The following is the forward Congressman Henry B. Gonzalez of San Antonio, Texas, wrote for the first edition of Coup D'Etat in America.

On November 21, 1963, I accompanied my good friend President John Kennedy to my home city of San Antonio where he was very warmly and enthusiastically received. I had wanted, and the people of my Congressional District had wanted him to stay longer in San Antonio and to dedicate the new John F. Kennedy High School there. The high school is in the poorest of the ten San Antonio school districts, and overwhelming Hispanic. The President promised me he would come back to San Antonio to dedicate the school. I had tried to dissuade the White House schedulers from including Dallas on the itinerary because of the climate of hate which prevailed there at the time against the President. But then Democratic Governor John Connally told us in the Democratic Congressional delegation the purpose of the trip was to raise funds for the 1964 Presidential election. So, after San Antonio, I continued with the Presidential party to Houston, and then to Dallas where the President died. I wound up at Parkland Hospital and spent what seemed interminable hours in the confusion there, and one point, finding Jacqueline Kennedy in a hall, sitting alone as in a trance. I happened to be in front of the room where the President's body lay. I suppose I really had questions from the start as to why he died, who killed him, and what directions had the bullets come? I was in car number four of the motorcade, and distinctly heard three shots. However, I wanted very much, as did most Americans, to accept the official findings, especially those of the Warren Commission, despite the fact that there were many questions being raised, among them rumors and speculations which I thought were too fantastic to believe.

It was not until the matter involving Vice President Spiro Agnew in September 1973, and then the 1974 impeachment hearings that my suspicions became sufficiently aroused regarding the death of President Kennedy. Some of the Watergate witnesses testified to the effect that there was great animosity against the President among those involved in the Bay of Pigs fiasco - to the point that some were interested in taking the greatest retaliation possible against him. Also, I couldn't understand how an "expert gunman" like OSWALD could miss his target when he had a clear shot at General Edwin Walker shortly before November 22, 1963.

At the time of the publication of the first edition of Coup D'Etat in America (1975) I was urging the enactment of my House Resolution (H. Res. 204) calling for the establishment of a select committee for the purpose of studying the assassination of President Kennedy, U.S. Senator Robert Kennedy, and Dr. Martin Luther King, and the attempted assassination of Governor George Wallace. The purpose of such a study was, of course, to determine if we could prevent further national decisions by bullets, rather than by ballots, and the detrimental impact on our democratic and governmental processes. Subsequently, in the late 1976 a select committee was forming in the U.S. House for the purpose of studying President Kennedy's and Dr. King's deaths with the House Speaker naming a colleague of ours as chairman. The new chairman, as well as the Speaker himself, planned to leave Congress at the end of 1976 - just three months away! This is the only time in the House's history a "lame duck" was appointed the chairman of a committee.

In January 1977 I was faced with the challenge of having to defend the need to reestablish the select committee in the new Congress. (Select committees die at the end of each Congress and have to be legislated back into existence if they continue their work.) Unfortunately, the former chairman and former colleague had placed a staff director in charge who had taken some actions which left the chances for reconstitution of the committee shaky. After getting the committee reestablished, but with a limited initial budget, the new Speaker named me as Assassination Committee Chairman. I resigned shortly thereafter when the House leadership failed to support me in the firing of the staff director. Later, under another chairman, within a few days of assuming the chair, the staff director was finally fired. The committee spent $6 million and issued reports which were inconclusive about what happened in respect to the assassination of President Kennedy and Dr. King.

Since the mid-1970's, people from throughout the country - pathologists, writers, social scientists - have shared with me their own private investigations. Among the writers I have gotten to know and who have shared with me their investigation of the John F. Kennedy assassination are Michael Canfield and A.J. Weberman. In this new edition of Coup D'état in America, Canfield and ajweberman continue to offer important research in our important quest, as a people, to learn the truth regarding the death of President Kennedy. Our quest has been a long one, and hopefully we are coming to the end of it soon. Murder will out.

Dear Mr. Weberman:

Thank you for your letter of December 1, 1996, addressed to Ms. Gail Beagle who is no longer on my staff. Please know that I have noted with interest that you have established a site on the World Wide Web that contains much of the information in Coup D'Etat in America.

I am honored that you are using the introduction which I wrote to the text in 1992. As I do not have any additional comments or information to add to my original piece for the book, I would be pleased to have you continue to use the introduction as it appears in the text.

With every good wish, I remain

Sincerely,

Henry B. Gonzalez

THE RIGHTWING DALLAS FBI FORMER SAC WHO TRIED TO DESTROY THE CIA / TRAMP THEORY OF THE KENNEDY ASSASSINATION

On November 22, 1963 E. HOWARD HUNT, FRANK ANTHONY STURGIS and DAVID LEMAR CHRIST were picked up 2 hours after Kennedy was gunned down disguised as tramps in a gondola car in back of the Texas School Book Depository. The FBI and CIA have done everything they could to cover up this fact. In 1992, Oliver Stone's film, JFK, was going to ask serious questions about the tramps. JFK caused a distinguished FBI high official Oliver "Buck" Revell to float an April 1992 false news story which stated the FBI had finally identified the tramps, and they were not HUNT or STURGIS. This is a lie and Oliver Buck Revell, the former Special Agent in Charge of the Dallas FBI office, is a dirty lowdown liar. The arrest records of the Dallas Police Department indicated that three tramps were picked up in a boxcar "immediately after shots were fired" then two hours later the transcripts of Dallas Police radio transmissions, as found in the Warren Commission Exhibits, clearly indicated that a second set of three tramps were picked up at 2:00 PM from a gondola car. He knows this. The Rockefeller Commission reported that 8 tramps in total were picked up on that fateful day.

About six or eight persons, referred to as "derelicts," were found in or near the freight cars. These persons were taken either to the nearby Dallas County Sheriff's office, or to the Dallas Police Department for questioning. All were released without any arrest records being made, or any fingerprinting or photographing being done by the authorities.

JFK TRAMPS, FBI SAYS, WERE JUST VAGRANTS

Washington, D.C. Nearly 29 years after the assassination of John Kennedy, the FBI has finally tracked down the mysterious three tramps arrested that day in Dallas and concluded they were just tramps. The FBI's Dallas Office said it traced the tramps after their names were printed in Texas newspapers...One tramp, Gus Abrams, is dead, the FBI said, but agents found and interviewed John Forrester Gedney in Melbourne, Florida and Harold Doyle in Klamath Falls, Oregon. They said they were at a mission the day of the assassination, 'had gotten some food and had gotten cleaned up and were wandering back toward the railroad yard' when they were arrested, said Oliver Revell, Dallas FBI Office head. Some theorists postulated that the tramps were future Watergate burglars HOWARD HUNT and FRANK STURGIS.

Journalist Ron Kessler reported: "Having begun his career as liaison to the FBI on the JFK assassination, Oliver Revell recently completed the circle in Dallas by instructing agents to try and find the three so-called tramps...Prompted by the controversy created by JFK Oliver Revell's decision 30 years after the event illustrates the discretion FBI agents have." [Kessler, Ron The FBI Pocket Books 1993 p162] Thanks to Special Agent in Charge Oliver Revell and the prestige of the FBI, most people with an interest in the assassination of President John F. Kennedy believe the tramp shot theory has been laid to rest. Don't let Oliver Revell pull the wool over your eyes. Revell and the other members of the FBI's hierarchy covered up the truth about the assassination of President John F. Kennedy in 1964. Revell began his career in the FBI in November 1964. He published a book entitled G-Man's Journal to chronicle his experiences in the FBI from the Kennedy assassination to the Oklahoma City bombing. Revell had been Director of the Criminal Division, Counter-Terrorism Section, of the FBI. He worked closely with CIA Plans Director Clair George. [Emerson Secret Warriors p288] In September 1987, Revell was placed in charge of a joint FBI/CIA U.S. military operation (Operation Goldenrod) which led to the first apprehension overseas of an international terrorist. President Reagan commended him for his leadership of this endeavor. In May 1991, he was awarded the FBI Medal for Meritorious Achievement and the following month received the National Intelligence Distinguished Service Medal by the Director of Central Intelligence, William H. Webster.

Oliver Revell had been installed by FBI Director William Webster as one of three executive Assistant Directors of the FBI. Revell was reprimanded over ABSCAM leaks after he failed a polygraph test. [<http://www.nytimes.com/1981/01/13/us/punishment-is-urged-for-federal-officials-tied-to-abscam-leaks.html>] Revell directed break-ins of the Committee In Solidarity with the People of El Salvador (CISPES) and Revell was a figure in Contragate. In 1986 Oliver North asked Oliver Revell to investigate the funding of the Christic Institute. The Christic Institute was a Washington-based group that investigated the illegal Contra supply operation. FBI documents revealed that Oliver North asked Oliver Revell to intervene to postpone the Federal grand jury appearance of a figure involved in funneling money to the Nicaraguan Contras. FBI Director William Webster, who had not been informed of the North/Revell contact, stated that he could not think of another lapse like this during his nine-year tenure as Director. Oliver Revell was demoted to Director for Investigations. When William Sessions became FBI Director, Oliver Revell was further demoted.

On May 28, 1991, Revell assumed the position of Special Agent in Charge, Dallas Division (covering the northern half of Texas). On May 1, 1992, the Attorney General of the United States ordered Revell to Los Angeles and placed him in command of joint Federal law enforcement efforts to suppress the riots and civil disorder. He was also assigned responsibility to coordinate the law enforcement activities of military forces assigned to combat the riots in Los Angeles. Attorney General William Barr presented Revell the Attorney General's Special Commendation Award for "outstanding leadership in overseeing Federal law enforcement agencies response to civil disorder in Los Angeles". He retired from the Federal Bureau of Investigation on August 31, 1994 with the restored rank of Associate Deputy Director.

THE LAST CONFESSION OF E. HOWARD HUNT

What truth did Revell hope to suppress? In 1975, the book Coup D'Etat in America, The CIA and the Assassination of John Kennedy, by A. J. Weberman and Michael Canfield, was published by the Third Press in New York City. This book identified two of the Dealey Plaza tramps as HUNT and STURGIS and provided background on these two men based on FBI documents. In 1976 HOWARD HUNT sued Canfield and I for having written Coup D'Etat in America. He lost, and agreed to pay us $300, which we never received. Just before he died HOWARD HUNT admitted to having been a "benchwarmer" in the plot to kill Kennedy but steadfastly denied he was one of the tramps picked up in Dealey Plaza. Extensive research indicated that so many CIA officials, agents and contract agents were involved in the "big event" that assassination of President John F. Kennedy was a coup d'etat carried out by CIA. It was not an official CIA operation, but it just as might well have been. Then the CIA and FBI intentionally covered-up the connection of its employees to the assassination of former President John F. Kennedy. The mob was also involved in the "big event." In the early 1960's the CIA and the Mafia, two of the most powerful institutions in America teamed up to assassinate Castro and overthrow Communism in Cuba. CIA's interest was ideological, the mobs was monetary as Castro had closed down their highly profitable casinos. But the main motivation behind the Kennedy assassination was the Bay of Pigs. After Kennedy withdrew air support for the Bay of Pigs invasion (sabotage) and signed a deal with the Soviets to guarantee the integrity of Communist Cuba in return for the USSR withdrawing its missiles those same two institutions came together again in a plot to kill not Castro, but Kennedy. HOWARD HUNT wrote:

Other scenarios include the assassination of Kennedy by a Cuban organization angered by the president's failure to go after Castro again. After the Bay of Pigs, I had many of the principals come to me asking, "Eduardo, let me know when we are going to do it again!" I tried to suppress any hope of reconstituting the invasion, as we had created as massive an effort as we ever hoped for, and its lack of success was probably final. It was apparent that any successful attack would entail the use of a great many U.S. troops, not a brigade of hastily trained adventurers. It was very discouraging news to the Cuban exile movement, which began to hate Kennedy for preventing the needed air support. When Kennedy compounded his mistake by promising Khrushchev that the United States would not invade Cuba, a lot of exile groups felt that the president had sold them out. The leadership group in the Frente [the shadow Cuban Government set up by CIA] definitely considered him a traitor to the cause and were especially bitter and hostile to the president, whom they had once supported vociferously over Nixon. [HUNT American Spy]

All of the people involved in the planning and effectuating of the “big event” were connected to the Bay of Pigs Invasion. GERALD PATRICK HEMMING, a anti-Communist militant close to the Bay of Pigs Brigade cooked up an elaborate plot to blame this assassination on his stooge OSWALD, who had just returned from a mission to the Soviet Union during which he pretended to defect, supplied the SOVs with the data they needed to shoot down the U-2 and sabotaged the upcoming US USSR Summit. Evidence suggested that in 1959 HEMMING secretly put OSWALD in touch with CIA Counter-Intelligence (CI) Chief JAMES JESUS ANGLETON who cooked up this diabolical plan.

I was on to ANGLETON years ago and other dudes on the opposite end of things than myself are getting hip. John M. Newman spent 20 years with the U.S. Army Intelligence. This included serving in Thailand, the Philippines, Japan, and China. He eventually became executive assistant to the director of the National Security Agency (NSA). After leaving the NSA Newman joined the University of Maryland where he taught courses in Soviet, Chinese Communist, East Asian, and Vietnam War history, as well as Sino-Soviet and U.S.-Soviet relations. A new edition of Newman’s book, Oswald and the CIA, was published in 2008. Newman argues that James Angleton was probably the key figure in the assassination of John F. Kennedy:

In my view, whoever Oswald's direct handler or handlers were, we must now seriously consider the possibility that Angleton was probably their general manager. No one else in the Agency had the access, the authority, and the diabolically ingenious mind to manage this sophisticated plot. No one else had the means necessary to plant the WWII virus in Oswald's files and keep it dormant for six weeks until the president's assassination. Whoever those who were ultimately responsible for the decision to kill Kennedy were, their reach extended into the national intelligence apparatus to such a degree that they could call upon a person who knew its inner secrets and workings so well that he could design a failsafe mechanism into the fabric of the plot. The only person who could ensure that a national security cover-up of an apparent counterintelligence nightmare was the head of counterintelligence.

In 1962, after OSWALD returned to the US after his successful U-2 DUMP mission that set back US USSR relations HEMMING introduced OSWALD to CIA agents and contract employees who deceived OSWALD into believing he was working for the Agency. HEMMING told this researcher: "A. J., you think the universe revolves around my asshole." Marina Oswald told this researcher in 1994:

Do you think HEMMING is making these statements right now only to add some importance to himself? We're all here to make ourselves look a little better than we really are. The answer to the Kennedy assassination is with the Federal Reserve Bank. Don't underestimate that. It's wrong to blame it on ANGLETON and CIA per se only. This is only one finger of the same hand. The people who supply the money are above the CIA. I never heard the name GERRY PATRICK HEMMING until Garrison [the New Orleans District Attorney who investigated the assassination of former President John Kennedy] told me. I never heard LEE mention that name. He never mentioned anything. He lived double life, know what I mean? Do you think I would be giving this interview right now if I knew? I inherited the mess, but the tragedy is not only mine, but the whole nation's.

HEMMING had OSWALD form a bogus chapter of the Fair Play for Cuba Committee, try to visit Cuba and other things that would convince America that Cuba had to be invaded after OSWALD was named as the assassin. The Mafia's part in the deal was to take out OSWALD after the event however the police officer that Ruby hired to do had just fallen off a turnip truck and failed to take OSWALD out. OSWALD was taken prisoner. As a result Ruby had to kill OSWALD despite RUBY's obvious connection to Organized Crime. This freaked out America and the Warren Commission had to be formed to assure everyone democracy was still safe in the United States.

THE ROCKEFELLER COMMISSION AND THE HOUSE SELECT COMMITTEE ON ASSASSINATIONS

The assassination remained a mystery to all but a few until photographic evidence of the CIA's presence in Dallas was uncovered by this researcher on November 22, 1973. After that all the puzzle pieces fell into place. In 1975 in order to once again assure the public that there was no CIA involvement in the assassination the Rockefeller Commission was formed. Then Michael Canfield, who worked with me on this database, suggested to Congressman Henry Gonzalez that he introduce a bill to investigate the Kennedy and King assassinations. He did, it passed and the House Select Committee on Assassinations was formed. Canfield was going to be hired as a staff member and I would work behind the scenes. However a fight broke out between Congressmen

Gonzalez and Chief Counsel Richard Sprague and both men resigned. From the way Congressman Gonzalez was behaving the possibility exists that he was drugged. I know that this sounds far out but there is other evidence that CIA brought down a plane with numerous passengers aboard to protect this secret. Robert Blakey who wrote the RICO Act took over and the event got blamed on Organized Crime, which was only part of the truth but better than nothing.

GERALD PATRICK HEMMING

HEMMING (a former prisoner of Castro seen above with A J WEBBERMAN), met OSWALD in the Marines, and brought him into his plan. HEMMING told this researcher: "How can you set up people to take a fall unless you're dealing with them personally? Get the clue, asshole?" HEMMING 1994: "You know who didn't want to parole me? Revell's brother who was Chairman of the Florida Crime Commission. He was also on the Parole Board."

In 1978 I met HEMMING at his "private detective" office in the Little Havana section of Miami. I was impressed by this 6' 7" man. HEMMING exuded self confidence and was fully conversant with all facets of trade craft. He was a genius. HEMMING provided me with the identity of the third tramp. He said: "FRANK STURGIS was firing from the Records Building." He visited me at Bleecker Street. I hung out at his office. This researcher re-contacted HEMMING in 1994 and found that he was experiencing a low point in his life. Broke, he separated from his wife of 30 years and moved in with his daughter, brother-in-law, and grandchildren in North Carolina. I sent him money.

HEMMING realized that his real friends were people like myself, who came to his aid when no one else did. Call it checkbook journalism, but it worked. In 1978 HEMMING had supplied me with important information, combined with disinformation, for nothing. This time, despite outlandish claims by HEMMING such as "there was a nigger jacking his dick on the fifth floor of the depository that day" he came closer to telling the truth than ever before. Even if he killed the President, hey what's an American president between friends?

HEMMING told this researcher:

You got me A. J. I'm gonna have to stand up here and raise my right hand - and take it off my dick - and confess to this heinous crime. It's time for me to get this burden off my back. It keeps me awake at night. It's terrible. Shit, I ain't figured out half of the fuckin' stuff. How could an outsider like you figure it out? You think people keep fuckin' records that burn a trail to their back door? I don't keep anything that goes against my own interest. What would I have it for? It would only endanger me - then I got to go out and kill some Cubans. I don't need the extra work.

I ain't worried about these assholes. I just have to take measures to counter what the fuck they plan to do. And it's work, costs me time and money. Shit, the Cubans are afraid of me. I came out of Cuba after running an execution squad.

Trying to seek out the truth to this matter somebody's gonna pay a fucking price. It will be difficult. The whole picture won't come out, but there will be enough clues to show that people in this country have been played like a fucking violin. I've been giving a deep throat clue here, a clue there. In the first few years I would never have put my ass on the line. Treason is a capital offense, there ain't no statute of limitations on it. There's a guy by the name of Beckwith that was convicted 31 years later. He just got life, didn't he? I'm not going to insert myself into the scenario.

My family feels they have been made to pay the fucking price because I didn't keep my mouth shut. That I just didn't sit on it. My family has already agreed. Fuck it! Let it all hang-out!. I don't give a shit what the risks are! I watch my step right now.

In your last book you gave STURGIS all the goddamned credit. FRANK was thirsting to do it. Given the opportunity this guy would have done it in a heartbeat. But this fucker couldn't wipe his ass with both hands. He's a fucking dunce. The slipdick don't know shit from Shinola. You should have been looking at me. I'm affronted, A.J. Ha, ha.

FRANK didn't buy your first book. I had to bring it over to the house. He had a library of about nine books on some kind of shit, none of the right books. I said 'Do you want to look in the index where your name appears?' And he looks at mine. He says, 'I see you got your name in here, too. I'll have to read this.' He wanted me to leave the fucking book. He would have stolen it. He looked at the pictures. He looked and he looked. No comment. No comment. Same thing if it was me. I wouldn't have commented on what I was looking at.

There are people in the contract business running around today who believe A. J. WEBERMAN is right. Would that surprise you? And when they're wandering around they whip out A. J. WEBERMAN's book and say, 'See how we did it?' There are people out in the field that believe that shit. The death squad people.

NODULE X3

THE CIA WAS INTO THE ASSASSINATION OF WORLD LEADERS FROM ITS INCEPTION

For the most up-to-date version of this Nodule go to <http://ajweberman.com/noduleX3.pdf>

The following material does not bear directly on the Kennedy assassination and if you are familiar with the intelligence community and are anxious to get to the OSWALD go to Nodule 2. It deals with the formation and staff of the CIA, biographical sketches of notable figures associated or targeted by the CIA, and CIA Operations. It is an orientation to the convoluted world of the intelligence community and was provided to give the reader some idea as what President Kennedy was up against when he tried to reign in the CIA.

The conspiracy to assassinate John F. Kennedy came out of a long history of Cold War intrigue that began with the formation of the CIA. In July 1947, the United States Congress passed the National Security Act. As a result, the Central Intelligence Group (CIG), a spy agency that was an intelligence-gathering operation, became the CIA. On December 19, 1947, Defense Secretary James Forrestal sponsored an unpublished annex to policy directive NSC/4. As a result, the CIA established the Office of Special Operations, a covert action instrumentality. ANGLETON and former FBI S.A. William King Harvey [CIA Office of Security #32 814], directed the Office of Special Operations. Their boss, Roscoe Hillenkoetter, Director of the Central Intelligence Agency, was intent on preventing the Communists from winning the elections which were scheduled for April 18, 1948, in Italy. Hillenkoetter assigned ANGLETON this task. ANGLETON formed the Office of Special Operations Special Procedures Group.

In June 1948, the National Security Council adopted NSC 10/2, a directive that authorized paramilitary activities against the Soviet Union. On September 1, 1948, the Office of Special Operations of the CIA created a subsidiary organization known as the Office of Policy Coordination. In October 1950, General Walter Bedell Smith replaced Admiral Hillenkoetter as the Director of the Central Intelligence Agency.

CIA FOUNDER: FRANK WISNER

In January 1951, General Walter Bedell Smith appointed Frank Wisner as CIA Deputy Director (Plans) for the Office of Policy Coordination. The Korean War necessitated an absorption of the Office of Policy Coordination by the Plans Division of the CIA. In January 1951, Frank Wisner was appointed CIA Assistant DD/Plans. Frank Wisner, born into a prominent Southern family, studied law at the University of Virginia and was a member of the law firm of Carter, Ledyard & Milburn. After a brief Navy commission, he was assigned to OSS, where he was an illegal who worked inside Germany during the war. From 1946 to 1947 Frank Wisner was a partner in Carter, Ledyard & Milburn. On November 12, 1947, Frank Wisner was appointed Deputy Assistant to the Secretary of State. Frank Wisner was CIA DD/P from 1952 to 1958. In 1959 he became Chief of Station in London. In 1962 he resigned from the Agency after suffering a series of nervous breakdowns. He drank heavily and contracted hepatitis. On October 29, 1965, Frank Wisner committed suicide by shooting himself with a 20-gauge shotgun on his Maryland farm. He was 56.

THE DOOLITTLE REPORT

In 1952, General Eisenhower was elected President. In 1954 President Eisenhower commissioned General James Doolittle to do a study of CIA covert operations. General Doolittle concluded the CIA was often ineffective against the KGB and that the CIA "must learn to subvert, sabotage and destroy its enemies by more clever, more sophisticated, and more effective methods than those used against it." JFK disagreed: "We cannot, as a free nation, compete with our adversaries in tactics of terror, assassination, false promises, counterfeit mobs and crises." [JFK address at University of Washington]

CIA PROJECTS: MKNAOMI

In 1952, the CIA embarked on Project MKNAOMI, the purpose of which was to stockpile lethal materials for the Technical Services Division of the CIA and to provide for testing, upgrading, and evaluation of these materials to insure complete predictability of results under operational conditions. The Technical Services Division developed darts coated with biological agents that were so tiny the victim could feel nothing as one penetrated clothing and skin. Furthermore, no trace of the dart or the poison would be found in later medical examination of the cadaver. The Technical Services Division also developed pills that contained several different biological agents which could remain potent for weeks or months, as well as other biological and chemical toxic agents which were undetectable during normal autopsy procedures.

CIA FOUNDER: ALLEN DULLES

MKNAOMI was authorized by the Director of the Central Intelligence Agency Allen Dulles in 1953. Allen Dulles (born April 7, 1893) had worked at Sullivan & Cromwell in New York City where he practiced international law. This firm represented The Chase National Bank, Standard Oil of New Jersey and other Rockefeller family financial interests. In 1933 Allen Dulles was retained by the United Fruit Company, after which he purchased a large block of United Fruit stock. [Hersh Old Boys p52] In October 1941, William Donovan appointed Allen Dulles Director of the New York City office of the Coordinator of Information. The office of Allen Dulles, when he was Coordinator of Information, was located at 30 Rockefeller Plaza. From 1942 to 1946 Allen Dulles ran the OSS station in Bern, Switzerland. After World War II he returned to his law practice. In June 1948, Allen Dulles was appointed Deputy Director of the Office of Policy Coordination. In January 1951, Allen Dulles was appointed CIA Deputy Director for Plans (DD/P). In February 1953, President Eisenhower appointed Allen Dulles, then Deputy Director/Counter-Intelligence, as the Director of the Central Intelligence Agency.

The brother of Allen Dulles, John Foster Dulles, had also been an attorney at Sullivan and Cromwell. In 1938 he represented the Bank of Spain which was controlled by Francisco Franco. Solicited for a Nazi front known as the America First Committee, John Foster Dulles wrote he was "in a mental quandary. I am very much opposed to our getting into wars; on the other hand, I am not an isolationist." His wife sent funds to the America First Committee. In 1949 John Foster Dulles left Sullivan and Cromwell to become Ambassador to Japan; President Eisenhower appointed him Secretary of State in 1953. John Foster Dulles was Chairman of the Board of Trustees of the Rockefeller Foundation. John Foster Dulles died on May 24, 1959.

The successor of John Foster Dulles, Christian Herter, had been his Under-Secretary of State. Christian Herter had worked with Allen Dulles in Paris after World War I, and was a leading member of the Council on Foreign Relations and the Center for International Studies at Harvard. [Congressional Yearbook 1959 p407]

CIA FOUNDERS: HELMS AND KARAMESSINES

Richard M. Helms supervised MKNAOMI. Richard Helms was born in St. David's, Pennsylvania, on March 30, 1913. After college he joined the United Press in Germany, where he interviewed Hitler. In 1945 Richard Helms and Allen Dulles ran the Berlin OSS Station. Richard Helms joined the Central Intelligence Group in 1946 and became a CIA Deputy Director for Special Intelligence and Operations in 1947. [Mader Who's Who in the CIA p230] Frank Wisner chose Richard Helms as his assistant. Richard Helms became CIA DD/P in February 1962; on June 18, 1966, he was appointed the Director of the Central Intelligence Agency. Richard Helms worked closely with Thomas Hercules Karamessines.

THOMAS KARAMESSINES

Thomas Karamessines was born in New York on July 25, 1917. He attended Columbia University Law School and served as a District Attorney from 1941 to 1942. Thomas Karamessines was in the OSS from 1942 to 1947. In 1951 he assumed diplomatic cover and took a post in the U.S. Embassy, Athens. He was listed as a Special Assistant to the Assistant Secretary of Defense in 1954. He assumed diplomatic cover again in 1959, when he became CIA Chief of Station in Vienna. Thomas Karamessines was appointed CIA Assistant DD/P in the Spring of 1962.

In 1973 CIA Director Richard Helms destroyed numerous records concerning these MKULTRA and MKNAOMI. In 1975 the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence Activities (SSCIA) questioned Richard Helms and Thomas Karamessines. Richard Helms testified he knew of an 18-year-old $3 million joint program with the Army's Biological Warfare Laboratory which developed delivery systems like dart guns, although he had never ordered such weapons used against human beings. Thomas Karamessines said he had "no recollection of the actual use of any of the materials" but acknowledged they may have been used to kill a watchdog in a foreign operation: "As Mr. Helms and others who know me are aware I would not have continued [at the CIA] if there was a requirement for the killing of a human being." ANGLETON was questioned about these programs during an Executive Session of the SSCIA. Senator Richard Schweiker examined ANGLETON about the CIA's failure to destroy its toxic agents, despite an Executive Order to do so. ANGLETON declared: "It is inconceivable that a secret intelligence arm of the government has to comply with all the overt orders of the government." [FBI NO-44-2064 12.10.63, 62-109060-1294, NO-89-69 p341 11.26.63, 62-1090604-891; HSCA V5 p94]

THE DEATH OF HUGH GAITSKELL

In 1963, ANGLETON was certain that the KGB had induced a fatal illness in Hugh Gaitskell, an anti-Communist British Labor Party leader, who died prematurely on January 18, 1963. ANGLETON reasoned that Gaitskell, chief cheer-leader for the U.S., had been assassinated by the KGB so that Harold Wilson, whom ANGLETON thought to be a KGB asset, could take power. The evidence against Harold Wilson consisted of his having had participated in post-war business deals with the Soviets, which sometimes involved jet aircraft; his association with Jews and left-wing Laborites such as Michael Foot; and his trips to Moscow.

Hugh Gaitskell suffered from lupus erythematosus, a then little-known auto-immune disorder which he allegedly contracted after having tea at the Soviet Embassy, London. [David Leigh - onset of symptoms much earlier - David Leigh, The Wilson Plot p83] In Spycatcher, Peter Wright (died April 27, 1995), a former U.K. intelligence official, stated:

After he died, Gaitskell's doctor got in touch with MI5...and explained that he was disturbed by the manner of Gaitskell's death. Gaitskell had died of a disease called lupus disseminata, which attacks the body's organs. He said that it was rare in temperate climates and that there was no evidence that Gaitskell had been anywhere recently where he could have contracted the disease. I consulted JIM ANGLETON about the problem...A month or two later he sent us a paper about lupus which he had translated from a Russian scientific journal. The paper was [7] years old and ANGLETON reported that there were no other papers in Russian that they could find. This paper described the use of a special chemical [hydralazine] which the Russians had found would induce lupus in experimental rats...the quantities required to produce lupus were considerable and had to be given repeatedly...if the Russians had continued to work on it they might have found a much better form of the chemical which would require much smaller doses and perhaps work as a one-shot drug. The next development was that [KGB defector] Anatoliy Mikhailovich Golitsyn told us quite independently that during the last few years of his service he had some contacts with Department 13, which was known as the Department of Wet Affairs in the KGB. This department was responsible for organizing assassinations. He said that just before he left he knew the KGB was planning a high-level political assassination in Europe...He did not know which country it was planned in, but he pointed out that the chief of Department 13...had been in Britain for many years and had just returned on a promotion to take up the job, so he would have had good knowledge of the political scene in England...

ANATOLIY GOLITSYN

Anatoliy Golitsyn, who defected in Helsinki on December 22, 1961, was ANGLETON'S prize defector. FBI Counter-intelligence Chief William Branigan recounted: "ANGLETON did have confidence in Golitsyn - more than anyone else I know of. And ANGLETON wanted the FBI to show Golitsyn its files, even though ANGLETON knew the FBI was not happy with Golitsyn and did not respect him." CIA psychiatrists considered Anatoliy Golitsyn paranoid and mentally ill. Despite this diagnosis, ANGLETON arranged for him to meet with United States Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy.

The CIA was made up of former OSS agents who had been involved in World War II. They wanted the ability to assassinate enemy agents or double-agents. The exact details of project MKNAOMI may never be known. The programs were highly compartmentalized. Few records were kept. ANGLETON had access to all the MKNAOMI files. The CIA instituted MKNAOMI in the 1950's in response to the KGB's use of these deadly techniques. Many of the KGB's agents had also been involved in intelligence during World War II. They too needed an assassination capability. During the Cold War accidental death was not always accidental, however, the Gaitskill episode was indicative of ANGLETON'S paranoid thinking, which was an asset in the world of counter-intelligence. Dr. Jerrold Post, a CIA psychologist, concluded that ANGLETON was not clinically paranoid, but had a strong paranoid inclination: "People with that psychological bent will function well in the CI world."

LSD AND THE CIA: MKULTRA

Lysergic Acid Diethylamide (LSD) was first synthesized in 1938 in Basel, Switzerland, by Dr. Albert Hoffman. In April 1943, Hoffman became aware of the psychotropic effects of LSD. MKULTRA entailed testing LSD and other hallucinogens on unwitting human Subjects. On November 18, 1953, Dr. Sidney Gottlieb administered a dose of LSD to Dr. Frank R. Olson as part of the CIA's MKULTRA program. Frank Olson went insane and was brought to New York City for evaluation. On November 28, 1953, he dived through the plate glass window from the tenth story of the Statler Hotel. In the Summer of 1994 the body of Frank Olson was exhumed and the multiple fractures to Frank Olson's skull were found to be inconsistent with a 13 story fall. [Wash. Post 7.12.94] The CIA claimed that:

...only two (2) field stations, Manila and Atsugi, have L.S.D. material. There is none in Germany although Mr. William K. Harvey recently expressed interest in the subject. A cable to the field on December 1, 1953 will instruct the field as to non-use and request data as to how much is on hand and has custody and access." [CIA Memo for Inspector General Subject: Use of LSD 12.1.53]

Sometime prior to August 1960 "(deleted) of the Technical Services Division, remembers discussion of a scheme to contaminate the air of a radio studio where Castro broadcast his speeches with an aerosol spray of a chemical that produces reactions similar to those of LSD Nothing came of the idea. (Deleted) said he had discouraged the scheme, because the chemical could not be relied upon to be effective. (Deleted) also told Technical Service Division recalls experimentation with psychic energizers but cannot relate it to Castro as a target."

DOCTOR SIDNEY GOTTLIEB

Technical Services Division Staff member Sidney Gottlieb was the CIA's expert on exotic poisons. A cripple with a speech defect, Gottlieb developed cigarette lighters that gave off a lethal gas, lipstick that would kill on contact, and a pocket spray for asthma sufferers that induced pneumonia. The CIA created the Society for the Investigation of Human Ecology to facilitate his work. Gottlieb developed poisons to be used against Fidel Castro and Gamal Abdul Nasser. Project MKULTRA resulted in at least one other death.

On November 29, 1963, Richard Helms, Mr. (Deleted), Lyman Kirkpatrick, Sidney Gottlieb and the Inspector General of the CIA, J. S. Earman, held a meeting at the office of CIA Deputy Director Lt. General Marshall Carter. This CIA document dealt with that meeting:

1. The main thrust of the discussion was the testing of certain drugs on unwitting U.S. citizens. Dr. Gottlieb gave a brief history of the MKULTRA program which was not in any way at variance with the Inspector General's report of August 1963 on this subject.
2. Messrs. Gottlieb and (Deleted) argued for continuation of unwitting testing, using as the principal point that controlled testing cannot be depended upon for accurate results. General Carter, I and Kirkpatrick and I do not disagree with the point. We also accept the necessity for having a 'stable of drugs' on the shelf and the requirement for continued research and development of drugs -- not only for possible operational use but also to give CIA insight on the state of the art in this field and in particular to alert us to what the opposition is, or might be expected to do, in the Research and Development of drugs.
3. (Deleted) noted that there was no disagreement with the recommendations of the IG survey on MKULTRA with the exception of the unwitting testing problem. In response to a query from General Carter, he stated that since the IG report, such testing has been in abeyance.

4. General Carter made it clear that he understood the necessity for research and development of all types of drugs, to include their testing, however, he was troubled by the 'unwitting aspect.' This led to a brief discussion on the possibility of unwitting tests on foreign nationals but according to (Deleted) this has been ruled out as a result of several conversations he recently had with Senior Chiefs of Station --- to dangerous and the lack of controlled facilities...If it is concluded by the DD/P that unwitting testing on American citizens must be continued to operationally prove out these drugs, it may become necessary to place this problem before the Director for a decision.

In the early 1960's, the CIA researched the possibility of large-scale covert use of biological weapons. Scientists prepared memoranda, studied by the CIA, that detailed which diseases were common in different areas of the world so that covert use of biological weapons containing these diseases could easily go undetected. [SSCIA For. Mil. Int. V1 p362] In 1964 Sidney Gottlieb approved a $150,000-a-year payment to a Baltimore laboratory to conduct research into lethal microorganisms. These researchers attempted to discover psycho chemicals that simulated death induced by carbon dioxide to produce a weapon to fake a common means of suicide. In 1965 Sidney Gottlieb hired former W.H. Division Chief J.C. King.

EARLY CIA FOUNDER: WILLIAM K. HARVEY

William K. Harvey, the son of a lawyer, was born on September 13, 1915. From 1931 to 1933 he was a reporter and printer for the Danville Gazette. From 1933 to 1937 he studied law at the University of Indiana. He joined the FBI in December 1940 where he targeted Soviet spies in Washington and New York City. In 1947 he was demoted by Hoover for Driving While Intoxicated. William K. Harvey was accepted by the CIA. From 1947 to 1952 he was listed as an Executive Officer in the Pentagon. Actually, he was an Intelligence Officer in Office of Special Operations/FBS (Foreign Broadcast Service), USSR Division, Office of Special Operations COPS (Covert Operations), then he became an assistant to the Deputy Chief. In 1949 he began special operations for CE (Counter-Espionage). In 1951 he began work for Division D. This component was involved in obtaining code books from embassies. Frank Wisner, the head of the Office of Policy Coordination (OPC) asked Harvey to investigate Kim Philby, the British Secret Intelligence Service (SIS) liaison in Washington. Harvey reported back in June 1951 that he was convinced that Philby was a KGB spy. As a result Philby was forced to leave the United States.

He joined the CIA DDP in 1952. The details of his career abroad between 1952 and 1959 were withheld. He returned to Headquarters in 1959 and soon headed Task Force W. Task Force W was engaged in running anti-Castro activities. [CIA Bio. Profile CIA Bio. Profile 9.22.71 180045180045] Harvey was sent to West Germany where he worked with Ted Shackley at the CIA Berlin Station. In 1955 he was commander of Operation Gold which succeeded in tapping Soviet phone lines via a 500-yard tunnel into East Berlin. Until it was detected a year later, the tap gave the CIA information about the military plans of the Soviet Union. It was only later that it was discovered that George Blake, a MI6 agent in Berlin, had told the KGB about the tunnel when it was first built.

Tom Parrott, who worked with Harvey in Berlin claims that Harvey was "anti-elitist". He disliked and resented the "Ivy Leaguers in the CIA". According to another agent, Carleton Swift: "Harvey believed that the elite had a guilty conscience. Guilt was the upper-class pathology. Actually, he was envious as hell. He wanted to be part of the establishment. He knew he wasn't, so he hated it." According to Swift he ruined several people's careers because of their elite background.

Harvey was also involved a policy that was later to become known as Executive Action (a plan to remove unfriendly foreign leaders from power). This including a coup d'état that overthrew the Guatemalan government of Jacobo Arbenz in 1954 after he introduced land reforms and nationalized the United Fruit Company. HUNT and PHILLIPS were involved in this activity. In March 1960, President Dwight Eisenhower of the United States approved a Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) plan to overthrow Fidel Castro. The plan involved a budget of $13 million to train "a paramilitary force outside Cuba for guerrilla action." The strategy was organised by Richard Bissell and Richard Helms.

The CIA JMWAVE station in Miami served as operational headquarters for Operation Mongoose, a covert action program for sabotage and subversion against Cuba. The head of the station was Ted Shackley and over the next few months became very involved in the attempt to overthrow Fidel Castro. William Harvey was appointed as head of Task Force W. and he organized a broad range of activities that would help to bring down Castro's government. In March, 1961 Harvey arranged for CIA operative, Jim O'Connell, to meet Sam Giancana, Santo Trafficante, Johnny Roselli and Robert Maheu at the Fontainebleau Hotel. During the meeting O'Connell gave poison pills and $10,000 to Rosselli to be used against Fidel Castro.

During the Cuban Missile Crisis, Robert Kennedy instructed CIA director John McCone, to halt all covert operations aimed at Cuba. A few days later he discovered that Harvey had ignored this order and had dispatched three commando teams into Cuba to prepare for what he believed would be an inevitable invasion. CIA official Walter Elder explained:

During the Cuban missile crisis when it was virtually impossible to get access to top officials in the government and to get their guidance on day to day affairs, Harvey, who did indeed try to get such guidance on his own concluded that the United States policy was headed towards a full-scale invasion of Cuba. He ordered a number of agent teams to be dispatched to the island for intelligence collections to be in place as assets to support a conventional military operation. General Landsdale claimed this was done without his knowledge and authorization and there was a confrontation in Mr. McCone's office. McCone concluded that unless these teams were being sent to satisfy specific requirements by the Secretary of State and the Secretary of Defense, that they should be recalled. Since there was no such requirement, they were recalled. In a separate meeting McCone reassured Landsdale that he was, in fact, Chief of Operations. As a result of this Harvey earned another black mark as not being fully under control. [TESTIMONY OF WALTER ELDER, 13 AUG 1975]

Kennedy was furious and as soon as the Cuban Missile Crisis was over, Harvey was removed as commander of ZR/RIFLE, the assassination section of OPERATION MONGOOSE. On October 30, 1962, RFK terminated "all sabotage operations" against Cuba. As a result of President Kennedy's promise to Nikita Khrushchev that he would not invade Cuba, Operation Mongoose was disbanded. In February 1963 Harvey was sent to Italy where he became Chief of Station in Rome. Harvey knew that Robert Kennedy had been responsible for his demotion. Harvey continued to keep in contact with Johnny Roselli. According to Richard D. Mahoney:

On April 8, 1963 Rosselli flew to New York to meet with Bill Harvey. A week later, the two men met again in Miami to discuss the plot in greater detail... On April 21 he (Harvey) flew from Washington to deliver four poison pills directly to Rosselli, who got them to Tony Varona and hence to Havana. That same evening, Harvey and Ted Shackley, the chief of the CIA's south Florida base, drove a U-Haul truck filled with the requested arms through the rain to a deserted parking lot in Miami. They got out and handed the keys to Rosselli.

In 1962, following a disagreement with Robert Kennedy, William Harvey became Chief of Station in Rome. The CIA admitted:

It is correct to say William Harvey disagreed with the Administration's approach to Cuban operations, and he finally told the Attorney General that in quite candid terms. He was essentially a tough and blunt man, and had no illusions as to what he was doing. The act probably led to his reassignment. It is safe to assume he held some resentment for the action of the Attorney General... [CIA Memo SDB to Blakey 2.9.79]

William Harvey continued to work with the CIA until 1967, when he went on sick leave. At the termination of his leave, he retired. He continued to associate with John Rosselli. A May 5, 1967, CIA Memorandum for the Record from L. K. White, CIA Executive Director-Comptroller, stated:

On May 5, 1967, Mr. Helms advised me that he had lunch today with Bill Sullivan of the FBI...Later in the afternoon, Sullivan called Richard Helms to report that Sam Papich had lunch today with Bill Harvey at the latter's request. The primary purpose of the luncheon was for Bill to report to Papich on some contact he had with a 'gangster' and to offer his cooperation to the FBI in dealing with this individual. He expressed to Papich (deleted). Richard Helms said that he assumed Papich would report on this in due course to Mr. ANGLETON...

On October 4, 1967, Howard Osborn, the Director of the Office of Security, noted:

MEMORANDUM FOR THE RECORD

SUBJECT: Luncheon Meeting with William K. Harvey

1. About a week ago Harvey called me and suggested that we have lunch on October 4, 1967. I mentioned this to Mr. Earman, Inspector General, and also to the Director.
2. Because of Harvey's association and continuing "friendship" with "Johnny" I notified the Bureau (Mr. William Cregar) officially that I intended to have lunch with Harvey and that this had been approved by the Director.
3. (Deleted) we spent the first fifteen minutes or so in an exchange of information relating to our families, the tragic and untimely death of Desmond Fitzgerald, the burglary of his household, and the current status of his application for admission to the District Bar.

4. Harvey then asked me directly whether or not "Earman" had kept me filled in on the status of his relationship with "Johnny." I said that he had since I had inherited knowledge of this case when I assumed the position of Director of Security on July 1, 1964. He said he was a little annoyed with Helms in that he had spread knowledge of this case so widely throughout the Agency since he had a very explicit understanding with him that it was to be extremely closely held. I pointed out that recent developments had obviously made him decide that it was necessary to solicit the assistance and support of his Inspector General. Since Harvey seemed quite relaxed after his second beer and inclined to chat about this, I asked him point-blank what was the nature of his relationship with "Johnny" since it seemed totally inconsistent to me with his desire to re-enter law practice in the District. I said that I had no real knowledge of the requirements for admission to the District Bar, but that I supposed that continuing contact with an individual of "Johnny's" reputation could hardly be regarded favorably. He agreed with this and said that he didn't give a damn; that he would not turn his back on his friends and that "Johnny" was his friend. I replied that while this was an admirable quality, that I felt that he was taking all sorts of risks in this regard. He indicated that Sam Papich had cautioned him along the same lines and that he had given him the same answer.

5. He went on to say that it was his opinion that it would be the worse thing he could do for himself or the Agency, to turn his back on "Johnny" at this time. He said that he had told "Johnny" at the outset of their association that if anything happened to "blow the operation" that "Johnny" could not look to anyone other than Harvey for assistance and that even Harvey would probably not be able to help him. He seemed to want to establish clearly with me the fact that it will be his neck if our use of "Johnny" comes out in the open, since he believes that the Agency could not or would not admit involvement. He changed back rather abruptly at this point and asked the whether or not we still used Bob Maheu or had anything to do with him. I said that we did not and asked him why, He said that in the last telephone call he had had with "Johnny" which lasted for more than an hour "Johnny" was quite vehement and bitter about Maheu; indicating that Maheu would "sell anyone down the river to protect his own neck"

6. Harvey then said that he felt very uncomfortable about the entire situation and fully realized its implications to the Agency if it ever surfaced publicly. In response to a question from me, he said that he felt sure "Johnny" would never "pull the string" on us unless he was absolutely desperate, but that his concern was that Senator Robert Kennedy knew all about the operation. He said that the Director had sent him a clipping from a Chicago newspaper touching upon our use of Giancana when William Harvey was Chief of Station in Rome. He said that he mentioned this to Johnny the next time he saw him, and that Johnny said he knew the information had come from a leak in Senator Kennedy's office when he was still Attorney General. [CIA D-000249]

William Harvey died as a result of complications from heart surgery in June, 1976 just before he was to testify before the House Select Committee on Assassinations.

EARLY CIA FOUNDER: JAMES FORRESTAL

James Forrestal (born November 10, 1890) was a bond salesman at William A. Reade Incorporated. He soon became an executive officer there. Dillon, Reade helped rebuild the steel plants which Hitler later turned into the most efficient war machine in Europe. [Drew Pearson 11.13.47] From June 23, 1940, to August 22, 1940, James Forrestal was an assistant at the FDR White House. Forrestal designed the Office of the Coordinator for Inter-American Affairs and recommended Nelson Rockefeller for the top job. [Hoopes and Brinkley Driven Patriot Knopf 1992] In June 1940 James Forrestal became Under Secretary of the Navy and commissioned the son of Clarence Dillon, C. Douglas Dillon, to do a special study of the Navy Department. In April 1944 James Forrestal became Secretary of the Navy. He was a member of the National Intelligence Authority which had originally mandated the existence of the Central Intelligence Group. In 1947 Forrestal armed hard-core Mussolini veterans to counter the Italian communists, and also opposed the establishment of the state of Israel. He became Secretary of Defense in September 1947. In 1948 he commissioned Mathias F. Correa and William H. Jackson to study the floundering CIA. William H. Jackson became an investment banker at Carter, Ledyard and subsequently, a Deputy Director of the CIA. [Ross & Wise Inv. Gov. p99; Hersh Old Boys p278]

THE FORRESTAL ENIGMA

Less than a week after his replacement as Secretary of Defense on March 2, 1949, Forrestal told a friend "They are after me." He ran through the streets shouting: "The Russians are coming! I've seen Russian soldiers!" [Yergin, Daniel Shattered Peace Houghton Mifflin 1977] He had no previous history of mental disease. By the end of March 1949, Forrestal's mental faculties had deteriorated and in April he went into a deep depression. Journalist Drew Pearson stated that Forrestal made three suicide attempts at this time: by drug overdose, by hanging and by slashing his wrists. James Forrestal was committed to Bethesda Naval Hospital. He fell 16 floors to his death on May 22, 1949, after trying to hang himself from his hospital window with his dressing gown. The facts surrounding the details of the suicide were investigated by a Special Board. On August 23, 1960, the Soviet Home News Service reported: "One of the apostles of the cold war, an American Admiral, Forrestal, ended his life in a straightjacket (a victim?) of his own anticommunist deliriums."

Although mental illness and suicide are not uncommon in the intelligence community, to my knowledge, no other former Secretary of Defense went insane then committed suicide. The onset of Forrestal's delusions was rapid, as if precipitated by a drug. His behavior resembled someone on a "bad L.S.D. trip." Forrestal was no longer in power when he became insane, so why bother "dosing" him? Did Forrestal's anti-Semitic and anti-Israeli attitude contribute to his demise? The mental illness and subsequent death of James Forrestal remains an enigma.

EARLY CIA OPERATION: THE BOGOTAZO RIOTS

In 1946 the Presidential candidate of the Liberal Party of Colombia was Dr. Gabriel Turbay. Dr. Gabriel Turbay was the Premier of Colombia from 1933 to 1938 and served as Colombia's Ambassador to Washington from 1939 to 1945. He was an ardent supporter of the United States. But Gabriel Turbay died suddenly in Paris on November 18, 1947, at age 46. This researcher has been unable to obtain the details of Turbay's death. In any event, as a result of Turbay's death, Jorge Eliecer Gaitan (born January 26, 1903) became the nominee of the Liberal Party in 1948. Jorge Eliecer Gaitan, a labor leader, helped found the short-lived National Leftist Revolutionary Union and stated he would not cooperate with the opposition party because it was involved in political murder. On April 9, 1948, Jorge Eliecer Gaitan was murdered as he walked to lunch. His assailant, Juan Roa Sierra, was battered to death by bystanders. The death of Jorge Eliecer Gaitan touched off serious rioting that was unexpected by the CIA. Additionally, this rioting occurred during the Inter-American Affairs Conference in Bogota. The conference delegates had to take cover when a mob attacked the Capitolio Nacional. Among those who represented the United States were John J. McCloy and Assistant Secretary of State Norman Armour. Norman Armour, a former OSS officer, was a member of the United States Delegation to the U.N. during the overthrow of Jacobo Arbenz in Guatemala in 1954. Shortly thereafter Norman Armour replaced John E. Peurifoy as Ambassador to Guatemala.

The President of Colombia's Conservative Party issued a communiqué that stated Jorge Eliecer Gaitan was "killed by a person apparently of Communist affiliation." His secretary blamed Communists for sabotaging the Inter-American Conference, and charged that Cuban Communists had participated in an attack on a government radio station. Director of the Central Intelligence Agency Roscoe Hillenkoetter maintained that although the Communists seized on the assassination for their own political purposes, secret CIA dispatches indicated Jorge Eliecer Gaitan was slain because he had just successfully defended the killer of the uncle of Juan Roa Sierra in a murder trial. The CIA: "Supporters of Jorge Eliecer Gaitan, apparently with his knowledge and perhaps mild encouragement, were considering the possibility of a coup d'etat for 1948. The murder of Jorge Eliecer Gaitan put to death a potentially revolutionary movement and the bogotazo riots was no more than its wake." [Studies in Intelligence V13 #4 Fall 1969; Ross & Wise Inv. Gov. p102; NYT 4.11.48, 4.10.48; DOS Bio. Reg. 1956; Hersh The Old Boys - Lovett p408] The CIA reported that, after the Bay of Pigs invasion, E. HOWARD HUNT was asked to determine the role of Fidel Castro in the Bogotazo riots. [EYES ONLY Analysis of Give Us This Day - Hunt CIA Office of Security File]

Was the CIA behind the assassination of Jorge Eliecer Gaitan? If a political assassin is himself quickly assassinated, it is likely a covert instrumentality was involved in both assassinations. Was Gabriel Turbay assassinated by the KGB?

THE CIA AND CASTROISM A BRIEF POLITICAL HISTORY OF CUBA

Machado y Morales was elected President of Cuba in 1924. On August 12, 1933, he was overthrown by a group of military officers. On September 4, 1933, Fulgencio Batista led a "Sergeant's Rebellion" against the junta. In 1934, Raymond Grau became president of Cuba. Grau was an anti-U.S. Cuban nationalist. Batista withdrew his support for Grau because of pressure from the United States. Batista took over in 1939. In October 1940, Batista, who ran as a civilian, was elected president.

FULGENCIO BATISTA

Fulgencio Batista was born into poverty in 1901. At age 20 he became an Army stenographer and penetrated the secrets of the Army Staff. Fulgencio Batista controlled Cuba from 1940 to 1944, when he was forced into exile in Miami. He spent 1944 to 1949 in the United States. In 1950 Batista ran, in absentia, for the Cuban senate. He was easily elected in his province, Las Villas, and returned to Cuba with senatorial immunity that year. On March 10, 1952, Fulgencio Batista and a small band of rebels entered Camp Columbia, a military fortress in the suburbs of Havana, and seized control. The Army, which remembered the high pay and good times of earlier days, rallied to his support and occupied the Presidential Palace. The President of Cuba, Carlos Prío Socarras, and his Foreign Minister, Francisco Varona Alonzo (born November 25, 1908; aka Tony Varona), fled to the countryside and eventually sought asylum in the Mexican Embassy; soon the pair fled to Miami. Former President Carlos Prío Socarras was determined to regain power. [FBI 109-12-210-355; NYT 1.2.59]

DR. CARLOS PRIO SOCCARRAS

Dr. Carlos Prío Socarras was the President of Cuba from 1948 to 1952. Carlos Prío Socarras headed the Authentic Party. Shortly after he was elected, he built a $2 million home on his Presidential salary of $25,000 a year. But Carlos Prío Socarras was unable to control the other grafters in his government, and a deterioration in public services was accompanied by a slump in tourism. The national crime syndicate, who controlled the Havana gambling industry, wanted Carlos Prío Socarras overthrown and ex-President Fulgencio Batista re-installed.

TONY VARONA

A CIA Provisional Operational Approval (POA) was requested on Tony Varona in August 1957 as a source of information on anti-government activities in Cuba and later amended for use in political action activities. He and organizations he represented were provided with material and financial assistance in promoting anti-Castro activities in Cuba until approximately 1962.

OPERATIONAL APPROVALS

OA (Operational Approvals), and POA's, Provisional Operational Approvals, were granted by the Chief, Counter-Intelligence Staff, after an examination of all pertinent records. The Office of Security conducted the Operational Approval investigations for Counter-Intelligence. Clandestine Services Instruction No. 10-5 stated:

In Operational Approval cases the Office of Security will forward investigative reports, name check results, etc. to the Counter-Intelligence Staff. In extremely sensitive cases, however, particularly those in which the security or good of the Agency as a whole is involved, the Office of Security will not be obliged to furnish all investigative material. In such cases the Office of Security will inform the Counter-Intelligence Staff that such material has been withheld and will, upon request, discuss the matter with the Chief, Counter-Intelligence Staff, or other appropriate official of the Clandestine Services.

FIDEL CASTRO

On July 26, 1953, rebel forces led by Fidel Castro attacked the Moncada Barracks of Fulgencio Batista's Army. The 26th of July Movement was born. Fidel Castro was imprisoned by Fulgencio Batista, but in May 1955, he was released under a general amnesty law. In July 1955 Fidel Castro traveled to Mexico.

On December 2, 1956, Fidel Castro and 82 followers left Mexico aboard the yacht Granma, and landed in Cuba's Oriente Province, where they used the Sierra Maestre Mountains as a base of operations to launch a guerrilla war against Fulgencio Batista. In 1957, the FBI reported that General Hector Bienvedido Trujillo Molina, aka Raphael Trujillo, the dictator of the Dominican Republic, had allowed Carlos Prio Socarras to set up an exile training camp in his country. [FBI 109-430-1839] In 1958, the Military Attache assigned to the U.S. Embassy, Havana, reported:

The Military Attache assigned to the U.S. Embassy in Havana advised that although the average low-ranking Cuban soldier has great respect for General Batista, this soldier does not appear to feel the same sympathy toward Army leaders directing him in the field. Many high ranking officers [in Batista's Army] are not noteworthy for their military acumen, and it is generally known that they are more interested in the graft they are able to secure, than in winning battles or skirmishes against the rebel forces. [FBI 109-12-210-355]

ROLANDO MASFERRER

Fulgencio Batista was forced to call on Cuban warlords like Rolando Masferrer [CIA 201-042669] to suppress Fidel Castro. Rolando Masferrer was born in Cuba on July 12, 1918. His father died when he was young and his mother's brother took him to live with he and his wife. His uncle was a army officer who was sent to Fort Sam Houston, in San Antonio, Texas for training with the U.S. Army. Rolando Masferrer attended school in Oklahoma, but left after only a few weeks. He returned to Cuba where he received his law degree there at age 21. At age 23 Masferrer fought in the streets against the dictator Machado. He was elected to the Cuban Senate and was the youngest Senator in its history. During the Spanish Civil War in 1938, Rolando Masferrer traveled to Spain and fought on the side of the Communists. Within months he was in a military hospital near Madrid, his left foot shattered by a bullet. It took him six months to walk again - with a crutch. The Communist Party assigned Masferrer to its Political Inspectorate. Masferrer became an enforcer for Joseph Stalin. The 'thump, thump' of his walk was dreaded by Communist functionaries throughout Europe. Six years later he broke with the Communists and formed his own political party as well as his own private army, El Tigres. Rolando Masferrer was elected to the Cuban legislature in 1949, and served as a representative under the Prio regime. Masferrer was described as "an opportunist of the first order. He was a staunch friend of President Carlos Prio Socarras under whose regime he served as a Representative, but when Prio was ousted he turned up overnight at the side of Fulgencio Batista. He has been a Senator in Batista's Government..." The CIA and the State Department conducted a covert name check on Rolando Masferrer when he was first elected to public office. Because he was a former Communist, by 1950 a file on Rolando Masferrer existed in the Office of Security of the CIA.

EL TIGRES

In 1958 El Tigres became Batista's primary counter-terrorist force. Murder, mutilation, rape, dismemberment, castration, torture and kidnapping were the trademarks of El Tigres. Bodies of individuals who had been tortured to death were flung from speeding cars on to the streets of Havana to strike terror in the populace. The main target of Masferrer were supporters of the 26th of July Movement. Masferrer was considered a war criminal by most of the 26th of July Revolutionary Movement. Rolando Masferrer told the FBI that Fidel Castro's men began to ambush, assassinate, and otherwise kill members of Rolando Masferrer's party. Consequently, in order to protect members of his party Masferrer went to...the Minister of the Interior and obtained permission to arm his men so that they could protect themselves. Masferrer stated it was untrue that he had a private army and that it is also untrue that he ever committed any personal atrocities, such as shooting helpless women and children. [FBI 100-344127 4.21.59 Miami]

Any opponent of the Batista regime was fair game for Masferrer who operated a chain of gambling casinos and was the editor of two newspapers. On July 13, 1956, the State Department reported:

Masferrer is a powerfully-built man of 39, who has the reputation as a gangster and a killer. He was a Communist in his student days and fought for the loyalist cause in Spain, but now professes anti-Communism with a vengeance. He has a private band of 80 armed men who served as a sort of personal bodyguard and stand by to act as hatchet men if violence is called for. Enjoying President Batista's confidence, Masferrer and his little army represent a potential force of some importance. He is known to have killed certain enemies and to have scared the wits out of others. In 1950, for instance, he was found by the police, machine gun in hand, over two frightened men who were actually digging their own graves. The men were saved but Masferrer was not arrested; he had congressional immunity; he was a representative at the time." [Memo R.G. Cushing to Ambassador] In August 1958 the FBI reported that Rolando Masferrer and Marcos Jimenez Perez, the exiled President of Venezuela, had become close associates. Rolando Masferrer told Marcos Jimenez Perez that he was "planning to take over the Cuban Government when Batista fell. [FBI 100-344127 8.12.58 Miami]

THE GANGSTERS WITH CUBAN INTERESTS MEYER LANSKY

Rolando Masferrer and Fulgencio Batista worked with national crime syndicate figure Meyer Lansky. Meyer Lansky was born in Russia on July 4, 1902, and died in Miami in January 1983. He was brought, with his younger brother, Jake, to the United States in 1911. By 1920 Lansky ran a floating crap game on the streets of New York City. When the mafia became aware of Lansky's operation it tried to extort a weekly payoff from him. Meyer Lansky refused to pay the mafia off. [Lansky, Hank Messick, G.P. Putnam, N.Y. 1971; Meyer Lansky Mogul of the Mob - Dennis Eisenberg, Uri Dan, Eli Landau, Paddington Press, N.Y. 1979] Meyer Lansky discovered that many Italian gangsters were opposed to the tactics of the Sicilian traditionalists. These included Frank Costello, Vito Genovese, Joe Adonis, Albert Anastasia, Salvatore "Lucky" Luciano and Al "Scarface" Capone. By 1922, the insurgents had murdered most of the old-line "Mustache Petes" and had taken over their territories. Jewish gangs were now given a sizable piece of the action. During the early 1930's Meyer Lansky discovered Cuba for the syndicate and invested its illegal profits there. In 1933 Lansky moved to Miami Beach, and in the late 1930's he lived in Cuba, where he owned the Hotel Nacional Casino and Havana's municipal racetracks. In 1940 Lansky left Havana for Miami. When Lansky moved to New York just before America entered World War II, he delegated the responsibility for the management of his Cuban and Miami holdings to SANTO TRAFFICANTE SR., the Sicilian-born Tampa gangster.

SAM GIANCANA

Lansky was associated with Sam Giancana. Sam Giancana began his career as a wheel man for the Capone mob. By the late 1940's Sam Giancana was the chauffeur and bodyguard for Chicago rackets boss Tony "The Tuna" Accardo. In 1957, a bullet was fired over Tony Accardo's head as he entered his half-million dollar estate. Tony "The Tuna" Accardo stepped down. Sam Giancana was the crime overlord of Chicago when the CIA approached him to kill Fidel Castro in 1960. His influence reached into the White House through Judith Campbell Exner, the alleged mistress of John F. Kennedy. Judith Campbell Exner told the press she was introduced to John F. Kennedy in Las Vegas in February 1960, by Frank Sinatra, a mutual friend. Judith Campbell Exner was in touch with Sam Giancana, who she said was aware of her relationship with John F. Kennedy. The Kennedy/Exner relationship lasted until late 1962, when the FBI became aware that Judith Campbell Exner, who was in telephonic contact with mobster John Rosselli, also made numerous calls to the White House. On September 26, 1999 Exner died of breast cancer.

CASTRO SEIZES POWER IN CUBA

On January 1, 1959, Fidel Castro seized power in Cuba. Some members of the CIA believed he was a Communist as far back as 1948. By 1960 it became clear to the world that Fidel Castro was, in fact, a Communist and a willing agent of the Soviet Union. On the other hand, the gangsters, the corrupt politicians and their fascist allies had to leave Cuba as a result of the Castro revolution. Communism was now only 90 miles from America. Many Central American dictators feared meeting the same fate as Fulgencio Batista.

THE SOMOZAS OF NICARAGUA

The Somoza brothers, Luis and Anastasio, were the sons of Anastasio Somoza Sr., who had been appointed War Minister of Nicaragua in 1932. During this time, the United States Marines and the Nicaraguan National Guard joined in a long and bitter guerrilla struggle against revolutionary leader Augusto Cesar Sandino. Anastasio Somoza Sr. offered Augusto Cesar Sandino safe conduct to Managua, then executed him. In 1935 Anastasio Somoza Sr. took over Nicaragua through a military coup and was "elected" President in 1937. He remained in office until 1947. From 1947 to 1950, Anastasio Somoza Sr. handpicked subordinates ruled; in 1950, he reassumed power.

In 1955, Anastasio Somoza Sr. began to feud with Costa Rican President Jose (Pepe) Figueres. Anastasio Somoza Sr. accused Jose Figueres of a long and close association with Communist and other leftist elements in the Americas, such as Jacobo Arbenz of Guatemala and Romulo Betancourt of Venezuela. He accused Jose Figueres of plotting his assassination. Jose Figueres charged Anastasio Somoza Sr. with doing the same. Jose Figueres was a liberal and an anti-Communist. In 1948 he became provisional President of the Founding Civilian Junta of Costa Rica through an anti-Communist coup. Jose Figueres was elected President on July 27, 1953. His major opponents were the Communists. In September 1956, Anastasio Somoza Sr. was assassinated because of a plot by the National Guard and Army Officers. Luis Somoza and Anastasio Somoza Jr. took over for their father. Luis Somoza claimed that the assassin of his father was a Russian communist. [NYT 9.30.56]

"PAPA DOC" DUVALIER OF HAITI

"Papa Doc" Duvalier, the dictator of Haiti, also feared Fidel Castro. The Duvalier regime began in 1957 and lasted longer than any other in the history of Haiti. Of the 36 Presidents who preceded "Papa Doc" Duvalier, 23 were either killed or overthrown. "Papa Doc" Duvalier's power depended on a 600-man palace guard, 5,000 militiamen, and the thugs known as the Ton Ton Macoutes - Haitian for bogeymen. The repression in Haiti was intense; six teenagers who painted anti-Duvalier graffiti on a wall were executed without trial."Papa Doc" Duvalier then ordered that all youth organizations, even the Boy Scouts, be disbanded. Under "Papa Doc" Duvalier, 90% of Haiti's population was illiterate, and were plagued with malnutrition and disease; per capita income was about a third of the Latin American average, and Haiti had the distinction of being the poorest nation in the Western Hemisphere. By 1961, the Kennedy Administration was fed up with "Papa Doc" Duvalier. He had used American aid to build Duvalierville, a complex of half-finished, rotting buildings. The United States cut its aid, which had amounted to $15 million a year, to $1.5 million. [NYT 4.23.71]

CIA AND THE ASSASSINATION OF RAPHAEL TRUJILLO

The dictator of the Dominican Republic, General Raphael Trujillo, was born on October 24, 1891. He joined the Dominican National Guard in 1918. The United States Marines were in the Dominican Republic at the time and Colonel Richard M. Cutts, USMC, sponsored him. In 1930 he was the Chief of Staff of the Dominican Army and was soon elected President. General Raphael Trujillo ruled the Dominican Republic as if it were his fiefdom. Not only did 'El Benefactor' hold absolute political power, he also owned most of the country, in his name and in the names of his relatives. General Raphael Trujillo had Dr. Jesus Galindez, a political opponent, kidnapped from his midtown Manhattan apartment on March 12, 1956. Jesus Galindez was a Dominican exile and professor at Columbia University who had written about the crimes of General Raphael Trujillo. The kidnappers flew him to the Dominican Republic, where he was murdered. The CIA had Colonel J.C. King investigate the abduction of Jesus Galdinez.

TONY ULASEWICZ

Watergate burglar Tony Ulasewicz investigated the Galindez kidnapping for the New York City Police Department. Tony Ulasewicz reported that the New York City Police Department burglarized Jesus Galindez' apartment and turned his papers over to the CIA: "Even though Galindez was a known Trujillo opponent, I quickly eliminated the CIA as being responsible for his fate...they would not have involved the New York City Police Department to get the contents of his briefcase. A possibility did remain, however, that his removal was a rogue intelligence operation that hadn't been cleared by CIA Headquarters. If the Galindez caper was a maverick, unauthorized operation, I doubted at the time that anyone would ever find the identity of those responsible."

STANLEY ROSS

Tony Ulasewicz reported that the employer of Jesus Galindez, El Diario editor Stanley Ross, was the first to go to the FBI and the New York City Police Department's Missing Persons Bureau and file a report:

Stanley Ross was openly criticized for waiting too long to report Jesus Galindez missing. Silfa [a Dominican exile] told me that he had become suspicious of Stanley Ross when he learned that Stanley Ross had checked with the superintendent of Jesus Galindez's building soon after he disappeared, but then waited four days before notifying the police. Why Stanley Ross insisted on being present in the apartment of Jesus Galindez [during the New York City Police Department search] came into question because before the disappearance, Stanley Ross had never been inside his apartment. Lydia Miranda reported that Jesus Galindez had also become suspicious of Stanley Ross. Lydia Miranda claimed Stanley Ross knew about the novel Jesus Galindez was writing concerning the members of General Trujillo's family. Lydia Miranda said Stanley Ross was sending General Trujillo an advance copy of Jesus Galindez's work through the Dominican Consulate in New York. When a Dominican informant confirmed that Stanley Ross, was, in fact, reporting all of Jesus Galindez's activities to Trujillo's Consul General in New York, I became suspicious that Stanley Ross might have been involved in the disappearance. [Ulasewicz, Tony The President's Private Eye, Macsam Publishing, 1990]

From 1955 to 1962 Stanley Ross was editor of El Diario de Nueva York, New York City's largest Spanish language daily. Stanley Ross became a registered agent of the Government of Nicaragua.

MORRIS ERNST

General Raphael Trujillo hired Morris Ernst to "investigate" the Jesus Galindez affair. Morris Ernst worked with Colonel J.C. King. He was unable to find any evidence that linked General Raphael Trujillo with the Jesus Galindez kidnapping. In 1938 Morris Ernst successfully defended the American Civil Liberties Union against charges of having been a Communist front. Morris Ernst was on the Board of Directors of the American Civil Liberties Union with Norman Thomas. Morris Ernst maintained a lengthy correspondence with J. Edgar Hoover, who he referred to as a close personal friend. [Wise, D. Politics of Lying 1973 168-9; Walls, D. Activists Almanac; Donner, F. Age of Surveillance]

GERALD LESTER MURPHY AND ROBERT MAHEU

Gerald Lester Murphy was a pilot for Dominican Airlines who boasted that he had flown Jesus Galindez from the United States to the Dominican Republic on one of his flights out of New York. Later, documents in Murphy's handwriting showed Dr. Galindez' name in several memoranda and notes for a flight plan from New York via Florida to the Dominican Republic. Not long after the kidnapping, Col. Salvador Cobian Parra, one of Trujillo's intelligence agents, was killed in a mysterious duel with a civilian who was also reported to have been killed in the duel. A car belonging to Gerald Lester Murphy was found on December 3, 1956, near a cliff in the remotest section of the Dominican Republic. When the police searched the hotel room of Gerald Lester Murphy, the name Horace Schmahl was found. Horace Schmahl traced back to Robert Maheu. A few weeks later, the body of Octavio Antonio de la Meza, Gerald Lester Murphy's co-pilot, was found hanging in a jail cell in Ciudad Trujillo. The police reported he left a note claiming responsibility for the death of Gerald Lester Murphy. Trujillo had given refuge to Fulgencio Batista and Marcos Perez Jimenez. [NYT 6.1.61] In June 1959, the Dominican Republic was invaded by a small mixed force of exiles and foreigners from Cuba, only to have peasants rally to join the Trujillo troops to smash the invasion. Major Delio Gomez Ochoa, the leader, asserted after his capture that the attack had been promoted by Castro. In the early 1960's the United States attempted to economically destabilize the Trujillo regime by adhering to Organization of American States sanctions imposed because of a Trujillo-sponsored assassination attempt on June 24, 1960, against President Romulo Betancourt of Venezuela. The United States broke off diplomatic relations with the Dominican Republic in August 1960. President John F. Kennedy wanted dictators like General Raphael Trujillo replaced with democratic leaders, as a guarantee against the emergence of any form of Castroism.

HUNT AND THE TRUJILLO ASSASSINATION

In 1976, Le Cygne, an autobiography by L. Gonzalez-Mata, was published in Paris. L. Gonzalez-Mata claimed to have served briefly as General Raphael Trujillo's Chief of Security in 1960. According to L. Gonzalez-Mata, John Rosselli and E. HOWARD HUNT arrived in the Dominican Republic in March 1961, and assisted in the plots against General Raphael Trujillo. L. Gonzalez-Mata identified John Rosselli as "a friend of Batista" who was operating "on the orders of William K. Harvey." HUNT was termed "a specialist." According to L. Gonzales-Mata, John Rosselli and HUNT met with U.S. Counsel General Henry Dearborn and Dominican dissident leader Lorenzo Berry, operator of a successful retail market. Lorenzo "Wimpy" Berry proposed a plan to force Raphael Trujillo into exile, but HUNT was adamant that an ambush was the only reliable course of action. Lorenzo Berry finally agreed when HUNT promised that the CIA would provide the weapons. [A Friend of Batista: L. Gonzales-Mata, Cygne, Grasset, Paris, 1976]

STURGIS AND THE ASSASSINATION OF TRUJILLO

FRANK STURGIS claimed that in May 1961, he and mafia associate Frank Nelson visited the Dominican Republic. STURGIS told journalist Paul Meskil that they contacted Dominican military officers who were conspiring to assassinate General Raphael Trujillo. STURGIS and Frank Nelson claimed they helped supply this clique with assassination weapons. Frank Nelson explained:

The guns arrived in boxes sent to a supermarket in the Dominican capital. The Dominican officers didn't need the guns. They already had enough stuff for a war. They needed U.S. Government moral support and this was represented by the arms shipment.

The SSCIA reported that the weapons were sent to Berry, broken down, disguised as canned goods. It also reported that handguns, machine guns, explosives, and carbines were supplied by the CIA. Many of these weapons ended up in the hands of Trujillo's assassins.

HEMMING:

Frank Nelson was involved in a business deal with Wimpy's Supermarket, where the rifles were shipped to. Commercial cover. If STURGIS and Frank Nelson jumped in on the game as the boys that were coming from up north, they would be the guys that went back to Washington and laid the plan out for the big boys in D.C. They wanted Agency people implicated in the hit so they could cover their ass later on. Those weapons weren't used for anything. These guys aren't stupid. They were being told by the CIA to dump the old man. This is gonna happen, that's gonna happen. And when the blame goes around from the wealthy Trujillo sons, [Ramfis Trujillo] vicious little bastards, and the shit hits the fan, these guys are going to want to be able to call their markers in from the CIA. They want to prove Uncle Sam's behind the thing to get the other colonels and generals to come in with them.

THE AMBUSH

On May 30, 1961, Generalissimo Raphael Trujillo was assassinated, ambushed by a band of seven men, including Tony Lambert and General Juan Tomas Diaz. Trujillo and his chauffeur drove unescorted to see his 20 year old mistress. Around 10:30 p.m. two carloads of gunmen fired 27 rounds into Trujillo's body. A source in the President's office of the United Fruit Company informed U.S. Counsel General Henry Dearborn that the assassination had not triggered an internal rebellion. U.S. Counsel General Henry Dearborn, in turn, informed the CIA. In the 1920's, Dearborn was a founder of the Council on Foreign Relations. [DOS Bio. Reg. 1956] Dearborn replaced U.S. Ambassador to the Dominican Republic, Joseph Farland, as the contact between the CIA and dissident Dominican groups. In a CIA briefing paper for United States Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy, the Agency admitted having sent arms to dissident Dominicans: "Operational security considerations prescribed that the dissidents make their own arrangements for receipt by which the source of the arms could not be identified." [Memo for Rec. 6.62. Sub: Rev. of Dom. Ops. for Per. Immed. Prior to, During and Sub. to Trujillo's Death/CWH/ARA file; Meskil Daily News 4.25.75]

No CIA documents linked HUNT or Rosselli with Lorenzo Berry. No documents linked HUNT to Rosselli. Neither HUNT or Rosselli had a motive to involve themselves in the assassination of Trujillo. A Friend of Batista was probably disinformation published abroad by the CIA, however, when HUNT testified before the SSCIA he said he was familiar with the planning of the Trujillo assassination "because of my intimacy with Latin American affairs." [SSCIA 157-10005-10228 p29]

The dissidents did not need Nelson or STURGIS. They had the official apparatus of the CIA behind them. Neither STURGIS nor Nelson's name appears in any documents dealing with the Trujillo assassination. STURGIS was lying about his involvement in the assassination of Raphael Trujillo.

CHARLES SIRAGUSA: THE CIA'S HITMAN

The CIA's initial efforts to form an assassination section involved Charles Siragusa. Siragusa (born October 28, 1913; died April 17, 1982, Office of Security # 41 82) was raised amid mob violence in New York City's Little Italy. He worked under ANGLETON in the OSS (March 1944 to December 1945), and then was an official of the Federal Bureau of Narcotics. [Winks Cloak and Gown p363] He was sent to Italy in 1951 to neutralize "Lucky" Luciano, who was sending heroin shipments to New York. [Sterling, C. Octopus p79] Charles Siragusa was attached to the U.S. Embassy, Rome, where he worked with the CIA Station. A CIA document revealed: "Siragusa was of liaison interest to various components of this Agency from 1961 to 1967, including the Behavioral Activities Branch of the Technical Services Division." [HSCA Gambino/Carpenter 2.28.78] In May 1967 Charles Siragusa supplied the CIA with biographic data that stated he had been employed by the Illinois Crime Commission since 1963. As head of the Commission, Siragusa was instrumental in solving the $4.3 million Purolator theft in 1974 by planting a snitch in the suspected burglary gang. In 1974 the name of Charles Siragusa was given to the Central Cover Staff in response to a request from an individual who might work for a pharmaceutical firm as an investigator.

In October 1977, Charles Siragusa told Senator Edward Kennedy that he was approached by a CIA employee in 1960 or 1961 who he recalls was Mr. Vincent Thill, who sought Mr. Siragusa's assistance to recruit underworld figures for assassination purposes. Mr. Thill is alleged to have said that one million dollars would be paid for a successful assassination. Mr. Siragusa also stated that in addition to Mr. Thill, he had contact with the following former CIA employees: Sheffield Edwards, JAMES ANGLETON, John Mertz and Robert Bannerman. As related to the CIA, the context of their relationship with Mr. Siragusa was not given. The SSCIA was informed of Mr. Siragusa's allegation. Mr. William Miller, SSCIA, suggested to Commander Bernard McMahon, Executive Assistant to the Director of the CIA, and Mr. John Waller, Inspector General, that CIA investigate the allegation. The Agency has initiated an investigation; following are the results to date: (Deleted).

CHARLES SIRAGUSA AND VINCENT THILL

Charles Siragusa told journalist Jack Anderson: "After a few minutes of chitchat, the CIA man [Vincent Thill] made this startling suggestion: that Siragusa, drawing on his underworld knowledge and contacts, recruit a crew of mafia torpedoes for standby assassination duty. They would be paid $1 million in fees and expenses for each kill. The CIA would assign the missions and underwrite the payoffs from secret funds." Siragusa, who had underworld and mafia connections because of his position with the Bureau of Narcotics, said that he refused to cooperate. Some evidence, however, indicated Charles Siragusa proposed that narcotics traffickers be utilized as assassins. On December 19, 1960, Harold Meltzer was considered as a possible CIA assassin. Meltzer was an associate of Meyer Lansky. The CIA: "Attached is a rather comprehensive six page biographical history which supplies not only all the information you requested, but many additional facts which will facilitate your evaluation of his potential. Meltzer owns and operates Fried Sportswear Company, Los Angeles, California. On August 3, 1959 he was convicted at Federal Court at Los Angeles for failure to register as a previously convicted narcotics law violator at the time of his travel abroad. He was fined $1,000 and placed on three years probation. Meltzer appeared before a Federal Grand Jury at Los Angeles on March 24, 1960, under subpoena, but invoked the Firth Amendment throughout questioning. Although he was threatened with contempt proceedings, this action never materialized. In the Spring of 1959 he furnished information to our California Office, but has not since cooperated with us. He has the background and talent for the matter we discussed but it is not known whether he would be receptive. Also attached is a copy of his FBI criminal record and an old Wanted Notice which bears a good likeness of him. I have never met Meltzer." [Los Angeles Times 5.3.78; CIA Enc. 12.1960

JAMES ANGLETON AND CHARLES SIRAGUSA

JAMES ANGLETON was interviewed on October 13, 1977, regarding his relationship with Charles Siragusa:

He knows Siragusa from World War II days. Following the war, during the 1950's, Mr. Siragusa was assigned to Rome as the U.S. representative on narcotics matters for Western Europe. ANGLETON had several official contacts with him but none since. Mr. ANGLETON states he was never associated with assassination plotting.

CHARLES SIRAGUSA AND JOHN MERTZ

When CI Director JAMES ANGLETON wanted his own Counter-Intelligence shop in Vietnam he ordered former Pretoria Chief of Station, John Mertz, to set one up. John Mertz told this researcher:

During World War II when ANGLETON was in Italy working for Allen Dulles he made an arrangement where he ran a Counter-Intelligence Unit in Italy. These men were in uniform, and did not report to the military. That was a peculiar situation in Italy for a short period of time. In July 1965 ANGLETON got the idea that he could do the same in Vietnam. They knew at that time that the American forces were thoroughly penetrated by the North Vietnamese and the Viet Cong. He sent me over to talk to General Joseph A. McChristian. He was top intelligence officer in Vietnam. [McChristian was General Westmoreland's intelligence chief from 1965 to 1967.] He later became DIA Chief, when he came back to the States. McChristian sent me over to confer with him to see if it would be possible for the Agency to set up a Counter-intelligence Unit in uniform, not reporting to the military. McChristian kicked me out the country. He said, 'No way, get the hell out of here. Tell ANGLETON, no.' Our Chief of Station was Gordon L. Jorgensen. I came back and made a report to ANGLETON. He sent a couple a guys over there and they got kicked out. [Gordon Jorgensen was succeeded as Chief of Station of Saigon by John Limond Hart.] That's as far as that went. I went to Africa a year and a half after that.

Mr. John Mertz was interviewed at his retirement home in Florida on October 6, 1977 in regard to Charles Siragusa's allegations.

Mr. Mertz related the following regarding his contacts with Mr. Siragusa. In 1960 or 1961, three CIA employees were arrested in Havana, Cuba, while engaged in an intelligence audio operation directed at a third country. They were tried, convicted and sentenced to ten years in prison. Their CIA affiliation was not revealed. Mr. Mertz was tasked with devising a means to free the prisoners. Mr. ANGLETON was Siragusa's OSS Supervisor in Italy during World War II, and suggested to Mr. Mertz that he contact Siragusa...Mr. Mertz states he was never associated with assassination plotting nor did he deal with Mr. Siragusa on any matters other than those discussed above...Mertz says he was never associated with assassination plotting.

CHARLES SIRAGUSA AND ROBERT BANNERMAN

Robert Bannerman, who was Deputy Director, Office of Security, during the early 1960's, and later the Director of the Office of Security

...remembers Siragusa as a Office of Security covert contact/informer. He says that when an Office of Security investigation turned up information related to narcotics, Siragusa might be contacted to see if he could provide assistance. Bannerman says he is not aware of any other contacts with Siragusa nor was he involved in any assassination plotting. He says he now knows that Sheffield Edwards was involved in Castro assassination plotting, but was not aware of it at the time. [CIA OGC 77-6457 10.11.77 Robert S. Young]

The Office of the Inspector General of the CIA determined that there was no basis for Siragusa's allegations. William K. Harvey took over the assassination project from Charles Siragusa. Notes on ZR/RIFLE stated: "Maximum security. Kubark [CIA Station] only. e.g. What does Siragusa now know?"

ZR/RIFLE: CIA ASSASSINATION SECTION

William K. Harvey hid ZR/RIFLE in Division D. It was known as FI/D. Division D had contact with the National Security Administration during the 1960's since it was involved in obtaining foreign ciphers through safe cracking. William Harvey was questioned about Division D by F.A.O. Schwartz Jr. of the SSCIA:

Harvey: It was a division of Clandestine Services, which was the focal point and was responsible for primarily two things (Deleted). We had nothing to do beyond that with the general sort of research and analysis use which was handled in a (Deleted) in the what I believe was the DDI, Deputy Director of Intelligence.

Schwartz: Did Staff D include within its responsibilities the (deleted).

Harvey: Yes, in two ways: complete control and coordination of any such efforts, approval and assessment of the security risk, and also the direct procurement through operational means abroad, but not in this country...

Schwartz: Now, did a man called James O'Connell work for you in Staff D?

Harvey: Yes he did.

Schwartz: At some point did James O'Connell recount to you a conversation concerning Patrice Lumumba?

Harvey: Briefly, (Deleted) came to me and said that he had been approached by Richard Bissell, who was then the Deputy Director for

Plans, to undertake an operation in the Congo, one of the objectives of which was the elimination of Patrice Lumumba. He also told me that he had declined to undertake this assignment.

Schwartz: Did Mr. Bissell subsequently have a conversation with you in which he also recounted the fact that he had requested Mr. O'Connell to undertake such an operation?

Harvey: Yes he did.

Schwartz: Do you know anything about what happened with respect to Mr. Lumumba, apart from those two conversations?

Harvey: I assume do you mean do I know any of the details of Lumumba's death?

Schwartz: No, that is not what I mean. I mean do you know about any steps undertaken on behalf of the Agency in connection with any proposals to eliminate Lumumba.

Harvey: No I do not.

WILLIAM K. HARVEY'S HANDWRITTEN NOTES ON ZR/RIFLE

William Harvey's handwritten notes on ZR/RIFLE contained no mention of assassination, These are the notes:

1. Identification. The purpose of ZR/RIFLE is to spot, develop and use agents assets for Division D Operations. Agents will be spotted in several areas, including the United States, but for operational security reasons will probably not be used in their countries of residence. Present developmental activity is being conducted in the WE and EE areas but it is anticipated that this will be extended to other division areas. The project will be operated against third party country intelligence and personnel.

2. Objective. The objective of this project is the procurement of code and cipher materials and information concerning such materials in accordance with requirements levied on the Clandestine Services, primarily by the National Security Agency. Since these requirements are subject to frequent revision, no listing of targets would be valid for the duration of the project. Specific operations will be mounted on the basis of need and opportunity. The project will be conducted by Division D with assistance from area divisions and stations as needed.

3. Background: In response to the increasing requirements for the operational procurement of foreign code and cipher materials, Division D in 1960 began the spotting of agent assets as a developmental activity. During that same period requirements from the National Security Administration became more refined and in many respects more sensitive. Because most stations are not equipped to conduct this type of operation and because of the desirability of completely centralized control over this entire effort, it was determined that Division D, which is in closest touch with the National Security Administration on procurement requirements, could best conduct this activity. The spotting activity has now advanced far enough to justify removing from the OOA category.

4. Operational Assets:

(1) Personnel: QJWIN is under written contract as a principal agent, with the primary task of spotting agent candidates. QJWIN was first contacted in 1958 through the (deleted) in connection with an illegal narcotics operation into the United States. For a period of a year and a half he was contacted by the Chief of Station, Luxembourg, in behalf of the Bureau of Narcotics. Files of the Bureau reflect an excellent performance by QJWIN. On October 1960...

Another series of William Harvey's notes on ZR/RIFLE combined with its first draft:

- 1) Legal, ethical morale, operational problems; political; non-attributability.
- 2) Our own experience (Bangkok), (& effect on DDP) and experiences w/KGB (Crossup, Bandera group Khokilov) require most professional, proven operationally competent, ruthless, stable, CE-experienced ops officers (few available) able to conduct patient search and with guts to pull back if instinct or knowledge tells him he should with known high regard for operational security. Assessments are all important)
- 3) Maximum security: Sigler [?] not secure enough.
  - a. Within KUBARK only (e.g. How much does Siragusa now know?); Limitation on number of code clerks for enciphering and deciphering. Guise of Lauvide [?] objective. no approach to other government agencies.
  - b. Within KUBARK one focal point for control, search tracing, case officering etc. DDP authority in the focal point mandatory. DCI officially advised? Overseas one man control base with own (non-Station) commo.
  - c. Maximum security cable commo for innocuous cables only; no restrictions of travel; possibility of one man overseas (Europe) control base with own (non-Station) commo. Word of mouth and no bashfulness re trips.

d. No PA's (except for search) or intermediaries; rigid case-officering from start to finish. No silk shirt PA's.

e. No approach to officials of foreign governments...Avoid discussion with foreign until all possibility of search through private citizens (e.g. QJWIN) had been examined.

f. No use of agent who ever worked for U.S. Government Agency. Tracing by opposition would end.

g. Use of already tested assets (e.g. Mankel - QJWIN) in the search.

h. Standby list of KUBARKERS who can pass as foreigners and limited official reference. Non-attributability. No American citizen or American residents for direct action; possibly for approach to foreign elements. No criminal who is tainted by use by another American agency.

i. Pretext: Kutuke/D search. this established (es. Rome).

j. No discussions in Stations.

k. No 'team' until ready to go if at all.

4. Blackmail:

a. No American citizens or residents or people who ever obtained a U.S. visa.

b. No chain of (illegible) from person to person; singleton ops. No chain of connections permitting blackmail.

c. Don't meet any selectee in home territory.

d. Exclude organizations e.g. Sicilians, criminals, those with record of arrest, those with instability of purpose as criminals.

e. Staffers involved - selection.

5. Cover: planning should include provision for blaming Soviets or Czechs in case of blow.

6. Testing of nominee's essential re: following directions, security and blackmail.

7. Former resistance personnel a possibility. (OSS Archives)
8. Use nobody who has never dealt with criminals; otherwise will not be aware of pitfalls or consider factors such as freedom to travel, wanted lists, etc. Exclude organization criminals, those with record of arrests, those who have engaged in several types of crime. Corsicans recommended. Sicilians lead to Mafia.
9. Should have phony 201 file in RI to backstop this, all documents therein forged & backdated. Should look like CE [Counter-Espionage] file.
10. Possible use of staffers for the action.
11. Silverthorne
12. Period of testing, surveillance, etc. for each selectee.
13. All Kubark personnel involved should have some CE experience.
14. Silverthorne & stable in Paris.
15. What are the limits on team or individuals selected? No "team" until ready to go.
16. Danger of standbys.

Keeping of files.

Another series of William K. Harvey's handwritten notes contained these words:

25/ 1 - Exec Action. The magic button. Narcotics Buro. William K. Harvey commented on his notes to Senate Select Committee on Intelligence:

Now these two pieces of paper, well, I say two pieces of paper, what they are from -- they are in my handwriting. It's from a yellow pad, probably the duplicate of this that I used to keep on my desk and just make rough notes of conversations that I had, telephone and otherwise, with various people. Once a week I would go through them and either destroy, classified trash, dictate from them, or occasionally save them. There is no relationship between the material that appears after the line two-thirds of the way down the page, just before the 26/1(deleted) and the material which appears above it which is tabbed SID G tab 21.

