

WHY?

From Houston, Texas—'Space City U.S.A.'—JAMES CAMERON wonders about the question no-one has stopped to ask amid the clamour to reach the moon

2 THERE must be scores of cities like Houston, Texas: great big elaborate small towns, rich exalted villages immensely meaningful and deadly dull. This kind of city sends its clever sons to people the world. But there is a difference with Houston, Texas: only Houston sends them to people the moon.

I spent some weeks there in growing wonder and admiration and impatience. It was an extraordinary opportunity to see this twentieth-century phenomenon at really close quarters. NASA—the National Aeronautics and Space Administration—gave us the run of what is in fact the heartland and power-house of this futuristic age: the Manned Spacecraft Centre, from which these half-incredible journeys in the void are controlled.

We met scientists, astronauts, visionaries, engineers, computers, and people indistinguishable from computers. We spent our time in the company of people whose bread and butter is the management of the abnormal, and of the electronic intelligences that are their servants—or, some might say, their masters.

This was odd territory for us; our programme is called Cameron Country, and on the face of it a space-centre is the most un-Cameron country imaginable. I am by no means a scientist and have no ambitions to be an astronaut. (If there had been any doubt about that, a spell of claustrophobic trauma in the Apollo command-module simulator made it a certainty.) To be honest, my addiction to space-travel is far from fanatical.

I would still like to consider a moon that had not become a parking-lot for American ironmongery. But there it is: it is a part of the fantasy of life that has to be looked at, and lived with.

The Apollo programme has cost the American people 30 billion dollars, literally an astronomical sum of money. We must accept the principle that it is scientifically valuable, probably militarily inescapable, and that in any case what man can do he must do.

At the same time there is an argument that in a world of present need—and in a nation, the U.S. itself, with 12 million people at poverty-level—this sort of thing could be considered ostentatious self-indulgence. I don't think this is the reasoning that comes through on the programme; perhaps it should have done. It is a programme in which I made many mistakes.

What does come through, I hope, is some of the immense complexity and ingenuity of the Apollo business, its intricacy and computerised assurance, and perhaps some of its visual beauty. Its beauty is not for me, but it has an absolute of its own.

Could I simply imply my feelings through the title we finally, and with much difficulty, agreed for this programme? In space-travel everyone wants to know how big, how far, how much. Nobody asks: why? I don't ask it myself really; if I did I might be told something I don't want to hear.

VON BRAUN

—the man who this week watches as his dreams come true

1 'FOR me it all started with the moon.' That's Dr. Wernher Von Braun's explanation of how he became interested in rocketry. In Britain he is still probably better known as the father of the German V-2 (the notorious rocket that blitzed London only twenty-four years ago), than as the head of the team that designed the Apollo moon-rocket, the Saturn V.

Few men can ever have had such ambitious dreams and lived to see them realised, and even fewer can have persuaded a former enemy country eventually to foot the bill for realising those dreams.

Yet, at the end of the last war—at a time when Dr. Von Braun might well have been lynched if he had set foot in London—the Americans welcomed him and his rocket-pioneering colleagues.

Together with as many unused V-2 rockets as they could collect before the Russians arrived, the Americans shipped Von Braun and his Peenemünde team back to the States, encouraging them to continue their research at White Sands in the New Mexico desert.

Then, when the Marshall Space Flight Centre was established in Huntsville, Alabama, Dr. Von Braun became its Director. He designed rockets for the U.S. Army, and later, when the National Aeronautics and Space Administration was set up, he drew the first blueprints for the Saturn V, the 373-foot colossus which should lift Astronauts Armstrong, Aldrin, and Collins towards the moon.

Out of this World, Tuesday's Documentary, reveals the extraordinary story which led up to Apollo 11, tracing the development of rocketry from the 1920s to the momentous events of this month. It also looks forward, beyond the moon landing. Dr. Von Braun states and shows that within fifteen years men could be on the way to Mars and beyond. JOHN MANSFIELD

—introducing a space series packed with pointers to our galaxy-trotting future

1 THE longest journey has to begin with a single step. So now, as man makes his first hesitant leap to another planet—even though it's just Earth's nearest neighbour—he can legitimately start thinking about voyaging farther out towards whatever other populated worlds may exist.

And it is overwhelmingly probable that there are such worlds. Astronomers say that even if just one in every billion of the known stars possesses planets, and if only one in each billion of such planets is of roughly the same size and composition as earth, then there would still be nearly three million worlds capable of sustaining life like our own.

That's the premise of Star Trek, the new space-adventure series. It looks to a near future in which human behaviour is still much as it is now, but in which space travel is well established. There are planets to be colonised, controlled, policed—and all these jobs concern the starship Enterprise under her captain James Kirk (played by Canadian William Shatner).

Enterprise is a cruiser whose 430-strong crew is drawn from all the former nations of a now-united Earth; and her Science Officer Mr. Spock—a key man in such a vessel—is in fact half Earthman, half Vulcanian.

While Kirk is an instinctive spaceman (in the sense that Drake was an instinctive seaman) Spock is almost as coldly precise as the computers he controls. Played by Leonard Nimoy, he will figure ever more prominently as the series develops.

In the opening episode, appropriately titled 'Where No Man Has Gone Before,' Enterprise happens upon the flight recorder—the 'black box'—of a long vanished space ship. It tells of a force field of almost infinite power and infinite menace . . . MICHAEL WILLIAMS

Welcome to a very special issue...

IN A YEAR that's full of notable anniversaries, this month's 50th anniversary of the first Moon landing feels extra special. As you'll see on the panel on page 12, there are a huge number of programmes marking the occasion on TV and radio this week and next. There are documentaries, a drama-documentary, radio shows, even a Prom (read more about how the Proms are celebrating this historical moment in next week's Radio Times).

But also, we as a magazine are for ever linked with the event because of the issue we brought out in early July 1969. When people discover I'm the editor of RadioTimes, more mention this issue than any other. The incredible cover, the background information, the pull-out posters for the younger members of the family. This week we're proud to reprint the cover of that 1969 issue and all the Apollo 11 feature pages in a pull-out supplement you will want to keep.

Back then, although it wasn't quite as big an operation as the actual Moon landing, it was all hands on (flight) deck when it came to producing this issue. A team of 44 staff put together the magazine, most pages of which were printed in black and white, while the colour pages had to be printed separately, weeks ahead of press date.

Re-live the excitement of the mission across TV and radio over the next few weeks: our listings and choices pages will be highlighting the programmes as they happen. It begins this Wednesday with Eight Days: to The Moon and Back on BBC2 at 9pm, a feature-length drama-documentary that uses previously unheard cockpit audio to illuminate this great story.

Next week, we have another supplement for you, this time our complete guide to the Proms 2019. And Poldark's back, too. So that's next Tuesday, then? See you there.

'I like the pictures as they are'

We should be cautious about "colourising" our history

IT'S THE GREATEST discovery in the history of archaeology. On 26 November 1922 in the Valley of the Kings in Egypt, Howard Carter peered into the tomb of Tutankhamun and saw a host of strange, beautiful objects that had been hidden for nearly 3,500 years. He was struck dumb. Behind him was Lord Carnarvon, who'd rushed from his home at Highclere Castle, better known to you and me as Downton Abbey. "Can you see anything?" he enquired anxiously. Carter could only reply: "Yes, wonderful things."

I have been working on a Channel 5 series – to be broadcast later this year – that provides fresh insights into the life and legend of Tutankhamun. We have used all sorts of techniques to make the story come alive. Those people who know me will not be surprised to learn that I ended up riding a donkey and a camel, as well as learning how to dance as an ancient Egyptian.

But how could we convey the glory of the discovery itself? Carter's team took thousands of photographs and meticulously recorded details of all the objects. Currently some of the artefacts are touring the world in a travelling exhibition (it's coming to London in November). Jordan Lloyd, who specialises in transforming black and white pictures, produced 30 amazing colour versions of these historic prints to spice up the exhibition displays. And some of these are being used in our TV series.

Jordan told me how "colorization", as the Americans call it, is increasingly supported by smart computer programs, but it also involves weeks of research. For this project all the objects were tracked down and photographed with modern cameras. The colours were then made to match. And they still had to add some clever touches to make them appear as dusty as they should after all those centuries.

Some enthusiasts are convinced that with the use of artificial intelligence (AI), a whole new world will open up. The complete colourisation process will be handled by computers at lightning speed. We will finally say goodbye to black and white pictures. Marvellous movies such as

The Dam Busters, Brief Encounter, Some Like It Hot, Dr Strangelove – to mention a few of my favourites – will be dramatically transformed.

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCES HAVE already been made. They Shall Not Grow Old, Peter Jackson's colourised documentary on the First World War, broadcast last year by the BBC, was like a veil being lifted: history was suddenly up close and personal. The colourised photographs of the D-Day landings were also strikingly vivid. But preparing all these pictures is a laborious process. Jordan Lloyd is convinced that instant colourisation to a high standard is still a very long way off.

Our coverage of the drama in the Valley of the Kings was boosted by those pictures, brilliantly altered by what Hollywood used to call "living color". But even if the technology can be made to work, I'm not in favour of a wholesale switch to colour. I usually like the pictures as they are; I find something disconcerting about trying to re-create the past by adding colour in this way. It's not necessarily an improvement. It's a substitute. The results can be so good that they seem false. The old films were designed to be in black and white. Computer experts should be careful how they treat them, and how much they alter any famous archive pictures.

WHAT WE WATCHED

It is a truth universally acknowledged that Andrew Davies's 1995 dramatisation of Pride and Prejudice was one of the best pieces of TV drama ever made. And two years after it first wowed BBC1 audiences, its repeat showing still merited a coveted place on the cover of RT.

The adaptation was of course noted for its strong overtones of sex, culminating in Colin Firth's famous Darcy plunge in the Pemberley pond in the fourth episode while Elizabeth is visiting his home. "I am notorious for this but I think it's one of the nice things in life to write about," Davies told us.

WHAT YOU SAID

Readers seemed to be quite alarmed about perceived implausibilities in The Archers' recent crime wave. Clive Horrobin, Ambridge's serial villain, had just been released from prison, with no word on his potential release restrictions, complained Elaine Grazin of the West Yorkshire Probation Service. While Nicholas Wightwick from Wrexham had issues over the trial of Usha Gupta's attackers and the "incredible swiftness with which criminal and other legal cases reach court in Borsetshire".

REACHING FOR THE MOON

1969 saw humanity's greatest journey as astronauts walked on the Moon. The BBC's 'geek' James Burke, now 82, recalls the edge-of-the-seat drama that was seen around the world

THE EVENING OF 20 July 1969 saw Cliff Michelmore (anchor), Patrick Moore (astronomer) and me (geek) sitting in the amazing BBC Space Studio, ready to broadcast the greatest adventure in history: Apollo 11. For those of you under 50, that's a perfectly straightforward description of a TV set-up. But think again. We weren't doing it in the world you now live in. This was the past.

In 1969, Britain had towns full of soot-blackened buildings, and half the population had no TV or cars – or inside loos. Above all, we lived with an “Iron Curtain” dividing Europe into East and West, opposing sides in the Cold War between the US and the USSR. We all lived with the awareness (buried deep in our brains) that any day might bring a nuclear attack. This is why the Apollo project launched in 1961 by President Kennedy was above all a political statement: that the West was militarily superior to the USSR.

By 1969, there had been eight years of Space Race and Nasa felt like a place on another planet: giant rockets 373 feet high, air-conditioned suites filled by computers and their white-coated acolytes, a new language: “lift-off”, “lunar module”, “splash-down”. All in preparation for the most extraordinary journey humanity had taken since we walked out of Africa 100,000 ▷

JAMES BURKE

◁ years ago. Apollo had the world holding its breath, after three flights (Apollo 8, to the Moon and back; Apollo 9 to test the lunar module; Apollo 10, flying to 50,000ft above the Moon) had whetted appetites for the Main Event.

Add to all this Nasa's own sales pitch: the Great Adventure, starring astronaut supermen and flawless advanced technology. Rising on fire and thunder, how could you fail? Indeed, even to us jaded journalists, Apollo launches were a heart-stopping experience. At three miles from the launch-pad, your entire body shook.

IT WAS A leap of faith in the American Way. Five-and-a-half million parts on the Saturn V launch vehicle. The entire project was the work of 400,000 people in 2,500 companies, organised to produce fail-safe precision for every nut and bolt. And now they were about to throw all this into space with no back-up plan. Small wonder we were hyped up on the day, as we switched on our grainy black-and-white TVs to watch a drama from the future.

The first three days were quiet (only one TV transmission from the ship). Then things got more edge-of-seat on the evening of 20 July. The BBC Space Studio received what Nasa broadcast (and whatever reports BBC correspondents sent), thanks to a single Atlantic satellite. This meant that the missions were to be predominantly a radio show with TV moonwalk inserts.

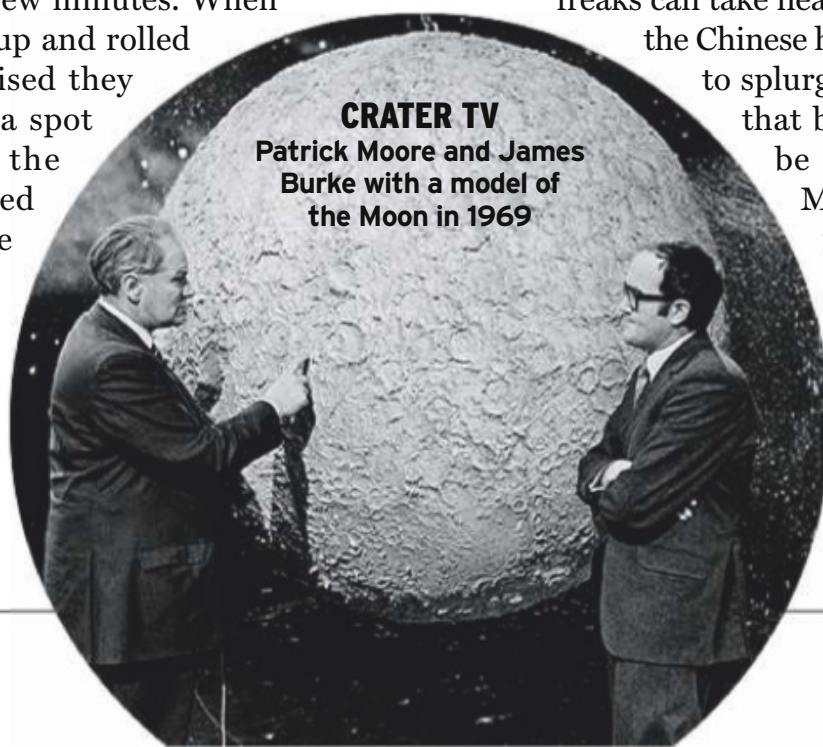

I had previously gone to Houston to interview anything that moved and made little films illustrating every aspect of the mission. These filled in spaces in the coverage. Which left only one supreme rule: never speak when an astronaut was speaking. Harder than it sounds.

'They flew feet first, lying face down till the last few minutes'

Things began to get tense when they fired the lunar module (LM) descent engine to fall out of lunar orbit towards the landing, 13 minutes and 50,000ft down. They flew feet first, lying face down till the last few minutes. When they straightened up and rolled the LM, they realised they were heading for a spot four miles past the planned site. Added to this, alarms were indicating what looked like a computer overload; then, at just 100 feet above the surface, they found themselves over a giant crater filled with boulders. So Neil Armstrong had to find another landing site before they ran out of fuel. After 240,000 miles and three days they landed safely with 30 seconds of fuel left.

CRATER TV

By now late evening in UK, their plan (and ours) was a night's sleep and then the moonwalk. But I heard them doing stuff that indicated a change of plan (preparing their moonwalk suits and not rigging sleep hammocks), so it was time for a rethink and the first-ever BBC all-night TV. "One small step" happened for a UK audience of 22 million at 3.56am.

The moonwalk itself was the easiest bit of all, as they bounced around in shades of black-and-white, and we (and they) all talked about not knowing what we were looking at. And listened to President Nixon wasting valuable science time with his phone call.

After three hours they were back in the LM, and we all got some sleep. Then lunar lift-off, when we didn't know that Armstrong's backpack had broken the engine-firing switch and was repaired with a high-tech wiggle of Buzz Aldrin's pen. Then three days heading home, followed by splashdown in the Pacific and hero worship for the rest of their lives.

FIFTY YEARS ON: was it worth it? Not for the new science and technology. Not even for the view of a vulnerable planet Earth from space (Apollo wasn't the first). However, the project was a part of the weapons race that would eventually bankrupt the USSR. And Apollo certainly advanced the art of management and organisation.

Fifty years on, for the majority of the population it's only history. Been there, done that. As is, to an extent, everything "space" since. Talk of interplanetary derring-do remains back-burner material, given our present focus on earthly matters such as pollution, climate change, starvation and resource depletion. Undoubtedly, identifying these problems has been aided by orbiting satellites, but they would be there without Apollo. And the solutions will owe more to nanotechnology than Captain Marvel.

In the long run, it seems unlikely that the future West will boldly go where no one has gone before. There's no political will and the money is required elsewhere. But adventure freaks can take heart from the fact that the Chinese have plenty of money to splurge. My bet would be that before 2030 there'll be a Chinese base on Mars. To an extent, a re-run of Kennedy. To give China international political prestige and, no doubt, allegiance, even from those few countries whom they won't already own.

'I was there'

Three eyewitness accounts: a reporter on the scene, a Nasa expert – and Neil Armstrong's son

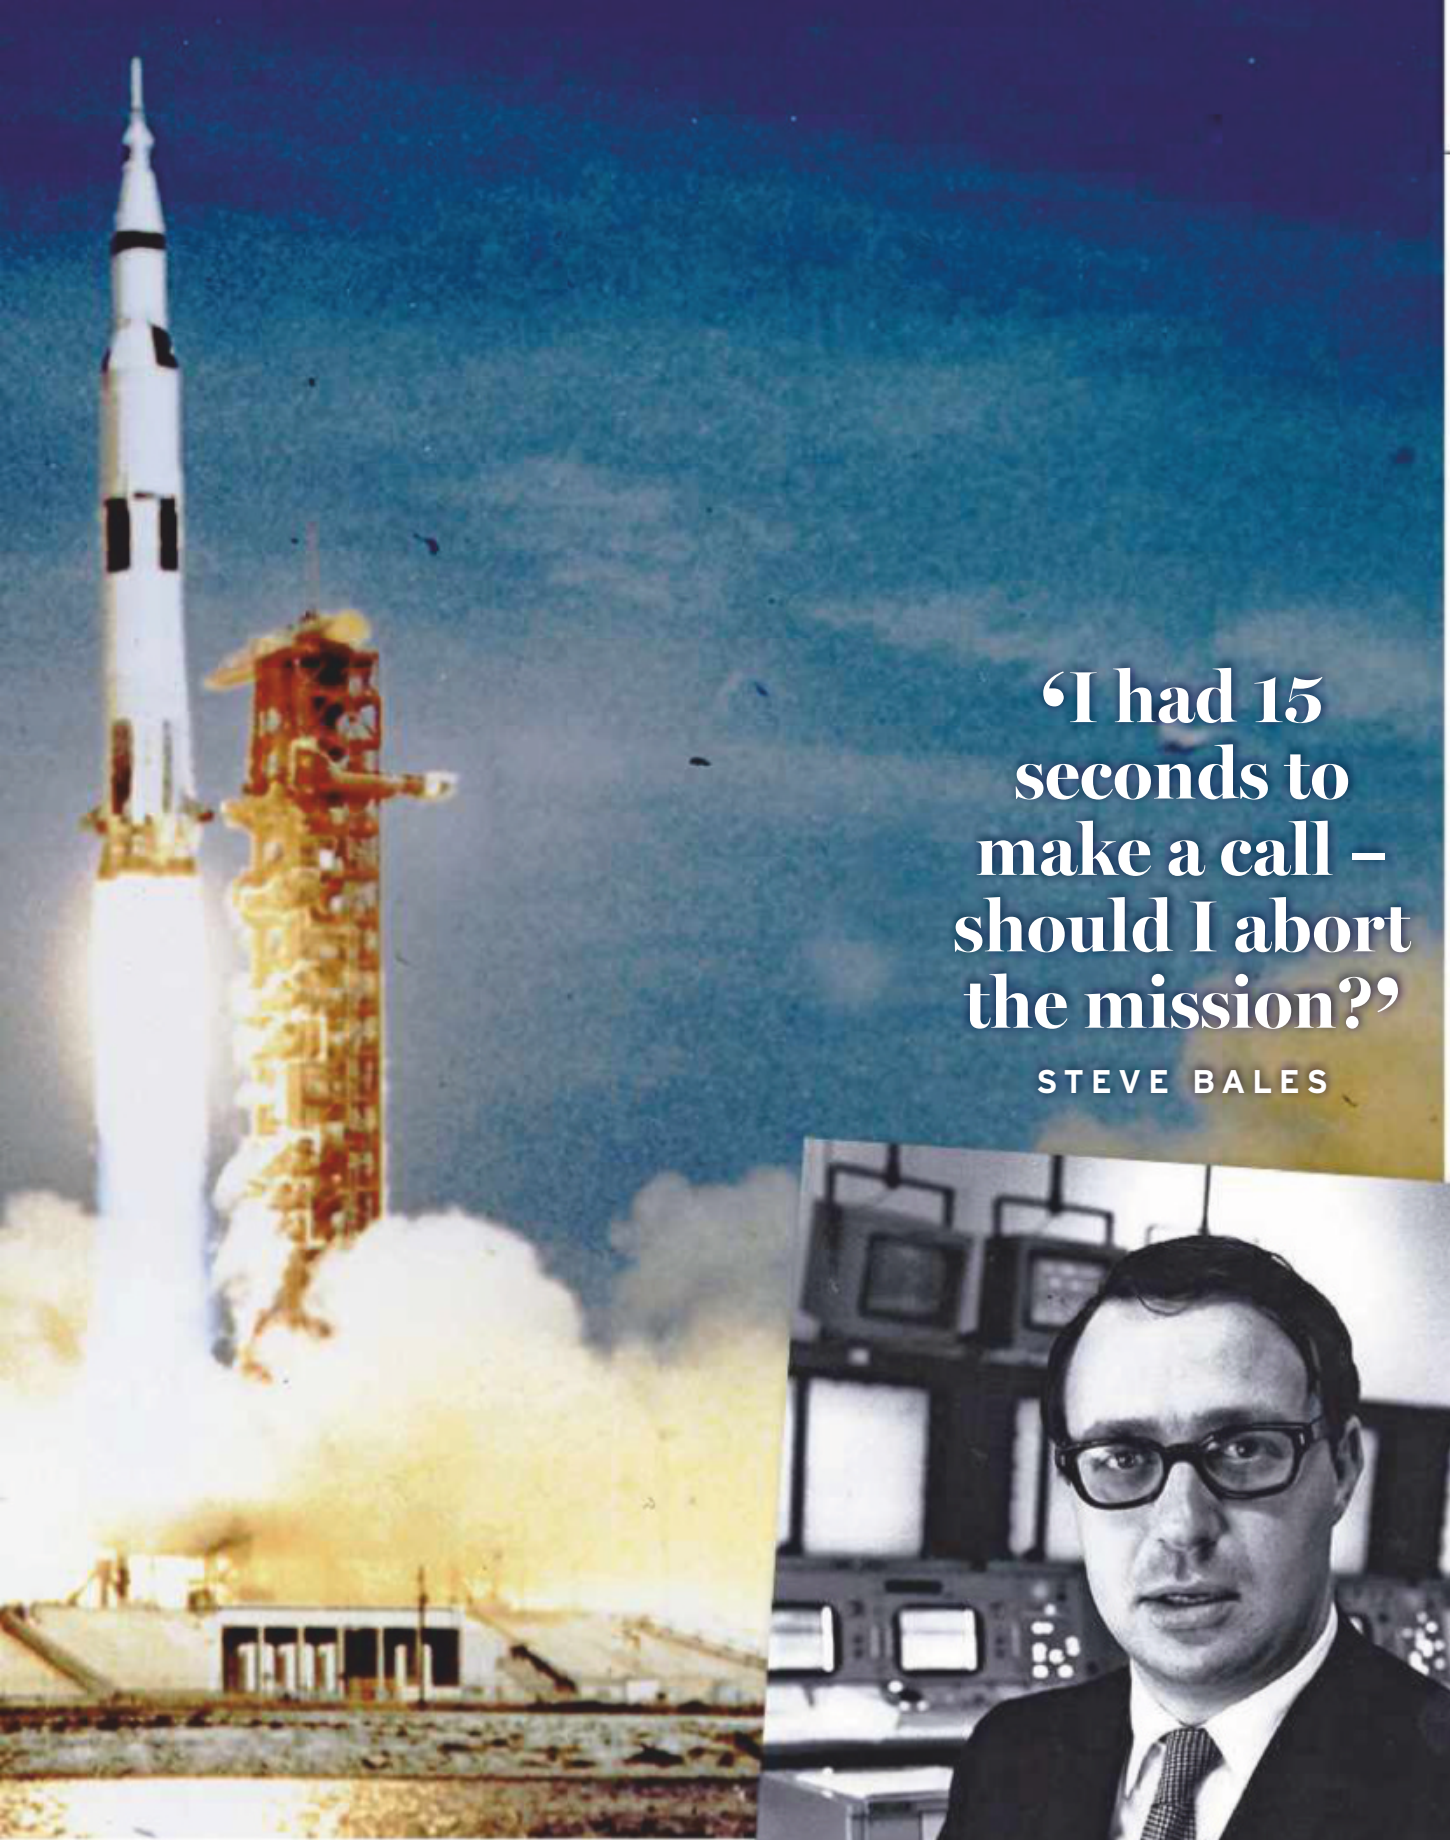

ADAM RAPHAEL was a 31-year-old Washington correspondent for The Guardian when he was sent to cover Apollo 11's eight-day mission

EVEN FROM TWO-AND-A-HALF miles away you could feel the ground shaking like an earthquake when Apollo launched with this gargantuan roar. It was the most fantastic spectacle. Fantastic, and treacherous: all of us gathered there on Cocoa Beach in Florida to watch it knew that some of the biggest dangers were in those first few moments after lift-off. Apollo 11 was carrying hundreds of thousands of gallons of liquid rocket fuel – just one gyroscopic failure and it could explode on the launchpad or after take-off.

The biggest worry was that if the rockets went out of control over a populated area, Mission Control might have to destroy it deliberately, so when it disappeared from view, there was this sense of a collective letting out of breath. Although the press pack had been kept well away from the astronauts – they had been signed up exclusively by Life magazine – you couldn't help but think about these men and their families.

The next few days were rather less dramatic. From our base in Houston, journalists were

‘I had 15 seconds to make a call – should I abort the mission?’

STEVE BALES

STEVE BALES was the Nasa engineer who, when problems arose during the final approach, had to decide whether to abandon the Moon landing

AT TWO-AND-A-HALF MINUTES and 750 feet until lunar touchdown an error message was flashing on Apollo 11’s in-flight computers. I had 15 seconds to make a call: should I abort the mission? My instinct told me it was safe to carry on. “We are go,” I said. In that moment I was just doing my job – I’d have to deal with the consequences later.

I was 26 and had been working on the Moon landing project for three years, one of a young crowd tasked with helping realise one of the most thrilling projects any science graduate raised in the Sputnik era could imagine. You needed an element of gung-ho “can-do” mentality in the job. I’d grown up knowing I wanted to work for Nasa, and after starting out as a tour guide I was ultimately appointed guidance officer for Apollo 11.

My role was to monitor the landing computer on Apollo and make sure that from the time the guys on board woke up that morning that everything was working as it should. We all knew how high the stakes were: we’d performed countless simulations of the landing, and not all had ended successfully. This time it was the real deal and everyone in the centre was as focused as I’ve ever seen. When I walked in for my shift on that Sunday morning, you could cut the tension with a knife.

The next eight hours were incredibly hard work to get Apollo in a position where we felt it was safe to land. There was half an hour when it disappeared behind the Moon and we couldn’t ▷ able to listen to Mission Control talking to the Apollo crew, and we had two to three briefings a day with Nasa scientists, but they were very matter-of-fact – we were starved of the human detail. As an arts graduate who knew nothing about the technicalities of space exploration, I felt on safest ground reporting on the astronauts’ bowel movements, until my editor told me I needed to be writing more about trajectories. Thankfully, I was assisted by a wonderful BBC correspondent called Caroline, a science graduate who explained the trickier details. I went on to marry her!

We all knew that the Moon landing itself was another moment of great peril, so when we heard the words “The eagle has landed”, a great cheer went up from all of us. So, too, at the moment of reconnection: if it hadn’t happened, there was no Plan B, they couldn’t have been rescued.

The whole mission was the most remarkable technical feat – you have to go back to Galileo to find a comparable technological advance – but it was equally matched by the courage of those who put their lives at risk to make it happen. Covering it was one of the great stories of my life, and an incredible privilege.

◁ talk to the crew. At that point flight director Gene Kranz told us that whatever happened we'd walk out as a team. He was saying he'd take responsibility if one of us messed up, and it still makes my spine tingle.

Then all we could do was wait until we saw Apollo coming round the side of the Moon.

The next 15 minutes were dramatic. As the final descent began and when communication was re-established, I knew I had a big problem: the vehicle was going towards the Moon 20 feet per second faster than it should be. It doesn't sound a lot but according to the mission rules if it got to 35 feet per second that's an abort. Happily, the measurements were corrected by the landing radar. But just ten seconds after that a 1202 alarm came on, quickly followed by another. Effectively, the onboard computer was in overload. Although we didn't know it, at times it was running to over 100 per cent of its capacity.

BY THEN WE were at 4,000 feet with three minutes to go: three alarms were going on and off but everything else seemed on track. At 750 feet and two-and-a-half minutes to go I had to make a call on that last alarm: it's then that I shouted "Go". Instinctively, my training told me that the craft was on track.

At that point my job was effectively done and I could only watch to see what happened next: when Neil Armstrong said, "The eagle has landed," I realised I'd pretty much been holding my breath the whole time. The moment to beat all moments was watching Neil come down the ladder. You knew that people all over the free world were watching and it was electrifying.

'The alarms were on and off but I shouted "go" instinctively'

At the same time we still had to get these guys back and, while we felt that we were equipped to cope, the uncertainties about the return still remained.

Later, I found out that Buzz Aldrin had discovered a piece of plastic from a circuit breaker on the Moon's surface as he returned to the spacecraft. Under guidance, he used a felt pen to push it back into where it had broken off. If he hadn't spotted it, it would have affected the engine's ability to start. It was a stark reminder of how the tiniest thing could plunge these guys into the deadliest peril.

All these years later, I remember it all like it was yesterday and remain so grateful that things went so well. Aside from my family, my role in putting a man on the Moon remains the thing I'm proudest of.

THE ARMSTRONGS
Eric (aka Rick), mum Janet and brother Mark watch dad Neil landing on the Moon

RICK ARMSTRONG was 12 when his father Neil became the first man to walk on the Moon. Here he recalls that memorable moment

IN THE BUILD-UP to the launch we had a very busy house, with friends, relatives, neighbours and other astronauts constantly coming and going. We had a two-foot-square poster by the front door that visitors could sign, which is still in the family. As I recall we tried to keep things as normal as possible. I suspect my mom was a mix of emotions, but mostly she appeared calm.

