

J. S. VANHORN.
Sleeve-Protector.

No. 203,676.

Patented May 14, 1878.

Fig. 1.

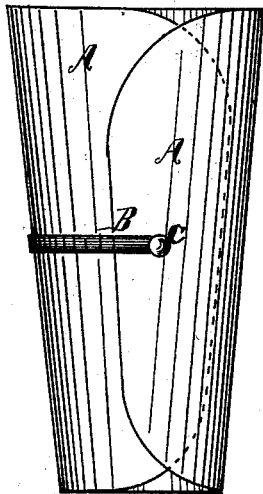

Fig. 2.

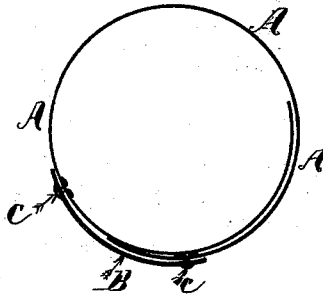

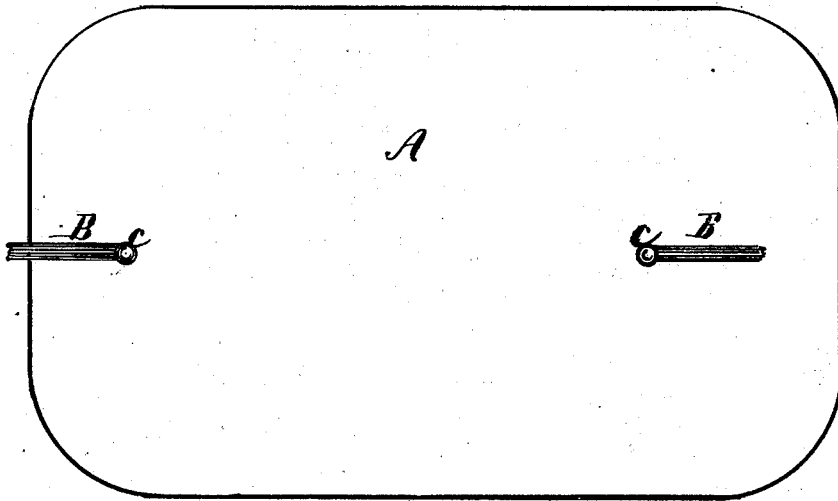

Fig. 3.

Witnesses:
J. Bieritt,
Ch. Reigleman

Inventor:
Joseph S. Vanhorn,
Per: Richardo Gernet,
Atty.

UNITED STATES PATENT OFFICE.

JOSEPH S. VANHORN, OF NEW YORK, N. Y., ASSIGNOR TO WILLIAM H. WOGLOM, OF SAME PLACE.

IMPROVEMENT IN SLEEVE-PROTECTORS.

Specification forming part of Letters Patent No. 203,676, dated May 14, 1878; application filed March 28, 1878.

To all whom it may concern:

Be it known that I, JOSEPH S. VANHORN, of the city of New York, in the county of New York and State of New York, have invented new and useful Improvements in Self-Adjusting Cuff and Sleeve Protector; and I hereby declare that the following is an exact and true description of my invention, which will enable others to make and use the same, reference being had to the accompanying drawing, forming a part of this specification, and to the letters of reference marked thereon.

My invention consists in constructing a cuff and shirt-sleeve protector out of a piece of paper or other suitable fabric or material, cut or stamped into such a form that it will fit over any shirt wristband and sleeve by the ends overlapping each other, and made to adjust themselves over the arm by the aid of an elastic rubber band attached by suitable fastenings to the cuff.

Referring to the drawing, Figure 1 is a side view of my improved self-adjusting cuff and sleeve protector. Fig. 2 is a plan sectional view, and Fig. 3 is a plan view of the cuff before the elastic band is attached thereto.

A represents the cuff; B, the elastic band, and c c the fastenings by aid of which the elastic band is attached to the cuff.

I am aware of the patent granted to O. H. Dunn, July 27, 1875, No. 165,921, and such I do not claim; but

I desire to claim—

As a new article of manufacture, the self-adjusting cuff or sleeve protector, consisting of the cuff A, provided with the elastic band B and fastening devices c c, constructed and arranged substantially as described.

JOSEPH S. VANHORN.

Witnesses:

F. BARRITT,
CH. RIEGELMAN.