYSTERY Very much eclipsed by Steven Moffat and Mark Gatiss's cornerstone BBC incarnation with Benedict Cumberbatch in the title role (and whose theme was named the nation's favourite in the recent BFI/RT poll), Guy Ritchie's funkily irreverent steampunk reboot of Sherlock Holmes can at least claim to have got in first. Robert Downey Jr is such a charismatic actor he gets away with it – and the English accent – as a sort of Zen, bare-knuckle fighting bohemian, grounded by Jude Law's more traditional Watson and Rachel McAdams as Irene Adler. Although it's set in London in 1891, with a highwire scene atop Tower Bridge, it's filmed (and scored, by Hans Zimmer) in a deliberately contemporary way, and Mark Strong brings a touch of evil as a serial-killing lord. But to my mind, 2011 sequel A Game of Shadows is a better show all round thanks to Noomi Rapace (the original Girl with the Dragon Tattoo) and the Reichenbach Falls. John Wick ★★★★★
9.00-11.05pm SSTAR 15

ACTION Numerous fight sequences are staged with a great deal of skill and style in this lean, propulsive revenge thriller. Keanu Reeves is reliably stoic as the title character, a formidable former hitman who has been out of the game for five years. He is compelled to return, however, when a trio of Russian lowlifes break into his house and cause mayhem. As John seeks retribution, the body count escalates and the film moves from one bruising set piece to another. As a film, there isn't much in the way of depth or complexity, but the constant violence is offset by some well-timed humour. The third John Wick adventure is in cinemas from 17 May. SC (US 2014, violence, swearing, HD)

CRIME DRAMA Ewan McGregor plays against type here as a hard-bitten professional bank robber who's serving a 25-year stretch when he is befriended by a teenage petty criminal (Brenton Thwaites). McGregor agrees to help protect the youngster – but at a price. What begins as a gritty prison flick then performs a hairpin turn into escape-movie territory, complete with machine-gun battles and helicopter chases, before it swerves into a heist-gone-awry set-up. McGregor obviously has fun playing a recidivist thief, and Thwaites is appealingly naive as the kid who looks, unwisely, towards him as a father figure. AS (Aus 2013, violence, swearing, sex scenes, drug abuse, HD)

COMEDY This knowing blend of comedy and common sense is family entertainment par excellence, aided by Oscar-winning make-up and career-best Robin Williams as an actor who disguises himself as a Scottish nanny to be close to his children after he splits from wife Sally Field. Director Chris Columbus should be given credit for reining in the Williams exuberance, while retaining enough of his quick-fire personality to ensure that just about every gag hits its target. DP (US 1993, edited for language, HD)

Here Ralph Fiennes essays a trio of flawed ancestors whose personal tragedies are enacted against the great events of the 20th century. 9.00-11.40pm ITV2 15

COMEDY Writer/director Judd Apatow follows up his hit "slacker" comedy The 40 Year Old Virgin with another refreshingly bold tale. Seth Rogen plays a harmless pothead who impregnates Katherine Heigl's media career girl during a drunken one-night stand. Prompted by the impending birth to give the relationship a go, our odd couple learns lessons about responsibility and life in general, but to hilarious rather than schmaltzy effect. AC (US 2007, swearing, sex scenes, drug abuse, HD)

The Deep

10.00pm-12.30am Talking Pictures TV 15

ADVENTURE Jacqueline Bisset in a wet T-shirt, Donna Summer's title disco hit and Jaws author Peter Benchley co-scripting from his own novel were enough to make this soggy saga a hit in 1977. With 40 per cent of his action taking place underwater in the creepy depths, director Peter Yates doesn't have to do much to keep tension on an even keel. Just a pity two-dimensional characterisations from Nick Nolte and Robert Shaw sink plausibility every time anything like reality threatens to surface. AJ (US 1977, violence, some swearing)

Taxi Driver

10.55pm-1.15am Sony Movie Channel 18

DRAMA Robert De Niro is mesmerising as the Vietnam veteran trapped in one of director Martin Scorsese's most frightening circles of hell, as he seeks a twisted redemption by saving the soul of New York child prostitute Jodie Foster (see feature, p30). This time the helter-skelter of Scorsese's Mean Streets gives way to a measured, chilly calm, elevated by composer Bernard Herrmann's superbly insistent swansong score. It's De Niro's show, but the supporting players (Foster, Harvey Keitel, Cybill Shepherd) are almost as good, and there's a genuinely scary cameo from the director himself. JF (US 1976, graphic violence, swearing) Where to, Guv?, p92

Dying Laughing

1.00-2.45am Sky Arts 15

DOCUMENTARY Directors Lloyd Stanton and Paul Toogood have assembled some of the biggest names in Anglo-American stand-up for this insightful and honest study of making people laugh (for money). Some 100 jokesters were interviewed and, while only half make the cut, they make a decent case for stand-up being considered a masochistic art form, as so many comics not only mock, but also bare their souls on stage. DP (UK 2016, swearing, BW /col, HD)

FILM OF THE DAY

Jason Bourne ★★★★★

9.00-11.30pm Film4 12

ACTION Bourne is back with a vengeance as Matt Damon resumes the role that launched a game-changing franchise. Director Paul Greengrass brilliantly marshals the action, as Bourne is thrust into a world of dodgy dealings and invasive surveillance. Thanks to the magnetic presence of Damon, it's still a case of a Bourne supremacy.

Jeremy Aspinall

50 First Dates ★★★★★

9.00-11.00pm Comedy Central 12

ROMANTIC COMEDY Only the really grumpy could fail to be charmed by this sweet tale. Drew Barrymore plays a car-crash survivor whose memory loss means she wakes up every morning with no knowledge of the day before. For would-be suitor Adam Sandler this means repeating their first date over and over again. It's an amusing concept laced with poignancy, and the film subtly balances its humour and heart. SF (US 2004, swearing, edited for language, drug abuse)

FILM OF THE DAY

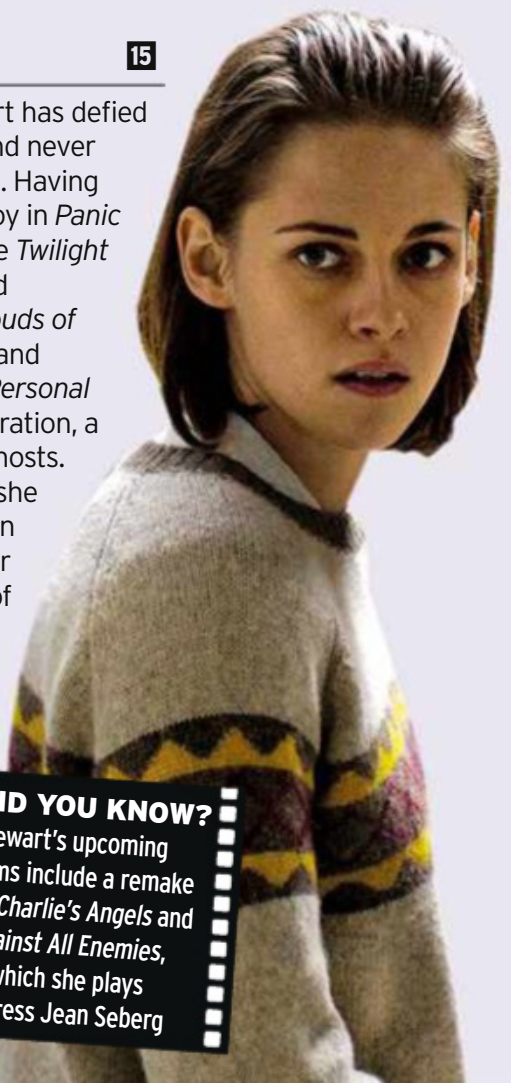

Personal Shopper ★★

11.05pm-12.45am BBC2 15

THRILLER Not yet 30, Kristen Stewart has defied Hollywood law about starting young and never being allowed to age (see feature, p30). Having made her entrance as a diabetic tomboy in Panic Room, she forged an A-list career in the Twilight saga. Once that was over, she appeared in the English-language French film Clouds of Sils Maria for director Olivier Assayas, and found herself winning a César award. Personal Shopper is her second Assayas collaboration, a psychological thriller that believes in ghosts. In arguably her best performance yet, she plays the personal shopper of a Parisian model who's mourning her twin brother and tries to contact him. The fatalism of an inherited heart condition drives her certainty that she can contact the dead, while trying on her employer's kit for further Hitchcockian intrigue.

There's also good work from Austrian Nora von Waldstätten as Stewart's boss. (Fr/Ger/CzRep/Bel 2016, violence, swearing, sex scenes, HD)

DID YOU KNOW? Stewart's upcoming films include a remake of Charlie's Angels and Against All Enemies, in which she plays actress Jean Seberg

Fire over England ★★★★★

12.15-2.00pm Talking Pictures TV U

ADVENTURE This historical yarn is memorable not just for early sword- and word-play by Laurence Olivier, but for being a call to arms against the growing forces of Nazism in Europe. Olivier is the nobleman seeking revenge for the death of his father at the hands of the Spanish Inquisition, and warning Queen Elizabeth (Flora Robson) about the imminent Armada invasion. TH (UK 1937, BW)

Quantum of Solace ★★★★★

9.00-11.15pm ITV2 12

SPY Picking up events directly after Casino Royale, Daniel Craig's second outing as James Bond sees him on the trail of Quantum, a shady organisation that has infiltrated the world's corridors of power. Marc Forster's take on 007 was hit by a writer's strike during its making, and the script suffers as a result. But viewed as an action spectacle, there's still plenty of excitement, and Craig's performance remains eminently watchable. JH (UK/US 2008, violence, HD)

Gangster Squad ★★★★★

10.00pm-12.15am ITV4 15

CRIME Subtlety flies out of the window in this action-heavy flick, in which LA cops Ryan Gosling and Josh Brolin take on Sean Penn's Mob kingpin. Director Ruben Fleischer (Zombieland) adopts a gung-ho approach to this adaptation of Paul Lieberman's book, but makes the most of his talent for blending flamboyantly staged violence with dark humour, as he splashes the budget on a glossy re-creation of 1940s Los Angeles. SP (US 2012, violence, swearing, HD)

Songwriter ★★★★★

10.00-11.50pm Talking Pictures TV 15

COMEDY DRAMA Willie Nelson and Kris Kristofferson star here as former singer-songwriter partners who reunite to take on unscrupulous elements of the country music biz. While this loose and wandering trifle isn't in the same league as Robert Altman's Nashville, which covers similar territory, it's still an amiable and entertaining work from Altman protégé Alan Rudolph. And it's all too rarely shown, too. DA (US 1984)

This Is England ★★★★★

11.10pm-1.15am Film4 18

DRAMA Shane Meadows's portrait of skinheads in the 1980s centres on 12-year-old Shaun (Thomas Turgoose) as he's befriended by a group of kindly, multiracial skinheads. But events take a more disturbing turn when he is drawn to a breakaway group of National Front supporters. Brilliantly evoking the working-class despair of the Thatcher era, this is a film to be reckoned with. Followed by Meadows's documentary about the Stone Roses, Made of Stone. JR (UK 2006, violence, swearing, drug abuse, HD)

Blinded by the light

The Vanishing ★★★

From Mon Sky Store/Virgin Movies (also DVD, Blu-ray and download)

THRILLER Gerard Butler and Peter Mullan are top of the bill in a lurid and decidedly fanciful drama "inspired by" the mystery disappearance in 1900 of three keepers from the remote Flannan Isle's lighthouse off the Outer Hebrides.

The most widely accepted explanation is that the men were swept off the rock by freak waves. The Vanishing plumps instead, not for some of the more fanciful yet plausible theories that surround this Mary Celeste-style mystery, but for a wildly improbable scenario involving a washed-up treasure chest and some Scandi baddies looking for it.

After a slow-burn but promisingly claustrophobic start, the movie mutates into an increasingly ripe melodrama that's slickly done and decently acted, but casts not one watt of credible new light on what actually might have happened on Flannan Isle. Dave Aldridge (UK 2016, violence, swearing, HD)

From Mon Sky Store/Virgin Movies

COMEDY Fiction's brilliant detective is reduced to buffoonery in a woefully poor comedy that fails on every level. Sherlock Holmes (Will Ferrell) and Dr John Watson (John C Reilly) are on the trail of Professor Moriarty (Ralph Fiennes) via a succession of puerile gags and underwhelming set pieces that illicit groans at every turn while insulting the audience's intelligence. TeS (US 2018, some swearing, sexual references, drug references, HD)

DVD OF THE WEEK

Dead in a Week (or Your Money Back) ★★★ 15 6 May: DVD and download

This comedy is blackly chucklesome but lacks the subtlety that might better have fulfilled the promise of the idea. Aneurin Barnard plays an unpublished author who, believing that life is a futile struggle, makes many unsuccessful attempts to end it all. He winds up outsourcing his suicide to an ageing contract killer (Tom Wilkinson) who needs one more hit to meet his Guild of Assassins quota. The plan predictably runs awry when things buck up for Barnard, and he decides that life is well worth living after all. Trouble is, a contract is a contract. It's rather too broadly played, but is entertaining in a black-comedy Carry On kind of way. Dave Aldridge

Discover DEEP STATE

10 REASONS WHY FOX'S DEEP STATE IS A MUST-SEE THIS MAY

HOT OFF THE PRESS

5 It's highly topical

DEEP STATE tackles shocking scenarios and real-life twists and turns that feel like they've been ripped straight from tomorrow's papers. The show is centred around the politics of power and explores the complicated political world we currently live in, leaving viewers questioning everything around them.

THE TRUTH WILL COME OUT

6 It's full of conspiracies

"I know we're not always the good guy – I just never really considered myself that bad." That's deep state operative Nathan Miller's assessment of himself, but what will you make of him? The truth is a matter of perspective in DEEP STATE – and it's up to you to decide who and what to believe. Will you end up a baddie or a goodie?

BACK FOR MORE

7 Series one was a big success

DEEP STATE is one of Fox's most successful new shows. A modern-day political thriller with an emotional heart, DEEP STATE is a successful combination of clever storylines highly relevant to today's news agenda, an international and critically acclaimed cast, and gripping plot twists throughout.

1 DIVE STRAIGHT IN It's a stand-alone series

While season one of DEEP STATE is well worth a watch, you can become fully embroiled in the new series without having seen the first. The new run brings to life a brand-new storyline that's enthralling in its own right, alongside a host of fresh faces.

STARS IN YOUR EYES

2 It has a stellar cast

Fans of DEEP STATE will be pleased to see some familiar faces among intriguing new characters as the show returns to screens this week. Performances to look forward to include those from Walton Goggins (Tomb Raider), Joe Dempsie (Game of Thrones), Karima McAdams (Vikings), Victoria Hamilton (The Crown), Alistair Petrie (The Night Manager) and Zainab Jah (Homeland).

HOME COMFORTS

3 It's cinematic television

DEEP STATE isn't your typical TV drama. Channelling Fox's Hollywood heritage, the show is epic in both its scale and ambition, and a fine example of cinematic television. It's a big, sprawling international thriller with an intelligent political plot that will have you on the edge of your seat.

A DRAMA A MINUTE

4 The action is totally thrilling

If you like high-octane drama that comes at you from every angle, you won't be disappointed by DEEP STATE. Every episode has its fair share of plot twists, bad guys, intense emotions, stunts and explosions – prepare to be shaken up on a weekly basis.

SET THE SCENE

8 It will take you across the world

Season one saw the deep state fail in the Middle East, and in the new series it turns its attention to resource-rich sub-Saharan Africa – Mali in particular. In Washington, Republican US senator Meaghan Sullivan is on a mission to expose the deep state, while over in London we get a glimpse into the pasts of two key characters.

LEAD THE WAY

9 The female characters are trailblazers

Conspiracy thrillers often have men at the helm, with women mainly there to facilitate the macho storylines and be heroically rescued. But, DEEP STATE features several powerful women, including covert operative Leyla Toumi, US Republican senator Meaghan Sullivan, and Aminata Sissoko, senior advisor to the Malian president.

10 HERE THERE EVERYWHERE
The plot is multidimensional

The interconnecting storylines in DEEP STATE will keep you hooked for the duration of the eight-part series. This new second season, set eight months after the events of the first, spans three continents, and takes place in a seductive, richly detailed world. It also takes us back to London two years earlier to give us an insight into how a pair of pivotal characters found themselves entangled in the deep state.

BEHIND THE SCENES

Inside DEEP STATE with Walton Goggins and Karima McAdams

Is Nathan Miller a good guy or a bad guy?

WG I think Nathan is someone who believes he's doing the right thing. He believes in his country and that his country should come first, and I think there are a lot of people working in the shadows of governments that share the same outlook as him. Nathan protects his nation's interests even though, at times, this comes at the expense of the country's liberal values. It's a complicated position to be in.

Does the line between Nathan's two lives get blurry sometimes?

WG Yes. Nathan is someone that can bring down kings but has a hard time keeping his marriage together. Is he a bad guy? It depends who you ask, and who benefits from the decisions Nathan makes and the action he takes. Matthew Parkhill, DEEP STATE's creator, has constructed the story so that nothing and no one is black and white.

What's your view on the importance of women to the show and the role of Leyla?

KM The DEEP STATE script came to me among a plethora of other scripts with roles for Arab women. Leyla caught my attention because she's a strong character and woman – she wasn't included because of her Arab roots. She's incredibly skilled in languages and very capable. She doesn't see the difference between women and men in her team and doesn't want to be mothered by anyone, which I think is important.

Do you see Nathan as an adversary to Leyla?

KM I think Leyla finds it hard to see the good in Nathan Miller, even before anything bad or dodgy has happened. She can't put her finger on it, but senses there's something about this man that isn't transparent. She's got her eyes on him the entire time.

Too tired to binge

David Brown will watch Game of Thrones – eventually...

THE PRESSURE WAS getting too much. It had reached the point where I felt I should be walking the streets with my fingers in my ears. Why? Because everyone was talking about Game of Thrones (Sunday, Monday Sky Atlantic) and I hadn't seen a single episode.

Despite analysing TV every day for a living, I'd been saving all eight series to watch in their entirety with my wife. Having been left scarred by the frustrating finale to Lost back in 2010, I wanted to make sure that the climax to Game of Thrones was worth the effort before making that kind of commitment again. But then I had a crisis of confidence and started to fret that neither of us had the energy for such an epic binge.

It was a comment my wife made that did it. "Have you noticed that every time we watch TV in the evening, we end up falling asleep? Do you honestly think we can get through Game of Thrones?" she asked. She had a point.