Schwartz: That would be Sid Gottlieb?

Harvey: Sid Gottlieb.

Schwartz: Doesn't the conversation with Sid Gottlieb on January 25 indicate that you had a discussion that included the word bankruptcy and you felt assassination was --

Harvey: There was a general philosophic discussion of assassination and assassination techniques...This was sort of an exchange of ideas and briefing session, probably held at the request of Sid Gottlieb in my office shortly after he either took over a new job in Technical Services Division or took over as actual Chief of Technical Services Division...[Last resort beyond last resort and confession of weakness] that's obviously referring to assassination. That's probably what I told Sid Gottlieb my opinion on the use and propriety of assassination as a technique was. The confession of weakness -- let me put it just as plainly. A great nation should be able to take care of a defaulting bank clerk other than eliminating him physically. [El Benefactor was Mr. Trujillo] obviously, yes. That is what he liked to be referred to himself.

Schwartz: Was the use of assassination against Mr. Trujillo brought up in conversation with Mr. Gottlieb?

Harvey: Not as you are stating it. In other words if what you mean was, was the question of should we assassinate Trujillo brought up in that sense, that answer is no."

William K. Harvey was asked to name the other two candidates for assassination:

I presume that the logical candidates would have been Lumumba and Castro, I mean not that we were considering them in this discussion as logical targets for assassination, but that these were sort of the three people that would have come to mind if you are going to go into this, these are three to be considered. But you will notice Mr. Schwartz, 'Framework of Sid's job (deleted) Memo.' (Deleted) is the name of the Staff Officer who worked for me in Division D at that time. This 'translating machine' was an experimental device, done under -- hoped for development (deleted) that I was most interested in, because of the serious translation problem we had and (deleted)..." William K. Harvey was read the passage: "Within Kubark, one focal point for control, search, training, case officering, etc. -- DDP authority in this focal point mandatory. DCI officially advised?" He responded: "I do not know [if the Director of the Central Intelligence Agency] was advised that I had been asked to set up an Executive Action capability and had taken certain steps to have an assessment of assets in that connection...I was completely convinced during this entire period, that this operation had the full authority of the White House, either from the President or from someone authorized and known to be authorized to speak for the President. But I must answer, so this does not get out of context, that I have no personal knowledge whatever of the individual's identities, times, exact words or channels through which such authority may have been passed...In February 1961 [Mr. Bissell] brought up the question of Executive Action. He said he was concerned about it -- about not only our capabilities, if any, to perform it, but the basic questions of protections, methods, techniques, decisions, judgment as to the advisability in any given case, and this whole sort of panoply of -- again, pardon the term -- expertise required. I cannot be positive the word assassination was actually mentioned, but to the best of my recollection, it either was mentioned in other words [Executive Action], that exact word either did come out, or the implication was so clear as to be beyond any misunderstanding...Well, I'm not trying to be humorous, but the first thing I did, quite honestly, was to go back and think about it, and try to think out my own thoughts, and then I did conduct a very discreet -- not completely, but almost completely Eyes Only -- survey is a bad word, its too formal and connotes more of an official inquiry than this was, but what I did do was to discuss in theoretical terms with a few officers whom I trusted quite implicitly the whole subject of assassination, our possible assets, our posture, going back, if you will, even to the fundamental question of A, is assassination a proper weapon of an American intelligence service and B, even if you assume that it is, is it within our capability within the framework of this government to do it effectively and properly, securely and discreetly...If useful at all, assassination could be used only most rarely and then under the most carefully controlled conditions and as a result of the greatest provocation, without attempting to determine the fundamental policy question of whether the government should ever entertain such a technique or tactic, which was not really my province." Schwartz: Your note has as report to the DCI, the January 26th reference, which reads in the first line (deleted). That is (deleted) I take it?

Harvey: "I'm sure that's (deleted).

Schwartz: Then it appears to say f-a-n-f-o-r-n DCI matter.

Harvey: I am not sure. The closest I could come to that is a fairly illogical Fanfani, and Fanfani was never even dreamed of, as far as I know, in any such context. Fanforn -- Burton Widess raised that with me and just had to throw up my hands. I just don't know. [Harvey SSCIA Test. 6.25.75 NARA SSCIA 157-100002-10105]

THE CANDIDATES FOR PRINCIPAL AGENT

"Spotting," not killing, was allegedly the primary activity of the CIA's contract killer QJWIN, ZR/RIFLE'S principal agent:

Principal agent (Mankel)?" Several candidates were considered for Mankel's job and on October 11, 1960, the CIA Chief of Station (deleted) sent William K. Harvey, Chief Division D, this document:

(1) (Deleted) as source and spotter for (deleted) to pick his brain and pinpoint his ability to do this job for us, but once selection is made, (deleted) to be eliminated. (Deleted) believes KUBARK handling as matter of convenience in behalf of Narcotics Bureau. (Deleted) to follow up with (deleted) on word from Hqs. Purpose is selection of one or two (deleted) as entry men to be teamed with (deleted).

(2) (Deleted) Thoroughly acquainted (deleted) picture. Appears to have on tap (deleted) type, ca 40 years old, whom he had once mentioned to (deleted) outside man in (deleted) to follow up with (deleted) after briefing by (deleted) and (deleted). Purpose is select (deleted) for teaming with (deleted) split them after job done. Possible find (deleted) speaking German as well as Italian. Possible German documentation?

(3) Siragusa, Assistant Deputy Narcotics Commissioner, as source on Corsicans and Sicilians; query him whether District #2 (N.Y. / N.J. / New England) had West Indian colored contacts usable for our purposes.

(4) (Deleted) contact: (Deleted) Rome, American Citizen, has clearance, good potential PA, experienced with criminals; educated England and US.

(5) Milan offers good possibilities of finding (deleted) and document-suppliers.

(6) (Deleted) contact Florence (deleted) bar owner, speaks Italian, German, English, had thorough knowledge underworld Antwerp and Brussels and working knowledge underworld Frankfurt, Cologne, Nice.

(7) (Deleted) had two expert (deleted) who were introduced to Cusack on July 19, 1960, in Barcelona.

(8) (Deleted) born May 11, 1910, Antwerp; stateless (of Russian descent); alias (deleted) Knowledgeable northern underworld. Possible spotter. Has worked for (deleted) and (deleted). Speaks English. Can locate thru CID, Fran, or thru desk at Frankfurter Hof, asking for (deleted) and using (deleted) name as reference with him.

(9) For training purposes: French commercial film (deleted); can be obtained thru (deleted) excellent detail on planning and execution of (deleted) job.

WHO WAS QJWIN?

The CIA settled on candidate number six, FNU Mankel, QJWIN (IRD #34,944). QJWIN was identified as a 44-year-old Luxembourg citizen. In 1919 he was arrested at Geneva for complicity in an assassination and sentenced to life imprisonment. In 1925, he was released through the influence of his friends. In December 1939, he was accused of embezzlement in Luxembourg. In December 1939, he was arrested by the French authorities on suspicion of espionage and interned at Gurs. Again, he was released through the influence of friends - Muchen, Laval - in June 1940. In August 1941, he was given an important intelligence post in Bordeaux by the Germans. In November 1943, he was arrested by the Gestapo and imprisoned at Frennes. A few days later he was released and placed under house surveillance at his Paris home. It was reported: "Reported to be art dealer and homosexual. Subject was described as wealthy and cultured. Subject had numerous friends in good Parisian circles and appeared to be more than a collaborator." In December 1943, he was expelled from France by the Gestapo and instructed to live at "fudelange" in Luxembourg. When he was arrested in Luxembourg on September 16, 1944, papers found on him indicated he had a fair amount of influence with the Germans and possibly was an agent.[CIA 201-245882 7.17.59] On August 7, 1945, he was mentioned at the trial of Marshall Petain. On September 5, 1958, Priority Traces on Subject and family were requested from (deleted) to the Chief Western European Division:

1. Priority A traces are requested on Subject who is the (deleted) informant referred to in para 2 of (illegible) 0010. Depending on the outcome of the traces, it is planned to use Subject as an Agent Provocateur and or a double agent against the Soviets.

2. (Deleted) has known Subject since the early 1950's when Subject was a successful smuggler. (Deleted) 3 and (Deleted) used Subject as an informer on the activities of other smugglers in Luxembourg. Subject is financially indebted to (deleted) who has loaned him money to get started in a legitimate business. (In addition, (Deleted) knows a lot about Subject's past illegal activities, which might conceivably be used against Subject.) Subject has many varied contacts among illegal traders and petty criminals as well as among influential legitimate businessmen. He is described by the (Deleted) as a quick thinker and one who can "think on his feet." When the question arose as to who a suitable candidate for provocateur might be, (Deleted) suggested Subject. (Deleted) was called in and without hesitation he answered the same question immediately with Subject's name. When the question is put to (Deleted) who is more conservative in judgment than either (Deleted) or (Deleted) he also agreed Subject was ideal choice. According to the (Deleted) assessment of Subject, he is the type of person who would appeal to (Deleted) and since we have been searching for means to probe into KGB activities in Luxembourg, Subject may well be the man for the job.

THE CHINESE COMMUNIST'S FREE HEROIN

The CIA: "QJWIN was first contacted in 1958 through the (deleted) in connection with an illegal narcotics operation into the United States. For a year and a half he was contacted sporadically by Chief of Station, Luxembourg in behalf of the Bureau of Narcotics." This case involved the allegation that the Chinese Communists were giving heroin to a smuggling ring for free so it could be smuggled into the United States. The CIA:

1. Chief of Station, Luxembourg has provided the following information concerning an approach to a Luxembourger by a French national who desired to join a narcotics ring disposing of narcotics supplied by the Chinese Communists.

A Luxembourg citizen reported that in mid-April 1959 one (Deleted) asked him to join a ring which received large amounts of free Opium from Chicoms on condition that it be smuggled into the United States. (Deleted) said that two Sicilian residing in Paris and successfully engaged in this traffic; one who allegedly had received 50 kilograms of free opium in Hong Kong and delivered it personally in the United States after entering via Canada. Full French documentation needed for an American visa can allegedly be obtained for $200.

Address is given as (Deleted) Paris and he is described as follows...Born in Basque country Smuggled narcotics before and after the war from North Africa. Convicted three times, the last time for theft and was last released in December 1958. (No Headquarters traces)

The Luxembourger stated his willingness to accept (Deleted) offer if he can have American guidance. COS, Luxembourg, who interviewed him, observed that he probably knows more than he told or is involved in some deal for which he hopes to protect himself by being able to state that he is working for the Americans. COS, Luxembourg suggested a (deleted) representative be sent to Luxembourg where he could fully interrogate the Luxembourger and assess his story. QJWIN would be an agent provocateur and would try to make contact with the Chicoms through the contacts he made when he was a successful smuggler in the 1950's. [CIA 470 9.9.58]

By 1960: "QJWIN was under written contract as a principal agent, with the primary task of spotting agent candidates." Mankel was not a safecracker, nor did he have access to false documents - Mankel was a killer. The candidates he spotted were candidates for assassination.

PATRICE LUMUMBA- CIA CABLE TRAFFIC

On August 18, 1960 the CIA Station in Leopoldville cabled the DCI:

Embassy and Station believe Congo experiencing classic communist effort takeover government. Many forces at work here: Soviets... Communist Party. Although difficult to determine major influencing factors to predict outcome struggle for power. Decisive period not far off. Whether or not Lumumba actual commie or just playing commie game to assist his solidifying power, anti-West forces rapidly increasing power in Congo and there may be little time left in which to take action to avoid another Cuba."

[CIA Cable IN 39706 Leopoldville to Director 8.18.60]

This cable also stated the Station's operational "objective of replacing Lumumba with pro-Western group." Bronson Tweedy, then Chief of the Africa Division of the CIA's Clandestine Services, replied the same day that he was seeking State Department approval for the proposed operation based upon: "Our belief that Lumumba must be removed if possible." [CIA Cable Out 59741]

On August 19, 1960, Richard Bissell signed a follow up cable to Leopoldville:

You are authorized to proceed with operation." [CIA Cable Out 59959]
Several days later the Stanleyville Station reported that a plan to assassinate Patrice Lumumba had been proposed to President Kasavubu by Congolese leaders: "Kasavubu refused to agree saying he was reluctant to resort to violence and no other leader sufficient stature to replace Lumumba. [CIA IN 42761 8.24.60]

On August 25, 1960, Allen Dulles attended a meeting of the Special Group - a subcommittee of the National Security Council responsible for planning covert operations. The Special Group "finally agreed that planning for the Congo would not necessarily rule out 'consideration' of any particular kind of activity which might contribute to getting rid of Lumumba." [Special Group Minutes 8.25.60] The next day Allen Dulles signed a cable to the Leopoldville CIA Station which stressed the urgency of 'removing' Patrice Lumumba:

In high quarters here it is the clear-cut conclusion that if Lumumba continues to hold high office the inevitable result will at best be chaos and at worst pave the way to Communist takeover of Congo with disastrous consequences for the prestige of the United Nations and for the interests of the free world generally. Consequently we conclude that his removal must be an urgent and prime objective that under existing conditions this should be a high priority of our covert action." [CIA Cable OUT 62966 Dir. To Leopoldville 8.26.60]

Allen Dulles cabled that the Station was to be given wider authority "including even more aggressive action if it can remain covert...We realize that targets of opportunity may present themselves to you." [CIA Cable 8.26.60] Allen Dulles authorized $100,000 "to carry out any crash programs on which you do not have the opportunity to consult Headquarters." Dulles assured the Leopoldville Station that the message had been seen and approved at a competent level in the State Department. [CIA Cable 8.26.60] But the Director of Central Intelligence made a special point of assuring the Leopoldville Station that he was authorized to act unilaterally in a case where the United States Ambassador to the Congo would prefer to remain uninformed: "To the extent that Ambassador may desire to be consulted, you should seek his concurrence. If in any particular case, he does not wish to be consulted, you can act on your own authority where time does not permit referral here." [CIA Cable 8.26.60] "This mandate raises a question as to whether the Director Central Intelligence was contemplating a particular form of action against Lumumba which the Ambassador would want to be in a position to plausibly deny United States involvement. Richard Bissell would later tell the SSCIA that he was "almost certain" that the cable was a circumlocutious means of indicating that the President wanted Lumumba killed." [SSCIA 9.10.75 p33, 64-65]

QJWIN was met in Luxembourg on October 19, 1960, and October 20, 1960, by two Agency officers and was asked if he would undertake a trip to Africa, presumably Dakar. He was not given the true objective of his mission because of its extreme sensitivity and pending a final decision to use him. Instead he was told that the Soviets were operating in Africa among nationality groups, specifically the Corsicans, and he was being asked to spot, assess and recommend some dependable, quick-witted persons for our use. On October 30, 1960, QJWIN was paid 3,500 Belgian Francs. On November 2, 1960 he accepted an offer to proceed to Leopoldville, Belgian Congo. He was informed the mission might involve a large element of personal risk. On June 26, 1963 William K. Harvey noted that some of the funds given to QJWIN during September and October 1960 could not be accounted for. On November 3, 1960, QJWIN was in Paris. On November 6, 1960, he received 15,000 Bfrs. November 11, 1960, 25,000 Bfrs; November 15, 1960, 30,000 Bfrs. In November 1960, Sidney Gottlieb prepared an assassination kit which included a lethal biological agent, hypodermic needles etc., then personally delivered it to the CIA Station in Leopoldville, where QJWIN had been placed. [Powers Secrets p184]

On December 8, 1960, QJWIN was in Leopoldville where he wanted to recruit a Yugoslav Air Force pilot, however, the CIA considered the target marginal: "We wish to keep him clean of any operational involvement other than that originally planned for him." In December 1960, he was paid $1,000. On December 9, 1960, the Director sent this cable to Leopoldville:

Exploring (deleted) interest possible purchase. Will advise. Have no ops interest pursuing lead but request continuing intelligence coverage important developments in diamond sales picture. *Desk Comment: (Deleted) diamonds collected by Kasai officials from villages as taxes, supposedly valued at 20 million dollars. Wanted (deleted) intact (deleted) about this. Request headquarters comments about having (deleted) being (deleted) and eliciting diamond sales pitch. Then arrange (deleted) Accra based rep of (deleted) meeting. Glenn D. Fields, AC/AF.

QJWIN MEETS WIROGUE

QJWIN related: "While in Leopoldville Subject met IDENTITY F, [WIROGUE] who passed himself off as an Austrian, flashed a bankroll and attempted to recruit Subject to work for an undetermined Western intelligence service, hinting that he was working for the (deleted). Subject reported this to his local Case Officer." In March 1975, the CIA attempted to determine why WIROGUE had approached QJWIN and asked him to be a member of an execution squad. It concluded: "The research did not clarify this matter to any great extent."

Memorandum for Record

WIROGUE Mission to (Deleted)

December, 1960.

On March 13, 1975, a search of available documents was made to determine the reason for the comment in paragraph 2 of a December 17, 1960, cable from Leopoldville indicating that WIROGUE/1 had attempted to recruit a European to be a member of an execution squad. The research did not clarify this matter to any great extent, although some assumptions can be made on the basis of circumstantial evidence.

WIROGUE was an ethnic Georgian recruited and trained for the old (deleted) program. Although born in the Soviet Union, he moved to Western Europe when he was two years old. Involved peripherally with the French Resistance, WIROGUE was sentenced to death by the Germans, but was liberated by the United States in 1945 and returned to Paris. By 1950 he had managed to rob a (deleted) bank of a sizable sum of money, receive a prison sentence and be released five years later for good behavior. He fought in the French Foreign Legion, and as of 1960, was essentially stateless. He was brought to the United States originally for use as one of two agents for Project A (deleted). He spoke native French and fluent Georgian, German and English.

By 1960 the Agency was involved in a reasonably major effort to resettle WIROGUE, possibly in Mexico for the mission for which he had been brought to the United States had been canceled...WIROGUE'S file indicates that as of August 30, 1960, steps were being taken to resettle him in Mexico. However, on September 19, 1960, two members of Africa Division met with him to discuss "an operational assignment in Africa Division." In connection with this assignment, WIROGUE was to be trained in demolitions, small arms and medical immunization. Plans to resettle him in Mexico were canceled. He was provided with a new pseudonym and immunization shots. In October 1960, a cable to Leopoldville stated that WIROGUE was being prepared for deep cover assignment to arrive Leopoldville late November. Headquarters noted the intent to use him as utility agent in order to

(a) organize and conduct surveillance team;

(b) intercept packages;

(c) blow up bridges; and

(d) execute other assignment requiring positive action. His utilization is not to be restricted to the Leopoldville Station. Indeed he may be subject to call by other African Stations although it is expected for him to be resident in Leopoldville.

In this cable WIROGUE was described correctly as an inventor, photographer, architect, forger and former bank robber. He was judged to be ingenuous, observant, shrewd, glib, and one who relished intrigue and daring. He was assessed as able to 'learn quickly and carry out any assignment without regard to danger.' As he was in the United States black, and the plan for him was to depart black, documented as an Austrian to surface in West Germany and from there proceed on his own to Leopoldville.

to prevent his identification with the U.S. Government or (deleted) and to preclude any unexpected recovery of his past which would associate him with his pre-(deleted) life', WIROGUE underwent plastic surgery to change the shape of his nose. He was provided a toupee for constant wear and documented as an Austrian who had never been to the United States. Cover for his presence in Leopoldville was to be shopkeeper, possibly that of photographer. A rather lengthy assessment of his character can be summed up by saying he was able to rationalize any action if he had strong case officer direction. Training records of WIROGUE/1 subsequent to his engagement by the Africa Division, indicate training only in SW. [Secret Writing]

WIROGUE arrived in Leopoldville on December 2, 1960. His case officer gave him the following instructions:

(a) to build cover possibly by opening photographic shop.

(b) to try to spot persons for a surveillance team, intelligence assets, particularly in (deleted) and paramilitary assets. Almost immediately upon arrival he ran into QJWIN who told the station that WIROGUE looked like an intelligence agent. In attempting to recruit QJWIN for his 'execution squad' WIROGUE/1 exceeded his instructions to avoid making approaches without checking with Leopoldville Station.

In January 1961 Leopoldville asked for authority to permit WIROGUE to take flying lessons so that the station plane could be used for clandestine missions. (The plane was registered in YQCLAM'S name). Station acknowledged disadvantage of crossing WIROGUE and YQCLAM OPERATIONS (YQCLAM was never involved in any assassination schemes). Headquarters approved flying lessons. By March 1961

WIROGUE/1 had obtained the position of advisor to the (deleted) and was almost immediately used for the purpose of gathering intelligence on the (deleted). By April 1961 WIROGUE was teaching the (deleted) to fly aircraft, although he himself had learned only several months earlier and was reading navigation manuals at night to stay ahead of his class. [By April 1961 the (deleted - Congolese Air Force?) were attempting to use him to obtain arms and instructors in Western Europe - CIA 5867 Att. In July 1961, WIROGUE departed Leopoldville because he had run into difficulty in obtaining a residence permit. He was terminated in September 1961. (Deleted) said WIROGUE/1 knew very little about station activities.

It is the writer's opinion that WIROGUE/1 was recruited for his (deleted) assignment because of his third country national background in order to establish a support mechanism in Leopoldville. At the time Leopoldville was in chaos, station had very few assets and there was some likelihood that the political situation would degenerate quickly. The (deleted) possibly also wanted to have latent paramilitary capability and WIROGUE'S background and previous training for the (deleted) program made him a suitable candidate. This is, of course, conjecture.

Perhaps pertinent is an October 1964, assessment of WIROGUE who had been turned over to (deleted) for resettling in Mexico. Resettling him had turned out to be an enormous problem. The October 1964 cable notes that WIROGUE had an intense desire for intelligence service and enjoyed the role of lower echelon action agent. Although he threatened to go to work for the (Deleted) it was not believed that he thought himself would be accepted. The assessment indicated there was little flap potential with WIROGUE/1 since he knew little about the Agency. In particular, in (deleted) he was aware of the (deleted) contact with (deleted). WIROGUE/1 spent most of his time trying to develop contacts and was not directly involved in any particular operation.

THE ASSASSINATION OF PATRICE LUMUMBA

On September 5, 1960, President Kasavubu dismissed Premier Patrice Lumumba from his government despite the strong support for Patrice Lumumba that existed in the Congolese Parliament. After having lost this power struggle with Kasavubu and with General Joseph Mobutu, the Chief of Staff of the Congo Army, who seized the government by a military coup on September 14, 1960, Patrice Lumumba sort protection from the United Nations peace-keeping force. The evidence indicated that the ouster of Patrice Lumumba from government did not alleviate the concern about him. The CIA continued to view him as a threat, at least until early December 1960, when he was captured by Joseph Mobutu's troops and imprisoned. During this period CIA officers in the Congo advised and aided Congolese contacts known to have any intent to kill Lumumba. They also opposed the resumption of the democratic process after the coup -- by reopening the Parliament -- because of the likelihood that this would return Lumumba to power." The CIA reported: "The day after Lumumba was deposed by Kasavubu, two CIA officers met with a high level Congolese politician [Mobutu?] who had a close relationship to the Leopoldville Station. The Station reported to CIA headquarters that the politician had made a response to a remark by the (deleted) Station that he might assassinate Lumumba: 'To comment that Lumumba in opposition is almost as dangerous as in office.' (The Congolese politician) indicated understood and implied he might physically eliminate Lumumba." [CIA Cable IN 49679 9.7.60] The cable continued to report that the (deleted) Station had offered to assist this politician "in preparation for new government program" and assured him that the United States would "supply technicians." The day after Joseph Mobutu's coup, the Chief of Station reported that he was serving as an advisor to a Congolese effort to "eliminate" Patrice Lumumba due to his fear that Lumumba might, in fact, have been strengthened by placing himself in U.N. custody, which afforded a safe base of operations.

Patrice Lumumba was arrested by Congolese authorities. Circa January 21, 1961, Patrice Lumumba was moved to Katanga Province where he was kept in a farmhouse prison under the watchful eye of Belgian Julien Gat. When the then-Belgian Congo gained its independence, Katanga Province, headed by Moise Tshombe, had broken away from Patrice Lumumba's central government. On February 13, 1961, Patrice Lumumba and two of his associates were killed. How they were killed remained a mystery. The Congolese Government claimed that Lumumba and two of his companions chiseled their way out of a sandstone hut, armed themselves with tree branches, snuck up behind the guards and knocked them unconscious. Two guards, who had recently been beaten, claimed they had been tied up with torn-up blankets. The fugitives stole a car, hot-wired it, then wrecked it. Local villagers found them, murdered them, and buried the bodies. The villagers did not want to be identified for fear of reprisals. The CIA:

On March 31, 1961, at the request of his case officer, QJWIN was technically interrogated in the French language at a safe site in Frankfurt, Germany. QJWIN had admitted that circa 1953 to 1954 he was approached by IDENTITY C, a Belgian citizen, whom he had known since 1947, to obtain a sample of a new model Belgian gun for the benefit of an Eastern country. Subject reported this incident to IDENTITY B [Belgian Intelligence] and to IDENTITY E, a (deleted) official at Bitburg Air Base. Subject advised that on his return from Leopoldville he visited IDENTITY B, but did not discuss his work with the (deleted). Their conversation concerned the situation in the Congo in general...Subject stated that his wife is acquainted with IDENTITY B and he was aware that she had a relationship with him. She is also aware that he presently has a clandestine relationship with (Deleted) without knowing the exact extent of it. Subject describes his wife as extremely discreet. Subject stated that he had collaborated with the Luxembourg, Belgian and West German Intelligence Services and with the French Marquis before his current association with the (deleted). Subject stated he is also known to the French and Belgian Police Departments in connection with illegal business transactions. While he was in Leopoldville, a sum of money was deposited to his wife's account at the Banque International de Luxembourg. The deposit was made ostensibly by the (deleted) Embassy in Luxembourg. However, Subject's wife did not question this, but it is obvious to her that he is employed by some (deleted) Agency." QJWIN was asked, "Did you reveal to anyone the nature and details of your mission for the (deleted) in Leopoldville? Did you honestly report everything that took place in Leopoldville? While in Italy and Switzerland in February 1961, did you indicate to anyone that you had a secret mission for the (deleted)?" QJWIN passed this lie detector test.

On March 21, 1961, QJWIN was paid 5,000 Bfrs; June 30, 1961, 30,000 Bfrs. July 28, 1961, $200; August 1, 1961, 30,000 Bfrs; September 28, 1961, 30,000 Bfrs; October 10, 1961, 20,000 Bfrs. Operational Expenses; October 31, 1961, 20,000 Bfrs. for operational expenses. October 31, 1961, 30,000 Bfrs; December 1, 1961, 7600 Bfrs, reimbursement for (deleted). December 1, 1961, 30,000 Bfrs; June 5, 1961, received 30,000 Bfrs. January 5, 1962, 30,000 Bfrs. January 31, 1962, 30,000 Bfrs. The CIA stated: "Agency officers who were handling QJWIN in Europe were almost certainly aware of the fact that he was being considered as an asset by the senior Agency official who had begun to become active in February 1962, in the assassination plot against Castro. An undated EYES ONLY memo from the DD/P refers to a February 19, 1962, memo and authorizes the retention of the services of QJWIN in activities which we have identified as coincidental with the assassination plot against Castro." On March 1, 1962, QJWIN was paid 30,000 Bfrs; April 2, 1962, 30,000 Bfrs; May 4, 1962, 30,000 Bfrs; July 2, 1962, 30,000 Bfrs; September 17, 1962, 30,000 Bfrs. Evidence suggested that in April 1963 QJWIN was in Florida with William Harvey. William Harvey's expense list: "Vouchered. All chargeable to ops expenses QJWIN/ZRRIFLE.

QJWIN IS TERMINATED

QJWIN was "terminated" on February 14, 1964. The CIA noted:

(Deleted) told him on April 21, 1964 that the operation in which he was to play a role had been shelved and therefore his contract, which ran out on February 29, 1964 was not renewed. He was reassured that this action did not result from anything he had done and his past cooperation was appreciated. It was mentioned as conceivable that the operation might have been off and running if he had been able to establish his cover last year...In discussing his future (deleted) suggested, now that he has received all the necessary authorizations in Cologne he seriously would discuss this with his wife. His only hesitation is committing himself to a long lease on a shop.

A CIA document dated March 3, 1964, read: "Received 30,000 for February Salary." [NARA 1993:07.22.08:24:18:400410] QJWIN's termination document continued:

Since January 1962 (see paragraph 6 (deleted) 1246 of December 15, 1961) QJWIN's only assignment has been to establish cover. This requirement was confirmed by DIR-12541 of May 28, 1962, and during (deleted) discussions in Headquarters in July 1962. Twenty-seven months and some $18,000 later, he is still not in place. Although (deleted) made an issue of this with him in August 1963. Whether he ever really intended to commit himself to this assignment remains a question. (Deleted) has strong doubts. QJWIN's personal history reflects major instability and the habit of hedging his bets is undoubtedly part of his character. That does not imply a security breach. There is nothing to indicate that he has discussed his KUBARK relationship with anyone except perhaps his wife.

(Deleted) is known to QJWIN by true name. (Deleted) used the name 'Pierre' with him but it is assumed he has identified Rozenov's true name. QJWIN knows the telephone number of the Station outside phone but this phone is being dismantled in October of this year. Daniel C. Brillard. [CIA FOIA 0003306]

CIA INVESTIGATION OF THE ASSASSINATION OF LUMUMBA

According to statements by a senior CIA officer [William Harvey] in 1967, made to the Inspector General, the Agency was instructed to develop a capability to conduct assassinations. Termed an 'executive action' capability such a project was initiated in 1961, apparently assuming an existing cryptonym, ZRRIFLE. At the request of the case officer (the same officer providing this information in 1967) a clandestine asset in Europe, QJWIN, was to be used in the project. The case officer understood that QJWIN had been considered in 1960 for use in the assassination of Patrice Lumumba but that the proposed operation was never carried out because the designated CIA case officer declined the assignment.

The case officer in charge of ZRRIFLE also was involved in an operation to assassinate Fidel Castro, running from early 1962 to mid-1963. However, QJWIN was not used in this effort, reliance being placed instead on a Cuban leader. [Tony Varona]. QJWIN was never briefed on the Castro operation, according to the officer handling ZRRIFLE and the Castro operation.

Records do show that QJWIN was dispatched to the Congo in 1960, being there in November and December 1960, prior to the death of Lumumba at the hands of the Congolese. However, there is no evidence to suggest that QJWIN was in any way involved in Lumumba's demise. The case officer who was the source of the information of the contemplated use of QJWIN in such activity understood that he was never used in this manner. The following information reviews existing knowledge beyond that summarized above.

A October 13, 1960, dispatch from (deleted) transmits notes to headquarters from one of the two officers who subsequently met QJWIN in Luxembourg. The notes list the names of police officials and criminal elements and allude to the possibilities of finding safe-crackers and document suppliers.

QJWIN was met in Luxembourg on October 19, 1960, and October 20, 1960, by two agency officers and was asked if he would undertake a trip to Africa, presumably Dakar. (The appropriate dispatch, dated November 2, 1960, lists only (deleted) and (deleted) as addresses.) He was not given the true objective of his mission because of its extreme sensitivity and pending a final decision to use him. Instead, he was told that the Soviets were operating in Africa among nationality groups specifically Corsicans, and he was asked to spot, assess and recommend some dependable, quick-witted persons for our use. He agreed to go on the trip. On November 2, 1960, QJWIN was met in Frankfurt by an Agency officer, and he accepted an offer to proceed to Leopoldville. (Presumably the idea for sending him there originated at Headquarters because someone must have considered him qualified to handle a potential operation there.) The precise mission was not conveyed to QJWIN, and he was only informed that the mission might involve a large element of personal risk. We do not know and at present are unable to determine what the assignment was. Subsequent cable traffic discusses arrangements for QJWIN to go first to Leopoldville and then to Dakar.

On December 8, 1960, QJWIN was in Leopoldville where he cultivated a close personal friendship with a Yugoslav Air Force pilot. There follow suggestion in cable traffic on what approach QJWIN should use to recruit him. However a special channel FI/D cable of December 14, 1960, rates this target as marginal when considered against the framework of plans for QJWIN and instructs him to desist if action has not already been taken. The first paragraph of this cable states that we 'would like restrict QJWIN to activity directly pertinent his mission Leopoldville of forthcoming mission Dakar and possibly elsewhere (e.g. Milan) for FI/D purposes. He our only asset of this type and we wish to keep him clean of any operational involvement other than that originally planned for him.' This cable would tend to rule out involvement in an assassination plot, since it is highly unlikely that an individual picked for such a sensitive and dangerous assignment would be burdened with other chores or assignments immediately thereafter.

Lumumba was still alive, albeit under arrest, as of the middle of January 1961 and it seems clear that QJWIN had left the Congo in December 1960. A December 19, 1960, cable to Leopoldville authorizes his return to (deleted) on December 21, 1960, and instructs (deleted) to pay him $1000 for December salary, which is the final payment for his services on this operation. Also headquarters was working out the details of a Congo assignment. A January 11, 1961, headquarters memorandum, which refers to T/A's dated December 21, 1960, states that the referenced amounts were given to QJWIN by the Chief of Station (Deleted). This suggests that QJWIN was in (Deleted) on or before December 21, 1960.

Subsequently, it appears that QJWIN operated in Europe trying to spot and assess individuals whom the Agency could use in (deleted) operations, in line with one of the principal missions of FI/D. A May 24, 1962 cable to (deleted) mentions that a decision was made to keep him in Europe and that the Leopoldville assignment had been canceled. A transfer to (deleted) is deemed a good choice. Also a April 24, 1964, dispatch from (deleted) which mentions the termination of QJWIN'S contract, refers to the fact that his only assignment since January 1962, has been to establish cover.

Agency officers who were handling QJWIN in Europe were almost certainly unaware of the fact that he was being considered as an asset by the senior Agency official who had begun to become active in February 1962 in the assassination plot against Castro. An undated (EYES ONLY) memorandum for the Deputy Director (Plans) refers to a February 19, 1962, memorandum and authorizes the retention of the services of QJWIN in activities which we have identified as coincidental with the assassination plot against Castro. The date of the reference memorandum coincides with the time that the senior Agency official became actively involved in this enterprise, A memorandum of June 27, 1963, dealing with the further handling of QJWIN mentions that his enterprise has been terminated, except for one precautionary 'life line.'

In summary it is almost certain that QJWIN had nothing at all to do with the assassination of Lumumba, even though the contents and language of available files are often cryptic and imprecise. If he had been, it is highly unlikely that the number of Agency officers handling and contemplating assignments for him would have been so large. The headquarters division for whom he worked was concerned, inter alia, with obtaining foreign cipher and code books and it is reasonable to conclude that QJWIN'S primary and exclusive responsibility was to find individuals who could do this kind of job. One of the officers who first met QJWIN in Luxembourg was on a trip overseas to find safe-crackers and document suppliers. The December 14, 1960, cable mentions keeping him clean and using him in Dakar and possibly Milan which was specifically mentioned in the October 13, 1960, dispatch as offering good possibilities for finding safe-crackers and document suppliers. Further, good trade craft practices would dictate that the last thing that would keep an individual clean would be involvement in an assassination plot. Although the Chief of Fi/D was later assigned responsibility for the Castro operation, there is no evidence to suggest that he was privy to assassination plots prior to his briefing in late 1961.

While QJWIN was considered for use in the executive action capability, there is no information available to suggest that he had ever been approached in this regard, much less used in any of the planning.

Based on available evidence it seems that the Agency was in no way involved in Lumumba's assassination. However, in the course of our research, two aspects of the Lumumba story surfaced that indicate Agency involvement in a plot. In the one instance, our 1967 source mentioned the name of an Agency officer who was designated as the case officer for an assassination plot against Lumumba, but reported that he had declined the assignment. That officer was the originator of a December 19, 1960, cable to Leopoldville in which he authorized the return of QJWIN to Leopoldville on December 21, 1960, to await further instructions and the payment of $1000 to him for his December salary by Leopoldville Station. The last paragraph of the cable advises Leopoldville that headquarters is working out the details of a Congo assignment for QJWIN. The same officer was the originator of a January 31, 1961, Memorandum dealing with payments to QJWIN.

In the second instance, a December 17, 1960, cable from Leopoldville deals with the activities of a newly recruited agent, WIROGUE whose mission was to try to spot persons for a surveillance team, intelligence assets (with emphasis on Orientale Province) and paramilitary assets. The second paragraph of the cable mentions that he resided in the same hotel as QJWIN (although neither knew of the other's CIA connection) and that he approached the latter with an offer of three hundred dollars per month to participate in an intelligence net and to be a member of an 'execution' squad. When QJWIN said that he was not interested, WIROGUE added that there would be bonuses for special jobs. The cable mentioned in paragraph six that the station was concerned with the free wheeling of WIROGUE, his lack of security, his inability to handle finances and his unwillingness to follow instructions. The Station was willing to keep him on probation, he believed his recall would be the best solution. A suggested alternative was to put him in Stanleyville to try to obtain immediate intelligence on that area.

In an attempt to reconstruct events, Africa Division was apprized of the above and was asked to search its records in an attempt to clarify what WIROGUE was up to in the Congo and his reference to an 'execution squad.' The research did not clarify the matter to any great extent, although some assumptions can be made on the basis of circumstantial evidence. On September 19, 1960 two members of the Africa Division met with WIROGUE to discuss an operational assignment in that division. In connection with this assignment, WIROGUE was to be trained in demolitions, small arms and medical immunization. Plans to resettle him in Mexico were canceled. In October 1960, a cable to Leopoldville stated that WIROGUE was being prepared for deep cover assignment to arrive Leopoldville late November. Headquarters noted the intent to use him as utility agent in order to ' (a) organize and conduct surveillance team; (b) intercept packages; (c) blow up bridges; and (d) execute other assignment requiring positive action. His utilization is not to be restricted to Leopoldville. Indeed he may be subject to call by other African Stations although it is expected for him to be resident in Leopoldville.'

WIROGUE arrived in Leopoldville on December 2, 1960. His case officer gave him the following instructions: (a) to build a cover possibly (deleted) and (b) to try to spot persons for a surveillance team, intelligence assets and paramilitary assets. Shortly after his arrival, WIROGUE ran into QJWIN, who later told the station that WIROGUE looked like an intelligence agent. In attempting to recruit QJWIN for his execution squad, WIROGUE exceeded his instructions to avoid making approaches without checking with Leopoldville Station.

In January 1961, at the request of the Leopoldville Station, WIROGUE was given permission to take flying lessons. By March he had obtained the position of (deleted) in that capacity he was used by the CIA for the purpose of gathering intelligence (deleted) He departed Leopoldville in July and his CIA contract was terminated in September 1961.

Africa Division believes that WIROGUE was recruited for his Congo assignment because of his third country national background in order to establish a support mechanism in Leopoldville. At the time the Congo was in chaos, we had few assets there, and the likelihood existed that the political situation would degenerate quickly. The Station possibly also wanted to have a latent paramilitary capability. An October 1964, assessment of WIROGUE indicates little flap potential with him since he knew little about the Agency. He spent most of his time trying to develop contacts and was not directly involved in any particular operation. [CIA 5867 Attachment probably Jerrold Brown]

WIROGUE was more likely to have been behind the assassination of Lumumba than QJWIN. QJWIN was an former Nazi spy who seemed have taken a lot of money from the CIA in the course of establishing his cover but produced little results. WIROGUE, on the other hand, was in the country when the assassination occurred, had made contact with members of the Congolese armed forces,, and he may have used these men in his 'execution squad.' On August 14, 1962, William K. Harvey generated this memo for the DD/P in response to a memo from Landsdale suggesting the liquidation of leaders:

The question of assassination, particularly of Fidel Castro, was brought up by Secretary MacNamara at the meeting of the Special Group (Augmented) in Secretary Rusk's office on August 10, 1962. It was an obvious consensus, in an answer to a comment by Ed Murrow that this is not a subject which has been made a matter of public record. I took careful notes on the comments at this meeting on this point, and the Special Group is not expecting any written comments or study on this point. Upon the receipt of attached memorandum, I called Landsdale's office, and in his absence, pointed out to Frank Hand the inadmissability and stupidity of putting this type of comment in writing in such document...we would write no document pertaining to this and would participate in no open meeting discussing it.

William K. Harvey suggested Lansdale delete the phrase from the memo and all copies of it. [NARA SSCIA 157-10002-10075 8.14.62] John A. McCone sent this memo the Director of the CIA on April 14, 1967:

Operation Mongoose...was under the direction of General Lansdale, with William Harvey handling CIA participation (under FitzGerald). At one of these meetings I recall a suggestion being made to liquidate the top people in the Castro regime, including Castro. I took immediate exception to this suggestion, stating that the subject was completely out of bounds as far as the United States Government and the CIA were concerned and the idea should not be discussed nor should it appear in any papers, as the United States Government could not consider such actions on moral or ethical grounds.

William K. Harvey knew he was guilty of conspiracy to commit murder and avoided leaving a paper trail - as best he could in a Federal bureaucracy.

LEE HARVEY OSWALD: 1939 TO 1959

LITTLE DID OZZIE KNOW HE WOULD GROW UP TO BE THE WORLD'S MOST FAMOUS PATSY

MARGUERITE AND ROBERT E. LEE OSWALD

For the most up-to-date version of this Nodule go to

LEE HARVEY OSWALD'S mother, Marguerite Claverie, was born in 1907. She was raised, with five other children, by her father, a streetcar conductor. Marguerite Claverie separated from her first husband, Edward John Pic Jr., in July 1931, but she bore him a son, John Edward Pic Jr. on January 17, 1932. Marguerite Claverie married Robert E. Lee Oswald on July 20, 1933, with whom she had two sons, Robert Edward Oswald, born on April 7, 1934, and LEE HARVEY OSWALD, born on October 18, 1939. Robert E. Lee Oswald died of a heart attack on August 19, 1939, two months before the birth of LEE HARVEY OSWALD. In 1940 Marguerite Oswald put the family house up for rent, moved into an apartment, and placed John Edward Pic Jr. and Robert Edward Oswald in a Catholic boarding school, where they remained for a year. In 1941 she purchased another house and opened Oswald's Notion Shop on the first floor. In December 1941 she placed John Edward Pic Jr. and Robert Edward Oswald in a Lutheran orphanage then tried to place LEE HARVEY OSWALD there. The orphanage refused. LEE HARVEY OSWALD was two years old. He had to be at least three to be admitted. Instead, Marguerite Oswald left LEE HARVEY OSWALD in the care of her sister, Mrs. Lillian Murret, who had married Charles "Dutz" Murret, a New Orleans gangster. Subsequently, Marguerite Oswald and LEE HARVEY OSWALD moved into an apartment and on December 26, 1942, LEE HARVEY OSWALD entered the Lutheran orphanage. In January 1944, he moved back to his mother's apartment. Marguerite Oswald and LEE HARVEY OSWALD moved to Dallas, where Marguerite Oswald purchased a house and brought Edward Pic Jr. and Robert Edward Oswald home. In February 1945 Marguerite Oswald unsuccessfully tried to return Edward Pic Jr. and Robert Edward Oswald to the orphanage. In May 1945 Marguerite Oswald married Edwin Ekdahl and Edward Pic Jr. and Robert Edward Oswald were sent to military school. In the summer of 1946 Marguerite Oswald left Edwin Ekdahl and moved to Covington, Louisiana. She enrolled LEE in Covington Elementary School in September, and withdrew him on January 23, 1947, to move to Fort Worth after a reconciliation with Edwin Ekdahl. Philip E. Vinson, OSWALD'S classmate in 1947, stated:

Generally speaking my recollection is that he was a pretty normal kid in second grade. He was not a good student. A little below average. He was sort of a tough guy. He had a bunch of kids who clustered around him called 'LEE'S gang.' [Interview with Vinson 8.93]

Otis Carlton, a neighbor of the OSWALD'S from Benbrook, Texas, reported that he witnessed OSWALD throw a knife at John Pic when he purchased the home of Marguerite Oswald in 1946 or 1947:

During the next few weeks he was in and out of the Oswald home on several occasions. One night he was in the living room of the Oswald home talking to Mrs. Oswald about the real estate transaction. LEE OSWALD, the youngest boy, came running through the kitchen door and was chasing John Pic, his older brother. LEE OSWALD had a long butcher knife in his hand and he threw the knife at John Pic but missed him, and hit the wall. Mrs. Oswald only made the remark 'they have these little scuffles all the time and don't worry about it.' [WCE 1874 p3]

In January 1948, Edwin Ekdahl and Marguerite Oswald were divorced. Marguerite Oswald had John Pic Jr. leave high school and go to work. In January 1950 John Pic Jr. entered the Coast Guard while Robert Edward Oswald joined the Marines in 1952.

OSWALD was shuttled around between institutions and developed a pathological personality. It would not surprise me if Carlton were telling the truth. The OSWALD'S were poor and LEE HARVEY used this as part of his cover however not every person who experiences the degree of poverty OSWALD did splits to the Soviet Union. OSWALD was a violent character, however, he was in with dudes that made him look like a sissy so this does not mean that LEE HARVEY OSWALD killed the President of the United States.

HERBERT PHILBRICK

In his book on his brother, Robert Edward Oswald claimed: "One of LEE'S favorite programs was I Led Three Lives, the story of Herbert Philbrick, the FBI informant who posed as a Communist spy. In the early 1950's LEE watched that show every week without fail. When I left home to join the Marines [July 1952] he was still watching the re-runs." Herbert Philbrick was the 25-year-old son of a railroad trainman who joined the youth section of the Communist Party of the U.S.A. in 1940 while serving as an unpaid FBI counterspy. Herbert Philbrick remained in place until 1949, when he surfaced as a surprise prosecution witness in the trial of 11 Communist leaders. Philbrick was a Cold War folk hero to most Americans. In 1952 Herbert Philbrick testified before the House Un-American Activities Committee. Philbrick also testified before the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee on May 29, 1952, along with Whittaker Chambers, General Claire Chennault and Hede Massing, a former Communist agent in Washington. Dr. Robert Morris was the Subcommittee's Chief Counsel. Philbrick wrote the book titled I Led Three Lives, which was made into a television series. Herbert Philbrick, 78, died on August 17, 1993.

OSWALD could not have watched I Led Three Lives when Robert Edward Oswald said he did. The TV listing in the Dallas - Fort Worth area for July 1952 did not list the program. The show premiered in New York City on October 21, 1953. The New York Times reported "Television Programs In Review / I Led Three Lives From Philbrick Book, Opens As Serial." Robert Edward Oswald was mistaken as to when he watched it but you can bet your ass OSWALD watched it because OSWALD wanted to be a spy when he grew up. He wanted to be part of an anti-Communist operation like Philbrick, an infiltration operation. In the summer of 1963 OSWALD wrote:

Now-a-days most of us read enough about certain right wing groups to know how to recognize them and guard against their corrosive effects. I would like to say a word about them, although there is possibly few other american born person's in the U.S. who have as many personal reasons to know and therefore hate, and mistrust communism. I would never be a pseudo professional anti-communist like Philbrick or McCarthy. I would never jump on any of the many right wing bandwagon's [FBI DL-100-10461]

A study of OSWALD'S life revealed that what OSWALD truly believed in was exactly the opposite of what he said and what he wrote, therefore his speech and his writing had to be interpreted through a mirror or "through a looking glass." If OSWALD wrote that he had distain for Herbert Philbrick, it meant that he deeply admired him.

EARLY VIOLENT BEHAVIOR & TRUANCY 1952 TO 1954

In August 1952, OSWALD and Marguerite Oswald moved to Manhattan, where John Pic Jr. lived. They moved into the apartment of John Pic Jr.'s mother-in-law at 325 East 92nd Street two blocks from where this data base is being updated. Here, OSWALD pulled a knife on John Pic Jr.'s wife, Marge Pic. Marguerite Oswald and LEE moved to the Bronx, where they lived in a basement apartment at 1455 Sheridan Avenue from September 1952 to January 1953. There, OSWALD refused to attend school - out of 64 school days, he attended 15. In January they moved to 825 East 179th Street where OSWALD refused to register at the public elementary school. At a hearing on January 27, 1953, it was decided to commence judicial proceedings if OSWALD'S truancy continued. OSWALD was called before a Family Court judge on April 16, 1953. Marguerite Oswald appeared in court and conveyed that he refused to appear. OSWALD was declared a truant and was remanded to Youth House for psychiatric study.

DOCTOR RENATUS HARTOGS

While at Youth House from April 16, 1953 to May 7, 1953 OSWALD was examined by its chief psychiatrist, Dr. Renatus Hartogs. In a report on OSWALD prepared by Dr. Hartogs dated May 1, 1953, OSWALD was described as:

...a seriously detached withdrawn youngster of 13. Laconic and taciturn, he answers questions but volunteered almost nothing himself, spontaneously. Despite the fact that he is very hard to reach he seems to have some ability to relate which in view of the solitary existence he has been leading is somewhat surprising. There is a rather pleasant appealing quality about this emotionally starved, affectionless youngster, which grows as one speaks to him, and it seems fairly clear that he has detached himself from the world around him because no one in it ever met any of his needs and love. OSWALD was able to respond to expression of understanding for his lonely situation but he denied that he really felt lonely. He feels almost as if there is a veil between him and other people through which they cannot reach him, but he prefers the veil to remain intact. When inquiry was made into his fantasy life, he responded, 'This is my own business.' He agreed to answer questions if he wanted to, rejecting those which upset him and acknowledged fantasies about being powerful and sometimes hurting or killing people but refused to talk about the dreams other to admit they sometimes contained violence but he insisted they were pleasant. OSWALD has a vivid feeling of fantasy life turning around the topics of omnipotence and power through which he tries to compensate for his present shortcomings and frustrations. OSWALD claims that he can get very angry at his mother and occasionally has hit her particularly when she returns home without having brought food for supper. He did not enjoy being together with other children and when asked whether he prefers the company of boys to one of girls, he answered, 'I dislike everybody.' His occupational goal was to 'join the army.' The summary in this report was as follows: 'This 13-year-old well built boy has superior mental resources and functions only slightly below his capacity level in spite of chronic truancy from school. No finding of neurological impairment or psychotic mental changes could be made. OSWALD has to be diagnosed as personality pattern disturbance with schizoid features and passive-aggressive tendencies. He has to be seen as an emotionally quite disturbed youngster who suffers under the impact of really existing emotional isolation and depravation, lack of affection, absence of family life and rejection by a self involved and self conflicted mother. Although LEE denies that he is in need of any other form of help other than remedial one, we gained the definite impression that LEE can be reached through contact with an understanding and very patient psychotherapist, and if he could be drawn at the same time into group therapy. He had a score of I.Q. 118 on the Wechsler Intelligence Scale for Children. He exhibits some difficulty in relationship to the maternal figure suggesting more anxiety in this area and strain, he appears increasingly defensive suggesting some concern orally and in general incapable of constructing an effective ego defense. LEE said, 'I don't want a friend and I don't like to talk to people.' He describes himself as stubborn and according to his own saying like to say 'No.' Strongly resistive and negativistic features were thus noticed.

LEE came to New York from Fort Worth, Texas, with his mother and has not been able to make a New York adjustment. The root of his problem which produced warning signals seem to be his relationship with his mother. There was no one in his family to meet his needs for love and interest since his father died of a heart attack two months before he was born and his older brothers, John and Robert, 21 and 18, were involved with their own friends and activities and repulsed his advances. LEE became a seclusive child who was thrown upon himself and his own resources and he never made friends with other children. His mother who worked and who when he was an infant demonstrated her need to shift responsibility for him by leaving him with her sister and then placing him for a short while in a home, appears to be a rigid self involved woman with strong ideas and she had little understanding of this boy's behavior...This is his first brush with the law. Psychotic mental context was denied and no indications of psychotic mental changes was arrived at. LEE'S withdrawal is a form of violent but silent protest against his neglect by [his mother]. He feels that his mother rejects him and really has never cared very much for him...He expressed the similar feeling with regard to his brothers who live pretty much on their own without showing any brotherly interest in him. [FBI 62-109060-362]

Dr. Hartogs recommended OSWALD be placed on probation on the condition that he seek outpatient care. He suggested OSWALD be treated by a male psychiatrist who could fill his need for a father figure.

Dr. Renatus Hartogs liked OSWALD. He did not characterize OSWALD as violent in this report, however, when he testified before the Warren Commission, he stated that during a 1953 seminar about OSWALD he reported: "I found him to have definite traits of dangerousness. In other words this child had a potential for explosive, aggressive acting out which was rather unusual to find in a child who was sent to Youth House on such a mild charge." Dr. Hartogs had no notes or reports on this seminar. When Dr. Hartogs testified before the Warren Commission he said "I recommended this youngster be committed to an institution...a mental hospital or a training school..that he should not be placed in the community." Warren Commission Counsel Wesley Liebler confronted him with his earlier report. Dr. Hartogs: "It contradicts my recollection." Dr. Hartogs invented this "seminar" to please the Warren Commission. Gerald Posner cited Dr. Hartogs "seminar" testimony [WC V8 p.217] rather than his earlier written report. In 1975 Dr. Renatus Hartogs was ordered to pay $350,000 for having sexual relations with one of his patients. [NYT 3.20.75] Dr. Hartogs, a Holocaust survivor died in 1999.

GERALD POSNER AND CASE CLOSED

In 1993, Random House publishers released Gerald Posner's book Case Closed. Aside from a number of inaccuracies, Case Closed never mentioned the documents released under the 1992 JFK Documents Act. Soldier-of-Fortune GERRY PATRICK HEMMING commented:

Posner is a limped-dick fuck. There are people in this country interested in history. They are tired of being lied to. If someone shows me they've done their homework and they can come up with the right kind of shit, I give them some more details. If they don't know what they're doing, I piss on the back of their neck and walk away.

After Oliver Stone's film, JFK, reached a mass audience, Gerald Posner, and other intellectuals like him, knew the CIA would be shopping around for something to counter the allegations of conspiracy set forth in this movie. Case Closed had a large advertising budget and received an inordinate amount of publicity, in my estimation, unwarranted by its contents. I doubt if Gerald Posner had a contract with the CIA, but I suspect that the CIA might have at least one asset, or have some contact with, Random House. In Case Closed Gerald Posner took a cross-section of average Americans whose lives intersected with the Kennedy assassination, and, if their testimony indicated that a conspiracy was involved in the assassination of President Kennedy, he attempted to discredit them. In Case Closed he accused many impartial witnesses of being liars, hoaxers, confused, mentally ill or unbalanced. Gerald Posner graduated from the University of California at Berkeley in 1975 and Hastings Law School in 1978. Posner was formerly with the prestigious law firm of Cravath, Swaine and Moore. In 1924 John J. McCloy, a member of the Warren Commission, joined the Cravath law firm. One of the founders of Cravath, Swaine and Moore, Paul D. Cravath, was a founder of the Council on Foreign Relations, with former CIA Chief Allen Dulles. Cravath, Swaine and Moore defended the Columbia Broadcasting System when General William Westmoreland filed a libel suit against CBS in 1985. Posner's books include Hitler's Children (Random House), The Bio-Assassins, (Random House), Warlords of Crime (McGraw-Hill) and Mengele, The Complete Story (McGraw-Hill). Posner is currently a New York City attorney who is active in Republican politics and he is Chairman of the Co-op Board in his luxury Upper East Side building.

In 1998 Posner was still refusing to buy a German automobile. Aside from cashing in on national tragedies (Posner also authored a book debunking the Martin Luther King assassination) another motive for Posner's covering up the JFK Assassination stems from his strong Jewish identity. I respect the research that Posner did on the Nazi War Criminal Mengele. I appreciate his work connecting the Saudi Government and Saudi "charities" to terrorism and 9/11. I also understand that the Jews have been accused of conspiring to rule the world, kill Christian babies for Matzo, poison wells, and control organized crime. To admit there was a conspiracy in the death of President Kennedy means that a Jew named Jacob Rubenstein, played a major role in the conspiracy. Oi Gevalt! This would verify the conspiratorial nature of Jews in some people's minds however, the truth must be told for only the truth will set us free. Posner's latest book is Miami Babylon: Crime, Wealth, and Power.

In March of 1953, a probation officer brought Oswald to the office of Dr. Milton Kurian, a psychiatrist employed by the Domestic Relations Court of New York. Dr. Kurian visited with Oswald and read the probation officer's file. The file contained information on Oswald's recent stay at the Youth House. Dr. Kurian noted that Oswald was quite small for his age. Dr. Kurian himself was only 5'7" tall and estimated Oswald's height at 4'6". Oswald discussed his background with Dr. Kurian and said his mother had been married five times, even though she had been married three times. Oswald told Kurian he had numerous stepfathers and was close to only one of them. But Oswald had only one stepfather, Edwin Ekdahl, and only in 1945-47. After interviewing Oswald for 45 minutes, Dr. Kurian described the Oswald he met as the most paranoid individual he ever interviewed. However, Dr. Kurian is not mentioned anywhere in the Warren Report or the 26 volumes of Hearings and Exhibits. The only psychiatrist Oswald was supposed to have seen was Dr. Rhenatus Hartogs, on May 1, 1953. After this researcher got busted for sale of marijuana at Michigan State University in 1964, I had to see a shrink so that he could report to the judge that I had been cured of my marijuana "addiction." Nine years after OSWALD was treated by Dr. Kurian I appeared at his office and told him that I was facing a 20 year minimum mandatory sentence for sale of cannabis and another 10 years for possession. Kurian knew there was nothing wrong with me or than the fact I was a beatnik and it was not until the day I beat the rap and was no longer going to see him that he said my psychoanalysis was about to begin.

JUSTICE JOHN CARRO

When Marguerite Oswald visited her son at Youth House, she recalled having been searched for drugs and weapons and having had to wait in line with: "Puerto Ricans and Negroes and everything." OSWALD was placed on probation by the Family Court. On May 7, 1953, OSWALD returned to public school at which time he entered ninth grade. It was reported he:

Consistently refused to salute the flag during early morning exercises. He spent most of his time sailing paper planes around the room and refused to work. His attitude was belligerent. However the progress report of November 19, 1953, reflects that there has been considerable improvement in OSWALD. He is now getting along well and salutes the flag. [FBI 62-109060-1362]

OSWALD'S Probation Officer, John Carro, told the Warren Commission that most of the boys he worked with were:

Puerto Rican or Negro, and they were the New York type of youngsters who spoke in the same slang, who came from the Bronx. This boy was Lutheran. Different from the average boy I had on probation...he had brothers but he didn't miss them. He seems to have liked his stay at Youth House because there they were paid attention, and this is a boy who is virtually all alone all day...there was no indicia that this boy had any Marxist leanings or that he had any tendencies at that age...this was just a truancy situation, not one of real disruptive or acting out of delinquent behavior.

In June 1993 New York State Supreme Court Justice Carro related:

He didn't show that he cared that much for [his mother]...His truancy was not going to the park or to the movies; his truancy was to stay home watch TV and read magazines...The real problem was - this is the 1950's - here's a kid from down south, spoke with a southern drawl, wore Levi's which were not in style then - they weren't called jeans, they were dungarees in those days, and here's a kid who came up to a predominantly Jewish, black and Puerto Rican neighborhood. And he just didn't fit into the thing and instead of just trying to acclimate or associate, he just withdrew. He didn't like his teachers, the students and the area. He had no time for school and wasn't learning anything. He would rather be on his own and stay home. He was about 12 years old, just turned 13 and at that time he wanted to go into the service. He didn't discuss any politics or dissatisfaction with the country; he was just dissatisfied with his own lot in life. His mother claimed they had had their own car, home, dog and she suddenly was in the Bronx paying $45 a month rent in a little one-bedroom apartment after having a falling-out with her son where she had first gone to live. She was making next to nothing on her job."

Justice Carro was asked about the incident where it was reported that OSWALD refused to salute the American flag:

One of his teachers was the source of this information. I felt that was just part of his acting up in class. It did not reflect that he was already anti-U.S. or anti-flag at the time, because the fact is his brothers were in the service and he wanted to go into the service. It's not fair to mention the flag - how many kids don't do that for whatever reasons, one thing or another - some kind of rebellion - he was rebelling a little, he was not getting along. He didn't like his teachers; it was anti-social behavior and I've never credited it to anything else. I spent nine months seeing this kid maybe on the average of once a week or twice a month and I found him to be a normal teenager, an ordinary young person. He didn't have any psychotic or bizarre behavior...there was nothing extraordinary or indicative of any future [leftist] propensity by this young man. None of this ever surfaced. I got no inkling of it from the mother, from him, from the whole investigation, from the school reports.

In early 1953, John Carro recommended that OSWALD should be institutionalized, although not in a reform school. OSWALD committed no crimes while he was absent from school, but he needed psychiatric help. John Carro spent months trying to find an appropriate Protestant institution for him and recommended meanwhile that he visit an outpatient psychiatric clinic. When OSWALD became a disciplinary problem upon returning to school in the fall of 1953, Family Court considered expediting his placement in an institution. Click HERE to see video of John Carro.

OSWALD spent a good deal of this youth in various institutions and this was where he learned to manipulate authority figures. Although OSWALD's only crime was truancy Carro, who was a pretty liberal guy, wanted OZZIE locked up. He detected an incipient psychopath and a adept habitual liar.

RETURN TO NEW ORLEANS JANUARY 1954

Before the court took any action, the OSWALDS left New York and returned to New Orleans in January 1954. OSWALD was out of the jurisdiction of the New York State Family Court. OSWALD and his mother stayed with Lillian Murret and Charles Murret at 757 French Street while Marguerite Oswald looked for an apartment. Julian Evans, whose wife rented Marguerite Oswald an apartment at this time told the Warren Commission that he believed OSWALD was a "psycho." He based this upon the fact that when OSWALD went fishing he watched the fish he caught die on the bank. OSWALD enrolled in the eighth grade at Beauregard Junior High School on January 13, 1954, and completed the school year without apparent difficulty or brush with the law. OSWALD readjusted to the South and renewed his efforts at friendship; he even got a part-time job delivering dentures.

SCOTT & ALLEN AND MARILYN DOROTHEA MURRET

In Coup D'Etat in America this researcher mistakenly accused OSWALD'S cousin, Marilyn Murret (the daughter of his aunt Lillian Claverie) of being a CIA asset. A file in the CIA's Office of Security existed on Marilyn Murret, but it consisted of "overt source material." [CIA FOIA O1C-78-0070/17] The synopsis of Marilyn Murret's CIA Office of Security file was deleted, except for a reference to syndicated columnists Paul Scott and Robert S. Allen. On March 26, 1964, Paul Scott and Robert S. Allen wrote that Marilyn Murret was on a State Department list of "most wanted defectors to the Soviet Union. Although Miss Murret was not a defector, her name was included in a list of 137 defectors..." [WCD 942; Knoxville, Tenn. Journal 4.11.73; CIA 1294-481] When the FBI interviewed Paul Scott about this he advised "he had some information to make a 'tie-up' between Murret and the case of OSWALD" but said this was not confirmed. Paul Scott apparently did not know she was OSWALD'S cousin." [Hoover to Rankin 5.19.64] This article caused CIA file 201-761577 to be opened. It was about Marilyn Murret and based on an FBI source document. Marilyn Murret's country of location was listed as Pakistan. After the assassination of President John F. Kennedy, Paul Scott's article prompted the FBI to check her State Department passport file. The Bureau related that Marilyn Murret traveled to Japan, India, Lebanon, Iraq, Egypt, Malaysia and was detained for 12 hours in East Berlin for unspecified reasons. [WCE 3119 p10]

The Marilyn Murret story was studied by the Warren Commission, and Marilyn Murret was investigated for being a defector. In February 1965 a CIA Document Transfer and Cross Reference Sheet listed Marilyn Murret as an actual or potential defector. Marilyn Murret was questioned about the Scott and Allen report by the HSCA: "There is no factual basis. It is obviously garbage like a lot of the other things that have been written." She denied any connection to the CIA: "Not to my knowledge. I have had part-time jobs, but I don't think that I ever worked with them." She never discussed politics with OSWALD. [HSCA Depo 11.6.78] In 1993 Marilyn Murret stated: "I don't think I'm really interested [in speaking with you]. I don't want to go through all of this again. I have no idea what you're talking about. Again, I don't think I want to talk. Do hear what I said? I don't care to rehash this..." Marilyn Murret was asked if she had any CIA-connection? "That is so stupid. I'm not even going to answer that. Goodbye." Marilyn Murret was a woman with no record of intelligence community involvement before or after the assassination of President John F. Kennedy.

ANGLETON SOURCE OF SCOTT AND ALLEN

William Colby reported,

In 1963, the CIA wire tapped two columnists, Robert Allen and Paul Scott – following a column in a newspaper in which they disclosed certain national security information. CIA records indicate that the wiretapping was approved by McCone after "discussions" with then Attorney General Robert Kennedy and then Secretary of Defense Robert McNamara. The wiretaps, which continued from March 12, to June 15, 1963 were described as very productive – among those overheard calling Allen and Scott were twelve Senators, six Congressmen and so forth. Apparently, the tap did not disclose the source of the security information published in the Allen-Scott column. [NARA Record Number: 104-10107-10031]

A study of Paul Scott and Robert S. Allen's articles revealed ANGLETON was the source for the Marilyn Murret Defector story. ANGELTON'S component, CI/SIG, involved itself with defector matters although its main function was mole-hunting. Other Scott and Allen articles also pointed to ANGLETON as their source. For example, Scott and Allen were shown a State Department document about OSWALD, and told that OSWALD was interviewed by the CIA when he visited the American Embassy in Moscow in 1959. The CIA's reaction:

MEMORANDUM FOR Chief, CI/ R&A

SUBJECT: Article Alleging OSWALD was interviewed by CIA Employees

1. On February 28, 1964, the Northern Virginia Sun carried an article alleging -- among other things -- that "State Department records show that OSWALD had several meetings with the CIA representative in the U.S. Embassy in Moscow." During this period, the assassin was seeking to renounce his citizenship. One State Department cable, No. 234, dated November 2, 1959, reports that OSWALD was interviewed by the CIA and other embassy officials.

2. This allegation is absolutely unfounded as the following facts bear out:

a. The article cites a State Department cable, No. 234, dated November 2, 1959. Such "cable" probably does not exist; however, the State Department Dispatch, No. 234, dated November 2, 1959, from the U.S. Embassy in Moscow is no doubt the one which the article intended to cite. That dispatch carried the security classification "Confidential."

b. That dispatch contains no statement or inference that Richard E. Snyder, the Second Secretary of the US Embassy in Moscow, who talked with OSWALD on October 31, 1959, has CIA connection. The only other U.S. official whose name was mentioned in that State Department Dispatch was Edward L. Freers who signed the dispatch as Charge d 'Affairs, ad interim.

c. Richard E. Snyder applied for employment with the CIA in June 1949 and submitted a complete PHS form at that time. He entered on duty with CIA on November 8, 1949, as a GS-9 ($4600.00 per annum). According to his Personnel file (see tab c) he was assigned to the Office of Policy Coordination and was slated to serve in Tokyo (the file contains no entry showing that he actually served in Tokyo). Snyder did, however, serve in Heidelberg, beginning in March 1950. While in Germany he apparently resigned effective September 26, 1950, in order to assume a position with HICOG. There are no further entries in his Personnel file. The SR Division had an unofficial file on him (see tab d). That file shows Nelson Brickham, an SR Division staff employee, was in contact with Snyder for about one year (1956 to 1957). Brickham used Snyder as a spotter at Harvard where Snyder was studying Russian and had access to other students who might be going to the USSR. There is no record of POA, [provisional operating approval] OA or CSA action in that connection. There was a record of Counter-intelligence Operational Approval interest in Richard E. Snyder at this time. In March 1959 (probably just before Snyder's departure for Moscow), State requested that he be given two weeks of OBS Course (probably ORR's training in Soviet Order of Battle).

d. Edward L. Freers was never an employee of the CIA. He has been an employee of the Department of State since 1941 and has served in various countries. In 1952, while a Peripheral Officer with the State Department in Rome, Office of Policy Coordination, requested liaison clearance on Edward Freers. The clearance was granted in April 1952. The interest was dropped in 1955 and the clearance was canceled. From September to November 1956, International Organizations officials were in official contact with him because of his position at the Department of State. For that purpose IO requested and received liaison clearance from the Office of Security. In addition, the Office of Security file contains the following record of interest and clearance action concerning Freers. April 1957 - SE/PP, April 1958 - OSI, August 1958 - C/PP/LO, August 1959 - C/PP/LO and January 1962 - DPD -DD/P.

3. The original article containing the subject allegation was written by Robert S. Allen and Paul Scott. Allen is a former associate of Drew Pearson's. The article has been replayed in various publications which carry the Allen-Scott articles. Many of the replays appear to have deleted the citation of the State Department "cable." Among the publications carrying the allegation in its entirety is the current issue of Human Events which is published in Washington, D.C. The publisher is one James L. Wick on whom the FBI has furnished adverse information. The founder of that publication was Frank C. Hanighen. According to the FBI a person with the same name had been a member of the "Intelligence Committee" of the CPUSA in 1944.

4. Robert S. Allen's and Paul Scott's attacks on CIA are well known and have been persistent. In December 1961, Colonel Stanley J. Grogan wrote a memorandum to the Director of the CIA concerning both of them.

In May 1962, C/CI/R&A [Raymond Rocca] wrote a memo to the CIA Office of Security and attached several items concerning these men. A surface analysis of the various articles written by this duo shows that they have been sharpshooting at Mr. Dulles whenever the opportunity presented itself. The recent article shows they are still at it: in connection with Mr. Dulles service on the Warren Commission, they accuse him of displaying 'a militant protectiveness regarding the CIA. The Office of Security has furnished a copy of a detailed biographic account of Allen and a copy of (a portion of) an investigative report on Scott. These papers contain no derogatory information. [North Vig. Sun 2.28.64; CIA 610-263, 695-302A; DOS 234 11.2.59.]

DD/P Richard Helms assured the Warren Commission that OSWALD did not contact a CIA agent at the American Embassy, Moscow, and that the Paul Scott and Robert S. Allen report, which had come to the attention of J. Lee Rankin, the General Counsel of the Warren Commission, was "utterly unfounded as far as the CIA was concerned." ANGLETON leaked other information to Scott and Allen: On October 22, 1964, Scott and Allen ran a story that was based on an ANGLETON report entitled Soviet Strategic Executive Action [CSCI-3/768,041]. "The contents of the Allen and Scott report reveals knowledge of most sensitive, though dated, CIA finished counterintelligence research and warrants vigorous follow up by the Security Committee of USIB." [CIA 916-921, 920-922] The article stated:

Despite the Commission's written request for all documents that might shed light on the assassination, CIA authorities failed to turn over a national intelligence estimate warning that it is Kremlin policy to remove from public office by assassination Western officials who actively oppose Soviet policies...Other U.S. intelligence experts, very dubious of Russia's coexistence line, stress that the Warren Commission's findings might have been different if this CIA estimate and other documents suppressed by the State Department had been available for study. [Honolulu Advertiser 10.27.64 sent to CIA by William Colby.]

In January 1965 Scott and Allen reported on a proposed defector study. [CIA 986-927BC; NARA 1993.06.21.16:33:15:710310] Snyder did have contact with the CIA but Marilyn Murret did not. Disinformation is good information mixed with bad. ANGLETON was behind the disinformation about Marilyn Murret leaked to Scott and Allen. He had access to the State Department cable in OSWALD'S 201-file. He wanted to make it look like Communism and defection ran in OSWALD'S blood. The purpose of the Soviet assassination story was blame the Reds for "the big event."

EDWARD VOEBEL AND THE CIVIL AIR PATROL

OSWALD'S closest friend between 1955 and 1957 was Edward Voebel. Marguerite Oswald told the Warren Commission: "This young man and LEE were very friendly. He and LEE joined the Civil Air Patrol together...And he often came to the house." In a space for the names of close friends on his ninth grade personal history record, OSWALD wrote "Edward Vogel." [WR p383] Marilyn Murret told the Commission that Voebel was the only one of his classmates to whom he was close, and that Voebel "got him to join the Civil Air Patrol, in which he was very interested."

In the early afternoon of November 25, 1963, the FBI interviewed Edward Voebel at his family's flower shop. He told the agents he knew OSWALD

Around 1954 to 1955 when he and OSWALD attended Beauregard Junior High School in New Orleans. Voebel recalled that OSWALD had a fight at school with two brothers named John and Mike Neumeyer. Voebel stated that the Neumeyer brothers arranged for someone from another school to come to Beauregard Junior High School and wait for OSWALD the following day and when OSWALD came out from the school, this other individual stepped out and hit OSWALD on the mouth. Voebel said OSWALD never told him what the fight was about, and Voebel does not know the identity of this individual who struck OSWALD on this occasion. Voebel stated he got some ice to put on OSWALD'S lip and apparently because of this act OSWALD became friendly toward him. Voebel would stop by OSWALD'S nearly every time he went for his weekly music lesson and either visit or shoot pool with OSWALD.

According to Edward Voebel, in 1963 the Neumeyer brothers had narcotics charges pending against them.

OSWALD PLANS TO BURGLARIZE A SPORTING GOODS STORE

Edward Voebel stated that OSWALD planned to steal a .45 caliber automatic handgun from a sporting goods store:

Voebel stated that OSWALD appeared interested in guns and since Voebel was interested in frontier type and military type weapons OSWALD would discuss guns with him. Voebel recalled that on one occasion OSWALD showed him a plastic .45 caliber automatic that was very realistic and could be taken apart. OSWALD told him at this time that he would like to have a real gun and told Voebel of a plan he had to steal one. Voebel stated that OSWALD showed him a box in which he had a glass cutter and a piece of silk, and OSWALD actually took him to a store in New Orleans and showed Voebel the gun in the window that he intended to steal. OSWALD said his plan was to cut the screen in front of the window and then cut out the glass.

Voebel showed OSWALD the metallic decoration around the window and explained that this was part of an ADT Burglary Alarm System and that if he cut the glass the alarm would ring. OSWALD had thought that this was just a decoration and after learning it was part of a burglary alarm decided not to steal the gun. Voebel said that to the best of his recollection this store was the third establishment from Walgreen's Drug Store on South Rampart Street. Voebel said OSWALD never told him why he wanted to steal this particular gun which Voebel believed was a small automatic.

VOEBEL ON OSWALD'S POLITICS

Edward Voebel told the FBI he did not think OSWALD formulated any political ideas at this time of his life:

Voebel said OSWALD never discussed politics with him, never made any comments concerning Marxism or Communism, and never made any comments detrimental to the United States Government. Voebel was of the opinion that information he has heard that OSWALD was studying communism when he was 14 years old is a 'lot of baloney.' Voebel said that OSWALD read quite a lot, but the books he read were paperback trash. Voebel said that in his opinion OSWALD was very bitter since his father died when he was very young and OSWALD felt he had a raw deal out of life. He said this bitterness on the part of OSWALD seemed to be that he felt he had been deprived of many things and was not directed toward any one individual or group. He said OSWALD did not like to be pushed around, and therefore got into many fights. Voebel stated that he and OSWALD were members of the Civil Air Patrol in New Orleans with Captain David Ferrie during the time they were in school...Voebel stated that OSWALD did not tell him when he was leaving town. He stated that one day he stopped by OSWALD'S apartment on Exchange Place and OSWALD was gone." Voebel was interviewed by the New Orleans Police Department: "When asked if OSWALD ever expressed political views to Voebel stated that OSWALD had not, and that he, Voebel, believed OSWALD had no leftist political views until later in his life.

Voebel was in Mexico during the summer of 1963, so did not see OSWALD in New Orleans.

THE FBI RE-INTERVIEWS VOEBEL

The FBI returned later that day and re-interviewed Edward Voebel:

Voebel stated that he had just been advised by Bill Slatter of WDSU-NBC television that David Ferrie, who was commander of a Civil Air Patrol Unit at New Orleans in which Voebel was a member, was a homosexual. Voebel stated that Ferrie seemed to be an 'odd-ball' who rode a motorcycle and appeared very emotional. Voebel recalled that on one occasion Ferrie cried while listening to some music. Edward Voebel said that when he first joined Civil Air Patrol, Ferrie was not commander of this Civil Air Patrol unit at the time, and he was unable to recall the identity of the commanding officer of this unit...He recalled that after having been a member for approximately six months Ferrie took over command of the unit...Voebel stated he persuaded OSWALD to join this same Civil Air Patrol unit and took OSWALD on the bus to attend this meeting. Voebel assumed that OSWALD completed an application for membership but could not say he did so for sure. He stated that OSWALD attended two or three drills and possibly four drills at most. He stated that it seemed funny, but he could remember OSWALD joining the unit but could not remember him as ever being there. He said OSWALD had a knack of being there, and not being noticed. He said OSWALD told him that the trip to Moisant Airport was too far to go to attend meetings, and that he had decided to join a CAP unit that met at New Orleans Municipal Airport on the Lake Front. Voebel stated he could not recall if Ferrie was unit commander at the time OSWALD attended meetings, or whether OSWALD attended meetings prior to Captain Ferrie taking command. He stated Ferrie never indicated to anyone that he was fond of guns and appeared to be a music lover of sorts...During the interview with Voebel he received a crank-type telephone call from an unidentified woman who admonished him for giving information over television which tended to bring a bad reputation to New Orleans and Beauregard High School. Voebel stated that he was frightened by a visit from someone who led him to believe he was from the Associated Press but acted very suspicious. Voebel was advised of the FBI's jurisdiction and that the FBI was not in a position to offer him any protection. He was advised that should he feel he needed protection, he should contact the New Orleans Police Department.

WILLIAM STUCKEY

Bill Slatter of NBC-TV, who telephoned Edward Voebel when the agents left, was an associate of William Kirk Stuckey. William Stuckey, born in 1932, received a B.S. degree in journalism from Southern Methodist University in Dallas, and spent two years in the Marines. After returning from a Latin American trip Stuckey stated he "went into the newspaper business...The New Orleans States-Item made me a columnist. This was in February 1962 when I started my column, and this extended on to April 1963...New Orleans and the Americas. After I left the paper, doing public relations, I acquired a radio program...Latin Listening Post [on an NBC station down here]." William Stuckey knew HEMMING, STURGIS, BRINGUIER and OSWALD. Bill Slatter videotaped OSWALD for William Stuckey.

An FBI teletype dated November 26, 1963, from the New Orleans FBI, to Director J. Edgar Hoover, summarized: "Voebel was unable to recall if OSWALD attended meetings under command of Ferrie or with previous commander." [HSCA V9 p108] The New Orleans Police Department elicited this from Voebel on November 27, 1963: "OSWALD attended a party (not sure) at the home of Dave Ferrie, Captain, right after the members of the Civil Air Patrol received their stripes." In 1964 Edward Voebel told the Warren Commission that OSWALD attended two or three Civil Air Patrol meetings. Warren Commission Assistant Counsel Albert Jenner asked: "Who was the mayordomo of the Civil Air Patrol unit that you attended?" Voebel responded: "I think it was Captain Ferrie. I think he was there when LEE attended one of these meetings, but I'm not sure of that. Now that I think of it, I don't think Captain Ferrie was there at the time, but he might have been. That isn't too clear to me." [NARA FBI 124-10248-10154]

WITNESSES TO OSWALD AND FERRIE IN CIVIL AIR PATROL

Other cadets who were in the Civil Air Patrol in 1955 linked David Ferrie to OSWALD. A Vice Squad Detective with the New Orleans Police Department reported: "Ferrie assumed control at Moisant Airport at about the same time OSWALD joined." Colin Hamer, an official of the New Orleans Public Library, told the HSCA that the meetings OSWALD and David Ferrie attended were held in an Eastern Airlines hangar at Moisant Airport and that OSWALD attended 16 meetings. He stated: "Ferrie was a unit leader. He stated that he can clearly recall that Ferrie headed the Civil Air Patrol Unit during the period that OSWALD attended. They were both there." Colin Hamer, contacted in June 1993, related: "When I was in the Civil Air Patrol they were both in, but I don't remember if they were in at the same time. I don't remember any relationship or if they knew each other or anything like that." The HSCA interviewed Jerry Paradis, a corporate attorney and the former New Orleans Lakefront Civil Air Patrol Unit Recruit Instructor. OSWALD joined the Lakefront unit after leaving David Ferrie's Moisant Airport unit. Paradis corroborated the accounts of OSWALD'S other Civil Air Patrol colleagues. When David Ferrie was interviewed by FBI agents after the assassination of President John F. Kennedy, he recommended Paradis as a Civil Air Patrol member who could verify whether OSWALD had ever been in his Civil Air Patrol unit. In his HSCA interview, Paradis stated that he was never called by the FBI. He told the HSCA: "I specifically remember OSWALD. I can remember him clearly, and Ferrie was heading the unit then. I'm not saying that they may have been together, I'm saying it is a certainty." The HSCA: "The committee established that OSWALD and Ferrie apparently first came into contact with each other during OSWALD'S participation as a teenager in a Civil Air Patrol unit for which Ferrie served as an instructor..." [HSCA R p170]

P. J. Trosclair, Intelligence Unit, New Orleans Police Department told the FBI on November 25, 1963, that "he understood, but had nothing to back it up, that OSWALD was possibly friendly with Ferrie in view of his Cuban activities." The HSCA tried to find OSWALD and David Ferrie's records in Civil Air Patrol files, but found that "most of the records of the squadron had been stolen in late 1960." One record which still existed revealed that OSWALD joined Civil Air Patrol on July 27, 1955, when he was given Serial No. 084965. The HSCA concluded: "While the Civil Air Patrol documentation did not permit a conclusive determination, the records themselves lent substantial credence to the possibility that OSWALD and Ferrie had been involved in the same Civil Air Patrol unit during the same period of time." [FBI NO-44-2064 12.10.63, 62-109060-1294, NO-89-69 p341 11.26.63, 62-1090604-891] After November 22, 1963, Marguerite Oswald told the FBI that she was going to "divulge information that had never before been discussed. When OSWALD was 15 ½ years of age, he was a Civil Air Patrol Cadet. She said that while he was in the Civil Air Patrol, a civilian, who was associated with the Civil Air Patrol, induced OSWALD to join the United States Marines." [WCD 480a p3] Gerald Posner alleged David Ferrie was expelled from the Civil Air Patrol in 1955 and therefore OSWALD could not have been in his group. Testimony revealed that despite his expulsion he continued to wear a Civil Air Patrol uniform, and held meetings between 1955 and 1960. [Airline Pilots Assoc. Ferrie v. Eastern Alpha #488 9.17.63]

In October 1955 OSWALD enlisted in the Marines using a false affidavit, signed by his mother, to prove that he was 17 years old. The document didn't pass muster, and he had to wait another year before he could enlist. William David Ferrie was born March 28, 1918, in Cleveland, Ohio. He was the son of a police captain and attorney. He attended Catholic grammar and high schools and intended to enter the priesthood, but withdrew from seminary school because he was a homosexual. He graduated from Baldwin-Wallace College, Berea, Ohio, with a B.A. Degree during the early 1940's. At the age of 24, David Ferrie took flying lessons, then worked as a pilot for an oil drilling firm. Next, David Ferrie taught in a high school, but was fired in 1948 and left Cleveland in 1949, amidst rumors that he took several young boys to a house of ill-repute. He returned to Cleveland in 1950 and joined the Air Force Reserve. In applying for a commission, he wrote his commanding officer: "There is nothing I would enjoy more than blowing the hell out of every Red...My friends and I could cook up a crew." [CIA 1127-987] David Ferrie became an instructor for the Civil Air Patrol in Cleveland. Eastern Airlines hired him as a pilot in 1951. In 1952 he moved to New Orleans, Louisiana. He became associated with the New Orleans Squadron of the Civil Air Patrol in 1953, and spent much time in the company of his cadets. He remained in this position until late 1955, when he resigned and subsequently became an instructor at the Moisant Squadron of the Civil Air Patrol.

In September 1955 the FBI made inquiries about David Ferrie based on a report from a source that Mrs. G.H. Nichols had quoted David Ferrie as having stated: "I see no reason to salute the American flag." Joseph W. Lisman, Agent of Delta Airlines and Commander of the Cadets, Moisant Squadron, Civil Air Patrol, advised the FBI on August 9, 1955, he had been acquainted with David Ferrie, an Eastern Airlines commercial air pilot, for three years. He said

...40 out of 50 people would say David Ferrie is nuts and that the other 10 might say he is normal. Lisman described Ferrie as being brilliant, but not a genius, and as a person who goes off on tangents just short of becoming berserk. He added, however, that David Ferrie is a good organizer; he made the Civil Air Patrol at New Orleans airport what it is today; he has a large following among the Civil Air Patrol Cadets, and is an excellent flying instructor. He gives six hours of his time each week to instructing Moisant Squadron Cadets and considerably more of his time to associating with them.

Joseph W. Lisman quoted Ferrie as having been critical of the Roosevelt Administration and saying the administration was trying to drive us into Communism. He said Ferrie was critical of the Truman Administration for the same reason. Lisman stated the only reference to the flag which he had heard Ferrie make was to the effect that in the abstract sense it is nothing more than cloth, but symbolizes what we stand for. Lisman could furnish no additional information relative to Ferrie's loyalty. He mentioned Ferrie is a woman hater, and that he, himself, personally disliked Ferrie because of his personality traits.

Mrs. G.H. Ruby Nichols advised the FBI on September 26, 1955, she was not the source of the information to the effect Ferrie had stated he could see no reason to salute the flag. She stated Ferrie had addressed a Scout meeting, under the direction of Mrs. R.J. Durr, and Mrs. Durr had reported some information to the effect that Ferrie might be a communist. Mrs. Nichols said she is a member of the Seniors of the Moisant Squadron of the Civil Air Patrol, and is in charge of the Girl Scout Squadron. Mrs. R.J. Durr, leader of Scout Troop 57, stated on September 28, 1955, she was sorry that matter had come up concerning Ferrie. She mentioned he was greatly disliked by her Scout Troop, principally because of the fact he arrived at the meeting on his motorcycle, his clothes were not pressed, and his hair was unkempt. She described Ferrie as a crackpot. She could think of no disloyal statements made by Ferrie, but finally recalled that he had offered his opinion that marching of military forces is silly. Confidential Informants cognizant in 1955 with some phases of Communist Party activity in the New Orleans area advised they were not acquainted, nor did they have any information, concerning anyone named David Ferrie. [FBI 105-104340-1]

THE DEATH OF EDWARD VOEBEL

Edward Voebel, who linked OSWALD to Ferrie, graduated from Fortier High School in 1958. He then attended the Marion Military Institute, Marion, Alabama, in 1959 and in 1960. He then served six months in the United States Army. The HSCA sought to locate Edward Voebel to take his testimony, but learned from his father, Sidney Voebel (born March 18, 1922; died in January 1981) of New Orleans, that his son died in 1971. Sidney Voebel said the circumstances surrounding his son's death were mysterious. He died suddenly from a blood clot when he suffered an attack of pneumonia at the age of 31. In April 1993, the former wife of Sidney Voebel, Doris Voebel, was contacted: "My husband and I have been divorced since my son was a year old. I never spoke with him after he left me with three children and no alimony. I took my children and raised 'em." The former Mrs. Voebel described the circumstances of her son's death: "It was right around Mother's Day and I asked him - I took a wedding at St. Anthony's Church and I said to him, 'Would you mind decorating the church for me?' He said, 'Well, gee, I've been up all night playing music.' I said 'It's Mothers Day and it's real hard here in the shop.' He said 'Okay.' So he came back and he said he had a pain in his chest. So I told him, 'I'll let your sister drive you home, leave your car here.' So he left the car here and he went home. The pain got worse, so his wife brought him to Foundation. The Ochsner Foundation Hospital - right up there on Jefferson Highway. Run by Alton Ochsner. And the doctor said, 'Go home, that it's just nervousness and indigestion.' So he came home and the pain got worse and worse till they brought him back. They said, 'Oh, no, you don't have indigestion, you have pneumonia.' So they said they punctured his lungs and nothing came out so they put him in the hospital ten days. And I went to visit him once, and I was going to go up that night to see him. Then I called up and he said, 'I'm going to be home Monday, there's no use you comin' up Sunday evening - just come visit me at the house.' I said 'Okay.' So that morning the hospital called. They wanted to speak to my mother, Mrs. Bartenelli. And when they said that, I knew something was wrong. Because they should have asked for me. They told him to go take a shower. And when he put his foot on the floor he was gone. It was a blood clot all along and they were treating him for the wrong thing." [Interview with Doris Bartenelli by A.J. WEBERMAN 4.14.93]

THE DEATH OF WILLIAM STUCKEY

The mother of William Stuckey said her son died September 21, 1981, however, no record of his death could be located. Mrs. Stuckey stated: "The autopsy said he died of a wound, I never did know the details. It didn't say gunshot wound. They put him in Seaton Hospital, near San Francisco. When I called the Hospital they said he had a heart problem, but the autopsy showed a wound. So I'll never know what happened. He never did regain consciousness. He only lived five days." Seaton Hospital had no record of William Stuckey, nor did the San Mateo County Recorder's Office.

If Edward Voebel was alive today he could have best answered the key question, 'Was OSWALD a communist in 1955?' He also could have told us if OSWALD knew David Ferrie in 1955. He could not have thrown any light on the Kennedy assassination. William Stuckey, however, knew both OSWALD and HEMMING.

OSWALD AND COMMUNIST THEORY

David Ferrie would not have tolerated OSWALD, had OSWALD been a Communist at this time, yet the Warren Commission claimed that fifteen-year-old LEE HARVEY OSWALD espoused Communist doctrine and was determined to join the Communist Party. The Commission indicated he borrowed books on Communism, including Karl Marx's ponderous Das Kapital, from the New Orleans Public Library. Edward Voebel, who thought OSWALD was not a great reader, did not see him read anything except "comic books and the normal things kids read." [f.n. 258 WR p860] The Chief Counsel of the Warren Commission, J. Lee Rankin, questioned Marguerite Oswald:

Mrs. Oswald: LEE, at age 16, read Robert's Marine manual back and forth. He knew it by heart. Robert had just gotten out of the Marines, and his manual was home. And LEE started to read communistic material along with that.

Rankin: What communistic material did he read?

Mrs. Oswald: It was a small book that he had gotten out of the library. And I knew he was reading it, Mr. Rankin.

