

Editorial note

C.J. Cramer, P.G. Truhlar

Department of Chemistry, University of Minnesota, 207 Pleasant Street SE, Minneapolis, MN 55455-0431, USA

Published online: 16 May 2003
© Springer-Verlag 2003

The journal would like to clarify a possible misunderstanding in the instructions to authors. In particular, the following will be added to the next published version of the instructions to authors: The essential content of submitted articles must not have been published before (except as a part of a published abstract or in a review or thesis). An exception occurs when the submitted article is an overview article, feature article, or review, and it is made clear that the essential content is a summary or analysis of previous work. Furthermore, except for very short fragments, the wording of submitted articles should not be verbatim duplication of previously published work (by the authors or others) unless the material is placed in quotation marks, the original source is properly cited or credited, and, if required, permission is obtained from the copyright holder.'