This is a high-end foodie feast

HEN REALITY TV works, it's a beautiful thing. I know people look down their noses at the very mention of it, but at its broadest it includes shows like The Great British Bake Off (back soon) and Strictly Come Dancing, so really, there's nothing to be snooty about. I was reminded of that watching two well-honed BBC2 reality shows: The Chefs' Brigade (Tue), which continues to be a highend foodie feast, and Interior Design Masters (Wed), which is new this week. The latter may remind you of one of the early greats of reality TV, Changing Rooms, but this is young, untried designers we're no fun in this kind of show if someone doesn't mess up in a way we can all get judgey about. With any luck, in future weeks the more flamboyant stylists will cut loose and make our eyes hurt. The legacy of Laurence Llewelyn-Bowen must be honoured, after all.

Dragons'Den (Sunday BBC2) - a different kind of reality TV - is back with a sparky new Dragon to shake things up. The best thing about the series is the genuinely high stakes for those who come on and have to make life-changing decisions on the spot, under the glare of both TV lights and five crotchety capitalists. There's an example in the first episode: it's agony to watch.

> Talking of capitalism, this week sees the return of Succession (Monday Sky Atlantic) the pitch-black comedy about a media family and their global empire. I banged on about the first series last year but hardly anyone watched it. Since then, word of mouth has spread and people keep telling me how great it is. Yes, I know! And judging by the opener, the second series could be just as good.

WHAT I'M WATCHING...

MICHAEL BUERK

'I'm catching up, big time. I can't make head nor tail of Stephen Poliakoff's Summer of Rockets - can anybody? The plot is preposterous but the old cars are wonderful and that's all that matters. I'm having trouble following Keeping Faith, too (perhaps it's me) but Faith herself is so vivid, watching her is like half an hour on the cross-trainer. Also, how did they find that many sunny days in Wales? I've loved Catch-22. As a former war reporter I know how brave a coward needs to be. Michael Buerk's viewpoint - page 9

SARFRAZ MANZOOR

The last great television drama I have seen is Years and Years, in which Russell T Davies managed to make the near future plausibly terrifying. I also loved Martin Scorsese's Netflix feature on Bob Dylan's Rolling Thunder Revue, even if I was left uncertain where fact ended and fiction began.

WHAT WE'VE LEARNT THIS WEEK

There's a reason why some croissants are curved while others are more or less straight. In France, there's a long tradition that a croissant where the ends curl round to meet will have been made with oil or margarine. Only a croissant made entirely with butter can be rolled so it is straight. Inside the Factory Tuesday BBC2

'Leave couch potatoes alone!'

The freedom to make bad choices is what democracy is all about

ISTEN UP, COUCH potato! As you settle down in front of the Netflix box set, crack open another beer and wrestle with that jumbo bag of salt 'n' vinegar crisps, don't worry that your backside is making such a huge dent in the sofa cushions – it's not your fault.

Read the papers. Throughout the summer there have been calls for obesity to be reclassified as a disease, not just a poor lifestyle choice.

We are the fat champions of Europe. Two-thirds of us are overweight, approaching one-third clinically obese. We're only outwaddled by Americans and the people of Tonga, who fetishise fatness.

Doctors are calling it a national emergency and many think that by declaring it a disease, it will reduce the stigma of fatness and encourage people to seek treatment.

They're wrong, on almost every count. There's been interesting research on how certain genes are associated with increased appetite and there are differences in individual metabolic rates (but nothing like as much as people think). The bottom line, though, is that you're fat because you eat too much.

Your genes might play a part, yes. But they don't explain why obesity-related admissions to hospital have increased TEN times in a decade, why ambulance services have had to spend hundreds of thousands of pounds on new vehicles that can take 50-stone patients (in London, there are some that will take patients weighing up to 70 stone). It's greed. You'll lose weight if you eat less.

It's not because of poverty, either. For the first time in history, it's the poor that are porky. The truth is, healthy food is cheaper than sugarpacked, fat-soaked convenience rubbish.

My new mate, Shaun Williamson (we've been boating together: Celebrity 5 Go Barging, Friday Channel 5) used his ample frame to great effect playing "Fat Barry" in EastEnders.

He resonated so well as a flabby failure that he's still mobbed in the streets. The only snag is that he has to pretend to like pork scratchings and Special Brew, when we all know his personal taste runs to broccoli and Bollinger. It's your fault and you can put it right. Stop guzzling. When I was put into the I'm a Celebrity... Get Me Out of Here! concentration camp and starved, I was pretty trim already (thanks to my blameless lifestyle, of course). I still lost one and a half stone (9.52kg) in three weeks. They

In any case, who is to say longevity is the ultimate goal in life?

In any case, who is to say longevity is the ultimate goal in life? Some might thought I was dying.

think a bon viveur's fun-filled, self-indulgent three score and ten is preferable to nine decades of pious self-denial (though I have to say the older I get, the less certain I am of this).

Lifestyle regulation is not the job of a liberal democratic state. It's your choice and your business as long as you don't hurt others.

ALKING OF WHICH, don't fall for Public Health England's line that obesity "costs" the nation £6.1 billion a year. Who can calculate how much an obese person would have cost if they were slim? How much would he or she cost if, instead of keeling over with a heart attack at 52, they live to a ripe, dementia-ridden old age, requiring decades of expensive care? (In any case, VAT on takeaways, confectionery and fizzy drinks more than covers it.)

The freedom to make bad choices is what personal autonomy, indeed democracy, is all about.

Let us positively reframe the argument. The obese will die a decade earlier than the rest of us; see it as a selfless sacrifice in the fight against demographic imbalance, overpopulation and overpopulation and climate change.

Give them the facts to make informed decisions, by all means, "nudge" all you like, but in the end – leave couch potatoes alone. They're weak, not ill.

WHAT WE WATCHED

More than 30 years after Spike Milligan, Harry Secombe and Peter Sellers launched The Goon Show, Radio 4 was engaged in a retrospective of Prince Charles's favourite comedy (our cover photo with HRH was taken in 1964).

A repeat of ten vintage episodes and a profile show meant welcome repeat fees for Milligan – but he had no intention of tuning in. "I never listen to it now," he told us in 1983. "It's too nostalgic. I used to get up at dawn to write it and take a Tube to [the office in] Shepherd's Bush and still be there at midnight. It drove me bloody mad. Broke up my marriage."

bustling Hammersmith, west London, a very special moment in TV history is happening. Seven icons of British situation comedy are being given a new lease of life – by an impressive, exuberant cast.

Captain Mainwaring, Sergeant Wilson, Lance Corporal Jones, and Privates Frazer, Walker, Godfrey and Pike are on parade once again. Not in newly written adventures, but for three stories that first aired in 1969 and were subsequently wiped from BBC videotapes, seemingly lost for all time.

Thanks to the Gold channel, those early, formative stories will live again in the three-part series Dad's Army: the Lost Episodes, showing on consecutive nights at the end of the month.

Gathering in a church hall, just as the original

Walmington-on-Sea Home Guard did for nine series between 1968 and 1977, the new recruits are visibly enjoying rehearsals, although they are all, to a man, keen not to offend sitcom sensibilities, realising how cherished Dad's Army is.

During a tea break, Hollywood actor Kevin McNally, who plays Captain Mainwaring, tells RT, "We're doing it because we know that you could never see the original people doing it. So we're like a tribute band."

The camaraderie is unforced but, when quizzed about their esprit de corps, Mathew Horne (who plays Walker), deadpans, "No, we're having a terrible time, it's really bleak," making his comrades laugh. Versatile comedy actor Kevin Eldon (Jones) elaborates: "It's a thrill. We've all got on, haven't we? There are no twits."

They've been running through the script of The Loneliness of the Long Distance Walker, in which the eponymous black marketeer tries to dodge the draft, and Mainwaring and Wilson visit the War Office in London to plead for his exemption. "Yes," explains McNally, "it's about our attempts to try to keep Walker with the unit, as he's the supplier of all things fun!"

You look around and think, "Blimey, it's the platoon!"

UCH ARE THE efforts the production team has gone to, that a wartime Tube platform has been built for just one scene, alongside a lovingly re-created St Aldhelm's Church hall, at Pinewood Studios, where the episodes are being recorded in front of a lucky audience.

It must surely help the cast that the church hall set is so faithful to the original? "Absolutely," says West. "It just ups the game a little bit," adds McNally. "And then getting your costumes on and looking at your colleagues and thinking, 'Oh blimey, it's the platoon!"

The other instalments in the series are A Stripe for Frazer, in which the cynical Scot and Jones tussle for the newly created post of corporal, and Under Fire, where the men are forced to become firefighters when incendiary bombs fall on the town.

McNally applauds the variety of approach across all three stories by original writers Jimmy Perry and David Croft, whose scripts they are following almost to the letter: "I always thought they were good, but I didn't realise quite how clever some of the writing was. It's brilliant, \triangleright Irresistible sparkling rosé and prosecco.

Award-winning and helped fund the Hulme Community Garden Centre.

GO OP It's what we do absolutely brilliant."

Eldon agrees: "Yes, kids get all the slapstick, the fire extinguishers going off in faces, and people getting water all over them. Also there are power plays, little putdowns, and all those things that are far more nuanced and subtle they're there for the taking as well. It's one of the best sitcoms that appeals on different levels."

Cold Feet and Toast of London star Robert Bathurst is especially enjoying the class conflict of his character, Wilson, with Captain Mainwaring: "Wasn't it one of the BBC controllers who originally said, 'No no no, the toff must be the sergeant?' That inversion was key to it. Which was genius."

So do they feel differently about the programme now that they've appeared in it? "I'm more affectionate towards it," says David Hayman, who plays Frazer in a departure from the gritty roles for which he is famous, in Trial & Retribution and Taboo. "It gives you a slight feeling of ownership, doesn't it?" adds fellow veteran Timothy West, who makes a delightfully otherworldly Godfrey.

To play devil's advocate for a moment, wasn't Frazer something of a caricature? "It's water off a duck's back, really," replies Glasgow-born Hayman. "Is he a stereotypical Scotsman? Yes, in many ways he is. Is Mainwaring an archetypal Englishman? Yeah, he is."

N ANY CASE, the important thing with their performances was not mimicking Arthur Lowe, or John Le Mesurier, or John Laurie, but, as Hayman puts it, "capturing the essence" - both of the famous characters, and of the situation.

Eldon has even revised his opinion of the game-for-anything lance corporal. "Actually, Jones wasn't always my favourite. As I got to my teenage years I thought, 'He's a bit obvious, isn't he?' A bit unsubtle. But now I've changed my mind. Because I've studied him. We've all studied our characters. We've been quite swotty about it! I now see a lot more nuance and technical savvy that I didn't before. And I think he's a really good character."

•People who love Dad's Army seem to love what we've done?

EXEC-PRODUCER TOM WEBBER

On the days of recording at Pinewood, the banter is quelled, the cast don their Home Guard uniforms and walk out, one by one, to the generous applause of the audience, many of them long-standing fans of the original series who are audibly lapping it up.

"They were so warm and responsive, they made our job so much easier," says Hayman after the first recording, while McNally says he'd been raring to go: "Unusually, I didn't feel an ounce of nerves. I felt like, 'Give me a go at the ball, I wanna get out there and perform this stuff!"

The oldest member of the cast at 84, Timothy West is an old hand at performing in front of an audience, but the youngest is used to it as well. Tom Rosenthal, 31, who plays Pike, is a stand-up comedian, and yet the Friday Night Dinner star still admits, "It is pretty nerve-racking. But just like any kind of live performance, it's lovely to get an immediate reaction, from people who you know are really invested in what you are doing."

Executive producer Tom Webber is proud of the results: "It took some considerable time to get our actors together, as they are all in such demand. So my primary emotion when shooting began was simply relief. What's been really pleasing since is the reaction of die-hard fans. People who love Dad's Army seem to love what we've done."

And the cast's hopes for The Lost Episodes? Hayman answers: "That lots of people watch it and enjoy it. And we get away with it!"

"And it plays on television as often as the originals do and those cheques keep coming in," quips McNally, before adding, with more serious, captain-like gravitas, "Obviously, given the brief, it will be the last time that we ever play these characters. And that will be sad. But the opportunity to have done it has been wonderful." MARK BRAXTON sk Luke Norris what it's like being so handsome and he'll throw his head back, laugh heartily and blush ever-so-slightly. He'll then give you a sidelong look, his cool blue eyes quite the respite from one of London's hottest summer days. As for his answer? We'll get to that.

First, though, we're here – ahead of Norris's exclusive RT photoshoot – to discuss the latest, and last, series of Poldark, in which he plays the good doctor, Dwight Enys. For five series, Dr Enys has been the counterpoint to the brooding Ross Poldark and the malign George Warleggan, embodying those rarest of traits, so often undervalued, especially in men. Kindness and openness.

It's a relief to find that Norris, 33, has been cast close to type. In real life, he's thoughtful, affable and humble. And no, it isn't an act. "I think it appeals to my sensibilities to play somebody who's putting it out there," he says of the good doctor. "I definitely get more joy playing those open characters. I don't think I have the self-restraint or skill to play a repressed character like George in the way Jack [Farthing] does. Jack is so good, in that you can see everything that George is going through, bubbling away, and in this series, the lid comes off that and that's really satisfying after watching him quell it for so long."

I'll miss the horsesbut not the breeches

Farthing is clearly one of the people that Norris will miss from his time on Poldark. He describes the cast and crew as having a family feel to it, says that he's made "friends from this job that will be around for ever" and regards the end of the series as "bittersweet for sure, because I'll miss everyone."

What else will he miss? The outfits? "Not really, no. Although we filmed in winter for four of those five series so the layers were very useful." The horses? "I will miss the horses, but not the breeches you have to wear to ride a horse. I can't ride that well but the horses are so well trained, they can do it without you. They can hit the mark with no one on them."

The fame? Norris pauses, pensive. "I'll miss being part of a show that's so popular. It's really nice that people care enough to watch and write letters and turn up on set and things like that. That's great for the ego. But it's Aidan [Turner, who plays Ross] and Eleanor [Tomlinson, Demelza] who are on the front of the magazines and get stopped in the street. I don't have that and that suits me fine.

"I feel like I get the best of both worlds, \triangleright

The Lacom orestram branch, this page. We had so with the page of the company of t

Norris says that no one on Poldark for esaw the phenomenon it would become. "I remember sitting outside a church in Cornwall with Jack Farthing and talking about how the contract was for five years. And we were like, 'It won't go that long, though, will it?' The 1970s version only had two series, so we figured that's how long it would last. So we had no idea – and I don't think anyone did. Then the press got hold of it, the first episode was popular, and it became a part of the public consciousness."

"And Aidan took his top off and people went nuts for it," Norris smiles. "It really took hold in a way that I don't even think the producers thought it would. And we're very grateful for that."

Norris is also grateful to Poldark writer Debbie Horsfield, for how she wrote Dr Enys. "In series three, in relation to prison and to PTSD, and in series four, going into the loss of the baby, she'd written these very open and delicate responses from Dwight – and it was great."

Public and honest discussion of men's mental health, which those stories portrayed and elicited, chime with Norris's own writing. Yes, not only is he a fantastic actor, he's also a brilliant writer. (Thankfully, he says that he's just an "OK singer", otherwise I might've had to kill him.)

His play So Here We Are won the Judges' Award at the prestigious Bruntwood Prize for Playwriting in 2013 and is being revived at the Queen's Theatre in Hornchurch, Essex next month. It focuses on a five-a-side football team with only four players, in a time when suicide is the single biggest killer of men under 45 in the UK. At turns, exquisitely sad and hilariously funny, So Here We Are is about male friendship, how men deal (or don't deal) with loss and grief, and what it means to be a man.

"So Here We Are is unapologetically about men's mental health and toxic masculinity because those are preoccupations of mine," Norris says. "Where I grew up in Essex, I think there's still an attachment to quite old-fashioned gender stereotypes for a lot of people, which aren't exclusively negative but can be, depending on who you are and how it's manifested.

"I grew up with my mum who was a single mum for a while – and while I've got a brilliant stepdad, there was definitely a very femaleheavy influence in my youth and upbringing that debunked some of the myths about women being soft, weak and the 'fairer sex'."

ON STAGE, 2013 Now married, Joanna Horton and Luke Norris met in As You Like It BLOOD BROTHERS Dwight (Luke Norris) comes to the aid of Ross (Aidan Turner)

So who taught Norris how to be a man? "My stepdad, my friends – and my mum, actually. And my grandad and uncle. There were plenty of other paternal influences. And I was going to be a rugby player – I played for 15 years – so I guess that's a big part of where I've partly learnt about manhood. There's that weird thing about rugby in that it's very aggressive and masculine,

'I'm that terrible actor mix of vanity and insecurity' but it's also full of sensitive and warm and loving people. There's camaraderie and brotherhood."

Growth, another of Norris's plays, discusses testicular cancer and one man's relationship with, ahem, his manhood. It was inspired by the experience of a friend of his, though he did go get himself checked out after he'd written the play. "I was worried about it but I still didn't go and get checked. And people told me that they were getting checked because of the play and then I thought, 'Well, I've got to. I've got to get over myself.' So I did."

Why are some men so reluctant to discuss their health – mental or physical – or go to a doctor or ask for help? "There's an extraordinary amount of self-denial you can get away with as a man, as a grown-up, if you feel you don't have responsibility towards anyone else. Now I have kids, I am straight to the doctor with any kind of health scare because I have a duty of care to them to be healthy. But prior to that, I just wouldn't go to the doctor. I would tell myself I was fine because if I wasn't fine, I would know about it. Which is ludicrous."

Is that a fear of being seen as weak? "I think for me it's actually a fear of it interfering with my life. 'I can't have cancer, because I'm too busy,' you know? 'This mole can't be dodgy because I've got a holiday booked."

Horton – chose not to know the sex of their children before they were born, but there was one thing he was sure of: "Whatever we had, they were going to be a feminist and they were going to be a good one." Now father of two girls, is Norris a feminist? "Yes, I am a feminist. Of course I am. Why wouldn't I be?" he says, with a fierce pride. "It seems so self-defeating to claim that you're not, or to actually not be. It feels horrific, frankly."

Norris admits he was "terrified that we'd have a boy because then I'd become the role model – someone that they'd be looking up to – and that still feels like a very scary thing to do because it's something that you're supposed to have a handle on: masculinity, or even adulthood. Which I was afraid of. But yes, we have two girls and we're delighted. It's good, brilliant, wonderful."

With Horton soon to embark on rehearsals for a play that opens in October – Blank at London's Donmar Warehouse – how does Norris juggle family life with a career? "It can be really tricky. When you're employed as an actor, it's feast or famine. That means when you're employed, you can be away a lot. And that can be hard, particularly when the babies are small and you're out for feeds and bedtimes. The hours are antisocial and childcare is exorbitantly expensive. So we juggle it between us. When Jo's in this play, I'll be at home with both girls for a few months, which is great."

With his photoshoot looming, our time is nearly up. Norris grimaces: he doesn't like having his photo taken. This prompts the question that it's always fun to ask men who are considered good-looking: what's it like being so handsome? After the laughing and the blushing, he groans and grins simultaneously. "That's so ridiculous. I did Sunday Brunch [on Channel 4] and they twice commented on me being handsome. And I just don't get it.

"I mean, I spend a lot of time looking in the mirror because I'm that terrible actor mix of don't feel I'm handsome.

POLDARK -THE FUTURE

Winston Graham's 12-volume Poldark saga leaves a ten-year gap between books seven and eight, during which this final BBC1 series ends. By the start of book eight, much has changed for the main players...

ROSS POLDARK

Nearing 50, Ross remains the same passionate, idealistic and stubborn man we know and love. Times have changed, though. It's 1810, Britain is in the throes of the Napoleonic Wars, and the story opens with Ross on the Continent. Still an MP, he's enlisted for a few spying missions for the government, which mean he's away from his family for long periods.

DEMELZA POLDARK

The fiery jealousies of her marriage to Ross have quietened markedly, and Demelza (Eleanor Tomlinson, right) devotes her time to their growing brood, who feature heavily in the later novels. High spirited and much soughtafter daughter Clowance is 17, son Jeremy is 19, and Demelza has given birth to vivacious Isabella Rose (Bella), who is eight when the story starts. Their life is disturbed by the arrival of what gives book eight its title, The Stranger from the Sea – a man who enmeshes himself into the life of the Poldarks, taking a shine to Clowance.

DWIGHT AND CAROLINE ENYS

The couple (Gabriella Wilde plays Caroline, left) remain friends with Ross and Demelza, while Dwight is now a highly respected physician, focusing on mental health disorders.

This includes an interest in the work of French doctor Philippe Pinel, who helped develop a more humane approach to the care of the mentally ill.

GEORGE WARLEGGAN

Has the villain turned soft? Dream on. He still misses his adored wife Elizabeth, despite a new love interest, and harbours a hatred for Ross. By 1810, the King's madness has returned, war is bubbling away and the ensuing turmoil leads to a lot of speculation on the financial markets. And George, as we know, isn't averse to seizing whatever opportunities he can.

ELIZABETH'S CHILDREN

Geoffrey Charles has joined the Army and encounters Ross on the continent; his romantic adventures also feature in the later stories. Valentine, who was brought up by George (while having almost certainly been fathered by Ross), turns into a dissolute individual who shows contempt for George. But will he figure out who his real father is? BEN DOWELL

LAKE DISTRICT can be deceptive. On the surface, the lakes are serene and sparkly, but they hide turbulent depths. New ITV drama Deep Water takes this allegory as its theme. It follows three mothers from a small Cumbrian village trying to manage parenting, careers, marriage and friendship, all the while trying to appear outwardly calm and as if they are coping. But what happens when life gets on top of you, and you drop the ball?

When kennel owner Lisa forgets to pick up her daughter's friend for a sleepover, a series of incidents ripple through the community, like a pebble dropped in a lake. RT talks to the three stars of Deep Water to find out how they attempt to do it all, and how successful they are at juggling different elements of their own lives.

ANNA FRIEL Describe your character, Lisa. She's a dog walker and a mum. She's kind and warm; a hearty character, a little bit shy and a bit silly. She makes mistakes but she has a really strong conscience. It's nice for me to be able to take my foot off the dark pedal!

Are you a dog lover? Gracie [Anna's 14-year-old daughter] has always wanted a dog, but I decided we couldn't do it with our lifestyle so we decided to share one – Maggie-May – with Gracie's best friend, who lives six doors down. We do one week on, one week off. Then when I was filming in the Lake District, I was alone a lot and I really missed Maggie, so we bought a puppy called Eunice.

The men in Deep Water are not terribly supportive. Is life harder for women?

Honestly? Yes, because men don't have to have babies or periods and they grow older more beautifully. Salt and pepper is attractive on men whereas women feel they have to dye their hair! It can get overwhelming for actresses because 30 years ago you would take two years off, not be back on set when your baby is eight weeks old. Things are more expensive, so it is easier to have two wages on the table than one. Life is just harder.

Is the industry getting better in terms of making more allowances for mums?

Filming Deep Water took me away from Gracie for four and a half months, so we saw each other every other weekend. Door to door from Windsor to the Lakes was more than six hours and I tried every form of transport: planes, trains, driving in the middle of the night. I found it heart-wrenching because it's all going so quickly, and I really don't want to miss out on those vital few years.

When she was a baby it was easier because I could just take her with me.
I filmed Marcella straight after Deep Water, in Belfast, and they offered to move Gracie there, set her up at school, and bring a nanny over.
I actually found it moving that they were so accommodating.

FAMILY FIRST Friel with her daughter,

Gracie

Have you ever had to turn down a job because you're a mum? Yes. I can't be specific out of respect for those involved but I was offered a big American TV show that would have meant a move to Austin, Texas. It was a great role, the money was fantastic, but it would have taken Gracie away from her father and her friends. I used to have a place in LA, but after David [Thewlis, Gracie's father] and I broke up, I never went back. I was doing really well in LA, all my boxes were ticked and that was my home, but I obviously had to choose life with Gracie over my career.

Do you ever hanker after an easier career?

Yes. It would be lovely to have a man who looked after you, and you could just do the odd bit of interior design and go for lunch with your friends!

It would be nice to have a bit more time to go to a yoga class or potter about Portobello Market or go to reclamation salvage yards. Although I think it would only be nice for a certain amount of time. You wouldn't have the ultimate sense of achievement.

