ALISON GRAHAM TV EDITOR AND PPA COLUMNIST OF THE YEAR

F THERE IS a finer, more profound, more thoughtful series this year, or even next year, than Years and Years, I will be surprised. The final episode (Tuesday BBC1) isn't just a blackly funny look at a dystopian future of chaos, fear, violence, intolerance, the rise of the far right and a world disintegrating in the face of a kind of mass selfishness, it's an important piece of television.

Admittedly Russell T Davies's drama appears to have proved hard to stomach for a mainstream audience, with low viewing figures (though here's hoping millions of people, right now, are seeking it on iPlayer) but that doesn't matter. Nothing can dilute a strong central message as Davies begs us to find our humanity again. The quest is personified by Anne Reid who, as Muriel, head of the Lyons family, makes an angry plea for more kindness and consideration. It's the most compelling few minutes of

of a sluggish start last week, Killing Eve (Saturday BBC1) takes off with a starkly brutal second installment that sees assassin Villanelle (Jodie Comer) arrive in England from near-death in France, as her hunt for agent Eve (Sandra Oh) really gets off the ground. There's a deeply sinister guest turn from The Mighty Boosh's Julian Barratt as a seemingly harmless good Samaritan.

WHAT GETS US TALKING...

SHUFFLING THE DECK AT ITV

All change at ITV entertainment department, where the broadcaster continues its search for a new Saturday-night, shiny-floor hit. Head of entertainment commissioning Siobhan Greene is leaving after seven years, which means that Kevin Lygo, ITV's director of programmes, has lost someone he called his creative "pocket rocket". Greene's replacement is head of entertainment commissioning Katie Rawcliffe who co-created Dancing on Ice and has worked on shows including I'm a Celebrity... Lygo will be hoping she'll stay put for a while.

BILL GATES'S FAVOURITE SITCOM

Also departing the TV landscape is Silicon Valley. HBO's sitcom about the tech world (which aired on Sky Atlantic in the UK and is funnier > than it sounds) is bowing out with a sixth and final series later this year. Its fans include tech pioneer Bill Gates who recently wrote, "If you want to understand Silicon Valley, watch Silicon Valley." Thomas Middleditch, the actor who plays the show's nerdy hero Richard Hendricks, says that the send-off will be bittersweet. "Much like the show, every victory has a consequence," he says of the fictional ensemble of programmers. "The show is perpetually going, 'Yay we did it!' then someone walks by and says, 'Ha-ha I got you in the nuts." Sounds like life in general to me.

KNOWING WHEN TO SAY NO

Sky's drama Chernobyl is a visceral dramatisation of the 1986 nuclear power station disaster. It's a tough watch and a scene in episode four in which dogs were shot in order to stop contamination, was especially grim. But there was going to be an even more distressing scene in that episode before creator Craig Mazin cut it out. "That story actually got worse [in real life]," says Mazin. "If we had shown it, I think a lot of people would have said, 'You know what, now you're just being mean'. We shot it, but it was too much."

THE NEW FACE OF TRAVEL

Alex Speck-Zolte and his dad Darron may have come second in BBC2's travel contest Race Across the World earlier this year, but 20-year-old Alex was such a hit with viewers that he has been signed by talent agency Knight Ayton, which plans to give him a shot at a career as a TV traveller. ust off your tricorn hats! The fifth and final series of Poldark is galloping onto BBC1 this summer - but with a twist: Debbie Horsfield's scripts are the first episodes of the revived drama not directly based on Winston Graham's 12-novel saga.

The action begins in 1800 with villainous George Warleggan (Jack Farthing) devastated at the loss of his beloved Elizabeth, and Ross (Aidan Turner) and Demelza (Eleanor Tomlinson) facing new challenges. Fresh faces include Freddie Wise as Elizabeth's son Geoffrey Charles who, in the wake of his mother's death, decides to join the military. New characters include Cecily Hanson (Lily Dodsworth Evans), whose opinions on the abolition of slavery pit her against her well-to-do family, and interracial couple Kitty and Ned Despard (Kerri McLean and Vincent Regan) – a real pair from the era.

Insiders say that this series, packed with "action and excitement", could be the best one yet... BEN DOWELL

Viewpoint

'Don't fall for cartoon Maggie'

The line between reality and entertainment is becoming too blurred

ILLIAN ANDERSON IS the latest of many actresses to take on the role of Margaret Thatcher. She will appear in the next series of The Crown, the moving version of Madame Tussaud's. Gillian is likely to play the part well. But having closely observed the former prime minister for many years, I can assure you that she ain't no Margaret Thatcher.

Even the marvellous Meryl Streep in The Iron Lady didn't convince me. It's hard for producers not to fall for the strident, cartoon version of Maggie. Clutching you by the arm, or putting her hand over yours by way of greeting, made her much more attractive in real life. At times, even with a journalist like me – hardly a close friend – she could be relaxed enough to be funny.

There is a danger that audiences have become too ready to believe that these fictitious depictions of the truth are what happened. Such is the prevalence of "biopics" or "factions", some people don't bother with the bigger news stories and wait for the film or TV version to come out. The most confusing and yawn-worthy sagas, such as Brexit, can be turned into slick drama.

The Jeremy Thorpe story, A Very English Scandal, was so close to how I remember it, I found myself complaining that events that I had witnessed were not included.

Viewers may be so captivated by this blend of fact and fiction that they find it increasingly difficult to tell them apart. Actors are now taking on the role of real politicians. The most striking example is in Ukraine where Volodymyr Zelensky was elected president after playing just that role in a TV drama. He seemed to be the sort of decent chap they were looking for to fight corruption.

N A COMPLICATED world, people search for simple ways to work out what is going on, and what should be done. Personalities are easier to follow than policies, and made-up characters more digestible than old sticks at Westminster. Behind the surge in support for Jeremy Corbyn was a feeling that he was more "authentic" than other politicians, more like a real person. In the USA, Donald Trump's success is partly due to the endless demand for "someone like us".

Writers and directors are swimming in the same pool. They are desperately anxious to encourage viewers to suspend their disbelief. Tom convicted criminal in a play; he discovered that an actor in the role would have been far more convincing. I have twice acted as a reporter on TV – in a comedy called My Dad's the Prime• Audiences are too Minister and also in Casualty. I didn't feel believable, but the BBC paid me more for pretending to be myself, than they paid me for being myself.

The reverse has also happened. At a news conference in Texas I asked President George W Bush whether he intended to oust Saddam Hussein in Iraq. In a fictionalised version I was played by a black man.

In a TV film about Margaret Thatcher's resignation an actor cast as me was pushed aside, as I was, outside the Paris Embassy. I haven't been contacted by The Crown team, but if they do include that famous scene in Paris, how about getting someone tall and handsome to play me?

WHAT WE WATCHED

It had been ten years since Monty Python's Flying Circus premiered on the BBC and we assembled the troupe to reminisce about their first live recording of material conceived, written and performed by John Cleese, Michael Palin et al. "My only memory is just the audience arriving there and people thinking they'd come to see a circus," Terry Gilliam told us. "And the BBC was calling it a circus so I think it was just a family audience and old age pensioners coming to see the lions and clowns." Palin compared the feeling of the night to "not exactly jumping off a cliff on a dark night, but certainly being slowly pushed off".

Changing Control of the Control of t

Angela Rippon was the first host of Top Gear – now she meets Paddy McGuinness and Freddie Flintoff, the new boys joining Chris Harris at the wheel

EVERSING A TEN-YEAR-OLD Rolls-Royce Phantom Drophead into a parking space in a jam-packed supermarket car park to pick up the family shopping is not one of the extreme challenges facing the new Top Gear team.

But perhaps it should be. As a decidedly redfaced Andrew "Freddie" Flintoff admits with embarrassment: "I had ten goes at it, trying to back in. In the end I just abandoned the car at the other side of the car park."

Quite an admission of failure from Flintoff, who, along with fellow newbie Paddy McGuinness, is about to become one of the two new faces in the driving seat of the BBC's iconic, commercially profitable and, at times, deeply troubled motoring blockbuster Top Gear.

I'm sitting with the duo in a trailer just 24 hours before they're due to record their first programme in front of an audience of 500 TG fans. We're just yards from the racing track where they test so many of the cars featured in the programme, with the whine of performance cars travelling at over 100mph providing the constant soundtrack to our conversation.

'When the call came from Top Gear I was like, "Yes, fantastic!"

PADDY McGUINNESS

McGuinness and Flintoff are the third and most recent in a series of "dream teams" charged with maintaining and growing the success and popularity of the show since the departure of Jeremy Clarkson, Richard Hammond and James May in 2015. During their reign, an estimated 350 million fans, in more than 200 territories worldwide, tuned in to experience the trio's laddish exploits. Top Gear was the BBC's cash cow, earning over £50 million a year from global sales, live shows and merchandise.

All a far cry from when I started as the first presenter of the programme in 1977, when it was a modest regional motoring magazine show in the Midlands – then the heart of Britain's motor manufacturing industry. We went nationwide the following year, and even though in my three years as presenter I drove everything from vintage cars to articulated lorries to the latest hot-off-the-line production models, Top Gear was a totally different animal from the one it's grown into. We filmed entirely on location, mostly around Britain, with none of the exotic settings, crazy challenges, live audiences and toys for the boys that became hallmarks of the formula and made it a ratings winner with a loyal and knowledgeable fan base.

However, 2015, with the departure of Clarkson and co after "punchgate", was a game changer. Fluctuating viewing figures and a not-always successful mix of presenters means that this new line-up for the 27th series – comedian, actor and presenter McGuinness, former cricketer Flintoff and Chris Harris, a professional driver who has been with the show since 2016 – has a lot to prove if the show is going to survive and thrive. That's something McGuinness and Flintoff are acutely aware of, but by no means fazed by. And it's clear that the all-important "C" word – the "chemistry" between the two presenters, which will define so much of the tone and strength of the programme – is already well established, even though this is the first time they've worked together. Flintoff sums it up: "When we did our practice day – a bit of driving and some stuff to camera – it didn't feel like the first time we'd done something together. It was a really nice feeling. I loved playing cricket, but I loved the dressing-room banter as well. It's like having that back again."

What's also clear is the genuine, almost boyish thrill both men are getting out of being the presenters of a show they have loved and watched for years. McGuinness may have hosted highly successful primetime television shows and performed arena tours for thousands as a stand-up comedian, but he squirms with delight when talking about Top Gear. "It was such a part of my TV landscape, but I never dreamt of being on it. But when the call came I was like, 'Yes, fantastic!" For Flintoff, a seasoned TV performer since retiring from cricket, it "always seemed unattainable. So when I went for the screen test, I was desperate to get it."

So they like each other, and they still can't believe their luck in landing the gig. But do they actually know anything about cars? It's something that comments in some areas of social media and the press have already brought up, alongside their suitability as presenters.

Flintoff is unequivocal. "I've always loved cars, and bought them from my early 20s. I've had Porsches and BMWs; more recently Ferraris and all sorts. I like older cars, not cars with too much technology in them because I want to drive them. I don't want to be looking at screens everywhere and everything touch-button." Hence his ten-yearold Roller, which he loves, though admits: "When I do drive it, I either look like I'm cleaning it, or like I've stolen it because I've always got my gym kit on, and I've got a beanie hat on, it up every week to keep the battery ticking over, and just love looking at it. I think it's beautiful."

JOKING ASIDE McGuinness, on the Paddy McGuinness other hand, has a totally practical view of in Kay's sitcom motors. He owns three Phoenix Nights versions of a Land Rover/ Range Rover. His wife has the Sport and his own indulgence is the Vogue, but the workhorse is the Discovery. "On days out you can put the kid seats in, me and the wife in the front and mother-ino while neither McGuinness nor Flintoff claims to be a petrolhead, their enthusiasm for anything on four wheels appears genuine. It's particularly evident in the way they throw themselves into the challenges tossed at them by the production team, everything from hairraising episodes on ice in Iceland to driving a modified hearse to destruction, or motoring through Ethiopia.

law in the back. Ticks all the boxes."

Flintoff has proved fearless and indestructible. Relating it back to his cricket days, he says, "I love being nervous. I love that feeling

Chris Harris provides an example of Flintoff's impressive willingness to get involved. "We went to Iceland, and were stood in a quarry, looking at a 50ft vertical cliff face that both of us were supposed to drive up," recalls Harris. "I looked at Freddie and said, 'Not only do I not fancy this, I think I'm going to call this and say I'm not doing it. Because I've got children, and frankly, if I'm going out, I'm going out in a Formula 1 car in Monza at 150mph. I'm not splattering myself in Iceland'. Freddie went: 'I'll do it!'"

HILE McGuinness is definitely less gung-ho in his approach than his co-host, he does admit that the rivalry between himself and Flintoff is "intense". It's a determination that has meant McGuinness has been forced to face up to a major phobia – a serious fear of flying.

As a cricketer, Flintoff has toured the world – a fact that was surely a consideration in his casting given his familiarity to an international audience, much like the previous host Matt LeBlanc. By contrast, McGuinness admits that Portugal was the farthest he'd ever travelled before the programme. "I didn't like flying. I never have. I would get on flights blind drunk – that was my default setting. Well, I can't do that on this show because I'm driving a car at the other end. So I went to see a doctor to combat my fear, and it was the best money I ever spent. Now it's great.

'I want the audience to love Top Gear again'

CHRIS HARRIS

I'll be giving you tips, Angela. It's the best way to travel! I'm all over it now – I love it!"

The third member of the team, Chris Harris, expects the programme to fly, too. "From the moment I first met them, I knew it was going to be absolutely fine. The only area of concern on Top Gear is that you've got to love cars – really love cars. Knowing cars is less critical, but loving them, being passionate... that matters. We've carried people in the past that didn't like cars as much, didn't have an interest in them in that way, and that didn't work; you get found out quite quickly. These guys have got it.

"They're sponges, and they will get better and better and better. But will they be casually sliding stuff sideways at a few hundred miles an hour? No. Can I tell a joke like Paddy? No. Am I as competitive and good on camera as Freddie? No. We're a team, and I want this chemistry to grow. I want the audience to begin to love Top Gear again. I think the audience has liked it for a while. I think we did a good job of making it likeable again, but I want them to love it again."

reaction to some of the places where we're going. It's all still centred around the cars. But because we're not synonymous with cars, I think people are going to be surprised as well.

PADDY We have a bit more interaction now with where we are. So we bring the locals in to do stuff, like we do in Ethiopia. Before it was in a bit of a bubble – they would have their adventures and then leave. We've opened up the world a bit now. It's got a lot of warmth and a nice smile running though it.

There is clearly a lot of public and professional pressure on you both to make a success of this...

job and enjoying it. I remember the first time I saw the racing track and everything going on. And you think "Actually, I'm doing Top Gear here. How is this happening? I was an average cricketer, now I'm on the telly doing this!" But I learnt a long time ago you can only affect the pressure on yourself. If you do the job the best you can, do it sincerely and how you want to do it, it's out of your hands. I can't be affected by what people write or say.

PADDY I do not feel one jot of pressure because we are so well looked after and supported. It's only when you go to some big BBC press event where they come from all over the world, and you think "Bloody hell!" But it's felt so relaxed and laid back. I've never had it on any other show. I don't know what it is, but I don't feel the nerves. Well, not until you said it, Angela!

Paddy, as the professional comedian on the team, do you feel you have to rein in your natural instinct to turn everything into a joke?

paddy Not at all. We all give each other enough space to finish what we're doing and saying. It feels like everything's clicked into place with the three of us on camera, so I don't feel I must throw in a few gags to liven things up – there's no need to.

Will you watch the first episode?

FREDDIE I struggle watching myself, but I think I will because the kids and family will want to. And there will be a sense of pride, I hope, because I've enjoyed it and we've put everything into it.

PADDY I genuinely will not. And I won't look at social media afterwards. I'm so happy with what I've seen and am proud of it, I think it's looking amazing. So if I saw one negative comment I'd feel the need to respond to it.

And are you up for more?

FREDDIE Yes, I'd like to go back to some of the places I played cricket and see them again. I'd love to do some in India. I love India. PADDY I think shows should be allowed to breathe and find their feet. Given a chance we can do two, three, four, five six, seven series.

George Clooney explains why, after a 20-year absence, he was tempted back to TV by Catch-22 – and why he's given up

playing the leading man

OU MIGHT NOT have seen much of him recently, but George Clooney has been busy. Not acting on television: he's been largely absent, chat shows and coffee adverts aside, since leaving ER 20 years ago. Nor on film: his last on-screen acting role was in Jodie Foster's 2016 thriller Money Monster. Nor behind the camera: he has directed just once in five years – 1950s-set satire Suburbicon. Instead, he's been raising twins with his wife Amal, and campaigning on issues including Darfur, gun control and LGBT rights.

It was always likely to take a landmark project to draw him back to the day job and Joseph Heller's classic tragicomedy Catch-22, an acerbic satire on war, capitalism, bureaucracy and human frailty, is just that. Covering 1942–1944, as the German army retreated through Italy, it follows the experiences of weary, sceptical US Bombardier Captain John Yossarian, and was brought to screen twice in the 1970s. First as a kaleidoscopic cinematic epic starring Alan Arkin, and later in a disastrously misconceived television pilot with Richard Dreyfuss. So a third attempt to adapt what, for many, is akin to a sacred text represented a gamble.

"If you're going to take 18 months out of your life then it has to be worth it," Clooney says, with a trademark grin. Asking as many questions as he answers, the 58-year-old – for whom the book was required reading at high school – is every bit the pro in person, wisecracking and deflecting with tremendous charm.

"Paramount called me and Grant [Heslov, his longtime friend and collaborator who also stars in and directs two episodes of the six-part series] only be grounded if he is crazy – all he has to do is ask, but to ask would be to demonstrate his sanity, thus compelling him to fly more missions.

"Yossarian has a lust for life, which I think is beautiful," says Abbott. "He's not afraid to die, exactly, just afraid at whose hands his life will end. There was an image that kept coming to me of lightning striking. Yossarian is constantly looking up at the sky and trying to dodge the lightning bolts while they hit all his friends around him. He's always thinking about who's in control of his life. Fear of the unknown, fear of what's next... I can relate to that, one hundred per cent."

ATCH-22'S PORTRAYAL OF male mental health issues, as Yossarian descends from feigning madness to possible insanity, feels irrepressibly timely.

"I've never talked about it before but it's an interesting theme for this," Abbott agrees. "More people deal with things than we know - especially guys and the pride they have when it comes to health. I do it too, I avoid dealing with things sometimes, and I live with anxiety - it's not crippling, but it can be hard. That idea of removal helps, focusing on something else. My anxiety usually comes when I'm going to bed, that's the time my mind starts racing and I don't sleep for hours."

One of the series' writers, Luke Davies, has talked about Heller capturing a very modern sense of communal anxiety about the state of the world. This, too, is something Abbott has wrestled with. "It's the combination of what's happening and the accessibility of news - it's more daunting than people acknowledge. It's important to stay up on topics and do your bit, but sometimes you need to tap out because some things are out of your control."

Also in keeping with our times, the Yossarian of the novel has had his roughest edges smoothed off in the drama - the casual misogyny, in particular. Davies and Michod wisely give actual names and personalities to the female characters, depicted by Heller as two-dimensional, and often the property of men ("Scheisskopf's wife", "Nateley's whore"). Nonetheless, Catch-22's focus on white men does feel idiosyncratic to a modern viewer.

While little could be done about the narrative requirements of the wartime setting, Clooney did try to ensure fair representation off screen. "All the #MeToo stuff started coming through and I said to Paramount: 'It's all guys [working on this] – we have to be part of the solution.' So [Emmy-winning cinematographer and Ozark director] Ellen Kuras jumped in to produce and direct a couple of episodes, we found a female editor and rethought our own involvement. There's tons more room for improvement, so it's a constant battle."

There is also an equal-opportunities attitude to nudity. Although our first sight of a woman is, regrettably, Julie Ann Emery as Marion Scheissstripped male torsos predominate over the series. In Yossarian's case, however, it's far from gratuitous. He spends one episode forgoing clothing altogether, deeply traumatised by his combat experiences. Abbott is sanguine about disrobing for the camera.

I ENJOYED PLAYING MAN... I GOT A LOT OF YELLING OUT

GEORGE CLOONEY

"I can watch [the nudity] because I feel removed from it by now. I have more vanity about photos or interviews or real life than I do on screen. I'm painfully aware of death at all times, so in the back of my head I'm going, 'Everyone's dying anyway, so just get not depressed."

While Clooney's nude scenes are probably behind him, he takes on the role of General Scheisskopf, a preening egomaniac obsessed with parades, with aplomb.

"It's not that much fun to age on screen," he says, "but I enjoyed playing the grumpy old man on this. There wasn't a whole lot of subtlety to what I did - I just got a lot of yelling out so I could come home and be nice to everybody."

Clooney and Abbott share an obvious mutual admiration, a rapport strengthened by Abbott being around the same age as Clooney was when ER began. The latter still talks with real fondness about the series that both launched his career and set television on course for its current golden age.

"ER was a nutty moment in the lives of six of us who were thrust into the stratosphere," says Clooney. "I'm still really close to that gang - I'm having dinner with Noah [Wyle] tomorrow night! It really changed the way television was made, then The Sopranos came out and changed it again, and it's been supercharged in the last few years. Now television allows you to do the same interesting work I was able to do in small independent films."

"George was great with everyone," says Abbott, who was not alone in seeking Clooney out for professional advice. "We've had very candid conversations. It's nice to keep some of what we said back, but he talked about the importance of knowing your place, not getting ahead of yourself, doing the right work in the best way you can. Just show up, do your job and know your lines!"

In spite of "a little mischief", Abbott and his younger castmates (many of them British) were, he insists, consummate professionals whose bond was strengthened by being billeted in the same hotels during filming in Sardinia. "Whether it's film or television, you have to make friends fast," Abbott says. "For Catch-22 it happened very naturally – we all got there ten days before shooting began and went out for dinner or to bars, went to the beach and exercised together."

As Clooney ruefully admits, he and Hugh Laurie (who plays the enigmatic Major de Coverley) were among the elder statesmen of the cast. "My wife and I stayed in a house across the street from the rest of the cast's hotel, which had the only restaurant within ten miles, so we were there a lot having dinner. I suspect it was pretty fun for them, although I was thinking, 'Thank God I can go to bed at nine o'clock and not feel ashamed.' My kids were oneand-a-half and actually slept through the night, but at 6am, we were up..."

Not that Clooney had reined himself in entirely – a motorbike crash in Sardinia during the shoot forced him to ditch a lifelong obsession. "We were coming back from the hospital – Amal rode with me – and we both just said, 'That's it, I'm done.' I hit a car at 70 miles per hour, straight on. If you get nine lives, I used them all up in one shot."

sense of mortality hung over the shoot, never more so than with the arrival from the United States of two Mitchell B-25 bombers, which saw combat 75 years ago. They landed on the tarmac on set in Italy to applause from cast and crew, and became both the stars of the brutally effective aerial combat sequences and essential inspiration for Abbott, whose time in the nosecone helped him get to grips with the reality of life (and death) as a Second World War bombardier.

"The nosecone is vulnerable, hot and very small," he says. "If something happened, or the plane was going down, the only way out was through a very narrow tunnel. Not only are you in danger of being shot down, but you have to crawl through a claustrophobic space in the hope you can live. I understood Yossarian's pure fear – even travelling at one mile per hour down a runway was scary."

The themes endure for both men, and, while neither refers to him by name, the spectre of US President Trump looms. "It's about white men in positions of power, using young men at will," says Abbott. "It comments on those power structures, on those men that were in place at the time and are in lots of ways still in place today, by making them look ridiculous."

"The book is a classic because the standard tenets remain true," adds Clooney. "St rolls downhill, authority is to be made fun of, red tape and bureaucracy drive you nuts, war is insane... Catch-22 would play as well in ancient Rome as it would in the future." GABRIEL TATE

IPPING FROM AN AC/DC Back in Black mug and wearing a tight-fitting Dogfest T-shirt, his feet up on the desk, Channel 4's Supervet is blinding me with science, and with talk of bottoms: canines', cows', and even his own.

"I remember getting to Blackpool and walking onto the same stage that Frank Sinatra sang on," Professor Noel Fitzpatrick is saying of his 2018 UK tour.

"I thought: this is a big honour. Who would have thought a vet presenting veterinary stuff could be on that same stage? That meant a lot: we're finally getting to the point where the public can understand the currency. And the currency is love, and I'm translating medicine through that. Then, by the time I got to the O2 in London, I'd lost my voice and had to get a big jab of vitamins in my bum."

The friendly, charismatic Fitzpatrick – a rugged and gym-toned 51 – is the vet as rock star, and not just because the music-loving Irishman can talk about U2, Simple Minds and Phil Collins till the Friesians come home.