Before my father left, we had a family meeting. I don't think I asked, "Do you think you're coming back?" [as portrayed in the First Man film] because I had no doubt that he was. Any problems that came up during the flight would be handled. I was never scared during the flight, I wasn't old enough to understand the complexity and Mom always downplayed the risk to us – but of course, she knew what it was.

On the day we had a houseful of people. For the landing itself I was in the bedroom with my mom. [Nasa astronaut] Bill Anders was there to make sure she knew exactly what was happening. We could hear Mission Control through a "squawk box" installed in the house for the flight. I was up the whole time – it was late at night, around 10pm Houston time. It wasn't easy to make out what was happening on TV, so everyone was paying close attention and there wasn't a lot of talking. I didn't really understand the nature of what was going on – to me this was just Dad going to work, and I was glad he was doing it well.

'I wasn't scared – this was just Dad going to work'

What I mainly think about now is not the individual accomplishments but the inspiration the Apollo programme provided all around the world. So many people have told me something to the effect of "I'm doing what I'm doing now because of what I saw your dad and the others do back then".

JILL HALFPENNY KNOWS about blighted childhood. When she was four, her father Colin died suddenly. He was only 36. "It came completely out of the blue," she says. "He was playing football and had a heart attack. In the morning he was there and then, in the evening, he wasn't."

We're in a quietly swish boutique hotel in central London, ready to talk about her role in Dark Money, a new drama series about the sexual abuse of a 13-year-old boy and its repercussions for his family. But the conversation has turned to Halfpenny's own youth in Gateshead four decades ago, and the death that seems to have driven much of her life since.

"Girls are brought up to believe that Daddy will be the person that comes to their rescue," says Halfpenny, who will be 44 on 15 July. "When you've lost that sense of somebody being able to come to your rescue, you say, 'To hell with it. I'll be my own rescuer.'"

Halfpenny did a pretty good job of rescuing herself, forging an acting career from inherent talent and sheer determination. She began on Byker Grove, the BBC's Tyneside-set children's television series filmed a few miles from her home, and went on to star in both Coronation Street and EastEnders.

She appeared alongside Maxine Peake in the harrowing drama Three Girls in 2017, based on the Rochdale grooming and child-abuse scan-

Anthony McPartlin and Declan Donnelly (Ant and Dec), were kept in a protective bubble by the BBC. "Everything was very personal and very friendly," she says of her time on the show between 1989 and 1992.

"To this day I'm friends with my chaperone, I just adore her. My mum knew the names of almost everyone I was working with and the communication between the parents and the producers was always really good. So it has never felt like a scary business to me, because I've never been on the receiving end of something like that. I can only presume that it's an absolutely terrifying place to be."

Byker Grove made Halfpenny famous locally. "It was crazy, being pointed at when I went shopping at Tammy Girl in Newcastle: 'There's Nicola from Byker Grove!' That was kind of thrilling, but then you got, 'It's that fing lass off the telly - who do you think you are?'" So Halfpenny merged into the background. "Instead of just walking into a school disco and being who I was I'd make myself small, in case somebody accused me of being big. That's not a good way to live your teenage years."

It seems a sad memory to have of a happy period. "It happened throughout my time on Byker Grove," she reveals. "But it was still the freest I'd ever felt. I was with people I understood and they understood me. I can't even tell you how happy it made me."

Then I'd go to school and my head was telling me that I had to apologise for feeling so happy."

That push-me-pull-me battle with emerging fame led to a lasting camaraderie between the actors, and Halfpenny recently went home for the show's 30th-anniversary party. Does she feel empathy when fellow Byker Grove cast members have problems, such as when Ant McPartlin was fined £86,000 for drink-driving last year?

"You care massively. Because it was such an intense, beautiful time, you have a real connection. Even if you're not seeing that person on a daily basis, or even from one year to another, you still feel. It was so unique."

IN SOME WAYS she'd been planning for success ever since her dad died. "I think there is a very strong argument that I might not have been an actress had that not happened. I think I probably internalised my dad's death, which is the classic child thing to do. 'Well, no one has said anything, so it must be my fault.' There's a lot of internalisation of the grief, and the shame, and what you do to deal with that."

Her father's death initially left her mother Maureen alone to care for Halfpenny and her older sisters Nicola and Paula (Maureen later married Colin's brother Derek). "It was the 1970s and my mum was left with three girls, a widow at 33," she says. "How do you survive that? You survive it by getting up in the morning and just doing it, and it breaks my heart to think that she had to do that and go through it. She didn't have any help or anyone to talk to about how she felt. But if you do that for long enough, that just ▷ dal; and, taking a new direction, can presently be seen in the Channel 4 sitcom Year of the Rabbit. "I get really pissed off if I'm put into a box. I love a bit of light entertainment. But first and foremost, I want to be an actress."

In Dark Money she plays Sam Mensah, who, with husband Manny (Babou Ceesay), discovers that their son Isaac, a child actor, has been coerced into sex acts by a director in Hollywood while supposedly being in the care of a chaperone (played by Rebecca Front). Written by Levi David Addai - creator of Damilola: Our Loved Boy - it's a drama about parenthood, about the power of money over love and the failure of an institution's duty of care.

The Jimmy Savile scandal showed that the BBC itself was capable of such failings and, as a young star, Halfpenny herself might have been vulnerable. But she says it wasn't like that on Byker Grove. The teenage cast, including

One of the ways they got through it was by not talking about what had happened. "I grew up in a household where the grief we were all experiencing wasn't talked about the way it would be now. It's the same in Dark Money, the survival technique that Isaac and his family have learnt is: 'Say nothing and get on with it.' But then it all simmers underneath, right?"

Halfpenny joined Coronation Street in December 1999 to play Rebecca Hopkins, a nurse who had an affair with Martin Platt. Then in 2002 she joined EastEnders, as Kate Morton, an undercover policewoman posing as a nail technician, who married Phil Mitchell and became a major character in her own right.

"The level of recognition can be scary," she says of her soap star days. "I remember purposely not going to the newsagent's when there were loads of schoolkids there. I get unbelievably embarrassed. When people stick a camera in my face, I get terribly self-conscious, I become quite small in those moments and a bit awkward."

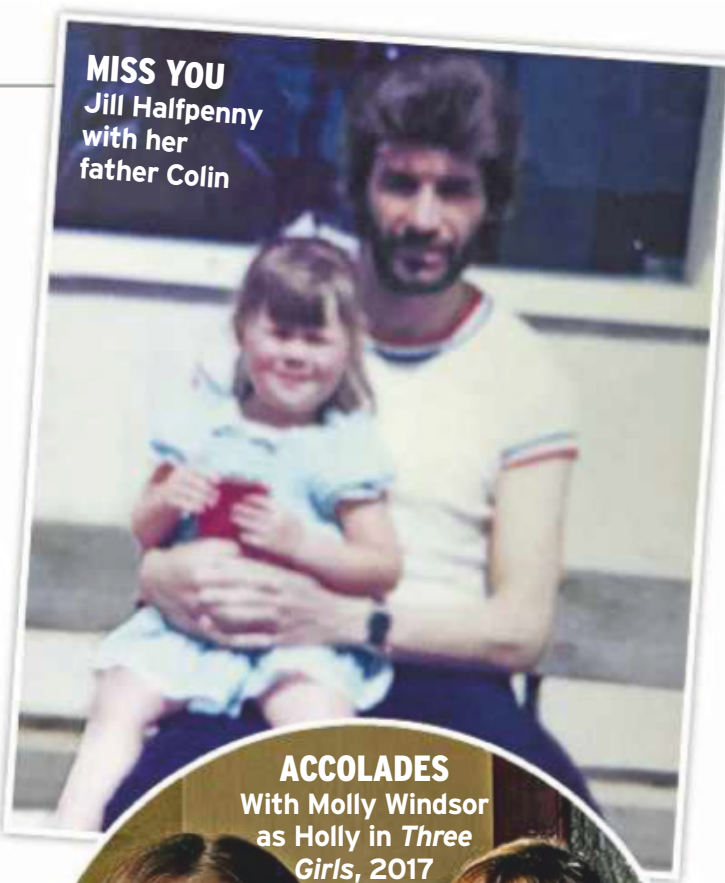

WHEN SHE WAS written out of the show in 2004 Halfpenny was "devastated", according to newspaper reports. "I think I still felt I had more in me," she says. How did the BBC tell her? "They said, 'Oh, you know, we're not going to carry on.' And I thought, 'What's it going to be like going back out into the big bad world?'"

But her childhood loss had given her a way to overcome adult disappointments. "I wonder if, in a subconscious way, I thought, 'Oh well, that's grim, but it's not as bad as losing your dad.' I don't know whether that's healthy, but that might be the way I deal with things. I've lost my house? OK. I've split up with someone? OK. And then, of course, the universe gave me Strictly in 2004."

Halfpenny grabbed the chance to expand her career. "I dedicated every hour I had to Strictly. My partner, Darren Bennett, was a really hard worker and even he was shocked. He'd say, 'Oh hell, how much do you want to work, Jill?' I was insatiable for the experience."

Halfpenny and Bennett won, beating Denise Lewis and Julian Clary in the final. Even so, her old insecurities remained. "People saying they like you is terrifying," she says of the public votes. "Why do you like me? What parts of me do you like? It still blows me away if anybody comes up to me and says, 'I voted for you on Strictly.' It still makes me blush and burn."

Halfpenny says there wasn't a moment when things just clicked, when she became the confident woman sitting before me. "The acting world is full of people who aren't massively happy with themselves. Which is why we're trying to be other people."

She's pretty good at that off screen, too – her stage career has included a 2011 Olivier award for her performance as beautician Paulette in the musical Legally Blonde and a wow 'em turn as Roxie Hart in Chicago, as well as acclaimed roles in Mike Leigh and Alan Ayckbourn plays.

DESPITE ALL THIS, and having played the mother of one of the abused girls in Three Girls, Halfpenny had to audition for Dark Money, but says she doesn't mind if she has to work harder than other actors. "I'm not one of those people who goes, 'Why has she got that and I haven't? I will look at people and be envious of their careers, but I don't want to fall into that trap of entitlement. Why shouldn't bad things happen to you? Why shouldn't good things happen to them? That's how the universe works.'"

Her 11-year-old son Harvey, with ex-husband Craig Conway, also an actor, is now talking about going into the business. "There's no hope," she jokes. Harvey, settled and thankfully unburdened by tragedy, has already had a very different childhood from her. She admits that when he was four she wondered how he might have coped with what she went through. "I realised that, if this four-year-old had a dad that walked out the door one morning and never came home, there was no way that he wouldn't be severely disturbed."

Halfpenny thinks we're mistaken if we think children will come through whatever life throws at them. "People say kids are resilient, that they'll just get on with things. But I'm not sure they are. Children survive for the same reason adults do, because we need to."

And has she survived? "Hopefully. I've worked out what's the healthy bit of this job and what's the unhealthy bit. I just want to enjoy what I do."

Finally, I ask her if she can remember her father. "I have one very strong memory of him. I'm sitting on his lap, and he's been for a run and I'm lying against his chest and I can taste the saltiness of the sweat and feel his warmth. It's so lucid, so vivid."

The new radicals

AN ALARMING STATISTIC flashes up at the start of the latest hard-hitting drama from the Bafta-winning team behind BBC3's Don't Take My Baby and Murdered by My Father: "In 2018, there was a 36 per cent increase in the number of far-right extremists referred to the UK Government's counterterrorism programme."

Set in an unnamed Welsh town that looks a lot like Cardiff, The Left Behind explores the lure of the far right from the perspective of a white working-class teenager who is radicalised in just three weeks. It opens with young Gethin and his mates videoing themselves as they attack a halal butcher's shop in pig masks, then rewinds to show the problems that propel him to search for answers on far-right online forums: his family is facing eviction, he's on a precarious, zero-hours contract, he's terrified of ending up on the streets like his alcoholic father. It's a heart-rending performance by Cardiff actor Sion

Daniel Young, and a powerful portrait of a disenfranchised community.

It was written by Welsh playwright Alan Harris, who spent a lot of time talking to the people who use one of Cardiff's food banks and a community centre in one of city's most deprived suburbs. "They told me people feel powerless," he says. "It is a case of being left behind, but it's also a case of being left out. There are a lot of people in the UK who have no hope of progressing, and once hope is gone, a wedge is driven between different sections of our society and extremism is very good at exploiting that wedge. Online radicalisation does that well: it turns personal problems into a crusade."

As part of his research, he also spoke to a counter-extremism specialist who has worked on Prevent – the controversial Government programme referenced in that opening statistic. It aims to steer people vulnerable to all forms of extremism away from violence, and Harris was shocked to discover how quickly people can be radicalised, and how young – barely teenagers in some cases. He was also told the far right has smartened up its act.

"These are well organised, respectable-looking organisations," he explains. "They don't turn up in red braces with a skinhead. They turn up in a suit with a much more professional attitude. They realised that the old model wasn't working from a recruiting point of view." Their supporters are concentrated in Britain's post-industrial towns and cities, which is why the producers decided to set The Left Behind in south Wales.

Some will question Harris's sympathetic portrayal of an extremist, but he believes we need to understand where they're coming from if we are to tackle domestic terrorism. "Society tries to ignore these things but they're happening, whether we like it or not. Understanding these people is a movement towards making society better."

In one scene, a chipper councillor is confronted by residents frustrated by the lack of social housing. The director deliberately chose extras who were all working-class and from the Cardiff area and asked them to improvise. Their raw, pent-up anger explodes on screen. "I felt really sorry for the actor who played the councillor," recalls Harris, who was on set that day. "It was gruelling. [The director] said to all the people in the room, 'Just say what you think,' and they ripped shreds out of her."

BBC STUDIOS APPROACHED Harris with the idea after seeing Sugar Baby, his one-man comedy about a small-time drug dealer. His plays often put working-class men centre-stage. "It's important for me to give these people a voice. We don't see enough honest stories of white working-class men. They're always angry or parodies, and I'm fed up with that."

He grew up in Tonteg, a village nine miles north of Cardiff. When he was eight, his parents had to sell their house and they moved into a caravan on his grandparents' smallholding. It was supposed to be temporary, but they lived there for ten years. "It was a wonderful upbringing because we were in the countryside. My dad built on a bedroom for me and my brother away from the road, so no one from the council could see it."

While Harris only recalls going to the theatre once as a child – to see Ken Dodd – he always knew he wanted to write. It wasn't so much ambition as the prospect of no longer having to share a room with his brother that inspired him to go to university. When he graduated, he had a taste of the insecure life that his antihero finds himself trapped in: he had a series of poorly paid jobs – selling Santa hats on the streets, working in a car park – and was temporarily homeless, sleeping in friends' spare rooms or on sofas.

He got his big break after he trained as a journalist and started submitting scripts to a theatre company that encouraged new writers. What do his family make of his career? "I think some of them still don't really know what I do, or how I earn my money! Halfway through my first play, there's a power cut and my brother got up and shouted, 'Wire it up, bro!', which is Valleys-speak for bypassing the electricity meter. He felt compelled to give the character on stage some advice about not paying for your electricity. I haven't invited him back since..."

'We don't see honest stories of white working-class men'

Is he apprehensive that Cardiff's working-class communities will be offended by his bleak depiction of life on an estate? "Not at all. I think it's a good thing to shine a light on the problems that some people experience. Hopefully those issues of housing, of employment, will ring true with a lot of people from Cardiff and the surrounding area. Hopefully it is bits of their lives reflected back at them. I don't have all the answers, but at least we can ask questions." CLAIRE WEBB

A new-minted Murray is back to delight us

THERE'S A LOOK you can get sometimes – if you're lucky – from your long-term partner, one that says that the mad excesses of those early years haven't all been consigned to history: and all at once the day lights up as if you were both still young.

There was a moment like that in the course of Andy Murray's pilgrimage to the men's doubles title at Queen's Club a couple of weeks ago. Murray was half-beaten by a shot to the corner. He span, sprinted, stuck out one of those long arms and flicked at the ball with his racket. The ball rose and soared, bird-like, over his opponent at an unplayable height before gravity and judiciously applied spin made it drop an inch or two inside the baseline. Once again, the Murray topspin lob had surprised an opponent as if it were new-minted.

I have seen that shot again and again across the world and across Murray's extraordinary career. And there it was once more – and there was Murray, lighting up the court again with his delighted grin: gosh, isn't tennis fun! Isn't life fun! Not bad for a chap who was reading his own obituaries six months back (I know, I wrote one). Not that he was dead: just that everyone was convinced he would never play again.

He won Queen's with Spain's Feliciano López (though he planned to take on the doubles at Wimbledon with the Frenchman Pierre-Hugues Herbert – a lot of partner-swapping goes on in doubles). He surprised us all, and perhaps himself, by playing beautiful tennis and winning a title: returning to the careless raptures we've all enjoyed across the years.

"I'm just quite happy doing what I'm doing," he said after that victory. I didn't anticipate playing doubles, or enjoying playing tennis like this."

Surgery can often resolve a problem with pain, but it can't always restore a great athlete to greatness. It seemed unlikely that Murray would ever again play at the level that brought him three grand slam singles titles, including two Wimbledons, and two Olympic gold medals.

He is wondering about test-driving his resurfaced metal hip in the singles at the US Open later this summer, but at Wimbledon he's playing doubles. And that's a double joy, for not only is Murray back doing his stuff, but the game of doubles itself is a joy.

Even in the most intense matches, there is something a little jolly about it. The frightful loneliness of the singles player has been abolished: the rat-a-tat rallies seem almost frivolous after the desperate intensity of singles. It would be joyful if Murray and Herbert won; but if they have already been knocked out by the time you read this, it won't be a tragedy (following his Queen's Club triumph, Murray went out in the first round at Eastbourne). However well Murray does, we can watch without anxiety.

Murray is a great figure in national life. Sure, in 2013 he became the first British man to win a Wimbledon singles title for 77 years, but, just as importantly, he has acted with style, irony, perspective, wisdom and generosity, all mixed in – inspired by mum Judy Murray here – with a dollop of practical feminism.

He is an all-round good egg, and his revelling in tennis again seems like something he thoroughly deserves, when his career seemed over at 32. He never held back when the difference between being good and being great was nothing more than hard work. He has worked himself, more or less literally, to the bone – but now it's as if he has worked a flanker on Time. This last act is a reward – for him, and for us.

WHAT A WORLD CUP!

Once women's football was exotic. Now, women's football seems like the most natural thing in the world – mainly because it is.

The Women's World Cup has brought us partisanship, drama, controversy and the eternal quest for excellence, as any decent competition should: and it has created a million converts, not just to women's football but to the wider issues the game represents.

In fact, make that many million converts, for more than six million viewers have watched England in action, captained by Steph Houghton (right).

It's always a bonus if a World Cup final is a decent game – so often the stakes seem too high for freedom of expression – but it's been a tournament to remember all right. Final: Sun 3.30pm (kick-off 4pm) BBC1, 4pm Radio 5 Live

Look again

Nic Roeg's Don't Look Now has been restored – don't miss it, says Andrew Collins

I WAS EVIDENTLY LOOKING, but in the wrong direction, when BBC2 first screened Nicolas Roeg's atmospheric, multi-layered Venice-set thriller Don't Look Now in 1979. It passed me by. Still, at the age of 15, I wouldn't have been intellectually able to appreciate its subtle symbolism or unearth its treasures. When it was next shown in 1983, I was windswept and pretentious enough to submit to Roeg and screenwriters Allan Scott and Chris Bryant's fathomless essay in existential dread, adapted from the short story by Daphne du Maurier. I was captivated and terrified. Ignoring the title's entreaty, I did look... and loved what I saw.

A documentary on Roeg's body of work up to that point was shown on TV at the same time, from Walkabout, The Man Who Fell to Earth and Bad Timing to the just-released Eureka. Unless my memory is playing tricks – something that happens a lot in Roeg's films – the interviewer asked the then 55-year-old director, “Can you tell us in a few words what your films are all about?” I recall this being his bamboozled response: “Well... er... what they're all about?”

It's clear what the latest edition of Don't Look Now is all about: a fastidiously reverential 4K (4,000 pixels) digital restoration that is enjoying a cinema re-release from Friday 5 July, followed by a handsome four-disc Blu-ray set on 29 July. Remarkably for a film made in the early 70s in slate-grey, off-season Venice, the only thing that dates it is Donald Sutherland's perm.

He plays an architectural historian using a work trip to Italy to help heal his and wife Julie Christie's grief after the death of their child. However, they run into two sisters, one a blind clairvoyant who gives false hope to the couple, leading to a sticky end that will be imprinted on your memory.

Sutherland is involved in the restoration of a church mosaic, which, owing to an unsafe scaffold that's not in the novel, nearly kills him. In du Maurier's book, the child dies of meningitis; in Roeg's film, she drowns – hence an aquatic theme that trickles throughout. Every drop of allusion is lent greater clarity by the new restoration, which fixes “scratches, chemical stains, fluctuations, blemishes, dirt and speckles” and was overseen by the original director of photography Anthony B Richmond, who observes, “This restoration is going to last a lot longer than me.”

A YEAR AFTER I first saw Don't Look Now I enrolled at Chelsea School of Art in London, to study illustration and design. An early brief was to illustrate a book cover. Inspired by the movie, I chose Don't Look Now, which I'd videotaped and studied. My artistic response to Penguin's 1973 Mills & Boon-esque jacket image was to reframe du Maurier's eerie tale in the style of a graphic novel. I wasn't illustrating the text but lifting the imagery straight out of Roeg's film. But then who in their right mind would attempt to improve on the visuals set down by one of

A Star Is Born ★★★★★

Friday 8.00pm Sky Premiere

Four stars were born

OK, I admit it, I saw the four incarnations of A Star Is Born in the wrong order. For me, the stadium rock version from 1976 with Barbra Streisand and Kris Kristofferson is the first (I saw it on video), succeeded – not preceded – by the 1954 Judy Garland/James Mason version, then the Janet Gaynor/Fredric March non-musical drama of 1937, and, finally, last year's Lady Gaga and Bradley Cooper Oscar hopeful, which in the end only managed the award for best original song.

That each generation should have its own reading is apt for a tale as old as showbiz itself: an ingénue from the sticks (originally saddled with the surname Blodgett) follows her dream west, catches the eye of an over-the-hill male idol with a drink problem who gets her a job, only to see her ascent mirror his decline.

Our four renderings (in chronological order: the noir, the satire, the rock-out and the vanity project) map the trajectory of the entertainment industry. Where once a dream factory sold mythology, now multinationals commercialise brands. Overpromoted pop star Lady Gaga is certainly one. But then the original Esther Blodgett probably wouldn't have launched her own youth foundation or been an LGBT activist.

Bradley Cooper is the only male star of the series to co-write, co-produce and direct, not to mention co-write and play the songs. This is in itself a sign of our self-empowered times. His character is convinced, like many, that drink is his muse. Gaga gives the acting lark a decent crack (remember, Kristofferson was musician first, actor second), but it's Cooper whose charisma holds it together. The famous scene where booze gets the better of him on live TV is complex and emotional.

But whichever order you watch them in, you still can't beat Gaynor and March, not least his deluded line from the sanatorium, "They even have bars in the windows to keep out the draft!"

GRIEVING COUPLE

cinema's greatest visual artists? As Mark Sanderson, author of the BFI Modern Classic on Don't Look Now, argues, "Once seen, it is impossible to forget."

Born in London in 1928, Roeg lived the textbook journey from tea boy to director, via clapper-loader, focus-puller, camera operator and eventually cinematographer, working for David Lean on Lawrence of Arabia and uncredited on Doctor Zhivago (Lean replaced him after a clash). He told The Guardian in 2005, "I was lucky in a way that I didn't go to film school." In other words, he learnt on the job.

In this spirit, he always allowed for the possibility of error. There's a scene in Don't Look Now where Sutherland walks into the office of a police detective, whose face is obscured by the placement of a lamp. He peers around it, and – a total fluke – it offers film students something else to chew on.

EVEN THE FILM'S conjugal sex scene, disarmingly cross-edited by Roeg so that we see the couple making love intercut with them later getting dressed for dinner, is still the subject of debate at symposia more than 40 years later – and a device borrowed, with full disclosure, by Steven Soderbergh in Out of Sight (1998). Other contemporary directors who owe him include Christopher Nolan, Paul Thomas Anderson and Danny Boyle.

The reissue gathers a number of professionals to hymn Don't Look Now, moved to do so by his death last November, aged 90. David Cronenberg, who employed the Thames as a symbolic depository for dead bodies in Eastern Promises (2007), traces a similar aquatic pulse in Roeg's film: "It begins with a disaster in the pond, then the rest of the film takes place in a city that's permeated with water – the city is dying." At one point, the couple stroll past a sign that reads "VENICE IN PERIL". Writer Allan Scott insists this was already there: a pure coincidence. To our understanding of Roeg's rich canon, Boyle cheekily adds this: "You can spot a Nic Roeg film in about 15 seconds! It's the use of a zoom lens, because nobody uses zoom lenses!"

There's so much to see and savour in Don't Look Now. But its restoration brings yet more clarity to imagery like a child's doll with its leg twisted backwards on a stone step, or to the offhand observation by the blind medium, "Milton loved this city." Give it a look; it really is the gift that keeps on giving.

Sail through the inland waterways of the Low Countries—The Netherlands and Belgium. Begin with an overnight stay in vibrant Amsterdam. Cruise through a vast network of canals and rivers, stopping in key cities to soak up Dutch, German and Flemish culture and history. Travel down picturesque waterways and witness feats of Dutch engineering. See fascinating Rotterdam and the windmills of Kinderdijk, a UNESCO World Heritage Site, before ending in Antwerp, Europe's diamond capital.

JOURNEY HIGHLIGHTS

Kinderdijk

In the serene Dutch countryside sits a collection of original windmills which comprise a UNESCO World Heritage Site. Take a look inside with your expert guide and discover how the ingenious Dutch prevented their land from flooding.

Antwerp's Spectacular Cathedral

Visit the largest Gothic cathedral in the Low Countries. Antwerp's Cathedral of Our Lady was built over 170 years. Though it opened in 1521, one of its spires was never completed. Soaring over the city's Grote Markt at 404 feet, the cathedral's largest bell requires 16 ringers.

FILM OF THE DAY

The Lady in the Van ★★★

10.20pm-12 midnight BBC1

COMEDY DRAMA You can't help but wonder: what if Mary Shepherd of no fixed abode had parked her van in the driveway of, say, Will Self, or Martin Amis, or Jeffrey Archer? Would a cheery, egalitarian essay in the London Review of Books have been the result? Fortunately for her, and us, she chose the north London drive of writer Alan Bennett, who generously let her stay for joined Roger Allam, Jim Broadbent and Claire Foy against a lovely classical score and pinpoint geographical authenticity (it was filmed on the actual street). However, I found some of Shepherd's antics unappealingly scatological.

You may have a stronger stomach. Or, if not, perhaps try the audiobook. (UK 2015, swearing, HD)

DID YOU KNOW?