What do you do on your days off?

I find cleaning and cooking therapeutic.
And as I get older, I like going to the garden centre more: I have these 300-year-old roses.
I've just had seven days off and I finished a whole book in a day. Reading is such a luxury.

What jobs are still on your bucket list?

I would like to do more comedy – [2007 comedy drama] Pushing Daisies was quite popular in America, but I don't think a lot of people got to see it here. I adore a love story, and anything period – I love the costumes.

We are seeing a lot of female-led dramas on primetime TV. Is it enough? There are never enough great female roles. Great performances by people like Olivia Colman have paved the way. It's a little hard to look back and remember that a lot of roles were just accoutrements – arm candy or the wife. I think one of the most progressive movements is that age is no longer a roadblock. Women over 40 are interesting and layered and Deep Water tells that story.

And you had a female director on set...

Female director, producer... I was thinking, "God, please don't let us menstruate at the same time, it'll cause a disaster!" ▷

SINEAD KEENAN

Describe your character, Roz. Roz is trying to keep afloat and keep her family together. She's a physio who had her own successful private practice but then lost the business. She's trying to keep the wolf from the door. That leads to a whole sequence of events that result in her making some very big decisions.

What's Deep Water about?

Everyone presents a front, whether they realise it or not, but it's what lies beneath that's really interesting. Some friends of mine seemed to have the perfect relationship, and I really envied it, and then they were over. You just don't know what goes on behind closed doors.

Can you empathise with the theme of struggling to keep your head above water?

Definitely. I went to B&Q recently and bought blackboard paint - it changed my life! If it's not on the blackboard, it's not happening. But my kids are three and one, and the wheels come off very early in the morning!

4 thought: What damage am I doing to my son?

SINEAD KEENAN

How did you find filming with two kids under three? Tricky. I'd put them to bed on Sunday evening, get into my car to the Lakes, then come back to Stratford straight after filming on Friday so I could have all weekend with them. My youngest was nine months when filming started and you think, "What psychological damage am I doing to him?" But he was being fed, and watered! He was fine, thanks to a combination of a brilliant husband, nursery and childminder.

Is the industry getting better in terms of making more allowances for mums?

My experience is limited, but on Deep Water they drove me back and forth so I didn't have to do an eight-hour train journey. Sarah Solemani launched a brilliant campaign called Budget the Baby that called for crèches on set, which would make so much sense.

The men in Deep Water are not terribly supportive. Is life harder for women?

As much as I'd like to say no, we do still have a long way to go. I have a wonderful husband and I was going to say he's "hands on", but actually I hate that phrase! You'd never say that about a mother. If men show up even a little bit, there's a round of applause, and in ₹ terms of salaries it's not equal.

Do you ever hanker after an easier career?

God, yes! Getting paid holiday, knowing what money is coming in every month... definitely. Those thoughts usually come when I'm not working, though. When I'm working, I never give it a second thought.

What do you do on your days off - if the kids are being looked after? I'd just like to sit down and have a coffee and read the paper without someone hanging off my leg telling me they're hungry.

ROSALIND ELEAZAR

Describe your character, Kate. She seems to have it all: she doesn't work, she has a lovely house. But that perfect façade has huge cracks. The character she presents to the world is a mask. She's concerned with being organised and controlled and pretty, but it's like Instagram, where you think everyone's having a fantastic life... Nobody takes a picture of themselves crying or mid-argument, do they?

Can you empathise with the theme of struggling to keep your head above water?

All of us have had times in our life where things are happening faster than we can deal with. These women find themselves in circumstances that have huge repercussions for themselves and the people around them. They make extreme decisions but their reasons are universally relatable, whether that's love, security, or wanting to belong.

The men in Deep Water are not terribly supportive. Is life harder for women?

Yes, although the men do become a bit more supportive and dynamic as the series goes on. Also these women aren't perfect: they make huge mistakes. Kate's not someone everyone will like, and that's quite intriguing. We've seen men in those roles for years and that's a more exciting narrative, so I like that we're getting to do it now. It's liberating to play a role that isn't the girl next door.

How do you juggle the different elements of your own life? I can be very focused when I'm filming, detrimentally so. There were times when my mum called me while I was working on Deep Water and I was like, "Mum, I can't talk right now." Even if I have a couple of days off, I tend not to see friends, which is stupid. I need to get better at that.

Are friends the thing you're most likely to drop when you're very busy? Absolutely. In all honesty I've lost friends along the way because I haven't made time for them. I have a lovely 'These women aren't perfect... they make huge mistakes?

ROSALIND ELEAZAR

boyfriend right now and because we live together, and he is in the same industry, it can be all-consuming.

Do you ever hanker after an easier career?

No. I do sometimes envy what it must be like at 5pm when your day ends and you're free to do whatever you want. But I love what I do and it doesn't really feel like a job.

What do you do on your days off?

I would probably just take a walk - without my phone - and look up. The phone and all its notifications are such a bore. EMMA COX

As Succession returns, Brian Cox and Matthew Macfadyen and creator Jesse Armstrong reflect on why this US satire is such a hit

T'S A SUNNY Sunday morning in a suite in Gleneagles, one of Scotland's finest country hotels, and a seemingly perfect family gathering is turning nasty. "Mom was nuts and now I'm sad," someone pouts. The conversation later switches from family to business and, referring to a rival, another voice suggests the hour has come for the siblings to "beat her head in with rocks".

Watching the four characters – all of whom are glamorous and highly polished multimillionaires – on a monitor in an adjoining room, screenwriter Tony Roche says quietly, "They're adults talking about big, important things, but they're regressing to children."

This is the set – and, effectively, the crux – of Succession. HBO's series about a New York-based media and entertainment conglomerate, run by Scottish-born mogul and patriarch Logan Roy (Brian Cox), launched on Sky Atlantic with little fanfare in the heat of last summer. But positive critical reviews quickly coalesced into furious word-of-mouth acclaim, and HBO renewed it for a second series after only one episode had been broadcast. Within six months of the show ending, that had turned into the 2019 Bafta for best international programme.

Succession made delicious, compelling and occasionally horrifying viewing. The first series followed the Roy clan as they jockeyed for position and favour under the withering gaze of their terrifying father. Logan is a self-made, thrice-married billionaire who, much of the time, makes little effort to conceal his contempt for his intelligent but also pampered and idiotic offspring. When their company, Waystar Royco, comes under threat in a shifting political and media landscape, rather than pull together, the family starts tearing itself apart.

During a break in filming, over morning coffee in another fancy room in the five-star resort overlooking the rolling Perthshire landscape, I ask Brian Cox the obvious question - how much Rupert Murdoch have you put into your portrayal of Logan? "Logan Roy is Logan Roy, he's not Rupert Murdoch," the Scotsman replies.

He and the rest of the normally New Yorkbased Succession cast and crew are back in Logan/Cox's mutual homeland for the best part of a month, filming episodes seven and eight of season two. A Logan Roy-style NDA (nondisclosure agreement) prevents me from revealing specific plot details but, without giving too much away, they revolve around Logan, his clan and corporation in tow, returning to the country of his birth.

"His background is extremely challenged," says Cox. "Murdoch came from a reasonably secure background. Logan is much more autodidactic - and much closer to how I am, in one sense: selftaught, self-made." The 73-year-old actor grew up poor in a tough, provincial city,

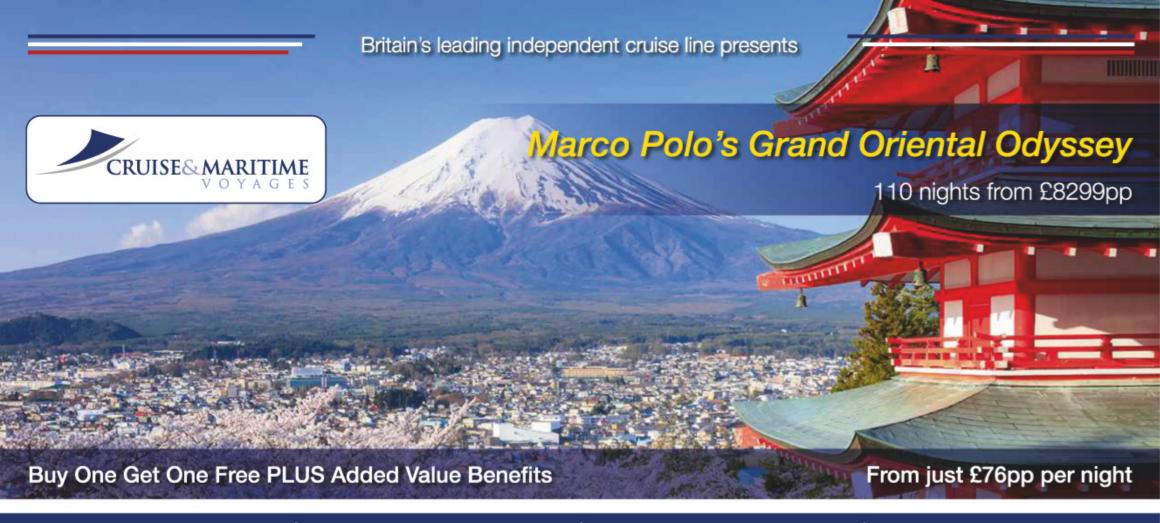

HOME-GROWN TALENT British series creatorJesse Armstrong is making his mark on the US nearby Dundee (full disclosure: I'm from there too, so I'm allowed to say such things).

"Nothing came [to Roy]," Cox continues. "So he doesn't take any prisoners. What he says is: 'If I can do it, anybody can.' And of course, that's not the case, because he has this formidable element to him."

The primary victims of Logan's wrath are his offspring who, starved of paternal love and eager to please Papa, turn on each other. Connor (Alan Ruck), the only child from Logan's first marriage, has ducked out of business to run a ranch in New Mexico and is mocked at every turn for his easygoing naivety. Only girl Siobhan, or Shiv (Sarah Snook), tries to forge her own path in Washington politics, but is reluctantly pulled back into the family business. She also has the misfortune of being saddled with a clownish company man of a partner, Tom Wamsgans – which brings us to the second Brit in the cast, Matthew Macfadyen.

For Macfadyen, the challenge of breaking free from the constraints of playing it straight in uptight British period dramas to take the role of "a colossal dhead" in a US show explains why he signed on, despite the series shooting for almost seven months, largely in New York.

He had the added challenge of perfecting an American accent, something this time-served actor has, remarkably, never had to do on screen before. "I wanted to do an American show, just because it's something I hadn't done. And because it's [shot on the] East Coast, it makes it much more doable. And as it's an ensemble piece, [the filming schedule] means I can get home every three weeks or so, for a short weekend."

Luckily, the filming of season one last year worked well, timing-wise on the family front, despite his wife of 15 years, Keeley Hawes, being extremely busy filming Bodyguard, Mrs Wilson and The Durrells – the first two of which earned her Bafta nominations.

"[Keeley was] doing three things in one go," the 44-year-old nods, "which has never happened [before]. But I had finished this and nothing was coming in, and it was lovely because I just took the time with the kids [he and Hawes have two children, Maggie, 14, and Ralph, 12, and he is stepfather to her son Myles, 19]. So that worked really well. But it doesn't always. That's part of the fun, and part of the stress."

Another key reason the drama appealed to Macfadyen was the fact that Succession was created by Jesse Armstrong, the Brit who co-created Peep Show and Fresh Meat, and who was one of the core writers on The Thick of It. It means that, true to the spirit of those UK comedies, Succession is smart, satirical and intricately plotted, as well as being stuffed with brilliantly drawn characters.

Armstrong and his team of writers puncture this heavyweight, very topical drama with bursts of biting humour. The 48-year-old, who lives in south London, acknowledges the debt Succession owes to The Thick of It, Armando Iannucci's scabrous, sweary and brutally funny take on modern British politics.

"I was involved with a lot of The Thick of It," he says. "That vibe, that feeling of chaos, people under pressure making decisions, and not always the right decisions, was in that show. And Armando has a great mastery of orchestrating those kind of scenes of power when it wobbles, and people under pressure."

Succession perfectly skewers the sense of entitlement that infects dynastic families, whether they're running media conglomerates or running the White House. "It's very, very reflective of what's going on around us," Cox notes. "And I think that's the power of the show.

There's a kind of modern morality tale at work. It's very Chaucerian. And it's so clear [from what] we're witnessing constantly on the news... the news is actually more ludicrous than drama. We're seeing people, like Donald Trump, who are successful but disconnected in some way."

T'S THAT COMBINATION of the ludicrous and the dramatic that Armstrong and his team do so well. In the first, pre-titles scene in the opening episode of series two, we find Kendall Roy in a spa in Iceland. But his recuperation from the traumatic events that closed the last season are interrupted by a suited emissary from his father.

Pulled from the hot tub and told he has to make an emergency TV appearance, a shellshocked Kendall murmurs that he's booked for a "silica mud wrap" – can he have that first? It's simultaneously hilarious and horrific.

"I'm glad you liked it," Armstrong says, patently pleased, when I mention that curtain-raiser. "That's the show, and that's our natural territory. The point is: even important, rich and somewhat smart people say foolish things. Even if your life is about to end, you might find your-self mumbling about some crisps you haven't finished and a massage you're meant to be having – can you take me to the hangman later?

"That's a more real portrayal of life than you might get in another show." Succession, though, is very much not another show. Right now, it's the show. CRAIG McLEAN

RadioTimes 10–16 August 2019

Davies would gather around the TV with a couple of friends, and imagine how she would slay the likes of Peter Jones.

"I watched it all the time at university," says the now-head of a multimillion-pound crafting empire. "Because I was studying management, the students used to get together every week to watch Dragons' Den with a couple of beers and a takeaway.

"My friends would always joke at me and say, 'Oh, you should go and pitch on the show sometime, Sara.' Fast-forward 14 years, and I'm telling that story to Peter one night after dinner, how we would all sit around and watch him as students. He looked at me and went, 'You used to watch me... at uni?' And I saw his face drop!"

At 35, Davies is the youngest investor in Dragons' Den's history. When she was a student at the University of York, she was doing more than just learning about business – she was building one, too. Inspired by a work experience placement at a local north-east crafting company, she spotted a gap in the market for people who loved to make bespoke cards, but had no way to customise their own envelopes. "As with any business, what you need to do is come up with a product that solves a problem," she says. With the help of her father, an engineer, she developed a tool called the Enveloper – and pitched it to shopping channel Ideal World. They were keen, but there was a catch.

"They wanted 8,000 of them," she says, "but I had no money to make that many. My family didn't have that sort of money. I grew up in a little pit village [Coundon, near Durham]. I persuaded a joiner to make the first batch, saying, 'Look, this company's going to pay me in 45 days. I'll write you a cheque but don't cash it until then because I haven't got the money in the bank.' How the hell I talked him into that I don't know. If the 8,000 didn't sell, I had no way of paying that bill."

They sold out almost instantly, and the joiner would go on to make another 30,000 by the following Christmas, with Davies running the business – now called Crafter's Companion – out of her university bedroom. Six months down the line she was even invited to pitch the Enveloper on Dragons' Den ("I did this happy dance inside"), but by that point she didn't need any more money. "Instead I said I'd like to give up a few per cent of my business to have one of the Dragons mentor me, but they said that's not how it works." Still, I say, getting rejected by Dragons' Den because you were too successful is quite the humblebrag. "Yes," she laughs. "You write it like that!"

VER A DECADE later, she was encouraged by a friend to call one of the show's producers.

"It was just before Christmas and we were watching the show on Sunday night. He said, 'Oh, you'd be awesome as a Dragon.' I said I'd love to do it, and he rang them the next morning! I don't know how he did it, but he spoke to one of the producers, texted me and said, 'Here's the number, they're expecting your call this afternoon."

Even after being picked, she couldn't shake a sense of "imposter syndrome"; of being too young for the job. "I just had to assure myself: 'They think I'm good enough, so I'm good enough." But if she was nervous during the filming of Dragons'Den, it certainly doesn't show on screen. She comes across as warm and down-to-earth while being tough, too; shrewd and a self-described "tight, canny northern lass" who in her very first episode beats Peter Jones to an investment in a tan cream product, before winning a bid for a toilet cleaner by rejecting a partnership with Touker Suleyman ("We don't need him").

'Forget the cameras... or else you'll lose a lot of money'

"The other Dragons were so supportive all the way through filming," she says. "And they are exactly the same off-camera. But it's not so much a TV programme, it's more like a boardroom. You've got to forget the cameras are there and make good commercial decisions. Otherwise you're going to lose a lot of money doing this."

One of Davies's great hopes for doing Dragons' Den is that she can use her youth to offer a different perspective – to say, "Trust me, as a millennial, this is a great product" and snap up the bids that the other Dragons simply don't understand. But she's also keen to offer the guidance and mentorship to young entrepreneurs that she craved when starting out her own business. "With the investments I have made in the Den, I've had a lot of those entrepreneurs in my offices going through business strategies, setting up pitches. It's a buzz being involved in early-stage businesses."

in 2016 and, left, at vork at her business,

Crafter's Companion

There are practical reasons for Davies wanting to live vicariously through new businesses, too: she simply has no time to build another of her own. Beyond Dragons' Den, she is already stretched between travelling the world for Crafter's Companion (now a global enterprise worth £34 million a year), and bringing up two boys, five and two, with her husband Simon, a "hands-on dad" who also co-runs the business. How much pressure does she feel to, as the rhetoric goes, "have it all"?

"It's unbelievably tough," says Davies, who received an MBE in 2016. "I didn't want to be that mum who would be at the park with the kids, pushing the swing with one hand while checking my emails with the other. When I'm with the kids, 100 per cent of my focus is on the kids... Just because I'm away from home ten nights a month doesn't mean that I'm not a fantastic mum. Instead of chastising myself for the things that I can't do, I focus on the positives that I can do."

put their mind to it" attitude is something that Davies evokes a lot. But one of the big questions that hangs over this series of Dragons' Den is why, amid the uncertainty of Brexit, anyone would want to set up a new business?

"It's always a risky time to start a business," she says. "But if you're driven enough, you'll just do it. If I look at our business over the last couple of years, it's been an incredibly unsettled economic time. Against all of that, we've never invested as much in our UK business in the 14 years we've been going as we have the last couple of years. If you've got a great business idea and you can make a success of it in the times of economic hardship, then you've got the right foundations to absolutely fly when the economy turns back around again." STEPHEN KELLY

TOM BANK

ATIONAL TREASUREDOM FALLS on the few and with no process or pattern. Peter Crouch, 38, is proof of that. When he announced his retirement from football a few weeks ago, after 21 years as a professional footballer at 11 clubs, having earned 42 caps and scored 22 goals for England, there was an outpouring of warmth. Yet this was towards a man who was once greeted by chants of "Freak! Freak! Freak!" for his 6ft 7in height and lean body shape. Having begun his career at Tottenham Hotspur, he moved on to Queen's Park Rangers, and later played for (among others) Portsmouth, Aston Villa and Liverpool, returning to Spurs in 2000, then Stoke City and Burnley.

Unlike most footballers, Crouch already has his future career sewn up. Last year he published an autobiography, How to Be a Footballer, that, rarely among football autobiographies, was actually quite good. From the book evolved That Peter Crouch Podcast, in which Crouch was funny and self-deprecating and won over fans by being just like them: obsessed with football, and a bloke you felt you could sit down and chat to.

Now Crouch has been signed up by Amazon Prime. The streaming giant has purchased the rights to show 20 live Premier League matches in December – the month's first midweek set of fixtures and every match from the busy post-Christmas schedule. They're also launching Back of the Net, a weekly football show with a studio audience, released every Tuesday and co-hosted by BBC presenter Gabby Logan, comedian John Bishop and Crouch.

"We're going to put a different spin on football," says Crouch, his limbs overwhelming an armchair at a London hotel. "People want to encounter players that they see on telly in different environments: maybe see a bit more of their characters. They want footballers being honest."

His honesty has endeared Crouch to the public. Married to the model and 2013 Strictly champion Abbey Clancy, 33, with whom he has four young children, the beanpole striker was once asked what he'd have been if he weren't a professional footballer. His answer? "A virgin." Today, ask him how he feels about life after football and he's equally open. "I'll be honest, I'm scared," he says. "When you're a footballer, you get told where to be, what to do, someone even takes your passport. Everything's done for you. But when it stops, you can't replicate the buzz, the adrenaline of a game, in anything else you do. The book, the podcast, this show, are taking my mind off it. It's been like therapy, in a weird way. When they came to me about the book, I said,

> 'I'm not doing the usual footballer stuff - I grew up here, did this, did that.' I wanted it to come from me." He was surprised to find that, although football is a national obsession, no one had ever thought to tell the millions of fans what being a footballer is actually like. "There were so many things that I didn't realise people didn't know. Little things around the training grounds, team buses, away trips... Then I only did the podcast to promote the book." One episode of that podcast begins with Crouch caught on microphone saying, "I don't know what a podcast is." They kept that in.

"The podcast is literally how I would be if I was in the pub with my mates. I think that's why people like it. And now it's gone crazy." The latest series ended with the Crouchfest festival at Indigo at the O_2 , in front of 3,000 people. It included an appearance by Liam Gallagher and Crouch reprising ("for the last time") his famous robot goal celebration.

"Music is a passion of mine," Crouch says. "I'd like to get into promoting new bands. Liam Gallagher offered me a job as a musician the other day. He was like, 'When we do a big gig, just learn the bass to one tune and you can come up and play with us.' I said, 'I'd love to do that, but I don't have any musical talent."

He has, for a footballer, an unusual aversion to trotting out platitudes. "The general perception is that footballers aren't very bright and there's a part of me that would have liked to have gone to university like a lot of my mates did," says Crouch, who has ten GCSEs. "But football's given me everything. It's the best life ever. That's why I've always tried to play with a smile on my face, because you think how lucky we are."

It pains him when other footballers, often immensely wealthy when compared with the fans, don't appear to realise their good fortune. "Certainly, there was a time at Stoke when we got relegated [2018] that I was disillusioned with the game really," Crouch says. "There were a lot of players there that didn't really appreciate what we'd been given."

Attitudes like that from their heroes were bound to disillusion the fans, especially followers of the national side. "The relationship between the England team and the general public went through quite a difficult stage," he says. "A lot of people saw the team I was part of as overpaid and underachieving."

не football world he prefers is the one he saw growing up in north London. "I'm always going to love 80s, 90s football... but it was a bit crap. The standard wasn't as good, the pitches were more bobbly. But I loved it then and I don't think you'll ever replicate that, for me."

In some ways Crouch is helping people who watch the game to reconnect with those who play it. Fans feel closer to footballers when they can hear them talk about having a rub-down or forgetting their lucky pants. "I'm not saying it was me that started it, but I think you'll see players being less guarded. Because in an age now of social media and Instagram and Twitter, it's obvious that there's a market for it. I think you will see players managing their own social media accounts rather than their managers doing it."

Crouch wants to move into punditry and there's clearly a seat on the Amazon sofa with his name on it. "It's quite clear Amazon are moving into football. But in all honesty, I just fancy watching some games and talking about them."

He's admirably fair when asked about the state of BBC punditry: Match of the Day is, he says, "done very well" and everyone, from Gary Lineker to Alan Shearer, "brings different things. I'm certainly not as political as Gary Lineker," he says, referring to the presenter's Twitter presence, "but I've got things I want to say." He also has a new adrenaline source to find.

"When I filmed the pilot of Back of the Net I had butterflies," he says. "Having that little bit of fear is as close as you can get to playing football. I needed a drink afterwards. That shows I'm doing the right thing." BENJI WILSON

Pace the fear

Why fast bowlers could decide the Ashes

The Ashes: Second Test from Wed 10am Sky Cricket/Main Event, 10.25am 5 Live Sp Ex/R4 LW

WAS ONCE SITTING at a table at which an admiring lady was asking Ian Bishop, former West Indian cricketer turned commentator, if he used to bowl fast. Politely but firmly he corrected her: "Very fast." There is a crucial difference between someone who bowls fast and someone who bowls very fast.