A live iteration of his bestselling memoir, Listening to the Animals: Becoming the Supervet, his Welcome to My World stage show hit 18 sold-out arenas around the country. Pet-loving fans of his Channel 4 documentary series The Supervet – now some 100 episodes old – turned out in droves for a mixture of personal reminiscences, immersive technology and demonstrations of the pioneering surgery that's revolutionised what's possible for ailing pets – including prosthetic limbs, hip and knee replacements and treatments for multiple types of cancer. With so much emotion in the air – not to mention the pep shots in his rear – were there lots of romantic proposals for the avowedly single rock'n'roll surgeon?

"Lots of romantic proposals," he beams. "The book signings were particularly like that. One lady said: 'Could you sign it to Mrs Fitzpatrick please?' And I said: 'Are you really Mrs Fitzpatrick?' 'I might be if you play your cards right!' So there was a lot of that," he grins. Then adds, "and kinky gifts".

Ooh, example, please. "No, because that will be a headline in your article. And that would be awful." You mean, "The Supervet: I Got a Leather Pet Collar and Whip on Tour"? "No comment!"

centre, is enjoying some rare down time.

Well, not really. As well as talking to me, Fitzpatrick has eight work-in-progress lectures open on the four big computer screens that flank his cluttered desk. He's "sculpting" them in advance of a trip to Italy and the upcoming VET Festival in Surrey, an outdoor conference he devised for the veterinary profession. He was at it all weekend, and at midnight last night was still working on one titled: What's New in Regenerative Medicine for Osteoarthritis and Bone or Cartilage Defects.

There are also articles to write for what he jokingly calls "the extremely socially popular" journal Veterinary and Comparative Orthopaedics and Traumatology. Even Keira, his adored border terrier, looks fatigued as she lolls on the floor.

But Fitzpatrick doesn't want to preach to the converted, or bedazzle his peers. He wants the public to embrace his cause: that of loving animals unconditionally, and understanding the veterinary medical science that he's driving forward.

"The importance of the show is that it's changed what people talk about at dinner parties. Ten years >

I find it very difficult to trust humans.
Trust is earned?

It's a sunny Monday lunchtime at Fitzpatrick Referrals in greenest Surrey. In a cramped office full of animal skeletons and academic publications, the man with his name above the door at this rural orthopaedic/ neurology centre, and at a nearby cancer and soft tissue It's also about changing the perception of what a vet does, highlighting the importance of specialism rather than all-creatures-great-and-small generalism.

"Until relatively recently, you'd expect your vet to fix a broken bone, sort out a dog's anal glands and give a vaccine."

o, The Supervet isn't just another cosy, furry-friends reality show, Animal Hospital with extra "cutting", as he calls his facility with a scalpel. "I would go mad if I was just making an entertaining show," he says. "Being a celebrity has no relevance to my life," he adds dismissively. The TV crew, pretty much permanently on site at the centre, are there because they serve a purpose.

"I did the book, the tour, the show, with one goal in mind. I want my legacy to be: 'He gave animals a fair deal.' I have no desire to sip piña coladas at a pool party. I'm excited when a scientific paper comes out that proves or disproves a concept. But nobody's going to read my paper on 1158 Tibial Plateau Levelling Osteotomy in a Dog. But when they see Mark Owen from Take That come in with his dog that has a cruciate problem – and I've listened to Take That for 30 years, so Mark and I can banter a bit – then people are suddenly interested in why a knee works the way it works."

But throughout Fitzpatrick's life, this blind devotion to animals, study and science has come at great cost. The reclusive, bookish son of a cattle and sheep farmer from County Laois, young Noel was mercilessly bullied at secondary school. He was beaten up, and chucked in a slurry-filled quarry in what he described in his memoir as a "lunchtime ritual".

Revisiting those memories for the book was, "horrendous. I realised that that was what had driven me, that rejection and [feeling of] never being good enough.

'My mission is to tell mankind not to mess up the world'

"But no matter how hard the bullies kicked or how many quarries they threw me in, I didn't care – I would much rather they did that than damage my books, which I'd put my heart and soul into. So I was inconsolable when they poured milk over my biology and physics books."

As a hugely successful profes-

'I've listened to Take That for 30 years – Mark and I can banter' sional, it sounds like his life now is no less pressured. "I've probably worked more hours than 99 per cent of human beings in the last 25 years," he says, adding that he's operated on more than 35,000 animals and employs 250 people.

While travelling and lecturing, his writing is sustained by an endless supply of Pringles: he distributes the contents of a can around his hotel room, and can only eat one every half hour, until the lectures are completed.

"One time, I was due to give nine lectures in Chicago. I flew out with none of them written because I'd been operating all the time. At four in the morning, in yet another hotel, with Pringles scattered around the room, I was desolate... But I was desperate to contribute.

"The second worst moment in my life was when I was doing my board [medical] exams and I puked in the toilet because I couldn't remember something, I'd had a panic attack."

All of which hasn't left much space – or, perhaps, inclination – for a personal life. "I don't like that many things about myself, but I do like my great sense of discipline." Equally, Fitzpatrick admits that the childhood bullying has impeded his ability to form relationships.

"Absolutely. I would say the answer to that is yes, and I would say that unequivocally. I find it very difficult to trust humans.

"Trust is earned, and animals don't judge you," he continues. "That's one of the many reasons I feel fortunate to do what I do: I don't feel judged. My dog, she got up this morning, was happy to see me, rolled over on her back, it was great to be alive," he beams, soppily.

Nonetheless, he believes "no question" that there is a woman out there for him. He'll just have to find the time. Fitzpatrick's surgical schedule is such that his daily fitness routine often sees him in his onsite gym at 2am, and he sleeps in the office four nights a week.

"That's my bedroom," he says, pointing to a door. So it's a cot in a cupboard?

"Ah, more or less," he replies, squirming ever so slightly. "And it's a mess. It's a student bedsit. And there's no window."

He is, though, used to a windowless cupboard. "I feel quite safe in there, maybe because I had a very small room in our house in Ireland growing up. And also because when I first went to America, I stayed in a cupboard for a couple of days. And every interview I went for when I was trying to get a residency, I slept in the toilet."

Dare I ask, what's his home in Guildford like?

"Ah, it's, ah, er, not very well-visited. The decor isn't exactly exciting. I've been in the same home since shortly after I came to the UK, so more than 20 years. And it's just an ordinary home with a bedroom and a kitchen. Home comforts? I have a very nice record player, and a lovely record collection. I just listen to my records and hang out with Keira."

He doesn't eat meat, and is clearly healthy – does he cook?

"No. I have a man who brings in food, because I have no time. He has a very strict list of things [I'll eat]. He and I have an understanding: I'm busy saving lives, and he's busy saving my life."

HE LONG HOURS, the ascetic discipline, the friends he can "count on the fingers of one hand" – they're all in the service of the Supervet's impassioned purpose. To him, the sacrifice is clearly worth it. Does he never feel lonely? His reply has a touch of the messianic. His hero, Bono – to whom he bears a passing resemblance – would approve.

"No, I don't get lonely. I get frustrated that as humans we're so conceited that we think we're it. I believe in love as a pure thing. It's God, it's the trees, the animals, it's you and me interacting in an honest way right now. It does not need to be just a relationship with one human being. I am in love with creation. And I have felt a very strong sense since I was a child that my job is to tell mankind that we have a very important mission. And that is to not mess up the world. And we're in serious danger of doing that.

"And I believe that more people should, in a non-evangelical way, say: we're all human beings, made with the same bones, guts and cardiac system as a dog. So why don't we just wise up, get over ourselves and do the right thing? That's my role on Earth." CRAIG McLEAN

Hitler used slave labour to turn Alderney into an armed fortress. But how many died?

OURIST BROCHURES DESCRIBE the island of Alderney, with its quiet beaches and gentle hills, as a restful destination offering a peaceful and relaxing holiday. But this tiny sibling of Jersey and Guernsey, which lies 60 miles south of the English coast and which is just over three miles long and $1^{1/2}$ wide, still bears the scars of a murderous and, until now, largely forgotten wartime occupation.

When the German army took the Channel Islands in 1940 Hitler personally decreed that Alderney should become an armed fortress that would dominate the English Channel. Over a million tons of concrete were poured and 6,000 prisoners were brought to the island by the Nazis to work as slave labourers to build the fortifications.

"Being on Alderney is a very strange sensation," says Caroline Sturdy Colls, professor of conflict archaeology and genocide investigation at Staffordshire University. "There are hugely imposing fortifications all around you but there are also traces of the camps where the enslaved workforce lived, hidden under dense vegetation."

Prisoners from 27 different nationalities, including Russian and eastern European prisoners and Jewish detainees, were housed in four prison camps. One, Lager Sylt, was run by the SS and, Sturdy Colls says, men were regularly executed and routinely starved. "I think it's incredibly important that we understand what happened to these people, because these were terrible crimes against humanity and they were perpetrated on British soil", says Sturdy Colls, whose research informs a new television documentary. "Inmate testimonies tell of individual guards who each had their own way of torturing the prisoners and a preference for how they liked to shoot them and kill them."

The population was evacuated. Nobody saw the Nazis' crimes'

There are 397 marked graves on the island but recent investigations by Sturdy Colls suggest the death toll was substantially higher. Using ground-penetrating imaging and mapping technology she has uncovered evidence of what she says are unmarked mass graves.

Although she is only 34, Sturdy Colls has already established herself as one of our leading investigators of Nazi crimes. "I've had an interest in the Holocaust since childhood", she says. "Later, at university, I helped a professor on a new investigation into the Moors murders, searching for the body of Keith Bennett. I realised that a key motivating factor, for me, is the resonance for the families left behind and that evolved into searching and trying to document over 50 Holocaust camps and killing sites all over Europe."

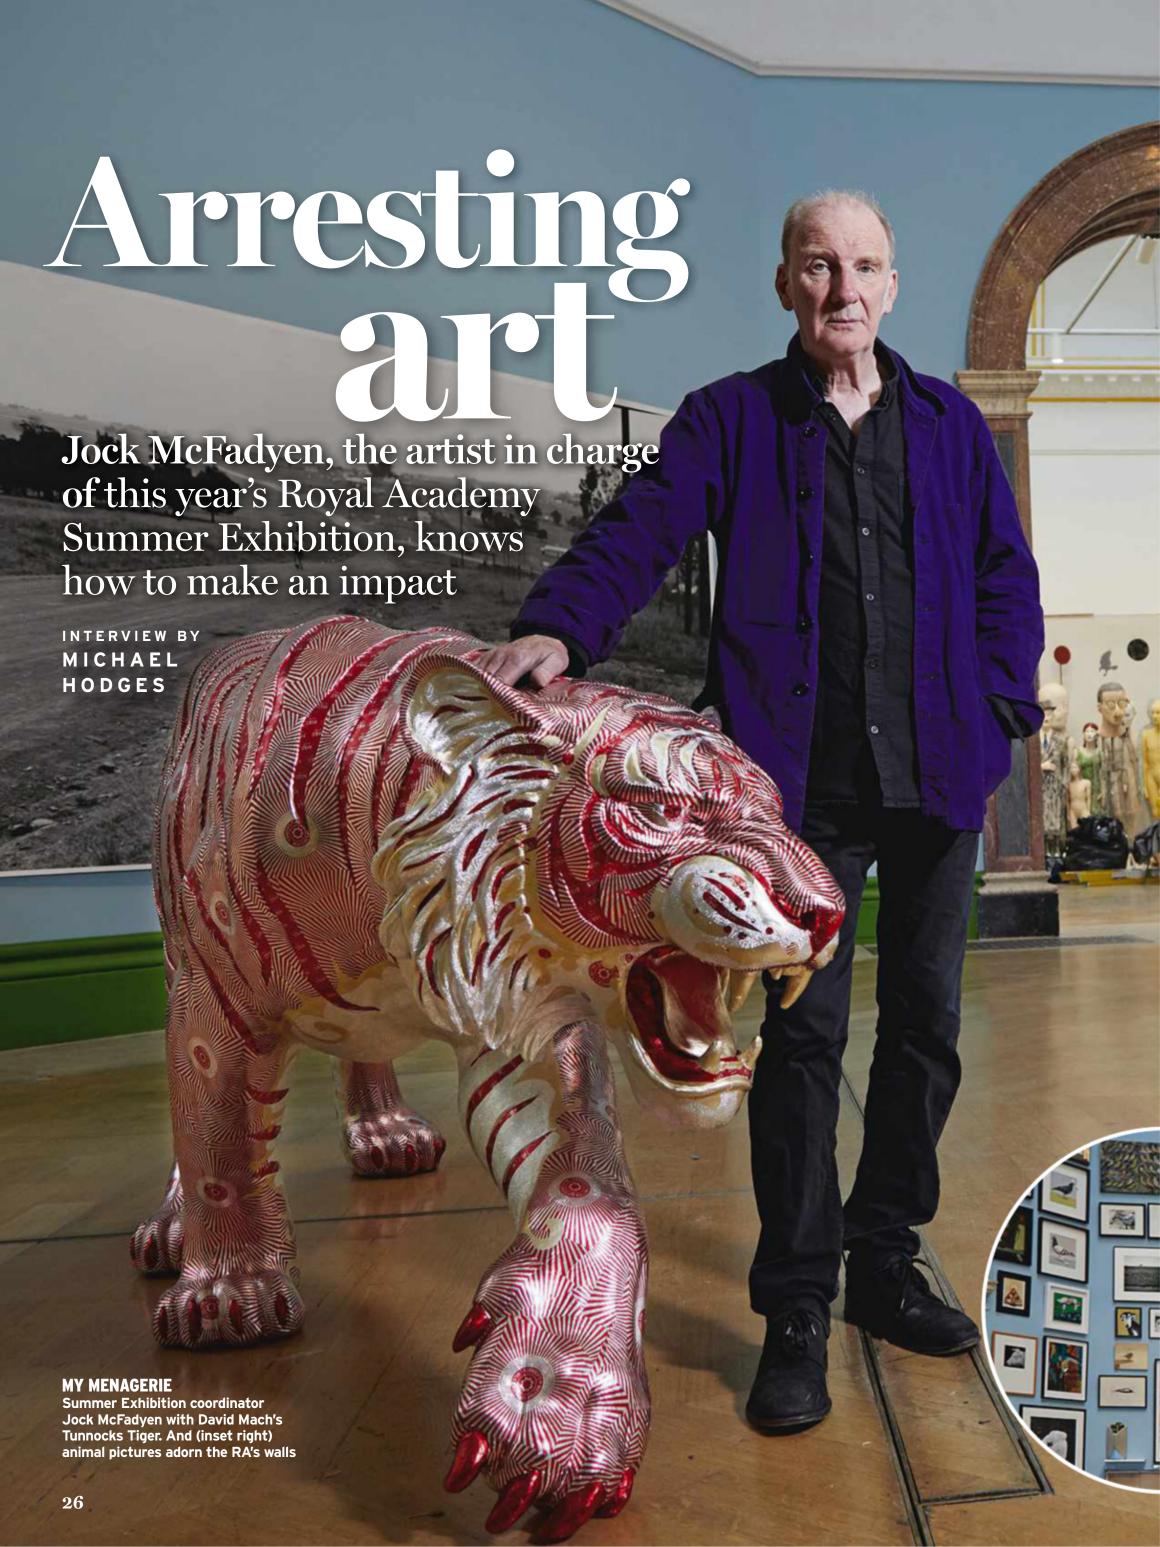

UT NOT EVERYONE is happy with Sturdy Colls's investigations. When the team were on Alderney the island authorities suddenly rescinded their permission to dig on the wartime sites. Was that due to embarrassment over wartime collaboration?

She says not. "Alderney isn't like Jersey and Guernsey where the population stayed behind. The whole population of Alderney was evacuated, so there wasn't actually anybody here to witness what the Nazis were doing and there aren't issues really around collaboration.

"People didn't want to think that this happened on British soil. And after the war, obviously, the sentiment was about moving forward, rebuilding relationships with Germany and then rebuilding Europe. So what happened on Alderney didn't really chime with that."

Sturdy Colls, for one, isn't willing to let the crimes that were committed on the island be forgotten. "You might think that these people on Alderney were from somewhere else, that what happened has nothing to do with British history. But it does and we absolutely have to document what happened in our territory. Being dismissive of the lives of slave labourers 75 years ago perpetuates the kind of racial hatred that we see in the present. Teaching people about this is ≥ more relevant now than ever." MICHAEL HODGES

TIME TO REFLECT Professor Caroline Sturdy Colls considers the dark history of Alderney

AREFUL!" SAYS JOCK McFadyen RA, as I nearly walk backwards into a small Tracey Emin bronze nude, recently unpacked and now balanced on a box. It's only a few days before the Summer Exhibition opens and the walls and the floors of the Royal Academy are absolutely crammed with the new pictures and sculptures that will fill an exhibition that has been running annually without interruption since 1769.

As he completes the last flurry of hanging, McFadyen, an acclaimed painter and coordinator of this year's show, is giving Radio Times a preview of one of the major events in the British art year. Some 250 years ago, the annual Exhibitions featured paintings by Academy members like Thomas Gainsborough and Joshua Reynolds, whose statue stands in the courtyard outside the front entrance to the Royal Academy on London's Piccadilly. This year, as well as Emin's nude, there are breathtaking large-format photographs of Americana by the German film director Wim Wenders, pieces from Turner Prize-winner Jeremy Deller and former YBA Matt Collishaw, plus paintings by McFadyen himself. The Summer Exhibition is also the world's largest open submission art show, a chance for amateur artists to see their work hung alongside the big names of British art.

Famously, the amateur entries often feature cats and dogs, and one of the first things McFadyen shows me is the part of the show he's calling Menagerie – a group of animal sculptures by several artists, displayed on plinths or prowling around the floor. These include a pair of headless surrealist dogs that are joined at the neck, and a life-size bejewelled tiger by Scottish artist David Mach.

"I thought I'd have fun with the tradition that pictures of animals are sent into the Academy as entries," says McFadyen, who came to public attention in the 1980s with his disquieting paintings of East London urban landscapes. "If you're expecting cats, then this piece says, 'Face your demons!' When the entries came in I accepted everything that was animalistic. Then you kind of weed it out at the end, [remove] the things that don't work."

Even with an edit, this involved looking at an awful lot of art for McFadyen and his fellow curators, Academicians Jane and Louise Wilson and, for the architecture gallery, Spencer de Grey. "We had about 16,500 entries, we asked for 2,500 things to look at, and we've hung 1,500," McFadyen says. "We see everything if it's sent in. The hang was quite gruelling."

The coordinator sets the tone of the hang and, as well as animals, this year's show is concerned with sustainability and how we can look after the Earth. One of the highlights is McFadyen's own painting Mallaig, in which a giant full moon hangs luminous over the Scottish coast. Previously the artist has taken his concern for the environment to public extremes.

He was arrested in 2014 after complaining to police officers who were letting their diesel car's engine idle outside his London home. "You don't kick a police car with two policemen in it and expect not to be arrested," he says, in a voice that reveals his Paisley origins. "They wound the window up on me in mid-conversation so I put my foot on the exhaust pipe, put my hands together as if I were cuffed and said, 'Take me.' After the arrest my brother rang up from Dundee and said, 'Hey Jimmy, you're in The Sun.' So it did work, but I became more well known for that than painting. Now, loads of kids are doing it. You've got a whole movement."

Summer Exhibition was Grayson Perry and his show, which coincided with the Academy's 250th anniversary, had a celebratory air. McFadyen, simultaneously lugubrious and agitated, is an intense man and although pleasant, lacks Perry's flamboyance. "I'll warn you," he says, "I'll go on about how I'd like the exhibition to be taken more seriously critically." Now 68, and despite moving south in 1966, he can still get a little vexed by the English admiration of amateurism.

"An amateur paints for pleasure," he says. "And there's nothing wrong with that, but when you leave art school, you've got to find somewhere to live in London, find a studio, get a job to support that huge outgoing. Then you've got to go to the art shop, buy things, find the time to make work, try and sell it and begin your career. That's not amateurism, it's dedication! It doesn't matter what kind of art it is, it's a big deal. You don't have amateur architects, because that's a crime. You're not allowed to be an amateur neurosurgeon. I don't do a bit of dentistry at the weekend after painting."

McFadyen's intensity doesn't mean this year's exhibition isn't witty. Brexit is dealt with obliquely in a Banksy piece, a full-scale EU customs post that has been locked shut with a padlock that a stencilled rat is trying to smash. "It's about barriers and borders," says McFadyen. "About who's allowed in and who isn't. I think it's pretty poignant."

The show is certainly naughty in places. We stop in front of a large painting of a public park, The Garden of Earthly Delights by Claire Douglass. "This is a funny picture," McFadyen says. "It's a bit like Where's Wally? There's Grayson Perry on a motorbike. There's Donald Trump paying golf and there's Nigel Farage. And there's all the cottaging going on, which you don't notice until the end. There will be a crowd around this one."

Isn't he worried that gay sex scenes will upset the people who come for the kittens? "Oh, it's not just gay sex," he says. "There's heterosexual dogging as well – we're covering all bases."

Cricket isn't English – it's way bigger than that

Cricket World Cup: England v Afghanistan Tue 9.30am 5 Live Sp Ex, 10.00am Sky Cricket/ Main Event, 10.15am Radio 4 LW

RICKET'S STRENGTH IS not to be found in the game's essential Englishness, or in the ancient Anglo-Australian rivalry, or even in the spectacular emergence of India. It's in the fact that the current Cricket World Cup covers five continents, representing a spectacular biodiversity of cricketers and their approaches to the game of cricket.

There are five teams from Asia, two from Australasia, and one each from Europe, Africa and the Americas. Cricket is not a local issue concerned with nostalgia and a vanished notion of Englishness: England's two opponents this week make it clear that it's about bigger things.

Their first challengers are Afghanistan, as unlikely a fixture as exists in sport. Under Taliban rule, all sport was banned in the country, but after a while they made cricket the exception. And when they fell in 2001, refugees who had been seeing out bad times in Pakistan came home, their hearts and minds filled with the glory of the cricket they learned in exile.

One of the first things that happens in the wake of disaster – as soon as there is food and the threat of imminent death has diminished - is that the young people set up a football pitch or a basketball hoop, or cricket stumps. Sport is the first sign of the return of sanity.

That has been the story of Afghan cricket. It's a game that bursts beyond tribal boundaries and unites a nation. Afghanistan's success is in becoming contenders, to have made it to their second World Cup, even though this one contains only ten teams. Their presence at this event is a triumph and any 🗄 hint of an Afghan victory is to be cheered.

I have cheered for Sri Lanka in every World Cup they have played in since I first went to the island in 1981. On my first morning, someone stopped me to talk about cricket. I was confused at first - "That bottom is wonderful!" - but when I worked out that we were talking about Ian Botham I realised I was among friends.

Sri Lanka have always had a tendency towards maverick genius. They took part in the World Cup of 1996 and batted like men possessed right from the first ball. By the time their various opponents had adjusted to the tactic, Sri Lanka had won the damn thing.

They produced Muttiah Muralitharan, not only the most effective bowler in Test history but a one-off that no one has been able to imitate. Now, in recent years of decline and disharmony, Sri Lanka still have Lasith Malinga, who bowls with his arm parallel to the ground.

OU CAN JUST imagine an English coach of the old school taking the young Malinga in hand: "Nay lad, nay! When you bowl, you must let your arm brush your ear..." But Malinga, now 35 and looking more than ever like the lion (front paw parallel to the ground) on the Sri Lankan flag, has always gone his own way - sending low-trajectory missiles at the toes of generations of batsmen who are still trying to work out how to cope.

England initially approached the shorter forms of cricket with a lofty tolerance that slowly turned into a hostile > snobbery. But now, at last, they have embraced the notion that cricket is an ever-changing game. They have learned from all the other continents – how best to play the game with the white ball. By coming to terms with cricket's biodiversity, they have become a team to admire and inspire.

Film Rebel Hero Hustler God

Asif Kapadia tells the complex story of Diego Maradona

T'S THE MORNING after the premiere before, and a bleary Asif Kapadia is just back from Cannes. ("It starts off posh then it all falls apart," he observes of the legendary film festival.) The director's new film has just made its international bow on the Croisette – the Riviera resort's famous promenade – as did his previous Oscar-winning portrait of Amy Winehouse. This time, the Londoner knew what he was letting himself in for.

His latest subject – Argentinian superstar Diego Maradona – is a global icon, a football genius acknowledged by fans from Buenos Aires to Bognor Regis via Bangladesh. "Cannes is so full-on, you just don't sleep," the 46-year-old says of his dawn-to-dusk interview schedule. "You end up running from one screening to another, grabbing anything to eat from the south of France's equivalent of a kebab shop."

Still, navigating a bad diet was nothing compared with the challenges Kapadia faced shooting his three-years-in-the-making film. For one thing, unlike the subjects of his previous acclaimed docs – Amy was preceded by the Bafta-winning Senna (2010), about the late Brazilian Formula 1 driver Ayrton Senna – Maradona is still very much alive. This would not be a film with a neat, albeit tragic, ending.