Rankin: Was it on Marxism, or what was it about?

Mrs. Oswald: No - if you are saying the title is Marxism [Das Kapital] - no sir, the title was not.

Rankin: Was it about communism?

Mrs. Oswald: It was more about communism. I knew he was reading it. But if we have this material in the public libraries, the certainly it is alright for us to read. And I think we should know about these things and all of our scholars and educators and high school boys read subversive material, which we call subversive material. So as a mother I would not take the book away from him. That is fine, LEE is a reader. I have said from early childhood he liked histories and maps. So that is fine. What I am saying now -we are getting back to this agent part. He is with this recruiting officer and he is studying the Marine manual - he knew it back and forth. In fact he would take the book and have me question some of the things. And he was reading communism. LEE lived for the time he would become 17 years old to join the Marines - that whole year...That is one part. That is the beginning of it, Mr. Dulles. I have much more." Allen Dulles characterized the testimony of Mrs. Oswald as incoherent.

Marguerite Oswald believed her son was reading about communism for counter-intelligence purposes. To disprove her contention, the Warren Commission cited the testimony of Palmer C. McBride, who worked with OSWALD in 1955 as a messenger for Pfisterer Dental Labs. Palmer McBride made his report to Air Force Intelligence on November 22, 1963. The report was transmitted to the FBI on November 23, 1963. On November 26, 1963, Palmer McBride told the FBI that OSWALD first visited his home in late 1957 or early 1958. Palmer McBride stated that the subject of President Eisenhower was discussed:

OSWALD was very anti-Eisenhower and stated that President Eisenhower was exploiting the working people. He then made a statement to the effect that he would like to kill President Eisenhower because he was exploiting the working class. This statement was not made in jest, and OSWALD was in a serious state of mind when this statement was made. LEE was very serious about the virtues of Communism...He would say that the capitalists were exploiting the working class and his central theme seemed to be that the workers in the world would one day rise up and throw off their chains. He praised Khrushchev's sincerity in improving the worker's lot...In another conversation OSWALD stated to me he was not a Communist Party member, but he suggested that both of us join to take advantage of their social functions. I did not join the Communist Party, but I do not know whether he did or not. During the period I knew OSWALD he resided with his mother in the Senator Hotel or a rooming house next door to the Senator Hotel in the 200 block of Dauphine Street. I went with him to his room on one occasion and he showed me copies of Das Capital and The Communist Manifesto. In April or May 1958 OSWALD stated he was moving to Fort Worth, Texas, with his mother. In about August 1958, I received a letter from him saying he was employed as a shoe salesman in Ft. Worth. In this letter he stated he had gotten mixed-up in an anti-Negro or an anti-Communist riot in a high school grounds in Ft. Worth, Texas. On the evening of November 22, 1963, I heard a radio commentator state that OSWALD had been arrested...upon seeing a full face photograph of OSWALD in the November 23, 1963 issue of The Miami Herald I am now quite certain that they are one in the same individual. I particularly recall the large ears, the mustache, and the receding hairline. I also recall that OSWALD made statements favoring Russia and Communism to other employees at the Pfisterer Dental Labs.

Palmer McBride told the FBI that OSWALD first visited his home in late 1957 or early 1958, rather than 1955 when OSWALD lived in New Orleans. OSWALD was already in the Marines in late 1957 or early 1958. McBride said OSWALD resided with his mother in the Senator Hotel or a rooming house next door to the Senator Hotel in the 200 block of Dauphine Street. OSWALD and his mother never lived at this address. McBride said that in April or May 1958 OSWALD stated he was moving to Fort Worth, Texas, with his mother. "In about August 1958, I received a letter from him saying he was employed as a shoe salesman in Ft. Worth. In this letter he stated he had gotten mixed-up in an anti-Negro or an anti-Communist riot in a high school grounds in Ft. Worth, Texas." This was fiction. McBride said OSWALD had large ears and a mustache. This did not fit OSWALD'S description.

THE OTHER EMPLOYEES OF PFISTERER DENTAL LABS

Palmer McBride gave the FBI the names of these "other" employees who had allegedly witnessed OSWALD make pro-Communist statements. One of the names Palmer McBride supplied to the FBI was George Bischoff. In June 1993 Bischoff was contacted and asked if OSWALD had arguments with other employees about the merits of communism. He responded, "No, no. He was a perfect gentleman when he worked here - as far as I can remember. He was real young. As far as I knew the boy, I can't say a thing about him." Bischoff was asked if OSWALD ever mentioned the USSR or Khrushchev. He responded: "No, no, that wasn't in his mind." Lionel Slater, another former Pfisterer Dental employee, was asked, "Did OSWALD make any communistic remarks back then?" He stated: "Not that I know of." Mr. Slater could not remember the specific dates of OSWALD'S employment. Linda Faircloth of Pfisterer Dental contacted in June 1993. She said she spoke to everyone at Pfisterer who knew OSWALD and that none of the former Pfisterer employees remembered OSWALD making any pro-Communist statements - except for Palmer McBride, OSWALD'S "bosom buddy." The FBI reported: "SAC Maynor advised the New Orleans Office has interviewed three employees of Pfisterer Dental Laboratory and was attempting to locate one other employee who might have recalled OSWALD or McBride. SAC Maynor stated none of the employees interviewed to date could recall either McBride or OSWALD. No record could be located on employment of McBride or OSWALD and the bookkeeper who handled the records for that period is deceased." [FBI 62-109060-646; McBride, Palmer telephone 818-768-2863]

On January 20, 1966, Mrs. Lorraine Blackwell advised the FBI that she was listening to the radio and heard a program which set forth twelve guidelines for spotting a Communist, and it was her opinion that James Harrison Vance qualified as a Communist. James Harrison Vance had told her that he was ...an atheist and that he had no use for religion at this time. He indicated that he might, at some later date, have use for a god, but at the present time he was only interested in being a physicist...He also stated he did not believe in going to war. He wondered how long it would be until he was exposed to classified information in his job with Boeing. They also got into a discussion concerning the assassination of President Kennedy and Vance said that his mother and OSWALD'S mother were personal friends and that he, Vance, had slept and eaten with OSWALD, and attended Scout meetings with him. During these meetings Vance said OSWALD attempted to turn them into 'cell blocks.' Mrs. Blackwell did not know where these meetings had taken place, but she assumed in New Orleans.

In May 1966 James Harrison Vance, an associate engineer with the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, called the FBI and asked to be interviewed. He told the Agents that Palmer McBride told him that he, Vance, had known OSWALD in 1958. James Harrison Vance told the FBI that "he has never to his knowledge either seen, or associated with, OSWALD..he has never heard anything about OSWALD being a member of the Boy Scouts." M. Paul Hartman of Counter-Intelligence Research & Analysis received this document. [NARA 1993.06.17.15:18: 54:090000; J. H. Vance Protection of the President 4.18.66 New Orleans] Palmer McBride was contacted in June 1993. He persisted in his errors:

I knew OSWALD in 1958. I never knew OSWALD in 1955. I knew him in the summer of 1958 for about two weeks; he worked at the dental lab. I quit Pfisterer Dental Lab in August 1958 when I went off to the summer camp with the Air Force Reserve. And that's when I knew him, just before I left the lab." It was pointed out to Palmer McBride that OSWALD was overseas at this time. He responded: "Why'd I think it was 1958 all these years? Well, whatever. I knew him for about two weeks and he came and visited my house once and expounded on the glories of communism and said he wanted to kill President Eisenhower 'cause of exploiting the people. Okay, that was it. Communist crap.

Palmer McBride was asked about OSWALD'S statement regarding Communist social functions. He recalled, "Hell, he talked about dances and stuff; I never went. I told him I was in the United States Air Force Reserve and I sure in hell wasn't going to a meeting of any kind." The testimony of Palmer McBride regarding his alleged contact with OSWALD in 1958 was read to him. He stated: "That's when I knew him, in April 1958 and May 1958 - that's when I knew him." He was asked about the letter OSWALD had mailed to him and where it was today. "Hell, I don't know. I didn't get it." If Palmer McBride didn't receive it, who did? He finally commented, "I don't remember receiving a letter." It was pointed out to Palmer McBride that OSWALD never worked as a shoe salesman. He stated: "Hell, I don't know." Palmer McBride was asked about OSWALD'S alleged threats on President Eisenhower:

Hell, people are thinking the same thing about the President today. They are already talking about Clinton. Look what happened the other day at the ceremony at Arlington. Bunch of veterans turned their back on him. All he did was alienate Congress with this gay military thing, and then what happens is they won't pass the jobs bill. But I'm not about to go out and shoot the son of a bitch because of it.

In 1964 the FBI asked Palmer McBride why he made no report of OSWALD'S threat concerning President Eisenhower to any law enforcement agency: "McBride now assumes that at the time he felt the statement was made by OSWALD to emphasize his anti-Eisenhower feelings and not made in the nature of an actual threat on the life of the President." Palmer McBride was asked if he made up the story to discredit communism by linking it to OSWALD:

Hell no, OSWALD and I were friends. He argued about the merits of communism with the other employees of Pfisterer Dental Lab...I never said anything about him having a mustache. I recognized his picture on TV and I went over and I talked to a colonel from Air Force Intelligence. I just told him all I knew. And he said, 'We'll get in touch with you in case anything comes up' and then he [OSWALD] was assassinated and he never said anything more to me. Where did they get that at? It's been so long ago - maybe I did receive a letter that said he was working as a shoe salesman in Fort Worth - but look at the dates. You said it was April 1958. That's when I remember him leaving the dental lab. I left the dental lab about August 13, 1958. We were friends for a couple of weeks - sort of an intellectual thing. It couldn't have been 1955 or 1956. I did visit briefly - we were going to a New Orleans Amateur Astronomers Association meeting - which a bunch of us from New Orleans belonged to, including Bill Wulf, who was President. That was the night he got into a fight with Bill Wulf's father over communism when he went to pick Bill Wulf up at his house. Briefly, we went to a rooming house across the street from the dental lab to get some clothes or something and he showed me his copy of The Communist Manifesto and Das Kapital from the public library. So it must be all right then, if the public library lends it out. I asked him if he was a card-carrying Communist Party member and he said, no, he just was a sympathizer to their cause. His mother was there and he introduced me. I said, 'Hello Mrs. Oswald, how are you?' and that was it. And that was the last time I ever saw her - across the street, next to the hotel. Like you say, there was a hotel - the Senator? After I left Pfisterer I never heard from OSWALD - I kept in touch with Wulf - he was my best friend - all the time we used to send audio tapes to each other. We never even talked about OSWALD.

Palmer McBride was queried about his politics. "I am 100% American, who has always backed this country and its leaders - even when they are fuck ups - like George Bush was, not doing anything for this country, taking care of foreigners." On the subject of Klansman David Duke, he observed:

Well, I never knew the man and of course I was in Louisiana when he was running for Governor, and never even heard of him until then. I didn't know anything about the Ku Klux Klan except what I saw in the movies. I had no compunctions about what communism was. I knew OSWALD was a raving nut. I told him so on several occasions. And wasn't he instrumental in having Gary Powers' U-2 shot down? Wrecked the Summit. I build airplanes since 1952. I worked at Cape Canaveral for Boeing. I been with Northrup for 20 years.

This researcher pointed out to Palmer McBride that George Bischoff and Lionel Slater did not remember OSWALD making communist statements at Pfisterer Dental. He replied, "I remember George very well. Well, OSWALD didn't work in the laboratory with those people. He was out in the office. Lionel was one of the delivery boys along with me and OSWALD. Yeah, well, he didn't know him too much. They didn't stay together much. He was out delivering to different dentists all over town. He made the remarks just to me, at the lab - it was so long ago - I don't remember that much about it." The Warren Commission cited the testimony William Eugene Wulf (born September 22, 1939), who was a friend of Palmer McBride.

Liebler: Did the agent who interviewed you indicate in any way as to how they had been led to you?

Wulf: In no way whatsoever. As far as I know the only person who knew that I had met OSWALD...was Palmer McBride, so I concluded that he probably got in touch with the FBI on the subject...

Liebler: Have you talked to McBride about this thing since the assassination?

Wulf: No; I have not. I have only corresponded with McBride once, and that was about a month ago [May 1964]. I sent him an amateur radiogram requesting the address of a mutual friend in New York, but I got no answer, and we were wondering where he is.

William Wulf, contacted in June 1993, stated: "I don't even remember exchanging tapes with Palmer McBride, he was in the service at the time, as far as I know. He was out at Patrick Air Force base. We very very seldom communicated, in fact, I didn't see Palmer until after the assassination. I didn't hear or talk to Palmer until several years later. We did not keep in contact. I spoke with Palmer for the first time about five weeks ago, after I got his number from a reporter. That was the first time I talked to Palmer. I saw him twice since the assassination, we only had two conversations. The two times I met Palmer he didn't appear to want to talk about the assassination and OSWALD at all. Period. We didn't.

Palmer McBride and William Wulf concocted their tale. Both men had each others' addresses and telephone numbers and communicated through audio tapes and amateur radio. It was highly improbable that Palmer McBride and his best friend had not discussed OSWALD'S role in the assassination shortly after it happened. Palmer McBride was, and still is, outspoken. He would have been anxious to discuss the effects of Das Kapital on OSWALD. Yet William Wulf said he had little contact with Palmer McBride and never discussed OSWALD. William Wulf denied that he spoke with Palmer

McBride even after the FBI questioned him. This was even less likely. William Wulf told Liebler about OSWALD:

I, being a history major... we got around to Communism. I think OSWALD brought it up, and he started expounding on Communist doctrine and saying that he was highly interested in Communism, that Communism was the only way of life for the worker, et cetera, and then came out with a statement that he was looking for a Communist cell in town to join, but he couldn't find any. He was a little dismayed at this, and said he couldn't find any that would show any interest in him as a Communist..."

In 1993 he stated:

After the assassination I didn't recognize the face; what I recognized was the incident with my father and that he was a very mixed-up kid. The whole business of his looking to join the Communist Party cell. He couldn't find one. He tried to make contact with the Communists. He appeared to make the impression that he had actually talked to somebody and said nobody took him seriously. He was very hip on Marxist-Leninist theory on the Soviet Union as the epitome of communism. He came to me as a guy who wanted to belong to something. He had an identity crisis. He was a kid looking for someone; whether he found it or not, he was a gullible kid. Now, whether he was used by an intelligence service or the Russians or the Cubans or the mafia, I don't know. He could have been used by anybody. I felt that he was looking to play spy. I felt that was why he joined the Astronomy Club, quite frankly - to play infiltrator. I mean, I got the impression he didn't know what the hell he was. He was looking for an identity. He didn't have an identity. He could have gone either way, he was a mixed-up kid.

Why had OSWALD been turned down by the Communists, who were anxious to recruit American youth? Why wasn't young OSWALD'S alleged contact with Communist groups detected by FBI sources? William Wulf testified that his father overheard the alleged conversation about communism and asked OSWALD to leave his home. There was no record of William Wulf or his father having contacted the FBI about OSWALD. [WR p384] The father of William Wulf was an ex-Communist:

My father had gone through Communist affairs in Germany in the 1920's and did not agree with OSWALD violently...He came back from Germany following the war, 1919 to 1920, when it was all upheaval. The Socialist Democratic Party was fighting the Communist wing and all. He remembered that and he just - well, as most Germans, a lot of Germans do, they just don't like Communists.

William Wulf was asked if OSWALD thought he could have put him in touch with Communists. He responded:

In fact, my father would have killed me if I had anything to do with Communists, he hated them. He had good reason because, as a Socialist Democrat, my father had been duped by them real bad as a World War I veteran in his 20's. My father was a Spartacist. He hated what he called black, authoritarian socialists. My grandfather was a SPD organizer. My father was trying to tell OSWALD, 'Look kid, don't fall for all this crap. They're a bunch of authoritarians, they're not democratic, they don't give a damn about the people.' And he wouldn't hear anything of it. My impression at the time was he was headed for trouble.

Both Palmer McBride and William Wulf had their own reasons for hating Communism. They had a motive in concocting this story. William Wulf was queried about Palmer McBride's stated acquaintance with OSWALD in 1958. William Wulf reflected, "The time frame is all screwed up. When I met him he was working at Pfisterer Laboratory. I have no idea if McBride met him or saw him after that period. Now that had to be late 1955, early 1956." In regard to the anti-Negro and anticommunist demonstration at OSWALD'S high school, William Wulf related that another researcher informed him such an incident occurred at a Fort Worth high school, but earlier than 1958. William Wulf denied that Palmer McBride brought OSWALD to the Astronomy Club, although Palmer McBride said he had. As far as the rest of Palmer's statements, William Wulf admitted: "I don't know where Palmer's coming from with all this."

OSWALD AND AMERICAN COMMUNISTS

When the FBI questioned Marguerite Oswald and Robert Edward Oswald about young LEE HARVEY OSWALD before the assassination of President John F. Kennedy, they both stated that OSWALD never exhibited an affinity for communism. Had OSWALD tried to make personal contact with the Communist Party when Palmer McBride and William Wulf claimed he did, it would have been his first and last time. There was no record of OSWALD having face-to-face contact with a member of the Communist Party. None of OSWALD'S associates were Communists, and he never attended any Communist Party, or Communist Party-front group meetings. He was not a card-carrying member and, according to the FBI, neither was anyone in his family. When he was interviewed by a reporter in Moscow on November 13, 1959, he noted that he was interested in Communist theory since he was 15 years old, when an old lady in New York handed him "a pamphlet about saving the Rosenbergs." When asked whether he was a Communist Party member, however, he responded that he had never met a Communist and that he might have seen one only once, when he saw that old lady. OSWALD initially had trouble parroting the Soviet Communist line. On November 14, 1959, he told Aline Mosby: "I was with the occupation forces in Japan and occupation of a country is imperialistic." The Soviets occupied numerous countries after World War II. On November 26, 1959, OSWALD wrote his brother: "I have been a pro-communist for years and yet I have never met a Communist, instead I kept silent and observed..." In 1962 he wrote: "I have never even known a Communist outside of the ones in the USSR." [WR pp. 392, 399, 695] Aside from William Wulf and Palmer McBride, the only witness who linked young OSWALD with Marxism was OSWALD: In 1959 he made a self-serving statement that he became a Marxist at age 15, upon discovering socialist literature. Later in life, OSWALD corresponded with the Communist Party and subscribed to its publications, but he did nothing to further the Communist cause in America, except leaflet on five occasions and appear on two radio programs. OSWALD had no left-wing associates in any of these activities. [FBI 105-82555-29] Marina Oswald 1994:

OSWALD was not Communist or Marxist what so ever. He did not subscribe to that theory or belief. That was a part he had to play.

OSWALD should be judged by his deeds, not by his words.

GERALD POSNER

Note how Gerald Posner treated this part of OSWALD'S life: he quoted the part of Edward Voebel's testimony before the Warren Commission about OSWALD and guns - nothing more. Then he extensively quoted William Wulf, Palmer McBride and OSWALD about OSWALD'S early affinity for Communism. He quoted Marguerite Oswald as having admitted OSWALD had books about Communism, but omitted her statement that his reading them had to do with his ambition to become a spy. OSWALD'S connection with David Ferrie, an anti-communist, was absent. Gerald Posner wrote: "There is no credible evidence that OSWALD knew David Ferrie." Scott Malone uncovered a photograph of the OSWALD and David Ferrie at a Civil Air Patrol outing. Gerald Posner: "There was no evidence that connected Ferrie and OSWALD... OSWALD did not know Ferrie." OSWALD-did-it advocate Priscilla Johnson was asked if the photograph changed her thinking: "I think OSWALD liked to create mysteries about himself." It was pointed out that we were talking about 15 year old OSWALD: "So maybe he was in the Civil Air Patrol when he was 15, but I don't know anything that would prove he knew Ferrie in the Summer of 1963."

FORT WORTH, TEXAS

Anticipating that OSWALD would join the Marines when he was 17, Marguerite Oswald moved to Fort Worth, Texas in July 1956, where she took an apartment at 4936 Collingswood for herself, OSWALD, and Robert Edward Oswald. On June 28, 1961, the FBI questioned Mrs. James E. Taylor, who was the landlady at 4936 Collingswood in 1956. Mrs. Taylor told FBI S.A. John Fain:

OSWALD was a peculiar boy, inasmuch as he read a great deal, and kept very much to himself. She had heard Mrs. Oswald state that Subject read books that were 'over his head.' Mrs. Taylor explained this to mean that the books he read were 'deep' books. She stated she does not know the titles of the books that he read. Mrs. Taylor stated that she got the impression Subject obtained some of this reading material through the mail. Taylor stated that she felt sorry for the subject inasmuch as it appeared it appeared to her that he had few friends and no social life. She stated that she pitied the boy because he had never known his father who had died before his birth. She stated that Mrs. Oswald worked continuously in an effort to support her two boys. Mrs. Taylor remarked that she has never seen anyone stay at home more closely than OSWALD [and] that Mrs. Oswald often quarreled at him for staying at home so closely and on occasion urged him to get out and seek employment but that he preferred to sit at home and read. Mrs. Taylor stated that Mrs. Oswald was in poor health and extremely nervous and that she often quarreled very loudly with both Robert and SAC...

In September 1956 OSWALD enrolled in tenth grade at Arlington Heights High School, but attended classes only a few weeks. He dropped out of school on September 28, 1956.

OSWALD OCTOBER 1956 OSWALD'S LETTER TO YOUNG PEOPLE'S SOCIALIST LEAGUE

In early October 1956, about a month before he turned 17, OSWALD wrote to the Young People's Socialist League, which was part of the Socialist Party headed by Norman Thomas.

Oct. 3, 1956

DEAR SiRS;

I am sixteen years of age and would like more information about your youth League, I would like to know if there is a branch in my area, how to join, ect., I am a marxist, and have been studying socialist principles for well over fifteen months I am very interested in your Y.P.S.L.

Sincerely
Lee Oswald

(ADDRESSE OVER)

GRAY EXHIBIT No. 1

"Oct. 3, 1956 DEAR SiRS; I am 16 years of age and I would like some information about your Youth League, I would like to know if there is a branch in my area, how to join, ect., I am a Marxist, and have been studying socialist principles for well over 15 months and I am very interested in your Y.P.S.L. Sincerely Lee H. Oswald (Addrese over)."

OSWALD dropped out of school a few days later and tried to join the Marines. OSWALD was coached when he wrote this letter. The spelling disability and poor grammar evident in most of OSWALD'S writing were absent from this letter, except for the word "Addrese." Compare this letter to one that OSWALD wrote on October 7, 1955: "To whom it may concern, Becaus we are moving to San Diego in the middle of this month Lee must quit school now. Also, please send by him any papers such as his birth certificate that you may have. Thank you. Sincirely Mrs. M. Oswald." [WR p680]

OSWALD received help from David Ferrie in composing this well-written letter. Why did OSWALD wait until he moved to Fort Worth, Texas, to make his first documented contact with the American Left? Did David Ferrie already have information on left-wing activity in New Orleans but not in Fort Worth? HEMMING told this researcher: "More than likely OSWALD was used as a mail drop when he was a kid. This is an indicator he was already cooperating with someone. It could be an informant, a Philbrick type." OSWALD checked this on his subscription blank: "I want more information about the Socialist Party." From whom or from what publication had he obtained this subscription blank? Did OSWALD write this letter on his own volition, because of his curiosity about the Left? Did OSWALD want to familiarize himself with Leftist ideology so that he could better combat it? Did this fit in with his ambition to become a spy? Why was OSWALD confessing to the Socialist Party, which received CIA subsidies because of its anticommunist orientation, that he was a Marxist? If OSWALD had been studying Marxism for more than a year, why didn't he contact a Marxist organization? Did OSWALD'S determination overshadow his intelligence? OSWALD inquired about meeting with Fort Worth Socialists when he was about to join the Marines. Would OSWALD have wanted to risk being turned down by the Marines? The Socialist Party sent OSWALD additional literature on October 9, 1956. In his letter dated October 7, 1955, OSWALD wrote that his family was moving to San Diego and that he needed a copy of his birth certificate. He needed the birth certificate so that he could alter it and use it join the Marine Corps. Warren Commission documents indicated that OSWALD lied on numerous occasions in his dealing with the Fair Play for Cuba Committee, Communist Party etc. It was a rare event when OSWALD told the truth to anyone. In light of OSWALD'S subsequent activities, it would be foolish to believe that OSWALD was sincere when he composed this letter to the Young People's Socialist League.

LEE HARVEY OSWALD 1956 TO 1959

For the most up-to-date version of this Nodule go to <http://ajweberman.com/nodule3.pdf>

OSWALD turned 17 on October 18, 1956. He enlisted in the Marines on October 24, 1956. On October 26, 1956, he reported for duty at the San Diego, California, Marine Recruit Depot. From March 1957 to May 1957, he was stationed in Jacksonville, Florida. OSWALD completed Marine basic training and Radar Operators School by May 3, 1957. He was granted a Confidential security clearance after he attended Aircraft Control and Warning Operators Training School, where he learned to spot incoming aircraft, plot their course, and monitor enemy air traffic. He was taught "tactical mission data and weapons and electronic status board plotting procedures." On May 4, 1957, OSWALD was transferred to Biloxi, Mississippi, and then to Atsugi Naval Air Station, Japan, in July 1957. Beginning in 1957, the CIA's U-2 spy plane landed at Atsugi Naval Air Station. [FBI 100-16601-12.11.63] If OSWALD'S job there entailed spotting incoming aircraft, he was familiar with the U-2. Proof of this was found in a May 8, 1978, CIA response to the HSCA regarding the deployment of the U-2 in Japan in 1957: "Operating procedures and liaison had been accomplished with the following major U.S. components: Far East Air Force; Far East Command and Theater Commander; 54th Weather Reconnaissance Squadron and the Atsugi Naval Air Station." The HSCA asked the CIA to determine if the men in OSWALD'S unit (Marine Air group 11, First Marine Wing) had knowledge of the U-2 Project. The CIA responded that Marine Air group II, First Marine Wing, had no knowledge of the U-2. [CIA SC-01836-78 TOP SECRET Eider, Chess] The HSCA concluded that "OSWALD'S Marine Corps records bore no indication that he ever received any intelligence training or performed any intelligence assignment during his term of service." HEMMING told this researcher: "It could have been shown that OSWALD, as a GTI operator with a Secret clearance working the board, would have tracked the U-2. I don't want to go into all the details. It's still classified." While OSWALD was in the Marines he became acquainted with GERALD PATRICK HEMMING, something that would change OSWALD'S life.

OSWALD'S DERRINGER: OCTOBER 1957

On October 27, 1957, at Atsugi, OSWALD opened his locker to remove some gear and a .22 caliber Derringer pistol fell to the floor. The discharged bullet hit him in the left elbow. Marine Paul Edward Murphy was in the next cubicle and rushed in. OSWALD remarked, "I believe I shot myself." He was hospitalized until November 15, 1957. The Judge Advocate General concluded that OSWALD "displayed a certain degree of carelessness or negligence" by storing a loaded revolver in his locker, but that his injury was incurred in the line of duty, and not the result of his own misconduct. He was, however, charged with possession of an unregistered privately-owned weapon in violation of general orders. A court martial followed on April 11, 1958. OSWALD received a fine and a suspended 20-day sentence. Why did OSWALD own a Derringer? Did he use it in some HEMMING-directed operation? HEMMING 1995:

That kid went out in the bush with seven other Marines hunting Huks, just out side of Angeles City on the base slopes of Mount Arayat. They drove through Olongapo...I can give you the whole fucking schedule. At Subic Bay and Cubi Point they were out hunting Huks on the weekends. First four guys got killed they clamped down, they took everybody's 782 shooter away from 'em. Gotta knock off this shit. OSWALD got wounded outside of fucking Angeles City by a grenade fragment, playing Huk hunter.

OSWALD stated: "Subic Bay Naval Base in the Phillippines, you'd know what I mean. Sympathies with Communist elements there, their hatred of America. Americans look upon all foreign people as something to be exploited for profit. All Filipinos who are well off are those who cooperate with the Americans." [Interview with Priscilla Johnson]

THE DEATH OF PRIVATE SCHRAND

On November 20, 1957, OSWALD'S Unit, MACS-1, went to the Philippines. The squadron was expected to return to Atsugi after maneuvers were completed; instead it disembarked and stayed at Subic Bay. On January 5, 1958, Marine Private Martin D. Schrand was fatally wounded by a discharge from a riot-type shotgun while on guard duty at Subic Bay. The official Marine investigation that year found that the death of Martin Schrand was the result of an accidental discharge of his gun; no other person was involved in the incident. The Marines dropped Martin Schrand's shotgun and discovered, when there was a shell in the chamber, it discharged.

Martin Schrand was an unstable character. He joined the Marines after going before a Juvenile Board where he was accused of car theft. He set his mattress on fire at Keesler Air Force base. Martin Schrand's brother was killed in an accident aboard a Navy vessel. OSWALD knew Martin Schrand at Atsugi and met him again in Subic Bay, but OSWALD had no apparent motive to kill him. According to the Warren Commission, a rumor began circulating shortly after

Martin Schrand's death that linked OSWALD to it. After the assassination, when it became expedient to link OSWALD to murder, OSWALD'S superior officer stated: "From firsthand information, he knows nothing of this, but was advised from other individuals that there was some question concerning the shooting of Shroud [sic]. He recalls that Marines assigned guard duty utilized a pump shotgun and were given three slugs for the gun. The instructions were that the chamber of the gun was to be kept empty until necessary. He stated that it was his understanding that Marine Shroud was shot through the left side of the chest, the bullet piercing the body and coming out the opposite side. He also recalls that the squadron's gear was kept in an airplane hangar which housed the plane, the nature of which he did not know at that time, but which he now knows to be a U-2. He does not know whether Marine Shroud was assigned the specific duty of guarding the hangar which housed the U-2..." No report existed prior to the assassination that remotely linked OSWALD to this killing. In Oswald's Tale, Norman Mailer wrote: "If OSWALD, however, - and let us assume the probability of that has to be small but not inconceivable [killed Schrand] then what a sense he would have had thereafter of being forever an outlaw..." Norman Mailer suggested: "An undeclared possibility is that someone was being forced to kneel and commit fellatio [on Schrand] and so was in the position to pick up the shotgun from where it had been placed on the ground at his feet." [Norman Mailer Oswald's Tale p385]

In 1994 Norman Mailer's Oswald's Tale, was published by Random House. Oswald's Tale was co-authored by FBI source Lawrence Schiller. [FBI Phil. F.O. 157-916-346] It focused on irrelevant detail such as Marina Oswald "pregnant, was now very sensitive to odor" and relied heavily on the works of Edward Epstein and witting CIA collaborator Priscilla Johnson McMillan. In the 1970's Norman Mailer was instrumental in obtaining the release of Jack Abbott from prison. Jack Abbott subsequently murdered a waiter at the Bini Bon restaurant, two blocks from where I lived at 6 Bleecker Street, because the waiter wouldn't let Jack Abbott use the restroom. After that I lost any respect I had for Mailer.

OSWALD'S ATTACK ON A MEXICAN-AMERICAN JUNE 1958

On June 27, 1958, OSWALD spilled a drink on Mexican-American Sergeant Miguel Rodriguez and abusively challenged him to a fight. Miguel Rodriguez suspected at the time that OSWALD was prejudice against persons of Mexican descent. OSWALD was sentenced to 28 days of hard labor. [WR p684; Epstein, Ass. Chron. p366] OSWALD told former Marine Richard Call that "he had beaten up a Sergeant who had been riding him for no good reason." On September 14, 1958, OSWALD sailed with his unit for Ping Tung, North Taiwan. It was there that Marines were preparing an offensive against Communist China in case of an invasion Matsu and Quemoy - where OSWALD was soon shipped.

OSWALD EL TORO MARINE BASE, SANTA ANA , CALIFORNIA

In December 1958 OSWALD returned to the United States and was stationed at El Toro Marine Corps Air Station in Santa Ana, California. OSWALD wrote that he went on leave that month. [WCE 93] It was at El Toro, not at Atsugi, that OSWALD'S first exhibited communist proclivities. The only other documented contact he had with the left prior to this was his letter to the Socialist Party in which he claimed to be a Marxist. Gerald Posner admitted that prior to this, "...he gave the Marines no reason to believe he might be a security threat." In January 1959 OSWALD read the Communist Party publication, The Daily Worker, and Russian-language newspapers in his barracks. He openly expressed his admiration for Soviet-style Communism. OSWALD studied the Russian language at El Toro. He took a Russian language aptitude test in February 1959. [WR p257] His friend in the Marine Corps, Nelson Delgado, said OSWALD was fluent in Spanish and German. OSWALD had the Germanic Gothic alphabet and various German words in his address book. [WR p656; 8WH303; WC Slawson's Rec. Dec. Notes #458] It should be noted her that ANGLETON prepared all the CIA traces on OSWALD'S address book that were given to the FBI. [CIA 518-219] According to an early version of a CIA chronology of OSWALD'S life:

His fellow Marines have reported that OSWALD frequently expressed pro-Soviet and pro-Communist views and on at once one occasion defended Fidel Castro during a discussion. He also read Communist literature including the Communist newspaper, The Worker. That the decision to go to the USSR was made, or at least contemplated, while he was stationed at Atsugi, Japan, in 1958 is suggested by the fact that OSWALD began to study the Russian language while there. Moreover, sometime between April 4, 1957, and January 30, 1959, OSWALD'S mother informed her doctor, Dr. Morton N. Goldberg, that her son, unnamed, want to defect to Russia.

The FBI questioned OSWALD'S former associates in the Marines. Since OSWALD'S defection received so little publicity JAMES ANTHONY BOTELHO

Thought OSWALD might have been a spy for the U.S. Would not have been surprised if OSWALD would have gone to Cuba because he once mentioned he would like to go to Cuba to train anti-Castro troops because of the money he would earn. Botelho shared the same room with OSWALD the two months prior to OSWALD'S discharge. OSWALD was very unusual person in that he would not speak unless spoken to and his answers were always brief. He associated with others as little as possible. OSWALD subscribed to a Russian language newspaper he said was published in San Francisco and to which he stated he first subscribed in Tokyo so that he could learn the Russian language. Richard Call began calling OSWALD "OSWALDSKOVICH."

Botelho knows of no subversive connections or memberships and was shocked when OSWALD was identified as responsible for the death of President Kennedy." [NARA FBI 124-10261-10225] Sergeant W. B. Funk advised the FBI that he was barracks NCO at MACS 9, Santa Ana, California, during the time OSWALD was assigned to the squadron. He stated OSWALD had a private room in a Quonset hut and that OSWALD kept his door locked all the time and that for him to inspect OSWALD'S room he had to threaten disciplinary action to get the door unlocked.

He advised OSWALD always had a stack of books on Communism which he had obtained from the camp library and possibly some from Santa Ana Public Library which he read constantly. He stated he had never heard OSWALD discuss politics or world affairs and he assumed at the time OSWALD was merely interested in these subjects on an academic basis. He stated everyone felt sorry for OSWALD as he was a loner who stayed by himself and never went on liberty with any of the men from the Squadron. He stated he doubted if OSWALD had any friends in the Santa Ana area because he hardly went on liberty enough to have acquired a friend. Sgt. Funk stated that a Lance Corporal named Delgado was an individual who resided in the same Quonset hut with OSWALD and that Delgado was so uncomfortable with OSWALD he requested to be assigned to other sleeping quarters." [Charlotte N.C. FBI 89-75-229-NARA FBI 124-10276-10224]

Staff Sgt. Camilous Brown advised he first met LEE HARVEY OSWALD when OSWALD was transferred to MACS Number Nine, MCAF, Santa Ana, California. He stated that OSWALD was with the squadron for about a year and that he was discharged during 1959, exact date unknown. Sgt. Brown stated that OSWALD was quiet guy who stayed to himself and did not solicit friends. He explained that OSWALD was disliked among members of squadron because work quality and professional attitude were poor and he appeared to only waiting for discharge day. Brown advised OSWALD rarely went on liberty, saved all his money was very resentful when his living quarters were inspected by barracks NCO. He also stated 'Nothing in my room concerns anyone but myself' and that a room inspection seemed to concern OSWALD more than anything else. Brown stated he never knew of OSWALD engaging in discussion of politics or world affairs with anyone and had never heard him express an opinion on any subject other than room inspection. Former Marine Richard Dennis Call told the FBI "He played chess with OSWALD weekly, and had some discussions with him. OSWALD had no close friends, was quiet, introverted, non violent, and a nonentity to the best of Call's recollection. OSWALD was interested in Russian music, and was studying the Russian language through recordings, and was called a Russian by some of the Marine Corps personnel. Call had no information that OSWALD had any subversive membership, subscribed to any subversive literature, attended any subversive meetings or had any questionable associates. When Call and his associates learned of OSWALD'S defection "they were greatly surprised by this since he had actually never voiced any pro-Russian opinions." [FBI Phil. 89-58-87 NARA FBI 124-10261-10214]

NO CIC OR FBI INVESTIGATION OF OSWALD

A Marine mail room clerk reported that OSWALD received subversive literature to his operations officer, Robert E. Block. OSWALD was questioned about this. He explained that he was only trying to indoctrinate himself in Communist theory. [Epstein, Ass. Chron. p374; Robert Block WC V8 p302] On November 22, 1963, Officer Robert Eddy, Santa Ana, California, Police Department, advised the FBI that "around 1959 to 1960 he had been in Counter Intelligence Corps at the El Toro Marine Corps Air Station. He said he recalled an individual whom he thinks may have been OSWALD was assigned to the Marine Corps Air Facility at about that time. Eddy said he vaguely recalled there was some talk that the individual he thought may have been OSWALD was receiving some kind of communist literature at that time and also reportedly said that he was going to Russia when he got out of the Marine Corps." Robert Eddy said that he did not conduct any investigation concerning OSWALD and referred the FBI to Elwood Whitby, another CIC investigator. Elwood Whitby did not conduct an investigation and referred the FBI to Douglas H. Cameron. Cameron told the FBI that he did not conduct an investigation of OSWALD. [LA FBI 89-75-189 - NARA FBI 124-10270-10175]

ZNAIE BOOKSTORE

OSWALD'S address book contained the name, "Znanya," believed by the FBI to be a Russian bookstore in San Francisco. The CIA reported:

The Znaie bookstore referred to above presumably is a branch store, 'Znania, Russian Bookstore,' which Victor Kamkin was planning to open at 5237 Geary Street, San Francisco, California, in the summer of 1959. This store was to be operated by S. Sapelkin, presumably Semen I. Sepelkin, the husband of Mrs. Kamkin's sister. For information regarding these individuals see the attached copy of a memo on KAMKIN, dated December 17, 1959. The Znania Book Shop in San Francisco, as well as the Victor Kamkin bookstore in Washington, D.C. was of interest during House Un-American Activities Committee Hearings in May 1962 and July 1962 on 'Outlets for the Distribution of Soviet Propaganda in the United States. [CIA 515-217]

A Kamkin Catalog was found among OSWALD'S personal effects. [Item 181] Oswald's Marine buddy Gerald Patrick Hemming was living in Los Angeles at the same time OSWALD was at El Toro. HEMMING stated that he was in touch with OSWALD at this time. OSWALD once mentioned he would like to go to Cuba to train anti-Castro troops because of the money he would earn. HEMMING did precisely this. OSWALD seemingly slipped by the Marine's Counter-Intelligence Corps. He also eluded the anti-subversion net of the FBI, since no FBI document was generated about the Communist Party newspaper being sent to OSWALD at a Marine base, or his having been on their mailing list. OSWALD had no interest in left-wing politics since October 1956, when he wrote to the Socialist Party. What suddenly rekindled OSWALD'S interest in Communism? Was his interest generated by contact with someone in the CIA or someone in contact with someone in the CIA?

OSWALD AND ALBERT SCHWEITZER COLLEGE: MARCH 1959

On March 4, 1959, OSWALD applied for admission to Albert Schweitzer College in Switzerland. His application stated he wished to begin attending classes in April 1960. OSWALD noted that when he attended high school in New Orleans he participated in a "student body movement in school for control of Juvenile Delinquency. Member Y.M.C.A. and A.Y.H. Associations" and was interested in "Science, English, woodworking, civics, mechanical, art, math (in H.S)." OSWALD'S special interests were "Philosophy, Psychology, Ideology, Football, baseball, tennis, stamp collecting." The extent and nature of OSWALD'S private reading included: "Jack London, Darwin, Norman Vincent Peale, Scientific books, Philosophy ect." OSWALD wanted to be a "short story writer on contemporary American life." [CIA 1291-1021] He wrote that he wished to attend Albert Schweitzer College to "broaden my knowledge of German and to live in a healthy climate and a Good moral atmosphere." Kermit L. Hall, who served from 1994 to 1998 on the Assassination Records Review Board to review and release to the public documents related to the assassination of U.S. President John F. Kennedy wrote "As a result of a cable's release, we know that the FBI had knowledge of and interest in Oswald's activities well before the assassination, to the extent of relying on officials of the Swiss Federal Police to learn about his possible attendance at Albert Schweitzer College." This was because his mother wrote to the FBI regarding her son's whereabouts. Hall died on August 13, 2006 when he drowned in his swimming pool after allegedly suffering cardiac arrest. Gerald Posner reported that OSWALD was expected to remain in the Marine Reserves for three years following his discharge and needed a valid reason to leave the country, like attending a Swiss school. OSWALD, however, never sent a copy of his application to the Marines. The CIA reported: "A search of CIA files has revealed no CIA knowledge of an Albert Schweitzer College in Switzerland." [Unmarked CIA doc.]

At the same time OSWALD was reported to have displayed pro-Communist leanings by his fellow Marines, OSWALD characterized himself as pro-American when he applied to Albert Schweitzer College. OSWALD never mentioned Karl Marx - he stated that he read the works of Norman Vincent Peale. OSWALD was a Juvenile Delinquent in New York City. In his letter to Albert Schweitzer College he said he was against Juvenile Delinquency. Which was the real OSWALD? A buddy of HEMMING, a Marine & as American as apple pie or a dirty little commie? Whatever the answer, one thing was clear: OSWALD had two identities.

The fact that OSWALD applied to this school indicated he was not yet been made aware of his mission by ANGLETON, or had not come into contact with him at this point. Another possibility is this was part of his cover as this college was sponsored by the Unitarian Church, a very liberal Protestant denomination.

OSWALD'S HARDSHIP DISCHARGE AUGUST 1959

OSWALD received a letter from his mother in June 1959, complaining of being incapacitated from an accident she had in December 1958: "I was getting candy from a storeroom and had to reach up and get a carton from up on a shelf and a number of signs on top of the carton fell and hit me in the face and head...I was knocked to the floor. I sustained permanent injuries to my head, neck and face which have totally disabled me up to the present time." OSWALD waited seven months before deciding he wanted to leave the Marines so he could help his allegedly disabled mother. The HSCA acknowledged that OSWALD'S Marine Corps discharge was somewhat odd. Although he was obligated to serve on active duty until December 7, 1959, he applied for a hardship discharge to support his mother on August 17, 1959. Two weeks later, OSWALD'S application was approved, and he was transferred from active duty to the Marine Corps Reserves under honorable conditions. The Marine Corps also approved dependency payments for his mother. The HSCA stated: "It appeared that OSWALD'S application for a hardship discharge [and request for dependency payments] was processed so expeditiously because it was accompanied by all the necessary documentation." OSWALD had to prove that he sent his mother money while in the Marines to qualify for a dependency allowance. In truth, he never sent his mother any money before August 1959, when he sent her $40. This was the month he applied for the hardship discharge and dependency allotment. [WR p688] OSWALD lied on the application, and wrote that he sent his mother support payments, but could not "...submit all of the supporting affidavits." In addition, the affidavit of Marguerite Oswald contradicted the sworn statements of her son. She wrote in her affidavit he had not sent her any money. The HSCA: "The unusual aspect of OSWALD'S discharge application was that, technically, his requisite application for a quarter's allowance for his mother should have been disallowed since Marguerite Oswald's dependency affidavit stated that OSWALD had not contributed any money to her during the preceding year." [HSCA R p221] The Marine Corps did not object to giving OSWALD a dependency discharge and so he was granted one despite the inconsistencies in his case. What is significant is that OSWALD could not wait until December 1959 to leave the Marines. He had to be somewhere else before then.

NODULE X5

OSWALD: A DISPATCHED DEFECTOR
SENT TO THE SOVIET UNION BY ANGLETON TO SUPPLY IT WITH THE INFO NEEDED TO SHOOT DOWN U-2
AND SABOTAGE UPCOMING SUMMIT

For the most up-to-date version of this Nodule go to

HEMMING introduced OSWALD to ANGLETON. ANGLETON encouraged both men to join Castro's revolution. HEMMING was able to enter Cuba, OSWALD could not. Evidence suggested that ANGLETON used OSWALD for another mission that HEMMING termed: "The U-2 Dump." The first part of this mission involved OSWALD'S dispatched defection to the Soviet Union.

E. HOWARD HUNT wrote:

Some people have said that there was a false defector program, in which the CIA would send people over to the Soviet Union and bring them back to debrief them. While a program of this type might have proved useful, I think that it credits the CIA with a lot more intelligence than it usually displayed. It never had such a program. It had a program of interviewing Cubans and Spaniards who had been arrested years before and sentenced to work in the Soviet Union. I remember that program because Archie Roosevelt was in Madrid in charge of screening these people. You got the names from the Spanish authorities, and he and his group would have an opportunity to question them about anything hot at that time, but that was the closest to what has been suggested. [HUNT American Spy].

Frontline reporter Scott Malone: "The CIA's Soviet Bloc Division sent spies into the Soviet Union but did not run any type of dispatched defector program in 1959." The HSCA attempted to determine if OSWALD'S trip to the Soviet Union was part of a CIA operation:

To investigate this matter further, the committee interviewed the persons who had been chiefs or deputy chiefs during 1959 to 1962 of the units within the Soviet Russia Division that were responsible for Clandestine Activities and the American Visitors Program. The heads of the Clandestine Activity Section stated that during this period the CIA had few operatives in the Soviet Union and OSWALD was not one of them. Moreover, they added that - because of what they perceived to be his obvious instability - OSWALD would never have met the Agency's standards for use in the field. The heads of the Visitors Section of the Soviet Russia Division informed the committee that they met with each person involved in their program - and OSWALD was not one of them. These officials also advised the committee that clean-cut collegiate types tended to be used in this program, and that OSWALD did not meet this criterion.

In 1964, the former Director of the Central Intelligence Agency, Allen Dulles, did not consider this "instability factor" a valid line of reasoning: "Mr. Dulles did not think it would be a good idea to cite CIA procedures for agent assessment and handling to show that it would have been unlikely for OSWALD to have been chosen as a CIA agent to enter Russia. There are always exceptions to every rule and this might be misunderstood by the members of the Warren Commission." [HSCA V4 p233]

OSWALD was a vest-pocket ANGLETON operation, and the chiefs of other CIA components concerned with the U.S.S.R. had not the slightest knowledge of his connection to JAMES ANGLETON. ANGLETON and his Deputies Rocca and Harvey should have been asked about this program. It has been stated without substantiation that William Harvey was one of three CIA officials who ran a program to send false defectors into the Soviet Union [<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=RhszHjeYjA4>] so the other CIA officials who were questioned told the truth to the HSCA. ANGLETON and his associates did not voluntarily reveal their connection to OSWALD to the HSCA. The HSCA was therefore convinced that OSWALD was not part of a CIA Operation, when in reality, the men who ran him, were in fact staff members of the CIA running an off-key operation. Nothing was being handled through regular channels in the OSWALD operation since its goal was at variance with American foreign policy under the Eisenhower Administration. Rogue agents were on the loose in Langley.

ANGLETON HAD THE CAPABILITY TO RUN DOMESTIC OPERATIONS IN

MEMORANDUM FOR: Chiefs of Area Divisions and Staffs

SUBJECT: Clandestine Service Operations in the United States

1. All clandestine operations carried out by the Clandestine Services in the United States will be coordinated in advance with the CI Staff, which in turn will deal with other U. S. departments or agencies as required or advisable.

2. The coordination referred to herein does not include that required for policy and support under NSC 5412/2, and relates only to the action necessary to prevent jurisdictional conflicts with other departments and agencies within the United States or to obtain assistance and cooperation from them for domestic operations.

3. A memorandum of record will be prepared by CI/Liaison in each case indicating that coordination has been effected or is not required.

Richard Helms
Chief of Operations, DD/P

FUNDING

ANGLETON'S super-secret component, CI/SIG, had a slush fund which gave him access to enormous amounts of unaudited money. He also had authority to report expenditures by certification, which meant he did not need vouchers or records to support his claim for reimbursement. He needed only to certify that he spent the money. Safes covered the walls of his outer office and he maintained a nearby vault room. Edward Petty stated: "

I read some of those files. Nobody had access to them except ANGLETON. You might think you knew a lot about him, but you didn't necessarily know everything about him. He was a strictly a lone wolf, a strange bird. The man was doing all sorts of things on his own that nobody ever told him to do, or that was any of his business at all, there is no doubt about it. ANGLETON did, in quotes, run operations. What an ANGLETON operation was, nobody really knows.

ANGLETON COULD DESTROY DOCUMENTS

After ANGLETON retired from the CIA, a search was conducted to find the records documenting ANGLETON'S contacts with KGB mole Kim Philby. CIA officers were unable to locate these reports. Philby met with ANGLETON at least 36 times. Tom Mangold reported: "There is no trail or indexing of the missing memoranda in the CIA central registry...No one could have stopped ANGLETON from destroying it." Paul Garbler commented, "The contact reports with their meetings. ANGLETON destroyed all of those. It's been pretty well established. None were ever found. None was found at all. It's believed that ANGLETON destroyed those after Philby showed up in Moscow."

ANGLETON OPERATION: NO PAPERWORK FOR MOLE TO FIND

ANGLETON believed the CIA had been penetrated by a mole. Even if this was true, the KGB would have discovered nothing compromising about OSWALD if the KGB had its mole examine the CIA's records on OSWALD after his defection. There were no official CIA project records on ANGLETON'S Project OSWALD for the mole to find, because it was a rogue operation with no approval from Allen Dulles, the Director of the CIA. Additionally, at ANGLETON'S request, no CIA documents were generated about OSWALD for 15 months after he defected except for minor memo consisting of only a few sentences. These were generated at the time of OSWALD'S defection as a result of an inquiry by the FBI. There wasn't a CIA file on OSWALD prior to December 9, 1960 in which all the documents about him were kept. Not only were there no records that linked OSWALD to ANGLETON, there were no CIA records on OSWALD, period. The only files that existed in the CIA's filing cabinets that concerned OSWALD were FBI and State Department documents referred to the CIA.

In September 1975 Counter-Intelligence Staff member Paul Hartman drafted a Memorandum for the Chief, Counter-Intelligence Staff (ANGLETON), stating that on November 27, 1963, he was instructed by Raymond Rocca, his immediate superior, to check Agency files in order to determine if OSWALD had been used by, or was connected with, the CIA. Paul Hartman checked with Records Integration Division , Deputy Director/Plans, Domestic Contacts Division , Division D, SE Division, the Cuban Operations Group of the Latin American Division, Medical Services, Counter-Intelligence/Operational Approval, CRS, and Office of Security/Security Research Service: "The results were negative" as well they should have been, since OSWALD worked for ANGLETON, not the CIA. [CIA 1188-1000]

ANGLETON did this on his own, with no approval from DCI Allen Dulles. In the midst of a series of military and civilian defections (The New York Times reported four defections prior to October 1959) evidence suggested ANGLETON instructed OSWALD to travel to the USSR via Helsinki and then to request Soviet citizenship. OSWALD was instructed that he was not to tell anyone, even his mother and brother, about this mission, since their reaction would be part of OSWALD'S cover.

OSWALD: SEPTEMBER 1959

OSWALD'S hardship discharge was granted in early September 1959, and he returned to Fort Worth to help his allegedly disabled mother. Marguerite Oswald reported that he gave her $100 and told her he was about to board a boat since he was working for an import/export company. OSWALD remained in Fort Worth two days, then left for New Orleans. On September 20, 1959, OSWALD boarded a Lykes Line cargo ship in New Orleans due to arrive in Le Havre, France, on October 8, 1959. Before sailing, he wrote to his mother that he had booked passage for Europe, adding: "Just remember above everything else that my values are very different from Robert or yours. I did not tell you about my plans because you could hardly be expected to understand." From Le Havre he took a ferry to Southampton. He arrived there on October 9, 1959. According to official British travel records he claimed he had no fixed address but planned to remain in the UK one week for vacation, before going on to "some school in Swisse." The Warren Report stated that on that same day, October 9, 1960, OSWALD traveled to London where he took an undetermined flight to Helsinki, Finland. [WR p690] Another section of the Warren Report had him arriving on Saturday, October 10, 1959. [WR p258]

OSWALD IN HELSINKI: OCTOBER 1959

On Saturday, October 10, 1959, OSWALD flew to Helsinki, Finland. ANGLETON controlled the CIA Station there. OSWALD registered at the Hotel Tornio around midnight. The Warren Commission determined that the only direct flight from London to Helsinki on Saturday October 10, 1959, was on Finn Air 852 and it arrived at 11:33 p.m. - too late for OSWALD to have time to pass through Customs and other airport travel formalities and register in the hotel by midnight. [CIA 758-325, 768-337, 748-321] Could OSWALD have gotten through Customs, then hired a cab to take him to the hotel, in 20 minutes? In July 1964 the CIA discovered a flight which left London at 7:05 p.m. arriving at Stockholm at 1:30 a.m. then changing planes to SK 734 leaving Stockholm 3:15 a.m. arriving Helsinki 5:35 p.m. This investigation was conducted by Raymond Rocca and ANGLETON Deputy William Hood, Chief/Soviet Research/CI. [CIA 995-928; NARA 1993.06.19.11:19:56:370000] OSWALD did not arrive in Helsinki at 11:33 p.m. He arrived on an earlier flight at 5:35 p.m. This did not explain why OSWALD waited until midnight before registering at the hotel. The reason was because OSWALD was briefed on his mission at a safe location as soon after he arrived in Helsinki. The HSCA: "The Committee was unable to determine the circumstances surrounding OSWALD'S trip from London to Helsinki." [HSCA R p211]

OSWALD'S SOVIET VISA

OSWALD arrived in Helsinki on Saturday, October 10, 1959, and was issued a 14-day tourist visa from the Soviet Embassy, Helsinki, on Wednesday, October 14, 1959. The earliest possible date he could have applied for the visa was the following Monday, October 12, 1959. Therefore OSWALD'S Soviet visa had been delivered in two days. The Warren Commission asked the State Department to estimate the "average time required to obtain a Soviet tourist visa from Helsinki in October 1959." The Department of State had an Embassy contact seek information on Soviet visa application time from three Helsinki travel agencies. These agencies reported that, uniformly for five years from 1959 through 1963, "usual time required for receipt of Soviet visa applied for by Americans has been seven to fourteen days." [FBI 105-82555 NR 6.2.64] The CIA conducted numerous studies of this, finally preparing a memo, "Length of Time Required to Obtain Tourist Visas in Helsinki and Stockholm, 1964." This document conceded it normally took from five to seven days, at best, to obtain a visa at any time in 1964. [WR p258] ANGLETON revised the text of this memorandum so that it read: "During the 1964 tourist season, Soviet Consulates in at least some European cities were issuing visas in five to seven days." The tourist season was the busiest time of the year. The Warren Report stated that the reason OSWALD received his visa in three days was that "the summer rush had ended." [CIA 707-308A, 836-360, 781-341, 1147-431]

GREGORY YEUGENYVICH GOLUB

OSWALD'S visa was signed by KGB Station Chief Gregory Yeugenyvich Golub. The OSS knew Gregory Yeugenyvich Golub was a Russian Intelligence Service Officer in 1946. The CIA did the translations of the signatures on OSWALD'S Soviet documents for the Warren Commission. A CIA document revealed OSWALD'S Soviet visa was signed by "illegible - probably Golub." Gregory Yeugenyvich Golub was not the only Soviet official to have an illegible signature: a Warren Commission memorandum revealed that "out of nine signatures appearing on the non-medical documents, eight were illegible or at least stated to be illegible by the translators." Warren Commission Counsel W. David Slawson wrote: "My opinion was that the high percentage of illegible signatures might have been intentional, in order to prevent the CIA from checking back on actual persons and places..." [HSCA V12 p170] David Slawson suspected they traced back to the KGB and the CIA was trying to cover this up. Gregory Yeugenyvich Golub had joined the Consular Corps in Helsinki, which previously had no Sino-Soviet representatives, in the fall of 1957. A CIA document stated:

MEMORANDUM FOR: Chief, SR/CI/R

SUBJECT: List of Consular Personnel (Soviets) in Helsinki in October 1959.

Source consulted: CIRA/RS list of Russian Intelligence Service personnel in Helsinki. Checklist of Soviet Officials Abroad (years 1955, 1956, 1959, 1960, 1961) 201 file for Golub, Grigoriy Yevgenyevich 'Lindy.'

1. The only Soviet official accredited to Finland as a Consular official in October 1959: Gregory Yeugenyvich Golub. (201-in SR/Bio).
2. Golub stated that he was the only person of officer rank in the consular section in May 1959. He had once had a part-time assistant, Mikhail Petrovich Lyubimov, who had departed sometime between February and May 1959.
3. Mention was once made of a feeble-voiced female who answered the phone in the consular section in 1958, but no other name of any Soviet appeared in any list for Helsinki Soviets with designation "Consular official" or "Consular Employee."
4. I feel that his (Golub's) statement that he was the only "male in the consular section since Lyubimov left" indicates that if he had any help, it was purely secretarial, and this may have been drawn from the regular embassy secretarial pool.
5. (Deleted) said that Golub was the Deputy Resident (i.e. Zhenikov's deputy) before Voronin. However, I noticed from the checklists that Voronin, Yuriy, a 3rd Secretary, predated Golub in Helsinki.[CIA 151-523]

Another CIA document stated that Gregory Yeugenyvich Golub was the KGB chief of Helsinki and he ran an agent in the Finnish Passport Office. During a conversation with a CIA agent, Gregory Yeugenyvich Golub was asked: "Are you the highest ranking intelligence officer the Soviet Union has in Finland?" The CIA watched Gregory Yeugenyvich Golub:

Golub stated that he was the only person of officer rank in the consular section in May 1959. He had once had a part-time assistant, Mikhail Petrovich Lyubimov, who had departed (deleted) said that Golub was the deputy resident (i.e. Zhenikov's deputy) before Voronin. However I noticed from the checklists that Voronin, Yuriy, a 3rd Secy, predated Golub in Helsinki.

Gregory Yeugenyvich Golub was Second Secretary and Consular Section Chief. He left Helsinki in February 1960. /Z 240304

E. Mendoza of the Office of Security sent the Deputy Chief, Security Research Staff a highly deleted memo dated March 23, 1970, on #88420. Subject: Lydia S. Biddle

From information contained in the file of Nikolay G. Makeyev, #261770, it would appear that the unnamed TRUD correspondent is actually Makeyev. In a summary of RI references dated December 26, 1961, relating to Makeyev, the following is noted:

Makeyev served as TRUD correspondent in Helsinki beginning in April 1958. On September 4, 1959 he was a dinner partner of an unnamed staff employee, apparently by pre-arrangement at a party give in return for past dinner by Mira and Johanen Bein of the Israeli legation. He attempted ardent cultivation of the staffer who was identified by the pseudonym assigned to Lydia Biddle. Summary also reflects that in October 1959, Grigoriy Golub, presumably KGB Chief in Helsinki, asked Biddle if she knew any Soviet diplomats, and she replied she knew only Makeyev. The next day Makeyev phoned her from a public pay phone. According to the (deleted) had a dinner date with Makeyev, and she was thereafter advised by the Station to terminate further contact.

In a report prepared by Biddle concerning her contacts with Makeyev, she commented on the above dinner party. It was noted that Leo Schulgin was also a guest, and as the evening progressed, Schulgin became quite drunk. Viewing the increasingly friendly atmosphere prevailing, especially regarding Makeyev, Shulgin sat muttering, audibly, "he's a dirty Soviet spy."

Biddle received the most assiduous attentions from MAKEYEV and when she indicated that she was leaving, Makeyev immediately bounced up and took his leave. Biddle had driven her own car and as it turned out, Makeyev had not, and solicited a ride from Biddle. He insisted on taking her up to his apartment, which she declined, but to get rid of him she agreed to meet him the following week (although she was aware he was married). He insisted that he pick her up in front of her apartment, and when discussing their plans on that evening, attempted to have her spend the evening in his apartment. She declined and they went to a casino. Biddle described him as a very dull individual, although he appeared to be full of flattery for the U.S. etc. Memo indicates that Makeyev's "designs" upon Biddle are certainly apparent. Whether his original plan included the use of this apartment, and attempt to compromise Biddle with photographs and subsequent blackmail could only be speculated upon. It was also indicated that MAKEYEV thinks Biddle did not report to her superiors on her intent to go out with Makeyev. Memo further notes (Deleted).

A CI/SIG document dated September 1, 1967, stated:

On October 5, 1962, we received a report from (Deleted) concerning Kuril Cornell, a clerk in the Finnish Passport Office arrested on a charge of espionage for the Soviets on October 25, 1962. According to (Deleted) Cornell was one of a group of White Russians and Finns handed over to the Russians by the Finns in 1955, and later returned to Finland. Although reportedly recruited by the KGB in 1954, he did not become active until 1958, when the Soviet Counsel in Helsinki, Grigoriy Golub 201-150156 (?) established contact with him. Cornell was instructed by Golub to obtain personality and other information on persons of interest to the KGB including British and American diplomats as well as lists of U.N. residents in Helsinki. In addition Cornell was to discover the names of American agents through his friend in the Finnish Security Police. Golub mentioned to Cornell that the Finnish Police Commissioner, Garrielson, was one of the individuals in important positions with whom he had contact and from whom he could obtain officially all the information needed.

A CIA Memo for the Director of the FBI dated January 17, 1964, stated:

In early August 1957, Gregoriy Golub, Second Secretary and Consul, asked a Finnish official to give Golub advanced notice of any Soviet about to be expelled so that Golub could assure that the Soviet left quietly and immediately. At the time, the request coming from a mere Second Secretary seemed unusual and implied special status. (Golub is identified as a KGB Officer who had contact with the Finnish police. Golub, who arrived in Helsinki, Finland, in early 1957, left in early September 1957 but later returned and stay until February 1960. In 1957, this agency was inclined to presume that departures of KGB Officers from Helsinki, Finland, after the surfacing of Hayhanen were probably somehow connected with the Abel-Hayhanen affair).

Another CIA document dated January 24, 1958, stated:

We failed to mention at one point in the talk (Deleted) said he took Golub to task for having interests not consistent with a diplomats job. 'Are you' he said, 'the highest intelligence officer the Soviet Union has in Finland?' Golub protested that his interests were purely diplomatic and that he had no other than normal consular duties. (Deleted) smiled and said to Golub 'Of course that is a lot of baloney.'

JUKKA RISLAKKI

In 1977 someone at the Daily World, the organ of Communist Party of the U.S.A. recommended to Jukka Rislakki, a reporter on the foreign desk of a large Finnish newspaper, that he read Coup D'Etat in America. Rislakki contacted me and informed me that he was in contact with Stasi agent Julius Mader, the author of Who's Who in the CIA. The CIA stated Who's Who in the CIA, written by "Julius Mader," was disinformation. Julius Mader was East German Stasi Agent Major Thomas Bergner. Ninety Stasi agents helped put the book together. It was described as largely accurate by The New York Times. [NYT 12.25.77 p12]

OSWALD KNEW HOW LONG IT WOULD TAKE TO OBTAIN A VISA

In 1978 Jukka Rislakki uncovered a Finnish Government document, "For Facilitating Passport Examination." OSWALD filled out this form when he first arrived, and listed the duration of stay as Sunday, October 11, 1959, to Thursday, October 15, 1959, then gave it to the airport passport control officer. William Hood of the CIA's Counter-Intelligence Section did not obtain the document "For Facilitating Passport Examination" for the Warren Commission.

THE HSCA'S EXPLANATION

The Final Report of the HSCA contained a segment, "OSWALD'S Ability to Obtain a Visa in Two Days." The HSCA:

In an effort to resolve this issue the Committee reviewed classified information pertaining to Gregory Golub. Two American Embassy dispatches concerning Golub were of particular significance with regard to the time necessary for issuance of Soviet visas to Americans. The first dispatch recorded that Golub disclosed during a luncheon conversation that, 'Moscow had given him the authority to give Americans visas without Moscow's prior approval. He stated that this would make his job much easier, and as long as he was convinced the American was 'all right' he could give him a visa in a matter of minutes.'

The second dispatch was dated Friday October 9, 1959, one day before OSWALD'S arrival in Helsinki. (Later in this section of the HSCA Report the same dispatch was dated "approximately one month prior to OSWALD'S appearance at the Soviet Embassy" or September 12, 1959.) The dispatch:

Since that evening [September 4, 1959] Golub has phoned [the U.S. Consul American Embassy, Helsinki] once and this was on a business matter. Two Americans were in the Soviet Consulate at the time and were applying for Soviet visas through Golub. They had previously been in the American consulate inquiring about the possibility of obtaining a Soviet visa in one or two days. [The U.S. Consul] advised them to go directly to Golub and make their request, which they did. Golub phoned [the U.S. Consul] to say that he would give them their visas when they made advance Intourist reservations. When they did this Golub immediately gave them their visas.

Because Golub was a happy time party cat and a KGB agent working for CIA the HSCA mistakenly concluded:

...that the available evidence tends to support the conclusion that the issuance of OSWALD'S tourist visa within two days after his appearance at the Soviet Consulate was not indicative of an American intelligence agency connection. If anything, OSWALD'S ability to receive a Soviet entry visa so quickly was more indicative of a Soviet interest in him.

The CIA agreed that the rapidity with which OSWALD obtained his visa and the fact it was issued by Gregory Yeugenyvich Golub indicated: "KGB knowledge or interest in OSWALD stems from at least as far back as his visa application in Helsinki in October 1959." Another CIA Staff Member felt the same: "The KGB would certainly not go out of its way to label its agents as such (which is what the material tends to do), and it would not believe us so naive as to accept the stories and documents as they stand."

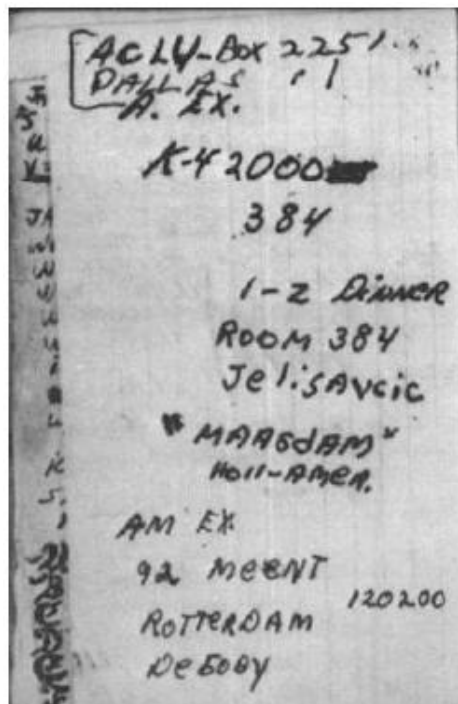

American vice consul William Costille, head of OPERATON REDCAP was trying to get Golub to defect. ANGLETON had worked out of Helsinki and was in close touch with the CIA Station there. OSWALD was sent specifically to Helsinki because, from documents such as those noted above, ANGLETON knew that Gregory Yeugenyvich Golub was already a double agent and that OSWALD would have his in no time. OSWALD knew in advance exactly how long it would take him to obtain a visa because he had the best of intelligence sources - JAMES ANGLETON - and this explained Rislakki's document. All he had to tell Golub was one word: "Deboey."

DAVID DEBOEY SAGIER

The OSWALD address book entries "Vera Alizberg, Lyudmilla p" and "American Express, Rotterdam" had the word Savoy next to them. The FBI stated "Savoy" referred to the Hotel Savoy, the former name of the Hotel Berlin. The CIA in a memo to Chief Research Branch /SRS/OS:

2. On page 28 (A2) of OSWALD'S address book there appears the notation which in all probability is several notations:

ACLU - Box 2251
Dallas
A. Ex.
K - 42000
1 - Z Diner
Room 384
Jelsavic
MAASDAM
Holl - Amer.
92 Meent

Debovy or Debooy

2. In the last line the Bureau apparently is not clear as to just what name was written. It shows 'DeBoey or Debooy' [rather than Savoy]. A number of individuals by this name were of interest in the case of David DeBoey Sagier [aka Zagier]. It appears to me that the part of the above notation involving Debovy or Debooy may begin with MASSDAM. [CIA 1298-477 - M.D. Stevens]

A knowledgeable source revealed "David DeBoey Sagier was a CI Staffer who "disappeared." It was unclear if he resigned or retired. David Zagier was born in Poland and recruited by the OSS even though he had been born outside the United States. He had subsequently held Russian and South African citizenship. He came under intense scrutiny by the OSS. [Cloak & gown: scholars in the secret war, 1939-1961 By Robin W. Winks] Zagier was part of Operation 'Stella Polaris.' In September 1944 the Finnish intelligence service was evacuated to Sweden, which was designated Operation 'Stella Polaris'. Newly declassified intelligence documents found at the US National Archives provide insight into the role of the American wartime foreign intelligence service, the Office of Strategic Services (OSS) and its successor, the Strategic Services Unit, in 'Stella Polaris' and its aftermath. The documents reveal that throughout World War II, the OSS secretly obtained sensitive intelligence information concerning America's wartime ally, the Soviet Union, from agents within the Finnish intelligence service. The OSS Stockholm Station purchased Soviet and other foreign government code and cipher materials from the Finns, not realizing until later that the Finns had sold the same material to other states. The Americans responded by recruiting some well-placed agents within the Finnish 'Stella Polaris' organization, who provided detailed information about the intelligence activities of the Finns in Sweden, and the work of Finnish intelligence officers in France after the end of the war. Among the key pieces of intelligence obtained was the fact that the French intelligence service was intercepting American radio traffic. Zagier was the author of this CIA report: "OSS Reports 17 0005685 Rumors Concerning Impending Devaluation of the Finnish Mark July 15, 1946 Special Funds Emerson Bigelow FSRO, David D. Zagier." He was the author of Botchki which was described as "Simultaneously humorous and tragic, this book is a memoir of Jewish shtetl life in Eastern Europe, before World War II, when life was ruled by religion and the Jewish calendar." Golub had worked with Zagier during World War II in Sweden and Finland. When OSWALD dropped the name he got his visa pronto!

OSWALD IN THE USSR: FRIDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1959

OSWALD left Helsinki by train the same day he received his visa and arrived in Moscow on Friday October 16, 1959.

In his Historic Diary OSWALD wrote: "October 16, 1959 Arrive from Helsinki by train; am met by Intourest [Intourist] Repr. and in car to Hotel 'Berlin'. Reges. [Register] as 'student' 5 day Lux. tourist ticket. Meet my Intourist guided Rimma Sherikova. I explain to her I wish to apply for Rus. citizenship. she is flabbergassed but agrees to help. She checks with her boss, main office Intour; then helps me add. A letter to Sup. Soviet asking for citizenship, meanwhile boss telephons passport & visa office and notifies them about me." OSWALD checked into the Hotel Berlin. The CIA reported that the room OSWALD occupied at the Hotel Berlin was equipped with an overhead visor. [CIA 861-374]

RIMMA SHIRAKOVA WAS NOT A KGB AGENT

The Warren Commission stated Rimma Shirakova was a KGB informant. Russian Intelligence Service defector Peter Deryabin stated: "It is an opinion of the undersigned Rima Shirokova is a KGB Second Directorate employee." The KGB Second Chief Directorate handled counter-intelligence matters; The First Chief Directorate handled intelligence. Deryabin was attempting to link OSWALD to the KGB. The FBI commented: "ANGLETON should be advised of the danger of talking to defectors who, for their own purposes, may seek to build up a picture that OSWALD must have been a Soviet intelligence agent under instructions from the Soviets." [FBI Belmont to Sullivan 12.10.63 105-82555-853] There was this early reference:

Shirakova, Rimma *90079
Intourist Guide
*Memo To CI Staff April 10, 1959, p 24.

This document is withheld as of 2010. In 1966 ANGLETON sent the FBI and Secret Service this report on Shirakova:

Shirakova came to the attention of the Soviet [this word was deleted in the 1993 version of this report] authorities when she befriended two British brothers who first visited the Soviet Union in 1960. She and a male guide joined the party with which the brothers were traveling at the Russian border. One of the brothers had pursued the friendship more than the other and claims that his relations with her have become affectionate but platonic. In fact, since he first met her, she was married and had a child. They have maintained a steady correspondence and he visits their home when he goes to the Soviet Union.

3. After the birth of their daughter in October 1963, Shirakova wrote and said that she had left Intourist and was employed as a teacher of English in a Moscow teacher's training college.

Another CIA document reported:

Source: (Deleted) (Georges Albert Vandekerkhove, Belgian tour bus driver, born 1931). His first trip to USSR was May 28, 1961, and he made seven trips that season, each 14 days. He made only one trip in 1962, having switched to another firm. Unknown how many he made in 1963, but on the final one he was picked up for black marketing in Minsk. Let off easy after a few hours, but doesn't want to go back.

Claims Rima (Inu) was his only Soviet contact on all those trips. She regularly boarded bus at border and traveled with tour. Spoke English and good German. Purely platonic relationship with source, he says. During one trip, while in Moscow, she invited him to her home once. He was received nicely by her and her mother in their one room apartment. She asked why he didn't invite her to come see him in Belgium, to which he replied that there would be difficulties because of his being married.

Rimma "came to the attention of Soviet authorities" and was not a KGB agent. In fact the CIA considered recruiting her in 1959. On Friday, October 16, 1959, after having spent less than one day in the USSR, OSWALD told Rimma Shirakova he wanted to become a citizen. Although he said he was planning to defect for two years, he did not delay his defection for one day to see what Soviet Communism was really about. Richard E. Snyder of the American Embassy, Moscow, stated, "It's typical of those who had come to the Soviet Union during the time I was there to state their intention to stay in the Soviet Union when they simply did not know what it was about. This was one of the meanest dictatorships on the face of the earth. It oppressed its own people and was a danger to the outside world. It's a society no Westerner can imagine unless he has lived there. You have to be either pretty naive or emotionally a little bit doubtful to choose that, of all places, if you are looking for the grander life."

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 17, 1959

OSWALD:

Saturday October 17, 1959 - Rimma meets me for Intourist sightseeing says we must continue with this although I am too nervous she is "sure" I'll have an answer soon. Asks me about myself and my reasons for doing this. I explain I am communist ect. She is politically sym. but uneasy now. She tries to be a friend to me. She feels sorry for me I am something new.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 18, 1959

My 20th birthday, we visit exhibit in morning and in the afternoon The Lenin-Stalin tomb. She gave me a present. Book "Idiot" by Dostoevski." Rimma Shirakova told Norman Mailer that on Sunday, October 18, 1959, "he was saying maybe he could tell them some secret things. He had served in the armed forces and had something to tell. Rimma went to her boss and told her that OSWALD was now prepared to offer matters of interest. He knew about airplanes; he mentioned something about devices." She said her boss told her to go on another tour with him.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 19, 1959

Monday October 19, 1959. Tourism. Am anxious since my visa is good for five days only and still no word from auth. about my request.

On Monday, October 19, 1959, OSWALD was interviewed by Radio Moscow. OSWALD made no mention of this interview in his Historic Diary.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1959

Tuesday October 20, 1959. Rimmer in the afternoon says Intourist was notified by the pass. & visa dept. that they want to see me. I am excited greatly by this news.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1959

Wednesday October 21, 1959. (mor.) Meeting with single official, balding, stout, black suit, fairly good English, asks me what do I want?, I say Sovite citizenship, he ask why I give vague ansewers about "Great Soviet Union" He tells me USSR only great in literature wants me to go back home. I am stunned I reiterate, he says he shall check and let me know weather my visa will be (extended it expiriers today).

Eve. 6:00 p.m. Recive word from police official. I must leave country tonight at 8:00 p.m. as visa expirs. I am shocked!! My dreams! I retire to my room. I have $100. left. I have waited for 2 year to be accepted. My fondes dreams are shattered because of petty officil; because of bad planning, I planned so much.

Former KGBnik Oleg Nechiporenko wrote that on Tuesday, October 20, 1959, (OSWALD claimed the date was Wednesday, October 21, 1959) OSWALD was interviewed at OVIR by Abram Shaknazarov. Oleg Nechiporenko reprinted a translation of a KGB document detailing this meeting. No mention of OSWALD'S service at Atsugi was made.

THE "SUICIDE ATTEMPT"

Wednesday October 21, 1959 7:00 p.m. I decide to end it. Soak rist in cold water to numb pain. Than slash my left writst. Then plang wrist into a bathtub of hot water. I think "when Rimma comes at 8:00 p.m. to find me deade, it will be a great shock. Somewhere, a vilin plays, as I watch my life whirl away. I think to myself. "how easy to die" and "a sweet death, (to violins) about 8:00 p.m. Rimma finds me unconscious (bathtub water a rich red color). She screams (I remember that) and runs for help. Amulance comes am taken to hospital, where five stitches are put in my wrist. Poor Rimmea stays by my side as interrparator (my Russian is still very bad) far into the night, I tell "go home" (my mood is bad) but she stays, she is "my friend". She has a strong will only at this moment I notice she is pretty.

Rosa Agafonova, [Rosa Grigorievna Agafonova, Otkrytoe Shosse, 25 Building 14, Apartment 35, Moscow, Russia, tel. (095) 167-1362] who ran the Intourist Office at the Hotel Berlin, told a television documentary crew [Wronski, Peter & Smale, Joanne Productions, 686 Richmond Street West, Toronto, Ontario, Canada M6J 1C3 416-363-4051; Third Decade 5.92] that on Wednesday, October 21, 1959, she ordered a car to take OSWALD to the OVIR office at 2:45 p.m. He never appeared. The hospital records indicated: "Medical records of Botkinskaya Hospital in Moscow indicate that at approximately 3:00 p.m. in the afternoon of Wednesday, October 21, 1959, OSWALD had slashed one of his wrists, 'not down to the tendons.'" OSWALD was admitted to Botkin at 4:00 p.m. The cut was one inch long and treatment consisted of four stitches and a bandage. No blood transfusion was needed and OSWALD was lucid throughout the operation. OSWALD told a psychiatrist that he regretted his action and "after recovery he intends to return to his homeland." [Soviet Medical Records]

Oleg Nechiporenko cited a KGB document that stated that on Wednesday, October 21, 1959, the KGB asked Intourist to put OSWALD on a train to Helsinki and at 12:00 p.m. the hotel informed OSWALD he had to be out by 3:00 p.m. When OSWALD did not appear at 3:00 p.m. Shirakova went to his room. Finding the door locked, she called the management who opened it with a passkey. Rimma told Norman Mailer she went up to the room at 2:30 p.m.

Although OSWALD told Rimma he was going to give information to the KGB, he did not do it at this point. The KGB looked at OSWALD, was unimpressed, and wanted to get rid of him. There was no need for OSWALD and he might have been a spy. The Soviet determined that like anyone else, he would have to apply for a residence visa at a Soviet Embassy outside the USSR. OSWALD'S suicide attempt was a clever move to forestall this. OSWALD had no intention of killing himself. OSWALD'S chronology had him receiving word from a police official at 6:00 p.m. that he had until 8:00 p.m. to leave the country, so he slashed his wrist at 7:00 p.m. allowing himself an entire hour to bleed to death before Rimma Shirakova (and the police) were scheduled to arrive at 8:00 p.m. OSWALD would have bled to death if he cut himself at the time he said he did. Since OSWALD lied about the time of day Rimma Shirakova showed up, he was also lying about the time of day he cut his wrist, and could have cut it at 2:55 p.m. just before Rimma came to his room. No matter, it took guts to slit one's own wrists. OSWALD'S "suicide attempt" could have caused him to die accidentally. OSWALD could have been committed indefinitely to a Soviet mental hospital. OSWALD was not afraid to die or go to prison.

Rimma Shirakova might have been made aware of the suicide attempt before it happened so she would be sure to discover the catastrophe before he bled to death, then take him to a hospital. But why would Rimma Shirakova, who was close to the KGB, play along? Rimma Shirakova was known to have sexual relations with tourists. OSWALD was one of them and she fell in love with him. As of 1993, Shirakova was in Russia. She said she had neither KGB nor CIA intelligence connections and that OSWALD'S suicide attempt was real and she did not help stage it. [Interview with W.S. Malone 5.12.93] OSWALD'S doctor reported that while he was being stitched, he threatened to attempt suicide again if he were not allowed to remain in the Soviet Union. OSWALD was put under immediate psychiatric observation. OSWALD'S hospital records recorded he was visited by the head of the Service Bureau, and daily by an interpreter. OSWALD had the Service Bureau's telephone number, K-4-19-80, in his address book. Hospital records described OSWALD as a Radio (Radar?) technician. Service Bureaus are usually staffed by Intourist personnel. OSWALD was questioned by the Soviet authorities at Botkinskaya Hospital. They wanted to determine if he was deliberately trying to embarrass the Soviet Union. OSWALD was taking a big risk checking into the bin in the Soviet Union because it might mean he would never get out.

Hospital. I am in a small room with about 12 others (sick persons.) 2 ordalies and a nurse. The room is very drab as well as the breakfast. Only after prolonged (2 hours) observation of the other pat. do I realize I am in the insanity ward. This realization disquiets [disquiets] me. Later in the afternoon I am visited by Rimma, she come in with two doctors. As entered she must ask me medical question; Did you know what you were doing? Ans. yes. Did you black out? No. ect. I than comp. about poor food. The doctors laugh. App. this is a good sign. Later they leave. I am alone with Rimma (amongst the mentally ill). She encourgest me and scolds me. She says she will get me transfered to another section of hos. (not for insane) where food is good.

THE ELDERLY AMERICAN: FRIDAY, OCTOBER 23, 1959

On Friday, October 23, 1959, the doctors at Botkinskaya, having noticed no psychotic symptoms, transferred OSWALD out of the mental ward but kept him hospitalized.

Transfered to ordinary ward, (airy, good food) But nurses suspicus of me. (They know). Afternoon I am visited by Rosa Abafonova of the Hotel tourist office, who asks about my health, very beautiful, excelant Eng. very merry and kind, she makes me very glad to be alive. Later Rimma visits. October 26, 1959 Hospital routine, Rimma vists me in afternoon. October 27, 1959 [Ditto].

THE ELDERLY AMERICAN: MONDAY, OCTOBER 26, 1959

Three days later, according to his Historic Diary:

An elderly American at the hospital grow suspicious about me for some reason. perhaps because at embassy I told him I had not registered as most tourists and I am in general evasive about my presence in Moscow and at hospital. Afternoon Rimma visit.

Most American tourists registered with their Embassy upon arrival in Moscow. OSWALD, however, did not. In fact, according to the same Historic Diary, he did not visit the American Embassy until Saturday, October 31, 1959, when he went there to renounce his citizenship. In an early draft of its chronology of OSWALD in the USSR, the CIA reported: "An unidentified 'elderly American' at the hospital became suspicious of OSWALD because ~~when they had met at the American Embassy...~~" Another CIA document surmised: "OSWALD apparently made no bones about his anti-American feelings during his first weeks in Moscow. Therefore his mysterious and secretive behavior toward the alleged American in the Moscow hospital may have had other causes." Richard Snyder believed:

It seems to me that he has simply juxtaposed the 'at Embassy' meaning 'I am not registered at Embassy.' Not, 'at Embassy I am not registered.' That's what strikes me. What he is saying is "I did not register at the Embassy, not 'At the Embassy, I did not register.' That seems to me a more logical explanation. Whether this has anything to do with his dyslexia, I don't know. Whether dyslexia operates that way or only on a one word basis, I can't say. He didn't appear in my office.

Oleg Nechiporenko reported: "There was one other American in Ward No. 7 who was often visited by his friend, an employee of the American Embassy. The latter used to ask OSWALD if he had registered with the Embassy and what happened to him...On that same day someone called from the Embassy and asked when he would be released." [Passport to Assassination p36] Could OSWALD have made a secret trip to the American Embassy? Did ANGLETON arrange a secret meeting between OSWALD and someone in the American Embassy, Moscow, to ensure that OSWALD was convinced that he worked for the CIA? Or did ANGLETON feel that any contact with OSWALD was too risky? Was Richard E. Snyder right and OSWALD had transposed the sentences? The CIA reported:

There are no legal restrictions against persons, including Soviet citizens, entering the American Embassy in Moscow; in fact, the Soviet Government guarantees the principle of unhindered access to the Embassy. In practice, however, the Embassy perimeter is covered physically by uniformed militia (Civil Police) personnel. These 'Militia Men' are actually personnel of the Committee for State Security (KGB). Anyone who is not readily identifiable as a foreigner and who has not had his visit announced in advance, is stopped and asked for his name and documents and business with the Embassy. Any Soviet citizen who does not have legitimate business with the Embassy is taken away for interrogation. Should someone force or bluff his way into the Embassy, he would be picked up when he departed. Such measures are taken, according to Soviet explanation, to protect the Embassy from intrusion by 'hooligans' and other undesirable elements. OSWALD might well be stopped by the militia at the gate...

OSWALD was readily identifiable as a foreigner and could have slipped in but then again, he might have been observed by the KGB. The American Embassy was the last place OSWALD would have gone to after he arrived in Moscow. OSWALD was contacted in Helsinki, not in Moscow. Snyder was correct. This was another example of OSWALD'S stupidity.

WALDEMAR BORIS KARAPATNITSKY

What was interesting about the elderly American episode was how the Warren Commission attempted to cover it up. In August 1964, a month before the Warren Report went to press, the Warren Commission wanted to find out the name of the man who spoke with OSWALD at the hospital, and it requested that the State Department check the records of the American Embassy, Moscow, to see if any elderly Americans were hospitalized at Botkinskaya in 1959. The State Department received this reply: "Embassy has no files on names for any other American visitors in Moscow, October 1959. Registration and medical files not retained." Ambassador Kohler sent the Secretary of State this cable: "No 1959 records or 1959 staff here now." On August 12, 1964, the CIA reported:

American citizen Waldemar Boris Karapatnitsky last known address West Berlin, visited relatives USSR 1959, and believed hospitalized Botkina Hospital Moscow in bed next to OSWALD October 21, 1959, to October 28, 1959. Subject a retired machinery importer-exporter born January 14, 1886, Ukraine...Subject denounced 1950 by neighbor as communist based on conversations between informant and SAC. No further derog. traces.

ANGLETON and Raymond Rocca were already familiar with Boris Karapatnitsky through HT-LINGUAL. From 1958 to 1962, Counter-Intelligence intercepted 15 letters mailed either to the Soviet Union from the United States by Boris Karapatnitsky, or mailed from the Soviet Union and received by him in the United States. [CIA Memo 5.1.64 HT Lingual Items Relating to OSWALD Case] On February 4, 1964, Lee H. Wigren C/SR/CI Research made an inquiry regarding the elderly American. [CIA 523-220] On February 6, 1964, Raymond Rocca drafted a document urging the Warren Commission to resolve the issue of the elderly American. The Routing and Record Sheet of a document that concerned Karapatnitsky contained a message to ANGLETON'S Deputy, Birch D. O'Neal, from Raymond Rocca, urging Birch O'Neal to get the document to the Commission. [CIA 526-223] In Molehunt, David Wise described Birch O'Neal as a Georgian who joined the FBI in 1938 and later switched to the CIA.

CIA historian Thomas Powers noted that Birch O'Neal was Guatemala Chief of Station in 1954. Birch O'Neal was in touch with Ambassador John E. Peurifoy in advance of the CIA-sponsored coup which occurred in Guatemala that year. Birch O'Neal worked with DAVID PHILLIPS in establishing a clandestine radio station there. [Kinzer Bitter Fruit pp. 135, 155; Powers, Thomas The Man Who Kept Secrets p107; O'Neal, Birch telephone 703-923-4497]

Al Wong contacted a friend of Boris Karapatnitsky in New York City .Al Wong was the former Assistant Agent-in-Charge of the United States Secret Service office in New York City. In 1972 Al Wong was the Secret Service official in charge of NIXON'S security during the Republican Convention. He later became the United States Secret Service technical services man at the White House. Al Wong traveled with NIXON to China in 1972. [McCORD Piece of Tape p11]

BORIS KARAPATNITSKY IS INTERVIEWED

Warren Commission General Counsel J. Lee Rankin wrote, "This request is of the utmost urgency. The CIA has been consulted and has agreed to offer every assistance through its West Berlin representatives." The CIA was reluctant to take the testimony of Boris Karapatnitsky because of "complications that would later arise," and discussed the problem with David Slawson. David Slawson told the CIA he would get the State Department to take Boris Karapatnitsky's statement. The State Department reported:

A Mission Officer called on Boris Karapatnitsky on August 14, 1964, under pretext of checking residences of older U.S. citizens residing in Berlin. Karapatnitsky said he thought he knew why the officer had come and stated he had intended to visit consular section for advice concerning problem. He described problem as follows: He had been informed by a friend in New York that a Secret Service agent, representing the Warren Commission, had inquired about him asking Kara had been in USSR certain time and if he had known OSWALD. Showed Consular Officer letter from friend dated August 10, 1964, surmising that Sovs had furnished names of all patients in hospital at time of OSWALD'S hospitalization and that he had been traced from there. Kara said he had never heard of OSWALD until after assassination of President Kennedy. He volunteered there had been only one American in Karapatnitsky's room in hospital but he was 69 year old industrialist. In response to repeated he had heard nothing about OSWALD in the USSR and could recall no reason to believe their paths have crossed. [CIA 794-871; DOS interview with Kara]

The Warren Commission could not locate the industrialist mentioned by Karapatnitsky. The former Ambassador to the USSR, Alexis Thompson, was asked during his Warren Commission testimony whether he was familiar with Mr. William Edgerton Morehouse, Jr., (born May 11, 1928) who had been in Botkinskaya Hospital in October 1959 after an auto accident. He responded he was not. CI/SIG had submitted the name of an American Communist named Golden as a candidate: "Golden had been hospitalized in the Botkina Hospital in late 1959. Golden was about 60 and may be the elderly American. In passing, Ann Egerter said that CI/SIG had queried State about the 'elderly American' and she heard that a negative reply had been received, although no one seems to be able to find the reply at present." Raymond Rocca discovered Golden was at Botkin in 1958. [CIA MFR 3.17.64; NARA 1993.06.19.09:02:57:810000]

CAMPAIGN TO CONVINCING BORIS K. HE WAS ELDERLY AMERICAN

In August 1964 David Slawson wrote:

Yesterday, Mr. Rocca told me that the CIA had information that Karapatnitsky had once, on an ocean liner, approached a Soviet delegation and asked assistance in locating his brother...he must be worried about his brother and might fear that anything he did which might displease the Soviet Government might result in his brother being harmed. In order that Mr. Karapatnitsky will not be afraid to tell the truth, perhaps he should be informed that the Soviets have officially told the American Government that OSWALD was in fact in this hospital and that therefore, if he saw OSWALD, his testimony will be confirming the truth of what the Soviets had told the Americans and will be welcomed by the Soviets. Obviously, this information must be imparted to Mr. Karapatnitsky carefully, so as not to influence him in the other direction, that is, to say he saw OSWALD when in fact he did not. [WC Memo Slawson to Rocca and Bagley 8.12.64; CIA 797-872]

David Slawson requested he have Secret Service Agent Al Wong remind the elderly American of the "Intourist Guide and her allegedly frequent visits to the Subject. This might be a fact that would juggle Mr. Karapatnitsky's memory." This activity still didn't "juggle" Karapatnitsky's memory and he refused to play the role of the elderly American for the Warren Commission. Karapatnitsky was, at 75, the ancient American. Nor was he easily identified as an American - he had a thick Russian accent.