As the Ashes series moves into its Second Test, we will see how important that difference is. Very fast bowlers are grand prix cars, delicate and prone to breakdown, and for the same reason: speed matters more than reliability. But when Mitchell Starc - who can bowl at speeds adjacent to 100mph - or Pat Cummins is in action for Australia, and England can pick from Jofra Archer, Mark Wood and Olly Stone (although none of England's pace-plus trio made the First Test) it's likely that batsmen on both sides will at times be required to hurry.

Go beyond 90mph and it's a lot harder to put bat on ball?

We have spent much of the summer with the World Cup's 50-over format, where as soon as a bowler has worked up a fair old pace, the captain has to worry about taking him off - he's only got ten overs and you don't want to waste him. In a Test match, when a bowler is going hot and strong, all that concerns the captain is how long he can keep going. In a one-dayer, if you hang about for half an hour, things will get easier. In a Test match, it can be closer to two hours.

At what point does a bowler become very fast? The consensus is 90mph, which works out at a rather less thrillingly round figure of 145kph. But it's not the numbers that matter: it's the speed. Something happens when a bowler reaches that pace. Or rather two things.

The first is the tiny fraction of time that the very fast bowler steals from the batsman. It's something that pushes the craft of batting close to the limits of possibility for hand-eye coordination. It's not a smooth graph, in which every 🗄 increment makes it a little bit harder. Rather, it's a graph with an appreciable step in it: go beyond 90mph and it is not harder. It's a lot harder. A Test batsman once told me that in his first innings against proper pace he was still at the top of his back-lift when the ball hit the stumps.

The speed makes the ball a lot harder to play; it also makes it a lot harder to avoid - and that's the second thing. No one has ever bowled fast just to defeat a batsman's coordination. A cricket ball is hard; when it strikes you, it hurts. The faster you bowl, the more it hurts - and the more likely you are to be hit. Even for the best, fast bowling is about fear.

ACING EXTREME PACE is frightening, but also stimulating. Some batsmen rise to the challenge, turning the pace against the bowler, so that he is undone by his own brilliance. The tougher it is, the better the great batsmen play.

Extreme pace ratchets up the tensions, and in such circumstances the great ones thrive: after all, it is what they are for. In 1984, David Gower, former England captain, was invited by the press to complain about the West Indian tactic of incessantly hostile fast bowling. Instead he summed up Test cricket for all time. "It's a Test match," he said. "It's not Old Reptonians v Lymeswold, one off the mark and jolly good show. You're not expecting life to be made easy for you." Beyond 90mph, nothing is easy.

Sarfraz Manzoor's memoir Greetings from Bury Park has been turned into a film, Blinded by the Light (in cinemas from Friday 9 August), by Beecham House director Gurinder Chadha, and starring Viveik Kalra. Here, the writer chats to the actor playing his younger self about ambition, opportunity and chopping onions...

Sarfraz Manzoor: In Blinded by the Light, you play Javed, a character based on me – a working-class British Pakistani 16-year-old living in 1980s Luton. So, you know where I grew up, but tell me about your childhood. Viveik Kalra: I grew up in Windsor in Berkshire, so very different from where you Viveik Kalra: I grew up in Windsor in Berkshire, so very different from where you grew up – different generation, different place. I was very lucky in that when I was younger my family saw that I was interested in the arts. So I had the privilege of them taking me to the theatre. But I didn't ever sit down and go, "I want to be an actor. This is the job I want to do." I just saw it as a hobby.

In the film, Javed's poems come to the attention of his English teacher. How did others notice you were into acting?

I was just a loud child and I used to do impressions. Borat [the Sacha Baron Cohen

'It's a great time for Asian actors'

character] was one of my biggest impressions. I used to go to family dinner parties and just do Borat impressions in the centre of the room.

When I was growing up in the 1980s there was no one I could point to who came from a similar background to me and was Asian who was doing anything creative, so it felt almost impossible that such a road was open to me. What about you – was there anyone who inspired you to think you could be an actor?

I think I just reached a point when I thought maybe this isn't just a hobby. I thought I'd be incredibly lucky even to get a job in the theatre. Film or TV weren't on my radar because I had no one near me connected to that world. But then suddenly...

You've done brilliantly well. You've just starred in ITV's Beecham House, also directed by Gurinder Chadha – were you ever worried that there may be fewer roles for an Asian actor than a white one?

I was never struck by that as a young person –

Kalra as Baadal with Tom Bateman

in Beecham House

I guess I wasn't old enough to understand that that was a thing. Now I look back and think about how in the past there were all these incredible Asian actors who were stamped into two-dimensional roles. You've talked about how your father was a really intelligent man but worked in a factory because he wasn't given the opportunity to be anything greater than that. I think that's the case for a lot of the generation previous to me and before that.

It's a great time for Asian actors, with Himesh Patel starring in Danny Boyle's Yesterday and Dev Patel about to star in Armando Iannucci's The Personal History of David Copperfield. Do you get the feeling that things are opening up in terms of opportunities for actors from diverse backgrounds?

I think it's incredibly important to make clear that I am in no way in competition with Himesh or Dev. I'm just excited to be a part of this, a small part of it.

Were there any obstacles to overcome?

The obstacles I face are certainly considerably less than a while ago. And I'm incredibly aware of that. The fact that ten years ago, or less, people didn't have the opportunities that I have now as a young 21-year-old Indian boy. It is sad that even a couple of years ago this wasn't the case. I haven't really had to fight to do what I want to do. I can just do it. I've been incredibly lucky.

That wouldn't have been much of a film... Exactly. It'd be terrible. "Javed wants to be a writer." "All right, son. Go on then, mate, you can do it. We'll pay for your uni."

When you read the script for Blinded by the Light, did it feel like it was from another world?

No, not really. Weirdly, even though I don't really relate to the world it is set in, the script was a piece of writing I related to more than anything I'd read before. I think it must have been the Asian-ness of it. Chopping onions

Ten years ago there weren't the same opportunities?

VIVEIK KALRA

with goggles on and those little cultural titbits – that was something I hadn't seen or read before but completely understood.

I took you up to my childhood home in Luton before filming Blinded by the Light last year and then took the film to Sundance [film festival] in January. Since then, you and I have been to New York, Hollywood and Las Vegas for preview screenings and right now there are huge billboards with your face on all over the United States and Britain. How does it feel?

I got on the Tube yesterday for the first time in ages to go to my barber to get a haircut, and I got off literally in front of a picture of my face on a poster, which is the most surreal thing. I didn't know what to do. So I just half stopped and then giggled to myself and then walked away. I didn't want to go and take a selfie with it because the Tube stations are busy, obviously, and you don't want to be that guy. But I just... it's just... I giggled.

It's weird that we are now bound together. A new edition of Greetings from Bury Park is being published and – look – you are on the cover! How inappropriate that your face is on the back of your own book but mine is on the front!

FILM OF THE DAY

The Bridge on the River Kwai

3.15-6.30pm C5

DID YOU KNOW? Alec Guinness initially said: ''I can't imagine anyone wanting to watch a stiff-upper-lip British colonel for two and a half hours."

WAR EPIC The Colonel Bogey March – as composed in 1914 by army bandleader FJ Ricketts, who went by the nom de baton Kenneth Alford – has only Eric Coates's Dam Busters theme to beat in terms of most whistled tune from the war movies. Apparently inspired by a golfer who whistled the first two notes in lieu of shouting "Fore!", Ricketts's march was a massive seller in the form of sheet music and has been played with gusto by just about every British military band that ever clashed a cymbal on the parade ground.

David Lean's 1957 jungle epic The Bridge on the River Kwai managed the impossible feat of further popularising Colonel Bogey. The Northampton-born composer Malcolm Arnold included it in his score for the classic PoW adventure starring Alec Guinness (as by-the-book Colonel Nicholson), William Holden, Jack Hawkins and Japanese silent-movie legend Sessue Hayakawa, who ended up as the film's only Oscar nominee not to win his category.

The movie was based on a novel by French author Pierre Boulle who was credited with adapting the screenplay, despite the fact he could barely speak English. The real writers, Michael Wilson and Carl Foreman, were blacklisted.

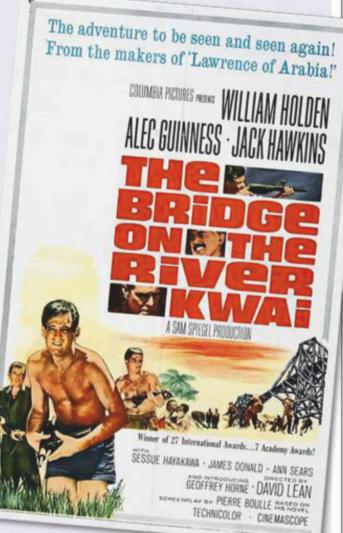

Set in 1943, the film uses Colonel Bogey as a melody of British insolence and defiance, as the soldiers of Nicholson's regiment are forced to bridge a waterway to connect the Bangkok-Rangoon railway line. The same cocked snook at authority runs through almost every British war movie of the 1940s, 50s and 60s. It should be noted that Kwai is a British-American co-production, like many of the great Technicolor classics, so when Holden's equally insolent

American PoW eventually sheds his cynicism to back his British allies, that's as much to do with the binary postwar morality as it is the story itself.

It's apt that Bogey is enjoying its latest march as an afternoon matinee. This is not a film that shies away from death or deprivation, but it's suitable for all ages, and has complex things to say about professional pride, national character and higher purpose. Hayakawa's commandant is as fascinating as Guinness's brainwashed officer: they have more in common than either man imagines. When you're a blacklisted screenwriter, such ironies must cross the mind. Wilson and Foreman were subsequently credited for their Oscar-winning work. (UK 1957)

9.00pm-12 midnight C4

SCI-FI The Autobots go Camelot in the fifth exhaustingly bombastic smashathon of the alien car-warrior franchise. Under the watchful eye of Transformers historian Sir Edmund Burton (Anthony Hopkins, good value), Oxford professor Vivian Wembley (Laura Haddock, overdoing the English Rose line) joins forces with inventor Cade Yeager (Mark Wahlberg, coasting) to find Merlin's legendary staff. Really, though, the whirling metal-crunching mayhem is all that matters here. AJ (US 2017, violence, swearing, HD)

DOCUMENTARY This lively music doc tells the story of Joan Jett, the iconic, trailblazing rock star known for anthems like I Love Rock 'n' Roll. It covers all the key events in her career, from co-founding the Runaways (the first big all-female rock group) to her induction into the Rock & Roll Hall of Fame. Happily, most of the talking is done by Jett herself, who is likeable and admirably defiant. "Tell me I can't do something," she says, "and you'll make sure I'm gonna be doing it." SC (US 2018, HD)

Schindler's List

9.55pm-1.05am C5

WAR DRAMA Steven Spielberg's outstanding Holocaust drama won seven Oscars and tells the story of Second World War entrepreneur Oskar Schindler (played by Liam Neeson), whose operation to supply the German war effort led him to be the unexpected saviour of more than 1,000 Jewish factory workers in Poland. Spielberg uses stark, brutal realism to put over his powerful points, and the stunning black-and-white photography and gritty hand-held camera footage give it a potent documentary style. THRILLER This story of a getaway driver who has no life outside his work is pared down to its existential essentials in Walter Hill's terrific thriller. The car chases are amazing, but it's Ryan O'Neal – wearing the same trenchcoat as Alain Delon in 1967 classic Le Samourai – whose cool calm you remember, before he ultimately unravels as Isabelle Adjani and cop Bruce Dern get under his skin. SPACE DRAMA In April 1970, Nasa astronaut Jim Lovell contacted mission control with the words: "Houston, we've had a problem." It was a classic understatement signalling a complex malfunction to be solved. Lovell and his crew were bound for the Moon when an oxygen tank exploded in their craft, leaving them potentially stranded in space. Lovell is played by Tom Hanks, whose very ordinariness is the essence of astronaut-man, while Ed Harris is a welcome contrast as the chain-smoking mission controller. Filmed in genuine weightless conditions, Ron Howard's movie is a technical tour de force. AT (US 1995, may be edited for language, HD)

PERIOD DRAMA No fewer than 21 writers are credited with scripting this all-star curio, plus seven directors and a mere four cameramen. It charts the history of a London mansion from 1804 to the Blitz. Needless to say, when it's converted into a residential hotel, as many stars as possible enter its impressive portals. An uneven film, obviously, and a bit rushed, but some episodes are outstanding and the whole enterprise is to be commended: everyone worked for free and profits were given to various Anglo-American war charities. EVENING

● • 101 Dalmatians ★★★ 7.00-9.00pm E4

COMEDY Disney updated its classic animated tale with this live-action version starring a deliciously over-thetop Glenn Close as infamous villain Cruella De Vil, who wants to turn loads of cuddly dalmatian puppies into a fur coat. Jeff Daniels and Joely Richardson (as the couple trying to stop her) are slightly more subdued, but still turn in entertaining performances. The only complaint for older viewers (and those sentimental about the original) is that live dogs lack the variety of expression – and the vocals – of their animated counterparts. That said, children will love it. JB (US 1996, HD)

Rock of Ages ★★ 7.40-10.00pm ITV2

MUSICAL Based on the stage musical of the same name, Adam Shankman's 1980s-set confection focuses on a young couple (Julianne Hough and Diego Boneta) pursuing their rock star dreams at a down-on-its-luck nightclub on Hollywood's famed Sunset Strip. To a backdrop of rock hits of the day, the lovers' ambitions are thwarted by cleanup campaigners and the arrival of a boozy superstar (Tom Cruise). Alec Baldwin shows his comedy chops as the club owner, and there's good work from Catherine Zeta-Jones as a politician's wife, but overall the film teeters, close to collapse, on its stacked heels. TeS (US 2012, sexual references, some swearing, HD)

COMEDY Robert De Niro is a senior citizen on work experience in a sprightly if unlikely comedy from writer/director Nancy Meyers. Anne Hathaway's young high-flyer is aiming to close the gap between generations, so she takes the old guy under her wing at the shopping website she's started up, before inevitably finding that she's actually the one on a learning curve. In a plot that's littered with dramatic shortcuts, there are wryly amusing, well-observed moments, and the most important connection – between the two leads - works surprisingly well, which helps paper over the cracks. SCI-FI Confusing time travel, lacklustre spectacle and a bland cast earmark this reboot of James Cameron's cyborg v man franchise for the smartphone generation. Emilia Clarke stars as Sarah Connor, all clued-up about Skynet's plans for world domination, and is aided by a rock-solid Arnold Schwarzenegger, still unstoppable and uttering those famous one-liners. It should have been a simple story, but complex scientific jargon about nexus points, alternate childhood realities and bewildering parallel universes, makes for a head-scratchingly complex narrative. HORROR Priest director Antonia Bird's stunning mix of gut-spilling gore and Carry On-style banter is a shocker that you'll either love for its edgy tone, or hate because it's so in-your-face. Inspired by the tragic Donner Pass disaster of 1846-7, the film stars Robert Carlyle as a maneater who decimates the inhabitants of a mountain outpost to keep human flesh on his winter menu. Carlyle etches the strongest portrait of pure evil since Anthony Hopkins in The Silence of the Lambs, while Guy Pearce is equally brilliant as the army captain who tries to stop him. 12 DRAMA Russell Crowe, whose opponents in this true-life boxing tale are real boxers, dislocated his shoulder, cracked a tooth and suffered concussion during filming; proof that director Ron Howard inspires his cast to go the extra round. All serious actors seem to want to make a boxing movie, and Crowe's is about decent heavyweight Jim Braddock, who hit rock bottom during the Depression and then made a comeback, inspiring ordinary Americans. It's absurdly old-fashioned – Howard shows a news headline to fill in the story and Crowe channels James Stewart – but while Renée Zellweger just simpers as Mrs Braddock, Paul Giamatti delivers another dogged, no-nonsense trainer in a crowded marketplace. While the hardship is ladled on with a Dickensian trowel, the boxing owes it all to Raging Bull. (US 2005, violence, swearing)

Cactus Flower ★★★

6.40-8.50pm Movies4Men

COMEDY In this glossy comedy, Goldie Hawn won a best supporting actress Oscar for converting her lovable kooky bimbo persona into a believable screen character to portray dentist Walter Matthau's young girlfriend. Matthau deflects Hawn's talk of marriage by presenting his receptionist (Ingrid Bergman) as his wife. Hawn is enchanting, Matthau is always watchable, but the plot is wafer thin and Bergman is ill-cast. TS (US 1969, some swearing)

FILM OF THE DAY

The Wrecking Crew ***

6.35-8.55pm Movies4Men

SPY COMEDY Quentin Tarantino's self-consciously definitive 1969-set drama Once upon a Time... in Hollywood arrives in cinemas tomorrow and looks poised to blow his previous work away – or so he intends. In any case, one of its key non-fictional characters, Sharon Tate (played by Margot Robbie), is due to be thrust back into the spotlight. The wife of Roman Polanski, she was murdered at home by the Manson Family at the age of 26. The Wrecking Crew, her penultimate film, is a vehicle for Dean Martin's louche spy, Matt Helm. Tate was billed third in the cast and plays a Danish tour guide who memorably fights Nancy Kwan accompanied by loud funky music – a confident, magnetic presence with karate-kick skills. If only she could have gone on to greater things. (US 1969, swearing, edited for some of its violence)

The Natural $\star\star\star\star$

3.30-6.20pm Sony Movie Channel

SPORTS DRAMA Robert Redford is at his beautiful best in this wistful and memorable look at the world of baseball by Rain Man director Barry Levinson. Baseball here is seen as something magical – Redford has a bat named "Wonderboy", which he fashioned from a tree struck by lightning – rather than merely a sport. If you can suspend disbelief and let yourself be drawn into the movie, you'll be rewarded with an emotional and heart-warming experience that will have you cheering. JB (US 1984, some violence, swearing)

Volcano ★★★

6.55-9.00pm Film4

THRILLER Tommy Lee Jones plays the emergency chief attempting to save Los Angeles from molten lava in this taut, effects-laden disaster movie. Director Mick Jackson uses the simple suspense device of cross-cutting as the cast members go about their daily activities with magma bubbling menacingly just under LA's threatened streets and public parks. The digital special effects come into their own when the city is awash with rivers of fire and the urban destruction goes into overdrive. AJ (US 1997, edited for violence, language, HD)

The Living Daylights ★★★ 9.00-11.45pm ITV4

pantomime of the late Roger Moore era, Timothy Dalton's take on 007 was a breath of fresh air. For a story that segues from Soviet defection and arms dealing to the struggles of the Mujahidin, this is an endearingly human Bond. He sweats, he bleeds and, unusually, he falls in love – with Czech cellist Kara (Maryam D'Abo). It's a freewheeling, romantic adventure with nods to the gadget brigade and a hair-raising aerial scrap. A savagely underrated escapade. MB (UK 1987, may be edited for violence, nudity, HD)

11.35pm-1.30am C5

THRILLER There's a melancholy vibe to this sun-bleached neon-noir, but Jason Statham – like director Simon West, who gave us the rabble-rousing Con Air – is better suited to kick-ass action, which punctuates Wild Card less frequently than it ought to. Vegas minder Statham is solicited by sometime girlfriend Sofia Vergara to get revenge on the Mafia hoods who beat and raped her. The fight scenes are electric, but the attempts at comedy and pathos are sorely misjudged. DW (US 2014, violence, swearing, sex scenes, nudity, HD)

DRAMA Writer Aaron Sorkin was the first to spot that Facebook founder Mark Zuckerberg was a bit weird. Always interested in minutiae, be it legal, legislative or corporate, Sorkin sought the truth behind this new breed of tech megalomaniac. Under the stately direction of David Fincher, and with a pounding Oscar-winning score by Trent Reznor and Atticus Ross, this edge-of-the-seat thriller follows Jesse Eisenberg's emergent mogul as riches beget legal action beget loneliness. Business partner Eduardo Saverin (Andrew Garfield) and backers the Winklevoss twins (Armie Hammer x2) are cast aside, and the resulting tale is exponentially livelier than you could possibly imagine. Sorkin performed the same movie miracle on Apple co-founder Steve Jobs, when he scripted Danny Boyle's biopic of the billionaire in 2015. (US 2010, swearing, drug abuse)

The Brides of Fu Manchu ★★ 6.30-8.25pm Talking Pictures TV

PERIOD THRILLER The second outing for Christopher Lee as Sax Rohmer's dastardly mastermind was the first step down the slippery slope of inadequate stories and deteriorating quality for the series. In this bid for world domination, Fu Manchu kidnaps the daughters of 12 international diplomats to cause political chaos. Borne out of a limp publicity stunt involving a beauty contest – the winners won movie roles Don Sharp's direction rarely lives up to his surname. Even the death ray in Fu Manchu's secret temple fails to raise excitement, although Lee's performance is as entertaining as always. AJ (UK 1966)

Bob & Carol & Ted & Alice ★★★ 15 9.05-11.25pm Movies4Men

COMEDY This slice of flower-power permissiveness alarmed some at the time because of promised revelations, but disappointed others because romance got in the way. Natalie Wood, Robert Culp, Elliott Gould and Dyan Cannon make up the two Californian couples who go in for group therapy and confessions to extramarital sex. The result is too many words and too little action courtesy of director Paul Mazursky. There's an intimidating sentimentality, too, but the film was still an important landmark in its day. FILM OF THE DAY

In the Heat of the Night

11.35pm-1.20am BBC2

DRAMA It's hard to think of a more definitive American film of the late 1960s than this politically charged thriller, in which detective Virgil Tibbs (Sidney Poitier) is sucked into a murder investigation while passing through a racially divided Mississippi town. Bigoted Chief Gillespie (played by an Oscar-winning Rod Steiger, carrying the bulk of history on his tired frame) learns lessons along the way, as the two cops are forced to work together. But if that sounds pat, fear not. At heart, it's a police procedural, yet it won five Oscars, including best picture. Its groundbreaking attitude to race - Poitier famously slaps a rich, white suspect - makes this essential viewing. You'd think a drama forged at the height of the civil rights movement would be dated, but with a US president normalising talk of congresswomen comedy cast, Bridesmaids is a heady hilarious romp through western female tribal-bridal culture. Loser singleton Kristen Wiig is asked by lifelong pal Maya Rudolph to be maid of honour at her upcoming wedding. But their friendship is torn asunder by Rudolph's new friend, icky perfectionist Rose Byrne. So Wiig musters a motley crew of bridesmaids and tries to get her best friend back. The script and direction makes for one smart, deft film. KK (US 2011, swearing, sexual references, HD)

■ Edge of Winter ★★★

9.00-10.50pm Sony Movie Channel

THRILLER Joel Kinnaman plays divorced father Elliot, whose mind begins to unravel when he becomes stranded in the woods with his young sons (Tom Holland and Percy Hynes White). The film spends the first act offering up a number of clichéd plot devices, but it all leads to a tense climax, even if it's one you see coming. While Edge of Winter spends much of its time treading through psychological thriller tropes, its three very talented stars add emotional stakes to a predictable path. Growing pains

■ Shazam! ★★★★

From Mon Virgin Movies (also DVD, Blu-ray, 3D Blu-ray, 4K UHD and download)

ADVENTURE A troubled 14-year-old boy is magically transformed into a muscular, grown-up superhero in this lively, laugh-packed take on a vintage comic book. Serial foster home runaway Billy Batson (Asher Angel) has crime-fighting powers bestowed upon him by a mysterious wizard and becomes a lycra-clad beefcake (Zachary Levi), but still with the mind of an impressionable adolescent. However, youthful frolics are abruptly curtailed by the arrival of a ruthless villain

Director David F Sandberg celebrates and mocks the conventions of superhero movies and he's helped by an impressive cast, especially Jack Dylan Grazer as Billy's foster home pal, whose zippy exchanges with Levi make for a hilarious double act. Terry Staunton (US 2019, some violence, swearing, HD)

DVD OF THE WEEK

The Sister Brothers ★★★★ 15 13 August on DVD, Blu-ray and download

Patrick DeWitt's idiosyncratic take on the western is brought searingly to the screen by director Jacques Audiard, who gives a rugged authenticity to proceedings. The siblings in question are a pair of assassins: the hotheaded Charlie (Joaquin Phoenix) and weary equine enthusiast Eli (John C Reilly). They are in pursuit of a chemist (Riz Ahmed) who has developed a divining substance to locate gold, and has taken off with the brothers' scout (Jake Gyllenhaal). Reilly and Phoenix are amusing in their absurdity, endearing in their unspoken affection, and chilling in their capacity for carnage. Emma Simmonds*RT Offer To order the DVD for £12.99, phone 0844 848 7300 (charges apply), quoting ref RT1751. Experienced Interior Designer, Claire Maillinson, has been working in the industry for over 30 years and says that one thing that has stood the test of time is beginning with a blank canvas, using neutral colours and then adding bold accent colours to bring a room to life.