Also, while the 58-year-old footballer is indeed still with us, at the same time, for Kapadia, he wasn't. Despite agreeing to the film, which is centred on his tumultuous time playing for Italian club Napoli from 1984 to 1991, the mercurial Maradona gave the Englishman the runaround. Initial interviews in Dubai, his thenresidence, were followed by a pursuit that had Kapadia poised, at various times, to fly to Belarus, Moscow, Argentina and Mexico. As he says, "It was like trying to nail jelly to a wall."

(in cinemas from Friday 14 June) all the more remarkable. As with Senna and Amy, Kapadia alchemises a trove of period footage and fresh interviews with family, friends and former friends into a kaleidoscopic portrait of a hugely complicated individual. Maradona is hero and villain, World Cup winner and World Cup cheat, family man and serial sirer of children, adopted Italian duce and confirmed drug user; he ultimately left Napoli under a cloud of football bans, legal hassles and reputed connections to organised crime. As the poster tagline puts it, Maradona was "Rebel. Hero. Hustler. God."

The result is an energetic, riveting portrait of a generationally gifted sportsman it's difficult to love but impossible not to admire – even if you're not a football fan.

"That's part of the fun or challenge of it," nods Kapadia, as we talk in a publicist's office in London's King's Cross. "I love sport, but I wouldn't go to the cinema to watch a film about racing cars. Senna, Amy, Maradona – they're fantastic, charismatic characters. The fanbase will come, but we have to bring in people who think they don't like Amy, or racing, or football. So, you tell them: there's a character here who's far bigger, far more interesting, than music or sport. That is the intention."

WORLD BEATER

Maradona celebrates Argentina's

It works. Amy became the second-highest-grossing documentary at the UK box office, ever. You can't move on Netflix for real-life films and true-crime specials. And, as Kapadia points out, last year in the States, documentaries grossed $100 million. Where does this new enthusiasm for non-fiction come from?

"Because of the nature of what's going on in the world, people want some reality," he replies, agreeing that a well-made doc is a bulwark against fake news. "Because Marvel movies are ruling cinema and destroying everything in their path, good docs have, in a way, taken the place of art house films. They are a kind of independent cinema voice. And they bring in audiences who wouldn't normally go to the cinema. Men of a certain age who hadn't been to the cinema in 25 years went to see Senna. Same with Amy. People who usually watch things on their phone or on YouTube went to the cinema to see that film."

APADIA, BORN TO an Indian Muslim family in east London and raised on rented VHS Bollywood movies, started off making features, but admits that he's a doc 'n' roll guy at heart. He cites his favourites as Marc Singer's award-winning Dark Days from 2000, about people living in the subway tunnels in New York, and Joshua Oppenheimer's Oscar-nominated The Act of Killing, a darkly bizarre reconstruction of genocide in Indonesia ("It blew me away").

"I've gone through a midlife existential crisis with fiction films in the last ten, 15 years, of just not feeling anything from a lot of them," he admits. "I could never see past someone pretending to be someone: it's a famous actor in a funny costume with hair and make-up. Then I see low-budget docs and I'm genuinely moved and feel something."

Watching Diego Maradona, you certainly feel something. There's a visceral thrill in watching some of the most sublime football ever played, by a stocky bull of a man. You'll also wince at the images of a sweaty, cocaine-addled playboy in Neapolitan nightclubs. And you'll probably feel a cocktail of emotions when rewatching the footage of that goal at the 1986 World Cup, in which Maradona effectively punched England out of the competition.

So, Mr Kapadia, as an Englishman, do you forgive your leading man for the Hand of God? The director smiles. "I'm a football fan. At the time I was ped off. But when your own players fall over and get a penalty, you don't complain. And football was dirty then.

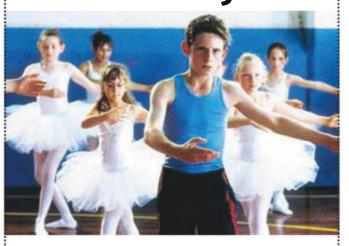

I've now seen him do that four or five times in all the footage. Sometimes he got away with it, sometimes he didn't. Maradona just did it better than everyone else." CRAIG McLEAN

MY MOVIES

Billy Elliot ★★★★ Saturday, Friday BBC1

Come dancing

"Shame on you, if you can't dance too," to quote the somewhat judgmental 1975 disco charttopper from Shirley and Company. And it was the fleet-footed Gene Kelly who, in 1952's Singin' in the Rain, declared "Gotta dance!"

This compulsion to hoof and tap and soft-shoe is primal, but there is, of course, no shame in failing to measure up to Kelly in a dance-off. When the energy and invention of top-flight choreography is captured in all its dextrous glory on screen, however, it's impossible not to feel like you too could pirouette out of the foyer and down the high street. I felt as cool and panther-like as Danny Zuko when I emerged from Grease at the Northampton ABC, aged 13. I wasn't.

Billy Elliot, written by playwright Lee Hall at the turn of the 21st century, takes the rags-toriches Hollywood template and cunningly transposes it to a fictional mining town in County Durham during the 1984-5 miners' strike. Billy – so key is the title role, it was cast from 2,000 hopefuls - is brought to life by Jamie Bell (above), himself then 13. Not all dancers can act, and not all actors can dance, but he has both disciplines covered. His angry routine across flat outhouse roofs to the Jam's A Town Called Malice remains a pivot of the story – it comes after Julie Walters's dance coach reveals to Billy's widowed dad and older brother the boy's desire to take up ballet. The latter explodes, "I'm not having any brother of mine running round like a right tt!"

all's script, authentically foul-mouthed and furious, reflects the privations and violence of the strike, but director Stephen Daldry's trick is to mix Ken Loach-like realism with hope, while the gender prejudice lends Billy Elliot a neat time-capsule quality.

At its most profound, the film presents dancing as a legitimate form of protest. To return to the sentiment of Shirley and Company, "My feet wanna move, so get out of my way."

ADVENTURE The technical wizardry and extraordinary draughtsmanship encouraged by Walt Disney during his studio's 1960s golden age gave the world an entirely new take on Rudyard Kipling's Jungle Books. Almost half a century later, the same studio reconditioned its animated original as a CGI-enhanced, live-action blockbuster. Under the sympathetic direction of Jon Favreau – entrusted with a mega-budget after the success of Iron Man and its first sequel – it turned out better than a loyal devotee of the 1967 incarnation might have expected. The green-screen landscapes are lush and detailed, and decent substitutes were found for the original voice cast, including Christopher Walken as King Louie the ape, Bill Murray as Baloo the bear and Idris Elba as the villainous tiger Shere Khan. Neel Sethi's "man-cub" Mowgli is the only human in sight. Two of the much-loved songs from the original survive, but they do feel slightly incongruous given the largely non-musical telling. But there's no real need to worry - The Jungle Book just got bigger, that's all. (US 2016, HD)

The emotional focus falls on LA fire department helicopter pilot Dwayne Johnson, who is intent on saving his estranged wife and their daughter from the disaster zone. Despite having the title role, Martin Freeman's Bilbo is again a supporting character, with Thorin (Richard Armitage) providing the heart of the story, as he hunkers down at Erebor to protect the glittering dunes of gold that the dragon Smaug has left behind. ROMANTIC COMEDY This yawnsome offering sees Kristen Bell's newly dumped New York museum curator travel to Rome for her sister's wedding. While there she takes some coins from a magical fountain and finds herself hotly pursued by the now-spellbound men who tossed them in. True love seems to lie with sports journalist Nick (Josh Duhamel) – or does it? When in Rome is watchable enough, albeit in a cheesily inept way, but is far less magical than its storyline. DA (US 2009, HD)

DRAMA Helen Mirren and Ryan Reynolds star in this illuminating drama that recounts the true story of the lengthy legal battle to recover a famous Viennese painting that was plundered by Nazis at the start of the Second World War. "Woman in Gold" refers colloquially to the artwork itself, officially titled Portrait of Adele Bloch-Bauer I, a gorgeous Byzantine fantasia completed by artist Gustav Klimt in 1907. Mirren phones it in a bit as the grumpy niece of Bloch-Bauer, now living in the US, who recruits Reynolds's slick rookie lawyer to help her claim back the stolen artwork from the Austrian government. It all makes for a fascinating yarn, and director Simon Curtis fills it with harrowing flashbacks to the Anschluss and modern-day

COMEDY Alexander Mackendrick's sublime film is one of the jewels in the Ealing crown. At the centre of this droll story of whisky smuggling in the Hebrides during the Second World War stands Basil Radford, who gives the performance of his career as the despised Sassenach commanding the local Home Guard. The Todday islanders are played to perfection by such accomplished actors as Gordon Jackson, Wylie Watson and Joan Greenwood, while Catherine Lacey is a delight as Radford's wife, who greets his posturing and humiliation with equal detachment. DP (UK 1949, BW)

Pal Joey ★★★ 12.50-2.35pm BBC2

MUSICAL Frank Sinatra's expert delivery of some great Richard Rodgers/Lorenz Hart songs (including The Lady Is a Tramp and My Funny Valentine) more than makes up for the whitewash here of the black-hearted hero from the stage version. Joey is now a crooner, not a hoofer as on stage, and his lust for bed (on the make for fading star Rita Hayworth, but really loving Kim Novak, in a rather pallid turn) and bright lights has been toned down for an out-of-kilter happy ending. The heel proves to have a soul, which is rather a pity as novelist John O'Hara's original Broadway exposé deserves a more sarcastic treatment. TH (US 1957, HD)

The Secret Life of Pets  5.05-6.50pm ITV2

COMEDY There's lots of furry fun to be had in this canine caper from the team responsible for Despicable Me and Minions. The story finds self-obsessed terrier Max (voiced by Louis CK) forced to share his Manhattan home with rescue mongrel Duke (Eric Stonestreet). Their initial enmity finds them slipping the leash and crossing paths with dog catchers and an underground resistance movement of unwanted pets. Luckily, Max's friends galvanise themselves to investigate his disappearance in an adventure that's stylishly realised and vibrantly rendered, but rather too indebted to other animation hits such as Bolt and Flushed Away. EVENING

Home at Seven ★★★ 7.00-8.45pm Talking Pictures TV

MYSTERY Adapted from RC Sherriff's West End hit, this was Ralph Richardson's sole venture as a film director, and a pretty fair job he makes of it, too. He also re-creates his stage role as the timid bank clerk whose dose of amnesia coincides with a murder and a robbery. The strength of the picture is that you're never quite sure whether he's bluffing or baffled, and the secret is tightly kept right to the end. It's more than a mite stagey, though, with wife Margaret Leighton and doctor Jack Hawkins particularly guilty of overseasoning the ham. DP (UK 1952, BW)

Hail, Caesar! ★★★★ 9.00-11.10pm Film4

COMEDY Joel and Ethan Coen's screwball comedy is a dizzy, saturated hooray to Hollywood. Josh Brolin does great, stoic work as a studio fixer in 1950s Burbank whose headaches over a 24-hour period include the kidnapped star (George Clooney, interviewed on p16) of a costly Roman epic, a spat with highly strung director Ralph Fiennes, a scandal scented by Tilda Swinton's twin gossip columnists, and the pregnancy of unmarried musical mermaid Scarlett Johansson. In place of a cohesive plot we get a plate-spinning exercise, but it's thrilling and frequently hilarious, with the Coens lovingly re-creating the age of CinemaScope before our very eyes. AC (US 2016, sexual references, HD) Don't mess with Mannix, p62

Jaws * 9.00-11.30pm ITV4 12

ADVENTURE Peter Benchley's pulp bestseller is here turned into the scariest sea saga ever filmed, with Steven Spielberg creating maximum suspense in the first dark moments and then maintaining the momentum with brilliant sleight-of-hand direction. The tale of a great white shark terrorising a New England resort community and the modern-day Captain Ahab (Robert Shaw) employed to kill it is now a classic of the suspense thriller genre. It's also credited with creating the summer blockbuster craze. John Williams's Oscar-winning music and the excellent performances of Roy Scheider and Richard Dreyfuss add to the ingeniously mounted tension that cleverly plays on all our deepest primeval fears. AJ (US 1975, violence, swearing, nudity, HD)

The Pursuit of Happyness ★★★ 9.00-11.25pm Paramount Network 12

DRAMA Will Smith reins in his customary exuberance here to deliver a beautifully understated performance as real-life San Francisco father Chris Gardner, who, in the 1980s, battled against astonishing adversity to achieve his American Dream. When his wife (Thandie Newton) leaves him, Gardner takes custody of their five-year-old child (played by Smith's real-life son, Jaden) and then faces a catalogue of disasters as they become homeless and he tries to pursue a new career. The overall message may be a positive one, but it's agonising to watch such a decent man suffer. The film is expertly constructed with faultless central turns, but it would have benefited from being more uplifting. SF (US 2006, edited for language, HD) comedy With their spin-off series coming to a close this evening (see choice, p55), here's Jemaine Clement and Taika Waititi's original film about a group of house-sharing Kiwi vampires. Everything in this mockumentary is delivered with straight-faced charm, and the guts and gore are balanced with sympathetic characters. ANDREW COLLINS FILM OF THE DAY

The Descendants $\star\star\star\star$ 11.10pm-1.30am Film4

DRAMA Before you watch George Clooney in the new mini-series based on Joseph Heller's satirical novel Catch-22 (Thursday C4; see feature, p16), let's scroll back to 2011 for his disarmingly funny and poignant turn in this movie. It's directed and co-written by Alexander Payne, a master of pathos, who portrayed older men coping with stasis in Sideways and Nebraska. Here, Clooney plays a Honolulu lawyer whose unfaithful wife is in a coma after a boating accident, forcing him to reconnect with daughters Shailene Woodley and Amara Miller. The film's aura of melancholy is enhanced by the soundtrack of traditional Hawaiian music, and Payne's skilfully rationed moments of humorous relief play out against a verdant landscape. CRIME DRAMA Apart from a handful of low-budget movies, writer/director Terry Bishop spent much of his career in TV, which would appear to have been the British cinema's loss if this concise thriller is anything to go by. Bishop succeeds in re-creating a world of tawdry glamour that is a far cry from the glitz of today's supermodels as a serial killer targets a magazine's pin-ups. SCI-FI Shailene Woodley and Theo James return in the second adaptation of Veronica Roth's futuristic novels, following 2014 hit Divergent. They're now fugitives on the run from oppressive leader Kate Winslet, who is obsessed with hunting down the "Divergents" that threaten her regime. Despite Woodley's spirited performance, the movie becomes bogged down by a plot that goes nowhere. There are bright spots, particularly for Winslet's villain, while new addition Naomi Watts fleshes out James's back story, so fans of the source material may still be eager for the next chapter. But for casual viewers this is a disappointingly bland sequel. JL (US 2015, some violence, swearing, HD)

War of the Worlds $\star\star\star\star$ 12 9.00-11.15pm Sky1

SCI-FI Steven Spielberg's mega-upgrade of the sci-fi landmark is a spectacular disaster epic of two halves. The first (and much the superior) hour is a masterclass in escalating tension, with brilliantly executed sequences following in rapid succession. The human drama (though clichéd in construction) is transfixing, as divorced dockworker Tom Cruise flees the invasion with his two estranged children (Justin Chatwin and Dakota Fanning). It's in the second hour that the story begins to wilt, petering out until a rather abrupt ending in which Hollywood schmaltz wins the day. AJ (US 2005, violence, HD)

ADVENTURE Timur Bekmambetov's high-octane action adventure stars James McAvoy as the office drone who goes from zero to super-skilled hitman when he's recruited by Morgan Freeman's guild of assassins. Among his fellow killers is a smoulderingly cool Angelina Jolie, who acts as mentor to the gauche McAvoy, as he tries to accept his destiny as the son of the world's greatest assassin. There are echoes of The Matrix, but the director's visual flair and the charisma of the lead actors make this an entertainingly over-the-top experience in its own right. JA (US 2008, violence, swearing, sex scenes, nudity, HD)

■ The Brand New Testament ★★★ 1.30-3.50am Film4

COMEDY DRAMA Belgian director Jaco Van Dormael (Toto the Hero) struggles to build upon an inspired premise in this scattershot satire on faith and fanaticism in a secular world. Ea (Pili Groyne), the ten-year-old daughter of God, is fed up with her dad tormenting humanity, so she exposes the death date of everyone on Earth and then escapes into modern-day Brussels to gather her own disciples. The script careens between eccentric set pieces and provocative allusions, but Van Dormael's corking idea never quite pays off. DP (Bel/Fr/Lux 2015, swearing, sex scenes, nudity, HD)

The Day the Earth Caught Fire

★★★ 6.30-8.30pm Talking Pictures TV

SCI-FI As a schoolboy fan of early sci-fi and overwrought disaster movies, I belatedly jumped at this black-and-white 1961 British film. A simultaneous nuclear detonation between superpowers spells meteorological doom, while a soap-like romance develops between boozy Fleet Street failure Edward Judd and secretary Janet Munro. Future Rumpole star Leo McKern is the science reporter who understands the gravity of the situation: "They've shifted the tilt of the Earth – the stupid, crazy, irresponsible bs!" Director Val Guest (who also turned his hand to The Quatermass Xperiment and Carry On Admiral) does a sterling job creating guakes, storms, riots, droughts and end-of-days bacchanalia, not to mention unbearable tension. It's climate change before the phrase was coined. (UK 1961, BW)

COMEDY This wonderful sprawling movie remains one of the best musical comedies of modern times. John Belushi and Dan Aykroyd play the criminally minded brothers on a mission from God, who resurrect their rhythm-and-blues band to raise money for their orphanage. EPIC Betrayed Roman general Russell Crowe escapes death and becomes a feared and celebrated fighter in the Colosseum in Ridley Scott's Oscar-winning period epic. There's a fine script, and the computergenerated Rome is simply staggering. Adrian Turner (US 2000, violence, swearing, HD)

Take a Girl like You ★★ 9.30-11.30pm Talking Pictures TV

COMEDY DRAMA Kingsley Amis's novel about a northern girl who teaches in a London grammar school fed off 1950s societal obsessions with frugality and furtive sex. Filmed at the tail end of the 1960s, it seemed dated on release, with Hayley Mills valiantly trying to remain virginal despite the best efforts of landlord John Bird and fellow teacher Oliver Reed. It's directed with an uncertain feeling by Jonathan Miller. AT (UK 1970)

No Way Out ★★★★ 15 11.30pm-1.40am Sony Movie Channel

THRILLER This spy and counter-spy movie provides a gripping insight into the corridors of US power. Based on the novel The Big Clock by Kenneth Fearing (originally filmed in 1948 with Ray Milland), this intelligent, intriguing movie contains some wonderful performances, notably Gene Hackman's manipulative politician. For once, Kevin Costner's tendency to stay emotionally removed from his character pays dividends as we are left guessing about him right up to the end. The "surprise" twist is a trifle daft, but overall this is a major treat. SH (US 1986, violence, swearing, sex scenes, nudity) Triumph of the Will, p102

ANDREW COLLINS FILM OF THE DAY

■ Being Frank: the Chris Sievey Story

★★★★ 10.00pm-12 midnight Sky Arts

DOCUMENTARY There will be people reading this who may be baffled by the sight of a man in a cheap suit and tie whose identity is concealed under a spherical papier-mâché head. This is Frank Sidebottom, alter ego of Mancunian polymath Chris Sievey, whose career as a post-punk musician was cursed with bad luck but whose second chance as a surreal TV presenter, singer and local mascot of Manchester suburb Timperley made him famous. Well, almost. Sievey died of cancer in 2010, virtually penniless, and fans raised money for his funeral, such was the love for this nasally voiced entertainer. Steve Sullivan's documentary - also crowd-funded - offers a fastidious account of Sievey/ Sidebottom's chaotic life, with access to his home videos, notebooks, diaries and family members. It goes some way to explaining him, but not definitively. A true English eccentric, he was one of a kind. He really was. (UK 2018, swearing, HD)

E Keeping Up with the Joneses ★★★ 9.00-11.10pm Film4

ACTION COMEDY If keeping up with these Joneses sounds like something you've done before, it's probably because you have. Isla Fisher and Zach Galifianakis play dully ordinary suburbanites; Gal Gadot (Wonder Woman) and Jon Hamm the stylish couple who move in next door. When the new neighbours prove adept at such skills as bugging houses and high-speed car chases, suspicions are aroused. It's no life changer, but passes the time pleasantly. DA (US 2016, violence, swearing, sexual references. HD)

The Fountain

9.00-11.00pm Syfy

ROMANCE This is one of the most original and extraordinary films of recent times – though a story that features not only ancient Mayans but also a bald man living on a little planet inside a snow globe with just a tree for company is bound to attract accusations of pretentiousness as well as claims of genius. This third feature from director Darren Aronofsky (Pi, Requiem for a Dream) stars Hugh Jackman as a man on a thousand-year odyssey to save his beloved (Rachel Weisz, in multiple roles). Those who stick with the movie will be rewarded with a profoundly rich experience about the meaning of life, death, love and immortality. BP (US 2005, violence, swearing)

9.30pm-12.05am Talking Pictures TV

CRIME DRAMA Richard Gere gets a chance to reveal his cornet-playing abilities in this tale of music and the Mob in toe-tappin' 1920s Harlem. Sadly, Gere's musical talents far outshine his performance, which seems almost trance-like in places, while Diane Lane often appears to be thoroughly bored in her role as Dutch Schultz's moll. The blame must lie with director Francis Coppola, who, in expending his energy on visual clout and showbiz set pieces (some of which are fabulous), underdirects his actors and forgets about the plot. JM (US 1984, violence, swearing, nudity) The movie that didn't die, p112

Papillon ★★★★

11.05pm-1.30am BBC2

BIOPIC This adaptation of Henri Charrière's autobiographical account of his escape from Devil's Island was the Shawshank Redemption of its day. Director Franklin J Schaffner's stately pace and careful development of the forbidding prison atmosphere adds greatly to a harrowing study of confinement and single-mindedness. Steve McQueen plays the convict bent on breaking free, with Dustin Hoffman as the fretful counterfeiter who's taken under McQueen's wing. DP (US 1973, violence, swearing, nudity, HD)

Van Helsing ★★★

11.10pm-1.30am ITV

ACTION HORROR Having revived the Mummy franchise, writer/director Stephen Sommers here turns his attention to the rest of Universal's classic monsters. Gabriel Van Helsing (Hugh Jackman) is sent by a secret, Vaticanbased organisation to 19th-century Transylvania where he Joins Anna Valerious (Kate Beckinsale) in her long-running battle against Count Dracula and his allies. This is Indiana Jones meets Hammer Horror – the relentless action is blended with a knowing undercurrent and dramatic gothic styling. SF (US 2004, violence, HD)

Taxi Driver

12.05-2.25am Sony Movie Channel 18

DRAMA Robert De Niro is mesmerising here as the Vietnam veteran trapped in one of director Martin Scorsese's most frightening circles of hell, as he seeks a twisted redemption by saving the soul of New York child prostitute Jodie Foster. This time the bustling helterskelter of Scorsese's Mean Streets gives way to a measured, chilly calm, and the Big Apple glistens with barely concealed menace. This deeply disturbing modern masterpiece established Scorsese as a major figure in world cinema, and it hasn't lost any of its power to shock. JF (US 1976, graphic violence, swearing)

Love hurts

■ If Beale Street Could Talk

From Mon Sky Store/Virgin Movies (also DVD, Blu-ray and download)

DRAMA The Harlem-set love story based on the novel by the great American observer James Baldwin is a good fit for writer/director Barry Jenkins after his Oscar-winning breakthrough film Moonlight in 2016.

Central couple Tish (KiKi Layne) and Fonny (Stephan James) are kept apart not by warring families, but the institutional racism of everyday life, which is especially acute for young black men. Their love blossoms in flashback, with a visual poetry that confirms the film as an artistic and political cousin to Moonlight.

An unashamedly idealised depiction of love and hate (the latter embodied by Ed Skrein's racist cop), it's fabulously acted, with rich, nuanced performances from the whole cast, though Golden Globe winner Regina King stands out as Tish's righteous mother. Andrew Collins (US 2018, violence, swearing, sex scenes, nudity, HD)

In this sensitive drama, Lucas Hedges stars as Jared, a gay teenager who is outed to his parents, preacher father Marshall (Russell Crowe) and mum Nancy (Nicole Kidman). Homosexuality goes against their beliefs, so Jared enrols in a strict, religion-based programme that pressures "patients" to change their sexual orientation. Jared's story is heartbreaking, especially when you consider that it is based on the experiences of a real person (LGBTQ activist Garrard Conley). Hedges gives a quietly affecting performance, portraying a confused young man wrestling with his emotions. The DVD includes featurettes and deleted scenes. Stephen Carty RTOffer To order the DVD for £16.99, phone 0844 848 7300 (charges apply), quoting ref RT1735. Idle speculation

Why must journalists report on non-events, asks Alison Graham

y heart ached and my ears bled for Lorna Gordon on BBC Breakfast as she provided yards of aural wallpaper while waiting on the apron of Stansted Airport for the arrival of US President Donald Trump in Air Force One.