Our routine was always the same: turn on, tune in, drop off. I became worried about our health. I checked the carbon monoxide detector, had my thyroid examined. And then I mentally replayed our regular schedule prior to slumping on the sofa: by 9pm on a weeknight, we'd usually ferried one child to football training, helped the other with revision, cooked dinner, washed up, read bedtime stories, ensured teeth were brushed and rucksacks packed.

It was a light-bulb moment: we weren't ill, we were just exhausted parents. Was it any wonder we were too worn out for Westeros? So here's the question we asked ourselves next: "Should we ditch the plan?" And the answer, inevitably, was: "Yes." What's more, we accepted that it's pointless to stress about the zeitgeist.

This change in our thinking came when I discovered that keeping up to speed with on-trend TV series can actually be bad for you.

FONO (Fear of Nodding Off) is all too real. What we need is TV we can watch together that isn't a huge undertaking.

So, thanks, then, to Phoebe Waller-Bridge, who made 12 perfect half-hour episodes of Fleabag. We're grateful also to The Victim and Trust Me, which both wrapped things up after four instalments. Gogglebox – you're the perfect salve on a Friday night. And long live Louis Theroux, the master at unpicking a knotty topic in the space of 60 minutes.

WE HAVEN'T COMPLETELY abandoned the idea of one day getting to grips with Game of Thrones. But, like its characters, we'll be waiting a while for a change to our current climate. In fact, we may have to hold off until my wife and I are both retired or the children have left home, whichever comes first.

And that's fine. It gives us something to aim for. Winter has, apparently, arrived in Westeros – so, if my calculations are correct, my wife and I should be able to witness this some time around 2045.

PROUD TO BE A NERD!

When I was at school, revealing a love for Marvel Comics would have put me on the fast track to a wedgie. There was no way I'd have admitted to reading The Amazing Spider-Man when everyone else was poring over football magazines such as Shoot! or Match. But fast-forward 30 years and my illicit passion is mainstream. Avengers: Endgame (above) is everywhere and Disney is now launching a streaming service filled with Marvel TV shows. The likes of Loki, Scarlet Witch, Vision, Hawkeye, the Falcon and the Winter Soldier are all getting their own series. The nerds have inherited the Earth and, suddenly, I can walk as tall as Thor.

Indeed, the other week, I felt confident enough to read a 1980 edition of Uncanny X-Men on my train journey to work. And guess what? Nobody stole my dinner money. After all this time, I can shout it loud and proud: Make Mine Marvel.

Type "binge-watching" into a search engine and you'll find reports on everything from eyestrain to heart disease.

Further worrying news came in the form of an email I received about streaming services, which revealed that indecisive users are taking an average of 23 minutes to choose what to watch. Seeing as it takes me that long just to pick up all the Nerf bullets from the floor each evening, I vowed not to waste any more of our precious time agonising about what we're missing.

Falling asleep is, admittedly, still an issue, so we know we have to be realistic. We may no longer feel FOMO (Fear of Missing Out), but

My5

You're best knowing nothing about this Australian drama before you go in, since it elegantly reveals its premise in a bewitching first episode. Suffice to say it's set in a small rural town that, a year previously, was hit by a flash flood in which five people died. Now strange things are happening. It's sci-fi, but solidly earthed in its characters and burnished by dark wit and a creepy, bucolic Picnic at Hanging Rock vibe. Available from 1 May

ANOTHER CHANCE

Amazon Prime

First shown on Channel 4 in 2013, John Fay's gritty drama is set in the 19th century, based on the history of Quarry Bank Mill in Cheshire. It unblinkingly portrays the dirty, degrading, often plain horrifying experiences of mill workers, including enslaved orphan children, tempering the misery with storylines reflecting the political protests of the time. The mix of real events and fictional character drama is effective.

COP-SHOW CLASSIC

The Shield

All 4

A corrupt-cop show that has a claim to be one of the all-time great US TV dramas, especially in its devastating final series. All 4 now has every episode, so you can relive Michael Chiklis as the morally grey (at best) street enforcer – plus, in series four, an Emmy-winning Glenn Close.

YOUR NEXT BINGE

In case you mythed it... science made fun

Sadly, Mythbusters – a science-based entertainment series that, being an Australian/American co-production, didn't have the patronising gloss most US factual TV has been infected with – finished in its original form in 2016. But if you've never seen it, you're in for a treat, as there are more than 280 episodes to catch up with.

The main presenters are both film and TV special-effects experts: sensible, walrus-moustachioed Jamie Hyneman and over-excitable Adam Savage. In every episode, they pose a couple of questions, such as "If a steel cable snapped under huge tension, could it actually cut someone in half?", "What sort of damage would a bull in a china shop do?", or even "During the American Civil War, did two musket balls fuse together in mid-air after being fired from opposite sides of the battlefield at exactly the same time and at exactly the same angle?"

The questions are generated from the Mythbusters website by viewers, who ask pretty much anything. Then the team decides if the proposition is true, plausible – or false, in which case the myth is "busted".

Could you paint a room by putting a stick of dynamite in a large tin of paint, as happened in an old episode of Mr Bean? Jamie and Adam start by building a room in a disused quarry, and end up testing several innovative ways of explosive redecoration. The science involved is sound, and the results are spectacular. Another episode asks if the flammable skin of the Hindenburg zeppelin was solely responsible for it being destroyed by a conflagration in 1936, as several experts have suggested. The construction of three large-scale replicas is a feat in itself, but the results are literally incendiary.

It's a knockabout show with plenty of humour, but you just might learn something. SHEM LAW

DOCTOR DIGITAL

Have a green tech clear-out

Spring is upon us, and Doctor Digital has been having a clear-out. However, gadgets can be tricky to dispose of – batteries should never be thrown into landfill, and some charity shops aren't set up to clean and recondition old tech.

Sites such as envirofone.com will buy your old phone handset and resell it, refurbish it for donation overseas, or recycle it if it's beyond repair. Many charities have their own donation schemes, with details listed on their website. For instance, Oxfam takes phones at its shops or online at fonebank.com/Oxfam. Larger items like televisions can be more challenging. Some charities such as the Red Cross welcome them, but you should check with your local shop first. Get Well Gamers (getwellgamers.org.uk) distributes old games consoles to children's hospitals, while the Turing Trust (turingtrust.co.uk) refurbishes old computers for classrooms.

Always wipe your data from any gadgets you donate or recycle. Consult the manufacturer's website: you're looking to "hard reset" or "erase all data and settings".

Sometimes gadgets are simply at the end of their lifespan, but the materials inside are still of value. Recycle-more.co.uk will highlight local recycling banks for almost any type of gadget. JONATHAN HOLMES

SPORT Rocket Ronnie defeated by an amateur, Judd Trump coming within one frame of embarrassment, incredible fightbacks, miscues – if the first round of the Snooker World Championship at the Crucible in Sheffield delivered shocks aplenty, what can the final do to top it?

At the time of writing it's not clear who is best placed to take advantage of O'Sullivan's listless exit. The semi-finals are set to conclude tonight, with the results today determining who will make it through to the final, beginning at 2pm tomorrow. The winner will be decided late on Monday night, with the final session not set to start until around 7pm. JAMES GILL

Ninja Warrior UK

6.30pm ITV

ENTERTAINMENT Bear in mind that this is coming from someone who couldn't shin up a rope in PE, but the obstacles in this final heat appear harder than the ones we've seen before. The "giant wheel and bag grab" looks almost impossible, while the "flying shelf grab" seems to require the fingertip strength of a mountain climber.

As ever, there are some who breeze through without breaking a sweat. But there are also a few who are still coming a cropper on those opening floating steps. I don't know if Ninja Warrior UK adds any sound effects in post-production, but a lot of the collisions are wince-inducingly crunchy. One poor woman even knees herself in the face. DB

Britain's Got Talent

8.00pm ITV

ENTERTAINMENT We're more than halfway through the auditions and, as ever, there have been plenty of jaw-dropping acts (knife-throwers, psychics, escapologists) as well as the odd trouser-dropping one – David Walliams being forced to strip off while being controlled by a ventriloquist was a rare low moment. So far this year, though, there have been fewer standout acts, so predicting a top five – or even top ten – is proving tricky. Even Ant and Dec's Golden Buzzer, young dancer Akshat Singh, left many viewers underwhelmed. Let's see who, or what, materialises on that shiny stage tonight. FT

PICK OF THE DAY Casualty 9.15pm BBC1

DRAMA As we follow characters in continuing dramas over a number of years, the genre is ideally suited to chart the impact of a dementia diagnosis. We saw an example of this with Emmerdale's Ashley Thomas, whose family had to cope with his personality gradually ebbing away as the illness took hold.

Now, with Duffy in Casualty having revealed that she is living with the condition, we get to witness another side to the story – specifically, how dementia affects a person's ability to do their job. Tonight, as Duffy (Cathy Shipton) starts to tell patients about what's happening to her, she finds that not everyone is as tolerant and understanding as she'd hoped.

The plotline also, by extension, shines a light on any latent prejudices we may have. If we're being honest, how many of us are looking out for instances when Duffy makes mistakes or gets confused? Done well, this plotline has the potential to challenge Duffy, those in her orbit and – perhaps most importantly – the viewers, too.

MAKING NINJA WARRIOR UK

■ "Of the approximately 10,000 people who apply for the show, we shortlist 200 to take on the course," says Martin Scott, executive producer of Ninja Warrior UK (6.30pm ITV). "The audition includes rigorous fitness tests, set specifically to test various skills such as core fitness, strength, balance, grip and speed."

■ It takes a whole day to film a single episode, and the obstacles are made with a games company based in the USA.

"Every series we sit down with them and design our course together," says Scott. "We test each obstacle with athletes to allow us to tweak each one to make sure they have the correct level of difficulty but are also possible to complete."

■ "This year, we have a competitor who makes it all the way to the bottom of the mountain," he teases. "You'll just have to wait to find out if they get to be crowned the first ever Ninja Warrior UK." FT

Vera

9.00pm ITV3

DRAMA Filming has just begun on series ten of the ever-popular Vera, with transmission pencilled in for 2020 – at which point, by my reckoning, Brenda Blethyn becomes the longest-serving female police detective on British TV drama.

This repeat showing of the very first episode is a reminder of our opening encounter with the unconventional and dogged DCI Stanhope, who's seen here sorting through the belongings of her recently deceased dad. That fractious father/daughter relationship would come to be explored further – most notably in Vera's most recent case, The Seagull, shown in February this year – so it's interesting to see what clues were evident at this very early stage. DB

Follow the Money

9.00pm, 10.00pm BBC4

DRAMA If you've invested in this Danish thriller over three series, you'll be hoping that it pays out in this last double bill. There surely is a final reckoning for its three antiheroes, who are now all willing themselves out of the messes they've created.

Anna is fired from the bank by Nete and takes extreme measures when her family is threatened by the drugs gang. Alf falls foul of the bent police chief, but his luck changes when he opens the door to a surprise late-night visitor. And Nicky – quite ludicrously after he was stabbed last week – goes on the run. Will he ever find a haven for himself and his son?

Danish TV company DR has confirmed to RT there are no plans for a fourth series. PATRICK MULKERN

The Jonathan Ross Show

9.15pm ITV

CHAT SHOW It's the most-watched and most-talked-about drama on television at the moment – and the final episode is showing tomorrow night. Stephen Graham, whose compelling portrayal of a rogue undercover cop in Line of Duty came to a shocking end, joins Jonathan Ross tonight. Don't expect him even to hint at the identity of H. Instead he might just reveal what he's been up to since – he's been a busy guy, among other projects starring alongside Daniel Mays in Code 404, a comedy about a crime-fighting duo.

Also in the studio are comic Romesh Ranganathan and singer Ellie Goulding. JANE RACKHAM

Who will strike first – West Ham's Alisha Lehmann or City's Nikita Parris?

Women's FA Cup Final

5.10pm BBC1, 5.15pm BT Sport 2

Manchester City v West Ham United

(kick-off 5.30pm) Before their semi-final against Reading, West Ham head coach Matt Beard said that booking a place in the FA Cup final would be "a fairy-tale ending" to their first season as a fully professional outfit in the Women's Super League.

Well, job done – but to go one better and take home some silverware will be a tall task: City won the League Cup in February, and are flying high in the league. Plus their squad boasts three of the six nominees for the PFA women's player of the year: captain Steph Houghton, midfielder Keira Walsh and in-form striker Nikita Parris.

But West Ham have some eye-catching talent, too, in 20-year-old Swiss forward Alisha Lehmann, while centre-back Gilly Flaherty – a seven-time FA Cup winner – brings vital experience.

Whatever the outcome, the Wembley crowd – which numbered a record 45,000 last year – is in for a treat. HANNAH SHADDOCK

Hepburn celebrated

Breakfast at Tiffany's ★★★★★ 3.50pm Sky Select
What would have been film icon and Unicef ambassador Audrey Hepburn's 90th birthday (she died too young, at 63, in 1993) provides a fine excuse for a triple bill on Sky Select. Audrey gleams in black-and-white as a bored princess going incognito in Roman Holiday, and as a chauffeur's unhappy daughter in Sabrina. Breakfast at Tiffany's puts some Technicolor in Audrey's cheeks, as well as providing her with one of cinema's cutest marmalade tabby cats and romantic comedy's rainiest endings. ANDREW COLLINS

Clash of the titans

1.05pm Film4 FREEVIEW
Worlds collide in this adaptation of Lynne Reid Banks's novel (review, p32). In one particularly memorable scene, action figures from Star Wars, Jurassic Park, RoboCop and more are brought to life by Omri's magic cupboard and waste no time getting into a huge fight. The best face-off is between Darth Vader and a T-rex – made possible by George Lucas giving director Frank Oz, his former Star Wars collaborator, permission to use the character of Vader. ELLIE PORTER

More scares, please!

Slender Man **★★

10.00pm Sky Premiere
Although pitched as a horror for the modern era, this workmanlike chiller is simply a rehash of old boogeyman tropes. Despite the efforts of a cast including The Conjuring actress Joey King, it's neither substantial enough to hold the attention nor scary enough to be worth the slog. JAMES LUXFORD

GRAND INQUISITOR
Can DCS Carmichael
(Anna Maxwell Martin) make headway in the

PICK OF THE DAY Line of Duty 9.00pm BBC1

DRAMA OF THE WEEK This current series has already given us many things: shock throat slittings, a lesson in how to spell the word "definitely" and a deluge of acronyms (do you know your OCG from your AFO, your DIR from your ARU?). But, Line of Duty's USP (sorry to add to the tally) has always been its interrogation scenes and the one in tonight's 85-minute finale is so intense, it should really have come with a weigh-in and pay-per-view contract. As you've probably guessed, it's round two of Hastings v Carmichael – and the AC-12 boss's career is on the line. During the showdown, Adrian Dunbar is, naturally, his usual charismatic self, yet it's Anna Maxwell Martin who steals the show as the fast-tracked Carmichael – her character's brittle smile and phoney courtesy reminiscent of one of those Ministry of Magic officials from Harry Potter who'd turn up at Hogwarts to tighten the screws. But if you're reading this for "H"-related clues, I'm afraid I can't be drawn. For the purposes of the tape, I'm saying nothing. DAVID BROWN See feature: page 10

Antiques Roadshow

8.00pm BBC1

ENTERTAINMENT It's only a few weeks since we saw Fiona Bruce bravely ride a replica penny farthing through the grounds of Erddig in Wrexham for the show. And now the experts see another penny farthing when the Roadshow arrives at Newcastle's Civic Centre – although Fiona shows no inclination to attempt a second trip.

It's an edition where several items bought for a song – including a tiny pot that cost its owner £10 – turn out to have an impressive value. But will any of them produce the sort of overwhelmed, tearful reaction we saw from the owner of a Steiff teddy bear hot-water bottle at the Buckfast Abbey visit?

D-Day: the King Who Fooled Hitler

8.00pm C4

HISTORY Other than his insistence that the royal family wouldn't be evacuated from Britain during the Second World War and the occasional bit of morale-boosting, King George VI didn't seem to contribute much to the war effort. However, the discovery of his private secretary's diary proved he had an active role in Operation Overlord, the Allied action that included the D-Day landings. It proves the King knew of MI5's plans to confuse the Germans by feeding them fake news, and helped amplify the deception. Press coverage of his visits to British troops tricked the Nazis into thinking they'd worked out when and where an invasion might happen. JR

Lost Treasures of the Maya

8.00pm National Geographic

HISTORY New series Technology is changing modern archaeology. Lidar – in which lasers are pulsed from space to Earth and the distances measured – can detect buildings and roads buried under the ground. Now National Geographic's Albert Lin is setting out to explore the wealth of new detail emerging from the forests of central America that's helping archaeologists put flesh on the bones of Maya history.

First, he's in Guatemala, hacking through jungle to find remains of walls and hidden pyramids. We also follow one archaeological team making astonishing discoveries the old-fashioned, hot and claustrophobic way. GILL CRAWFORD

Victoria

9.00pm ITV

DRAMA All is not well in the royal household. "I used to be his friend, his companion. Now I feel I'm just his wife," complains Victoria, because Albert is obsessed with his Great Exhibition plans. He's spending all his time deep in conversation with Mr Cole, his energetic colleague from the Royal Society of Arts and Commerce.

As the press are ridiculing his project on a daily basis, Victoria toys with a way to distract him from what she sees as a potential catastrophe, until a comment from Lord Palmerston convinces her to support her husband in his dream. Meanwhile, Sophie's illicit dalliance with a footman ends in a truly distressing way. JR

JED MERCURIO: THE STORY SO FAR

Not only does Line of Duty end tonight (9pm BBC1), but its creator Jed Mercurio is also the focus of The South Bank Show (10.30pm Sky Arts). Now best known for writing some of the most heart-stopping shows on TV including last year's huge hit Bodyguard, Mercurio, 53 was a junior doctor whose scriptwriting career began with BBC1's Cardiac Arrest after answering an ad in the British Medical Journal asking for doctors to contribute to a new series.

"My view of the world of medicine came purely from watching television," he explained. "When I did start working as a doctor I was struck by the contrast – and to a large extent I felt that I'd been misled by medical fiction." He went on to write medical dramas Bodies and Critical, as well as comedy The Grimleys, sci-fi series Invasion: Earth (Mercurio wanted to be an astronaut in his youth) and an adaptation of Lady Chatterley's Lover. FT

Celebrity SAS: Who Dares Wins for Stand Up to Cancer

9.00pm C4

REALITY Horribly compelling though this is, last week's interrogation test was uncomfortably tortuous – for the celebs and for us. It's no wonder it broke Dev Griffin, but equally this level of psychological brutality may have been too much for viewers, too. The physical challenges certainly make I'm a Celebrity's bushtucker trials seem like a walk in the park.