A fabulous way to do this might be a striking Fireside Chair in an otherwise quiet corner of the room, placed near a window to really let the colours shine. It could also be a beautifully made sofa with bright and bold accessory cushions adorning it. If you're feeling particularly adventurous, there's always the option of having neutral walls and flooring with a statement suite – mixing and matching colours with patterns is a particularly eye catching style.

"Check, floral, statement print, velvets or beautiful block colours" When thinking about designing a room, one thing you don't want to feel limited by is fabric choice. Whether it be a specific texture or colour you are after, you'll want to find a retailer who can provide a myriad of choices. At HSL, you are able to choose from their vast range of beautiful sofas, chairs and recliners, and then once you've found the right choice, you can browse hundreds of fabrics and leathers to suit your personal style.

The choice they have is second to none, whether you're looking for check, floral, statement print, velvets or beautiful block colours; HSL have it all. This includes some fantastic designer fabrics from internationally renowned British design houses: Morris & Co, Moon and Sanderson.

An aspect that people don't often factor in when looking to redecorate, is the physical benefits your furniture can offer. A relatively unknown side effect of sitting on chairs and sofas that don't fully support your body, is that your posture can be severely affected. Occupational Therapist, Julie Jennings Dip COT HCPC explains:

"Many of us have developed what is often referred to as a "Comfort Posture".

This term refers to the most comfortable position we adopt in a particular seat.

If our usual furniture does not provide adequate postural support then our comfort posture may be detrimental to our overall health and fitness, leading to, at best, aches and pains, and at worst, damaged joints and deformity."

As specialists in comfort furniture, HSL create chairs and sofas that are designed and built with CleverComfort™. They are ergonomically designed to ensure key areas of your body such as back, hips, legs, neck, shoulders, head and arms receive the correct levels of support, to improve your posture and well-being.

HSL Comfort Experts

My radical reshuffle

Imagine a BBC/Westminster job-swap, says David Butcher

HESE ARE TIMES when a comforting voice goes a long way. Mishal Husain's, for instance. I always find the day ahead seems a little less doom-laden when I wake up to her calming tones on Radio 4, every word coated in sanity. As opposed to, say, John Humphrys, rumbling like a summer thundercloud.

There's a similar thing with Clive Myrie, on the TV news. I can't believe anything is too much of a crisis when Clive imparts news of it in a voice like vintage port. The Antarctic could evaporate into space overnight, but if Clive broke the news I'd take it on the chin as just one of those things.

And let's not forget Huw Edwards, who is very much a mouthpiece of the keep-calmand-carry-on school. If nuclear war broke out between Devon and Cornwall, Huw's voice would express no more than headmasterly disappointment, even as he thanked the local correspondent ("Many thanks again") for the update on radioactive fallout.

This may not be a good thing, of course.

The BBC could be lulling us. As long as shocking headlines are delivered via voices as cultured as Myrie's and Husain's, we'll never be alarmed enough to panic, or rise up in protest. Could it be possible the at all authorities are keeping us under media sedation and that the BBC are lackeys of the state? That's what half my Twitter feed seems to think, anyway.

But if that's the case, they could at least make it official. Why not install BBC figures in positions of real power? Given the choice, wouldn't you have Mishal Husain as foreign secretary, rather than Dominic Raab? I can't help thinking Louis Theroux would make an excellent fist of the Home Office portfolio, with an enlightened approach to crime and drugs policy.

PERIOD PIECE

Jacob Rees-Mogg could present Antiques Roadshow

As Chancellor of the Exchequer, Evan Davis would undoubtedly be popular with the business community. And I'm sure you could point Jane Garvey from Radio 4's Woman's Hour at any problem all and she'd sort it pronto. And if she didn't at all and she'd sort it, pronto. And if she didn't, she'd be very funny about what went wrong.

I won't hold my breath. I suppose some people might argue that installing journalists, with all their foibles and fecklessness, in high offices of state could be a gamble, theoretically, but I can't imagine why. I'd still quite like to see Fiona Bruce make the obvious move from Question Time to Prime Minister's Questions, perhaps with Laura Kuenssberg as Speaker of the House.

And of course, while these BBC types are busy running the country, the plum media roles could be taken by politicians, in a convenient job-swap: Jacob Rees-Mogg would bring his whiff of Victorian wood polish to Antiques Roadshow. Jeremy Corbyn could host Gardeners' World from his allotment. And with Nigel Farage barking out the headlines as the latest presenter of News at Ten, none of us would shrug off a major crisis ever again.

STOP DRAGGING IT OUT

I don't think the message has got through. Reality producers still think eviction scenes are TV gold. Come on, that whole laboured "And the person going home this week is..." thing has become tired, especially on a grown-ups' channel like BBC2.

Take the likeable new talent show, Interior Design Masters (Wed). At the end of each edition, a designer is evicted. Judge Michelle Ogundehin (below, with Fearne Cotton) announces the name, but with yawning pauses and sad piano music playing, as if we're about to faint at the awful poignancy of it. We're not: spit it out and we can get on with our lives.

Contrast *The Chefs'*Brigade (Tue), where Jason Atherton dispatches rejects with a swift, painless flash of his blade, like a kitchen samurai. If it were me on the receiving end,
I know which I'd prefer.

Never a critical favourite but always followed by an ardent fanbase, this US comedy drama ran for eight series. The gimmick is that Shawn (James Roday, above left), the maverick helping the Santa Barbara police, appears to be a psychic but actually just has keen observational skills and a good memory. YOUR NEXT BINGE

Could you make your own crisps?

f you've ever wondered quite how teens can while away hours and hours of their lives on YouTube, Gourmet Makes – a deliciously addictive cooking show from US food mag Bon Appétit – may help you understand.

Each episode of the series, which has amassed millions of subscribers since its inception in 2017, sees host Claire Saffitz attempt to re-create snack foods from scratch. Claire unveils the snack of the week (Snickers, Doritos and, incredibly, Pop Rocks have all featured), deconstructs it, then attempts to make her own version as close to the original as possible. That last part is where it gets tricky.

These treats are bestsellers for a reason, and the secrets to their creation are kept under lock and key, so Saffitz is forced to work her own method out through trial and error with the help of her colleagues, who pop up regularly to lend their taste buds. There are shades of workplace sitcom to her interactions with the characters of the BA Test Kitchen – such as Chris Morocco, whose remarkable palate has led to a spin-off series that sees him re-create meals from taste alone – set thousands of feet above New York City in the One World Trade Center building.

Episodes range from 15 to 40 minutes, depending on how many hurdles Saffitz has to clear to complete her task. As one commenter points out, the longer the video, the steeper our host's descent into madness. Shoots often take days, as she attempts to satisfy her perfectionist co-workers.

Best of all, Saffitz, clearly a brilliant and diligent cook, puts everything she has into each task. Never before have the tiny ridges on the bottom of a Snickers been treated with such reverence.

If this series takes your fancy, there are plenty of other shows on BA's channel that will, too. The YouTube rabbit-hole is real.

DOCTOR DIGITAL

Gaming: a spectator sport?

Dr Digital could have been a contender, instead of a bum, which is what he is. When he was a younger man with younger thumbs, you should have seen him play Super Smash Bros. It was poetry. Now competitive video games are a billion-dollar industry, with 15-year-old Jaden Ashman from Essex winning nearly £1 million at the Fortnite World Cup.

If you're not familiar with "eSports", their sudden popularity is baffling, but in truth people are watching all year round. As you'd expect, most viewers are online.

Both Google and Amazon are competing with their YouTube and Amazon brands respectively. They are used for slightly different purposes. YouTube is more socially oriented, with teams and players producing videos about their lives, or cutting together highlights. Twitch, a gaming-focused streaming network owned by Amazon, concentrates on live matches (half a million people watched the Fortnite World Cup) and both pro and amateur gaming across the world.

TV is slowly starting to catch up. BBC3 dabbled with eSports on iPlayer, and Sky Sports carried the eSports version of the Premier League earlier this year. If you're truly hooked, Ginx (Sky Channel 433) broadcasts eSports 24 hours a day. It's never too late to start practising. JONATHAN HOLMES

DRAMA Star Amanda Mealing has already promised that her troubled character Connie Beauchamp's exit from the ED will be both "dramatic" and "heartbreaking". And I can now confirm that both boxes are indeed ticked, as the increasingly fragile clinical lead departs in tonight's feature-length edition, albeit only for a temporary period – a spokesperson has confirmed that Mealing will resume filming in the autumn. But for the moment, this appears to be it for Connie, as events come to an explosive and emotional head following a bloody showdown in a pharmacy.

You can expect Connie's conscience to be pricked in a major way, after colleague Archie is left with life-threatening injuries in a stabbing incident for which Mrs Beauchamp holds herself partly responsible. But, as viewers know, there are other past crises for which Connie should be feeling a sense of blame. That botched intubation, the lidocaine/saline screw-up, poor Duffy's resignation... DRAMA You have to feel for the innocent passengers who boarded the ferry from Elsinore in Denmark to Helsingborg in Sweden. It should have been a guick crossing; they weren't to know that Syrian fighter June al-Bagee, her despotic kidnappers and "resting" anti-terror cop Philip Norgaard were also aboard. Now, as the ship drifts in the Oresund, everyone is enduring a Saturday-night hostage crisis from hell.

The hijackers are an odd bunch, part Islamist terror cell but referred to by their leader Yusuf as "privateers". Below the surface (as the title implies) and beyond the wits of the Danish cops, they are working for dark forces, perhaps even sanctioned by military intelligence.

Two burning questions: why would a ferry for a 20-minute crossing keep such a huge kitchen, a deep fat fryer and a freezer big enough to imprison people? And why didn't the thugs simply cross the Oresund Bridge (of The Bridge fame) and save themselves a lot of bother? PM

The Driver ★★★★

10.10pm Talking Pictures TV FREEVIEW

There's a rare chance to see Ryan O'Neal at his 1970s peak in The Driver today. And what of other screen getaways? Walter Hill pretty much formalised the genre when he adapted Jim Thompson's novel The Getaway for the screen in 1972, with Steve McQueen and future wife Ali MacGraw at the wheel. More recently, Ryan Gosling put the pedal to the metal in Drive and Ansel Elgort popped in the earbuds as Edgar Wright's groove-synchronised Baby Driver, Meanwhile, Frank Grillo's Wheelman is revved up on Netflix. The Red Sea Diving Resort ★★★ Netflix

This tonally confused true-story thriller set in late 1970s/ early 80s Sudan dramatises the "third wave" exodus of Ethiopian Jews to Israel orchestrated by Mossad agents posing as hoteliers on the Red Sea coast. Chris Evans stars as the reckless – and often shirtless – Captain America-like hero who assembles the humanitarian avengers. The heartfelt thrust is undermined by sappy lines and period pop hits that jar in the context of this story set in the ongoing global free-movement crisis. Ac

■ Nobody's Fool ★★ 10.00pm Sky Premiere

This romantic comedy from Tyler Perry isn't exactly the subtlest creation. Tiffany Haddish over-acts like crazy as the mouthy ex-con sister of an advertising exec with a complicated love life. Look closely and you can see the marks where the scenery's been chewed. DAVE ALDRIDGE

SUNDAY Choices The pick of today's TV

PICK OF THE DAY Poldark 9.00pm BBC1

DRAMA If only Mr Mahogany, Ralph Hanson, had a moustache to twirl and a cape to swirl, he'd be the perfect villain, like a character in a light opera. He's still a copper-bottomed meanie, though, trying to pimp out his daughter Cecily in marriage to George Warleggan, who so far hasn't been terribly interested.

Hanson (Peter Sullivan) is also a brutal beast whose business and profits rely entirely on the work of his slaves. But times might be changing – his own overseer has written to say he can't bear to witness any more cruelty on the plantation, a place he calls "a grove of death".

And Ross Poldark (Aidan Turner) makes an impassioned anti-slavery speech in the House of Commons. With any luck, it's surely only a matter of time before this monstrous "business" is ended.

Meanwhile, Geoffrey Charles Poldark, a young man burdened by terminal wimpishness, gets into trouble. ALISON GRAHAMThe RT Interview with Luke Norris: page 12

Rugby Union

1.00pm Sky Sports Action; 6.00pm (highlights) BBC2

England v Wales One of the sport's great rivalries resumes at Twickenham with the first World Cup warm-up match for both sides (k/o 2pm), with Wales basking in the glory of their Six Nations grand slam and England thirsting for revenge after their 21–13 defeat in Cardiff.

New strategies and players will be tried by coaches Eddie Jones and Warren Gatland as both camps look to finalise their squads for Japan in September, but as top-class rugby "friendlies" aren't ever very friendly, the spectre looms of injuries that could shatter World Cup dreams. And they have to do it all again next Saturday in the reverse fixture at the Principality Stadium. STEVE WALL

BBC Proms 2019

7.00pm BBC4

emotionally charged classics tonight: Brahms's Tragic Overture, Wagner's Prelude and Liebestod from Tristan und Isolde, and Mozart's Requiem. The BBC National Orchestra of Wales makes the second of six appearances this season, the BBC National Chorus of Wales the first of three, and for Nathalie Stutzmann it's her Proms debut as conductor (though she sang at two 17 years ago).

Tom Service is joined in the Albert Hall's Gallery by Danielle de Niese, the "First Lady of Glyndebourne". These hosting duos work well if they have a proper, enthusiastic exchange. I'm not keen on the "Right, you say your bit, now I'll say mine" pattern they can lapse into. PATRICK MULKERN

The Queen's Lost Family

all TV royal histories are about the Windsors narrowly surviving a period of political upheaval that threatens to expose them as complacent hedonists and/or musty relics; this one's no different, and it's pleasingly chaotic as it charts the adult lives of George V's very different children in the 1920s and beyond.

The format itself is a little chaotic as historians take turns to add details about Prince George's hellraising, Prince Edward's ambivalent views on worker emancipation, and Princess Mary's yearning for a quiet life. But the show's secret weapon – personal correspondence, hitherto unseen – gives it the moreish flavour of fresh gossip. JACK SEALE highlight of my career in expeditions, and one of the proudest moments of my life." So says Steve Backshall at the end of a pleasantly meandering episode. We're in sparsely populated Suriname in South America, which has rivers few humans have navigated. Backshall and his team are taken by helicopter to point A and will be met at point B: who knows what lies in between?

Expedition with Steve Backshall

8.00pm Dave

The answer is a smattering of gorgeous wildlife and hot, humid, occasionally perilous work kayaking downstream, while experiencing the rare joy of covering genuinely uncharted territory. Then, near the end, there's a wonderful surprise. Js

WARMING UP FOR THE NEXT WORLD CUP...

What a year for World Cups! After England's strong showing in the women's football and unforgettable triumph in the men's one-day cricket, next month it's the turn of the best male rugby union players on the planet.

■ England are second favourites with the bookies, behind New Zealand, to lift the Rugby World Cup in Yokohama on Saturday 2 November. The odds could change if Six Nations champions Wales beat England in their warm-up game at Twickenham (1pm, k/o 2pm, Sky Action; highlights 6pm BBC2).

■ The two teams meet again in Cardiff next Saturday (again on Sky Sports), with Ireland and Scotland also in televised action in the coming weeks on C4 and Premier Sports.

■ The World Cup kicks off when hosts Japan face Russia in Tokyo on 20 September.
And, following the boost football and cricket tournaments got from being shown on terrestrial TV, the good news is that ITV has rights to the whole tournament. JACK SEALE

Vera

8.30pm ITV

DRAMA Vera needs every ounce of her famous compassion and empathy when a little boy finds his mum dead in the garden of their home on a smart estate. Her skull has been cracked by a rock.

At first there are few clues in this case from 2018. Why on earth would someone, seemingly without an enemy in the world, meet such a hideous end? In an absorbing story, Vera (Brenda Blethyn) digs into the past and unearths secrets before calling on a succession of potential witnesses, all of whom are shifty, rude and dismissive.

She's exasperated, of course, but then she stares into the distance as the solution presents itself, all nice and neat. AG

The Misadventures of Romesh Ranganathan

9.00pm BBC2

Romesh Ranganathan gets shirty with his own director over sequences of his travel show that are calculated to make him look like a berk. Tonight that includes an attempt to go skiing in Bosnia ("Sri Lankan people are not meant to ski... Utterly pointless"), dressing him up as Archduke Franz Ferdinand ("People are saying, 'Apparently a bellboy was assassinated on that corner...'") and riding down a disused bobsleigh track.

It's another splendid episode, with several cacklingly funny sequences. But there's also a respectful look at the effects of war on the region, including the tunnel that saved Sarajevo during the 1992 siege. DB

The Handmaid's Tale

9.00pm C4

DRAMA There's sometimes such a sense of inky-black evil in this drama, it clings to you like mud. Last week's episode felt like a horror movie and this week's is no walk in the park.

What it does offer is a glimmer of hope: June (Elisabeth Moss) is determined to free the children of Gilead, to send at least some of them across the border to freedom, as if this were the easiest thing in the world. "You're going to get yourself killed," says Beth (Kristen Gutoskie), the worldly-wise Martha in her household.

But all that takes a back seat as we're reminded that wrenching children from their mothers isn't Gilead's only monstrosity; there's also the Ceremony. DB

How Not to Die on Holiday

from 10am BBC3

An almost flippant title for an investigative documentary that will be irresistible for parents with older kids who are threatening to go abroad by themselves this summer. Worrying stories of how young Brits have fallen from balconies, got caught in rip currents or been crushed by avalanches are mixed with practical advice on what to do if holiday peril looms.

Dragons' Den

8.00pm BBC2

BUSINESS Seventeen series on, the formula still does the business. The argy-bargy between entrepreneurs and investors still makes for TV that can strip the enamel off your teeth one minute and lift your spirits the next.

Poised, thoughtful Jenny Campbell has left the show, so taking her leather armchair in the Den is Sara Davies, a craft-supplies magnate who, at 35, is the youngest Dragon yet and brings a sparky energy to the room (or warehouse, or wherever it's meant to be). If the Den sometimes felt like a slightly jaded, faded place – not any more.

Among the hopefuls tonight is a Hampshire inventor who has designed a new kind of loo brush. Explaining how it works has several Dragons wincing slightly at a discussion that, as it were, goes through the motions. Elsewhere there's probiotic pet food, a tanning cream and heavy-metal rum. The SpongeBob Movie: Sponge out of Water  11.00am Film4 FREEVIEW

It may have been 20 years since Nickelodeon introduced the world to SpongeBob, but this surreal animation shows no signs of slowing down. Creator Stephen Hillenburg first came up with the idea for the character while teaching marine biology at California's Ocean Institute in the 1980s, developing an educational comic book that featured various anthropomorphic sea creatures. Enjoy this second film before a third spin-off is released next year. ELLIE PORTER

9.00pm Sky Action

Fans celebrating Sky Action's Star Wars marathon might pause to mark the 25th anniversary of the death of Peter Cushing. Already a Hammer icon, his appearance as Death Star commander Grand Moff Tarkin in A New Hope delivered him to a new generation. He's said to have felt like he'd been dressed as "an Edwardian chauffeur" for the role and played most of his scenes wearing carpet slippers as his ill-fitting boots were "agony". ANDREW COLLINS

A killer premiere for Sky

■ Lizzie **

10.00pm Sky Premiere
A palpable sense of dread fills the first half of this drama delving into the life of Lizzie Borden, the 19thcentury Massachusetts woman tried for a grisly double axe murder. Chloë Sevigny exudes intensity in the title role, but that first-half uneasiness soon gives way to boredom as the plot drags by with little action. JAMES LUXFORD

MONDAY Choices The pick of today's TV

PICK OF THE DAY Who Do You Think You Are? 9.00pm BBC1

DOCUMENTARY Kate Winslet had a hard time in the press when she told RT recently she came from "a long line of impoverished people" and would have been "disgusted if I had come from wealth or royalty". The tabloids promptly found a few successful relatives and cried hypocrisy.

Fortunately, her WDYTYA journey steers clear of affluence. Winslet is thrilled to learn about a Swedish branch of the family ("This is brilliant!"), but as she discovers the course of their lives, she ricochets from "I absolutely can't stand it!" to "Gosh, how fantastic!" and back to "What? No, no, no!" in the face of revealing documents.

A four times great-grandfather was arrested for stealing potatoes in the midst of a famine ("I feel angry now!"), while child mortality was inescapable ("Oh my God, this sadness is terrible"). You feel Winslet is struggling to process what she's learning, particularly when she explores her father's side of the family and finds a mid-Victorian drum major – with 11 children. DAVID BUTCHER

Nadiya's Time to Eat

8.00pm BBC2

FOOD I'm sure every TV cook practises their tasting technique for the cameras but Nadiya's face is so naturally expressive, I could happily watch a whole programme of her simply eating. Her recipes can be challenging – not to follow but to understand how she came up with the idea. Her chickpea-free falafels for instance. "I will give a fiver to anyone who works out that there's baked beans in these," she says. Eh? Baked beans?

She also makes apple pies with ready-made apple sauce (the sort served with pork) and shop-bought filo pastry because "even if I had 12 hours free, I still wouldn't make filo pastry." JANE RACKHAM

Animal Rescue Live: Supervet Special

8.00pm C4

pocumentary You could simply coo over these bundles of fluffy cuteness then carry on with your life. Or you could do something – by offering a home for a rescue animal or giving money to help rescue shelters around the country.

Last time Noel Fitzpatrick, Steve Jones and Kate Quilton presented this adopt-a-thon (with all applicants being properly vetted of course), they found new homes for 80 per cent of the rescued animals in the Newcastle shelter. Hopefully, they'll do as well this year. To help kick off the week, husband and wife Martin Kemp and Shirlie Holliman join the team at Raystede Animal Shelter in Lewes, East Sussex. JR

When Bridges Collapse: the Genoa Disaster

9.00pm BBC2

DOCUMENTARY One year ago, the Morandi Bridge in Genoa collapsed, killing 43 people. The exact causes of the disaster are yet to be established but a state prosecutor argues here, "There's no way this was an accident... It was not unpredictable. It was avoidable."

A forensically detailed doc looks at how the bridge was engineered in the 1960s using a technique that wrapped steel suspension cables in concrete to protect them from corrosion. But the system made the cables harder to inspect and maintain – Hammersmith flyover in London had similar problems with cables buried in concrete. As a story of how infrastructure engineering can fail, this is sobering. DB

There's a blast from the past in Coronation Street (7.30pm, 8.30pm ITV) when Fiona Middleton is mentioned for the first time in about 20 years. Yes, those tabloid rumours suggesting perky hairdresser Emma is the secret daughter of perky ex-hairdresser Fiona (the role that launched Angela Griffin's career) are confirmed when Emma's dying dad reveals he is not her biological father. Devastated, Emma confides in Audrey that her mother (who now lives overseas) has spun her lifelong lie, but when Aud starts doing the maths, it all starts to add up. Could Fiona's old flame Steve be Emma's real dad? And could this be the most randomly convenient rewriting of history Corrie has pulled?

Bobby joins the Ahmeds for Eid in EastEnders (8pm BBC1), but the spirit of inclusion through his conversion to Islam is in stark contrast to the Maalik family's experience in Hollyoaks (6.30pm). Their celebrations are marred by more intimidation from their farright neighbours. JOHNATHON HUGHES

Long Lost Family: What Happened Next

9.00pm ITV

DOCUMENTARY "I thought I was all alone in the world," says one of the three people in this update, encapsulating the feeling they'd all experienced before LLF tracked down their siblings. John had been led to believe he had no blood relations so was taken aback to discover he had a brother who was searching for him.

Just before they died, the parents of "only child" Tracey revealed she had an older brother and through him she got a "second chance family". And Pauline, who at 81 was getting married, was desperate to find a family member to share the big day with her. JR

Born Famous: Mel B

10.00pm C4

DOCUMENTARY Mel B sends her daughter Phoenix from Beverly Hills back to where the Spice Girl grew up: Hyde Park in Leeds, an area whose terraced streets used to be home to tight-knit working-class communities. Phoenix arrives, with her laid-back teenage wisdom, to find an area now dominated by student lets, which are a blessing and a curse: they inject youth and wealth, but the days when everyone knew each other have gone.