Poor woman, she was marooned in a lapping sea of concrete and grass where her only visual reference points were a couple of parked helicopters she struggled to name as the wind tore at her hair. No wonder she became increasingly squeaky as the morning wore on.

But there was nothing to say, Trump was due to land, we all knew that, but he hadn't landed yet. Nope, still not yet... nope, not here... so let's just keep talking even though we know full well there are many, many aching voids of minutes to fill before the plane is even due to touch down.

When it did finally land, Trump appeared, said hello to dignitaries and hopped into his helicopter for the journey into central London. So much preamble, for so little reward.

Why does telly do this? When there's nothing going on, why catapult wretched reporters to locations sometimes hours before anything is even expected to happen (Air Force One was due to land just before 9am, but Lorna Gordon was reporting to camera throughout the early morning) into empty caverns of time.

There was nothing to say. Trump hadn't landed yet...?

It's not like they can do star-jumps or handstands to relieve the boredom. They just have to stand, and stand, and stand. Remember the BBC's Simon McCoy, growing increasingly desperate looking at a closed hospital door in pained exasperation as the Duchess of Cambridge gave birth? "We're going to be speculating about this royal birth with no facts to hand" was his memorable cri de coeur.

There's too much of this kind of time-filling, it's so deadly, it's like baking a sponge cake, shovelling on cream and then just staring at it. For a very, very, very long time, while also having to say, "Well, I'm here in the kitchen, looking at a sponge cake. It's quite spongey and quite cakey. Over there is an opened packet of biscuits... I can't see the label but they might be bourbons... erm, there's a half-eaten slice of banana bread, or it could be date and walnut... and now back to the sponge cake. Which is still a sponge cake, nothing has changed. It's no more spongey or cakey than it was five minutes ago. Now, back to the studio, please."

T'S NO WONDER our brains turn to mush as we try to absorb hours of nothingness when we could be doing something useful like making the raspberry bushes squirrel-proof, or clearing the front path of other people's chucked rubbish yet again.

Then there's the endless, endless wittering as reporters interview each other and the bucket is yet again thrown down the Well of News only to be laboriously pulled back up again, empty of any actual news.

And, please, no more taking anchors on to the streets, at least until Brexit is over. (Will it ever be over?) It's usually Huw Edwards yelling against a tide of shouty protesters, but the admirable Clive Myrie had to take his turn on the BBC 10 o'clock news to stand outside Buckingham Palace during the Trump visit, trying to make himself heard against the indistinct shrieks and taunts of flag-waving Brexit supporters/remainers who seem to follow BBC news outside broadcasts like swarms of angry bees. Buzz off.

ALICE! WHAT A SURPRISE...

One of my favourite current documentary conventions is when contributors pretend to be surprised as the presenter strides into view and engages them in learned conversation. This happens a lot to Professor Alice Roberts in Britain's Most Historic Towns (Saturday C4) as historians and enthusiasts appear to be interrupted ("Oh, hello Alice!") as she drops

5 How to Sell Drugs Online (Fast)

Netflix

Teen comedies are really upping their game this year – globally. Sharing many of the attributes of Netflix's acclaimed Sex Education is a smart German series about a lovelorn nerd who resorts to desperate, and in this case extremely irresponsible and illegal, measures to improve his boring life in a small town. It's naughty, tender and highly attuned to how a generation raised on the internet thinks and communicates.

Matt Berry lends swagger to any comedy he's in, but his performance as a ludicrously maverick Victorian cop is just one source of rock 'n' roll hilarity in a sitcom that glories in filth, insults and some of the foulest language tat you'll hear on television all year. Susan Wokoma, Freddie Fox, Paul Kaye and Alun Armstrong all steam through their supporting roles.

YOUR NEXT BINGE

The rude, boozy godfather of the modern sitcom

The series launched in 1992 and it's hard to fathom now that it premiered on ITV with Harry Enfield, not Morrissey. But by 1994 it had found its true home (after the watershed on BBC1) and the perfect cast combination (Morrissey joined in series two).

The best comedy should test the boundaries of taste and decency, and this certainly does: it was criticised by the Royal Society for the Prevention of Accidents for a "lad's culture of boozing and irresponsibility". Many modern comedies owe it a huge debt, The Inbetweeners for one.

Without it we would have no Doc Martin (Clunes at his most wry), a very different Bob the Builder (the original was voiced by Morrissey – what have they done to it!) and eat far fewer delicious M&S desserts (yes, those are Quentin's velvety vocals you hear).

Certain scenes are too over-thetop to be funny. Christmas 1998 saw three feature-length episodes bring the long-running series to a close: the ill-thought-out finale certainly divided its nearly 14 million viewers, proving that no programme is too big to fail.

But let's not end on a low note, and give a final word to Clunes: "I shouldn't admit to this, but I've been watching the Men Behaving Badly repeats on TV, and laughing like a git!" SUE ROBINSON

DOCTOR DIGITAL

Augment your reality

Being a fearless journalist, Dr Digital attended the launch of Disneyland's new addition, Star Wars Galaxy's Edge in California, on your behalf. Key to the experience is the Play Disney app, which can translate alien languages, hack robots and give guests their own continuing storyline in the park.

However, augmented reality apps already let you turn the entire world into a theme park. Pokémon Go was a sensation back in 2016, mixing augmented reality with GPS tracking to let you hunt the beasties. Makers Niantic are currently beta-testing Harry Potter: Wizards Unite (harrypotterwizardsunite.com), which takes a similar approach to wizard duels and magic creatures. Less fantastical beasts can be found with Google AR. Using the Chrome or Google app, search for animals like pandas or tigers, press "view in 3D" and they appear in your room at their true majestic scale. The BBC Civilisations app does the same with Renaissance art.

For a more practical use of AR, Yelp has a feature, Monocle, which overlays recommendations and reviews on your neighbourhood. For a less practical but rewarding experience, Zombies Run! casts you as the lone survivor of the apocalypse, trying to outpace the undead horde. You won't get that in Disneyland. JONATHAN HOLMES

Brooks Koepka is chasing a record-equalling third consecutive win and is in the right sort of form, but Tiger Woods, despite middling fortunes after his Masters victory, could still pull out a performance like that which saw him win the Open at Pebble Beach in 2000 by a record 15-shot margin. DAVID CRAWFORD

Harry Hill's Alien Fun Capsule

7.30pm ITV

ENTERTAINMENT Alien Fun Capsule has obliterated any vague premise that previously existed and it's all the better for it. It's now more a potted career retrospective with a twist, and tonight's brave celebrities are Blue Peter's Konnie Hug, Lewis star Kevin Whately and Coronation Street actors Georgia Taylor and Bill Roache. It's Roache who gets the heaviest pasting as Harry dredges up footage from one of the few other TV shows he's been in. WHAT NEXT FOR SHERLOCK?

Although it's been over two years since a new episode of Sherlock (Christmas special The Abominable Bride, right, is repeated at 9pm on Alibi), it's unlikely we've seen the last of Holmes and Watson.

Speaking to Radio Times last year, co-creator Steven Moffat said: "Nobody has ever closed the door on Sherlock. We haven't got an immediate plan, but I'd be surprised, given our collective enthusiasm, if we didn't do it again."

Benedict Cumberbatch is set to appear in the Doctor Strange sequel, and reunites with former Sherlock co-star Andrew Scott in war film 1917, due out in December. Martin Freeman is in new Sky series Breeders with Daisy Haggard, and an animated adaptation of A Christmas Carol due out this year.

Moffat and co-creator Mark Gatiss, meanwhile, will be kept busy with Dracula – a new BBC/Netflix drama starring Danish actor Claes Bang. FT

Maria Castellino, a rather refined 67-year-old prostitute, has been strangled to death in her boudoir. Mimi theorises about "deviant" gerontophilia and erotic asphyxiation, and he finds a suspect who ticks both boxes, but Salvo is having none of that. Britain's Most Historic Towns

8.00pm C4

HISTORY The small city of Canterbury hosts roughly seven million tourists a year, and that figure is boosted by one as Professor Alice Roberts arrives to look at its Plantagenet links. She presents another absorbing, potted history of a moment in time spanning 245 years and starting with Henry II and his friend, Thomas Becket, Archbishop of Canterbury.

Becket was installed by the king as a yes man, only he unexpectedly found God, and was murdered by Henry's thugs. Becket was beatified as Henry folded in horror and guilt. And it wouldn't be a proper trip to Canterbury without touching on The Canterbury Tales and the English language. AG Alison Graham: page 41

Casualty

8.25pm BBC1

DRAMA Up until this current Casualty storyline came along, I'd never heard of cuckooing. Then again, I do live a very sheltered life here at RT Towers. For those also unaware of the term, though, it's when villains take over the home of someone vulnerable, so they can use it as a base for dealing drugs. And as we've now seen, this is exactly what is happening to Jacob's poor mum, Omo (Ellen Thomas). Not that he's going to stand for it, of course.

In true action-man style, Jacob (Charles Venn) busts down his mum's front door, only to injure the frankly terrifying giant-hoop-earring-wearing master criminal, Jet. But in tackling the situation head-on, has Jacob only made things worse for himself?

Royal Academy Summer Exhibition

8.30pm BBC2

ART Grayson Perry's shoes are big ones to fill. His exuberant curation of the record-breaking 250th Summer Exhibition last year challenged preconceptions of what art is. But while this year's coordinator, painter Jock McFadyen, wants the exhibition to be taken more seriously critically, he's known as a maverick, too. So he's incorporated the Menagerie, which gently pokes fun at all the depictions of cats and dogs that are traditionally submitted to the Academy.

"I want to show art that describes the world," he has said. So politics and climate change are recurring themes while there's work by familiar artists including Tracey Emin, Banksy and McFadyen himself. Kirsty Wark and Brenda Emmanus give us a fabulous insight into the world's biggest open-submission exhibition. JANE RACKHAM See feature: page 26

Taron gets set to soar

Eddie the Eagle $3.00pm Film4 FREEVIEW

Taron Egerton is in cinemas as Elton John in Rocketman only three years after launching himself into space to play Eddie "The Eagle" Edwards in this biopic (review, p33). The physical transformation wasn't so difficult – Egerton donned some pebble glasses, a wig and put on a bit of extra weight – but practising the ski jumps was more intense. "I was quite nervous doing it," he said. "You only realise how dangerous it is when you're doing it." But what better training for the dizzy heights of Elton's platform shoes. STEVE MORRISSEY

The dog of war

 \square Sgt Stubby: an Unlikely Hero $\star\star\star$

6.20pm Sky Premiere

This animated feature tells the true story of a bull terrier that served with the US Army during the First World War and was decorated for bravery in combat. The horrors of the trenches are somewhat toned down, and the animation is far from Pixar level, yet Stubby himself is keenly characterised. Archive photos of the dog in uniform make a welcome appearance in the finale, adding a bit of historical ballast to this family-friendly treat. TREVOR JOHNSTON

CHARITY Lee Mack nutmegs Eric Cantona. Martin
Compston from Line of Duty slides a neat ball to Usain Bolt, who scores past David Seaman. Sam Allardyce has a touchline bust-up with Piers Morgan. All this and more could theoretically transpire at this year's instalment of a pro-celebrity charity match that's usually a blast.

Just look at the personnel. The England squad has Michael Owen, Joe Cole, John Terry, Mo Farah and Ben Shephard. Lining up for the World XI are the likes of Didier Drogba, Eric Cantona, Roberto Carlos, Niall Horan from One Direction and actor James McAvoy, with Harry Redknapp giving the orders. Your hosts are Dermot O'Leary and Kirsty Gallacher. DB

Live: Britain's Next PM: C4 Debate

6.30pm C4

POLITICS If all has gone to plan, the first round of voting in the Conservative leadership contest took place last Thursday, weeding out the least popular from a crowded field. Now Channel 4 invites the remaining hopefuls to a live debate hosted by Krishnan Guru-Murthy.

At this stage they're pitching themselves partly to the 330 MPs who will vote again tomorrow and partly to the 120,000 Tory party members who'll choose between the top two candidates later this month.

So this is the first real chance to see the candidates take each other on, while doing their level best to look prime ministerial. BBC1 will air the next debate at 8pm on Tuesday. DB

Equator from the Air

pocumentary There's nothing radical about Gordon Buchanan's look at how aerial photography can be used to save wildlife. But as a snapshot of the state of conservation efforts, it's worth watching. It has scenes that are quietly devastating, like the ones this week in Jakarta that show, as Buchanan says, "rapid urbanisation gone horribly, horribly wrong". The city is slowly sinking – and not all that slowly in some places, where streets subside at a rate of 25cm a year.

Out in the jungle we see turf wars between farmers and elephants and it's to the series' credit that it seeks out the farmers' viewpoint, too. If elephants ruin their crops, how will they send their children to school? DB

Antiques Roadshow

8.00pm BBC1

FACTUAL What is it about Eltham Palace? Last time the Roadshow visited, Joanna Hardy was stunned by what she described as "the most splendidly bonkers piece of jewellery I've ever seen" (and valued it at £8-10,000), while Alastair Dickenson saw a pretty Fabergé tea set that he valued at £7,000.

This time there's an emerald-and-diamond bracelet from a famous Parisian house and a tea set that went to the Antarctic on board Captain Scott's ship. Will they get equally high valuations?

There's also a thermometer that's as tall as a person, but before you start worrying how to use it, we learn that it was actually part of an advertisement. JANE RACKHAM

It's one of the world's most important competitions for classical singers. Here's everything you need to know about BBC Cardiff Singer of the World (9pm BBC4):

- It's held every two years, and more than 400 singers from around the world applied this year, with a shortlist of 20 having made it through the selection process.
- Five finalists will make it to the grand final, with the winner, announced next week, scooping a £20,000 cash prize.

- Jury members include Dame Kiri Te Kanawa (pictured), Dame Felicity Lott, David Pountney and Frederica von Stade.
- There are two British competitors this year: 32-year-old Katie Bray from Devon and 30-year-old Angharad Lyddon from Wales. The other singers come from all over the world, from Argentina to Ukraine.
- The most recent winner of the competition is Edinburgh's Catriona Morison, who took the title in 2017 and became the first ever British singer to win.

DRAMA Aunt Lydia Lives! When it was left vague whether Emily had finished her off (having stabbed her and shoved her down a staircase), we suspected we hadn't seen the last of the nasty old brute, and sure enough she turns up at June's new home with the Lawrences, injured but indomitable. There's a signal moment when Lydia asks Commander Lawrence (Bradley Whitford) if he has practised the ritual known as the Ceremony with his new Handmaid yet. They haven't, but Lawrence lies coolly, "Yup. Aces. Praise be..."

That relationship between June – Ofjoseph, as she now is – and her new Commander will clearly form a big part of season three. Is he her saviour or a special kind of monster? DB

What We Do in the Shadows

9.45pm, 10.10pm BBC2 (N Ireland: Mon 11.15pm, 11.40pm)

SITCOM A vampire orgy? It sounds exciting but as the Staten Island vampire household sets about hosting one, we feel confident it will end in bathos, as everything else they attempt does. Still, it gives Laszlo (Matt Berry) a chance to unpack the cardboard box in the attic labelled Orgy Stuff to retrieve his codpiece and a bag with Oliver Cromwell's head in.

Downstairs, Guillermo is wrapping the chaise longue in clingfilm and Nadja is demanding "a blood fountain. And pure opium – about ten kilos..." Unfortunately, Laszlo's collection of films from his back catalogue as a (hopeless) vampire porn star might spoil the vibe. DB

Discovering...

11.00pm BBC4

MUSIC This is quite a tough sell, but if anyone can sell it, Radio 3's impeccable musicologist Tom Service can. BBC4 is devoting an entire programme to the analysis and performance of a modern(ish) piece known as Graal théâtre, a violin concerto described as "haunting and explosive".

Composed in 1994 by Finland's Kaija Saariaho, it really is quite startlingly unusual. If you stick with it, you'll likely have "discovered" something about your own musicality and levels of endurance. It will be performed by the BBC Philharmonic under the baton of Ludovic Morlot. Kudos to solo violinist, Peter Herresthal, who explains and masters the technical demands of the piece. PATRICK MULKERN

DRAMA Just when Anne Lister thinks she has Ann Walker within her grasp, Ann slips away, limp and listless, pale and wan, to take to her bed. "Have some courage!" yells Lister as once again her beloved places obstructions in their path to love.

Admittedly, odious Rev
Ainsworth, who treated Ann so appallingly, can't be easily ignored when he arrives in Halifax to talk about taking up a new position within the church. Newly widowed and not conspicuously sad about it, he assumes Ann will drop straight into his life, no problem.

Again there's a powerful, persuasive performance from Suranne Jones as Lister, a woman who wants love, but not at any price. And a high-five, too, for the excellent Gemma Whelan, who plays Anne's hard-done-by sister Marian. She asserts herself by inviting Mr Abbott to tea at Shibden Hall. It's not a success. ALISON GRAHAM

Tom Wrigglesworth and Rob Bell take a look at the inner workings of the Boeing 747. After flying 36 million miles over 14 years for British Airways, a 200-ton jumbo is being broken down, before being reassembled and certified fit to fly again. It's a complex procedure that gives the engineering duo a fascinating insight into how a 747 works. Then the pair head to the country's largest plane salvage centre in the Cotswolds to find out how a jumbo's valuable parts are stripped for resale when a plane reaches the end of its working life.

Don't mess with Mannix

Hail, Caesar! ★★★★ 9.00pm Film4 FREEVIEW

The Coen brothers' billet doux to 1950s Tinseltown (review, p34) swirls around Josh Brolin's Eddie Mannix, modelled on MGM's very own fixer of the same name. But no matter how badly Brolin's studio devotee behaves for the Coens, the genuine article was far worse: he discredited raped starlets, paid off the victims of car accidents involving big stars, and was suspected of being involved in the death of his first wife and the "suicide" of George Reeves, the TV Superman who had been lover to Mannix's second wife. STEVE MORRISSEY

The BFG ★★★ BBC iPlayer FREE TO VIEW

An orphaned girl (Ruby Barnhill) is kidnapped by a benevolent giant (a motion-captured Mark Rylance) in Steven Spielberg's visually dazzling adaptation of the Roald Dahl favourite. A sluggish first half finally turns full-throttle fun fantasy when the BFG joins forces with the Queen (a game Penelope Wilton) to halt the threat of his even larger flesh-eating brethren. ET scriptwriter Melissa Mathison (who died of cancer before the film's release) happily keeps Dahl's gibberish dialogue intact. ALAN JONES

MONDAY Choices The pick of today's TV

PICK OF THE DAY Thatcher: a Very British Revolution 9.00pm BBC2 (Wales: 9.30pm)

DOCUMENTARY In late 1990 the sharks circled Margaret Thatcher. The prevailing feeling among her own Cabinet was that, after more than ten years, it was time for her to go, that she'd lost touch – "She'd forgotten what it was like to be ordinary" – and become paranoid and autocratic. "She'd been so successful, and hubris took over," notes Kenneth Clarke in the final episode of this enthralling, pin-sharp documentary series. Chris Patten is even crisper: "Deep down she didn't believe that anybody else could do the job."

The poll tax riots were an apocalyptic warning that British public opinion had turned against Thatcher, and former deputy prime minister Geoffrey Howe delivered the silver bullet with his withering resignation speech.

But there was loyalty among some of those closest to her, including Bernard Ingham, who has poignant memories of meeting her in later years when she ("poor lass") had dementia. ALISON GRAHAM

The Family Brain Games

8.00pm BBC2 (Wales: Tue 6.30pm)

QUIZ New series Here's a pleasantly cerebral game show – in the Crystal Maze/Krypton Factor mould – with a difference. Dara O Briain hosts as two families are put through cognitive games designed to test not just how smart they are but "how a collective intelligence emerges from a group dynamic".

The quote comes from Dr Hannah Critchlow, who is on hand to offer neurological insights on things like teamwork and frustration. Her teach-y bits, and the fact we get to know the families – watching them make marmalade, play bridge etc – give things a semi-documentary feel. But it's the challenges where the fun lies. DAVID BUTCHER

Apollo's Moon Shot

8.00pm Smithsonian

DOCUMENTARY New series

"In the early days of the [space] programme," we hear astronaut John Glenn say, in this new six-part series, "it was all pretty much up in the air." Actually nothing was up In the air for a long time – other than the Russians, who, embarrassingly, had beaten the US into space.

Evocative footage from the Nasa vaults and audio recordings of the Mercury Seven (the former test pilots who trained as astronauts) are enhanced by interviews with experts to tell the extraordinary story of the US's bid to get a man on the Moon. While we're all aware of Neil Armstrong's "small step" in 1969, it's eye-opening to see how many stumbles led to it. JANE RACKHAM

Long Lost Family

9.00pm ITV

Nicholas Rhoades contacted the Long Lost Family team, he'd already come within yards of finding his birth mother. He'd stood outside the family home but couldn't bring himself to knock on the door. It's not uncommon to hold back, apparently, because people are frightened of what they might uncover. Unknown to him, he had a half-sister who was also worried about making the first move, so had done nothing for decades... apart from hope that he'd turn up.

The other story features Margaret, 83, who gave birth in a Catholic home for destitute mothers in the 50s, and is desperate to meet her daughter before it's too late. JR blacksmith Annabelle Bradley on television before, she's a regular port of call for presenters when they drop into the Dales. But that's fine, because watching her work is such a pleasure. In another potter around North Yorkshire we eavesdrop as she makes a branding iron for the Dawson sheep up at Bleak Bank farm. Farmer John and son William identify their flock with initials seared into the sheep's horns as a means of combating sheep-rustling.

In Muker, Swaledale, the village's silver band needs new members, and sheepdog trials come to Jervaulx Abbey. Can local champion Richard and sheepdog Lola triumph? AG

The problem with soap actors having their every moment tracked by websites hungry for round-the-clock content is that we now know all about cast exits months before they happen on screen. Take Coronation Street (7.30, 8.30pm ITV), in which Michelle confides in Ryan how happy she is to have been reunited with Robert and that, this time, it's for keeps. Well, obviously, nothing is ever for keeps in soapland because there's nothing so dull as domestic bliss. But Michelle's boast has an immediate best before date stamped upon it thanks to news having already broken about Kym Marsh taking a break later this year and Tristan Gemmill (pictured) leaving life in Weatherfield behind.

Hollyoaks (6.30pm C4) is no longer a show made for teens: it was recently voted best soap at the British Soap Awards. And now it raises the median average age of its cast by decades thanks to 107-year-old Jack Reynolds filming a scene as part of Maxine's Munchausen's plotline. DAVID BROWN

Big Little Lies

9.00pm Sky Atlantic

DRAMA The pressure is building on the Monterey Five; so much of the way they operate is based on secrecy - who killed Perry, the parentage of Jane's son Ziggy – that when the truth slips out they're left exposed and vulnerable. The plotting here is delectable, as is the script, even when it's simple. My notes include the lines: "You will not be like him," and "I think we're done." They don't sound like much, but when you see who says them, they're bombshells. And there's so much else to savour, not least Meryl Streep's deliciously unhinged Mary Louise, grieving furiously for her lost son. This show does the expression of female anger so well - and this week, Celeste and Renata have good reason to vent their rage. GILL CRAWFORD a long way in a sitcom. Where would The Thick of It have been without Malcolm Tucker's swearing? Then again, where would all the swearing in The Thick of It have been without characters like Malcolm Tucker to dish it out? Luckily this sharp period sitcom has no shortage of vivid, slightly mad characters (led by Matt Berry as Victorian cop Inspector Rabbit) who are well up to the amount of imaginative cockney swearing the script calls for – ie a lot.

This week Rabbit investigates a murder tied to the East End folk monster the Brick Man. His guvnor, Alun Armstrong, snarls at him, "I want this case cracked like a witch's mirror." DAVID BUTCHER

Save This Rhino

10.00pm National Geographic

DOCUMENTARY Prepare for some alarming stats in this conservation doc. A rhino is taken down every eight hours in South Africa's Kruger National Park. With only about 18,000 white rhinos left, they could all be gone by 2025. Here, former England cricketer Kevin Pietersen and outback wrangler Matt Wright join the fight against poaching. "It's a full-on war and the solution is so convoluted," says Matt. While it's distressing to hear about endangered animals being killed for cash, the conservationists' heroics are an antidote.

Petronel Nieuwoudt, for example, runs a charity for orphaned rhinos. The shots of her petting and bottle-feeding the gentle young giants are humbling. GARY ROSE sport Queen's may no longer hold the prestige of being a top-drawer warm-up for Wimbledon – Federer is contracted to play the Halle Open in Germany; Nadal and Djokovic are yet to confirm their participation – but it does still herald a glorious month of top-class English grass-court tennis.