The younger incarnation of Alan Bennett is played by Alex Jennings, but look out for a cameo from the playwright himself

ADVENTURE This self-deprecating and winningly indulgent cosmic adventure has an irresistible premise: four elderly astronauts finally get the chance to go into orbit 40 years after being sidelined by a monkey. Director/producer Clint Eastwood and his co-stars (Tommy Lee Jones, Donald Sutherland and James Garner) shine as the ageing spacemen, wheezing through basic training, navigating past feuds and becoming all-American heroes in the process. AJ (US/Aus 2000, nudity, edited for language, HD)

Mr Bean's Holiday ★★★ 4.15-6.00pm 5STAR PG

COMEDY This second film outing for Rowan Atkinson's slightly creepy comic creation is, for the first hour at least, really rather good. Bean, who has won a Côte d'Azur holiday in a church raffle, heads off to Paris by train and proceeds to bumble his way across France. If the film-makers had stopped there, we'd have had an amusing series of vaguely connected slapstick sketches. Instead, they introduce a daft plot involving a young boy, a pretty actress and the Cannes film festival. In this case, a little less of a good thing would have been rather more. DA (UK 2007, HD)

EVENING

Liar Liar ★★★ 7.15-9.00pm ITV2 12

COMEDY In this hilarious comedy, Jim Carrey stars as a ruthless lawyer and compulsive liar who misses his son's birthday party and is "cursed" to tell the truth for 24 hours. Carrey's physical and vocal contortions provide lots of amusing comic moments, as well as a few riotous ones, and the role is not only tailor-made for his rubber-faced antics but also gives him an opportunity to show a more human side. His bravura performance is at its best as he hurls inadvertent insults and digs himself into an abyss in the middle of a big divorce case. JC (US 1997, may be edited for violence, language, HD)

Jack Reacher: Never Go Back

★★★ 9.00-11.20pm C4 12

THRILLER Tom Cruise returns as Lee Child's literary hero in this sequel, which sees the military cop made a fugitive after being wrongly accused of murder. He finds himself on the run with Cobie Smulders's major, who is accused of selling government secrets. Also thrown into the mix is a feisty teenager who may or may not be Reacher's daughter. The girl is a useful tool for sending Jack up ("You're very intense, you know?") and that knowing humour helps leaven the pudding. Director Edward Zwick makes sure the 54-year-old Cruise isn't upstaged in some slickly staged punch-ups, while the threat of romance never slows him down. SP (US 2016, violence, HD)

WAR Set on a US gunboat patrolling the Yangtze River in 1926, this blend of action and melodrama was a hit in its day, earning eight Oscar nominations (although it won none). Part of the reason for its success can be found in its thinly veiled apology for American intervention in Vietnam, but there are some more enduring plus points, too. Steve McQueen and Richard Attenborough turn in pleasing performances and Joseph MacDonald's cinematography is outstanding. To director Robert Wise's credit, this long film never feels like a slog. DP (US 1966, violence, swearing)

Memento ★★★★★

12 midnight-1.50am BBC1 15

THRILLER This highly original work from writer/director Christopher Nolan has a complex narrative that moves backwards in time. Thus we begin with a murder then regress through the events that led up to it. Matters are complicated by the fact that the person investigating the killing (Guy Pearce) suffers from a rare form of amnesia, leaving him with no short-term memory. Not just an indulgence, the ingenious structure makes the point that memory, although unreliable, is what we depend upon for our sense of reality. DM (US 2000, violence, swearing, col/BW, HD)

Mandela: Long Walk to Freedom

★★★ 12.05-2.25am BBC2 12

DRAMA Adapted from Nelson Mandela's 1995 autobiography, this handsome yet prosaic life story of the great South African statesman pivots on a performance of controlled grace from Idris Elba. British director Justin Chadwick is evidently aiming for the historical grandeur of Gandhi, but, even at two-and-a-half hours, the film's 50-year span – from anti-apartheid activism to high office – feels episodic. Any deeper understanding of Mandela the man is undermined by facile recourse to newsreel to fill in the gaps. AC (SAfr/UK 2013, swearing, some violence, sexual references, HD)

On Dangerous Ground ★★★

1.30-2.50am BBC4 PG

CRIME DRAMA Like many a major director, Nicholas Ray often did minor work, but even his lesser movies have quality. This RKO production has a terrific beginning, with tough cop Robert Ryan leading a manhunt and displaying a totally unsympathetic, even sadistic, temperament. Then he falls for blind Ida Lupino, his world is turned upside down and the movie loses its edge somewhat. Overall, it's not nearly grim enough for its subject matter, but the mood is well maintained by Bernard Herrmann's remarkable score. TS (US 1951, BW, HD)

FILM OF THE DAY

The Water Diviner ★★★

10.45pm-12.30am BBC2

15

DRAMA Not a bad start to Russell Crowe's directorial career (and after his turn in The Mummy, he might need it). This post-First World War drama was based by writers Andrew Anastasios and Andrew Knight on a single line in a letter at the Commonwealth (formerly Imperial) War Graves unit referring to a bereaved father from Australia who travelled to Turkey to identify his sons, all Anzac soldiers who'd fought at Gallipoli. Crowe plays widower Joshua Connor, also a water diviner, but it's his boys he's hoping to trace and bring home to be buried with their mother. Without going into the story, which isn't as predictable as it sounds, the film, partly shot in Turkey, sees a believable friendship develop between Crowe and Olga Kurylenko's hotelier (also a widow). Meanwhile, as the grim detective story unfolds, the Greek invasion of the former Ottoman empire further complicates his already challenging quest. A truly decent drama. (Aus/US 2014, violence, HD)

DID YOU KNOW?
"I'll find them, love. I'll find them and I'll bring them home to you..."
These enigmatic words, found in a letter, were the catalyst for the film

Michael Crichton's bestseller. The world's ultimate theme park, featuring genetically re-created dinosaurs, is about to open and owner Richard Attenborough decides to give a sneak preview to a select few, including scientists Sam Neill and Laura Dern. However, all is not well in this new Garden of Eden when the creatures run amok. T rex and his chums are the undoubted stars of the show and the mix of computer animation and models is truly inspiring. JF (US 1993, includes scenes that may be disturbing for children, may be edited for language, HD)

DOCUMENTARY American socialite Edith Ewing Bouvier Beale and her daughter will be familiar to many from 1975's Grey Gardens, the extraordinary documentary made by the Maysles brothers. However, as Göran Hugo Olsson reveals in this fascinating film footnote, Jackie Kennedy's sister, Lee Radziwill, beat the Maysles to the punch by three years by venturing into the Hamptons with a 16mm camera to record her aunt and cousin for posterity. Even in the raw footage presented here, Big and Little Edie make for compelling viewing, as they reminisce, bicker, gossip and point-score with a patrician eccentricity that one suspects prompted neighbours to seek their eviction from the ramshackle mansion. DP (Swe/US/Den 2017, HD)

THRILLER Headhunters director Morten Tyldum here takes on the story of Alan Turing (Benedict Cumberbatch), the genius who cracked the infamous Enigma code during the Second World War. The film explores his methods, his clashes with colleagues and his homosexuality, which was illegal in Britain at the time. The subject matter is potentially dry but Tyldum's direction ensures it's an absorbing journey throughout. While the script doesn't allow much exploration of Turing's sexuality, Cumberbatch is outstanding and has a fine sparring partner in Keira Knightley as his confidante and fiancée. JL (UK/US 2014, sexual references, col/BW, HD)

Director Rob Marshall licks the problem of how to film something that was presented as vaudeville on stage by re-creating the musical numbers as fantasies in Roxie's head, and in so doing loses none of the energy of the stage version nor its dark subtext on the corrupting nature of stardom. BP (US/Ger 2002, violence, HD)

COMEDY British journalist Toby Young found success when he wrote a book about his failed stint at a New York glossy. This loose adaptation stars Simon Pegg as Sidney Young, who, unlike his real-life counterpart, has a charming silly streak that keeps you amused. It helps, too, that the stars and their PR wranglers are even bigger egomaniacs than him. MUSICAL In his autobiography, Charlton Heston recalls asking director William Wyler if he had any problems with Barbra Streisand on Funny Girl. "Nah, not really," said Wyler, "considering it's the first film she ever directed." And when, 15 years later, Streisand did finally get to direct, co-write and star in this movie, her perfectionism became the stuff of legend. Set in central Europe in 1904, this musical drama (showing for the first time in 15 years on Freeview) is about a Jewish girl who dresses as a boy to receive a religious education. Such complications suggest a kosher Victor/Victoria or Tootsie, but Streisand approached it very seriously and the box office was lacklustre. Nevertheless, the film did win the Oscar for best score. Followed by Barbra Streisand: Becoming an Icon. AT (UK/US 1983, nudity, HD)

FANTASY In this outstanding adventure, Dumbledore (Michael Gambon) lures potions professor Horace Slughorn (Jim Broadbent, in an entertainingly eccentric performance) back to Hogwarts. Harry (Daniel Radcliffe) is then charged with trying to dislodge a key clue regarding Slughorn's old pupil, the future Lord Voldemort. Director David Yates dazzles with an evocatively brooding style and conjures impressive magical atmospheres, while the dark tone, as the forces of evil grow stronger, is leavened by romantic entanglements and rampaging hormonal comic relief. AJ (US/UK 2009, may be edited for violence, HD)

DOCUMENTARY I saw this sound update of the silent 1924 documentary The Great White Silence via a BFI restoration and was floored by it. More cherished now than at the time (neither version put bums on seats), it remains a film masterpiece, taking us to the South Pole by sledge and snowmobile. Its coloured tints aren't retro-fitted, either – this is as the director intended, in icy blues and alarming yellows. We see expedition leader Robert Scott, his words expressed as intertitles, and the ship's cat doing tricks on the ice. It's essentially arrogant men meddling, but as a record of a pre-melt Antarctic, it's chilling. (UK 1924/1933, tinted)

The Day the Earth Stood Still
★★ 6.45-8.50pm Film4 12

SCI-FI Robert Wise's alien-invasion film The Day the Earth Stood Still, released in 1951, is an iconic entry in the canon of sci-fi. Fifty-seven years on, this fatuous remake ditches the Cold War/religious subtext – and even the flying saucers – in its attempt to deliver a more contemporary allegory, as spaceman Keanu Reeves arrives with a warning for humanity. At his best when dealing with the CGI-heavy action, director Scott Derrickson fumbles the plotting and loses sight of what made the original so unique. JR (US 2008, violence, HD)

Star Trek into Darkness
★★★★ 8.00-10.35pm E4 12

SCI-FI Plot points and characters from the classic 1967 Space Seed TV episode have served the Star Trek film series well, and they appear again in this thrill-a-minute blockbuster. Benedict Cumberbatch is sensational as the rogue Starfleet officer who turns intergalactic terrorist, prompting the Enterprise crew to track him to the planet Kronos where the Klingons are on war alert. Returning director JJ Abrams pulls out all the action stops, beginning in full-throttle adventure mode and sustaining the warp-speed spectacle all the way through to the epic finale in San Francisco. AJ (US 2013, some violence, swearing, HD)

Superman II ★★★★★
8.00-10.30pm Sky1 PG

FANTASY Plot-wise, this is probably the best segment of the Christopher Reeve Superman films, being free from the po-faced seriousness of the original film and the rampant silliness of the following two. Director Richard Lester delivers a knowing, knockabout cartoon with Superman finding out that he is no longer the toughest guy around when three baddies from his home planet also arrive on Earth. The effects are equal to the first film and there's a strong supporting cast, including the excellent Terence Stamp in what, at the time, was something of a comeback role. JF (UK/US 1980, edited for violence, language, HD)

Splice ★★★
9.00-11.05pm Horror Channel 15

HORROR Cube director Vincenzo Natali merges David Cronenberg-style body horror with twisted fairy-tale fantasy to craft a Frankenstein fable for the modern era. Scientists Sarah Polley and Adrien Brody experiment with DNA splicing to create new life and the resultant infant develops into a beautiful chimera. As his potent allegory about child-rearing turns deadly, Natali deflates the most risible moments with well-judged levity, while the fully fledged creature, CGI-augmented actress Delphine Chaneac gives this oddly affecting monster movie its heart of dark fascination. AJ (Can/Fr 2009, violence, sex scenes)

Blitz ★★ 11.05pm-12.55am C5 18

THRILLER An unconventional London detective with an anger-management problem finds himself on the trail of a serial killer targeting cops in this violent crime flick. Jason Statham is handy with his fists and ready with a wry one-liner, but an unoriginal plot and a general lack of excitement don't do justice to either him or the high-calibre supporting cast. To his credit, director Elliott Lester comes up with a fresh vision of London, but he should have worked harder to make the film live up to its evident franchise potential. TJ (UK 2010, violence, edited for language, HD)

DRAMA Andrey Zvyagintsev could not be more blatant in his symbolism in this tale of a couple on the edge of divorce whose young son suddenly disappears. The ensuing search dominates, but the result matters less than the response of those involved. THRILLER With Steve McQueen achieving iconic immortality in The Great Escape (see Thursday's Film of the day), whet your appetite for a pre-feminism action caper set in my favourite American city, San Francisco (although to be fair I haven't been back since Google took it over). McQueen dons the black polo-neck and gun holster, and tears up the streets in his Ford Mustang, though his actual brief as a police lieutenant is to babysit a Mob informer before a hearing with Senator Robert Vaughn. But it's Lalo Schiffrin's funky score that reminds us why we're here. McQueen's real-life pal, Don Gordon, plays his partner, while Jacqueline Bisset mainly waits nakedly in bed for Steve to drop by. They did things differently then. (US 1968, violence, swearing, nudity, HD)

The Westerner ★★★★★

WESTERN Director William Wyler here brings all his professional skills to bear in a fine example of the western genre. In the lead is the star who always looked at home in the West, lanky Gary Cooper, in a tale based on the life of the notorious Judge Roy Bean, played by Walter Brennan who won a third supporting actor Oscar for his ferocious turn. The story itself may be fable, but Bean's celebrated obsession with Lillie Langtry was real enough, and the clever screenplay makes good use of it, particularly at the climax. TS (US 1940, BW)

HORROR Paul Anderson put his lacklustre Mortal Kombat behind him with another video game adaptation that spawned a hit franchise. A single-minded tale of genetic research facility workers accidentally turned into ravenous zombies, it's a relentless throat-grabber. Hinging on grisly special effects, breakneck pacing and hard-hitting fight sequences, the tension is at least racked up by Anderson to claustrophobic levels. It really is like watching a video game come to life, as Milla Jovovich and a team of commandos move through progressively more dangerous levels to wipe out the undead. SF (Ger/UK/Fr 2002, violence, swearing, brief nudity)

True Movies (Freeview 50, Freesat 302, Sky 321, Virgin 424) PG

DRAMA A great actor was needed to find a shred of humanity in Nazi Adolf Eichmann and this made-for-cable movie has that actor in Robert Duvall.

He portrays the monstrous bureaucrat who sent millions to the gas chambers as an aged, infirm exile, kidnapped in Argentina and taken to Israel to face trial. Concentrating on the excitement of the chase, the film nevertheless carries the horror of the Holocaust across the years. TH (US TVM 1996, swearing)

10.45pm-12.35am Film4 15

COMEDY This sequel winningly subverts the traditional college comedy while remaining authentically ribald. Though scripted by five men, it's a surprisingly feminist film that takes on sexism and has a ball doing so. With 30 days before the sale of their house can go through, Seth Rogen and Rose Byrne are once again at the mercy of teenage neighbours, this time in the shape of a rule-breaking sorority led by Chloë Grace Moretz, who teams up initially with the couple's nemesis Zac Efron. Despite revisiting old comedic ground, Bad Neighbours 2 feels fresh and even incendiary as it frantically tackles all sorts of taboos. EAS (US 2016, swearing, sexual references, drug abuse, HD)

ADVENTURE A PoW adventure from director John Sturges that celebrates the indomitable spirit of the Allied forces even when their backs were to the wall. Sturges had already pulled off the same ensemble trick with The Magnificent Seven three years earlier, and here three of the Seven – Steve McQueen, Charles Bronson and James Coburn – are reunited. The Directors: John Sturges precedes one of the all-time great war movies, in which McQueen's Cooler King remains an iconic force. Andrew Collins (US 1963, violence, HD)

The Raging Moon ★★★
9.30-11.45pm Talking Pictures TV PG

DRAMA The suggestion that disabled people might enjoy a sexual relationship was still shocking when this romance in wheelchairs appeared, offering invaluable insight into a previously closed world. Malcolm McDowell is the young man embittered by his crippling illness until he meets a woman (Nanette Newman) better adjusted to her fate. Director Bryan Forbes (Newman's husband in real life) tends to overdo the sentimentality, but the leads are sympathetic and convincing. DM (UK 1970)

The Master ★★★★★
1.00-3.20am C4 15

DRAMA Writer/director Paul Thomas Anderson (There Will Be Blood) conjures another richly evoked American period drama here. In the early 1950s, mentally damaged sailor Freddie Quell (Joaquin Phoenix) is taken under the patriarchal wing of Philip Seymour Hoffman's leader of The Cause. The Scientology-like movement develops into a cult, but the film fails fully to take dramatic flight. It remains, however, vital, character-driven film-making. AC (US 2012, swearing, sex scenes, HD)

Everest ★★★★★
6.40-9.00pm Film4 12

ADVENTURE Director Baltasar Kormakur is drawn to terror spawned by elemental peril, as seen with 2012 survival drama The Deep and his snowbound TV series Trapped. So it's no surprise that he would produce an epic nailbiter based on the real-life events that took place on a blizzard-hit Everest in 1996. He re-stages the climbers' tragic journey steadfastly and benefits from a script that matches the vertiginous action with the emotional fallout. Unless you know the destiny of the actual climbers – Josh Brolin's determined amateur, Jake Gyllenhaal's cocky rival, Jason Clarke's expedition leader (whose pregnant wife, played by Keira Knightley, waits at home) – you'll be gripped by the fateful climb. AC (US/UK 2015, violence, HD)

The Maze Runner ★★★★★
9.00-11.15pm E4 12

SCI-FI The Hunger Games meets Lord of the Flies in this fast-paced teen thriller. It's a star-making role for Dylan O'Brien who plays the latest in a line of boys to be dumped at the centre of a giant maze while suffering from amnesia. Within those stone walls lurk monsters, their mechanisation hinting at a human-led conspiracy, and it is this well-balanced combination of politics, action and mystery that draws you in. Of course, power struggles ensue when our hero announces his intention to find a way out. SP (US/UK/Can 2014, some violence, swearing, HD)

The Equalizer ★★
9.00-11.40pm 5STAR 15

THRILLER In the hit 1980s TV show, portly Edward Woodward played Robert McCall, the retired agent-turned-good Samaritan who equalised the odds for ordinary folk beset by bad guys. In director Antoine Fuqua's slick reboot, it's superstar Denzel Washington who's guardian angel to the meek and menaced. His McCall is ultra-resourceful, lethally efficient and pretty much indestructible (like Liam Neeson in the Taken films) as he uses his "particular set of skills" to confound nasty Russian gangsters. It's ludicrous, but Washington has the stellar charisma to keep total disbelief at bay. JA (US 2014, violence, swearing, HD)

Les Misérables ★★
9.00pm-12.05am Paramount Network 12

MUSICAL The stage sensation emerges as a well-mounted film "poperetta" in the hands of The King's Speech director Tom Hooper. He takes an episodic approach to Victor Hugo's epic saga that revolves around Jean Valjean (Hugh Jackman, the bona fide star of this show), a reformed thief who is pursued through 19th-century France by the intractable officer Javert (Russell Crowe). Though the story is abridged, it is still rousing thanks to evergreen anthems like Bring Him Home and Oscar winner Anne Hathaway's powerfully moving rendition of I Dreamed a Dream. AJ (UK 2012, violence, swearing, sex scenes, HD)

DID YOU KNOW?
Angelina Jolie only accepted the role of Fox after she had the script rewritten to tailor the character more to her liking

ACTION James McAvoy crossed the velvet rope of stardom with the X-Men series, but it was Wanted that showed he was willing to sign a Faustian pact and sacrifice indie cred for sheer muscle. Though he plays a Chicago desk jockey called Wesley in this adaptation of writer Mark Millar and artist JG Jones's comic book, it behoves him to pump himself up when he discovers he possesses the abilities of a super-assassin. After being mentored by Angelina Jolie (right), he's dragged into an all-action netherworld of shoot-outs, high-speed chases and ninja training. It's directed with over-the-top vim by Kazakh import Timur Bekmambetov (who went on to besmirch Ben-Hur) and it buzzes with adrenaline and CGI-assisted thrills. Even if it doesn't all quite coalesce, McAvoy is a reason to watch, and it's nice to see my fellow Northamptonian Marc Warren in the noisy mix, too. CRIME With Quentin Tarantino's new Once upon a Time in Hollywood due in cinemas in August, let's go back to where it all began with his $1.2 million budget debut, which proved a runaway success and inspired countless wannabes. Working wonders with the pacy, attitude-laced dialogue (packed with references to pop music, TV shows and hip movies), the cast is uniformly excellent, with Michael Madsen's sadistic, ear-slashing Mr Blonde and Steve Buscemi's exasperated Mr Pink particularly outstanding. P Fisherman's Friends ★★★ 12

From Mon Virgin Movies (also DVD, Blu-ray and download)

COMEDY DRAMA Director Chris Foggin's fact-based film is an old-fashioned and very likeable tale in which a bunch of grizzled Cornish fishermen find themselves in line to land a recording deal to produce a CD of sea shanties.

James Purefoy stars as the fisher "king", Tuppence Middleton as his daughter and Daniel Mays as record-company boss Danny, who stumbles upon the group while down from London for a stag do and sees the potential for making a hit.

The film also stars Noel Clarke (as Danny's demanding boss) while Dave Johns and David Hayman are suitably salty as band members in a film that unashamedly puts the corn into Cornwall. Indeed, watching Fisherman's Friends is like slipping on one of the singers' thick-knit pullovers: warm and comforting. It's not quite a Full Monty or Local Hero, but just the ticket if you're in the mood for uplifting and undemanding entertainment. Dave Aldridge (UK 2018, swearing, HD)

The Aftermath ★★★ 15 Released 8 July on DVD, Blu-ray and download

Hamburg in 1946 and the troubled wife of a British army officer joins him as he works on Germany's reconstruction, in this adaptation of Rhidian Brook's novel. Keira Knightley is spot-on as the brittle spouse trying to work through wartime trauma, but while her bluff other half (Jason Clarke) is off doing his best for the postwar effort, she's left rattling around a mansion shared with its German owner (Alexander Skarsgård). It's obvious where this is all going, but it's still a classy proposition bolstered by Clarke's square-jawed display and Knightley's emotional conviction. The DVD includes a commentary and deleted scenes. Trevor Johnston

Stop dumbing down the news, pleads Alison Graham

RIGHT, LET'S TAKE an inventory. I can cross the road unaided (at the moment, anyway, until I'm completely decrepit). I can cut up and eat food by myself (again, at the moment) and I can, say, switch on a light, peel a banana and change channels on the telly. Not necessarily at the same time. And I can navigate a computer, though if I get stuck I have relatives under ten years old who can help me.

So, for a grown up, you have to admit I'm not doing badly. And, best of all, unless I'm distracted by shiny objects – if you dangle a pair of sparkly earrings in front of me, I'm lost – I can concentrate without too much difficulty on television news programmes.

But, bless them, they are determined to help me out, even though, as I say, I'm fairly competent. I think. Yet television news persists in presenting not terribly complicated matters to me in various Trumpton-like scenarios.

We can all see them coming, there was an item on the BBC news about the Conservative leadership election the other day that was pointlessly filmed at a heritage steam railway. Presumably because this is a very narrow electorate and there's no point in buttonholing your average voter for vox pops outside Boots. But I'm wise to this kind of trick. Mmm, I wondered, how long before the reporter refers to the election going "full steam ahead"? The answer was... not long.

'I was catatonic with boredom and fury at being patronised'

The whole thing chuntered on from there, as clichés dropped from the sky like dead ravens. The interviewer spoke to members of the local Conservative Association, the only voters in this particular election, and took them on a wholly specious trip on the steam train.

TOY TORIES
Jeremy Hunt and Boris Johnson as Looby Loo and Andy Pandy

This was simply so she could make a pun about "keeping the country on track". Give me a pineapple as a prize, because I spotted that one coming from a long way off.

BUT BY THE end of the report I had a pretty big haul of goodies, because we were also shown footage of one-arm-bandit slot machines (to be honest, I can't remember where these came into the proceedings as I didn't make a note, I think by this point I was catatonic with both boredom and mute fury at being so patronised).

Give me a giant teddy bear because I just knew the reporter was going to describe the leadership race as "game on" with "all to play for". Surely I'm not the only person to think this whole method of being addressed is just so twee. I can appreciate the need to liven up a frequently dry and dreary contest populated entirely by men in suits, but unless you're going to dress Boris Johnson and Jeremy Hunt up as Andy Pandy and Looby Loo (and who wouldn't want to see that?) then drop the kids' stuff.

I can also do without pointless cutaway shots of interviewees' restless hands. Unless they are making a macramé waistcoat or flicking surreptitious "V" signs at Laura Kuenssberg, I don't need to see their unfiled nails or bitten cuticles.

Oh well, I suppose it's going to be a long hot summer of frothing and foaming and endless speculation. There will be no shade and no respite. So I suppose we might as well stockpile the raspberry Mivvis and hunker down.

ROMANS RUINED

I enjoyed Race to the Death: Rome's Charioteers (Saturday C4), which attempted to re-create the highly dangerous, but undoubtedly thrilling, ancient Roman sport of chariot racing. But the commentary's desperate grasp for any modern-day parallel it could lasso into submission bordered on the absurd.

Like the Circus Maximus (the race track) being described as "the original theatre of dreams... with a capacity twice as big as Manchester United's Old Trafford". And charioteers as "star drivers" in a sport "just like Formula One". There's no need for this. Honestly, there really isn't.

1 THE KIDS IN AMERICA Stranger Things Netflix

The retro supernatural mega-hit is back, with a spring in its step as it once again mixes creature horror and adorable 80s-set schoolkid adventures. This year, rats in Hawkins, Indiana are exploding, the power keeps cutting out, and the Russians are coming – meanwhile, puberty is hitting hard.
Available from 4 July

THE ENTIRE SAGA 5 Gomorrah NowTV/Sky Box Sets

We're spoiled now with hundreds of top shows from Europe, but this Italian crime drama is still among the continent's best, despite its relative obscurity over here: it's about power struggles among Neapolitan gangsters, with more focus than most Mafia sagas on how organised crime interacts with ordinary life on the streets. Fast, brutal and constantly on a knife-edge, it's showing its fourth season on Sky Atlantic but the whole thing is already up on demand.

STAND-UP MISERY 6 Crashing NowTV/Sky Box Sets

US comic Pete Holmes gently excoriates himself in his low-key dramedy: if you've never heard of him, that's fitting for a show in which he plays a version of himself for whom stardom and professional fulfilment are elusive, and in any case not enough to balance out his embarrassing romantic career. The third series – available in full after the first two eps air on Sky Atlantic on 2 July – brings the story to a close.

LAST CHANCE 7 The Victim iPlayer (BBC1)

You still just about have time to digest Rob Williams's serious, heavy drama about grief and justice, led by Kelly Macdonald as the mother of a murdered boy who thinks she's found his killer. In a year packed with great drama, its airing on consecutive nights on BBC1 in April passed some viewers by. The performances of the cast, in a plethora of difficult roles, are well worth another look.
Available until 10 July

THE WHOLE BOX SET

2 Justified Amazon Prime

Timothy Olyphant (right) is terrific as a classic morally conflicted lawman in this perennially underrated US crime saga. What begins as a tough, satisfying show about old-fashioned justice becomes a fine study of masculinity in a small town, peopled by complex characters and with a violent showdown or tantalising moral dilemma around every corner, but with a sly sense of humour running through it. Amazon has all six series.

MODERN JUSTICE

3 Canny Cops iPlayer (BBC3)

An often darkly comic three-part documentary, on the beat in County Durham – where a deep-seated suspicion of law enforcement, plus social problems caused by economic deprivation, make policing a challenge.
Available from 3 July

PERIOD DRAMA WITH A PUNCH

4 Warrior NowTV/Sky Box Sets

Those who thrilled to naughty US drama Banshee will know what to expect given that co-creator Jonathan Tropper is also involved here: set amid the gang wars of 1870s San Francisco, it's a period saga with added sex and particularly violence. Bone-splintering martial arts scraps pepper the action as the city's Chinese, Irish and police thugs endlessly duff each other up.

Walter Presents (All 4)

Just as Scandi-noir fans enjoy spotting the same faces popping up in different shows, fans of continental dramas will recognise actors from Professor T, Code 37 and The Team in this solid, if a little soapy, Belgian saga. Two brothers who have been football-crazy since childhood are pulled apart when one turns pro: their family tries to stick together as both men end up in unfamiliar, toxic environments.

NO-FRILLS SLEUTHING

9 London Kills

iPlayer (BBC1)

A strong cast, led by Sharon Small, Tori Allen-Martin (above left) and Hugo Speer, elevates this run-of-the-mill crime drama in which a squad of murder detectives ply their trade around the capital. Sometimes, though, a police procedural that resolves itself within 45 minutes and hasn't got too many bells and whistles is exactly what's required to fill a hole in your viewing schedule. If so, here are five stories to settle into.

10

Amazon Prime

In between series one and two of this dramedy, co-creator Peter Farrelly made the Best Picture winner Green Book. This isn't anything like that, or Farrelly's previous films such as Dumb and Dumber: it's a gleefully misanthropic story of addiction and redemption, starring Ron Livingston as a recovering alcoholic who runs an unconventional support group. Loose, rude, quietly heartfelt and often very funny.

YOUR NEXT BINGE

A sober account of a deeply disturbing case

T rue-crime documentaries may not be your cup of tea, but The Yorkshire Ripper

Files: a Very British Crime Story

– written and produced by film-maker Liza Williams – carefully avoids the high tide of excitement that often accompanies such programmes. Moving the emphasis away from the life and motivations of one of the most notorious murderers this country has ever produced, the three-part BBC4 series is a much more considered affair, as it re-examines in detail the facts of the case and tries to identify the real people behind the familiar victim photos.

The saga that began in the deprived area of Chapeltown, Leeds in 1975 soon turned into a media sensation, with the resulting pressure on senior officers leading to a number of dubious decisions. More than five years after the first murder (of Chapeltown mother-of-four Wilma McCann), local lorry driver Peter Sutcliffe was arrested for the more minor offence of having false number plates on his car, by which time he had been interviewed nine times.

The story Williams tells combines archive footage with meetings with victims' family and friends, and discussions with those involved in both the inquiry itself and the media coverage of it. As Williams explores the inadequacies of the investigation, she asks what people remember of the case and the impact the attacks had on those directly affected. It comes as a surprise to be reminded of the gender preconceptions that were prevalent at the time, and how those caused frustrating, and sometimes fatal, delays.

Of course, the technology available to an inquiry of this scale did not include computer databases or DNA sequencing, but even taking that into account, a troubling picture still emerges of tragic missed opportunities and lives needlessly ruined. SUE ROBINSON

DOCTOR DIGITAL

Are your gadgets safe?

If you bought a 15-inch MacBook Pro between September 2015 and February 2017, the battery is in danger of overheating. Affected devices are being recalled. Check your laptop serial number at support.apple.com/15-inch-macbook-pro-battery-recall.

This joins other high-profile recalls including certain Apple UK chargers (apple.com/support/three-prong-ac-wall-plug-adapter) and the infamous Samsung Galaxy Note 7, the hot new smartphone that kept exploding.

Recalls for more obscure items might pass you by. Electrical Safety First maintains a list of recalls with contact information for the relevant manufacturers (electricalsafetyfirst.org.uk). But scanning the catalogue and trying to match it against everything you own is a time-consuming and dread-inducing experience.

The better strategy is to register your product when you buy it, so you should be contacted if a defect is found. If the registration card that came with your new TV went in the bin, you can usually find a Register button on the company's website.

Moreover, bear in mind that every gadget is potentially dangerous. Overheating or ruptured batteries are potentially explosive; frayed cords should be replaced, not taped; and never, ever make toast in the bath. JONATHAN HOLMES

LEADING THE PACK
Geraint Thomas should be back to defend his 2018 title

PICK OF THE DAY Cycling: Tour de France 10.30am Eurosport 1, 10.45am, 7.00pm (highlights) ITV4

SPORT In the UK, Le Tour used to be seen as an exotic event usually won by Frenchmen, Spaniards and Belgians, but now we hope for – nay expect – British success. Six of the last seven editions of the greatest Grand Tour race have been won by GB riders, with only Italy's Vincenzo Nibali spoiling that run. Will a rider from these shores yet again be wearing the maillot jaune when the peloton sweeps onto the Champs-Élysées on 28 July?

Chris Froome, four times a winner, will of course not be taking part after his horrific accident, but Geraint Thomas has dusted himself off after a fall and is ready to defend his title, while Adam Yates has unfinished business after finishing fourth in 2016, earning him the young rider title.

The brutal course this year looks like making it one for the climbers. The riders will encounter four mountain ranges during the 21-day race, with the Pyrenees and Alps sorting the men from the boys in the latter stages.

STEVE WALL

Harry Hill's Alien Fun Capsule

6.40pm ITV

ENTERTAINMENT Those without an encyclopaedic knowledge of Harry Hill will miss the zanier references here, as Stouffer the cat makes a cameo and Coventry Market – The Musical (a song that first featured in series one) enjoys a resurgence. Proffering themselves for a send-up this week are former royal correspondent Jennie Bond, TV presenter Angellica Bell, comedian Nick Helm and Emmerdale's Patrick Mower. Hill's quips about his panel get better every week ("It's like the table at a wedding no one wants to sit at") but it's radio presenter Liz Kershaw and her cousin's walk-on part that sums up the spirit of this teatime treat. FRANCES TAYLOR

Race to the Death: Rome's Charioteers

8.00pm C4

DOCUMENTARY If you can get past the desperate attempts to make ancient Roman chariot races all groovy and up to date ("Just like Formula One, it was a lethal sport") this is good fun, and informative, too. The idea is to re-create a Roman chariot race, once a popular and lucrative though incredibly dangerous sport for chariot drivers.

It follows the story of charioteer Scopus, a slave who was able to buy his freedom after massive success on the Circus Maximus racetrack. Presenter Mike Loades even makes his own chariot, which he attaches to four horses for a belt around an arena. It looks terrifying.

ALISON GRAHAM TV EDITOR

Casualty

8.25pm BBC1

DRAMA I love it when Casualty and Holby City turn into retirement homes for veteran performers because it gives us all the chance to wander down entertainment memory lane. Only the other week we had Brian Murphy guesting on Holby, now it's Roy Hudd being admitted to the ED. Despite his character Ken having collapsed outside his house, Hudd himself is thankfully looking very spry at 83.

At the other end of the age scale, a child needs rescuing after equipment at a disused soft-play centre falls on top of her. Just the other year I got trapped in an oversized foam mangle at one of those places and it's no laughing matter, let me tell you.