Disappeared, too, are the life chances that gave Mel B a shot at stardom, as Phoenix discovers when she visits the house her grandparents were able to buy, thanks to humble but stable full-time jobs. What might seem like a celeb-reality stunt gently makes a sad, political point. JACK SEALE

Delivering Babies

10.00pm W

DOCUMENTARY The responsibility of being a maternity care assistant is beginning to dawn on Emma Willis. "It's such important stuff. It's real life, not pretend telly life," she says with disarming honesty.

On shift in the birthing unit at Princess Alexandra Hospital, Emma meets a newly-wed couple about to have their first baby. I say "about to", but it takes 36 hours of labour before the final push. However, Emma doesn't shy away from the blood and guts of childbirth – she's in theatre for Lucy's elective caesarean and impressively isn't the slightest bit fazed by the op – but she's not there when a birth suddenly becomes a life-threatening emergency. Succession

9.00pm Sky Atlantic

DRAMA OF THE WEEK If you didn't see season one of this malign, messed-up, mean-spirited show, I can't recommend it enough. Charting the lives of a billionaire family, whose patriarch (Brian Cox) owns a global media empire, it has a vicious wit and a black-comic edge, like The Thick of It given a big budget and transposed to Wall Street.

When we rejoin the terrifyingly rich Roy family, their mutual loathing is as sharp as ever. Kendall – who at the end of the first series tried to betray his all-powerful father – is recovering in Iceland as the takeover bid on Waystar Royco leaves Logan with an impossible choice.

The episode starts quietly then builds to a great climax as Logan gathers his offspring at an oceanside mansion and canvasses their views in his study. As his son-in-law mutters, "It's like

On 14 August 2018, the Polcevera Bridge in Italy collapsed, sending 27 vehicles plummeting into the valley below. A total of 43 people died, making it Italy's worst ever road-bridge disaster. This film tells the story of some of the people on the bridge that day and asks what caused it to fail. Designed by one of Italy's most celebrated engineers, the Polcevera formed a vital link between the south of France and Rome. The tragedy has raised questions about the maintenance of Europe's ageing infrastructure. In particular, are our bridges safe? See page 66. Director Martin Gorst (S) (AD) (HD)

Fresh-faced Scarlett

Home Alone 3 ★★★ 12.40pm Film4 FREEVIEW

When Macaulay Culkin declined to reprise his role as Kevin, franchise writer John Hughes initially planned for this third instalment to see original burglars Harry and Marv target Kevin's cousin Fuller (Culkin's real-life brother, Kieran). The idea was scrapped when Kieran felt he couldn't follow in Macaulay's footsteps as the lead. Hughes came up with a different screenplay and key roles went to newcomers Alex D Linz, who quit acting in 2007, and Scarlett Johansson, who hasn't been heard of since. Oh, wait... DEAN AGIUS

□ The Captor ★★★ Virgin Movies

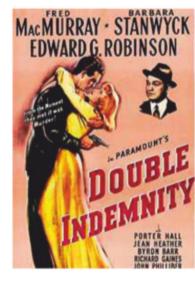

There's a deft balance between the light-hearted and the serious in Robert Budreau's crime drama, which is prefaced as "based on an absurd but true story" and chronicles Sweden's first-ever hostage crisis – a 1973 incident that is now credited as the source of the concept of Stockholm Syndrome. Ethan Hawke gives a magnetic performance as the pill-popping antihero who casually holds up a bank, while Noomi Rapace oozes believable vulnerability as the mousy clerk who's taken hostage. Double Indemnity

Billy Wilder's classic thriller, with its crackling screenplay co-written by Raymond Chandler, is one of the best-loved examples of film noir ever made. It follows definitive femme fatale Barbara Stanwyck as she seduces Fred MacMurray into doing away with her husband to claim his life insurance.

PICK OF THE DAY

Kathy Burke's All Woman

10.00pm C4

DOCUMENTARY OF THE WEEK

New series Kathy Burke is concerned she's going to sound like a "jealous old hag" as she effs and blinds her way through this terrific doc about women's obsession with conforming to a fixed idea of beauty. But what she's really worried about is the way women of the Instagram generation are so insecure about their image. "I wish they'd realise it's not the be-all and end-all," she says, having talked to Love Island contestant Megan Barton-Hanson (who spent £40K on cosmetic surgery), a lovely-looking young woman getting a boob job and, to get a different perspective, Sue Tilley, who was Lucien Freud's famously large nude model.

Kathy is increasingly foul-mouthed as she gets more and more appalled by what she calls the tyranny of beauty and how the pressure of social media means women aren't happy unless they're "perfect". Which, at the very least, means photoshopping and filtering your selfies, but often also means spending a fortune on surgery.

"If I had a daughter who was 20 and looked like me, could you imagine the abuse she would get?" she rants. JANE RACKHAM

Inside the Factory

8.00pm BBC2

recipe for the croissant we know today dates from 1906. That's how recently the French pastry evolved from previous breadier versions with their roots in Austria. This and other flaky facts are part of the package as we watch the production line at a French factory that turns out 18,000 an hour.

They are all based on a mother dough or levain that has been kept going since 1936. Gregg Wallace goes out of his mind with excitement as he learns the stages of baking (in the company of a very charming and tolerant manager called Laure) including why, when it comes to layers of butter, 12 is the magic number. DAVID BUTCHER

The Yorkshire Vet

8.00pm Channel 5

DOCUMENTARY In North Yorkshire farming is in the blood but skills need to be passed on to the younger generation if they are to continue the tradition. Julian Norton meets four young farmers to see how they are responding to the challenges.

Fourth-generation farmer Ben, 24, has big plans to renovate his farm and buy his first herd, while teen champion sheep breeder Laura wants to further her career by learning to shear her own sheep. And teenage brothers George and Henry are anxiously waiting for their cows to start birthing – they lost a pregnant cow earlier this year so are concerned there'll be more difficult calvings that will require the vet's intervention. JR

Keeping Faith

9.00pm BBC1

DRAMA Oh gawd, so many tears, so many declarations of love.
And why do Faith and her solicitor colleague Cerys slide down walls and sink to the floor when they are faced with crises in a way you never see people do in real life?

But Keeping Faith is all about melodrama, so Faith crashes to all fours and cries in the office when she loses a case (I'm sure solicitors do this a lot) and of course she doesn't just take a sip from her water bottle; she takes a sip and then empties the contents all over her head.

This is after she's done some Angry Boxing, because her hopeless husband Evan is coming home. ALISON GRAHAM

24 Hours in A&E

9.00pm C4

DOCUMENTARY The life-affirming hospital series rolls on. As so often, a key patient this week is a teenager in peril. Sixteen-year-old George has been rushed to A&E with a bleed on the brain. We hear from his dad how the two of them bonded over George's passion for football.

CT scans reveal that George's bleed will require emergency brain surgery, and as his dad, brother and step-mum support him at his bedside, we learn how their blended family came together.

Meanwhile, in paediatrics, ten-year-old Kezia has an injured wrist after performing a back bend in gymnastics. Her father speaks about the parenting lessons he took from his own adventurous father. DB

I've noticed that Holby City's (8pm BBC1: Scotland 10.35pm) Henrik Hanssen (right) appears to have had a little less starch in his shirts since he started looking after little Oskar. He's relaxed when his grandson accidentally wrecks his mobile phone. And the way he beams whenever Oskar calls him "farfar" is adorable. But a threat comes when Oskar's mum Sara reveals that she's taking her son home. Might Hanssen end up putting family before his duties at the hospital and leave too?

Obviously, the place could crumble to dust should he hand in his security pass, but it's surely worth the risk?

Elsewhere, we have a guest star with an interesting CV. Not only is actress Julia Foster the one-time lead singer with 1960s' pop band the Four Pennies, she's also the mother of TV's Ben Fogle. And funnily enough, one of her first roles on television was playing student nurse Anne Carson on the mother of all medical dramas: Emergency – Ward 10. DAVID BROWN

Revolutions

9.00pm BBC4

perhaps the ideal subject for this carefully measured science-history series: how on earth the things perform their miracles demands an explanation of several discrete but linked moments of inspiration, from Roman battlefield signals and Bell's telephone through to Marconi's radio and the development of the microchip, with actress/inventor Hedy Lamarr arriving somewhere in the middle to pep the story up with her unique mix of glamour and Nazi-smashing guile.

The way different academics front each segment, all linked by Jim al-Khalili as the omniscient main presenter, is itself a pleasing innovation. JACK SEALE

Euphoria

10.00pm Sky Atlantic

DRAMA If you can stomach the bleakness of this US high-school drama, it's undeniably skilled at provoking horror and dread. The central character tonight is Nate (Jacob Elordi), the chiselled football hero whose deep-seated anger and psychosexual issues are fleshed out via an unpleasant childhood flashback and, later, a hauntingly vivid scene of awful violence in the present.

Supporting storylines, as yet mostly independent of each other, make us watch kids charging into the bear traps that are drugs and pornography, creating a queasy nightmare that's bearable if you repeat to yourself that this is an extreme caricature of modern teens. At least, let's hope it is. Js

The South Bank Show Originals

10.30pm Sky Arts

ARTS This profile of London-based painter Frank Auerbach dates back to the first series of The South Bank Show, in 1978. And although the desaturated quality of the 1970s film doesn't do Auerbach's highly textured paintings justice – it's a bit like looking at the food in a 40-year-old cook book – his charcoals come across with an especially haunting quality.

Solemn and awkward in front of the camera, the young Auerbach's subtle German accent somehow lends extra gravitas to his philosophies about art. "Painting is an intensely difficult problem, it's almost incapable of solution," he says. Critic Jonathan Jones provides contemporary commentary. GARY ROSE

Amazon Prime

Amazon doesn't have Premier League football streaming on Prime Video every week – only for two rounds of matches in December – but that doesn't stop it running a weekly studio banter show looking back at the most recent action. Multiple celebrity and elite footballer guests are promised, and the presenting trio is impressive: Peter Crouch, John Bishop and Gabby Logan are up front.

The Chefs' Brigade

9.00pm BBC2

FOOD This show, where a team of raw British recruits take on top restaurants around Europe, has a great many moving parts but they mesh nicely. The mainspring is harsh-but-fair head chef Jason Atherton – part delicate culinary artist, part assassin.

This week he takes his team to Cádiz in Spain, where they take on local mainstay El Faro at its traditional, fish-based menu. It sounds straightforward – but to give you an idea of how traditional, one member of El Faro's kitchen staff has been cooking fish there for 22 years, longer than some of Jason's crew have been alive.

One speciality is a dish that involves roasting rice in stock then adding sea bass on top for just the right time so that both rice and fish emerge perfectly cooked: tricky. Meanwhile Jason must deal with one of his crew, who's "a bit of a bull in a china shop". DAVID BUTCHER David Butcher: page 43

Identity crisis

Man Up ★★★★ BBC iPlayer FREE TO VIEW

Available on catch-up until next week, this feel-good comedy sees Lake Bell steal someone else's blind date (Simon Pegg) from under a clock at Waterloo Station and create mayhem as she tries to perpetuate the lie. The script is snappy and there's a screwball rhythm to the action, plus winning support from Rory Kinnear (as Bell's oddball school chum) and Olivia Williams (as Pegg's weird ex-wife). Set against buzzing London streets, Ben Palmer's film feels like a frisky romantic version of After Hours. KAREN KRIZANOVICH

Happy birthday, Paul!

Cheam's Paul Greengrass turns 64 today, and he's still folding his TV current affairs background into high-end cinema. Sky Thriller is showing Captain Phillips, Green Zone, Bourne Ultimatum & Supremacy, plus United 93. In 2009, as good fortune had it, a contribution I'd made to a charity book granted me an invite to 10 Downing Street. Amid a plethora of more famous contributors than me, I introduced my plus-one, Dad, to Greengrass. We marvelled at the fact that this garrulous and friendly chap could pop classics out like so many two-minute trailers. His latest, 22 July, is on Netflix. ANDREW COLLINS

PICK OF THE DAY Interior Design Masters 8.00pm BBC2

PROPERTY New series "Teamwork makes the dream work, guys!" trills a competitor in this spritzy new talent show. But hang on, we don't come to reality TV to watch things go swimmingly: "Hatings get the ratings" is nearer the mark in TV terms, so as two teams make over showhomes (mostly in teal and pink, for some reason), what we're really after is a little light friction, with highlights of bitchiness – and we get it. Just enough to offer the promise of feuds to come.

With Fearne Cotton overseeing proceedings and designer Matthew Williamson dropping by as guest judge, the show moves along very enjoyably, a blur of mankles, stylistic "passion" and feature walls. The contestants are well cast – ten up-and-coming designers from different backgrounds and there are plenty of chances for us viewers to tut at rogue wallpaper or make a mental note to steal ideas. Uefa Super Cup

7.00pm (kick-off 8pm) BT2

Liverpool v Chelsea Last season's Europa Cup final required Chelsea and Arsenal to travel all the way to Baku in Azerbaijan. Tonight's Super Cup final – pitting the Europa Cup winners against the Champions League winners - takes Liverpool and Chelsea to Istanbul. What's more, the match is sandwiched right between the opening two weekends of the Premier League.

It remains to be seen what sort of line-ups will be on display in a match that won't exactly mean everything to either club. Then again, it's Jürgen Klopp v Frank Lampard for the first time, which is bound to be intriguing. Who knows how many such encounters may lie in the future? SIMON O'HAGAN

His round-up will also include artworks by the gold medal winners in various categories, a visit to the temporary modern art exhibition Lle Celf, and chats with festival honourees Jonathan Davies, Ken Owens and Tudur Owen. JACK SEALE

The Best Little Prison in Britain?

8.00pm ITV (Wales: 10.45pm) DOCUMENTARY "Ordinary decent criminal" Craig is on his seventh sentence at Jurby Prison on the Isle of Man. "I'm in for knife crime," he explains. "I was in a fight with a bloke who had a knife and I managed to get it off him and stabbed him with it three times in self-defence." He's representing himself at trial, but will his argument (and a smart new suit) sway the jury?

George "Stores", who runs the prison shop, has other problems. The women aren't happy about him buying their underwear so suggest that an inmate should do it. Head of security Margo isn't having any of it. JANE RACKHAM

The Art of Architecture

DOCUMENTARY In the first episode we saw how Santiago Calatrava helped transform Ground Zero in New York with his soaring, wing-like World Trade Center transport hub. London-based designer Thomas Heatherwick has also attempted to alter the New York cityscape with the Vessel: a strange mix of building and sculpture at the heart of a new multi-billion-dollar development on Manhattan's West Side.

Heatherwick says that "how a place makes you feel is its function". There's no real point to the Vessel, but the idealistic Heatherwick is a persuasive champion of the importance of bringing beauty and humanity to building in the public realm. GILL CRAWFORD

What are our thoughts so far on Gemma and Paul's mum Bernie (right) in Coronation Street (7.30pm, 8.30pm ITV)? Admittedly, it can take new faces a while to bed down, but I can't yet shake the feeling of déjà vu she elicited upon arrival. The Jackie Dobbs/Cilla Battersby-Brown useless mum template has been closely followed, and when she starts conning the neighbours for cash pretending she's collecting for sick kiddies, when in fact it's to pay a parking fine, her scheming and scamming still feels predictable.

My other issue with bringing in long-lost relatives for quirky characters such as Gemma is that it can end up stifling their uniqueness: chaotic Gemma being exasperated that someone is even more chaotic than she is clips her wings and arguably makes her too serious. A similar thing happened when Mary's family were introduced and her kooky edges were curbed as she was forced to defend her eccentricities. JOHNATHON HUGHES pocumentary The things that people do for their faith really are amazing. We see a Shinto devotee running up and down the steep staircase at Nachi Falls carrying a massive flaming torch to purify it; there's a Sikh helping feed the 250,000 worshippers at the Vaisakhi festival at Amritsar's Golden Temple – even the hardest-working chef would be impressed by his stamina.

Most chaotic is the gruelling annual task of replastering the mud walls of Djenné mosque in Mali, necessary if they're not to be washed away in the rainy season, while weirdest is the New York cathedral where the congregation includes a menagerie of camels, sheep, snakes, pigs and parrots. JR

Murder Case

9.00pm BBC2 (N Ireland: Thu 9.00pm BBC2)

Reilly, a 47-year-old mother of one, is reported missing by her family. She's had a difficult life, but she is usually assiduous in keeping in touch with her daughter, sister and mum. But when police launch an investigation, they learn that Julie had planned to move a male lodger into her home, and when the house is searched forensic officers make a series of shocking, distressing discoveries. Yet there is worse to come.

In a three-part documentary series first shown on BBC Scotland, cameras follow the major investigation team as they track down Julie's last known movements, while having sad conversations with her family. AG prama Talk about delayed gratification. It's taken five episodes to bring Claire and Jamie back together, but the makers of this historical romance aren't rushing to get them into bed, though it's not long before Jamie's taking his trousers off. First, they have to get to know one another again – 20 years have passed since they said farewell. Claire's dyed her hair, Jamie's wearing glasses, and a lot has happened since – how is he going to explain what he's doing living in an Edinburgh brothel?

It's clear their red-hot attraction has not dimmed. "Time doesn't matter, Sassenach," Jamie says, while they share a Tom Jones-like meal before jumping on each other. But trouble is hot on their heels. GC

Deep Water 9.00pm ITV

DRAMA New series In a new drama centred on the lives of what ITV describes as "three complex and vibrant women" your heart might sink at the most simplistic of all clichés, the one used so often to signal "Busy women! Lots to do!" – the harassed mum/hurried breakfast/"Have you got your school project?" scene.

But bear with Deep Water (based on the series of novels set in Windermere by Paula Daly) because it becomes something a lot more promising and interesting. The trio of women – Lisa (Anna Friel), Roz (Sinead Keenan) and Kate (Rosalind Eleazar) – are on the surface all friends, but there are ructions in the lives of each and every one of them that will have an impact on their relationships.

The catalyst is a terrible dinner party where Lisa does something very unwise, something that has unthinkable, catastrophic consequences. ALISON GRAHAM See feature: page 16

Armie sees double

The Social Network

9.00pm Sony Movie Channel FREEVIEW

Few knew the name of Armie Hammer before he managed to play both Winklevoss twins, Cameron and Tyler, in David Fincher's The Social Network (Film of the Day, p37). The second of the Harvard athletes is actually played by another actor with Hammer's face wrapped around his own. But a new interview reveals that Hammer was originally cast to play just one of the "Winklevii" opposite actor/model Josh Pence. Fincher plumped instead for digital realism and put motion-capture dots on Pence's face. ANDREW COLLINS

Koreeda comes to Sky

□ Shoplifters ★★★★ 10.00pm Sky Premiere

Director Hirokazu Koreeda continues to explore the mechanics of the modern family with this compelling and deeply moving study of an unconventional domestic unit eking out an existence on the outskirts of Tokyo. Although partners Osamu and Nobuyo have jobs, they frequently resort to shoplifting to feed elderly Hatsue, tween Shota and 20-something Aki. However, cracks begin to appear after the couple take in an abused young girl. It's utterly engrossing and ultimately shattering. DAVID PARKINSON

Pause for thought

An Ordinary Man★★★ Amazon Prime

Recently arrived on Amazon Prime, this leisurely character piece sees Ben Kingsley deliver another engrossing performance – this time as a war criminal in hiding who strikes up a friendship with his maid. There may not be much to shock or excite, but the drama's intelligence does make you think. JAMES LUXFORD

THURSDAY Choices The pick of today's TV

PICK OF THE DAY Fake or Fortune? 9.00pm BBC1

ART This run of the art series has already unmasked a work that was valued at £8,000 but turned out to be worth half a million. Good going, but tonight's jackpot might be way bigger.

A London publisher owns a Canaletto-style view of Venice from the 18th century, by one of two artists. If it's by Michele Marieschi, it's worth around half a million pounds, but if it's a Francesco Guardi – as a Royal Academy label on the back suggests – well, put the champagne on ice because it is worth anything up to £10 million and would be, says Fiona Bruce, "by a country mile the most valuable painting we have ever looked at".

The problem is – or rather, one of many problems is – Venetian views were the tourist postcards of their day, so the best artists were widely copied. This is, Philip Mould says, "a Grand Canal of murk". DAVID BUTCHER

Ross Kemp: Living with Online Gambling Addiction

7.30pm ITV

DOCUMENTARY It's so easy to use a phone app to gamble, instead of having to go to a betting shop or casino, that increasing numbers of people are getting hooked – and racking up scarily high debts.

Ross Kemp meets a man who won £127,000 playing online roulette over a weekend – and then lost it all in 26 minutes. He also talks to a mum whose addiction to online slots has left her with thousands of pounds worth of loans. Saddest of all are the two sets of distraught parents whose young sons killed themselves because they couldn't see a way out of their gambling problems. JANE RACKHAM

The Secret Teacher

9.00pm C4

DOCUMENTARY "What have I let myself in for?" asks property millionaire Kate Stewart when she goes under cover as a support worker in a Sheffield secondary school with a "tricky reputation". Kate herself was disruptive at school but maybe not on this level.

Zain and Molly are both 15 and both have potential, but Zain's "the kind of kid that does a teacher's head in" and Molly often doesn't turn up at school for weeks. Kate especially identifies with Molly, but she can also see that rule-breaker Zain will either be "very good at being good or very good at being bad". When she offers to help them, there are a lot of tears. JR

A League of Their Own

9.00pm Sky 1

comedy Finally, the problem of there only being seven days in a week and 12 months in a year catches up with the indefatigable James Corden. The late-night US talk show host, awards host, Carpool Karaoke host and film actor has up to now heroically continued to present a relatively minor British sports quiz on the side, but in this 14th (!) series he's at last made way for a rotating cast of guest question-masters.

Except, he's one of them and he's in the chair for this first episode, joshing in manly fashion with regulars Andrew Flintoff, Jamie Redknapp and Romesh Ranganathan. Expect the usual mix of grand stunts and dangerously ballsy banter. JACK SEALE

The nation wept when Lisa died in Emmerdale (7pm, 8pm ITV) and it's been heartbreaking to watch Zak grieve. Earlier this week fun-loving Faith tried to put a smile back on the widower's face and the pair kissed, sending Zak into a spin and leading to a calamitous event that sounds typical of the soap's penchant for broad comic set-pieces. The Good Place

10.00pm E4

COMEDY The offbeat afterlife created by this series adds a new quirk this week with the introduction of the Judge, an all-knowing being situated between the Good Place and the Bad Place who rules on matters of dispute between the two realms.

The Judge (Maya Rudolph) is a little more down-to-earth than you might expect – she's been whiling away eternity watching box sets of Friday Night Lights – but she still demands Eleanor, Jason, Tahani and Chidi pass fiendish (and hilarious) individual tests before they even have a chance at escaping eternal torture.

Meanwhile, Ted Danson's Michael faces his own dark future when he's captured by the other demons...

COMEDY DRAMA Sometimes it's hard to tell whether Aine is drowning rather than waving. She constructs a shell made entirely of terrible jokes and wisecracks as she battles her overwhelming feelings of unhappiness. She's cripplingly lonely, an Irishwoman in London with few friends and just her sister Shona to lean on.

But this is a likeable comedy drama from writer and star Aisling Bea – even if Aine threatens to become completely overwhelming, you'll still be on her side. She has a big heart, too, which leads her into trouble. Tonight she takes a Bulgarian student from her English language group to hospital after he suffers what she thinks is a racist attack.

