

Report to Congress Concerning
Certain United States Personnel
Classified as Prisoner of War or Missing in Action During World War II or the Korean Conflict

Introduction

As required by Section 406 of the Intelligence Authorization Act (Public Law 102-183), Fiscal Year 1992, this report -- concerning certain United States personnel classified as prisoner of war or missing in action (POW/MIA) during World War II or the Korean conflict -- is forwarded to the Select Committee on POW/MIA Affairs and the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate and the Committee on Armed Services and the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence of the House of Representatives.

Information in this report was gathered from the Secretaries of the Military Departments, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Under Secretary of Defense (Policy), Assistant Secretaries of Defense, Comptroller, General Counsel, Director of Administration and Management, and Directors of Defense Agencies.

As noted in the responses received from the various Department of Defense elements, most of the records concerning POW/MIAs from World War II and Korea have been transferred to the National Archives and Records Administration (NARA). As a result, within the 90 days Congress allocated to completing this report, uncertainties remain as to the level of research required to determine the scope of identifying, segregating and relocating POW/MIA records from both World War II and Korea. An assessment of cost at this time can only be made in terms of the Department's experience with Vietnam era POW/MIA records.

Two private research firms are assisting the Department of Defense in developing approaches through which U.S. Government officials and private citizens can systematically research cases involving missing personnel between 1941 and 1975. An overview of these efforts is included in this report. Additionally, the Federal Research Division of the Library of Congress has provided some recommendations for developing a database for POW/MIA related materials from World War II, Korea and the Cold War.

The National Archives and Records Administration (NARA) maintains most War Department and Department of Defense records on members of the Armed Forces from World War II and the Korean conflict. Numbers for members who were unaccounted for and whose remains have not been recovered are represented in Table 1. These individuals are honored at American Battle Monuments Commission memorials.

Unaccounted for in World War II and the Korean conflict are combined in casualty listings. Separate unaccounted for listings could be developed from American Battle Monument Commission registers for World War II and Korea and the Korean casualty database maintained by the National Archives.

from World War II and Korea. Army military pay records from this era may exist only if the member separated or retired after 1954. These records are stored at NARA's Federal Archives and Records Center, Dayton, Ohio. Requests for records information can be made through DFAS-Indianapolis Center (DFAS-IN/KMD), Indianapolis, IN 46249-0001.

Pay records for former Navy military members are microfilmed and stored at NPRC. These can be accessed through written request to DFAS-Cleveland Center (DFAS-CL/JJ), 1240 East Ninth Street, Cleveland, OH 44199-2055.

Air Force military member pay records from the Korean conflict are located at either NPRC or NARA's Federal Archives and Records Center in Denver, Colorado. Requests for pay record information may be made through the DFAS - Denver Center (DFAS-DE/WAD), Denver, CO 80279-5000.

Pay records for former Marine Corps military members who were separated during or shortly after World War II are filed with personnel records maintained at NPRC. The extent to which records exist after this time is unknown. Requests for Marine Corps pay records can be made through DFAS-Kansas City Center (DFAS-KC/J), Kansas City, MO 64197-0001.

Military pay record information, if available, is releasable within the parameters of the Freedom of Information Act and the Privacy Act of 1974. Records are filed by individual name and there is no coding which distinguishes POW/MIA records from others.

All Department of Defense individual deceased personnel files for POW/MIA from World War II and the Korean conflict are maintained by the Army. These records are stored at the Washington National Records Center in Suitland, Maryland. Individual deceased personnel records are filed alphabetically and stored together with records of Armed Forces personnel who died during these wars. There is no distinction between those unaccounted for and those whose bodies were recovered. World War II records are stored in over 10,000 separate boxes containing more than 3,000 pages each.

Records for individuals unaccounted for in Korea are stored similarly in one alphabetical grouping. There are approximately 1,400 separate boxes.

Individual deceased personnel files for this era are available to family members and members of the public. Individual records may be obtained upon request to Commander, U.S. Total Army Personnel Command, ATTN: TAPC-PED-F, 2461 Eisenhower Avenue, Alexandria, Virginia 22331-0482.