DAVID BROWN

Inspector Montalbano

9.00pm BBC4

DRAMA What do you do if you wake up and find a tramp dozing on your beach terrace? If you're Salvo, you give him an espresso and clean clothes – with luck, he may even bag a subplot that has some bearing on the main one.

There's been another murder in Vigata: Cosimo Barletta, a sleaze-bag loan shark who's bedded a string of young women (and photographed them in compromising poses). Few mourn his death, and Salvo deduces two separate killers could be in the frame.

I've watched nearly 30 of these films and 2017's A Nest of Vipers is one of the finest – a sheen of good humour offsetting unsavoury revelations. PATRICK MULKERN

HOW WE MADE: RACE TO THE DEATH

Reconstructing a Roman chariot is no mean feat, but riding one is a more daunting prospect. Mike Loades – a chariot historian in Race to the Death: Rome's Charioteers (8pm C4) – had “massive apprehension” about taking the reins. Luckily, he was in safe hooves: the four “very highly trained horses” are all stars of Poldark. One of the centre animals is Seamus – the main horse Aidan Turner rides – and the other three are made up to look like him when filming requires a trick or two.

When it comes to historical accuracy, Loades says that he believes they were “99 to 100 per cent” correct with their reconstruction. “The biggest eureka moment was that although it looks dangerous, it’s perfectly designed and safer than it appears. For an older nerdy gentleman this was jolly exciting, and taught me a lot.” FT

Download Festival

9.00pm Sky Arts

MUSIC If you ignore Metallica’s 2014 headline slot, Glastonbury isn’t exactly a mecca for metallers. No, Download fulfils that purpose. And you won’t find any willow-crafting workshops here.

Sadly, this year the Donington-based festival was so wet that some fans rebranded it “Drownload”. So, it was v-shaped guitars against an overcast sky, for a line-up that spanned the heaviness gamut, from the glam of Def Leppard to Anthrax’s Maiden-inspired thrash, right up to Carcass’s intense goregrind.

Expect all the metal clichés, including shooting flames and sword-fighting Vikings from Amon Amarth. I hope the stage-security guys were on triple time. GARY ROSE

Killing Eve

9.15pm BBC1

DRAMA Assassin Villanelle’s eyes sparkle with mischief and insolence as she completes a kill during a wincingly awful scene in a car wash. So, just another day at the office... until her adored/hated Eve hits on the most perfect plan – to use herself as bait to lure Villanelle into the open to confront the second hired killer.

It’s a fuzzy, diffuse episode that doesn’t gain any real traction until the end. Maybe the problem with the second series is that the element of surprise has gone, and will never return.

Still, hang around for the sight of Villanelle (Jodie Comer) wafting around what purports to be the Forest of Dean in a floor-length black chiffon gown. AG

Matangi/Maya/MIA

10.30pm BBC2

DOCUMENTARY This energetic documentary portrait of British-Sri Lankan rapper MIA (real name Mathangi Maya Arulpragasam) is as much as anything about reconciling the disparate elements of her identity.

Directed by her friend Stephen Loveridge, it features exceptional access to the musician, including a wealth of home-movie footage tracing her journey from refugee to aspiring film-maker to star. Often depicted as combative, she emerges as a frustrated, rather vulnerable figure. Although MIA’s activism is deeply personal (her father is a Tamil resistance leader and she has lost family to Sri Lanka’s civil war), her attempts to raise awareness are met with indifference. EMMA SIMMONDS

RIVER OF LIGHT

Architect Charlie Luxton and, below, an artist’s impression of the plan to light up the Thames

London’s Great Bridges: Lighting the Thames

7.00pm C4

DOCUMENTARY New series During the next year or so, 15 of London’s bridges across the Thames will become glimmering art installations decked in glorious fountains of light. It’s a £40m project (funded, you will doubtless be pleased to learn, largely by private donors including the Rothschild Foundation) designed to bring the Thames to life at night. But we’re not talking about tacky coloured fairy lights: this highly engineered project is by the American artist Leo Villareal, who designed the stunning illumination of San Francisco’s Bay Bridge.

Architect Charlie Luxton accompanies a nervous Villareal during a test run at Waterloo Bridge and dangles in a harness from a bridge as he helps to fit a light: each one costs £3,000 and takes an hour to install. Still, it should look lovely when it’s done. AG

The Sand Pebbles ★★★

11.25pm Talking Pictures TV FREEVIEW

Director Robert Wise had wanted to make a film adaptation of Robert McKenna's China-set novel ever since reading it. The studios, however, weren't so keen. Eventually, 20th Century-Fox agreed to finance The Sand Pebbles (review, p27), but, wary of the extensive location scouting involved, the impending monsoon season and perhaps worried about star Steve McQueen's difficult nature, they got Wise to do a "fill-in" movie first. Its name? The Sound of Music. STEVE MORRISSEY

Now on Netflix

Atomic Blonde ★★★ Netflix

Charlize Theron does the majority of her own stunts here, playing an MI6 spy tracking down double agents during the final days of the Berlin Wall. Director David Leitch's take on graphic novel The Coldest City merges John Wick with John le Carré, Bourne and Bond for a sexy gut-punch of A-list gorgeousness that provides Theron with a franchise-friendly hero to call her own. Disposable popcorn fluff it may be, but the action is brutally kinetic, while the killer 1980s soundtrack is a Disco Deutschland delight. ALAN JONES

A rainbow celebration

The 2019 Pride in London Parade takes place today, and to celebrate Sky Select hosts a weekend of movies championing LGBTQ stories. Oscar winners Philadelphia, Boys Don't Cry, A Fantastic Woman and Call Me by Your Name are among the highlights. And don't miss Love, Simon (right), which suggests there is a place for gay teenage romance among mainstream Hollywood fare. JAMIE HEALY

SPORT And just like that, it's over, or very nearly. Hopes were high for France 2019, and – mostly – the tournament has delivered, receiving unprecedented media coverage and racking up record TV audiences across the globe, including in the UK: a peak of nearly seven million watched England's battle against Cameroon in the last 16, one of the standout matches, though not for the right reasons. See also VAR: though it certainly meant there was no shortage of drama – remember France's retaken penalty against Nigeria? Its implementation was less than convincing, and at times overshadowed the purer entertainment offered by the considerable talent on the pitch. Elsewhere there were reminders of the ongoing push for parity: the USA – who asserted themselves early on with their 13–0 dismantling of Thailand – continue to fight for equal pay, while Brazil's Marta celebrated becoming the all-time top scorer at any World Cup by kissing her boots, which bore a symbol of gender equality.

At the time of going to press, we don't know which two teams will be lining up in front of a full house at the Stade de Lyon this afternoon, but both the 60,000-strong crowd and the millions watching at home will be hoping for a grandstand finish. HANNAH SHADDOCK Alex Scott: see p146

The Wonderful World of Chocolate

7.00pm Channel 5

DOCUMENTARY No matter which chocolate factory it is (this time it's Gyljan in Belgium, who make those chocolate seahorses), the workers seem very hyper, making me wonder how much product they've been sampling.

This week's nostalgia spot goes to Cadbury Dairy Milk (altogether now: "a glass and a half of full cream milk in every bar"), including that fabulous 2007 ad where a gorilla plays drums to In the Air Tonight.

There's a palatable history lesson about the Aztecs' worship of chocolate and, in Austria, Josef Zotter experiments with... whisky- and bacon-filled chocolate. Yes, really. JANE RACKHAM

Vienna Summer Night Concert

7.45pm BBC4

MUSIC Sundays on BBC4 are turning classical again for the summer. The channel's Proms coverage is just on the horizon, and as a foretaste Katie Derham presents a recent concert in Vienna's opulent Schönbrunn Palace gardens, with Venezuelan dynamo/conductor Gustavo Dudamel energising the Vienna Philharmonic.

Rhapsody in Blue is the event's overarching title, and the Gershwin classic is played with aplomb by Chinese star pianist Yuja Wang. The bill includes familiar pieces from North America: Barber's Adagio for Strings, Dvorak's New World Symphony and Max Steiner's score for Casablanca. Play it again, Gus.

PATRICK MULKERN

Top Gear

8.00pm BBC2

MOTORING Bob Mortimer is this week's studio guest – good news because he can't open his mouth without being funny. But it's also significant. Back in 2016, Mortimer slammed the show's then-presenter Chris Evans, tweeting a link to a newspaper story that claimed the producer of Top Gear had quit over Evans's tyrannical behaviour, with Mortimer adding: "We'll soon see if Tony Hall meant what he said about talent abusing their power at the BBC #topgeartimebomb". Now Evans has left, Bob clearly feels the time bomb has been defused...

Elsewhere, Paddy McGuinness and Freddie Flintoff head to Borneo and Chris Harris tries out the world's most luxurious SUV. DAVID BUTCHER

War in the Blood

9.00pm BBC2

DOCUMENTARY Arthur Cary's feature-length documentary charts the drama of trying to reprogramme human biology at the cutting edge of cancer treatment. We follow two leukaemia patients, Graham, 53, and 18-year-old Mahmoud, who have exhausted other treatment options as they take part in the first human trials of the new CAR T-cell therapy.

Graham says, "It could be brilliant. Could kill me." His wife Mellie confides that she has bought him a special Christmas tree decoration: a cloth guinea pig wearing a Santa hat.

As we chart the ups and downs of the gruelling treatment Graham and the serene Mahmoud undergo, this is a moving portrait of the human side of science. DB

A KILLING CAMEO...

■ Sofie Grabol from The Killing has ditched Sarah Lund's chic jumpers to guest star as the Queen of Denmark (right) in tonight's Gentleman Jack (9pm BBC1). Speaking of the "small part" in a recent interview, the 50-year-old Danish actor said, "I read the script and it was so well written. I'm sorry to say I haven't seen any of [Sally Wainwright's] work, but you always recognise a really good writer. And Suranne Jones! She's just so radiant, I was completely mesmerised by her." ■ This isn't the first time she's played Danish royalty – she made her English-language debut as Queen Margaret in The James Plays on stage in Edinburgh in 2014. ■ It's been seven years since Grabol was last seen as Sarah Lund. More recent roles include TV psychological drama Fortitude alongside Dennis Quaid and Luke Treadaway and Danish films The Day Will Come and That Time of Year. FRANCES TAYLOR

Beecham House

9.00pm ITV

DRAMA Buckle up, it's flashback time! Hunky John Beecham (Tom Bateman) gathers his ladies for tea, tells them a sad story and makes them cry. After which, of course, they love him even more, what with him being not just manly but damaged, too.

As Gurinder Chadha's epic saga grinds on, we find out who John was defending when he was injured in the first episode and learn more about the mother of cute baby August. August's auntie, meanwhile, slinks into John's bedroom as the words "You cannot deny our connection, John" drop from her mouth like bad teeth.

And another lady of the house is disappointed in love when she's seduced by a cad: "You have ruined me!" she cries. ALISON GRAHAM

The Handmaid's Tale

9.00pm C4

DRAMA This is more like it. A stunning episode generates the kind of focused emotional drama that this show is so good at. The characters are crushed and twisted by all the usual Gilead nonsense, but also by ordinary feelings of love and motherhood that Gilead can never quite tidy away.

The plot revolves around June's baby, now safely with her husband Luke in Canada. The Waterfords want to see her one last time to say goodbye (because they consider her their baby, of course). That leads to a heartbreaking phone call between Luke and June and some excellently underplayed fury from O-T Fagbenle as Luke. And, as ever, the soundtrack does surprising things, this time with Leo Sayer. DB

Ashes 2005: the Greatest Series

10.00pm C4

DOCUMENTARY Previews weren't available for this look back at a great cricketing drama, but you'd have a job making the tale of that summer anything but spine-tingling.

England started the 2005 series against Australia on the back foot, not having brought the Ashes home for 18 years, since the Botham era. On the plus side, they had a fresh-faced Freddie Flintoff in the bowling attack, fearless batsman Kevin Pietersen and Michael Vaughan as captain.

The balance of the series swung madly to and fro through five ferocious Tests, with the outcome only settled on the fifth day of the last, at the Oval. If this summer's Ashes has anything to touch it, we'll be in luck. DB

That there was no dominant style in the charts in 1988 works in this documentary's favour: it moves from Bros and Kylie to the Mission and acid house without worrying about tonal clashes. LOST LOVE

The two Ann(e)s have been torn apart by convention

Gentleman Jack

9.00pm BBC1

DRAMA OF THE WEEK In the final episode of Sally Wainwright's splendid drama, the two Ann(e)s are further apart than ever, both emotionally and geographically. Ann Walker (Sophie Rundle) is in Scotland, being bullied into marriage by her ghastly brother-in-law, while Anne Lister (Suranne Jones) is running from heartache again by travelling abroad. But just as you despair that Ann Walker is the most insipid drip you've ever set eyes on, at last she finds her bravery.

Anne, meanwhile, hurtles through Europe and fetches up at the court of the Danish Queen in Copenhagen. Yes, that's The Killing's Sarah Lund herself, Sofie Grabol, in a funny cameo role as the surprisingly flirty monarch (above).

I hope there's a second series of Gentleman Jack – Anne Lister's diaries were dense and immense so there's plenty of material.

But next time, less of the coal-mining. It's deadly dull. AG

7.45 Vienna Summer Night Concert
RT The magnificent gardens of the Schönbrunn Palace in the Austrian capital provide the backdrop for an evening of classical favourites from North America performed by the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra, led by the charismatic Venezuelan conductor Gustavo Dudamel. The programme includes Gershwin's Rhapsody in Blue, featuring Yuja Wang on piano. Presented by Katie Derham. See p46. Producer Dominic Best Repeated 1.50am (S) (HD)

9.00 That Summer ★★★★★
P An Arena film in which photographer Peter Beard looks back on the summer of 1972 when he spent time in the Hamptons, Long Island, with people such as Andy Warhol, Truman Capote and Mick Jagger. But his most fascinating encounter was with Edith Bouvier Beale and Edith Ewing Bouvier Beale, relations of Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis, who became the subject of the acclaimed documentary Grey Gardens. Review page 28. Director Goran Olsson (2017) (S) (HD)

10.20 Rich Hall's California Stars
The comedian considers the influence California has had upon the US and the wider world, as it has been a hotbed for gold mining, silver-screen stardom, the dotcom boom and hi-tech innovations. He also uncovers the reality of life in the Golden State as he ponders the frequent duality to be found among Californians – even though many are unhappy with their own lives, they still believe they dwell in the land of dreams. Director Chris Cottam Series producer John McCormack (R) (S) (HD)

11.50 Sound of Musicals with Neil Brand
1/3. The composer and author reveals how the modern shape of the musical was established through a series of pioneering works, examining Jerome Kern and Oscar Hammerstein's Show Boat and its bold look at America's racial divide in the 1920s. Director/Producer Sebastian Barfield (R) (S) (HD)

Love at first sight

7.05pm Sony Movie Channel FREEVIEW

When Leslie Mann auditioned for The Cable Guy (1996), she didn't get to read with star Jim Carrey, but the film's writer/producer Judd Apatow. Legend has it that when she left, he said, "There goes the future Mrs Apatow." The pair went on to tie the knot in 1997 and have been married for 22 years. It's a moving example of love at first sight in a fake-filled industry, and was only slightly undermined when Mann revealed to NBC News: "I think he may have said that [line] about Heather Locklear... and J-Lo, too." ANDREW COLLINS

Meeting your heroes

Juliet, Naked ★★★ 6.15pm Sky Premiere

Based on the novel by Nick Hornby, this romantic comedy stars Rose Byrne as a woman whose relationship with boyfriend Chris O'Dowd is overshadowed by his obsession with a rock star (Ethan Hawke). Byrne posts a comment on a fan website, only to receive a reply from the musician himself, leading to the American rocker travelling to the couple's small British seaside town. Hawke and O'Dowd display some deft comic touches, but it's Byrne as the sharp-witted, frustrated, forgotten woman who carries the film. TERRY STAUNTON

Leaving tomorrow

Bride & Prejudice ★★★
My5 FREE TO VIEW

Jane Austen's classic story is given a Bollywood makeover here by Gurinder Chadha, creator of ITV's Beecham House (see choice, p47). Aishwarya Rai takes the Elizabeth Bennet role as Lalita, who meets handsome but haughty Will Darcy (Martin Henderson) at a wedding. It's not long before the sparks are flying and saris whirling. LORIEN HAYNES

A FAMILY IN TURMOIL
The secret's out for Manny (Babou Ceesay), Isaac (Max Fincham) and Sam (Jill Halfpenny)

PICK OF THE DAY Dark Money 9.00pm BBC1

DRAMA New series London parents Manny and Sam (Babou Ceesay and Jill Halfpenny) welcome back their son Isaac (Max Fincham) from filming on a sci-fi blockbuster. It was his big break as a child actor but Isaac is traumatised: while he was in America he was sexually abused by the film's producer.

Manny's first instinct is retribution: "I won't let him get away with it." Strangely, the drama behaves as if it's his pain that matters most here, rather than Isaac's (or Sam's). When he first hears of the abuse, Manny doesn't comfort his son but sits crying to himself in guilt and agony, and later cuts himself horribly with a kitchen knife.

Ceesay and Halfpenny give strong performances but the script never quite convinces you things would unfold as they do. That said, it's such a sharp premise, with undercurrents of real-life Hollywood scandals, that watching how a troubled family copes with the nightmare is gripping. Next episode tomorrow. DAVID BUTCHER The RT Interview with Jill Halfpenny: page 14

Apollo's Moon Shot

8.00pm Smithsonian

DOCUMENTARY You'll see a lot of Neil Armstrong taking his small step this week, but this gripping series has the major bonus of Nasa insights, detail and footage that makes the Moon landing just as exciting as it was 50 years ago.

The countdown starts with Apollo 10's lunar orbit and the astronauts' training schedule (including a catastrophic simulated landing on a "flying bedstead") before Apollo 11 was eventually launched. We hear why the landing was nearly aborted from those in Mission Control while the voices of Armstrong, Aldrin and Collins add their personal view on the historic moment the Eagle landed.

The Honest Supermarket

9.00pm BBC2

DOCUMENTARY Britain's supermarkets got a pasting in the recent War on Plastic with Hugh and Anita for their wasteful recycle-unfriendly plastic packaging and this documentary gives them a kicking for so many other reasons.

Dr Hannah Fry opens her Honest Supermarket where labels are truthful with a look at the supposed purity of bottled water, and the meaninglessness of florid descriptions such as "mountain water". Elsewhere Eat Well For Less? dietician Priya Tew finds out, with the help of a fish expert, what the word "fresh" means when applied to fish. It comes as a shock.

ALISON GRAHAM

Extreme Tribe: the Last Pygmies

9.00pm C4

DOCUMENTARY New series Film-maker Livia Simoka (producer/director of Bruce Parry's The Tribe) is living with Mbendjele Pygmies in a remote part of the Congo where, as part of her welcome, she's given barbecued caterpillars and monkey organs stew. She gamely tucks in.

In fact, she throws herself into everything, whether it's knocking back palm wine or trying to negotiate her way round a family dispute. But be warned: there are graphic and distressing moments. She, too, finds it hard to watch a teeth-sharpening ceremony (the women think it makes them more beautiful) and she struggles to control her emotions during a hunting expedition. JR

Ghosts of the Deep: Ancient Shipwrecks

9.00pm More4

DOCUMENTARY Centuries ago, the Black Sea was known as the "hostile sea". Now, scientists investigating how it changed from a freshwater lake to a sea find out why, when they identify the astonishingly well-preserved remains of more than 40 ancient shipwrecks lying on the sea floor off Bulgaria. They could give us invaluable insight to life along its shores over the past 3,000 years.

Thanks to the oxygen-poor waters at depth, objects that would normally have rotted or been eaten away have survived in excellent condition, and the technique of taking thousands of photographs and then creating digital 3D renditions of the wrecks has worked miracles. GILL CRAWFORD

Have you noticed that Robert (right) on Coronation Street (7.30pm, 8.30pm ITV) keeps coming up with fresh excuses regarding his whereabouts when he's secretly with Vicky?

We've had "I was visiting some young offenders" and "I was meeting up with an old chef friend", but I'm now hoping that his lies spiral. "I've joined the Avengers and they need me on a mission" would be good. Or "I've been asked to renegotiate the Brexit withdrawal agreement". Michelle, who has suddenly become a pushover, would probably just nod and say, "OK, babe, but don't work too hard..."

Tonight, the beleaguered Bistro owner dissembles once again when Michelle asks him to deliver more food to a fundraiser, just as he's about to leave for Vicky's. When he arrives at the hotel with emergency canapés, his mobile starts ringing. Mate, it's time to change Vicky's contact name to "Captain America" on your phone. You know it makes sense. DAVID BROWN

90 Degrees South

4.25pm Talking Pictures TV
Compelling film of the fated Antarctic journey of Captain Scott – with fascinating wildlife footage. See page 29

Waco

9.00pm Alibi

DRAMA Knowing the outcome of the disastrous Waco siege in 1993 does nothing to diminish the tension in this excellent, intelligent dramatisation. The FBI and its offshoot the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms (ATF) prepare to raid the Texas compound of the Branch Davidians sect, led by the messianic and seemingly unshakeably confident David Koresh.

But the operation is bungled from the start as an FBI surveillance team is woefully unprepared when Koresh (Taylor Kitsch) pays a "friendly" visit to its lair. Koresh – a bigamist and a sexual exploiter of underage girls – is no fool, and he's armed to the teeth, ready for the "armies of Babylon" to come to his door. He doesn't have to wait long. AG

Year of the Rabbit

COMEDY There's plenty to love in this Victorian crime spoof full of ripe performances and riper language. This week we get more on the continuing storyline about a covert women's network run by Keeley Hawes, which for some reason has it in for shambolic Inspector Rabbit (Matt Berry). But why, Mabel asks her, when he's basically "a high functioning fried breakfast"?

We remain in the dark while Rabbit deals with an armed siege at a match factory, as his lover Flora is set to hang and the assistant commissioner prepares a ruling on his misdeeds. What if it goes against him? Then, says Rabbit, with a nod to Berry's other mad sitcom, "I'm toast."

DAVID BUTCHER

10.00pm Sky Atlantic

DRAMA Yes, there's a third series. The dark, sparky HBO dramedy created by Sharon Horgan has evolved into something lighter (each season has had a different showrunner) but is still finding good angles on characters in middle age struggling to reboot their lives. Frances (Sarah Jessica Parker) is out job-hunting after her art gallery burned down, while her ex-husband Robert (Thomas Haden Church) is daunted by the prospect of becoming a father again with his significantly younger fiancée. "Maybe it's time to rethink things, steer the old ship of dreams back to port," muses Frances.

The best scene comes when their once-wealthy friend Diane visits her husband – who lost all their savings – in prison. DAVID BUTCHER

LOST AND FOUND

Davina McCall and Nicky Campbell uncover surprising secrets

Long Lost Family

9.00pm ITV

DOCUMENTARY Kathleen, who's now 62, only knew she had been adopted after the woman she thought was her birth mother died. At five, she was devastated to learn the truth and that her real birth mother couldn't keep her because of the stigma at that time of an unmarried woman with a mixed heritage baby. So it was tough to grow up without a single family member who looked like her.

To her delight – and Kathleen is a joyfully exuberant person, who hugs everyone – the team quickly track down her 87-year-old mum (also called Kathleen). But Nicky Campbell is stunned when Kathleen senior reveals more secrets about her family and asks for his help.

And the surprises keep coming: an excited Davina McCall tells Kathleen junior that, amazingly and unexpectedly, a DNA connection to Kathleen's Jamaican birth father has been found. JR

Supermarket: What's Really in Our Food? 9.30pm Hannah Fry detects unexpected items

10.30am Wimbledon

Day seven at the All England Club is traditionally one of the busiest days of Wimbledon fortnight, featuring the last-16 matches in both the men's and women's singles.

On this day last year, Novak Djokovic, Rafael Nadal and Roger Federer all cruised into the men's quarter-finals. Meanwhile, for the first time in the open era, the second week began without any of the top four women's seeds after they were all eliminated early on. However, seven-times winner Serena Williams secured her place in the last eight with a straight-sets win over Evgeniya Rodina of Russia. Twelve months on, Britain's Johanna Konta will have been hoping to be in action today, having reached her third grand slam semi-final at Roland Garros last month. Presented by Sue Barker. (S) (HD)

Watch a selection of matches from other courts on the red button, with every match available on iPlayer and at bbc.co.uk/sport. Centre Court coverage is available in UltraHD on iPlayer and via the red button on compatible TVs, subject to bandwidth.

8.30pm Today at Wimbledon

Clare Balding and her guests introduce the best moments from today's play at SW19, featuring the fourth round of the men's and women's singles. Plus reaction from the day's winners and losers. Repeated on the red button from 10.30pm. (S) (HD)

9.30 The Honest Supermarket: What's Really in Our Food?

RT For every pound we spend on food shopping, 77p goes to the supermarkets. But can we trust the big high-street stores to tell us the truth about what we're buying and how it was produced? In an ambitious experiment to discover the real story about our everyday foods, Horizon has constructed the first ever "honest supermarket", where every product is labelled with the facts about its impact on us and the environment, and where the public can discover the truth about their favourite food. Dr Hannah Fry and dietician Priya Tew unearth the latest scientific research about the goods on our supermarket shelves, which suggests we could be ingesting plastic particles along with our bottled water, and our fresh fish might not as fresh as we'd like to think. See page 56.

Mrs Brown's Boys D'Movie ★★★

BBC iPlayer FREE TO VIEW

This feature outing for Brendan O'Carroll's comedy creation sees the potty-mouthed Mrs Brown crusading to save Dublin's Moore Street Market. O'Carroll employs familiar tricks from the TV show, addressing the audience and acknowledging the artifice to put a twist on jokes that would otherwise be too outrageous or just plain silly to swallow. The absence of a studio audience robs the formula of some of its fizz, but the spirit of anarchy remains. There's more from Mammy and the gang on Friday BBC1. STELLA PAPAMICHAEL

Psycho ★★★★★ 11.10pm TCM

This is easily the most shocking film produced by the "Master of Suspense" – yet Alfred Hitchcock always maintained it was a black comedy. He completed the picture for a mere $800,000, but the California Gothic tale of the Bates Motel went on to become his biggest commercial success. The opening segment, involving Janet Leigh and an envelope of stolen cash, is the biggest "MacGuffin" in Hitchcock's career. But his most audacious achievement was in getting us to side with the creepy Anthony Perkins. DAVID PARKINSON

Houston calling

Mission Control: the Unsung Heroes of Apollo ★★★ Netflix

Neil Armstrong and co might have won all the glory for landing on the Moon, but it was the technicians in Houston, Texas, who got them there. Those founding fathers of Nasa tell their side of the story in this alternative view of the space race. RT celebrates 50 years since we voyaged to the Moon on page 8. JAMIE HEALY

BORNEO, BORNEO...
RSC legend Dame Judi Dench takes to a very different stage

PICK OF THE DAY Judi Dench's Wild Borneo Adventure 9.00pm ITV

DOCUMENTARY Dame Judi Dench doesn't bat an eyelid when she gazes upon a reticulated python and marvels that this small creature has the physical ability to eat a small bear, whole. Is it the first time she's held a snake, wonders the expert? "No, we had real snakes in Antony and Cleopatra, they got out one night and frightened Michael Gambon out of his wits."

It's a good story and Dame Judi is on fine form, enjoying every experience and never once being weedy and scared. So hats off to her as she enters a bat cave ("There are more bats here than there are people in Birmingham," she tells us, slightly pointlessly). A million of the things wheel and chirrup around her, and she's unfazed.

But the real highlight of her trip to the jungle in Borneo comes at the end of the episode, as she takes the trusting hand of a tiny, bright-eyed orphaned orangutan.

Cricket World Cup

9.30am Sky Cricket/Main Event

SPORT Finally, the round robin is over. The format at this World Cup, whereby all ten teams play each other once in a mammoth group stage, has meant fans of every country (and crucially, India) have had a chance to stay involved as long as possible. Now, though, it's make-or-break as the top-ranked teams meet in semi-finals, today (at Old Trafford) and Thursday (Edgbaston).

At the time of writing, only Australia had booked their place, while pre-tournament favourites England were doing their best to swat away hopes of a semi-final spot with the grace of a mistimed slog. If Eoin Morgan's men are still in contention when you read this, it will have been quite a turnaround. DAVID BUTCHER

Ackley Bridge

8.00pm C4

DRAMA This series is rarely subtle about getting a message home. So after Nas and Sam get nicked for shoplifting, the resulting comparison of their home life (a loving, moral family versus an apparently uncaring lot of petty criminals) is like being bashed over the head with a placard that says: "Do you get what we mean here? DO YOU??" But Ackley Bridge is capable of dealing with important modern-day issues, such as period poverty, in an admirably sensitive way. So more of that, please.

There is some light relief tonight: when Kaneez practises her job interview technique and when an embarrassed Cory and Naveed read out their homework essays... on STDs. JANE RACKHAM

The Great Gardening Challenge

8.00pm Channel 5

GARDENING A pointless 48-hour deadline is surely just a means of enabling presenters Nicki Chapman and Diarmuid Gavin to bang on about garden-building contestants "feeling the pressure". Just give them a bit more time and everyone can relax.

The programme is at a care home for the elderly in Essex and two teams of married couples (Jon and Adam, and Catherine and James) are asked to come up with a garden that's fully wheelchair accessible to residents, to be built from scratch with a £5,000 budget. It's all very good-natured, despite the hosts' desperate attempts to sow discord among the designers. "Catherine and James are showing signs of strain"... no, they're not. AG

Secrets of the Railways

8.00pm Yesterday

DOCUMENTARY The small Swedish town of Kiruna exists to service a gigantic iron-ore mining complex deep underground in one of the most inhospitable regions on earth. But these very mines will shortly lead to Kiruna's destruction, because it's sinking as the land beneath becomes increasingly prone to collapse.

So its most crucial and beloved buildings are being loaded on to lorries and moved two miles down the road where a new settlement is being built. It's yet another gruelling undertaking in the difficult history of the Arctic Circle railway line from Kiruna to Narvik in Norway, a strategically important port during the Second World War that of course attracted the attention of Hitler. AG

Once again, we're left wondering why the sound of wedding bells doesn't act as a warning siren for a soap bride-to-be. Honey (right), who's been a regular on EastEnders (7.30pm BBC1) for many years, really should know better. But she's on cloud nine when Linda suggests that marriage could be on the cards for her and Adam. We, of course, know that the dirty dentist is also tickling Habiba's tonsils. But as Honey and Adam decide to get one of Jack's flats, might this be the moment she discovers the truth?

TODAY IN SOAPLAND

We're playing Holby City (8pm BBC1) catch-up, thanks to the Women's World Cup usurping its place in the schedules. So there are two episodes this week, with the second (more dramatic) airing tomorrow. Not a great deal occurs tonight, although there is a comic scene that finds Hanssen struggling to obtain a temporary work pass from receptionist Carole. Seeing the buttoned-up boss undone by his own overly rigorous administrative edicts is a joy.

DRAMA Child actor Isaac's sudden stardom would cause problems in the happiest of families, and his is anything but. As we saw at the start of last night's opener, they now live in a big, plush mansion, but it's a house of pain where tensions in what was already a fraught family set-up keep erupting.