And maybe things are looking up elsewhere, as Aine is offered a job tutoring a young French boy who's moved to London to live with the father he barely knows (Tobias Menzies). ALISON GRAHAM

9.00 Fake or Fortune?

A/4. A Venetian View. Nick Hopkinson inherited a highly desirable landscape of Venice from his great grandfather that bears two labels from the Royal Academy on the back. One attributes it to the 18th-century painter Francesco Guardi, the other to his contemporary Michele Marieschi. Philip Mould and Fiona Bruce set out to solve the mystery with much at stake – if it's a Marieschi it could be worth £500,000; if it's a Guardi then £10 million. See p96. Margot's lucky strike

The Wolf of Wall Street

9.00pm Film4 FREEVIEW

Martin Scorsese's black comedy (Film of the Day, p38) marked a big-screen breakthrough for Margot Robbie – and she secured the role of financier Jordan Belfort's wife, Naomi Lapaglia, in the most unlikely of ways: by slapping lead actor Leonardo DiCaprio in the face. During her audition with DiCaprio, as the pair played out an argument, she could sense the part slipping away from her and wanted to make her mark. What did she do? "Whack! I hit him in the face." Scorsese and DiCaprio loved it. She got the part. DEAN AGIUS

New this week on TCM

The Appaloosa ★★★ 11.25am TCM

Marlon Brando and his much-prized Appaloosa horse become the target for a Mexican bandit chief in this very 1960s western. Brando is at his mumbliest, moodiest and most masochistic, having already been on the revenge trail with his own superior western One-Eyed Jacks. The highlight is an absurd arm-locking duel fought between Brando and John Saxon over a pair of scorpions – the loser gets stung – and the whole movie has an operatic, parodic quality that recalls the style of Sergio Leone. ADRIAN TURNER

Gosford Park ★★★★ My5 FREE TO VIEW

You've got until 21 August to catch Robert Altman's Oscar-winning drama on My5. Here, the director takes the English country-house murder mystery and turns it on its head. A huge cast of mostly British thespians fleshes out the satire and the pace is maintained by Julian Fellowes's sparkling script. ANDREW COLLINS

PICK OF THE DAY

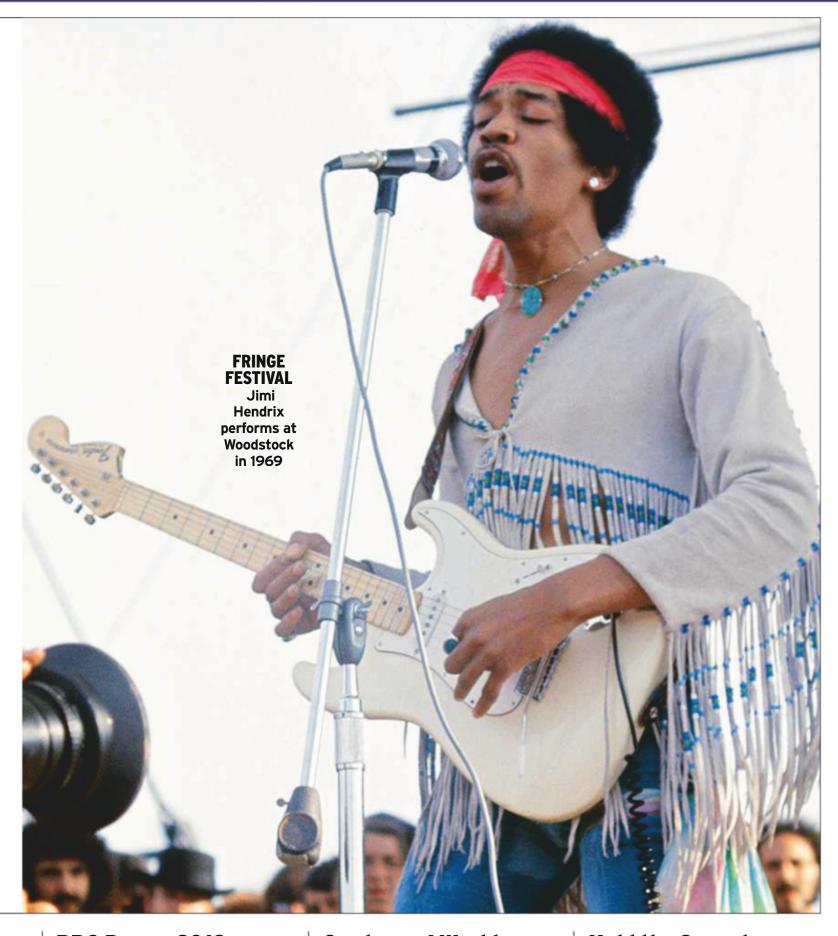

Woodstock: Three Days That Defined a Generation

10.00pm BBC4

organisers and attendees provide the insightful voiceovers in this vibrant documentary about the counter-culture festival – we don't see any of them, though. Because, apart from a few drone shots of the site as it is today, director Barak Goodman mines his visuals from the rich seam of archive footage from the time.

In contrast to the classic 1970 Woodstock film, this one focuses more on the festival's organisation (or lack of it) than its artists. The first third follows its conception and planning, before chronicling the overpopulation, food shortages and apocalyptic weather. These minor snags are, however, offset by an atmosphere of peace, creativity and togetherness.

"We sensed that we could change the world for a few days, but the rest of the world wasn't with us, and we knew it was going to be a culture shock coming back into society," says one of the "beautiful people", echoing the sentiments of every festival-goer before and since. GARY ROSE

from 7.00pm Sky Arts

MUSIC News broke earlier this year that director Baz Luhrmann (Moulin Rouge) is making a biopic about Elvis Presley, centred on the King's relationship with his manager, Colonel Tom Parker (to be played by Tom Hanks, no less). If that prospect has you all shook up, then so will the run of repeats tonight on Sky Arts.

They begin with a Classic Albums (7pm) looking at how Elvis made his debut album – Keith Richards and BB King are among the contributors. At 8pm Trude Forsher gives her account of his early career in Elvis and the Girl from Vienna. Then Elvis's closest friends and confidents – the "Memphis Mafia" – contribute to Elvis: the Final Hours (9pm).

the Albert Hall stage packed with young talent, such as the National Youth Orchestra of Great Britain earlier in the season. Here, their brass section joins the National Youth Orchestra of the United States of America, for a thorough workout with Antonio Pappano, director of the Royal Opera House.

After a short piece (Occidentalis) by Benjamin Beckman, an apprentice with the NYO USA, Pappano welcomes his frequent collaborator, mezzo Joyce DiDonato, to mark the 150th anniversary of Berlioz's death with the song-cycle Les nuits d'été. Then he conjures up Bavarian vistas in Strauss's An Alpine Symphony.

in your garden can be extremely expensive, if you only buy fully mature plants from a nursery or garden centre. But Monty Don is building a plant bank at Longmeadow for next to nothing by purely using cuttings he's already taken. He's also got some tips about how best to prune your lavender, a plant that can get very leggy and out of control if you don't keep it compact after it's finished flowering.

Meanwhile Carol Klein is on her home turf in Devon to look at eryngiums. Their spiky appearance and teasel-like flowers can be an attractive sculptural addition to anyone's garden. JANE RACKHAM Your RT Gardening: page 142 difficulty selling his house, though it's hard to see why. The show films its southwest London settings so lovingly, it makes Thameside suburbia look heavenly. Even if Phil has got dry rot in his attic (that's not a figure of speech – his mental health seems fine now), you'd think he'd have plenty of offers.

But that would remove an obstacle to his and Edith's happiness, and this mild, meandering comedy is all about obstacles, the more unlikely the better. This week meddling pair Bob and Roger inspect Phil's woodwork and Edith's sister Joan (Sue Johnston) keeps promising people she'll leave them money in her will. But why? DB

Medical jeopardy is the backdrop to turning points for two fractious relationships in EastEnders (8pm BBC1). First, we have Jean's sparky bond with fellow cancer patient Daniel (perfectly cast Adrian Edmondson, right) developing into more serious territory as she bumps into him at a chemo appointment and realises something is very wrong. Mick has collapsed for the second time in a week and his only hope of calling an ambulance and potentially saving his life is archenemy Stuart. Is this the point the Square's own He-Man and Skeletor finally make amends?

Playing "Lame Excuse for Being Away Bingo" is the only way through Robert's ridiculous double-life plot in Coronation Street (7.30pm, 8.30pm ITV) as he tries to keep Vicky and Michelle apart. His latest excuse is unimaginative even by the cheating chef's low standards.

But guess what? Michelle swallows it. Again. And the audience is expected to think she really is that gullible. Again. JOHNATHON HUGHES

Fosse/Verdon Lethal Weapon

9.00pm BBC2

DRAMA It's the 1972 premiere of the movie Cabaret, starring Liza Minnelli, but director Bob Fosse is smoking furiously in the foyer, unable to bear the audience reaction. He fears it's going to be a flop – "I'm not in the mood for a funeral," he tells the producer. But of course, it's a sensation.

Fosse (Sam Rockwell) celebrates with loads of booze and drugs – he looks terrible – and he's at his creepiest when hitting upon the young women in the chorus of his new musical Pippin.

Fosse/Verdon clearly isn't afraid to make Fosse as unappealing and unsavoury as possible, as he tries to force himself on a dancer. But she fights back. ALISON GRAHAM

9.00pm ITV

DRAMA A sturdy enough episode of a comedy cop show that, since the departure of Clayne Crawford and the arrival of the safer Seann William Scott, has developed a weakness for mawkish brooding that smothers the laughs and the action.

Regret is the clunking theme tonight as Murtaugh (Damon Wayans) is confronted with the possibility of having once convicted an innocent man, while Cole (Scott) endures some unconvincing Afghanistan flashbacks.

The return of irritating lawyer and, now, true-crime podcaster Leo Getz (Thomas Lennon) brings enough energy to push the story along whenever it threatens to stall, which is often. JACK SEALE

Celebrity 5 Go Barging

9.00pm Channel 5

bocumentary The final leg of this canal odyssey kicks off with breakfast à la John Prescott – scrambled eggs served with an anecdote about the man who Prescott thumped after he egged him. We also get to hear what Tony Blair had to say about it. Then, as they near Stratford-upon-Avon, the spirit of Shakespeare takes hold of Michael Buerk and Shaun Williamson at a gin distillery.

The celebs appear to have rubbed along well despite the cramped conditions and have (almost) mastered the art of steering.
The result, while not plain sailing (there are lots of those sorts of puns), is undemanding, mildly entertaining TV. JR

Mortimer and Whitehouse:

Gone Fishing

8.00pm BBC2

bocumentary This show's 8pm slot means Bob Mortimer and Paul Whitehouse can't swear as they otherwise might, so they're limited to calling each other things like "halfwit" or "silly sod". A producer has said the hardest thing about making the first series was editing around Bob's colourful language, and I swear tonight that at a moment of frustration, he shouts something profane that has been dubbed over with an "Aaaagh!"

As much as I'd love to see an uncut version where they turn the air blue, the innocent vibe fits the unspoilt landscapes – the opening shot of the River Tay looks utterly dreamy. And the music on the show is carefully chosen: there's a taste of that lovely Burt Bacharach soundtrack to Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid near the end – before a glorious pratfall. DB

Mindhunter Netflix

One of Netflix's classiest dramas returns for a second series. It's overseen by David Fincher and based on the real work of FBI criminal profilers in the late 1970s, and its signature scene is a tense, extended encounter between investigators and an incarcerated serial killer, whose insights might help solve a crime. This year the cases include the Atlanta child killings of 1979–81.

Sky's fantastic premiere

☐ Fantastic Beasts: the Crimes of Grindelwald

★★★★ 8.00pm Sky Premiere

This second episode in the five-film Fantastic Beasts franchise makes for a sumptuously absorbing spectacle. The action opens in 1927, where Newt Scamander (the ever-reliable Eddie Redmayne) journeys to Paris alongside assorted friends, family and villains to learn why escaped convict Grindelwald (Johnny Depp) is searching for the mysterious Credence Barebone. Directed with efficiency by Potterverse veteran David Yates, this blockbuster continues to build on the fabulous formula. ALAN JONES

Dennis Hopper's road movie may be a countercultural touchstone, but its production was far from an easy ride. Rip Torn successfully sued Hopper for defamation after a clash between the two saw the role he'd been lined up for go instead to Jack Nicholson. Peter Fonda's relationship with Hopper also hit the skids over money tied to the film. "[Hopper] was so caught up in his own megalomania and bitterness that he couldn't see I respected his genius and his work," said Fonda of their fallout. DEAN AGIUS

As Radio 4 hands out its Comedy Award, we ask five stand-ups what the final meant to them

BBC Introducing Radio 4 Comedy Award 2019 Final Thursday 6.30pm Radio 4

SINDHU VEE, FINALIST 2016

I was ready to enter in 2015 and then I discovered you had to post your entry on Soundcloud and I just couldn't be doing with the technology. A year later I did it. I also had a thing about radio, which came from my upbringing in India. Radio was what old people listened to. But actually the great thing about comedy on radio is that what you write has to be structurally coherent. You haven't got facial expressions to help you get laughs. So I focused on the writing and there I was performing in Edinburgh. The problem was that just before the gig I fell over and blood was pouring from my knee. But the award started my relationship with Radio 4. I feel so lucky.

Sindhu Vee is on tour with her show Sandhog from 5 September to 22 November: see sindhuvee.com

JOSIE LONG, WINNER 1999

I was 17 when I won the BBC Newcomer Award. It was in Edinburgh, presented by Bob Monkhouse, in front of 700 people. I was still at school and had done no more than 20 gigs, mostly to 30 people in a pub. I was so nervous I couldn't eat. I did an odd little routine about my bathroom being a nightclub for earwigs, and when we came off stage they brought me a bucket of Bacardi Breezers as I didn't drink beer and I drank five. Bob Monkhouse ran over saying: "What are you doing? You can't get drunk, you might win. You must eat my fruit platter." So I went into his dressing room and ate an entire complimentary fruit platter to sober up. I said, "I won't win, Bob." I felt like such a joker. But I did win, and it was life-changing.

Josie Long's show Tender is at the Stand, Edinburgh, until 25 August (not 12 or 19). Her feature film Super November is available now from Vimeo On Demand

TEZ ILYAS, FINALIST 2011

I'd only been doing stand-up for eight months, and I was still working as a civil servant. I was 27 and I'd

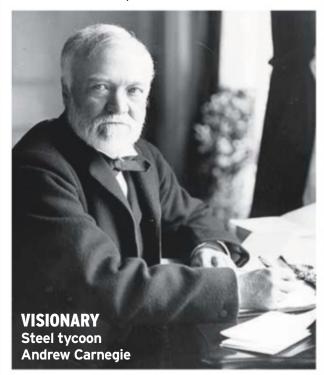

Gordon Brown on The Gospel of Wealth Sunday 1.30pm Radio 4

Before he became prime minister, Gordon Brown spent ten years as Chancellor of the Exchequer, and he'll always be associated with economic policy. But the area dearest to his heart is education, which becomes abundantly clear in his latest Radio 4 outing.

Brown's subject is Scottish-American philanthropist Andrew Carnegie (below), who died 100 years ago – the greatest philanthropist who ever lived, in Brown's estimation. It was Carnegie who, in his 1889 treatise The Gospel of Wealth, argued that "to die rich was to die disgraced"; and in pouring his wealth into the cause of education, Carnegie indirectly helped Brown's own father to go to university.

"Carnegie makes us think about what the purpose of philanthropy is," says Brown whether it's "just rich people doing what they like", or, as Carnegie did, focusing on areas that bring about the greatest good to the greatest number of people. That's the lesson, Brown says, to be drawn today.

This is fine, serious programme-making. They really don't make prime ministers like Gordon Brown any more.

AMBRIDGE DIARY

The Archers this week...

Jim is finally taking steps to move on with his life by joining Lilian's quiz team. But just as Alistair is breathing a sigh of relief, along comes Jazzer, whose shock admission threatens to send Jim straight back to square one.

Shula is nervous as she faces her first meeting with the Diocesan Director of Ordinands. No surprise there really; expect the appointment to get off to an immediate bad start and for Shula to make a valiant attempt to swing things in her favour.

Will, meanwhile, continues to blame himself for recent events at Grange Farm, only to confront an even bigger drama when one of the Grundys faces a dash to hospital. What will the diagnosis be? DAVID BROWN been on a stand-up writing course, and the challenge was to hone my material into a five-minute routine. 2011 was the return of the award after six years. You could sense how big it was. Sarah Millican was one of the judges. The first heat was in Newcastle, the semi-final in Bath. Then the final was in London. Patrick Kielty was the host, and he was great. The only thing that wasn't great was that I had to go on first, which is the hardest spot. Angela Barnes won, and quite rightly – hers was the best routine. But just reaching the final was amazing and gave me so much self-belief. It led to my Radio 4 series and my Channel 4 series. It was my breakthrough.

The Tez O'Clock Show (C4) is available on All 4

KEN CHENG, FINALIST 2015

The final took place during an afternoon at the Comedy Store in London – I think it was going out live on the Steve Wright show. My set was six minutes long and entirely built around the expression "to kill two birds with one stone". I guess I was disappointed not to win. It was my third attempt. But I was in the final, that was what mattered. I'm now a full-time comedian. I've had my series on Radio 4. If it comes to it, I can always go back to playing poker. That was how I made my living before. They're both risk-taking things. You win or you lose. Some nights the comedy goes well, some nights it goes badly. What counts is being able to accept that.

Ken Cheng's show Ken Cheng: to All the Racists I've Blocked Before runs at the Bedlam Theatre, Edinburgh, until 25 August

LUCY BEAUMONT, WINNER 2012

If I hadn't won I really don't think I could have continued in comedy. I'd spent a year in London working as a teacher's assistant, earning £50 a day and gigging in the evenings. I could only afford one meal a day – the school lunch. And I was living in a shared house that was basically a squat. The final was in Blackpool. My routine was all about Hull and I think I was at an advantage because it was a northern, working-class audience. The next day I quit my job. As a female comedian it was hard to get bookings, but suddenly they poured in. I've had my show To Hull and Back on Radio 4, but for me the best thing has been selling out the Hull Truck theatre. There's just no feeling like it.

Lucy Beaumont's show Space Mam is at the Pleasance Courtyard, Edinburgh, until 25 August

Wakey, wakey...

Early starts prove I'm an owl, not a lark

T'S THE GOLDEN rule: on radio, as in life, there are two types of people – larks and owls. Working just days ago on Radio 2 reminded me that I am, in fact, an owl.

Larks rise before dawn to sing to their loyal listeners, who really don't want anyone else to wake them up, thank you very much. Radio larks must wake up, get up and leave the house. I have always found it hard to pull off these simple tasks in quick succession.

As a young reporter in the 1990s, I would beg my Citroën 2CV to fire up at 4am to head down the A12 to the studios in the birthplace of radio, Chelmsford. "Start, damn you! Why won't you start, s'il vous plait!" As BBC Wall Street anchor, I missed a meeting at the Twin Towers on 9/11. I'd been up late and failed to set an alarm. Never have I been more relieved to have overslept.

Just a few short days ago, I was asked to fill in for Vanessa Feltz on her 5am weekday slot on Radio 2. (I will return to Lady V, as her listeners call her, in a future column – she is a miraculous woman.) Anyway, there I was on the morning of my first shift, out cold on my sofa. I had fallen asleep here the night before with no battery left on my smartphone, and snored on with no expectation of waking up in time.

Why hadn't I listened to John Humphrys, who once told me, "I have three alarm clocks"? One of his is set to clang as far away from his bed as possible so he must get up to turn it off. The BBC's Chris Mason sets his alarm by the minute depending on the work – 4.34am, 4.35, 4.36 – savouring each extra second of sleep like a shining diamond in the dark.

Breakfast-time is home to the biggest names in the business. Nick Ferrari at LBC, Zoe Ball at Radio 2, Chris Evans at Virgin Radio – like Terry Wogan before them, all wake the nation, rising early to be rewarded with radio's richest rewards and the most listeners in the land.

I was only saved by the recent heatwave. By luck and good fortune, I woke up at exactly the right time – the radio gods were smiling on me.

And then came the best part. Listeners at 5am rushed to help me out, sending messages and snapshots of life at dawn around the land.

We hit our stride with our feature on heatwave films – Hotting Hill, The Devil Wears Nada, The Man with the Golden Sun. People heading off on holiday by car shared news of their drive; one mum broke the news that her flight to the US had just been cancelled.

Each morning at 6.20am during my stint, in came Zoe Ball to say hello, before heading to her perch for her own show. Listening to her ten minutes later fire on all engines proved another golden rule: on radio, as in life, the owl can learn from the lark.

NAME THAT CAR...

More now on radio's most remarkable motor – the one with a direct logbook link to Ken Bruce, Jimmy Young and Terry Wogan that I mentioned last week. The vehicle is still a reliable old runner – much like Ken himself. Ken, who bought it off Jimmy, sold it to our friend Alan, Terry's producer on Wake Up to Wogan. Many have asked me to reveal the make and model, which I will do, but not yet. Instead, here are some of the many wrong guesses: the car is NOT a Jaguar, NOT a Bentley, and NOT a Daimler. Neither is it a Mini, nor a Maxi. More soon. Beep beep!

Paddy O'Connell hosts Broadcasting House on Sunday at 9am on Radio 4, and co-hosts the podcast Dogpod

SOUND BITES

BY DAVID HEPWORTH

When holiday meant holiday

Back in the summer of 1962 I was on holiday with my family when a news vendor's poster in the Swiss city of Lucerne told us that Marilyn Monroe had died. In 1997

I was flying back overnight from a holiday in the United States when a member of the cabin crew told us that the Princess of Wales had been involved in a car accident in Paris. The full news, which was passed from one pilot to another as we flew through the night, was eventually announced to the passengers as they woke over Ireland.

The (old) news from home

In those days, being on holiday overseas meant being out of touch. If you wanted to know how your team had fared in the early games of the season you would pay for an overpriced, two-day-old copy of a British newspaper. If you wanted to phone home to sort out a work matter you had to book an international call and then wait, sweating, in an improvised phone box at the back of a Greek taverna, in the hope of being put through. This sensation of being out of touch was pleasant, but so was the quick hit of news from home.

"Anything else happening?" the family would lazily enquire on your return poolside and you would reply with the news that an old entertainer had passed away, England were following on and, with a bit of luck, it was bucketing down at home. That's all gone now. Nowadays we're never far from home. We can remain as connected as we prefer.

No more fear of missing out...

On the face of it this is a good thing. You may now listen to your favourite BBC radio programmes in a villa in Portugal, much as you would in a bungalow in Blighty. Thanks to BBC Sounds, John Humphrys or Zoe Ball (right) can accompany you as you cycle back from the boulangerie with un pain on your pannier.

But here's what I do miss

I can't help missing two things. One is the special pleasure of returning from holiday to hear a whole Archers omnibus without having tasted any of the individual episodes. The other is the profound state of relaxation that came from knowing that a bunch of really tiresome things could happen on the home front and you wouldn't be called upon to care about them until you'd got home. Nowadays you can check the news and sport as often as you like. Why we do it is a mystery. It rarely makes us any happier.

Archive on 4: Beckett's Last Tapes

8.00pm Radio 4 Pretty terrified, is how the great actress Siân Phillips says she felt when, back in 1966, she found herself working with Samuel Beckett (above). They were on the set of Beckett's TV play Eh Joe, and Beckett was telling her - with great courtesy, it has to be said – how to deliver the lines. "He was looking down like some merciless god," Phillips recalls. "He was incredibly handsome." Some of their exchanges were captured on tape – just one of a remarkable cache of recordings that presenter Robert McCrum revels in as he explores the Beckett archive housed in – of all places – the Museum of English Rural Life that is part of Reading University. Phillips sounds quite unchanged, and we also hear

7.30pm Radio 3

"A name to remember, and a voice – once heard – you won't forget." So wrote Gramophone magazine when bestowing its 2018 Young Artist of the Year Award upon rising Norwegian soprano Lise Davidsen. Also a triple award-winner at Plácido Domingo's Operalia competition, Davidsen is being spoken of in the same breath as fellow Scandinavian singing legends Birgit Nilsson and Kirsten Flagstad. Currently appearing at Wagner's own Festival Theatre in Bayreuth, Davidsen takes a night off to grace the Proms with the four songs that Richard Strauss wrote as a wedding present for his own soprano wife Pauline. Today's Choices

Stillicide 7.45pm Radio 4

The Environment Agency has warned that demand for water in England could outstrip supply by 2040; a frightening forecast brought home by the recent heatwaves, but a boon for fiction writers. In this 12-part adaptation of Cynan Jones's latest short story collection Stillicide, the author imagines a future where water is commodified. Richard Goulding narrates this first episode in which a train, guarded for risk of sabotage, must transport it to a city draining the country of its resources. A compelling blend of Frank Herbert's classic drought epic Dune and the real world horror of John Lanchester's climate-change dystopia The Wall.