Because even if the top three ranked players aren't there, the courts will still be graced by quality from the likes of Stan Wawrinka, Kevin Anderson, Juan Martín Del Potro and defending champion Marin Cilic, whose epic final against Djoko last year will go down as one of the greatest in the tournament's history.

And talking of tournament greats, if you're lucky you could catch the heartening sight of Andy Murray making his return to competitive tennis after surgery in January, in the doubles. But be quick – he may not be around for long. DAVID CRAWFORD

Clooney's second chance

The Descendants ★★★★ 11.10pm Film4 FREEVIEW
Director Alexander Payne has a reputation for rejecting star casting. He resisted pressure to take Tom Cruise for Election, and turned down Edward Norton and George Clooney for the leads in Sideways. But Clooney was Payne's only choice for The Descendants (review, p36): "There aren't too many American stars in whom I detect a real person," he explained.
As for Clooney, he didn't even read the script: "I just wanted to work with Alexander first and foremost." The star talks to

RT about his role in TV's Catch-22 on page 16. TOM FOLLEY

In a sniper's sights

Tower Block ★★★★ My5 FREE TO VIEW

The residents of a derelict East End tower block come under attack from a psycho sniper in this riveting thriller, available on Channel 5's catch-up service. With the lifts booby-trapped and the exits obstructed, the killer has thought of every last detail to divide and conquer the panic-stricken sitting targets. Of the cast, Sheridan Smith stands out as the accidental heroine, while Jack O'Connell genially sends up his hardman persona. The modest budget sometimes shows, but this is still a high-tension ride full of twists and turns. ALAN JONES

The Birds *******

11.05pm TCM
This classic from Alfred Hitchcock lands on TCM
today. It sees Tippi Hedren journey to the coastal town of Bodega Bay to win over eligible bachelor Rod Taylor. However, a menacing populace of birds descends on the town, wreaking terror and havoc. Hitch cranks up the suspense, but, as ever, he's also having a laugh. AJ

PICK OF THE DAY Years and Years 9.00pm BBC1

DRAMA OF THE WEEK Granny Muriel is the big, beating heart of this astonishing, heart-crushing drama and she has a fine moment as she addresses, with piercing directness and a forensic eye, what's gone wrong with society. It's all down to automated supermarket checkouts. In a brilliant little take-down of consumer selfishness Muriel (the truly great Anne Reid) holds forth about our lack of humanity, our inability to offer the simplest kindness to other people (such as being unable to look a real checkout operator in the eye with even passing friendliness) and our utter selfishness.

But maybe it's too late. In 2029, the world is in meltdown, the BBC has closed, monkey flu is sweeping the globe and thousands upon thousands of homeless and displaced people are in peril from the hideous Viv Rook (Emma Thompson).

In a superb, profound final episode writer Russell T Davies shows us what it means to be human. It's extraordinary. ALISON GRAHAM

SPORT England reach the halfway point mindful of the need to be wary, even against Afghanistan, the team widely regarded as the weakest of the ten contenders.

The supposedly second-weakest, Pakistan, inflicted a shock defeat on the hosts earlier in the tournament so nothing should be taken for granted at Old Trafford today. But if the Afghans are going to pull off something even more sensational, they'll surely need a big performance from star batsman Rahmat Shah.

Stick around for the opener in a three-match women's T20 series between England and the West Indies at 6.45pm. SIMON O'HAGAN Sport: page 29

The Thames: Britain's Great River with Tony Robinson

8.00pm Channel 5

DOCUMENTARY Here's an interesting little nugget that Tony Robinson learns from the guide on a Thames river bus – the last people imprisoned in the Tower of London without being executed were gangsters Ronnie and Reggie Kray.

It's a leisurely interlude in a bustling episode – Robinson dons compulsory suit and tie to visit the trading floor of the London Metal Exchange, an absolute bear pit of smart-looking men yelling at each other and into phones. Robinson sits on his hands during what looks like mayhem, just in case he accidentally spends billions. AG

Secrets of the Railways

8.00pm Yesterday

DOCUMENTARY New series

Canfranc is a huge railway station at the heart of the largely defunct Trans-Pyrenees line between France and Spain. It's an astonishing building resembling the Overlook Hotel in The Shining. During its pomp Canfranc hosted parties for the Nazis and was at the epicentre of a dirty trade in Nazi treasures. Now, as this informative documentary shows, it's largely derelict, though there are plans to turn it into a hotel on the re-opened line.

The construction of the actual railway cost many lives, thanks mainly to the dynamite used to blow through rocks and mountains. Today one of its tunnels houses a spectacular science laboratory. AG

The Planets

9.00pm BBC2 (Wales: 9.30pm)

DOCUMENTARY OF THE WEEK It's quite something that this series has outperformed BBC1's star-studded drama on Tuesday nights, as Brian Cox mesmerises two million or so viewers with his leisurely life stories of planets. At times things get properly slow as we wallow in another grand CGI re-creation of something that happened on a Tuesday four billion years ago. But adjust your mental rhythms: it's worth it. The way Cox tells his story is extraordinary at its best magically fascinating and full of vast, weird drama.

Tonight, he looks at lovely Saturn, where it rains diamonds (probably) and those LP-like rings are slowly falling apart. DAVID BUTCHER

Megan in Emmerdale (7pm, 8pm ITV, right) is worrying about how she'll cope with her sentencing if she's sent to jail. Can't her ex-con partner Frank put her mind at rest and teach her all there is to know about mailbag stitching and avoiding scheming soap prison wardens?

It must be Bring Your Mum to Work Week at Holby Hospital. First, Jacob's mother Omo was admitted to the ED in Saturday's Casualty; now Holby City (Scotland: Mon 24 June) sees Xavier's mum Nanette turning up, talking in riddles. Xav is about to do a high-stakes operation, so Donna makes the decision to take Nanette away from him. Big mistake.

Not everyone is as busy as Xavier, though. Sacha finds time to spruce up Patricia's cleaning cupboard. But he finds something unexpected – and it drives a wedge between the two lovebirds. DAVID BROWN

As we went to press, BBC1 announced it would be holding a Conservative Party leadership debate at 8pm tonight. Holby City will be shown on Thursday at 8pm on BBC1.

Carol Klein

GARDENING The gardens at Gravetye Manor, a country-house hotel in East Sussex, "revel in the beauty of nature", says Carol Klein. It was planted by William Robinson, who "set gardens free" by celebrating nature rather than controlling it. In spring there are glorious drifts of daffodils, while in the summer what she calls "an international community of flowers" flourish in the same bed.

But it's the magnificent walled kitchen garden that takes your breath away. Seeing it transform through the seasons from bare earth to a cornucopia of vegetables is a treat. JANE RACKHAM See page 154

Impossible Builds

PROPERTY Essex couple Steve and Sharon have always wanted a bolt hole. They ruled out Palm Springs as being too far away and France bit the dust because "we don't speak the lingo". But happily they fell in love with somewhere closer to home, an empty plot on a remote, thickly wooded peninsula on the Norfolk/ Suffolk border.

Strict planning laws ruled out a permanent building, so instead they hit upon what is effectively a gigantic, wood and glass mobile home assembled 300 miles away in Cumbria, which we see being driven onto the site (in two separate pieces) and fitted together.

It's all surprisingly straightforward, apart from the mud... AG

First Dates

ENTERTAINMENT I'd love to know what barman Merlin Griffiths is thinking when the couples first meet on the other side of his bar. But, apart from maybe a raised eyebrow, he never lets on. Not even during the extremely awkward exchange between Sue and her date Bernard – she recognises him and doesn't seem thrilled. Nor does Merlin flinch when serial-killer obsessive Luka admits she's never had a date "in case they kill me".

Waiter Grant, on the other hand, is less discreet, immediately pigeonholing Italian daters Marco and Chiara: "He's a proper geezer. She's posh totty." If you recognise the names, it's because this edition was meant to be broadcast on 4 June. JR

Walking with Dogs iPlayer (expires today)

From veteran documentarist Vanessa Engle, a perhaps surprising 2012 film: if the idea of accosting dog owners on Hampstead Heath and asking them about their pets sounds like a recipe for cute whimsy, to an extent it is but the deeper truth here is that the diverse set of interviewees gain a life-changing benefit from having a canine friend. That's evidenced by some remarkably moving stories.

DRAMA It's all change at Ackley Bridge since Valley Trust's take-over. There's a whole new (and useless, as it turns out) staff for Jo Joyner's head to whip into shape. Her director of behaviour (Emmerdale's Charlie Hardwick) is clearly waiting for retirement but hopefully her unorthodox new deputy (Downton Abbey's Robert James-Collier) may be A Good Thing.

However, the big story is that Nasreen has an interview for Oxford University. It's a daunting prospect, even though Missy seems totally supportive of her planned escape (expressed in an odd musical sequence where she bursts into "The sun'll come out tomorrow").

However, the more everyone enthuses about Nasreen's future, the harder it is for Missy. Can this be the end of the road for their friendship? Wait until the very last scene to find out. JR

A/5.* It might be the most visually enticing of all the planets, but as Professor Brian Cox reveals, Saturn was originally a strange world of rock and ice on the outer reaches of the solar system. After it attracted huge amounts of hydrogen and helium, it was transformed into a gas giant. Its core became hotter than the surface of the sun and subject to pressures so intense that carbon there falls as diamond rain. Nasa's Cassini probe has discovered that its distinctive rings were formed less than a hundred million years ago, when one of Saturn's ice moons was drawn too close to the planet. Brian also explains how Cassini's risky encounter with another moon, Enceladus, revealed an ocean with similar conditions to places on

Earth, where life thrives. See page 74.Director Nic Stacey; Series producer Gideon Bradshaw (S) (AD) (HD) Forces of Nature with Brian Cox is on BBC4 at 11pm RT BOOKS To order The Planets companion book for £21 incl p&p, call 03302 232 639 or visit radiotimes.com/shop25

A Victorian love affair

Effie Gray ★★★★ BBC iPlayer FREE TO VIEW

Hove the Pre-Raphaelite painting Ophelia by John Everett Millais, depicting Hamlet's lovelorn noblewoman prior to her drowning. Tom Sturridge plays the artist in this drama, but dominating the story are Greg Wise and Dakota Fanning as the art critic John Ruskin and his young wife, Effie. This handsome, middlebrow period piece explores the vacuum at the heart of their marriage, and the social and romantic shortcomings of the artist. Effie's attraction to Millais brings respite but, be assured, it's complicated. ANDREW COLLINS

Remember him this way

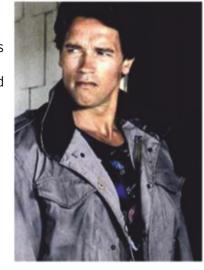

□ Lucky ★★★ 10.00pm Sky Premiere

In some ways, nothing really happens in this wistful, low-key drama that follows a 90-year-old man named Lucky (Harry Dean Stanton) as he performs his daily routine. Each day, he buys cigarettes from a convenience store, attempts crossword puzzles at the local diner and enjoys a drink at his favourite bar. Lucky is in excellent health for his age, but his life is coming to an end – and he knows it. The film is quietly moving and insightful, and it features a captivating turn from Stanton, who passed away in 2017, aged 91. STEPHEN CARTY

The Terminator Netflix

Arnold Schwarzenegger is perfectly cast here as the cyborg who is time-warped from the future to kill waitress Linda Hamilton and alter the course of history. Director James Cameron generates maximum excitement from the first frame, and the thrills are maintained up to the nerve-jangling climax. ALAN JONES

PICK OF THE DAY The Supervet: Noel Fitzpatrick 8.00pm C4

POCUMENTARY Regular viewers already know about Noel Fitzpatrick's remarkable surgical skills. He has pushed the boundaries of possibilities, seeing no reason why animals shouldn't receive the same cutting-edge medical treatments as humans, and has dramatically improved the lives of countless much-loved pets. But he always puts the animal's interests first. "Every day of my life I'm faced with ethical dilemmas. Just because it's possible to do an operation does not make it the right thing to do," he says when contemplating a total shoulder replacement on young labrador cross Gylly, a complex procedure nobody else will attempt.

Other canine patients in theatre are Barney, seriously injured when he was hit by a bus, and Albert, whose back legs suddenly went from under him, since when he's not walked. As always, Noel's empathy shines through. For a self-confessed recluse, his ability to console and communicate is as impressive as his surgical skills. JANE RACKHAMSee feature: page 20

7.30pm (k/o 8pm) BBC1, BBC4

sport At press time we were yet to see either England or Scotland in World Cup action, so it's hard to assess their chances in these final group games, but here goes nothing. On BBC1 tonight, England face big-tournament specialists Japan; the Lionesses should have done enough to book their spot in the last 16, but if they do need a result tonight then they can take heart from their 3-0 win against Japan in the SheBelieves Cup in March.

Scotland, meanwhile, are likely to require a win against Argentina in Paris (BBC4) to keep their hopes alive – former goalkeeper turned BBC pundit Gemma Fay picked this as their most important fixture in France. HANNAH SHADDOCK

DRAMA Inventor Samuel Petrukhin is trapped in a spin-cycle of lies and obfuscation as many men in suits take him aside for quiet little chats. In the penultimate episode of Stephen Poliakoff's completely absorbing drama (if you've missed it so far, the whole lot is on iPlayer, you'll be lost for days) Samuel is taken out to supper.

It's a horrible meal, presided over by a pompous Army boss with unedifying views on Jewish people. Samuel, recovering from last week's horrors, still has no idea who he should trust. But he and the lovely, damaged, porcelain-fragile Kathleen Shaw (heartbreaking Keeley Hawes) become close as she hunts for her missing son. ALISON GRAHAM

Wild Bill

9.00pm ITV

DRAMA Unlikely as it may seem, Bill Hixon is still Chief Constable of East Lincolnshire, fighting crime in this odd, wildly uneven police drama. There are such curious, sudden changes of tone – one minute it's a straightforward thriller, the next a comedy, the next Bill (Rob Lowe) pines for his dead wife as sad music plinks away on the soundtrack.

"This place is like Fraggle Rock!" wails Bill. "What am I doing here?" We could all ask the same thing as he and his dogged sidekick Muriel (Bronwyn James) look into the mystery of an amnesiac man (Craig Parkinson) who becomes an internet sensation when film of him playing a piano beautifully at a railway station goes viral. AG

The Restaurant That Makes Mistakes

9.00pm C4

DOCUMENTARY Every day before filming The Restaurant That Makes Mistakes, the participants are asked if they're happy to be filmed. Invariably, by the following morning, many will have already forgotten what they're involved in.

It'd be easy to get caught up in the palpable sadness that accompanies these accounts of dementia – like 54-year-old Peter, who says he dreads the day he loses the ability to communicate. But this innovative experiment does seem to be creating positive change. Shelley, 43, says her confidence beforehand was quite low. "Now it's growing – maybe I can do a little bit more than I thought I could." FRANCES TAYLOR

I have a feeling that Coronation Street (7.30pm, 8.30pm ITV) is going to turn Gary into an "oops, I did it again" serial killer. You know the type? They're the ones who stumble into murder almost by accident. Or, in Gary's case, because he was tired of having to sleep on an airbed on the Platts' floor. Yes, really. That seems to be the entire reason as to why he sabotaged the factory roof and inadvertently brought about the death of Rana Habeeb.

Now, there's the possibility of him taking another life during a showdown with drug dealer Rick (left). Which should, in theory, be an exciting prospect. But we've seen this type of storyline play out so many times in the past that it's all starting to feel predictable. We don't yet know how long Gary will be forced to cover up his crimes, but I'm hoping this is wrapped up soon. It's Corrie's 60th birthday in 2020 – the last thing I'd want is for Gary to be claiming yet another victim on the anniversary. DAVID BROWN

9.00pm Dave

ENTERTAINMENT Sian Gibson once went to see a clairvoyant. "He said I had a gift," she says. "And I really thought that I was channelling Pink Ladies". The Ladies in question are of the apple variety, and the task is yet another that seems straightforward yet results in Sian resorting to her psychic powers and Paul Sinha using vastly complicated mathematic equations; neither to great effect.

Always excellent value on Taskmaster are the taste tests, and tonight a line of crisp flavours require ascertaining; that's if the comedians can actually open the packets. For reasons that make complete sense in the context of this eccentric episode, Joe Thomas is hindered by boxing gloves, Lou Sanders by oven mitts. FT

Massive Engineering Mistakes

9.00pm Discovery

DOCUMENTARY New series

Sometimes engineering projects do go wrong: a bad calculation at the design stage can have potentially fatal consequences. Take 601 Lexington, a vast skyscraper in Manhattan that the Red Cross estimated could have killed up to 200,000 people had it toppled. Thankfully, the thesis research of an architecture student averted disaster.

It's just one of the stories featured in this rather breathless doc about building blunders. There's the Leaning Tower of Pisa (rather obviously), and we learn what links a household broom to the pedestrian crossing over the Thames that, nearly 20 years since it opened, people still call "the wobbly bridge". DRAMA Mostly this drama has fun with the excess and absurdity of 1980s Wall Street. That's very nearly enough, but in the end it needs a heart, too, and tonight we get a sense of the romantic tensions beneath the chaotic money-making plays at The

That fleshes out several of the leads nicely, as ex-lovers Mo and Dawn dream up a way to reunite preppy Blair with his heiress fiancée.

But more fun is the typically crazy idea of the "La Guardia Spread", a last-ditch trade where you bet everything on a long-shot position then head for the airport. If you make a profit, you head home in triumph; lose and you catch a plane to a new life. DAVID BUTCHER

10.00pm BBC2 (N Ireland and Wales: 11.15pm)

COMEDY OF THE WEEK Putting others first: it's what mothers do. But Cathy is epically forbearing, an Olympian of tolerance, because her boorish family really do take the biscuit – usually ten at a time, before crumpling the empty wrapper and throwing it on the floor.

Cathy and Michael (Lesley Manville and Peter Mullan) have been waiting on these mewling ingrates hand, foot and finger for three series, and it feels to them as though decisions must now be made. Of course, the elephant in the room has always been the fact that Michael is the best friend of Cathy's late husband, hence their guilt and the suspicion of others when spying the pair's guarded exchanges. So can this sweetest of 60-somethings be granted the happy ending they deserve? Lovers of Stefan Golaszewski's majestically happy/ sad sitcom should not miss a minute.

ParameterJapan v England

England's Lionesses face familiar opponents in their final group match in Nice (kick-off 8.00), having come up against Japan in each of the previous three World Cups.

Although they beat the Japanese at the group stage of the 2011 tournament, it was their opponents who had the last laugh, winning the final on penalties to become the first Asian winners of the Women's World Cup. Four years later, England lost out to them at the semi-final stage thanks to Laura Bassett's unfortunate last-minute own goal. Phil Neville's team will be hoping it is their turn to claim the victory against a team sitting four places below them in the Fifa rankings.

Presented by Gabby Logan, with commentary from Jonathan Pearce and Sue Smith, plus analysis from Alex Scott, Jordan Nobbs and Dion Dublin. Alternative commentary is available on the red button and at bbc.co.uk/sport. See page 84. Director Ian Finch; Editor Stuart Hutchinson (S) (HD)

Curtis turns back the clock

About Time ★★★★ 6.40pm Film4 FREEVIEW

Richard Curtis is at it again. In a week's time, Yesterday, the comedy he wrote imagining a world where the Beatles had never existed, opens in cinemas. But he first warmed up the "alternative reality" idea in this romantic comedy starring Domhnall Gleeson and Rachel McAdams (review, p37). But what of Curtis himself – is there anything he'd like to go back and change in his own past? "With me," he admitted, "it's mainly not seeing The Exorcist. That was such a bad mistake... I slept with the light on for a year." STEVE MORRISSEY

The toast of Edinburgh

Calibre ★★★★ Neflix

The annual Edinburgh film festival kicks off today, running until 30 June, making me long to be north of the border. Last year, the winner of best British film was Highlands-set thriller Calibre, a sort of Caledonian Deliverance, which marked the feature debut of Matt Palmer and showcased the talents of hotly tipped composer Anne Nikitin. The film showing during the opening gala at this year's festival is Boyz in the Wood, which has a similar Highland setting, only with a hallucinogenic twist, and centres on four hapless teens on a Duke of Edinburgh's Award exercise. ANDREW COLLINS

Killers on the road

Badlands ★★★★

11.10pm TCM

Martin Sheen stars here as the alienated killer on a psychopathic rampage through the American Midwest, accompanied by his teenage girlfriend, Sissy Spacek. Both leads are effective in their roles, yet it's director Terrence Malick's understated approach that makes this such a truly scary experience. ALAN JONES

THURSDAY Choices The pick of today's TV

PICK OF THE DAY Catch-22 9.00pm C4

DRAMA New series Captain John Yossarian (Christopher Abbott) has had enough of flying missions during the Second World War. After several attempts to feign illness, he decides there is only one way out – to fake insanity. But there's a catch. Catch-22, to be exact. "That's some catch, that Catch-22", he marvels at the medic who explains it.

It's probably the best-known line in Joseph Heller's magnificent satire that features an array of eye-popping characters, including the brutal, parade-obsessed Lieutenant Scheisskopf, played with gimlet-eyed fury by George Clooney (also one of the series' executive producers).

Heller's novel has been filmed, not successfully, in the past, but this version is sharp and smart (the combat sequences are vivid and terrifying) and Abbott is an excellent Yossarian – a clever, frightened man baffled and angered by the pointlessness of what he is asked to do.

sport Sweden v USA The final group match for reigning champions USA should see them advance as the winners of Group F, but their opponents are their nemesis, who dumped them unceremoniously out of the 2016 Olympics, beating them on penalties in the guarter-finals.

Back then US supporters were shocked and angry that the national team had been beaten by a "cowardly" Swedish side, who locked Team USA into stalemate before the roulette of penalties decided their fate. But the Swedes are now a more attacking side who represent more of a danger going forward. On paper they're playing to see who tops the group, but in their hearts USA will be out for revenge. George Clarke's Old House, New Home

PROPERTY Architect George Clarke is a champion of small spaces. In the past, he's enthused over double-decker buses and underground toilets that have been converted into fabulous, if compact, homes. Here, he visits a tiny Edwardian workers' cottage in south London, where a mum-of-two is desperate for her own bedroom (she currently sleeps in the front room). There were no previews available, but apparently it's more like a doll's house — astonishing to think it once housed ten people.

The next project is decidedly bigger: a four-bed house with glam Italianate decor, whose owners need a grown-up sitting room.

Inside Incredible Machines

8.00pm National Geographic

Given its current woes with the 737 Max, Boeing must be gnashing its teeth that the plane that made its fortune, the 747 jumbo jet, launched nearly 50 years ago, has been retired. Here, former Nasa engineer Chad Zdenek visits a breakers' yard in Mississippi, where a 20-year-old 747 is being disassembled, its usable parts (engines, seating, avionics, landing gear) stripped to be sold on, and the rest scrapped.

While wrangling giant wrenches, Zdenek gives us a decent history of the plane that revolutionised long-haul travel, but it's sad seeing the "queen of the skies" reduced to a mere skeleton. GILL CRAWFORD

Death Row: Countdown to Execution

9.00pm ITV

DOCUMENTARY Susanna Reid is in Texas, meeting death row inmate Billie Wayne Coble. Coble, 70, has spent the past decade in solitary confinement yet, as his execution day approaches, he seems strangely at peace for a man who has waited 29 years to be put to death. He has a curious fixed smile that could be read as benign or sinister, though we could do without one lawyer's simplistic judgement: "He's evil and he deserves to die."

Coble's crime – killing three of his in-laws and kidnapping his estranged wife – was brutal, but it's hard to see his execution as any kind of restitution, and his family's distress is tough to watch. DAVID BUTCHER

Ordinary life in India has been

Soumik Datta puts that right heritage that starts in Kolkata, where he plays the sarod and Louisa Clein recently told RT that "there's definitely still more to play" where her character Maya's story on Emmerdale (7pm, 8pm ITV) is concerned. So even though Maya is receiving her verdict in court (right), I don't expect this to be the end of the plotline. It's news that probably won't please those on the online forums screaming "lock her up!". But I'd much prefer to see more twists for Maya and Jacob than witness Kim Tate spitting venom like she's on Dynasty. Having said that, some of Kim's dialogue isn't even worthy of Dynasty. Flamingo Road, maybe. Or Falcon Crest.

Keanu on EastEnders (7.30pm BBC1) finds himself tied up in an empty warehouse – it can only be a few weeks since he was locked in that shipping container. One day, he'll be able to look back and laugh... DAVID BROWN

9.00pm Sky Atlantic

DRAMA Anthony LaPaglia's character, Constantine, must wish he really had died in the explosion. When news of his remarkable resurrection leaks out to a couple of astonished family members, their reactions are pretty extreme. In fact, it highlights such an unsavoury situation for one of them that, once again, it prompts a desperate solution.