Astonishingly, eight celebrities have survived the constant verbal abuse and "beastings" of this mock SAS course. They've now got one final gruelling challenge... then they can go home to their own beds for a well-deserved mug of cocoa. JR

The Lancaster: Britain's Flying Past

9.00pm BBC4

HISTORY The average age of a Lancaster bomber crew member was 22, with a life expectancy of two weeks. These young, brave men flew dangerous Second World War missions to Germany in what John Sergeant, a lifelong lover of Lancasters, describes as "the plane that won the war".

But a surviving Lancaster crew member isn't sentimental: "We knew what we were getting into." In this 2014 documentary Sergeant looks at the Lancaster's most famous, and devastating, attacks: on Dresden, which was all but destroyed by a ferocious pummelling and resulting firestorm, and the Dambusters raids, with Barnes Wallis's bouncing bombs.

ALISON GRAHAM TV EDITOR

The South Bank Show

10.30pm Sky Arts

ARTS Hot on the heels of another ratings smash – the season-five finale of Line of Duty – comes this sharp, no-flab profile of its creator. Jed Mercurio is not what you'd call a slouch: he's been a doctor, RAF pilot and novelist, and he's still managed to create some of the biggest and most talked-about TV shows of recent years (see above for his CV so far).

Cameras follow this son of Italian immigrants as he drives around the West Midlands streets of his youth and feeds us fascinating jumping-off points (watching Blockbusters coaxed him into medicine). And on-set access gives us gold-starred insight to Line of Duty, too. But why couldn't the BBC commission this? MARK BRAXTON

Leslie (Callum Woodhouse) enlists a troop of scouts to wave flags for the royal visit

The Durrells

8.00pm ITV

DRAMA There's great excitement on Corfu because the King of Greece is paying a visit – the streets have already been dusted and the trees washed in preparation. The royal route passes by the villa, so the Durrells plan a welcoming display. But, of course, it all goes a bit wrong...

As a counterpoint to the sun-dappled festivities, we cut to a claustrophobic railway carriage where a returning Margo is packed in with several Europeans who are understandably prickly about the current situation with Hitler. It's a neat way of reminding us about the imminent war – and has the bonus of landing a boyfriend for Margo.

There's no such luck for Spiros and Louisa. The fallout over Basil and Dimitra's clandestine liaison doesn't bode well for a happy ending. JR

7.00 World Snooker

The second session of the World Championship final, with a further nine frames scheduled for this evening. Cameron's ratings battle

The Other Woman ★★★ 9.00pm Film4 FREEVIEW
This romantic comedy about three women uniting against a common foe (Game of Thrones actor Nikolaj Coster-Waldau) was originally slapped with a restrictive "R" rating in the US. But star Cameron Diaz thought there was nothing particularly offensive about The Other Woman (review, p33) and made the bold move of appearing at a hearing to plead her case. "They judge us [women] a little bit more than they do men," she said to the LA Times. "Like, you can't say 'vagina'. What's wrong with a vagina?" She won the case, and the MPAA downgraded the film – without cuts – to a PG-13. ELLIE PORTER

New to Netflix today

The Girl with All the Gifts ★★★★★ Netflix
Mike Carey's adaptation of his own dystopian novel sees a fungal spore infecting the planet, turning most people into "hungries" who crave human flesh. But contaminated youngster Melanie (the extraordinary Sennia Nanua) is somehow able to control her cannibalistic urges, so could provide the cure. Paddy Considine, Glenn Close and Gemma Arterton co-star in a movie – directed by Peaky Blinders regular Colm McCarthy – that is the best and most unusual zombie tale since 28 Days Later. ALAN JONES

Leaving iPlayer soon

Brief Encounter ★★★★★ BBC iPlayer
FREE TO VIEW
Co-adapted by Noël Coward from his play Still Life, this is one of the finest films ever made in Britain. What makes the illicit love between Trevor Howard and Celia Johnson so memorable is the pair's sheer ordinariness – they really could be anybody. Available on iPlayer until tomorrow. DAVID PARKINSON

PICK OF THE DAY The All New Monty: Who Bares Wins 9.00pm ITV

REALITY For the third time, ringmasters Ashley Banjo and Alexander Armstrong cajole and encourage a group of nervous male celebs to shed their inhibitions and their thongs in front of a live audience. Of course it's entertaining but it's also a serious business because the aim is to raise awareness of prostate and testicular cancer – and most of the men have personal reasons for taking part.

Hats off (if you'll pardon the pun) to them all – including Xander and Ashley – for whipping off their Officer and a Gentleman uniforms at the climax of their routine, even if there have been some serious doubts along the way about going through with it.

A word of warning: you may care to avert your eyes – and stick your fingers in your ears – for the scene where Joe Pasquale, Jason Cundy and several others get waxed. They make more noise than the audience do during the performance. Tomorrow it's the women's turn to bare all. JANE RACKHAM

Travel Man: 48 Hours in Hamburg

8.30pm C4

TRAVEL The last time we saw Bob Mortimer going away for a spot of male bonding it was with Paul Whitehouse and there was a rod involved. This time it's a totally different kettle of fish.

He joins Richard Ayoade for a chilly trip to Hamburg, where their nautical-themed hotel boasts the facility to compose a message in a bottle. After refuelling with Labskaus (a mashed corned beef, potato and beetroot dish created for scurvy-ridden sailors with crumbling teeth), they stop by the German Food Additives Museum. Hard to believe such a thing exists, but it does, and so they get to taste a plethora of E numbers and emulsifiers. JR

Not Going Out

9.00pm BBC1

SITCOM A little bit o' politics tonight, as Lee and Lucy discuss an issue that tears at the soul of so many middle-class families: should they move their son to a private school in case the comp underperforms? With the couple's divergent backgrounds underlined by the involvement of Lee's feckless dad and Lucy's posho pops, we're set for a comedy of snobbery, inverse and otherwise.

A farce of lies, quick fixes and people always finding out the thing they weren't supposed to know plays out when Lee and Lucy try to use subterfuge to secure a place at their favoured hothouse. It hits all the right sitcom beats, a bit too squarely: you can see every calamity coming.

Banged Up: Teens behind Bars

9.00pm C4

DOCUMENTARY This second instalment brings a welcome fleshing-out of both the misbehaving teens and the man trying to whip them into shape, Lieutenant Robbie Stokes, who says of his charges: "They have natural abilities, but are using them for the wrong thing."

We begin to see how the disciplinary techniques of Stokes and his team could reap rewards, while the kids face their starkest warning yet when they hear from two inmates who are both facing life sentences for murder.

While Lt Stokes appears to make a breakthrough with 17-year-old tough guy Tunde, the girls come to verbal blows. HANNAH SHADDOCK

Game of Thrones

9.00pm Sky Atlantic

DRAMA After starting its final series with two dialogue-heavy episodes, Game of Thrones kicked things into high gear with last week's truly epic battle episode, a feature-length clash between the living and the dead that is officially one of (if not the) longest battles ever put to screen.

And after a conflict that big, you have to expect similarly huge repercussions. Who's survived? What new (and old) enemies face them over the coming episodes?

And, perhaps most crucially of all, will somebody please turn on the lights so we can see what's going on? When we were promised the darkest series to date, we weren't expecting it literally... HUW FULLERTON

The David Brown column: page 41

It's a tricky old week on Emmerdale (7.00pm ITV) as we get a series of flashbacks that return to the fateful night at the club we witnessed a fortnight ago. Tonight, we're very much setting the scene, but we are promised answers to a number of questions as the flashbacks progress. The person I think most viewers are interested in is Maya (Louisa Clein, right) – specifically, what took place in the woods? Why is she now missing? And with her scarf having been found, might she actually be dead?

TODAY IN SOAPLAND

Other characters in focus include Ellis (was it his brother Billy who stabbed him?), Rhona (who did she kiss when the club closed?) and Victoria (what is the shock event that is set to affect her for the rest of her life?).

Over on EastEnders (8.00pm BBC1), it's Tina's birthday, but Shirley is refusing to reveal her present. But I'll let you into a little secret: it's actually Mick and he's waiting to surprise Tina in the barrel store. Welcome home, Mr Dyer, we've missed you. DAVID BROWN

Sex on Trial

10.00pm C4

DOCUMENTARY New series Nikki Yovino hit the headlines in the States last year when she was sentenced to a year in prison after pleading guilty to making false rape claims against two student football players from Sacred Heart University in Connecticut. But the nuances of the investigation, as revealed here in this eye-opening look at sexual crime and punishment, do raise certain troubling issues.

I didn't know, for instance, that detectives in America are permitted to claim, while questioning someone, that they have video recording of an incident when, in fact, no such footage exists. As you'll see, when Detective Walberto Cotto says exactly this to Yovino, it has a big effect on the statement she then goes on to give. DB

Cleopatra and Me: In Search of a Lost Queen

10.00pm BBC4

HISTORY In the west, when we consider Cleopatra, we might think of Shakespeare, Elizabeth Taylor's sultry seductress or Amanda Barrie in Carry on Cleo. But what do Egyptians know about their last pharaoh? Dr Islam Issa was taught to regard her as a great politician; here he sets out to explore how the stories diverged.

It's bookended by two other programmes about Ptolemaic Egypt: at 9pm, in Cleopatra: a Timewatch Guide, Vanessa Collingridge traces the changing shape of history's most famous face, while at 10.30pm in Swallowed by the Sea, we look beneath the Med at the amazing remains of the lost city of Heracleion, near Alexandria. GILL CRAWFORD

Back to Life

11.00pm BBC1 (Scotland: 12 midnight)

COMEDY DRAMA It's a well-worn comedy set-up: two characters trapped together on a long car journey. But this being the worrying world of Back to Life, we soon have Miri and Caroline embroiled in an accident and having to deal with a severely injured fox in the road. This bloody reminder of death then becomes the catalyst for Caroline finally giving voice to some long-standing grievances concerning her daughter's time in prison.

Back at home, Oscar finds out the identity of his wife's secret lover and engineers a showdown. It ends up being a victory, of the small and messy kind that we've come to expect from this bleakly tender series. DB

LIGHTS, CAMERA...

Alison and Mike (Charlotte Ritchie and Kiell Smith-Bynoe) have yet more visitors

Ghosts

9.30pm BBC1

COMEDY OF THE WEEK This brightly imaginative sitcom remains flawless, although tonight you won't be wiping away unexpected tears as you might have last week. It's a light, cheering but devilishly well-worked episode, relying on the fact that, at this point in the series, we can enjoy just hanging out with the characters for a while in whatever new situation arises.

A television crew descends on the mansion to shoot a period drama, offering rookie stately homeowners Alison and Mike (Charlotte Ritchie and Kiell Smith-Bynoe) the chance to make big money – if their decrepit haunted house doesn't fall apart. As usual, though, the finest comic work is in the way the ghosts, played by the old Horrible Histories team, adjust to a fresh example of modernity: they don't understand the awe-inspiring magic of film-making, until suddenly they do. JS

Breaker Morant ★★★★★

6.40pm Movies4Men FREEVIEW

Director Bruce Beresford's 1979 drama about the Boer War (review, p34) was made for the rock bottom price of $65,000 – not bad for a movie that was described by one critic at the time as “the most distinguished film of the year”. When Beresford was doing publicity in New York, he was asked what he would have done with a larger budget. He sighed, saying, “I would have been able to fight the Boer War with more than 18 bloody extras!” TOM FOLLEY

American Graffiti ★★★★★ 11.40pm TCM

A summer night in the lives of a group of Californian teenagers following their high-school graduation in 1962 is brilliantly captured by director George Lucas in this classic coming-of-age saga based on his own youthful exploits. The golden-oldies soundtrack is a perfect complement to the sharp and tender comedy, engagingly played out by future stars including Richard Dreyfuss and Ronny (Ron) Howard. Wonderfully evoking the era's spirit, this is one of those rare movies you live through rather than watch. ALAN JONES

10.00pm Sky Premiere

A muddled adaptation of Howard Kaplan's 1977 book, this political thriller stars Jonathan Rhys Meyers as an Israeli spy recalled to Jerusalem after a failed mission. With a tendency to lose the narrative thread, director Daniel Zelik Berk's film is full of period detail but unsatisfying in its haphazard execution.

CALMING INFLUENCE

PICK OF THE DAY Trust Me 9.00pm BBC1

DRAMA Well done to the makers of Trust Me, who I've now realised must have filmed the whole series during a power cut. At first, I thought the gloom was merely down to the way things were run at the spinal unit where Jamie (Alfred Enoch) is being treated, but when, in this final episode, a character gets quizzed at a police station, even there it looks like they're paying the price for ignoring red bills from the electricity company. So, with one mystery solved, we now turn our attention to another:

just who is responsible for the string of suspicious deaths? Personally, I'm not mad keen on any of the staff, though sadist Dr Alex (Richard Rankin) is particularly loathsome, and handsy Dr Archie Watson (John Hannah) should be struck off for the way he keeps sneaking up on people and grabbing them by the shoulders. I reckon he's getting carried away because he thinks he's working in the scary hospital from Halloween II. Or he could just be a bit of a perv. DAVID BROWN

Bake Off: the Professionals

8.00pm C4

ENTERTAINMENT "I never want to see a fing lemon again!" mutters a stressed-out chef, while there's so much rushing round the kitchen that Tom Allen describes it as being like a farce: "A vicar will come through that door in a minute with his trousers down!" That would certainly lift the mood, as Cherish Finden and Benoit Blin are being exceptionally harsh, describing patisserie as boring, disappointing, lacking innovation or flavour and – the coup de grâce – inedible. One pair get rave reviews, though. Creating a fabulous éclair tower sends another team into emotional meltdown, but at least nobody's showstopper collapses this week. JANE RACKHAM

Surgeons: at the Edge of Life

9.00pm BBC2

DOCUMENTARY Once again, the operations are intricate, lengthy and challenging, even for the most experienced surgeon. But what's especially interesting is seeing how colorectal surgeon Simon Radley talks through an operation so that trainee Deborah Wright can learn not just the physical techniques but the thought process and communication skills required. We also discover the benefits of innovative CyberKnife treatment in targeting cancer without the patient being cut open. "These non-surgical treatments are ultimately a better way," says Radley, adding pragmatically, "though people like me will have to hang up their scalpels in the future." JR

The All New Monty: Ladies' Night

9.00pm ITV

REALITY Now the lads have had their bits out, it's the women's turn. Victoria Derbyshire and Coleen Nolan return to encourage a new set of celebs (including one surprising late addition) to bare all so as to raise awareness of breast cancer.

The process, under the gentle tutelage of Ashley Banjo, isn't only about rehearsing a dance routine and stripping. It's about self-confidence, vulnerability and honesty, so there are tears. There are also moving stories about how cancer has touched the women's lives, directly or through family members. So when they finally perform, you'll be an emotional wreck – although, like them, elated too. JR

9.00pm C4

DOCUMENTARY Amid all the programmes spawned by last year's royal wedding, this instalment of 24 Hours in A&E may well be the most profound. Its subject is enduring unions, exemplified by John, 92, brought in with a head injury, and his wife of 66 years, Maggie, who is impressively spritely for 97. Proper Londoner Minnie, 98, who calls everyone "mate", has a blood clot in her leg that presents doctors with a challenge, but as her daughter Chris recalls, it's not the first she's faced in her life. And as the St George's staff get teary-eyed watching the royal nuptials, I felt a bit lachrymose too as Lynda describes how her partner David's accident led to a belated realisation. HANNAH SHADDOCK

There's a real "Where do I know you from?" moment on Holby City (8.00pm BBC1; Scotland: 10.35pm) when a patient called Victoria is admitted onto the ward. To save you scouring the end credits, I'll tell you who's playing her: it's Sarah Douglas (right), best known as Ursa, co-conspirator of General Zod in Superman (1978) and Superman II (1980). You know who I mean, right? She's the one with the killer cheekbones who says: "They come from there. A place called Houston." Man, she was scary back in the day. Apart from former Kryptonian supervillains showing up, we have the similarly evil Evan (Jack Ryder) getting a job working alongside his ex Chloe (Amy Lennox). Within minutes, he's scheming to ensure that Chloe falls out with her mum, Ange (Dawn Steele), and sides with him instead. What a dirtbag! If only he'd crossed paths with the woman formerly known as Ursa. She could have crushed his hand and blasted him with her heat vision. DB

Ben Fogle: New Lives in the Wild

9.15pm Channel 5
DOCUMENTARY The beautiful scenery stands in contrast to the stomach-churning injuries that young British-born vet Janey has to deal with at her sanctuary for street dogs in Sri Lanka. She left the UK because she wanted to save more lives, and it's inspiring to see someone following a strong calling with such fearless altruism. A cute puppy that's been bitten by a pit viper provides a handy climax for the programme-makers, but this is everyday life for Janey. "She's obviously incredibly ambitious," says Ben. True, though "compassionate" would have been an even more appropriate adjective. It's a brilliant episode, but not one to watch with your dinner. GARY ROSE

Don't Forget the Driver

10.00pm BBC2
SITCOM Humdrum Pete, with his frayed tips tray and anaemic packed lunches, has now become the reluctant hero of this story, what with him having taken his whole family (Rita included) on a day trip to Devon to try to put some miles between them and their pursuers. But the people traffickers aren't giving up so easily and a confrontation is soon playing out against the unlikely backdrop of Babbacombe Model Village in Torquay. With miniature versions of national monuments in danger of being trampled underfoot as God Save the Queen broadcasts from a tinny loudspeaker, we get a timely lesson in compassion as Pete stands up to his venal colleague Squeaky Dave. DB

10.00pm C4
ENTERTAINMENT Everyone walks into the First Dates restaurant with high hopes that they're about to meet "the one" because they've all been incredibly well matched by the programme-makers. So it's heartbreaking for us – and them, obviously – when dessert arrives and there's no spark. Tonight, one couple seem to have loads in common, but in a furtive phone call he reveals he'd like her to be half a foot taller. Oh, come on – really? Another pair both admit to a lust for life, although his emphasis is on lust. And Michael announces, "People find it quite taxing to be in my company for any extended period of time." That doesn't bode well for bubbly date Del. JR

IN THE DANGER ZONE
Adam Nagaitis as one of the firefighters who risked their lives at the power plant

9.00pm Sky Atlantic
DRAMA New series Knowing what we do now about the events of April 1986 makes it even more horrifying to see people's casual attitudes when the nuclear power plant exploded. In Craig Mazin's grim drama, locals watch the "beautiful colours" in the sky while children play amid radioactive particles floating through the air; firefighters shrug off the danger ("it's only the roof that's on fire"); officials buck-pass and deny there's any serious risk. Then the plant workers and emergency crew start collapsing and vomiting from radiation burns. But it's not all lies and cowardice – some individuals went to heroic lengths to save lives. A bleak, greenish light and what feels like realistic Soviet-speak give an authentic feel, while the starry cast includes Jared Harris, Stellan Skarsgard and Emily Watson. But it is, inevitably, a hauntingly depressing story. JR

Antony and Cleopatra ★★★

10.00am Movies4Men FREEVIEW

This was a passion project – and then some – for Charlton Heston. For his revisit of the Shakespeare tale, he wore directing, co-writing and acting hats, playing Marc Antony for the third time after his 1950 and 1970 versions of Julius Caesar. But it wasn't a smooth ride. The budget was uncomfortably tight, which could explain why Heston ended up slotting in some leftover stock footage from Ben-Hur. Now that's some epic recycling. ELLIE PORTER

The Great Gatsby ★★★ Netflix/Amazon Prime

Baz Luhrmann's opulent take on the F Scott Fitzgerald novel is new to Netflix and Prime this month. Leonardo DiCaprio stars as the new-money millionaire throwing lavish parties in an attempt to win back old flame Daisy (played by Carey Mulligan), having lost her to playboy heir Tom Buchanan (Joel Edgerton). If the unrelenting glitz can feel counter-intuitive, Luhrmann isn't being sacrilegious; this is more an unabashed expression of love for the book that's slightly lost its way. Much like Gatsby himself. STELLA PAPAMICHAEL

★★★★★ 3.10pm TCM

Gary Cooper was born on this day in 1901, and he stars here as an army major accused of cowardice during an expedition against Pancho Villa in 1916 Mexico. Robert Rossen's film makes for grim but satisfying viewing, with Rita Hayworth, Van Heflin and Richard Conte among Coop's co-stars.