OSWALD RELEASED: WEDNESDAY OCTOBER 28, 1959

October 27, 1959. Stiches are taken out by doctor with "dull" scissor.
October 28, 1959. Leave hospital in Inturist car with Rimma for Hotel "Berlin." Later I change hotels to "Metropole", all cloths packed, and money from my room (to the last kopeek) returned as well as watch, ring. Ludmilla Dimitrova (Inturist Office Head) and Rosa invite me to come and shit and take with them any time. I get lonesome at new hotel. They feel sorry for me.

According to document reproductions provided to the United States Government by the Soviets, OSWALD was discharged from Botkinskaya Hospital on Wednesday October 28, 1959. It was noted by the CIA that "the interpreter that was with him every day [Shirakova] was informed ahead of time." [CIA 285] Upon his discharge from Botkinskaya OSWALD was moved to room 233 of the Hotel Metropole. The CIA reported that this room was equipped with an infra-red camera for observation of its occupants. In KGB, John Barron wrote: "If the KGB, for any reason, has other than a routine interest in a foreigner, the surveillance is much more elaborate...his hotel room contains not only standard microphones and television cameras, but also infrared cameras that can record the Subject's actions in the dark." [Barron KGB Readers Digest Press NY 1974; CIA 861-374]

Rimma notifies me that pass. & registration office wishes to see me about my future. Later Rimma and car pick me up and we enter the officies to find about four offials waiting for me (all unknown to me). They ask me how my arm is, I say O.K. They ask "Do you want to go to your homeland. I say no I want Sovite citizen. I say I want to reside in the Soviet Union. They say they will see about that. Than they ask me about the lone offial with whom I spoke in the first place (appar. he did not pass along my request at all but thought to simply get rid of me by not extending my Soviet visa. At the time I requested it) I desqribe him (they make notes.) (What papers do you have to show who and what you are? I give them my dischare papers from the Marine Corps. They say wait for our ans., I ask how long? Not soon. Later Rimma come to check on me. I feel insulted and insult her.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs intervened on behalf of OSWALD, thus on the same day he was released from Botkinskaya, he was again summoned to the OVIR office. According to his Historic Diary, when OSWALD appeared there he was asked whether he still wanted to become a Soviet citizen and he replied that he did. He was apprised that he could not expect a decision soon and was dismissed. That evening he met with Rimma.

OSWALD reflected in the journal that he remained in his hotel room sitting by the telephone for three days: "Thursday October 29, 1959. Hotel room. I have been in hotel three days, it seems like three years. I must have some sort of showdown."

DISSOLVES U.S. CITIZENSHIP: SATURDAY, OCTOBER 31, 1959

Richard Snyder reported:

Oswald stated he was discharged from the U.S. Marine Corps on September 11, 1959. Highest grade achieved was corporal. Oswald evidently applied for his passport to the Agency at San Francisco while still in the service. He stated that he had contemplated the action which he took for about two years before his discharge. He departed from the United States through New Orleans with the intent of traveling to the Soviet Union through Northern Europe. He states that he first applied for a Soviet Tourist Visa in Helsinki on October 14 and that he applied for Soviet citizenship by letter to the Supreme Soviet on October 16 in Moscow. He stated that he did not mention his intent to remain in the Soviet Union to the Soviet Embassy in Helsinki at the time of his time application.

Throughout the interview Oswald's manner was aggressive, arrogant and uncooperative. He appeared to be competent. He insisted that he did not wish to waste time in discussion or answering questions concerning his personal affairs beyond what was directly related to divesting himself of his American citizenship. He was contemptuous of any efforts by the interviewing officer in his interest, made clear that he wanted no advice from the Embassy. He stated that he knew the provisions of U. S. law on loss of citizenship and declined have them reviewed by the interviewing officer. In short he displayed all the airs of a new sophomore party-liner. Oswald gave as the "principal reason" for his decision that "I am a Marxist" but declined any further elaboration of his motives. However, other remarks bearing on his attitude were made during the interview. At one point he alluded to hardships endured by his mother as a worker and stated that he did not intend to have this happen to him. He also referred to himself several times as worker, but admitted that he had never held a civilian job, having entered the Marine Corps directly from his junior year of high school. (He claimed to have completed high school while in service.) He stated that his service in Okinawa and elsewhere gave me a chance to observe American imperialism. At another point he reacted sensitively when asked, in connection with his rank in the Marine Corps, whether he felt he should have had a higher grade.

Oswald categorically refused to discuss his family beyond stating that he was not married and that he has a mother in Texas. He had obliterated the address written on the inside cover of his passport and steadfastly refused to give any last home address until items elicited try the threat that nothing could be done about his request to renounce his citizenship without this information. After giving the address noted above, he then confirmed that it was his mother's address. He would not say whether he had informed his mother and rebuffed any suggestion of concern for her.

Oswald offered the information that he had been a radar operator in the Marine Corps and that had voluntarily stated to unnamed Soviet officials that as a Soviet citizen he would make known to them such information concerning the Marine Corps and his specialty he possessed. He intimated that he might know something or special interest.

Oswald is presently residing in non-tourist status at the Metropole Hotel in Moscow awaiting the Soviet response to his application for citizenship. As his Soviet visa and alien registration expired on October 22, 1959, and have not been renewed, he is patently in a technically illegal residence status with the tacit consent of the Soviet authorities.

OSWALD told Richard E. Snyder that he had been planning to defect for two years. If OSWALD harbored anti-American feelings while he was in the Marines, perhaps he had deliberately obtained information that would be of value to the enemies of America? OSWALD was one of the phoniest Marxists there was – he joined the elite fighting force of Capitalism, the Marines, he never worked a day in his life, His only bona fides is that he was willing to become a traitor. But what is amazing here is that OSWALD was virtually announcing that he was in the Soviet Union to do the U-2 Dump. On Saturday, October 31, 1959, OSWALD met with Rimma Shirakova, after which he took a taxi to the American Embassy. OSWALD:

I make my dision. Getting passport at 12:00 I meet and talk with Rimma for a few minutes she says: stay in your room and eat well, I don't tell about what I intend to do because I know she would not approve. After she leaves I wait a few minutes and than I catch a taxi. "American Embassy" I say. 12:30 p.m. Arrive in "Bolga" type taxi. Two Russian policemen stand at the Embassy. One salutes as I approach entrane of the embassy and says "passport". I smile and show my passport. He motions me to pass inside as I wish. I walk in and say to the receptionist "I would like to see the consular". She points to a large lager and says "If you are a tourist please register."

Richard E. Snyder reported:

Any American could enter the Embassy there with no trouble at all. I think he arrived on Saturday morning when the Embassy was still opened. We were opened six days. Half a day on Monday and half a day on Saturday. The receptionist was there when he came in, so the Embassy was open. The guys outside the Embassy are KGB and their job was to keep anyone from entering the Embassy who they don't think belongs there. Namely Soviet citizens. They were pretty rough in carrying out their duties. They just dragged people away from the door physically. If you looked like an American, American shoes and what have you, and there was no indication you spoke Russian, they would let you go in. This was constantly a source of friction between us and the Soviet authorities. The Soviet line was the men are there only to protect foreign embassies.

OSWALD:

Entering I find the office of the "Consular" side. Opening the door I go in. A secretary busy typing looks up. "Yes"? she says "I'd like to see the consular." I say. Will you sign the tourist registrar please" she says dryly, going back to her typing. I take out my American passport and lay it on the desk. I have come to dissolve my American citizenship I say matter-of-factly she rises and entered the offices of Richard Snyder American Head Consular in Moscow at that time. And taking my passport goes into the open inter [interior] office, where she lays the passport on a mans desk, saying "There is a Mr. OSWALD outside, who says he's here to dissolve his U.S. citizenship. "O.K." the man says, "Thanks" He says to the girl without looking up from his typing. She, as she comes out, invites me into the inter office to sit down. I do selecting an armchair to the front left side of Snyder's desk (it was Snyder whom I talked too Head Consular). I wait, crossing my legs and laying my gloves in my lap. He finishes typing. Removes the letter from his typewriter and adjusting his glasses looks at me. "What can I do for you he asks" leafing through my passport. "I'm here to dissolve my U.S. citizenship and would like to sign the legle papers to that effect." Have you applied for Russian citizenship? Yes...He asks name, personal information to which I answer than: "Your reasons for coming." I say I have experienced life in the U.S. American military life, "American imperialism, I am a Marxist, and I've waited two years for this I don't want to live in the U.S. or be burtained [burdened] by American citizenship. He says O.K. Thats all unless you want to profound [propound] your "Marxist belifes" you can go. I said "I've requested that I be allowed to sign legal papers devasting [divesting] myself of U.S. citizen. Do you refuse me that right"? He says Uhg. No, but the papers will take some time to get ready. In the meantime where are you staying. "Room 212 at the Metropole". I state, angry at being refused a right. I started to leave "You'll tell us what the Russ. do next". I turn very mad "of course" I say and leave."

THE HANDWRITTEN NOTE

I LEE HARVEY OSWALD do hereby request that my present citizenship in the United States of america, be revoked. I have entered the Soviet Union for the express purpose of applying for citizenship in the Soviet Union, through the means of naturalization. My request for citizenship is now pending before the Supreme Soviet of the USSR. I take these steps for political reasons. My request for the revoking of my American citizenship is made only after the longest and most serious consideration. I affirm that my allegiance is to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Richard E. Snyder was questioned about this by the HSCA: "He handed me a handwritten statement which stated, in effect, that he renounced his American citizenship. I used the pretext that the Embassy was not officially open that day, and, therefore I was not in the position to prepare the required form to go through with the renunciation and invited him to come back on the Embassy's next business day if he so wished. I retained his passport at that time." Richard E. Snyder explained in a telephone interview with this researcher,

This was after my interview of him which took an hour or more. By the time the interview with him was over I told him that the Embassy had closed, and I no longer had a secretary there so I wasn't in a position to take his declaration. He came about noon, just before the receptionist left. When the interview was over, I used the subterfuge that the Embassy closed. Actually, I could have typed out the thing myself but I wanted to make him leave and think it over and perhaps he'd change his mind. Understand, when you're in my job you are used to the peculiarities of human beings, the dumb and sometimes inexorable things that they do, in a sense, you save them from their own follies, if you can. That was the attitude I took toward OSWALD. My job was to give aid and comfort to American citizens wherever they needed it. The guy needed some assistance from keeping him from doing something dumb.

Saturday, October 31, 1959. (con.) warns me not to take any steps before the Soviets except me, says I am a "fool" and says the dissolution papers are a long time in preparing (in other words he refuses to allow me at that time to dissolve U.S. citiz. I state "My mind is make up" from this day forward I consider myself no citizen of the U.S.A. I spend 40 minutes at the embassy before Snyder says "Now unless you wish to expound on your Marxist beliefs you can go. I wish to dissolve U.S. citiz., not today he says in effect. I leave embassy elated at this showdown, returning to my hotel I feel now my energies are not spent in vain. I'm sure. Russians will except me after this sign of faith in them. 2:00 p.m. a knock. A reporter by the name of Goldstene wants an interview. I'm flabber-gassed "How did you find out? The embassy called us." He said. I send him away. I sit and realize this is one was to put pressure on me. By notifying my relations in the U.S. through the newspapers. Although they would say "Its for the public record." A half hour later another reporter.

OSWALD USED MARXIST CLICHÉS - RICHARD E. SNYDER

In 1963 Richard E. Snyder recalled,

"Source of his "Marxism," I believe he attributed to "SONU books" and other materials he had while in the Marine Corps and possibly before. OSWALD stated his eyes had been opened to the way American oppresses and colonizes foreign peoples from observing our actions in Okinawa. He referred throughout in condemnatory and contemptuous tones to his own country and laudatory to the Soviet Union. I called strong impression he used simple Marxist stereotypes without sophistication or independent formulation. He referred, I believe, to earlier poverty and a hard life of mother as partial rationale for attitudes.

Snyder also stated "OSWALD stated his desire to conclude the matter quickly, that he had been forewarned I would try to talk him out of the decision...." [WCE 909]

OSWALD'S SUSPICIOUS MARXISM - JOHN MCVICKAR

Foreign Service Officer John A. McVickar, who shared an office with Snyder, overheard their conversation:

OSWALD was extremely arrogant, truculent and unfriendly to America and Americans in general. He wanted to divest himself of his citizenship for with. His reasons were not too clear, but he gave the impression about being very angry about some thing that happened to him during his Marine Corps duty. He said, however, that he was a 'Marxist' and that he had become disgusted with American 'imperialism' as he had observed it in operation in the Far East while in the Marines. He gave evidence of some education in the rudiments of Communist dogma and he apparently had some knowledge of the legalities involved in renunciation of citizenship. He also did state that while in the Marines he had worked with radar and that he would turn over everything he knew about it to the Soviet authorities. In the minds of those concerned at the time, this statement tended to extinguish any sympathy one may have felt for a confused and unhappy young man.

I recall thinking at the time that OSWALD was behaving with a great deal of determination and purpose for such a young and relatively uneducated person. On the other hand, there also seemed to me to be the possibility that he was following a pattern of behavior in which he had been tutored by person or persons unknown. For example, in discussing Marxism and the legalities of renunciation, he seemed to be using words which he had learned but he did not fully understand. His determined statements in rather long words were not entirely consistent and not in a fully logical sequence. I am sorry that I do not remember examples but only this impression. Of course, this could have been because he had merely studied books himself without fully understanding what they meant or it seemed that it could also have been that he had been taught to say things that he really didn't understand. In short it seemed to me that there was a possibility that he had been in contact with others before or during his Marine Corps tour who had guided him and encouraged him in his actions." [DOS Ex. 14a (File 294g) ]McVickar was asked to elaborate: "He would have to have known the not too obvious fact that Helsinki is a usual and relatively uncomplicated point of entry to the Soviet Union (one that the Soviets might well choose for example if arranging the passage themselves). OSWALD evidently knew something for the procedure for renunciation of citizenship when he came into the office...At the time, OSWALD seemed surprisingly confident, competent and determined about what he was doing, considering his age and experience. [DOS Memo McVickar to Ehrlich 11.27.63, 4.7.64; NARA 1993.06.22. 16:18:44:370240]

OSWALD'S MARXISM SUPERFICIAL - PRISCILLA JOHNSON

On November 17, 1959, journalist Priscilla Johnson told McVickar about an interview she had conducted with OSWALD: "Her general impression of OSWALD was the same as ours has been. His naivete about what he could expect here is balanced by a rather carefully worked out set of answers and a careful reserve about saying things he feels he shouldn't. He made one interesting comment to her to the effect that he had never in all his life talked to anyone so long (two hours) about himself. She remarked that although he used long words and seemed in some ways well read, he often used words incorrectly, as though he had learned them from a dictionary." On another occasion Johnson reported: "He really couldn't carry on a conversation about Marxism. Not that I particularly could either. I tried to engage him. He didn't know anything in depth. He used words that were too big for him. He reversed consonants. He was dyslexic." Priscilla Johnson told Richard Snyder: "During the conversation, Priscilla Johnson mentioned in passing having interviewed LEE HARVEY OSWALD in Moscow. She said she had had a long talk with him during which it became evident that he had very confused ideas, of economics in particular. He seemed to blame a lot of in America on the economic system without having any real idea of what the system was all about." [NARA 1993-05019-13.59.10.000058]

ALINE MOSBY: OSWALD WAS A "PARLOR PINK"

In 1978 the HSCA interviewed Aline Mosby, who, like Priscilla Johnson had interviewed OSWALD in late 1959: "OSWALD was strictly from the boonies. I was prepared for a more sophisticated person. His knowledge of communism was shallow. In America he would be called a 'parlor pink.' She questioned him about his background and he told her about his early readings e.g. Das Kapital, which influenced him. He also told about the lady who gave him the Rosenberg pamphlets. When OSWALD saw Aline Mosby's article about him, he called her and claimed he was "an ideological defector."

OSWALD OFFERS INFORMATION TO THE SOVIETS

OSWALD omitted this from his Historic Diary: When he spoke to Richard E. Snyder he "offered the information that he had been a radar operator in the Marine Corps and that he had voluntarily stated to unnamed Soviet Officials that as a Soviet citizen he would make known to them such information concerning the Marine Corps and his specialty as he possessed. He intimated he might know something of special interest." Richard Snyder discussed the matter with Edward Freers. On September 8, 1964, Yuri Nosenko stated that the KGB had a microphone in the office of Edward Freers (left). Yuri Nosenko: "He was not considered to be connected with the CIA." The CIA reported: "Edward L. Freers was never an employee of the CIA. He has been an employee of the Department of State since 1941 and has served in various countries. In 1952, while a Peripheral Officer with the State Department in Rome, Office of Policy Coordination, requested liaison clearance on Edward Freers. The clearance was granted in April 1952. The interest was dropped in 1955 and the clearance was canceled. From September to November 1956, International Organizations officials were in official contact with him because of his position at the Department of State. For that purpose IO requested and received liaison clearance from the Office of Security. In addition, the Office of Security file contains the following record of interest and clearance action concerning Freers. April 1957 - SE/PP, April 1958 - OSI, August 1958 - C/PP/LO, August 1959 - C/PP/LO and January 1962 - DPD -DD/P."

MEMORANDUM FOR: Deputy Director of Security (Investigations and Support)

VIA: PP/ICD/Ln- Attn: Mrs. Wambold.

FI/OPS/CCB/OLC-Atten: B. MacDonald

SUBJECT: Edward Louis Freers

1. Under date of September 11, 1956, this division requested a liaison clearance be granted to permit Cord Meyer, Stanley Richardson and Ethel Holton to liaise with SAC on matters of mutual interest.

2. To the list of IO personnel who will meet with SAC, it is requested that W. Koplowitz's name be added. Mr. Koplowitz will meet with SAC to discuss certain matters in connection with PROJECT TPGLARE.

John C. Richards, Chief, Security Officer, International Organizations Division.

Freers was contacted on a continuing basis by Stanley Richardson, Ethel Jill Holton, Wilfred Koplowitz and Cord Meyer. [NARA 1993.08.02.13:37:17:030028]

CORD MEYER

HEMMING: "Meyer was a bitter, one-eyed, asshole. He knew my friend Alex Rorke."

Cord Meyer was born on November 10, 1920. His father was a wealthy Long Island real estate developer turned diplomat. The Meyer family also had sugar interests in Cuba. He attended Yale University, enlisted in the Marines, and lost an eye and a twin brother during World War II. In April 1945 he married Mary Eno Pinchot, a correspondent for the North American Newspaper Alliance. Mary Pinchot was the niece of former Pennsylvania Governor Gifford Pinchot. On December 18, 1956, their eight-year-old son, Michael, was hit by a car on the curve of a highway near their house and killed. [McLean Boy Dies in Dash Across Road The Washington Post and Times Herald Dec 19, 1956. pg. C7, 1 pgs]. The man who was driving the car, Charles L. Booth, was a local interior decorator. The question remains as to why the child was unsupervised when the family dog had been killed two years earlier at the same location. What this indicates is a pattern of irresponsible behavior on the part of Mary Pinchot Meyer. The couple were experiencing marital problems and the death briefly brought them back together. However, in 1958, Mary filed for divorce.

Cord Meyer covered the founding of the United Nations for The Atlantic Monthly. He commented during a telephone interview, "I was Harold Stassen's assistant at the U.N. conference." He became interested in the World Federalist League. In 1951 Allen Dulles hired Cord Meyer and he joined the Office of Policy Coordination. Cord Meyer commented, "I joined the CIA in 1951. There's no such things as the Office of Policy Coordination separate." Cord Meyer was suspended from the CIA during the McCarthy era. Cord Meyer: "I wasn't suspended from the CIA." The FBI had discovered Cord Meyer had been a member of the National Council on the Arts, along with Socialist Norman Thomas and anti-communist liberal Arthur Schlesinger Jr. After these charges were investigated, Cord Meyer took over Thomas Wardell Braden's position as Division Chief of the CIA's International Organization Division. The original purpose of the International Organization Division was to counter the Soviet Union's $250 million annual expenditure in supporting numerous Communist-front organizations. In March 1962 the International Organization Division merged with Plans, and in 1967 Cord Meyer became Deputy Director /Plans. After Watergate he was made London Chief of Station. [Meyer Facing Reality, Harper and Row 1980] Cord Meyer asked, "What did that have to do with Watergate? There's no relationship." Cord Meyer was asked about Freers: "I never heard of him. What the hell is this all about? I don't know what you're doing. I can't help you very much. I don't want to continue this conversation. This is extraordinary. You have everything screwed up. You're relating one thing to another when there's no connection. I'm finished with this, it's just not quite possible. Thank you. Goodbye." [Meyer, Cord telephone 202-785-8205]

LEE HARVEY OSWALD, unmarried, appeared at Embassy today to renounce American citizenship, stated applied in Moscow for Soviet Citizenship...Says action contemplated last two years. Main reason: 'I am Marxist.' Attitude arrogant, aggressive. Recently discharged from Marine Corps. Says has offered Soviets any information he has acquired as an enlisted radar operator." On November 3, 1959 ALUSNA (U.S. Naval Attaché) MOSCOW sent a cable to CNO noting that OSWALD had offered to furnish the Soviets with information he possessed on U.S. radar. This document, only recently released, contained numerous deletions. [FBI 105-82555 NR 11.13.59 Orig. Copy filed in 105-81258]

The group that declassified the document mistakenly left this notation: "Paragraph (deleted) contained Category B encryption. Physically remove prior to declassification." Clearly, OSWALD told Richard E. Snyder he was trying to exchange classified information for Soviet citizenship. By reporting this to Richard E. Snyder, OSWALD was creating his own bona fides. Even if the Soviets did not overhear the OSWALD / Richard E. Snyder conversation on an Embassy bug, all cable traffic went through the Soviet telegraph system. OSWALD, however, did not furnish the Soviets with classified material at this time, he only threatened to do so.

THE CABLE DOES NOT SPARK AND INVESTIGATION BY CI/SIG

ANGLETON received a copy of the cable that mentioned OSWALD'S threat on December 6, 1959. Birch O'Neal's initials appeared on an OSWALD document that was received by the CIA on November 13, 1959. ANGLETON conducted no investigation of OSWALD. Former military intelligence officer John Newman found this suspicious. [OSWALD and the CIA - John Newman - Carroll & Graff - 1995 p37] During a television interview, Priscilla Johnson said that OSWALD had told her he was going to give military information to the Soviets. When questioned about this in 1994 she stated: "I'm not sure if he told me that or told it to Snyder. Check my notes in the Warren Commission Report. If it doesn't say that, than it's not me he said it to. I got confused." Neil Huntley of Soviet Russia Intelligence (SRI) wrote:

There is no doubt that OSWALD was debriefed by the secret police shortly after his arrival in Moscow. They were interested in him not only because he was a political defector, but because he also boasted publicly -- in the Embassy on October 31, 1959 -- that he intended to tell the Soviet "everything he knew" about Marine Corps radar installations on the West Coast. According to OSWALD's former commanding officer, this included the location of all radar units and their secret call signs, authentication codes and radio frequencies -- all of which knowledge was grist for the Soviet intelligence mill...any indication that he had made good on his boast about the radars could easily lead to arrest and indictment on a charge of treason. [CIA 376-154 NARA 1993.07.08.18:14:59:810390]

Richard E. Snyder was born in Passaic, New Jersey, on December 10, 1919. He went to High School in Newark, and attended Rutgers University for a year. He reported for active Army duty in September 1940. Richard E. Snyder was overseas from October 1944 to November 1945, and saw action in France and Germany, later serving with the occupation forces in Germany. He was awarded the Bronze Star, and discharged with the rank of Captain in January 1946. Richard E. Snyder recalled,

I was in the 44th Infantry Division of the New Jersey National Guard. I went to OCS in Texas, and then was assigned to the 100th Infantry Division as a Medic throughout the war. After the war I attended Yale University. I stayed in the Reserves for awhile and I asked for a transfer from the Medics into Military Intelligence, MI, because I studied international relations.

Shortly after having graduated from Yale, Richard E. Snyder entered the CIA. A document, "A Brief History of CIA Interest in Richard E. Snyder/Memorandum for the Chief CI/R&A [Raymond Rocca]," stated: "Snyder applied for CIA employment in June 1949 and submitted a complete PHS form at that time." On July 14, 1949, W.R. Cornelison, Acting Security Officer, Security Branch, Office of Policy Coordination, informed Robert Bannerman that a semi-covert personnel action was being instituted on Richard E. Snyder: "It should be noted from his Personal History Statement that he has several in-law relatives who are presently Italian citizens. It is not believed that these relatives are close enough to the Subject to create a security problem. Therefore, it is requested that you take into consideration the request for a waiver of foreign connections." Two documents about Snyder dated October 17, 1949, was withheld in their entirety [CIA JFK Box No. 46 Folder No.2]

The Brief History of CIA Interest in Richard E. Snyder memorandum continued: "He entered on duty with CIA on November 8, 1949, as a GS-9 ($4600.00 per annum). According to his Personnel file (see tab c) he was assigned to the Office of Policy Coordination and was slated to serve in Tokyo (the file contains no entry showing that he actually served in Tokyo)."

The CIA told the HSCA that Richard E. Snyder's position with the CIA involved

...an accounting project, the purpose of which was to provide funds for administrative purposes. It had a budget of $5,000 and was a 'project for purposes of providing each Program Group, Budgetary Group, and Foreign Branch with an unvouchered funds account against which proper administrative and operational development costs, not properly chargeable to a specific project may be charged.' These charges (which had to be approved in advance) were to include: Staff travel and incidental expenses; travel of interviewees (when authorized); travel compensation per diem of prospective agents and operational contacts; conferences; salaries, per diem and other costs of maintaining casual personnel paid from confidential funds and not assigned to a project." Snyder was paid from unvouchered funds for the entire period of his employment, November 8, 1949, to September 26, 1950.

The Brief History of CIA Interest in Richard E. Snyder/Memorandum continued: "Snyder did, however, serve in Heidelberg, beginning in March 1950. While in Germany he apparently resigned effective September 26, 1950, in order to assume a position with HICOG. There are no further entries in his Personnel file."

The Brief History of CIA Interest in Richard E. Snyder/Memorandum stated he apparently resigned. Did he resign, or didn't he? Richard E. Snyder stated: "The record you have suggests that I went to Heidelberg under CIA auspices. I did not work for the CIA in Heidelberg. I left the CIA in Washington to join the Foreign Service and my first assignment was Heidelberg. I went as a Resident Officer. The occupation was just winding up and the Foreign Service took over the occupation duties from the Army. A number of us were rushed over rather quickly to fill these spots. Under the military occupation, each county or kreiss had a resident military officer who represented the power of the occupation in that county. I took over the kreiss around Heidelberg. I was only there for about three months or so when an appointment came as Munich Vice Consul, which I then took. I was there for two years. The same thing was happening in Japan. The Army was pulling out and turning over to the State Department a number of Information and Educational Libraries, which were then turned into American cultural centers in Japan. I and another group of other SSOs took over these centers. I ran a cultural center in Niigata from 1953 to 1954. I was there for one year when I was transferred to the Tokyo Embassy as a Consular Officer in charge of the Passport and Citizenship Section from 1954 to 1956. I was in Harvard from 1956 to 1957, in the Kennedy School, Russian Studies.

I was only in the CIA while awaiting my appointment. I resigned when it came through. They called me one day while I was working in Washington and said, 'Do you wish to accept your Foreign Service commission?' I left the CIA and was then a genuine Foreign Service Officer for the rest of my career. This keeps reappearing over and over again. You are the first one who checked it with me. Each person writing on the subject simply takes it from somebody else. None of the people who have written books and have me as a CIA agent in Moscow have ever checked it out with me. Edward Epstein wrote a book on the subject and had lunch with me in the tavern here. We talked for two hours or so. When he wrote he said there was evidence I was undercover in Moscow. Epstein did not ask me at the time. If anyone checked with me I would have told them, 'I was not with CIA, I was not undercover.'

A September 27, 1950, letter to Chief, Staff C, from C.V. Broadley Acting Chief, Security Division, stated "This is to report the resignation on or around September 26, 1950, of the SAC person who was employed as an Intelligence Officer in the Office of Policy Coordination. The SAC resigned to accept a position with the Department of State, with which Department he expects an eventual assignment to Germany."

Richard E. Snyder's CIA Office of Security File indicated he resigned from the CIA to become a diplomat. There was no indication of significant CIA-contact after he joined the State Department. The CIA: "There is no record in Mr. Snyder's Official Personnel File that he ever worked, directly or indirectly, in any capacity for the CIA after his resignation on September 26, 1950." The Brief History of CIA Interest in Richard E. Snyder/Memorandum stated: "The SR Division had an unofficial file on him (see tab d). That file shows Nelson Brickham, an SR Division staff employee, was in contact with Snyder for about one year (1956 to 1957). Brickham used Snyder as a spotter at Harvard where Snyder was studying Russian and had access to other students who might be going to the USSR. There is no record of POA, OA or CSA action in that connection. There was a record of CI/OA interest in Richard E. Snyder at this time." On September 19, 1956, a request for a document was submitted to R&I/Files. A notation in red by R&I/Files indicated that the document had to be cleared for access and review by the restricting desk (CI/OA). [CIA FOIA 04187] Nelson H. Brickham Jr. was in the SR Division from 1955 to 1958, Iran from 1960 to 1964, and Vietnam from 1965 to 1967, where he worked in the OPERATION PHOENIX assassination program with John L. Hart. The HSCA:

Richard E. Snyder's 201 file indicated that for approximately one year during 1956 to 1957 he had been used by an Agency case officer as a spotter at a university campus because of his access to others who might be going to the Soviet Union...Snyder testified that since resigning from the CIA in March 1950, he had no CIA contact other than a letter written in 1970 or 1971 inquiring about employment on a contractual basis.

Richard E. Snyder continued: "After I graduated from the Kennedy School, I then served two years in the Department of Intelligence and Research, Soviet Affairs. That was 1957 to 1959. [Richard E. Snyder was granted a Top Secret CIA clearance on July 18, 1957.] Then two years in Moscow, 1959 to 1961." The Brief History of CIA Interest in Richard E. Snyder/Memorandum: "In March 1959 (probably just before Snyder's departure for Moscow), State requested that he be given two weeks of OBS Course (probably ORR's training in Soviet Order of Battle)." Richard E. Snyder: "We had a travel program which members of the Embassy who would be traveling in the Soviet Union were told to look for certain signs, factories, railroads which would potentially point to a strategic installation. This was the OBS course." On April 1, 1959, a Request For Approval of Liaison form was sent to Chief, Employee Activity Branch, PSD/OS through the Chief, Official Cover and Liaison/CCB/FI. The name of the CIA employee who was in contact with Snyder at the time was withheld. His component was PPG/Staff. Richard E. Snyder commented: "I was in Washington at this time." The document read: "The following contact is hereby requested to be effective on a one-time basis. CIA Employee (deleted) PPC/Staff. Non CIA Employee Richard E. Snyder, State Department." Richard E. Snyder was appointed Second Secretary and Consul of the American Embassy, Moscow, on June 28, 1959. On October 18, 1959, Russell A. Langelle (born October 7, 1922), the Chief Security Officer at the American Embassy in Moscow, was charged with espionage and ordered to leave the USSR in three days. From 1942 to 1956 Langelle was in the Office of Naval Intelligence. From 1956 he was in the State Department, where he worked for the CIA. (The CIA had agents in the USSR as early as 1953). ## COUNTERINTELLIGENCE INFORMATION REPORT

COUNTRY: USSR

SUBJECT: "The Cherepanov Papers"

DOI: As stated

SOURCE: As stated

1. On November 4, 1963, Laurence H. Miller, a librarian at the University of Illinois, turned over a package of documents to the U.S. Embassy, Moscow, with the explanation that A. A. Cherepanov, an employee of the International Bookstore, passed them to Miller's wife with the request that they be delivered to the U.S. Embassy. After photographing the documents, the Embassy, fearing a KGB provocation, delivered the package to the Soviet Ministry of Foreign Affairs that following day.

2. According to a defector source, whose information has been reliable, the Foreign Affairs Ministry turned the package over to the KGB, who identified Cherepanov as the person who passed the papers to the U.S. Embassy. Cherepanov had been a case officer in the First (U.S. Embassy) Department, 2nd (Internal Counter-intelligence) Chief Directorate, KGB, until August 1961, when he was forced to retire from the KGB and found employment at International Books. In ca. mid-December 1963 Cherepanov was arrested near Baku, where he was trying to flee across the Soviet border. He was later executed.

3. The documents received by the U.S. Embassy which have come to be known as the "Cherepanov Papers" all appear to have come from the files of the First Department, Second Chief Directorate, KGB, during the period 1958 to 1960. A number were handwritten drafts, which would normally have been destroyed once the final copy was typed. Attached is a translation of the "Cherepanove Papers."

Edward Petty stated: "It was the State Department that insisted that it be given back. The CIA resisted. It was Ambassador Toon. Garbler copied the material." The Cherepanov papers contained this entry: "Report on B.G. Kokiyev, a contact of Richard E. Snyder, Consul to the U.S. Embassy, Moscow, February 1960."

REPORT

B.G. Kokiyev, born in 1935 in the city of Moscow, Ossetian, bachelor. His father, G.A. Kokiyev, a former Moscow State University professor, who was arrested in 1949 by State Security organization and sentenced to eight years of corrective labor under Article 58, Section 10, and in 1954 he died at the prison site. His mother, D.M. Kokiyeva, born 1911 a member of the CPSU works as the chief doctor at the children's clinic, city of Moscow.

While a student of the Mendeleev Chemical Technological Institute KokiyeV in 1957 came into contact with the so-called "hippies" and began to live a criminal type of life. He developed a wide circle of acquaintance among foreigners from whom he bought foreign currency, watches, gramophone records, magnetic tape, shoes and clothing of American manufacture and resold them for speculative purposes. He corresponded with foreigners whom he had met in Moscow and received presents from them from abroad. In connection with this in 1958 he was expelled from the ranks of the Komsomol and from the Institute.

Among the "stilyagi" he became well known as a homosexual and a very active and enterprising speculator noted for his coarseness, insolence and greed for money. In connection with this, in 1958 he was expelled from the ranks of the Komsomol and from the Institute.

During the Sixth International Festival of Youth and Students in Moscow in 1958, he rented a room for the purpose of storing things for speculation. He was several times detained by the militia for speculation. As he spoke English and held anti-Soviet views he took active steps towards obtaining a foreign passport in order to escape to the United States, where, he claimed, his rich relatives were living.

KokiyeV's mother, in order to get him away from the "stilyagi" took steps to get him in the army service, from which, faking illness, he was discharged after a few months. He returned to Moscow and continued the same sort of life. In late October 1959 he got a job at the State Scientific Research and Design Institute of the Varnish Industry (GIPI-4). Until recently, in spite of the warnings from the militia and the KGB, he has continued to make contact with foreigners, speculate in foreign currency and goods and seek opportunities to go to the United States. In November of this year he made the acquaintance of the American Embassy Consul in Moscow, Richard E. Snyder and, taking precautionary measures, had two prolonged meetings with him. In conversation he openly told Snyder about himself, his parents, where he worked, and tried to get his help in going to the United States. He tried to conceal his contact with Snyder from the KGB during a case officer's conversation with him.

In late 1959 KokiyeV succeeded in getting help from the Rayon Committee, CPSU to get his friend V.P. Orlov a job at GIPI-4. The latter appears in KGB records as a person who recently made contact with Huston, an American Embassy employee in Moscow, who is suspected of affiliation with American intelligence.

According to the head of the secret department at GIPI-4, he tries to act like a good worker. She directs attention to the fact he expresses an interest in rocket technology and he became friendly with one of the young employees working in a secret laboratory.

Richard E. Snyder commented:

The only thing that kind of fits this was a couple of conversations I had with a Soviet, a young man I had met with twice in a café, at his request. The young were not particularly afraid of the security people like the older people were. I remember this in particular because he invited me up to his apartment. We spent the evening talking. The next day, or the day after that, there was a pointed article in Izvestia describing my meeting with this guy but not naming me. That was clear warning for me not to see the guy.

American Awaits Soviet Word

MOSCOW, Nov. 2 (UPI)—Lee Harvey Oswald shut himself in his hotel room today to await a decision on his request for Soviet citizenship. Mr. Oswald, a former marine from Fort Worth, Tex., turned in his American passport to the United States Embassy here last week-end. "I am awaiting a reply from the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet on my application for citizenship and have nothin g to say meanwhile," he said over the telephone.

On November 1, 1959, OSWALD'S family read about his appearance at the Embassy in the local newspapers, and tried to contact him. Marguerite Oswald suspected that he had been forcibly removed to Russia. She placed a telephone call to him, but either he refused to speak with her or he cut her off quickly. A call from Robert Edward Oswald was either canceled before it was completed, or refused. Marie Chetham of the American Embassy wrote: "At 11:05 p.m. I contacted Mr. OSWALD at his hotel and asked him if I could read messages from his brother, that I now had two telegrams for him. Mr. OSWALD replied, 'No, not at the present time,' then hung up." One of these telegrams implored him to keep his nose clean. OSWALD'S Historic Diary told a different tale: "Sunday November 1, 1959 - more reporters, 3 phone calls from Brother & Mother. Now I feel slightly axzillated, not so lonely."

OSWALD told no one that he was going to defect. When Marguerite and Robert Edward Oswald were questioned by the FBI in 1962, both responded they had no prior knowledge OSWALD had planned to defect. OSWALD, who had been neglected by his mother and half brothers, used them as cover. OSWALD claimed he sequestered himself in his hotel room from, "November 2, 1959, to November 15, 1959. Days of utter loneliness. I refuse all reports phone calls I remain in my room, I am racked with dsyentary." Oleg Nechiporenko wrote that KGB records indicated that on November 4, 1959, OSWALD met with a representative of the First Chief Directorate, who claimed to be with Intourist, and spoke with him on the subject of possible use abroad. Oleg Nechiporenko stated that the KGB never recontacted OSWALD.

PRISCILLA JOHNSON AND CORD MEYER

On November 16, 1959, OSWALD was interviewed by Priscilla Johnson [201-102798; OS 71 589]. Priscilla Johnson was born on July 19, 1928, in Glen Cove, Long Island, the daughter of a wealthy cotton textile broker. Her ancestry traced back to the Pilgrims. Priscilla Johnson attended Bryn Mawr College from 1946 to 1950. At Bryn Mawr College she became affiliated with the World Federalist Organization, whose President in 1948 was Cord Meyer. According to Edward Petty: "He's a person I considered to be of interest in a certain way, simply because I know so little about him. Cord Meyer is a strange guy to be in the Agency to begin with and then, beyond that, he had a special friendship with ANGLETON." Priscilla Johnson, interviewed in December 1993, commented, "I know him, yes. When I first saw him it was at a New Hampshire World Federalist Organization conference in 1946. He was one of its leading lights. By 1947 he said, 'Either there would be a world government by such and such a year or else...' The 'or else' was that he went to CIA." In 1960 ANGLETON was friendly with Cord Meyer and many of the women Cord Meyer dated came to know him. [Hersh, NYT 6.25.78] Priscilla Johnson became President of her World Federalist Organization chapter at college, as well as a member of the Pennsylvania State chapter. Priscilla Johnson told this researcher: "How did you get all this?" In 1947 she spent the summer months working with the World Federalist Organization in New York City. A Passport Division check disclosed that Priscilla Johnson traveled to England, France and Luxembourg to attend a convention at Luxembourg as International Chairman of the United World Federalists. Priscilla Johnson told this researcher: "I was never chairman." CIA traces on Priscilla Johnson first appeared on an index card titled, "Joint Press Reading Service - Moscow" and read "Memo Notebook, State, USSR, Moscow D# March 1, 1951, CIA #580822."

JOHNSON APPLIES FOR EMPLOYMENT WITH THE CIA: 1953

Priscilla Johnson told the HSCA that "she applied for a position with the CIA in October 1952 as an intelligence analyst. The application, however, was withdrawn." The Cancellation of Applicant Processing indicated Johnson had applied for a position as an intelligence officer. On February 24, 1953, the Project and Liaison Section sent a memo to the Deputy Chief, Security Division.

Reference is made to your memorandum of February 24, 1953, requesting that SAC be reviewed from a Counter-Espionage aspect. Personnel have been contacted by the undersigned and SAC is no longer an applicant for employment, having declined employment on January 21, 1953. In view of the above it is not believed that is any CE interest in Subject case. Bruce Solie."

A CIA investigation that resulted in a March 5, 1963, report on Johnson indicated she was a liberal democrat and member of the United World Federalists:

Subject is being considered for employment as an Intelligence Officer, GS-7, in Soviet Russia Division, Washington, D.C. Subject is described as liberal, internationally minded and overly polite to such a point that it was thought that she was putting it on. At Bryn Mawr college she was a member of the International Relations Club and the Students for Democratic Action...The individual who recruited Subject stated that when interviewed she exhibited some odd mannerisms such as cocking her head to one side and waving her hands in an exaggerated manner. Only one informant furnished any information of a similar nature, he described her as a 'rather goofy kid.' This informant could not qualify his statement.

The CIA discovered that Johnson was:

1. A member of the League for Industrial Democracy, an organization affiliated with the Socialist Party.
2. Two of her professors at Radcliffe, Harold Joseph Berman and Robert Lee Wolff had been a member of an organization on the Attorney General's list.
3. At Bryn Mawr College she knew Frances De Graaff, a suspected Soviet agent.
4. She listed Norton Dodge, Nancy Nimitz and Edith Farnsworth as references. The CIA had unfavorable traces on these individuals.
5. A person who considered herself "quite close" to Johnson spoke of her in highly favorable terms. This person was subsequently alleged to have been recruited as an Israeli Intelligence agent and one who allegedly had contact with Russian Intelligence agents over a considerable time.

Bruce Solie concluded: "In view of the Subject's close association with a person identified as a Communist, her association with other persons of questionable loyalty, and her liberal political views and her connection with Socialistic organization and Internationalistic organization, it is believed that (deleted) the Subject (deleted) would constitute an unwarranted security risk." Robert H. Cunningham, who conducted the investigation of Johnson, advised the Chief of CI/OA, Mr. Thomas Carroll, that Priscilla Johnson was unsuitable for CIA employment.

CIA Office of Security Staff member William Osborn disagreed with Cunningham: "This girl is now being considered for employment in ORR where she will need SI clearance. She's active politically (i.e. interested in domestic and international politics), but is not, and has not, been tied in with subversive groups. While a member of United World Federalists she does not appear to be objectionably internationalistic. Recommend approval." [CIA To: Chief Security Division 2.17.53] An undated CIA Telex stated: "This reopens (deleted) now being handled in (deleted). Priscilla Johnson is not aware of the fact, but she has been interviewed by a representative of (deleted), who was very much impressed by the young lady. Despite (Deleted's) opinion (deleted) is interested in possibly offering Johnson a job. They wish to see samples of Johnson's writings, and for this reason they request that you approach her for FPI debriefing and ask if she has written any articles, preferably on her recent trip, which she would be willing to let you have on loan. We have determined from (Deleted) that Miss Johnson may be reached by phone..." [CIA NYOR CITE WA 11059 undated]

Priscilla Johnson told this researcher:

I've seen what you're referring to and I figured out who that is. My father had a friend named F. Trubee Davison, he was high in CIA. I didn't know it. My father played tennis with members of Davison's family. [Davison, the son of a J.P. Morgan & Co. partner, was the assistant to the Director of the Central Intelligence Agency, Walter Bedell Smith, and an associate of Warren Commission member John J. McCloy]. And I remember Mr. Davison speaking to me in his living room. My father was there. I wondered since, 'Who was in a position to see that I was offered a job?' I'm not sure what year this was. I was young enough that I got a ride with my father. I would have been in my early 20's. This was sometime between 1950 and 1953.

Priscilla Johnson had probably received word that her application was not going to be approved, so rather than be turned down by the CIA for Security reasons, she gracefully withdrew.

JOHNSON 1953 TO 1956

After receiving a degree in Russian Studies from Radcliffe in 1953, Priscilla Johnson went to work for Senator John F. Kennedy as a researcher on Vietnam. Priscilla Johnson left the staff of Senator John F. Kennedy and became a translator for The Current Digest of the Soviet Press. The next CIA trace read: "JPRS #1047 *Tucker, Robert Charles - Report dated August 12, 1953, p2."

From 1955 to 1956 Johnson worked as a Moscow correspondent for The New York Times. On August 8, 1956, the Chief, CI/Operational Approval and Support Division, notified Deputy Director of Security, Mr. Rice, "Please withhold (deleted) pending favorable assessment. When appropriate, CSN 10-27 memo will be submitted."

A CIA memorandum from the Office of Security to the Deputy Director for Security of the State Department revealed that Johnson's biographical data "reflects that from December 1955 to April 1956 she worked in the U.S. Embassy in Moscow as an employee of the Joint Press Reading Service." [CIA 1273-1027] Priscilla Johnson told this researcher: "I did not work for Joint Press Reading Service from December 1955 to April 1956. I was in the Soviet Union from December to April. It is incorrect. I worked for the Joint Press Reading Service in February 1955 for 30 days only. Then I worked for The New York Times as a translator. Then my visa ran out. The Joint Press Reading Service appeared to be something that the British, Canadian and American Embassies had for their diplomats. You went to work early in the morning and rapidly translated the foreign affairs articles in that day's papers. Those would be delivered to the English-speaking Embassies by their lunchtime. Then we would go back to work after lunch and do the domestic Soviet stories. It appeared to be a three country organization. It was mainly English people." The Joint Press Reading Service was part of the CIA. In Priscilla Johnson's 1957 application for CIA employment she wrote: "1955 to 1956, Translator, U.S. Embassy, Moscow."

Priscilla Johnson once received payment from the United States Information Agency (USIA) for an article she authored. In a CIA fitness report on HOWARD HUNT, his duties were listed as: "Liaison with USIA and area division as required to co-ordinate (deleted)." [CIA doc. approved for release 4.22.83] The CIA's Office of Security stated: "Johnson, Subject of OS #71 589, has been of prior interest to this agency both as an applicant and under the legal traveler program. She has apparently been employed on a part-time basis with the United States Embassy in Moscow during two periods of residence in Russia. (Priscilla Johnson: "They're wrong. I worked 30 days in the Winter of 1955.") On her application for CIA employment in 1967, Johnson she wrote: "Inclusive dates 1955 to 1956, U.S. Embassy, Moscow, Translator 1955 to 1956 N.Y. Times, Moscow, Correspondent." On January 25, 1957, Priscilla Johnson's Operational Approval was canceled when (Deleted) SR/10 sent a Request For Cancellation of Approval to Chief, CI/OA: "SR/10 has no further interest in SAC. Please cancel." The next trace was a card: "Johnson, Priscilla 3819 (deleted). Memo to CH/CI/SRS, February 25, 1957, p.1." On April 10, 1958, Cord Meyer and Lewis J. Lapham of the International Organizations Division sent this message to (deleted):

From wealthy, Long Island family. Excellent scholastic rating. Application Kubark employment 1952 rejected because some associates and memberships would have required more investigation than thought worthwhile. Once member United World Federalists: Thought liberal, international-minded, anti-communist...Considered by present Kubark employee knew her at Harvard to have been screwball then; considered

'goofy, mixed-up' when applied Kubark employment. No headquarters record prior Kubark use.

Louis Jay Lapham (born October 5, 1920) received a Ph.D. from Harvard in 1954. When the above message was written, Lapham was in Paris, under State Department cover. In 1967 Lapham went to Vietnam where he worked in OPERATION PHOENIX. Lapham was the Director for Political Research of the CIA from 1974 to 1976, and Assistant to the Deputy Director from 1977 to 1978.

On May 6, 1958, Counter-Intelligence/Operations Approval and Support Division, asked Mr. Grigon of the Office of Security to approve Priscilla Johnson. "Subject investigated for employment in 1952 (deleted)." This was followed by a Classified Message dated June 20, 1958, "Report reveals derogatory political associations in past. Dissemination this information limited to Kubark personnel on need to know basis. Subject's past activity in USSR, insistence return and indefinite plans inside likely draw Soviet suspicions. (Deleted.) Regret delay. Appreciate Station efforts. Copies went to Deleted at OS, IO, WE/3, CI/OA SR/10, SR/COP/FI. The releasing officer was C/WE/FI and the authenticating officer was C/SR/2." On August 28, 1958 (Deleted) SR/10 sent a Request For Cancellation of Approval to Chief, CI/OA "SR/10 has no further interest in SAC. Please cancel." In September 1958 Priscilla Johnson became an accredited correspondent for the North American Newspaper Alliance.

The North American Newspaper Alliance was owned by OSS founder Ernest Cuneo, a highly influential Washington, D.C., attorney. [CIA 592-252-B] Ernest Cuneo's clients included United Fruit, and he was a friend of Allen Dulles. She told the FBI he had been commissioned to prepare a lengthy article on the assassination of President John F. Kennedy, and that "Allen Dulles was to be the principal source of information for him prior to the time the report was issued." He asked C.D. De Loach if he could see a copy of the FBI's report to the Warren Commission. DeLoach generated a memo about his request and sent it to Mr. Mohr. [Goulden Superlawyers p143; FBI 105-82555-1936, 62-109060-NR 12.11.63, 105-82555-195] When journalist Drew Pearson wrote articles unfavorable to the Warren Commission, Cuneo attempted to dissuade him from writing such articles. [Serial illegible NR #199] Priscilla Johnson commented, "I didn't know Cuneo was a former OSS man." There was a card that read: "Johnson, Priscilla, Hotel Metropole, Moscow, USSR 90079, Memo for CI Staff, October 30, 1958 - p.6."

OSWALD AND JOHNSON 1959

Priscilla Johnson told the HSCA:

In November 1959 she had returned from a visit to the United States where she covered the Camp David Conference between President Eisenhower and Premier Khrushchev. On November 16, 1959, she went to the American Embassy to pick up her mail." At the Embassy, she accidentally ran into Consular Officer John A. McVickar, who told her an American defector named LEE OSWALD might speak to a woman reporter. McVickar felt she might be able to dissuade OSWALD from defecting. Priscilla Johnson said she needed a story that was not time sensitive, because she had to mail, rather than cable, her stories to the United States. She then "proceeded to her hotel, found out the American's room number, knocked on his door and asked him for an interview. OSWALD did not ask her into the room, but he did agree to talk to her in her room later that night.

OSWALD told Johnson that he Became a Marxist at 15. Why? I had discovered socialist literature at that time. Five years of reading Socialist Literature observing treatment of minority groups: Communists, Negroes and the workers especially watching treatment of workers in New York - the fact that they are exploited. I'd read about it in socialist literature and I saw that the description was quite correct. Saw that I would be worker exploited by capitalism. Professional: an exploiter, or since there are many in this category, I'd be in the unemployed...Marx and Engel, the standard works, Das Kapital...Segregation, I was brought up, like any Southern boy, to hate Negroes. Then socialist literature opened my eyes to (illegible) reasons for hating Negroes. Was part of Indonesian invasion in March 1958. Sat off coast with ammunition.

McVickar called on her on November 17, 1959, the day after the interview, and asked her to supper...McVickar indicated a general concern about OSWALD...McVickar believed Snyder had acted in a way to make OSWALD more likely to go through with the defection." As stated Priscilla Johnson also had a conversation about OSWALD with Richard E. Snyder. Priscilla Johnson told this researcher: "At the Embassy I avoided those political attaches that I thought to be CIA. I tried to skirt all of that secret apparatus. I equated the CIA with KGB.

PRISCILLA JOHNSON 1960

In July 1960 Priscilla Johnson was expelled from the Soviet Union. She told the FBI that she "attributed this to the U-2 incident...she stated that Vice President RICHARD NIXON had, at one time, intervened on her behalf to obtain an extension of her visa." Priscilla Johnson told this researcher: "Adlai Stevenson did. I'm not so sure about NIXON. I tried to get him to help through his Press Secretary, Herb Klein. I don't recall that he did anything." On another occasion, the United States Ambassador to the Soviet Union spoke directly to Nikita Khrushchev about an extension of her visa. Priscilla Johnson told this researcher: "Mr. Thompson spoke to Khrushchev in this country during the Fall of 1959, when Khrushchev was visiting Eisenhower, about pressure that had been put on some American correspondents to spy for the KGB. Mr. Thompson didn't speak to him about an extension of my visa. He spoke to him about the pressure American correspondents had been under." Priscilla Johnson returned to the United States and worked briefly on the speech writing staff of Senator John F. Kennedy's Presidential campaign: "I worked as a Fact Finder. I did a study for him of the treatment of Asian and African students in the U.S. as compared with Russia. Archibald Cox was in charge. Joe Kraft, Adam Yarmolinsky. I found out facts for Kennedy to use in his speeches. For just a matter of weeks." On December 16, 1960, it was reported to the CIA that "it was highly likely that the Soviets attempted to recruit Priscilla Johnson, as she spent a lot of time with Soviet nationals."

PRISCILLA JOHNSON 1961

On January 31, 1961, a Memorandum was generated for the Chief, Personnel Security Division, OS, to Chief, Contact Division, OO, Subject: Travelers to Soviet Bloc Countries. It asked for a Security Check on Johnson because OO planned to debrief her. [Virginia Thorne for E.M. Ashcraft] On March 19, 1961 the Domestic Contacts Division received an Interoffice Memo William A. Osborne, Chief, Personnel Security Division, of the CIA's Office of Security: "In as much as Subject is employed as writer, any classified information released to her during contact should be carefully identified as such."

THE SOVIET SURVEY 1962

A CIA Classified Message dated April 1962 stated:

C/S Comment: (Deleted) recommends Priscilla Johnson, Harvard Russian Studies for position Soviet Survey. C/IO/Security (deleted) OS/ID/ - Hamby, Cord Meyer C/IO, Releasing Officer.

Priscilla Johnson told this researcher:

That was a journal put out by the Congress of Cultural Freedom. They put out Encounter, NATO anti-communist intellectual world. I think Cord Meyer was in charge of the program. A man named John Hunt came to Cambridge and sounded me out as to whether I wanted the job. I didn't. The Congress was shown to have been behind all those magazines until 1967. Whether I suspected that it was, or whether I just did not want to move to London, I'm not sure. I think I didn't turn it down on the spot because I went to a conference on Soviet literature in England that summer. I wondered about the morality of it. Because I knew I was being considered for that job and I didn't intend to take it. I didn't know that it was Cord Meyer.

On May 25, 1962, Office of Security and Counter-Intelligence Operational Approval received a Approval Request. The only undeleted lines read: "Subject has been of previous interest to the Agency. (Deleted) or equivalent on file in the Office of Security." On July 16, 1962, a CIA investigation of Priscilla Johnson's post-1958 activities turned up a State Department telegram dated June 22, 1960. On July 24, 1962 the Deputy Director of Security (Investigations and Operational Support), Victor R. White, sent a memo to Chief, CA Staff, about Johnson the first paragraph of which was deleted. In the late summer of 1962 Priscilla Johnson reentered the Soviet Union. When she left the USSR from Leningrad, the KGB confiscated her notes.

Priscilla Johnson told the FBI: "Sexual advances had been made to me but I never let these advances get started. I was constantly fearful that I might be drugged or be the victim of compromising photographs."

On October 24, 1962, Priscilla Johnson furnished the Domestic Contacts Division with a report on Soviet writers. A week before this, she furnished Domestic Contacts Division with a report on an alleged assassination attempt against Khrushchev. On October 25, 1962, the Chief of the Domestic Contacts Division requested that a security check be run on Johnson because she was a source of foreign positive intelligence. [E.M. Ashcraft to James Farr] On November 27, 1962, Priscilla Johnson had a meeting with a CIA Staff member after returning home from her third trip to the Soviet Union:

In November 1962, I had a conversation with a man who identified himself as a CIA employee. During the later part of my trip to the USSR in 1962 I had been under heavy surveillance and the KGB knew what Soviet citizens I had seen. Since my notes were now part of the KGB files, I felt it might help them if the CIA knew that which the KGB already knew. My meeting with the CIA employee...was a reversal of my usual effort to avoid CIA-contact." Priscilla Johnson wrote to President John F. Kennedy, "asking his help in having my papers returned. He then had me called by Carl Kaden (phonetic), Bundy's Deputy on the National Security Council Staff. Pierre Salinger lodged a protest on my behalf. That's all that was ever done about it.

The HSCA determined that on occasion, during the years 1962 to 1965, Priscilla Johnson had provided literary information to the CIA. On December 11, 1962, she met with Donald Jameson, Chief SR/CA. Jameson was a board member of AEWILDFIRE. Jameson: "She had been a Domestic Contacts Division source, and they had a clearance on her for contact and debriefing. Priscilla Johnson was selected as a likely candidate to write an article on Yevtushenko in a major U.S. magazine." [CIA FOIA 17455] On December 17, 1962, a Request for Approval was sent to the CI/ Operational Approval and Support Division from SR/CA (Deleted) File No. C-70300 RI 201-102789 Office of Security. Full Details of Use (Deleted). The non-deleted line, as of 1994, read: "No overseas since last (deleted) field traces."

PRISCILLA JOHNSON 1963

In 1963 Priscilla Johnson joined the Russian Research Center at Harvard University. She told the FBI that the Russian Research Center provided her with office space but she had no official connection with the Russian Research Center. The KGB identified the Russian Research Center as a CIA training school. The Wall Street Journal stated that the members the Russian Research Center reviewed the accuracy of Secret CIA estimates of Soviet intentions and that "CIA publications just arrive, unbidden" in its library. On January 4, 1963, the Chief of the Investigations Division sent a memo to the Assistant Deputy Director of Security (Investigations and Operational Support) about Priscilla Johnson. "Gist: Request for an expedite FBI check concerning Subject. Counter-Intelligence/Operational Approval has requested that the results of Subject's FBI checks be returned to their office no later than January 11, 1963. Charles W. Kane." Priscilla Johnson told this researcher: "I didn't know they were considering me for a job. By that time I knew an awful lot about the literary political scene in Moscow." It was pointed to Priscilla Johnson that she was being considered for clandestine use, that was why she needed Operational Approval. She commented: "That's too bad. I wouldn't have been very good." On May 3, 1963, Victor R. White, Deputy Director of Security (Investigations and Operational Support) issued Priscilla Johnson a provisional operational approval in conjunction with PROJECT AEWILDFIRE. The CIA: "Subjects of provisional operation approval are not to represent themselves as, nor are they represented as, employees of the CIA." [Memo for Chief, SR Div Attention (Deleted)] In late 1963 Priscilla Johnson's Office of Security file would be reviewed by Counter-Intelligence's M. Paul Hartman in regard to the OSWALD matter. [CIA OS Traces - Mendoza]

PRISCILLA JOHNSON 1964

On January 30, 1964, and on January 31, 1964, Priscilla Johnson met with Gary Coit SR/CA and discussed her experience in the USSR. On March 3, 1964, she met with Garry Coit, a CIA SR/CA Staff member. [CIA 577-813] Gary Coit commented:

I feel vaguely uncomfortable after this long discussion with Priscilla Johnson. She is certainly intelligent and well informed on the Soviet Union. However, she is interested in it as an intellectual thing, not because she is out to destroy the Communist system...In any event I am reasonably certain that we cannot expect to use Johnson actively in operations. She obviously doesn't want to get involved in deep plots. She is unlikely to be the type of informant who will volunteer information; but she will supply info she has acquired, if asked and if it's not too sensitive, such as the identities of her friends in the USSR.

Priscilla Johnson told this researcher: "I do remember talking to Coit in Grand Central Station and I cannot remember why or when. It would have been something about the Soviet literary scene." In 1994 the CIA released the notes of this meeting. Priscilla Johnson was questioned about a defector named Assev and her visa problems in the Soviet Union. She told Garry Coit that the notebooks seized by the Soviets did not contain sensitive information. When asked about her Russian contacts, she refused to supply the CIA with names. The conversation did concern the Soviet literary scene. In June 1964 Priscilla Johnson traveled to Dallas and became a confidante of Marina Oswald. She started work on a book about the relationship between OSWALD and Marina Oswald. In February 1965 Johnson was in touch with the CIA regarding Alex Dolberg.

SVETLANA STALINA & JOHNSON 1967

Priscilla Johnson came across the name of Stalin's daughter, Svetlana Stalina, on a bulletin board at Moscow University, announcing that she was teaching a literature class. Priscilla Johnson enrolled and attended one class. On February 20, 1956, the KGB barred her from attending. When Svetlana Stalina, defected to the United States in 1967 she stayed at the home of the family of Priscilla Johnson. When Stalina wrote her autobiography, Priscilla Johnson acted as her translator and Evan Welling Thomas, the son of Norman Thomas, was her editor.

1. Reference is made to attached clipping regarding Svetlana Stalina, which reflect that the editor of the book she has written is to be Evan Welling Thomas, 2nd, the son of Norman Thomas and that its translator is Priscilla Johnson #71589 DL who is also currently working on a book with Marina Oswald, widow of LEE HARVEY OSWALD...

2. Priscilla Johnson's file makes no mention of her marriage to George MacMillan, a free lance writer, and no check on him has been made (large deletion).

3. Stalina's lawyer is Edward S. Greenbaum, #354817, regarding whom no summary has ever been prepared but whose reference cards indicate the possibility of question as to his political sympathies. Greenbaum also represents Harper and Row who will publish Stalina's book and who also published William Manchester's, Death of a President, which was edited by the above referred to Evan Thomas who is the subject of # 164032. His file, which fails to indicate that his father is Norman Thomas, reflects that in 1957 he was associated with Harper Brothers and was the subject of a request for a Covert Security Clearance to permit his use on QKENCHANT. [OKENCHANT was an indicator used by Central Cover Staff and the Office of Security with a program for clearing (deleted) providers (businesses etc.) with access to classified material] However the division cancelled prior to the issuance of the clearance requested for him. A check on him at the FBI at that time was NIC. In August 1961, Evan Thomas was again of interest as one of the individuals at Harper Brothers who were to be interviewed regarding a book which Pawel Monet, # 1666824 intended to publish, which was highly critical of the CIA and FBI. It was hoped that publication of the book could be stopped, but there is no indication in the Office of Security file Evan Thomas as to whether it was or not. [Pawel Monat, one of Communist Poland's top intelligence agents and head of all Military Attaches, defected to the West in Vienna on November 22, 1959. NYT 11.23.59]

4. Alan Uriel Schwartz, # 168207, a 35 year old partner in the law firm Greenbaum, Wolff and Ernst, # EE 6832, # 167982, who accompanied Stalina to New York was of interest to WH/III in February 1958 at which time it was indicated that he was employed by Morris Ernst, in Greenbaum, Wolff and Ernst. There is much seriously derogatory information on Ernst, including the fact that in December 1939 he attended a secret meeting at Communist Party headquarters in Chicago at which time he was identified at the Counsel of the American Civil Liberties Union in New York City. Alan Schwartz, who apparently was brought into Greenbaum, Wolff and Ernst by Morris Ernst is a graduate of Yale University Law School, to have written, Censorship The Search For the Obscene with Morris Ernst and to have been Counsel to the Radio and Television Committee of the ACLU since 1959. It is interesting to note in March 1958 Security recommended against Ernst's use with the Galindez case; and that WH/III's interest in Schwartz, at the same period of time, was (deleted 24) to review some Cuban files in connection with (a) case being handled by firm of C-68017." A notation on CI/OA's request for a PSCA on Schwartz reads, "On February 24, 1958 Mr. (deleted 03) CI/OA advised that upon Subject's return to New York City, the appropriate division with contact him there on a fairly continuing basis." There is no further indication in Schwartz's file as to what use has been made of him. Schwartz in 1957 was a registered agent of the Dominican Republic in connection with his employment by Morris Ernst, Special Counsel for that country; and he also registered sometime during the period 1955 to 1959 as an agent of the Dominican Republic in connection with his association with a William H. Munson.

6. Hill and Knowlton, "a public relations firm coordinating the publicity attending Stalinas arrival here" is subject of Security files # 162356 and # EE 13791. This firm, which is said to be one of the largest public relations firms in the world, was of interest in November 1957 and again in May 1960 in connection with persistent reports that it represents the interest of the Japanese Socialist Party in the United States.

In 1967 Priscilla Johnson filled out a Personal Record Questionnaire for CIA employment. In 1972 Bruce Solie, Deputy Chief /Security Research Service, noted Priscilla Johnson's name appeared on the Soviet Visa Blacklist.

JOHNSON V. WEBERMAN

On January 3, 1975 the CIA characterized Johnson as a "willing collaborator." In 1975 Priscilla Johnson planned to have her attorneys start libel proceedings against the publisher of Coup D'Etat In America. Priscilla Johnson objected to being characterized as a possible CIA asset. Priscilla was contacted in January 1977:

Q. What happened to your lawsuit?

A. Mr. Okpaku promised to correct what was wrong.

Q. Priscilla, the jig is up, the CIA just released a Office of Security memorandum on you.

A. This is no "jig." Mr. Weberman, I know of no such memorandum. What is the Office of Security?

Q. They keep records on anyone who has ever worked for the Agency.

A. Well, I deny it completely and I never heard of it. I've never even worked for the Embassy.

In 1977 Lee and Marina, Priscilla Johnson's book on the assassination of President John F. Kennedy was published. Time Magazine gave it a full page review. Based on Marina Oswald's alleged recollections, the book supported the Warren Commission. In 1978 Priscilla Johnson furnished the HSCA with an Affidavit in which she swore she never worked for the CIA and that her record indicated the CIA had turned her down as a security risk. Priscilla Johnson told this researcher:

I did not know ANGLETON. I did become quite expert in the Soviet literary scene and they were interested in that. But I wasn't interested. I tried to stay as far away as I could from CIA and KGB. I didn't always succeed, particularly from the KGB, because I lived in its country. I wasn't interested in working for the intelligence, I wasn't interested in working for any large bureaucracy. A person who came out of graduate school in the early 1960's in Russian studies was trained to go into the government. But I didn't want to. I thought I might, and I applied. But when I realized...I think somebody interviewed me and asked me whether I could sail, this would be 1952. I said 'No thanks,' they must be thinking of some covert thing. No, I didn't want to have anything to do with them. I can't help it if they have documents about me, but that is not to say that I would have worked for them. In 1962, when I went to Russia, I had a good friend who went for Encounter. But I wouldn't have gone for Encounter for the same reason I didn't work for Survey. I thought that it was financed behind the scenes by CIA. I worked for the Reporter because I knew where my money was coming from. I'm sorry that you probably don't believe a word I'm saying." File NARA 1993.08.13.18:14:26:210059; HSCA Aff; NYT 10.2.94 - Johnson reviews Stalin and the Bomb by David Holloway]

Priscilla Johnson was not part of the conspiracy to assassinate President Kennedy, however, she was part of the coverup. Priscilla Johnson's relationship with the CIA made her a propagandist, not an objective journalist. Her insistence she only worked for the Joint Press Reading Service for a month despite diverse documentation to the contrary ("I never worked in any way for the CIA. I worked for 30 days as a Joint Press Reading Service translator") was a lie she invented to refute this. Johnson was connected with Cord Meyer. Cord Meyer would later head the Domestic Operations Division of the CIA, whose purpose was to influence, co-opt, subsidize etc. major book publishers in the United States. The CIA wanted the ability to prevent books that criticized it, or were considered breeches of security, from being published. The CIA effectively subverted freedom of the press in America with this activity. Books that were favored by the Agency were sure to be published, widely advertised and reviewed by CIA assets at various publications. Books that were unfavorable were suppressed or ignored. Cord Meyer led to HUNT and ANGLETON.

November 1, 1959 - more reporters, 3 phone call from Brother & Mother. Now I feel slightly axzillarated, not so lonly.

November 2, 1959 to November 15, 1959. Days of utter loneliness. I refuse all reports phone calls I remaine in my room, I am racked with dsyentary.

OSWALD'S FIRST LETTER TO EMBASSY NOVEMBER 3, 1959

OSWALD did not return to the United States Embassy to renounce his citizenship. Instead, he mailed the Embassy a letter on November 3, 1959 in which he denounced his citizenship.

I, LEE HARVEY OSWALD, do hereby request that my present United States citizenship. I appeared in person, at the consulate Office of the United States, Embassy, Moscov on October 31, 1959 for the purpose of signing the formal papers to this effect. This legal right I was refused at that time. I wish to protest against this action, and against the conduct of the official of the United States consular service who acted on behalf of the United States Government. My application, requesting that I be considered for citizenship in the Soviet Union is now pending before the Supreme Soviet of the U.S.S.R. In the event of acceptance, I will request my government to lodge a formal protest regarding this incident.

OSWALD researched the expatriation laws. He noted, "asking for emformation about how to dissolve 1544 at. 18 US Code" and I went [to the Embassy] to legally liquate [liquidate] my amercian citizenship and was refused this legalle right." Nonetheless, whatever effort OSWALD exerted, he could not legally renounce his citizenship without filling in the proper form. The Warren Commission wrote that, even though OSWALD probably read the relevant provisions of the Immigration and Nationality Act, and was "trying to use three out of four ways set out in the statute to surrender his citizenship...he succeeded in none. [WR p265]

OSWALD had no intention of staying in the Soviet Union for ever. He knew that he would return to the United States one day and did not want to lose his citizenship. A State Department document, declassified in August 1993, reported that Priscilla Johnson stated: "OSWALD appeared in last conversation last week not to have altered intent to accept Soviet citizenship, but may have purposely not carried through original intent to renounce Amcitship in order to leave crack open." [WCD 921 12.6.59] OSWALD never filled-out the official Expatriation Forms. Richard E. Snyder commented, "He never came back." Nicholas Petrulli visited the American Embassy on September 2, 1959, turned in his passport, stated he had sent a letter to the Supreme Soviet and asked to renounce his U.S. citizenship. Richard E. Snyder explained the irrevocability of renunciation and told Petrulli to return in the afternoon. He did so and Snyder administered the oath of renunciation." [HSCA V12 p445] Richard E. Snyder commented, "This was the same kind of thing, I sent him off to think about it and when he came back I had no grounds on which to deny it. He appeared to have his mind made up, knew what he wanted. He was of mature years.

State Department Officer Giacomo Cacciatore, contacted in November 1993, stated:

I made the decision on OSWALD. There was a recommendation that he be expatriated - the newspapers proclaimed he defected. But he did not do it in accordance with the law - he just wrote a letter - so he retained his citizenship. I went to the Embassy to give Snyder instructions about OSWALD. This was in 1960. I told Snyder to give OSWALD the opportunity to fill in the expatriation forms. I believe the Embassy sent him a letter in Minsk and asked him to come in. There was no Consulate in Minsk so he could not have expatriated himself there. You could not mail it to him. He had to appear in person.

On November 6, 1959, the U.S. Embassy in Moscow wrote a letter to OSWALD at room 233 at the Metropole inviting him to come in to arrange the preparation of expatriation papers, according to Embassy records. The CIA:

NOTE: OSWALD told newspaper correspondent Priscilla Johnson in Moscow on November 15, 1959 that he had written a letter to the United States Embassy on November 1, 1959 (error, for his letter was dated November 3, 1959) and had "received this letter back." OSWALD then quoted from the Embassy letter of November 6, 1959. Although OSWALD did receive the Embassy invitation to come in to sign expatriation papers, for unexplained reasons he did not do so. [CIA 285]

NOVEMBER 8, 1959

On November 8, 1959, OSWALD wrote this letter to his brother Robert:

Dear Robert:

Well, what shall we talk about, the weather perhaps? Certainly you do not wish e to speak of my decision to remain in the Soviet Union and apply for citizenship here, since I am afraid you would not be able to comprehend my reasons. You really do not know anything about me. Do you know for instance that I have waited to do this for well over a year, do you know that I speak a fair amount of Russian which I have been studying for many months.

I have been told that I will not have to leave the Soviet Union if I do not care to. This then is my decision. I will not leave this country, the Soviet Union, under any conditions. I will never return to the United States which is a country I hate.

Someday, perhaps soon, and again perhaps in a few years, I will become a citizen of the Soviet Union, but it is a very legal process, in any event, I will not have to leave the Soviet Union and I will never leave...I will not speak to anyone from the United States over the telephone since it might be taped by the Americans...if you want to send me money, that I can use, but I do not expect to be able to send it back.

November 15, 1959 I decide to give an interview, I have Miss Mosbys card so I call her. She drives right over - I give my story, allow pictures, later story is distorted, sent without my permissions, that is: Before I ever saw and O.K.'ed her story. Again I feel slightly better because of the attention...Miss Mosby enters and greets me and sits down. I start by saying, I wish it understood that I wish to see the story before it is sent. "All right' she says, "It's all the same to me what you do in regards to your life, I'm just taking down your words! O.K. I say. First the reasons for my coming. She asks me about military service I answer questions about my military service and then she asks why did you apply for Soviet citizenship,? What are your reasons for coming here? I have waited two years in order to dissolve my American citizenship I have seen too much hate and injustice in the U.S. I have served in the occupation forces in Japan and occupation of a country is imperialistic, what the Russians would call "imperialism" I have chosen a socialist country since their are only two main systems in the world. "Why the USSR," she asks "why not Czechoslovakia, where the housing problem is not so bad" "I have chosen the USSR since it is the leader of the Socialist camp. and the symbolic champion of the cause of communism!" What other reasons got you to change your loyalty. "In the U.S., as we know, there are many shortcomings, racial segregation and the suppression of the underdog, U.S. Communist party. How long have you been studying Marxism." I first started studying "Marxism" when I was 15. "I always had to dig for my books in the back, dusty, shelves or libraries and old outdated books were the back bone of my reading, books on philosophy, political economy ect." "In my library in the most obvious places there are the prominent anti-communist books we know so well but as I say I always had to dig for my book "what were some impressions you got serving in the occupation forces." I saw the American military hauling cannon up a mountain side, the tools of war and oppression I learned to hate the U.S. imperialistic militarys" Thank you she says...I am surprised at the interest. I get phone calls from "Time" at night a phone call from the States I refuse all calls without finding out who's it from. I feel non-displeased because of the attention. 10:00 p.m. I retire."

November 16, 1959. A Russian official comes to my room asks how I am. Notifies me I can remain in USSR till some solution is found with what to do with me, it is comforting news. For me. November 17, 1959 to December 30, 1959. I have bought myself two self-teaching Russian language books. I force myself to study 8 hours a day. I sit in my room and read and memorize words. All meals I take in my room. Rimma arranged that. It is very cold on the streets so I rarely go outside at all for this month and a-half. I see no one speak to no-one except every-now-and-then Rimma, who calls the ministry about me. Have they forgotten?...This month I was called to the passport office and met 3 new officials who asked me the same questions I answered month before. They appear not to know me at all."

This month I was called to the passport office and met 3 new officials who asked me the same questions I answered a month before. They appear not to know me at all.

OSWALD'S NOVEMBER 26, 1959 LETTER TO ROBERT OSWALD

Dear Robert:

I shall begin by answering your question on why I and my fellow workers and communists would like to see the present capitalist government of the United States overthrown.

Do you remember the time you told me about the efforts of your milk company to form a union? Try to see why workers must form unions against their employers in the U.S. It is because the government supports an economic system which exploits all its workers, a system based upon credit which gives rise to a never ending cycle of depression, inflation, unlimited speculation (which is the phase America is in now) and war. In this system art, culture and the spirit of man are subjected to commercial enterprising, religion and education are used as a tool to suppress what would otherwise be a population questioning their government's unfair economic system and plans for war. Science is neglected unless it can be directly used in making war or producing more profit for the owner's of business's - these are some of the reasons. Look around you and look at your self. See the Segregation, See unemployed and what automation is, remember how you were laided off at convair?

I remember well the days we stood off-shore at Indonesia waiting to suppress yet another population, when they were having a revolution there in March 1958. I can still see Japan and the Phillipines and their puppet governments - more important I can see the American men in uniforms. Men who were there because they were drafted or because they were adventuresom or unemployed in civilian life. I will ask you Robert, what do you support the American government for? What is the Ideal that you put foward? Do not say "freedom" because freedom is a word used by all peoples through all of time. Ask me and I will tell you I fight for communism; this word brings to your mind slaves or injustice, this is because of American propaganda, look this word up in the dictionary, or better still read the book which I first read when I was 15, 'Capital' which contains economic theorys and most important the 'Communist Manifesto.'

I will not say your grandchildren will live under communism, look for yourself at history look at a world map. America is a dieing country. I do not wish to be part of it, nor do I ever again wished to be used as a tool in its military agressions.

This should answer your question, and also give you a glimpse of my way of thinking.

So you speak of advantages? Do you think that is why I am here? For personal, material advantages? Happiness is not based on oneself, it does not consist of a small home, of taking and getting. Happiness is taking part in the struggle where there is no borderline between one's own personal world, and the world in general I never believed I would find more material advantages at this stage of development in the Soviet Union than I might have had in the U.S.

When I talked to a reporter I gave most of my reasons, however the story I found out later was badly slanted and left out my real reasons, the reporter was interested only in a colorful story. I have been a pro-Communist for years and yet I have never met a communist, instead I kept silent and observed, and what I observed plus my Marxist learning brought me here to the Soviet Union. I have always considered this country to be my own.

I left you out of this matter because I did not want to get you in any sort of trouble because of me, also this decision is one which I only could make and you would not have been able to understand me.

You probably know little about this country so I will tell you about it. I did find, as I suspected I would, that most of what is written about the Soviet Union in America is for the better part fabrication. The people here have a seven hour work day now and only work until 3:00 p.m. on Saturdays with Sundays off. They have socializism which means they do not pay for their apartments or for medical care. The money for these comes from the profit they help create in their labor, which in the U.S. goes to the capitailist. Here in Moscov there is a housing shortage because of the war but its not bad now. There is no unemployment here in fact a slight shortage of manpower even with 250,000,000 population this is because this country is building at a pace which will put it first in all fields of endeavor in 15 years. Most important is the fact that they do not work for employers at all, a milkman or a factory supervisors are both socialy equal, this does not mean they have the same salery of course, this just means that their work goes for the common good of all.

These people are a good warm, alive people. These people would never think of war, they wish to see all peoples lives in peace but at the same time they wish to see the economically enslaved people of the west free, they believe in their Ideal and they support their government and country to the full limit.

You say you have not renounced me, good I am glad, but I will tell you on what terms I want this arrangement.

I want you to understand what I say now, I do not say lightly, or unknowingly, since I have been in the military as you know, and I know what war is like.

1. In the event of war I would kill any American who put a uniform on in defense of the American government - any American.
2. That in my own mind I have no attachments of any kind in the U.S.
3. That I want to, and I shall, live a normal happy and peaceful life here in the Soviet Union for the rest of my life.
4. That my mother and you are (in spite of what the newspaper said) not objects of affection, but only examples of workers in the U.S.

You should not try to remember me in any way I used to be, since I am only now showing you how I am. I am not all bitterness or hate, I come here only to find freedom. In truth, I feel I am at last with my own people. But do not let me give you the impression I am on another world, these people are so much like Americans and people the world over. They simply have an economic system and the Ideal of Communism which the U.S. does not have. I could never have been personally happy in the U.S.

I wish you would do me a favor since that other bad newspaper story went over I have been thinking I would like to give people, who are interested the real reasons. If you would, give the contents of this letter (except that which is for your benefit) to some reporter, it will clarify my situation, use your own judgement, however.

I have no money problems at all. My situation was not nearly as stable then as it is now, I have no troubles at all now along that line.

It is snowing here in Moscow now, which makes everything look very nice from my hotel window. I can see the Kremlin and Red Square and I have just finished a dinner of meat and potatoes. So you see the Russians are not much different than you or I.

This letter bordered on treason. OSWALD stated that he would like to overthrow the Government of the United States by force. If OSWALD had such strong feelings against Capitalism from age 15, why didn't he tell his brother about them? Why didn't he act on these beliefs instead of joining the Marines? OSWALD threatened to kill any American soldier, even his own brother in defense of Communism! He asked his brother to disseminate the pro-Communist beliefs enunciated in this letter. This letter, which contained sentences like "Happiness is taking part in the struggle, where there is no border line between one's own personal world and the world in general" was OSWALD'S most realistic articulation of his bogus leftist beliefs. Who knows where he copied it from? Clearly, OSWALD hoped this letter would be read by the KGB, since it would be, with Rimma Shirakova's reports, the only new information KGB could uncover about OSWALD. By sequestering himself in his room, and communicating with no one, OSWALD succeeded in denying the KGB any new information on him. OSWALD was a singleton agent. His contacts with other agents had to be non-existent or very infrequent.

On December 10, 1959, OSWALD wrote this letter to his brother Robert: "I will be moving from this hotel, so you need not write me here. I have chosen to remove all ties with my past, so I will not write you again, nor do I wish you to try and contact me. I'm sure you understand that I would not like to receive correspondence from people in the country which I fled. I am starting a new life and do not wish to have anything to do with the old one."

NODULE X6

CIA'S CI-SIG REACTION TO OSWALD'S DEFECTION INDICATED
ANGLETON WAS RUNNING HIM

For the most up-to-date version of this Nodule go to <http://ajweberman.com/nodulex6.pdf>

OSWALD believed that ANGLETON had dispatched him on an official CIA mission. OSWALD'S early belief that he had a connection to the CIA was hinted at by the absence of the words "CIA" or "Central Intelligence Agency" in any of his writings, letters or speeches until the summer of 1963. OSWALD was pro-Soviet, yet he never mentioned the Communists favorite whipping boy, the CIA? He was over-acting in order to disassociate himself from it. Marina Oswald was asked by the HSCA if her husband ever mentioned the word CIA. She responded: "Not that I recall. I never knew what the CIA was until they started asking me the questions. Until I came to this country I never knew what the CIA was." [HSCA V12 p381. 366] In reality, OSWALD was not carried on the CIA's books. He was a vest pocket operation of his father figures ANGELTON and HEMMING. There was no document that indicated he worked for the CIA in the CIA's files. ANGLETON used OSWALD because OSWALD filled a vacuum.

THE SUSPICIOUS FACTORS ABOUT OSWALD'S CIA FILE WHY DID THE OSWALD DOCS GO TO OS RATHER THAN CI/SIG?

The first document on OSWALD was a State Department cable dated October 31, 1959. The HSCA reported:

A confidential, State Department telegram dated October 31, 1959, sent from Moscow to Washington and forwarded to the CIA reported OSWALD, a recently discharged Marine, had appeared at the U.S. Embassy, Moscow...and has offered the Soviets any information he has acquired as [an] enlisted radar operator.

This cable was first routed to the CIA's Office of Security where a file was opened on OSWALD which was known as Security File # 351-164. The location of the original of this document was found in this file. It was somewhat odd that this document was found in the files of the Office of Security. The original should have been routed by the Records Integration Group (RID) to other CIA components which routinely handled defector matters. The CIA declassified one pre-201 Routing and Record Sheet that presumably was placed in the OSWALD Office of Security file dated May 1, 1960: "From Counter-Intelligence Research & Analysis/RS (deleted) 200-5-40." Copies were sent to IP /AN, (Intelligence Project / Analysis Section) IP/EDI (Intelligence Project) and IP/FI. (Intelligence Project / Foreign Intelligence) [CIA 1188-1000]

CIA/Office of Security files and activities are thought to be maintained primarily to record actions taken by the Office of Security in granting or denying security clearances to those persons whose relationship with the Agency gives them access to classified information. The Rockefeller Commission reported:

The bulk of the files maintained by the Office of Security consist of approximately 90,000 security dossiers, each relating to the security investigation of a specific Subject (person, organization, business or project) of Agency interest. About one third of these files are retired. About 90% of the security files relate to individuals, a majority of whom are

United States citizens. The remaining 10% relate to organizations, businesses etc. A few Office of Security files are maintained on persons who are unaware that they have any Agency relationship. Likewise, clearance information may be maintained by the Office of Security on persons whom the Agency is thinking of contacting, or foreign nationals of potential operational use, even if the Agency consequently decides not to contact the individuals, or contacts them and they refuse to assist the Agency. Some Office of Security files have been compiled on organizations and individuals thought to pose a threat to Agency personnel, installations or operations. But, as a practical matter, 95% of all requests to establish new files are routine, and are undertaken at the request of the Office of Security Clearance Division, which insures that a security clearance is approved before access is granted to classified Agency information." [RR p247].

THE OFFICE OF SECURITY AND ILLEGAL CIA OPERATIONS

This is not all together true. The CIA's Office of Security often ran Operations involving domestic targets. The most extensive program of illegal "domestic spying" by CIA on Americans was the "CHAOS" program. CHAOS was the centerpiece of a major CIA effort begun in 1967 in response to White House pressure for intelligence about foreign influence upon American dissent. The CHAOS mission was to gather and evaluate all available information about Communist links to racial, antiwar and other protest activity in the United States. CHAOS was terminated in 1974. The CHAOS office participated in the preparation of some half dozen major reports for higher authorities, all of which concluded that no significant role was being played by foreign elements in the various protest movements. This repeatedly negative finding met with continued skepticism from the White House under two administrations and pressures for further inquiry. In response to this skepticism CHAOS continued to expand its coverage of Americans in order to increase White House confidence in the accuracy of its findings.

A second major element of the CHAOS operation was to pursue specific inquiries from the FBI about the activity of particular Americans traveling abroad. CHAOS received a great deal of information regarding Americans from CIA stations abroad, as well as from the FBI itself. In addition, CHAOS eventually received such information from its own agents who participated in domestic dissident activity in America in order to develop radical "credentials" as cover for overseas assignment. CHAOS also obtained information about Americans from other domestic CIA components, from the CIA mail opening project and from a National Security Agency international communications intercept program. CHAOS also ran an Operation involving staging attacks on American radicals overseas. Singer Phil Ochs had his throat cut and Abbie Hoffman was beaten up as a result of the fact the CIA can operate against Americans overseas.

OPERATION CHAOS

CHAOS amassed thousands of files on Americans, indexed hundreds of thousands of Americans into its computer records, and disseminated thousands of reports about Americans to the FBI and other government offices. Some of the information concerned the domestic activity of those Americans. Within CIA, there was no written directive from Helms to Karamessines, his deputy for the Plans Directorate, to establish the CHAOS program. The first recorded authorization is an August 15, 1967 memorandum from Karamessines to JAMES ANGELTON, Chief of the Counterintelligence Staff. Karamessines' memorandum refers to discussions earlier that day among himself, ANGELTON and Helms and asks ANGELTON to designate a staff officer to run the program. The memorandum contemplated the conduct of operations to collect intelligence. It also acknowledged the program's "domestic counterintelligence aspects," and the need for dissemination of the information obtained to domestic agencies. The memorandum requested:

- a. The exclusive briefing of specific division chiefs and certain selected officers in each division, on the aims and objectives of this intelligence collection program with definite domestic counterintelligence aspects.
- b. The establishment of some sort of system by Dick Ober (or whatever officer you select) for the orderly coordination of the operations to be conducted, with the responsibility for the actual conduct of the operations vested in the specific area divisions.
- c. The identification of a limited dissemination procedure which will afford these activities high operational security while at the same time getting the information to the appropriate departments and agencies which have the responsibility domestically. 17

Angleton chose Richard Ober to head what became the Special Operations Group within the Counterintelligence Staff. Ober had already been involved in a more limited inquiry into possible foreign links to American dissidents.

MERRIMAC AND RESISTANCE

The MERRIMAC and RESISTANCE programs were both run by the CIA Office of Security, a support unit of the CIA charged with safeguarding its personnel, facilities and information. Project MERRIMAC involved the infiltration by CIA agents of Washington-based peace groups and black activist groups. The stated purpose of that program was simply to obtain early warning of demonstrations and other physical threats to the CIA. The collection requirements, however, were broadened to include general information about the leadership, funding and activities and policies of the targeted groups. Project RESISTANCE was a broad effort to obtain general background information for predicting violence which might create threats to CIA installations, recruiters or contractors and for security evaluation of CIA applicants. From 1967 until 1973, the program compiled information about radical groups around the country, particularly on campuses. Much of the reporting to headquarters by field offices was from open sources such as newspapers. But additional information was obtained from cooperating police departments, campus officials and other local authorities, some of whom, in turn, were using more active collection techniques such as informants.

Edward Petty must have not been privy to the above OPS:

There simply isn't anything there to indicate a real interest in OSWALD [because of OS interest]. It simply has to do with interagency exchange of information on people who've gone aboard. That's all there is to it. The Office of Security had every right to receive the document, if it asked for it.