Meanwhile, Georgina (Julia Stiles) calmly admits to her uncle Jeff (Will Arnett) that she killed Adam (Iwan Rheon), expecting him to understand and even sympathise. Instead he confronts Irina (Lena Olin): "I can't work out which one of you sold their soul and which one of you is the devil," he says. Does it matter? Both women are without so much as a shred of decency or morality. JR

SITCOM As he finally knuckles down to learning the ins and outs of human ethics, Ted Danson's demon Michael suddenly understands the truth of his own mortality, plunging him into a deep, dark pit of existential ennui that puts his new secret allies, Eleanor, Chidi, Tahani and Jason, in danger.

Veteran sitcom actor Danson shines through Michael's mental despair, showing off his gift for physical comedy as he is buffeted by the horrors of existence, and through the sudden midlife crisis he attempts to launch himself into in order to regain some of his usual pep.

But can Michael get back to normal before all the other demons begin to suspect his human pals know more than they should? HUW FULLERTON

from 1.05am BBC4

DRAMA It's not long now before series five of the Birmingham gangster tale is due to arrive, shifting the saga to 1929 and to BBC1. Nobody is suggesting you stay up till 4am to catch (or re-watch) the first episodes of series one, from 2013, but set the digibox to record and revel in one of the decade's standout TV creations.

From the start it broke new ground, with the rhythms of a Western and the colour palette of a dirty stormcloud. Everything in 1919 Birmingham is 50 shades of grey – morally and visually. The city's kingpin is sad-eyed Tommy Shelby (a mesmerising Cillian Murphy), the thinking man's racketeer and head of a crime family packed with psychopaths and - crucially strong women. 10.00pm Channel 5

DOCUMENTARY Channel 5 once again shows its knack for turning around timely documentaries on hot stories. At the time of writing, the future of Sir Philip Green's retail empire hangs by a slender viscose thread, so this might need extra editing close to broadcast.

Trouble with Topshop

It charts the story of Topshop, from its launch in a London basement to its glory days under Green in the noughties, helped along by celebrity collections from the likes of Kate Moss and Beyoncé.

The trouble is, whenever bullying "Big Phil" is on screen, you can't help wishing it were more a profile of him and his laughably brash ways - growling at an MP who looked at him the wrong way, or manhandling a camera crew in the Med. And in the version I saw, the misdemeanour assault charges recently filed against Green in the US didn't get

Triumph of the Will

No Way Out ★★★★

11.30pm Sony Movie Channel FREEVIEW

Will Patton enjoys a juicy role as Gene Hackman's aide in this thriller (review, p38), paving the way to appearances in Gone in Sixty Seconds and Armageddon. During pre-production, director Roger Donaldson went to check out Patton in an off-Broadway play, only to fall asleep during the show. He awoke with Patton looking down at him, hopefully, prompting Donaldson to cast him as much out of embarrassment as inspiration. He made sure he had the director's full attention when filming commenced. ANDREW COLLINS

Back on the streets

Adulthood ★★★ My5 FREE TO VIEW

This sequel to Kidulthood is set six years after that original slice of London teen turbulence. Noel Clarke directs from his own screenplay, and once again takes the role of Sam, who is fresh out of prison having served his sentence for the killing of local rival Trife. But during his first 24 hours of freedom, Sam finds that Trife's friends are still eager to take revenge. The film spans a rather narrower emotional spectrum than its predecessor, and humour is in short supply, but this is still competent British film-making. DAVE ALDRIDGE

Igniting passions

The Beguiled ★★ Netflix

Director Sofia Coppola's trifling version of Thomas Cullinan's novel is new to Netflix today. In the 1970 film adaptation, Clint Eastwood played the wounded Union soldier recuperating at a girls' school. Here, it's Colin Farrell who arouses more than the curiosity of Nicole Kidman, Elle Fanning and Kirsten Dunst. ALAN JONES

PICK OF THE DAY Celebrity Crystal Maze 8.00pm C4

ENTERTAINMENT The ever-enjoyable Crystal Maze reboot returns with a new series full of celebrity contestants and some interesting tweaks on the format, introducing a new themed area for the first time since the 1990s (the East Asia-influenced "Eastern Zone") and a new format to "supersize" one crystal collected during the game.

Breaking in these changes this week are reality stars Gemma Collins (aka The GC) and James Argent, presenters Rick Edwards and Carol Vorderman, and The Mash Report's Ellie Taylor, all of whom make for a lively bunch from the off.

"I really feel this has the makings of an absolute trainwreck," deadpan host Richard Ayoade notes happily at the start of the hour and he's not wrong – though surprisingly, the notoriously accident-prone Collins does fare better than you might expect in the usual challenges of Skill, Mystery, Mental and Physical. SPORT The last time England played Sri Lanka in a one-day international – in Colombo last October – the visitors lost by 219 runs. The drubbing came with England holding an unassailable 3–0 lead in the series, but even so, the memory of it is bound to inform events at Headingley today.

The Leeds ground has always favoured the kind of seam bowling that England teams have specialised in, and the wicket-to-wicket bowling of exciting new find Jofra Archer will be worth watching. This may not be the highest-scoring match of the tournament, but it promises to be one of the most closely fought.

8.00pm Channel 5

pocumentary It's the final episode of the series and there's a shameless scene of heartstring-tugging as the trains are locked away in their sheds for the winter to the soundtrack of Dvorak's New World Symphony (played, Hovis-style, on brass).

But before that, there are some sitcom-worthy laughs as the NYMR team puts on a massive bash for Halloween just as Kieran is having a nightmare thanks to failing electrics in the carriages. Oh, and watch out for saturnine signalman Alastair's comments about leaves on the line. "Worst-case scenario, you're talking derailment," he notes lugubriously, Eeyore-like. DAVID BROWN

Still Game

SITCOM Stars Ford Kiernan and Greg Hemphill have already announced that this is to be the final series of Still Game, so enjoy your visits to Craiglang while you can. This episode (shown on the launch night of BBC Scotland back in February) begins with the sight of Winston becoming a viral sensation after he's filmed throwing his false leg at a thug who's trying to snatch Isa's bag.

9.00pm BBC1 (Wales: 9.30pm)

Needless to say, Jack and Victor then want a piece of the internet action, but first they need to get to grips with modern technology – enter guest star Martin Compston as a mobile phone salesman. As ever, the humour is, by turns, broad and crude, though there is an unexpectedly poignant pay-off. DAVID BROWN

The Nile: Egypt's Great River with Bettany Hughes

9.00pm Channel 5

HISTORY Her traditional dahabiya is "pretty gorgeous", says Bettany Hughes, but it doesn't come close to the opulence of Cleopatra's gold-encrusted and perfumed-sailed boat. No wonder "Egypt's very own superstar" fascinates her.

Hughes is sailing from Beni Hasan to Dendera, examining mummified animals (including a demonstration that's not for the faint-hearted) and scrambling through tiny, dark, hot tombs. She stops off to investigate one woman's attempt to grow a rare lotus flower, but even this involves a motorbike ride. Bet Cleopatra never had to do that. JANE RACKHAM

Those who followed the Who Killed Lucy? mystery on EastEnders (8.30pm BBC1) will recall that Max once did time for Bobby's crime. So we shouldn't be surprised to see Max flying off the handle now he's noticed that Mr Beale is back (right). Mind you, Max does seem to recover pretty quickly from trauma. For instance, he still drinks in the Vic despite three of his own children having fallen from the roof. So, if Max can sup pints in the pub with London's most cursed top ledge, then I'm sure he'll be

So Daniel might come to regret his words. DAVID BROWN

The Looming Tower

9.30pm BBC2

DRAMA There are ironies in this true story of the lead-up to 9/11 that are so stinging you couldn't put them in a fictional drama, it wouldn't work. The most painful of them concerns the FBI's anti-Al-Qaeda boss John O'Neill, played here with jowly charisma by Jeff Daniels.

In the course of the plot, O'Neill has been steadily downgraded: now, in 2001, he is elbowed into retirement, and opts to take a plush new job in the private sector – as head of security at the World Trade Center.

As he settles in, the FBI are investigating the curious phenomenon of Arab students at US flight schools who appear to have no interest in learning to land the plane. DAVID BUTCHER

CHAT On a previous visit to the show, Tom Hanks told a charming story about how kids never recognise him as Woody from Toy Story until he tells them to close their eyes and he speaks the line "We gotta get back to Andy's room, Buzz!". With the latest Toy Story film about to open, expect more animated stories tonight.

Joining him on the red sofa is Spider-Man. Or rather Tom Holland, who's been playing Marvel's web-head for the past three years. Completing the Hollywood line-up are Holland's Spider-Man: Far from Home co-star Jake Gyllenhaal, and Gwyneth Paltrow, whose wellbeing brand Goop encourages us all to "nourish the inner aspect". Her In Goop Health summit hits London next week. JR

No spoilers if you didn't watch the first series of this German drama and still want to catch up, but suffice to say that what looked at first like a fairly standard crime story – about a small town reeling from a new event that mirrored a notorious crime of yesteryear - turned out to be a lot more ambitious than that. Time is still a flat circle as the new episodes ramp up the weird, well-filmed spookiness.

I Can Go for That: the Smooth World of Yacht Rock 9.00pm BBC4

DOCUMENTARY Yacht Rock isn't really a thing, it's an invention of a load of YouTubers who, in the early 2000s, made daft spoof videos about 1970s/80s soft rock bands such as Toto, Hall and Oates and the Doobie Brothers. But it turns out to be a handy little description upon which to build a two-part documentary series.

In another glorious hour, Katie Puckrik returns to LA, where she skates in the sunshine on

Venice Beach, as the smooth, smooth sound of yacht rock enters the 1980s, when it was fully embraced by MTV. The photogenic Hall and Oates ruthlessly used the channel to become the biggest-selling duo in music history with soft-focus videos of them dressed in nice suits looking impeccably cool.

Steve Lukather and Steve Porcaro of Toto are highly entertaining as they look back on the old days and their mega hits Africa and Rosanna. ALISON GRAHAM

The movie that didn't die

The Cotton Club $\star\star\star$

9.30pm Talking Pictures TV FREEVIEW

Francis Coppola spared no expense in bringing this jazz-age crime drama (review, p38) to the screen. Some 30-40 scripts were drafted, over 600 people worked on sets, costumes and music at a cost of $250,000 a day, and one music arranger regularly commuted on Concorde to get to work. Little wonder the budget ballooned from $25 million to $58 million. "The movie was like a vampire," said production designer Dick Sylbert. "But every day it would come out of its coffin. Somehow, it didn't die." TOM FOLLEY

Very dark habits

☐ The Nun ★★★ 8.00pm Sky Premiere

The universe of horror franchise The Conjuring expands further here, with the origins story of Valak, the sinister nun from The Conjuring 2. Set in 1952, the movie sees exorcist Demián Bichir and novitiate Taissa Farmiga sent by the Vatican to investigate a suicide at the mysterious Abbey St Carta in Romania. Director Colin Hardy never stints on doomy atmosphere or the chance to blind-side the viewer in this precision shock horror spectacle that neatly ties together all the movies in the series. ■ Destination Wedding ★★★ Virgin Movies

Keanu Reeves and Winona Ryder share the screen for the fourth time in this black comedy, playing two bitter people forced to endure a wedding together. The formula of the pair endlessly griping does become repetitive, but Reeves's revelations about his family and a confrontation with a cougar are laugh-out-loud funny. JAMES LUXFORD

The Archers
Sunday-Friday 7.00pm Radio 4

'In my eyes she's the Queen of Ambridge'

TIM BENTINCK David Archer

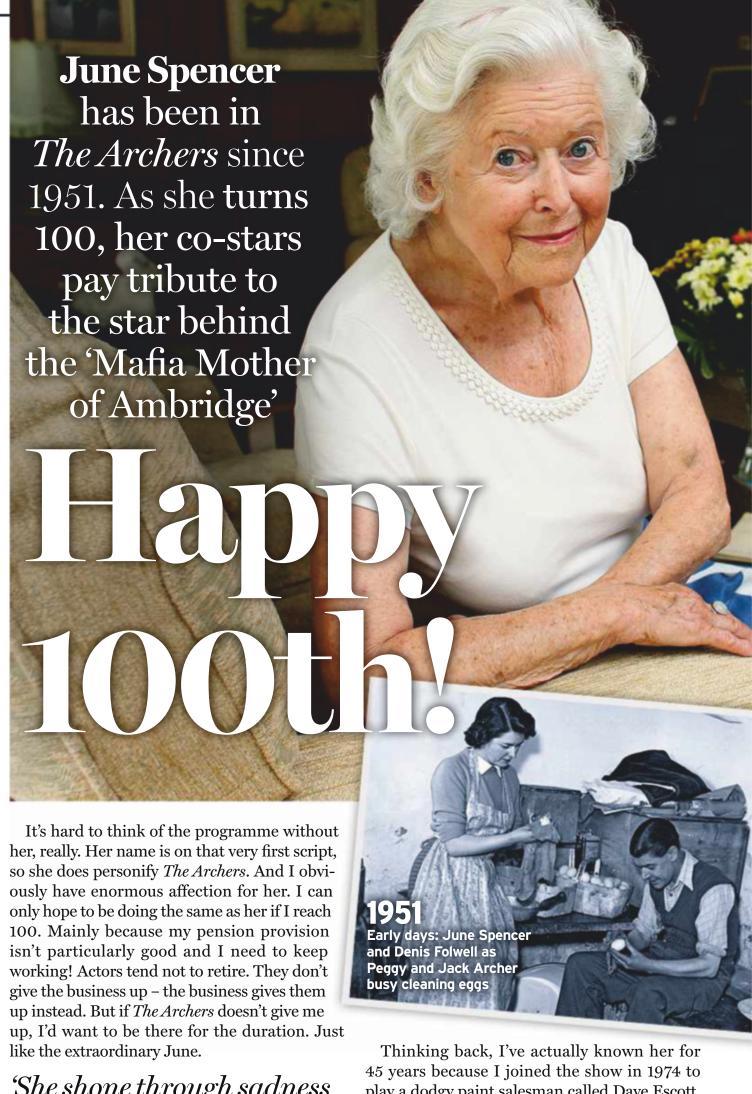

It's QUITE UNBELIEVABLE to me that we're celebrating this birthday because I'm sure that June has found the secret to eternal youth. I started on The Archers 37 years ago and June hasn't appeared to age in all that time. She always turns up fully prepared, knows her character inside out – and now, suddenly out of the blue, she's 100 years old. It has to be unique, surely? I can't think of any other actor working at that age.

It helps, of course, that she's both physically and mentally able. Very sharp indeed. You'd expect there to be some drop-off in skill with someone of 100, but not with June. She's great with all the technicalities of radio acting – for instance, turning the pages of the script without making any noise. And being able to lift the words off the page, so that it sounds as though she's just thought of what she's saying and not just reading it out.

She has such gravitas, and there's no denying that Peggy is the materfamilias of the Archer family. In my eyes, she's actually the Queen of Ambridge. Not that she'd ever describe herself in this way. In fact, it's the last thing she'd say because she's so modest and self-effacing. But, you know, every new generation that comes along thinks that they ARE The Archers.

It was the same for me when I started in 1982 as the new young thing and now here I am, with David Archer slowly becoming an old man. The thing about June is that she is unchanged and unchangeable. I'm sure we'll still be seeing her in the studio when she's 110.

'She shone through sadness without a word of complaint'

CHARLES COLLINGWOOD Brian Aldridge

No one in the history of The Archers has made fewer mistakes than June. It's now become an expression: June Spencer Never Fluffs. I've had lots of lovely scenes with June, in which she's always perfect and then I'll fluff at the end and get a little look from her over her glasses!

Thinking back, I've actually known her for 45 years because I joined the show in 1974 to play a dodgy paint salesman called Dave Escott, who, if memory serves, actually had a mild flirtation with Peggy. June used to stay at the Holiday Inn in Birmingham and, at that time in her life, she was a keen swimmer. So there she'd be, swimming up and down the centre of the hotel's pool. And my wife Judy [Bennett, who plays Shula] and I used to take our two little boys there. I'd say to them, "Don't you dare splash her!" We thought she was like the Queen Mother!

But, of course, she's actually immense fun and has been a wonderful friend to Judy and me over the years. And even though she's had to endure some terrible sadness in her life – she lost her husband Roger a number of years ago to Alzheimer's and her son died when he was only in his 50s – she's shone through without a word of complaint. She just gets on with it. She's the ultimate professional and I actually think she should be made a dame. I can't believe there's anyone else in the world of entertainment still working as a professional performer at the age of 100. She's completely unique.

A case in point – a couple of years ago, we had a Christmas party that The Archers office kindly gave us. And June, who was 98 at the time, came along in high heels. She looked amazing. The following morning, I was in the studio with her and I said, "How are you this morning, June?" And she replied: "Do you know, dear, I've got a hangover." And I just thought, "How wonderful to have a hangover at the age of 98."

I hope, in the nicest possible way, that on 15 June this year [the day after her birthday], she'll also have a little bit of a hangover. She's remarkable and I salute her a hundred times.

Peggy is the Mafia Mother of Ambridge' SUNNY ORMONDE Lilian Bellamy

JUNE HAS ALWAYS said, "I don't think Peggy has much of a sense of humour". Thankfully, June herself does and we always have a laugh together in the studio. She's a bit of a legend in her own lifetime.

She used to write comedy monologues for Cyril Fletcher. I've read them. They're wonderful. So you can perhaps understand why she now loves slightly naughtier storylines that allow Peggy and Lilian to get sparky with each other.

There's a tendency, as we get older, for us to become physically and vocally frail. Not June. Her voice is as strong as ever because acting, for her, is the breath of life. And she's still completely independent. We have heavy doors on the way into the studio. You'll open them for her and she'll say, "No, dear, I'm fine". Or I'll say, "What are you doing after the recording?" And she'll reply: "Oh, I'm off to Menorca". I blanch sometimes at the thought of getting on a plane and \triangleright

PICK OF THE WEEK

The Food and Farming Awards

Sunday 12.30pm/Monday 3.30pm Radio 4

For Sheila Dillon (below) the BBC Food and Farming Awards stand out from other food awards for very clear and powerful reasons. "They are about people who on the whole fly under the media radar," the longtime presenter of The Food Programme says. "And they are people who are not just producing great food, they are also changing society."

This year's awards – celebrated over two programmes on Sunday and Monday recorded a few days previously at a ceremony at City Hall, Bristol – are the 20th. The inaugural awards in 2000 were hosted by the Prince of Wales and the winners included Delia Smith and Neal's Yard, since when all manner of pioneers have been honoured.

The 2019
categories include a new one – the Pat
Llewellyn New Talent
Award, named in memory of the TV producer who discovered the talents of Jamie Oliver and Gordon Ramsay and brought
The Two Fat Ladies to our television screens.
Llewellyn died in 2017.

Sheila Dillon has another cause for celebration. The Food Programme, which runs the awards, marks its 40th anniversary in September, and for most of its time on air she has been an intrinsic part of it, first as producer and then as presenter.

With a series of guest editors lined up around the time of the anniversary, it's a chance for a great programme to show off the immense contribution it has made to our understanding of food and the food industry.

AMBRIDGE DIARY

The Archers this week...

The fallout from Peggy's announcement continues, with a raging Tony determined to make his mother see sense. Lilian, though, is wondering whether they should just let Peggy get on with it. Tom, meanwhile, also has a different view to his father, but will he risk Tony's wrath by exploring it?

Tom and Natasha's housewarming party is a wild affair, but what secrets will Alice and Pip discover when they snoop in their hosts' bedroom? Shula receives upsetting news, but will Alistair come into his own as he deals with the situation? A tempting new opportunity is coming Kirsty's way. Plus Adam and lan face another pre-natal challenge – but this time, it's lan who's the one left struggling. DAVID BROWN

✓ I'm in my 60s. But she just gets on and does it.

I'm very proud to be her radio daughter and I can't imagine the show without her. Because Peggy is the Mafia Mother of Ambridge. And it amuses me that all her children are a bit frightened of her. We're all quite strong in our own way but we do get wobbly-kneed at the thought of what Mother is going to say when she commands us to come over to her house!

But, in real life, the two of us have a great relationship. She's a phenomenon and I admire her so much. I know she already has her OBE and CBE, but I'm hoping she might be made a dame. If anyone deserves it, it's June.

What happens in June's birthday episode is a secret'

PATRICIA GALLIMORE Pat Archer

ONE THING THAT people might not know about June is that she's actually a master Scrabble player. I remember spending some lovely evenings on the balcony of the villa she owns in Menorca playing Scrabble with her and let me tell you, she certainly takes no prisoners. She's a member of at least two Scrabble clubs.

She's amazing, really. A feisty lady. And with such self-discipline. She never turns up late, is always immaculately dressed. It partly comes with being part of that generation. But, in some ways, I wish I could be more like her. Sometimes you look at old age and think, "That doesn't look like much fun". But when you look at June, you think, "If I was like that, it might not be so bad!"

Nobody has to make any concessions to June, age-wise. She neither wants nor needs it. Indeed, the instalment of The Archers to be broadcast on her birthday, which we've already recorded, is very much June's. What happens is a secret, but it's all about what Peggy has to say and how the senior members of the family - Peggy's children and in-laws - react. It was wonderful to see her still in charge of an episode.

'She's a grand old lady who isn't a grande dame'

CAROLE BOYD Lynda Snell

When I first appeared on The Archers, it wasn't as Lynda Snell but as shepherdess Fiona Watson. This was in 1967 and I was only a year out of drama school, so I was very much the green newcomer.

But what I remember to this day is how welcoming June was. Also, how professional and prompt - you could see the code of ethics she practised as a seasoned player on the show.

What struck me, when I returned to play Lynda in 1986, was that June was still the same person. It was like no time had passed. She's always early, never puts a foot wrong, never makes demands... It would be so easy for someone of her advancing age to have everybody make allowances, but no. Not a bit of it. I can think of actors over the years who'd exploit the position she's now in and had people kowtowing. But there's no sense of the diva about her. She's a grand old lady who isn't a grande dame.

Nothing daunts her and she never complains. It's wonderful to come in to work and see June carrying on with that same quiet dignity. Her performance as Peggy is wonderful. She's been given the chance to show that age has not withered her and I don't think it ever will. Even now, she's always the one who's bang on cue, while the rest of us are fluffing all over the place.

Patricia Greene and June Spencer (first and celebrating The Archers' 30th anniversary

And what you have to remember is that you don't come across modesty like hers very often. And it's this quality that makes her a star. She also has a real sweetness about her – and the blue, sparkly eyes of a 20-year-old. It's extraordinary. Everyone here respects and adores her.

`June looks delicate butshe's as strong as an ox'

PATRICIA GREENE Jill Archer

THE THING ABOUT June is that she looks so sweet and delicate but is actually as strong as an ox. She drives her car here at home and has another car in Menorca for when she visits her little villa. She still flies out there whenever she can. She also has a real work ethic. She mostly sits down now in the studio, of course. In the old days, our scripts were printed on lovely soft paper, but now it's this awful crispy stuff that's really difficult to turn without making a noise. So, she'll sit down with a stool at the side of her on which she places her script pages one after the other.

June is self-contained. She's like Peggy in that respect - quite shrewd. She comes in, doesn't talk a lot, sits there with her script and does her job. I really can't imagine the show without her. Let's not forget Peggy's had quite a colourful life much more eventful than Jill's. At one point, I even remember a GI from her past who came to Ambridge and set the cat among the pigeons...

And June is the only surviving member from the first episode. But when I joined in 1957, she wasn't playing Peggy. Thelma Rogers was in the role because June had left to have a family. June then came back in 1962 and slid seamlessly back into the character, which was quite something. I looked at my latest script recently and it was episode 18,977 - and June is still around. It's remarkable. I'm quite sure she'll outlive us all.

Greece, here I come

Download The Archers – I'm off on holiday

'VE JUST FINISHED writing my fifth novel and am halfway through writing a nonfiction book, my brain is frazzled, the old man's been working his hairline off and we both need a break – so I'm packing to go on holiday. In preparation, I've done my first DIY fake tan of the season. Did I exfoliate? No, but at least this time I remembered to do both legs! We're going to Greece, home of the Greek salad and grilled octopus. I'm very excited and can't stop butchering songs from Mamma Mia!

But while packing, I realise how different the contents of my suitcase are compared with when I first visited Greece in my 20s in 1984, when Frankie Goes to Hollywood were belting out Relax from every taverna on Skiathos. Back then, all I needed was some bikini bottoms (I was very topless in those days), a bottle of suntan lotion, a lipstick and a pile of books.

Not any more. Apart from the travelling pharmacy I must carry whenever I leave home (blood-pressure tablets, HRT meds, itchy-ear eczema ointment and variety of dry-eye drops), there's my massive swimming cozzie from Marks with its "secret tummy control", an assortment of colourful linen smocks, and a selection of different-weight cardigans (because when you get to my age, you'll understand there's a science to cardigans), plus all my toys.

These days I pack for myself as if I were packing for a toddler, because I find in my late 50s I need to be constantly entertained. Lying on a beach is no longer enough for me. I used to be like a lizard (albeit a very pale-skinned lizard). I could just bask and loll for hours on end.