Scarred by his abuse at the hands of a Hollywood producer, Isaac is acting up at school, while his chaperone Cheryl (Rebecca Front) insists, "We must all try to move on." She takes him on a publicity campaign that involves appearing on a TV chat show: it's hosted by Clare Balding, who makes playing a convincing version of herself in a drama look easy.

Inside the Bank of England

9.00pm BBC2

DOCUMENTARY Due to the BBC mislabelling preview episodes, we ran the wrong choice last week. So, again, here is a fascinating glimpse into what must be one of the world's best-protected buildings, where we see men standing on domestic stepladders as they count gold bars in the vaults of the Bank of England. There are 413,000 belonging to countries across the globe and they are worth a total of £155 billion. And, incidentally, none ever goes missing.

It's an absorbing diversion in an episode that's dominated by Brexit, of course. Cameras followed bank governor Mark Carney and his team throughout last year while Theresa May negotiated her withdrawal agreement. AG

Crashing

10.10pm, 10.45pm Sky Atlantic

COMEDY Another excellent double bill of the HBO dramedy that peers into the heart of stand-up comedy and sees mostly anxiety and pain. I'm Dying Up Here did something similar, but in 1970s Los Angeles and without such a sharp sense of awkwardness.

Crashing's hero is luckless, repressed Pete. In the throes of love with his new girlfriend, everything is going well until she insists on taking him to the very comedy club that rejected him so cruelly last week – but this time, in the audience.

A guest turn from Ray Romano playing himself adds to the agony for Pete. Not many shows can twist the knife in their protagonist with quite such delicate control.

DAVID BUTCHER

Charles I: Downfall of a King

9.00pm BBC4

HISTORY New series The country divided... a fast-moving political climate... a widespread fear of European interference in our affairs... Parliament in turmoil...

It's not hard for Lisa Hilton to find parallels between 1641 and 2019 as she charts "50 tempestuous days when the very foundations of the British state fractured", and essentially retells the tale of MPs challenging the excesses of Charles I as a Brexit parable we might do well to remember if we want to avoid the modern version of a civil war.

Whether you get on with Hilton's account of the story will depend on whether you're OK with her delivery style, which is more arch than the archbishop of Marble Arch. Get past that and there's plenty of substance on the intriguing details of the Grand Remonstrance, puritan firebrand John Pym and the vital importance of currants. DAVID BUTCHER

12.30pm Wimbledon

It's day eight at the All England Club, where the women's quarter-finals are scheduled to take place. On this day last year, Angelique Kerber's campaign gathered strength with a 6-3, 7-5 win against Daria Kasatkina, while Serena Williams dropped her first set against Camila Giorgi before taking the match 3-6, 6-3, 6-4. For British fans, the day's drama was provided by a five-set thriller in the men's doubles, as Jamie Murray and Bruno Soares of Brazil lost their battle with Raven Klaasen and Michael Venus. With commentators Vijay Amritraj, Tracy Austin, Boris Becker, Chris Bradnam, James Burridge, Andrew Castle, Matt Chilton, Kim Clijsters, Andrew Cotter, Annabel Croft, Jo Durie, Colin Fleming, Peter Fleming, Paul Hand, Tim Henman, John Inverdale, Nick Lester, John Lloyd, Dan Lobb, Miles MacLagan, John McEnroe, Ronald McIntosh, David Mercer, Nick Mullins, Martina Navratilova, Pete Odgers, Louise Pleming, Simon Reed, Chanda Rubin, Sam Smith, Liz Smylie, Mel South and Todd Woodbridge. 9.00 Inside the Bank of England

RT 2/2. It's October 2018 – six months before the UK is due to leave the European Union – and Parliament tasks the Bank with compiling a detailed analysis of the likely economic impact of leaving the EU without a deal. Executive director Alex Brazier and the bank's financial stability team must assess whether our financial system could cope, and subject the nation's high-street banks to economic stress tests to find out if they hold sufficient contingency funds. With scrutiny mounting, the Bank's leaders brace themselves for press inquisition as the Brexit report is published, and a forensic examination of their findings by MPs. There are also longer-term risks to consider, and governor Mark Carney heads to New York to announce a major breakthrough in the Bank's efforts to shield the global economy from the effects of climate change. See page 67. Director Rob McCabe; Producer Emily Bunt (S) (AD) (HD)

Queen of the court

Battle of the Sexes ★★★ Now TV/Sky On Demand
With this year's Wimbledon in its second week, here's a film celebrating one of the greatest champions the oldest tennis tournament in the world (inaugurated on this day in 1877) has ever produced. Billie Jean King won 20 titles (six singles, ten doubles and four mixed), a record only equalled by Martina Navratilova. Emma Stone stars as King in this drama set around her 1973 match against one-time US number one Bobby Riggs (Steve Carell). The dress she wore for the match is in the Smithsonian. SUE ROBINSON

Sicario ★★★★★ 9.00pm Film4 FREEVIEW
This was the movie that turned Denis Villeneuve from being the highly regarded director of films such as Enemy and Prisoners into a top-rank Hollywood player. It also proved he was an absolute ace at action. He followed it up with two films – Arrival and Blade Runner 2049 – demonstrating his genius for sci-fi, too. Both genres collide in the Canadian's next project – "Star Wars, for adults" he calls it – a reworking of the Frank Herbert classic Dune, which reteams him with Josh Brolin, star of Sicario (review, p29). STEVE MORRISSEY

Holiday tears

Two for Joy ★★
10.00pm Sky Premiere
Samantha Morton stars here as a newly widowed mum who takes her two kids to a seaside caravan park run by kindly Daniel Mays and his troubled sister, Billie Piper. Despite the film's title, it all ends in tears, but this British independent film is nicely made and has some terrific performances from the younger cast members in particular. DAVE ALDRIDGE

Inside the Ritz Hotel

8.00pm ITV

DOCUMENTARY The Ritz's executive chef John Williams is launching a cookbook with a slap-up dinner for journalists and fellow chefs. All goes well with the turbot starter, and the venison wellington is just about to be served when the phone rings: it's an emergency – there's a vegetarian in the house!

You might wonder who on earth would leave such a vital piece of information until the very last minute, but it's not John Williams's job to reason why, though he has a certain look on his face as something with celeriac is rustled up for the diner. Elsewhere Rod Stewart's wife Penny Lancaster arrives for a birthday meal with some friends. ALISON GRAHAM

The Supervet: Noel Fitzpatrick

8.00pm C4

DOCUMENTARY One-year-old ridgeback Loki has always been lame because of a developmental disease in the ankle joint of one of his back legs. His owner opts for surgery, but just as challenging as the operation is the lengthy recuperation period. Loki is much too boisterous to take such a thing lying down. Also needing Noel's help is Hugo, a newfoundland who acts as a therapy dog for young Dominic, who has autism. Unfortunately Hugo not only has hip dysplasia but, Noel discovers, other problems, too. "That's not good," he says grimly. "We have some big decisions to make." JANE RACKHAM

The South Bank Sky Arts Awards

8.00pm Sky Arts

AWARDS It's all here: dance, theatre, television, classical music, pop, literature... the list goes on, as the only awards that pull every type of artistic endeavour under one umbrella have their big night.

The TV comedy category features the much-loved Derry Girls (which should have won a Bafta), Inside No 9 and Hang Ups, while for drama it's a tussle between Patrick Melrose, A Very English Scandal and Killing Eve. Peter Jackson's First World War documentary, They Shall Not Grow Old, which was shown on BBC2, vies for best film with Beast and The Favourite, which won Olivia Colman an Oscar. And Lily Allen, Sons of Kemet and IDLES compete for the pop crown. AG

PICK OF THE DAY Eight Days: to the Moon and Back 9.00pm BBC2

DOCUMENTARY OF THE WEEK In a week full of high-powered docs about the Moon landing, this one has a little extra rocket fuel. It uses audio recordings of the astronauts themselves, and has actors lip-sync to it in dramatised reconstructions of life on board Apollo 11.

That sounds a bit mad but it works beautifully, giving us a sense of the regular guys inside the spacesuits. We can hear the emotion in the voices of Neil Armstrong, Michael Collins and Buzz Aldrin as they see sights never before seen ("Look at that horizon! Goddamn that's pretty...") and josh among themselves about, say, Armstrong's dodgy taste in music. Mixed in is real footage from the Nasa archives that still has the power to amaze. The end result is to float us weightlessly through an extraordinary week in human history and make it all feel... very human.

It's the second of this week's visits to Holby City (8pm BBC1) and you may come away feeling that the episode's best moment happened off screen. I'm referring to a scene in which a slightly fragile Serena Campbell discusses her night out with hilarious consultant obstetrician Fleur Fanshawe. As Serena admits, this involved them drunkenly dancing on a table in their bras, proof that "mixing shiraz with hot flushes" is a recipe for embarrassment. Hopefully, footage of this wild evening will eventually surface; I'll be keeping my eyes peeled for an iPlayer exclusive.

As for drama at the hospital, we have horrible Evan (Jack Ryder, left) getting attacked by a stropky patient who seems to be modelling herself on Catherine Tate's "am I bovvered?" teenager Lauren. As you can imagine, this performance doesn't at all come across as either clichéd or outdated. As he dices with death, Evan still has time to manipulate Chloe into actions she may well end up regretting... DAVID BROWN

Wild Bill

9.00pm ITV

DRAMA Really, you're still watching this? OK, if you must... Muriel, the only detective in Lincolnshire, is once again the lead investigator on a murder when the body of the owner of a broccoli farm is found chopped up in a suitcase. Muriel's sidekick remains the Chief Constable, Bill Hixon (Rob Lowe), who accompanies her on inquiries that are helped along by fortuitous CCTV Footage.

The dead man's awful family and his girlfriend all behave in ways guaranteed to arouse suspicion, while that local reporter (Angela Griffin) turns up on Bill's doorstep asking for a quote. Then Bill commits criminal damage and illegally discharges a shotgun. There's only one episode left. AG

Taskmaster

9.00pm Dave

COMEDY After what they've been through, it's a wonder that all five comedians have made it to the final of this series of Taskmaster in one piece. This humdinger of a finale does its best to undo that, with fireworks, an actual fire and blindfolds all being implemented to varying degrees of danger. That's all before one particularly competitive comedian attempts to actually eat a rubber eraser (Alex Horne maybe should've intervened...) and Joe Thomas finally snaps after ten weeks, receiving a standing ovation for his outburst.

The lengths some will go to in order to be in with a shot of taking home the trophy – a bust of Greg Davies's head – never ceases to amaze and amuse.

10.35pm BBC1

DRAMA Gethin is a nice lad, part of a fractured family, but he is close to his sister and his niece. He has a handful of good mates and not much of a job – he's on a zero-hours contract in a fast food takeaway shop.

But the fates conspire to send Gethin (Sion Daniel Young, who is excellent) completely off the rails as the fragile threads that hold his life together unravel and snap, leading to violence and tragedy.

DRAMA Anyone hoping to see the lovers at the heart of this Scottish time-travelling romance reconnect will need to wait a bit as we enter the third series. Separated by a continent and two centuries, Jacobite Highlander Jamie Fraser (Sam Heughan) and Second World War nurse Claire Beauchamp (Caitriona Balfe) are heading in very different directions. In 1746, Jamie must relive (in grisly detail, so be warned) the horrors of the Battle of Culloden – including a gruelling confrontation with his nemesis – and its murderous aftermath.

Claire, meanwhile, having returned to 1948 through those mysterious standing stones, and pregnant with Jamie's baby, has arrived in Boston (USA) to make a new life with her first husband, Frank (Tobias Menzies). But it's not just swollen ankles that's making their situation hard to deal with. Praise, as ever, is due to Menzies in a tough dual role. GILL CRAWFORD

Eight Days: to the Moon and Back 9.00pm A re-creation of the Apollo 11's crew's space odyssey

1.00pm Wimbledon

The men's quarter-finals are the main attraction on day nine at the All England Club. On this day in 2018, number one seed Roger Federer was the most stellar casualty, as the eight-times champion lost a five-set thriller on No 1 Court to the South African Kevin Anderson, who would go on to reach the final. On Centre Court, Novak Djokovic took a relatively straightforward route to the semi-finals with a 6-3, 3-6, 6-2, 6-2 victory over Kei Nishikori. Meanwhile, the 2008 and 2010 champion Rafael Nadal needed five sets to defeat Juan Martin del Potro, and big-serving John Isner saw off the challenge of Milos Raonic to secure his place in the last four. Presented by Sue Barker. (S) (HD)

DOCUMENTARY OF THE WEEK

9.00 Eight Days: to the Moon and Back

RT It took precisely eight days, three hours, 18 minutes and 35 minutes for Neil Armstrong, Buzz Aldrin and Michael Collins – the crew of Apollo 11 – to blast off from Kennedy Space Centre, fly to the Moon, land on its surface and return safely to Earth, splashing down in the Pacific. But what were those eight days really like for those three pioneering astronauts? To mark the 50th anniversary of the first Moon landing, this drama-documentary brings to life the story of the mission as it happened. With access to hours of declassified audio recorded by the crew, it uses digital effects and dramatised performances to explore what it was like for those three men, from moments of high drama to cockpit banter, during the course of the ultimate human adventure. See page 76.

Milla's night terrors

from 9.00pm Sony Movie Channel FREEVIEW

As Sony shows Resident Evil (review, p30) and the first two sequels in the zombie saga, spare a thought for its star, Milla Jovovich. "I don't even like scary movies, but I've lived for years inside this world of horror," she revealed to the Mail on Sunday. "The actual making of the movies is very normal. The zombies are on set drinking coffee, having a cigarette and chatting. Then I close my eyes and they're after me." A glutton for psychological punishment, Jovovich has since taken roles in Hellboy and Monster Hunter. ANDREW COLLINS

New this month on Netflix

Blindspotting ★★★★★ Netflix

As Oakland's working class sees their community slide into gentrification, the police shooting of a black man casts a shadow over two pals. Daveed Diggs's African-American ex-con proves to be the more responsible of the two – no mean task when his white best mate (Rafael Casal) is such a loose cannon. Whether Diggs will make it through the last days of his probation keeps the tension alive, but this drama is really a community fresco, pressing the audience to look deeper than familiar clichés. TREVOR JOHNSTON

Theatre of war

The Captain ★★★

10.00pm Sky Premiere

Two weeks before the end of the Second World War, a German army deserter evades capture by impersonating an officer in this true-story tale. Shot in crisp black-and-white, the film offers a convincing depiction of Nazi Germany on the verge of collapse, with Max Hubacher equally convincing as a scared runaway or steely Hitler fanatic. TJ

Annie McVey (below) lost her daughter to the human variant of BSE

PICK OF THE DAY Mad Cow Disease: the Great British Beef Scandal 9.00pm BBC2

DOCUMENTARY Every Christmas Annie McVey emails photos of her daughter Claire to a "hit-list" of politicians and business people. She reminds them that her daughter's death in 2000, aged just 15, from the human variant of mad cow disease, is, she believes, their fault.

Claire's decline from a cheerful teen to a young woman barely able to speak or stand is captured with painful clarity in a series of home movies and her mother's anger is undimmed. "I wanted to know who to blame because I wanted to break their legs."

Claire is one of nearly 200 people who died in what remains Britain's most infamous food scandal, when meat from cattle fed on bovine spongiform encephalopathy-infected spinal cords entered the food chain.

The chilling documentary looks hard at spectacular Government misjudgement and warns that there's still no cure, and no way of pinpointing carriers of the disease. ALISON GRAHAM

Serengeti

8.00pm BBC1

NATURE So much incredible filming. Such great footage of beautiful animals – lions, cheetahs, elephants, baboons and ostriches. Sweeping shots of the African landscape in golden sunlight. It's a shame someone decided all this had to be painted over with a weird, sickly gloss of dramatised storytelling.

The idea could have worked but the script is such a dud that narrator John Boyega is stuck with preachy platitudes ("Accepting failure is the hardest part of leadership... A family is something worth fighting for...") when we'd be happy just lapping up shots of gambolling cheetah cubs. I mean, fluffy cheetah cubs are all anyone needs. DAVID BUTCHER

The Directors

8.00pm Sky Arts

DOCUMENTARY This is one for the huge TV and the surround sound system. Director John Sturges was a master of the western and he put that familiarity with sun-parched landscapes to good use in his 1955 thriller Bad Day at Black Rock when he set Spencer Tracy against a widescreen desert panorama.

However, one of Sturges's other famous films is what you'll need those speakers for: you'll want to crank it up for the rousing theme to The Great Escape (which follows at 9pm). This profile of Sturges's life and work covers both films, as well as that other classic, The Magnificent Seven. Time to play the "name the Magnificent Seven actors" game... DAVID CRAWFORD

Why Can't We Sleep?

9.00pm ITV

DOCUMENTARY Night terrors, stress, sleep apnoea, heavy meals and excess alcohol, too much late-night screen time: there are many reasons why people don't sleep well. And if you're one of the estimated 16 million adults in this country who say they have insomnia, or the 32 million who regularly suffer from disrupted sleep, you'll know how devastating it can be. Trying to function with a sleep-deprived brain is not easy.

This documentary investigates some of the causes of sleep issues while a group with sleep problems seek help from a specialist research centre. And that, of course, involves the ghostly night-vision footage that always gives me nightmares. JANE RACKHAM

DRAMA Even in death these characters look glamorous: artfully spread out hair, an exquisite designer dress arranged just so and not a hint of gore to spoil the tableau.

But before we get to that part, poor Irina wakes up to find her fabulous swimming pool is full of pig's blood. Who could have done such a thing? The list of people with a grudge is probably endless but good old Georgina reckons she can fix it. To her, "fixing" something means blackmail, coercion or even murder – so the thuggish Jakob Negrescu should take notice when Georgina warns him not to mess with her.

Meanwhile, Adriana and Nico's announcement gets a somewhat muted response. JR

Comedian Les Dawson once described Emmerdale (7pm, 8pm ITV) as “Dallas with dung”. And while the show has now largely moved on from its sex-and-silage roots, there is one character who keeps Dawson’s image of frisky farming alive: Moira Dingle (right). “Mucky Moira”, as she’s been dubbed in the press, has always been quick to rip open the press-studs of her overalls in her years at Butlers Farm – and now we have someone else working the land who’s just as salacious as she is:

TODAY IN SOAPLAND

newcomer Nate Robinson, or “Naughty Nate” as he should perhaps be known. Already this week, we’ve seen Moira sabotaging Nate’s relationship with Amy. Now, after seeing Nate back in Amy’s arms, Moira fires him and lies to a newly returned Cain over what has happened. But I feel that Moira’s rash actions where Nate’s job is concerned mask deeper feelings. And I’m predicting that fans of Cain and Moira’s marriage (Team #Coira) will end up seeing Nate as a big threat. DAVID BROWN

Arabia with Levison Wood

9.00pm Discovery

TRAVEL Having escaped from Yemen by the skin of his teeth, Levison Wood takes an unexpected detour. It takes time – you can tell how long by the increasing bushiness of his beard – before he finally gets to Saudi Arabia. Levison does his best to understand this contradictory country, but he’s not allowed to do much more than scratch the surface.

There’s a surreal moment, though, when, after Levison’s head is prettily garlanded with flowers, one of the notoriously fierce Asiri tribe casually asks for a photo for his Instagram. And if you think inflation in the West is bad, seeing people pushing wheelbarrows piled high with cash in Somalia will make you think again. JR

The Good Place

9.30pm E4

SITCOM In one of the sweeter episodes to date, this week’s story explores the relationship between demon Michael (Ted Danson) and his synthetic “not-a-robot” sidekick Janet (D’Arcy Carden), beginning with a flashback to their first meeting before jumping into a present-day calamity – Janet is malfunctioning, and Michael might need to put her down to save his human friends.

The upbeat Carden has always been The Good Place’s secret weapon, and hearing Janet perkily beg Michael to “go on, kill me!” is a real tonic.

But as the pair delve into Janet’s manual, it looks like Janet’s in-built “marble-ising” function, where she’s crushed into a tiny ball, might be her only future... HUW FULLERTON

Too Gay for God?

10.35pm BBC1

DOCUMENTARY The Rev Jide Macaulay is an openly gay member of the Church of England who wants to marry his boyfriend and continue serving as a deacon. This is forbidden by the C of E. His own father, a hugely influential clergyman in Nigeria who advises the country’s government on homosexuality (punishable by up to 14 years’ imprisonment), thinks a spell in jail would make his son straight.

In an often sad film Macaulay asks why the church he loves cannot accept him as a married, gay clergyman. He meets Andrew Foreshew-Cain, the first gay Church of England vicar to marry his partner, and a sympathetic bishop whose understanding of his unhappiness reduces Macaulay to tears. AG

HOMEWARD BOUND?

Yossarian hits on a plan to get discharged

9.00pm C4

DRAMA Yossarian’s mind is newly focused after the horrors he witnessed last week. He needs to get out of the air force, right now. As the barmy Colonel Cathcart increases the number of flying missions, Yossarian hits on a radical new plan – he will fly his remaining 11 missions as fast as possible. Just get them all out of the way, and then he can be discharged and go home.

In a thrilling, febrile episode directed by Catch-22’s executive producer and occasional star, George Clooney, Yossarian must first complete a kind of spiv’s odyssey at the behest of wheeler dealer Milo. It involves goats, artichokes, parrots and Yossarian (Christopher Abbott, tremendous as the everyman anti-hero) passing himself off as Nelson Rockefeller.

By now this smart adaptation of Joseph Heller’s novel has a life of its own – it’s intelligent, funny and, frequently, as in tonight’s closing moments, devastating. AG

12.30pm Wimbledon

The last four women are now just two victories away from the Venus Rosewater Dish, as the semi-finals take centre stage on day ten.

On this day last year, Angelique Kerber pulled off an emphatic 6-3, 6-3 victory over Latvia's Jelena Ostapenko on Centre Court, followed by an equally convincing win for Serena Williams against Julia Goerges of Germany, 6-2, 6-4. In the men's doubles semi-finals, Raven Klaasen and Michael Venus took another British scalp en route to the final, beating Joe Salisbury and his partner Frederick Nielson of Denmark in five sets. There was also strong British interest in the mixed doubles quarter-finals, where Jay Clarke and Harriet Dart bounced into the last four, while Jamie Murray and Victoria Azarenka sealed their place in the semi-finals by defeating Jean-Julien Rojer and Demi Schuurs. 9.00 Mad Cow Disease: the Great British Beef Scandal

RT In 1996, the government announced that a new fatal condition called Variant Creutzfeldt-Jacob Disease had been discovered. Related to the cattle disease BSE, better known as "mad cow disease", it was untreatable, incurable and almost the entire population of Britain had been exposed to it. What's more, it was entirely man-made. Since then, almost 200 people have died from vCJD, while BSE has caused the death of four million cows. The crisis cost the NHS over a billion pounds, and virtually destroyed the British beef industry in the 1990s. Featuring interviews with the politicians, scientists and families whose livelihoods were defined by the crisis, this film reveals how the desire for cheap meat in the 1970s led to the first outbreak of BSE in 1985, and chronicles how the nation's biggest ever food scandal was created through a combination of greed and political miscalculation. See page 86.

The Bourne inspiration

Jason Bourne ★★★★★ 9.00pm Film4 FREEVIEW
It's said that the inspiration for author Robert Ludlum's amnesiac hero was Ansel Bourne, a preacher from Rhode Island who went missing in January 1887, only to show up two months later in Norristown, Pennsylvania, with no memory of what had occurred. During that time, he had been going about his business as AJ Brown, and had even opened a store in the town. The case became a sensation, with doctors summing Bourne had been in a fugue state all along. Curiously, after Bourne's identity was restored, Brown could still be reached through hypnosis. JAMIE HEALY

The Upside ★★★★★ Amazon Prime
In this US reworking of the 2011 French movie Untouchable, Bryan Cranston and Kevin Hart take on the real-life roles of an author left quadriplegic after a paragliding accident, and the black ex-con who is hired as his full-time carer. Cranston is his usual solid and dependable self, but it's Hart who really impresses, toning down his usual schtick to show off some genuine acting chops. Remakes of European movies rarely match the original, but this offering from Limitless director Neil Burger is better than most. DAVE ALDRIDGE

Something strange

Possum ★★
10.00pm Sky Premiere
This perplexing chiller stars Sean Harris as a disgraced children's entertainer who tries and fails repeatedly to destroy Possum – a hideous, human-faced spider puppet, which is an external manifestation of his mental problems. The film plays out like a horror as written by Samuel Beckett, but it does have a certain niche appeal. DA

RAISIN HELL
Ashley Jensen returns as accident-prone amateur sleuth Agatha

PICK OF THE DAY Agatha Raisin 9.00pm Sky 1

COMEDY DRAMA To say that Agatha Raisin is daft would be an understatement – it makes Midsomer Murders look like NYPD Blue. Harsh? Well, you haven't yet seen the moment in this feature-length series-two opener that finds Ashley Jensen's amateur detective falling into a wheelie bin. Or the sequence where she goes to get her hair cut by a supposedly posh stylist and emerges with Glenn Close's gigantic perm from Fatal Attraction. Believe me, it's tricky to sift the clues and red herrings of a murder mystery when we keep being distracted by comic interludes that feel like they're lifted from Keeping Up Appearances.

But there is still fun to be had, particularly when Mathew Horne is on screen as Aggie's scene-stealing sidekick Roy. "Slow down – I'm mid- to late-30s!" he yells as he tries to chase a suspect. I could have done with more of him and less of the over-the-top pratfalling. DAVID BROWN

Live Netball World Cup

from 8.30am Sky Sports Netball/Action/Arena/Main Event/Sky 1

SPORT Liverpool hosts as netball's biggest event gets under way, with England, Scotland and Northern Ireland involved in the first group stage – Wales didn't qualify, sadly.

Northern Ireland are the first Home Nation on court, taking on title holders Australia (Sky Sports Netball, centre-pass 11am), England face Uganda (Sky Sports Netball/Sky 1, 7pm) and Scotland play Samoa (Sky Sports Action, 7.25pm).

The initial group matches will be on Sky channels – but from Monday, matches will also be shown on the BBC. Netball is experiencing a surge in popularity since England's Commonwealth gold last year, and could have gained even more fans by the final on 21 July. STEVE WALL

Celebrity Crystal Maze

8.00pm C4

GAME SHOW I'm ashamed to say it's taken me this long to realise that the arrival of the new Eastern Zone had meant the retirement of the Medieval Zone, and as much as I'm enjoying the new-look challenges it's sad to say goodbye to a classic element of the 1990s series. And does this mean no more quests for Jessica Hynes's Knight character?

Anyway, doing their best with the remaining zones are actors Sunetra Sarker and Nikki Sanderson, Brexit Party MEP Ann Widdecombe, broadcaster Matthew Wright and Love Island's Wes Nelson, all a powerful example of the bizarre casting sheet this series seems to draw from. HUW FULLERTON

Gardeners' World

9.00pm BBC2

GARDENING The buzz at this year's Chelsea and Hampton Court flower shows has all been about how gardeners can encourage wildlife, whether that's through flowers that attract bees or building a bug hotel. Monty Don and the team join in the campaign by reporting on the loss of wildflower habitats in this country and discovering ways we can help redress the balance.

Monty is at Highgrove to see the new meadows that the Prince of Wales has created there, but if your own patch isn't quite big enough for that, Carol Klein suggests plants we can all fit into our gardens to increase the numbers of insects and birds that come to visit. JANE RACKHAM
Your RT Gardening; page 132

It's race day on EastEnders (8.30pm BBC1) and it looks as though Mitch (right) will be edging the competition, which should please him, seeing as he isn't the biggest fan of his son-in-law and fellow competitor Gray. It's almost as if canny Mitch knows the soap rules when it comes to characters with professional qualifications. Basically, if your suit has a sharper cut than your neighbour's, your hair is slicked back with wax and your name is double-barrelled, then you must be up to no good.

TODAY IN SOAPLAND

Personally, I'd like to see the show subvert these expectations when it comes to Gray and for it to be revealed that Mitch's rogue radar is off. So little is known about Gray and Chantelle's marriage that EastEnders could do anything with the pair. Maybe their dark secret (because when it comes to these things there's always a "dark secret") is that she is coercively controlling him? Gray could be the first man in Walford with designer threads and good diction to be entirely innocent. DAVID BROWN

Pluto and Beyond

9.00pm PBS America

SCIENCE While everyone celebrates the 50th anniversary of the Moon landings, the excellent science strand Nova lauds another, more recent feat of space exploration: the New Horizons flyby of a lump of space rock, four billion miles away from Earth past Pluto in the Kuiper Belt, which may hold clues as to how the solar system might have been formed.

The details of the mission are astounding: the New Horizons team had to calculate where an object 20 miles wide, which they could only see by telescope for a couple of seconds, would be in over a year's time – then work out how to intercept it. The story of how they achieved this proves awe-inspiring and surprisingly emotional. DAVID CRAWFORD

NCIS: New Orleans

9.00pm Fox

DRAMA The make-up effects department definitely earns its keep in this episode of the crime drama spin-off series, as it rises to the challenge of creating a bloated corpse that's been in the water for at least 36 hours, having had a nasty encounter with the propeller of a shrimping boat. Let's just say that torso and head are no longer the best of pals.

It's a pity, then, that the mystery that follows is as soggy as the body – a sluggish story of conspiracy within the local fishing community that doesn't provide much in the way of tension. Thankfully, the B story is better paced, as a flabbergasted LaSalle (Lucas Black) tries to work out why his late dad has left behind an $8 million debt. DAVID BROWN

Rick and Morty

11.15pm E4

ANIMATION It's easy to run from your problems when you have an interdimensional portal gun, so when Summer and Morty struggle with their parents' divorce Rick has the perfect distraction – a quick visit to a Mad Max-esque world filled with post-apocalyptic mutants, a car-based religion and a glowing green rock that he needs for his experiments.

The kids work through their issues in entertaining ways, with Summer shacking up with a brutal outlaw while Morty gets roped into a dead man's revenge ploy, forced to murder all comers in an off-brand Thunderdome.

"Save it for the Semantics Dome, EB White!" Rick snaps when informed it's actually called the Blood Dome in this reality... HF

Jerry Allison (centre) talks about his time in the Crickets

Classic Albums: The "Chirping" Crickets

9.00pm BBC4

DOCUMENTARY Sitting in his garage, grinning broadly under a sailor's cap, Jerry "JI" Allison reminisces engagingly, as he has so often done before, about the days playing with his friend Buddy Holly in the Crickets, laying down the template for rock 'n' roll.

As drummer, Allison was crucial: interviewees here agree it was the special way he locked in with Holly's guitar that forged a sound to inspire the Beatles, the Stones and any number of others: the Crickets were effectively the first rock group.

A revealing moment comes when Allison demonstrates the Bo Diddley "hambone" beat he adapted for Not Fade Away (played in the studio, famously, on cardboard boxes) with a casual little one-handed slap of his thigh. Other highlights include early versions of Maybe Baby and That'll Be the Day that sound awful. They fixed them. DAVID BUTCHER

Gardeners' World

9.00pm Carol Klein has tips on how to tempt insects and birds into our gardens

12.30pm Wimbledon

Sue Barker presents the action on day 11, where just four men remain in pursuit of that famous golden trophy. Will Roger Federer still be in line for his ninth title, and will Novak Djokovic be in contention to retain his crown and land his fifth victory?