But the Office of Security, CI/SIG and ANGLETON weren't engaging in any operations based upon these documents. I know CI/SIG, I know what they did. It was not an operational group. That's true, that's the way it is, and no amount of speculation will make any change in it. It's true that ANGLETON did a lot of things on his own, sometimes - probably more times than not - at least somebody in CI/SIG would know what he was doing. At the same time he did things which I am sure we did not know anything of...I'm really not trying unduly to debunk you, anything is possible. I think if what you were saying was true, I think I would know it. That's basically what I am going on. And I don't think it is true. I wasn't there when this particular thing was going on, so I can't rule everything out. Because I was first there in 1966, that doesn't mean that I wouldn't have known about it. Part of my job was to make myself familiar with all the material. There was so much of it, I do not remember everything. However, when you add the sum total of my actual knowledge of this material with what people did and did not do, your contention does not make sense. I don't believe for one minute that ANGLETON was engaged in running OSWALD. I don't think ANGLETON had anything to do with OSWALD. He had to do with a great many things which were of a lot of interest, but not that one. If I could find something there I would be very interested in it, but honestly I don't.

The Directors of the Office of Security have included Sheffield Edwards, Howard Osborn and Leo Dunn. Bruce Solie was head of OS Research. The Directors of Security came and went but ANGLETON remained. (ANGLETON was the de facto Director of the CIA). ANGLETON and the OS both had the responsibility of protecting the CIA from hostile elements so they had to work closely together. Both CI-SIG and OS ran deep cover operations. The Church Committee reported:

Most of the assets of OPERATION CHAOS developed their leftist coloration by entering universities in the United States after an initial period of basic agent training. When in school, they participated in the radical community. While preparing for their future assignments, the agents filed detailed reports and were also debriefed by their case officer.

In the process, they provided considerable information on their associates, dissident organizations, demonstration plans and sometimes personal information. 89 One asset submitted a 60 page report for a three week period which included detailed information on demonstrations, group meetings, and general accounts of such activity as Women's Liberation efforts in the area.

OSWALD defected and had threatened to give military secrets to the Soviets. On November 2, 1959, Sam Papich, the FBI liaison between the FBI and the CIA, requested information on OSWALD from CI/SIG, and was advised that CI/SIG had no information on him. On November 2, 1959 this document was generated: "Internal note dated November 2, 1959, (oral FBI name check request) and NO RECORD reply dated November 4, 1959. The location of the original of this document was found in CI/LSN (Counter-Intelligence Liaison Jane Roman)." This document read: "OSWALD, LEE HARVEY. Mr. Papich would like to know what we know about this ex-Marine who recently defected in the USSR. November 2, 1959. Mr. Papich was advised that we had no info on SAC. November 4, 1959." [CIA 592-252B] On November 4, 1959, an FBI memorandum was sent from the FBI's Counter-intelligence Soviet Section Chief, William A. Branigan, to A.H. Belmont, "summarizing agency checks regarding OSWALD and recommending that no further action was warranted by this Bureau concerning OSWALD at the time." [WCE 834 p2]

ONI advised they contemplated taking no action in this matter. No derogatory information was found in the files of the U.S. Marine Corps concerning SAC, and there is no indication of any Soviet Contacts involving SAC. Since SAC's defection is known to the Department of the Navy, and since SAC apparently has no knowledge of any strategic information that would be of benefit to the Soviets, it does not appear that any action is warranted by the Bureau in this matter. It is recommended however, that this memo be referred to the Identification Division so SAC's service fingerprints can be placed in the criminal files and that a stop be placed against the prints to prevent SAC's entering the United States under any name. Espionage section should be advised if SAC again enters the United States. [FBI 105-82555-3]

Branigan, contacted in July 1993 stated, "I don't remember that. You got something there in writing? What the hell? We couldn't investigate him in the Soviet Union. You can't do that. But when he comes back, he's a defector you know, and then he's fair game for investigation." William, A. Branigan, who was disciplined by the FBI for his pre-assassination handling of the OSWALD case, was in charge of the FBI's mail opening program. [Scott, Deep Politics p64] On November 9, 1993, William Branigan, 77, died of cancer.

Since Subject apparently has no knowledge of any strategic information which would be of benefit to the Soviets and there is no indication of any Soviet contacts...it does not appear that any action is warranted by the Bureau in this matter. [FBI 105-82555-3]

When this telephone interviewer mentioned OSWALD'S access to information on the U-2, William Branigan commented, "I don't know much about OSWALD and Atsugi. You are surmising he had access [to U-2 information]...you surmise these things. It could be. I don't know." He was asked, "What made the FBI believe he possessed no strategic information?" He responded, "From the fact of who he was, where he lived, and what he did. There was nothing about OSWALD that would indicate, well, hell, this guy is something really important. No, no, no. There was nothing. Somehow it sticks in the back of my mind that the Soviets did not think very much of him. They thought he was a jerk. 'This guy was something we don't want to fool with.' That's my recollection now and that was a long time ago. You could prove me wrong..."

WILLIAM CORNELIUS SULLIVAN

In 1964 William Branigan, and his colleague William Cornelius Sullivan, were in charge of directing the FBI's investigation of the assassination of President John F. Kennedy for the Warren Commission. William C. Sullivan, a farm boy from Bolton, Massachusetts, entered the FBI as a Special Agent on August 4, 1941. During World War II, he worked in the Special Intelligence Service of the FBI, and was closely connected to the OSS. On his return, he became a security field supervisor at FBI Headquarters in Washington; he remained at Headquarters for the duration of his FBI career. In 1961 he became FBI Assistant Director in charge of the Domestic Intelligence Division (DID). William C. Sullivan was the house intellectual at the DID. He had close ties to ANGLETON, and was listed in Who's Who in the CIA as having been co-opted by the Agency. In 1961 William C. Sullivan was named Bureau representative to the U.S. Intelligence Board (USIB), a position he held for ten years. The USIB was composed of CIA, DIA, NSA, Atomic Energy Commission, DOS, ONI etc. The Chairman of the Intelligence Board was the Director of the Central Intelligence Agency, Allen Dulles, until he left the Agency in November 1961. Allen Dulles was succeeded as the Director of the Central Intelligence Agency by John McCone and then Richard Helms.

The Navy believed OSWALD had no access to U-2 information via his job so they gave him a clean bill of health. But ANGLETON could have given OSWALD the exact information he needed to give to the Sovs so they could shoot down the U-2. Evidence of the CI/SIG's continued interest in OSWALD was found in the OSWALD's 201-File.

ANGLETON DELAYED OPENING OSWALD'S 201 FILE

ANGLETON and CI/SIG opened an OSWALD dossier, or 201 file only because it was forced to do so. ANGLETON wanted as little a paper trail between him and OSWALD as was possible that was one reason why OSWALD's documents were sent to the Office of Security. No CIA documents existed on OSWALD until his 201 file was opened on December 9, 1960. David E. Murphy, Soviet Russia Division Chief, was told by Allen Dulles that "Warren Commission members could not understand why CIA had not begun an investigation of OSWALD as soon as it received word that he had defected." [CIA 56-20; CIA 652-827] Some component other than CI-SIG should have opened a 201 File on OSWALD immediately after he threatened to give military information to the Soviets but ANGLETON took over the investigation.

THE ESTABLISHED CRITERION FOR OPENING A 201 FILE ACCUMULATION OF DOCUMENTS

The Rockefeller Report:

The fact that a name has been entered into the index does not mean that a [201] file exists on that person. Files are open only at the direction of a division or staff and only when it appears that the person will be of continuing intelligence interest. In that case, a so-called personality (or 201) file is opened, i.e., a manila folder is prepared to hold relevant documents accumulating on that person.

A CIA Handbook stated: "201 dossiers should be opened in the following categories: (5) Persons on whom a Main Index search reveals information in five or more documents." Edward Petty disagreed: "It's possible to have a 201 number assigned to an individual if there's just one document in the file."

THE CIA TRIES TO EXPLAIN THE DELAY

The HSCA noted that a CIA Memorandum dated September 18, 1975, indicated: "OSWALD'S 201 file was opened on December 9, 1960, in response to the receipt of five documents: two FBI, two State Department and one Navy." This explanation was inconsistent with the presence in OSWALD'S file of four 1959 State Department documents and a fifth dated May 25, 1960. If the opening of OSWALD'S 201 file was triggered by the CIA's receipt of documents, why wasn't it opened in MAY 1960, when five documents had accumulated?

The CIA commented: "'OSWALD'S 201 file had been opened on December 9, 1960 on the basis of the receipt of the first five documents.' This statement is not accurate. Although the writer of this memorandum made this statement (and it is quoted accurately) the OSWALD file was open following the completion of work in response to the State Department memorandum dated October 25, 1960." [NARA 1993.07.01.17:55:47:8100390]

The CIA Memorandum dated September 18, 1975 also claimed that the file was opened because of OSWALD'S defection and his possible re-entry into the United States.

OSWALD, however, never officially expressed to any U.S. Government official, an intention to return, until February 1961. The CIA Memorandum dated September 18, 1975, did not explain why the CIA waited over a year before opening an OSWALD 201 file. The HSCA still could not resolve this issue.

THE HSCA EXPLAINS DELAY

The HSCA reviewed CIA files of 11 individuals on a list of defectors supplied to the State Department from the CIA and determined that: "201 files were opened in December 1960, for each of the five (including OSWALD) who did not have 201 files prior to receipt of the State Department inquiry. In each case the slot for 'source document' referred to an Agency component [CI/SIG] rather than to a dated document." The HSCA interpreted the fact that five other 201 files on defectors were also opened in December 1960, to mean that there was nothing extraordinary about initiating OSWALD'S file at this time. However, it allowed: "This analysis only explained why a file on OSWALD was finally opened; it did not explain the seemingly long delay in the opening of the file."

THE SOURCE DOCUMENT WAS CI/SIG

The Committee tried again:

Finally, a reference to the original form that was used to start a file on OSWALD did not resolve this issue since the appropriate space that would normally indicate the 'source document' that initiated the action referred to CI/SIG rather than to a dated document." The CIA indicated to the HSCA that it was 'customary to refer to a component when the opening action is taken on that component's authority.'

There was nothing extraordinary about CI/SIG appearing in the Source Document Box. This was the component that sometimes handled defectors, although its main job was to unearth moles. The CIA, however, deleted the information in the source box for 30 years because it was weird that the molehunters opened the OSWALD file. It also indicated a familiarity on ANGLETON'S part with OSWALD while OSWALD was in the Soviet Union. Edward Petty was asked about why this information was withheld: "It's an internal indicator that has no real sense to anybody except to somebody who's going to read something into it."

To prove there was nothing irregular about CI/SIG waiting one year before opening an OSWALD 201 file, the HSCA did a broader analysis. It "reviewed the files of 13 of the 14 persons on the CIA's November 21, 1960, response to a State Department letter inquiring about defectors, and of 16 other defectors (from an original list of 380 supplied by the CIA) who were American-born, had defected during the years 1958 to 1963, and who had returned to the United States during that same time period." The HSCA stated that of 29 defectors whose files were reviewed, 8 had been the Subject of 201 files before the time of their defection. This group was of interest to the CIA before they defected. The HSCA: "In only 4 of the remaining 21 cases were 201 files opened at the time of their defection. The files on the 17 other defectors were opened from four months to several years after the defection.

None of the other defectors had openly threatened to give the Soviets classified military information about American radar. OSWALD was a special case and nothing could be gained by comparing him to how other defectors were treated.

The HSCA was finally "able to determine the basis for opening OSWALD'S file on December 9, 1960, by interviewing and then deposing Ann Egerter or Ann Eggerter who was directly responsible for initiating the opening action. By her account the questioning focused on the circumstances of opening the file and possibly related procedural practices. Her story is a fairly simple one. There was a State Department request for information concerning a list of defectors. She did the basic work in preparing the information and then, on her own decision, opened 201 files on each of the individuals, totaling about 12 in all. One of them was LEE HARVEY OSWALD. She also, on her own decision, noted a restriction that required requesters for information on any of those people to contact CI Staff." [CIA OLC 78-2058 5.23.78] The only reason CI/SIG had Plans open an OSWALD 201 file was because it had to due to Martin and Mitchell flap.

MARTIN & MITCHELL

On September 6, 1960, one month before this document was written, William Martin & Bernon Mitchell, two mathematicians working for the National Security Administration, defected to Russia. They were discovered to be homosexuals, which indirectly led to the resignation of the personnel director of the National Security Administration, and the firing of 26 other employees for sexual deviation. Soon, the House of Representatives passed a bill giving the Secretary of Defense the power to fire National Security Administration employees without explanation and without appeal, if they were security risks. The White House wanted to know if there were any more defectors like Martin and Mitchell, capable of providing useful intelligence information to the Soviet Bloc.

THE REQUEST FOR INFORMATION ON DEFECTORS FROM STATE

On October 25, 1960, the Director of the Bureau of Intelligence and Research of the State Department, Hugh C. Cummings, sent a letter to Richard Bissell, the Deputy Director/Plans of the CIA, which read:

Dear Dick:

Our efforts to answer recent informal inquiries, including some from the White House Staff, have revealed that, though the CIA and the FBI have detailed records concerning Americans who have been recruited as intelligence agents by Bloc countries, there does not appear to be a complete listing of these Americans now living in Bloc countries who might be called 'defectors.' Using definitions of DCID/4/2, these persons might be described as those who have either been capable of providing useful intelligence to the Bloc or those who desire to resettle in Bloc countries and had been significantly exploited for communist propaganda purposes. This would mean that no attention need be paid to Americans whose resettlement within the Bloc had no counter-intelligence implications or had attracted no particular attention; for instance this definition would not cover individual U.S. citizens or Eastern Europeans of Chinese origin who returned to the 'homeland' because they had never been completely assimilated into the American society. There is an attached list of such persons, covering the last 18 months, and it would be appreciated if the Agency could verify and possibly expand this list for the use of interested Bureaus of the Department. Sincerely yours, Hugh S. Cummings, Jr.

THE BUREAU OF INTELLIGENCE AND RESEARCH

The author of this letter, Hugh C. Cummings, Jr., a former Ambassador to Indonesia, was appointed Director of the Bureau of Intelligence and Research of the State Department in 1957. The Bureau of Intelligence and Research included numerous CIA personnel. William McAfee, the Chief of Staff for Coordination of the Bureau of Intelligence and Research in 1963, was listed in Who's Who in the CIA as having worked for the CIA under State Department cover since 1951. In April 1957 he entered the Bureau of Intelligence and Research, and by May 1960, he had been promoted to Supervisor, Intelligence Research Specialist. McAfee became Assistant Deputy Director for Coordination in June 1967. He was a Deputy Director of the Bureau of Intelligence and Research from 1972 through 1977. [State Dept. Bio. Reg. 1977] McAfee's Deputy, James D. Crowley, a Mexico Regional Administration Specialist, worked for the CIA since 1961. In November 1963 he was promoted to Intelligence Operations Specialist. [State Dept. Bio. Reg. 1977] John T. Noonan, Chief of the Intelligence Reporting Branch of the Bureau of Intelligence and Research, was listed in Who's Who in the CIA. Note the reference to recent informal inquiries, including some from the White House staff. The letters DCID stand for Director/Central Intelligence/Directive. The CIA denied my request for the substance of DCID 4/2, which was CIA-originated. The CIA Information Review Committee is currently reviewing this decision. [CIA FOIA F93-1559] On September 14, 1995, the CIA suggested I send my request to Frank M. Machak at the State Department. I have not as yet heard from Machak and the file was never released as on 2010.

Richard Bissell, who this memo was addressed to, had graduated from Groton and earned a PH. D. from Yale in 1939. He attended and headed the London School of Economics. At Yale, Richard Bissell was a member of the America First Committee, a Nazi-front group active in the United States in the late 1930's and early 1940's. During World War II he worked in the War Shipping Administration. In 1948 he joined the Marshall Plan and in 1954 he entered the CIA. Richard Bissell described himself as a high risk man.

Attached to the request was a list of 12 defectors known to the State Department entitled, "List Of American Defectors." Out of the 12, five had defected from the U.S. Armed Forces. The list provided the sources on which the State Department information was based. The defectors listed were:

1. Morris and Mollie Block.
2. David DuBois.
3. Sergeant Joseph Dutkanicz, U.S. Army.
4. Sergeant Ernie F. Fletcher (Cincusareur telegram SX 5307 of 0617442 August 5, 1959), U.S. Army.
5. Sergeant (FNU) Jones (Air Intelligence Information Report number 1430223 August 9, 1960), U.S. Air Force.
6. William Martin, National Security Administration employee.
7. Bernon Mitchell, National Security Administration employee.
8. LEE HARVEY OSWALD, tourist.
9. Libero Ricciardelli, tourist.
10. Pvt. Vladimir Sloboda, U.S. Army.
11. Robert Edward Webster, tourist (see NYT article of October 20, 1959).
12. Bruce Frederick Davis, U.S. Army. (Embassy Moscow telegram 1032 of October 22, 1960)."

When the CIA listed OSWALD in its response to Hugh C. Cummings, a newspaper article was cited as the CIA's source.

RICHARD BISSELL'S RESPONSE

Richard Bissell signed a response to Hugh C. Cummings on November 2, 1960: "I have your letter dated October 25, 1960, requesting certain information concerning Americans living in Bloc countries who might be called 'defectors.' Our files are being searched for the information you desire." The "Signature Recommended" on this document was that of S. H. Horton, Acting Chief of ANGLETON'S Counter-Intelligence Staff (AC/CI). According to Who's Who in the CIA, S. Herman Horton was born on October 9, 1913. From 1944 to 1946 he was in the Planning Office of the War Department. On December 20, 1954, when DD/P Frank Wisner established a separate Counter-Intelligence staff, S. Herman Horton was appointed Deputy Chief. From 1947 to 1961 S. Herman Horton's CIA cover was Deputy Chief of Operations/Composite Operation Group at the Pentagon. S. Herman Horton had drafted this document for Deputy Director/Plans, Richard Bissell to sign. In 1961 S. Herman Horton assumed State Department cover. He was dispatched to Pretoria, South Africa. S. Herman Horton and ANGLETON helped the South African Government lay the foundation of the Bureau of State Security. S. Herman Horton remained in South Africa through 1964. [Covert Action #13 July to August 1981] The name of Birch D. O'Neal appeared on this document in two places. Copies of S. Herman Horton's letter were sent to COPS [Covert Operations?] Copies were sent to Acting Chief /Counter-Intelligence (Horton); SR/6/Stacy; SR/CE/Grady; CI/SIG. The Association of Former Intelligence Officers 1983 Membership Directory listed a Harry L. Grady and William J. Grady. [Public Information Research POB 680635 San Antonio, Texas 78268]

The markings "C/CI/SIG:BDO'NEAL: bd x-2356 November 2, 1960," also appeared. S.H. Horton drafted a reply to the Bureau of Intelligence and Research on behalf of the CIA. The document contained markings "C/CI/SIG/ BO'NEAL:bd x-2356 November 18, 1960," as well as the identical dissemination markings found on the November 2, 1960, response to Hugh Cummings.

The CIA responded to this State Department request on November 21, 1960, and provided a long list of defectors and a paragraph about each of them. The information on OSWALD'S defection was classified Secret, as were seven of the 13 cases listed. The defection of the stepson of W.E.B. DuBois, "the well-known Negro leader and writer," was classified Secret. Robert Edward Webster's defection was Confidential. Five of the defections were unclassified, including Martin & Mitchell. [CIA 596-252F; WCD p69] The State Department sent this document to the White House to answer any questions it had about defectors.

OVERALL ANALYSIS

Why wasn't OSWALD 201 file opened earlier due to the number and nature of documents which had accumulated about him?' The HSCA concluded that "opening a file years after a defection was not uncommon." OSWALD was not a common case. Richard Helms stated: "I can't imagine why it would have taken an entire year. I am amazed. Defect to the USSR October 1959. This is December 1960. There wasn't a 201 file already in existence, I am amazed. Are you sure that there wasn't? Yes, (deleted) but (deleted) had they not opened a file a lot earlier. I can't explain that."

When the CIA responded to a letter from the Department of State asking if any defectors to the Soviet Union posed any security threats it received the biography below that failed to mention OSWALD'S threat to give up information on something connected with American radar. This was a deliberate omission.

OSWALD, Lee Henry

The following information is SECRET:

Born October 18, 1939 in New Orleans, Louisiana, Lee Henry OSWALD joined the United States Marines at the age of seventeen because he did not want to be a "burden" on his mother who was widowed prior to his birth. While in the Marines, OSWALD, a private first class, became a radar operator and had fourteen months service in Japan and the Philippines. About a year before his discharge from the Marines OSWALD began to teach himself to read and speak Russian. After receiving an honorable discharge from the Marines on September 3, 1959 OSWALD visited his mother in Waco, Texas for about three days and then departed. A note written to his mother from New Orleans stated that he had booked passage to Europe and that he was doing something he felt he must do. Shortly thereafter he appeared at the United States Embassy in Moscow and renounced his U.S. citizenship, giving his reason the plight of the American Negro and U.S. "imperialism" abroad. OSWALD acknowledged mail addressed to him at the Hotel Metropole in Moscow in 1959; however he failed to do so in 1960. OSWALD is reported to have stated that regardless of any material shortcomings he sees in the USSR, he will never return to the United States.

OSWALD'S 201 FILE

The HSCA's investigation of OSWALD'S 201 file was based largely on erroneous leads provided by this author:

MEMORANDUM FOR THE RECORD

SUBJECT: Briefing of G. Robert Blakey, Chief Counsel of the HSCA July 25, 1977. Present at the briefing held in GG-14

CIA: Douglas Cummings, OLC, John Walker O/SA/DO/O, William Sturbitts, LA Division, Raymond Reardon, Office of Security, Robert Wall, CI Staff, Russell B. Holmes CI Staff

1. The undersigned was called to brief Blakey on the Agency's official file on OSWALD. A copy of notes prepared for the briefing is attached.

2. The briefing, or more accurately, question and answer period, lasted about three quarters of an hour.

4. The first point the undersigned brought up in reference to the Staff's file on LEE HARVEY OSWALD was the document opening the file. The undersigned stated that this document had been released under provisions of Freedom of Information Act and a photograph of the sanitized version had appeared in the National Enquirer of April 26, 1977, along with the comment by a former CIA employee, Patrick McGarvey, that the existence of a 201 file on an individual meant the individual had been recruited by the Agency. The undersigned said such a statement was false.

What happened here is that Canfield and I had run into a dude from the Navy named Robert Sibley who helped us sell a story on OSWALD's CIA employment file to the National Enquirer. In CIA Diary, CIA defector Philip Agee wrote: "Files are maintained on all agents and they always begin with the number 201, followed by a number of five to eight digits. The 201 file contains all the documents that pertain to a given agent..." [Agee CIA Diary p59] I had obtained a copy of OSWALD'S 201 via the FOIA. However in the American Armed Forces a 201-file is a personnel file, in the CIA it is not. Fidel Castro has a gigantic 201-file and he does not work for the CIA. The CIA indicated:

A CIA 201 file is opened when a person is considered to be of potential intelligence or counter-intelligence significance. The opening of such a file is designed to serve the purpose of placing certain CIA information pertaining to that individual in one centralized records system. The 201 file is maintained in a folder belonging to the Directorate for Plans, the CIA component responsible for clandestine activities. The existence of a 201 file does not necessarily connote any actual relationship or contact with the CIA. [HSCA R p200]

When Attorney Marvin Miller asked ANGLETON if a CIA 201 file always meant CIA employment, he said: "Not necessarily." Asked to elaborate, his CIA attorney interjected: "On behalf of Director Turner, I would object to any question requiring a definition of 201 file. That information does remain classified." Edward Petty stated:

All personalities of any interest whatever, would be assigned 201 numbers. The 201 does not at all indicate operational interest, except that for some reason, someone decided to keep it and assign a number; because if you retrieve it from the file you've got to have it numbered. Any personality of any interest at all to the CIA operations side, got a 201 file. 201 files would not normally be opened on Staff members. The personnel files for Staff members were held by the Office of Security. Those are Security Files and have another designation. Agent personnel would have 201 files. But a 201 file is simply a personality file of anybody who was ever of interest to the CIA. A great many people who were of almost no interest to the CIA would have 201 files simply because if you have information on a person and you don't want to throw it away, you open a 201 file on him.

Richard Helms told Mr. Goldsmith of the HSCA: "My recollection is that when an individual was an agent of the Agency all the papers on him were taken over by the division that was handling him and there was nothing available in the central records to identify him as an agent. Now there obviously would be exceptions to that but in the case where there were exceptions, I would think all that would be in the file, the central file, would be a carding saying to the FE Division or something...My impression was, the original impression, all the papers were kept in the Division that was handling the agent...I don't remember anymore how this dilemma was resolved about running traces, and on a fellow who was already an agent and how we dealt with the problem of protecting that fact, I don't remember, I don't recall anymore."

SENSITIVE AND NON SENSITIVE 201 FILES

The regular 201 file generally contained information such as place of birth, family, occupation and organizational affiliation. In addition, a sensitive file might be also maintained on that same person. The sensitive file generally encompassed matters which were potentially embarrassing to the Agency or matters obtained from sources, or by methods that the Agency sought to protect." [RR p144] Richard Helms disagreed: "My recollection is that there was one 201 file. I wouldn't be surprised if there were occasional cases where the thing was so sensitive that somebody made a separate file in order to protect a certain category of information." Agee stated: "The 201 file is divided into two parts that are stored separately for maximum security. One part contains true name documents while the other part contains cryptonym documents and operational information."

WHAT PERCENTAGE OF CIA 201 FILES ARE EMPLOYMENT?

The CIA had stipulated that a 201 file could mean Agency-employment. But, what percentage of the 201 files indicated employment, and what percentage indicated mere intelligence interest? While studying OPERATION CHAOS the Rockefeller Commission discovered that 300,000 names of American dissidents were stored in a CIA computer. For some of these individuals, "a 201 or personality file would be opened when enough information had been collected to warrant a file or when the individual was of interest to another government agency that looked to the CIA for information." The Rockefeller Commission came across the general breakdown of 201 files:

An analysis by the Agency of a group of [201] files opened on American citizens in 1974, as reported to the Commission's staff, showed that 70% of these files were opened on persons who were sources of information or assistance to Agency, 19% related to Americans of possible use to the Agency and 11% related to Americans who were of foreign counter-intelligence interest.

If a 201 file existed on an American, there was an 89% chance he or she was of some use or possible use to the CIA. Since 201 represented employment 89% of the time, many former CIA Staff members and employees were certain it was exclusively an employment file. Former CIA D/DP Staff member Victor Marchetti commented:

The 201 file originated in the Armed Services. An OSWALD 201 personnel file was located at Marine Corps Headquarters. [FBI NO-100-16601 12.9.63] It was a basic employment file containing pay receipts, sickness or accident reports, unit assignments, etc. It carried over into the CIA. For example, if I wanted to find out about an agent, say Philip Agee, I would call the relevant component and say, 'Send over Agee's 201 file.'" In a telephone interview, Victor Marchetti added: "If you can prove that it is a 201 file, that's the thing...if you can prove it was a 201 file then he was an Agent...at minimum a contact, but more likely an Agent.

Former CIA Agent Bradley E. Ayers, who trained anti-Castro Cubans for the Bay of Pigs invasion, observed: "The fact that OSWALD had one [a 201 file] is absolutely fantastic. It means he was either a contract agent, working for them full-time on contract over a period of time, or he was on some kind of CIA assignment." [rec. tel. con. in possession of Nat'l Enq. 4.26.77]

Former CIA Staff member Patrick McGarvey: "You've got a bombshell, man, you have the one that cracks the egg. If a guy had a 201 file, that means he's a full-time professional staff employee of that organization."

This researcher and Michael Canfield were also mistakenly convinced that OSWALD'S 201 file indicated he worked for the CIA in a official capacity. We sold the story to The National Enquirer. The National Enquirer verified our contention that a CIA 201 file was a CIA employment file with the aforementioned former CIA agents, then published it, despite the fact that it was not true. I had unwittingly floated a false news story that linked OSWALD to the CIA. What a remarkable turn of events.

The request to Headquarters to open a 201 file on OSWALD was sent to the Records Integration Division for processing on December 9, 1960.

WHY LEE HENRY OSWALD?

The HSCA asked: "Why was he carried as LEE HENRY OSWALD in his 201 file?
OSWALD'S 201 file was opened under the name LEE HENRY OSWALD. No Agency witness could explain why. All Agency personnel testified that this must have been occasioned innocently by bureaucratic error." The CIA assured the Committee that, even with an altered middle name, it could have found him in its files. Ann Egerter, who retired in 1969 and died on July 16, 1990, was asked about this error:

4. She was pressed on why the name LEE HENRY OSWALD appeared on appeared on one occasion, instead of correctly as LEE HARVEY OSWALD. She could not explain, speculating that it could have been either a mistake, or that someone other than herself made the entry as the handwriting appeared quite differently than the rest of her writing on the form. She pointed out she did all 12 folders at the same time and got tired of writing, which made her handwriting deteriorate."

There were other inconsistencies: "Defected to the USSR in October 1959, Radar operator, U.S. Marine Corps as of 1960." All of these sounded like innocuous mistakes, but they were there for a reason. They appeared there to make it seem that CI-SIG had so little interest in OSWALD they could even spell his goddamned name right or his chronology! ANGLETON was deliberately leaving a paper trail that indicated CI/SIG had so little knowledge of, or interest in, OSWALD, that OSWALD might just as well been an ant that defected. Raymond Rocca would eventually correct it: "NB: HARVEY" - Name at Birth - HARVEY.

DID 'AG' STAND FOR AGENT?

The HSCA: "What was the meaning of 'AG' under 'Other Identification' in OSWALD'S 201 file?" The CIA was asked to explain its significance because the HSCA believed "this term was considered to be of potential significance in resolving the issue of OSWALD'S alleged Agency relationship." (This researcher erroneously suggested to the HSCA that "AG" might stand for Agent or Agency.) The CIA claimed that "'AG' is the 'OI' (Other Identification) code - meaning 'actual or potential defectors to the East or the Sino/Soviet bloc including Cuba' - and that anyone so described could have the 'OI' code 'AG.'" This code was reportedly "added to OSWALD'S opening form because of the comment on the document that he had defected to the Soviet Union in 1959." The letters "AG" appeared on the 201 files of many Soviet and Cuban defectors. A November 15, 1974 CIA Handbook stated: "OI Code: a two letter symbol used in conjunction with the 201 personality records in the 201 system to record the association of an individual with organizations or activities of operational interest. OI Codes cover intelligence and security service affiliation, whether staff or agent, or known or suspect, as well as activities of DDO interest. There are two categories of OI codes for use by components:

(1) general OI codes

(2) OI codes assigned to a specific component for intelligence services or other specific organizations. The 201 system has the capability of producing machine listings of 201 personalities by OI codes. For example, if an OI code has been opened for the security service of a certain country, a listing may be compiled of all members of that service."

Ann Egerter reported:

The staff questioning made it clear that the HSCA wished to determine if OSWALD had an agent relationship with the Agency. She feels an effort was made in two or three different ways to get her to make statements that there was some such relationship. For instance there were the letter AG on the form employed in opening 201 files. She was asked if this meant Agent. She replied it did not although she could not recall what it did mean. She also made the point in her testimony that she did not handle agent files.

The CIA stated:

1. In June 1960 a new form 831 (for opening 201's) came into effect which made the old (October 1957) type form used by the OSWALD 201 obsolete. Since 201's are opened by the individual offices and not at a central point, the Records Integration Division allowed for an overlap period before not accepting the October 1959 form 831's. The June 1960 form was obviously geared for machine input and specifically has spaces for the machine codes. The analyst, (initials N.S.) who reviewed the 831 form on OSWALD and assigned the 201 number added the machine codes to the old type opening sheet.

A. The OI Code (Other Identification) "AG" means "actual or potential defectors to the East or the Sino/Soviet Bloc including Cuba." The analyst added this OI code because CI/SIG (Egerter) had stated that OSWALD had defected to the USSR in October 1959. Any person who could be described as the above could have an OI Code "AG."

B. CI/SIG has been crossed out because the space now required a machine code (as explained in paragraph one above). The number "73" is called a "non-country code" which means in machine input language that CI/SIG (the office which had opened the file).

C. The number "074" is under category #10 "Country of Residence" not "047" under category #12 "Second Country Interest," as stated in HSCA letter of August 15, 1978. The number "074" is a "country code" and means the USSR.

(Note: The machine codes in Paragraph 1a, b, & c were obtained from a Machine Listing produced by IMS/Procedures Branch/EDIS (Electronic Data Input Section). It is a computer listing to identify computer fields. The IMS analysts also have handbooks entitled "Handbook for Analysis" which also specifies the same information).

OTHER MARKINGS

In Section III, the information in the slot entitled COUNTRY OF RESIDENCE read USSR - 074 and the ACTION DESK read ~~CI/SIG~~ 731. Edward Petty commented, "'Action Desk' can have several meanings. It could be that a report from the field that needs to answered. It could be a case or the place of residence of the file." The SECOND COUNTRY INTEREST read "SR." If numbers were to replace letters for security reasons why not fill out an entirely new 201-File-Request with just numbers? I don't buy the CIA's explanation and believe the words were crossed out for a more sinister reason. Finally, the file was marked Restricted and signed by Egerter. [CIA 2-524, 1-1-B, 1187-436, 593-252C]

WHY WAS OSWALD'S 201 FILE RESTRICTED?

A CIA Handbook stated:

RESTRICTED DOSSIERS

a. Access to a sensitive 201 dossier may be restricted by holding the file at the desk or placing it on restriction on Central Files.

(1) The dossier may be restricted by checking Box 2 on the 201 Personality File Action Request (Form 831) when the file is opened.

(2) The dossier may be restricted by holding it on a permanent charge from Central Files. (Note: To maintain the restriction of a dossier being returned to the Central Files for retention, a File Restriction Notice (Form 2021) must accompany the dossier).

(3) The dossier may be restricted and held in Central Files by submitting a File Restriction Notice (Form 2021).

b. Access to a restricted dossier located in Central Files is limited to the personnel of the restricting desk or persons authorized by that desk. Any request for the charge of a restricted dossier or any document within a restricted dossier held in Central Files will be forwarded with the entire dossier and a multiple-routed cover sheet to the restricting desk. This desk may then forward the file to the requestor or deny the request and return the dossier to Central Files. The desk will notify the requestor of a denial.

c. Anyone requesting a restricted dossier, or a document within a restricted dossier, permanently or temporarily charged to a desk, will be referred to that desk by Central Files.

d. Access to a restricted dossier located in Central Files is limited to the personnel he HSCA asked: "Why was OSWALD'S 201 file restricted? The form used to initiate the opening of the file contains a notation indicating the file was to be 'restricted.' This indication was considered potentially significant because of the CIA's practice of restricting access to the files of its agents to persons on a 'need-to-know' basis. The individual who actually placed the restriction on OSWALD'S file testified that this was done simply to allow her to remain aware of the developments that might have occurred with regard to the file. The restriction achieved this purpose because any person seeking access to the file would first have to notify the restricting officer, at which time the officer would be apprized of any developments."

According to Ann Egerter, the who opened OSWALD'S 201 file, after more than one year of total disinterest in OSWALD (between the time he defected and the time the CIA opened a 201 file on him), the CIA was now intensely interested in him; so interested, it could not wait for a periodic check of his file, but had to have, instantaneously, knowledge of any intelligence officer who was interested in OSWALD so that the restricting officer would be apprised of any developments. A far more plausible explanation was that, due to the sensitivity of OSWALD'S mission, ANGLETON was interested in anyone who was interested in OSWALD.

The HSCA concluded: "Restricting access to a file was not necessarily indicative of a relationship with the CIA." Edward Petty agreed: "Restriction does not have any operational implications. It could." The initials NS appear on the bottom of the document, as do the letters CS Copy [Clandestine Services copy], OSWALD'S 201 number, and a still-deleted signature.

OSWALD'S 201 FILE DID NOT CONNECT HIM TO THE CIA

As stated, OSWALD'S 201 file bore no indication of his connection to ANGLETON because it was created by Ann Egerter and Jane Roman, who both worked for ANGLETON. These documents indicated OSWALD was a defector, not an operation. OSWALD'S 201 file was unwittingly forged by these ladies; OSWALD'S Agency connection was a secret even within the CIA. ANGLETON knew the system, and could easily have done this. Jane Roman's husband Howard Roman, was a close associate of ANGLETON. [Hersh, The Old Boys, p363] Edward Petty commented: "Jane Roman and Howard Roman worked in different areas of the CIA. Jane is retired, Howard had died. Remember, you dilute the whole business if you reach too far." Evidence existed that ANGLETON forged other 201 files.

ZR RIFLE'S 201 FILE

William K. Harvey's handwritten notes concerning his talk with Sid Gottlieb indicated that he was considering assassinating a world leader and blaming it on the Soviets - with ANGLETON'S help. "Cover: planning should include provision for blaming Soviets or Czechs in case of blow. (Deleted). Should have phony 201 file in RI to backstop this, all documents therein forged & backdated. Should look like CE [Counter-Espionage] file." William K. Harvey's assassin would have a 201 file which was forged and backdated so that it simulated that of an Soviet or Czech assassin."Backstop" meant to provide bona fides that appeared to be real when checked. Other notes read: "RIS cover caution Bankruptcy - no Star eyes - JIM A." Russian Intelligence Service cover would be cautiously provided by ANGLETON. A false 201 file would be created.

THE HSCA INVESTIGATED

The HSCA assessed William K. Harvey's notes and inquired: "Did the CIA maintain a dual filing system on OSWALD?" The HSCA investigated, but never published its conclusions. "When pressed on the possibility that there might be another such file elsewhere on OSWALD, she said that there would have to be a 'fake file.' When pressed on this she stated the word was an incorrect one, and that what would have been would have been a file folder with a piece of paper in it referring to the existence of an original file somewhere else, specifying where." [CIA MFR 5.23.78 OLC-78-2058; HSCA R p205; William K. Harvey's handwritten notes: Z-R Rifle Item 42 CIA cover ltr.; USDC-DDC 75-0944-Civ.]

Cleveland Cram, a former CIA Staff member who conducted a study of CI, was contacted in August 1993. He stated,

It's conceivable you could create a phony 201 file, but when you got to checking on the 201 file, it would very soon become evident that there was no support for the documents in it, and people would start looking around and find out it was phony. The minute you get into something like that, you got one or two people involved, maybe four, you start fiddling around with trying to create a phony file and the first thing you know somebody says, not at the time, maybe five years later, ten years later, now especially when all this conspiracy crap comes out. It would leak. I was so long in the CIA and I know that it was very difficult, almost impossible to keep secrets. There are leaks like crazy. There is no connection to reality. What would be the object of creating a false 201 file? Bill Harvey, towards the end of his life there, when he was in ZR RIFLE, was getting a little bit flaky. He was on the marts about a pitcher or more a day.

Scott Breckinridge, a 26 year veteran of the CIA who spent 14 years in the Inspector General's Office, commented:

It was clear that Mr. Harvey and an associate initially contemplated trying to establish false files. It is equally clear to anyone will to pursue the question beyond its asking, that they did not do so. Why he did not cannot be recaptured factually today as Mr. Harvey is dead, but that he did not is clear. Perhaps he tried and simply could not. In any event it was not necessary to do so anyway if limited records were desired to enhance the security of the operation.

Richard Helms gave authorization for ZR/RIFLE to continue on February 19, 1962, and on March 6, 1963. [HSCA CIA 3319, 3329] Helms told the HSCA:

The project so it could be funded, but my distinct recollection is that I told the case officer who was involved with this that this was to be changed in its concept, in other words, there was absolutely no point in having a professional killer on the payroll as such, and that he was to try and find something else for him to do.

The memorandum in question stated: "For the purpose of ZRRIFLE activities, you are hereby authorized to retain the services of Principal Agent QJWIN and such other principal agents and sub-agents as may be required. This authorization will continue to be in force through December 31, 1962, subject to renewal at that time...Richard Helms." [CIA D002109]

Goldsmith: Was the case officer who handled this project William Harvey?

Helms: I always thought it was (Deleted). Maybe Harvey started it and (Deleted) took over it later. Maybe that is what happened...Harvey came to the Agency after many years with the FBI. He handled the Elizabeth Bentley case..."

Richard Helms was asked if ZR/RIFLE used fake or cover 201's: "No, I don't know what was done (deleted)."

Goldsmith: a case where, at the very least, agency personnel were contemplating the use of a fake 201 file and possibly a fake operational file.

Helms: Yes it looks like that. But then his boss would have known about this. He would have had to get permission to do that. Somebody would have known about it.

Goldsmith: Again for the purposes of clarification, when a file is faked in the manner suggested by the author of these particular papers, how many people would know about it?

Helms: Well, the person who instructed it to be done, I assume his boss, the person who would do it, and whether anybody in RI or in the Registry would know about it is problematic. They probably would not."

Richard Helms also told the HSCA,

He was not aware of the one that you brought to my attention [William K. Harvey's phony 201 file proposal] and I am not aware of any others. ZR RIFLE originally started out as an indication of a project which was supposed to cover a man who in turn had been taken on to have available an operational capability to kill people. A man was hired, before I was aware of these things. But anyway, after I became DD/P, I put on the shelf for good, all and any use of this capacity for killing people. We didn't need that.

OSWALD'S HT LINGUAL FILE

After the assassination of President John F. Kennedy, the CIA searched its HT LINGUAL file for additional material: "Approximately 30 pieces of correspondence that were considered potentially related to the investigation of OSWALD'S case (even though not necessarily directly related to OSWALD) were discovered. None of these was judged by the CIA to be of any significance. These materials were stored in a separate HT LINGUAL file." The HSCA search of the OSWALD HT LINGUAL file yielded two index cards:

INDEX CARD ONE
OSWALD, LEE HARVEY SECRET: CI-Project/RE
USSR EYES ONLY November 9, 1959
7-305
[NR/RI NOV 20, 1959
Recent defector to the USSR. Former Marine.
WATCH LIST
DELETE 15/3/60 March 15, 1960

CI/PROJECT/RE

Initially this researcher believed the words "CI/Project/RE" stood for Counter-Intelligence Project, Russia, Europe. As a result of this the HSCA asked: "Did OSWALD ever participate in a Counter-Intelligence project?" Edward Petty stated, "That is ridiculous. Russia and Europe, in my experience, were never tied together in that particular way. What you have is divisions handling possible operations such as SR [Soviet Russia] Division, SB [Soviet Bloc] Division. "E" only came to represent the European Division much later than the date on this document. The European Division was always EE so it's mixing apples and oranges." Edward Petty was correct, it probably did not signify that.

One former CIA employee told the HSCA the notation was a convenient name used to describe the HT LINGUAL project. Another testified that CI PROJECT was the name of the component that ran the HT LINGUAL project, and "RE" was the name of the translator who had worked on the OSWALD documents. The CIA told the HSCA that "there existed an office within the counter-intelligence staff that was known as CI/PROJECT, a cover title that had been used to hide the true nature of the office's functions. This office was responsible for the exploitation of the material produced by the HT LINGUAL project. The Agency further explained that RE represented a former employee's initials." The CIA: "RE" represents the initials of a CIA employee now retired under cover. The presence of the initials indicates that on November 9, 1959, RE placed OSWALD'S name on the 'Watch List' for the reason given on the card, to wit, 'Recent defector to the USSR - Former Marine.'"

The HSCA questioned various former employees of the CIA who may have had some knowledge of the HTLINGUAL program and/or of these cards in particular, as to their recollection of the meanings of the aforementioned notations. Some of them recognized the cards as relating to the HTLINGUAL project but were unable to identify the meaning of the notation. "CI/Project/RE." (Deposition of Ann Egerter, 5/17/78, p. 60. Deposition of Birch O'Neal, 7/20/78, p. 39) However, one person explained that the "CI Project" was "simply a name of convenience which was used to describe the HTLINGUAL project" (Deposition of Raymond Rocca, 7/18/78, p. 221).

The key to this is that the testimony of RE - or identity - was absent from the HSCA's report.

7-305 AND THE OFFICE OF SECURITY

The CIA told the HSCA: "The number 7-305 indicates the communication (not necessarily written) to the Office of Security informing the latter of the Staff's interest in seeing any mail either coming from or going to LEE HARVEY OSWALD in the Soviet Union." The HSCA reported:

The CIA's response went on to state the handwritten number, 7-305 was a reference to the communication from the Counter-Intelligence Staff to the Office of Security expressing the Counter-Intelligence Staff's interest in seeing any mail to or from OSWALD in the Soviet Union.

The CIA's Office of Security, acting alone over a 24-year period, ran over 91 separate mail-cover operations relating to individuals within the United States. That meant an average of 4 mail covers a year. According to the Rockefeller Commission: "Most of the cases involved CIA employees under investigation..."

Why was the first document on OSWALD routed to the Office of Security? Why did CI think that the Office of Security had a mail cover on OSWALD? The Office of Security did not run many mail covers. When it did it was a very select list. Was OSWALD that dangerous? What had merited this sort of attention? And if this degree of attention was paid to OSWALD by the Agency, why wasn't there a 201 file for him in 1959? Or was OSWALD being surreptitiously checked on by ANGLETON?

Edward Petty commented, "Where is this information from?" He was told, "From the HSCA Hearings." Edward Petty responded, "Certainly Office of Security didn't have a mail cover on him in the Soviet Union, you can be sure of that. I don't know why the Office of Security might have had an interest."

N/R-RI

The CIA: "N/R-RI November 20, 1959 - this notation indicates that a name trace run in central files resulted in a NO RECORD on November 20, 1959." On November 2, 1959, the FBI received a State Department cable about OSWALD. The Bureau telexed the CIA and asked what it knew about him. "N/R-RI November 20, 1959," signified "that a name trace run through central records register [Records Integration] indicated that there was no record for LEE HARVEY OSWALD as of that date." unable

WATCH LIST

The words "Watch List" appeared on this card. The CIA claimed that an employee at HT LINGUAL placed OSWALD'S name on the Watch List:

On November 9, 1959, an employee whose initials were RE placed OSWALD'S name on the Watch List for the HT LINGUAL project for the reason stated on the card - that OSWALD was a recent defector to the Soviet Union and an ex-Marine.

When HSCA requested the criteria used by the CIA in compiling a Watch List, the Committee was referred to this Rockefeller Report section:

Individuals or organizations of particular intelligence or Counter-Intelligence interest were specified in Watch Lists provided to the mail project by the Counter-Intelligence staff [ANGLETON], by other CIA components, and by the FBI. On the average, the list included 300 names, including about 100 furnished by the FBI. The Watch List included the names of foreigners and of U.S. citizens. The mail intercept project was programmed to provide support data (if possible) as to Soviet attempts to:

- (a) Penetrate the United States Government and strategic defense industries.
- (b) Recruit travelers to the USSR, including educational leaders, businessmen and students.
- (c) Exploit United States defectors.
- (d) Communicate with Soviet illegals and spies
- (e) Exploit Soviet exchange student contacts.
- (f) Exploit and disrupt dissident groups.
- (g) As a by-product, gain operational information on Soviet censorship, passports, and official document regulations within the USSR." [NARA 1993.07.01.19:37:20:530370]

Although not as exclusive as the Office of Security Mail Cover list, OSWALD was among 300 people in the United States whose mail was watched so that it could be routinely opened by the CIA. Most letters to be opened by HT LINGUAL were selected randomly; only a few were selected on the basis of the Watch List, often compiled by ANGLETON'S staff. Who had put LEE HARVEY OSWALD, teenaged defector, on it? The CI/SIG or the FBI?

THE CIA DELETES THE WORD DELETED

The most recent release of the information in this document was the word "Deleted" before April 15, 1960. The CIA had deleted the word "deleted" for 36 years. OSWALD was taken off the mail intercept Watch List just before the U-2 was shot down.

ANALYSIS: CARD TWO

INDEX CARD TWO

OSWALD, LEE HARVEY CI/SIG/Egerter 9-580

WATCH LIST 10-288

August 7, 1961 11-323

Minsk, USSR

DOB: October 18, 1939

POB: New Orleans, Louisiana

Defected to Russia 1959. August 17, 1960, received undesirable discharge from United States Marine Corps Reserve. Reportedly expresses a desire for return to the U.S. under certain conditions.

DELETED May 28, 1962.

Reviewed by AE 10/4/62

The Agency's explanation of the second HT LINGUAL Watch List card was: "On August 7, 1961, the CIA Staff Officer who opened the OSWALD 201 file requested that OSWALD'S name be placed on the 'Watch List' because of OSWALD'S expressed desire to return to the United States," as stated on the card. In 1993 the CIA released the notation "CI/SIG/Egerter." As in the case of the OSWALD 201 file, Egerter had acted on ANGLETON'S instructions.

~~9-580~~; 10-288; and 11-323

The card contained the numbers "~~9-580~~; 10-288; and 11-323." If the number 7-305 was a reference to the communication from Counter-Intelligence staff to the Office of Security expressing the Counter-Intelligence staff's interest in seeing any mail to or from OSWALD in the Soviet Union, then what CIA communications and components were signified by these numbers? The CIA provided no explanation. [CIA Res. to HSCA Req. 8.15.78 03203]

A handwritten notation indicated OSWALD'S name was deleted from the Watch List on May 28, 1962, about two weeks before he returned to America. Why was OSWALD no longer of intelligence interest to HT LINGUAL? If OSWALD were a bona fide defector, he might have been recruited by the KGB in the USSR then sent back to America. Counter-Intelligence should have been interested in all the mail he sent to and received from the USSR after his return to the United States.

The CIA stated: "Signification of handwritten notations on cards in HT LINGUAL file. Card Two: On August 7, 1961 (Deleted) asked that OSWALD'S name be placed on the Watch List for the reason that OSWALD 'reportedly expresses a desire for return to the U.S. under certain conditions.' On May 28, 1962 OSWALD'S name was removed from the Watch List."

The CIA stated it had only one general file on OSWALD however, "The single exception to the above statement concerns one HT LINGUAL document dated July 8, 1961 but discovered only on a review triggered by press publicity following the OSWALDS return to the U.S. in June 1962. The sensitivity of this intelligence precluded its inclusion in the OSWALD file in general circulation." [CIA 1634-1088]

MARINA'S OSWALD'S WATCH LIST CARDS

The HSCA found two HT LINGUAL index cards on Marina Oswald. They indicated her name was placed on the Watch List on November 26, 1963. It took a Presidential assassination to get her on the list. The first card contained the markings CI/Project/RE 12-451 and the second, a June 29, 1965 card, had the markings CI/Project/PH.

Edward Petty told this researcher:

The Routing and Record Sheet is circulated to see if anyone might be interested in a particular document. It simply goes around the circle and comes back. The document is being shopped. You can't tell if a component had an interest, except that they passed it on. They could have copied it, but basically they would have retained it if they had an interest.

Agency officials who were questioned by the HSCA testified that the substance of the DOS October 31, 1959, cable was sufficiently important to warrant the opening of a 201 file. The Clandestine Service Handbook No. 43-1-1 CSHB 70-1-1 Chapter III, ANNEX B February 15, 1960 stated: "7. Stations or branches often are concerned with personalities not of general CS concern. Files on these may be kept in any desired order. Should such personalities become of general CS interest, they must be brought into the 201 system." But because ANGLETON was secretly running OSWALD, CI/SIG did not request that Headquarters open an OSWALD dossier upon receipt of this significant information. Edward Petty was asked, "Could the quality of information trigger the opening of a 201 file?" He responded, "It wouldn't necessarily. You wouldn't immediately, necessarily open a 201 file, there might be a related file in which the document belongs. There may be a case file of some sort in which it belongs."

THE EARLY OSWALD CIA ROUTING AND RECORD SHEETS

The Routing And Record Sheet from the Office of Security that was attached to the first document on OSWALD generated by Richard E. Snyder after OSWALD defected in 1959 has not yet been declassified. We do not know if ANGLETON and CI/SIG ever received a copy but judging from the initials on the later ones you can bet your ass he did.

Document # 104-10015-10042 is a one page record and routing sheet. It is dated 04/26/62. It is from RID, CIA to SR/CI, CIA.

All totaled, the Location of Originals broke down this way when examined after the Kennedy assassination: Office of Security: 9 OSWALD Files. CI/SIG: 10 OSWALD Files. OSWALD'S 201 File: 12 OSWALD Files. In 1993 the CIA released a list of the original location of OSWALD documents. Of the documents received prior to the opening of OSWALD'S 201 file, six were found in the CIA's Office of Security file 351-164; four in CI/SIG; three in CI/SIG but were "Rec'd December 6, 1963"; one in CI/LSN [Jane Atherton Roman Counter-Intelligence liaison]; one in 201-289,248 (OSWALD'S 201-file); one in file 74-500; one in the DDP files and one, received by the CIA on November 3, 1959, in file number 201-074,8009 (Richard E. Snyder's 201 file).

The CIA released a "List of Items in OSWALD'S 201 File which predate its opening." No CIA originated documents on OSWALD were located aside from cover sheets. [NARA 1993.06.19.08:48:00:12000 4.13.64]

CIA TOLD HSCA THE ROUTING SHEETS WERE DESTROYED

The HSCA requested that the CIA indicate where documents about OSWALD had been internally disseminated and stored prior to the opening of his 201 file on December 9, 1960. It was advised: "Because document dissemination records of relatively low national security significance are retained for only a five year period, they were no longer in existence for the years 1959 to 1963. Consequently, the Agency was unable to explain either when these documents had been received, or by which component." [HSCA R p200]

In 1992 it was discovered that the CIA had lied to the HSCA. Most of the document dissemination records did exist - including some of those that were generated prior to the opening of OSWALD'S 201 file. When HSCA Chief Counsel Robert Blakey was questioned about the Routing and Record Sheets by this researcher in 1993 he responded, "You are talking about something 15 years ago and I don't have a specific memory on that one way or the other. We did the best we could to prove that OSWALD was Agency-connected in some fashion but we were unable to do so - I don't think he was."

Paul Garbler, the CIA HSCA liaison, was asked about this by this researcher: "From the very start it became our task to tell the HSCA that CIA was not involved in the Kennedy assassination. In the course of this, a lot of information that we gave them became distorted out of the HSCA Staff's sense of bias. They came to the case with bias, and that bias persisted. The [Routing and Record Sheets] were merely a record of what happened to documents. And CIA claimed at that time they had been destroyed?"

The CIA denied to the HSCA that the CIA's document dissemination records on OSWALD existed and the CIA is still withholding some dissemination records because one of them indicates that the document on OSWALD which mentioned his threat to divulge classified information to the Soviets was not retained by CI/SIG. ANGLETON kept as far away from OSWALD as possible, so his complicity has to be explained in terms of what he didn't do, rather than what he did. When these OSWALD documents circulated, ANGLETON kept his own initials off them, just as he kept his name off all Warren Commission documents. But the initials of his subordinates Scott Miler and Elizabeth Ann Egerter appeared on them. All pre-201 (December 1960) CIA-generated documents on OSWALD were either never generated, or destroyed.

WHO ELSE KNEW ABOUT OSWALD AND ANGLETON?

Evidence suggested that although ANGLETON did not reveal the nature of OSWALD'S mission to his colleagues in the CIA, the name of ANGLETON'S defector, LEE OSWALD, was known to certain key personnel the Office of Security, and to some members of CI/SIG. Just ANGLETON and perhaps one or two trusted associates who were in key positions in the CIA knew that ANGLETON had made contact with OSWALD through HEMMING and that OSWALD was in the Soviet Union at ANGLETON'S request.

JAMES AND ELSIE WILCOTT

Two former CIA employees claimed that OSWALD was an official CIA operation and was on the CIA's payroll. James and Elsie Wilcott were recruited by the CIA as a husband and wife team in the late 1950's, shortly after their marriage. Their first tour of duty was in Japan (1960 to 1964) where they worked under Chief of Station William V. Broe, after which they returned to Washington, D.C. Elsie Wilcott worked as a secretary in the Soviet Bloc Division, James Wilcott as a finance officer.

WILCOTT'S STORY

November 24, 1963, was when I first heard about the CIA somehow being involved. Not long before going off duty, talk about OSWALD'S connection with CIA was making the rounds. While this kind of talk was a jolt to me, I didn't really take it seriously then. Very heavy talk continued up to about the middle of January. Based solely on what I heard at the Tokyo Station, I became convinced the following scenario is true: CIA people killed Kennedy. Either it was an outright project of Headquarters with the approval of McCone, or it was done outside, perhaps under the direction of Dulles and Bissell. OSWALD was recruited from the military for the express purpose of becoming a double agent assignment to the USSR. It was said they had some kind of special handle on him. Perhaps, went the speculation, they had discovered that he had murdered someone or committed some other serious crime, during a routine lie detector test. In any case it was a very risky assignment. CIA taught him Russian and it was said he had been to the farm (CIA's agent training camp, Camp Peary, Virginia) although probably not in one of the regular agent training programs. He may not have even known he had been there. (That was often done with special cases. They would be put to sleep and wake up in a strange place and be told that it was some other place than the farm). Although they said that he knew he was working for CIA, he was kept rigidly compartmented from any of the normal contacts that a regular CIA employee would have. The operational people that I knew never admitted they were working on the project, although some hinted at it. Jerry Fox, a SR agent who purchased Soviet information, may have been one of them. The Deputy Chief of SR (first name was Dave, I've forgotten his last name) may also have been one too. More than once I was told something like 'so and so was working on the OSWALD Project back in the late 1950's.'

When OSWALD returned from the USSR in June of 1962, either on his way back, or after he got back, he was brought back to Japan to either Atsugi or Yokosuka for debriefing, it was assumed. At one point, soon after RUBY shot OSWALD, I was talking with someone, I can't recall who for sure, and I expressed disbelief about OSWALD being a CIA project. I was told something like this: 'Well James, OSWALD drew an advance some time in the past from you or for that project under such and such a cryptonym.' It was a familiar cryptonym at the time, which I have since forgotten, as well as the time that the advance of the funds was drawn...At first I thought these guys were nuts, but then a man I knew and had worked with before showed up to take a disbursement and told me OSWALD was a CIA employee. I didn't believe him until he told me the cryptonym under which OSWALD had drawn funds when he returned from Russia to the U.S.A.

James Wilcott said he was not privy to the type of project involved, since "project funds were disbursed on a code basis; as a disbursement officer, he would not have been apprised of the substantive aspects of the project." [NYT 3.27.78; WR p256; East Bay Tribune 9.18.78 pB13; San Francisco Chronicle 9.12.78; statement of James Wilcott with attach. ARA doc.]

SUBJECT: Wilcott, James Bernard Jr. #109 301

1. Tab B presents the results of an interview of the Subject conducted at Miami, Florida, and Tab C directs that certain checks be accomplished prior to the polygraph of the Subject.

2. The FBI has furnished extensive information concerning Ray Robinson, Jr., James Monsonis (Monsonus) and Reta Betty Rotondi.

3. Monsonis and his wife, Lenore Gensburg Monsonis, have participated in racial picketing and James Monsonis is President of the National Student Christian Federation. James Monsonis in December 1964, according to the FBI, was the Director of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee, Washington, D.C. and several well known CP members were connected with SNICK or visited SNICK in December 1964.

4. The FBI furnished a copy of an investigation concerning Reta Betty Rotondi conducted in October 1964 and revealed that an informant revealed that Betty Rotondi is self-identified as a CP member in June 1964 and in August 1964 as one of two CP members who worked in CORE as Task Force leader. Informant made available information indicating Betty Rotondi accepted in Queens County CP Club in February 1946 and from 1948 to and including 1954. Betty Rotondi's CP associates were set forth.

5. Ray Robinson Jr. - participated in the Quebec-Washington-Guantanamo Walk for Peace sponsored by the Committee for Non-Violent Action and on November 19, 1963 was arrested by the police at Macon, Georgia for distributing literature against city ordinances. Ray Robinson has an extensive arrest record dating back to 1954, which included assault with a deadly weapon, intoxication, possession of narcotics, armed robbery etc.

6. Concerning Alex Passikloff, the FBI indicated they have no identifiable information pertinent to our inquiry.

7. In compliance with paragraph 2 of Reference C, a written report concerning Subject's arrest in November 1964 in Washington, D.C. indicated that the Subject and one Ray Robinson Jr. were arrested for being drunk. The arresting officer advised that Subject and Robinson were arrested for drunkenness and were also disorderly, but were not so charged. Subject and Robinson, according to the arresting officer, were very intoxicated and fighting among themselves.

8. Relative to paragraph 3 of Reference C, the New York Field office of IOS furnished information that Alexander Passikloff has been known to them since 1938. Passikloff has an extensive police record and in 1963 was arrested three times in connection with anti-segregation (pro-integration) protest demonstrations. There were indications of possible CP membership and/or affiliation of Passikloff. Information indicates that Passikloff in 1950 reportedly told somebody that he had been expelled from the CP. Passikloff, in 1963, participated in sit-ins sponsored by CORE on at least three separate occasions in New York City.

9. In addition Passikloff was arrested on August 5, 1964 in Jersey City, New Jersey during the course of a race riot. He was charged with disorderly conduct and possession of a knife. It was also indicated that Passikloff had been treated at the Creedmore State Hospital for a mental disorder.

10. The New York City Police Department contained no record of Joseph or Betty Rotondi.

11. Concerning Blyden Brown Jackson, the New York Police Department indicates that Byden Brown Jackson is Chairman of the East River chapter of CORE. Jackson has a police record dating from 1958, his last arrest was on April 22, 1964 for disorderly conduct and resisting an arrest. Jackson has participated in racial demonstrations and sit-ins and in April of 1964 is listed among a group of individuals furnished by the U.S. Secret Service regarding security escort to the President of the United States.

12. Jackson was arrested by the New York City Police Department on January 11, 1965 and charged with felonious assault and Jackson is known to the psychiatric division of Bellevue Hospital in New York.

13. It is recommended that Subject be polygraphed concerning his association with the above individuals. It is recommended that coordination be effected with Jerry Mullane, Security Officer, WH Division, who is aware of this case to have Subject report to Headquarters for polygraph examination or arrange to have the Subject polygraphed in Miami, Florida, which ever is convenient.

14. It is further recommended that this polygraph examination be administered as soon as possible. Leland E. Bunn.

James Wilcott resigned in April 1966, after nine years of CIA employment. He became friendly with CIA defector Philip Agee and broke his secrecy agreement with the Agency in 1968. In 1978 James Wilcott testified at a CIA tribunal in Havana, then testified before the HSCA. Elsie Wilcott agreed with her husband: "Right after the President was killed, people in the Tokyo Station were talking openly about OSWALD having gone to Russia for the CIA. Everyone was wondering how the Agency was going to be able to keep the lid on OSWALD. But I guess they did." Elsie Wilcott never testified before the HSCA.

THE HSCA & WILCOTT

The HSCA concluded that, "Based on all the evidence, James Wilcott's allegation was not worthy of belief." [HSCA R p200] The Committee based its conclusion on interviews with CIA personnel, including one who was named as a participant in one of these conversations. This CIA person told the HSCA he was transferred from the Tokyo CIA Station to the United States in 1962, so that he could not possibly have had the conversation with Wilcott. His CIA employment records substantiated this. The HSCA interviewed everyone who had served at the Tokyo CIA Station during this period. Not one had any recollection that such conversation ever took place.

Wilcott had this information in November 1963. He underwent a transformation to a radical in August 1965. He left the CIA in April 1966. He came forward with his charges in 1978. What took him so long? It was not common knowledge at the CIA that OSWALD was a CIA Operation. Only ANGLETON and a few of his associates were aware of OSWALD'S true status. Most CIA personnel probably thought OSWALD was a tool of the Cubans and Soviets. Wilcott stated that OSWALD had drawn funds when he returned from Russia to the U.S.A. This was unlikely. The Wilcotts were propagandists. They floated a false new story against the CIA, for whatever their reasons.

CI/SIG: SPECIAL INVESTIGATIONS GROUP

As stated, the CIA component charged with investigating defectors like OSWALD was CI/SIG and was run by JAMES ANGLETON. It was hidden within the Counter-Intelligence Branch. According to the CIA, CI/SIG - the Special Investigations Group or Unit - handled the more important CIA investigations. The word "special" generally meant Secret. For example, the Special Operations Division of the OSS, the CIA's Special Operations Group in Vietnam and the New York City Police Department's Bureau of Special Services. [Powers, Secrets p401]

CI/SIG'S CHARTER

The CIA stated that CI/SIG was "a small staff usually charged with investigation and analysis of the most important security cases..In connection with reference request for information concerning a charter pertaining to the CI/SIG unit within the Directorate of Operations the following information is provided.

A. The only available information concerning a charter for the Special Investigations Unit (later referred to as Special Investigations Group) is contained in CSI 70-1 (tentative) dated March 2, 1955. A Xerox copy of the pertinent portions are attached.

B. The above mentioned Clandestine Services Notice officially established the Counter-Intelligence Staff, and as part of it, CI/SIG. CI/SIG was abolished in the 1973 reorganization of the Counter-Intelligence Staff but the reasons for it are not recorded.

C. To the best of our knowledge there is no record of the existence of any operational plans pertaining to CI/SIG. B. Hugh Tovar, Chief Counter-Intelligence Staff. [CIA 1993 o4199 CI 260-78 for PCS/LOC Norbert

Reference OLC-78-2185/1 6.19.78]

CSI 70-1 stated: "Special Intelligence Unit performs the Counter-Intelligence investigation and analysis of any known or potential security leak in the Clandestine Services organization, whether in headquarters or in the field, from the standpoint of its effect on existing operations, and the cover of personnel. In performing this function, maintains close working relations with the Office of Security, the latter being primarily concerned in such cases from Agency security rather than an operational security standpoint." A chart attached to this document indicated CI/SIG was directly responsible to ANGLETON.

ANGLETON told the HSCA:

I set [CI/SIG] up in 1954 so that no one in the Counter-Intelligence [Staff]...would ever have access to anybody's [CIA] security file. I chose an individual [Birch O'Neal] who had been ex-FBI...as the man to run that component...In the event there was an allegation about an employee, he could review the entire file [with the CIA Office of Security which]...has sole possession of security files and is responsible for the security clearance of personnel.

ANGLETON added that CI/SIG kept lists of defectors to the United States and managed sensitive cases involving Americans which were not being handled by any other U.S. Government department. He said these functions were deliberately referred to only in "fairly camouflaged terms" and were "very much fuzzed over," even within the CIA, in order to preserve the Unit's secrecy. [HSCA ANGLETON Deposition cited in Cold Warrior by Mangold; Ang. Rock. Comm. test. also w/h]

ANGLETON biographer Tom Mangold wrote:

The most secret component of ANGLETON'S empire was a short distance down the hallway to the left of his office. Little is known of it to this day. Formally designated as the Special Investigation Group - or CI/SIG - it was a small elite unit consisting of eight of ANGLETON'S most trusted and closed mouth people. The unit included a chief, deputy, two officers and a small support staff of assistants and secretaries. ANGLETON had set up CI/SIG shortly after he became Counter-Intelligence Chief in order to investigate the possibilities that the CIA itself might have been penetrated by the KGB...The CI/SIG was so secret that many members of the Counter-Intelligence Staff didn't even know it existed, and nearly everyone was denied access to it. Over the years, as the unit grew in importance, its true function became increasingly obscured, until only a handful of insiders actually understood its work. It was effectively removed from all peer or executive supervision. Secret units within a Secret unit were a hallmark of ANGLETON, the CI/SIG and the Counter-Intelligence staff.

Unsurprisingly, internal conflict grew, and by the late 1950's resentment of the Counter-Intelligence's staff supervisory role - as secret policemen over its own agency colleagues - was mounting.

CI/SIG PERSONNEL
CLARE EDWARD PETTY

Clare Edward Petty was born in Oklahoma December 2, 1920; from 1943 to 1946 he was an artillery officer and was in military government in Germany. He joined the CIA in 1947 and worked with the Reinhardt Gehlen organization of former Nazi Army General Staff Officers for eight years. Edward Petty stated: "It was determined at Nuremberg these men were never Nazi party members. They opposed the party. Gehlen had the files on the Soviet Order of Battle. We needed it." Petty joined CI/SIG in 1966.

Edward Petty recounted:

CI/SIG had to do with other things besides the so-called mole hunt that was instigated by ANGLETON and Golitsyn. There were a number of very sensitive things which ANGLETON would just automatically send to CI/SIG, and OSWALD was one of them. Those records were undoubtedly pulled out of other files, they didn't actually originate in CI/SIG, CI/SIG simply had the authority, capability and regularly pulled files from everywhere. CI/SIG would keep the papers on it [American defectors] and if there was something they could do about it they would, as you say, handle it. It was basically an office of record of such things, it was not an action office. Memoranda were routed to other agencies which would be generally signed by ANGLETON. CI/SIG did not carry on active investigations or operations, it was an analysis group. It had a paper sort of analysis capability. They absolutely did not run operations. They had access to all the documents, and that was the critical point where things were put together to determine, for example, a possible penetration involving CIA personnel, in which case you would go immediately to the Office of Security, and begin to cooperate on investigations. In the case of OSWALD, the chances would be extremely high that if CIA had anything to say about OSWALD, having checked CIA files, they would have said it to the FBI and that would be the end of it. CI/SIG carried on operational security type correspondence with the FBI. That was the point of liaison for that type of material. So anything that had to do with that sort of thing would go into CI/SIG files. We gauged the security problems in various Agencies. After all, things like that were usually not isolated. You have to look for connections between various things. Like the National Security Administration defectors, Martin & Mitchell, that bears upon security overall. There was a file on them in CI/SIG.

I have to tell you, I don't actually remember the OSWALD file, I would have thought that I had read all such files but I don't remember it. I don't remember an OSWALD file in CI/SIG [in 1966]. In CI/SIG we had a very large three-room vault that was filled with such material which did not necessarily indicate that action was being taken. They keep paper on those things so they can watch the overall picture. In counter-intelligence, what you need is continuity and a totality of access. This was just part of the totality of their access. It doesn't mean they did anything about it necessarily. If action was taken, it was likely to have been simply correspondence with another component passing information or asking for information. I consider myself to be very well-informed on all of that material that was in CI/SIG. There would have been no analysis unless it seemed to tie to something else. After all OSWALD sat in the base in which the U-2 flew into and out of Japan...I say that based on everything I know about CI/SIG and everything I know about the OSWALD business and subsequently in relation to [KGB "defector"] Yuri Nosenko. The kind of organization that CI/SIG was, there were so few people there, we could not have possibly been running such operations...The absolute top [of CI/SIG] was eight people and that would be secretaries and everything..."

CIA STAFFER PAUL GARBLER

You know what CI/SIG was? Find the mole. That's all they had to do. I have no idea what they were doing with files on OSWALD. You opened this conversation by talking about a relationship between OSWALD and ANGLETON. I totally unaware that there ever was one. I am unaware that CI/SIG ever had anything to do with OSWALD at all. I could see that ANGLETON would have retained for his custody only some kind of OSWALD file. I am unaware of which kind. I am not making an apologia, I am not trying to defend the CIA here. I merely telling you what I know, and what I do not know. I never knew that CI/SIG had any concern about OSWALD at all. CI/SIG was devoted, in my memory, to find the mole." Edward Petty commented, "I can see why somebody from the outside would say that. In very, very rough terms I suppose you can say that's true, although I never used to work moles." It was suggested that ANGLETON may have been watching OSWALD because he thought he had become a double-agent. Garbler: "A lot of paranoia existed back then. There is no question about that. CI/SIG found me to be guilty, before they had any evidence, as a mole.

WILLIAM HOOD

William Hood was born in Maine on April 19, 1920. He was a former newspaper correspondent and OSS officer. While in the OSS Station in London during World War II hood took part in an intelligence operation called Ultra that outwitted an enciphering machine the Germans thought was invulnerable: the legendary Enigma. "We broke the code," Mr. Hood explained. The Germans were using it to disguise wireless telegrams and other communications about everything from the movement of battalions to supply shortages and power outages. Ultra enabled the Allies to intercept, for example, messages to and from U-Boats during the Battle of the Atlantic. "Without it we might not have won the war," Mr. Hood said. "In 1941 and 1942 in England there was some question about who was going to win it." Because the Germans were unaware that their security had been breached, "it was a deep, deep secret," Mr. Hood said. He was cleared to read the intercepted messages, but first had to sign an oath vowing never to "put myself in a position to be captured." That sounded reasonable, he said to another man who was also signing. "He said, 'Well, you're supposed to do this.' Mr. Hood pointed a finger to his temple and pulled an invisible trigger. In the CIA, William Hood was stationed in Vienna, (February 1951 to January 1955), Munich (Economic Office, August 1957), Berlin (Political Office, December 1959 to March 1960), and Washington (November 1962 to April 1964). William Hood joined the Counter-Intelligence Staff in 1973. William Hood said it was much later than 1973.

NEWTON S. MILER

Newton S. Miler, the son of a meat packer, was born in Mason City, Iowa on March 1, 1926. He was an analyst in the Navy in 1946. Newton S. Miler joined the CIA in 1947 and worked as a Case Officer in Japan and in the Philippines. He was a research analyst from 1949 to 1956. In 1956 he was in Thailand as an employee of the International Cooperation Administration, training police. He was listed as a Department of the Army area analyst in 1958. [1969 State Department Biographic Register] From May 1958 to June 1961 Newton S. Miler was in Washington where he was on the Counter-Intelligence Staff, dealing with Soviet counter-intelligence. In July 1961 he became CIA Chief of Station in Addis Ababa and in 1964 he joined CI/SIG. He was Counter-Intelligence Deputy Chief and at the same time had the responsibility for CI/SIG. Newton S. Miler stated: "The main thing we were doing was the search for penetrations. That was the primary thing..." [Wise, Molehunt, p27, Mangold, Cold Warrior]

THE MOLE HUNT

The hunt for Soviet spies within the CIA started after Kim Philby was forced to resign as British Security Service Director in 1951. In 1963 Kim Philby defected to the USSR. In 1964 the HONETOL Committee was formed to look into the mole question. It was in existence from November 1964 to April 1965, and consisted of ANGLETON, Newton S. Miler and Bruce Solie from the CIA's Office of Security, FBI domestic intelligence chief William C. Sullivan, FBI CIA liaison Sam Papich and two others. About six members of CI/SIG worked on HONETOL, including Edward Petty. Author David Wise reported other CIA officers assigned to HONETOL included Jean M. Evans, who had worked with Reinhardt Gehlen, Albert P. Kergel, John D. Walker (former Chief of Station in Israel), Charles Arnold and William F. Potocki (a former subordinate of William K. Harvey). CIA Soviet Bloc Division officers Tennent Bagley and David Murphy were the targets of this mole hunt. Both were found innocent of being moles.

PETTY: ANGLETON WAS THE MOLE

When William Colby became Director/Counter-Intelligence on May 10, 1973, he was the recipient of a report prepared by Clare Edward Petty which stated ANGLETON was the KGB mole in the CIA. Edward Petty's report suggested that ANGLETON had studied under, and been too close to, Kim Philby; had spread disinformation when he suggested the Sino/Soviet split had been contrived; and had trusted Anatoliy Golitsyn. Edward Petty suggested ANGLETON demoralized the CIA: "ANGLETON put forth the proposition that the KGB was so totally superior, and so all-knowing, that anything CIA or any of the other allied intelligence services tried to do was negated from the word go. The operational side was totally frustrated over a period of years. ANGLETON propounded the proposition that operations against the Soviets were doomed to failure." To William Colby, Edward Petty's report was a product of "the ultra-conspiratorial turn of mind" which he disliked in ANGLETON.

WILLIAM EGAN COLBY

During World War II, William Colby (born January 4, 1920), was a Jedburgh who parachuted into German-occupied Europe more than once. After the war, he was Chief of Station in Rome. Between 1965 and 1972 Colby served in South Vietnam. During much of this period he was director of OPERATION PHOENIX, an effort to identify, imprison or recruit Vietcong members in South Vietnam. Some 20,587 Vietcong

"suspects" were killed during OPERATION PHOENIX. Colby later told a House Committee there had been some "illegal killing" but he argued that he worked to halt such abuse. In the picture on the right he was the recipient of a pie thrown by my research assistant Aron Morton Kay.

THE DEFECTOR STUDY

The HSCA conducted a defector study to ascertain if OSWALD'S defection was suspicious. The Committee: "To determine which individuals the Committee would study, a letter was sent to the CIA requesting the names of persons who defected to the Soviet Union between 1958 and 1964." The CIA "provided a list of the names and variations of the names of 380 Americans who were in the USSR during that time period," entitled, "U.S. Persons Who Have or May Have Defected to the USSR Between 1958 and 1963." This list included the names of Communist Party members who made frequent trips to the Soviet Union or were there on official Party business, like Henry Winston. Winston could not be termed a defector. The names of emigrants were included in this list. Some had been in the Soviet Union for over 20 years. The CIA:

This listing represented U.S. persons, including some non-U.S. citizens, who owed some measure of allegiance to the United States, who had either defected or shown some interest in defecting." [HSCA V12 p404] The HSCA requested the CIA provide more information so that it could select, for a detailed analysis, those defectors who were most similar to OSWALD. The CIA provided a second list which was "a computer listing of the name, 201 file number, date and place of birth, and a compilation of information derived from the 201 file, as well as citations for various other Government agency reports.

No HSCA investigators visited CIA headquarters and went through defector files there. Instead, the CIA gave the HSCA some of the files the Committee requested, "the vast majority of which" were in undeleted form. The HSCA conceded there was not always "an independent means of verifying that all materials requested from the Agency had, in fact, been provided. Accordingly, any finding that is essentially negative in nature - such as that LEE HARVEY OSWALD was neither associated with the CIA in any way, nor ever in contact with that institution - should explicitly acknowledge the possibility of oversight." [HSCA R 197] From the second defector list, the HSCA eliminated those who had :

- (A) Been born outside the United States.
- (B) Gone to the USSR some time other than the 1958 to 1962 time period.
- (C) Remained outside the United States until 1964."

The HSCA focused on the files of 23 defectors from the original list of 380. The Committee then examined the request dated October 25, 1960, from the State Department Bureau of Intelligence and Research on 13 individuals whom it considered defectors. That list included the following:

(A) OSWALD.

(B) Seven individuals whose files the committee had decided to examine under the previous criteria: Mollie Block; Morris Block; Bruce Frederick Davis; William H. Martin; Bernon F. Mitchell; Libero Ricciardelli; Robert Edward Webster.

C. Two individuals whose names appeared on the computer listing but had been excluded since they were not born within the United States [Joseph Dutkanicz and Vladimir Sloboda]

(D) Three individuals who had not previously been known to the committee as defectors: David DuBois; (FNU) Sergeant Jones; Sergeant Ernie Fletcher.

When the CIA responded to the October 25, 1960 request of the Bureau of Intelligence and Research of the Department of State, two additional names were added to the original list of twelve defectors - Maurice Halperin and Virginia Coe. The HSCA had already selected Maurice Halperin from the computer list of 380 names, but had no knowledge of Virginia Coe.

MAURICE HALPERIN

Maurice Halperin (born March 3, 1936) was a specialist in Latin American affairs employed by the OSS during World War II. In the summer of 1967 Maurice Halperin assisted Soviet agents Martha Dodd Stern and her husband Alfred Kaufman Stern to secretly travel from Mexico to Czechoslovakia. Maurice Halperin traveled to the USSR shortly after the departure of the Sterns from Mexico; he was employed by the Soviet Government as a Latin American specialist and has "periodically renewed his American passport." This information on Maurice Halperin was compiled by JAMES ANGLETON. [CIA CSCI-316/01206-67] Halperin was named as a Communist spy by Attorney General Herbert Brownell Jr.

The Committee requested all CIA 201 files on the 23 individuals from the computer list. It requested files on Joseph Dutkanicz, Vladimir Sloboda, Jones, David DuBois and Ernie Fletcher, since their names appeared on the State Department defector list. Finally, it asked for the file on Virginia Coe.

Out of the 29 individuals whose files were the subject of this request, five were immediately dropped. The CIA could not identify Jones (an Air Force Intelligence document existed about his defection); David DuBois and Virginia Coe had defected to China, not the Soviet Union; and the Martin & Mitchell file was too sensitive and could not be presented to the HSCA. Now the list was down to 24, on whom the Committee asked other Government Agencies to provide selected information. After this analysis, thirteen more defectors were eliminated: 5 for lack of substantive information; 5 for being Communist Party members who made frequent trips to the Soviet Union, or for residing outside the United States for an extended period of time before entering the Soviet Union; and three for remaining in the Soviet Union for over 20 years. The HSCA: "Thus, the defector study was reduced to 11 individuals, two of whom were married." Actually, three of the defectors were married. These three couples could logically have been eliminated from the study because OSWALD was single when he defected.

Anyone who defected to the Soviet Union at the height on the Cold War, and wasn't a hard core Communist ideologue, had to be a little crazy. Many of the defectors were just that.

THE BLOCKS

Morris Block (born March 30, 1920) attended the 1957 Sixth World Youth Festival in the Soviet Union. After the conference, he traveled to Communist China, prompting the State Department to impound his passport for misuse. He tried to defect to the Soviet Union with a falsified passport in 1958. In 1959 Morris Block, his wife Mollie, (born November 6, 1912) and his child defected to Poland. They were transferred to Moscow, where they applied for visas to China. The Soviets suggested the Blocks accept Soviet asylum in September 1959, and later issued them Soviet internal passports for foreigners. They were sent to Leningrad. There, Morris Block had an affair with his Russian-language teacher, and his family left him and moved to Moscow where his daughter was hospitalized for a nervous disorder. After the Blocks were reunited, they decided to re-defect; however, their applications for Soviet exit visas were refused. Morris Block disconnected a loudspeaker broadcasting propaganda at his place of work. Molly Block granted an anti-Soviet interview to The New York Times. Finally, the Blocks were expelled from the USSR.

LIBERO RICCIARDELLI

Libero Ricciardelli decided that exposing his three children to a Communist system of government could straighten out his domestic problems. In February 1959 he defected, contracted influenza, and was granted Soviet citizenship after he denounced the United States. By June 1963, the Ricciardelli family returned to the United States.

HAROLD CITRYNELL

Harold Citrynell (born March 10, 1923) entered the Soviet Union with his wife and child on February 27, 1958. He was granted Soviet citizenship and remained in the Soviet Union until June 29, 1959. The FBI: "Subject was born in the U.S. in 1923 and served in the U.S. Army from 1942 to 1945. He graduated from the College of the City of New York with a degree in mechanical engineering and held many jobs in that field between 1950 and 1958. In February 1958 he took his wife and infant daughter to Russia and attempted to obtain Soviet citizenship...he returned to the U.S. in July 1959. His wife divorced him in 1962 and after holding several jobs in the U.S. he traveled to England and then to Bulgaria in 1964. After working for one month in Bulgaria he went on strike and refused to work. He had numerous difficulties in that country and eventually returned to the U.S. in 1965 and it appears that he is emotionally disturbed and suffers from a persecution complex." [From Legat London (163-2201) Director (165-70603) 8.12.67] That brought the number of relevant defectors down to eight. Two of these should have been excluded because they fit the not native-born American criterion, although their names appeared on the State Department list.

VLADIMIR SLOBODA

Vladimir Sloboda, a native of the Ukraine, was sent to Germany as a forced laborer during World War II. He enlisted in the United States Army in Germany in 1953. He became a United States citizen in 1958. After basic training in the United States, Sloboda was assigned in August 1958 to an Army Intelligence Group in Europe. He defected to East Germany in August 1960 requesting Soviet asylum. Vladimir Sloboda's CIA 201 file reflected that the "fact of Army countermeasures caused by the arrest of 154 MID [East German Military Intelligence] agents recently" was responsible for his defection.

Lee H. Wigren C/SR/CI/R wrote:

Our conclusion that Sloboda was in prior connection with the KGB turned on the facts that: Sloboda's prior KGB involvement was confirmed by (deleted) VISION as reported in YT-1192. See attached memo of March 28, 1962 in regard to passage of this information to Army. Further indications are the the facts that Sloboda was a KGB resettlement case in January 1962 and that he later told an American Embassy Moscow official that he had been blackmailed and framed in going to the USSR (It is our assumption that he made the same statements to the Army debriefers who spoke with him in early 1962. The Sloboda defection was participated by increased Army security measures, according to (deleted) VISION in January 1962.

Counter-Intelligence Staff member Newton S. Miler (CI/OG/SOV) prepared a report on Vladimir Sloboda on October 12, 1960. On April 25, 1969, the CIA reported:

The Office of Security file of (deleted 06 as of 2010) reflects that on November 20, 1960, (deleted 06 as of 2010), an employee of the Joint Overt Interrogation Center Berlin received a telephone call from an English speaking male identifying himself as 'your friend Vladimir.' The caller asked (deleted 06 as of 2010) if he had been to his mailbox yet, and when (deleted 06 as of 2010) answered in the negative, the caller said there was a letter in the box and he suggested that (deleted 06 as of 2010) pick it up. The caller added that (deleted 06 as of 2010) should not worry about the letter since it had been placed in the box by a secure means. (Deleted as of 2010) retrieved the letter, which was postmark November 20, 1960, read it and immediately called his chief Lt. Col Gordon.

The text of the recruitment letter read:

Dear Mr. Deleted. Don't be surprised at his way of contacting you and don't take rash action before considering the contents. After watching and studying your life and activities for some time in the United States, Austria (Vienna), in Zone (Ulm) and here in West Berlin we have concluded we might be of service to each other. From different sources we have come to know many details of your official and private life and we are aware that your present position gives you small chance for promotion, and we are aware of the financial hardships you must face. These difficulties could be much greater if we did not think of sending you this letter. Being aware of your slips and blunders in work we have not made any moves which could undermine your reputation with Col. Ross (Berlin) and Major Huey (Oberusel). It is believed you could draw the right conclusion from our attitude. It is enough to mention that we were able to learn much from the documents in March 1959 in Frankfurt Am Main when you were driving a hired car. Through your slips in handling your sources Wolfgang and Dieter, in whose path we put no obstacles, many things became known to us. The same is to be said about the sources you ran in Vienna under the cover name Porter. By so doing, we hoped to come to an agreement with you at a suitable time on mutually profitable terms. We could continue to relate information regarding your activities and work of your office known to us because of your mistakes, but this would be pointless. We offer you a business-like cooperation on terms profitable to both sides. There is no need to describe what we are. It must be clear to you. Since you are a man of reason and sound logic you must understand that cooperation will give you a chance to overcome financial difficulties and make savings for the future. Also, we could create conditions which would aid the growth of your prestige at your office and in turn help you get a better job on your return to the United States. If agreement is reached we will immediately provide you with a substantial sum to settle your affairs and guarantee you monthly pay in the future, higher than your salary, as long as you stay in contact. If you agree to our proposal, come to the democratic sector of Berlin for future talks. On November 20, 1960, from 1930 to 2000 hours arrive at the U-Bahn Station in Warchauerbruecks. A representative of our organization, Vladimir, will meet you at the flower shop at the entrance to the station...It goes without saying that if during talks we can't reach mutual agreement, that we will still guarantee you absolute security and safety. You face no danger during the talks. If we do not hear from you by December 1, 1960 we shall consider ourselves free to act. To assure you this letter is not a trap laid by your security service, we shall broadcast on Soviet Forces Volga Network an old waltz tune on November 20, 1960, at 1310. If this is not convincing, write us in advance what other piece of Russian music you would like to hear and when you would like to hear it. Write to Herr Gruneat, Berlin, Lichtenberg 1, Postschliessfach 34. When writing we recommend you do not sign the letter, using any fictitious return address you like...We would like to warn you that it would be a mistake on your part to show this letter to your chiefs, because in the long run this will only harm you. We know there is an instruction from Washington which deals with such cases and that is kept at the Security Section of Lt. Col. McCord's office. We do not like to resort to threats, and in principle blackmail runs counter to our working methods, but you must realize we may be forced to resort to certain measures, not to compromise you, but to stop your activities against us. So you have ample chance to get everything you are striving for. For this you must have courage and resourcefulness.

BOB was of the opinion "that the Russian Intelligence Service was attempting to suggest that Vladimir Sloboda (MIG defector in August 1960) was being used in this approach." [CIA AC/FIOB/SRS Jerry G. Brown 4.25.69] Vladimir Sloboda had engaged in discussion with (deleted) regarding "Wolfgang and Dieter" who were assets. Vladimir Sloboda was clearly a spy seeking asylum, not an American defecting. The Russians quoted Vladimir Sloboda as saying that he defected because of his revulsion to the U-2 flights. He never returned to the United States. On March 23, 1962 ANGLETON'S Deputy, James Hunt, Deputy Chief, Counter-Intelligence, was consulted about questioning Mrs. Lilian Sloboda by (deleted) SR/CI/RED.

In 1965 the CIA prepared a report on Vladimir Sloboda, much of which is still withheld as of 2010.

SLOBODA's KNOWLEDGE OF CIA PERSONNEL

8. (Deleted of 2010) CIA staff employee (Deleted of 2010) stated in October 1960, that as early as March 1960 SLOBODA knew him by his true name. (Deleted as of 2010) saw SLOBODA about three times in the latter's office concerning the acquisition of basic intelligence materials such as East German telephone books, city plans etc. (Deleted of 2010) questioned other CIA employees concerning their knowledge of Sloboda. None had any personal contact with him but all felt they had seen him at the (Deleted of 2010) coffee bar. (Deleted of 2010) thought it conceivable that Sloboda could have learned the true name of CIA employees.

POSSIBLE RECRUITMENT ATTEMPT BY SLOBODA

The following information was extracted from U.S. Army Counter-intelligence Summary dated 15 February 1961 concerning two approach operations against USAREUR personnel by Soviet Intelligence Service (SIS) (deleted as of 2010)

It is not known whether Sloboda is affiliated with the Soviet Intelligence Services at this time. According to a December 19, 1962, Foreign Service Dispatch from the American Embassy, Moscow, (deleted as of 2010)."

JOSEPH DUTKANICZ

Foreign-born Joseph Dutkanicz visited the Soviet Embassy, Washington, in 1952, made pro-Soviet statements, and listened to Radio Moscow. In 1954 the U.S. Army court-martialed Joseph Dutkanicz on charges of subversive activity. He was acquitted and allowed to continue his normal U.S. Army activities. In 1958, while he was stationed in Germany with the U.S. Army, he was approached and recruited by the KGB. A Western-bloc security investigation caused him to seek asylum in the USSR.