The Friends' Meeting House in Manchester is notable for one wall on its Bootle Street side. It's all that remains of an earlier Quaker building that stood while the Peterloo Massacre took place in the adjacent St Peter's Field exactly 200 years ago. In today's programme, recorded at the Meeting House, Carol Ann Duffy, soon to relinquish her post as Poet Laureate, is joined by singer-songwriter Kathryn Williams and other poets, who will perform new work dedicated to the peaceful rally that ended with 15 dead and hundreds injured. Today's Choices

7.30pm Radio 3 It was in Buenos Aires, back in 1949, that little eight-year-old Marthita and seven-year-old Danielito first met at one of the famous Friday-night soirées held at the home of the music-loving Rosenthal family at No 1257 Calle Talcahuano. A budding pair of child prodigies, they played hide-and-seek beneath the tables in between playing their party pieces at the piano. Now, 70 years on, and long established as two of the most admired classical artists of our age, Martha Argerich (above) and Daniel Barenboim are reunited again at tonight's Prom, in which she will play Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No 1, while he conducts the young Arab and Israeli musicians of his visionary West-Eastern Divan Orchestra.

The Conversation: Champion Mums

MARK PAPPENHEIM

11.30am BBC World Service For any man or woman who struggles just to get the kids to school on time in the morning, this may not be the best listen. With a firm emphasis on superhuman multi-tasking, The Conversation's Kim Chakanetsa talks to two women – the UK's record-breaking ultra-runner and full-time vet Jasmin Paris, and Swiss Olympic gold medal-winning triathlete Nicola Spirig Hug – who succeed in combining intensive physical training and competing with motherhood. But let's not fret too much – they may be incredible athletes and even interesting and productive people, but whether they are champion mums is surely between them and their children. sue robinson

Daniel Barenboim conducts the West-Eastern Divan Orchestra and pianist Martha Argerich in works by Schubert, Tchaikovsky and Lutoslawski. Barenboim and his orchestra return to the Proms with a programme of emotion and sensation. Argentinian pianist Martha Argerich is the soloist in Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No 1 – an outpouring of Romantic intensity right through to its thrilling finale. Polish folk dances pulse through Lutoslawski's vibrant Concerto for Orchestra, with its echoes of Stravinsky and Bartok, and its bracing rhythmic energy and reticent beauty offer the perfect foil to the melodic richness of Tchaikovsky's concerto. Presented by Kate Molleson, live from the Royal Albert Hall, London.

Today's Choices

Land Power v Sea Power 8.00pm Radio 4

Britannia, famously, once ruled the waves. While those days would appear to be long gone, our seafaring legacy continues to lap against the shores of the present, at least according to this thought-provoking programme from documentary maker Phil Tinline, which traces the military might of today's superpowers back to the prophecies of two 19th-century thinkers: Alfred Thayer Mahan and Sir Halford Mackinder. Mahan argued that the US would need its own navy to match the British Empire, while Mackinder saw the new-fangled Trans-Siberian Railway as evidence that the future belonged to those who could control vast swathes of terrain. The rest is of course history, but Tinline's musings on the great conflicts still to come, from posturing in the South China Sea to geopolitical manoeuvring on the great Eurasian plain, are chilling to contemplate. The conductor Martyn Brabbins, who turns 60 today, is a champion of British and contemporary music. So how better to celebrate his birthday than by conducting the world premiere of a Proms commission that combines his two passions in the form of a new set of variations modelled on Elgar's Enigma Variations and co-written for him by a cohort of 14 leading composers. As with Elgar's work, which concludes the concert, there's an enigma behind Brabbins's "birthday variations": who is the "Anon" who wrote the theme? MARK PAPPENHEIM

The Folk Show with Mark Radcliffe

9.00pm Radio 2 Although established before Glastonbury and the Isle of Wight, the annual four-day festival in the grounds of Cherry Hinton Hall has avoided becoming the leviathan that those two events have, managing to retain an altogether more, well, folky atmosphere. Perhaps that has something to do with the commitment of the artists, who often play more than once over the weekend. This year's festival is curated by Mercury Prize-nominated local boy Nick Mulvey (above) and these highlights are a delicious and typically eclectic package featuring among others, Richard Thompson, Nancy Kerr and James Fagan, Mulvey himself and the excellent partnership that is Senegalese kora player Seckou Keita and Welsh harpist Catrin Finch.

TONY PETERS

You might think vicars have it tough trying to write a fresh sermon every week. When Bach became Leipzig's Thomaskantor – effectively director of music for the city's four Lutheran churches (as well as head of its choir school) - he not only set out to compose a new cantata for every Sunday and feast day in the liturgical calendar but, having completed one such cycle, went on to compose four more, although sadly only three survive, totalling some 200 cantatas altogether. In tonight's late Prom, Solomon's Knot perform four cantatas for St Michael's

Day, all drawn from different

BBC Proms 2019

7.00pm Radio 3

The first ever British winner of BBC Cardiff Singer of the World, Scottish mezzo Catriona Morison (above) makes her Proms debut tonight in Elgar's Sea Pictures. Whether or not she'll copy Clara Butt, who apparently dressed like a mermaid when premiering the songs in 1899, remains to be seen. The juxtaposition of the aquatic and the artistic runs through the concert, with Mendelssohn's Fingal's Cave overture prefacing the Elgar songs, while Errollyn Wallen's tribute to Howard Hodgkin – an artist whose paintings regularly overflowed their frames – leads into Ravel's hyper-saturated colorisation of Mussorgsky's originally monochrome Pictures at an Exhibition.

Wisebowm – Urban Poet 11.00pm Radio 4

Steve Whiteley sprang from YouTube. His satire of the urban poetry scene premiered in Edinburgh in 2017. He plays both the earnest Wisebowm, whose parents (Ricky Grover and Joanna Brookes) run a spoken-word club, and his cooler rapper friend Dean. Poetic pretentiousness is pricked in a manner that recalls Galton and Simpson's skewering of beat poetry in an often-repeated episode of Hancock's Half-Hour. I sense a hit. "This is one of the boldest radio comedies I have ever been involved with," Brookes tells me. "I loved doing it." DAVID McGILLIVRAY

Today's Choices

BBC Proms 2019

7.30pm Radio 3

A double bicentenary tribute to Queen Victoria and her beloved Prince Albert, tonight's Prom from the period-instrument players of the Orchestra of the Age of Enlightenment principally showcases music by Her Majesty's favourite composer, Felix Mendelssohn. Ending with his "Scottish" Symphony that he dedicated to the Queen five years before she and Albert bought Balmoral, the concert also includes his Piano Concerto No 1, which Stephen Hough (above) performs on Victoria's very own glittering, gilt piano, on loan from the Royal Collection. As a bonus, Hough also accompanies tenor Alessandro Fisher in five German songs that Albert himself composed, and surely also sang at Buckingham Palace, with Queen Victoria accompanying him on her piano. "Refugees are basically all the same," says Ruth, and by that she means they are vulnerable and have poignant stories to tell, irrespective of race and background. The 98-year-old, escaping the Nazi persecution of Jews, came to Britain in the late 1930s under the UK's Kindertransport policy. Meanwhile, present-day Syrian refugee Murad recalls the horror that has befallen his country and how he was able to start a new life in Birmingham as a bus driver. In a programme by turns distressing and life-affirming, presenter Nikki Tapper also hears from those who have campaigned for Birmingham to welcome a new generation of refugees. CHRIS GARDNER

10.00 Japan's Never-Ending War

Rana Mitter visits Tokyo to talk to directors, critics and students about how today's Japan tells itself the story of the Second World War through its movies. In Europe, the War is history, but in East Asia it's still current affairs. The way the War is remembered has deep resonance, even as disagreement over what happened persists, so Mitter explores how recent Japanese war movies have focused on the suffering of Japanese civilians in the late stages of the war. Featuring contributions from Japanese directors, critics and students. Producer Phil Tinline (R)

Face behind the voice

Joanita Musisi BBC Radio York

Age 39 Current job Presenter of BBC Radio York's Saturday breakfast show and reporter on the weekday breakfast show.

CV Born in Kampala, Uganda, her family moved to England when she was young, to give her better opportunities: "My parents said they'd sweep the streets if they had to." Studied psychology at the University of Worcester, then travelled the world. She temped for two weeks on BBC Radio York's reception before getting a job as a trainee broadcast assistant, becoming staff a year later. Best moment "My first outside broadcast, at a 1940s nostalgia weekend. Even though it was pouring with rain, it was a really nice atmosphere. I spoke to a couple – the woman was 75 and the man was 82 - who were getting married, and he was saying how amazing she was. It was just lovely." Worst moment "I went to interview Edward Fox on top of huge scaffolding at the Royal Hall in Harrogate, about its restoration. It was a really nice interview... But I hadn't recorded any of it!"

Off air "I live in a village outside York with my partner, our twins who are four, and my stepdaughter who is 15. I've started running during the last year – it's really changed my life, how I think about myself and my body." First radio memory "The pips on the World Service. My parents listened to it in Uganda. They said it was the only station where you'd get balance."

Favourite broadcasters "Liza Tarbuck,

who is so hilarious and random. Kirsty

Young is authoritative without being intimidating – I was so sad to hear she was stepping down from Desert Island Discs. And Mista Jam – he's just got so much energy and I want a hit of that." Ambition "To travel the world with my family. And to host Radio 2 breakfast." Dream job "Radio 2 breakfast would be it. Or Antiques Roadshow - I love it!" Secret skills "This is really gross but... one of my eyeballs jiggles in its socket and makes this horrible sound. I acted as a child, and I'm going to be an extra in the new BBC comedy Scarborough unless they cut it!" DAVID CRAWFORD

Joanita Musisi BBC Radio York

Age 39 Current job Presenter of BBC Radio York's Saturday breakfast show and reporter on the weekday breakfast show.

CV Born in Kampala, Uganda, her family moved to England when she was young, to give her better opportunities: "My parents said they'd sweep the streets if they had to." Studied psychology at the University of Worcester, then travelled the world. She temped for two weeks on BBC Radio York's reception before getting a job as a trainee broadcast assistant, becoming staff a year later. Best moment "My first outside broadcast, at a 1940s nostalgia weekend. Even though it was pouring with rain, it was a really nice atmosphere. I spoke to a couple – the woman was 75 and the man was 82 – who were getting married, and he was saying how amazing she was. It was just lovely." Worst moment "I went to interview Edward Fox on top of huge scaffolding at the Royal Hall in Harrogate, about its restoration. It was a really nice interview... But I hadn't recorded any of it!"

Off air "I live in a village outside York with my partner, our twins who are four, and my stepdaughter who is 15. I've started running during the last year – it's really changed my life, how I think about myself and my body." First radio memory "The pips on the World Service. My parents listened to it in Uganda. They said it was the only station where you'd get balance." Favourite broadcasters "Liza Tarbuck, who is so hilarious and random. Kirsty Young is authoritative without being intimidating – I was so sad to hear she was stepping down from Desert Island Discs. And Mista Jam – he's just got so much energy and I want a hit of that." Ambition "To travel the world with my family. And to host Radio 2 breakfast." Dream job "Radio 2 breakfast would be it. Or Antiques Roadshow - I love it!" Secret skills "This is really gross but... one of my eyeballs jiggles in its socket and makes this horrible sound. I acted as a child, and I'm going to be an extra in the new BBC comedy Scarborough - unless they cut it!" DAVID CRAWFORD

Face behind the voice

Joanita Musisi BBC Radio York

Age 39 Current job Presenter of BBC Radio York's Saturday breakfast show and reporter on the weekday breakfast show.

CV Born in Kampala, Uganda, her family moved to England when she was young, to give her better opportunities: "My parents said they'd sweep the streets if they had to." Studied psychology at the University of Worcester, then travelled the world. She temped for two weeks on BBC Radio York's reception before getting a job as a trainee broadcast assistant, becoming staff a year later. Best moment "My first outside broadcast, at a 1940s nostalgia weekend. Even though it was pouring with rain, it was a really nice atmosphere. I spoke to a couple – the woman was 75 and the man was 82 – who were getting married, and he was saying how amazing she was. It was just lovely." Worst moment "I went to interview Edward Fox on top of huge scaffolding at the Royal Hall in Harrogate, about its restoration. It was a really nice interview... But I hadn't recorded any of it!"

Off air "I live in a village outside York with my partner, our twins who are four, and my stepdaughter who is 15. I've started running during the last year – it's really changed my life, how I think about myself and my body." First radio memory "The pips on the World Service. My parents listened to it in Uganda. They said it was the only station where you'd get balance." Favourite broadcasters "Liza Tarbuck, who is so hilarious and random. Kirsty Young is authoritative without being intimidating – I was so sad to hear she was stepping down from Desert Island Discs. And Mista Jam – he's just got so much energy and I want a hit of that." Ambition "To travel the world with my family. And to host Radio 2 breakfast." Dream job "Radio 2 breakfast would be it. Or Antiques Roadshow - I love it!" Secret skills "This is really gross but... one of my eyeballs jiggles in its socket and makes this horrible sound. I acted as a child, and I'm going to be an extra in the new BBC comedy Scarborough unless they cut it!" DAVID CRAWFORD

Joanita Musisi BBC Radio York

Age 39
Current job Presenter of BBC Radio York's Saturday breakfast show and reporter on the weekday breakfast show.

CV Born in Kampala, Uganda, her family moved to England when she was young, to give her better opportunities: "My parents said they'd sweep the streets if they had to." Studied psychology at the University of Worcester, then travelled the world. She temped for two weeks on BBC Radio York's reception before getting a job as a trainee broadcast assistant, becoming staff a year later. Best moment "My first outside broadcast, at a 1940s nostalgia weekend. Even though it was pouring with rain, it was a really nice atmosphere. I spoke to a couple – the woman was 75 and the man was 82 – who were getting married, and he was saying how amazing she was. It was just lovely." Worst moment "I went to interview Edward Fox on top of huge scaffolding at the Royal Hall in Harrogate, about its restoration. It was a really nice interview... But I hadn't recorded any of it!"

Off air "I live in a village outside York with my partner, our twins who are four, and my stepdaughter who is 15. I've started running during the last year – it's really changed my life, how I think about myself and my body."

First radio memory "The pips on the World Service. My parents listened to it in Uganda. They said it was the only station where you'd get balance."

Favourite broadcasters "Liza Tarbuck, who is so hilarious and random. Kirsty Young is authoritative without being intimidating – I was so sad to hear she was stepping down from Desert Island Discs. And Mista Jam – he's just got so much energy and I want a hit of that." Ambition "To travel the world with my family. And to host Radio 2 breakfast." Dream job "Radio 2 breakfast would be it. Or Antiques Roadshow - I love it!" Secret skills "This is really gross but... one of my eyeballs jiggles in its socket and makes this horrible sound. I acted as a child, and I'm going to be an extra in the new BBC comedy Scarborough unless they cut it!" DAVID CRAWFORD

Face behind the voice

Joanita Musisi BBC Radio York

Age 39 Current job Presenter of BBC Radio York's Saturday breakfast show and reporter on the weekday breakfast show.

CV Born in Kampala, Uganda, her family moved to England when she was young, to give her better opportunities: "My parents said they'd sweep the streets if they had to." Studied psychology at the University of Worcester, then travelled the world. She temped for two weeks on BBC Radio York's reception before getting a job as a trainee broadcast assistant, becoming staff a year later. Best moment "My first outside broadcast, at a 1940s nostalgia weekend. Even though it was pouring with rain, it was a really nice atmosphere. I spoke to a couple – the woman was 75 and the man was 82 – who were getting married, and he was saying how amazing she was. It was just lovely." Worst moment "I went to interview Edward Fox on top of huge scaffolding at the Royal Hall in Harrogate, about its restoration. It was a really nice interview...

Off air "I live in a village outside York with my partner, our twins who are four, and my stepdaughter who is 15. I've started running during the last year – it's really changed my life, how I think about myself and my body."

First radio memory "The pips on the World Service. My parents listened to it in Uganda. They said it was the only station where you'd get balance."

Favourite broadcasters "Liza Tarbuck,

who is so hilarious and random. Kirsty

Young is authoritative without being intimidating – I was so sad to hear she was stepping down from Desert Island Discs. And Mista Jam – he's just got so much energy and I want a hit of that." Ambition "To travel the world with my family. And to host Radio 2 breakfast." Dream job "Radio 2 breakfast would be it. Or Antiques Roadshow - I love it!" Secret skills "This is really gross but... one of my eyeballs jiggles in its socket and makes this horrible sound. I acted as a child, and I'm going to be an extra in the new BBC comedy Scarborough unless they cut it!" DAVID CRAWFORD

Joanita Musisi BBC Radio York

Age 39 Current job Presenter of BBC Radio York's Saturday breakfast show and reporter on the weekday breakfast show.

CV Born in Kampala, Uganda, her family moved to England when she was young, to give her better opportunities: "My parents said they'd sweep the streets if they had to." Studied psychology at the University of Worcester, then travelled the world. She temped for two weeks on BBC Radio York's reception before getting a job as a trainee broadcast assistant, becoming staff a year later. Best moment "My first outside broadcast, at a 1940s nostalgia weekend. Even though it was pouring with rain, it was a really nice atmosphere. I spoke to a couple – the woman was 75 and the man was 82 – who were getting married, and he was saying how amazing she was. It was just lovely." Worst moment "I went to interview Edward Fox on top of huge scaffolding at the Royal Hall in Harrogate, about its restoration. It was a really nice interview... But I hadn't recorded any of it!"

Off air "I live in a village outside York with my partner, our twins who are four, and my stepdaughter who is 15. I've started running during the last year – it's really changed my life, how I think about myself and my body." First radio memory "The pips on the World Service. My parents listened to it in Uganda. They said it was the only

Young is authoritative without being intimidating – I was so sad to hear she was stepping down from Desert Island Discs. And Mista Jam – he's just got so much energy and I want a hit of that." Ambition "To travel the world with my family. And to host Radio 2 breakfast." Dream job "Radio 2 breakfast would be it. Or Antiques Roadshow - I love it!" Secret skills "This is really gross but... one of my eyeballs jiggles in its socket and makes this horrible sound. I acted as a child, and I'm going to be an extra in the new BBC comedy Scarborough unless they cut it!" DAVID CRAWFORD

Does HSBC owe you?

You could be due compensation for unreasonable debt collection charges, says Paul Lewis

SBC is to pay out an estimated £30 million to more than 25,000 people who had unreasonable debt collection charges applied to their bills. They all had a loan, or a credit or store card from HFC Bank or, in fewer cases, from John Lewis Financial Services (JLFS) and missed payments.

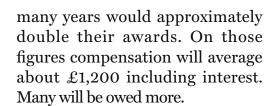

The debt was referred to one of two solicitors, Restons or Weightmans, who wrote to customers and on the bank's instruction added a debt collection charge of 16.4 per cent of the amount owed. In 2010 the Office of Fair Trading ruled that charge unreasonable and ordered HFC to stop.

Compensation will average about £1,200

HFC and JLFS are owned by HSBC, which began a limited exercise in 2017 to find 6,700 people it had identified as due compensation. They were owed an estimated £4 million plus interest, which at eight per cent over

AST MONTH IT emerged that HSBC is writing to another 18,500 people who may be due redress. HSBC will listen to their "recollection of events", even if they have lost paperwork.

Nicholas Wilson, who has campaigned tirelessly for redress to be paid, says he was leaked county court records that show 119,000 people had the charge added and believes the real number could be as many as half a million.

Andrew Bailey, chief executive of the FCA, said at its annual public meeting in July that the number given redress would be "driven by the evidence".

HSBC told me: "We believe we have identified all those affected who may have paid a Debt Collection Charge between 2003 and 2009, and are writing to them. If someone believes they paid a DCC and we haven't contacted them, they can call us to discuss it on 0345 585 7564." Neither Restons nor Weightmans would comment.

If you were pursued for a debt to HFC or JLFS by either firm in the period 2003–2009, call the above number and make a claim.

HELP COMBAT CLIMATE CHANGE WITH GREEN ENERGY

Reduce the impact of your carbon footprint by switching to a green energy tariff...

We've all got a responsibility to help protect the environment, so it's important to take some time to examine the size of your carbon footprint and consider what you can do to reduce it. One simple way to contribute toward the global fight against climate change is to switch over to a green energy tariff.

The good news is that, as public awareness and concern about climate change has drastically increased, real change has started to occur. In 2018, 33 per cent of all the electricity generated in the UK came from renewable sources*.

A huge variety of the UK's suppliers now offer a choice of green energy tariffs including many of the Big Six and plenty of smaller independents. Some of these come with added benefits like discounted energy between certain hours of the day to make charging an environmentally friendly electric vehicle much cheaper, as well as the option to have solar panels fitted to your house for an extra charge.

Finding an inexpensive green energy deal is incredibly easy with the Radio Times Switching Service. All you need to do is provide us with a few details about your current usage and then filter by "green plans" to see what's available in your area.

Once you've seen a tariff you like, you can switch online or simply call us and we'll handle the rest to ensure a seamless switchover. There's no obligation to take a deal if you can't find anything suitable.

The Radio Times Switching Service is completely free to use, so don't wait: starting saving the environment today!

Book of the Week: Mudlarking

Monday-Friday, 9.45am, 12.30am Radio 4

HE HUMAN EYEBALL looks back at us from the coffee shop table. "It was a bit creepy when I came across it," says Lara Maiklem, author of Mudlarking: Lost and Found on the River Thames. "Then I saw it was glass. They made loads of them after the First World War, because so many people lost their eyes. This one probably fell down the loo and went into the drains and then into the river."

Londoners have been dropping things down the loo and in the river since the Romans established the city, in AD 47. Maiklem puts the eye back in a Tupperware lunch box that also contains medieval coins, a 12th-century belt clasp, fragments of Renaissance drinking jugs, Hindu offerings to the gods and a child's leather shoe from the Tudor period.

Maiklem is 48 but looks much younger, possibly because she's spent the past 15 years scouring the shoreline. We are meeting near the river at Greenwich, but her beat stretches from the Thames's tidal limit at suburban Teddington, out to the "amazing and desolate" estuarine marshes of north Kent, pocked with Second

'I talk to the river when there's no one else around'

LARA MAIKLEM

World War bomb craters that await unwary feet. This is where, last week, she found part of a human skull. "I think it's probably from the old prison hulks in the estuary," she says.

Maiklem, originally from Surrey, began her mudlarking career at Hammersmith in 2005 when, at a low point in her life, the river reached out and picked her up. "I'd split up with my ex, and was having a crappy time," she says. "One day, I went down to the water to have a look. I found a clay pipe and thought, 'There must be more stuff in there.'"

There was. Including long-lost pieces of metal type (a font that is used on her book's jacket design) that, in 1916, was hurled into the river from Hammersmith Bridge by bookbinder Thomas James Cobden-Sanderson, and endless coins, which careless or drunk Londoners seem compelled to throw into the Thames.

Service of the control of the contro

Maiklem passes me a much-burnished coin with Spanish markings, dated 1645. "It's called a maravedi. They were produced by Spain for use in the Caribbean colonies. I found that at Execution Dock, Wapping, where they hanged the pirates. It's dated the year that Captain Kidd was born. He was hanged there in 1701."

Perhaps it was the famous pirate's keepsake, dropped as he twisted on the gallows, but what about Maiklem's neck? Out on the estuary the tide can come in at up to 8mph; a woman struggling through the mud in wellies does 2.1mph. "I always take a friend out on the estuary and tell the coast-guard we're going out," she says.

"In central London you have to know where your exits are, be aware when the tide is coming in and don't go out into deep mud, so you are not cut off. Slipping and falling on stones or stairs is the main danger. And sewage; you can get nasty tummy bugs."

Now Maiklem shows me a penny-sized bone counter. "It's from Lambeth Wells," she says. "Which was one of the pleasure gardens at Vauxhall. There was music but it was also where Londoners went to get a bit of hanky-panky. No one has ever found anything like this counter before, so it's a real history changer."

She has a permit from the Port of London Authority and reports any find over 300 years old and of historic significance to the Museum of London. She happily admits to being middle class, but in Victorian times mudlarking was for the destitute.