In last year's opening semi-final, Kevin Anderson and John Isner traded aces in a bruising encounter lasting six hours 36 minutes. The fifth and final set alone took almost three hours, and was eventually won by Anderson, 26-24. With the light fading, the roof lights were switched on for the second match between Djokovic and Rafael Nadal, but play was halted at 11.02pm, with the players returning on Saturday, when the Serbian finally claimed victory.

Watch a selection of matches from other courts on the red button, with every match available on iPlayer and at bbc.co.uk/sport. Centre Court coverage is available in UltraHD on iPlayer and via the red button on compatible TVs, subject to bandwidth.

RT The Crickets: The "Chirping"

Crickets. Featuring the hits That'll Be The Day, Not Fade Away and Oh, Boy!, the 1957 debut album by the Crickets was an immediate bestseller, showing off Buddy Holly's skill as a singer, a pioneering guitarist and a songwriter at a time when few of his peers composed their own material. It was the album that inspired John Lennon to form a band with Paul McCartney and one of the first LPs bought by Keith Richards. Featuring interviews with band members Jerry Allison and Sonny Curtis, and famous fans such as Peter Frampton and Cliff Richard, this film tells the story of a rock 'n' roll classic. See page 97.

Director George Scott; Producers Nick de Grunwald and Celia Moore Repeated 1.30am (S) (HD)

10.00 Roy Orbison: One of the Lonely Ones

Kenneth More Day Talking Pictures TV FREEVIEW

If I ran the country I'd make Kenneth More Day a national holiday, during which we all drank sugary tea and treated each other decently. To mark the 37th anniversary of More's death, Talking Pictures TV is filling its schedule with films, interviews and programmes celebrating the actor's life and career. Among the movies are Love Island precursor Our Girl Friday, vintage-car caper Genevieve, space-race farce Man in the Moon and kitchen-sinker The Comedy Man (review, p31), a channel premiere. Same time next year? ANDREW COLLINS

Twelve years in the making

Minding the Gap ★★★★★ BBC iPlayer FREE TO VIEW

This Oscar-nominated documentary offers a humane, infectious and moving portrait of childhood friendship and growing up. It follows three young skateboarders who race and trick-jump around the empty streets of Rockford, Illinois, escaping homes broken by absent or abusive fathers. One of the trio, Bing Liu, produced, directed, shot and co-edited the film over 12 years. As he interrogates both his friends and his mother on camera, secrets are revealed and harsh realities are faced. AC

Back on Netflix today

The Theory of Everything ★★★★★ Netflix

Eddie Redmayne won an Oscar, Bafta and Golden Globe for his performance as Stephen Hawking in this adaptation of the memoir by his first wife Jane (played by Felicity Jones). Director James Marsh successfully conveys the cosmologist's brilliance and stubbornness, while Redmayne's bodily and facial transformation is truly remarkable. AC

Radio

Short, sharp... and funny

Absolutely's Gordon Kennedy sings the praises of the radio comedy sketch show

The Absolutely Radio Show
Sunday 7.15pm Radio 4

OCTOPER..." OH GOD. It's happened. I try again. "Octomer". Argh. I still can't say it. The audience laugh a little, as if they're not sure what they are supposed to be laughing at. I try again. "October". Phew.

And we are off again as the crowd – packed to the gunnels at the Òran Mór venue in Glasgow – laugh, cheer, boo, occasionally shout out, but most of all fill the room with love and support for The Absolutely Radio Show, about to enter its third series on Radio 4.

I'm co-producer, performer and occasional writer on the show, and this was possibly one of my worst moments on stage. I genuinely thought I was losing the capacity for speech.

This was due to the fact that exactly four weeks before I was standing on stage I'd undergone a four-hour operation to repair a double fracture to my lower jaw that had happened when I had a Chris Froome-like moment on my bike and collided with a lamp post.

My recovery stunned medical science, obviously, but what doctors don't understand is that it is amazing what the body will do when the footlights and the radio microphone beckon. Having said that, the crash left me with a bottom lip with very little feeling, hence my problem with saying the word "October".

That we got through it – the sketch is in episode four, so see if you can spot it in a few weeks' time – is, in a way, entirely in keeping with the show's history. Absolutely is very much The Little Sketch Show That Could, and it sometimes feels like we are flying the flag for a comedy format that seems to go constantly in and out of fashion – radio sketch-show comedy.

Sketch shows are important, I think, for three reasons. First, they are a fantastic breeding ground for comedy writing and acting talent. There are generations of brilliant UK comedy shows, from Beyond the Fringe and Monty Python through Not the 9 O'Clock News and Spitting Image, Absolutely, The Fast Show, A Bit of Fry and Laurie, Lenny Henry, French and Saunders, Blue Train, Goodness Gracious Me, The Mary Whitehouse Experience, The Real McCoy, The League of Gentlemen, to Bo' Selecta and Horrible Histories and many more that my paltry research hasn't thrown up. Generation upon generation of writing, performing and producing talent who have made a huge cultural impact and, much more importantly, made us laugh.

Second, they are transferable: the leap from stage to radio and TV can be direct and relatively painless. Think League of Gentlemen – stage to radio to TV and on and on – or indeed Absolutely – stage to radio to TV and back to radio. This process enables talent to develop and gives writers and performers a chance to grow before they are thrust into the brightest spotlights.

Edited by

Third, sketch shows are disposable. They don't hang around too long, partly because the talent can outgrow the form. Writers want to write longer material, and performers want to act in different genres. It's also because the good ones are always a bit zeitgeisty and of their time. Maybe it's the lack of longevity that has led to their chequered history.

I AM PRETTY SURE Absolutely itself would not have existed but for a tasty-looking club sandwich that was sitting along with other lunch items in the middle of the Channel 4 boardroom in autumn 1988. Our pitch for a new sketch show was stalled and although commissioning editor Seamus Cassidy was keen on the show we seemed to be held in a commission-pending holding pattern. I think Morwenna Banks came up with the idea of reading our pilot script out to Seamus.

He agreed, and we met in the boardroom to have lunch and table read. As we were about to start, walking along the corridor outside was Seamus's boss Mike Bolland, the controller for entertainment. His lunch appointment had just been cancelled and he wasn't happy. He looked in and saw the aforementioned sandwich. He picked it up and asked, "Mind if I join you?" Some 40 minutes later, Mike said to Seamus: "If you don't commission a pilot I'll sack you!"

My co-producer on The Absolutely Radio Show – Gus Beattie – deserves a medal for almost single-handedly keeping the development of radio sketch show comedy alive – with Radio 4's Sketchorama and most recently Sketchtopia. And now, it seems, radio sketch shows are re-booting and sit alongside a swathe of new ones, like John Finnemore's Souvenir Programme, It's Jocelyn and The Pin. I can also reveal that Absolutely Productions has just completed work on a brand-new sketch show pilot so hush-hush I can't even tell you that it has been created by comedy legends Rob Grant and Andrew Marshall... so don't even ask... but it will be out in August.

THIS IS ALL great, but it does rather beg the question, where are the sketch shows on TV? Right now it's beyond comprehension why there is not a satirical sketch show on mainstream primetime TV.

It feels like there has never been a better time or greater need for one. While Have I Got News For You and Nish Kumar's Mash Report are great shows that TELL us what is wrong with the world, a sketch-show format – like Spitting Image or Saturday Night Live – SHOWS us.

But it's not all doom and gloom. With series like Famalam and the upcoming pilot Muzlamic, BBC3 demonstrate that they are looking to commission and develop sketch shows from young talent. That's great, but there needs to be more, and more ambition from the main broadcasters.

I think all of us on The Absolutely Radio Show team feel very lucky and humbled to be given the opportunity to return to re-invent something we all loved so much. But the greatest pleasure of all has been to see that The Little Sketch Show That Could is being enjoyed all over again. And who knows where it might go next...

PICK OF THE WEEK

Soul Music

Wednesday 9.00am Radio 4

The excellent series in which members of the public recount their emotional connection to famous songs begins its latest run with a quote from the late Amy Winehouse (below) that neatly encapsulates the whole idea of the programme: "I don't know anyone like myself, but I know if I'm honest about myself, if I'm honest about what I do with my life, I know there are girls who will hear that and will be like, 'yeah, I felt that'."

The Winehouse song with the deepest emotional resonance has to be Back to Black, her 2006 torch song about addictive love, pain and loss, and there is plenty of emotion on display here as we hear from people who, like the singer, struggled with alcoholism, mental health issues and damaging relationships.

Lesley was born in the same year as Winehouse and had a similar struggle with addiction, finally becoming sober at the age of 27, the same year that Winehouse died. Daisy's destructive relationship was soundtracked by Back to Black, though her boyfriend hated Amy Winehouse and her music. Their tearful recollections and acute insights form the nucleus of the programme, though it's obvious that the song touched many people deeply in its revelation of a profound human truth about living through pain and hurt.

Like its subject matter, this is a bittersweet listen, with the tender, heart-warming stories tempered by the knowledge of the singer's troubled life and death aged 27.

AMBRIDGE DIARY

The Archers this week...

Jim is keen to make amends for his actions, but will everyone be ready to forgive and forget? Alistair is feeling the strain following the recent revelations and, as the stress builds, he looks set to make a terrible mistake.

At Grange Farm, things are looking up for Emma, but Ed is forced to tell a lie when faced with the wrath of Will. And he's not the only one getting angry – more than one Ambridge resident finds themselves at the sharp end of Jazzer's rage. Shula, meanwhile, struggles on the anniversary of Caroline's death until she receives support from an unexpected source. Plus Lilian's party proves to be a real blast, with one guest in particular stealing the show. DAVID BROWN

SOUND BITES

BY DAVID HEPWORTH

This is Radio Gold

In East Anglia I discovered the joy of FM

IT'S A BIT like the reception for Magic FM in the Chilterns... it sort of comes and goes." So said David Cameron, long ago, before he ran away to live in a shed.

DC was comparing his dodgy radio signal to his religious belief, and quoting his friend Boris Johnson. His radio remarks are not what most people remember about him. He will instead go down in history for EU-Know-What.

But that's not for here, not for now, and certainly not for this column in Radio Times.

DC's tuning troubles came to my mind as I motored around East Anglia in an old car with an even older radio. At home and online, I'm surrounded by fabulous digital ways to listen, to listen again, and to listen again and again and again. I'm in charge. But when driving around with an ancient AM/FM radio, the technology decides what's possible. You're constantly forced to retune, and I love it. In fact, I realised all over again that I adore FM.

'At home, I'm in charge – on the road, my ancient radio is'

Whistling south through the wide flat acres and the corn fields, one moment you're locked on to BBC Radio Norfolk, then BBC Radio Suffolk flashes its ankle. Somewhere in the middle, The Beach (Bauer) grabs hold.

Then, bumping down the narrow, potholed A12 you'll pick up BBC Essex and Heart Essex – whose signals compete, much like the drivers of those Audis and Beamers speeding just inches from each others' bumpers. One moment Heart's ahead, the next the BBC overtakes.

So here's a little of what I heard at 60mph. Let's start with The Beach – one of the best radio station names ever. The Beach. The Beeeeeach! I loved their Summertime Reggae slot, playing Bob Marley to me in the scorching sun.

BBC Radio Norfolk aced their 4.30pm headlines. These were gripping, including an RSPCA raid on a puppy farm, said to be the worst the charity had seen. All Norfolk stories, beautifully read, and not a single mention of Brt.

Then to their winning Birthday Record feature – a song from a popular artist played on their birthday. I silently toasted Carly Simon and learned some new facts about her near Diss.

On BBC Radio Suffolk, boosted by a strong signal and informed conversation, I enjoyed a little-known song by Ronnie Lane, The Poacher. Then, skirting Constable Country, I was looking forward to catching up with one of my favourite broadcasters, Dave Monk on BBC Essex.

I was briefly his producer and I got him to read a script saying "Right, I'm off. I'm leaving. I'm out of this studio. And I'll tell you why after this from Abba." The station manager came galloping down the stairs from his office eyrie in the Chelmsford HQ. The switchboard had jammed, and I was responsible. "What have you done?" he quivered. "What's he said?"

ABBA WARBLERED THEIR last notes, and Dave continued his script. "Right. I'm off. I'm leaving the studio... and I'm coming to your office, your village, and your town for my new Dave Monk Road Show. Just drop us a line and invite us!"

Anyway, Ian Puckey was standing in for Dave, and taught me all about plans for a mother oyster sanctuary in Essex. Essex! All this radio gold thanks to all that rampant frequency modulation. FM! It's a bit like that quote David Cameron brought up. "The reception comes and goes." Now, whatever happened to him?

Paddy O'Connell hosts Broadcasting House, Sunday 9.00am Radio 4, and co-hosts the podcast Dogpod with Maria McErlane, from your usual podcast provider

Where there's a hit, there's a writ

There was a running gag on the excellent John Finnemore's Souvenir Programme, which has just completed its eighth series on BBC Radio 4. Man gets into a cab, cabbie asks what he does for a living and man reluctantly tells him that he's a composer of music. At this point, cabbie says that he too has had some thoughts in that direction, which he then proceeds to sing to his hapless passenger. Cabbie further suggests that maybe the professional might like to do something with the thoughts and they could split the proceeds. Finally, he warns of the dire consequences that will befall the writer should he discover that he's been cut out of the deal.

Ideas are ten-a-penny

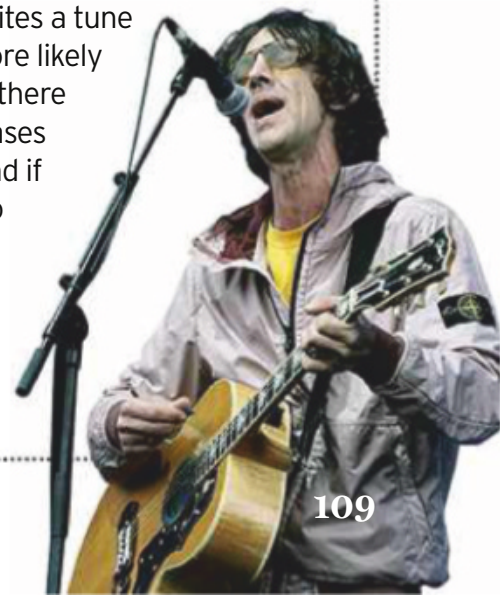

Joking aside, there's a nugget of truth here. People who will never write a novel always think they've got an idea for one. And people who know nothing about music always think they have just invented a tune. It doesn't work like that. Ideas are ten-a-penny. What makes the difference is having the ability to execute the song and being in a position to make it a success. That's what the cab driver doesn't understand. He desperately wants his idea to be pinched because only then he can benefit from it.

Music is a risky business

There's an old saying in the music business that where there's a hit there's a writ. That means that once you've had a really big hit record it's almost inevitable that somebody will come out of the woodwork, pointing out the similarities between your hit tune and this song that they composed years earlier. They may want an apology. They may want a part of the credit. What they will definitely want is some of the money you've made from your hit.

If I were Ed Sheeran, I'd avoid cabs

This is never far from the news. The Verve's Richard Ashcroft (below) has just got back the rights (after more than 20 years) to the band's massive 1997 hit Bitter Sweet Symphony, which had been tied up in a dispute with a former manager of the Rolling Stones. Some of these cases come to court. Most are quietly settled in lawyers' offices. The internet means that if somebody writes a tune like yours, you're more likely to know. That's why there are more of these cases than ever before. And if lots of them seem to involve Ed Sheeran, that's because he's had a lot of hits. If I were him, I'd never get in a cab again.

Moira Stuart's Hall of Fame

3.00pm Classic FM

One of the best-loved voices and most familiar presences on the BBC for more than 40 years – most notably as the first African-Caribbean female newsreader to appear on British television, and most recently as newsreader for the Chris Evans breakfast show on Radio 2 – Moira Stuart (above) joined Classic FM in February as its weekday morning news presenter on both the Tim Lihoreau and John Suchet shows. Now comfortably settled in at Classic FMHQ, she today launches her very own new Saturday afternoon music show, in which she'll be showcasing complete performances of works from the Classic FM Hall of Fame, and mining the archives for legendary recordings, as well as choosing the very best of the latest releases. MARK PAPPENHEIM

Archive on 4: God Bless the Prince of Wales

8.00pm Radio 4

It's been 50 years since Charles's investiture as Prince of Wales at Caernarfon Castle, a symbolic ceremony that attracted adoring crowds and millions of TV viewers, despite the monarchy's PR battle to remain relevant amid the turbulence of the Swinging Sixties. The fact that the ceremony, which was only reintroduced by Lloyd George in 1911, can be traced back to Wales's subjugation at the hands of Edward I also made it a prime target for Welsh nationalists. The little-known bombing campaign that shook North Wales amid the public jubiliations during the summer of 69 is faithfully retold here; an intriguing tale that seems increasingly relevant for our brittle Union. TOM GOULDING

2.30 Drama: Between the Lines

By Rebecca Lloyd-Evans. Meera Syal stars as a recently divorced woman facing a bleak future after the end of her fast-paced career in publishing. She is persuaded to volunteer as a reader to a group of blind and partially sighted home residents. They share their life stories, and she writes erotic adaptations of these, possibly providing her with a new career. The cast features Fenella Fielding (1927-2018) in one of her last roles. First broadcast March 2017.

Eleanor Oliphant Is Completely Fine was the breakout literary hit of 2017, winning that year's Costa debut novel award and going on to have its film rights optioned by Reese Witherspoon's movie company. The book's success is well deserved, as its depiction of the loneliness experienced by the titular finance clerk is, by turns, hilarious and heart-breaking. Read one page and you'll be laughing at Eleanor's off-kilter view of life, read the next and you'll be left haunted by the all-too-real depiction of her isolation. Here, writer Gail Honeyman (above), who herself had a number of admin jobs before gaining popular and critical acclaim, discusses the impact of her story with James Naughtie and an assembled audience of readers. DAVID BROWN

Good Morning Sunday

6.00am Radio 2

There is a photograph of Britney Spears in her early Noughties heyday, walking down the street, coffee in hand, wearing a T-shirt that says "DUMP HIM". Clearly, she was ahead of her time: today the GMS team talk singledom – a growing trend, with more than half of 25–44-year-olds not in a relationship – as part of Radio 2's Faith in the World week. They're joined by artist Florence Given, whose "It's a Wonderful Day to Dump Him" tee has clear echoes of Britney, vicar Kate Wharton, who in 2017 vowed to remain single in a ceremony at Liverpool Cathedral, and No Country for Young Women podcast host Sadia Azmat. HANNAH SHADDOCK

Today's Choices

Sweet Sorrow 12.04pm Radio 4

The opening instrumental strains of Tender by Blur will immediately transport listeners of a certain age back to the 1990s, which is where we meet the hero of Sweet Sorrow, the latest novel from David Nicholls. It's the final day of school for 16-year-old Charlie Lewis and his mates, marked by the traditional sports hall disco and an appropriately mortifying last dance; it's also the beginning of a summer that will change Charlie's life. Read by James Norton (above), this is an immediately winning start to a typically romantic tale from the literary world's charmer-in-chief: Nicholls's previous books include the University Challenge-based love story Starter for Ten and 2009's One Day, which became a Hollywood weepie starring Anne Hathaway and Jim Sturgess as old friends turned star-crossed lovers. HANNAH SHADDOCK

The Full Works Concert 8.00pm Classic FM

Jane Jones showcases some of today's fastest-rising young classical stars. There's an exceptionally sensitive Bach concerto performance by 18-year-old Swedish violinist Daniel Lozakovich; some phenomenal Chopin playing by 24-year-old Polish-Canadian pianist Jan Lisiecki; one of the "Lost Songs of St Kilda", arranged by 30-something British screen and concert composer Rebecca Dale; and an impressive new recording of Clara Schumann's youthful Piano Concerto by the brilliant 23-year-old pianist Isata Kanneh-Mason (sister of "Royal Wedding cellist" Sheku), who is also the subject of Radio 4's Front Row, tonight at 7.15pm. MARK PAPPENHEIM

9.00 The Pleasures of Brecht

In 1954 poet and playwright Bertolt Brecht's relationship with the East German communist party was growing increasingly strained, with projects derailed and poems censored. Out of this context came the poem Vergnügen, which captures simple everyday pleasures but which also looks out into the world beyond the private sphere. Writer Joanna Macy, philosopher Christopher Hamilton, pleasure activist Adrienne Maree Brown and German scholar Karen Leeder reflect on what Brecht's list of simple pleasures can tell us about our own time. Today's Choices

In the Studio: Bicycles of the Future

11.30am World Service

As elite cyclists push their bodies to extremes on highly engineered bikes in the Tour de France, ultra-endurance cyclist Lee Craigie takes a gentler journey. She's in Copenhagen to meet designers Paul Harder Cohen and Mette Walsted, who produce wooden-framed bikes in their small studio workshop. A blond-wood bicycle may seem like a head-turning, typical piece of Scandinavian design, but Craigie is soon won over by Cohen's arguments about form following function and the science behind why wood is a good material for a frame. Though she may go too far in suggesting they're transferring the feeling of hugging a tree into a bike, this will get anyone riding potholed British roads pining after the suppleness of a wooden bike. DAVID CRAWFORD

People Fixing the World: Inside the School Where Wellbeing Comes First

8.00pm World Service

The statistics are staggering. On average, one in eight children in the UK has mental health issues. Yet just 4.5 psychiatrists are available for every 100,000 young people. With the UK's mental health provision so stretched, Highgate Primary School in London has developed a unique system in which children can get one-to-one sessions with trainee therapists and more time is given to wellness activities such as gardening, cooking and drama. Today's programme features some of the children that have benefited from these ideas – but can other schools replicate them, and help fill the gap left by dwindling government funding?

11.00 FM Translating for Mum and Dad

Psychologist and academic Dr Humera Iqbal's research at University College London is all about migrant children, who do vital unpaid translating work for their families.

This is because they're often able to pick up English more quickly than their parents.

There are thousands of children like them in the UK, translating in crucial places like at the doctors or in banks. As they undertake such adult tasks it really creates a role-reversal in the parent-child dynamic. We follow them as they go about their lives. Producer Nina Robinson (R)

11.30 FM The Dying of the Ice

Darren Harriott: Black Label

11.00pm Radio 4

Darren Harriott (above) hasn't been around long. He first made his mark in Edinburgh in 2017 and was soon Live at the Apollo. He gives the impression, like the young Lenny Henry far too long ago, of pandering to his predominantly white audience. In his first Radio 4 series, he even references Henry in a Black Country joke (Harriott is a Brummie who returned home for this show). But then his comedy becomes confessional. There is stuff about mental health, suicide and his drug dealer relatives ("My family tree is a cannabis plant") that's vaguely unsettling. But I can see why Radio 4 is taking a chance with him. He's endearing, a hard quality to fake. Give him time.

DAVID MCGILLIVRAY

Radio 3 in Concert

7.30pm Radio 3

Established in 1969, Chetham's School of Music marks the climax of its 50th-anniversary celebrations – and also the farewell of its Director of Music, Stephen Threlfall, after a distinguished 24 years at its helm – by filling the stage of Manchester's Bridgewater Hall with past and present pupils, plus special guests from around the world, for a performance of Mahler's Eighth Symphony. It's a work whose gargantuan musical requirements – eight solo singers, three separate choirs, gigantic orchestra, organ and off-stage brass band – have earned it the nickname "Symphony of a Thousand".

Today's Choices

The Forum: Kafka's The Metamorphosis

9.00am World Service

You'll know the story, even if you haven't read the book: a man wakes up to find his body transformed into something foul and foreign, usually described as a cockroach, or insect. Exactly what form he takes is just one of the many ongoing dialogues surrounding the enigmatic Metamorphosis, Franz Kafka's 1915 novella, which is under discussion here. Rajan Datar is joined by guests including Dr Carolin Duttlinger, co-director of the Oxford Kafka Research Centre, Professor Alice Staskova, who specialises in music in the Czech author's work, and University College London's Dr Peter Zusi. We also hear from Nigerian novelist A Igoni Barrett, whose 2015 debut, Blackass, is an example of the countless cultural works that owe a debt to Kafka: its protagonist is a black man who, one day, wakes up white. HANNAH SHADDOCK

Radio 3 in Concert

7.30pm Radio 3

Forty years ago, the first Buxton Festival re-opened Frank Matcham's 1903 opera house with a production of Donizetti's Lucia di Lammermoor. Tonight, as part of the 40th-anniversary festival, the Manchester-based BBC Philharmonic finally makes its Buxton debut. Also featuring Macclesfield-born violinist Jennifer Pike in Vaughan Williams's The Lark Ascending, their concert opens with Patrick Hadley's rarely heard orchestral salute to Kinder Scout, the Peak District's highest plateau, which was premiered in Buxton in 1922, ten years before the mass trespass of that local landmark paved the way for today's "right to roam". MARK PAPPENHEIM

8.00 Making History
3/8. Tom Holland and Iszi Lawrence discover how Britain's borders have been used to separate communities. Tom travels to Offa's Dyke to find out how the 176-mile-long, eighth-century earthwork divided the Anglian kingdom of Mercia from Powys. In Belfast, the so-called peace lines are barriers that often cut across streets, separating nationalists from unionists. But now a new scheme is under way to neutralise their effect. (R)

8.30 The Bottom Line
7/9. Are the Good Times Over for the People who Manage our Wealth?
 Consumer scepticism with the multi-billion pound UK investment industry has been building for years, fuelled by hidden fees that have eaten into returns on nest eggs. The industry itself is divided on whether it's really worth paying all the fees and charges to more expensive fund managers. Increasingly investors are choosing to put their money in so-called "passive funds", where fees are lower and often more clear to the consumer. Among Evan Davis's guests this week is Bella Caridade-Ferreira, CEO of Fundscape.

FRIDAY Radio

Today's Choices

Madam Mayor
11.30am Radio 4

Back in the day Brenda Gilhooly (above) enlivened the alternative cabaret circuit as dozy Page 3 girl Gayle Tuesday. I'm not sure where she's been hiding herself since then. But now she's back as writer and star of this new sitcom about the dozy mayor and council of the town of Mansford. Somewhat magnanimously, Gilhooly has given the lion's share of the jokes to her mate Harry Hill, playing a holy fool of a councillor. Unwisely, the mayor expects him to sort out the mess she's caused by pretending that Jenni Murray will unveil a statue. Clearly the audience loves Hill. But the script isn't really about a town council. With constant references to Woman's Hour, In Our Time and the shipping forecast, it's more about Radio 4 eating itself. DAVID MCGILLIVRAY

The Interrogation

2.15pm Radio 4

A new season of Roy Williams's addictive detective series is always a boon, and while it may lack the bravura of trademark Line of Duty interviews, The Interrogation has a lower-key hold of its own. DCI Matthews (Kenneth Cranham) and DS Sean Armitage (Alex Lanipekun) conduct a seemingly unwarranted questioning of Dan, whose wife Katie has attempted to kill herself. But when it transpires that Katie recently got in touch with an old flame on Facebook, the case take a sinister turn. You may well guess the twist before it's revealed, yet that won't stop you enjoying this well-written and timely piece, which centres on the potential dangers of social media. CHRIS GARDNER

BBC Local Radio

Face behind the voice

Tamsin Robson BBC Newcastle

Age 32

Current job Presenter since April of the evening show on BBC Newcastle (Mon–Wed 8–10pm) plus, since March, two weekend shows on Saturday (9am–12 noon) and Sunday (10am–1pm).

The evening slot is a music show, “funky, aimed at younger listeners”, with the emphasis on local talent.

The weekend shows are “bright and breezy, like a nice linen shirt”, with a slot called Personal Passions in which guests talk about their enthusiasms.

CV She grew up in south Tyneside, went to school in Sunderland, then spent two years at Manchester Metropolitan University, completing her degree, in film and media, back in Sunderland. Did her masters, volunteered on hospital radio, then trained as a pastry chef, setting up her own business. Then BBC Newcastle came calling, “and I still don’t really understand how I came to be here!”

Best moment “Being offered a job at the BBC. I’m still in shock. My BBC lanyard feels like I’ve won a gold medal.”

Worst moment “I was covering on the weekend breakfast show and I kept cutting the newsreader off. It was 6am. I’m not really a morning person.”

Off air “I live with my boyfriend in Newcastle. I love to cook and we like to travel. We’ve been on road trips round the US and Europe.”

First radio memory “On a family holiday in Florida. My father would tape hours of US radio – local DJs and a whole range of music – and bring the tapes home and I’d listen to them. It’s how I first heard Howard Stern.”

Favourite broadcasters “I love Huey Morgan on 6 Music. It’s like he’s my mate and we’re sitting in a bar. And Winifred Robinson on You and Yours. She’s the boss. She always stays calm.”

Ambition “I’m so grateful to have this opportunity. I just want to carry on.”

Dream job “To present a food show on TV – Saturday mornings, maybe. Something a bit like Keith Floyd.”

Secret skills “I love my baking – I bake for friends and for my sister.”

BBC Local Radio

Face behind the voice

Tamsin Robson BBC Newcastle

Age 32

Current job Presenter since April of the evening show on BBC Newcastle (Mon–Wed 8–10pm) plus, since March, two weekend shows on Saturday (9am–12 noon) and Sunday (10am–1pm). The evening slot is a music show, “funky, aimed at younger listeners”, with the emphasis on local talent. The weekend shows are “bright and breezy, like a nice linen shirt”, with a slot called Personal Passions in which guests talk about their enthusiasms.

CV She grew up in south Tyneside, went to school in Sunderland, then spent two years at Manchester Metropolitan University, completing her degree, in film and media, back in Sunderland. Did her masters, volunteered on hospital radio, then trained as a pastry chef, setting up her own business. Then BBC Newcastle came calling, “and I still don’t really understand how I came to be here!”

Best moment “Being offered a job at the BBC. I’m still in shock. My BBC lanyard feels like I’ve won a gold medal.”

Worst moment “I was covering on the weekend breakfast show and I kept cutting the newsreader off. It was 6am. I’m not really a morning person.”

Off air “I live with my boyfriend in Newcastle. I love to cook and we like to travel. We’ve been on road trips round the US and Europe.”

First radio memory “On a family holiday in Florida. My father would tape hours of US radio – local DJs and a whole range of music – and bring the tapes home and I’d listen to them. It’s how I first heard Howard Stern.”

Favourite broadcasters “I love Huey Morgan on 6 Music. It’s like he’s my mate and we’re sitting in a bar. And Winifred Robinson on You and Yours. She’s the boss. She always stays calm.”

Ambition “I’m so grateful to have this opportunity. I just want to carry on.”

Dream job “To present a food show on TV – Saturday mornings, maybe. Something a bit like Keith Floyd.”

BBC Local Radio

Face behind the voice

Tamsin Robson BBC Newcastle

Age 32

Current job Presenter since April of the evening show on BBC Newcastle (Mon–Wed 8–10pm) plus, since March,

two weekend shows on Saturday (9am–12 noon) and Sunday (10am–1pm).

The evening slot is a music show, “funky, aimed at younger listeners”, with the emphasis on local talent.