Joseph Dutkanicz defected to the Soviet Union in June 1960. JAMES ANGLETON commented: "Security investigations was immediate cause of defection. USAREUR Case Summary 2-62-2 indicated that DUTKANICZ told American Embassy, Moscow, official that he was under investigation for security reasons. He defected soon after, in accord with a KGB suggestion that he do so...A more significant indication of his KGB involvement before his defection is the fact that the special decree granting him Soviet citizenship was enacted three months before his arrival in the USSR." In 1962 Joseph Dutkanicz's wife, Lilian Dutkanicz recounted that after their arrival, Russian agents contacted her husband on a daily basis for a period of six months or more. After one year, her husband told her he wished to return to the United States and that she should tell the officials at the U.S. Embassy he had been blackmailed into collaborating with the Soviets. Joseph Dutkanicz's wife was allowed to leave the USSR. On November 15, 1963, Joseph Dutkanicz died in a hospital in Lvov, USSR. [FBI LHM 5.20.65 highly deleted no serial "Enclosure 105-189"]

Colonel Burke, an Army Counter-Intelligence officer informed Jane Roman that he suspected Joseph Dutkanicz had KGB connections only after his defection: "Dutkanicz had not been attached to the 513 MID but to a signal outfit in which his job was climbing telephone poles. The statement that both these men had prior KGB connections is not true. Army just suspected this to be the case after their defection. The statement that both men fled as the result of Army Security checks is not true. Both men were not under security check although the Army was taking an "informal look into" the activities of one of them." ANGLETON prepared a report on Joseph Dutkanicz's pre-defection KGB connections for the Department of the Army in connection with the Warren Commission report: "USAREUR Case summary 2-62-2 indicated that Dutkanicz himself told American Embassy officials in Moscow that he had been approached by KGB representatives in a bar near Darmstadt in 1958 and accepted recruitment as a result of their threats and inducements. He claimed to have given them a minimum for cooperation from then until his defection, although the Army considered it probable that the had done more than he admitted." [CSCI-316/01779-64 dated 11.7.64 NARA 1993.06.18:56:10:93000]

Lee H. Wigren, Chief, Soviet Research, Counter-Intelligence Research, noted Joseph Dutkanicz's wife indicated her husband had connections with the Counter-Intelligence Corps: "She indicated that their trip behind the Iron Curtain 'had been made possible because her husband worked for the CIC and was allowed to do things the ordinary 'GI' could not do. There are also penciled notations in the 201 file suggesting that his Army assignment may have included intelligence functions of some kind." [NARA 1993.06.18.17:18:53:500000 - CIA 893-910] The file made a convincing argument for both defectors having prior contact with the KGB. This brought the number of relevant defectors down to six.

SHIRLEY DUBINSKY

In October 1961 Shirley Dubinsky (born March 11, 1925) wrote several letters to Premier Khrushchev asking for citizenship, then traveled to the Soviet Union, where her bizarre behavior caused her to be placed in a mental hospital. She returned to America in February 1963.

NICHOLAS PETRULLI

Nicholas Petrulli (born February 13, 1921; died in April 1982) was another mentally ill defector. Nicholas Petrulli visited the Soviet Union in August 1959 and believed he could land a high-paying job there. He went to the U.S. Embassy, Moscow, and renounced his citizenship. Richard Snyder administered the oath of renunciation. About two months later, Nicholas Petrulli realized he had made a mistake. The State Department declared him legally incompetent and he was allowed to return to the United States. Nicholas Petrulli had received a medical discharge during World War II based on a mental breakdown, and had received disability payments as a schizophrenic. [FBI Los Angeles JFK case #-11.24.63] Richard E. Snyder recalled, "The Soviets decided that they didn't want him. They looked him over for quite a while, the same as they did OSWALD. And they said, 'No, go home boy.' He was no longer an American citizen, which made for a bureaucratic tangle. The out that arose in his case was that he had been discharged from the Air Force on a mental discharge." After Petrulli returned to the United States the FBI interviewed his brother, Dominick Petrulli who said Nicholas "returned from Russia about three or four years ago; shortly thereafter the attempted to commit suicide, was committed to a mental hospital on Long Island and later moved to California. Dominick described Nicholas as being extremely nervous, highly sensitive and one who become emotional after he realized the gravity of a situation." [FBI Los Angeles 11.24.63]

On October 31, 1960, the Staff of the Office of Security of the CIA drafted a memorandum which was sent to the Chief, Security Research Staff, that listed defectors of interest to the CIA: "Robert Edward Webster, and Nicholas Petrulli were subject of OO/C [Domestic Contacts Division] requests on May 29, 1959, and June 15, 1959, respectively, with a view to their being debriefed upon their return from visits to Russia. Neither was interviewed by CIA, either before or after their visits. With reference to Nicholas Petrulli it is noted that his cousin, Michael Thomas Schiralli, [SSD 84, 253] is a former CIA covert employee who was assigned to the Robalo site in Panama under Project FJ-HOPEFUL and also took part in PB SUCCESS. [The overthrow of Jacobo Arbenz in Guatemala in 1954]. As of 1954 he was to be debriefed as he chose to return to private employment." [CIA Memo from M.D. Stevens 10.31.60 Subject: American Defectors]

MARTIN GREENLINGER

Martin Greenlinger, had fallen in love with a Russian woman while he was attending the 1957 World Youth Festival in Moscow. In April 1958 he returned to the Soviet Union and married her, then applied for an exit visa for her and her child from a previous marriage. In July 1958 Martin Greenlinger returned to the United States alone. One year later, the Soviet authorities issued Mrs. Greenlinger the exit visa. The U.S. Embassy, however, refused to issue an entrance visa due to her Communist Party affiliation. The CIA file on Martin Greenlinger stated: "This apparently involved Komsomol membership although the wives of Parker and OSWALD - q.v. - had many more drawbacks and were let in." In September 1960 Martin Greenlinger was awarded a National Science Foundation fellowship for one year. Still unable to obtain a U.S. entrance visa for his wife, he applied for visas at the British Embassy, and was told his wife would be issued a visa if he got a job in England. Eventually the National Science Foundation approved his plans to study mathematics in Manchester, England. The HSCA reported: "No further information is known." If no further information was known, then this defector did not fit the criterion of having re-defected before 1964.

BRUCE FREDERICK DAVIS & LEE HARVEY OSWALD

This left three defectors to correlate. One of them was Bruce Frederick Davis (born Rome, N.Y. May 4, 1936).

1. Bruce Frederick Davis was born in Rome, New York in 1936. He was the son of Dorothy Talbert of Scottsdale, Arizona. His father was killed in the Second World War. His stepfather was an officer in the U.S. Army and his family moved frequently around the U.S. His upbringing was very strict. [CIA Memo 6.29.62] Bruce Frederick Davis had a difficult childhood since he spent 12 years of schooling in ten different schools. OSWALD'S mother moved frequently during his childhood and OSWALD attended ten different public schools. [WR pp. 672-681]

2. In June 1954, following his high school graduation, Bruce Frederick Davis enlisted in the Marines and served three years. Bruce Frederick Davis attended the U.S. Marine Aviation Electronics School. OSWALD enlisted in the Marines around this time, and attended a similar school. After discharge from the Marines, Bruce Frederick Davis attended college and supported himself through various part-time jobs. He enlisted in the Army in November 1958, and was sent to Fort Benning, Georgia, for advanced training, and then to Germany, where he was given a Secret clearance. While in Germany, Bruce Frederick Davis was involved in an incident with "a Negro soldier, name unrecalled. During the fight half of Bruce Frederick Davis' right ear was bitten off...Subject's injury was called 'service connected.'" OSWALD was involved in an attack on a Mexican-American soldier while he was in the Marines.

3. Bruce Frederick Davis defected to East Germany on August 19, 1960. He raced his car past the U.S. military patrol near the border, then abandoned it at the barricade of the border itself. "He walked past the barricade and was apprehended about 300 yards inside the Soviet Zone of Germany by two border policemen who searched for weapons and turned him over to another two man police border patrol." Bruce Frederick Davis was questioned by Soviet Zone authorities. He claimed he answered all their questions innocuously, and did not reveal he had a Secret clearance while assigned for a short period to Division Headquarters in Wuerzberg, Germany. The Soviets were dissatisfied with the results of the interview, and Bruce Frederick Davis was sent to East Germany, where he was kept in a series of safehouses, then blindfolded and sent to a barred building. Bruce Frederick Davis asked if he could attend Friendship University in Moscow to complete his college education. Instead, on October 3, 1960, he was sent to the University of Kiev.

In October 1960 two articles appeared in Izvestya and Pravda, with statements by Bruce Frederick Davis attributing his defection to disillusionment with U.S. foreign and military policy: "On the night of August 19, 1960, I deserted the U.S. Army. I am 24 years old. I was born and raised in the U.S.A. I am not married. I didn't belong to any political party and didn't have any other reasons to be discontented with my life in the West. All my hopes as a simple American who wants peace were destroyed by the spy flights of the U-2 and RB-47 planes, and the breakdown of the Paris conference for heads of states...I hope to receive this political asylum in the USSR, to continue my education and to live and work among the Soviet people." On July 1, 1960, the Soviets had shot down an Air Force RB-47 reconnaissance plane which was on a ferret flight along the Soviet border, a mission designed to activate and pinpoint Soviet radar. [Ross & Wise The Espionage Establishment p251] OSWALD denied that he was a communist prior to his defection, which allegedly was based on similar objections to capitalism.

4. Although Bruce Frederick Davis physically defected, he did not officially denounce his American citizenship, and the documents provided to him by the Soviets categorized him as a stateless person. OSWALD was issued a stateless-person passport. Bruce Frederick Davis settled in Kiev as a student at the Kiev Institute of National Economy, where he was provided a free dormitory room and a subsidy of 900 old rubles per month. OSWALD received a government subsidy of 700 old rubles per month.

Bruce Frederick Davis made many unauthorized trips while he was studying in the Soviet Union. The CIA reported: "After his repatriation in 1963, Davis told U.S. authorities that he made a total of seven unauthorized trips from Kiev during the 1961 to 1963 period...Davis was apprehended on two of his seven trips, and was returned to Kiev each time under escort. On both occasions he was merely reprimanded by the Deputy Chief of the Institute at which he was studying." On May 1, 1961, he flew to Moscow and spent three days there, where "he met an American tourist, a former salesman for an electronics firm in Los Angeles, approximately 27 years old, who stated that he had been in Rumania. He was separated from his wife, by whom he had two children, because of a love affair with a girl in Rumania. Bruce Frederick Davis later wrote a letter to him and sent it off to Rumania. The unidentified tourist answered by stating that correspondence between them might be dangerous to those in the U.S.A., and therefore was not to be continued." The meaning of this was unclear. In July 1961 Bruce Frederick Davis made an unauthorized trip to Johnkoi, Crimea, where he had seen some Badger bombers arriving and departing from an unseen military airfield. Bruce Frederick Davis was apprehended for traveling without a permit, and sent back to Kiev. In September 1962 he appeared at the American Embassy, Moscow, to request an American passport. He was apprehended on the second day and sent back to Kiev under guard. He phoned the Embassy and stated he would not be completing the application, as he had been arrested for participation in a brawl in Kiev. He returned to the Embassy in October 1962, and was issued a passport and an entry visa into West Germany. Bruce Frederick Davis allowed the passport and visa to expire, allegedly due to a new Soviet girlfriend he met.

Bruce Frederick Davis visited the Embassy on another unauthorized trip in January 1963. He delivered papers to the Embassy from another unhappy defector and from Soviet citizen Vitalya Kalinochenko. These papers contained Kalinochenko's autobiography, the reasons he was dissatisfied with the Communists, and a request to be contacted regarding his experiences with the Soviet Navy and the rockets used by the Soviet Navy. On July 19, 1963, Bruce Frederick Davis went to the U.S. Embassy, Moscow, and, "with the help of a Mr. Fain, U.S. Embassy official" his re-defection plans were completed. Fain was listed in Who's Who in the CIA: "Fain, Thomas Alexander. Born: March 22, 1922; Language: Russian. 1943 to 1945 First Lieutenant in G-2 of U.S. Army; from 1949 in Department of State, work for CIA (Economic espionage); 1962 Intelligence School in Oberammergau; OpA: Belgrade, Oberammergau, Moscow (2nd Secretary), Washington." The decision that Bruce Frederick Davis had not expatriated himself was made by Counsel Samuel G. Wise:

Samuel Wise "Counsel in the American Embassy in Moscow" may well be Samuel Griffin Wise Jr. #74574, SD & SSD, who apparently was once a contract employee on (deleted) ACTIVE. The State Department reviewed Wise's file on June 2, 1954; and as of September 1962 a Samuel G. Wise was Second Secretary of the American Embassy in Moscow. At that time Wise advised in a cable to the State Department that it appeared that Bruce Frederick Davis, #352267 who defected from the United States Army in Germany on August 18, 1960, had not expatriated himself. Davis' case is very similar to that of OSWALD, and he, like OSWALD, lived in the Soviet Union for two years after his defection and prior to making application for return to the United States.

Wise was an applicant for CIA employment in early 1953 and was security approved Subject to polygraph on August 11, 1953. He did not enter on duty and in September 1953 the office which had been interested in him was 'no longer interested.' On November 13, 1953, Wise was granted a CSA to permit his use as a contract employee on (deleted) ACTIVE in New York City. [CIA Office of Security Marguerite D. Stevens 1.29.64]

Bruce Frederick Davis was returned to military control in July 1963 and was debriefed by Army Intelligence. He told Army Intelligence that he believed in "the theory of Marxism and Leninism. He feels that the system would work in a highly industrialized nation, such as the United States, because in the USSR, which is a backward nation, the system does not work properly. Bruce Frederick Davis does not believe in the present method of application of the system in the USSR. Bruce Frederick Davis refused to admit he was a communist, but he did admit that he was sympathetic towards communism. During the interview, he, at every opportunity, defended the Soviet way of life, praised their economic struggle, and voiced admiration for the Soviet communist personality."

Bruce Frederick Davis was polygraphed by Army Intelligence with such questions as, "Were you required to sign a statement of obligation to work for Eastern intelligence upon your return to the U.S.?" Bruce Frederick Davis answered, "No," and the polygraph showed no sign of deception.

After a thorough analysis of the charts, it is the opinion of this examiner that DAVIS displayed reactions indicative of deception to question 7, Test I. Upon being confronted with this reaction Subject denied ever engaging in homosexual act. Upon intense questioning he admitted to some deviations to the normal sex acts with Soviet females, but he did not admit to any specific act of perversion or sodomy. A reaction indicative of deception was recorded in his answer to Question 2, Test III," which was, "Isn't it true you were forced to leave Russia?" Bruce Frederick Davis answered, "No." When confronted with his reaction, "He denied being forced in any way to leave Russia, or that he was asked by anyone to leave. He denied that he left for any reason except of his own desire and he left by the method he had previously revealed, that of contacting the U.S. Embassy, Moscow, and being given a visa." The report continued: "Bruce Frederick Davis failed to answer Question 7, Test III." This question was: "Do you believe in communist theory?" "No answer." He was asked why he did not answer the question. He replied that he refused to answer under the provisions afforded him in Article 31, UCMJ, because his answer might tend to incriminate him.

The FBI: "Following his return to United States control he was sentenced on October 1, 1963 to a dishonorable discharge, forfeiture of all pay and allowances, hard labor for one year, and reduced to the enlisted grade of Private E-1. He is currently serving this sentence at the Federal Penitentiary, Leavenworth, Kansas." [Highly-deleted memo D.J. Brennan to Sullivan 12.7.63] In the early 1960's, the CIA and the State Department conducted an interagency exchange of information on defectors. The CIA reported to the State Department that there were five defectors who were ascertained KGB agents: Dutkanicz, Martin, Mitchell, Sloboda and Bruce Frederick Davis. [CIA 1634-1088 p11] This researcher has no further information on Bruce Frederick Davis other than a highly deleted FBI report from Phoenix, Arizona, dated November 13, 1964. [FBI 105-92510-35 pgs. B, 1-4, 6-8; FBI 105-92510 NR Serial dated 7.28.69] When Bruce Frederick Davis was not on the polygraph, he expressed his belief in communist doctrine. When he was connected to the polygraph, however, he refused to discuss his beliefs. Would the polygraph have indicated deception? Bruce Frederick Davis fit OSWALD'S profile. He was possibly an Army "dangle." A recently released CIA document described him as "a source."

ROBERT EDWARD WEBSTER

Robert Edward Webster, (born October 23, 1928, Tiffin, Ohio), was a plastics technician for the Rand Development Corporation who made several trips to the Soviet Union to prepare for the 1959 U.S. Exhibition in Moscow. He defected to the USSR in October 1959.

THE RAND DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

The Rand Development Corporation was a CIA proprietary. On October 9, 1959, the CIA surmised that

As was pointed out last June and earlier, it might well have been of value to have obtained from ATIC, or the coordinator for the fair, a list of persons who Rand was sending to the USSR in order to avoid inadvertent contacts with such people as Robert Edward Webster and Ted Korycki as Guide 223 or Lincoln Leads respectively. This might be something to note for any future operation. Of the others mentioned [in a newspaper article about Webster's defection] H. J. Rand was sending to the USSR in order to avoid inadvertent contacts with such people as Webster and Ted Korycki as Guide 223 or Lincoln Leads respectively.

In 1975 the CIA reported:

A check of Agency records has not revealed that Webster has ever been used in any capacity by this Agency or ever been given any type of clearance. Consideration was being given in late May 1959 and early June 1959 for a debriefing of Webster in regard to his proposed travel to the USSR. However, Webster was not contacted prior to his departure for the USSR. On his return to the United States in 1962 Subject was debriefed by Agency Officers to obtain Soviet Realities data. [NARA 1993.08.14.09:37:45:870028]

DOCTOR H. J. RAND

The President of the Rand Development Corporation was Doctor H. J. Rand. H.J. Rand's father was Vice-Chairman of Sperry-Rand. [63-Civ-2753-USDC SDNY; Fortune 11.63 p135] The telephone number for the Rand Development Corporation in New York City was answered at a division of Martin-Marietta. Martin-Marietta was a major stockholder in Sperry-Rand.

H. J. Rand undertook private negotiations with the USSR for the purchase of technical devices and information, on behalf of the CIA's Office of Scientific Intelligence. During the late 1950's, CIA Agent Christopher Bird was the representative of the Rand Development Corporation in Washington, D.C. The Executive Vice President for Research and Development of the Rand Development Corporation, George Bookbinder, was a former OSS man who worked under Frank Wisner in Bucharest in 1944. [NYT 6.15.59; Smith OSS Univ. of Calif. Press London 1977 p397; Bookbinder DOB 7.7.14 died 11.79] In 1967 the Chairman of Rand Development was J. Elroy McCaw. In 1990 Forbes Magazine named him one of the richest 400 men in America. In 1970 Bookbinder and H.J. Rand had a falling out. Bookbinder sued Rand Development. [USDC SDNY 71 Civil 5631]

On October 23, 1964, Birch O'Neal suggested that Yuri Nosenko (AEDONER, "Sammy") be questioned about George Bookbinder, H.J. Rand and Brigadier General W. Randolph Lovelace's connection to Galina Ivanovna Rednikina, a Russian language secretary.

MEMORANDUM FOR: Chief, SR/CI/K (Deleted). Attention Miss (Deleted).

SUBJECT: Requirement for AEDONER

1. It is requested that AEDONER be shown the attached items which refer to the following individuals and be requested to provide all information he may have concerning the persons and events referred to in all the items:

Galina Ivanova Rednikina, an interpreter at the Sovietskaya Hotel in Moscow who has acted as a Russian language secretary for, George H. Bookbinder, an official of the Rand Development Corporation of Cleveland, Ohio, and Henry James Rand, head of the Rand Development Corporation, and Brigadier General W. Randolph Lovelace, Flight Surgeon and head of aero-space medical program of NASA, who visited the USSR in 1958 with Bookbinder and Rand.

2. For your information, only Rand, Bookbinder and Lovelace have had frequent contact with Soviet officials both in the United States and the USSR, including Mikhail Ilich Bruk, formerly with the Soviet Ministry of Health, who was identified by AEDONER as an agent of the KGB.

3. You will also note that Rand was the employer of Robert E. Webster, who defected to the Soviet Union in 1959 and renounced his U.S. citizenship.

4. This matter will also be of interest to Mrs. (Deleted) of SR/CI.

THE RAND CORPORATION

The Rand Development Corporation was often confused with CIA-linked think tank known as the Rand Corporation - the Rand Development Corporation was called the Rand Corporation in at least one State Department document. The Rand Corporation was organized in 1946 by General Henry "Hap" Arnold to perpetuate the partnership of military men and university scientists that had been established during the war. Rand was initially administered by the Douglas Aircraft Corporation. The Sperry-Rand Corporation provided part of the initial funding for the Rand Corporation although Rand stands for research and development.

In 1968 the CIA ties of the Rand Development Corporation were exposed because of an Department of Interior expense inquiry into an antipollution contract between the Rand Development Corporation and that Agency. Donald L. Hambric of the Federal Water Pollution Control Administration mentioned the contract to Department of the Interior officials. He wrote: "Rand also has a small classified contract with the CIA and any auditor working at Rand should have at least a secret clearance." [NYT 4.25.55,

4.16.67, 3.7.68, Sel. Repat. Cases Inv. U.S. Def. to USSR c/c 11.6.64; 71-Civ-5631 USDC-SDNY p3; Balt. News. American 1.31.75; NYT 3.7.68]

TONY ULASEWICZ AND RAND DEVELOPMENT

Tony Ulasewicz, a member of NIXON's White House/Special Operations Group wrote: "When I first met Chotiner, the first thing he did was to hand me a file on the Rand Development Corporation and its officers...Chotiner's file on the Rand Development Corporation disclosed that during the 1968 presidential campaign Rand was named as a defendant in a lawsuit started by some angry Minnesota businessmen. The charge was that the Small Business Administration and the Government Services Administration were guilty of fraud and conspiracy in the way a government contract for some postal vehicles was awarded to a wholly-owned the Rand Development Corporation subsidiary, the Universal Fiberglass Corporation. The Universal Fiberglass Corporation, the lawsuit charged, was born for the sole purpose [of obtaining this contract]. "Despite apparent lack of qualifications, a crony of Senator Hubert Humphrey awarded the contact to the Universal Fiberglass Corporation. The Universal Fiberglass Corporation defaulted and disappeared under Rand Development's umbrella." Murray Chotiner was trying to bring this situation to the attention of the media. [Ulasewicz, Pres. Priv. Eye, 1990]

ROBERT EDWARD WEBSTER'S DEFECTION

While in Moscow for seven weeks, beginning May 1959, Robert Edward Webster dated Vera Ivchenko, the hostess employed at the tourist restaurant of the Hotel Ukraine. In this capacity, Vera Ivchenko contacted many foreign correspondents, including those who accompanied Vice President NIXON to the USSR. According to the information given to the HSCA by the CIA, Vera Ivchenko was suspected of being a KGB agent. When the HSCA wrote about Robert Edward Webster, it never mentioned Vera Ivchenko's name: it referred to her as Robert Edward Webster's girlfriend. Robert Edward Webster conveyed to Ivchenko that he wished to divorce his wife in the United States and return to the Soviet Union to marry her. Robert Edward Webster first revealed his desire to defect on July 11, 1959. He approached two Soviet officials in charge of arrangements for the U.S. Exhibition, and requested information concerning the procedures for a U.S. citizen to remain in the USSR. Robert Edward Webster was given a telephone number to call, and a meeting was set up in the private room of a restaurant. Robert Edward Webster was instructed to write a letter to the Supreme Soviet requesting to remain as a citizen. He was given a form to fill out which he would submit to Mr. Popof. With Popof, Robert Edward Webster filled out a questionnaire furnishing his background and expressing his wish to remain in Russia to "better himself in the plastics industry." When Popof would not accept this, Robert Edward Webster said: "I want to stay in the Soviet Union because all the businesses in America are government-controlled." He refused to publicly denounce the United States, but stated that he "wished to cooperate in every way with the Soviet Union." In late July or early August, he attended a meeting in a private restaurant room at the Metropole Hotel. Robert Edward Webster told two Soviet chemists he could help them make the Rand spray gun which he demonstrated at the U.S. Exhibition. Robert Edward Webster also attempted to design a fiberglass resin depositor, but due to the lack of parts and equipment, the machine did not work.

Robert Edward Webster told the FBI that he was never questioned by the KGB:

The only time I was questioned concerning American defense matters occurred when some Moscow engineers asked me what government work was handled in the Rand Development Corporation. I denied any knowledge of this, because I had none." Robert Edward Webster informed the HSCA that the KGB never contacted him, that there was no reason for them to do so as the government officials who aided him in his defection had his entire story. He said he had never been questioned relative to intelligence matters. On September 9, 1959, he was told that he had been accepted as a Soviet citizen. He disappeared the next day. Although he asked to work in Moscow, the Soviets informed him he would be sent to Leningrad. The following day, the Soviet officials registered Robert Edward Webster at the Bucharest Hotel, and instructed him not to leave. He was given 1000 old rubles, and asked to write a note to a Rand Development employee requesting that money be left for him at the hotel, since he was going on a tour of Russia. The KGB threw a short party for Robert Edward Webster on September 11, 1959. He was then flown to Leningrad with an interpreter, where an Intourist representative met him.

He applied for work at the Leningrad Scientific Institute of Polymerized Plastics, and lived in a hotel with Ivchenko. On October 17, 1959, Robert Edward Webster was in Moscow. He attended a meeting at the OVIR Central Office with the original Soviet representative with whom he had contact; an unknown Soviet; Doctor H.J. Rand; George H. Bookbinder; and Richard E. Snyder. At this meeting, Robert Edward Webster said he was free to speak; he told Richard E. Snyder that when he applied for Soviet citizenship, he was granted a Soviet passport on September 21, 1959. He never exhibited the passport to Richard E. Snyder, because it had not yet been issued to him. When Robert Edward Webster later decided to re-defect, he told Richard E. Snyder he had no Soviet documentation at the OVIR meeting but was still in possession of the American passport which he never sent to Richard E. Snyder as requested. He did, however, fill out a State Department form, "Affidavit for Expatriated Person," in which he renounced his American citizenship. Vera Ivchenko joined him the following day for a month-long vacation. [also see DOS ltr. Snyder to Boster 10.28.59; Davis to Snyder 12.10.59] On return to Leningrad, the couple began work at the plastics institute, where Vera Ivchenko was employed as an assistant and translator. They resided in a new apartment building.

On October 8, 1959, an Memorandum for the Record was generated by (deleted) "Regarding: Attempts to Locate Webster; receipt of (above) Emb. Cable. - AICC Cleveland asked whether Webster was carrying out clandestine task for CIA which hadn't been coordinated with them. Was assured that this was not case & to best of our knowledge Webster had not been briefed by & was unknown to either DDP or OO Offices. Check made with (deleted); had encountered Webster on a few social occasions; he will consult with Messrs. (deleted) to produce a more complete picture of Webster."

On October 20, 1959, this Memorandum for the Record was generated by Bruce L. Solie, Office of Security / Security Research Staff regarding Robert Edward Webster: "(Deleted) advised (deleted) called Roman regarding Agency interest in Webster. - Office of Security files - no clearance; was an OO/C interest in Webster in late May 1959, but Webster wasn't contacted by OO/C prior to trips to USSR. CI/OA files - no record." On October 21, 1959, this document was sent by (deleted) to Chief, Domestic Contacts Division, attention Support Branch "Regarding: Webster case at recent Machine Searching Conference on October 20, 1959. Our organization has no interest in matter." On October 22, 1959, an Office Memo (Deleted) to Chief, Contact Division, Attention Support (Deleted) re: Webster was generated "Questions asked by Major Robert Lochera (?) of OSI: a) Is this office doing anything re: Webster's defection? b) If not, do they contemplate doing anything? c) What would this office have done if Webster left normally? (Deleted) called next day w/response they knew only what was in newspapers regarding Webster; (not very cooperative)." "A CIA Office Memorandum dated October 23, 1959, was sent to Chief Contact Bureau (Deleted) concerned: "information on Vera Ivchenko, Webster's girlfriend." "October 26, 1959. Memo (Deleted) to Director, FBI, regarding Agency interest in Webster. Webster never used by Agency; was considered for debriefing May 1959 to June 1959, however, he wasn't contacted prior to departure for USSR. Agency does have (deleted) [interest in Rand Development]. In view of Webster's employment with Rand Development Corporation, please forward any information obtained in the investigation of Webster." On October 28, 1959 a report on Robert Edward Webster stated: "Webster was given security clearance on June 5, 1959, but never had access to military information." "October 30, 1959. Office Memo (Deleted) regarding Kent (of WRU) conversation with H.J. Rand regarding Webster."

These document came from a handwritten summary of all the CIA documents in Webster's file prepared by the HSCA on March 15, 1978. Several pages of entries marked Volume III (Cont.) & Vol. IV have been deleted.

Some people in the CIA thought Robert Edward Webster was an operation due to his connection with the Rand Development Company. This researcher thought Robert Edward Webster was an operation until documents declassified in 1995 revealed that before coming to Rand Development, Robert Edward Webster had worked for six corporations that had nothing to do with the intelligence community. Just before Robert Edward Webster left for the Soviet Union The New York Times took a family photograph. It on October 20, 1959, and showed Robert Edward Webster, a Quaker, with wife Martha, his seven-year-old son Michael, and daughter six-year-old Anne reading a magazine entitled USSR. Robert Edward Webster deserted his wife of eight years and his two children in Ohio with no apparent warning except for a call to the Russian secretary in the Rand Development Company's Moscow office; he requested the secretary notify his family he was not returning. If Robert Edward Webster was an agent, his method of establishing a cover was extraordinary. The KGB would have found it difficult to believe that a CIA spy would leave his wife and children in the United States, then have a child with a Russian woman. Robert Edward Webster was destroying his family. Was someone carrying out the dictates of the Doolittle Report and "hitherto acceptable norms of human conduct no longer applied" or was Robert Edward Webster crazy? Logic dictated that the KGB would have been interested in the Rand Development Corporation, simply because its name evoked the Rand Corporation. Webster was probably questioned by the KGB.

Robert Edward Webster was granted a Soviet internal passport after writing a summary of his life, listing his relatives and where they worked, submitting photographs of himself, and undergoing a medical examination. In December or January 1960, he turned over his American passport and obtained a Soviet passport at the OVIR office in Leningrad. Robert Edward Webster had lawfully renounced his citizenship; the State Department issued a Certificate of Loss of Citizenship.

MARINA OSWALD AND ROBERT WEBSTER?

This entry was found in a CIA Name List With Traces on Marina Oswald's address book: "Prizentsev, Lev Kondrat'yevskiy Prosepepekt 7, Apt. 63 or Kondrat'yevskiy

Prosepepekt 63 Apt 7, Leningrad." In a December 17, 1963 FBI interview, Marina Oswald said she met Lev Prizentsev at a rest home near Leningrad [October 1960?] and that 'he had an amorous interest in Irina Volkova [q.v.] who, unfortunately was already married.' Traces: 1. No traces on Prizentsev. 2. Robert E. Webster claimed to have resided in a three-room apartment at Kondrat'yevskiy Prosepepekt 63 Apt. 18, Leningrad." Did Robert Edward Webster know Marina Oswald? Robert Edward Webster told the FBI he had no contact with LEE OSWALD, although he had heard of him. [David Slawson WC Notes #340] In 1993 Lev Prizentsev said he did not know that Robert Edward Webster lived in his building. [Interview with W.S. Malone 5.12.93] ANGLETON sent a memorandum to J. Edgar Hoover about this on May 11, 1964. Marina Oswald told this researcher in 1994:

There may have been a connection or there was none at all. I tell you what it is. When I was going to pharmacy school I was there with Ellie Sobreta whose address is in my book. It just happened to be in a good neighborhood, and if Robert Edward Webster was living there, neither of us knew. She doesn't know it up to this day. So people started making connections where is none. I did not know Webster. She simply was my friend and I visit her and he lived in her building.

WEBSTER REDEFECTS

After six months had passed, Robert Edward Webster began to take the steps necessary to re-defect. In early December 1959 he wrote to the U.S. Embassy; he claimed he had received no reply to this letter. In January 1960 he received a letter from his father informing him that his mother had a nervous breakdown and he was needed in the United States. A daughter, Svetlana Robertovna Webster, was born to the couple in August 1960. In late April 1961 Popof arranged for him and Ivchenko to visit Moscow on Mayday. In Moscow, due to his American clothing, he entered the American Embassy unchallenged. He informed Consul John McVickar that he wished to return to the United States. John McVickar requested two notarized statements from Robert Edward Webster's father saying he would be responsible for his son after Robert Edward Webster's return, and told him to apply for a Soviet exit visa. When he returned to Leningrad, Ivchenko helped him prepare the application for the exit visa. She gave her consent, which was required.

Still, high government officials, suspected Robert Edward Webster was on a CIA mission. On April 15, 1961, the Director of the Central Intelligence Agency, Allen Dulles, sent a letter to McGeorge Bundy, the National Security advisor to President John F. Kennedy's, which stated the CIA had no operational relationship with Robert Edward Webster. {Rockefeller Commission handwritten notes.} In June 1961, Robert Edward Webster was apprised that his request for an exit visa had been denied; he would have to wait one year before he could reapply.

On November 8, 1961, a CIA Official Routing Slip indicated that documents on Webster had been sent to CI/SIG Mr. O'Neal, Mrs. Egerter, Evans, Grady, RID Files. Remarks: CD/OO Case 29.267 From S. Stetson CD/OO Support Branch.

Soviet officials from Moscow visited Robert Edward Webster, inquired why he was unhappy, and suggested he send for his American family. In February 1962 he was granted an exit visa. In March 1962 the American Embassy gave him instructions on obtaining an American entrance visa. Robert Edward Webster quit his job, and his father sent him a plane ticket for his passage home. He surrendered his internal Soviet passport for his exit visa in May. Robert Edward Webster arrived in the United States as an alien under the Russian quota, on May 20, 1962. He did not attempt to get Ivchenko or his daughter out of the Soviet Union. [DOS For. Ser. Disp. 10.25.59 - Edward Freers; WCE960 p3; FBI 105-82555-NR 2.7.64; HSCA V12 p448-450]

WEBSTER'S DEBRIEFING

Shortly after his return to the United States, Robert Edward Webster's wife divorced him. She married W.G. Belding of Zelenople, Pennsylvania. Eugene S. Rittenburg, Cleveland Resident Agent, reported this to Headquarters. Robert Edward Webster was debriefed in Ohio by CIA and Air Force representatives. The CIA reported: "(Deleted) and (Deleted) talked alone with Webster in the INS offices for about one hour. During this time, no attempt was made to secure any FPI, rather it was a general 'get acquainted' type session. Webster was very well-dressed, but extremely nervous. His nervousness was not caused by our presence, as Mr. O'Brian had previously told us that he was having difficulty getting Webster's fingerprints as he was perspiring so profusely - even through his fingertips." [CIA Pitts F.O. 6.28.62] Robert Edward Webster was brought to CIA Headquarters where he was debriefed for two weeks. The debriefing reports included a chronology of his life, the CIA's assessment of him, information regarding life in the Soviet Union, Robert Edward Webster's work there, biographical data on persons he met there, and other information which was classified. [CIA SR/6-62-274, 11.1.62, Kay Grady] Ann Egerter, Birch O'Neal, (FNU) Grady and (FNU) Evans received copies of the debriefing.

Robert Edward Webster told the CIA that his father was a ceramics engineer who was still in college when he was born.

The family lived in Columbus until the father graduated from college and then moved to South Milwaukee...Subject describes these years as being lean and describes the family as being 'poor.' He recalls that in Milwaukee he developed a fear of being in water. In Louisville he was caught trying to steal apples from a neighborhood store. He states he was sent home by the store owner but not punished. In Louisville, when the Subject was six or seven years old his mother reportedly suffered a nervous breakdown. It was described to him that his mother passed out and was hospitalized in a Louisville City Hospital. He states that his father indicated that he never knew the reason why his mother became ill. He recalls visiting his mother in the hospital and viewing her through a screen wire door. This scene became quite vivid for him again in January 1960 in Moscow when he received a letter from his father in which the father stated that his mother had suffered a complete mental breakdown and was in the hospital again...He isn't sure how long his mother was in the hospital...At the same time while studying at night he took a day job in a manufacturing plant. On weekends he went home to his parents by bus and during one such trip he met his future wife. She was also studying away from home in a beautician's school and going home on weekends. After a short courtship he proposed, she accepted and they eloped. His wife was under age and kept her true age from the authorities when applying for a marriage license. Their plan was to keep their marriage secret until after his wife had finished beautician's school. However, the news somehow got back to his wife's parents and the secret was out. His mother-in-law was quite upset over the marriage. His parents, however, accepted in calmly and without fanfare and the subject notes that they could do little else since they also eloped when they were married. His wife finished beauticians school and he dropped out of Carnegie Tech and began the job of supporting them. He changed jobs and his wife began part-time work as a beautician. But they found the going difficult and after a few months he found a job in a plastics factory in his home town. His wife, who is a diabetic and has been since childhood, became pregnant. Because of her diabetes she required special medical care during her pregnancy. One year and one month after their marriage their first child, a son, was delivered by cesarean section. Subject became active in civic and church affairs, was promoted to foreman capacity in the plastics plant and he began attending a local small college in the evening studying chemistry. He was gone from home three nights a week to school and on returning home one night early found a strange man in the living room with his wife. This was a shock to him and he became quite angry although he did not express this to his wife or to the man. His wife stated she was lonely and gave that as her explanation for her actions. The Subject promptly went out and purchased an expensive wrist watch which he actually could not afford. Things cooled down somewhat between them. Very soon thereafter in 1953 their second child, a daughter, was born.

His wife required constant medical attention as well as insulin and special diet. On two occasions early in their marriage she went into insulin coma and was seriously ill. Their expenses were greater than his income and he found himself getting deeper in debt. Feeling he could better himself he began looking for a new job and found a better paying one in a nearby town. He again was given a supervisory position in this plastics plant but this time he was supervising all female workers. At this point he notes his real troubles began. He soon found himself involved with a female married employee and while his wife was in the hospital for one of her regular checkups he became quite involved in this extra marital affair. His wife found out and the relationship deteriorated even further. Separation and divorces were contemplated, a lawyer visited with this in mind but again the situation cooled down.

The plastics plant where he was working was purchased by another firm and though he was advised that he would not lose his job, in anticipation of being fired he quit his job...

He continued to look for other work and through business contacts was approached by the Rand Development Company of Cleveland and was offered a better paying job with them. He accepted and moved to Cleveland. Soon he was assigned to a traveling job in which he was to demonstrate a new piece of plastics manufacturing equipment. He began to travel frequently and each trip began to keep him away from home for longer periods of time. His wife became increasingly upset because of his prolonged absences. He found his job trying and demanding and he spent a great deal of time on the minute details of the exhibits. On one trip in 1958 in Chicago after getting an exhibit set up and eating and drinking in excess he had his first episode of passing out. He describes being under a great deal of tension he knew he was going into shock. Realizing what was going on he told people what to do for him and after lying down for a while, he soon recovered. A similar episode occurred in Moscow in May 1959 where he was preparing the plastics equipment for the exhibition. In 1959 his company asked him to go to Moscow to help set up an exhibit. His first trip was in March 1959 with another company official and he remained there for one week doing a preliminary survey. He returned to the States and in May 1959 again went back to Moscow to start actual work on setting up the plastics equipment. He viewed this opportunity as one in which if he was able to do a good job he would certainly improve his standing with his company. On the second trip he was gone much longer than originally planned for and he soon began receiving letters from his wife in which she gave him a 'fit' about his long absences. He notes that once in the States he was away for some time and on returning home he found that his wife had taken the children and had left town. He located them at his in-laws and when he asked his wife to return she questioned whether he really wanted his family or not. He convinced her that he did and she returned.

During his second stay in Moscow he met a Russian girl, Vera. He first met her in restaurant where she worked as a translator and soon thereafter began dating her. He found himself comparing her with his wife and soon began telling Vera all his family troubles. He describes Vera as married but separated from her husband. She was pictured as petite, womanly and passionate. In the next breath he spontaneously denied intimate relationships with her until after the Soviets had officially informed him he could stay in the Soviet Union. His wife was described as being generally indifferent sexually and only at time would their relations in this area be satisfactory.

The Subject feels that somehow, somewhere during his second prolonged seven to eight week visit in Moscow, Vera subtly suggested that he stay in Russia. But at the same time she 'pooh-poohed the idea that he could or would stay.' During this visit he made up his mind to attempt to stay in Russia and so informed Vera. 'I must have been way off base and I wonder if I had a nervous breakdown.' But staying in Russia offered him a chance to get as far away as possible from his troubles at home and the plastics industry in Russia was in its infancy and he felt he could make his mark there.

Sometime in mid-summer 1959 he returned to the U.S. and was home for ten days. This period with his wife is described as being a honeymoon but in spite of this he continued with his plan to return to the Soviet Union and request permission to remain there. He packed some winter clothes, books and jazz records to take with him.

On returning to the USSR sometime in July 1959 he approached a male translator at the exhibit and inquired as to necessary procedure to obtain permission to become a permanent resident of the USSR. He received some vague answers and then was asked to identify the person who was interested in such a step. He then indicated he was the interested party and there began shortly thereafter a series of clandestine meetings with various Soviet officials. At each meeting he states he drank heavily and was generally 'loaded' by the time the meeting was over. As he recalls it it was sometime in September before he was informed that his request to stay was being granted. When he heard the news he felt a "twinge of guilt and regret." He was particularly troubled by his neutral feeling for his children back home.

His Soviet handlers asked him to pack a small bag, leave a not for his Rand Company boss in Moscow that he was going on a tour of Russia. He was then moved to another hotel in Moscow and soon thereafter flown to Leningrad. She stayed with him five days and he states emphatically that during this period he first had sexual relations with her.

He states that he very much wanted Vera to become pregnant as he was "afraid of not being able to hold her." Vera returned to Moscow to make arrangements to join him permanently. He was given a position at the plastics institute in Leningrad. Vera soon became pregnant and was quite ill. His job was to help the Soviets reproduce the U.S. plastics machine on exhibit in Moscow. He states that by the time he had left they had not succeeded in doing this. In January 1960 he received a letter from his father indicating that his mother had suffered a complete nervous breakdown as a result of his defection.

At this point Webster decided to redefect. Technical information supplied by Robert Edward Webster was included in a Joint Report of the Foreign Technical Division, Air Force Systems Command, and the CIA. On February 20, 1970, the Domestic Contacts Division/Operational Support Staff contacted CI/Liaison Jane Roman regarding Robert Edward Webster. [NARA 1993.08.02.20:01:25: 870033]

ROBERT EDWARD WEBSTER: A VEGETABLE

Frontline located Robert Edward Webster in 1993. He was in Oaks Nursing Home, New Bedford, Massachusetts, and was allegedly unable to converse. [CIA 535-227A, 522-228; CIA Name List with Traces Vladimir Makarov, Robert Aleksandrovich Ivanov also Vanda Kuznetsova] Robert Edward Webster's nurse, Susan Gilbert, told me: "He suffers from no mental illness. His family doesn't want him to talk and his legal guardian doesn't want him to talk. He's a shell of the man he once was. Medical ethics prevent me from telling you more. He doesn't want to talk to you or see you."

OSWALD'S DOMESTIC CONTACTS DIVISION DEBRIEFING

The HSCA conducted a review of defector files to determine whether defectors were routinely debriefed upon their return to the United States. The HSCA began with the CIA's full list of 380 defectors. From this list, the HSCA compiled a list of persons who were U.S. born citizens who defected, or attempted to defect, to the Soviet Union between 1958 and 1963, and who returned to the U.S. within the same period. In addition, the Committee included individuals from the October 25, 1960, State Department letter regarding defectors sent to the CIA. The Committee requested files on 29 individuals and the CIA provided files on 28 individuals on whom it maintained records. These 201 files were reviewed as well as any existing Domestic Contacts Division files. The review revealed that, in the cases of six of the individuals, there was no indication they had ever returned to the United States. As for the other 22 defectors, the file review showed there was no record of CIA contact with 17, although 4 of these files contained reports by sources who had advised the Agency of their contact with the re-defectors, so they had been indirectly contacted. The circumstances of the CIA's contact with the other five defectors differed:

Irving Amron (born December 4, 1917) - His file reflected that he had been living in the USSR since 1933 and returned to the United States in 1962. He was debriefed by a CIA officer after applying for employment in response to a newspaper advertisement. Amron had been in the Soviet Union too long to have been included in the study.

Bruce F. Davis - His file contained a CIA debriefing report.

Harold Citrynell - His file reflected he was unwittingly debriefed by a CIA officer, upon the departure of the official from the Soviet Union, in the American Embassy, Copenhagen. Also interviewed by Domestic Contacts Division.

Robert Edward Webster - Extensive debriefing at CIA Headquarters.

Libero Ricciardelli - CIA debriefing by Boston Domestic Contacts Division.

Out of 22 defectors, nine had been debriefed by the CIA either directly or indirectly, almost half. The HSCA: "Based on this file review, it appeared to the committee that the CIA did not contact returning defectors in 1962 as a matter of standard operating procedure. It becomes clear from the review of these defector files that CIA debriefing of defectors was a random occurrence. Nonetheless, in the instances when the Agency did choose to debrief returning American defectors...the persons who were debriefed were similar to OSWALD in that they defected and returned within the same general time period and each spent his time in the Soviet Union in areas of interest to the CIA."

If the CIA had debriefed Robert Edward Webster and Bruce Frederick Davis, the defectors whose circumstances most closely resembled OSWALD'S, why not OSWALD? Was he debriefed by a component other than Domestic Contacts Division? The Committee: "The CIA has denied ever having any contact with OSWALD and its records are consistent with this position. Because the Agency has a Domestic Contacts Division that routinely attempts to solicit information on a non-clandestine basis from Americans traveling abroad, the absence of any record indicating that OSWALD, a returning defector who had worked in a Minsk radio factory, had been debriefed has been considered...not to be indicative that OSWALD had been contacted through other than routine Domestic Contacts Division channels."

REDWOOD

The HSCA discovered conflicting information when it "interviewed the former chief of an Agency component responsible for research related to clandestine operations within the Soviet Union," who, on November 25, 1963, wrote the following memo:

Chief, (Deleted)
Chief, (Deleted)
Chief of Station, (Deleted).
(Deleted) OSWALD
For Information

For the record we forward herewith a memorandum by (Deleted – Case Officer Stationed In Paris) Staff Employee in which he gives his recollections of (Deleted) interest in Subject following Subject's return to the United States from the USSR. (Deleted).

SUBJECT: OSWALD

TO: Walter P. HALTIGAN [Chief of the Soviet Section of the Paris Station]

(1) It makes very little difference now but REDWOOD had at one time an OI (Overseas Intelligence) interest in OSWALD. As soon as I heard OSWALD'S name, I recalled that as Chief of the 6 Branch [specializing in the debriefing of defectors from the Soviet Union] I had discussed, sometime in the summer of 1960, with the then Chief and Deputy Chief of the 6 Research Section the laying on of interviews through the Domestic Contacts Division [KUJUMP] or other suitable channels. At the moment I don't recall if this was discussed while OSWALD and his family were on route to this country or if it was after their arrival.

(2) I remember that OSWALD'S unusual behavior in the USSR had struck me from the moment I had read the first State Department [ODACID] dispatch on him, and I told my subordinates something amounting to 'Don't push too hard to get the information we need, because this individual looks odd.' We were particularly interested in the information that OSWALD might provide on the Minsk factory in which he was employed, and of course we sought the usual biographic information that might help develop foreign personality dossiers.

(3) I was phasing into my LPOVER cover assignment and out of KUDOVE at the time. Thus, I would have left the country shortly after OSWALD'S arrival. I do not know what action developed thereafter.

Addendum

(4) As an afterthought, I recall also at the time I was becoming increasingly interested in watching a pattern we had discovered in the course of our biographical and research work in 6: the number of Soviet women marrying foreigners, being permitted to leave the USSR, then eventually divorcing their spouses and settling down abroad without returning 'home.' The AE OCEAN-3 case was among the first of these, and we eventually turned up something like two dozen similar cases. We established links between some of these women and the KGB. KUDESK became interested in the developing trend we had come across. It was partly to learn if OSWALD'S wife would actually accompany him to our country, partly out of interest in OSWALD'S own experiences in the USSR, that we showed operational intelligence interest in the HARVEY story. (Thomas B. CASASIN)" [CIA 435-173A; CIA DO-02647-p3 of 3]

Edward Petty:

REDWOOD was not an operation; it was a type of activity. It was the examination for exploitation of people who had come out of the Soviet Union. REDSKIN was more a penetration type activity. Looking for operational opportunities with people who were going in.

Thomas B. Casasin told the HSCA that, to his knowledge, contact was never made with OSWALD. Moreover, if a debriefing had occurred, the officer stated he would have been informed. This officer was wrong. OSWALD photographed the plant and procured a floor plan; this was corroborated by CIA employee Don Deneselya who, in 1962, had worked in the Soviet Branch, Foreign Documents Division, Directorate of Intelligence. Don Deneselya advised the HSCA

He specifically recalled collecting intelligence regarding the Minsk radio plant. This individual claimed that during the summer of 1962, he reviewed a contact report from CIA Field Office representatives who had interviewed a former Marine who had worked at the Minsk radio plant following his defection to the USSR. This defector, whom the employee believed may have been OSWALD, had been living with his family in Minsk. The employee advised the HSCA that the contact report had been filed in a volume on the Minsk radio plant that should be retrievable from the Industrial Registry Branch, then a component of the Central Reference Office. Accordingly, the committee requested that the CIA provide both the contact report and the volume of materials concerning the Minsk radio plant. A review by the committee of the documents in the volumes of the Minsk radio plant, however, failed to locate any such contact report.

Frontline researcher John Newman reported:

A memo from CI/SIG has surfaced in these files with handwriting on it which gives the name of a Domestic Contacts Division employee - a name which appears to be one 'Andy' Anderson - as a CIA contact for OSWALD. This document confirms the recollections of other CS employees that Andy Anderson did in fact debrief OSWALD. Don Deneselya, who worked in the Russian Branch, Foreign Documents Division, Office of Contacts read Anderson's debrief in 1962. [Testimony to Rep. Conyers 11.17.93]

John Newman stated that the former deputy chief of the Domestic Contacts Division said that the CIA did debrief Oswald. In 1993 several other CIA officers remember a Major Andy Anderson who conducted debriefings for the CIA's domestic contact division, and two recalled the debriefing of OSWALD but would not go public with the information. John Newman found traces of a notation in OSWALD's 201 file, that were reversed, blended through from a document the CIA did not want copied. Newman turned it over and held it to the light, and deciphered handwriting that read "Anderson 00 on OSWALD." Barely legible, the name ANDY preceded it. [LIVE BY THE SWORD: THE SECRET WAR AGAINST CASTRO AND THE DEATH OF JFK by Gus Russo]

The HSCA Casasin, Haligan and Hart interviews were a waste of time because these men were not about to link OSWALD to their beloved CIA:

Casasin said at the time (the SR Division considered interview Oswald) he assumed Oswald had been sent out of the Soviet Union by the KGB, so exercised caution and did not attempt to debrief OSWALD...Casasin said he believes it is inconceivable that Oswald would have been any type of operative of the CIA. However, he also gave his opinion that the nature of KGB operations made it conceivable that Oswald could have been a "lay low" Soviet operative.

Haltigan stated that he had never heard any rumors to the effect that Oswald had been used by the CIA at any time. He felt that because of his assignments within the Agency, he would have been in a position to know if Oswald had been used in any capacity.

Lastly the Committee contacted Mr. Paul Hartman, who served on the Counterintelligence Staff Research and Analysis Group at the time of the assassination. Mr. Hartman authored a memo dated September 18, 1975 which detailed the steps he took on November 27, 1963 to determine whether Oswald had ever been used by the CIA or connected with the Agency in any conceivable way. Hartman, who was considered a CIA clandestine records expert, concluded the allegation of Oswald's connection to CIA were totally unfounded.

HELMS

Scott Malone also reported that in September 1993 Richard Helms admitted that OSWALD "might have been" debriefed. In 1964 the Warren Commission questioned then-CIA Director John McCone about CIA contact with OSWALD. John McCone's testimony was based on a search supervised by Richard Helms. John McCone submitted an affidavit and testified: "I have gone into the matter in considerable detail personally, in my inquiry with the appropriate people within the Agency, examined all records in our files relating to OSWALD...OSWALD was not a CIA agent, employee or informant. The Agency never contacted him, interviewed him, talked with him...The Agency never furnished him with any funds or money...in the Soviet Union or anyplace." John McCone was then asked whether he was made aware of every CIA agent and informer. He answered, "Mr. Helms, who is directly responsible for that Agency division's activities as a Deputy Director, might explain. Would that be permissible?"

Richard Helms stated: "On Mr. McCone's behalf, I had all of our records searched to see if there had been any contacts at any time prior to President Kennedy's assassination by anyone in the CIA with OSWALD. We checked our card files and our personnel files and all our records. Now, this check turned out to be negative." Richard Helms said "no contact had even been contemplated with OSWALD." [Wash. Star 10.1.76] The Warren Commission never questioned ANGLETON.

ANGLETON

When questioned in the late 1970's ANGLETON denied that the CIA ever contemplated contacting OSWALD. Attorney Marvin Miller asked:

Q. Could it have happened without your knowledge?

A. No.

Q. Then your testimony would be that every single activity undertaken by your section with any individual was cleared with you first or given to you afterwards?

A. Well, I think I would have learned from my Deputy if there had been any, any attempt or any desire to contact OSWALD because of the FBI jurisdiction of the case.

Q. What about the time he was in the Soviet Union?

A. I don't think I was aware at the time.

JANUARY 4, 1960

OSWALD:

December 31, 1959. New Years Eve, I spend in the company of Rosa Agafoneva at the Hotel Berlin, she has the duty. I sit with her until past midnight, she gives me a small "Boratin" clown, for a New Years present she is very nice. I found out only recently she is married, has a small son who was born crippled, that this is why she is so strangely tender and compelling.

January 1, 1959 to January 4, 1960. No change in routine."

On January 4, 1960, OVIR granted OSWALD a stateless passport, which required him to report to the Soviet Passport and Visa Department three times a year:

January 4, 1960 I am called to passport office and finally given a Soviet document not the Soviet citizenship as I so wanted, only a residence document, not even for foreigners but a paper called "for those without citizenship." still I am happy. The official says they are sending me to the city of "Minsk". I ask "is that in Siberia?" He only laughs; he also tells me they have arranged for me to receive some money through the Red Cross. To pay my hotel bill and expenses. I thank the gentlemen and leave later in the afternoon. I see Remma "she asks are you happy" "yes". [CIA 646-265]

The CIA was unable to determine if it was unusual for OSWALD to be allowed to remain in the USSR: "Not knowing how many would-be defectors have been turned back, it is impossible to say whether the acceptance of OSWALD and five others is unusual. Acceptance of KGB agents is certainly not out of the ordinary." [CIA Les Rodes draft]

January 5, 1960. I got to Red Cross in Moscow for money with interruptor (a new one). I receive 5000. Rubles. A huge sum!! Later in Minsk I am to earn 70 Rubles a month at the factory.

January 7, 1960. I leave Moscow by train for Minsk, Belorussia. My hotel bill was 2200. Ruble and the train ticket to Minsk 150 Rubles so I have a lot of money & hope. I wrote my Brother and my Mother letters in which I said "I do not wish to every contact you again." I am begining a new life and I don't want any part of the old."

January 7, 1960. Arrive in Minsk, met by 2 women Red Cross workers. We go to Hotel Minsk. [located at 11 Leninsky Prospect] I take room and meet Rosa and Stellina, who persons from Intourist in hotel who speak English. Stellina is in 40's, nice, married, young child. Rosa about 23, blond, attractive unmarried excellant English, we attract each other at once.

OSWALD: JANUARY 8, 1960

The Historic Diary.

January 8, 1960 I meet the city mayor, Comrade Shrapof, who welcomes me to Minsk promises me a rent free apartment "soon" and warns me about "uncultured persons" who sometimes insult foriengers. My interputer: Roman Detkof, Head For. Tech. Instit. next door.

JANUARY 10, 1960

"January 10, 1960. The day to myself. I walk through city, very nice." Norman Mailer reported that in Minsk OSWALD'S case was assigned to KGB Officer Igor Ivanovitch Guzman. Igor Ivanovitch Guzman told Norman Mailer that it had been decided on the highest levels after the suicide attempt to let him stay, even though his suicide attempt may have been staged. Igor Ivanovitch Guzman assigned Stepan Vasilyevich Gregorieff to OSWALD. Hundreds of pages later Norman Mailer told his readers these names were pseudonyms. Why not say it at the outset? Norman Mailer determined that the KGB watched OSWALD on January 9, 1969, January 10, 1960, January 13, 1960 and January 30, 1960.

THE MINSK RADIO PLANT JANUARY 12, 1960

Minsk was a center of science and technology. OSWALD received a position in the experimental division of the Minsk radio plant, an apartment, and a subsidy from the Soviet Red Cross. The CIA: "During this period he was also helped financially by various Russians in Moscow, but Marina Oswald did not know the extent of their aid (nor did she indicate she knew their identities)." [CIA Chron. LHO in USSR 1.24.64]

January 12, 1960 I vist Minsk Radio Factory where I shall work. There I meet Argentinian immigrant Alexander Zeger. Born a Polish Jew. immi to Argen. in 1933 and back to Polish homeland (now part of Belo.) in 1955. Speaks English with Amer. accent he worked for Amer. Com. in Argen. He is Head of a Dept. A quialified engenien. in late 40's, mild mannered, likable. He seems to want to tell me somet. I show him my tempor. docu. and say soon I shall have Russ. citiz.

In 1938 Alexander Ziger emigrated from Poland to Argentina where he worked for an American company. This is assuming that "Amer. Com. in Argen" stands for "American Company." (Another possible interpretation is "American Committee." The Office of Inter-American Affairs was known in South America as the "American Committees.") Alexander Ziger returned to Poland in 1956 "homesick for his native land and taken in by their propaganda." The CIA stated: "Available records show that the ship Salta, when leaving Buenos Aires, Argentina, for Odessa, USSR, on July 1, 1956, carried repatriates back to the Soviet Union. Among them were Alexander Ziger, Soviet, age 44, engineer. Ana Ziger, Soviet, age 46...A report of 1957 refers to Alejandro Ziger, a Pole, and radio-telephonic expert, 44 years old, married to Ana Dmitruk, a Pole, 47 years old." [Draft of 518-219] The Zigers native land was by then part of the USSR. The Zigers ended up living in Minsk. In 1957 Ziger applied for an exit visa at the Argentine Embassy, Moscow. He was refused. OSWALD wrote:

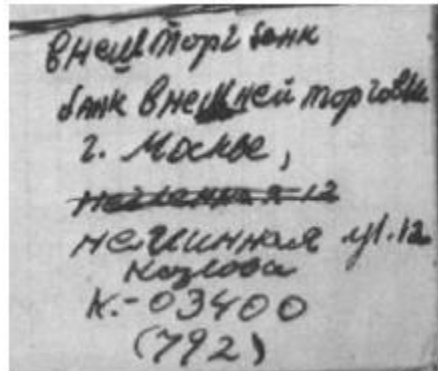

...In Minsk the capital of belorussia the ministry of Interia [Inertia?] became responsible in 1960 for determining the eligibility of aplicants for hard to get exit visas too leave the USSR formaly the official progrative of Moscow alone but now that this state ministry in Moscow has "withered away" it becomes all the more difficule to get an exit visa since now one had to go to the area, city and republican state capital commites of beaurocrats and on top of all that a last finial O.K. has to come from increadibly the Moscow ministry of foreign affairs!! [WCE 25 p10]

The CIA identified Alexander Ziger's friend Anatoliy as Anatol Kholodov, after the Warren Report was released. A check of unspecified Agency files on November 18, 1964, revealed "no identifiable information on Kholodov." The Warren Commission believed the Zigers were susceptible to persecution because of their association with OSWALD. Like Rimma Sherakova, the name "Ziger" was changed when Life Magazine printed excerpts from OSWALD'S Historic Diary. Dr. Alfred Goldberg, who wrote much of the Warren Report, "indicated that some of OSWALD'S references to the Zigers had been toned down to protect them." In 1977, Alexander Ziger lived in Minsk. Alexander Ziger died in the early 1990's possibly in Israel. [Slawson: Rankin with I.D. Levine-Transmittal 2-6.2.64, transcript pp. 14-16; WC Inventory & Evidence 3-6 Slawson; WC Rankin Memo 10.6.64; CIA 947-927; Conversation with telephone operator, Minsk, USSR] Jews comprised a large proportion of Soviet dissidents at this time.

OSWALD may have in touch with dissident Russians working for the CIA while he was in the Soviet Union. The name Kozlova was found in his address book:

Vneshtory Bank
Bank of Foreign Trade
Moscow
Neglinnaya Ul. 12
Kozlova (woman's surname)
K-03400 (telephone number)

(792) (possible telephone extension)

The CIA:

TO: Files

FROM: M.D. Stevens

2. The following notation appears on 29 of Oswald's address book (page 12 of the FBI memo).

Kozlova (woman's surname)
K-03400 (telephone number)
(792) (possible telephone extension)

3. Security Indices contain information on a number of women with the name Kozlova, none of whom can be identified as being the individual in question; but any of whom might be.

(1) Olympiada Kozlova, #MS-16332, is the aunt of Nikolai Vasilievich Kozlov #51048 - SSD who is currently employed as an agent by this agency. CI/SIG has information on Kozlov which makes reference to various female relatives of his by the name of Kozlova. Olympiada Kozlova, a professor, is the Director of the Moscow Institute of Engineering and Economics. She is active politically, often travels abroad, and in November 1961, was scheduled to travel to Washington, D.C., with a scientific group. It should be possible to obtain this woman's telephone number for comparison with that listed in OSWALD'S address book under the name Kozlova.

(2) One 'Valentina Kozlova, NSC,' was observed to arrive at the Soviet Mission in Tokyo on June 11, 1956, at 10:45 a.m. and to depart at 12:07 p.m. She was not further identified in our information.

(3) One Lyubov Nikolaevna Kozlova, (MS 9995) was an interpreter in the USSR Embassy in London from 1950 to 1953, and in the U.N. in New York City in 1954. [CIA 487, 470, 1299-470].

The 1962 Moscow Telephone Directory lists the telephone number K-03400 for the Ministry of Finance of the USSR located at Neglinnaya Ul. 12. (The number next to it was an extension or room number at the Ministry). The same source also gives the address of the Vneshtorg Bank as Neglinnaya Ul. 12.

The CIA could not or did not want to trace the telephone extension and find out who it went to. My vote goes to Olympiada Kozlova. A bank and economics are involved and one of her relatives had an SSD number which meant he worked for the CIA with ANGLETON at CI/SIG. The reason this SSD number was withheld was because it provides another link to OSWALD and CIA. When the document was declassified in its entirety it turned out I was right.

OSWALD - WORKER - JANUARY 13, 1960 TO APRIL 31, 1960

Jan. 13, 1960 - March 16, 1960 I work as a "checker" metal worker, pay: 700 Rubles a month, work very easy, I am learning Russian quickly now. Everyone is friendly and kind. I meet many young Russian workers my own age. They have varied personalities. All wish to know about me even offer to hold a mass meeting so I can say. I refuse politely. At night I take Rosa to the theater, movie or operas almost every day I'm living big and am very satisfied. I receive a check from the Red Cross every 5th of the month "to help." The check is 700 Rubles. Therefore every month I make about 1400 R. about the same as the director of the factory! Zeger observes me during this time. I don't like: picture of Lenin which watches from its place of honour and phy. Training at 11.-11.10 each morning (complusery) for all. (Shades of H.G. Wells)

March 16, 1960. I receive a small flat one room kitchen-bath near the factory (8 min. walk) with splendid view from 2 balconies of the river. Almost rent free (60. Rub. A month) it is a Russians dream.

OSWALD'S upstairs neighbor, Maya Gertzovich, reported that in the spring of 1960 the KGB asked her to vacate her apartment for a weekend; she presumed they had planted a listening device in OSWALD'S ceiling.

March 17, 1960 to April 31, 1960 - work, I have lost contact with Rosa after my housemoving. I meet Pavil Golovacha. A younge man my age friendly, very intelligent, a exalant radio tehnicion his father is Gen. Golovacha, commander of Northwestern Siberia. Twice hero of USSR in W.W. 2

Pavel P. Golovachev

[Ul. Kalinina, 24 Apartment 31, Minsk, Bylorussian Republic 220012, C.I.S. tel (0172) 669-815 home and The Radio Factory (work) (0172) 331-883] was the son of General Golovachev. In one CIA Name List with Traces, by ANGLETON [CIA CSCI 3/781,172 also CSCI - 3/779,817], Pavel P. Golovachev was ignored in favor of his father. In another, he had traces in the CIA's Office of Security of the CIA. Norman Mailer reported that he was considered to be "of a dissident nature." In November 1991 and May 1992, Pavel P. Golovachev was interviewed by a Canadian film crew. He said that shortly after he met OSWALD, a KGB officer approached him at his home. The officer requested that Pavel P. Golovachev meet with him every few months in a Minsk park and report on OSWALD'S activities. Pavel P. Golovachev said he acquiesced, because he believed, "It was entirely possible OSWALD was a CIA spy." In a 1992 article in Izvestia, the current version of the KGB stated that Pavel P. Golovachev was blackmailed into informing on OSWALD. Pavel P. Golovachev added that he reported to Alexander Feydorovich Kostyukov, and that he told OSWALD about his KGB contact in the Summer of 1961. Nevertheless, Pavel P. Golovachev remained in contact with the KGB until OSWALD departed.

OSWALD: MARCH 1960

In March 1960 Marguerite Oswald wrote to the State Department and asked it to contact her son. A cable went to Moscow suggesting a message be relayed to OSWALD. The American Embassy replied to Washington that no action had been taken, because OSWALD could not be located. [DOS prim. ser. 0056; WCE 12C file 294 DOS; SCS 261.1122]

A State Department Operations Memorandum dated MARCH 23, 1960, read:

TO: American Embassy, Moscow

FROM: The Department of State
SUBJECT: CITIZENSHIP AND PASSPORTS - LEE HARVEY OSWALD

Unless and until the Embassy comes into possession of information or evidence upon which to base the preparation of a certificate of loss of nationality in the name of LEE HARVEY OSWALD, there appears to be no further action possible in this case. An appropriate notice has been placed in the Passport Office's lookout card section in the event that Mr. OSWALD should apply for documentation at a post outside the Soviet Union.

PPT: B Waterman: Jn: March 25, 1960.

REFUSAL CARD ISSUED

Reason for refusal: "May have been naturalized in the Soviet Union or otherwise have expatriated himself. Frances G. Knight. March 25, 1960.

A refusal sheet is prepared for insertion in the passport file when information is received which may affect the issuance of the passport. It is used primarily as a 'flag' and does not necessarily mean the person concerned should be denied passport facilities. It does indicate, however, that a lookout card for the named individual should have been prepared. The State Department reported: "The FEA card record shows as follows: March 13, 1960, case to BW (Bernice Waterman)...March 28, 1960, Refusal for Warning..."

The State Department reported:

The information from Moscow, beginning in October 1959, indicating that OSWALD desired to renounce his citizenship and to acquire Soviet citizenship, was sufficient basis for the preparation of a lookout card for use until the expatriation question was resolved. The passport file shows that a refusal sheet was prepared on March 25, 1960, at the same time an Operations Memorandum was drafted to the American Embassy at Moscow. The Operations Memo which was approved and mailed on March 28, 1960, stated in part: 'An appropriate notice has been placed in the lookout section of the Passport Office in the event that Mr. OSWALD should apply for documentation at a post outside the Soviet Union.' The refusal sheet should have led to the placement of a lookout card in the ordinary course of business. At that time, such cards were prepared in the Clearance Section of the Passport Office. A present review of the passport file tends to indicate that a lookout card may not have been prepared or filed. This opinion is based on the following grounds:

(1) No such card has been located.

(2) Under standard operating procedures in effect in March 1960, a file "130" should have been placed on the refusal sheet immediately preceding the name on the index line on the right margin of the sheet when the card had been made. No such file number appears on the sheet.

(3) The passport file contains a record stamp of a 'PT/RCL (Lookout Files)' search made on August 2, 1961, which reports 'No Lookout file record' located on that date.

There is no evidence or information contained in the file to indicate that any action was taken to remove from the lookout card file any card which may have been filed pursuant to the refusal sheet.

NOTES ON OSWALD'S FILE

The file shows refusal sheet prepared by Miss Waterman on March 25, 1960, - "May have been in the Soviet Union or otherwise expatriated himself." Immediately on top of this sheet is a File Request Form prepared by G. Masterton dated April 6, 1960, - PT/FEA. The Search Report on this form shows the following boxes checked

X Classified File

X File Attached

The Search Report is dated March 12, 1960.

The FEA card record shows as follows:

March 28, 1960, Refusal for Warning

April 6, 1960, Conference OM [Office Memo]

April 13, 1960, Same and case to BW

This sequence indicated that the file was sent to file after OM to Moscow was mailed. Then the file was returned to FEA on April 13, 1960, with search request form." [DOS FOIA 11-1-10004-10027; File Request Form G. Masterton April 11, 1960, - PT/FEA. Search Report dated April 12, 1960; NARA 11-1-10004-10027]

A lookout card is a small IBM card kept in a special file maintained in the Passport Office. Without a lookout card a refusal sheet is worthless because a lookout card is an index to numerous refusal sheets. It appears as if a lookout card was prepared for OSWALD then removed from OSWALD'S file. The employees concerned with the preparation of a lookout card on OSWALD were Bernice Waterman, Henry F. Kupiec and John T. White.

OSWALD: MAY 1, 1960

On the day that Francis Gary Powers was shot down, May 1, 1960, OSWALD attended a party at the home of the Zigers:

May Day came as my first holiday all factories ect. closer after spetacular military parage all workers parad past reviewed stand waving flags and pictures of Mr. K. ect. I follow Amer. custom of marking a holiday by sleeping in in morning. At night I vist with the Zegers daughters at an party thron by them about 40 people came many of Argentine origen we dance and play around and drink until 2 a.m. When party breaks up. Leonara Zeger oldest dau. 26 formally married, now divorced, a talanted singer. Anita Zeger so very gay, not so attractive but we hit it off. Her boy-friend Alfred is a Hungarian chap, silent and brooding, not at all like Anita. Zeger advises me to go back to U.S.A., its the first voice of dissention I have heard. I respect Zeger, he has seen the world. He say many and relats many things I do not know about the U.S.S.R. I begin to feel inside, its true!!

PATRICE LUMUMBA UNIVERSITY

OSWALD applied for admission to Patrice Lumumba University in Moscow. In May 1960 OSWALD was refused admission by the KGB:

Esteemed citizen HARVEY OSWALD! We ask you to pardon us for the delay in answering your application for studying at the University of the Friendship of Nations, named for Patrice Lumumba. It is evident to us that you desire to study at the University of Friendship of Nations, however, regretfully, we may not satisfy your request in view of the fact that the University was created exclusively for youth of underprivileged countries of Asia, Africa and Latin America. Concerning citizens of other countries, or stateless citizens, they may be accepted in any other institution of higher learning of the Soviet Union in accordance with existing regulations for them. P. Chikarev (Typewritten Signature) Voloshin (Handwritten signature).

CIA Traces on Voloshin:

1. As of July 1959, P.T. Voloshin was Deputy Chief of the Protocol Division of the Ministry of Culture of the USSR.

2. Pavel Trofimovich Voloshin, identified as a Soviet State Security officer since about 1940, was in the United States (visiting Los Angeles, California, as well as other American cities) with a Soviet dance group in July and August 1959. During September and October 1959 he visited the Soviet Embassy in Mexico City as "Chief Inspector of the Protocol Section of the Ministry of Culture." From July 1961 until January 1963 he was stationed at the Hague in the Netherlands as: "Inturist Representative to the Benelux countries." In view of a probable relationship between Patrice Lumumba Friendship University and the Ministry of Culture, Pavel Trofimovich Voloshin may be identical with the (fnu) Voloshin who signed for Chikarev.

The University of Friendship of Nations was established in February 1960. Patrice Lumumba was assassinated January 1961. In February 1961 it was re-named Patrice Lumumba University. The terrorist Carlos the Jackal studied at this university, along with guerrillas and revolutionaries from Latin America, Africa and Asia. Mahmoud Abbas was a graduate as was Ali Hoseyni Khāmenei supreme leader of Iran and one of the top ten enemies of the press and freedom of expression. OSWALD attempt to infiltrate Patrice Lumumba University was unsuccessful - so he began to take the necessary steps to return to the United States. [DOS Memo for files 11.17.59 Richard Snyder; WCE 72,32] On May 2, 1960, Marguerite Oswald was interviewed by FBI Special Agent John W. Fain. The title of this interview was, "Funds Transmitted to Residents of Russia." Marguerite Oswald had mailed LEE a money order for $25 on January 22, 1960, five months before FBI S.A. John W. Fain contacted her about it. She told S.A. John Fain that she was:

currently employed as a supply mother at the Methodist Orphans home in Waco, Texas, and that she had come to Fort Worth that day in as much as this was her day off...Mrs. OSWALD stated she has been very much upset and uneasy concerning her son LEE HARVEY OSWALD...She stated that following his discharge in September 1959, he came to Fort Worth for a visit of three days and thereafter left Fort Worth with the expressed intention of going to New Orleans, Louisiana. She stated that he indicated to her when he left Fort Worth that he planned to resume his employment with an import-export company at New Orleans...He had engaged in the import-export employment prior to his entry into the United States Marine Corps. She stated that he had mentioned something about his desire to travel and said something about the fact he might go to Cuba. Mrs. OSWALD stated that shortly after LEE arrived in New Orleans she received the following letter postmarked at New Orleans 'Dear Mother: Well I have booked passage on a ship to Europe. I would have had to sooner or later, and I think it is best that I do it now. Just remember above all else that my values are very different from Robert's or yours. It is difficult to tell you how I feel. Just remember this is what I must do. I did not tell you about my plans because you could hardly expected to understand. Lee.' Mrs. Oswald stated she was very much shocked and surprised later to learn that he had gone to Moscow, Russia. She stated she has no idea how he got there but she does know that he had saved up about $1,600 from his service in the Marines. She stated that he did not previously discuss with her any intention to go to Moscow. She stated he had never shown any proclivities for the ideologies of Communism. She stated that he had never expressed any sympathy for Russia or the Communistic system. She stated that he was always a studious type of individual and that he read books that were considered 'deep.' Mrs. Oswald stated that she would not have been surprised to learn that LEE had gone to South America or Cuba, but that it had never entered her mind that he might go to Russia or that he might try to become a citizen there...She stated she was greatly surprised and disappointed that he had taken this action. She stated that she has suffered a great deal of embarrassment as a result of inquiries from newspaper reporters concerning LEE.

Robert Oswald was also interviewed. He told the FBI that he "had never known LEE HARVEY OSWALD to have any sympathy for or connection with Communism before this occurred." On May 25, 1960 J. Edgar Hoover sent a copy of this interview to Richard Helms. The CIA's Records Integration Group routed it to CI/SIG. The CIA reclassified this document from Confidential to Secret on May 25, 1960. [WCD 692] On May 25, 1960, CIA's Plans component generated an OSWALD index card that listed him as a Soviet citizen living in Moscow:

OSWALD, LEE HARVEY
SEX M DOB OCTOBER 18, 1939 074-500 DBF -49478
NEW ORLEANS, LOUISIANA May 25, 1960 P7
CIT USSR
MOSCOW, USSR

Ex-U.S. Marine, who upon his discharge from the Marine Corps., September 1959 traveled to USSR to renounce his U.S. Citizenship.

The number 074-500 was a CIA file entitled "USSR Miscellaneous" and consisted of 43 CIA documents from 1948 to 1977. [Allen v. DOD 003387 1519; CIA 2-524] Why was this card filed under this category? Why wasn't a 201 File opened?

MARGUERITE: MY SON HAS BEEN DOUBLED

The FBI reported that on or about January 26, 1961, Marguerite Oswald appeared at the U.S. Department of State in Washington, D.C. and advised that she had come to Washington to see what could be done to help her son.

Mrs. Oswald said she had come to Washington to see what further could be done to help her son, indicating that she did not feel that the Department had done as much as it should in his case. She also said she thought there was some possibility that her son had in fact gone to the Soviet Union as a United States secret agent, and if this were true she wished the appropriate authorities to know that she was destitute and should receive some compensation. Mrs. Oswald was assured that there was no evidence to suggest that her son had gone to the Soviet Union as an agent, and that she should dismiss any such idea.

Marguerite Oswald spoke with D. E. Boster, Edward J. Hickey and D. E. Boster. In May 1992 the CIA Historical Review Committee released the CIA's copy of the State Department's "Memorandum of Conversation" of this meeting. The CIA copy was stamped "Limited Use - For Background Only. Pro anus [illegible] thru OCR required for any use [illegible] CIA." In 1993 Boster stated: "At this point I don't remember precisely what she said but it certainly was that she suspected that at least that he might be an agent. I thought this was just totally crazy. Frankly, I don't think she knew what she was talking about." No matter what D. E. Boster told Marguerite Oswald she remained convinced her son was a CIA Agent. In early November 1963 Marguerite Oswald, a registered nurse, told a patient that her son was "a U.S. Government employee or agent." [FBI DL 89-43-1283, DL 89-43 11.22.63 Brown & Brown; CIA 261, 1122; OSWALD DOS File 1-2661, 1.26.61 serial 0075]

The Warren Commission noted that "Mrs. Oswald had introduced a statement to the effect that she suspected her son to be a CIA Agent." The Warren Commission asked Richard Helms, and David E. Murphy, if OSWALD had been a CIA agent: "Mr. Helms replied that he had not been. Mr. Willens then asked if there were any way of proving this. Mr. Helms remarked that in him and David E. Murphy, Chief, Soviet Russia Division, the Commission had the two Clandestine Service Officers who certainly would know whether or not OSWALD had been a CIA agent in the Soviet Union. He then said the Commission would have to take his word for the fact that OSWALD had not been an agent." [CIA 256] D.E. Boster had no idea OSWALD worked secretly for ANGLETON. David E. Murphy was unaware of OSWALD'S connection to ANGLETON. Richard Helms may or may not have known.

In June 1960 Marguerite Oswald told the FBI the actions of her son were so uncharacteristic, she believed he might have been kidnapped while on the way to Europe to attend Albert Schweitzer College, and that an impostor could be using his identification. To substantiate her theory, she cited a letter from the college inquiring why he had not shown up for the fall semester. On June 3, 1960, J. Edgar Hoover sent a memorandum to the State Department: "There is a possibility that an impostor is using OSWALD'S birth certificate." J. Edgar Hoover wanted State Department documents on OSWALD. When OSWALD returned to the United States, OSWALD was asked if he had brought his birth certificate with him to Russia. He told the FBI he had not.

Marguerite Oswald was a hostile witness when she testified before the Warren Commission. In November 1966 J. Edgar Hoover recommended that the name of Marguerite Oswald be placed on the Protective Research List of the United States Secret Service "because background is potentially dangerous; Subversive; Evidence of emotional instability (including unstable residence and employment record) or irrational or suicidal behavior." Marguerite Oswald died on January 18, 1981, at age 73.

Davis Eugene Boster, (September 14, 1920 - July 7, 2005) of the Soviet Division of the Department of State, responded to J. Edgar Hoover. D. E. Boster was born on September 14, 1920. From 1939 to 1942 he worked as a newspaper reporter. He was in the U.S. Navy from 1942 to 1947. D. E. Boster was contacted in June 1993. He said that the Navy had trained him in the Russian language from 1946 to 1947, but he was never with the Office of Naval Intelligence. He became Attaché at the U.S. Embassy, Moscow, in July 1947. In 1949 he returned to Washington, became a Foreign Affairs Analyst and an International Relations Officer at State Department Headquarters and by January 1958, he was Special Assistant to Secretary of State John Foster Dulles. In 1959 he was working as a Sovietologist for the Soviet Section (SOV), and was the Officer in Charge of Bilateral Political Relations, Office of Soviet Union Affairs. In the early 1960's, D. E. Boster was transferred to the American Embassy, Mexico City. He remained at this post until January 1964, when he went back to Washington to work in the Office of Inter-American Affairs. D. E. Boster informed J. Edgar Hoover that the State Department had no information on an OSWALD impostor. In 1993 D.E. Boster had no recollection of this correspondence.

J. Edgar Hoover cabled the Paris Legal Attaché and ordered him to investigate the possibility that OSWALD had been kidnapped. On July 27, 1960, September 27, 1960, October 12, 1960, and November 3, 1960, the FBI received information on OSWALD. These cables from the Paris Legal Attaché were highly deleted because they involved liaison with foreign police agencies. Other cables stated, "OSWALD was not in attendance at Albert Schweitzer College in Churwalden, Switzerland," and that there was no information on an OSWALD impostor. [FBI List A 105-82555 WFO; DOS serial 0070-7.11.60; FBI 105-82555-8,5-11.3.60, 9-9.27.60, 10-10.12.60; WCD 834 p9]

Marguerite Oswald's speculations stemmed from the fact that she knew her son LEE better than anyone else in the world. She had lived with him for 16 years on a day-to-day basis; she knew he was not a Communist. She knew that something was happening but she wasn't sure what it was. Hoover could not understand how someone who was supposed to go to Albert Schweitzer College ended up defecting in Moscow and took the OSWALD impostor theory seriously. On June 18, 1960, OSWALD was issued a hunting license. Combined with it was a registration of hunting weapons that listed a single-barreled 16-gauge shotgun belonging to OSWALD. Had OSWALD been allowed to purchase this weapon because he had furnished the KGB with information? Had he told the KGB he feared reprisals from the CIA, even in the Soviet Union? Marina Oswald recalled only one occasion when he went hunting. Pistols and rifles were prohibited by Soviet law. OSWALD reportedly was irritated because the Soviet Government did not allow him to own a pistol. [NYT 11.27.63] Peter Wronski reported that OSWALD told his girlfriend Ella German [Ella German Prohorchik Uritskovo UI, 4,

Apt 108, Minsk, Bylorussian Republic 220050 C.I.S. Tel. (0172) 333 018] that he was hunted in Moscow by Soviet agents. Ella German:

Alec said to me that he came to live in Minsk because it was more out of the way - in Moscow there was too much attention being paid to him. He said that in Moscow he was sort of 'famous' when he first arrived and that people from the U.S. Embassy tried to hunt him down to kill him. I didn't believe that Alec returned to the U.S. When people told me that I insisted, 'No, that could never be.' Because he had always told me that he was afraid to return to the United States because it was 'bang-bang' for him if he ever went back.

Ella German told Norman Mailer the same thing:

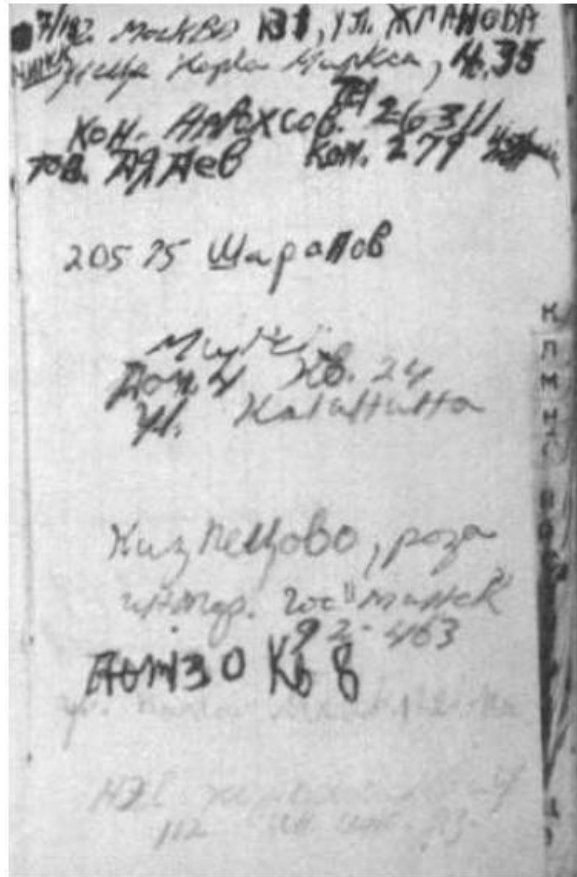

Once, after they first started going out, he was quite upset. It was when news came to Minsk that an American U-2 had been shot down over Soviet territory, and its pilot, Francis Gary Powers, had been captured. LEE asked her 'What do you think, Ella? Can it damage me because I'm American?' She told him not to worry personally, because no one can say you are responsible. She tried to calm him down and talked to him nicely. She wasn't really sure, but she did want to support him. It was their most emotional moment yet. LEE told Ella that when he lived in Moscow he was afraid of Americans more than Russians. In fact, he told her, the Soviet authorities had sent him to Minsk because he would be safe there. He even said, 'Here in Minsk I'm invisible. But when I came to Moscow I was really outstanding.' Americans had been very interested in him, he told her, and had been hunting him and wanted to kill him. She thought maybe he had offered some information to obtain a Soviet citizenship, information Americans didn't want given out. He said, 'If I go back to America, they'll kill me.' It made him more interesting, but she didn't believe it was real. She just thought they were passing remarks. [New Yorker 4.10.95]

OSWALD AND THE U-2 DUMP SPRING 1960

Evidence suggested that sometime in the spring of 1960 OSWALD gave the Soviets the information they needed in order to shoot down the CIA's U-2 spy plane, which was developed by Deputy Director/Plans Richard Bissell. OSWALD wrote: "After death of Stalin and peace reaction, then anti-Stalin reaction. A peace movement leading up to the Paris conference. The U-2 incident and its aftermath." In order to do this, OSWALD would have had to made contact with a Russian Intelligence Service.

The CIA: "Traces: None on Kuznetsova or her address. The Minsk Telephone Directory gives 9-2-462 as the number of Inturist, Minsk Hotel. 9-24-463 is not listed." On January 28, 1964, a CIA staff employee, presumably from Counter-Intelligence, generated this document:

Rosa Kuznetsova, former wife of Augustin Trueba (Calvo), may be identical with the Rosa Kuznetsova who was shown in the address book as being with Intourist at the Hotel Minsk."

In 1993 the CIA released this document:

TO: Chief/Research Branch/OS/SRS
FROM: M. D. Stevens
SUBJECT: LEE HARVEY OSWALD
Address Book
Rosa Kuznetsova

2. According to information in a July 27, 1960, IRD report on a May 1960 interview with Augustin Trueba (Calvo), #110 066 Rosa Kuznetsova is the first wife of Augustin Trueba and at that time (May 1960) was living in Moscow with their daughter Ludmilla Kuznetsova.

3. Augustin Trueba was described as a 36-year-old married male who had been repatriated to Spain from the USSR in December 1956 after having left Spain to go to the Soviet Union in 1939 and having remained there. In October 1959 he walked into the Office of the Labor Attaché of the U.S. Embassy, Spain, and offered information about his work in the Soviet Union; he eventually was recruited to supply positive information. He was given the pseudonym of Sergei Petrovich Ivanov.

4. Augustin Trueba's polygraph in May 1960 reflected that he was withholding information regarding: helping or working for Soviet Intelligence and being sent to Spain by the Soviets, signing an agreement to work for Soviet Intelligence, information about Communist and Komsomol membership and other factors; and that he had discussed his CIA work with his wife and others. During his IRD interview, which was conducted in Spain, Augustin Trueba discussed the possible effect on his former wife, Rosa Kuznetsova, and their daughter should his association with CIA be discovered by the Soviets and commented that he had caused his daughter enough trouble, suffering and punishment, in that she did not know who her father was and had not had the benefit of his guidance, etc. since he had left his wife when his daughter was quite young. He mentioned that on his way from "Magadan to Spain" (time not stated) he stopped in Moscow and while there visited Rosa Kuznetsova's residence. She was not there, he said, but his daughter opened the door and talked with him while he waited for her to return. (It is not clear whether or not she did return while he was there. This could probably be resolved by asking Mr. Stoiaken who conducted the interrogation). He said that his daughter did not recognize him and did not know him to be her father. According to Trueba he did not correspond with his former wife or their child or with anyone in the USSR. His current wife, Felicia Calvo, he said, was corresponding with her sister who lived near Moscow. According to Trueba, he met Rosa Kuznetsova sometime in 1945 and married her later that year or in early 1946; He stated that at the time she work for GIK as an audio technician. The child he said was born November 20, 1946. He left her some time in 1947 and as he recalled he received a divorce from her in October 1947. He got a divorce he said, because she became physically unattractive to him and because he heard rumors that she had been having an affair with some other man at her place of employment. After giving a long detailed story regarding the divorce, its costs etc. TRUEBA admitted that he did not in fact receive a divorce and that there was only a separation. He added that his present wife had met Rosa Kuznetsova sometime during the period 1950 /1954 while both were attending the Moscow Juridical Institute. He said, in fact, that his present wife had also met his daughter, Ludmilla Kuznetsova, and that during the period they were awaiting repatriation to Spain, Ludmilla spent quite a bit of time with him and his present wife. During the IRD interview Augustin Trueba, who admitted that he had lied on various accounts, became uncooperative and bluntly refused to cooperate further. (Information concerning Rosa Kuznetsova is contained on pages 3, 6 and 7 of the July 27, 1960 IRD report. See copy attached.) Signed M. D. Stevens.

The IRD (Information Research Development) arm of British Intelligence used Media and 'Academic' fronts, often with the CIA, such as Encounter Magazine (1953, exposed as CIA front 1967). Trueba must have been a high value intellectual but I can find no traces on him except that Augustin Trueba Calvo was born in Santa ??? in 1923 and his wife Felisa was ... Trueba's brother was shot by the Spanish Fascists and his mother spent 13... [Homage to Spanish Exiles Voices of the Spanish Civil War Nancy MacDonald]

On January 31, 1964, Birch D. O'Neal, Chief, CI-SIG signed a Memorandum for the Record in response to the document about Rosa Kuznetsova having been married to Augustin Trueba. Based on the description of Rosa Kuznetsova furnished by the Historic Diary, - lived in Minsk, blonde, 23, O'Neal concluded the two Rosa Kuznetsovas were not identical. After O'Neal spoke with Raymond Rocca, the latter ceased to conjecture:

The possibility of these two individuals being identical was discussed with Raymond G. Rocca of CI Staff and he expressed the opinion that based on his knowledge of the case it appeared quite clear to him that the Rosa Kuznetsova concerning whom entries were made in the address book was identical with the Rosa Kuznetsova referred to in the diary.