TAKEN TO TASK
Lou Sanders, Iain Stirling, Sian Gibson, Paul Sinha and Joe Thomas are tasked by Greg Davies and Alex Horne (seated)

PICK OF THE DAY Taskmaster 9.00pm Dave

ENTERTAINMENT Watching The Chase star Paul Sinha wandering aimlessly around in circles wearing a dressing gown and shouting "Hello!" 64 times would, in any other situation, be cause for alarm. But on Taskmaster, this is not only completely normal but also brilliantly entertaining.

Faithful fans of the deliciously daft show will be welcoming series eight with open arms, while the uninitiated should familiarise themselves pronto with the unabashed silliness of seeing comedians look like wallies on this anti-panel show of mini-games featuring – in this episode – putrid smells, baby monitors and an inexplicably tense game of hide and seek.

One-Day International Cricket

12.30pm Sky Sports Cricket/ Main Event

SPORT The first of five one-day internationals between England and Pakistan begins, with the Cricket World Cup less than a month away. England are the number one ODI side in the world and favourites to win the World Cup on home soil, but Pakistan will be an ideal final test before the main action begins.

The most intriguing name on the team sheet is fast bowler Jofra Archer, selected for this series but not currently in the World Cup squad. Could he be the missing ingredient? Even if he is, is it too late to be fiddling with your frontline World Cup attack? JAMES GILL

Location, Location, Location

8.00pm C4

PROPERTY This week's house hunts should be straightforward enough. A young couple are looking for their first home in north London – they've got the finances sorted out, and know what they want, although one must-have leaves Kirstie nonplussed: "When did men in their 20s become so obsessed with storage?"

Slightly further afield in Hertfordshire, Phil is showing big houses with gorgeous gardens to a single mum-of-three and her mother, who are aiming for multi-generational living. They're swept off their feet by one semi-rural property with a to-die-for kitchen, but there are five people to satisfy... can anyone get what they want? GILL CRAWFORD

Saving Britain's Hedgehogs

8.00pm Channel 5

DOCUMENTARY Steve Backshall is a busy man. Fresh from scaling Arctic mountains on BBC2, the adventurer returns to the more hospitable habitat of Britain's gardens. It's no secret that hedgehog numbers have plummeted, and there's a very real danger they'll be extinct by 2025.

Thank goodness, then, for the army of hog helpers he meets who are devoting their time to nursing the young and injured back to health, including Queen's Brian May – who states that one of the greatest joys in his life is rehabilitating hedgehogs (more than performing at Live Aid?!). This is as much a crucial call to action as it is an adorable look at one of our most charismatic critters. FT

Earth from Space

9.00pm BBC1 (Scotland: 11.05pm)

DOCUMENTARY The finale of a sometimes captivating series has a focused story to tell, of human activity changing the planet at frightening speed. The show harnesses its best innovation – time-lapse satellite photos – to capture cities expanding into the desert, and forests and glaciers shrinking. From high above we also usefully observe storms and wildfires fuelled by climate change.

Impressive spectacles, but Chiwetel Ejiofor's narration has been gloopy and overcooked throughout. In episode one, emperor penguins were "one of our most iconic species"; now that thuddingly meaningless phrase is repeated verbatim for chimps. JACK SEALE

So, Mary in Coronation Street (7.30pm, 8.30pm ITV) is upset with Norris because he wants to get married to Freda. Now, I know we all love Mary (Patti Clare) because she's so often thwarted in love and speaks like a Barbara Cartland character attending a Regency ball. But don't forget how she first tried to win the affections of Norris (Malcolm Hebden). That's right, she kidnapped him, Misery-style, and started fantasising about him being Heathcliff to her Cathy. A lot has happened since that attempt, of course.

TODAY IN SOAPLAND

And we're now at a stage where Norris and Mary are, technically, a married couple. Hence Mary refusing to give her other half the divorce he's asking for. But how will she react when she discovers a stash of letters that Norris had kept hidden at Number 3 – missives from Mary's one-time boyfriend and editor of supernatural-themed magazine The Inexplicable, Brendan Finch? Expect furious recriminations, especially after Mary finds an engagement ring in one of the envelopes... DAVID BROWN

Chimerica

9.00pm C4

DRAMA The strong if somewhat stodgy drama – Channel 4 bills it as a “thriller”, which is pushing it – concludes with some meaningful resolutions and more than one fiendish surprise.

Mostly it's a reckoning for our man Lee (Alessandro Nivola), as the maverick photographer repeatedly discovers either that he hasn't understood something he's done, or that he hasn't understood the consequences, usually because he doesn't comprehend the differences between China and the US as profoundly as he thinks.

All this calls for a humbling tongue-lashing, delivered with relish by the excellent Cherry Jones as Lee's redoubtable colleague, Mel. JS

Brexit: Behind Closed Doors – Storyville

9.00pm BBC4

DOCUMENTARY A two-part fly-on-the-wall doc made over two years by Belgian film-maker Lode Desmet. It gives us access to the man whose occasional public statements, often made in a wryly despairing or bemused tone, have given us glimpses of the EU's reaction to Britain's Brexit meltdown: Guy Verhofstadt.

As the Brexit co-ordinator of the European Parliament, the former Belgian PM runs the team that's decided the EU's negotiating strategy. We're promised off-record conversations and telling private moments, documenting how the other side have moved from cautious respect to frustration, annoyance and ultimately plain amusement. JS

Urban Myths

9.00pm Sky Arts

COMEDY DRAMA The spoof anthology reimagines an event in New York in 1979, when the supermodel/disco diva Grace Jones and her artist boyfriend Jean-Paul Goude were held at gunpoint in their penthouse by a burglar demanding large sums of money.

Grace under Pressure struggles and largely fails to land laughs or create a sense of authenticity. Too much facial mugging and a backstreet that looks a long way from Manhattan work against it. There are one or two pleasing touches – David Ajala as the unnamed burglar keen to live to see his daughter's birthday and a strange cameo from Emily Atack as Debbie Harry – but this is a disappointing entry in the series. PATRICK MULKERN

Forensics: the Real CSI

9.00pm BBC2

DOCUMENTARY Much like 24 Hours in Police Custody or Ambulance, this brilliant series needs a strong disposition and the ability to inhale deeply and steel yourself for what unfurls – in this case a burglary in which a man and his dog were stabbed, and a woman who has been raped.

The latter is particularly disturbing: the 27-year-old has learning disabilities and was led away from a bus stop by a stranger before she was attacked by two men. At a specialist sexual assault clinic, a series of invasive swabs provide a jigsaw of two DNA profiles, which scientists, with great difficulty, must attempt to interpret. Without a reference sample from one of the two suspects, it's painstaking.

If and when the meticulous and gritty work of forensics leads to arrests in these cases, the result as ever is usually a string of “no comment” interviews. Is there anything more infuriating? FT

9.00 Brexit: Behind Closed Doors – Storyville

RT 1/2. For two years, Belgian film-maker Lode Desmet has had exclusive access to the European Parliament's Brexit co-ordinator Guy Verhofstadt and his team, to chronicle the story of the complex negotiations from the "other" side. The result captures off-the-record conversations and arguments as the European negotiators devise their strategy for dealing with Brexit. As the UK fails to present either a united front or a clear goal, the Europeans' respect for their British counterparts turns to frustration, irritation and, eventually, ridicule. Concludes tomorrow 9pm. See p85. Director Lode Desmet Executive producer Fiona Stourton (S) (HD)

Taxi Driver ★★★★★

10.55pm Sony Movie Channel FREEVIEW

Robert De Niro is one of cinema's most famous method men, so it makes sense that he decided to get himself a New York taxi licence to prepare for his role in Martin Scorsese's drama (review, p35). Most of the time, De Niro went unrecognised by his fares, despite having won an Oscar for The Godfather Part II. However, Scorsese recalled that one eagle-eyed passenger did notice that he was being ferried about by the young Vito Corleone: "He said, 'Gee, I guess it's tough to find work.'" ELLIE PORTER

A feast of Carry Ons

ITV Player FREE TO VIEW

If you're a sucker for the fine British art of innuendo, ITV Player is currently rammed with late-1960s/early-1970s Carry On corks. For me, the period romps age the best: explorations of "the British position" in Up the Khyber; threat of a revolutionary chopper in Don't Lose Your Head; and assorted missionary moments in Up the Jungle. In the latter, Sid James plays Bill Boosey, who's avoiding the cannibalistic Nosh tribe, while in Again Doctor, he's Gladstone Screwer. It's enough to make your chest swell... with pride. Ooh, I say! ANDREW COLLINS

Kubrick goes to war

Full Metal Jacket

Netflix

Stanley Kubrick's Vietnam War drama, shot entirely in Britain, is as harrowing today as it was on its release in 1987. The performances are superb, especially Lee Ermey as the foul-mouthed drill sergeant. Kubrick is the subject of a new exhibition at London's Design Museum, which runs until September. ADRIAN TURNER

RAISING HER VOICE
Vicky McClure is close to home, working with a choir in Nottingham

PICK OF THE DAY Our Dementia Choir with Vicky McClure 8.00pm BBC1 (Wales: Friday 8.30pm)

DOCUMENTARY OF THE WEEK When Vicky McClure announces to her dementia choir singers that they're going to be performing at Nottingham's Royal Concert Hall – which has a capacity of 2,500 people – there are whistles of disbelief and claps of glee. Explaining her own experience of dementia, 50-year-old singer Julie says, "It's like part of my brain has gone on holiday and left the rest of it here... and gradually more of my brain will go and join them on the beach."

Julie's in the earlier stages, but McClure also visits a care home that has personalised music therapy for those further down the line, and sees how it reduces anxiety and restlessness. You're left with the sense of how much good this resource could do across the country. When the choir does its final performance, it's wonderfully moving for both the singers and the audience. McClure may be best known for Line of Duty and This Is England, but this might be her most powerful work yet. KASIA DELGADO

Golf: the British Masters

10.30am, 3.30pm Sky Sports Golf/ Main Event

SPORT After the historic ending to the US Masters in Augusta, it's back to the windswept world of links golf as Hillside Golf Club plays host to the British Masters. Local player Tommy Fleetwood is honorary host for the year, following the likes of Justin Rose, Ian Poulter and Lee Westwood.

Last year, Eddie Pepperell announced himself at the Masters, scooping both the tournament victory and Shot of the Year for his incredible hole-in-one. A tee shot at the ninth saw his ball smack the pin and bounce off before spinning back into the hole. "It's one of the craziest aces I think I've seen," he said sheepishly afterwards. JAMES GILL

When I Grow Up

8.00pm C4

DOCUMENTARY This experiment is a delicate proposition. Tonight a new group of kids from widely varying backgrounds embark on another joint internship at a real company, this time a chocolatier. At first the tone veers uncomfortably close to Apprentice-style conflict: I felt sorry for Constantin, who lives in a Belgravia mansion but is only eight and can't really be expected to adjust for his own privilege.

Eventually, though, he stops villainously embodying social inequality, and we can concentrate on the heartwarming sight of the kids surprising themselves with how capable they are. It turns out children know a thing or two about chocolate... JACK SEALE

The Big Bang Theory/ Young Sheldon

8.00pm, 8.30pm E4

SITCOM Dr Greg Kurburn has proved to be an irritating fly in Sheldon's ointment in this final series of Big Bang. As played by Sean Astin (Samwise Gamgee in Lord of the Rings), the self-serving Dr P has effectively elbowed Amy out of a forthcoming group Nobel award. But Sheldon and Amy may have proof that he plagiarised his college thesis. Dare they use it as ammunition?

In Young Sheldon, meanwhile, Georgie's former sweetheart Veronica comes to stay at the Cooper household, while Meemaw and Dr Sturgis (wonderful Wallace Shawn) celebrate their one-year anniversary. One year? Inconceivable. MARK BRAXTON

Superstructures: Engineering Marvels

8.00pm National Geographic

DOCUMENTARY Costing in excess of $100 billion, the International Space Station is the most expensive structure ever built by humans. It shoots around the Earth at an orbital velocity of 28,000km per hour, while astronauts conduct experiments in the vacuum of space. Unfortunately for them, it's an environment closer to the gritty claustrophobia of Ridley Scott's Alien than the spacious, pristine habitat imagined by Stanley Kubrick in 2001: a Space Odyssey.

Here, impressive CGI pulls the structure apart and reassembles it like a giant Meccano set, uncovering how it supports life 350km above its home planet's surface. GARY ROSE

The courtship of Keanu and Louise (right) on EastEnders (7.30pm BBC1) hasn't exactly been the most conventional. Just a few months ago, he was having a torrid affair with her step-mum. Then Phil – unaware of the aforementioned affair – ordered Keanu to protect Louise. Then the two of them ended up getting held captive in a shipping container, only to fight their way free and have sex. I mean, it's not exactly dinner and a show "up West", is it? Now, we get a fresh twist as Louise breaks the news to Keanu that she's pregnant with his baby. But before he has the chance to speak, Lou rushes off, leaving a stunned Keanu to confide in his mum Karen about what he should do. "Stop sleeping with members of Phil's immediate family", would be my advice. The Walford warhorse won't be overjoyed when he finds out that Keanu has had his wicked way with both his daughter and his wife. I'm guessing the writers are saving up that little discovery for Christmas. DAVID BROWN

Ambulance

9.00pm BBC1

DOCUMENTARY This documentary flips nimbly between punishing drama and agreeable, albeit on occasion deadly serious, real-life soap. It's the latter tonight, following the warp and weft of a pretty normal shift. An old woman who's sparky but utterly alone needs reassurance about her bad leg; a baby being born at home would be better off in a hospital; a man rings to say he's killed his wife, providing one of the handful of calls in a 999 phone operator's career that will haunt them for the rest of their days.

The central event is England losing to Croatia in the World Cup semi-final. It brings out happy camaraderie, but we're made aware that without this kinship, the stress of the job would be unbearable. JS

Pose

9.00pm BBC2

DRAMA Hard times for Elektra, who despite scraping a living in a tawdry peep show and sleeping on park benches remains strikingly maintained. "You wanna be a beautiful corpse?" cautions Blanca, who insists that her old adversary accepts sanctuary in her house.

What's lovely about this final episode is the strong sense of sorority and mutual support. Yes, there are scraps on the ballroom floor as egos vie in one outré costume category after another, but there's only one surefire winner for Mother of the Year. No prizes for guessing who.

It's a warming, sometimes witty end to this landmark series. A second run is in the works. PATRICK MULKERN

Grand Designs: the Street

9.00pm C4

PROPERTY Modular construction (where everything is chosen and put together in the factory before it's transported, in its entirety, to the site) is definitely the quickest way to self-build. Once delivered, the home can be ready to inhabit within days.

Unfortunately, Pauline and Godfrey, who have commissioned a modular house and sold their family home, have a financial shortfall, so nothing can happen on their plot. As Kevin McCloud says, there's a "whole trail of anguish" behind even this method.

We're also updated on the other self-builders, as we're reminded of how they created their dream homes and shown the bond created between them. JANE RACKHAM

Deep State

9.00pm Fox

DRAMA Fox UK's first original drama, a pacey and explosive conspiracy thriller, returns for series two. Last time, Mark Strong led it as Max, an ex-MI6 agent who got pulled back in and uncovered a US conspiracy to profit from a fraudulently promoted war with Iran. Now the main players are Joe Dempsie as Max's son Harry, and series one breakout star Karima McAdams as field agent Leyla, with Victoria Hamilton also joining the cast. The action shifts to Mali, where valuable natural resources have attracted shady forces whose contribution to a move towards renewable energy pretty certainly isn't what it claims to be. Soon we've got fiery blowback everywhere and another perilous quest for the truth. Likely to steal every scene he's in is Walton Goggins (Justified; The Shield) as Nathan Miller, an ex-CIA man – which in this show means he's the most dangerous man in the room. JS

Jason Bourne ★★★★★ 9.00pm Film4 FREEVIEW

After making hit sequels The Bourne Supremacy and Ultimatum together, director Paul Greengrass and star Matt Damon decided to quit the franchise, leaving Jeremy Renner's Aaron Cross to take the story in a different direction in Legacy. "I discovered in my heart I didn't have another one in me," said Greengrass. Happily, Greengrass and Damon changed their minds for this sequel (review, p36), nine years after the amnesiac assassin vanished from cinemas, and Damon was Bourne again. ELLIE PORTER

Murder on the Orient Express ★★★★★

BBC iPlayer FREE TO VIEW

In an Oscar-nominated performance, the late Albert Finney – who would have turned 83 today – makes Belgian sleuth Hercule Poirot seem every bit as preposterous as Agatha Christie intended. The supporting cast does everything that is expected of it, with Ingrid Bergman's Oscar-winning turn just about the pick of a stellar selection. Director Sidney Lumet's superior adaptation of Christie's whodunnit is available on iPlayer all week. DAVID PARKINSON

New to Netflix

RBG ★★★★★ Netflix

Figures from both sides of the US political line take part in this documentary about Ruth Bader Ginsburg, a Supreme Court Justice who has spent decades fighting for equality, and was recently portrayed by Felicity Jones in On the Basis of Sex. With facts to back up the adulation, this film is a fitting celebration of a life spent bettering the world. JAMES LUXFORD

DRAMA A Russian diplomat is bumped off inside the residence of a former American ambassador and – wouldn't you just know it – Iris is the one to witness his dying breath. As the women investigate, they quickly attract the attention of both the FBI and KGB, while we get to hear possible Soviet agents delivering lines like: "I see Amerrrican drrrream eeez only for reeech".