The weekend shows are “bright and breezy, like a nice linen shirt”, with a slot called Personal Passions in which guests talk about their enthusiasms.

CV She grew up in south Tyneside, went to school in Sunderland, then spent two years at Manchester Metropolitan University, completing her degree, in film and media, back in Sunderland. Did her masters, volunteered on hospital radio, then trained as a pastry chef, setting up her own business. Then BBC Newcastle came calling, “and I still don’t really understand how I came to be here!”

Best moment “Being offered a job at the BBC. I’m still in shock. My BBC lanyard feels like I’ve won a gold medal.”

Worst moment “I was covering on the weekend breakfast show and I kept cutting the newsreader off. It was 6am. I’m not really a morning person.”

Off air “I live with my boyfriend in Newcastle. I love to cook and we like to travel. We’ve been on road trips round the US and Europe.”

First radio memory “On a family holiday in Florida. My father would tape hours of US radio – local DJs and a whole range of music – and bring the tapes home and I’d listen to them. It’s how I first heard Howard Stern.”

Favourite broadcasters “I love Huey Morgan on 6 Music. It’s like he’s my mate and we’re sitting in a bar. And Winifred Robinson on You and Yours. She’s the boss. She always stays calm.”

Ambition “I’m so grateful to have this opportunity. I just want to carry on.”

Dream job “To present a food show on TV – Saturday mornings, maybe. Something a bit like Keith Floyd.”

BBC Radio Scotland

Face behind the voice

Tamsin Robson BBC Newcastle

Age 32

Current job Presenter since April of the evening show on BBC Newcastle (Mon–Wed 8–10pm) plus, since March,

two weekend shows on Saturday (9am–12 noon) and Sunday (10am–1pm).

The evening slot is a music show, “funky, aimed at younger listeners”, with the emphasis on local talent.

The weekend shows are “bright and breezy, like a nice linen shirt”, with a slot called Personal Passions in which guests talk about their enthusiasms.

CV She grew up in south Tyneside, went to school in Sunderland, then spent two years at Manchester Metropolitan University, completing her degree, in film and media, back in Sunderland. Did her masters, volunteered on hospital radio, then trained as a pastry chef, setting up her own business. Then BBC Newcastle came calling, “and I still don’t really understand how I came to be here!”

Best moment “Being offered a job at the BBC. I’m still in shock. My BBC lanyard feels like I’ve won a gold medal.”

Worst moment “I was covering on the weekend breakfast show and I kept cutting the newsreader off. It was 6am. I’m not really a morning person.”

Off air “I live with my boyfriend in Newcastle. I love to cook and we like to travel. We’ve been on road trips round the US and Europe.”

First radio memory “On a family holiday in Florida. My father would tape hours of US radio – local DJs and a whole range of music – and bring the tapes home and I’d listen to them. It’s how I first heard Howard Stern.”

Favourite broadcasters “I love Huey Morgan on 6 Music. It’s like he’s my mate and we’re sitting in a bar. And Winifred Robinson on You and Yours. She’s the boss. She always stays calm.”

Ambition “I’m so grateful to have this opportunity. I just want to carry on.”

Dream job “To present a food show on TV – Saturday mornings, maybe. Something a bit like Keith Floyd.”

Secret skills “I love my baking – I bake for friends and for my sister.”

Face behind the voice

Tamsin Robson BBC Newcastle

Age 32

Current job Presenter since April of the evening show on BBC Newcastle (Mon–Wed 8–10pm) plus, since March,

two weekend shows on Saturday (9am–12 noon) and Sunday (10am–1pm).

The evening slot is a music show, “funky, aimed at younger listeners”, with the emphasis on local talent.

The weekend shows are “bright and breezy, like a nice linen shirt”, with a slot called Personal Passions in which guests talk about their enthusiasms.

CV She grew up in south Tyneside, went to school in Sunderland, then spent two years at Manchester Metropolitan University, completing her degree, in film and media, back in Sunderland. Did her masters, volunteered on hospital radio, then trained as a pastry chef, setting up her own business. Then BBC Newcastle came calling, “and I still don’t really understand how I came to be here!”

Best moment “Being offered a job at the BBC. I’m still in shock. My BBC lanyard feels like I’ve won a gold medal.”

Worst moment “I was covering on the weekend breakfast show and I kept cutting the newsreader off. It was 6am. I’m not really a morning person.”

Off air “I live with my boyfriend in Newcastle. I love to cook and we like to travel. We’ve been on road trips round the US and Europe.”

First radio memory “On a family holiday in Florida. My father would tape hours of US radio – local DJs and a whole range of music – and bring the tapes home and I’d listen to them. It’s how I first heard Howard Stern.”

Favourite broadcasters “I love Huey Morgan on 6 Music. It’s like he’s my mate and we’re sitting in a bar. And Winifred Robinson on You and Yours. She’s the boss. She always stays calm.”

Ambition “I’m so grateful to have this opportunity. I just want to carry on.”

Dream job “To present a food show on TV – Saturday mornings, maybe. Something a bit like Keith Floyd.”

Secret skills “I love my baking – I bake for friends and for my sister.”

Face behind the voice

Tamsin Robson BBC Newcastle

Age 32

Current job Presenter since April of the evening show on BBC Newcastle (Mon–Wed 8–10pm) plus, since March,

two weekend shows on Saturday (9am–12 noon) and Sunday (10am–1pm).

The evening slot is a music show, “funky, aimed at younger listeners”, with the emphasis on local talent.

The weekend shows are “bright and breezy, like a nice linen shirt”, with a slot called Personal Passions in which guests talk about their enthusiasms.

CV She grew up in south Tyneside, went to school in Sunderland, then spent two years at Manchester Metropolitan University, completing her degree, in film and media, back in Sunderland. Did her masters, volunteered on hospital radio, then trained as a pastry chef, setting up her own business. Then BBC Newcastle came calling, “and I still don’t really understand how I came to be here!”

Best moment “Being offered a job at the BBC. I’m still in shock. My BBC lanyard feels like I’ve won a gold medal.”

Worst moment “I was covering on the weekend breakfast show and I kept cutting the newsreader off. It was 6am. I’m not really a morning person.”

Off air “I live with my boyfriend in Newcastle. I love to cook and we like to travel. We’ve been on road trips round the US and Europe.”

First radio memory “On a family holiday in Florida. My father would tape hours of US radio – local DJs and a whole range of music – and bring the tapes home and I’d listen to them. It’s how I first heard Howard Stern.”

Favourite broadcasters “I love Huey Morgan on 6 Music. It’s like he’s my mate and we’re sitting in a bar. And Winifred Robinson on You and Yours. She’s the boss. She always stays calm.”

Ambition “I’m so grateful to have this opportunity. I just want to carry on.”

Dream job “To present a food show on TV – Saturday mornings, maybe. Something a bit like Keith Floyd.”

Secret skills “I love my baking – I bake for friends and for my sister.”

Paul Lewis on why over-75s should claim Pension Credit now to keep their free TV licence

THE BBC'S DECISION to scrap free TV licences for people over 75 unless they also get the means-tested Pension Credit benefit has caused widespread protest. At the moment about 4.6 million get a free licence (the Department for Work and Pensions picks up the bill) and the BBC says it would cost it £745 million a year to continue the scheme after it bears the whole cost from next year. The licence currently costs £154.50 but is expected to be around £158 from April 2020.

The almost 950,000 over-75s who already receive Pension Credit can send proof of their entitlement to TV Licensing and keep their free licence. The 3.75 million who do not get Pension Credit will have to pay for their TV licence from 1 June 2020. Among them are an estimated 650,000 over-75s who could get Pension Credit if they applied.

Pension Credit has one of the worst take-up rates of any means-tested benefit. Four out of every ten who could claim it do not do so. The BBC hopes the change will “raise the visibility of Pension Credit as a way of claiming a free TV licence”. But previous efforts to increase the take-up of Pension Credit have all failed. Indeed, take-up has fallen from around 65% in 2004/05 to 60% in 2016/17.

ASINGLE PERSON AGED 75 or more with an income up to £201.53 a week (£293.61 for a couple) can get Pension Credit. Savings over £10,000 reduce the limits. They are higher for carers and severely disabled people. People who successfully claim will get a free TV licence even if they get just 1p a week in Pension Credit. However, on average, over-75s who claim will get £2,500 a year benefit, and if they pay council tax this will often be reduced to zero. To claim, call 0800 99 1234 with your income details and, if possible, National Insurance number.

Anyone aged 74 and born before 1 June 1945 is still entitled to a free TV licence from their 75th birthday until 1 June 2020.

More information at: entitledto.co.uk; tvlicensing.co.uk/age; and gov.uk, search “pension credit”.

LOOKING TO BOOST YOUR FINANCES?

Get a free guide to unlocking the cash in your home, written by RT's money expert Paul Lewis Homeowners aged 55 to 95 are increasingly looking at their properties in a new light, as a way to help boost their finances to fund the things they wish for. With a lifetime mortgage, the most popular form of equity release plan, you could release tax-free cash from your home to spend however you like and, as your home remains your own, you can enjoy the money without having to downsize.

Popular reasons for releasing cash include making home improvements, paying off an outstanding mortgage, clearing credit card debts, going on holiday and gifting money to children or grandchildren.

UNLOCKING THE CASH IN YOUR HOME – THE FACTS

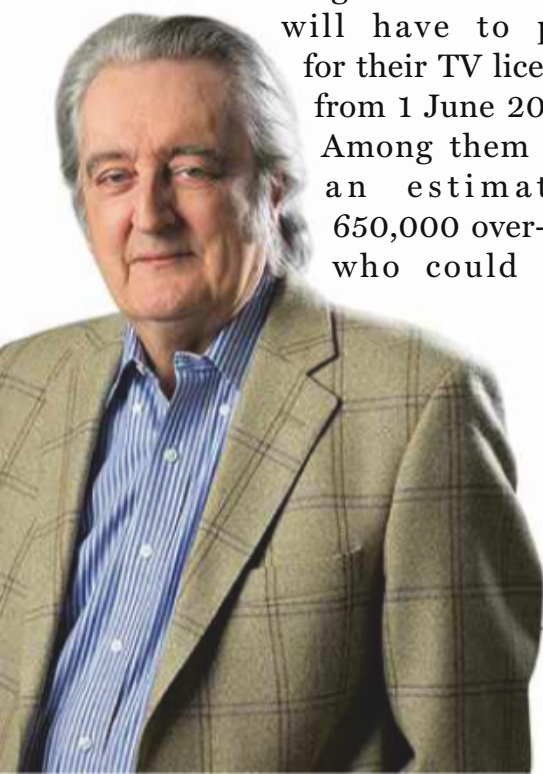

- Cash released is tax-free and yours to spend however you like
- With a lifetime mortgage, typically there are no monthly payments to make as the loan, plus roll-up interest, is repaid when the plan comes to an end
- With a lifetime mortgage, the most popular type of equity release plan, you still own your own home and can live in it as long as you like
- You can guarantee an inheritance for your family with some plans
- You will never owe more than the value of your home with Equity Release Council approved plans
- A lifetime mortgage is a loan secured against your home, like a traditional mortgage
- Equity release will reduce the value of your estate and may affect your entitlement to means-tested benefits
- Always think carefully before securing a loan against your home

If you're considering unlocking cash from your home it's important to seek independent specialist advice. Radio Times has partnered with Key, an independent equity release adviser, and produced a FREE guide written by Radio Times money expert Paul Lewis.

To request your FREE guide written by Paul Lewis, or to book a free, no-obligation consultation, call 0800 138 2695 or visit radiotimes.com/equity

Lines are open Monday–Thursday 9am–8pm, Friday 9am–5.30pm and Saturday 9am–5pm

Unless you decide to go ahead, Key's service is free of charge as Key's typical advice fee of 1.99% of the amount released would only be payable on completion of a plan. Subject to a minimum advice fee of £1,499.

A new way to understand your family

Neuroscientist Dr Hannah Critchlow knows more about your family than you do – it's all in the brain

MANY OF US believe that we are free to shape our own destiny, but what if free will doesn't exist? What if we don't really have control over our life choices, from everyday decisions such as a pie or salad for lunch to the more complex questions, like who we fall in love with?

Latest neuroscientific findings are challenging the idea that we are masters of our own destiny as the technological revolution enables us to peer deep into the brain, helping us to understand how many complex behaviours are ingrained. We are discovering that fate lurks at every branching junction in the dense circuitry, generated as trillions of connections between nerve cells spark and fizz with our brain's staggering power. It is written into our DNA code, amplified through the volume dials for our genes, to direct the construction of the brain's architecture and operation to produce our mind.

It can, of course, be empowering to discover our fate. Awareness of our own flaws, inherent biases and idiosyncrasies can perhaps help us avoid powerless rumination and instead enable us to live with greater appreciation for the staggering breadth of behaviours we as individuals, and as a society, are capable of.

Where better to start putting such valuable knowledge to good use than in our own families?

TUNE YOUR BABY'S BRAINWAVES

Newborns are socially capable and highly curious – that much is clear from their suckling and grasping reflexes, the way they keep close to the care-giver and maintain direct eye contact. You can take advantage of this ingrained drive and boost the rate at which a baby learns to understand speech by returning the direct eye contact while talking to them. This literally synchronises the brainwave patterns between baby and care-giver, helping them to see and hear the world in the same way.

This trick of direct eye gaze to synchronise brainwaves also holds true throughout life between adults, offering a possible route to help mitigate differences in opinion and reach a group consensus.

ACCEPT ADOLESCENCE

You may remember Harry Enfield's Kevin turning 13 when the clock struck midnight and instantly becoming the parody of a moody teenager, incapable of normal speech and embarrassed by everything his parents did.

MIND GAMES
Hannah Critchlow with Dara O Briain on BBC2's recent Family Brain Games

‘Some
neurobiology occurs during the adolescent

HANNAH CRITCHLOW

Neuroscientists are uncovering the biological basis for this, observing it across species. In fact, “teenage” rats and mice drink greater quantities of alcohol in one sitting than adults, and this age-related difference is accentuated within the company of peers. That’s right: teenage rodents also hang about in groups and get drunk.

Some fascinating neurobiology occurs during the adolescent period to give rise to this. The brain already has some well-established neural networks but now, alongside continuing to create further connections, in adolescence it begins to prune or even eliminate the less frequently used ones, while also wrapping higher amounts of insulating fat around nerve cells. This process refines the child’s brain circuitry, upgrading it from a system composed of numerous connections to one based on fewer high-speed highways that information can travel along. In essence, by the end of the critical time period, around age 25, information from the outside world can be processed with speed so that decisions can be made rapidly, honed by the benefit of experience.

AVOID THE MIDLIFE CRISIS

Our brains may lose some of their flexibility as we age, but we replace the loss with life experience, using it to change the way we process information. We place more weight on our existing framework, the circuit board of which has been refined through experience, its operation finessed. There are simple things we can do to help retain some brain plasticity, though, including staying physically active to aid the birth of new nerve cells in key areas of our brain. Staying socially active and taking on board other people’s perspectives keeps the brain dynamic, and a good diet (eat for the heart and brain) protects against micro strokes that could asphyxiate your brain cells.

Continued learning protects against cognitive decline and staying positive also helps, since if you’re feeling blue you’re less likely to find the motivation for all the self-care tips listed.

EAT TOGETHER

We’ve evolved over 250 million years to carry on eating, no matter what. Storing fat once gave us an advantage for survival. Now our environment has changed – and our biology hasn’t. The genomics revolution indicates that a large proportion of the variation in our weight and shape is down to our genes. But sociable cooking and eating well as a family or with friends can still help to sculpt the brain towards healthy food preferences because of the association of feelings of reward with positive company and nutritious food.

YOU’VE GOT TO LAUGH

Our brains light up with chemicals that help us to feel part of a tribe, and happily socially connected with each other when we laugh with others, hug, tell stories, dance or do synchronous exercise together. All of these activities boost feelings of social inclusiveness and cohesion. Given that we are reportedly suffering a crisis of loneliness, perhaps this also explains the rising popularity of mass marathons or triathlons, community choirs, dance classes and laughter yoga. So, why not try some of these activities as a family?

DEBATE IS BEST MEDICINE

Due to our brains’ constraints we each hold a uniquely flawed view of the world – a result of our life experiences amplifying and echoing the brain circuits we were born with – so that even individuals with similar genes, from the same family, will each hold an individual perspective on the world. However, sharing our version of reality, conversing with others, practising compassion and taking on others’ viewpoints help us to arrive at a more realistic version of reality. So, taking time to discuss younger family members’ views can be a way to encourage their confidence and communication skills, with the added benefit that it helps to keep older brains flexible.

HUG FOR HEALTH

Current hectic lifestyles and work pressures can result in losing that connection with our loved ones. But the power of touch can be magical, releasing the chemical oxytocin to help nurture alliances and forge a tight bond, helping to bring the spark back to relationships that have lost their lustre. A massage, back rub or tight hug can have a powerfully positive effect.

Through the grapevine

What have the Romans ever given us?

THE WANDERING VINE: WINE, THE ROMANS AND ME

NINA CAPLAN

Robert Elms Monday 10am
BBC Radio London

“My love of wine began when my father ended,” writes journalist Nina Caplan in The Wandering Vine: Wine, the Romans and Me (£9.99, plus £1.50 p&p), a personal and historical exploration of the role the humble grape has played in human civilisation. Caplan’s informative, self-reflective, deftly written mediation on wine, family and home begins in Richborough Fort in Kent and takes in Champagne and Catalonia, via Sicily and Andalusía, before ending where it all began, in Rome.

AINSLEY’S CARIBBEAN KITCHEN

AINSLEY HARRIOTT

Earlier this year we joined Ainsley Harriott on his travels around the Caribbean, in a ten-part ITV series that began in Jamaica, where his father grew up. In Barbados, Harriott prepared pineapple French toast with caramelised bananas, in Dominica he hit the beach to make twice-fried plantain, while in St Lucia he whipped up chicken with bois bandé – a spice that’s made from the bark of a local tree – and white chocolate mashed potato. In Ainsley’s Caribbean Kitchen (£18, incl p&p) Harriott collects more than 80 dishes like this, inspired by his travels – including plenty of cocktails.

THE FENS: DISCOVERING ENGLAND’S ANCIENT DEPTHS

FRANCIS PRYOR

Book of the Week

Mon–Fri 9.45am/12.30am Radio 4

An area of around 1,500 square miles, extending from Cambridge in the south almost up to Lincoln in the north, the Fens have a long and complex history. Their very existence is also somewhat paradoxical: the Fens are both ancient and modern, first drained in the mid-17th century to reclaim the marshland from the water. In The Fens: Discovering England’s Ancient Depths (£21.50 incl p&p), Francis Pryor traces the area’s history and his own relationship with it, which stretches back more than 40 years.

DO YOU DEADHEAD annual and perennial plants? With annuals, it encourages repeat flowering throughout the summer, and some perennials reward you with a second flush later in the year. Some gardeners deadhead so that the energy that would go into producing seed goes back into the plant to produce a bigger clump for the following year. Then there are the control freaks who just want the tidiest garden in town.

You can also leave self-seeders to do their own thing, creating a naturalistic flow to your planting. Simply pull new plants out where you don't want them. In my garden, I welcome the honey spurge (Euphorbia mellifera) popping up to fill gaps in dry shady spots and introduce an effortless rhythm to the borders. Pheasant's tail grass (Anemanthele lessoniana) knows an opportunity when it sees it, too, as do Verbena bonariensis, foxgloves, aquilegias, purple fennel and winter-flowering hellebores. By letting some seed around, you'll learn to recognise the seedlings, so you can avoid weeding them out in error, or reduce their number if they're getting a little boisterous.

It's simplest to leave seedlings where they have naturally sown, but if you wait until autumn, most are easy to lift (with a clump of soil at the roots) and move around the garden to balance your scheme and spread the joy.

Some (such as Alchemilla mollis) thrive when dotted into cracks in paving, or spilling into gravel areas (Verbascum, Eryngium, poppies). Crevices in stone walls give another opportunity for plants to self-seed (eg ferns in shade, or Mexican fleabane in sun), and you can always give them a helping hand by shoving some soil into cracks for them to germinate in, or pushing seedlings in and hoping for the best.

FIVE SENSATIONAL SELF-SEEDERS

1 California poppy (Eschscholzia californica) Bright orange flowers (above) and feathery grey leaves. Ideal for hot, dry banks or poor soil.

4 Cornflower (Centaurea cyanus) Blue summer heads make great cut flowers; let some seed around to get them back.

Spread the joy

Let self-seeding plants do their own thing and you'll be rewarded time and time again, says Joe Swift

LAIID-BACK BEAUTY

MAKE A MINI POND

FIRST, A CONTAINER...

There are lots of off-the-peg 'pond in a pot' type products available, made of fibreglass, plastic or sealed metal, but anything that holds water can work, such as half barrels, sinks, oil cans etc (avoid terracotta as it draws water). Seal any holes with silicone.

To enjoy a fountain or simple spout (bear in mind that waterlilies don't like moving water), you'll need a submersible pump, which may require plugging into the mains (by a qualified electrician); solar kits work well, too. Place the pond in position before filling (it will be too heavy to lift afterwards), ideally with rainwater. If you must use tap water, leave it to neutralise for a few days before planting.

WHAT TO PUT IN IT...

A balance of plants will keep the water clear and encourage damselflies and dragonflies (which will eat any mosquito eggs). In a small pond, two or three plants will do; in a larger one, no more than five. Aquatic and marginal plants come in special pots to place directly in the water – you may need a few flat stones or bricks to raise them to the right level. A good combination for still water would be a mini waterlily and the contrasting form of a marginal plant or two, such as an upright rush or mini reed mace. Finish by throwing in a few oxygenating plants that sink below the surface and you're done.

BEST PLANTS FOR A MINI POND

Dwarf reed mace (Typha minima) has upright wiry stems, growing up to 60cm.

Dwarf waterlily (Nymphaea odorata var. minor) has white fragrant flowers and glossy circular floating leaves (left).

Water hyacinth (Eichhornia crassipes) Like small green floating balloons, these last a single summer.

Serengeti

Thursday 8.00pm BBC1

THE CAMERA CREW who filmed Serengeti, the BBC's groundbreaking natural history series, used drones to track down their animal stars, but they still had to rely heavily on the knowledge of local guides. "We were transfixed by their ability to find animals," says producer Philip Dalton. "It's like a superpower. They'd say, 'There's a leopard over there,' and even our experienced cameramen would say, 'There's no leopard over there.' But there would be a leopard, literally a kilometre away, in a bush.

"Another time, we'd lost track of a cheetah and cubs and these guys said: 'Yesterday it rained and the hyenas were to the west, and there's a line they like to take down this valley when the hyenas are over there, so we reckon they're about three kilometres that way.' And so we drove through the bush – off-road and totally disorientated – and the guides found the cheetahs under a bush in the middle of nowhere. It's almost shamanic. They just get under the skin of the animals and know how they think."

The five-part natural history series was shot over two years in a private reserve in the heart of the Serengeti – a protected, 11,000-square mile ecosystem in East Africa. Encompassing Tanzania's Serengeti National Park and Kenya's Maasai Mara, along with a number of game reserves and conservation areas, it's the stage for the largest terrestrial migration of mammals on the planet.

More than 1.5 million wildebeest, 300,000 gazelle and 200,000 zebra chase the rains, thundering across its plains and woodlands from northern Tanzania to the Maasai Mara and back again. The region is most famous for its lions, but the series also follows spotted hyenas, baboons, elephants and leopards.

"The Serengeti is an Eden for anybody who's seeking a quintessential wildlife experience and wants to see how the planet used to be before humans made a real mess of it," says Dalton. "There's nowhere else you'll see such a diversity of birds and mammals in one place. It's mesmerising and life-changing – I was lucky enough to take my ten-year-old boy out a few months ago and I've never seen him so happy. He's got a very different world view and he's passionate and adventurous now. He wants to have his life around animals and wildlife. My father did the same for me when I was 13 and that's why I do the job that I'm doing now – it's all from that one experience in the Rift Valley in East Africa."

'Lions and cheetahs come right past you, within inches'

FOR MOST OF US, a safari is a trip of a lifetime because it comes with a hefty price tag: seven-day safaris in the Serengeti start at around £1,700 per person, while you can expect to pay over £4,000 for luxurious set-ups, not including flights. Dalton recommends paying extra to sleep under canvas. "The tented camp safari experience adds another dimension. The reserve put us up in tents initially and it was really nice. You were there with the elements. You could hear the hyenas, and the lions in the morning roaring, and you have animals walking through the camp. The stars are incredible. In the evening, if it's not raining, you sit around a fire and look at the Milky Way."

His three filming crews used ingenious cameras to capture the immersive footage. They had a roving camera that resembled a boulder, stationary cameras disguised as rocks that were triggered automatically when animals came within range, and cinema cameras mounted on vehicles for rock-steady shots at 40mph.

WHILE TOURISTS ARE unlikely to come eye-to-eye with a hyena (probably to their relief), many reserves use open vehicles, sometimes with no doors at all. "Animals see safari vehicles a lot, so they are habituated to them and don't necessarily notice you," says Dalton. "You can have lions and cheetahs come right past you, within inches. On rare occasions a cheetah in a hunt will use the vehicle as a promontory and jump on the bonnet. So you can get very close, which is what makes it special."

Surprisingly, he says not to worry about capturing your wildlife encounters. "You can't help but take pictures, but it's important to put the camera down. We never get the chance to do it during filming, but on rare occasions when you can just relax and take it all in without putting a camera to your eye, that's the best bit. It's more important to experience it than share it on Facebook." CLAIRE WEBB

NO-FLY VENICE SIMPLON-ORIENT-EXPRESS AND ITALIAN ADVENTURE

17 nights departing 18 June 2020 on board Arcadia

Embark on an unforgettable Italian adventure with a luxurious journey to Italy on board the Venice Simplon-Orient-Express, stays in Lake Garda and Venice and a Mediterranean cruise on board the stylish Arcadia.

Begin your holiday in the most luxurious way imaginable on board the Venice Simplon-Orient-Express. Harking back to a more elegant age, you'll journey through the countryside in original 1920s and 1930s carriages. As twilight falls and glittering lights appear on the passing hillsides, you'll spend your evening sipping cool cocktails in the Bar Car, accompanied by a pianist, and enjoying sumptuous cuisine – it's an unforgettable journey of a lifetime.

Arriving in Verona, you'll be transferred to Lake Garda, one of Italy's most scenic regions where the northern Alps tumble down into shimmering waters, for a four night hotel stay. With majestic mountains around its edges and colourful villages wedged among sprawling vineyards, Lake Garda is a compelling destination that offers so much to discover. Ascend to the top of Monte Baldo in a cable car as you gaze in awe at the striking panorama below, or take a leisurely walk through the pine-clad scenery.

Next you'll travel to the enchanting city of Venice for a further three-night hotel stay. Defying both logic and architectural techniques, the city stands as beautiful as ever, an incredibly well-preserved network of waterways and grand palazzi. Following your stay, you'll embark Arcadia for your journey home. You'll call first at the capital of Sardinia, Cagliari, where you can explore ancient Roman ruins and palazzi, sample Sardinian cuisine, or head to the beautiful Poetto beach.

You'll then cruise to Gibraltar, a British-owned territory full of British quirks. Enjoy afternoon tea, fish and chips and watch out for the cheeky Barbary macaques before arriving home in Southampton.

GET THE SUPPORT YOU NEED WHEN YOU'RE SERIOUSLY ILL

Get quick access to treatment when you need it most with private healthcare insurance

A 2018 Cancer Research UK report suggested that cancer cases are projected to rise more than 40% by 2035[†]. With an already stretched healthcare system in the UK, it can sometimes be frustrating to get the treatment that you need when you need it most. That's why Radio Times are introducing you to AXA PPP healthcare.

At AXA PPP healthcare, our Comprehensive Cancer Cover is part of our standard cover on our Personal Health plan. Our Personal Health plan is designed to cover you for the treatment of new medical conditions that arise after you join.

If you're diagnosed and need someone to talk to, our dedicated cancer nurses can offer you support over the telephone, taking the time to get to know your condition and listen to what you are going through. They'll even explain your treatment choices in words that make sense.

So long as you're a member, we will provide support throughout your cancer treatment, even if it becomes incurable.

Previously been diagnosed with cancer?

If you have previously had cancer, or have symptoms of cancer, we won't be able to offer you our Comprehensive Cancer Cover. We will however be able to offer you NHS Cancer Support, which means though we won't pay for the treatment of your cancer, we will pay for licensed cancer drugs that the NHS will not pay for if they are recommended by a specialist. We may also be able to pay for the drugs to be given to you at home by a qualified and experienced healthcare professional.

OUR COMPREHENSIVE CANCER COVER INCLUDES

- Diagnostic surgery, CT, MRI and PET scans
- With the Out-Patient option you'll have access to our Fast Track Appointments service
- Consultations with the specialist treating your cancer when you're an out-patient
- Chemotherapy and radiotherapy and targeted (biological) therapy
- Support from a dedicated cancer nurse
- £100 a night charitable donation to a hospice where you're receiving your care as an in-patient or at home
- External prostheses up to £5,000 a year, and wigs up to £150 a year – when you're having treatment to kill cancer cells

Terms and conditions *Choice of one of the six free gifts detailed below, on purchase of a Personal Health plan (excludes child only plans). QUESTIONS BY PHIL "THE COLLECTOR" SWERN

GETTY; SHUTTERSTOCK

Dictionary corner Susie Dent

Can you explain the origin of "undertaker"? Pamela Harron by email

In the Middle Ages, blunt references to death and dying were commonplace, but today we tend to be far more squeamish about the subject. We talk of people passing away rather than dying, while funeral directors will talk about their customers rather than corpses, a coach rather than a hearse, and their coffin range as furniture.

In the same euphemistic vein, a wake may be held in a slumber room, after which a body is laid to rest.

The word undertaker fits into this same category. Originally, the term was applied to anyone who undertook a job required of them, whether as an odd-job man, a tax collector, scholar, or royal financier. By the 17th century, it had settled on the very specific profession of carrying out the arrangements for funerals.

LETTER OF THE WEEK

Big up iPlayer box sets!

BBC'S BEST
Porridge, Blue Planet II and Killing Eve

I tend to join ITV's Lorraine Kelly with my breakfast and when she recommends a new series, she always says, "Available on Netflix" or whatever. Those BBC PR teams who make Siobhan in BBC satire WLA look slick should rise to the challenge of making people understand what great value the BBC is. So much is there on iPlayer, but viewers need to know that, and how they can find it.

Among the amazing box sets and shows available for nothing more than the licence fee there's drama (Killing Eve, Years and Years, Summer of Rockets, Bleak House, all of Doctor Who) alongside science, David Attenborough, current affairs, comedy (The Thick of It, This Country, Porridge) – all of them easy to binge.