People with the same name are not necessarily the same person, however, the CIA found no traces in Minsk of a tourist guide, or anyone else named Rosa Kuznetsova, nor could it verify that 130 Karl Liebknecht Street was a valid Minsk address. How could CIA explain this away? OSWALD wrote: "I study russian elementary and advanced grammars from text books with a English speaking Russian intourist teacher by the name of Rosa Agafanova, Minsk January to May 1960." The Warren Commission remarked: "Reference to 'Rosa Agafanova' probably should be to 'Rosa Kuznetsova'." [CIA 458, 1306-471, 1304-473, 1545-458 rel. 5.18.82; WR p833 fn 116 WCE 93 p340] Eric Titovitz, who knew OSWALD at this time, reported Rosa Kuznetsova died in January 1992 in Minsk. Eric Titovitz became a neurosurgeon and professor.

From (deleted) To: Chief Research Branch SRS: According to the diary on January 8, 1960 OSWALD was met by the Mayor of Minsk Shrapov, who welcomed him to the city. The name SHARAPOV and the phone number 20575 were found on pages 45 and 81 of the address book, and the notation Comrade Sharapov 20525" was on a paper found in OSWALD'S possession by New Orleans Police in 1963.

Traces:

1. Vasili Ivanovich Shrapov has been Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Minsk City Council since June 1954.

2. The 1963 Minsk Telephone Directory lists the following office under the number 20575: The Receptionist of the Chairman of the Executive Committee of the City Council of Worker's Deputies. Address: Karla Marksa 12.

Minsk House No. 4, Apt. 24 UL. Kalinina was OSWALD'S address in Minsk. Warren Commission presumed "Shrapov" and "Sharapov" were identical. The CIA ran traces on Sharapov:

TO: Chief, Research Branch/SRS
FROM: M. D. Stevens
SUBJECT: LEE HARVEY OSWALD CASE (Address Book)

C. Sharapov could conceivably have referred to one of several persons by that name in Security Indices:

(1) Lt. Col. Nikolai Georgeiyevich Sharapov, who is described as an Russian Intelligence Service career officer, is an old time Chekist with interrogation experience. In 1942 he was chief of a small counter-espionage section in the Second Directorate of the NKVD [the predecessor to the KGB]. In 1942 he held the rank of Captain and sometime after February 1954 became the Chief of the Seventh Chief Directorate Section of the MVD [the domestic counterpart of the KGB]. He is said to have participated in the arrest of Beria. Nikolai Georgeiyevich Sharapov was born about 1909, was married, and as of 1954 had a 13-year-old son. He also had daughters, aged seven and three, by a mistress, Olga Khokhlova. It should be noted that Nikolai Georgeiyevich Sharapov has a son about OSWALD'S age. In a February 24, 1955 CIA information report, 'KGB Organizations, Functions and Personalities,' Nikolai Georgeiyevich Sharapov was listed as the KGB (X Directorate) Independent Section, Surveillance Section (NN), Sub-Section Chief.

(2) According to the 1930 testimony of E. Y. Belitskiy aka Yefim Belitskiy, the father of Boris Yefimovich Belitskiy, #175069-SSD, one P. I. Sharapov was at one time a director of the All-Russian Textile Syndicate in New York City, as he (E. Y. Belitskiy) also had been. The Syndicate, he said, was actually part of the Soviet Government and was controlled as such.

See attachment regarding Boris Y. Belitskiy.

(3) According to information furnished to the FBI in 1948 by Mikhail Ivanovich SAMARIN (aka Mr. Gregory) AI 116, one Lt. General Andrei Rodionovich SHARAPOV of the Soviet Military Staff Committee at the United Nations (as well as Lt. General Alexander Filippovich) was involved in Soviet espionage. According to SAMARIN he obtained this information during a discussion he had with Eugene Vasilievich GLAKHOV of the Soviet U.N. Delegation in about June 1948. According to SAMARIN, General Sharapov took over all the duties of General VASILIEV, Head of the First Department of Soviet Intelligence in the United States, when he later departed – apparently shortly before June 1948. [CIA 1296-469]

The document in the foregoing appeared contained the notation: "THIS IS OFFICE OF SECURITY INFO. MR. BRUCE SOLEY (SOLIE) OF SECURITY TOLD BIRCH O'NEAL C/CI/SIG THAT IS CAN BE RETAINED IN DD/P FILES. AED MARCH 17, 1964.

ATTACHMENT

According to several sources, Belitskiy is an associate of Aline Mosby, whose name appeared in OSWALD'S address book...She is also mentioned in CI/SIG's cover memorandum dated January 10, 1964.

According to Joseph Doyle SR/2/CE, #56948 SD & SSD, in September 1958, Aline Mosby was in direct contact with Boris Y. Belitskiy, a Russian official at the Brussels World's Fair, and "was the center of a great deal of activity for (him). Doyle stated that Belitskiy, who was the head of the British Division of Radio Moscow had been an interpreter for the Russians at the Brussels World Fair. He previously had been in the United States with his father who was with AMTORG in the late 1920's/ early 1930's.

Joseph Doyle said that Belitskiy attended school in New York City and that the family returned to Russia in 1936 or 1937.

With further reference to Mosby Doyle noted that there was a direct relationship between Mosby, Koch (Carl Henry Koch #50001) and Volkoff (George Volkoff #152385 -SSD) - all of whom had been of interest with reference to Belitskiy.

Other whom Mosby knew included Alexander Dolberg, #165651 - SSD, to whom she was introduced by McKinney H. Russell #83853 - SSD, still another who was of interest in connection with Belitskiy. CI/SIG was advised in late 1958 regarding the above individuals and informed that CI/OA was also interested in them.

According to information furnished by Fitzgerald Curtis Smith, #176178 - SSD, during a debriefing in June 1959, Boris Y. Beitskiy, whom Smith knew in Moscow was in great fear of being purged "as was his father, a Russian Jew, who had once lived in New York." According to Smith, Belitskiy knew and trust no citizens in Moscow other than himself (Smith) and Aline Mosby, UPI correspondent in Moscow. Smith said Belitskiy met Aline Mosby at the Brussels World Fair in the summer of 1958, at the same time he met Smith. Smith said he subsequently contacted Belitskiy in Moscow in December 1958, through NBC Correspondent Irvine R. Levine.

Another who knows, or has known, Aline Mosby is former Agency employee George Winters, #55769. Winters stated in an interview in November / December 1960, when discussing Americans in Moscow who lived beyond their means, that newspaper man Harry Shapiro was a very heavy loser at poker – to the extent that “one got the impression that he was on the Soviet budget.” Shapiro, he said, had a Russian wife who was more aggressive than he. Winters added that newspaper woman Aline Mosby was in Shapiro’s office; and commented that she “stuck mostly to the foreign circuit rather than the Embassy circuit.” She said that she had been in the hospital on several occasions during the previous year, so that “one didn’t see too much of her” and added that according to gossip one hospitalization was occasioned by an abortion.

Another newspaperwoman in Moscow, whom Winters mentioned, was Priscilla Johnson #71589-DL. She has been mentioned in newspaper as one who recalled having come in contact with LEE HARVEY OSWALD in Moscow, where she interviewed (or talked) with him. Her name, like Mosby’s, was listed in his address book under her last name only.

Mosby was born on July 27, 1922 in Missoula, Montana; and graduated from the University of Montana in 1943. She was employed by United Press International in Seattle, Washington, from 1943 to 1945, and was Hollywood Correspondent for UP from 1945 to 1957. According to the UP Bureau Manager at Los Angeles, she resigned voluntarily in 1957 and her employment was satisfactory. According to confidential informant R-1, during an Agency investigation in the fall of 1958, she was dropped by UP when she was subpoenaed in connection with legal suits against Confidential Magazine, for which she had done re-write without the knowledge of UP. She went to the Brussels World's Fair as a stringer of the North American Newspaper Alliance. She was considered loyal by her associates during the above period; but was described as the co-existence type who associates with the Russians - plays footsie with the Russians. No informant questioned her loyalty

In January 1960, Mosby reportedly was introduced on the Dave Garroway show, "Today" as NBC News' Correspondent; but in a State Department dispatch of December 12, 1960, which listed "Western Correspondents in Moscow" she was named as representing UPI.

According to House Un-American Activities Committee records, Aline Mosby did a motion picture type article for the Daily Worker in 1947; wrote an article for the Daily Worker at Laguna Beach, California, in 1947; and contributed a column to the Daily Worker on November 23, 1956.

M. D. Stevens

Was OSWALD referring to the Mayor of Minsk or was he trying to hide his contact with a someone else named Sharapov? Was Lt. General Andrei Rodionovich Sharapov a high-level KGB contact of OSWALD'S? Was he the man who OSWALD gave the information the Sovs needed to shoot down the U-2? Peter Deryabin revealed that Lt. Col. Nikolai Georgeiyevich Sharapov was "Colonel Sharapov who used to work at one time in the Counter-Intelligence Directorate of the KGB as the chief (or deputy) of one of the CIA Sections." [CIA 1007-951; 469]. When the CIA first released this document it withheld the Attachment on Mosby then eight and one-half blank pages followed, although two of them contained the handwritten date, March 9, 1954. TO: The Record Date August 14, 1970.
From: Edna Mendoza

SUBJECT: OSWALD, Lee Harvey
Address Book - FBI Report December 31, 1963.

On page 11 of the above FBI report, showing listings in Subject address book on page 27 there appears the name "Alizberg, Vera V...." followed by a notation "illegible."

The files of OS contain no information identifiable with the name as listed above. In view of Subject's poor spelling, as evidenced in the address book, a possibility exists that the name was written phonetically. A possible correct spelling might be "Eliasberg" or "Eliazberg."

The following was found in the files of OS/Security Research Staff regarding Vera ELIASBERG.

Vera ELIASBERG #350923, was previously known as Vera FRANKE, or Erna Vera FRANKE. As Erna Franke she was listed in the "German Wanted List" for 1936 – 1938 with birth date indicated as December 21, 1910, at Leningrad in a section captioned Address Unknown.

As Erna FRANKE she was listed in the German Security Handbook of the USSR as follows:

Erna FRANKE 21.12.10 Leningrad Stenotypist in RSHA A 2 (a category described as "open terrorist attacks and forgery.")

A reliable confidential informant of SRS has advised that Erna FRANKE was born in Russia of Jewish parents, who moved to Germany when she was a child. She was a member of the New Beginner group in Germany during the early 1930's and as a result of her underground work she was arrested with others of the group and placed in a concentration camp. She escaped to Paris in 1935 and continued to work with Paul Hagan. She made her way to Spain or Portugal and eventually entered the United States at New York. In 1941 she was married to George Eliasberg, whom she had known in Germany at the time of their arrest by the Gestapo, although Eliasberg had been permitted to travel to Palestine, from which he later emigrated to the U.S. See additional information on Vera Eliasberg in file of her husband, George Eliasberg #341773 [CIA 1319-487]

Hagan worked with the OSS during WW II on the shadow war against Hitler. This from an anti-immigration website:

Soviet agents, front groups, and infiltration and espionage techniques composed a broad strategy to undermine the United States. Immigrants as well as traitorous natives played a role in the communist threat. For instance, German refugee Karl Frank, alias Paul Hagen, was investigated by the FBI in 1945. His internal security case confirmed that Hagen was a communist and active in a communist front group, New Beginning.

According to Herbert Romerstein who studied the Venona Files:

One [unsolved murder] involves the disappearance, in Barcelona during the Spanish Civil War, of Mark Rein, son of the exiled Russian Menshevik Rafail Abramovich. Rein was associated with Scandinavian social democracy when he vanished in wartime Catalonia. His case is one of a short list of unsolved atrocities alleged against the Soviet secret police on Spanish Republican territory. According to Romerstein, Rein may have been betrayed to Stalin's agents by a German leftist named Paul Hagen. A footnote discloses that sources on the Rein affair may be found in the German Communist Party Archives.

Most of this document was withheld until 1998 when it was "Released in Full" except for the component from which it originated. It was not a Warren Commission document. It indicated that OSWALD was in touch with a hardcore experienced KGB agent.

Perhaps the most intriguing document regarding OSWALD's CIA connections is one dated April 1964 that deals with events as late as 1972 and may be predated by its author JAMES ANGLETON. It contains names that do not appear in the FBI Report (the Name List with Traces) that it refers to:

Born September 10, 1907 in Washington, D.C.; from 1934 to 1939 did teaching a research in Europe, primarily in the USSR. JOHNSON was frequently mentioned in the Daily Worker and contributed articles to that publication on many occasions. During 1941 to 1947, JOHNSON and his wife were connected with cited organizations. Many of the close associates of Subject and his wife have been reported as members of the Communist Party or Communist sympathizers. It was alleged that Subject's wife was a CP member. From 1943 to 1946, JOHNSON was Chief, Russia Political Section, US Military Intelligence; from 1947 to 1955, Carnegie Institute of Technology; and from 1955 at the University of Pittsburg. JOHNSON was doing research in the USSR / Poland / Czechoslovakia / Yugoslavia under Department of State sponsorship for five months and for six months in 1966/67; travelled in the USSR / Poland / Czechoslovakia / Yugoslavia under sponsorship Department of Education doing research. On November 12, 1953 JOHNSON was disapproved for any use by CIA; and in March 1967 was on interest to Domestic Contacts Section but should be approached with extreme caution and not be exposed to classified material.

Born July 19, 1928 in Glenn Cove, New York. JOHNSON knew Lee Harvey OSWALD in the USSR and also did some research work for John Kennedy in 1953. Lived in USSR 1958-1960 as reporter for NANA but her visa was cancelled when she wrote an unfavorable article about MIKOYAN. JOHNSON did translation for SVETLANA. JOHNSON was of interest to the Agency in 1953 but interest was cancelled because of extensive investigation required of friends; of interest in 1958 but interest again cancelled; of interest to SB (Soviet Bloc) in May 1963 for debriefing concerning her contacts in Soviet Union; now Priscilla Johnson McMILLAN.

Richard C. JACOB, #291 610, was born May 24, 1936 in Altoona, Pennsylvania. JACOB was a CIA employee from 1960 to 1969. He was p.n.g.'d as a result of the PENKOVSKY case. Clearance was issued for him for use as a spotter-assessor in March 1972. Is now a stock broker in New York City.

Nancy Dammann spent 17 years with USAID as a Communications Media Advisor in countries such as Indonesia, Thailand and the Philippines. Richard C. Jacob, was a twenty-four-year-old CIA case officer from Egg Harbor, New Jersey, listed on the embassy rolls as an "archivist" who was assigned the task of picking up some intelligence information from Colonel Penkovsky at a dead drop: "The message has to be in a matchbox," Case Officer Paul Garbler stated, "Hold it in your hand until you get out on the street, and if you're jumped, drop it, try to drop it in the gutter, the sewer if you can. Don't have it." Jacob nodded, and Garbler went on, "They'll try to sweat you. Don't admit anything about clearing a drop. Demand to call the embassy." When Jacob arrived at the Pushkin Street drop, the KGB was waiting. He had walked straight into a trap, just as Garbler had feared. [Molehunt David Wise] No traces on the others, other than their names appeared on a Soviet visa blacklist. At this time this document is a conundrum for me. OSWALD'S KGB File (No. 31451) contained no indication that he supplied information to the Soviets.

There is one more interesting detail in his records. KGB insists, that it is not mentioned in the papers even once of the Soviet intelligence officials ever interrogating OSWALD. It is very strange because the fact that OSWALD arrived in the Soviet Union, and his further behavior, must have (and it did) caused strong suspicions of the KGB: it was not every day that American tourists in 1959 kept asking for political asylum so persistently...The KGB officials assure that he wasn't recruited by them. Though it is impossible to check this fact out, the thick file of records on OSWALD can be good proof that he had nothing to do with the KGB. Six volumes - this is too much for a file of a person who is working for the KGB. Usually they would keep a thin and absolutely secret folder.

OSWALD's KGB file indicated that OSWALD was never interviewed by the KGB. This in itself was strange. If a secret folder existed that linked OSWALD to the U-2 dump it would have been destroyed after the assassination of President John F. Kennedy. As of 1995 there was no KGB record that indicated OSWALD had any connection with the KGB, however, the KGB was a covert action arm of a totalitarian power. It did not keep records on everyone it killed or everyone who contacted it. Perhaps there were no written records to be destroyed.

On August 6, 1959, The New York Times reported: "Officials said that while the [recent] talks between President Eisenhower and the Soviet leader could possibly improve the atmosphere for a summit meeting, they were not to be regarded as automatically preliminary to a conference of heads of government." On September 26, 1959, Nikita Khrushchev and Dwight Eisenhower met at Camp David, Maryland. "The Spirit of Camp David" signified a break in the Cold War. While the two heads of state were discussing Berlin, John McCone, chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, was meeting with his counterpart to discuss the peaceful uses of atomic energy. Vice President NIXON accompanied McCone to Camp David. On September 27, 1959 President Eisenhower took

Premier Khrushchev to his Gettysburg farm for private talks. Khrushchev was given a 21 gun salute when he left, and French Prime Minister Charles DeGaulle was hopeful that a summit conference was near. A U.S.-Soviet Atom pact was foreseen. Discussions over nuclear cooperation had been underway for several months. At Camp David, a summit conference was scheduled for May 16, 1960, in Paris. President Eisenhower would then visit the Soviet Union. ANGLETON knew that there was going to be a summit conference as early as August 1959. OSWALD was dispatched to the Soviet Union in September 1959 to sabotage the summit conference and destroy the understanding between American and the Soviet Union that had come to be known as détente. ANGLETON believed: "Détente is a sham, a tactic." After he resigned from the CIA, ANGLETON told friends that he was done in by Henry Kissinger in retaliation for his outspoken doubts about the U.S. policy of détente with Russia and China. [Newsweek 1.6.75] Evidence suggested he was determined to prevent American/Soviet relations from warming up. In 1946 he wrote: "In practice a certain overlapping of Counter-Espionage and SI (positive intelligence) functions exists, particularly in this turbulent period before the peace conference when most secret political activities of foreign powers are conducted through intelligence service's contacts and networks." [The Secrets War NARA p237] ANGLETON gave OSWALD the info he needed to shoot down the U-2 spy plane then had OSWALD give the Soviets the information just before the summit, so that the summit would be destroyed. The national security of the United States would be undamaged by the sacrifice of the U-2. CORONA SPY SATELLITE:

By August 1960 the CIA had reconnaissance satellites in operation - such as the Discovery or Corona Spy satellites - which rendered the U-2 almost obsolete. These first spy satellites were launched after President Eisenhower approved the plan in February 1958. The Corona vehicle took photographs with a constant rotating stereo panoramic camera system and loaded the exposed photographic film on to recovery were de-orbited and recovered by Air Force C-119 aircraft while floating to earth on a parachute. The first attempt to launch a rocket designed to carry the Corona ended in failure on January 21, 1959. After numerous failures the first truly successful Corona mission to place on August 19, 1959. On August 31, 1959, President Eisenhower established the Office of Missile and Satellite Systems within the office of the Secretary of the Air Force. This became the cover for the National Reconnaissance Office. By December 10, 1959, the resolution of the Corona's camera was approaching that of the U-2. The Space Imaging Division of Lockheed, Martin-Marietta reported: "The first film capsule recovered from Corona yielded more data than all of the U-2 flights over the Soviet Union combined. And even from its earliest days, Corona was collecting imagery at a spacial resolution of roughly two meters." [Ambrose Eisenhower, Simon & Schuster p515; <http://www.spaceimage.com/hom/corona.html>] ANGLETON believed that President Eisenhower would enter into treaties and make concessions to the Soviets that would be far more dangerous than losing a U-2. William K. Harvey wrote: "JIM A. - contradestruct from U-2." As the Summit approached, President Eisenhower considered grounding the U-2 spy plane.

THE KGB: UNAWARE OF THE U-2 IN 1956

The U-2 began flights over Russia in 1956. On July 10, 1956, the USSR sent a note to the Department of State of the United States protesting violations of Soviet airspace by a "twin engine medium bomber" on July 4, 1956, July 5, 1956, and July 9, 1956. The CIA reported:

Summary of Initial Missions

In the period from June 20, 1956, to July 10, 1956, the Soviet Bloc air defense system was subjected to eight penetrations of an unprecedented nature, seven occurring within a period of only eight days. It must be remembered that (deleted) provides the only basis of judging the performance of the Soviet system. This is important because it is clear from (deleted as of 2010). However, some tentative conclusions may be drawn from these initial flights as follows:

1. In spite of the fact that these missions come as a surprise, none of them went undetected. This is clear evidence that their radar coverage extends above (deleted as of 2010) feet.
2. By July 5, 1956, the fourth flight, the USSR was aware of the purpose of the missions and was taking counter-action. One positive action was the stand down of civil flights while the mission aircraft was over the USSR, and a second action which is believed related is the moving of the MIG-19 aircraft into East Germany and Poland on July 7, 1956. Also MIG-19's were moved into Hungary at about this time.

3. The performance of the Soviet System on the July 5 mission, 2014, was indeed curious. While the action evident from (deleted deleted as of 2010) is not clear an explanation which appears to fit the known facts is offered as follows: As a result of the previous missions, the Soviets had concluded the essential facts concerning the missions i. e., that they were for reconnaissance, that they flew about (deleted) feet, and that a penetration as deep as Moscow was possible. They probably surmised that the July 5 mission was headed for Moscow when the track appeared on a northeasterly heading.

4. By July 9, 1956 in addition to the evident recognition of the great height of the mission flights, tracking was better and in general the performance of the warning system was much improved.

5. The next day July 10, 1956 proved that the air defense warning system is deployed in depth. (deleted as of 2010).

6. The first eight missions proved (deleted as of 2010).

7. Confusion and track loss seemed to be related. (deleted as of 2010).

8. The question of radar for height finding. [CIA SC-02164-58]

On March 2, 1958, the Soviet detected a violation of their airspace by a "military jet aircraft." In March 1958 Model Airplane News published a story about the U-2, complete with drawings. The article observed: "An unconfirmed rumor says that U-2's are flying across the Iron Curtain taking aerial photographs." On April 21, 1958 the Soviets identified the aircraft as a Lockheed U-2 type. Soviet Aviation, the official newspaper of the Red Air Force, subsequently published articles about the U-2. On April 21, 1958, the Soviets issued a press release accusing an "American military reconnaissance aircraft of the Lockheed U-2 type, having appeared from the direction of the Sea of Japan" of having violated Russian airspace. U-2 pilot Francis Gary Powers reported that in the fall of 1958:

There was no longer any doubt they knew about the overflights. Our evidence of this was of the most conclusive kind. Although none of the pilots had actually seen them, electronic equipment on returning U-2's indicated the Russian were now sending up rockets attempting to bring us down. At our altitude we weren't too worried about MIGs, but we were beginning to be concerned about SAMs, surface-to-air missiles. By this time a few of the unknowns were disappearing from the U-2 overflights. We now knew that the Russians were radar tracking at least some of our flights; it was possible that they had been doing so from the start. Equipment on board recorded their signals; from their strength it was possible to tell whether they were "painting," this is tracking the flight. However this could only be determined after returning to base and studying transcriptions. There was still no way, while in flight, to know for sure.

We also knew that SAM's were being fired at us, that some were uncomfortably close to our altitude. But we knew too that the Russians had a control problem in their guidance system. Because of the speed of the missile, and extremely thin atmosphere, it was impossible to make a correction. This did not eliminate the possibility of a lucky hit. In our navigation we were careful to ensure our routes circumvented known SAM bring us down.

The press reported that a U-2 landed in a Japanese rice paddy in September 1959. Knowing the Soviets were aware of the U-2 and were intent on shooting one down, President Eisenhower considered suspending the flights. He told his intelligence advisors during a February 2, 1960, meeting, "If one of these aircraft is lost when we are engaged in apparently sincere deliberations, it would be put on display in Moscow and ruin my effectiveness." The CIA was insistent that the U-2 flights over the Soviet Union be continued, even expanded, because they brought back invaluable data. President Eisenhower agreed to additional flights, but only at the rate of one a month. Francis Gary Powers recalled: "After a long pause, two flights were scheduled for the same month, April 1960."

THE SOVIETS ALMOST SHOOT DOWN A U-2

On April 9, 1960, the Russians tracked the U-2 by radar and made several attempts to down it with SAMs. They were getting closer. Why? Had the Soviet made any technological advances in radar that allowed them to defeat the primitive electronic warfare devices that made the U-2 impossible to shoot down? Or had they made advances in rocketry? The Soviets already had rockets that could reach the cruising altitude of the U-2; 68,000 feet. Were the SAMs too inaccurate even with this new hypothetical factor? For whatever reason, the U-2 returned to its base intact.

FRANCIS GARY POWERS

President Eisenhower authorized Richard Bissell to fly any day before May 1, 1960. Every day for the next two weeks the USSR was under a cloud cover and the mission had to be postponed. The U-2 needed near-perfect weather to get its photographs. On May 1, 1960, the weather cleared. That morning, CIA Plans contract employee Francis Gary Powers took off from an airfield in Adana, Turkey and headed for Bodo, Norway, his flight route taking him directly over the Soviet Union. While flying over Sverdlovsk, a Soviet SAM exploded several hundred feet away from the aircraft, knocking it out of the sky. The U-2 aircraft was equipped with a self-destruction device. Francis Gary Powers bailed out without pressing the plane's destruct button and survived.

I reached for the destruct switches, opening the safety covers, had my hand over them, and then changed my mind, deciding I had better see if I could get into position to use the ejection seat first. Under normal circumstances, there is only a small amount of clearance in ejecting. Thrown forward as I was, if I used the ejection seat the metal canopy overhead would cut off both my legs. I tried to pull my legs back, I couldn't...The ejection seat wasn't the only way to leave the plane. I could climb out. So intent I had been on one solution I had forgotten the other. Reaching up, not far, because I had been thrown upward as well as forward, with only the seat belt holding me down, I unlocked and released the canopy. It sailed into space. The plane was still spinning. I glanced at the altimeter. It had passed 34,000 feet and was unwinding very fast. Again I thought of the destruct switches but decided to release my seat belt first, before activating the unit. Seventy seconds is not a very long time. Immediately the centrifugal force threw me halfway out of the aircraft.

An intact destructor unit was recovered from the aircraft. At the show trial of Francis Gary Powers, an aeronautics expert testified that "it was impossible to establish the lag of the explosion since no timing mechanism was found in the wreckage." The CIA reported:

1. Frank Powers aircraft was equipped with a destructor unit made by Beckman and Whitley, Inc. Model Number G-175-10. Procedure for activating the device was a two step function. The pilot had to activate the system by throwing one switch, then commence the timing sequence by throwing a second. A 2 ½ pound charge of cyclonite would be ignited 60 seconds after the second switch was thrown. (In a statement before Congress, Powers indicated that the timing mechanism was set for a 70 second delay.)
2. The purpose of the destruction unit was to destroy the camera in the equipment bay. Because of the equipment bay's location underneath the cockpit, potential serious injury could occur to the pilot should the device fire while he was in the aircraft; hence the two step activation procedure was established to minimize accidental ignition.

3. The Russians, in displaying the U-2 wreckage, showed the destructor unit made by Beckman. Their inference was that it was a remote control destructor unit, and this point was noted in the translation of the transcript of Power's trial published by Translation World Publishers of Chicago in October 1960.

Powers feared that the 70 seconds before the plane exploded was nonexistent and that he would be blown to bits along with it. Francis Gary Powers was taken prisoner by the Russians who found a poison pin on his person that he was to use to commit suicide. Norman Mailer reported that the KGB watched OSWALD on May 1, 1960, and on May 2, 1960. The next reports cited by Norman Mailer were dated July 2, 1960, and July 3, 1960. Nothing even remotely suspicious was uncovered.

THE RUSSIAN'S RESPONSE

Premier Khrushchev made a speech to the Soviets on May 5, 1960, in which he reported his Air Force had downed an American spy plane, but made no mention that Francis Gary Powers had been captured and the wreckage of the plane found. The speech suggested an element in the American Government was at work without the President's knowledge: "Even KGB often carries on activities I do not know about." In a later statement the Soviet Government claimed the "flight had been sent to wreck the Summit talks...the CIA knew Powers would be shot down, thus setting the stage for the Summit's collapse." At first, the State Department insisted the Russians had shot down one of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's U-2 meteorological research planes. On May 7, 1960, Premier Khrushchev reported to the Supreme Soviet that "we have plane parts and we also have the pilot." The Eisenhower Administration was caught red-handed in a lie. Khrushchev would announce he was about to attack the U-2's bases. President Eisenhower canceled his trip to the USSR. On May 14, 1960, President Eisenhower flew to the Summit Conference in Paris. Premier Khrushchev demanded an apology for the overflights, and President Eisenhower promised him that no further flights would be sent over Russia. The Summit meeting collapsed, over before it had even started and détente with it. The Soviets had previously failed to shoot down the U-2 for two reasons: It carried a granger and flew at an altitude of over 60,000 feet.

FACTOR ONE: THE GRANGER

Powers:

As a defense against air-to-air missiles, those fired from another aircraft, a new piece of equipment called a 'granger' was installed in the tail. As explained to us, should an aircraft lock onto a U-2 with his radar and launch a missile, the granger would send out a faulty signal to break the radar lock. Whether it actually did this or not we had no way of knowing, since we had never been threatened by aircraft.

The Soviets reported:

Expert findings on the tape recorder and its tape have shown that the signals recorded by Powers came from surface radar systems insuring the anti-aircraft defense of the Soviet Union. Special equipment had been installed in Power's aircraft to counteract and interfere with interception radar stations and fighter plane direction. Experts have established that the U-2 aircraft was equipped with a special radar scrambler to create interference for radar stations intercepting and directing fighter aircraft.

DID THE GRANGER WORK AGAINST GROUND LAUNCHED MISSILES?

Francis Gary Powers believed the granger protected the U-2 only from air-to-air missiles and not surface-to-air (SAM) missiles:

Francis Gary Powers said that a special device to jam radar and signals given by fighter planes and rockets was activated on the plane before his May 1, 1960 take-off, and throughout his flight over the Soviet Union. In reply to a question by a people's assessor, Powers explained that he meant air-to-air rockets.

When Francis Gary Powers was captured by the Soviets, "there followed an attempt to make me verify that the granger was supposed to deflect SAM missiles as well as air-to-air missiles."

FACTOR TWO: 68,000 FEET CRUISING ALTITUDE

Francis Gary Powers told his KGB interrogators his flight was terminated "at maximum altitude for the plane, 68,000 feet." In his book OPERATION OVERFLIGHT, Francis Gary Powers claimed 68,000 feet was a figure invented to protect his fellow pilots in the event the flights resumed. According to Francis Gary Powers,

I was stuck with the 68,000 foot figure. However, maybe I could use that advantageously. If given the chance, I decided to stress that I had been hit at "maximum altitude, 68,000 feet, hoping the CIA would realize by "maximum altitude" I meant I was flying exactly where I was supposed to when the explosion occurred. For me to say I was flying at my "assigned altitude" would imply the plane could fly higher, which was true. If I could get that message across, the trial, for all its propagand value, would have served one positive purpose. It could be the means for saving lives of other pilots. I knew by May 7, 1960, the day on which Khrushchev announced my capture and details of my flight, my interrogators had bought my story, believed I was telling the truth, even to altitude, Khrushchev use of 20,000 meters (65,600 feet) being the closest approximation to the 68,000 feet figure I had used. It was a dangerous gamble. It was possible their intelligence had already ferreted out the exact altitude. I was inclined to doubt this: this was one of the most closely guarded secrets of the U-2. Even more dangerous were their radar plots. Everything depended on their accuracy, or rather, lack of it. Previously we had felt their height finding was inaccurate at the altitudes at which we were flying. If we were wrong, they would quickly pinpoint the lie...I withheld the most important information in my possession.

Francis Gary Powers stated that when the KGB had scientists extrapolate his altitude from various radar readings, they happened to verify his arbitrary figure:

As they read the figures, I began to disbelieve them. Surely this was some cruel hoax, designed to throw me off guard. No one could be so lucky. Not only was their height-finding radar off...some were actually at 68,000!

During the show trial of Francis Gary Powers in Moscow in August 1960, the Soviets insisted they shot down the U-2 at its cruising altitude of 68,000 feet. Francis Gary Powers was asked repeatedly, "At what altitude was your aircraft struck?" and he answered, "It was the maximum altitude, 68,000 feet." Major Voronov, whose rocket unit shot down the U-2, testified: "As the plane entered the firing range at an altitude of 68,000 feet one rocket was fired and its explosion destroyed the target." In 1978 the CIA claimed: "The Soviets knew perhaps even more accurately than even the U-2 altimeters showed, what the height was." [CIA OLC #78-2469 - SD Breckinridge meeting with HSCA investigators] The key to shooting down the U-2 was not so much in defeating its granger as it was having accurate information as to its cruising altitude. Francis Gary Powers tried to cover up the fact that he gave the Soviets accurate information about the altitude of the U-2. Francis Gary Powers had been instructed that "if captured be cooperative and try to answer questions to which the Soviets appeared already to have knowledge." Powers did not know it, but the Soviets already had knowledge of the altitude of the U-2 from OSWALD. OSWALD had learned it at Atsugi or from ANGLETON. (The Soviets thought he had learned it while stationed at Atsugi). ANGLETON had sabotaged the Summit and changed history.

The back flyleaf of OSWALD'S address book contained the words "New Hite Special" however Angleton transcribed it as "From Mrs. Hail N. White Special."

From Mrs. Hail N. White
Special

No information could be found on this person.

OSWALD'S friend, Michael Paine, commented:

I could well believe that he would give some information. That he'd like to be valuable to the Russians. He didn't feel a loyalty to the United States. He wanted to change the system here. If he had some information he thought he could sell, he might have done it. That's enough explanation. If he gave the Russians the information to sabotage the summit, it would have had to happen at the right instance. OSWALD wasn't what you called a 'world class' person. If I were recruiting somebody to do that, I would like someone with a little more mental acumen. He wasn't stupid, but neither was he smart. If I were trying to find someone for a role like that, I wouldn't have picked LEE.

This researcher told Michael Paine that the most unrecognizable spy is the most dangerous. Michael Paine agreed, "Yeah, I'll go along with that. But OSWALD was pipsqueak." HEMMING told this researcher:

He wasn't a world class operator. He was just involved in world class deals. What are you going to do? Put a Rudolph Abel in on the U-2 dump? OSWALD'S in there because he was a turkey fucking patsy. Most of us are in there because we were on the turkey fucking way. When it's all over, it really don't make a difference, does it?

Marina Oswald told this researcher in 1994:

Maybe he supplied them with false information, and somebody else give the real information. Maybe they want to make a patsy out of him? I think somebody else sabotage U-2 plane, not LEE HARVEY OSWALD.

RICHARD E. SNYDER MEETS WITH FRANCIS GARY POWERS FAMILY

EVIDENCE OF ANGLETON'S INVOLVEMENT IN THE U-2 DUMP

The U-2 was downed. Had the Soviets made advancements in their radar capabilities? Or had the CIA been penetrated? Or had a leak emanated from elsewhere? Logic dictated that CI/SIG and the Office of Security would lead the investigation into the U-2 flap, and that any honest CIA investigation would have had OSWALD as a suspect. The FBI reported:

No one knows what he told the Soviets about American radar. We know that when he tried to renounce his American citizenship in Moscow he stated he had volunteered to give the Soviets any information he had concerning the Marine Corps, intimating he might know something special. Later when he was applying in Moscow to reenter the United States, he said he had not given the Soviets any information about the Marines, but this was self-serving. He indicated to our Agents in an interview in 1962 that he never gave the Soviets information concerning his Marine Corps specialty in radar. [FBI 105082555-5640] ‘

OSWALD informed Richard E. Snyder that he had offered the Soviets radar information "including the specialty that he possessed." Edward Freers included this in his report on OSWALD that he cabled to Washington. As a result, State Department Headquarters sent the FBI a report on OSWALD, and the Bureau opened an inactive file on him. As stated, the same report was sent to the Office of Security of the CIA.

THE UNASKED QUESTIONS

In May 1960 the questions that ANGLETON and CI Staff should have asked were: "Has there been a report of anyone with access to the U-2's altitude offering this information to the Soviets?" ANGLETON could access his defector files in 1960; by that year all CIA files had been microfilmed and placed in an IBM computer specially-designed for CI. It was a machine records system. When a CIA agent wanted a particular item, he fed in 25 key words about the subject. The computer found the correct microfilmed document and photographed it with ultraviolet light. The tiny photograph was then projected on an Intellofax viewing machine; the whole thing took five seconds. The CIA microfilmed Richard E. Snyder's initial dispatch concerning OSWALD. Once it located OSWALD'S threat about radar, the next question to ask would have been, "Did he have access to the altitude of the U-2?" A simple check with the Navy would have indicated that, as a radar operator at Atsugi, he very well might have. Edward Petty reported that there was no CI/SIG file about the U-2 incident, yet after Francis Gary Powers returned to the U.S. a CIA Counter-Intelligence Officer was a witness at a Board of Inquiry hearing into the U-2 Affair. Why was there was no investigation by CI/SIG and ANGLETON? After the Kennedy assassination CI/SIG commented: "CIA does not investigate U.S. citizens abroad unless we are specifically requested to do so by some other government security agency. No such request was made in this case." [First Draft of Initial Report on OSWALD case Attachment to TX-1889] ANGLETON would never had waited for a green like from the investigative agency the CIA termed ODENVY before initiating and investigation, even of his own grandmother. HEMMING asked this researcher:

Where was damage control? The Soviets couldn't obtain this intelligence information, this means someone handed it to them. OS, and one other element, had across the board need-to-know about everything. Who's the top guy who can go anywhere and stick his nose into anything he wants to? ANGLETON. He would have insisted, 'We just got our damage control estimate. We just got our assessment. I don't think it's complete. I want to know about anyone on the periphery, mechanic, guard. I want everybody's name who saw the U-2, heard its sounds.' An enormous undertaking. Under that process people would have been on the lists who worked the radar sites. The trail leads right back to somebody who intentionally dumped the U-2, tried to cover it up.

OSWALD'S ACCESS TO U-2 INFORMATION EUGENE J. HOBBS

FROM: S/A Berlin March 10, 1964

TO: OSI

SUBJECT: Eugene J. Hobbs, HMC, USN, Incident Report

At 12:40 p.m. this date Hobbs who serves as hospital corpsman in the USS Stone County (LST-1141) (San Diego based) visited the Pearl Harbor Branch Office to report information which he thought might be of interest to us, as follows.

Hobbs was stationed at the dispensary at Atsugi, Japan, NAS from 1956 to December 1957 or January 1956. According to a Life Magazine story recently printed, LEE HARVEY OSWALD, alleged assassin of our late President, was also stationed there at the same time. The magazine continued that OSWALD visited Russia in 1959. Atsugi is a closed base and at the time, was the base for the Joint Technical Advisory Group, which maintained and flew recon U-2 flights. Hobbs noted that one year after OSWALD visited Russia, Powers was captured. Hobbs stated it was gossip around the base that the U-2's were making reconnaissance flights over Russia. Sometime during 1957, a Naval Commander came into the dispensary and talked to some of the HMC's at the Master of Arms shack. The Commander stated he wanted an HMC to volunteer to join a group he was commanding which will be stationed in Bangkok and will make reconnaissance flights over China. One of the HMC's, name unknown, a short blonde headed Chief, eventually went with the unit to Bangkok and was there three months. The Commander stated that the flights would be the same as the ones the U-2's are making over Russia. Since it was common knowledge around the base that the U-2's were being utilized for recon flights, Hobbs now believes that OSWALD could have given that information to Russia. Stone County will be in this area for approximately two more months. [FBI 105-82555-3262]

THE FBI EXAMINES OSWALD'S MILITARY RECORD

The Navy sent Hobb's report to the FBI:

A review of OSWALD'S Marine Corps files discloses that in 1957 and 1958 he was stationed in Japan and had the address of Marine Air Control Squadron 1, Marine Air Group 11, First Marine Air Wing, FMF c/o FPO San Francisco, California. His weapons firing record discloses that in May 1958 he fired two courses on two different days at NAS, Atsugi, Japan.

One of OSWALD'S Marine Corps associates has advised that in August 1957 he and OSWALD were part of a 120 man overseas draft and OSWALD went to a Marine Corps base at Atsugi, Japan. Another of his former Marine Corps associates has stated that OSWALD was stationed at Atsugi, Japan, sometime in 1957 and 1958. Still another of OSWALD'S

Marine Corps associates recalled that they left the United States on August 15, 1957, for Japan and OSWALD was assigned to Marine Air Control Squadron 1, Atsugi, Japan. In January 1958 this Squadron was at Cubi Point, Philippine Islands. This individual remembered that the gear of the Squadron was housed there in an airplane hanger which he says he now knows was the hanger for the U-2 airplane. A former Marine Corp Officer [also confirmed OSWALD'S presence at Atsugi].

As you know, OSWALD was discharged from the Marine Corps in September 1959, and shortly thereafter went to Russia, arriving there in October 1959. You may well wish to analyze Hobbs' information in the enclosure as well as that set forth above and conduct such further inquiry as you deem appropriate to determine what data about the U-2 program may have been available to OSWALD was a result of his Marine Corps assignments abroad. This Bureau would appreciate being advised of the results of your analysis and inquiry.

NOTE FOR SAC, DALLAS:

There is enclosed one copy of referenced ONI memo. This is being furnished for your information.

NOTE:

Letter is classified Confidential because it contains information about the U-2 program, including some from the enclosure which was so classified. Former Marines furnishing information about OSWALD'S assignments abroad were Owen Delanovich, Donald Peter Camarata, Donald Patrick Powers and William K. Trail. Since the U-2 program was primarily managed by the CIA, it is the proper Agency to handle this. Of course, even if it turns out OSWALD was assigned to a base from which U-2 airplanes were flying reconnaissance missions in 1957 and 1958 and could have had knowledge of this, which he may have given the Soviets when he went to Russia in October 1959, it is believed the Russians were aware of the U-2 flights several years before. Nevertheless, it should be run out. It is not felt it would be worthwhile to re-interview Hobbs since he possessed no direct information about OSWALD and since the information he furnished regarding the base at Atsugi was from 'gossip' he heard while stationed there. [FBI 105-82555-3262]

Owen Dejanovich, who became a professional football player, was contacted in 1993. He said he was with OSWALD at El Toro, Jacksonville and Biloxi, Mississippi, but not at Atsugi. The only other thing he would say was "I gave the FBI no information about the U-2." Owen Dejanovich told Frontline a different story:

There was a small business section across one bridge. We were allowed, as Americans, to go into that sector of the residential portion of Iwakuni. The other sector was considered to be communist, Japanese communists and it was an off-limits area.

Owen Dejanovich claimed OSWALD made pro-Communist remarks and was seen with a beautiful White Russian. Why didn't he report the presence of a subversive in the ranks of the Marine Corps to his commanding officer?

JOHN E. DONOVAN'S FAKE U-2 REPORT

By erroneously putting himself in Japan and the Philippines with OSWALD, John E. Donovan falsely linked OSWALD with the U-2: "LEE was a radar man and he surveilled for aircraft both known and unknown. He plotted the position of the aircraft. He saw, or one of his counterparts saw...we did up [the U-2]...you could see it on our altimeter." Gerald Posner wrote that of "the more than 200 Marines spoken to by researchers, only one claimed OSWALD ever mentioned the plane." This was Charles Donovan. (Posner meant John E. Donovan).

ANGLETON ASSURES FBI OSWALD HAD NO ACCESS TO U-2 DATA

ANGLETON or members of his Staff drafted a reply to the FBI inquiry regarding OSWALD'S access to information regarding the U-2 and had Richard Helms sign it. [CSCI - 3/781,351] It assured the FBI OSWALD had no access to information on the U-2:

2. The Atsugi Naval Air Station is located approximately 35 miles south and west of Tokyo, Japan. At the time in question, Atsugi was a closed base in the sense that American and indigenous personnel entering the Station were required to possess official identification cards. Within the Station the flight line areas were restricted, as is the case of all such Stations, and certain hanger areas were further restricted for the performance of classified functions.

3. The Joint Technical Advisory Group occupied an area within the Station, consisting of 20 to 25 individual residences, two dormitories, an office area, a power plant, several Butler-type warehouses, and a club building used for recreation and a bachelor officer's mess. The Joint Technical Advisory Group area was not closed, but it was located about 400 yards from the main Station area and there was no occasion for the regularly assigned Station personnel to visit the Joint Technical Advisory Group area. The club was open only to Joint Technical Advisory Group personnel and their guests. Two of the living quarters were occupied by the Navy Commanding officer and his deputy because the quarters of Joint Technical Advisory Group were of better quality than the housing accommodations provided at the Station.

4. Joint Technical Advisory Group air activities were conducted from a classified hanger area at one end of the flight line. OSWALD did not have access to this area. Prior to the time in question, the Joint Technical Advisory Group had been publicized by Radio Peking as being a headquarters for American intelligence activity. For this reason, and because the Joint Technical Advisory Group was obviously not part of the Naval Station complement, there were rumors and gossip regarding the unit and its activities regarding the unit and its activities. This condition was regarded as normal under such circumstances. Being there at that time, OSWALD could have heard such gossip; however, there is no information to indicate, nor is there reason to believe, that he obtained factual knowledge regarding the Joint Technical Advisory Group and its mission. (For your information, an incident involving the landing of a U-2 in a rice paddy in Kanagawa Prefecture, Japan, was reported in the press and aroused some public interest. That incident, however, occurred in December 1959, which was some time after OSWALD left Japan).

5. There were no Navy personnel assigned to the Joint Technical Advisory Group. Moreover, the Joint Technical Advisory Group did not participate in, or transfer any of its activities to a Station in Bangkok. Regarding the statement by Hobbs that a Navy Commander was recruiting Navy Personnel for an assignment in Bangkok, it is noted that the Navy at that time was conducting certain air reconnaissance activity from Atsugi using other types of aircraft.

6. The following should be considered with respect to your source's assertions that OSWALD'S squadron was in Cubi Point, Philippines Islands, in January 1958 where it kept its gear in what the source now knows to have been a hanger for a U-2 airplane; and that the squadron was back in Atsugi, Japan in May 1958. The term "U-2" was not known publicly and did not gain worldwide notoriety until the ill-fated Powers mission some two years later. Therefore it is highly unlikely that the term "U-2" would have meant anything to OSWALD, even if he had heard it and had been able to identify the term with any aircraft at Cubi Point, at Atsugi or anywhere else.

7. To summarize: There is no evidence or indication that OSWALD had any association with or access to, the Joint Technical Advisory Group operation or its program in Japan. This applies also to information regarding the U-2 or its mission. Even if OSWALD has seen a U-2 aircraft at Atsugi or elsewhere, this fact would not have been considered unusual nor have constituted a breach of security. Limited public exposure of the craft itself -- but not of its nomenclature or mission -- was accepted as a necessary risk. It is most unlikely that OSWALD had the necessary prerequisites to differentiate between the U-2 and other aircraft engaged in classified missions which were similarly visible at Atsugi at the same time. [FBI 105-82555-3831]

The CIA assumed that OSWALD had some sort of physical contact with the U-2. The CIA admitted he was within close proximity of the Joint Technical Advisory Group at Atsugi. The CIA, however, did not address itself to the possibility that OSWALD became aware of the U-2 as a blip on a radar screen. But even if OSWALD did not have this contact he could have gotten the information he needed from ANGLETON and told the Russians it was from his experience as a radar operator. Not only was there evidence that OSWALD was aware of the U-2 at Atsugi, there was evidence that OSWALD observed Powers at Vladimirs Prison.

EVIDENCE: THE LETTER TO ROBERT EDWARD OSWALD

OSWALD'S Historic Diary noted:

January 15, 1962 to February 15, 1962. Days of cold Russian winter. But we feel fine. Marina is supposed to have baby on March 1, 1962. Feb 15, 1962. Dawn. Marina wakes me up. Its her time. At 9:00 a.m. we arrive at the hospital. I leave her in care of nurses and leave to go to work. 10:00 a.m. Marina has a baby girl. When I visit hospital at 500 after work, I am given news. We both wanted a boy. Marina feels well, baby girl, O.K. February 23, 1962. Marina leaves hospital I see June for first time.

and certainly accepted.
How are things at your end?
I heard over the voice of America that they released Powers the U-2 spy plane fellow. That's big news where you are I suppose. He seemed to be a nice, bright American-type fellow, when I saw him in Moscow.
You would like to see

On February 15, 1962, OSWALD wrote this to Robert Edward Oswald, as see above: "I heard over the Voice of America that they released Francis Gary Powers the U-2 spy plane fellow. that's big news where you are, I suppose. He seemed to be a nice, bright, American-type fellow, when I saw him in Moscow."

The CIA commented:

The only period during which it would have been reasonably possible for OSWALD to have seen Francis Gary Powers in Moscow in person was between August 17, 1960 and August 19, 1960, when Francis Gary Powers was in Moscow, undergoing trial. There are no other indications that OSWALD was in Moscow after January 1960, so OSWALD'S statements remain unclarified.

If OSWALD did, in fact, see Francis Gary Powers during the trial, why had he waited almost 18 months before writing to his brother about it? Why hadn't OSWALD mentioned attending the Francis Gary Powers trial in his Historic Diary? [CIA 285] OSWALD'S remarked "he seemed to be a nice bright American-type fellow." This indicated OSWALD had observed Powers personally.

OSWALD WROTE LETTER AFTER POWERS VISITED MOSCOW

Another CIA document revealed:

Francis Gary Powers was in Moscow from May 1, 1960, to September 9, 1960, and again for less than a day on February 8, 1962, and February 9, 1962, just before his release. [OSWALD'S letter was postmarked February 15, 1962.] The most likely time for OSWALD to have seen Powers in person would have been during the period August 17, 1960 to August 19, 1960 when Powers was on public view during his trial and in the course of being transported to and from trial sessions. On February 8, 1962, Francis Gary Powers was brought into Moscow without publicity, and departed early the next morning. Since OSWALD is not known to have been in Moscow in August 1960, or February 1962, his statement that he saw Powers may have referred to a television or newsreel appearance. [CIA 285 2.15.62]

A third CIA document noted:

Francis Gary Powers was in Moscow...for less than a day on February 8, 1962 to February 9, 1962, just before his release. If OSWALD did see him and is not making up this story, or referring to a television appearance, he must have made another trip to Moscow which is completely unknown to us. The period from May 2 to May 19 the more likely, since Powers was not on public view (illegible) to and from trial sessions, whereas in February 1962 he [Powers] entered the city without fanfare and departed very early that next morning.

In another CIA document it was detailed:

February 8, 1962: At about 1:00 p.m., Powers arrived in Moscow from Vladimirs Prison by train en route to his release. He was taken for the night to the prison in which he had been held in 1960. February 9, 1962:

Powers left the prison in the early morning for an airfield (apparently a military field) whence he departed Moscow for Berlin and the U.S.

When Powers was first arrested he "noticed a cover over the outside of the peephole to my cell. The guards could look in whenever they chose; I couldn't look out." [Overflight pg. 107]

How did OSWALD know that Francis Gary Powers stopped in Moscow before he left the Soviet Union in February 1962? Marina Oswald told this researcher: "Number one, he would hear it on the Voice of America. LEE did not make secret journey if I was married to him. Only time, was I married to him then? February 1962. He did not make any secret journeys then. He was home everyday. Cause our daughter was born on February 15, 1962. So we stayed close everyday. He did not make secret journey to Moscow. I was in the hospital for a week until the 23rd. So I do not know, I cannot guess, if I wasn't home I cannot verify that. LEE was restricted to travel." Had KGB agents arranged for OSWALD to make a secret trip to Moscow to see the pilot he almost killed because he had supplied the information needed to shot down a U-2? Did OSWALD observe Powers through one-way glass in Vladimis

Prison? The KGB knew OSWALD was going to re-defect, and wanted OSWALD to observe that Francis Gary Powers had been well-treated. They did not want OSWALD to denounce the Soviet Union after he left. Other re-defectors were forced to sign statements that they would not engage in anti-Soviet propaganda. [HSCA V12 p441; CIA 285, 300; Powers, B. Spy Wife Pyramid Books; Sanche de Gramont The Secret War Since WWII Putnam 1962 Ch. 9] Richard E. Snyder commented on this letter:

I can't imagine how he possibly could have...The only thing that comes to mind is that it this was a lot of hot air. No one from the Embassy ever saw Francis Gary Powers. They never let us have any contact with him. The only people who saw him at the time were his mother, father and wife. I don't think the lawyer got to see him.

EVIDENCE OF THE U-2 DUMP: OSWALD'S FEAR OF PROSECUTION

EMBASSY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA
FEB. 13. 1961
MOSCOW

Dear Sir;
Since I have not received a reply to my letter of December 1960, I am writing again asking that you consider my request for the return of my American passport.

I desire to return to the United States, that is if we could come to some agreement concerning the dropping of any legal proceedings against me. If so, then I would be free to ask the Russian authorities to allow me to leave. If I could show them my American passport, I am of the opinion they would give me an exit visa. They have at no time insisted that I take Russian citizenship. I am living here

In February 1961 OSWALD wrote to the American Embassy, Moscow, about repatriation:

Dear Sir; since I have not received a reply to my letter of 1960, I am writing again asking that you consider my request for the return of my American passport. I desire to return to the United States that is if we could come to some agreement concerning the dropping of any legal proceedings against me. If so then I would be free to ask the Russian authorities to allow me to leave. If I could show them my American passport I am of the opinion they would give me an exit visa. They have at no time insisted that I take Russian citizenship.

With each subsequent letter to the Embassy, he reiterated this fear and demanded "full guarantees that I shall not, under any circumstances, be persecuted for any act pertaining to this case."

Dear Sirs

In reply to your letter of March 24. I understand the reasons for the necessity of a personal interview at the Embassy, however, I wish to make it clear that I am asking not only for the right to return to the United States, but also for full guarantees that I shall not, under any circumstances, be persecuted for any act pertaining to this case. I made that clear from my first letter, although nothing has been said, even vaguely, concerning this in my correspondence with the Embassy. Unless you honestly think that this condition can be met, I see no reason for a continuance of our correspondence, indeed, I shall endeavour to use my relatives in the United States, to see about getting

In regard to your letter of March 24. I understand the reasons for the necessity of a personal interview at the Embassy, however, I wish to make it clear that I am asking not only for the right to return to the United States, but also for full guarantees that I shall not, under any circumstances, be persecuted for any act pertaining to this case. I made that clear from my first letter, although nothing has been said, even vaguely, concerning this in my correspondence with the Embassy. Unless you honestly think this condition can be met, I see no reason for continuance of our correspondence, instead I shall endeavor to use my relatives in the United States, to see about getting something done in Washington.

He repeated the theme to his brother on May 31, 1961, and wrote:

I can't say whether I will ever get back to the States or not, if I can get the government to drop charges against me, and get the Russians to let me out with my then maybe I'll be seeing you again. But" you know it is not simple for either of those two things. I am in touch with the American Embassy in Moscow so if anything comes up I'll know.

In his next letter to Robert Edward Oswald, June 26, 1961 he wrote: "I assume the government must have a few charge's against me, since my coming here like that is illegle. But I really don't know exactly what charges."

On July 11, 1961 Snyder wrote this about his interview with OSWALD:

Oswald indicated some anxiety as to whether, should he return to the United States, he would face possible lengthy imprisonment for his act of remaining in the Soviet Union. Oswald was told informally that the Embassy did not perceive, on the basis of information in its possession, on what grounds he might be subject to conviction leading to punishment of such severity as he apparently had in mind. It was clearly stated to him, however, that the Embassy could give him no assurance as to whether upon his desired return to the United States he might be liable for prosecution for offenses committed in violation of laws of the United States or any of its States. Oswald said he understood this, He had simply felt that in his own interest he could not go back to the United States if it meant returning to a number of years in prison, and had delayed approaching the Soviet authorities concerning departing from the Soviet Union until he "had this end of the thing straightened out."

In yet another letter he wrote in January 1962 he asked his brother: "You once said that you asked around about whether or not the U.S. government had any charges against me, you said at that time 'no', maybe you should ask around again, its possible now that the government knows I'm coming and will have something waiting." [ltr. 1.30.62]

BORIS KLOSSON

When OSWALD was interviewed at the American Embassy, Moscow, on July 11, 1961, Boris Klosson (born January 21, 1919; died 1990) questioned him about the statement "which he had made to the interviewing officer at the time of his first appearance at the Embassy on October 31, 1959, to the effect that he would willingly make available to the Soviet Union such information as he had acquired as a radar operator in the Marine Corps." OSWALD stated:

...he was never in fact subjected to any questioning or briefing by Soviet authorities concerning his life experiences prior to entering the Soviet Union and never provided such information to any Soviet organization. He stated he doubted in fact that he would have given such information if requested despite his statements made at the Embassy. OSWALD indicated some anxiety as to whether, should he return to the United States, he would face possible lengthy imprisonment for his act of remaining in the Soviet Union. OSWALD was told informally that the Embassy did not perceive, on the basis of the information in its possession, on what grounds he might be subject to conviction leading to punishment of such severity as he apparently had in mind. It was clearly stated to him, however, that the Embassy could give him no assurance as to whether upon his desire to return to the United States he might be liable to prosecution for offenses committed in violation of laws of the United States or any of its States. OSWALD said he understood this. He had simply felt that in his own interest he could not go back to the United States if it meant returning to a number of years in prison, and had delayed approaching Soviet authorities concerning departing from the Soviet Union until he "had this end of the thing straightened out. [WR p75; DOS 5.26.61 Ex. 19 294j; ltr. Lee to Robert 5.31.61, 6.26.61; For. Service Dispatch 7.11.61 - Klosson]

In 1943 the name and address of Boris Hansen Klosson appeared in the address book of Louise Morley, a suspected Soviet intelligence agent. During this time, Boris Klosson was attending a Russian language course "at a school being handled by the Office of Naval Intelligence." Boris Klosson survived the McCarthy era and in 1954 was State Department, Deputy Chief, Division of Research for USSR and Eastern Europe. In 1956 Boris Klosson became a Political Officer at the American Embassy, Moscow. He was not listed in Who's Who in the CIA. On September 8, 1964, Yuri Nosenko reviewed the entire Moscow Diplomatic List for 1959: "Klosson, Boris H. Source has reported earlier concerning Klosson; that he was considered to have been the CIA resident. The case officer working against him was Valentin Mikraylov."

OSWALD was afraid he was going to be prosecuted for giving the Soviets the information they needed to shoot down the U-2. OSWALD had been given a little speech by ANGLETON that the CIA would not come to his aid if his deed were exposed. It would deny any connection with him. OSWALD thought Justice Department might go after OSWALD because it was unaware of his connection to ANGLETON and the Central Intelligence Agency.

EVIDENCE: APPLICATION FOR RENEWAL OF PASSPORT
THE STATE DEPARTMENT

THE HAVES and HAVE-NOTS

On July 10, 1961, while he was at the American Embassy, Moscow, OSWALD signed an Application for Renewal of Passport which contained a printed statement whereby, by crossing out either the word 'have' or the words 'have not,' the applicant could indicate whether he had committed one or more of the disloyal or possibly expatriating acts listed. The printed statement also provided that if the applicant indicates that he committed one or more of these acts, a supplementary statement under oath explaining the circumstances is to be attached to the application. By crossing out the appropriate words, LEE HARVEY OSWALD stated under oath that he had committed one or more of the disloyal or possibly expatriating acts listed on the application.

The Warren Commission questioned Richard E. Snyder about this:

Coleman: This is the application for the passport renewal which OSWALD signed -

Dulles: For the American passport to return to the United States?

Snyder: It says, "I have - have not - been naturalized as a citizen of a foreign state; taken an oath or made an affirmation or other declaration of allegiance to a foreign state; entered or served in the armed forces of a foreign state; accepted, served in or performed the duties of, any office, post or employment under the government of foreign state or political subdivision thereof; voted in a political election in a foreign state or participated in an election or plebiscite to determine the sovereignty over foreign territory; made a formal renunciation of nationality, either in the United States or before or before a diplomatic or consular officer of the United States in a foreign state; been convicted by court martial of deserting the military, air or navel service of the United States in time of war or of committing any act of treason against, or of attempting by force to overthrow, or of bearing arms against the United States; or departed or remained outside the jurisdiction of the United States for the purpose of evading or avoiding training and service in the military, air or naval forces of the United States. If any of the above acts are or conditions are applicable to the applicant's case, or to the case of any person included in this application, a supplementary statement under oath should be attached and made a part hereof."

Coleman: Mr. Snyder, as I read the application, what you did was to cross out the "have not" which means that OSWALD was stating that he had done one of those acts which you have read, is that correct?

Snyder: This is what it would mean.

Coleman: Which one of the various acts that you have read was it your impression that OSWALD was admitting that he had done?

Snyder: Well, there are two possibilities here. One possibility is that the crossing out of "have not" is a clerical error, and that he did not intend to do this.

Coleman: How could that be a possibility? Don't you pretty much negate that possibility by the fact that you did require him to fill out the questionnaire which only has to be filled out if he admits he has done one of the various acts?

Snyder: No; the questionnaire is filled out routinely in Moscow in any kind of problem case.

Coleman: Even though the citizen has done none of the acts which are set forth in the passport renewal application?

Snyder: Yes; well I say in a problem case. I don't mean an American citizen coming in to get his passport renewed, on whom there is no presumption of any problem at all. But a person who has resided in the Soviet Union -

Coleman: Is it your testimony this is only a typographical error?

Snyder: This is one possibility. The other possibility is that he may have said, "I have taken an oath or made an affirmation or formal declaration of allegiance to a foreign state." He had, on several occasions, you know, stated that his allegiance was to the Soviet Union. He may have put this down - that is he may have said "have," having that act in mind, knowing that I knew it, and that there was no need to attempt to hide the fact. This is possible.

Coleman: Do you now recall what reaction you had in mind when you received the application that had been crossed out in such a way that indicated that he was admitting that he had done one of the various acts which are set forth on the form?

Snyder: No, I don't. Of course what I would have been concerned with at the time in more detail really is the questionnaire, which is an expansion of this paragraph and is much more meaningful. So I would have been concerned both with what he said on the questionnaire and with the facts of his case whether he thought he committed one of these acts is not material to the fact of whether he had committed it or whether he lost his citizenship thereby. At any rate, my attention would have been directed to the expanded questionnaire in which he had to fill out individual paragraphs concerning each one of these things, and to a determination of the facts in the case.

Dulles: Do recall whether or not that striking out was noted at the time the passport application or extension was considered?

Snyder: I do not Mr. Dulles, no.

THE WARREN REPORT

The renewal application contained a printed statement which set forth, in the disjunctive, a series of acts, which, if committed by the applicant, would either automatically disqualify him from receiving a passport on the ground that he had lost his American citizenship, or would raise a question whether he might be so disqualified. The printed statement was preceded by two phrases, 'have' and 'have not,' the first phrase being printed directly above the second. One carbon copy of the application indicates OSWALD signed the document after the second phrase, 'have not' had been typed over, thereby apparently admitting that he had committed one of more of the acts which would a least raise a question as to whether he had expatriated himself. Snyder was not able to remember with certainty to which of the acts listed on the statement OSWALD'S mark was intended to refer, but believed it may have been 'swearing allegiance to a foreign state.' He points out the strike out of 'have not' may also have been a clerical error. On the actual signed copy of the application kept in the files of the Moscow Embassy, which is not a carbon copy of the copy sent to the State Department, the strike out is slightly above the 'have;' therefore, since the 'have' is itself printed above the 'have not,' the strikeout may have been intended to obliterate the 'have.' In any event, OSWALD filled out the supplementary questionnaire which was required to be completed if the applicant admitted he had performed one or more of the expatriating acts. He signed the questionnaire under oath.

POSNER

Some question why Snyder approved OSWALD based upon his answers on the carbon copy of the questionnaire. At the bottom of the form, four acts were listed that would indicate a person had forfeited his American citizenship. All were prohibitions related to actions in a foreign state, including swearing allegiance, serving in the armed forces or government, or voting in an election. Next to these prohibitions were the words have or have not. On OSWALD's form, have not was apparently stricken, indicating he had committed one or more of the prescribed (sic) acts. In approving OSWALD, therefore, it appeared that Snyder had bent the rules. The real explanation is more mundane - a typing error. On the original, the ~~strikeout~~ is between the have and have not, and only on the carbon is it directly over the have not (WC Vol. V, pp. 359 -360). But in any case, Snyder had OSWALD fill out a supplementary questionnaire and his more detailed answers showed that he had not violated any of the disqualifications.

THE WARREN REPORT V. POSNER

The Warren Report: "On the actual signed copy of the application kept in the files of the Moscow Embassy, which is not a carbon copy of the copy sent to the State Department, the strike out is slightly above the 'have;' therefore, since the 'have' is itself printed above the 'have not,' the strikeout may have been intended to obliterate the 'have.'"

Posner: "On the original, the ~~strikeout~~ is between the have and have not, and only on the carbon is it directly over the have not."

This is Warren Commission Exhibit CE 947.

I ~~(have)~~ been naturalized as a citizen of a foreign state; taken an oath or made an affirmation or other formal declaration of allegiance to a foreign state; entered or served in, the armed forces of a foreign state; accepted, served in, or performed the duties of, any office, post, or employment under the government of a foreign state or political subdivision thereof; voted in a political election in a foreign state or participated in an election or plebiscite to determine the sovereignty over foreign territory; made a formal renunciation of nationality either in the United States or before a diplomatic or consular officer of the United States in a foreign state; been convicted by court martial of deserting the military, air, or naval service of the United States in time of war, or of committing any act of treason against or of attempting by force to overthrow, or of bearing arms against the United States; or departed from or remained outside the jurisdiction of the United States for the purpose of evading or avoiding training and service in the military, air, or naval forces of the United States.

If any of the above-mentioned acts or conditions are applicable to the applicant's case, or to the case of any other person included in this application, a supplementary statement under oath should be attached and made a part hereof.

OSWALD believed he went to Russia on a mission approved by the CIA and committed "treason" at the behest of that Agency. OSWALD believed he, in one sense, had committed treason, but in another sense he had performed a patriotic act on behalf of his country. OSWALD had expressed fear that he would be prosecuted in the United States for acts connected with his defection. The section that OSWALD had in mind dealt with treason, not his declaration of allegiance to the Soviet Union: OSWALD knew that he had never formally renounced his American citizenship in front of a State Department Consular official nor had he filled out the State Department's official form which was required in these cases, so that he could not be disqualified from renewing his passport because of having made "a formal renunciation of nationality, either in the United States or before or before a diplomatic or consular officer of the United States in a foreign state." Snyder thought OSWALD'S having told him he had committed an act which would disqualify him from renewing his passport had to do with OSWALD'S informal pledge of loyalty to the Soviet Union - a statement that clearly fell within the bounds of free speech. Snyder knew that OSWALD never returned to the Embassy to sign the formal renunciation papers. He knew that OSWALD knew this too. Then why didn't Snyder make it a point to ask OSWALD which act OSWALD believed he had committed so he could make a notation of it on the form?

By the time OSWALD filled out the questionnaire he realized if he wished to return to the United States he would have to explain to Snyder about his CIA connections or he would have to commit perjury. His response to this question changed. This should have further alerted Snyder.

As to where the XXX's were on the original form versus the carbon - this was irrelevant because Snyder was typing up the form as he was asking OSWALD the various questions. It was not OSWALD who typed the form. And Snyder heard OSWALD say "have" and Snyder typed it in and then Snyder asked OSWALD to fill out a supplementary questionnaire, because he heard the word "have" and remembered it no matter where the XXX's were on the application.

Richard E. Snyder commented,

Defection is really a loaded word. Any American citizen can leave his country for any other country. You do not need anyone's permission. There's no crime committed there. I presume he just didn't know. He may have had reason in his own mind to be worried about the statement that he would make available to the Soviets what he learned of radar. That I could imagine. It may have disturbed him that he didn't know what the law was and he might have imagined that he would be held for it.

It was suggested to Richard E. Snyder that the only way he would be worried was if, in fact, he had given the Soviets secret information. He commented: "Yes, but I have no idea what the law is on that."

EVIDENCE: OSWALD'S RUSSIAN DICTIONARY

The Miami Herald reported: "The only possession of LEE HARVEY OSWALD not confiscated by government agents at the John F. Kennedy assassination was an English, Russian dictionary in which numerous words were marked or copied including a phrase meaning "to hit or kill at a distance." It hasn't been checked out for microdots, or anything," said former sheriff's chief Deputy John Cullins. He was given the book by OSWALD'S widow, Marina Porter. Marina confirmed the dictionary belonged to her late husband and that the handwriting and markings in the book were his. She said she could not understand why government agents did not notice it when they descended upon the couple's residence after the assassination. She said she did not look in the book or notice the emphasized or hand-written practice words until Cullins asked her to translate them. Among the emphasized words were "radar" and "range" "eject" and "razor." "Radar locator" is written in OSWALD'S handwriting and a definition of "range" is underlined before being rewritten in Russian. The Russian phrase, Marina said, means: "To beat, hit kill at a definite distance." Another translation means to kill or slaughter, like an animal. Cullins said, "I think it was a resume or information on his part that he was preparing to give up to someone who spoke or read Russian. I see no other reason he would look things up in English and practice them in Russian." [Miami Herald 8.9.81] Marina Oswald told this researcher in 1994: "I gave the dictionary to John Cullins who tried to make money off the whole thing. This was the only time he was friend."

EVIDENCE: OSWALD'S CRYPTIC NOTE

During OSWALD'S voyage to the United States in 1962, he made the following notation:

as for the fee of $_____I was supposed to recive for this_____I refuse it. I made pretense to except it only because otherwise I would have been considered a crack pot and not allowed to appear to express my views. after all who would refuse money?!?

OSWALD deliberately left the blank spaces, indicated by pen strokes. The first blank was difficult to fill in. How much money OSWALD received was a mystery; however, the dollar sign indicated the payment had not been made in rubles. Since OSWALD'S Red Cross subsidy was paid to him in rubles, this paragraph referred to another payment. OSWALD:

Whene I first went to Russia I the winter of 1959 my funds were very limited, so after a certain time, after the Russians had assured themselves that I was really the naive american who beliyved in communism, they arranged for me to recive a certain amount of money every month. OK it came technically through the Red Cross as finical help to a Roos polical immigrate but it was arranged by the M.V.D.. I told myself it was simply because I was broke and everybody knew it. I accepted the money because I was hungry and there were several inches of snow on the ground in Moscow at the time but what it really was payment for my denuciation of the U.S. in Moscow in November 1956 and a clear promise that for as long as I lived in the USSR life would be very good I didn't relize all this, of course, for almost two years. [WCE 25]

The second blank made sense when the word "information" was placed in it. [WCE 25 p2B p122 of Vol.] Note that when Yuri Nosenko first approached the American Embassy, Geneva, he offered to sell information to the CIA for 900 Swiss francs. Later he admitted inventing this story; "He said he feared that an offer to give away information would be rejected as a provocation..." [Wise, Molehunt p68] Marina Oswald told this interviewer: "Maybe he make blank line because he forget amount."

EVIDENCE: POWERS BELIEVED OSWALD WAS RESPONSIBLE

In 1970 Francis Gary Powers wrote in Overflight that he believed OSWALD'S defection was related to his being shot down: "OSWALD'S familiarity with MPS 16 height-finding radar gear and radio codes (the latter were changed following his defection) are mentioned in the testimony of John E. Donovan a former first lieutenant assigned to the same El Toro radar unit as OSWALD on page 298 of Volume 8 of the Warren Commission Hearings. According to Donovan:

OSWALD has access to the location of all bases in the west coast area, all radio frequencies for all squadrons, all tactical call signs, and the relative strength of all squadrons, number and type of aircraft in each squadron, who was the commanding officer, the authentication code of entering and exiting the ADIZ, which stands for Air Defense Identification Zone. He knew the range of our radar. He knew the range of our radio. And he knew the range of the surrounding unit's radio and radar. OSWALD'S conversation with Snyder is mentioned at least three times in the Warren Report: "OSWALD told [Snyder] that he had already offered a Soviet official what he had learned as a radar operator in the Marines. [Overflight pg. 358]

The FBI reported: "News media report Powers has theorized LEE HARVEY OSWALD gave the Soviets radar secrets and information as to U-2's altitude capacity."

EVIDENCE: VLADIMIR SEMICHASTNY

Vladimir Semichastny told Frontline: "There were conversations, but this was such outdated information, the kind we say the sparrows have already chirped to the entire world, and now OSWALD tells us about it. Not the kind of information that would interest such a high level organization such as ours." Scott Malone confirmed that this information dealt with the U-2, but claimed that OSWALD supplied it after the U-2 had been shot down. Vladimir Semichastny: "We already had better sources of information. We had the plane and the pilot." [Interview with W. S. Malone]

FRANCIS GARY POWERS' RELEASE

Francis Gary Powers was given a ten-year prison sentence by the Soviets. The name of the prosecutor at Powers' trial was Roman Andreyevich Rudenko. The name Aleksandr Rudenchek was found in OSWALD'S address book with the notation, teacher, next to it. Francis Gary Powers could have received the death penalty. He was well treated in prison. Eventually, former OSS General Counsel James B. Donovan (died January 20, 1970), who had defended GRU Colonel Rudolph Abel, arranged for Francis Gary Powers to be exchanged for Rudolph Abel. Rudolf Abel had been an illegal agent stationed in the United States. ANGLETON had helped develop the trail that led to Rudolf Abel. This was a poor trade for America - a master spy exchanged for a mere CIA contractual employee. United States Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy opposed the trade. He anticipated that when Francis Gary Powers returned to the United States he would be tried for treason. Francis Gary Powers' behavior in the Soviet Union became the focus of much criticism. The CIA set up a board of inquiry headed by retired Federal Appeals Court Judge E. Barrett Prettyman. In the summer of 1962 James B. Donovan and E. Barrett Prettyman negotiated with the Castro Government for the release of the Bay of Pigs prisoners. Hearings were held in CIA Headquarters, and Francis Gary Powers was cleared of any wrongdoing.

The only evidence received by the Board which directly conflicted with Powers' account was part of a report based on (deleted). Some of these (deleted) indicated that the Soviets thought the flight of the U-2 had continued at the same altitude beyond the point where Francis Gary Powers claimed it fell, that it then descended to a lower altitude, and then it changed its course by turning in a broad circle back to the neighborhood of Sverdlovsk and disappeared from the observation of the trackers sine 35 minutes later. The activities which culminate in a (deleted). In the course of the presentation of the evidence to the Board the obvious possibility of confusion and error was pointed out; indeed at least one dramatic incident of error due to confusion was explained to the Board in detail. Of course this operation of the American intelligence system is invaluable. But the Board is of the opinion that it cannot make a flat assumption of accuracy in these (Deleted) so as to invalidate all other evidence concerning the occurrence of the incident. It is the conclusion of the Board that the evidence establishes overwhelmingly that Power's account was a truthful account.

Former Director of the Central Intelligence Agency, Allen Dulles, personally congratulated Francis Gary Powers. Francis Gary Powers divorced his wife, who had once been the Subject of a complaint by Richard Bissell, and he married a CIA psychologist. He was hired as a test pilot for Lockheed Aviation, which produced the U-2. In June 1977 an attempt was made by this researcher to locate Francis Gary Powers.

THE DEATH OF FRANCIS GARY POWERS

On August 1, 1977, Francis Gary Powers was killed when the traffic helicopter he was flying for a Los Angeles radio station ran out of fuel. The New York Times reported: "The 47 year old aviator, who had survived the downing of his U-2 over the Soviet city of Sverdlovsk on May 1, 1960, died when he Bell Jet Ranger helicopter crashed near a Little League baseball field in the San Fernando Valley suburb of Encino. George Spears, a cameraman for the television station KNBC, also died. The initial indications were that the helicopter had run out of fuel. James Turner, an official of the Federal Aviation Administration control tower at Van Nuys had received a message from an unidentified helicopter pilot at 12:36. The pilot said he was low on fuel and was granted approval for an expedited, direct approach to the airport. Francis Gary Powers crashed at 12:38 p.m. An official of KNBC checked in by radio with his supervisors at the station at about 12:25 p.m. said he was returning to Van Nys for fuel and asked what his next assignment would be. He was told he would probably be assigned to cover another brush fire near Los Angeles this afternoon. Station officials said he mentioned nothing about being short of fuel. One witness told a fireman that the tail rotor of the helicopter fell off before the crash, but this was not immediately confirmed." Powers had worked for KNBC for nine months. The National Transportation Safety Board investigated the crash, and determined that it was a case of too long a flight with too little fuel, because it found the tank and fuel lines totally empty. The National Transportation Safety Board never examined the instruments (which were largely intact) to determine whether the readings they registered to Francis Gary Powers were accurate. [NTSB Powers Rep.; NYT 8.2.77; Ross & Wise Inv. Gov. p226]

There was something suspicious about the death of Francis Gary Powers. For someone who criss-crossed the Soviet Union numerous times to die in a helicopter crash of this nature strains my credulity.

YURI NOSENKO, OSWALD AND THE U-2

In 1964 Yuri Nosenko was asked: "Wouldn't you have connected OSWALD'S coming from Finland with Anatoliy Golitsyn?"

A. No, no. It is not unusual.

Q. Why didn't the KGB fully debrief OSWALD on the U.S. Marine Corps, and particularly such things as American radar installations in Japan?

A. I think they didn't even know that he had been in Japan.

Q. Why didn't they find out? Ask him?

A. Nobody will go to speak to a person who is not normal. The KGB is frightened.

Q. What do you mean, frightened? That is the job of the KGB.

A. I don't mean frightened that way. The KGB is frightened because to talk to somebody like this, to get involved with him, will result in a big headache

Q. Didn't anybody ever sit down with this man and get his full biographic data? Ask him to write his life history, every place he ever lived, worked, everything he has done. If he was in the military service, when, what, where, everything?

A. Never. Nobody did.

Q. I can't believe it...This man could have spent five years of his life working for American intelligence. Maybe all the time he was in the Marines he was working with intelligence. And the KGB wouldn't know about it?

A. It wasn't done. He was never spoken to by any KGB officer in Moscow or Minsk.

The HSCA asked Yuri Nosenko: "Would the Soviet Union be interested in someone who was in the military and worked with radar equipment?"

A. It depends. If he was a corporal, private, no big interest. If he was an officer maybe they be interested.

Q. The fact that he worked with the equipment wouldn't be enough; they would want to know what his rank was?

A. No sir, it is not enough because they had sources.

Q. And in 1959 would the Soviet Union have been interested in someone who served as a radar operator on an air base where the U-2's took off and landed?

A. Yes, sir, it would be very interested.

Q. Is it your testimony that LEE HARVEY OSWALD, who had been a radar operator, and had worked on base from where the U-2 took off and landed, that he wasn't even interesting enough for the KGB to speak to him, to find out if he knew any of this information?

A. Mr. Klein, I understand your position, but we didn't know he had any connection with the U-2 flights. That is one thing.

The HSCA questioned Soviet Russia Division Chief, David Murphy, about Yuri Nosenko:

I did not believe that it would be possible for the Soviet Intelligence Services to have remained indifferent to the arrival in 1959 in Moscow of a former Marine radar operator who had served at what was an active U-2 operational base. I found that to be strange.

Defector Peter Deryabin opined:

It is evident in the supplementary materials that even in his early meetings with U.S. Embassy personnel, OSWALD was ready to give any information on the Marines, etc. (including some 'special' type of information) to the Soviets; then why does the [CIA's] chronology apparently try to whitewash OSWALD by saying: 'When asked about his statement on October 1959 to the effect that he would willingly make available to the USSR that he had acquired as a radar operator for the Marine Corps, OSWALD replied that he had never been questioned and doubted he would have given such information if asked...It is the opinion of the undersigned that this whole paper was written in OSWALD'S defense.

THE NOSENKO INCUBUS

One of the most puzzling mysteries surrounding the assassination of President John F. Kennedy revolved around the question of Yuri Nosenko's defection and bona fides. A CIA Staff member commented: "Once Nosenko is exposed as a KGB plant there will arise the danger that his information will be mirror read." Edward Petty:

The only time OSWALD became of really serious interest to CI/SIG was after the assassination. Nosenko came over claiming that he had seen the KGB's OSWALD file. He came over at precisely the right time, he defected within about 60 days of the Kennedy assassination. And so here you have a really fascinating coincidence; a KGBnik coming in with precisely the information needed about OSWALD at that particular time.

Yuri Nosenko claimed OSWALD had no connection or contact with the KGB. Had Nosenko been dispatched by Moscow to cover up OSWALD'S contact with the KGB during the U-2 dump? Or was he bona fide and telling what he knew about OSWALD? Was he bona fide and lying about OSWALD? Or, as Edward Petty suggested, was he exposed to limited information on OSWALD then spooked into defecting?

GENEVA

Yuri Nosenko was born in the USSR in 1927, to Bolshevik parents. His father would become Nikita Khrushchev's Minister of Shipbuilding. Yuri Nosenko was a dedicated Communist. At age 18 he entered the International Relations Institute in Moscow. Upon graduation in 1951, he claimed he joined Soviet Naval Intelligence. By 1953 he was a KGB agent. On June 5, 1962, while serving as a KGB Security Officer in Geneva, Yuri Nosenko approached the CIA for money and agreed to act as an agent-in-place. The CIA:

A current review of [Nosenko's] statements and remarks during his five contacts in 1962 indicate that his many errors, exaggerations, and actual lies were quite likely typical of a braggadocio element in the personality of Nosenko...Nosenko, during his five contacts in Geneva, made many statements which, in retrospect, were impossible and the investigation of which could only have raised certain questions concerning Nosenko:

(A) Nosenko claimed he personally was with Oleg M. Griбанov, Chief of SCD, during the recruitment pitch to (deleted). This was a lie and an interview with (deleted) with display of photograph would have disclosed that Nosenko did not participate.

(B) Nosenko was involved in the recruitment approach to Russell Langelle. This was a lie and Langelle was available for interview.

(C) Nosenko said he recruited (deleted) in Bulgaria. Actually Nosenko never met (deleted)."

NOSENKO VERSUS GOLITSYN

The CIA went on to list four other examples of Nosenko's lies, then stated: "In 1962 to 1963 a number of similarities were noted between information furnished by Nosenko and information which had been furnished by Anatoliy Golitsyn prior to June 1962. These similarities were quite striking and gave rise to certain suspicions of Nosenko because he provided information which the KGB already considered compromised as a result of the defection of Anatoliy Golitsyn. Certain of the similarities at the time could only be explained in terms of Nosenko being a dispatched agent. (A) Both furnished information in regard to (deleted)." The CIA supplied four more examples of KGB operations compromised by Anatoliy Golitsyn and mentioned by Nosenko. One of these dealt with the audio operations against the American Embassy. Anatoliy Golitsyn had previously supplied the CIA with this information.

Certain information supplied by Yuri Nosenko conflicted with information supplied by Anatoliy Golitsyn. For example, Anatoliy Golitsyn mentioned the attempted recruitment of an American Embassy, Moscow, code clerk during a train ride to Helsinki: "Yuri Nosenko, as Deputy Chief of the First Section specifically charged with work against code clerks, should have been aware of the November 1960 trip of Kosolapov to and from Helsinki. His lack of knowledge may or may not be explainable in terms of his other activities such as his trip to Cuba in November to December 1960."

Yuri Nosenko returned to the USSR, but being in the Second Chief Directorate, he said he knew the degree of coverage there was in Moscow and refused to have contact with the CIA there. He was sent back to Geneva in January 1964 for another disarmament conference. There, he told the CIA he wanted to defect to the West because he had received a recall telegram from Moscow. He later retracted this, and said that he invented it, because he was afraid the CIA would not let him defect. [Nosenko interview with Posner] Edward Petty: "I think Bagley got him to admit that he never got such a telegram."

YURI NOSENKO'S 1964 OSWALD STORY

Yuri Nosenko told the CIA he had helped manage the 1959 OSWALD defection case, when he was Deputy Chief of the Tourist Department and that OSWALD'S visa application in Helsinki was handled by Pereletov who had been in "the KGB's 2nd Department in Leningrad, and there he was dealing with tourists." Yuri Nosenko then stated: "KGB had no interest in OSWALD...OSWALD was regarded as mentally unstable." This was based on a report furnished to him and his associate Krupnov (Kim Georgiyevich) by Rimma Sherakova "who was an agent or operational contact of his." Yuri Nosenko mentioned Chelnokov, Gribanov, Bobkov, Sergey Mikhaylovich and Konstantin Nikitovich in connection with the OSWALD case. Yuri Nosenko:

There was no personal interview of OSWALD by KGB and no further attempt to establish his bona fides...No consideration was given to his possible KGB operational potential...There was, of course, the consideration that OSWALD might be an American Intelligence Agent, but no unusual measures were taken to investigate this possibility...without referral to higher authority, I decreed OSWALD should not be allowed to stay in Soviet Union.

Yuri Nosenko implied that the request was not referred to the "CPSU or to any other Soviet Government agency." Yuri Nosenko stated that OSWALD had been advised at 9:00 a.m. on the morning of his suicide attempt that he would have to leave Russia:

Then he slashes his wrist at 10:00 a.m. The people at the hotel broke down the door to OSWALD'S hotel room and found him bleeding to death. And it is decided this kind of man would not be used by American intelligence. The KGB washed its hands of him...The KGB didn't want him in the Soviet Union and considered OSWALD as being not completely normal and not really very intelligent...After the suicide attempt, there was no attempt to debrief OSWALD because he was not an interesting person and was not normal...he was such a low level person that it was not thought that he would have information of value.

Then the Soviet authorities decided to allow him to stay. The KGB had no choice. They must look on him. We didn't ask the 1st Department or the FCD because he is not an interesting person and is not normal. There were no microphones in any of OSWALD'S hotel rooms. It was not felt that he was of sufficient importance to justify the use of such techniques against him...We were getting no information. There were no such reports in the file...there was no record in the file that OSWALD had ever offered to give information on the U.S. Marine Corps or any matters to the Soviets...There was no physical or technical surveillance of OSWALD while he lived in Minsk. The OSWALD'S mail was monitored, but revealed nothing of interest." After the assassination, Yuri Nosenko, still in Moscow, was read a summary of OSWALD'S KGB file that concluded with the statement that in Minsk the KGB had attempted "to influence OSWALD in the right direction.

Yuri Nosenko had also been present when OSWALD'S September 1963 request for a visa to the Soviet Union was denied, along with Turalin, Alekseyev, Chelnokov and Kovalenko. After the assassination, all KGB files from Minsk about OSWALD were flown to Moscow where it was discovered by Yuri Nosenko that the Minsk KGB had not taken any action with respect to OSWALD contrary to instructions from headquarters. Yuri Nosenko claimed repeatedly that the KGB had no contact with OSWALD whatsoever. OSWALD was never questioned about his past nor asked to write an autobiography.

THE CASE FOR YURI NOSENKO BEING DISPATCHED TENNENT BAGLEY

In the U.S., Yuri Nosenko was handled by Tennent Harrington Bagley who discovered lies in Yuri Nosenko's story. Tennent Bagley was born in Annapolis, Maryland, on November 11, 1925, and came from a prominent Navy family. He served in World War II for three years in the U.S. Marine Corps then attended the University of Geneva, Switzerland, where he received a doctorate in political science. He served in the CIA from 1950 on, where he specialized in Soviet operations. After serving as a Case Officer in Austria, he was assigned to Switzerland in 1960. He'd known ANGLETON since 1961. From 1960 to 1962 Tennent Bagley was Deputy Chief, Soviet Russia, Clandestine Activities Section. Tennent Bagley, 37, held this position at the time of Yuri Nosenko's first Agency-contact in Geneva in 1962. In 1962 he became head of a section responsible for counter-intelligence against the Soviet intelligence services. In 1965 or 1966, he became Deputy Chief, Soviet Russia Division. He went to Europe as Brussels Chief of Station in 1967, and retired there in 1972. The HSCA called him as a witness. Tennent Bagley was convinced Yuri Nosenko was bogus for the following reasons:

(1) The CIA was unbelievably lucky to have found him. Tennent Bagley added, "the key word in that last sentence is 'unbelievably.'"

(2) There were contradictions in Yuri Nosenko's testimony that could not be explained by Yuri Nosenko's personality flaws or memory. According to Tennent Bagley, when he reviewed OSWALD'S KGB file, "Nosenko was already a willing secret collaborator of the CIA. Therefore he must have been alert when dealing with this matter of such obvious importance to the United States and to his own country...Nosenko told us some of these events only 10 weeks after they happened, so there wasn't time for them to become dim in his memory."

(3) "Ten years removed from this case I can still remember at least 20 clear cases of Nosenko's lying about KGB activity and about the career which gave him authority to tell of it..."

(4) The cases Nosenko revealed for the first time were useless.

Tennent Bagley believed that the KGB had interviewed OSWALD:

(5) Here was a young American, LEE HARVEY OSWALD, just out of the Marine Corps, already inside the USSR and going to great lengths to stay there and become a citizen. The KGB never bothered to talk to him, not even once, not even to get an idea whether he might be a CIA plant. Can this be true? Could we all be wrong in what we've heard about rigid Soviet security precautions and about their strict procedures and disciplines...? Of course not.

(6) Yuri Nosenko gave the CIA the location of several microphones in the American Embassy, Moscow. Tennent Bagley stated Anatoliy Golitsyn had given CIA the same information six months previous. Yuri Nosenko produced a list of microphones in the American Embassy, Moscow, from 1960 to 1961. He said, at great risk, he kept this document in a KGB safe he shared with two subordinates. Yuri Nosenko never plausibly explained the circumstances which prompted his retention of this list until 1964, when he produced it for the CIA in Geneva.

Anatoliy Golitsyn had provided, in the first months after his defection, information that led to: "the final uncovering of Kim Philby; to the first detection of several important penetrations of European governments; and pointers to serious penetrations of the United States Government.