It's mostly good fun, though images of spies Boris and Natasha from The Rocky and Bullwinkle Show did spring to mind more often than the writers would probably have liked. And how Rachael Stirling manages to say dialogue such as "I'm going to need a little tit for my tat" with a straight face is beyond me.

But to give credit where it's due, the plot does take a menacing, and rather effective, turn in its later stages. And yes, that is Stirling's husband and Elbow frontman Guy Garvey performing a gorgeous version of I Only Have Eyes for You in the scene set in a jazz club. DAVID BROWN

Unreported World

7.30pm C4

CURRENT AFFAIRS Close your eyes, stop a spinning globe and your finger will rest on a place where this series can find a fascinating or enraging issue to investigate.

Tonight we're in Madagascar, where reporter Datshiane Navanayagam scores rare access to the country's prisons. Oppressively long stays in jail for defendants on remand are a problem in numerous prison systems, but here the injustice of remaining behind bars for up to three years before being tried for a petty crime is particularly acute.

The accused in question are children, they're in adult prisons, and sometimes their parents have no idea they've been incarcerated.

BBC Young Dancer 2019

8.00pm BBC4

ARTS We've seen the judges choose their South Asian category winner, Contemporary winner and Ballet winner, and this week it's time to see the Street Dance finalists in action.

Thomas Carsley, Louie Juster, Christian Griffin, Kate Morris and Max Revell are the five dancers performing for the panel: Botis Seva, an Olivier Award winner and artistic director of Far from the Norm, dancer and choreographer Rhimes Lecoite – founder and artistic director of all-female dance company Boadicea – and Jonzi D, founder of hip-hop theatre festival Breakin' Convention. They'll decide who will make it through to the grand final at the Birmingham Hippodrome on 18 May. KASIA DELGADO

Gardeners' World

8.30pm BBC2 (not Wales)

GARDENING Carol Klein is always on the hunt for new and interesting plants, so what will catch her attention when she – along with Adam Frost and Frances Tophill – visits the floral marquee at this year's RHS Malvern Spring Festival?

While they're happily strolling around the show gardens and stands, Monty Don is back at Longmeadow. He's continuing work on his paradise garden – inspired by his tour of Islam's ancient gardens in 2018 – but he's also planting out tomatoes, anticipating a bumper crop this summer. There are also reports about a woodland oasis in Peterborough and a Cambridgeshire gardener's passion for preserving heritage plants. JANE RACKHAM

Joe Lycett's Got Your Back

8.30pm C4

CONSUMER AFFAIRS The tactics that unlikely consumer champion Joe Lycett deploys here are, quite simply, a joy. He holds companies to account in the most ludicrous ways, which this evening means sidekick Mark Silcox attempting to move into the office of Sterling De Vere – a property management company that was prosecuted last year for misleading a prospective renter.

As the heavy-handed staff grow irate, Joe deadpans that "we might be killed – but I'm really excited!" while watching from a covert car. Funny yet with a serious point to make, this deserves a second series. Over to you, Channel 4...

FRANCES TAYLOR

The fact that Coronation Street (7.30pm, 8.30pm ITV) now has such a large cast means that characters do get forgotten about for months at a time. At the tail end of last year, Corrie couldn't get enough of Ryan Connor: he was in too deep with crime boss Ronan, blackmailing Sarah Platt and bouncing off the bonnet of a speeding car. Then, suddenly, it all seemed to go quiet. Ryan went back to carrying a tray at the Bistro and it felt as though the "Connors on the run" drama had never happened.

TODAY IN SOAPLAND

Well now the writers have finally remembered that Ryan isn't actually a non-speaking background artiste and have handed him a new plotline. One that sees him getting close again with Bethany (left), while trying to keep under wraps the fact that he has also made a play for Alya. What's the betting Bethany finds out and (a) knees him in the groin, (b) pours a pint over him or (c) pretends to seduce him, only to then throw his clothes out into the street?

Adele: in Her Own Words

9.00pm Channel 5

DOCUMENTARY This is mostly not Adele in her own words, although it does feature a good clutch of archive interviews with the lady herself. It's a clips show in which a handful of commentators and acquaintances talk us through the story, annotating her career from afar.

Such things are usually for fans only, and that's fine. They'll enjoy reliving every moment, from the first stirrings in the early 2000s – there's some great, super-grainy mobile phone clips of Adele singing half-finished songs – to the outpouring of sympathy when damaged vocal cords forced the cancellation of Wembley gigs in 2017. We learn nothing new, but we're reminded of what a joyful, authentic talent Adele is. JS

The Looming Tower

9.30pm BBC2

DRAMA The political drama shifts this week between Afghanistan, Kenya, Washington... and a rain-soaked Manchester, where the FBI want to question a suspect recently arrived from Nairobi following the deadly attacks. But he's giving nothing away – if only they could access that useful hard drive the CIA's Bin Laden section is keeping its mitts on.

But under the ultra-hawkish Martin Schmidt (Peter Sarsgaard), the Agency simply will not play. Schmidt is determined that air strikes are the only response to the Kenya bombings, and to hell with collateral damage, or the law. Meanwhile, al-Qaeda themselves are planning their future attacks, which sound chillingly familiar. GILL CRAWFORD

The Graham Norton Show

10.35pm BBC1 (N Ireland: 11.05pm)

CHAT SHOW For many, Robin Williams's manic voicing of Genie for the 1992 animation Aladdin could never be bettered, so it's a brave man who takes on the role. Will Smith is on Graham's sofa this evening – probably not in his full blue body make-up – to explain how he hopes his portrayal in the live-action version won't rub Aladdin-ettes up the wrong way.

Joining him is co-star Naomi Scott and Kevin Hart, who voices Snowball, the adorable "superhero" white rabbit in The Secret Life of Pets 2. Hart may also talk about being Irresponsible on Netflix, a recording of his high-energy introspective stand-up gig recorded before that awkward Oscars situation. JR

John Bishop's Ireland

8.00pm ITV (not STV or Border Scotland; N Ireland: 10.40pm)

DOCUMENTARY John Bishop gets a lot of comic mileage from his flying visit to TG4, a Gaelic TV station on the west coast of Ireland. You know the eskimos have about 500 different words for snow, he tells a receptive audience, well in Gaelic there's almost as many ways "to describe the st weather you get here".

On his travels he also stops off at Westport in Mayo to visit a pub owned by Matt Malloy, of Irish supergroup the Chieftains, for some traditional music, before heading on to "a place that's synonymous with the Troubles" – Derry.

It's here he gets a better understanding of the events of Bloody Sunday and learns how life has changed for people, no matter what their religion, in the intervening years. JR

Sky's BIG premiere

The Meg ★★★ 8.00pm Sky Premiere

Big, glossy and daft, Jon Turteltaub's blockbuster B-movie is exactly what you would expect from what could be subtitled "The Stath versus Jurassic Shark". Jason Statham plays the disgraced rescue diver dragged out of retirement to save a submersible disabled in the Pacific Mariana Trench by a prehistoric megalodon. He cuts a fine dash in the ludicrous sea-faring action, and there's an epic quality to many of the set pieces, but this is a brainless CGI feeding frenzy that jumps the shark too often to be as fun as it should be. ALAN JONES

Shane Meadows's latest TV series The Virtues begins next week on Channel 4, reuniting him with Stephen Graham, the star of This Is England (review, p36) and its TV spin-offs. The film also introduced audiences to a then-15-year-old Jack O'Connell, with the role of Pukey written for him after he impressed Meadows in auditions. However, Graham didn't go easy on his young co-star. In the scene where he repeatedly head-butts Pukey, O'Connell revealed, "They used the sound from the actual head-butt." JAMIE HEALY

An escapist comedy

The Secret War of Harry Frigg ★★★

3.15pm TCM

Paul Newman was never fully convincing as a comedian, though he makes a fair stab here, as a deadbeat private with a talent for escaping from military prisons. Written by Peter Stone (Charade), this is a generally jolly jape, lifted by some lovely turns from the supporting cast. ADRIAN TURNER

PICK OF THE WEEK

Encounters with Victoria

Monday—Friday 1.45pm Radio 4

“I’m working in the classy end of the media now,” jests Lucy Worsley (above) when asked about her debut on Radio 4. The Chief Curator of Historic Royal Palaces, best known for her costume-filled re-creations for BBC TV, is already a radio and podcast fan, and reveals that if she wants “background noise” while she is working, then it’s Radio 3 she turns to. However, when it’s “cocktail time” at the end of the week, on goes Radio 2’s Friday Night Is Music Night.

Over the course of ten programmes, recorded at 15 locations, from Balmoral to a hotel in Nice, Lucy focuses on some of the key encounters that formed the life of Queen Victoria. Obviously, there are fellow royals and leading politicians, but Worsley has completed painstaking research into the journals, letters and diaries of her servants, the making and keeping of which was totally forbidden.

These do not gloss over any of the dark sides of the Queen. The episode I listened to has a truly shocking story about her treatment of her mother’s lady-in-waiting, but many other discoveries totally humanise her.

Would Lucy be tempted back to radio? “Absolutely, if people like it.” I can guarantee that you will. It is a work of wonder.

AMBRIDGE DIARY

The Archers this week...

It’s all change at Bridge Farm and Jazzer’s got a bone to pick with Tom. Jim is advocating caution, but since when did Jazzer go in for circumspection? As for Tom, he’s telling Helen the truth about Natasha, but can he prevent the secret from reaching Pat and Tony’s ears?

Emotions are also running high at Lower Loxley as Freddie prepares to say goodbye to an old friend and Elizabeth remembers the past. Elsewhere, Will and Clarrie feel terrible for not noticing that they were overloading Mia with tasks. Mia, meanwhile, is just wishing that things could go back to the way they were. Jolene lets her ambition get the better of her — and Kenton’s solution only makes things worse. DAVID BROWN

KEVIN FONG TRIED extremely hard to become an astronaut. On the CV of the 47-year-old doctor and broadcaster — well known to Radio 4 listeners across a range of science subjects and as an occasional presenter of BBC2’s Horizon — is a whole string of achievements that reflect an obsession with space travel.

The product of a north London state school, Fong has degrees in astrophysics and medicine and a master’s degree in astronautics and space engineering. In the late 1990s, he secured an internship at Nasa — “I just wrote letter after letter, like The Shawshank Redemption” — and he kept going back. Finally, in 2008, he entered Nasa’s astronaut selection programme.

he says. “I never had any real expectation I’d get selected, but I just thought, ‘I’ve got to apply, having come this far: I got through a couple of rounds. There were still a few hundred people left.’”

The dream was finally over, but now Fong has found another way to indulge his passion — a 12-part BBC World Service series and podcast he is presenting called 13 Minutes to the Moon, which tells the Apollo 11 story in an entirely new way.

thought, ‘Well, tomorrow, we’re talking with someone who’s actually flown there.’ I remember having a slightly sleepless night. I’d heard he doesn’t suffer fools gladly. And talking to him, it was like he was a fighter pilot. Just when you think you’ve got him where you want him, he’s behind you. But it was all very playful, and he couldn’t have been nicer.”

Other interviewees include Charlie Duke, now 83, who was in Mission Control in Houston for Apollo 11 and was the one person who spoke directly to Armstrong and Aldrin during the descent. In 1972, Duke walked on the Moon himself as a member of the Apollo 16 crew.

Fong also talks to Jim Lovell, now 91, commander on the near-fatal Apollo 13 mission; and to the first female engineer in Mission Control, Poppy Northcutt, who is still only 75. “Youth was the norm in Mission Control,” Fong says, thrilling to the story of another interviewee, Steve Bales, who grew up in a farming community in Iowa and became flight controller on Apollo 11 by the age of 26. “Bales is like the Luke Skywalker of the Apollo programme,”

Fong says. “Culturally, Mission Control couldn’t have been further away from his upbringing. He started right at the bottom, almost like a coffee boy, an intern giving tour guides. Then he ends up as one of the most important flight controllers in the whole venture.”

Fong stands in awe of the entire Moon landing project. “It’s almost impossible to get your head around how it was done,” he says. “But the answer of course is that it wasn’t just Armstrong, Aldrin and Collins. It wasn’t even just the astronaut corps and Mission Control. It was this army of hundreds of thousands of people who were connected to it in some way — the official count puts it at about 400,000. It’s this effort of dedication over a short decade that brings it all to bear, and it’s worthy of study in so many different dimensions.” SIMON O’HAGAN

The 13 Minutes to the Moon podcast starts on Monday 13 May and airs on BBC World Service two days later

THE TITLE REFERS to the duration of the lunar module’s descent to the Moon after it detached itself from the command module — 13 minutes of heart-stopping drama, which culminated in Neil Armstrong and Buzz Aldrin touching down and then walking on the Moon on 20 July 1969.

The final episode will air on the 50th anniversary of the Moon landing, by which time we can be sure that there will be no lack of coverage of the “giant leap for mankind” across TV and radio. But what makes the podcast stand out is its epic scale — seven hours of audio, complete with music scored by the great film composer Hans Zimmer — and the access that Fong has gained to some of the most important people involved in the Apollo programme.

They include Michael Collins, the third astronaut on the mission whose job was to stay behind in the command module orbiting the Moon while his fellow crew members seized the world’s attention 60 nautical miles beneath him.

The prospect of interviewing Collins, now 88, made Fong nervous. “We were in Florida and I looked up into the sky, saw the Moon and

SOUND BITES

BY DAVID HEPWORTH

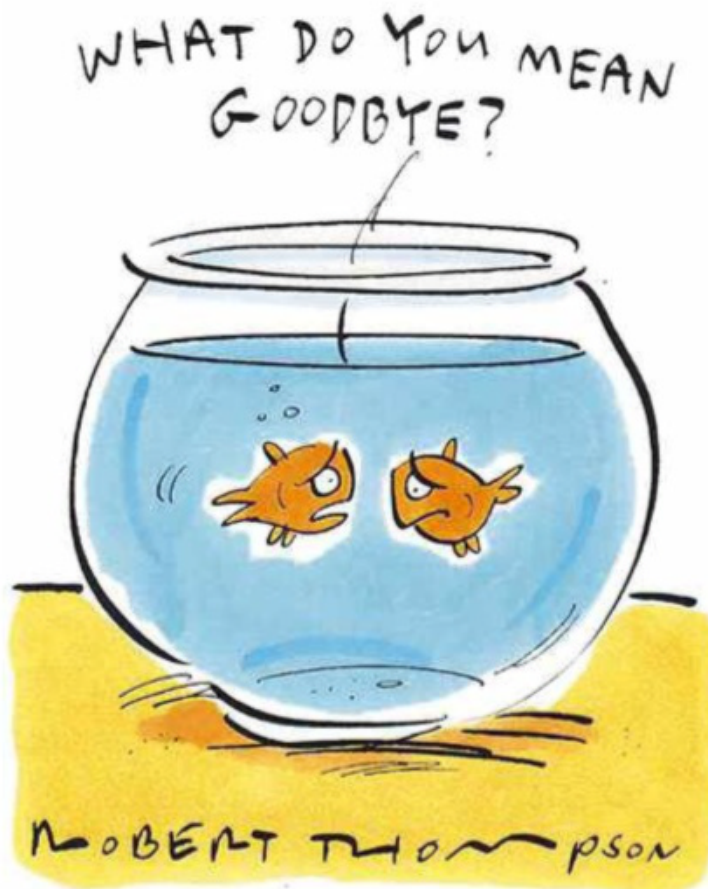

That's all folks!

After nine years, it's time to say goodbye...

I'M THINKING OF suing Radio Times. When I started writing this column, in April 2010, I could read without spectacles. My hair was more pepper than salt and, now I think about it, I actually had hair. These days when I look at myself, I'm blurry. And then when I put on my specs, I wish I hadn't. The man with most of his 40s ahead of him is now squinting at his mid-50s. It can't be a coincidence that this startling physical decline coincided with writing to you every week.

And it wasn't just my life that was different back then. In 2010 the London Olympics were still in the planning stage. Elizabeth Taylor and Ernest Borgnine were still alive. Nigel Farage was desperately trying to get elected. So much has changed.

It had been my intention to carry on writing this column until Brexit was decided, one way or another. However, as you may have heard, it's not gone according to plan. Deadlines have slipped away like Elizabeth and Ernest. For weeks I have had a publisher ready to print either "Brexit: How Our Glorious Emancipation from Europe Was Finally Achieved" or "Ode to Joy: How We Stopped Madness in Its Tracks

Christmas night was Brucie, Mike Yarwood and Morecambe and Wise in what would be their last Christmas at the BBC. Somewhere, too, I have the edition where my name first appeared. And, of course, the first one with me on the cover. I've cropped Peston out of it.

It's rare to have a childhood connection with a publication that's still a part of my life as an adult reader. While The Beano has lost its appeal for me, Radio Times continues to be my valued guide to my own listening and viewing. And I always check to see if I am still on LBC.

THERE'S NO JOB I've loved more than this. But sometimes you need to know when to stop, and this seems a good moment. Thank you, sincerely, if you've ever read any of my stuff. It was a thrill to be asked to write for RT, and I'm not going to push my luck beyond nine very happy years.

The people I've dealt with at RT are great too. My thanks to all of them, especially the brilliant radio editor, Jane Anderson, and the magnificent Robert Thompson, whose cartoons are always the best thing about this column.

Like you, I will carry on being an avid reader and relying on the clear listings and expert curation. And collecting the special covers.