Now I need my tapestry, books, iPad, laptop loaded with Stephen Poliakoff's Summer of Rockets, headphones for "on the beach Archers listening" (I'm intrigued by this new girl Natasha), plus I'll be tuning in to my mate Al Murray's reading of Vanity Fair and checking whether I did actually repeat "Kondo" on a recent Just a Minute! Also in the bag go notepad and pens (for holiday brainwaves), drawing pad and pencils... In fact, this time I've even bought a special lock-down Tupperware box so that

YOU HAVEN'T CHANGED MUCH BUT YOUR
SUITCASE HAS PUT A LOT OF WEIGHT ON
1984

I can take a selection of acrylic paints with me. The only thing I seem to have drawn the line at is "holiday Lego". You can laugh all you like, but Lego therapy is totally where it's at for quite a lot of stressed-out adults and I'm all for it.

oliday or not, I like a packed itinerary and am slightly put out that the resort I'm going to offers kiddieclub Pilates and under-tens' craft club, which sounds like holiday nirvana, and yet apparently I'm half a century too old to join in! Hmm, I say leave the beach to the kids. My idea of fun is some fully licensed scout hut, preferably in pine with plenty of nap-time bean bags scattered around. Somewhere that offers creative activities and gentle, mat-based exercise classes for middle-aged women and like-minded men.

Yes, I like swimming, sunbathing and sight-seeing, but if I could also have a couple of hours gluing and sticking during the day then that would be utterly marvellous. Why should the kids get all the fun? Come to think of it, I don't mind being given the children's lunch menu, either. Grilled octopus is all very delicious, but my idea of heaven is fish fingers, chips and peas, just as long as I'm allowed to wash it all down with a nice glass of chilled retsina. Cheers all!

Jenny Eclair is a comedian and writer. Her new novel, Inheritance, will be published by Sphere on 1 August.

Hazy memories of mankind's giant leap

The thing I remember most about watching the TV coverage of the Moon landings in July 1969 is that I couldn't really see very much. The images were in black and white, our Bush TV could only manage 405 lines and the light on the lunar surface was so weird and disorienting that you had to take the word of commentator James Burke for what was going on as Neil Armstrong made his ultimate nervous descent into the unknown.

It was the same many years later when my wife presented me with an ultrasound picture of one of our children in the womb. I pretended I could see what was going on, but really I couldn't.

This is Houston - don't be alarmed!

Back then there were no experts on hand to explain what was going on, for the simple reason that what was going on had never gone on before. When Armstrong and Buzz Aldrin were looking for a decent parking spot on the Sea of Tranquillity, I don't remember anybody explaining the significance of the alarm that flashed up on the control panel of the landing module or the tightening you could hear in Armstrong's vocal cords as his worried "12-o-one!" cut into the laconic back and forth of Mission Control back in Houston.

The youth of yesterday

Ironically, the Moon landings, which were seen by everyone at the time as above all a television event, are one of those historical phenomena still best explained through audio and the printed word. It remains an achievement so far beyond our ken that it's more effectively conveyed by a human voice recounting the bald facts in a dramatic fashion than it can ever be in cinematic terms. Which is why 13 Minutes to the Moon, the podcast from the BBC World Service, can effectively tell the full story of the mission without any recourse to pictures.

Presented by Kevin Fong, this 12-part podcast can explain things that were hushed up at the time, such as Aldrin secretly celebrating communion before stepping out of the module, and also matters considered unremarkable at the time, which now seem amazing, such as the fact that Steve Bales, the engineer who decided that Neil Armstrong didn't need to worry about the flashing error message on his screen, was just 26 years old.

Opera on 3 6.30pm Radio 3

As a culture-loving king and practising playwright, Gustavus III of Sweden suffered a tragically theatrical fate, shot by an assassin at a masked ball held in the opera house that he himself had built. No wonder his death inspired no fewer than three 19th-century operas, of which the last and finest was Verdi's 1859 Un ballo in maschera. A mercurial mix of dark Italian melodrama and lighter French-style comedy, with a plot that cleverly combines the personal and the political as an intimate love triangle gets caught up within a conspiracy to murder, it's heard tonight in a recent Welsh National Opera staging, starring Welsh tenor Gwyn Hughes Jones and American soprano Mary Elizabeth Williams (above) as the doomed king and his best friend's wife. The Mystery of Charles Dickens

6.00am/4.00pm/4.00am Radio 4 Extra

Simon Callow is surely Charles Dickens's greatest living champion. The actor and author has written books about Dickens and played him in numerous productions on stage of Doctor Who. Callow turns 70 today, and by way of celebration, 4 Extra broadcasts this one-man play by Peter Ackroyd first heard in 2001 which presents us with the author's life from birth to death and includes extracts from his stories. Callow performs a dazzling repertoire of character voices, and the combination of three towering British talents produces an indisputable audio masterpiece. DAVID McGILLIVRAY

Poor Emily Eavis. Every year the Glastonbury organiser and founder's daughter (above) seems to spend the weeks leading up to the event locked in an endless press junket, extolling the virtues of what everyone already knows is the nation's best music festival. With days to go before she can kick off her wellies, there's just time for this programme about her favourite artists and the performances she is looking forward to, such as this year's headliners Croydon grime star Stormzy and 80s post-punk sensations the Cure. She also looks back at her highlights, including Leonard Cohen's trip to the farm and Dolly Parton's now legendary slot in 2014. There are worse jobs. Tom Goulding

There are limitless numbers of books and we all have limited lifespans. Is it this that can make re-reading feel like a luxury? The writers Tim Parks and Belinda Jack join Mariella Frostrup to explain why it's anything but, and I'm grateful to Parks for alerting me to his chosen great re-reads which include the novels Watt by Samuel Beckett and Party Going by Henry Green. "It's as if the first readings serve to create a kind of lock in the brain," Parks tells me, "which each new reading of the book turns again." sımon o'hagan

Reading Europe: Lullaby 10.45am/7.45pm Radio 4

"The baby is dead," are the first words of this chilling drama, an adaptation of the novel by French-Moroccan author Leïla Slimani (above), which was published in 2016 but not translated into English until last year. It's not a whodunnit – we know from the outset who killed the child – but a psychological thriller that slowly builds a portrait of both the perpetrator and the family who were the victims of the violence. Lawyer Myriam (Laila Alj) and her music producer husband Paul (Endeavour's Shaun Evans) live with their two children in an affluent Parisian neighbourhood. When Myriam decides to return to work, they hire a nanny, the apparently perfect Louise (Christine Bottomley). But slowly, Slimani peels back Louise's Mary Poppins-esque façade. This first instalment is an atmospheric start to a darkly gripping tale. HANNAH SHADDOCK

1.45pm Radio 4

Many people feel divorced from nature, but in this series, running to Monday to Friday, Becky Ripley and Emily Knight from the Blue Planet II podcast explore how manifestations of our urban existence are replicated in the natural world behaviour. It's fascinating, and in some instances quite scary. Today they look at how the maths of starling murmurations are similar to that of social media memes, but it's on Wednesday when it gets scary, as they question the meaning of the individual in relation to the Portuguese man o'war and our place in the great machinery of society. It's almost Orwellian! DAVID CRAWFORD

Today's Choices

In the Studio

11.30am BBC World Service German-Japanese classical pianist Alice Sara Ott (above) is marketed on her idiosyncrasies: she's performed in ball gowns and bare feet and has spoken about her liking for neat scotch. Not every critic thinks she has the musical ability to justify the hype, but there's no question that she's "hot" and of interest. Presenter Kate Molleson, who thinks Ott is "one of today's most brilliant young pianists" (she's 30), accompanies the recitalist to her rehearsal room in Munich, where she talks about her new album Nightfall, a collection of nocturnes inspired by the magic hour between day and night. (She's touring the UK at the moment). Ott comes across as a loner attracted to melancholy. "The darker the better," she says of her influences. Finally she talks about a personal tragedy. DAVID McGILLIVRAY

11.00am Radio 4

Pauline Harvey's words stop you in your tracks. "I'm still a mum of two girls, but only one is living." Harvey's daughter Abigail, who died as a result of her having an extremely rare chromosome disorder, was cared for at Ty Hafan, a children's hospice in the Vale of Glamorgan. Justin Wiggan's soundscape is interspersed with the testimony of families whose lives have brought them into the world of Ty Hafan, and it evokes the many aspects of the hospice's special character, by no means all of them sombre. Fine work from producer Adele Armstrong on a programme broadcast to mark Children's Hospice Week.

Today's Choices

The Evidence: Vaccination

3.05pm BBC World Service Vaccination is one of the 20th century's biggest public health successes. The UK, for example, attained WHO measles elimination status in 2017, but continued debate around the MMR vaccine, right across western Europe, has meant that blanket elimination has ceased and outbreaks of measles have been on the increase. In other parts of the world, the same debate occurs but around different diseases. In Japan it's focused on the HPV vaccine (the virus that can lead to cervical cancer), and in Kenya, tetanus. The Evidence looks at the myriad factors that can influence people's reluctance to go ahead with vaccination, concluding in a discussion led by Shaimaa Khalil around the ethics of mandatory vaccination. What right do people have not to vaccinate?

Today's Choices

11.15am/9.15pm Radio 4 Extra Based on a rail journey he took in the 1950s, Philip Larkin's poem The Whitsun Weddings describes how a passenger gradually becomes aware of a stream of newlyweds joining the train. Years later, in this eloquent verse drama first broadcast in 1999, writer Kathleen Jamie imagines what has happened to four of the couples, interspersed with lines from Larkin's original work. Eileen Atkins (above) is Audrey, who's "failed on ladyhood" but more pointedly is now widowed. George, meanwhile, is keen to renew his wedding vows. In contrast, Peter recalls the breakdown of his marriage. And Paula, the daughter of the fourth couple, tries in vain to reconcile her parents' strait-laced values with her progressive ideals. The

poem. CHRIS GARDNER

Paul Merton tends to be brilliantly funny without a script, constricted with one. In this sitcom, piloted last year, he seems ill-at-ease, even though playing pretty much himself, a stand-up comic. In the show's original concept, Merton was confronted by an obsessed fan (played by his wife Suki Webster, who also wrote the script). Radio 4 has commissioned only two new episodes, and the caution is understandable. The initial crazy conflict has gone and Mr and Mrs Merton are now in a conventional relationship. DAVID McGILLIVRAY

FRIDAY Radio

Today's Choices

Science and Religion 11.00am Radio 4

Are science and religion at war? In the first in a three-part series, Nick Spencer (of Goldsmiths. London, and Christian think-tank Theos) takes a look back at what he terms the "simplistic warfare narrative" of these supposedly feuding disciplines. From the libraries of the Islamic world to the work of 13th-century bishop Robert Grosseteste in maths and natural sciences, Spencer draws on the expertise of a variety of academics to argue that there has long been an interdependence between the two. I felt one or two moments of consternation ("There are probably more flat-earthers [believing the earth to be flat] around today than there were back then...") and with so many characters in the unfolding 1,000-year narrative, some may wish for a biographical dictionary at their elbow... I certainly did. Yet somehow Spencer produces an interesting and informative treatise from all the detail. SUE ROBINSON

The Verb

10.00pm Radio 3

I was recently castigated for using the word "nice": "Such an unimaginative way of describing something." I forget the context but not my rush of indignation. Just as other words have been reclaimed – eg: gay men grabbing "queer" with both hands – so I strenuously believe that "nice" deserves a swift rehabilitation. Stating that "I've had a nice day" isn't a throwaway line, it speaks to me. Joining Ian McMillan to debate the issue are author Tessa Hadley, writer Jesse Schwenk and poet Brian Bilston. Will they echo my thoughts? Nice if they do... CHRIS GARDNER

Face behind the voice

Becca Bryers Multi Story podcast series

Age 32 Current job Producer/ presenter of the Multi Story podcasts, which feature personal stories gleaned from across the

39 English BBC Local Radio stations. The second series started last month. Catch up on BBC Sounds.

CV Took part in student radio at the University of Nottingham, also working part-time as arts reporter at BBC Radio Leicester. Then BBC broadcast assistant, writer for the Where I Live website, BBC online news journalist, then weekend producer for Radio Leicester in 2011. Producer/presenter for Multi Story podcast series since October 2018. Best moment "Winning gold at the British Podcast Awards in May. They accidentally flashed our logo on screen early – and before I knew it I was up on stage, with an award and Katie Piper!" Worst moment "One day when I was producing a show, one of the team slipped and broke their leg – I had to call an ambulance, while we were live on air!" Off air "I live in Leicester with my boyfriend Paul and our cat Indi. We're constantly battling to keep our Victorian house upright! And I'm fairly active -I've joined a running club, I play netball, and I've taken up kickboxing."

First radio memory "I used to listen to Rae Earl reading excerpts from her teenage diaries on Leicester Sound later made into the TV series My Mad Fat Diary. Years later, at Radio Leicester, I actually got to work with her!"

Favourite broadcasters "I'm massively influenced by podcasters – my "radio god" is Ira Glass on This American Life. So natural, I love his philosophy of storytelling. And I enjoy Shaun Keaveny's slightly off-key style of broadcasting!" Ambition "To keep making programmes and telling stories that excite me - and to just get better at it. And to get the word out there about Multi Story." Dream job "I'm doing it. But one day I'd really like to work on This American Life!" Secret skills "My dad is a huge vinyl collector. He taught me from an early age about niche 60s and 70s record labels - so I'm good at identifying rare vinyl in charity shops!" CAROLINE MEYER

Current job Producer/ presenter of the Multi Story podcasts, which feature personal stories gleaned from across the

The second series started last month. Catch up on BBC Sounds.

University of Nottingham, also working part-time as arts reporter at BBC Radio Leicester. Then BBC broadcast assistant, writer for the Where I Live website, BBC online news journalist, then weekend producer for Radio Leicester in 2011. Producer/presenter for Multi Story podcast series since October 2018. Best moment "Winning gold at the British Podcast Awards in May. They accidentally flashed our logo on screen early – and before I knew it I was up on stage, with an award and Katie Piper!" Worst moment "One day when I was producing a show, one of the team slipped and broke their leg - I had to call an ambulance, while we were live on air!" Off air "I live in Leicester with my boyfriend Paul and our cat Indi. We're constantly battling to keep our Victorian house upright! And I'm fairly active -I've joined a running club, I play netball, and I've taken up kickboxing."

First radio memory "I used to listen to Rae Earl reading excerpts from her teenage diaries on Leicester Sound later made into the TV series My Mad Fat Diary. Years later, at Radio Leicester, I actually got to work with her!"

Favourite broadcasters "I'm massively influenced by podcasters – my "radio god" is Ira Glass on This American Life. So natural, I love his philosophy of storytelling. And I enjoy Shaun Keaveny's slightly off-key style of broadcasting!" Ambition "To keep making programmes and telling stories that excite me – and to just get better at it. And to get the word out there about Multi Story." Dream job "I'm doing it. But one day I'd really like to work on This American Life!" Secret skills "My dad is a huge vinyl collector. He taught me from an early age about niche 60s and 70s record labels - so I'm good at identifying rare vinyl in charity shops!" CAROLINE MEYER

Becca Bryers Multi Story podcast series

Age 32 Current job Producer/ presenter of the Multi Story podcasts, which feature personal stories gleaned from across the

39 English BBC Local Radio stations. The second series started last month. Catch up on BBC Sounds.

CV Took part in student radio at the University of Nottingham, also working part-time as arts reporter at BBC Radio Leicester. Then BBC broadcast assistant, writer for the Where I Live website, BBC online news journalist, then weekend producer for Radio Leicester in 2011. Producer/presenter for Multi Story podcast series since October 2018. Best moment "Winning gold at the British Podcast Awards in May. They accidentally flashed our logo on screen early – and before I knew it I was up on stage, with an award and Katie Piper!" Worst moment "One day when I was producing a show, one of the team slipped and broke their leg – I had to call an ambulance, while we were live on air!" Off air "I live in Leicester with my boyfriend Paul and our cat Indi. We're constantly battling to keep our Victorian house upright! And I'm fairly active -I've joined a running club, I play netball, and I've taken up kickboxing."

First radio memory "I used to listen to Rae Earl reading excerpts from her teenage diaries on Leicester Sound later made into the TV series My Mad Fat Diarv. Years later, at Radio Leicester. I actually got to work with her!"

Favourite broadcasters "I'm massively influenced by podcasters – my "radio god" is Ira Glass on This American Life. So natural, I love his philosophy of storytelling. And I enjoy Shaun Keaveny's slightly off-key style of broadcasting!" Ambition "To keep making programmes and telling stories that excite me - and to just get better at it. And to get the word out there about Multi Story." Dream job "I'm doing it. But one day I'd really like to work on This American Life!" Secret skills "My dad is a huge vinyl collector. He taught me from an early age about niche 60s and 70s record labels - so I'm good at identifying rare vinyl in charity shops!" CAROLINE MEYER

Becca Bryers Multi Story podcast series

Age 32 Current job Producer/ presenter of the Multi Story podcasts, which feature personal stories gleaned from across the

39 English BBC Local Radio stations. The second series started last month. Catch up on BBC Sounds.

CV Took part in student radio at the University of Nottingham, also working part-time as arts reporter at BBC Radio Leicester. Then BBC broadcast assistant, writer for the Where I Live website, BBC online news journalist, then weekend producer for Radio Leicester in 2011. Producer/presenter for Multi Story podcast series since October 2018. Best moment "Winning gold at the British Podcast Awards in May. They accidentally flashed our logo on screen early – and before I knew it I was up on stage, with an award and Katie Piper!" Worst moment "One day when I was producing a show, one of the team slipped and broke their leg – I had to call an ambulance, while we were live on air!" Off air "I live in Leicester with my boyfriend Paul and our cat Indi. We're constantly battling to keep our Victorian house upright! And I'm fairly active -I've joined a running club, I play netball, and I've taken up kickboxing."

First radio memory "I used to listen to Rae Earl reading excerpts from her teenage diaries on Leicester Sound later made into the TV series My Mad Fat Diary. Years later, at Radio Leicester, I actually got to work with her!"

Favourite broadcasters "I'm massively influenced by podcasters – my "radio god" is Ira Glass on This American Life. So natural, I love his philosophy of storytelling. And I enjoy Shaun Keaveny's slightly off-key style of broadcasting!" Ambition "To keep making programmes and telling stories that excite me – and to just get better at it. And to get the word out there about Multi Story." Dream job "I'm doing it. But one day I'd really like to work on This American Life!" Secret skills "My dad is a huge vinyl collector. He taught me from an early age about niche 60s and 70s record labels - so I'm good at identifying rare vinyl in charity shops!" CAROLINE MEYER

CV Took part in student radio at the University of Nottingham, also working part-time as arts reporter at BBC Radio Leicester. Then BBC broadcast assistant, writer for the Where I Live website, BBC online news journalist, then weekend producer for Radio Leicester in 2011. Producer/presenter for Multi Story podcast series since October 2018. Best moment "Winning gold at the British Podcast Awards in May. They accidentally flashed our logo on screen early – and before I knew it I was up on stage, with an award and Katie Piper!" Worst moment "One day when I was producing a show, one of the team slipped and broke their leg – I had to call an ambulance, while we were live on air!" Off air "I live in Leicester with my boyfriend Paul and our cat Indi. We're constantly battling to keep our Victorian house upright! And I'm fairly active -I've joined a running club, I play netball, and I've taken up kickboxing."

First radio memory "I used to listen to Rae Earl reading excerpts from her teenage diaries on Leicester Sound later made into the TV series My Mad Fat Diary. Years later, at Radio Leicester, I actually got to work with her!"

Favourite broadcasters "I'm massively influenced by podcasters – my "radio god" is Ira Glass on This American Life. So natural, I love his philosophy of storytelling. And I enjoy Shaun Keaveny's slightly off-key style of broadcasting!" Ambition "To keep making programmes and telling stories that excite me – and to just get better at it. And to get the word out there about Multi Story." Dream job "I'm doing it. But one day I'd really like to work on This American Life!" Secret skills "My dad is a huge vinyl collector. He taught me from an early age about niche 60s and 70s record labels - so I'm good at identifying rare vinyl in charity shops!" CAROLINE MEYER

Producer/presenter for Multi Story podcast series since October 2018. Best moment "Winning gold at the British Podcast Awards in May. They accidentally flashed our logo on screen early – and before I knew it I was up on stage, with an award and Katie Piper!" Worst moment "One day when I was producing a show, one of the team slipped and broke their leg – I had to call an ambulance, while we were live on air!" Off air "I live in Leicester with my boyfriend Paul and our cat Indi. We're constantly battling to keep our Victorian house upright! And I'm fairly active -I've joined a running club, I play netball, and I've taken up kickboxing."

First radio memory "I used to listen to Rae Earl reading excerpts from her teenage diaries on Leicester Sound later made into the TV series My Mad Fat Diary. Years later, at Radio Leicester, I actually got to work with her!"

Favourite broadcasters "I'm massively influenced by podcasters – my "radio god" is Ira Glass on This American Life. So natural, I love his philosophy of storytelling. And I enjoy Shaun Keaveny's slightly off-key style of broadcasting!" Ambition "To keep making programmes and telling stories that excite me – and to just get better at it. And to get the word out there about Multi Story." Dream job "I'm doing it. But one day I'd really like to work on This American Life!" Secret skills "My dad is a huge vinyl collector. He taught me from an early age about niche 60s and 70s record labels - so I'm good at identifying rare vinyl in charity shops!" CAROLINE MEYER

The current political chaos is a gift, says Mick Herron, as he returns with the latest volume in his satirical spy series

NE PERSON, AT least, seems to be benefiting from the ongoing chaos of Brexit Britain. "It's an appalling thing to say, but the worse the world gets, the easier it is for a writer of my stamp to indulge themselves," confesses Mick Herron, chuckling sheepishly.

Herron, 56, is the author of the critically lauded, gallows-humoured Slough House spy series. Joe Country, the sixth full novel in the series (there are also a couple of novellas), is published this month. Slough House is an imagined, tumbledown, decrepit four-storey office building in London's Barbican. Geographically, it's an easy Tube journey or tourist bus ride from the Secret Intelligence Service's fortress-like Vauxhall headquarters.

Culturally, however, it's an imaginative world apart. Slough House is an internal exile, where spies who have messed up and are known as Slow Horses (also the first title in the series), get banished to eke out their working days on bureaucratic dead-end tasks and surveillance jobs that barely get them out of the office. Its denizens have issues like alcoholism, drug addiction and anger management, have mislaid documents of national importance or have made an enemy of someone in power. What all these disgraced, dysfunctional spooks have in common – other than their Hogarthian boss, the outrageous Jackson Lamb – is that they once saw themselves as James Bond figures and yearn to be brought back in from the cold.

The books are set in contemporary Britain and skewer the ineptitude and connivance of our political class. Our interview takes place just in advance of one of the more outlandish entertained by a Prime Minister who has already resigned.

"The more chaotic the political situation gets the easier it is to write a spy fiction that has an element of bleakness and satire within it," says Herron, "because so much of what is going on, and so many of our worries about where our democracy is going, and who is really controlling our democracy and our technology, are fodder."

The "aspect of failure" was what first inspired his creation. He was keen to write an ensemble thriller, and spies appealed because with a procedural police series there would be less imaginative scope. "I wanted to write about people who were not particularly good at what they were doing. But perhaps it just reflected where I was at the time."

Boehm private detective series, largely set in Oxford – where the Newcastle-raised Herron has lived since his student days. But he was also working full-time, as a specialist legal sub-editor in London, commuting five days a week from Oxford, then writing for a precious hour or so each evening.

The Slough House series was not an immediate success. Its first UK publisher dropped it, although the Americans kept faith. By happy accident, the editorial director of Herron's current UK publisher, John Murray, came across an American edition of Slow Horses at London's Liverpool Street station, and determined to relaunch the mordantly funny series more splashily, in the process garnering rave reviews and prizes.

Now a television drama is in pre-production with See-Saw Films, makers of Top of the Lake and Steve McQueen's Widows, with Will Smith, a writer on Veep and The Thick of It, as head writer. Meanwhile, the creator of Waking the Dead, Barbara Machin, is adapting his Zoë Boehm series.

Two years ago, Herron was finally able to become a full-time writer, although his characters remain grounded in Slough House. "I suppose the whole nature of genre fiction is that it is geared towards escapism, so it's a bit counterintuitive setting a spy book in an office," Herron admits.

The books are comedic, but many of these characters, like the honourable but struggling alcoholic Catherine Standish or the flawed hero River Cartwright, retain the readers' sympathy. "I hope so," says Herron. "So many of our lives are dependent on things that happen in the blink of an eye. I write from the inside out when I'm writing characters, so I always empathise with them."

ven bully boss Jackson Lamb, whose habits are unspeakable, who always says the unsayable and for whom Herron saves his best lines? "I don't want to go too deeply into his thoughts or feelings," admits the creator of this repellent yet oddly charismatic character. "But when he is there, I try to turn it up to 11, because that's what Lamb demands.

