Comment: [redacted] previously reported [redacted]

[redacted]

[redacted] the movement of Soviet artillery and infantry units across the Chongchon River in early May.

A one-hour Russian-language voice transmission was intercepted on 14 April. The transmission seemed to be disguised field artillery fire directions passed between a forward observer, a unit commander and battery positions.

There is, however, no confirmation of the existence of any organized Soviet combat unit engaged in the Korean war other than antiaircraft artillery and Soviet-piloted MIG-15's.