Eddie Mair's show is on LBC, weekdays at 4pm

An old friend of mine, a marketing expert, talks about people's changing patterns of consumption as a series of "defining moments". One such happened to him when he picked up his car from the garage, found that the mechanics had tuned his radio to Radio 2 and this time didn't bother retuning to his previous favourite. Media's about habits, and habits don't change easily. In the case of radio, listeners only change when they decide they're no longer the same people they once were and turn to something that suddenly seems to better reflect who they've magically become.

Radio's just noise to the young

Young people don't listen to much radio. However, they do hear a lot of the radio their parents listen to. It's only when their interests begin to change, either because they are passing through a life stage or because their tastes are less influenced by their peers, that some of that background noise begins to resolve itself into something they actually want to listen to. It's amazing how long this can take. It is genuinely astounding how many decades a young person can spend with The Archers playing in the background before they suddenly apprehend the fact that this programme seems to be set in the countryside.

It can take years of having Eric Coates's By the Sleepy Lagoon wash over them before they realise, as one of my own offspring recently did, that there is a programme called Desert Island Discs wherein notable people choose the pieces of music they would take with them were they to be cast away. Prior to that, back when they were locked in the prison of teenage self-consciousness, it was all, to quote Alan Partridge, "just a noise".

Radio 4 – the station for grown-ups

The job of Radio 4 is not to change itself in order to become accessible to teenagers or even people in their 20s, but to be there when people hit real adulthood, which nowadays is not until the mid-30s. Whenever somebody decides they've got enough trainers, Radio 4 should be there, ready to offer a hand as these people put away childish things and have need of sober help and advice. It's at that moment and not before that programmes like the modestly excellent Money Box Live with Paul Lewis (right; see p137) cease to be the indistinct sound of older people droning on about ISAs and become instead something that, in the words of Morrissey, is saying something to them about their life.

'RT is still my guide. I always check to see if I'm still on LBC'

The truth is, and with a heavy heart, I know it's time for me to stop writing to you in RT, and I want to take a moment to thank you.

When the editor first suggested a column all those years ago, I said to him: "What would you like me to write about?" And his response was, "Well, radio, plus anything else."

You'll have your memories of RT down the years, and I have mine. The special covers for big events – Olympics, Easter, royal weddings – and, of course, the Christmas double issues. I vividly recollect seeing (the backs of) Morecambe and Wise on a cover in my local newsagent and just staring at its brilliance. Checking back, I find it was 1976. I would have been ten years old. Somewhere I still have the 1977 Christmas issue with its beautiful tree/village illustration. The pages make a noise when you pull them apart.

Drama: Live and Let Die 2.30pm Radio 4

Forget the Roger Moore/Jane Seymour film version: this is a faithful version of Ian Fleming's novel, and the strong chemistry between James Bond (Toby Stephens) and Solitaire (Rutina Wesley, above) is as much down to affection and trust as it is glamour and passion. Bond is sent to New York to track down the notorious Mr Big, a ruthless criminal mastermind suspected of importing gold coins from a treasure trove in the Caribbean and then using them to help fund Russian spies in the US. There's all the expected action, from blowing up trains to feeding people to sharks, as 007's mission takes him from Harlem to Jamaica, via Florida. But this is the most tender Bond I recall hearing – to his male colleagues as well as to Solitaire. Amazingly, this is the eighth Fleming classic that Martin Jarvis has narrated and directed. Keep them coming.

Moby: 20 Years of Play 9.00pm Radio 2

Whether or not you own Moby's bestselling album Play, you have almost certainly heard it. From car commercials to Danny Boyle's The Beach, it's been hard to escape this ambient classic over the past 20 years. Here, the artist himself dissects the record in a two-part programme that, like the tracks, could have been stripped back. But amid Moby's meandering anecdotes are moments of candour about his creative process that are refreshing, as well as fascinating clips of the original gospel and blues vocals sampled for the album.

Ruby Wax: Frazzled 7.15pm Radio 4

The glorious, witty, smart writer and comedian Ruby Wax (above), has no qualms in talking about her mental health problems, including periods when she had to go into institutions for her own safety. But it was not always like this: she used to feel shamed, useless, at the end of her career and personal path. Back in April last year she first performed Frazzled before a studio audience and the feedback she received was that they found the Q&A sessions the most useful, so that's what she focuses on for the second edition – "and it means I don't have to write such a big script," she quips. The comic lines are mainly aimed at herself but if she disagrees with an audience member she does not hold back. For her, getting back on track has been about practicing to think differently: "Change yourself first, then go and change the world."

JANE ANDERSON

The Reunion 11.15am Radio 4

As the fight for gender equality goes on and newspapers run front pages comparing the legs of Theresa May and Nicola Sturgeon, it's fascinating to hear from a group of 1970s female newsreaders who battled sexism in the newsroom. Sue MacGregor is joined by former newsreaders Angela Rippon, Julia Somerville, Sue Lawley and Jan Leeming to discuss their mind-boggling experiences of prejudice. They include an internal 1973 BBC report which revealed a belief that women were not capable of doing hard news stories and that their voices weren't authoritative enough. KASIA DELGADO

John Ashbery is one of the towering figures in American poetry of the past 50 years. Up until his death in 2017, aged 90, the New Yorker produced a vast body of poetry and prose, often characterised as a surrealist river of ideas and playfulness – the reader seldom entirely sure what's going on but swept along by the exuberance and mischievous glint of Ashbery's writing. Drawing on the testimony of writers and poets who knew him, Colm Tóibín presents an intimate portrait of Ashbery. Contributors include Ann Lauterbach, Karin Roffman, Robert Polito, John Yau, and Mark Ford. Producers Steven Rajam and Lyndon Jones

Today's Choices

Andrew Ridgeley's 80s Playlist 5.00pm Radio 2

"Well we hadn't seen your face around town awhile..." Wham! devotees will immediately recognise the slight tweak I have made to the lyrics from Young Guns (Go for It) as Andrew Ridgeley (above) marks his debut as a radio presenter on the UK's most listened-to network. Some former pop stars have made a decent stab at this massive career switch – Lauren Laverne and Emma Bunton both spring to mind – but others, naming no names, have not fared so well. Don't forget, our most beloved broadcasters have trained for years, so will Mr Ridgeley encounter similar nerves as when he went on stage at giant concerts? But he is bubbling with excitement over his playlist of the 80s and yes, he promises, there will be some Wham! JANE ANDERSON

Alongside their primary aims of raising the art form's profile and recognising and rewarding success, the International Opera Awards also exist to raise money to fund bursaries for aspiring young singers, directors, conductors, répétiteurs and accompanists. And in this year's awards ceremony, recorded last week at Sadler's Wells, the other celebrity guest performers – including soprano Joyce El-Khoury, mezzo Vivica Genaux and tenor Charles Castronovo – were for the first time joined by a special chorus of bursary recipients. MARK PAPPENHEIM

1/5. In the Orbit of Rimsky-Korsakov
Donald Macleod explores the life and work of the composer who, in his music, is said to have ushered in the 20th century. Stravinsky's name is probably still most associated with the revolutionary evening that prompted that accolade: the premiere of The Rite of Spring in Paris on 29 May 1913. This first instalment explores the composer's early relationship with a pivotal figure in Russian classical music, Rimsky-Korsakov.

Jane Austen (above) – all bonnets, balls and beating hearts... Think again. Series host Matthew Parris is joined by writer and activist Caroline Criado-Perez and Austen biographer and specialist Paula Byrne for a thoroughly myth-busting edition. Caroline (who launched the successful campaign to get the novelist on the ten pound note) and Paula are in total agreement that Austen was not just a proto-feminist but in possession of acerbic wit, a superhero level of sarcastic observation on social mores and, in her early writings, some surprising tales of drunks and children biting off their parents' fingers. As Byrne points out, she was a Georgian: it was the Victorians who appropriated her as a prim spinster. JANE ANDERSON

Can My 11-Year-Old Fix My Life?

11.00am Radio 4

Freelance artist Babak lives in a swish London enclave and has an upcoming exhibition. Life appears to be sweet, but in reality Babak's an anxious, exercise-phobic dad who still dresses like a teenager. His young son Arthur is the exact opposite, and his self-bestowed mission is to sort out Babak's unstructured life. "It should be the other way round," concedes Babak, wryly. Far from being cloyingly precocious, Arthur is perceptive and fun to be with. The often comical exchanges with his dad are a delight, and while his unerring optimism and lack of cynicism are more typical of an 11-year-old, we can all take something from Arthur's uplifting mindset. CHRIS GARDNER

Today's Choices

Drama: Off Grid

2.15pm Radio 4

Kirsten is a young woman who throws caution to the wind, quits a job she despises and decides to join an eco-friendly, self-sufficient commune in the Scottish Highlands. She takes a recording device with her so that she can make a programme about her life-changing experience. This is the audio equivalent of a found-footage horror film, for when Kirsten finally reaches the remote location, the man who supposedly runs the commune is nowhere to be seen. There are just three other people there, living in the wilds, with fuel and food resources dwindling. Set in a woodland once used for pagan worship, all four inhabitants have their own peculiar relationship with both the trees and the folklore. A deliciously sinister thriller.

JANE ANDERSON

Bunk Bed

11.00pm Radio 4

The success of Bunk Bed bears comparison with that of TV's Fleabag. Nothing like either of them had ever been aired before, and while it's possible to detect something of Samuel Beckett in the wonderfully aimless night-time dialogue indulged in by Patrick Marber and Peter Curran, Bunk Bed, like Fleabag, is a comedy game-changer that has acquired a devoted following. With guest appearances by such luminaries as Cate Blanchett and Jane Horrocks, the series that ends tonight has scaled new heights, and in the normal course of events, 11.00pm fare of this calibre would graduate to 6.30pm. I like that with Bunk Bed such a move could never happen. SIMON O'HAGAN

Today's Choices

Free Thinking

10.00pm Radio 3

There's no one I'd rather hear discussing spaghetti westerns than Matthew Sweet and Christopher Frayling – the latter's books including the just published Once Upon a Time in the West: Shooting a Masterpiece, a study of Sergio Leone's 1968 epic (Henry Fonda, above). Sweet, a regular across Radio 3, is as near to a font of all knowledge as makes no difference. And I have fond memories of Frayling's 2012 Radio 4 programme about the composer of many a spaghetti western score Ennio Morricone, which encouraged me to catch a date on the Italian maestro's recent concert tour. I wondered what this Free Thinking would comprise. "It's live, this one, so nothing has been put down yet," Sweet told me. All he added was, "We'll meet in the dusty street of Studio 5A to discuss Once Upon a Time in the West in all its bloody detail."

DAVID MCGILLIVRAY

Radio 3 in Concert

7.30pm Radio 3

Firm friends and fellow folk-song collectors, the composers George Butterworth and Ralph Vaughan Williams both served in the First World War, the former on active duty, the latter in the medical corps, but tragically only one survived. Felled by a sniper's bullet, Butterworth, aged only 31, left only a few works, of which the lovely folk-song rhapsody The Banks of Green Willow was the last he heard performed. Like VW's AE Housman cycle On Wenlock Edge, with which it is coupled in tonight's BBC Scottish Symphony Orchestra concert, it exudes nostalgia for a lost golden age.

Stravinsky wrote to a friend: "My house, my family is destroyed – I no longer have anything to do in Paris." He was seemingly distraught at his wife Katya's death despite his less than loving treatment of her during her lifetime. Although in deep mourning, he chose to accept an offer of a professorship at Harvard University for a year and set sail for America, alone, at the outbreak of war, at the end of September 1939.

Today's Choices

The Devolution Decades

11.00am Radio 4

On the Edinburgh Festival Fringe in the 1970s there were plenty of "home rule for Scotland" jokes. The reality seemed a long way off. But it's now 20 years since the official opening of the Scottish Parliament and the Welsh and Northern Ireland Assemblies. Devolution – bringing not all but many forms of government closer to people throughout the UK – seemed absolutely right for its time. Probably nobody expected a quick fix, but a report earlier this year from the Institute for Government claimed the polar opposite: relations between the Scottish and UK governments are at their most strained since the 2014 independence referendum. And there's still Brexit to reckon with. Aberdeen-raised James Naughtie begins this three-part series by looking at some of the less desirable aspects of devolved power.

That Peter Crouch Podcast

9.30pm Radio 5 Live

Another top-quality Premier League season draws to a close this Sunday, but no one's done better in 2018–19 than the veteran striker Peter Crouch. I don't mean on the pitch – at 38, the much-travelled former England man's playing days are nearly over – but behind the microphone, with the hugely engaging podcast in which he reveals so much about life at the top of the game. Tom Fordyce and Chris Stark play foil to the 6ft 7in cult hero, and beyond the "bantz" there are terrific insights into everything from referees to life on the subs bench. SIMON O'HAGAN 12.00 Composer of the Week: Stravinsky 5/5. Late Austerity.

Donald Macleod concludes with a look at Stravinsky's late move towards serialist methods of composition. It's not clear whether this was attributable to the influence of his musical assistant Robert Craft, but the younger man regularly conducted concerts which included works by Schoenberg, and Stravinsky seems to have set about a reappraisal of his own technique. In his record of conversations with Stravinsky, Robert Craft recalls an occasion in the 1950s when he challenged the composer to "draw" his recent music. The result resembled a simplified version of Harry Beck's map of the London Underground system, with a series of points connected by straight lines. "This", the composer said, "is my music."

BBC Local Radio

Sarah Gosling BBC Radio Devon/BBC Radio 1

Age 25

Current job Presenter of BBC Radio Devon's BBC Music Introducing (Saturdays 8.00pm) and Radio 1's Mindfulness Mix (Fridays 3.00am).

CV Born in Gibraltar and brought up in Devon. Studied English at King's College, London. Work experience included a spell at the NME, before joining BBC Radio Devon as a broadcast assistant in 2016. Her big break came in January 2018 when she became a presenter of BBC Music Introducing, which focuses on fresh, emerging talent in the area.

Best moment "I love having artists in, playing live sessions. I'd like to think that I am good at 'casual chat' and putting nervous people at their ease. It brings me ridiculous amounts of joy!"

Worst moment "My first on-air insert from an outside broadcast in Torbay. I had been to a wedding the day before, and let's just say I really wasn't feeling very well... Thankfully it worked out!"

Off air "I live in Plymouth and have a boyfriend – he's a drummer – and a beloved cat. I am an ambassador for the Music Venue Trust, 'to help safeguard venues that are closing'."

First radio memory "Listening to Chris Moyles's Radio 1 breakfast show from my bed, and making recordings."

Favourite broadcasters "Lauren Laverne is fantastic – so enthusiastic and knowledgeable. She has all of my dream gigs. I also admire Alice Levine."

Ambition "To start some masterclasses for aspiring acts. I'm extraordinarily lucky to have such a creative job.

Where I currently live is a tourist area, and the audiences mostly want to hear covers. I'd like to live in a place where new music is freely performed – beyond Bristol is limited right now..."

Dream job "To do some Glastonbury Festival coverage – my favourite place in the world. If you could mix me together with Graham Norton and Lauren Laverne that would be perfect!"

Secret skills "I take commissions for portrait painting, verging on photorealism. I am learning to use oil – acrylic is my usual choice – but I also love pen and ink." JANE ANDERSON

Face behind the voice

Sarah Gosling BBC Radio Devon/BBC Radio 1

Age 25

Current job Presenter of BBC Radio Devon's BBC Music Introducing (Saturdays 8.00pm) and Radio 1's Mindfulness Mix (Fridays 3.00am).

CV Born in Gibraltar and brought up in Devon. Studied English at King's College, London. Work experience included a spell at the NME, before joining BBC Radio Devon as a broadcast assistant in 2016. Her big break came in January 2018 when she became a presenter of BBC Music Introducing, which focuses on fresh, emerging talent in the area.

Best moment "I love having artists in, playing live sessions. I'd like to think that I am good at 'casual chat' and putting nervous people at their ease. It brings me ridiculous amounts of joy!"

Worst moment "My first on-air insert from an outside broadcast in Torbay. I had been to a wedding the day before, and let's just say I really wasn't feeling very well... Thankfully it worked out!"

Off air "I live in Plymouth and have a boyfriend – he's a drummer – and a beloved cat. I am an ambassador for the Music Venue Trust, 'to help safeguard venues that are closing'."

First radio memory "Listening to Chris Moyles's Radio 1 breakfast show from my bed, and making recordings."

Favourite broadcasters "Lauren Laverne is fantastic – so enthusiastic and knowledgeable. She has all of my dream gigs. I also admire Alice Levine."

Ambition "To start some masterclasses for aspiring acts. I'm extraordinarily lucky to have such a creative job. Where I currently live is a tourist area, and the audiences mostly want to hear covers. I'd like to live in a place where new music is freely performed – beyond Bristol is limited right now..."

Dream job "To do some Glastonbury Festival coverage – my favourite place in the world. If you could mix me together with Graham Norton and Lauren Laverne that would be perfect!"

Secret skills "I take commissions for portrait painting, verging on photorealism. I am learning to use oil – acrylic is my usual choice – but I also love pen and ink." JANE ANDERSON

Face behind the voice

Sarah Gosling BBC Radio Devon/BBC Radio 1

Age 25

Current job Presenter of BBC Radio Devon's BBC Music Introducing (Saturdays 8.00pm) and Radio 1's Mindfulness Mix (Fridays 3.00am).

CV Born in Gibraltar and brought up in Devon. Studied English at King's College, London. Work experience included a spell at the NME, before joining BBC Radio Devon as a broadcast assistant in 2016. Her big break came in January 2018 when she became a presenter of BBC Music Introducing, which focuses on fresh, emerging talent in the area.

Best moment "I love having artists in, playing live sessions. I'd like to think that I am good at 'casual chat' and putting nervous people at their ease. It brings me ridiculous amounts of joy!"

Worst moment "My first on-air insert from an outside broadcast in Torbay. I had been to a wedding the day before, and let's just say I really wasn't feeling very well... Thankfully it worked out!"

Off air "I live in Plymouth and have a boyfriend – he's a drummer – and a beloved cat. I am an ambassador for the Music Venue Trust, 'to help safeguard venues that are closing'." First radio memory "Listening to Chris Moyles's Radio 1 breakfast show from my bed, and making recordings."

Favourite broadcasters "Lauren Laverne is fantastic – so enthusiastic and knowledgeable. She has all of my dream gigs. I also admire Alice Levine." Ambition "To start some masterclasses for aspiring acts. I'm extraordinarily lucky to have such a creative job.