The Army Central Identification Laboratory, Hawaii (CILHI), has initiated a project to screen, identify, and extract data from the individual deceased personnel files from the Korean conflict where remains have not been recovered. The database to be developed as a result of this effort will be used to identify on-hand and any future remains that may be recovered from Korea.

In addition to individual Personnel and Pay records, the National Archives and Records Administration (NARA) also holds general Department of Defense records pertaining to World War II and Korea. Information on POW/MIAs can be found in some of these records. Records that may contain POW/MIA information are included in Appendix A. Of these, less than 20 percent are maintained by the Department of Defense. For a more comprehensive listing and description, considerable archival research would be required.

Most of the records at National Archives are releasable to the public. A very small percentage of the records require review for declassification. Classified files are being declassified or sanitized through an ongoing systematic review with priority on specific Freedom of Information Act requests.

Assessment of the feasibility and costs of identifying, segregating, and relocating all such records to a central location within the United States.

As noted in the previous section, War Department and Department of Defense records and files concerning Prisoners of War and Missing in Action from World War II and Korea, maintained by the National Archives and Records Administration (NARA), are located in Washington, DC; Suitland, Maryland; St. Louis, Missouri; Dayton, Ohio; and Denver, Colorado. Files maintained by the Department of Defense are located at the Washington National Records Center in Suitland, Maryland. Further research would be required to locate other U.S. Government and international organization records on POW/MIAs.

Independent of feasibility or utility of centralizing these records, a cost estimate could be based on experience the Department of Defense has gleaned working with Vietnam-era POW/MIA records. Although the Vietnam-era records are far more known and accessible, an estimate in the range of $10-20 million to centralize World War II/Korean conflict records is not unlikely. Great care would be required for reproduction of many of the records held by NPRC. Because of the 1973 fire, many of the remaining World War II and Korea records are fragile and require special handling so as not to cause further damage. ...

Two ongoing efforts sponsored by the Department of Defense are focused on further identifying records and other information on those unaccounted for from World War II and Korea. The result of these efforts will assist in determining the feasibility of segregating and centralizing records to a single location.

The Institute for Defense Analysis is conducting a survey of official records pertaining to U.S. Military and Government personnel declared missing between 1941 and 1975. The goal of this effort is to present a handbook by which U.S. Government officials and private citizens can systematically research cases involving missing personnel. The handbook would tell the reader what kinds of records are available, where these records are, and how to gain access to them. This effort would also identify what kinds of relevant records were known to have been created, but no longer exist, and cannot now be located. Each record repository will be described as to location, access restrictions, and relevant holdings. Databases and record guides to assist in records searches will be included. Flow chart and checklist research approaches will be outlined. The handbook, as required by the contract, will be available in February 1993.

RAND is also under a Department of Defense contract to do research on those unaccounted for from Korea. The RAND study will focus on American servicemen who were reported missing in action, presumed killed (body not recovered), or who were taken prisoner but remain unaccounted for. RAND research will be focused to describe United States and United Nations efforts made to retrieve those missing in action, prisoners of war, and remains of deceased servicemen buried in North Korea. This report suggests options that could lead to a fuller accounting for U.S. personnel. Study results are expected to be available in June 1992.

In response to an informal Department of Defense request, the Federal Research Division of the Library of Congress recommended developing a database for World War II, Korea, and Cold War POW/MIAs. Historical research suggested would involve consultation with Service POW/MIA action officers and historians, National Archives and Records Administration, other Federal government offices, state and private veterans groups, and POW/MIA organizations. The recommendations presented by the Federal Research Division included doing historical records research both within the U.S. and in other countries such as the former Soviet Union. Preliminary cost estimates for these services would range from approximately $250,000 for a literature search of relevant publications on POW/MIA affairs with emphasis on individual cases to nearly $1,700,000 for development of individual case files from sources both inside and outside the U.S.

At this time, efforts to determine the feasibility of segregating and centralizing POW/MIA records from World War II and Korea are incomplete. The results of the ongoing Institute for Defense Analysis and RAND studies are required for a more conclusive determination of the feasibility, cost and utility of centralizing all known records of individuals unaccounted for from World War II and the Korean conflict.

In conclusion, it is recommended that continued work on this issue be performed by experienced specialists in historical and archival research. This research has already been initiated with the RAND and Institute for Defense Analysis contracts cited above.