Pull yourselves together, BBC – be proud!
Maggi Willis Wembley, north-west London

Maggi Willis wins a BOSE SoundLink Revolve speaker, in either black or silver. One of BOSE's best-performing portable Bluetooth speakers, it is water-resistant, has a rechargeable battery that plays for up to 12 hours and delivers true 360° sound, wherever you place it in the room. RRP £179.95. bose.co.uk

CARDIFF SINGER NOTES

Firstly, I'm a supporter of the BBC and all it does. However, how could they have got the coverage of the Cardiff Singer of the World competition – in their own words a "prestigious event" – so badly wrong? Sports fans get live coverage of the Women's World Cup and the tennis. How come we only got the final live?

We do not want to have to watch it on iPlayer or start watching at 10pm on BBC4; we want the same as sports fans – to watch the whole event live! Come on, BBC, in 2021 make it easier to watch our favourite event as it happens.
Geoff Vivian Rowledge, Surrey

...From start to finish it was never short of uplifting, and many times transcending. Everyone who performed was wonderful and the job of picking a winner must have been almost impossible. I look forward to hearing more of each and every one of them in the future. I can't wait for the next competition and only wish it came around every year.

Agnes Lynch West Kirby, Merseyside

JOHN & LISA'S RECIPE

Surely, I thought, we've reached our capacity for any more cookery programmes – all channels are dripping with celebrity chefs. How surprised was I, then, to stumble upon John and Lisa's Weekend Kitchen (Sat/Sun ITV) in which John Torode and Lisa Faulkner (partners in real life) present a delicious mix of easily accessible recipes? Their chemistry is unmistakable: we see a softer side to John, and Lisa is a delight.

Catherine Parkinson Little Easton, Essex

OUT OF THIS WORLD

Professor Cox took us on a wonderful tour of our solar system in The Planets (BBC2), but was I the only one wondering where he was being filmed on Earth? The backdrops were amazing enough to show that you don't have to leave this planet to find natural wonders. Even a brief caption would have been helpful.

Justin Bailey Ruislip, north-west London

...That's the second time I've fallen asleep while trying to catch up on the Saturn episode of The Planets (18 June) on iPlayer. The trouble is, it's too relaxing – the combination of soothing planetary vistas and gorgeous graphic illuminations orbiting Brian Cox's poetic commentary...

This series is fascinating, yet to my consternation I'm always floating in the outer reaches of the land of nod by the end of it. Maybe some loud cymbals with each planetary collision?

Debbly Elley Stockport
Good news – the series is available on iPlayer for a year, so you have plenty of time to have another go!

DON'T KNOCK DAD'S ARMY

What nonsense Daisy Goodwin wrote in her Viewpoint on Dad's Army (RT, 29 June). It's one of the best programmes the BBC has ever made, is treasured for its characters (cast to perfection), timing, humour, charm and more, and it has never occurred to me that it could subliminally have political influence.

One day, I suppose, because of the limited number of episodes, it may have to be "retired", but certainly not yet. I still marvel at its qualities every time I watch. Long live the Army!
Neil Coppendale Shoreham-by-Sea, West Sussex

FIRST-CLASS JACK

The 23 June episode of Gentleman Jack (BBC1) was beautiful: it showed Anne Lister as more than a flashy buccaneer with a will of iron; she can feel devastation just like the rest of us. Loving a girl who lacked the courage to be what she honestly could have been is heartbreaking. As a lesbian in her 60s, I've been there and done that.

Alison Graham suggested the series might be two episodes too long. Sally Wainwright would never let that happen.

Paula Clark Dunstable, Bedfordshire

...Gentleman Jack is the best Sunday-night drama in years, with first-class acting, music and costumes. I also like the glances and remarks to camera – they're amusing and draw in the viewer.

I got my daughter-in-law addicted and she watched the first three episodes on iPlayer in one evening!

LUMINOUS
Hannah (Lily Sacofsky) and her well-lit bowl in Summer of Rockets

SUMMER LIGHT

I thoroughly enjoyed Stephen Poliakoff's Summer of Rockets (BBC2) and hope that other viewers, like me, appreciated that special Poliakoff touch with the lighting. Every scene was bathed in warm and comforting shafts of light, whether daylight or artificial. The fish bowl in Hannah's bedroom was just stunning! Mr Poliakoff's creative vision in this respect is much appreciated.
Pamela Coleman Northampton

WELCOME BACK, RACHEL

How nice to see Rachel de Thame [who's had breast cancer treatment] on Gardeners' World again, planting up containers in her Cotswolds garden (21 June BBC2). We wish you well, Rachel.
Frances Gilbert Ashford, south-west London

...Will Young on Gardeners' World was a complete inspiration. I'm quite sure his open, optimistic views on the benefits of gardening to counteract pernicious anxiety will have spoken to many people. I'm just one of those, and I'd so much like him to know that his words were a fantastic boost.
Ellie Sedgwick Halesworth, Suffolk

BEECHAM WOOD

Oh what a disaster! Far from being a worthy successor to Downton Abbey, Beecham House (Sunday ITV) has a wooden script so clichéd that one can almost anticipate the next line. While the backgrounds are superb, the characters are stereotypes... and whoever thought of dressing John Beecham (Tom Bateman) as Indiana Jones must have been kidding themselves.

Chris and Jill Harman Callington, Cornwall

GEORGE THE BRAVE

A Year to Save My Life: George McGavin and Melanoma (24 June BBC4) was powerful and moving, a very brave film to make and a perfect blend of the personal and scientific. The cutting-edge science was clearly explained, and it was heartening to hear about the excellent treatment the likeable George received from the NHS. The ending of this emotional, fascinating programme was hopeful – not just for George, but many other cancer sufferers, too.

Anne Riley Ilkley, West Yorkshire

MISPLACED PRIDE

In her preview (RT, 29 June) of Charley Pride: I'm Just Me (5 July BBC4), Alison Graham says: "I'm the only RT writer who's heard of Charley Pride," then tells us she knows all the words to his 1973 release The Most Beautiful Girl in the World, which "doesn't feature here" – hardly surprising, given that the song was a hit for country singer Charlie Rich in 1974.

Geoff Mullin, former Radio 2 head of music Marlborough, Wiltshire
Thanks to everyone who wrote to point this out. Charley Pride did in fact release a cover version of the song, in the 1990s.

WILLIAM SIMONS 1940–2019

I was very sad to read of the death of William Simons on 21 June, aged 78. Most people will remember him as PC Alf Ventress in Heartbeat, but I first saw him as Tim Payton in the 1951 film Where No Vultures Fly, when he was aged about 11. He played the son of Bob and Mary Payton, played by Anthony Steel and Dinah Sheridan. He reprised the role in 1954's West of Zanzibar. I also recall him, as a teenager in the 1950s, in television Children's Hour plays.

Much later, in 1980, he popped up as Alan Dobie's sidekick in the TV series Cribb. Then, of course, from 1992–2010 came his great, memorably laid-back performance as Alf in the long-running 1960s-set Yorkshire show.

Barrie Vinten Rugby, Warwickshire

TOPS FOR TREES

Congratulations to Frances Byrne and everyone involved in the making of her docudrama Our Trees (24 June Radio 4), billed in RT as "a dark contemporary fairy tale". Yes, but there was something moving and uplifting in the voices of all those trying to protect the urban trees of Sheffield: honest and from the heart, exploring what trees mean to us, with not a cliché to be heard. One of the best dramas I've listened to on Radio 4.

YOU ASK US

I'm an Eggheads fan – so who's the best?

I am an avid viewer of the BBC2 weekday quiz Eggheads. Can you tell me which Egghead is best?

J David Ragsdale, Rotherham, South Yorkshire

Eggheads' senior question producer Nick Pagan has all the answers: "It's safe to say that Kevin Ashman is the best quizzier in the world. He's a multiple winner of the World Quizzing Championships and his general knowledge, recall and facility for dates are incredible. Kevin's 86 per cent win record in head-to-head rounds is impressive. Were it not for the Food and Drink rounds (Ashman kryptonite), he might well have overhauled Pat Gibson, who has won an amazing 90 per cent of all his rounds (in 50 History head-to-heads he's only been beaten once). When they're both playing, the Eggheads are almost unbeatable.

"There have been more than 1,870 episodes since the first series in 2003, and 11 Eggheads since we began, with Kevin, Chris Hughes and Judith Keppel from the original team still playing. Chris is formidable. There are few people who can give him a run for his money on steam trains. His Achilles heel is anything modern – he last went to the cinema in 1974, to see Blazing Saddles! Less well known is his love of karaoke – his Bat out of Hell is legendary in the pubs of Crewe.

"Judith was famously the first person to win the jackpot on Who Wants to Be a Millionaire? She has the lowest win record – though, to be fair to her, she's played more Sport rounds than any other Egghead, which isn't her favourite subject. And she still managed to defeat Olympic sprinter Iwan Thomas twice.

"Daphne Fowler, who retired in 2014, looked like a sweet old lady, but had an amazing knowledge of pop culture, even gangsta rap! She used to give the others homework. CJ de Mooi was a Mensa chess champion and a memorable Weakest Link contestant before he joined us.

"The other Eggheads, Lisa Thiel, Beth Webster, Barry Simmons, Dave Rainford and Steve Cooke, all won their places by their exceptional records on other Eggheads shows.

"The Eggheads' longest winning streak is 74 episodes. It ended in 2007: a team from Oxford Brookes University who called themselves 'Beer today, Gone tomorrow' beat them, winning £75,000."

SCOTLAND OMITTED

Thatcher: a Very British Revolution (BBC2) was a good documentary series but made no reference to Scotland. Many of us up here, keen to remain in the Union, feel this happens all too often. Mrs Thatcher's attitude to Scotland was patronising. She's still remembered for the "Sermon on the Mound" when she spoke to the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland and more or less stated that everybody should be like her and "get on", totally failing to accept that many people in life need support. She also imposed the poll tax on Scotland first: surely very relevant to her story and her downfall.

Rosemary Currie Edinburgh

A BBC spokesperson responds: "In five hours of programming, the series aimed to capture as much as possible of Margaret Thatcher's career, her life and her relationship with her inner circle over the course of 20 years and, as such, difficult editorial decisions had to be made. Unfortunately, this meant that not every event that occurred during Thatcher's time in power could be included."

LIFT-OFF!

I was interested to read that the 6 July issue of RT would include pages from the 1969 Apollo 11 issue. I was 19 in 1969, home from university for the summer holiday, and used the original RT cover for the scrapbook [below] I made of newspaper articles about the Moon landing. In the 60s I watched Tomorrow's World and anything else about rockets, computers and technology – it was all very exciting back then. David Hart Nottingham

Excellent! Don't miss the reprint at our centre pages. David wins a DVD of The Planets with Brian Cox. It's available to buy for £14.99 incl p&sp (RRP £19.99) from radiotimes.com/dvds28

View from my sofa

ALEX SCOTT

'I never wanted to be a pundit'

The World Cup analyst would much rather be dancing on Strictly

What's the view from your sofa?

I've got a big, L-shaped sofa, and to my right I've got doors out onto my decking and ahead of me I've got a flatscreen telly on the wall. I've only just moved into my apartment in north London and I didn't think I'd want a big TV – but then someone persuaded me to get a great one, and I get it now!

What have you enjoyed watching on your huge telly?

I love Killing Eve – I couldn't wait for series two. I love Big Little Lies, too, and I've just started watching When They See Us on Netflix. Because I'm always watching football for work, I enjoy binge-watching a box set to switch off.

Anything you just won't watch?

At the moment, the news. I find it depressing. Why would I want to put myself in a bad frame of mind?

How do you like to spend your downtime?

I love music – in my playing days I was always the team DJ. I watch a lot of live music and I love the theatre, especially musicals. While I was playing football in the US, I learnt to play the guitar and I'm picking it up again now. I'm not amazing, but I can play some tunes. If Ed Sheeran wants to give me lessons, I'd take that up...

NOTHING TO WATCH?

MY APP It's really nerdy, but my BBC Sport app. And Deliveroo has been my lifesaver in France.

MY BOOK Michelle Obama's Becoming.

MY RADIO 1Xtra is what I always listen to when I'm on the road.

So does a music career beckon?

I do like karaoke, but I'm not very good. I filmed Bear Grylls: Mission Survive in 2016 with Samantha Barks, who's an amazing singer [Barks starred in the film of Les Misérables], and one time we went out to do karaoke. I thought I'd do a bit of Lady Marmalade and then she started hitting all these high notes – I've never been more embarrassed in my life!

Back to the day job – while you're in France, have you kept an eye on the record-breaking World Cup ratings?

Yeah, we're buzzing off it over here – we know that, as well as the England girls performing well, we have to perform well on screen, to make it engaging and something people at home want to follow.

There's been no shortage of drama on the pitch, but you've been outspoken about the standard of officiating...

Women's football has progressed so rapidly, but we need that same progress in other areas of the game. It's about having the right people who are the most qualified to do it on the world stage – for me, that doesn't mean having to have all-female officials. It should be the people who deserve to be there.

Any post-World Cup plans?

I'm loving what I'm doing at the moment, but I never actually wanted to be a pundit! I've already had the chance to do things outside of football – I've presented The One Show and done music interviews – and I love presenting and asking the questions, so over the next year or so you'll start to see me pop up on different things.

Does Gary Lineker need to watch his back, then?

Well, if he wants to stop and pass on the baton, then I'll pick it up! But I don't think he's going anywhere any time soon.

What about Strictly? You won a Sport Relief edition last year...

It's no secret that I love dancing and music – everyone's known for years and years that that's the one show I'd really love to do. So if they come knocking, then definitely!

This week three men set out

Three men and their journey into space are about to rivet the attention of the world. Here JAMES BURKE introduces eight days of drama and suspense

THE MEN COMMANDER

Neil A. Armstrong. Born Wapakoneta, Ohio, August 5, 1930. Blond hair; blue eyes; 5ft. 11ins.; 11 stone 11lbs. B.Sc. in Aeronautical Engineering. Wife: Janet. Two sons: Eric—12, Mark—6.

Neil Armstrong is a pleasant, ordinary-looking American. You'd pass him in the street and not look twice. But his conversation reveals a dry, prosaic character. He tends to talk very briefly and very much to the point. And the only thing he wants to talk about is space. He's very meticulous. In training the technicians who work with him say guardedly 'he's mission oriented.' What they mean is that he is not the outward-going casual man you warm to. But then as Commander of Apollo 11 he can afford even less than other Apollo Commanders to make a slip.

NASA say he's more Air Force than the Air Force, even though he's a civilian—he's described by almost everyone in NASA as 'probably the best jet test pilot in the world.' He distinguished himself as a fighter pilot in Korea.

He was selected as an astronaut in September 1962, and has since flown only once: as Commander of Gemini 8, launched March 16, 1966.

His home town has named a street after him. His school teachers remember him as 'single-minded and industrious.' He got his flying licence before he was old enough to drive a car. He read aeroplane magazines, not comics.

LUNAR MODULE PILOT

Edwin Aldrin (Colonel, U.S.A.F.). Born Montclair, New Jersey, January 20, 1930. Blond hair; blue eyes; 5ft. 10ins.; 11 stone 11 lbs. B.Sc., Doctor of Science in Astronautics (Massachusetts Institute of Technology). Wife: Joan. Three children: Michael—13, Janice—11, Andrew—11.

'Buzz' is a bull of a man. The people who train him complain that he drives them too hard and apparently never tires. They also say he is the most pernickety astronaut there is. If something is wrong he wants to know every detail, however small.

'Buzz' Aldrin is outwardly much the same as his Commander. He uses few words and is apparently almost without humour. He is reported never to make mistakes, and to be an enormously competent pilot. His care for detail should stand him in good stead. His job in the Lunar Module will be basically to monitor everything Armstrong does and check all systems throughout the flight down to the moon and back.

He was selected as an astronaut in October 1963 and has since flown once: as second pilot on Gemini 12, launched November 11, 1966. In fact he set a record for time outside the spacecraft—five-and-a-half hours. Aldrin has been called 'the astronaut's astronaut.'

COMMAND MODULE PILOT

Michael Collins (Colonel, U.S.A.F.). Born Rome, Italy, October 31, 1930. Brown hair; blue eyes; 5ft. 11ins.; 11 stone 11 lbs. B.Sc. Wife: Patricia. Three children: Kathleen—10, Ann—7, Michael—6.

Michael Collins is totally unlike his fellow astronauts on Apollo 11. He's of Irish descent and he spends a great deal of his time smiling and joking.

His job is mainly to fly the mother spacecraft in orbit while Armstrong and Aldrin go down to the moon and back. He shrugs this off philosophically—'somebody has to stay behind.'

If anything other than a serious 'getting on with the job while we make history' feeling comes across on the live television broadcasts from this mission, it will be due in all probability to Collins. He was selected as an astronaut in October 1963. He has flown once, as second pilot on Gemini 10.

THE MOONCRAFT

The ship in which the astronauts spend most of the journey and which serves as a base from which the Lunar Module operates on the trip down to the moon and back is called the Command and Service Module—CSM for short. It's made in two separable bits: the Service Module—a cylindrical section housing all the power units and the main spacecraft engine; and the Command Module—the spaceship's cockpit, and the only part of the vehicle that returns, in one part at any rate, to earth.

Inside the Command Module the crew lie on couches—built to fit them individually—alongside each other, and facing the pointed end of the ship. In front of them, from head to waist level, and from wall to wall, the instrument panel.

The Commander, on the left seat, has the flight control instruments. The Command Module Pilot, in the centre, sees to the fuel states and does the navigation. And the Lunar Module Pilot, on the right seat, monitors the systems that provide oxygen, power, and temperature regulations in the cabin. All three have hand-operated throttles on the arm rests of their couches—one for direction, one for power.

Beyond the foot of the centre couch, a well intrudes into the tip of the spacecraft. This houses the navigation instruments. The tip itself comes off and back into the cabin, to clear a hole through which the crew go to the Lunar Module.

There's about as much room inside the Command Module as there is in the front seat of a large family car. On the six CM flights so far, of the one-and-a-half million functioning parts on board, only three have ever gone wrong.

The Lunar Module is the world's first pure spacecraft. Never intended for flight in air, it is built with no regard to smooth aerodynamic shape. The four men who have flown in it so far (McDivitt and Schweickart on Apollo 9, Stafford and Cernan on Apollo 10) describe it variously: 'A tin foil joke'; 'It's like flying in a bath tub with somebody hanging on the outside'; 'You look at it—and you think, they must be joking.'

Its awkward-looking shape is purely functional: a lower stage carrying four legs, an engine and fuel tank; an upper stage carrying controls, food, oxygen, fuel, an engine, and the crew.

The lower stage—31 feet leg pad to leg pad and nearly 11 feet high —carries the descent engine on whose power the crew lower themselves to the moon. It also acts as a launch pad for take-off. It's then left behind on the moon.

As on the Command Module—there are two computers: one to do everything, the other to check it.

The crew compartment in the upper stage is just big enough for two men in spacesuits. They stand at the controls. There's no room to sit, and, anyway, nothing to sit on. They sleep on the floor. Two triangular windows at eye level are the only view out.

None of the LM returns. The lower stage is left on the moon. The upper stage is fired into solar orbit before they come home. But it carries the most vital piece of hardware in the mission: the ascent engine. If that fails, Armstrong and Aldrin don't come home.

THE MISSION

Just before one in the afternoon of Sunday, July 20, Armstrong and Aldrin leave Collins alone in the mother ship and drift through the tunnel to the Lunar Module. Twelve orbits around the moon and then they separate the two ships.

One orbit of inspection to see that everything looks right on the LM—and then the dive towards the landing site in a long curve that takes them almost halfway round the moon and ends 50,000 feet above the surface. The descent engine fires to begin the 'powered descent'—and, like a helicopter, the LM sinks towards the surface, slowing gradually until at a point 110 feet up they hover and inspect the landing area. They have only two minutes hover power in that descent engine to change their minds about where to land.

They go on down to five feet—the probes extending from the LM foot pads make contact with the surface, the engine automatically cuts out, and they fall the rest of the way.

Touchdown is planned for nine-twenty-two on Sunday evening.

The first few seconds after touchdown are critical—if the landing feels the slightest bit uncertain the crew flick the 'abort' button and relaunch immediately. If all feels right, they take two hours to check out all the systems necessary for take off at the end of their period on the surface, and then swallow a sleeping pill. Four hours later they wake, eat, and at just after seven-twelve a.m. on Monday, July 21, Neil Armstrong goes down the ladder...

As he reaches the second rung down the ladder he pulls on a ring that sets a television camera working, and pictures of his first contact with the moon will be relayed to earth as it happens. Twenty-seven minutes later Aldrin follows him. They both spend a total of two hours and forty minutes on the surface, televised throughout.

Then, with the camera on the surface watching them, they return to the Lunar Module, sleep briefly, and at about seven on Monday night lift off to rejoin the mother spacecraft that Collins has been flying in orbit all this time. Back in the Command Module they jettison the Lunar Module and head for home. They return to no tumultuous crowds, no hand-shakes, no speeches. After the greatest journey in the history of man, Armstrong, Aldrin, and Collins will go into quarantine for twenty-one days. They will have left the American flag on the moon—but nobody knows what they will bring back. And nobody is taking any chances. History or no history.

MAN ON THE MOON 1

The astronauts: Neil Armstrong, Michael Collins and Edwin Aldrin. Armstrong, the mission commander, and Aldrin, the lunar module pilot, will drop to the moon's surface. Armstrong will be the first man to step on to the moon. Command module pilot Collins will stay in lunar orbit. If one of the team goes sick—then all three astronauts will be replaced by another trio. NASA officials claim they could replace six teams—if they had to.

Helping to put you at home (9) completely in the picture are BBC-tv's special Apollo 11 space team—including Cliff Michelmore (7), Patrick Moore and James Burke (8). As well as interpreting the live pictures of this week's historic flight, they will be using models and film to fill in the complicated background. MAN ON THE MOON 3

U.S.A. in Space

1969

May: Apollo 10—the first manned trip to within ten miles of the lunar surface and the first manned link-up and transfer of crews in lunar orbit

1968

December: Apollo 8—a major 'first' for America when Borman, Lovell and Anders become the first men to venture beyond earth orbit and circle the moon
October: America puts three men into earth orbit—the beginning of the manned Apollo programme

1967

January: Grissom, Chaffee and White die in a launch pad fire

1966

June: America's answer to Luna 9—Surveyor 1 lands on the moon and sends back TV pictures of the surface
March: A manned Gemini craft links with unmanned spacecraft in earth orbit

December: Two Americans spend fourteen days in space and rendezvous with two others
June: Edward White shows that Americans, too, can walk in space
March: America's first two-man flight

1964

July: Ranger 7 shows TV viewers over 4,000 close-ups of the moon

1962

February: John Glenn completes America's first orbit and two more

1961

May: An American face-saver—Alan Shepard completes a short space hop from Cape Kennedy into the South Atlantic

1958

January: Explorer 1—The U.S.A.'s first satellite but much smaller than Sputnik 1

Soviet Union in Space

1969

January: Soyuz 4 and 5—the first manned link-up and transfer of crew in earth orbit

1968

November: Zond 6 repeats Zond 5's trip but makes a return on dry land
September: Unmanned Zond 5 carries animals around the moon to a splashdown back on earth
April: Russia gives the moon her first satellite—Luna 14

October: Venus 4 makes the first soft touchdown on another planet. The same month two unmanned Cosmos spacecraft link up in orbit
April: Vladimir Komarov dies as Soyuz-1 crashes

January: Luna 9 soft lands on the moon and sends back pictures (intercepted by Jodrell Bank)

1965

March: Alexis Leonov walks in space

1964

October: Voshkod 1 orbits three men together

1963

June: Forty-eight orbits by Valentina Tereshkova confirms that space is safe for women, too

1961

August: 17½ orbits by Herman Titov confirms that prolonged space travel is safe for man

1959

September: Luna 2 hits the moon. The first terrestrial device to reach another heavenly body

1957

November: Sputnik 2 carries the first living creature—the dog Laika—into space
October: Sputnik 1—the first man-made satellite launched into earth orbit

WHEN the Americans climb out of their spacecraft and walk around for two hours on the moon, we will be able to see and hear them as they do it. There will be live pictures of one of the most breathtaking events in all history—and from a quarter of a million miles away. As Armstrong and Aldrin take those first painful and exhausting steps what will they say and do? The moon crew are trained to be garrulous. They must report every sensation, describe every detail they see.

When Sir Edmund Hillary and Tensing climbed Everest, theirs was a lonely, private triumph on the highest point on earth. It took two-and-a-half days for us to get the news. They had stood and pounded each other on the back. When they got down exhausted to their companions far below, Hillary called out: 'We knocked the bastard off!'

Such earthy human comment may be ruled inappropriate on the moon. But it is hard to imagine that these hours of watching, beginning with Armstrong's slow descent down the spaceship ladder, will not be moments of moving excitement.

On the airless moon, the astron-

ONLY A SECOND AWAY...

MICHAEL CHARLTON writes about the communications miracle that will keep you in touch with the Apollo astronauts auts' voices will not carry. They can speak to each other, and to us, only by microphone. It will take Armstrong's voice one point three seconds to reach us here on earth with whatever shout or comment he thinks fit. Another one point three seconds for what will surely be an explosion of encouragement and triumph from Mission Control at Houston to get back to Armstrong and his companion, as they stand alone among the stars.

From beginning to end we will be able to follow the flight of Apollo 11 in sound and picture. The world television audience will become a part of the astronauts' lifeline of superb communications.

At Cape Kennedy we will describe the launch from a grandstand three miles away. As soon as the Saturn V—3,000 tons of beautiful mathematics—clears the launch tower at the Cape, all control passes from the Cape Kennedy launch crews to Mission Control at Houston, some 1,000 miles away.

BBC-tv will be in Mission Control throughout the journey to the moon and back. As Apollo 11 rides away from earth, it climbs up a veritable beanstalk of telemetry fed into the Manned Spacecraft Network—fourteen ground stations, four ships, and eight aircraft spread out around the earth.

For the first 10,000 miles of its journey, a string of thirty-foot antennae girdling the world track Apollo and bring in the astronauts' voices. Beyond the first 10,000 miles the biggest 'ears' in the world take over. These are the huge eighty-foot antennae spaced at intervals of 120 degrees round the earth—at Goldstone (California), Madrid, and Parkes (Australia). As our world revolves from west to east, one of these big dishes always has the moon in sight. They hand over the job of communications, one to the other, like relay race runners. Most of the pictures from the moon's surface will come in via the station at Parkes.

All but the last 50,000 feet of the moon journey has already been accomplished on previous flights. But some unknowns and many dangers remain. (The Apollo 10 flight overshot Apollo 11's landing zone by four miles, a deviation caused by the mysterious 'Mascons' beneath the moon's surface.)

On Sunday night, July 20, they are due to fly those last 50,000 feet down to a landing. All that night they sleep in the cold of the moon. The next morning at twelve minutes past seven our time, we will be able to watch one of those singular moments when 'hearts are brave again and arms are strong.'

Then a young American called, fittingly, Armstrong emerges from the mooncraft and climbs slowly down his ladder to walk about in the Sea of Tranquility—to gather rock samples and the impressions he will pass on to us on earth.

This incredible morning's TV from the moon may even shake the conviction of the Flat Earth Society. They, I remember, thought Frank Borman's flight to the moon at Christmas was a hoax. They believe he went out over the edge and loitered there out of sight!

SPACE TALK The moon men have a language of their own—translated here in a glossary prepared by PETER RYAN

Apogee The point at which the moon or an artificial satellite in its orbit is farthest from the earth.

Attitude The position of a spacecraft defined in terms of the inclination of its axes (see Pitch, Roll, and Yaw).

Burnout The point at which combustion ceases in a rocket engine.

Cislunar The space between the earth and the moon, or between the earth and the moon's orbit.

Control system A system that serves to maintain stability during forward flight and to correct deflections.

Delta V A velocity change.

Digital computer A computer in which quantities are represented numerically and which can be used to solve complex problems.

Down-link The part of a communication system that receives, processes, and displays data from a spacecraft.

Entry corridor The final flight path of the spacecraft before and during earth re-entry.

Escape velocity The speed a body must attain to overcome a gravitational field, such as that of the earth (24,800 m.p.h.) or the moon (5,300 m.p.h.).

Fuel cell An electrochemical generator in which the chemical energy from the reaction of oxygen and hydrogen is converted directly into electricity and water.

G or G force Force exerted upon an object by gravity or by reaction to acceleration or deceleration, as in a change of direction.

Inertial guidance A sophisticated automatic navigation system using gyroscopic devices, etc., for high speed vehicles. It absorbs and interprets such data as speed, position, etc., and automatically adjusts the vehicle to a predetermined flight path. Essentially, it knows where it is going and where it is by knowing where it came from and how it got there. It does not give out any signal so it cannot be detected by radar or be jammed (see Pitch, Roll, and Yaw).

Injection The process of injecting a spacecraft into a calculated orbit or on a flight path.

Penumbra Semi-dark position of a shadow in which light is partly cut off, for example the surface of the earth or moon away from the sun near the terminator.

Perigee The point at which the moon or an artificial satellite in its orbit is closest to the earth.

Perilune The point at which a satellite in lunar orbit is closest to the moon, the craft having been launched from the moon.

Pitch The movement of a space vehicle about an axis (Y) that is perpendicular to its longitudinal axis—imagine a ship at sea (see also Roll and Yaw).

Re-entry The return of a spacecraft into the atmosphere.

Retrorocket A rocket that gives thrust in a direction opposite to the direction of the object's motion.

Roll The movements of a spacecraft about its longitudinal (X) axis—imagine a pencil rolling on a desk (see also Pitch and Yaw).

S Band A radio frequency used for spacecraft communication with the ground. It also carries television signals.

Telemetry Measurements taken within a spacecraft in flight and transmitted by radio to the ground station or vice versa.

Terminator Separation line between lighted and dark portions of celestial body lit by the sun.

Translunar coast Journey out between earth and moon.

Umbra Darkest part of a shadow in which light is completely absent, for example, surface of the moon or earth away from the sun.

Up-Link data Telemetry information from the ground.

AOS Acquisition of signal. APS Ascent propulsion system (of LM). CAP COM Capsule Communicator (speaks to astronauts from MCCII). CDH Constant delta height (steady rising or lowering of LM). CDR Commander (Armstrong). CM Command module. CMP Command module pilot. CSM (CM plus LM) Command and service module. DOI Descent orbit insertion (above moon). DPS Descent propulsion system (of LM). EOI Earth orbit insertion. EPO Earth parking orbit. EVA Extravehicular activity (on lunar surface). GET Ground elapsed time (from launch). IVT Intravehicular transfer (from CM to LM and vice versa). KSC Kennedy Space Centre (Cape Kennedy). LES Launch escape system. LOI Lunar orbit insertion. LM Lunar module. LMP Lunar module pilot (Aldrin). LOS Loss of signal (when spacecraft is behind Moon). LPO Lunar parking orbit. MCC Midcourse correction. MCCII Mission Control Centre Houston. MSFN Manned spaceflight network (Apollo communications). RCS Reaction control system (controls spacecraft attitude). SLA Service module-LM adapter (encloses LM at launch). SM Service module. SPS Service propulsion system (main engine of SM). S-IVB Third stage of Saturn V. S-II Second stage of Saturn V. S-IC First stage of Saturn V. TD and E Transposition, docking, and LM ejection. TEC Tranearth coast. TEI Tranearth injection. TLC Translunar coast.