Where I currently live is a tourist area, and the audiences mostly want to hear covers. I'd like to live in a place where new music is freely performed – beyond Bristol is limited right now..."

Dream job "To do some Glastonbury Festival coverage – my favourite place in the world. If you could mix me together with Graham Norton and Lauren Laverne that would be perfect!"

Secret skills "I take commissions for portrait painting, verging on photorealism. I am learning to use oil – acrylic is my usual choice – but I also love pen and ink." JANE ANDERSON

BBC Radio Scotland

Face behind the voice

Sarah Gosling BBC Radio Devon/BBC Radio 1

Age 25

Current job Presenter of BBC Radio Devon's BBC Music Introducing (Saturdays 8.00pm) and Radio 1's Mindfulness Mix (Fridays 3.00am).

CV Born in Gibraltar and brought up in Devon. Studied English at King's College, London. Work experience included a spell at the NME, before joining BBC Radio Devon as a broadcast assistant in 2016. Her big break came in January 2018 when she became a presenter of BBC Music Introducing, which focuses on fresh, emerging talent in the area.

Best moment "I love having artists in, playing live sessions. I'd like to think that I am good at 'casual chat' and putting nervous people at their ease. It brings me ridiculous amounts of joy!"

Worst moment "My first on-air insert from an outside broadcast in Torbay. I had been to a wedding the day before, and let's just say I really wasn't feeling very well... Thankfully it worked out!"

Off air "I live in Plymouth and have a boyfriend – he's a drummer – and a beloved cat. I am an ambassador for the Music Venue Trust, 'to help safeguard venues that are closing'."

First radio memory "Listening to Chris Moyles's Radio 1 breakfast show from my bed, and making recordings."

Favourite broadcasters "Lauren Laverne is fantastic – so enthusiastic and knowledgeable. She has all of my dream gigs. I also admire Alice Levine."

Ambition "To start some masterclasses for aspiring acts. I'm extraordinarily lucky to have such a creative job. Where I currently live is a tourist area, and the audiences mostly want to hear covers. I'd like to live in a place where new music is freely performed – beyond Bristol is limited right now..."

Dream job "To do some Glastonbury Festival coverage – my favourite place in the world. If you could mix me together with Graham Norton and Lauren Laverne that would be perfect!"

Secret skills "I take commissions for portrait painting, verging on photorealism. I am learning to use oil – acrylic is my usual choice – but I also love pen and ink." JANE ANDERSON

BBC Radio Ulster

Face behind the voice

Sarah Gosling BBC Radio Devon/BBC Radio 1

Age 25

Current job Presenter of BBC Radio Devon's BBC Music Introducing (Saturdays 8.00pm) and Radio 1's Mindfulness Mix (Fridays 3.00am).

CV Born in Gibraltar and brought up in Devon. Studied English at King's College, London. Work experience included a spell at the NME, before joining BBC Radio Devon as a broadcast assistant in 2016. Her big break came in January 2018 when she became a presenter of BBC Music Introducing, which focuses on fresh, emerging talent in the area.

Best moment "I love having artists in, playing live sessions. I'd like to think that I am good at 'casual chat' and putting nervous people at their ease. It brings me ridiculous amounts of joy!"

Worst moment "My first on-air insert from an outside broadcast in Torbay. I had been to a wedding the day before, and let's just say I really wasn't feeling very well... Thankfully it worked out!"

Off air "I live in Plymouth and have a boyfriend – he's a drummer – and a beloved cat. I am an ambassador for the Music Venue Trust, 'to help safeguard venues that are closing'." First radio memory "Listening to Chris Moyles's Radio 1 breakfast show from my bed, and making recordings."

Favourite broadcasters "Lauren Laverne is fantastic – so enthusiastic and knowledgeable. She has all of my dream gigs. I also admire Alice Levine." Ambition "To start some masterclasses for aspiring acts. I'm extraordinarily lucky to have such a creative job.

Where I currently live is a tourist area, and the audiences mostly want to hear covers. I'd like to live in a place where new music is freely performed – beyond Bristol is limited right now..."

Dream job "To do some Glastonbury Festival coverage – my favourite place in the world. If you could mix me together with Graham Norton and Lauren Laverne that would be perfect!"

Secret skills "I take commissions for portrait painting, verging on photorealism. I am learning to use oil – acrylic is my usual choice – but I also love pen and ink." JANE ANDERSON

BBC Radio Wales

Face behind the voice

Sarah Gosling BBC Radio Devon/BBC Radio 1

Age 25

Current job Presenter of BBC Radio Devon's BBC Music Introducing (Saturdays 8.00pm) and Radio 1's Mindfulness Mix (Fridays 3.00am).

CV Born in Gibraltar and brought up in Devon. Studied English at King's College, London. Work experience included a spell at the NME, before joining BBC Radio Devon as a broadcast assistant in 2016. Her big break came in January 2018 when she became a presenter of BBC Music Introducing, which focuses on fresh, emerging talent in the area.

Best moment "I love having artists in, playing live sessions. I'd like to think that I am good at 'casual chat' and putting nervous people at their ease. It brings me ridiculous amounts of joy!"

Worst moment "My first on-air insert from an outside broadcast in Torbay. I had been to a wedding the day before, and let's just say I really wasn't feeling very well... Thankfully it worked out!"

Off air "I live in Plymouth and have a boyfriend – he's a drummer – and a beloved cat. I am an ambassador for the Music Venue Trust, 'to help safeguard venues that are closing'."

First radio memory "Listening to Chris Moyles's Radio 1 breakfast show from my bed, and making recordings."

Favourite broadcasters "Lauren Laverne is fantastic – so enthusiastic and knowledgeable. She has all of my dream gigs. I also admire Alice Levine." Ambition "To start some masterclasses for aspiring acts. I'm extraordinarily lucky to have such a creative job. Where I currently live is a tourist area, and the audiences mostly want to hear covers. I'd like to live in a place where new music is freely performed – beyond Bristol is limited right now..."

Dream job "To do some Glastonbury Festival coverage – my favourite place in the world. If you could mix me together with Graham Norton and Lauren Laverne that would be perfect!"

Secret skills "I take commissions for portrait painting, verging on photorealism. I am learning to use oil – acrylic is my usual choice – but I also love pen and ink." JANE ANDERSON

You can ignore demands to repay benefits paid to someone after death, says Paul Lewis

WHEN SOMEONE DIES, their state pension and other benefits may still be paid for a short period. The Department for Work and Pensions (DWP) routinely writes to relatives asking them to repay payments – which can amount to hundreds of pounds – made after the death. However, it has no legal right to recover this money and the letters can safely be ignored.

When someone dies, their death has to be reported within a few days. It is often the closest relative who does that. Nowadays, in most local authority areas, people can use the Tell Us Once service, which informs all central and local government agencies about the death. That includes stopping passports, disabled badges, driving licences and council tax. The service is very useful but is usually not acted on quickly enough by the DWP to stop payments of the state pension and other benefits.

The Department routinely writes to the person who registered the death and asks them to repay any excess of benefits such as state pension, attendance allowance or pension credit paid for periods after the death. These amounts are often in the low hundreds of pounds. The letter uses phrases like “when public funds are incorrectly paid we are obliged to ask for them to be refunded... We recommend you use the Bank Giro Credit slip enclosed”. Many people take this as an instruction to repay the money. However, the Department has no legal power to recover the money and in any case it should be applying to the executors, not the relative who registered the death.

IN SOME CASES, where the deceased was overpaid benefit while they were alive or has a debt due to the DWP, it can recover money that was overpaid during their lifetime from their estate. However, if there is not enough money in the estate the debt must be written off – and even if there is enough, the DWP cannot recover it from relatives who were not executors. For more on this subject, visit paullewismoney.blogspot.com and search “after death”.

COULD YOU SAVE UP TO £458* ON ENERGY?

With prices rising yet again, don't miss out on a better deal with energyhelpline

We want Radio Times readers to start choosing cheaper energy, energyhelpline is here to help make that happen. You might think it's easier to simply stick with your gas and electric supplier, but the fact is that you could be missing out on savings of up to £458*. In today's energy market, loyalty can actually cost you.

When you don't shop around, your supplier can take you for granted. Your prices can go up and you'll just pay the higher rates without taking up that better deal elsewhere. The Radio Times Switching Service is available to help you find the best prices on energy and help you start seriously saving.

ENERGY PRICES HIKED AGAIN

Did you know that the six biggest energy suppliers in the country have hiked prices by 10% for 2019? That's British Gas, SSE, Scottish Power, E.ON, EDF and npower all raising the cost of energy, just like they did last year. The trick to beating these hikes is to find a great deal with a fixed price, and it's now so easy for customers to switch and save.

WHY SWITCH WITH US?

Our service is free, with no obligation to switch. We help our readers find out about the best prices on energy, and we strive to get a great deal for everyone. We compare over 70 suppliers, looking through the options for you and finding the best ones based on your usage. We can also handle your switch for you, without interruption to your supply. Growing up in her family's Reading corner shop was a lesson in life, says BBC news presenter Babita Sharma

'The shop was our living room'

Book of the Week: The Corner Shop
Monday–Friday, 9.45am, 12.30am Radio 4

BABITA SHARMA TRAVELLED back to her childhood recently. “I’d been reporting on Brexit at Westminster all day and I was in a car going home,” the presenter on BBC World News and BBC News Channel tells me. “We stopped outside a corner shop where they were closing up, bringing in the paper stands and pulling down the shutters. I looked in the doorway and I could almost see myself at my mother’s side behind the till.”

The 42-year-old’s face is recognised from Santiago to Shanghai, but she began life as the daughter of Asian shopkeepers on the outskirts of Reading in Berkshire, one of three sisters brought up with “the shop as our living room”.

Sharma’s success speaks volumes of her determination but also, she argues, for her background. “A corner shop is the perfect training ground for a journalist,” she says when we meet near her west London home.

“Working class people, middle class, even upper class, anybody and everybody would come into the shop and I would sort them in my head by which newspapers they bought. At the same time the future journalist in me was learning the art of watching and hearing conversations: people talking about politics and the news, builders effing and blinding, a wealthy woman who used to sit in a chair while my father fetched what she wanted from the shelves. All the time, I

MEMORY LANE
Babita and her parents Ved and Prem revisit their old shop was sitting there thinking, 'Who are these characters?'"

Sharma made the documentary Booze, Beans & Bhajis: the Story of the Corner Shop and has now written The Corner Shop: Shopkeepers, the Sharmas and the Making of Modern Britain. It's the story of her parents and a generation of south Asians who, through hard work and a willingness to embrace extended opening hours, saved Britain's corner shops, threatened by the arrival of supermarkets, in the 1960s and 70s.

Her parents worked so hard that Sharma sometimes missed out on their time. "They wouldn't come to parents' evenings at school," she says. "I used to love doing theatre productions and they couldn't get free time from the shop to see them. That would upset me."

AT THE SAME time the shop was a nexus of local gossip, an informal information exchange, so anything Sharma did quickly made its way back home. "I remember meeting a boy once on the way back from school and sneaking off to the park. Someone said, 'I saw your daughter, Mrs Sharma, down the road with a boy.' That kind of stuff would always happen. Our teenage years were quite fraught. We were trying to find our own space as second-generation Asians – our own identity – and coming up against Mum and Dad quite a bit."

Her book records a childhood where everything was governed by the demands of the three corner shops her parents ran, helping to lay out the piles of newspapers and magazines and mopping the shop floor at the end of each day. The shop even provided her diet. "We ate Bird's Eye boil-in-the-bag cod, Fray Bentos pies and had Ice Magic for pudding, which magically went hard when you squirted it on to ice cream. It was very sugary."

There was a lot of sugar about in the 80s; Babita and her sisters would pinch sweets as they were filling the display jars with pear drops and pineapple cubes. As well as the shop, her father worked at the Mars factory in Slough and "brought home bags of seconds for us".

As a child her father was witness to the partition of India (Sharma presented the 2017 documentary Dangerous Borders: the Story of India and Pakistan). "When you go through that kind of trauma as a kid you feel like you can take on the world," Sharma says. "So if you get the chance to go to England it's, 'Yes!'"

Her mother had an English degree from Delhi but found herself as bookkeeper and manager of a business, getting up at 4.30am for the newspaper delivery and working until 9.30pm when the shop closed. "I don't think she found it liberating," says Sharma, who is expecting her own first baby in May. "It's really hard owning your own business, but doing the corner shop and the hours, it's not what she thought she would be doing. In her ideal scenario, she would be raising her three kids."

‘Our teenage years were fraught, trying to find our identity’

It was, though, says Sharma, a childhood largely free of racism. "I knew it was around, but we got nothing directly aimed at us." So when footage was recently broadcast of Millwall football supporters chanting "I'd rather be a P than a Scouse", Sharma was shocked. "I thought, 'Am I in a bubble?'" she says. "I work for the BBC, I live in London and I don't see all of that but, actually, if I was to go to a Millwall game I would not be welcome. It really upset me. When I hear chants like that it feels like it's still a 'them and us' society. I'm 100 per cent British to my core, but I wonder if people see me like that?"

It seems a sad note to end our conversation on because, if anything, the story of our corner shops is a story of assimilation and of triumph. "Think about it," says Sharma. "You run the corner shop, you're a working-class family and you send three of your children to university. My parents are amazing." MICHAEL HODGES

SPRING IS SUCH an exciting time, as many deciduous trees fill with colour to lift a dull day and take a blue-sky one to another level. There has been plenty of blossom already, with more to come.

Cherries are understandably popular garden trees, blousy in spring and carrying good autumn colour, too. They grow happily on most garden soils (except waterlogged ones). But remember that a tree is for life, not just for spring, so choose carefully. Cherries vary greatly in size and habit. Prunus “Kanzan” is particularly floriferous, with double pink flowers. It’s ideal for a medium-sized garden as it reaches about 6m in height and 4m in spread. For smaller gardens, how about P “Kursar” (around 3m x 3m). It’s picture-perfect, with deep-pink single flowers. P “Shogetsu” carries pink flowers initially that fade to pure white and hang down from the branches to give it a Japanese feel.

Crab apple trees (Malus) are another fine choice for spring and, after their gorgeous flowers, ornamental fruit follows and then most put on a fine display of autumnal colour. What more could one want from a deciduous tree?

Malus floribunda is one of the most prolific, its branches smothered in crimson buds that open to white or pale-pink blooms. It has a nicely rounded, densely branched crown – and when mature reaches 8m in height and spread.

Malus “John Downie” (left) has classic apple blossom followed by large orange and scarlet fruit. By contrast, Malus x moerlandsii “Profusion” is smothered in sexy dark-purple/pink blooms in late spring, with plum-coloured fruit to follow.

SOME BRITISH NATIVES – such as hawthorns and rowans – perform gloriously in spring. The common hawthorn, Crataegus monogyna, should never be dismissed as it adorns our hedgerows; but perhaps the Grignon hawthorn (C x grignonensis) is more suited to a garden, since its white flowers are showier and it’s completely thornless, too.

Cercis siliquastrum (the Judas tree) is native to southern Europe and western Asia, but at this time of year its bare stems are covered with unmissable pink flowers. The autumn colour is also stunning, with shades of golden yellow, orange and deep purple.

Whatever your preference, now is a fine time to plant. Prepare the ground well, plant the tree to the same depth as it is in the pot, stake low down and (without drowning it) don’t let it dry out while it establishes itself.

Hello, blossom

Spring means flowering trees, from cherries to crab apples and hawthorn, says Joe Swift

UPGRADE YOUR BOUNDARIES

Boundaries are an important element of the garden, providing privacy, security and a backdrop for your planting. The smaller a garden is, the more important are its boundaries, as they're among the first things you see at eye level. Whatever boundaries you have inherited, you're never stuck with them.

IT'S A COVER UP

Ugly boundaries or garage walls can be hidden. Screening materials, such as willow, bamboo (below), reed and rattan, are available in rolls and are easy to fix. OK, they won't last for ever, but they're relatively inexpensive.

ADD STAIN TO WOOD

Natural timber fences will always mellow to a grey/silver over time, which works in most gardens. Perhaps you're looking for a colour or tone to set off planting or bounce light around in a shady space? Stain is easy to apply and reapply and may also preserve the timber. Try the colour on a small area first (it may look very different on the wood or seep through to your neighbours' side!).

MORE PLANTS!

I always look to "green up" boundaries with climbers (such as clematis, right) as it's not only a chance to grow more plants where space may be limited, but covering fences tricks the eye into not knowing where the garden ends or what shape the garden is, which can make it feel larger.

PAINT IT BLACK...

Ugly brick or block walls can be painted using masonry paint. White can be demanding on the eye, but mellow off-whites or warmer tones such as ochres or terracottas work well. Blues can be a little cold in winter. Black is brave – but worth considering as it makes boundaries recede and sets off most plants surprisingly well.

John Bishop launched his career on Irish TV. Now he's back to soak up the culture – and enjoy the craic

John Bishop's Ireland Friday 8.00pm ITV
(10.45pm UTV, not STV/Border Scotland)

JOHAN BISHOP HAS a soft spot for Ireland because it's where he got his big break. The comedian's first TV gig was on a Northern Irish panel game in 2003, and a regular slot on an RTÉ talk show followed. At the time he was a sales rep for a pharmaceutical company, but his success across the Irish Sea gave him the courage to jack in the day job. "Although at that point I had no chance of getting on TV in the UK, it gave me the confidence that at least I'd always have a live audience in Ireland."

Irish audiences, he says, are "so welcoming. I like that there is a culture of the spoken word in Ireland. People will give somebody a chance and listen to their story. That was a revelation when I was starting out: I don't have to say a joke every ten seconds. I can tell a story and they'll wait for it."

In John Bishop's Ireland, he travels around the Republic and Northern Ireland, performing gigs and exploring Irish traditions. He began by watching a game of Gaelic football – "a mixture between football, rugby and GBH" – with exuberant fans in Dublin. "Gaelic football is the national sport, along with hurling, and it's just mental. I got a ticket to the all-Ireland final between Dublin and Mayo, which 80-odd thousand people attend, and half the country watches on TV. Nobody on the pitch is professional and I just thought that was fantastic. I got to speak to one of the stars and asked about it turning professional and he said, 'No, it would kill it'. Everyone just plays for their county. There's something uniquely brilliant about that."

In this week's episode, he heads to the leafy Georgian town of Westport, County Mayo, to meet Matt Molloy of the Chieftains, the traditional Irish music band who have collaborated with the likes of Mick Jagger and Roger Daltrey, played for the Queen and the Pope, and won six Grammys.