"I want him to behave in a repellent way and say repellent things, but not to repel readers. They should perk up when he appears and enjoy being discomfited by him."

The inspiration for Joe Country, a tale of corruption that buries some ghosts and revives others, came to Herron in a single "Chaucerian" image. "I saw a character sitting under a tree in a snow-filled landscape. I knew the character was dead and who they were, so the challenge was to come up with a plot that provided the context for that to happen." He is already writing the next book in the series, with no plans to decommission his spooks.

Herron, who is often inspired by his travels on the literary circuit, has just returned from a literary festival in the Estonian capital of Tallinn. Might he allow Slough House's beleaguered bureaucrats a jaunt to the Baltic states? "They never get to go on foreign assignments," he says, laughing. "They might read about it in the paper." Gardening

ARDENS AREN'T ALL about hard graft. They're also about kicking back and enjoying the summer outdoors with family and friends, surrounded by the natural world. Creating a comfortable outdoor living space to eat, entertain and relax in is easy, but there are a few design questions that are worth thinking about to bring it all together.

Where do you want to sit?

When I design a garden, the first decision I make is where the seating area will be. I'll walk around the garden considering the best spot for sun, shade, privacy, views into (and out of) the garden, and what feels the most comfortable spot. The most common place for a seating area is as an add-on to the back of the house, as it's easily accessible and can help link the exterior to the interior – but don't just choose it by default; it's not always the best choice. Placing the seating area further down the garden, or towards the end, will provide an all-important destination point and may be the ideal spot for a secluded sanctuary surrounded by plants.

Size and surface?

If you're planning to lay a new surface (such as paving, decking or gravel), measure it out and be sure to make it as generous as possible. It's amazing how much the area will shrink when you introduce some furniture. During the planning stage, you should think about incorporating areas for planting around and maybe within it to soften edges and increase the feeling of being immersed in nature.

• Need some shade?

Perhaps you want to increase shade, or the sense of seclusion and privacy? Permanent structures are ideal for scented climbers to grow up and over and can help to clearly define an outdoor living space. Alternatively, temporary structures such elegant parasols and sail shades will do the business throughout the summer months and can then be stored away for winter.

Decide on the furniture

The furniture you choose will help to style the space. Do you want a dining table to sit at, or more relaxed furniture for lounging? Comfort is as important as appearance, and these days there are some great outdoor products to choose from that can be left out all year.

Finishing touches
These can increase an area's functionality and help to style it and make it more inviting at the same time. Fire pits, barbecues, outdoor kitchens and garden lighting (from simple candleholders to solar-powered kits) can make a huge difference to how you may use an area.

A packet of Hesperis matronalis seed goes a long way. This one's a magnet for wildlife and will probably self-seed around. Its masses of purple flowers (there's also a white variety) look great in cottage-style borders.

FIELD SCABIOUS

The native wild Knautia arvensis is a good choice, along with the many garden varieties available. Regular deadheading will help "Butterfly Blue" (left) keep going all summer.

VERBENA BONARIENSIS

With clusters of purple flowers, these tall plants go on for ages. I've got it in front of my kitchen windows as it doesn't block the light.

PERENNIAL ASTERS

There is a huge choice of asters that flower in July and August – Michaelmas daisies go on through to October – and all provide nectar.

GLOBE THISTLE

The Echinops is a herbaceous perennial with perfectly spherical blue or blue-grey flower heads held high on stems.

GLOBE ARTICHOKE

A tall perennial with large, thistle-like lilac flowers, Cynara cardunculus is a magnet for butterflies.

BUTTERFLY BUSH

The Buddleja (right) attracts a huge range of butterflies.

LAVENDER

Another garden favourite for full sun, with many different varieties and sizes to choose from.

VALERIAN

With red, pink or white flowers, Centranthus ruber is a cottage garden plant that self-seeds into gaps in walls and paving.

Armistead Maupin's Tales of the City Netflix

HEN I FIRST got off the bus years ago, I had the strangest feeling that I'd come home," says Laura Linney's character in Netflix's latest literary adaptation, Armistead Maupin's Tales of the City, a sequel to Channel 4's 1990s original dramatisation. Beginning in the 1970s, Maupin's stories put the spotlight on San Francisco's LGBT community, but they're also a love letter to this liberal outpost on the Pacific Coast.

Ever since it was founded in the Gold Rush, San Francisco has been a haven for dreamers and rebels: immigrants, beatniks, hippies, gay men and women and Silicon Valley's techies have all flocked here. For Brits, it's usually a stop-off on a cruise, coastal rail journey or road trip, but it's worth spending time getting to know this laidback city and its vibrant neighbourhoods – 48 hours should give you a good start.

DAY ONE

RIDE THE RAILS

Vintage streetcars traverse the city's three-mile thoroughfare, Market Street, and along the waterfront. As well as San Francisco originals, the F Market heritage line has given a home to antique trolley cars from across the globe, so you could find yourself in a rare open-topped Blackpool boat tram or a 1928 Milan streetcar.

GRAB A GOURMET BRUNCH

Hop off at the grand old Ferry Building, where you'll find artisan souvenirs and a high-end food hall: how about a slab of mushroom cheesecake from Cheesequakes, or bourbon and cornflakes ice cream from Humphry Slocombe's parlour? Work off the sugar by strolling along the palmlined Embarcadero waterfront, drinking in the bay views.

CATCH A BOAT

Boats to Alcatraz Island, the notorious maximum-security prison, leave from Pier 33. The haunting audio tour of its claustrophobic cells and solitary confinement "dark holes" includes interviews with ex-inmates. Alcatraz cruises need to be booked at least a month in advance and can be combined with a trip to Angel Island, which used to be a holding area for immigrants seeking US citizenship.

TOAST THE BEAT GENERATION

In 1957, the owner of the City Lights (citylights. com) bookstore in North Beach was arrested on charges of corrupting America's youth after publishing Allen Ginsberg's poem Howl. When you've finished browsing its crammed shelves, head next door to cocktail bar Vesuvio (vesuvio. com), a favourite hangout of Jack Kerouac and his fellow Beatniks, and order a martini – a drink invented in San Francisco.

BOOK A TABLE IN LITTLE ITALY

In the early 1900s Italian immigrants settled in North Beach and it's still full of espresso bars, authentic delis and old-school trattorias. Former Beatnik favourite Tosca Café (toscacafesf.com) has been scrubbed up and serves the city's best meatballs. The best place to try SF-style seafood soup, cioppino, is Sotto Mare (sottomaresf.com), while you can choose between a Neapolitan-style chewy crust, a thin-crust pizza Romana or a Californian pie at Tony's Pizza Napoletana (tonyspizzanapoletana.com), owned by a 13-time World Pizza champion.

DAY TWO

SPOT MURALS IN THE MISSION

In the late 1700s, Spanish Catholic priests founded a religious outpost in what's now the city's oldest neighbourhood. Their adobe church, Mission Dolores, was built by the Ohlone people – the natives of San Francisco Bay – who put their stamp on it with a mural that was covered up for two centuries. At weekends, locals flock to the adjacent park (which has a cameo in Tales of the City) to picnic and enjoy the skyline views. Book a place on Wild SF's (wildsftours.com) excellent street art walking tour to learn more about this working-class Latin-American neighbourhood.

ENJOY A LATIN-AMERICAN LUNCH

A stroll down Valencia Street reveals evidence of the Mission District's latest upheaval: the fine dining restaurants, organic bakeries and hipster cafés frequented by Silicon Valley's techies, who have moved in and made rents soar. Fortunately, the Mission's beloved taquerias have so far survived. Refuel with a hearty burrito from Taqueria El Farolito (elfarolitosf.com), or join the hipsters at rooftop bar El Techo de Lolinda (eltechosf.com).

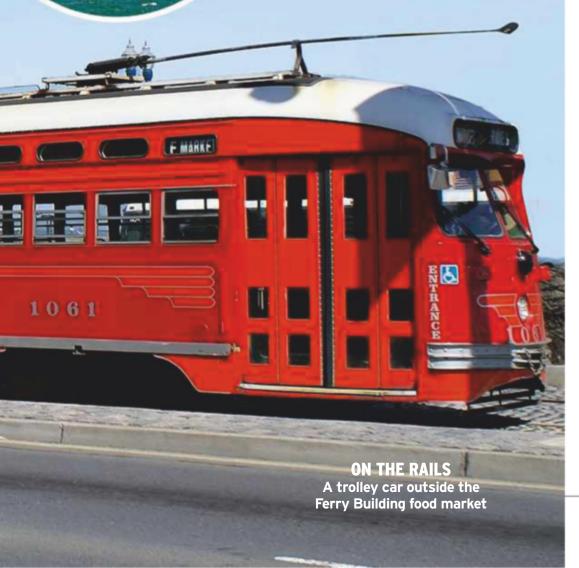

TAKE A WALK IN THE PARK

When the sun shines, Golden Gate Park's 1,000 acres of lawns and lakes are the place to be. And if the weather turns, you can take cover in its myriad museums. The California Academy of Sciences is a pioneering natural history museum, planetarium, aquarium and rainforest under one roof, while the park's oldest landmark is the delightful Conservatory of Flowers, which was modelled on Kew Gardens.

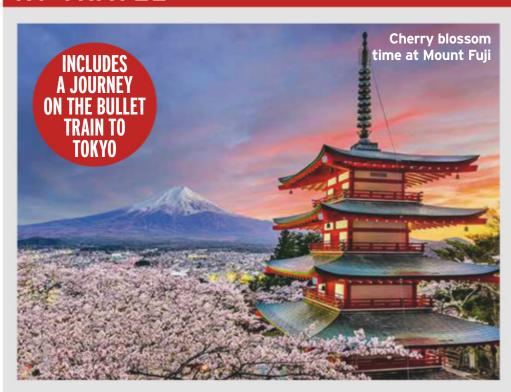

SPLURGE ON SOME FAR-OUT SHOPPING

The epicentre of the Summer of Love was Upper Haight, the district east of Golden Gate Park. In the 80s, the yuppies moved in, but the mural-daubed high street still clings to its hippie past. Stock up on vinyl records at Amoeba Music, anarchist 'zines in the Bound Together Bookstore and tie-dye tees at Jammin on Haight. CLAIRE WEBB

Be wise to pension tax

If you're taking cash out of your pension, the tax man will want a slice, says Paul Lewis

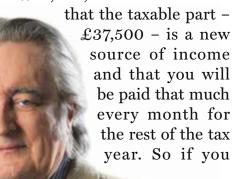

HE MOVE TO take money out of our pensions shows no sign of decline. In the past 12 months, people aged 55 or over cashed in more than £8 billion from their pension pots. Since pension freedom began in April 2015, we have taken out more than £25 billion.

Cashing in a pension may or may not be a good idea for an individual. But it is bringing in a lot of money for the Chancellor. The first 25% of a pension fund is usually tax-free,

6 A higher rate of tax is due on the money but the rest is taxable in the year you take it out. That can mean a higher rate of tax is due on the money.

However, the Revenue goes even further. If you take out, say, £50,000, HMRC will assume take it out this month, June, HMRC will assume your income has magically increased by £37,500 a year, pushing you into the top 45% tax bracket.

For example, your other income is £26,000 and you take out your pension pot of £50,000. Deduct the 25% tax free, which is £12,500, and you're left with £37,500 to be taxed. Adding it to your income gives £63,500. The actual tax on that pension should be £10,200, about 20% of your total pot.

owever, HMRC will take far more than that Lbecause it will assume that extra taxable income will happen every month for the rest of the tax year. At the moment, for example, it will deduct £15,155 in income tax, which is £4,955 more than the net tax of £10,200 you actually owe. The exact amounts will vary, depending on when in the tax year you cash in your pension.

You can either reclaim that excess tax immediately, or wait for HMRC to - hopefully - do the correct sums during the next tax year. I would claim it now.

Work out the tax on cashing in your pension pot at fidelity.co.uk where you search "pension tax calculator". Claim the tax back now at gov.uk and search "P53" if you took all of your pot or "P55" if you took part of your pot.

HAVE YOU THOUGHT ABOUT YOUR SOCIAL MEDIA AFTER PASSING AWAY?

Getting the right funeral plan has never been easier

When someone passes away there's so much more than simply material things that are left behind. In addition to the emotional distress loved ones are left with, there is also a digital footprint that most times is not even considered.

As time goes by, the grieving process continues and it can be upsetting for the loved ones to see reminders on platforms such as Facebook, about a lost close one.

Social media is something that may not have come up in many wills or arrangements until recent times. Each platform has a different policy when it comes to a user's death but the majority won't give anyone else access due to privacy policies.

There are ways to overcome these issues as nowadays some social media platforms, such as Facebook, will offer an option to either assign a 'legacy contact', who will be able to manage the account (with limited access) or simply request for the account to be deleted. Other social media platforms, like Twitter, will automatically delete the account if this has been inactive for more than 6 months.

In addition, there are other things that you can plan for regarding end of life, such as your final send-off. There's never the perfect time to talk about this topic, however, planning your funeral in advance is a sensible decision.

Radio Times has teamed up with Dignity, one of the UK's leading funeral plan providers. Dignity have already helped over 910,000° people plan for their funeral in advance and will be there for the ones you love, when they need it most.

Why choose the Dignity Prepaid Funeral Plan?

The Dignity Prepaid Funeral Plan allows you to pay for your funeral in advance – once paid for, you will never pay more for the services included in the plan.

To request your FREE guide to the Funeral Plan visit radiotimes.com/funerals or call 0800 033 4716, quoting RAD95ND

Is it true that the origin of "not having a pot to pee in" lies in the sale of urine to industry? David Driscoll Hove, East Sussex

Urine has held great value over the centuries. The Romans collected it for the tanning of leather, while special containers were developed in > medieval times so that it could be shipped to the heartlands of the textile industry, where it was used to help bind the dye to the cloth. But "not having a pot to pee in" has different beginnings, being a shortening, in the early 20th century, of "not to have a pot to piss in, nor a window to throw it from", which refers to the historical ritual of emptying chamber pots from windows, often to the chagrin of pedestrians below. The image is of poverty so extreme that there's not even the means to buy a receptacle for the most basic of human needs.

LETTER OF THE WEEK

No shouting here

It was a treat on the morning of Donald Trump's arrival in the UK (3 June) to see Vince Cable and Michael Howard standing side by side to be interviewed by Dan Walker on BBC Breakfast. Both expressed themselves articulately and succinctly. Neither interrupted the other or gave cause to be interrupted, and the interviewer got answers to all his questions without himself interrupting.

Back in the distant days when broadcasters and public figures in general accepted a responsibility to set an example of courtesy, such an experience would have been unremarkable. Nowadays the norm is to allow nobody more than a few words before shouting them down, and the twin results are that nobody's views get adequately expressed and that uncivil manners are portrayed as acceptable.

So, bouquets please to all three gentlemen, and please could everyone in broadcasting observe and follow their example?

..... BRITAIN'S GOT COLIN

This year's final of Britain's Got Talent (2 June, ITV) was the best ever. There were several potential worthy winners, but sweet Chelsea Pensioner, 89-year-old Colin Thackery, deservedly won the hearts - and votes - of the nation with his beautiful singing and modest, gentle demeanour. The choir of his fellow Pensioners elevated his performance to a rousing level.

He is just right for the Royal Variety Show. I'm sure the royal family will love him, too. Of all the contestants, he's the least in need of a career boost, but I have no doubt many of the others will go on to have success in their chosen fields.

The judges' wild card, 12-yearold dancers, Libby and Charlie, performed a stunning routine - with only a day to prepare. I hope they will be invited to appear as guests on Strictly Come Dancing this autumn - they deserve it.

Well done to all the finalists. Rosemary Marshall New Malden, Surrey

FIELD OF DREAMS

Simon Barnes (RT 1–7 June) talks about lines that capture the real truth about football. Here is one I feel beats them all.

It was an amateur cup match between ICI Alkali and Oxford. Oxford were clearly the better team and took a 7-0 lead. However, with 15 minutes to go ICI Alkali scored three times. The crowd that had been so quiet began to roar. An old chap near me in the crowd uttered the words that capture the heart of football: "It's not possible, but they just might do it."

Alan Keith Austin Sheffield

BOMBS OVER LIVERPOOL

I must congratulate Channel 5 for The Blitz: Britain on Fire (27–29) May), a moving documentary of the horrors of the bombing of Liverpool. The accounts were sensitively produced and shown to us in a factual, informative way.

I used to talk to my father about his war work. He grew up in France, only escaping to England in 1940 when the Germans started to invade. He said that he wanted to "get back at the enemy", and immediately on arriving in this country joined up in the Army. He was in the Loyal Regiment (Infantry) in the Midlands when the raids on Liverpool began and was drafted to assist with firefighting and rescue work.

Dad never described what he experienced while carrying out his duties in Liverpool, but it must have been such a shock to see the devastation as shown in the TV programme.

He later became a SOE agent parachuted into France, but that's another story!

David Shelton Worthing, West Sussex

D-DAY REMEMBERED

The BBC should be applauded for its coverage of the events to mark the 75th anniversary of the D-Day landings (6 June). The solemnity and significance of the memorial service were most successfully conveyed. This contrasted with the more upbeat and informative coverage of the previous day's celebrations.

In our present political woes, being reminded about the United Kingdom's significant involvement in the liberation of France, and subsequently Europe, makes me all the sadder that those ties with Europe are soon to be sacrificed. We are reminded that progress, peace and, ultimately, security come from confederation and not separation.

A LETTER TO MUM

If RT had billed Mum (BBC2) as "an intense drama of relationships within a closely knit group expect tears, passion, buried tensions", I might not have chosen to watch it as a relaxing evening half-hour, with some good laughs. Even the title, Mum - what could > funny. And it was: Stefan Golaszewski and the terrific cast give us the laughter, but with economy, sharpness and compassion, they also let us see something of what goes on under our surfaces, and what happens when it erupts. Morgan Woodland ends for good this week.

NO BALL FOR KIDS

The cricket World Cup is under way, but only on Sky. I wonder how many child cricketers are unable to watch this great event. Highlights are tucked away at 10pm on Channel 4, just when younger children will be in bed. Will this bring more young cricketers into the game? No.

Goodness me, how I treasure my memories of Arnott, Benaud and all the other great commentators on the BBC, TV or radio. Free to air, as it should be for such a prestigious event. Thankfully we still have TMS! Stephen Young Chesterfield, Derbyshire

WORTHY OF WOGAN

Many thanks to Radio 2 for continuing to provide good humour. I find Tony Blackburn and Mark Radcliffe very amusing, and my favourite is Paul O'Grady, whose interaction with his producer Malcolm reminds me of the great Terry Wogan. Des Oakley Hemel Hempstead, Hertfordshire

There seems to be something fundamentally wrong with the Scottish BBC that it is willing to deprive its viewers of a chunk of this well-loved programme (made in Scotland for Scotland), in the middle of the growing season.

63 AND COUNTING

The new series of 63 Up (ITV) was a surprisingly emotional watch. We see these people every seven years and, although we don't know them personally, we've come to care about them.

The snapshots we've seen of their lives reflect all of us in many ways, not just those who are of a similar age to the participants. The divorces of previous years were sad, but there has been something deeply affecting about watching cancer and death impact upon the lives of these familiar strangers.

MUSIC MATTERS

Other letter writers have commented on the excellence of Gentleman Jack (Sunday BBC1), but I'd like to know more about the wonderful music. I know that the song Gentleman Jack is written and performed by O'Hooley and Tidow, but what about the rest of the music, is that of their composition and performance too? Is the soundtrack likely to be available on CD?

Mary Little, St Albans, Hertfordshire You're right – closing theme Gentleman Jack is by folk duo Belinda O'Hooley and Heidi Tidow, who, like Anne Lister and the drama's writer Sally Wainwright, also have Yorkshire roots: they're from Huddersfield, a few miles from Lister's home, Shibden Hall. The track is available on their 2012 album The Fragile.

The show's score, however, is by Murray Gold (pictured right) who – as a reader noted last week – also provides the soundtrack to Russell T Davies's Years and Years.
Gold is a long-time collaborator with Davies, and has received four Bafta nominations for his work with the writer: once for Queer as Folk (1999) and Casanova (2006) and twice for Doctor Who, for which he was musical director until 2018.

He's also worked on previous Sally Wainwright projects Last Tango in Halifax and Scott and Bailey, while most recently his
A Very English Scandal score earned him a Royal Television Society award. There's no news yet on plans to release the Gentleman Jack score

on CD, so enjoy it while you can!

The title music of Mum (Wed BBC2) is very me! Is it available on a CD, please?

Jill Levack, Horsham, West Sussex
The opening theme to Mum is the song Cups (You're Gonna Miss Me)
by Lulu and the Lampshades.
Unfortunately the 2011 EP it comes from, Cold Feet, is unavailable now, although downloads of the track are available to buy online. The closing theme is the same song, but the version sung by Anna Kendrick in the film Pitch Perfect 3. You can see the clip here: youtube.com/watch?v=lxi9imJZ40M

Thanks to the participants themselves and to Michael Apted and his amazing team – the 7 Up series has grown into nothing less than the finest and most important series of documentaries in the history of British television.

SPECTACULAR FEAT

What is happening with Cherish Finden's glasses on Bake Off: the Professionals (C4)? By some miraculous sleight of hand she manages to whip them off between bending to criticise the latest offering and it reaching her mouth, only for them to reappear seconds later with no obvious hand-eye communication!

Thinking perhaps this was a one-off continuity issue, I've now observed this strange phenomenon numerous times. Perhaps she should join the ranks of talented magicians on BGT? Lynn Myhre Mitcham, Surrey

FILE UNDER GROWTH

According to Joe Swift in his article on astrantias (RT, 8–14 June), "Being promiscuous and easily grown from seed, growers have developed a wide range of colours." Perhaps if I were a grower I'd be suing for defamation.

View from my sofa

What's the view from your sofa?

At the moment our sofa is sat on some boards, so we've an elevated view of our telly. We've been here in Devon for 41 years, but we're still doing up the cottage. It's just one big room downstairs and at the moment only the sofa, telly and Aga have stayed put.

Do you remember the first TV you had in the house?

Yes, my mum bought us our first

NOTHING TO WATCH?

MY BOOK I have read Andrea Camilleri's Inspector Montalbano series at least twice. I also romp through John le Carré, and recently read Andrea Levy's Small Island.

MY FILM Old European films are my cup of tea, by directors like Jean-Luc Godard, Federico Fellini and Ingmar Bergman.

MY MUSIC Oh, I'm very oldfashioned. I love Lou Reed, Van Morrison and Jim Morrison – all the Morrisons!

telly when we moved here, just after my first daughter was born. A couple of days later, the licence people knocked on the door and we got fined. We wrote a letter explaining the mitigating circumstances, but it didn't help.

Who controls the remote?

[My husband] Neil watches what I watch! But we seldom watch things when they air because at this time of year I'm out in the garden until 9pm, and I'm away a lot. We enjoy a bit of dark comedy: Fleabag, Frankie Boyle, Toby Jones's sitcom Don't Forget the Driver. I love Scandi crime dramas, too; I'd make much more fuss about [Danish thriller] Follow the Money than Line of Duty. I won't watch third-rate anything, because there isn't enough time in the world.

Which programmes have you enjoyed most recently?

Pose, the drama about the LGBT community's ball culture in 1980s New York, which was on BBC2. It's absolutely wonderful and the clothes are fabulous.

What makes you shout?

Match of the Day. I'm a Manchester United supporter, so I won't watch Liverpool on principle. My dad took me to my first match when I was about eight. I was always keener on football than my two brothers – and much better at it.

What's your earliest TV memory?

I grew up in a very small house in Walkden in Lancashire, and the front of it was my dad's telly shop. I remember watching the Coronation in 1953: the whole street was in the shop, gathered around our projector.

Did any TV programmes help to cultivate your green fingers?

I always loved Gardeners' World.

I used to watch it with my mum

- we'd sit on the couch on Friday night with a gin and orange.

Geoff Hamilton was my absolute favourite presenter.

Now you're part of the show, but you don't seem to have as much screen time these days...

Monty Don is still the kingpin, but they wanted to change the format, partly to be more inclusive: to have someone in a wheelchair, someone who's black. That's happened across lots of TV and I don't resent it at all. I think it's a good thing.

You present Channel 5's Great British Gardens and will be a judge on a series coming soon called Great Gardening Challenge. Why is Channel 5 branching out into gardening? It's a sign of the times. I think it's partly because there's so much concern about the environment, and we're suddenly realising how important our gardens are. People are also becoming more and more conscious of mental health and wellbeing, and being in your garden does you good, doesn't it?

What's the key to your longevity? I think they just don't dare give me the sack! I'm 73 and I've been doing gardening TV for going on 25 years, so I was quite old when

No plans to retire?

I came to it.

Definitely not. I need the money! CLAIRE WEBB