"Mudlarks were the lowest of the low," she says. "Armies of children went down there, old people, women. If they didn't find anything on a tide to sell or barter, they would end up in the workhouse. They thought wading around in st was better than being in the workhouse – that tells you how horrific the workhouses were."

Today, there are more men than women on the Thames. "There is a secret mudlark society of predominantly middle-class, middle-aged men with metal detectors," Maiklem says, "and it's impossible to get membership." Not that she would want to; male mudlarks tend to have spades, too, and they like to probe and dig into the bank. Maiklem, and (as a rule) the other women mudlarks, take only what the water offers.

Does she believe that the river has an animating spirit? Is there an Old Father Thames? "I think the river is a woman," she says. "It's got patience. Occasionally it gets angry and it floods but, on the whole, it just puts up with us. It's definitely been my therapy. I talk to the river when there's no one else around. You can just work your problems through, and switch off completely."

That is not to say that the river is benign. Two days after we meet, three bodies are found in the Thames. Maiklem remembers the first body she saw, that of a young woman who had drowned. "My reaction to it surprised me," she says. "It was strangely peaceful and intensely personal: she was just there, floating. Sadly, large numbers of people still go in the river. It always seems to have drawn people in."

On another occasion, Maiklem found a box containing human ashes that had washed up on the shore. "I thought about what to do for eight hours and then I put them back in the water," she says.

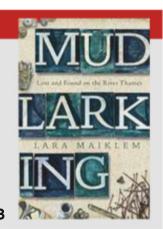

"I let the river decide, because the river is the reason we're all here. It's always been just quietly flowing through the city and it will still be flowing, long after we've gone." MICHAEL HODGES

E DEADHEAD PLANTS for various reasons.
Annuals and bedding plants, such as cosmos, dahlias, sweet peas and snapdragons, certainly look better without faded flowers, but regular deadheading will also prolong their season by look better without faded flowers, but regular deadheading will also prolong their season by stopping them producing seed, thereby tricking the plant into producing more blooms instead.

By deadheading repeat-flowering roses and some perennials (including hardy geraniums), we're encouraging them to put on a second flush towards the end of summer. Daylilies are perennials, which produce many flowers over a long period, but each only lasts a day and regular deadheading makes them more prolific. You can eat the flowers, too, which look great and taste deliciously spicy in salads.

Bulbs and most perennial plants won't produce further flowers after the initial show, but by removing spent blooms we are diverting the plant's energy away from forming seeds into creating a better plant (root and/or leaf growth) that will come back strongly next year.

Cutting seedheads off freely self-seeding plants (such as fennel or Alchemilla mollis) stops them spreading to areas where you don't want them.

But before you head out and start snipping away, it's important to remember that not all plants need deadheading. And many look great with their fading seedheads left on into winter, which benefits wildlife, too. Most roses will produce colourful and birdattracting hips if left alone, which may cause you a dilemma about whether to deadhead or not.

Once you know what to deadhead, it's a case of how to. The faded flowers of most annual and perennial flowers can simply be pinched off with your fingers and doing this regularly will result in more compact plants. For larger bedding plants, I find sharp kitchen scissors or garden snips are best, as soft new growth can be easily bruised if you use larger tools, such as secateurs.

Herbs may not need to have their flowers deadheaded, but regular pinching out or clipping back for culinary use will keep them tidy and encourage tasty new young leaves.

A common mistake with woody plants, such as repeat-flowering roses, is to remove just the flowerhead. It's better to take the stem back about a third of its length to an outward facing bud, which will encourage stronger regrowth and hopefully generate more flowers further down the line.

Walter Presents: Thou Shalt Not Kill Friday 9.00pm More4

NSPECTOR MONTALBANO FANS who tune into More4's Italian crime drama Thou Shalt Not Kill expecting sunbaked scenery will be disappointed. Whereas Montalbano's beat is southern Sicily, newcomer Chief Inspector Ferro's patch is the northern city of Turin.

"The atmosphere of the drama is very cold and very Nordic," says Miriam Leone, who plays Valeria Ferro. "Italy is a very long country, and the north is totally different from the south. Turin almost becomes a protagonist in the drama because of the light the grey tones, the shadows. It's not the Italian cliché – it's more like The Killing, and it was a new approach to crime dramas in Italy."

Like most Scandi noir

about a tough but troubled female detective. "She's the boss in a man's world," says Leone. "She's strong, smart and fragile at the same time. Her father was killed when she was a baby, and when she investigates a case, it's as if she's trying to solve her father's murder. In Mediterranean culture, it's rare that a woman is the lead in a crime show. I'm very proud of this character."

In the opening episode, the body of a young woman is found in an abandoned industrial estate and there are only brief glimpses of the city's grand boulevards and regal palazzi. A ducal city that was occupied by the > French during the Napoleonic Wars, Turin was the first capital of a united Italy in the 1860s. "It's often called 'Little Paris," says Leone. "It's a very elegant city with a beautiful old centre, big squares and many interesting museums and parks. It's great for shopping, too, with a huge flea market on

The most famous landmark is the dome of the Mole Antonelliana with its aluminium spire (main picture, below) that soars above the old town. Turin is also famous for being the birthplace of Fiat. "It's a city of many different cultures. Many Sicilians came here to work, so the most popular words are Sicilian," explains Leone, who lives in Rome and grew up in Sicily. "Not words I can tell you - bad words!"

Although you won't see Ferro downing tools for leisurely lunches as Montalbano does, Turin's oldest restaurant, the plush Del Cambio, opened in 1757. "Important historical personalities like Mozart have eaten there. It's a great place to go for a very fancy dinner," says Leone. Piedmont has a gastronomic pedigree, as the Slow Food movement originated here. Dogs are trained to scour the countryside in search of white truffles in November, with prices reaching €5,000 per kilo. Leone says that she became "obsessed" with the traditional antipasto vitello tonnato: "Very thin slices of veal

Dictionary corner Susie Dent

The word "floozy" was commonly used to describe a certain sort of woman. Where does it come from? Anthony Taylor North London

A floozy (also "floosie" and "floozie"), is defined in the Oxford Dictionary as "a girl or woman who has many casual sexual encounters or relationships".

Today, the word has a jokey feel, but in the early 1900s, it was a disdainful word for a woman of "disreputable character". Its origin hasn't been definitively nailed down, but there are two distinct contenders. The first is a dialect term "floosy", meaning "fluffy" or "soft", implying that a floozy is a bit ditzy or daft. The second is that "floozy" riffs on "flossy", a word from mid-19th-century America, which literally meant "silky" but was used in slang to mean "saucy" and "flashy". As I've found, "floozy" is also a handy rhyme for "Susie" (alongside "boozy").

LETTER OF THE WEEK

Everyone's a winner

A few years ago Feedback published a letter from me, challenging the "winner takes all" approach of talent shows. Now, at last, praise is due to The Voice Kids (ITV), who rewarded all their finalists (27 July) with a brilliant holiday to Florida, while the excellent winner still won the main prize. You could see how thrilled they all were, and the runners-up felt they had won something great, too.

This was a totally enjoyable series with remarkably talented young singers, and the coaches were just lovely, really attending to their charges and giving good feedback and praise – which was especially helpful to those who didn't get through in each round.

A model for similar shows, even for adults! Barbara Simons Bridport, Dorset

Barbara Simons wins a BOSE SoundLink Revolve speaker, in either black or silver. One of BOSE's best-performing portable Bluetooth speakers, it is water-resistant, has a rechargeable battery that plays for up to 12 hours and delivers true 360° sound, wherever you place it in the room. RRP £179.95. bose.co.uk

POLDARK'S REAL STAR

I've never liked the self-satisfied, brooding portrayal of Ross by Aidan Turner in Poldark (Sunday BBC1) and much preferred Robin Ellis in the 1970s dramatisation, which I felt reflected Winston Graham's books well.

Yes, George Warleggan in the books and that earlier TV version is quite a pantomime villain. In the new series, Jack Farthing has made him insecure and human, and for me he's the star. So what do the programme-makers do? They send George insane. How ridiculous!

Letting scriptwriter Debbie Horsfield ignore the books and concoct her own plot was a serious mistake.

Ros Williams Wells, Somerset

...Though George Warleggan's medical treatment may seem barbaric, if he had been a common man (like his blacksmith grandfather), he would have been taken to the little Cornish village of St Cleer and thrown down the holy well, whose deep, cold waters had the remarkable property of curing lunacy. (I suspect patients learnt to hide their symptoms, so they didn't get thrown down there!) My late father-in-law lived in a mining foreman's cottage in St Cleer, where I first heard this story. CHOCKS AWAY!

I thought I wouldn't find Planespotting Live (BBC4) interesting – big mistake, it was brilliant. Andi Peters, Zoe Laughlin and Arthur Williams were knowledgeable and fun, the "retired" pilots knew their stuff and were right on the ball. But why was Peter Snow there? He came over to me as awkward and bumbling and I began to feel almost sorry for him. It tells me that some of us in TV or radio have to face the fact that we were right to leave when we were winning, even if we miss it like crazy.

AFFECTING ADAPTATION

Catch-22 (C4) was both funny and so, so sad. I loved every episode and this adaptation was very close to Joseph Heller's novel, read many years ago. Christopher Abbott as the airman Yossarian was excellent, and the last sequence was heartbreaking. It affected me very much. Thank you, Channel 4, for a marvellous six weeks.

Veronica Laycock Bury St Edmunds, Suffolk

NOT STREET SMART

Trite, clichéd and superficial, ITV's Ross Kemp: Living with Homelessness (25 July) added little to the now familiar genre of TV presenters and investigative reporters probing housing issues, rough sleepers (not always the same thing), beggars and addicts.

Kemp was filmed in the obligatory sitting-in-a-doorway sequence, supposedly to get a taste of how homelessness feels; but it occupied barely a couple of minutes of the programme.

He concluded that homelessness was almost becoming a national crisis. Almost? If it isn't one already, what is?

Francis Harvey Bristol

SCANDALOUSLY GOOD

George Clarke's Council House Scandal (31 July C4) was an enlightening contribution to discussions on the social housing crisis in this country. Like his mother, my parents bought their council house when offered it at an attractive discount; I was therefore interested to hear Clarke make the point that it wasn't simply council house sales, but the woeful failure to replace lost housing stock that lies at the heart of the crisis that is upon us.

His programme gave persuasive examples from home and abroad of rented and council housing achieving their potential. I hope this exposé will stimulate consciences in those in power and start the much-needed process to put right this shameful blot on our society. Peter Woodroffe Lutterworth, Leicestershire

RIVETING DRAMA

Dark Money (BBC1) was excellent and topical, with a whole bunch of great performances from a very good cast.

As parents Sam and Manny Mensah, Jill Halfpenny and Babou Ceesay were brilliant; as were the young actors, Max Fincham (Isaac), Olive Gray (Jess) and the fabulous Tut Nyuot (so funny at times as Tyrone), as the children.

It was well put together and a riveting watch, handled with care. Thomas Hall Haywards Heath, West Sussex

THE NEW QUEEN VIC

Victoria Fritz has been sensational presenting the Victoria Derbyshire show (29 July-2 August BBC1). She made it look effortless, covering a wide range of subjects with such confidence and professionalism. More Victoria Fritz on our screens, please. Richard Snowdon Bolton

LET ME OFF THE ISLAND

The news on all channels seemed to set aside room to report on the final of Love Island (29 July ITV2). If this is considered newsworthy, then what shall I expect next? The Teletubbies having a tiff?

I choose not to watch such rubbish and am astounded that I can't get away from it when I want to be informed about world events. Angella Dare Oxford

TWO WHEELS BEST

The coverage of the Tour de France was a tour de force this year on ITV4. I loved the races within races, the complexity of the tactics, the thrills and spills, but most of all, watching the last stage where all the riders chatted amicably, regardless of teams, just happy to have taken part and done their job.

Perhaps our politicians should watch it... they might learn something about working together for a common good. Roll on the Vuelta a España.

Helen Pedley Cheddar, Somerset ITV4 will have highlights of every stage of the Vuelta from 24 August to 15 September, with live coverage daily on Eurosport.

DON'T FORGET PETRA

Prompted by Andrew Collins's article "Top of the Pups" on great movie mutts (RT, 3 August), I'd like to remind readers that, equally as loved as the film star Lassie, Petra the mongrel puppy was Britain's most famous dog on BBC television - a dog with eight million owners.

Joining Blue Peter when she was eight weeks old, Petra – named by viewers in 1962 - made no fewer than 1,192 appearances until her sad death in 1977. Sculptor William Timyn's bronze (below) still has a place of honour in the Blue Peter garden at Salford Quays. Biddy Baxter (Blue Peter producer/ editor 1962-88) London W1

A 20TH-CENTURY HIT

I was disappointed that RT's poll to find the most-missed TV shows (3 August) only included those broadcast in the 21st century. I would like to have been able to nominate the wonderful comedy drama Moving Story

(1994-5), created by Jack Rosenthal. It starred the late Warren Clarke, Phil Davis, Con O'Neill, Ronny Jhutti and Kenneth Colley as a group of removal men transporting the contents of people's homes in Elite Removals' van, the "African Queen". It was gentle, warm and funny, a real gem.

EVIE WAS SUBLIME

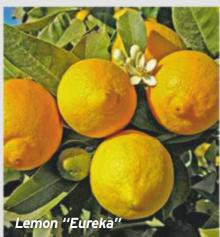

I am a major fan and advocate of radio drama, but was never moved to write a letter until now, after hearing The Interrogation: Evie (26 July Radio 4).

The nuanced performance of Marcia Warren as Evie was sublime. But what reduced me to tears was the humanity of Max and Sean's (Kenneth Cranham and Alex Lanipekun) post-interview chat, with its succinct acknowledgment of the sometimes-flawed legal system.

For a moment I forgot this was a drama and wanted to know what happened to Evie - a testament to the fantastic acting and the writing of Roy Williams. Congratulations to all involved, and keep them coming. Vicki Barton Sunderland ▷

READER REPORT

The beginning of the end for mumbling?

Ever since "Mumblegate" in 2014, when the BBC took a lot of flak for Jamaica Inn's "inaudible" dialogue, RT readers have complained about having to strain to hear. The good news is that the BBC is developing some new technology that will allow viewers to adjust the sound balance to suit themselves.

An online trial uses an episode of BBC1's Casualty to demonstrate how it works. So far, more than 4,000 people have given it a go with an 80 per cent approval rate. The project leader, 29-year-old Australian Lauren Ward, would love RT readers to join in. Go to bit.ly/ae-audio – as well as the volume control, there's a pink box with a "slider" that you can move across to the left, from standard audio at the right-hand end, to steadily reduce background noise.

Ward heads a core team of ten. Developed from her PhD studies at the University of Salford over three years, the trial grew out of a Research Council-funded project, S3A: a collaboration between BBC Research and Development and the Universities of Southampton, Surrey and Salford on making TV more accessible for audiences.

So how did Casualty get involved? "Their team are really keen to try new and different things," she tells RT. "It was a natural fit and working with them has been absolutely fantastic.

"Because human hearing is so complex, even if it's 'normal', there can be certain things that you as an individual will struggle with. So to be able to give people control over the mix so they can find what works for them is, I believe, the way forward.

"In the current way broadcasting is done, everything – foreground sounds, background sounds - is mixed into one single stream of information. So it's very hard to change. An analogy is that it's like trying to unmake porridge – once you've mixed the ingredients and warmed the porridge up, you can't get it back to its constituent oats, milk and water."

he technology Ward's working with does it very differently: "Rather than send you the complete 'porridge', we're sending the individual parts. And instead of the mixing going on at the BBC or the production house, it goes on in your own computer or TV. So if you want more or less of something, or don't want something to go into the mix at all, you make those decisions."

This technology is only in the experimental stage, and it's not yet close to being introduced on iPlayer or our TVs at home, but Ward says, "I'd expect over the next three to five years certainly, streaming services will use this - the videoon-demand services have more flexibility by being over the internet."

Once the trial finishes, at the end of August, Ward's team will look at what has worked, both for audiences and programme-makers. "The next step is to look at how we make the tools for producers to generate this kind of content. And if we can make something easy to do, it's got a far greater chance of being adopted.

"One blanket solution – say, turning the music down – is not going to work for everyone, and certainly it's not going to work creatively. So it's got to be something that people can have some control over, and find the version that works best for them."

PAST STARTERS

With reference to RT's feature (13 July) on BBC2's University Challenge, I wonder why past series don't earn a repeat showing. The same applies, I would argue, to Only Connect.

Even if we have enjoyed those cerebral clashes before, there would still be great pleasure in seeing the contests played out once more. In the case of University Challenge, the BBC has a quarter-century of material for us to happily wallow in! Simon Warner Halifax, West Yorkshire

SEDUCED BY THE BORG

I now know for sure that there is a parallel universe out there. In 1795, in Beecham House, an Indian empress seduces her injured lover, General Castillon, with "Resistance is futile" (21 July ITV). This was the favourite saying of the Borg in Star Trek: the Next Generation. Rosalind Redwood Hitchin, Hertfordshire

HOW TO HELP FUND A BETTER RETIREMENT

Most dream of a comfortable retirement. After decades of working, finally having complete control over how you spend time is alluring

Whether you have your heart set on more family time, booking that cruise of a lifetime, or simply getting around to home improvement projects you've always desired – everyone has different dreams for their later years. But what if you haven't enough in your pension pot to afford the dream?

Equity release is one option that more homeowners aged over 55 are turning to in order to help fund the retirement they want. With a lifetime mortgage, the most popular form of equity release – a loan secured against your home – you can unlock tax-free cash from your property to spend as you wish. People use it in all sorts of ways from home improvements and holidays to gifting to loved ones or using it as a regular income.

STAY IN THE HOME YOU LOVE

While some feel that downsizing is the only option to raise funds, an ERC-approved equity release plan allows you to stay in your home for the rest of your life.

- With a lifetime mortgage, there are typically no monthly payments to make as the loan, plus roll-up interest, is repaid when the plan comes to an end
- Equity release will reduce the value of your estate and may affect your entitlement to means-tested benefits
- You can guarantee an inheritance for your family with some plans

Use our free online calculator to find out how much you could release from your home. Last year Key customers were able to release an average of $£86,000^{}$ from their homes. Your home could help fund the retirement you always dreamt of.

Unless you decide to go ahead, Key's service is completely free of charge, as Key's usual advice fee of 1.99 per cent of the amount released would only be payable on completion of a plan, subject to a minimum advice fee of £1,499. Visit radiotimes.com/equity

WHY CHOOSE KEY

If you think that equity release could be an option for you, the first step is to seek information from specialist equity release advisers.

- Trustworthy our five-star Trustpilot record speaks for itself. With more than 20 years' experience, our award-winning service has helped over a million people decide if equity release is right for them
- Open we'll guide you through the options available to you and, if equity release isn't right for you, we'll tell you
- Tailored we know that everyone is different: the plans we recommend will always be tailored for your circumstances so you can get what you want from equity release
- Peace of mind we recommend plans approved by the Equity Release Council (ERC), the sector's governing body: if you decide to go ahead, you'll get a dedicated case handler who will be there every step of the way – we'll handle all the paperwork!

View from my sofa

CAROL KIRKWOOD

My cat watches the forecast'

The upbeat weather presenter has many fans – but is she ever gloomy?

What do you enjoy watching on television, Carol?

As I'm up at 2.45am for a 4.30am start, I'm usually in bed by 8pm, so not a lot of live TV! I am a bit of a news junkie, everything else is on demand. If it's raining outside, I'll spend the whole afternoon enjoying a cup of tea with catch-up.

What have you most enjoyed watching recently?

Bodyguard and Line of Duty – they can't come back fast enough for me. I love the twists and turns. Would I Lie to You? – those guys are so clever and so witty. And Fleabag. Plus, I loved Suranne Jones in Gentleman Jack. I want to watch Killing Eve and The Widow.

And what's your sofa like?

It's an old, brown, comfy leather sofa that my cat, Donald, loves to sink his claws into. He jumps up and watches whatever I'm watching. Spookily, he's particularly interested in watching the weather. My other half told me that when Donald was a kitten he used to come into the room, see me on the TV and walk behind the screen to see if I was there.

What do you make of this summer's weather?

The safest answer is that there will be days when temperatures are way above average, days when they're below average, days when it's wet and days when it's dry. Being an island, there are so many variations.

Does volatile weather give you more of a thrill?

Yes, I get excited when we see hurricanes. I went storm chasing in America and saw three tornados. But I met a farmer who said, "Ma'am, with all due respect, I hope that you don't find one, because it could destroy everything we've worked so hard for." Wow. That's a reminder that you have to temper all the stats with the fact that some of this is life-threatening.

Your fans are very enthusiastic – what's the most memorable thing you've been sent?

Mostly I get asked where my clothes are from. Occasionally you'll get somebody complaining that you're standing in front of Cornwall. People send millions of pictures of cats – I'm not complaining, because I love cats. When I'm on location I post pictures: the other day, on HMS Enterprise, I posted a photo of me standing by a picture they had up of Captain Kirk and wrote, "The real Captain Kirk." It got retweeted, and William Shatner liked it.

You were great on Strictly Come Dancing. Do you still watch the show, and would you do any more reality TV?

Strictly is amazing. It's fun, it's a skill you learn and it's a really nice programme to work on. I have been asked to do others as well, but I work on a programme that all ages watch, so which moments stand out? When, at the end of a forecast from

In 21 years of broadcasting,

When, at the end of a forecast from the Blue Peter garden, I touched a carefully sculpted snow teapot, and it disintegrated in front of my eyes. Two blizzards where producers have literally been hanging onto my leg and I could hardly speak because it was so cold. And recently at Royal Ascot I said I was so hungry I could eat a horse. Not a wise thing to say at Ascot...

some programmes aren't right, and others require a lot of time away.

You're so cheerful on air – is there anything that makes you grumpy?

People pulling out in front of you on the motorway without indicating. And if you're much more than 20 minutes late, I'm fuming! STEPHEN ARMSTRONG

NOTHING TO WATCH?

MY RADIO I always have the radio on and love music with a passion. I'll listen to 5 Live in the car, and Magic and Smooth at home.

MY THEATRE I love going to the theatre, musicals in particular, and recently went to my first opera, La bohème. I always thought opera was huge gowns and singing in Latin, but I could not have been more wrong.

AN DERRY

LUXURY CHERRY BLOSSOM & MOUNT FUJI EXPLORER

NEW FOR 2021 12 nights, departing 11 April 2021, including Queen Elizabeth cruise, from £3,199pp

Discover Japan, awash with the beautiful cherry blossom of spring, with a hotel stay in Tokyo, a fully escorted tour of Mount Fuji and a cruise on board the elegant liner Queen Elizabeth.

Springtime in Japan heralds the arrival of cherry blossom season, one of the most anticipated and celebrated times of year. You'll start your holiday in Tokyo, where despite the pace of this ultra-modern city's life, there's always time to indulge in "hanami", or cherry blossom viewing. Make your way to the Shinjuku Gyoen National Garden or Ueno Park to marvel at the sight of hundreds of flowering trees and join the locals in picnicking under the trees.

During your stay in Tokyo, you'll also enjoy a fully escorted tour of Mount Fuji, Japan's highest mountain. Drink in the stunning panoramas from halfway up the mountain before taking a ride over hot springs on the Hakone Ropeway cable car. You'll also enjoy a boat trip across serene Lake Ashi, a picturesque crater lake, before the bullet train whisks you back to Tokyo.

Following your stay, you'll embark Queen Elizabeth, one of the finest cruise liners sailing the oceans. You'll cruise first to Kobe, where you can sample some of the city's famous beef or visit Osaka, one of the best places in Japan to see cherry blossom. After calling at the friendly city of Kochi with its famous streetcars, you'll visit Kagoshima, a geothermal wonderland of hot springs where you can sample the spirit sake, followed by Busan, South Korea's second city.

Your final port of call is Nagasaki with its fascinating mix of Spanish, Dutch and Portuguese influences, before your cruise ends back in Tokyo.

- Three-night hotel stay in Tokyo
- Fully escorted tour of Mount Fuji including the Hakone Ropeway cable car
- Fully escorted boat trip across Lake Ashi
- High-speed bullet train back to Tokyo
- Nine-night cruise on board Queen Elizabeth with all meals and entertainment
- All transfers
- All flights (London departure regional airports available)