"He's got a pub called Matt Molloy's where people just turn up and play, and he joins in, so you get to play with one of the best musicians in the world. It's like me being able to play five-a-side with Steven Gerrard." Did he sing along? "I haven't got a musical bone in my body, but I drank the Guinness and listened very hard. I'd recommend anyone to go to Matt Molloy's pub or something like it – just sit there and absorb a traditional Irish music session."

NORTHERN EXPOSURE

The coast near Portrush in Antrim

While in Mayo, he also visits the Knock Shrine, where the faithful believe there was an apparition of the Virgin Mary, St Joseph and St John the Evangelist outside the parish church on a rainy August day in 1879. Today over a million and a half people a year make the pilgrimage to attend services and marvel at an enormous mosaic depicting the apparition. "It's a village of less than a thousand people, but it's got its own international airport for all the pilgrims. Whether you're religious or not, that's an interesting place."

WHEN IT COMES to scenery, he was blown away by both the north and southwest coast. "In the north I went to Portrush, which is Game of Thrones country and a beautiful part of the world. I went swimming, which was not a great idea because I nearly died of cold. The other place I'd never been before that I really loved was West Cork. The west coast of Ireland is absolutely wild."

Anyone looking for holiday romance should consider a trip to Lisdoonvarna, a spa town in County Clare that holds a matchmaking festival every September. Bishop met Ireland's premier

PAST TIMES

Westport House in County Mayo mixes history and leisure dating guru there, a rather serious chap called Willie Daly. "You put your hands on Willie's magic book, and then he will find you a partner during the matchmaking festival. It happens at the end of the summer because farmers used to go to find a wife after the crops had been brought in. Willie's father and grandfather were matchmakers before him. It's just fantastic, isn't it?"

Daly claims to have matched more than 3,000 couples and wasn't deterred by the fact that Bishop is a married man. "He said: 'If you're married, you should put both hands on the book and close your eyes. The next two weeks will be like the first two weeks of your honeymoon.' And I said, 'Well, that's no good to me, Willie. I don't want to spend the next two weeks being disappointed and having an argument.'" CLAIRE WEBB

What is the "hap" in hapless? S Nesbitt by email

"Hap" crops up in many English words. In the 13th century, a person's hap was their lot in life. Goodhap was good fortune, while mishap meant misfortune. To be hapless was to lack good fortune, and so to be incompetent or clumsy.

Hap is also at the heart of happen, used for events that come to pass according to fortune or chance.

Perhaps is therefore "by chance", while to be happy was to be blessed with good fortune. (Incidentally, someone blessed with happiness was also described as "seely", a word that eventually morphed into silly, because someone relentlessly happy might be seen as lacking in common sense.)

Finally, something haphazard was considered the result of the random nature of fate or chance. All of these from that single word, hap.

LETTER OF THE WEEK

Moved by Rachel's courage

GARDEN THERAPY
Rachel de Thame spoke out about her cancer

I want to thank Rachel de Thame for her inspiring contribution to Gardeners' World (BBC2). She was so brave and honest as she spoke to Monty Don of her ongoing struggle with breast cancer and the therapeutic role of gardening on her uncertain path to health.

This has echoes for many of us. Much further down the scale from Rachel, I've spent a year recovering from two injuries that at first left me chairbound. Progressing through the year from doing simple pruning to mowing the lawn shifted my focus from all that I couldn't do to the one creative thing I could.

Rachel's example and her courage in talking about it while still unsure about the future were so moving. I wish her a speedy and full recovery.

DROWNED OUT

I love wildlife and nature programmes. Earth from Space and Wales: Land of the Wild (BBC1) are both enthralling to watch. My enjoyment, however, is marred by the loud music played throughout each episode. At times it's so loud that you can't hear the natural sounds of the wildlife and even the narrator appears to have to raise his voice!

Penny Cross Llanfyrnach, Pembrokeshire

SERENDIPITY

I stumbled across Born to Be Wild (Monday BBC Scotland) by accident. What a lovely series about the work of the SSPCA at their wildlife rescue centre, which has a seal unit, a bird unit and small animal areas.

The dedicated staff take in a diverse selection of wildlife including hedgehogs, seals, owls, sea eagles and many more, nursing them back to health and releasing as many as possible back into the wild. A truly inspiring series.

Lynda Husband Liverpool
BBC Scotland programmes are available on Freesat, Sky and cable and also on iPlayer.

ALICE OF ARABIA

The first part of Alice Morrison's Morocco to Timbuktu: an Arabian Adventure (24 April BBC4) was a travel programme with a major difference: the presenter wasn't a celebrity. She was someone who could speak to the people she met and you didn't feel that she nipped off to the nearest five-star hotel each night. What a marvellous, inspiring and enthusiastic woman! Can the Foreign Office employ her as an ambassador?

Martin Eade Saltdean, East Sussex

NOTES ON A THEME

In response to Norma Postin's letter (Feedback, 27 April), she is mistaken regarding the Match of the Day theme tune. This piece of music was composed specially for the programme. She might be thinking of a similar theme called Mucho Mexico Seven-O, which was written by John Shakespeare and released on a single in May 1970; or possibly the other side of the single (The World at Their Feet), which was used for ITV's World Cup coverage.

The BBC used a piece called Mexico Grandstand played by the Syd Lawrence Orchestra and released on Fontana in May 1970. It was recorded at the famous Strawberry Recording Studios in Stockport.

INSPIRING
Alice Morrison was the perfect travel guide

...I work in a charity shop and this week a lady came in with a large bag of assorted used black flowerpots. Seeing my surprise, she said, "Monty Don says we must recycle!"

Pam Russell Scarborough, North Yorkshire

WORTH THE TRIP

Don't Forget the Driver (BBC2) was superb. After a slow start, the characters developed and there was wonderful photography. This dark comedy was well acted by Toby Jones and the cast, and it made excellent entertainment. A little gem.

Gina and Steve Shepperd Bristol

MY HAPPY EASTER

I loved Britain's Easter Story (Good Friday/Easter Monday BBC1). The combination of choirmaster Gareth Malone and conductor Karen Gibson, travelling to a variety of places that have connections with the Easter story – accompanied by familiar music, gospel, and plainchant from 1,700 years ago – made it for me the best programme in ages.

Lesley Whittaker Berkhamsted, Hertfordshire

WORK OF ART

In all my long life I've never seen such beautiful television programmes as the three parts of Looking for Rembrandt (BBC4). They're informative, thoughtful, sensitive and slow – giving our eyes time to dwell on the marvels themselves, the paintings.

Could the people responsible for Rembrandt be persuaded to give us a similar series on Mozart? An equally disorderly life, but one similarly fulfilled by the creation of the most glorious art. I live in hope.

Martin Down Witney, Oxfordshire

'Ted could make you laugh – and cry'

Trevor Harrison pays tribute to Edward Kelsey, 1930–2019, The Archers' Joe Grundy

Ted and I worked together for 34 years on The Archers and we built up a rather special relationship. Our characters really gelled and we almost became father and son. Joe and Eddie got into all sorts of scams – we were a little like Steptoe and Son. We knew our characters so well that we could tell exactly what inflections to put into our lines. Occasionally, after one take, the director would say, "I don't think we can improve on that, boys."

It was always fun going into the studio with Ted. We would obviously stick to the script, but we were allowed to put in little things – sighs, and ways one uses one's voice. And he was quite good at certain things: I think he once did a cuckoo! He'd pick up a paper cup and the next thing you knew it'd be a loudspeaker or a trumpet.

He could make people laugh, like when Clarrie would come in and Joe had his ferrets on the table, and then, when tragedy happens, such as when they were evicted from Grange Farm, he could put on this fragile little voice – "OK, Eddie..." – so you'd almost want to cry. He was a brilliant actor.

He was a clever writer, too. He once wrote a marvellous play called The Ambridge Pageant and it was so good that eventually we did a national tour with it. And I even went with Ted on Archers cruises! We had such a laugh.

Ted and I used to go to a lot of agricultural shows at one time – we became a bit of a double act and we even wrote a sketch together based on the old joke, "Jamaica?" "No, she went of her own accord."

We did our own version that went on and on because Joe kept getting it wrong and we'd have to start again. We loved doing things like that. I remember Ted's smiling face, and him coming out with funny things. He had this awful ringtone on his phone – it was a song he'd written and sung called Don't Panic! He told me it once went off on a train among a crowd of giggling schoolgirls and he couldn't find it in his bag, as the song got louder and louder!

Ted was a shy man in certain ways but, even if he was unwell, as soon as he entered the studio and the light went on, he just became Joe Grundy. It was magical.

Ted will be greatly missed. He was popular with the cast, they'd all ask after him, and Barry [Farrimond], who plays Ed, treated him almost like his own grandad. It was that Grundy bond, I suppose.

On The Archers you only turn up to a recording when you have a storyline: they can't use all of the characters all of the time. It's sad because I hadn't seen Ted for a few weeks. I wish I'd been there in the studio when he last was. He was a lovely man.

REFRESHED BY SCALA

Ever since the days of Terry Wogan, my wife and I haven't been able to find a breakfast radio programme to suit our tastes. Radio 2 has become too loud and busy, while Classic FM is too dreary at breakfast, although we enjoy it at other times.

Hurray, then, for Scala Radio, just discovered! Presenter Charles Nove is a delight, and the music selection is just right – a mixture of well-loved and new-to-us pieces.

The pace and mood of the programme are perfect – we recommend it to anyone looking for a change.

NOTHING NEW ON TV?

In his preview of Wild Bill (RT, 27 April) writer Ben Dowell says, "It may sound like the most unlikely premise in the history of television..." But casting an American actor in a British cop show is far from unlikely! Some readers may remember that, back in 1985–6, the ITV crime drama Dempsey and Makepeace, starring Michael Brandon and Glynis Barber, paired a streetwise, working-class New Yorker with a British noblewoman.

UNFORGOTTEN
ITV's 80s hit Dempsey and Makepeace

Cracking good show with a ripping theme tune.

YOU ASK US

Why not film the snooker from the ceiling?

Given the limitations of televising snooker – such as exaggerated perspective and foreshortening – can't the BBC give us the benefit of a directly perpendicular overhead shot to show the true angles and distances involved?

Ron Brook, Walsall, Staffordshire
A BBC spokesperson tells RT: "All sports coverage tries to provide the viewer with the best seat in the house/stadium and the most comfortable viewing angle. We do have an overhead camera, which is used selectively, and an overhead shot does give a unique view of the angles. But over long periods of coverage, the angle becomes flat and uninteresting and the way it cuts with the other cameras makes it disorientating for the viewer.

"On the other hand, the floor cameras we use give the viewer additional information regarding spin, stance and ball movement. The lower cameras capture the drama of the game. Very rarely in sport can you provide coverage from the field of play and allow the viewer to stand in the same position as the player.

"You make a good point, though, and it's one we will explore again

POT THAT!
Finding the right angle for snooker on TV can be tricky to try to enhance the experience." BBC2 coverage of the World Snooker Championship semi-finals continues on Saturday, with the final on Monday.

TIME TORN

When will we get to see series three of Outlander on Freeview? It's my favourite drama.

Susan Sorel, France
Not too long to wait – the third series of the time-travel drama is scheduled to start on More4 this summer. Expect to see a pregnant Claire (Caitriona Balfe) trying to adjust to life in 1940s Boston. Series four is available on Amazon Prime Video.

FAITH IN THE FUTURE

If you were at the BFI & Radio Times Television Festival, you may have heard from Keeping Faith stars (and real-life married couple) Eve Myles and Bradley Freegard, and creator Matthew Hall. It was fascinating to learn that scenes are reordered for the English version – which, as the BBC carries no adverts, is ten minutes longer!

Fans will have a treat next week: series two of the Welsh version, Un Bore Mercher, starts on S4C (and iPlayer, with subtitles so we can all enjoy it!) on 12 May: look out for more in next week's RT.

PRAISE FOR BEN RICH

BBC Weather reports don't get many mentions, apart from Michael Fish's "Don't worry, there isn't a hurricane on the way" forecast back in 1987. May I heap some praise therefore on Ben Rich for his enthusiasm and energetic forecasts? Lots of hand movements, excellent pronunciation and plenty of extra detail. A joy to watch, even when the forecasts aren't great.

CORRIE MEETS TED

Watching the scene in Coronation Street (19 April ITV) set in the caravan, with Gemma (Dolly-Rose Campbell) playing with a toy black-and-white cow, I was reminded of an episode of the sitcom Father Ted when Ted was trying to explain the concept of perspective to Dougal. I suspected this was more than a coincidence when in a later scene, in a pub, there was an unconscious priest in the background!

HOMAGE
Coronation Street's Gemma makes a nod to Father Ted

Patricia Bray Werrington, Staffordshire
Well spotted! An ITV spokesperson tells us that Dolly-Rose came up with these references herself, after the toy cows were put on set by the design team, and they were incorporated by director Gill Wilkinson. Patricia wins a DVD of This Time with Alan Partridge. It's available to buy for £14.99 with free p&sp at radiotimes.com/dvds19.

LAURA CARMICHAEL

But, surprisingly, the Downton star is happy to be back in a corset

What's your TV set-up in north London?

I've had my TV set for many, many years and I can't change it, even if I wanted to, because it fits on the shelf perfectly. It still works for me!

Is your sofa as old as your TV?

My sofa is definitely the kind of thing one can snack on freely and not worry about. It's very much under a throw. I try and squish as many of my family and friends on to it as possible because other than my sofa, I have those slightly ornamental but not necessarily comfortable seats, which I feel quite bad about.

What are you watching?

I just saw the documentary series Pistorius on Amazon, which was very good. I also liked Formula 1: Drive to Survive on Netflix. Who knew I'd enjoy that? But I did! I love a cookery show and my family WhatsApp thread is full of discussions about MasterChef. But mainly, I can't get over how brilliant Fleabag is. I'm going back to watch it again. I've always been a big fan of Phoebe Waller-Bridge on stage and on screen. I feel like women everywhere are punching the air, going, "Go on, girl!" She says something that people haven't said before and it's hilarious and deeply moving.

NOTHING TO WATCH?

MY FILM I've been watching films I feel I should have seen a long time ago, including Million Dollar Baby and The Silence of the Lambs.

MY BOX SET I'm always watching RuPaul's Drag Race.

MY BOOK I'm trying to read as much Mary Beard as I can. I'm a big fan of Mazza Bezza, as I call her.

Do you think things are changing for the better for female writers and actors?

We're now saying, "Hang on, this script isn't representing the world we live in!" We still have a long way to go and I'm always livid if I hear anyone say we're going too far in terms of hearing women's voices or trying to get equality – I can't believe how often people talk about how it's gone too far the other way. But it's an exciting time to put ideas forward you think are honest and haven't been seen before.

What's it like being back in a corset, post-Downton, playing Margaret Pole in The Spanish Princess?

I love it and I've not done the 16th century before. You can't slouch in this costume or travel very far in it. It puts you in a regal and upright stance, which is helpful for the role. Filming in incredible sets and ancient abbeys and castles also gave me a feel for that period.

Are you very 21st-century in your off-screen life?

I don't know what I use my phone for, I'm terrible at replying to messages, I'm terrible at replying to emails, and I'm bad at Instagramming. I was laughing with the girls the other day about how terrible I am at social media. My phone is there to play me Radio 4 in the morning and not for anything else, really. I'm useless. If social media was more private maybe I'd be better at it, but now it feels exposing and public, and I'm more shy about it.

What was it like being reunited with the cast of Downton Abbey for the film?

It was so much fun, we had such a dreamy time. It's much quicker doing a film than eight episodes of a series, so it felt like a holiday with mates. It was nostalgic. All of us always felt that if Julian Fellowes wrote it we'd do it, we're so fond of our characters and what that job did for all of us. We really care about it and have a lot of affection for it. We hope it's not destroying the image we left you with. KASIA DELGADO

UNLOCKING THE CASH

THE KEY TO YOUR RETIREMENT COULD LIE IN YOUR HOME...

Find out if property wealth could help boost your retirement finances with your FREE Radio Times guide to unlocking the tax-free cash from your home

For millions of older homeowners their biggest and most successful investment is their home, yet many do not realise they could tap into its value and access tax-free cash. With the average value of a house in the UK having more than tripled over the past 20 years*, the key to your financial security in later life could lie in your bricks and mortar.

THE FACTS

A lifetime mortgage, the most popular type of equity release plan, allows homeowners aged between 55 and 95 to access a tax-free cash lump sum without having to move and downsize. Typically, there are no monthly repayments to make as the loan, plus roll-up interest, is repaid when the plan comes to an end. What's more, the money you release is yours to spend however you like. Equity release will reduce the value of your estate and may affect your entitlement to means-tested benefits.

Research from Key shows that the most popular reasons for releasing cash include making home improvements, clearing an outstanding mortgage and gifting to help loved ones so they can enjoy their inheritance whilst you're still around to see it.

A lifetime mortgage is a loan secured against your home, just like a traditional mortgage. Whatever plans you have for retirement, equity release is one solution that could help you fund them and in a way that meets your needs.

Unless you decide to go ahead, Key's service is completely free of charge as Key's typical advice fee of 1.99% of the amount released would only be payable upon completion of a plan. Subject to a minimum advice fee of £1,499.

*Nationwide House Price Index FY 2018

Key is a member of the Equity Release Council (ERC) and recommends ERC-approved plans.

Radio Times has teamed up with Key to produce a free guide by Paul Lewis to give you the information you need

A REAL CASE HISTORY

Retired couple Patrick and Christine from Buckinghamshire were looking for a way to pay off their interest-only mortgage.

"Although we had savings to pay this off, it would have left us with little money in retirement. We didn't want to be left with no savings.

"Our mortgage provider was aware of our situation but couldn't help us. They suggested a few options to look into to improve our situation. One of which was equity release to pay off the outstanding mortgage so our savings remained untouched."

"We contacted Key, who organised an independent adviser to visit us and discuss our options. He was very helpful and there was no pressure to proceed.

"When we decided to go ahead, the process was very smooth and we felt relieved to have finally paid off our existing mortgage. The whole time it felt like something was hanging over us and now we can just enjoy our retirement without worrying.

"We were also able to gift some of the money to our children to enjoy a holiday. It was nice to see them enjoy the little boost, and there is still a sizeable amount of equity left in the house when we go."

WHY NOT CALCULATE HOW MUCH YOU COULD RELEASE FROM YOUR HOME?

Use our free online calculator to find out how much you could release from your home. Last year Key customers were able to release an average of £86,000 from their homes. Your home could help fund the retirement you always dreamt of.