Tennent Bagley stated that Yuri Nosenko's information had all been previously compromised, citing the case of William John Vassall, an exposed KGB agent in the British Admiralty. Yuri Nosenko:

The KGB has now (1962) an agent in a high government position in London who provides most valuable information, some from NATO intelligence service conferences. The agent was recruited in Moscow in 1956 or 1957 on the basis of a homosexual compromise. After leaving Moscow he became an assistant to the Minister, or something like that, in the Admiralty. Yuri Nosenko learned of the agent's existence, not his identity. Anatoliy Golitsyn had earlier provided a lead to a KGB agent who was the source of Admiralty documents which Anatoliy Golitsyn had reviewed in KGB Headquarters. On the basis of that lead, British security authorities on June 11, 1962, passed to CIA a list of 20 suspects, including William John Vassall.

The Chief of Soviet Research, Counter-Intelligence, commented:

Yuri Nosenko is a KGB plant and may be publicly exposed as such sometime. The Agency's greatest contribution to the resolution of the questions at hand would be to break Yuri Nosenko and get the full story of how and why he was told to tell the story he did about OSWALD. [CIA FOIA 02911 7.28.64]

Tennent Bagley described himself as the principal opponent of Yuri Nosenko. The CIA produced "some penciled jotting...left carelessly in a highly secret file folder" in Tennent Bagley's handwriting which suggested "liquidation, drugging, or confinement in mental institutions" as means of breaking Yuri Nosenko. Tennent Bagley: "The fact that 'liquidation' was included revealed that they [the notes] were theoretical." In a lengthy, top secret report released in 1994, [CIA TS No. 197124] Tennent Bagley stated:

Yuri Nosenko did not serve in the Naval RU in any of the capacities or at the places and times he claimed. Yuri Nosenko did not enter the KGB in the manner or at the time he claimed. Yuri Nosenko did not serve in the American Embassy Section throughout the 1953 to 1955 period as he claimed. During the period 1955 to 1960 he was neither a senior case officer in, nor Deputy Chief of, the Seventh Department, American/British Commonwealth Section. Yuri Nosenko was neither Deputy Chief of the American Embassy Section, nor a senior officer or supervisor in the Section during the period 1961 to 1962. The contradictions in Yuri Nosenko's accounts of his life and KGB service are so extensive as to make his claims as a whole unacceptable. Given the conclusion that Nosenko is not a bona fide defector, it is necessary to attempt to determine his true motives for contacting American Intelligence and for providing the information he has given..." Reasonable explanations advanced for Nosenko's misrepresentations ranged from "swindler posing as former KGB agent" to "mental case" to "dispatched KGB agent."

Tennent Bagley: "Nosenko is a KGB officer who served in at least some of the components for some or all of the time periods that he claims, but who greatly exaggerated his positions, rank and access to information, to achieve greater status with American Intelligence. Because none of the above explanations is consistent with the data developed in interrogations and investigations, we are left with the hypothesis that Nosenko was dispatched by the KGB. While this explanation does not reconcile all these anomalies, none of them renders it untenable."

ANGLETON believed Nosenko was dispatched. He knew Nosenko was lying about OSWALD'S KGB connection, because he had used OSWALD in the U-2 dump, and he knew the KGB officers with whom OSWALD had contact. ANGLETON stated: "This agency has no information that would corroborate or disprove Nosenko's statements regarding OSWALD." [CIA Memo: ANGLETON to Hoover 4.28.64] Other CIA staffers, who were unaware of OSWALD'S connection to ANGLETON, concluded, for different reasons, that if Yuri Nosenko was dispatched, it must have been to accomplish or further a KGB purpose or mission...

...the nature of which has been, and continues to be, unknown...The theory has also been considered that Nosenko could have been dispatched to confuse and divert American Intelligence and thus protect an important KGB penetration or penetrations of the United States Government, particularly the CIA. This is a theory which has been given full consideration, but it is not possible to factually substantiate or refute this theory in the absence of specific information that high-level KGB penetrations do, or do not, exist.

PRIMARY FACTORS INDICATING NOSKENO DISPATCHED

Yuri Nosenko was a liar. Yuri Nosenko admitted lying about needing money and about the recall cable. Yuri Nosenko claimed he was a KGB Lieutenant Colonel. The CIA could not verify this. In 1992 Yuri Nosenko told Gerald Posner that "his appointment was still in the process of being approved, yet his travel document did say he was a lieutenant colonel." [Case Closed, p39]

Oleg Nechiporenko named different people than Yuri Nosenko in relation to OSWALD in 1959: Aleksandr Perepelitsyn, V. Vysotin. He also said different people handled OSWALD'S September 1963, visa request: Dryakhlov, Vlasov, Bannikov. Yuri Nosenko said OSWALD had no KGB contact, Oleg Nechiporenko said he did. Nonetheless, Oleg Nechiporenko stated that Yuri Nosenko was genuine, and the KGB had sentenced him to death.

Yuri Nosenko had the time of OSWALD'S suicide wrong. Yuri Nosenko said OSWALD'S hotel room was not bugged. Not only was it bugged, there was a camera in it. Yuri Nosenko said there was no technical surveillance on OSWALD in Minsk. There was, as reported by his neighbor. In fact, a 1992 Izvestia article entitled, KGB File No. 31451, stated that OSWALD was under constant surveillance. The article went on to say that OSWALD was suspected of seeking out people with access to secret information, and so was put in touch with people who pretended to have this access. He was lured into anti-Soviet conversations. When he went hunting, KGB agents followed him. OSWALD was drugged and watched by 20 agents. Yet Gerald Posner wrote that this article "both supplements and confirms the information from Yuri Nosenko."

ADDITIONAL CONTRADICTIONS

Yuri Nosenko stated that although the KGB recognized that OSWALD may have been an American agent, no unusual measures were taken to check on this possibility, since it already had been decided not to let him stay in the USSR. Was the KGB only interested in spies who stayed in the USSR for more than a week? Yuri Nosenko said the KGB did not consider recruiting Marina Oswald to report on OSWALD "because she was his wife and it was considered dangerous to recruit a wife to report on her husband." The KGB would recruit children to spy on their parents.

Yuri Nosenko repeatedly referred to the KGB's recognition that OSWALD was not normal as the reason for the KGB's failure to take various steps which it could normally be expected to take against a foreigner like OSWALD. In other words, a lack of normality, and the KGB's recognition of it, provided the peg for the whole story of the KGB's handling of OSWALD. Yuri Nosenko stated Marina Oswald had no difficulty leaving the country, because she was married to an American. This reasoning seems to overlook the fact that OSWALD had already declared his intention (through mail to the U.S. Embassy) to leave the USSR before he married her. If this fact were known to the KGB, as presumably it was, Marina Oswald's marriage request would have been closely scrutinized. [CIA Memo Wigren to C/SR 7.8.64]

SAM JAFFE

Reporter Sam Jaffe was one of the American citizens wrongly exposed by Yuri Nosenko. Samuel Adason Jaffe was born in San Francisco. He served in the Merchant Marine in World War II and then the Navy Reserves. He was a Marine combat correspondent in Korea during the war there. He attended the University of California at Berkeley, Columbia University, and the New School for Social Research. He worked for the old International News Service in San Francisco. He worked briefly for the U.N. in the early 1950's and then joined Life Magazine, where he was a reporter from 1952 to 1955. In 1955, as a freelancer, he covered a conference of Third World countries at Bandung, Indonesia, and interviewed the late Chou En-lai of China. As a correspondent for CBS from 1955 to 1961 he covered the United Nations and Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev's visit to this country in 1959. Victor Marchetti wrote:

In 1955 Sam Jaffe applied for a job with CBS news. While he was waiting for his application to be processed, a CIA official who Jaffe identifies himself as Jerry Rubins visited his house in California and told him, 'If you are willing to work for us, you are going to Moscow' with CBS. Jaffe was flabbergasted, since he did not even know at that point if CBS would hire him, and he assumes that someone at CBS was in on the arrangement or otherwise the Agency would never had known he had applied for work. Moreover, it would have been highly unusual to send a new young reporter to such an important overseas post. Rubins told Jaffe that the Agency was willing to release 'certain top secret information to you in order that you try and obtain certain information for us.' Jaffe refused and was later hired by CBS for a domestic assignment. [Cult, page 335]

In 1960 Jaffe went to Moscow for CBS to cover the trial of Francis Gary Powers. In 1961 Jaffe joined ABC and went to Moscow to open its first bureau there. He was among the first to report the ouster of Khrushchev from politics on the night of October 14, 1964. In 1965 he was expelled from the Soviet Union because of a report ABC carried from Washington saying that another shake up in the Soviet leadership was imminent. By then Jaffe had already been assigned to take over ABC's Hong Kong Bureau. As the war in Vietnam deepened he was sent there and for his coverage he won a prize from the overseas press club. In 1968 he was reassigned to the United States and moved to Washington. The following year he resigned from ABC.

In the 1950's and 1960's Jaffe had a brilliant run as a newspaper and broadcast journalist, however, in 1969 allegations circulated regarding Jaffe's connection with the KGB based on information supplied by Nosenko. The FBI reported:

1. Sam Jaffe's relationship with the Agency predates his assignment to Moscow as an ABC correspondent. During the period 1958 to 1960 while in New York, Jaffe was an FBI confidential informant on his Soviet contacts. In addition, he had several meetings with the Domestic Contacts Division New York office. While in Moscow with ABC, Jaffe felt he was the Subject of a KGB recruitment attempt in 1962. He recounted his story to the Regional Security Officer at the American Embassy, Moscow, copies of which went to both the CIA and FBI. Jaffe covered the trial of Gary Powers for the ABC Television Network, and flew on the same plane from New York to Moscow with Barbara Powers' party. Prior to that trip, he was briefed by a CIA psychologist on ways to observe Power's behavior and demeanor. Jaffe was never "ordered" to cover the Powers' trial, but simply acting as an enterprising newspaperman befriending Barbara Powers while her party was enroute and in the Soviet Union.

2. During the latter part of his time in Moscow, Jaffe was in contact with a KGB Officer, Kuvkov, and this relationship is a matter of record with the FBI. Jaffe has given his version of his dealings with the KGB in a lengthy interview with the FBI in 1969. Yuri Nosenko provided information on Jaffe's relationship with the KGB in 1964. However, as time went on, further debriefings of Yuri Nosenko indicated Yuri Nosenko was not as sure about Jaffe's relationship as he had been originally. By 1968 Yuri Nosenko was positive only that Kuvkov had been in touch with Jaffe, but Yuri Nosenko was not certain that Jaffe was a paid witting KGB agent.

4. During Jaffe's tour in Hong Kong and subsequently in Washington, he was in touch with CIA officers. He provided good information on a (deleted 24 as of 2010) and he was helpful to the Agency in reporting on a (deleted 11) organization, (deleted 08 as of 2010). All (deleted 28 as of 2010) contact with Jaffe ended in 1971.

5. Central to Jaffe's charges about CIA, which he has made public many times, is Jaffe's belief that the CIA passed derogatory information about him to his employers. Attached is a November 24, 1975 letter from Mr. Colby to Jaffe which states categorically that no information in the CIA files had ever been passed outside of official channels. In addition to this letter Jaffe has been reassured on this point verbally on at least four other occasions. The CIA is positive that Jaffe's recall from Hong Kong in 1968, and subsequent dismissal by ABC, are not related to any action taken by the CIA.

6. In discussions with Jaffe he frequently recounts a conversation he had with Mr. (deleted 06, 08 as of 2010) in Hong Kong. According to Jaffe (deleted as of 2010) told him he had a "security problem" but this problem would clear up in due course. A close check of our files cannot elucidate what (deleted as of 2010) was talking about. It is possible of course that (deleted as of 2010) was alluding to the Nosenko allegations as (deleted as of 2010) were given much of the Nosenko debriefings. The record is unclear on this point. However, based on information available to this Agency, we feel we have tried to pacify Jaffe with the statement contained in the Colby letter that we have no evidence he has ever been an agent of any foreign intelligence service.

Sam Jaffe said that the CIA attempted to get him to act as an agent and obtain information from Chinese Communist contacts. Mr. Jaffe said that while he was stationed in Hong Kong he was prepared to make contact with a Chinese official for the CIA, but he said that ABC recalled him from his assignment before the contact could be made. [NYT 2.9.76] Sam Jaffe wanted to locate Yuri Nosenko and confront him. He contacted John Gittinger and Chief, CI/R&A, Leonard McCoy. Sam Jaffe was told the KGB wanted to kill Yuri Nosenko and a meeting was impossible. [CIA Dempsey Memo on Jaffe 12.8.75] Jaffe had regular conversations with ANGLETON. Covert Action reported:

Apparently, ANGLETON had come to befriend Jaffe because of his conviction that he was the target of a KGB defamation attempt. A Soviet defector, Yuri Nosenko, interrogated ruthlessly by ANGLETON, hinted that Jaffe was a KGB agent. Since ANGLETON was convinced that Nosenko was a KGB double agent sent to sow disinformation and confusion, Jaffe had to be okay. [CA No. 29 (Winter 1988)]

YURI NOSENKO'S OTHER INFORMATION DID NOT CHECK OUT

Yuri Nosenko claimed with certainty that the KGB recruited no American Embassy personnel between 1953 and his defection in 1964 with two exceptions:

The first was that of Sergeant Dayle W. Smith who served in Moscow from April 1951 to July 1953. Smith agreed to work for the KGB abroad, but not in the U.S., however, when Smith returned home, he was approached by the KGB. Smith worked for the KGB in the U.S. until September 1962. After denying involvement with the KGB in interviews with the FBI in 1964 and 1965, Smith admitted that he had been approached by the KGB in Moscow in late 1953, that he had been offered a large sum of cash and gems in exchange for classified information concerning Embassy cipher systems and that he had provided the KGB with a mock code machine rotor. The KGB officer who compromised Rudolf Ivanovich Abel, Reino Hayhanen, who defected in Paris in May 1957, also provided information leading to the arrest of Smith.

The second exception concerned a counter-intelligence officer at the American Embassy who had been sleeping with his KGB Agent Russian housemaid. Yuri Nosenko said the KGB subsequently sent him pornographic photo montages. The KGB concluded that the American would not succumb to ordinary blackmail and consequently the maid was instructed to confess to him that she had been recruited by the KGB against her will and would be arrested if she did not fulfill her KGB tasks. The American agreed to help her. This man met with Gribanov on one occasion, then went to Ambassador Bohlen. Anatoliy Golitsyn had already provided the CIA with a similar story. Yuri Nosenko consistently asserted that, had there been other recruitments, he would have learned some of the details. He discounted the fact that he was not always in the First Department, which was responsible for Embassy recruitment.

THE CASE FOR YURI NOSENKO BEING BONA FIDE

In 1976 John L. Hart was brought out of retirement to conduct a study of the Yuri Nosenko case. Hart testified before the HSCA in 1978. That year, Leonard McCoy, AC/CI, released this statement:

Yuri Nosenko was probably the most valuable source of counter-intelligence information that the U.S. Government has ever had....He identified some 2,000 KGB officers and 300 Soviets who were acting as KGB agents. He provided information on 238 Americans in whom the KGB had displayed some interest, including many who had been recruited. For example, one of his identifications led to the trial, and a sentence of 25 years, for U.S. Army Sergeant Robert Lee Johnson. Nosenko also provided information on some 200 foreign nationals in 36 countries in whom the KGB had taken an active interest...the British were able, on the basis of Nosenko's information, to identify William John Vassall, a high official of the British Admiralty, as a KGB agent, and sentence him to 18 years.

Gerald Posner was granted an interview with Yuri Nosenko. Yuri Nosenko explained that his appearance in Geneva in January 1964 was arbitrary: "Disarmament negotiations were postponed twice in 1963. 'If there had been a meeting as scheduled in the Spring of 1963, I would have defected then...'"

Many other defectors said Yuri Nosenko was bona fide including, Fedora, who worked in the Soviet Union's Mission to the United Nations. Gerald Posner listed nine other similar defectors who believed Yuri Nosenko was authentic, but failed to state how they knew this, and where they made their statements. Additionally, questions have been raised regarding some of these men:

(1) Yuri Loginov (1961). Yuri Loginov was a KGBnik who went to the American Embassy, Helsinki, in 1961 and offered to act as an agent-in-place. He did so for six years, undetected by the Soviets. In 1967 he was arrested by the South Africans for spying on behalf of the Soviet Union. ANGLETON betrayed him because his case officer, Richard Kovitch, was suspected of being a mole, due to ambiguous information supplied by Anatoliy Golitsyn. Yuri Loginov was sent back to the Soviet Union in a spy trade. His fate there remains unclear.

(2) Igor Kochnov (1966).

(3) Obscure Soviet trade delegate Oleg Lyalin, 34, who defected to Britain early September 1971. He was 27 years old when he had knowledge of Yuri Nosenko. As a result of his defection, 90 Soviet delegates were PNGed from London. Oleg Lyalin revealed the Soviet's intent to sabotage military installations. He was a double-agent for six months before he defected. Oleg Lyalin was a bona fide defector - he blew too many other agents cover not to be so.

(4) Rudolph Albert Herrmann studied in East Germany then went to the United States in 1968. He was rolled over in 1977.

(5) Ilya Grigorevich Dzhirkvelov was a KGB officer with a history of alcoholism. He worked in the Soviet media from 1958 to 1965. He defected after a car accident in 1980.

(6) Vladimir Andreyevich Kuzichkin joined the KGB in 1975. He was a senior KGB officer in Tehran, who defected to the British, in June 1982. Vladimir Kuzichkin produced a list of Soviet agents in Iran. Many of them were executed.

(7) Viktor Gundarev (1985).

(8) Vitaliy Yurchenko (1985). Vitaliy Yurchenko was a senior intelligence official who defected to the West in 1985, and redefected in November 1985. Before he returned to the United States he said he had been kidnapped, drugged and tortured by the CIA. Yurchenko provided information to the CIA on Edward Lee Howard, a CIA officer who worked for the KGB. Howard fled the United States after he was exposed by Yurchenko. This indicates that Yurchenko was a bona fide defector.

Yurchenko passed the CIA's lie detector tests. Yurchenko probably re-defected after his lover refused to defect with him. [NYT 11.8.85] Just who this lover was is unclear. The New York Times reported: "The woman in Toronto, Svetlana Dedkov, 48 years old, fell to her death from the 27th floor of a 35-story apartment building in the Toronto suburb of Etobicoke. Her husband, Boris Dedkov, worked for Stan-Canada, a Soviet machine tool trading company in Toronto." The Canadian police stated that they found a suicide note. Her suicide took place the morning after the defector said he was going home. The New York Times reported: "The sources here linked Mr. Yurchenko to a Soviet diplomat's wife in Ottawa, who they would not identify. One official said that he heard that the Soviet Embassy might have flown her back to Moscow on Thursday to get her out of the way...After defecting, officials said, Yurchenko visited a woman in Canada with whom he had been involved with while stationed at the Soviet Embassy here from 1975 to 1980. But she sent him away, the Americans, said." [NYT 11.6.85] The Canadian government would not confirm or deny that Yurchenko visited Canada. What is Vitaliy Yurchenko doing in Russia today? Where did Yurchenko release the information that Nosenko was bona fide.

(9) Oleg Gordievskiy, 46, a Soviet Consul in London, was U.K. KGB Chief. He defected in September, 1985. Twenty-five Soviet nationals were expelled as a result of his collaboration with the British. Oleg Gordievskiy joined the KGB in 1962, where he worked in Department S of First Directorate, which concerned itself with illegals in the West. Oleg Gordievskiy claimed that the Soviet Union believed the United States was going to attack in early 1981. Former CIA/DD George Carver labeled this disinformation. Twenty five Soviet nationals are a lot of people to burn in any operation. Gordievskiy was bona fide. Again it was not stated where Gordievskiy said Nosenko was bona fide.

Many respected authors like David Wise and Tom Mangold were convinced Yuri Nosenko was genuine. Edward Petty: "The Bureau, as far as I know, considered him to have been a really good source. He was real, as far as being a Second Chief Directorate officer." The CIA:

If Yuri Nosenko was dispatched, it is felt that he, during his 1962 contacts, would have been very carefully briefed and that his remarks or statements would have not been of a nature that would have caused any suspicion in regard to the bona fides of Yuri Nosenko." The CIA explained why Anatoliy Golitsyn and Yuri Nosenko furnished the same information: they were both in the same section of the KGB. The CIA explained Yuri Nosenko's lack of knowledge concerning the trip that Kosolapov made to Helsinki in November 1960: "It cannot be interpreted as evidence Yuri Nosenko was dispatched by the KGB since, if he had been, he would have been briefed on the trip, as this was an event the KGB knew Golitsyn was aware of.

THE MIDDLE GROUND

Did Yuri Nosenko lie because he had been exposed to false or limited information, then allowed to, or was spooked into, defecting? Edward Petty: "The facts and timing with respect to Yuri Nosenko's defection and his provision to the CIA of information about OSWALD in the Soviet Union make it virtually certain that the KGB knew that he was going to defect, and expected him to provide the CIA with the extent of his knowledge concerning OSWALD. Various information, including much of Yuri Nosenko's own conduct, has subsequently provided the basis to accept that Yuri Nosenko is personally genuine. There is no other conclusion but that the KGB allowed him, or motivated him, to defect without his realizing that to have been the case. Just such a technique had been used successfully by the KGB in the Goleniewski case only four years earlier."

"SNIPER"

In March 1958 "Sniper" (Michael Goleniewski, a renegade Polish Intelligence officer) contacted the U.S. Embassy in Bern, Switzerland, by mail and offered information about communist espionage activities. Howard Roman studied the contents of the letters and determined that they were written by a German speaking Pole. The information was evaluated in Project BEVISION. "Sniper" led the CIA to KGBniks Gordon Lonsdale (Russian Colon Molody) and George Blake, who had compromised the Berlin Tunnel. He exposed an Israeli citizen named Israel Beers as a KGB mole. "Sniper" defected in December 1960. Evidence existed that the KGB had false information planted on him before his defection, then spooked him into defecting. Michael Goleniewski remembered having been told by a KGBnik that Stafan Bandera, an anti-Soviet Ukrainian nationalist living in Munich, had been murdered on the night of October 15, 1959, by the man with whom he was having supper, German intelligence service (BND) agent Heinz Danko Herre. The CIA later learned Heinz Danko Herre was innocent:

The Legal Attaché in Bonn in June 1962, reviewed information furnished to the Germans by Bogdan Stashinsky, which indicated that he was recruited by the KGB in 1952...in 1958 he was told that because he had proved himself, he would be given an important mission against Ukrainian émigré groups in the West. This mission turned out to be the assassination of Dr. Lev Rebet and Stafan Bandera, émigré leaders in Munich. He murdered Lev Rebet in 1958 and Stafan Bandera in 1959...by spaying poison in his victim's face which made death appear to be from a heart attack." [FBI 62-109090-NR 1.24.64 Sullivan to Branigan]

The Soviets had deliberately planted the Heinz Danko Herre story on Michael Goleniewski to make trouble between the CIA and BND. Michael Goleniewski was told that Henry Kissinger had been recruited by the Soviets in the aftermath of World War II. No evidence of this has surfaced to date. Edward Petty:

The Soviets had details of the Goleniewski case as it was going on. They therefore had a clear-cut penetration. A penetration of that level had also to know the Nosenko case. Ergo, if you accept that hypothesis, then they knew about Nosenko. The key is that Nosenko himself was quite genuine. Nosenko was in the Second Chief Directorate and handled OSWALD material in the normal course of events. So he was perfectly willing to tell what he knew. The material was true as far as the Second Chief Directorate was concerned. If you accept the evidence from Nosenko himself that he personally is genuine, that does not mean that he is genuine as far as an unwitting control is concerned. ANGLETON was doing exactly what they wanted to happen.

The second part of the Nosenko affair dealt with KGB penetration of CIA and the Golitsyn case. Golitsyn had predicted Nosenko's appearance and that he would try to discredit his bona fides as a defector. ANGLETON was always saying the Nosenko was going to destroy Golitsyn's leads and therefore he would destroy Golitsyn. Nosenko was a pawn in whatever play was going on involving ANGLETON and Golitsyn.

When they ultimately gave him polygraph tests that were not rigged, Nosenko came out perfectly all right. The Soviets let him out. He didn't know he was playing their role. What they did to make him run, I don't know. That's the reason they never broke him.

Edward Petty pointed out that Nosenko was never asked,

Think about it fellow, are there any facts which would cause you to believe that the Soviets were putting pressure on you to leave?' Whether he would tell anybody such a thing at this point is something else. The CIA in that sense was inclined to look at things as either black or white. Either he was 'Okay' or he was a dispatched agent. They didn't understand that there could be a middle ground.

Cleveland Cram stated:

At that time ANGLETON foolishly did not believe Nosenko, not because of OSWALD and the assassination, but because of Golitsyn having denounced him. I believe Nosenko was bona fide.

Cleveland Cram was asked if Yuri Nosenko could have unwittingly been given false information then spooked into defecting. He stated:

If you had a big conspiracy in the Soviet Union he might have been shown false stuff and reported that. It was looked into. With the evidence we have now from the Soviets, we know that is not true. Nosenko saw what the KGB had, and he reported what he saw. The problem was that JIM was so screwed up in his thinking because of Bagley and Golitsyn he did not want to accept Nosenko, who was the only person who really had first hand information on OSWALD in the West, available to us. ANGLETON didn't have the brains to run OSWALD as vestpocket operation. That's ridiculous. OSWALD was too unreliable. All you guys in this conspiracy shit should do something else. Like the JFK movie. It's just not true.

Cram was asked if there could have been a middle ground:

His information was very accurate about all the important things. He had access to the OSWALD file after the assassination. I know the sun rises in the East and sets in the West. Nosenko was a genuine defector. It is firmly established now. Former Soviet Generals will tell you this. I'm not sure that Goleniewski had any false information planted on him before his defection. That's a theory cooked-up by nut cases like JIM ANGLETON, who never could prove it. ANGLETON was trying to prove some of his goofy theories, and that's how it got started. Goleniewski says it isn't true.

ANALYSIS OF MIDDLE GROUND THEORY

OSWALD did not supply the Soviets with strategic information until April 1960. His report could have been placed in a RESTRICTED file. Yuri Nosenko might have been exposed to the non-sensitive OSWALD file and was assigned to Geneva then provoked into defecting. Or he might have defected on his own. Either way he would have been genuinely convinced the KGB had no connection with OSWALD. As for the contradictions in his story about OSWALD and the KGB, Scott Malone believed: "He was a drunk and a liar. He lied - because he was a liar." Did he lie because he was trying to exaggerate his importance to the CIA? The CIA explored something akin to "a middle ground" when it asked:

Is there evidence of a political or any other type objective which could justify a dispatch of Yuri Nosenko by the KGB with permission to speak freely to CIA concerning his knowledge of the KGB and without Yuri Nosenko being given a specific mission? The above possibility has been given consideration, even though the ultimate ramifications are practically incalculable. The conclusion is that as regards Nosenko, with the single exception detailed below, there is no evidence of a political type objective which could be considered of sufficient importance by the KGB to warrant the dispatch of a KGB officer with the knowledge of Nosenko to speak freely with the CIA without his being given a specific mission, or missions, by the KGB...The only area touched upon in any way by Nosenko which might meet the above requirements is the assassination of President Kennedy.

The CIA also asked: "Is there any evidence that the contacts of Nosenko in 1962 or in 1964 with the CIA were known to the KGB prior to his defection?" The CIA:

It is recognized that since positive factual confirmation such as the KGB file on Nosenko is not available, any conclusion concerning whether Nosenko was, or was not, dispatched by the KGB can only be based on a full review of available information from Nosenko...One of the particular areas considered was his apparent behavior during his contacts with the CIA in June 1962 and the conclusion was that it was incomprehensible that he could have been under KGB control at the time.

The CIA reasoned that had Nosenko been under KGB control, he would not have expressed considerable concern over his personal security, but it had to admit: "It is recognized that the above indicated concern is not substantial evidence that Nosenko was not under KGB control." The CIA also dismissed the possibility that the Soviets discovered that the documents Yuri Nosenko had stolen were missing. It cited the fact Yuri Nosenko lied about his rank as further proof of his bone fides: no dispatched KGB agent would be that stupid. The possibility that Yuri Nosenko was discovered, then "spooked" into defecting, was not covered in this report.

YURI NOSENKO AND THE WARREN COMMISSION

Yuri Nosenko offered to testify before the Warren Commission. The CIA never allowed him to do this, nor was he mentioned in the Report or Twenty-Six Volumes. Interviews with Yuri Nosenko were included in the documents of the Warren Commission. Edward Petty commented, "While the CIA considered Nosenko to be a dispatched agent from the word go, actually from before he ever arrived, the CIA could not hold back word of what Nosenko had to say about OSWALD from the Warren Commission." The CIA told the HSCA: "CIA was unable to resolve satisfactorily the question of his bona fides until well after the Warren Commission had completed its work. The point is that CIA, per se, did not reach an agreed position on Mr. Nosenko until late 1968." Former President Gerry Ford was Yuri Nosenko's foremost opponent:

Ford: I have been led to believe, by people who I believe know, that there is a grave question about the reliability of Nosenko being a bona fide defector...I feel so strongly about this that I just think the Commission has got to make a decision on it.

Warren: I am allergic to defectors...So I think exactly as you do, Gerry.

Dulles: I concur in what you said. Over the weekend I had an opportunity to discuss the Nosenko matter in some detail with my former colleagues...

Ford: It is my best recollection that he was actually a defector some time in December, at a disarmament meeting in Geneva, Switzerland. And the original press releases were to the effect that he was a highly significant catch as far as we were concerned...There was a great mystery about his particular defection, because the Soviet Union made such a protest - they went to the Swiss Government and raised the devil about it. Now subsequent information has developed that he doesn't appear to be quite as big a catch, if any, as far as we were concerned. Having absolutely no faith in what the Soviet Union tries to do in these cases, he might have been dangled for one reason two or three months before the assassination, but pumped last th (illegible) the assassination, and a man that was as high as he allegedly is, with the mental capacity he is supposed to have, could very well be filled with all the information which he is now giving us in reference to the OSWALD case. As I say, I am a complete and total skeptic and cynic about these kinds of people, and there would be no better way for the Soviet Union to try and clean its own skirts than to have a high ranking defector come and discount OSWALD'S importance, OSWALD'S significance while in the Soviet Union." [WC Proceedings 6.23.64]

BRANIGAN'S DOUBTS ABOUT NOSENKO

William Branigan pointed this out to William Sullivan:

With respect to the points that are to be elaborated on, Nosenko stated that he next heard about OSWALD two hours after the assassination of President Kennedy when he was summoned to the KGB center in Moscow. The time element of two hours is highly unlikely. Elsewhere, Nosenko states that when OSWALD appeared at the Soviet Embassy in Mexico City, the First Chief Directorate of the KGB at Moscow was advised of his interest in returning to Russia and the First Directorate consulted the Second Directorate. This could only have occurred in late September or early in October 1963, but then Nosenko says following the assassination no file on OSWALD could be located at the KGB center in Moscow. This seems unlikely. [NARA FBI 124-10169-10063]

YURI NOSENKO'S IMPRISONMENT

ANGLETON knew for a fact that no matter how you cut it, Nosenko was not for real. The CIA kept Yuri Nosenko locked up for five years under prison-like circumstances. He was tortured and deprived of basic human necessities. Helms commented: "One of the first problems we had with him in the United States was he liked to drink and carouse. One of the reasons to hold him in confinement was to get him away from booze..." Yuri Nosenko undertook numerous polygraph tests. One of these tests, according to Helms, "was designed as sort of a psychological trick on Nosenko to indicate that he wasn't telling the truth." He was administered LSD. Some in the Bureau were convinced Yuri Nosenko was real:

The FBI perceived Nosenko's statements about OSWALD, depending upon a subsequent, definitive resolution of Nosenko's bona fides, to be the most authoritative information available, indicative of a lack of Soviet Governmental involvement in the assassination of President Kennedy.

The FBI found no substantial basis to conclude that Nosenko was not a bona fide defector...

YURI NOSENKO'S REHABILITATION

In 1967 Bruce Solie, of the CIA's Office of Security, wrote a critique of a lengthy report Tennent Bagley had prepared on Yuri Nosenko. Bruce Solie determined that Yuri Nosenko had not been dispatched. During the tenure of the HSCA, Bruce Solie, Chief of the Security Analysis Group, supplied the Committee with many of its documents. In 1968 the FBI issued a Top-Secret Nosenko Report.

It is noted that a brief chronology of events is set forth in the preface to the WFO paper. It is indicated therein that Sammy is considered by CIA as a part of a large scale KGB deceptive operation. In addition to those comments, it is noted that a paper prepared in December 1964 by CIA as an agenda for proposed CIA-FBI conference, concluded that Nosenko was dispatched by the KGB in March 1962, as one part of a broad provocation effort conceived as early as 1959 and set in motion in the latter part of 1961. It was stated, "We believe the major figures in this provocation include at least three defectors, and at one time or another more than eight Soviet officials in-place as American Intelligence Service (AIS) agents. They are supported by a large number of staged incidents and purposefully handled agents known by the KGB to be under Western control. NOSENKO (SAMMY) is but one of these figures, a pivotal one and the one offering us the greatest insight into the larger operation."

The paper went on to say that the provocation was directed by a group of highly experienced KGB officers probably working directly under the Chairman of the KGB or one of his deputies. It was also stated, "We have been able to discern how NOSENKO was briefed and trained and his legend shaped, and have been able to identify tentatively the specific KGB officers running this operation."

The December, 1964, paper also made proposals for the disposal of SAMMY. In the event his full confession and cooperation were not obtained, it was proposed that he be removed from U. S. territory for controlled detention abroad followed by a public statement identifying him as a confessed provocateur.

(This is close to what happened to EYEBALL in 1967.) It was stated that preparation should be made for action against sources "whom we believe to be suspect or related to the NOSENKO case," to be coincidental with action against SAMMY.

The December, 1964, paper and others emanating from CIA which conclude that SAMMY is a plant and that all other defectors or defectors in place who support him are likewise plants, attempt to discredit Bureau sources as well as SAMMY. They illustrate the subject of defector interrogation and exploitation is clearly within the interests of the Bureau.

SAMMY has been under almost daily interrogation by Mr. BRUCE SOLIE of the Office of Security of CIA from October 30, 1967, to date. SOLIE's technique has been to question SAMMY in such a manner that he will volunteer information and only in rare instances has he challenged SAMMY's statements or become involved in arguments about what SAMMY did or did not furnish previously. The theory was to get SAMMY to volunteer information without reference to previous interrogations. This technique has been effective.

The current interrogations have not exhausted SAMMY's knowledge of Soviet Intelligence but thousands of pages have been recorded covering his career, cases known to him, and general as well as specific, data regarding KGB. The transcripts have been made available to WFO and have been thoroughly reviewed by three WFO Agents who have collectively more than 50 years of experience in Soviet counterintelligence work.

Based upon the review of this voluminous material and the results of some collateral investigation it has been concluded, contrary of some collateral investigation in the 1968 paper, that SAMMY is what he says he is, that he is knowledgeable in the areas and to the extent that he should be, and he has a logical explanation for his acquisition of information which normally would not have been accessible to him in his claimed positions. It is believed impossible that he developed this detailed knowledge by KGB briefings only. The consistency between previous and current interviews is substantial proof of this. If he was dispatched by KGB he was given a "green light" to tell everything he knew. This is believed incredible, particularly because of his connections with ranking KGB officers and because his information is closely related to that furnished by various other sources. Collectively these sources have seriously damaged SIS operations and have rendered valuable assistance to Western Counterintelligence. They have supplied the key to practically all successful counterintelligence operations during the past five years. To hold that they are all "Plants" is preposterous. While SAMMY admittedly during previous interrogations, exaggerated and in some instances lied about his KGB rank and his personal involvement in some cases, there is no reasonable basis for now doubting his bona fides.

The current interrogation of SAMMY by SOLIE is being handled as indicated in number six above and has been productive. Based upon the results summarized in the attached paper, the conclusion is inescapable that the persons who handled previous interrogations and evaluations of SAMMY were either incompetent or for reasons of their own persisted in the attempt to prove the February, 1964, conclusion that he was not bona fide. There was a definite failure to take elementary steps to clarify questioned matters. A good example is the insistence that KGB could not have placed "metka" (powder) on the clothing of JOHN V. ABIDIAN because he did not employ a Soviet maid until 16 months after his arrival in Moscow. The current interrogation of SAMMY developed that KGB was aware that ABIDIAN had an American girl friend who sent her maid to clean ABIDIAN's apartment. Recent interview of ABIDIAN by SOLIE confirmed this; the maid therefore could have had access to his clothing beginning 6 months after his arrival in Moscow. Other examples of inadequate interrogation and collateral investigation are set forth in the attached paper:

RECOMMENDATIONS

WFO believes that SAMMY is a bona fide defector and that his isolation and detention re based on erroneous conclusions and unsound grounds and are incompatible with the American system of justice.

Yuri Nosenko was freed in April 1969. He was put on the CIA payroll as an independent contractor.

YURI NOSENKO'S HSCA TESTIMONY

In 1979 the HSCA questioned Yuri Nosenko about why the Soviets allowed OSWALD to remain in Russia. He said two psychiatrists determined he was insane, and if they tried to deport him he might commit suicide: "Simply a mentally unstable person, they didn't want to go it on any such action." Yuri Nosenko declared that, although extensive KGB resources were devoted to physical and technical surveillance of OSWALD, the KGB never interviewed him. In 1964 Yuri Nosenko had supplied different information to the FBI: OSWALD was put under ...passive observation to make sure he was not an American intelligence agent temporarily dormant...in view of instructions from KGB, Moscow, no active interest in OSWALD could be taken in Minsk without obtaining prior approval from KGB, Moscow. No such approval was ever requested or granted and based on his experience, he opined that the only OSWALD coverage during his stay in Minsk consisted of periodic checks at his place of employment, inquiry of neighbors and review of his mail.

Yuri Nosenko explained: "Well I told them there was work done against OSWALD; it was ordered, passive work, it's called passive. Whenever it's ordered not to make an approachment, not to make a contact, not to make a recruitment, this is passive."

THE YURI NOSENKO INCUBUS

When ANGLETON was deposed in HUNT v. WEBERMAN in 1979, he stated:

Well, I will simply say that during my tenure the [Nosenko] case had never been resolved...and, Mr. Helms, in his testimony before the assassination committee recently, had words to the effect that the problems of Nosenko were still an incubus that hung over our heads...I have never in a, as a matter of policy and as a matter of professional judgement, come to any conclusion other than the case was unresolved. That was the official position and I can speak to my tenure. That was the official position of the former Deputy Director of Operations, i.e., the Clandestine Services, Thomas Karamessines. It was reflected in the FBI disseminations of his reports to the effect that they were from a defector whose bona fides had not been resolved...There were many speculations that the so-called methodology that Nosenko alleged was the methodology of the KGB was inaccurate, but that was in the realm of speculation based on very thorough analysis of Nosenko's testimonies. As I said earlier, the incubus was still hanging over our head. There was no quotation, no determination.

Helms told the HSCA: "To this very day no person familiar with the facts, of whom I am aware, finds Mr. Nosenko's comments about OSWALD and the KGB to be credible. That still hangs in the air like an incubus." Nosenko was dispatched by the Soviets to disassociate OSWALD from the KGB. He had to remain in America and he could never redefect. He would be condemned as a traitor by the Russian Intelligence Service and sentenced to death. It was unlikely the death sentence could be carried out within the United States. He was an extremely strong-willed person, and could not be broken by torture. He may have supplied the CIA with a lot of good information, but his information about OSWALD and others was a lie. Nosenko's real mission was to prevent World War III by supplying the CIA with information which disassociated OSWALD from the KGB. ANGLETON knew first hand Nosenko was full of shit because ANGLETON had run OSWALD in the Soviet Union.

OSWALD: JULY 1960 TO NOVEMBER 1960

July summer months of green beauty, pine forest, very deep. I enjoy many days in the environments of Minsk with the Zegers who have a car "Mosivich". I always goes along with Anita. Leonara seems to have no Sov-friend, many admirirs. She has a beautiful Spanish figure, long black hair, like Anita. I pay much attention to her shes too old for me she seems to dislike my lack of ambition for some reason. She is high strung. I have become habituated to a small cafe which is where I dine in the evening the food is generally poor and always strictly the same, menue in any cafe, at any point in the city. The food is cheap and I don't really care about quiality after three years in the U.S.M.C.

By September 1960, OSWALD was becoming openly critical of Soviet society:

As my Russian improves I become increasingly conscious of just what kind of a society I live in. Mass gymnastics, compulsory afterwork meeting. Compulsory attendance at lectures and the sending the entire shop collective (except me) to pick potatoes on a Sunday, at a state collective farm. A "patriotic duty" to bring in the harvest. The opinions of the workers (unvoiced) are that it's a great pain in the neck. They don't seem to be especially enthusiastic about any of the "collective" duties. I am increasingly aware of the presence, in all things, of Lebizin, shop party secretary, fat, fortyish and jovial on the outside. He is a no-nonsense party regular.

October 1960. The coming of Fall, my dread of a new Russian winter are mellowed in splendid golds and reds of fall in Belorussia. Plums, peaches, apricots and cherries abound for these last fall weeks. I am healthy brown color and stuffed with fresh fruit. (at other times of the year unobtainable)

ELLA GERMAN

ELLA GERMAN on the right

October 18, 1960. My 21st birthday sees Rosa, Pavil, Ella at a small party at my place. Ella a very attractive Russian Jew I have been going walking with lately, works at the radio factory also. Rosa and Ella are jealous of each other it brings a warm feeling to me. Both are at my place for the first time. Ella and Pavil both give ash-trays (I don't smoke) we have a laugh.

November 1960. Finds the approach of winter now. A growing loneliness overtakes me in spite of my conquest of Ennatchina, a girl from Riga, studying at the music conservatory in Minsk. After an affair which lasts a few weeks we part.

November 15, 1960. In Nov. I make acquaintances of four girls rooming at the For. lan. Dormitory in room 212. Nell is very interesting, so is Tomka, Tomis and Alta. I usually go to the institute dormitory with a friend of mine who speaks English very well, Eraich Titov 22: is in the fourth year at medical institute. Very bright fellow. At dormitory we sit and talk for hours in English.

December 1960. I am having a light affair with Nell Korobka."

The Warren Commission named Eric Titovets as OSWALD'S oldest existing acquaintance. In his Historic Diary, OSWALD reflected he did not trust Eric, who was a loyal Communist Party member, and did not tell him he was returning to the United States until one day before his departure. [CIA 1295-482, 1295-482]

OSWALD: JANUARY 1961

January 1, 1961 - New Years I spend at home of Ella Germain. I think I am in love with her. She has refused my more dishonourable advances, we drink and eat in the presence of her family in a very hospitable atmosphere. Later I go home drunk and happy. Passing the river homewards, I decide to propose to Ella.

January 2, 1961. After a pleasant hand-in-hand walk to the local cinema we come home, standing on the doorstep I propose's. She hesitates then refuses, my love is real but she has none for me. Her reason besides lack of love: I am American and someday simply might be arrested simply because of that example Polish Intervention in 20's led to the arrest of people in the Soviet Union of Polish origin "you understand the world situation there is too much against you and you don't even know it." I am stunned she snickers at my awkwardness, in turning to go (I am too stunned to think!) I realize she was never serious with me but only exploited my being an American, in order to get the envy of the other girls who consider me different from the Russian Boys. I am miserable.

January 3, 1961. I am miserable about Ella. I love her but what can I do? It is the state of fear which was always in the Soviet Union.

Priscilla Johnson related that LEE told Marina Oswald "Being American, German thought I was a spy." He confided that he "loved Ella with all his heart," and "her only fault was that at 24 she was still a virgin, due entirely to her own desire...Our last formal date was in February 1961 after which I stopped seeing her." [Johnson Lee & Marina p401: CIA Name List with Traces] Was Ella Germain reporting back to the KGB? The CIA's Name List With Traces: "An American visitor in Moscow on 19(??) reported being assigned an interpreter named Ella Herman (also spelt German) who was described as single, Jewish and in her early 30's with an excellent command of English including a good vocabulary in thermodynamics. She claimed to have two years of experience translating for a chemical institute. Ella Herman was furnished by the Moscow Energetics Institute and was reportedly attached to the English chair of the Institute." Vladimir Semichastny said OSWALD'S primary interest was womanizing.

OSWALD OFFERED SOVIET CITIZENSHIP

January 4, 1961 One year after I received the residence document I am called in to the passport office and asked if I want citizenship (Russian) I say no simply extend my residential passport to agree and my document is extended until Jan 4, 1962.

January 4, 1961 to January 31, 1961. I am stating to reconsider my desire about staying. The work is drab that money I get has nowhere to be spent. No nightclubs or bowling allies no place of recreation except the trade union dances. I have had enough.

On January 12, 1961, S.A. John W. Fain was still assigned to the OSWALD case and was under the supervision of ASAC W. David Breen and SAC Curtis O. Lynam.

FEBRUARY 1961

February 1, 1961. I made my first request to American Embassy, Moscow, for reconsidering my position, I stated "I would like to go back to the U.S.

On February 1, 1961, the State Department sent Airgram A-127 via diplomatic pouch to the American Embassy, Moscow, which requested that the American Embassy inform the Soviet Ministry of Foreign Affairs that Marguerite Oswald was worried about her son. Delivery time for such pouches was from three to ten days. On February 5, 1961, before the American Embassy passed this message to the Soviet Ministry of Foreign Affairs, OSWALD mailed a letter dated February 1, 1961 to the American Embassy, which the American Embassy received on February 13, 1961. In this letter, he expressed his interest in returning to the United States. American Embassy officials stated this was the first time they had heard from, or about, OSWALD, since November 16, 1959. Marguerite Oswald's letter and OSWALD'S decision to leave the Soviet Union were unrelated. His mission had ended and he was not admitted to Patrice Lumumba University. The Warren Commission concluded: "The simultaneity of the two events was apparently coincidental. The request from Marguerite Oswald went from Washington to Moscow by sealed diplomatic pouch and there was no evidence that the seal had been tampered with." [WR p275] Richard E. Snyder: "All we could do in cases like that would be to forward a letter to the Foreign Office with a request that they forward it. We could not contact the individual himself."

REFERENCE TO LETTER U.S. EMBASSY NEVER RECEIVED

OSWALD'S February 5, 1961, letter to the American Embassy, Moscow, contained a reference to a December 1960 letter allegedly mailed to the American Embassy from Minsk, which the American Embassy never received: "Since I have not received a reply to my letter of December 1960 I am writing again asking that you consider my request for the return of my American passport." The CIA reported:

There is no indication in the diary or elsewhere in OSWALD'S papers of his having written to the Embassy in December 1960 as mentioned in the letter as set forth above. Furthermore, the diary refers to his February 1, 1961, letter as his first request concerning return to the United States. One possible explanation for reference to a spurious letter may be that OSWALD wished to give the Embassy the impression that he had initiated the correspondence regarding repatriation before having renewed his identity document on January 4, 1961.

OSWALD'S letter may have been intercepted by the KGB and not delivered to the American Embassy in order to give him time to reconsider his decision to re-defect.

D. E. BOSTER

D. E. Boster suggested the American Embassy, Moscow, mail him his passport directly. Secretary of State Dean Rusk vetoed this: "If the Embassy is fully satisfied that he has not expatriated himself in any manner...his passport may be delivered to him on a personal basis only, after being [illegible] valid for direct return to the United States. For security reasons, the Department does not consider that it would be prudent for the Embassy to forward OSWALD'S passport to him by mail." [DOS A-273, 4.13.61] In August 1961 a State Department passport analyst wrote a Memorandum for the Record in which he expressed incredulity that the decisions regarding OSWALD'S passport had been "routed to D. E. Boster of SOV." [DOS Memo Johnson to White 3.31.61; WCE 24A]

Next to it, the name "Jelisvacic" (the office manager, according to the phone book at the American Embassy and the words "one-two Di-ner" appeared. OSWALD mentioned nothing about this in his Historic Diary. Another document revealed that the CIA's Office of Security had a file on Michael Jelisavcic. On December 17, 1968, the New York Office of the FBI sent this wire to the Director:

Enclosed herein for the Chicago Office are 14 copies of various communications relating to the investigation of Michael Jelisavcic. Also enclosed for Chicago is one photograph of Jelisavcic and one photograph of 'Sammy' for possible use during interrogation of Jelisavcic.

For the information of the Chicago Office, Michael Jelisavcic, currently employed as an American Express Company representative, Moscow, USSR and is visiting US on home leave. It was ascertained, this date, that Jelisavcic departed from the New York City area on December 11, 1968, en route to Chicago. Raymond V. Stormes, American Express Company Representative, New York City, advised that Jelisavcic can be reached at the following address: 150-41 Morgan Street, Harvey, Ill. Tel. # 312- ED-1-3085. Jelisavcic can be reached through the above address until January 1, 1969, when he is scheduled to depart from Chicago with connecting flights at New York direct to Moscow, USSR.

The Bureau is requested to authorize Chicago to immediately interview Jelisavcic in an effort to resolve all facts concerning possible compromise of Jelisavcic by Soviet intelligence during his employment within the USSR.

The enclosures for the Chicago Office contain all pertinent information re Jelisavcic in the possession of the New York Office. Chicago's attention is directed particularly to Bureau letter, dated January 8, 1965, in captioned matter wherein Jelisavcic's name and room number were in possession of OSWALD. During interview he should be questioned concerning all circumstances surrounding any possible association with or knowledge of OSWALD and this information should be set out in Letter Head Memorandum form suitable for dissemination under OSWALD caption. All other pertinent information re Jelisavcic's connection with Soviets in USSR and possible compromise by Soviet Intelligence should be set out in a form suitable for dissemination under Subject's caption." On October 30, 1969 the New York Times reported,

A U.S. Travel Agent Expelled by Soviet Moscow: The manager of the American Express Company here said tonight that he had been ordered to leave the Soviet Union "as soon as possible." He is Michael S. Jelisavcic, a United States citizen who was born in Yugoslavia and who has been in Moscow for nine years. Mr. Jelisavcic said that the order for his departure had been relayed to him by officials of the United States Embassy. He said in an interview that the apparent reason for his expulsion order was his involvement of August 6 in an automobile accident. The accident, Mr. Jelisavcic said, occurred when an apparently intoxicated Soviet citizen walked in front of the automobile he was driving. Mr. Jelisavcic said that his wife was vacationing in France and his son was a student in New York.

U.S.-Russian Relationship
Spaso House
July 9, 2009

Distinguished Guests; Ladies and Gentlemen:

I am very pleased to open today's conference on the role of exchanges in the U.S.-Russian relationship. I want to thank those of you have come here today to share your memories of the past and your ideas for the future. I would like to thank Olga Borisovna Pokrovskaya, Editor-in-chief of America magazine, who provided rare photos for the photo exhibit at the conference. I'd like to thank Vladimir Meletin, who has made a remarkable new film of the 1959 exhibition, which he is presenting to participants today. My special thanks to Aleksey Fominykh and Michael Jelisavcic, for providing material from the original comment books Russian visitors signed at the exhibition.

How did Michael end-up with this guest book if all he did was work from American Express? Why did he have dinner with OSWALD?

NODULE X8

RE-DEFECTION: MARCH 1961 TO
JUNE 1962

For the most up-to-date version of this Nodule go to <http://ajweberman.com/nodulx8.pdf>

In reply to OSWALD'S letter dated February 14, 1961, Richard E. Snyder informed OSWALD he would have to personally appear at the American Embassy, Moscow. On March 20, 1961, the American Embassy received another letter from OSWALD, postmarked Minsk, March 5, 1961. Here OSWALD wrote it was inconvenient to visit the American Embassy for an interview and he could not leave Minsk without permission:

I believe there exist in the United States also a law in regards to resident foreigners from Socialist countries, traveling between cities... I do not think it would be appropriate for me to request to leave Minsk in order to visit the American Embassy...I have no intention of abusing my position here, and am sure you would not want me to.

He requested the American Embassy send him a questionnaire in place of having the personal interview. When Snyder replied he assured OSWALD the Soviet Government interposed no objection to American citizens in the Soviet Union visiting the American Embassy. OSWALD'S reference to "a law in regards to resident foreigners from Socialist countries" concerned restrictions put on suspected KGB agents by the United States, not on Russian tourists. Where did OSWALD learn about this law? From the KGB?

February 28, 1961. I receive letter from Embassy. Richard E. Snyder stated "I could come in for an interview any time I wanted. March 1, 1961 to March 16, 1961. I now live in a state of expectation about going back to the U.S. I confided with Zeger he supports my judgment but warns me not to tell any Russians about my desire to return. I understand now why."

March 17, 1961 - I and Erich went to trade union dance. Boring but at the last hour I am introduced to girl with a French hair-do and red dress with white slippers. I dance with her Than ask to show her home I do, along with 5 other admirares. Her name is Marina. We like each other right away She gives me her phone number and departs home with an not-so-new friend in a taxi, I walk home."

YURI MEREZHINSKIY

In a FBI interview during December 1963, Marina Oswald advised that "Yuri Merezhinskiy, a friend of OSWALD'S, had first introduced her to OSWALD at the Palace of Culture in Minsk on March 18, 1961. Marina Oswald further advised that the mother of Yuri Merezhinskiy had given a speech that same evening...on her impressions of the United States." The CIA had traces on the Merezhinskiys that indicated they were Soviet intellectuals who had written numerous scientific papers. The Merezhinskiys lived at Leninsky Prospect 12, not far from KGB headquarters. Yuri Merezhinskiy told

Norman Mailer that Marina Oswald had to leave Leningrad because she was a prostitute and she came to Minsk where "everybody fucked her."

March 18, 1961 to March 31, 1961. We walk. I talk a little about myself, she talks a lot about herself. Her name is Marina N. Prooakoba.

On March 31, 1961 Edward J. Hickey of the State Department recommended that OSWALD'S passport be returned to him only on a personal basis because of the rumor that an imposter was using OSWALD'S identification. [NARA DOS 179-40007-10386]

MARINA PRUSSAKOVA APRIL 1961

April 1, 1961 to April 30, 1961. We are going steady and I decide I must have her, she puts me off so on April 15, 1961 I propose, she accepts.

April 31, 1961. After a 7 day delay at marriage because of my unusual passport they allow us to register as man & wife two of Marina's girlfriends act as bridesmaid: We are married at her aunt's home we have a dinner reception for about 20 friends and neighbors who wish us happiness (in spite of my origin and accept) which was in general rather disquieting to my Russian since for. are very rare in the Soviet Union even tourist. After an evening of eating and drinking in which Uncle Woser started a fight and the fuse blew on an overloaded circuit we take our leave and walk the 15 minutes to our home. We lived near each other - at midnight we were home.

On April 31, 1961, OSWALD married Marina Prussakova, a 19-year-old Minsk pharmaceutical worker. Born July 17, 1941, Marina Prussakova was the illegitimate daughter of Klavdiya Prussakova, a 23-year-old laboratory worker whose lover was arrested by Stalin and sent to a prison camp from which he never returned (he reportedly belonged to a former Czarist officer group). Marina Oswald told this researcher:

I never knew who my father was. I know that where my mother was, there was a political prisoner, she could have had an affair with the man. But even my relatives wouldn't tell me. I have no idea if he was a Czarist. That's just a speculation of writers.

Klavdiya Prussakova died in 1957, when Marina Prussakova was 16 years old. The stepfather of Marina Prussakova, Alexander Medvedev, refused to fight the Nazi invaders, and was interned in a prison camp. Marina Oswald told this researcher: "For what reason he was there, it was mess, I don't know." Marina Prussakova was raised by her grandmother, Tatyana Prussakova, a former Czarist. One of her daughters had made frequent trips to the United States. Marina Prussakova was baptized and was discharged from the Communist youth group, Komsomol, after she announced her intention to go to the United States. She was not a Communist Party member. [Johnson

Lee & Marina pp. 13, 156, 18, 21] Marina Prussakova was involved in an incident with a Afghan diplomat, Abdel Julali, before meeting OSWALD. Marina Oswald told Norman Mailer that Irina, a neighbor, set her up to be raped by a member of a soccer team. Although she was not raped, she had to visit an institute for venereal and contagious diseases. Irina then set her up to be raped by an Afghan "client." Marina Oswald told this researcher: "I did not have affair with the Afghan diplomat. In a week I find out who is who. Only one person knew about that. I was raped by this guy." Marina Oswald's associate, Ruth Paine, testified that Marina Oswald "spoke of having met some young Cuban students who were traveling in Russia, or studying in Minsk, or both..." Marina Oswald was reportedly a sexually active individual and reportedly told Priscilla Johnson that she slept with her old boyfriend after her marriage to OSWALD. [Marina & Lee p129]

May 1, 1961. May Day 1961 Found us thinking about our future. In spite of fact I married Marina to hurt Ella I found myself in love with Marina."

May - The trasition of changing full love from Ella to Marina was very painfull esp. As I saw Ella almost everyday at the factory but as the days and weeks went by I adjusted more and more my wife mentaly. I still hade'nt told my wife of my desire to return to U.S. She is maddly in love with me from the very start. Boat rides on Lake Minsk walks through the parks evening at home or at Aunt Valia's place mark May.

OSWALD wrote an undated letter to the American Embassy in May 1961:

In regards to your letter of March 24, 1961, I understand the reason for the necessity of a personal interview at the Embassy, however, I wish to make it clear that I am asking not only for the right to return to the United States, but also for full guarantees that I shall not, under any circumstances, be persecuted for any act pertaining to this case.

In 1992 the CIA Historical Review Committee released the CIA's copy of a State Department document which commented on this letter. The CIA markings: on the right-hand side of the document, the dissemination instructions were handwritten: "| 1AP | B-lylari | 4 distrib | 1-TSD | 1-OCI SR/SS|." Why did a copy go to the Technical Services Division? "YAAZ 9644 May 26" appeared on the document. This probably referred to D-806, a May 26, 1961, cable from the American Embassy regarding OSWALD'S citizenship and passport. A CIA Record and Routing Sheet was attached to this May 26, 1961, Foreign Service Dispatch signed by Richard E. Snyder and was dated May 26, 1961. The document was sent

OSWALD: JUNE 1961

June 1961. A continuenes of May, except that; we draw closer and closer, and I think very little of Ella now. In the last days of this month I revele my longing to return to America. My wife is slightly startled. But that encourages me to do what I wish to do."

July 1961 I decided to take my two week vactition and travel to Moscow (without police permission) to the American Embassy to see about getting my U.S. passport back and make arrangements for my wife to enter the U.S. with me.

OSWALD: JULY 1961 FBI ACTIVITY

On July 3, 1961, the FBI closed the inactive case on OSWALD. On July 3, 1961, FBI S.A. John Fain prepared a report on OSWALD that was rehash of previous reports. The only new information was obtained from Mrs. James E. Taylor, OSWALD'S landlady in Fort Worth, Texas, prior to his having joined the Marines:

On June 23, 1961, Dallas Confidential Informants T-3 and T-4 advised that there knowledge of subject is limited to newspaper accounts reporting SAC's defection to Soviet Russia. Dallas T-3 and T-4 advised that SAC was not a member of the Communist Party at Fort Worth and that they have never heard his name mentioned in connection with Communist Party membership.

A copy of that interview was sent to the CIA on July 13, 1961. On July 8, 1961, an HT LINGUAL document was generated about OSWALD. The CIA claimed it was "discovered only on review triggered by press publicity following the OSWALD'S return to the U.S. in 1962." [CIA 1634-1088]

OSWALD VISITS THE AMERICAN EMBASSY IN MOSCOW

Saturday, July 8, 1961 - I fly by plane to Minsk on a IL-20, 2 hrs 20 m later after taking a tearful and anxious parting from my wife I arrive in Moscow. Departing by bus from the airfield I arrive in the center of the city. Making my way through heavy traffic I don't come in sight of the Embassy until 3:00 p.m. in the afternoon. Its Saturday. What if they are closed? Entering I find the offices empty but manage to contact Richard E. Snyder on the phone (since all embassy personal live in the same building) he comes down to greet me shake my hand after interview he advises me to come in first thing Monday.

Richard E. Snyder commented,

I don't see anything suspicious in the fact that he visited the Embassy on a Saturday one way or the other. I don't see anything significant. If he visited the Embassy six times and everyone was on a Saturday one might say...I have no idea why he came to the Embassy on Saturdays. OSWALD was not the kind of a guy who thinks in those terms. OSWALD thought the world operated to serve OSWALD. 'When I come to the Embassy I expect somebody to see me.' Very arrogant, very manipulative. He did not get into the office. He entered the Embassy through the one public entrance. That takes you into a little anteroom. That's as far as you can go. The Marine Guard would be stationed there. I presume the Marine Guard then allowed him to call me on the phone.

OSWALD, however, claimed to have entered the offices, found them empty, and called Richard E. Snyder on one of the office telephones. OSWALD returned to the American Embassy on Monday July 10, 1962, and spoke with Richard E. Snyder for 10 or 15 minutes. Secretary of State Dean Rusk had requested that OSWALD'S statements be taken under oath, however, they were not. [DOS a-273, 4.13.61] Richard E. Snyder: "I believe that OSWALD demanded as 'condition' return to the United States assurance he would not be prosecuted." [WCE 909] Richard E. Snyder told OSWALD to have his wife visit the American Embassy. OSWALD sent Marina Oswald a letter dated July 10, 1961 in which she was instructed to call either D-2-20-87 or D-2-00-10 upon her arrival in Moscow. The number D-2-20-87 could not be verified as being, or having been, a telephone number of the American Embassy, Moscow. The number was unlisted in the 1960 Moscow Telephone Directory. Richard E. Snyder had no recollection of these telephone numbers.

The next day Richard E. Snyder sent a telex to State Department Headquarters in which he declared that OSWALD had not lost his citizenship, nor had he broken any U.S. laws, and should be expeditiously repatriated with his wife. Richard E. Snyder had reached his decision without meeting Marina Oswald. [?] Richard E. Snyder: "Do you have the telex? This paraphrase does not sound like I would have written it. It was not likely, unless I had some reason at the time to recommend that he be repatriated with his wife as soon as possible and that sort of thing. The only decision involved for me was whether he was a citizen or not. The question of Marina Oswald did not come into my conversation with him at all. It was irrelevant as to my finding whether he expatriated himself. The question whether Marina was eligible to receive a visa was handled after I left Moscow. I had no official position on Marina Oswald. I don't recall having made any comment about his wife other than that she existed."

OSWALD informed Richard E. Snyder he never applied for Soviet citizenship. He explained his original application was for permission to remain in the Soviet Union, and for a temporary extension of his tourist visa pending the outcome of his request. He claimed this was the letter he sent to the Supreme Soviet when he first arrived in Moscow, and it was not a request for citizenship. OSWALD added that his contention was supported by the fact that this letter appeared to have been delivered to the OVIR Central Office, and not to the Supreme Soviet. Richard E. Snyder determined that OSWALD had not legally renounced his citizenship, since he had not filled in the Expatriation Forms and taken the oath. Richard E. Snyder gave OSWALD his passport on July 10, 1961. Richard E. Snyder stated: "The only question involved is, 'Did he lose his citizenship or didn't he?' Nothing else matters. He was never given Soviet citizenship. Webster had been given Soviet citizenship, so he automatically lost his American citizenship. OSWALD was still an American and was entitled to return to his country."

OSWALD TELLS SNYDER ABOUT RADIO MOSCOW BROADCAST

During the interview, Richard E. Snyder asked OSWALD about his contact with the KGB. OSWALD told him the only time he was ever interviewed by a Russian was in his room at the Hotel Metropole. That interview was conducted by a reporter from Radio Moscow who sought comments from American tourists visiting Moscow, and his comments had not been anti-American.

THE TWO SETS OF NOTES

This story was consistent with one set of notes he made en route to the United States: "I made a recording for ~~radio~~ the Moscow Tourist Radio travel log, in which I spoke about sight-seeing and what I had seen in Moscow tourist circles. I expressed delight in all the interesting places. I mentioned in this respect the University, mesuem of art, Red Sqaure, the Kremlin I remember I closed this two minute recording by hoped our people would live in peace and fr."

OSWALD, however, also wrote: "Did you make statements against the U.S. there? yes. What about that type [tape] recording? I made a recording for Radio Moscow which was broadcast the following Sunday, October 25, 1959." [WCD 924; 16WH436; WCE 100]

The FBI reported:

Among OSWALD'S personal effects found after the assassination were two sets of questions and answers prepared in OSWALD'S handwriting. These documents appear to have been prepared by OSWALD in contemplation of press interviews upon his return to the U.S. from Russia. In these documents OSWALD made reference to a two-minute taped interview in which he participated in Moscow and which was broadcast on a Sunday by Radio Moscow. In the documents OSWALD claimed to have spoken of his experiences in traveling about Moscow visiting cultural establishments and stated that he closed his remarks with a wish for peace between Russia and the U.S.A...

The FBI reported:

Marina stated OSWALD told her during her first visit to Moscow with OSWALD, about his broadcast over Radio Moscow shortly after his arrival in Russia. She said upon the occasion of her visit to Moscow with OSWALD, OSWALD showed to her the name of Leo Setyaev in his address book and said this person was a Radio Moscow broadcaster in Moscow. He attempted to call this person but without success. Marina questioned OSWALD about the radio broadcast he had made and OSWALD explained Leo Setyaev had helped him make some money by assisting in the broadcast. OSWALD said he criticized the United States and praised Russia as a better place to live because he thought it was the thing to do inasmuch as he desired to live in the USSR. Marina believes the occasion of this broadcast is related to the visit of a Moscow radio reporter to the Hotel Metropole to see OSWALD as OSWALD told her that Setyaev and visited him in the Metropole Hotel. [FBI 105-82,555-4771] Lending additional support to the belief that OSWALD did participate in a radio broadcast over Radio Moscow are comments of Marina Oswald during a December 17, 1963 interview. Marina stated that OSWALD appeared on a radio program in Moscow. She said OSWALD did not tell her about which he spoke on the program, but she presumed he denounced the United States and praised Russia, else he would not have been permitted on the program. The Bureau is desirous of determining if OSWALD, in fact, participated in a broadcast on Radio Moscow during his residence in the Soviet Union.

MEMORANDUM: DIRECTOR: FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

SUBJECT: LEE HARVEY OSWALD

1. Subsequent to the preparation of our CSCI-3/779, 817 dated February 4, 1964 subject as above, in response to your communication xxx-10461 dated December 31, 1963 file number (S) 105-82555 additional information relating to the subject has come to our attention. This information was received from your office in your communication DA 59961 dated December 20, 1963, subject Lillie May Rahm. It is repeated below for the convenience of your personnel involved in the OSWALD case.

2. Concerning the entry on page 23 of OSWALD's address book:

Lev Setyaev - Radio Moscow
Leo Setaev
V-3-65-88 (work)
Novo-Preschanaya 23/7
Apt. 65

A report from your office dated December 20, 1963 subject Lillie May Rahm, contains the following information. Annette (nee Zugoff) aka Annette K. Henkina, born November 18, 1919 at Lake Stevens, Washington is married to a Leo Setyaev who worked for Radio Moscow. Annette Setyaeva, who appears to be the daughter of Lillie May Rahm, aka Lillie May Teslich, aka Lillie May Zugoff, born November 8, 1902 at Wells Township, Michigan, travelled to the Soviet Union in 1935 and on March 20, 1936 became a citizen of the USSR. At least until July 1962, Annette was reportedly married to Henkin (fnu). For a number of years Annette has worked as an announcer in the American Section of Radio Moscow. Allegedly she is the Radio Moscow announcer known as Moscow Molly who broadcasts an English language program, reportedly containing surprisingly factual and intimate details of life at U.S. bases in the Alaskan Command, ostensibly calculated to destroy troop morale at these bases.

3. a. Annette K. Setyaeva presumably together with Leo (Lev) Setyaev was reported to be residing at Kotal'nicheskaya 1/13, Section V, Apt. 79, Moscow, USSR.

b. The 1960 Moscow Telephone Directory lists a K. V. Khenkin, telephone B-74789 at the address Kotal'nicheskaya 1/13. No apartment number is listed. There are no further traces on Setyaev or Henkin (Khenkin). Except for reports of your office, there are no further traces on Rahm or Setyaeva.

Your office will be advised of any further pertinent information.

Lev Setyayev [tel. (095) 422-1976 home (095) 233-633 (work)]

The CIA reported:

This agency has no additional information on the Moscow telephone number V-3-65-88 which OSWALD connected with Lev Setyayev of Radio Moscow. The 1959 Moscow City telephone directory is unavailable, and the 1960 directory does not include any numbers in the V-3-65- series; however it is a plausible Moscow telephone number. A number similar to V 3 65 93 was given by an employee of Radio Moscow to one CIA source as his office number, and to another source as his home number. [NARA 1993.06.18.18:09:23:620000]

The Setyaevs were living under the name of Annette's first husband, K. V. Khenkin at Kotal'nicheskaya 1/13. Perhaps they moved there from Novo Preschanaya 23/7 Apt. 65, the address OSWALD had for them in his address book in 1959? But I don't buy ANGLETON's statement "The 1959 Moscow City telephone directory is unavailable, and the 1960 directory does not include any numbers in the V-3-65- series, however it is a plausible Moscow telephone number." According to Setyaev he knocked on Oswald's door and introduced himself. Oswald invited him in and the first thing he said, according to Setyaev, was "I am a communist." Setyaev felt this was a strange thing for the young American to say upon first meeting somebody. Setyaev reiterated that his Radio Moscow broadcast was intended to be a light tourist chatter type of show and that he specifically avoided political questions. He stated that Oswald had little to say about Moscow's tourist sites as he had apparently not seen much. He only visited some "friendship society or language institute," said Setyaev. (In his second interview with me, about ten months later, Setyaev said something different: that Oswald's comments were "too political" to be of use for his show.) Setyaev insisted that when he returned to the radio station and listened to the tapes, he immediately bulk-erased them, deciding they were worthless for his broadcast. In 1962, Oswald wrote about the interview: "I expressed delight in all the interesting places. I mentioned in this respect the University, museum of art, Red Square, the Kremlin. I remember I closed this two minute recording by saying I hoped our peoples would live in peace and friendship." [CE 100 CIA 555-

NOSENKO

The FBI stated: "In view of the factors cited herein we believe it is likely that OSWALD did participate in a broadcast over Radio Moscow in the Fall of 1959. If so this event would likely have been recorded in OSWALD'S KGB file which Nosenko claims to have carefully reviewed. Nosenko made no reference to such a broadcast when interviewed by the WFO re OSWALD. The CIA has been requested to develop trace of such broadcast through its coverage of Radio Moscow and interview Nosenko." The FBI wanted to interview Yuri Nosenko because "Nosenko, if he is bona fide, can shed further light on it. If he denies knowledge of the broadcast and we can establish that OSWALD'S references to it were correct, this will give further insight into Nosenko's bona fides." [FBI DL-105-82555-4527] The CIA reported: "Nosenko has been asked if any attempt was made by the Soviets to exploit OSWALD for propaganda purposes, such as Radio Moscow broadcasts, and Nosenko replied that this was not done either in Moscow or Minsk. Nosenko later reviewed this statement and confirmed it." After the assassination of President John F. Kennedy, someone on the Counter-Intelligence Staff made a note to "review available material to identify the two-minute broadcast mentioned by OSWALD." The CIA never found the tapes of OSWALD'S broadcast over Radio Moscow.

MEMORANDUM FOR: Chief, CI/R & A SUBJECT: FBID and FDD Coverage of OSWALD before the Assassination

1. Pursuant to your request I checked with FBID and FDD and obtained the following answers:

a. FBID Mr. K. Ball, Jr. As Standard Operating Procedure, FBID would have recorded any mention of an American defector such as OSWALD. But upon checking their records at and headquarters and in London disclosed no pertinent entries.

b. FDD Mr. E. Duin As a standard operating procedure FDD would not have noted the name of an American defector. They concentrate their efforts toward recording Soviet personalities. A check of the FDD records disclosed no pertinent entries.

2. A recheck of all actual materials i.e. the Soviet radio and press releases for that period could be undertaken, but the task would be Herculean and a change in the statements in a and b above rather doubtful. [CIA 601-816]

The CIA concluded: "A review of the results of monitoring Soviet foreign broadcasts at the time when an interview with LEE HARVEY OSWALD had supposedly been taped was conducted with negative results. Therefore, it is assumed that such a tape, if broadcast at all, was aired over a local USSR facility for internal consumption.

Edgar C. Duin, 89, a former research analyst with the CIA, died of pulmonary fibrosis March 21, 2007. He specialized in the Soviet Union within the CIA's Foreign Broadcast Information Service and spoke Russian, French, Spanish and Dutch. Tapes of Radio Moscow recorded on this date should have been examined; if OSWALD did not appear, all other Radio Moscow broadcasts between October 16, 1959, and November 16, 1959, should have been checked. The North American Service of Radio Moscow came on the air about 7:00 p.m. E.S.T. on October 25, 1959, broadcasting until about midnight. The programming was repeated approximately every three and one half hours. I possessed a Hallicrafters S-38-E short wave radio in 1959, and was a nightly listener to Radio Moscow. I vaguely remember hearing an interview with a defector from Texas. At the time I thought to myself, "They must be dirt poor in his area of Texas for him to expect a higher standard of living in the USSR."

OSWALD JULY 1961

July 8, 1961 - Interview July 9, 1961. receive passport. Call Marina to Moscow also. July 14, 1961. I and Marina return to Minsk. July 15, 1961. Marina at work, is shocked to find out they everyone knows she entered the U.S. embassy. They were called at her place of work from some official in Moscow. They hold a meeting and give her a strong browbeating. The first of many indoctrinations.

July 15, 1961 to August 20, 1961. We have found out which blanks and certificates are necessary to apply for exit visa. They number about 20 papers, birth certificates affidavit photos ect. On August 20, 1961 we give the papers out they say it will be 3 ½ months before we know whether they'll let us go or not. In the meantime Marina has had to stand 4 different meetings at the place of work held by her boss's at the direction of "someone" by phone. The Young Communist League headquarters also called about her and she had to go see them for 1 ½ hrs. The purpose (expressed) is to dissuade her from going to the U.S.A., net effect: make her more stubborn about wanting to go. Marina is pregnant. We only hope that the visas come through soon.

On July 11, 1961, Boris Klossen of the State Department generated a lengthy memo on OSWALD. Klossen felt that the American Embassy should renew OSWALD'S passport. Klossen took OSWALD'S word that he did not give any military information to the Soviets

A CIA Routing and Record Sheet dated was July 24, 1961.

KGB TRANSCRIPTS OF OSWALD

Norman Mailer was able to obtain KGB transcripts of OSWALD beginning mid July 1961, shortly after he appeared at the American Embassy, Moscow. Prior to this all Norman Mailer had were surveillance reports. Maya Gertovich stated a bug was placed in OSWALD'S ceiling in the Spring of 1960. Where were the earlier transcripts? The transcripts did not indicate any involvement of OSWALD in espionage because OSWALD knew he was being recorded by the KGB and because he never took Marina Oswald into his confidence. He only knew her for 90 days before he married her. Their conversations revolved around the laziness of Marina Oswald, her fear of living in America, and her former sexual habits. OSWALD told her: "I was decent and good when I met you, but there was a lot in you that was indecent." Marina Oswald: "I don't see it that way, I didn't even kiss Sasha. No one called me indecent. I didn't act like the other girls. I didn't have a mother to put me on the right path. Once a week I was very wicked."

From KGB transcripts of its tap on OSWALD from July 21, 1961:

OSWALD: Well, why are you crying? (Pause.) I told you it won't do any good. (Wife cries.)

Marina: You know, I never said that I was a very good person. (Wife cries and OSWALD calms her down, through tears): Why did I get married? You tricked me.

OSWALD: You shouldn't cry. I understand, you don't understand yourself why.

Marina (through tears): My friends don't recognize me.

OSWALD: Well? I've also lost weight, right?

Marina (cries): Why did I get married?

OSWALD: Well, what am I supposed to do? Is it my fault that you have a lot of work? I mean, you don't ever cook, but other women cook. And I don't say anything about it. I don't yell. You never do anything, and you don't want to do the wash. What do you do? The only thing you ever talk about is how tired you are at work.

Marina: I didn't get any rest.

OSWALD: Well, what can I do? (Pause.)

Marina: Everything was so good, but lately everything has gotten bad, nothing's right. You can't please a man like you. (They are silent.) (Later that night.)

OSWALD: Well, what? This is ridiculous!

Marina: I want to sleep, don't bother me! ... You're so crude! I'm tired, I swear, I'm tired.

OSWALD: And what did you do that you're so tired? You didn't do anything. You didn't cook anything.

Marina: The cafeteria is good enough for you.

OSWALD: And who's going to wash the shirts, the socks?

Marina: Everything's already washed, go and take a look.

On July 27, 1960, the Legal Attaché in Paris sent J. Edgar Hoover this message: "ReBulet to State Department June 3, 1960. (Deleted) This will be followed and the Bureau will be advised." [FBI 105-82555-8] On July 28, 1961, a routing slip from the Paris Legal Attaché to the FBI advised that the Paris Legal Attaché had informed one of his sources on OSWALD'S present status. On August 7, 1961, the FBI Legal Attaché in Paris sent a message to J. Edgar Hoover about OSWALD

Re Dallas rep 7/31/61 transmitted by Bu 0-7 7/13/61. The Swiss Federal Police were advised as to the subject's present status in view of their previous investigation to locate him. [FBI 105-82555 NR 8.8.61]

On August 21, 1961, Marina Oswald requested an exit visa in a one-sentence handwritten request directed to the Chief of the Minsk Militia. The KGB cut off OSWALD'S Red Cross subsidy and alerted local Communist Party members that Marina Oswald was moving to the U.S. On July 28, 1961, Deryabin points out, her work booklet shows that she was transferred (apparently promoted) to assistant druggist at the hospital where she had worked until 1959. This seems very strange, in light of the facts that

1. She had just made her visit to the American Embassy and was being subjected to heckling at her place of work (to the extent, OSWALD said, that she was hospitalized five days for nervous exhaustion).

2. Her plans to leave the USSR, in addition to casting suspicion on her, would remove her from her job shortly. [CIA ATT. 2 to XAAZ-22408] Marina Oswald denied she had been promoted when interviewed by this researcher.

The KGB treated OSWALD as they would any re-defector so it would not draw attention to its relationship with OSWALD, although the KGB made sure it did not interfere with him. The OSWALDS were among the lucky few in terms of obtaining exit visas for a good reason: OSWALD had cooperated with the Soviets. The State Department reported that from 1954 to December 1963 a total of 724 immigrant visas were issued at the American Embassy in Moscow. Of these 97 were issued in 1962. [State Dept. Memo Jenkins to Erlich 6.25.64] The CIA reported that from 1959 to 1964 approximately 800 relatives of American citizens received exit visas from the Soviets. [Memo: Coleman to Slawson re Possible Foreign Conspiracy]

AUGUST 1961 THE FIRST LOOKOUT CARD DISAPPEARS

A State Department document related: "The passport file contains a record stamp of a 'PT/RCL (Lookout Files)' search made on August 2, 1961, which reports 'No Lookout file record' located on that date." The State Department:

The procedure to have a lookout card removed from the file, is to mark the Refusal Sheet 'disregard,' and send the case to the Lookout File Section, with a notation to remove the card. The Refusal Sheet in OSWALD'S passport folder is not marked 'disregard.' The reason for this possible failure to take this administrative action is not apparent from the file.

AUGUST AND SEPTEMBER 1961

August 21, 1961 - September 1, 1961. I make repeated trips to the passport & visa office also to Ministry of For. Affairs in Minsk, also Min. of Internal Affairs, all of which have a say in the granting of a visa. I extracted promises of quick attention to us.

September 1961 to October 18, 1961. No word from Min. ("They call us".) Marina leaves Minsk by train on vacation to the city of Khkov in the Urals to visit an aunt for 4 weeks. During this time I am lonely and I and Erich go to the dances and public places for entertainment. I haven't done this in quite a few months now. I spend my birthday alone at the opera watching my favorite "Queen of Spades." I am 22 years old.

OCTOBER 1961

The INS asked the CIA to furnish it with any derogatory information on OSWALD. A CIA Routing and Record Sheet, dated October 30, 1961, indicated that the document attached to it, which was dated October 13, 1961, was sent:

FROM RECORDS INTEGRATION DIVISION/ANALYSIS

TO:

1. COUNTER-INTELLIGENCE/Staff/SIG Forwarded: November 7, 1961 (Initials ege)
5. RECORDS INTEGRATION DIVISION/ANALYSIS Received November 16, 1961 (Initials MK)
7. RIS/MIS (Initials LE)
11. RI/FI

It contained this comment: "Retain or Destroy. This document has been reviewed by RID/AN. It has not been integrated into the CS Record System. If further processing is desired, please so indicate and return to RID/AN." The document No. XAAZ 9645 appeared. OSWALD was photographed in front of the Palace of Culture in Minsk by two tourists. Monica F. Kramer and Rita Namen took photographs of OSWALD in August 1961. When they returned to the United States, the CIA contacted them on a one-time basis and compiled a report of their experiences entitled: "00 - Interrogation in Minsk Following Giving Away U.S. News Magazines." Rita Namen commented in 1994:

When I returned from the Soviet Union I received a call from the CIA and was asked to see my pictures. A young lady came and looked at them. I had been called into the Inturist Office in Minsk and accused of distributing counter-revolutionary material in the Soviet Union. I had given one Newsweek magazine to this supposed young student, a plant. The CIA would not allow me to write my own statement.

The ladies turned over 160 photographic slides. The HSCA reported: "CIA records indicate that only five of the 160 slides initially made available were retained. Committee interviews with the two CIA employees who had handled the slides for the Domestic Contacts Division...stated the picture of OSWALD had been retained because it depicted a Soviet Intourist guide; the other employee indicated that the picture had been kept since it showed a crane in the background." The photographs were filed under "Intelligence Photography." A CIA document revealed, "March 13, CIA Graphics Register Transmittal Sheet TO: Frank Young FROM: Graphics Register / Office of Central Reference SUBJECT: Intelligence Photography. The attached photographs are furnished in response to referenced request unless otherwise noted. Any inquiries concerning this material should be directed to Graphic Register, Office of Central Reference, Headquarters Building HH-12546." [CIA 8900] On March 20, 1964, ANGLETON drafted CSCI 3/780612, a document about the photograph of OSWALD in Minsk. [CIA 8900; CIA 614-261, 671-286; WCD 871; FBI 105-82555-3211, 105-82555-3406, 62-070060 enc.] Monica F. Kramer told this interviewer that she had photographed a military parade, but these photographs were not retained.

THE INDICES SEARCH REQUEST

On October 12, 1961, an unnamed CIA component requested a file search of OSWALD and Marina Prussakova. Nothing came up on Marina Prussakova. Nothing appeared on Marina. Three traces appeared on OSWALD

No. 2 INDEX C. L. Oswald (Deleted) Reference Raymond Wright (FBI Report July 8, 1955 page 2)." [A Freedom of Information Act inquiry revealed that this was an "L. Oswald" who had signed a telegram protesting the Sam Darcy prosecution in San Francisco along with Wright].

No. 1 Index O Mrs. (FNU) Oswald. Attached.

An abstract file slip was found:

Mrs. Oswald Reference Index 1940 Information on Nazis

See HCUA Index V January 19, 1939. Not available in security. (Illegible Numbers) 1048,1049

This could be an error and refer to Mrs. Oswald Mosley, the wife of a British Nazi but then again it could refer to Marguerite: In January 1965 Mrs. Marguerite Oswald told the FBI "the Jewish people hired JACK RUBY to kill President Kennedy." [FBI Dallas 1.25.65 NARA ID 1993.06.21.16:24:00:620310; CIA 1249-1010] The Historic Diary.

November 2, 1961 Marina arrives back, radiant, with several jars of preserves for me from her aund I Khkov. November 1961 to December 1961. We are now becoming about the delay. Marina is beginning to waiver about going to the U.S. Probably from the strain and her being pregnate, still we quarrel and so things are not to brightest. With the approach of the hard Russian winter. December 25, 1961 - Xmas day Tuesday. Marina is called to the passport and visa office. She is told we have been granted Soviet exit visa's. She fills out the completing blank and than comes home with the news. Its great (I think?).

MARINA ISSUED A SOVIET EXIT VISA WITHIN FOUR MONTHS

The Zigers waited years for an exit visa and it had not been granted. Marina Oswald obtained an exit visa in four months; OSWALD'S took five and one-half months. The HSCA studied "Soviet Relationships and Exit Visas" and found: "Only one Soviet exit visa was granted in a shorter period than OSWALD'S. Sloboda's wife received an exit visa within three months of application...Reasons for OSWALD'S short wait in obtaining an exit visa are unknown." [HSCA V12 p641] Vladimir Sloboda was a KGBnik, so his wife was given exceptional treatment. Thomas Karamessines stated: "The KGB has the major responsibility for approving or denying requests for emigration or foreign travel. It investigates all applicants and its recommendation is given great weight by the Exit Department of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union - the agency which makes the final decision." [CIA 828-373] The CIA reported:

So far as we are able to determine, there is no Soviet law which would prevent a Soviet citizen married to a foreign national from accompanying his or her spouse from the USSR. This situation is also believed to have existed at the time of OSWALD'S departure from the Soviet Union in 1962. In practice, however, permission for a Soviet wife to accompany her foreign national husband abroad was rarely given. In almost every case available for our review, the foreign national was obliged to depart the USSR alone and either return to escort his wife out, or arrange for her exit while he was still abroad. In some cases the wife was never granted permission to leave. The majority of cases reviewed involved foreign students, exchange teachers, and other relatively transient persons, and while a number of these cases have certain points in common, they bear little similarity to the OSWALD case; none involved a defector who married prior to repatriating. The time lapse involved in Soviet processing of the OSWALD departure documentation seems to be normal. Marina began assembling the documents necessary to an exit visa in May 1961, and both OSWALDS actually applied on August 20, 1961, according to Marina's statement and OSWALD'S diary. Marina's exit visa was issued at the time her new passport was issued, January 11, 1962, although she had been informed by Soviet authorities about January 1, 1962, that the visa would be issued. LEE OSWALD'S exit visa was not issued until May 22, 1962, although he, too, apparently had been told in early January 1962 that the visa would be granted. The time lapse between actual application and notice of approval was over four months. By way of comparison, some Soviet wives have been held in the USSR for years, while in two specific cases involving Swedish national husbands, the Soviet wives were processed out in less than four months.

From Minsk, OSWALD wrote a series of letters to the American Embassy that contained fewer misspellings than many of his previous communications. He complained that Marina Oswald had been mistreated by her co-workers and had been hospitalized for nervous exhaustion. Marina Oswald denied this and said that she went to hospital because of her pregnancy.

OSWALD'S BOMB?

Oleg Nechiporenko reported that on December 25, 1961, the KGB discovered OSWALD was assembling two homemade bombs, which he later discarded. [Passport, p62] Why wasn't OSWALD arrested? Norman Mailer's source confirmed this report:

Their observer, looking through the peephole in the apartment next door to OSWALD, saw some suspicious activity. Was OSWALD making a bomb? He seemed to be putting gunpowder and metal fragments into a small box...Stepan would only say that OSWALD'S device turned out to be some kind of toy...OSWALD threw away this toy a day or two later. They had been able to examine it in the apartment house trash bin.

[Norman Mailer, Oswald's Tale, p252] The CIA: "The diary records that on Tuesday, December 25, 1961, (actually a Monday) Marina Oswald was summoned to the passport office and told that exit visas for herself and her husband had been granted. She completed the necessary forms and returned home to her husband with the news." The OSWALD/bomb story does not make sense in light of what we know of KGB practices. Why wasn't OSWALD arrested or at least interrogated?

New Years we spend at the Ziger's at a dinner party at midnight. Attended by 6 other persons. January 4, 1961 I am called to the passport office since my residenceal passport expires today. Since I now have a United States passport in my possession I am given a totly new resid. pass. called "pass. for forin." and since they have given us permission to leave, and know we shall, good to July 5, 1962.

OSWALD wrote his mother on January 2, 1962, that he and Marina Oswald expected to arrive in the United States around March. He asked her to contact the local Red Cross and request that it put his case before the International Rescue Committee. In 1947 OSS founder William Donovan headed the International Rescue Committee. Leo Cherne headed the committee since 1951. OSWALD advised his mother to insist on an $800 gift from the International Rescue Committee. On January 1, 1962, and January 26, 1962, he wrote to the International Rescue Committee and asked for $1000. When the International Rescue Committee denied Marguerite Oswald's request, the State Department called the International Rescue Committee and asked for assistance. The International Rescue Committee again refused: it would not subsidize the passage of an unrepentant Communist to the United States. [WCE 2266; HUNT Undercover p141; NYT 2.20.76; Marchetti Cult p334] There was evidence ANGLETON was running at least one agent in the USSR at this time. Paul Garbler, former Moscow Chief of Station, stated, "I agreed with JIM before I left for Moscow that I would service a drop that he was aware of in Moscow. I arrived in Moscow in 1961. I would have gone to the drop in 1962."

On January 15, 1962, OSWALD received a letter from the American Embassy, Moscow, that indicated there would be a delay in processing the entry visas of the OSWALDS. The American Embassy suggested he secure an Affidavit of Support for Marina Oswald. Again OSWALD asked his mother for assistance by mail; Marguerite Oswald obtained an Affidavit of Support from her former employer Byron Phillips. A CIA Office of Security Memorandum generated by Ethel Mendoza noted that OSWALD's address book contained the listing "Mr. Phillipps LI 2-22080" then showed deleted traces. [NARA 1993.07.24.10:48:22:340550] This was Byron Phillips, resident of Wilbarger County, Texas. Marguerite Oswald had mailed Byron Phillips' Affidavit of Support to her son. Because of deleted traces I mistakenly bugged Byron. Byron Phillips commented about these traces in May 1977:

Well, I didn't know that boy. His mother worked for my mother and daddy for two or three months and that is the only connection I had with him. I never did see him. As far as CIA contact, well, it had to be local over here, I didn't have any contact with anybody that I didn't know. There's a lawyer over here, I'm not sure if he's FBI-connected or not, he called me and talked to me about him one time. That's the only one that ever talked to me about him...that's before it ever happened. A lawyer over here named Curtis Renfro (born April 5, 1905; died September 1984) called me. He just asked me if I knew him...

Curtis Renfro said he knew Byron Phillips. As to whether he called Byron Phillips in regard to OSWALD before the assassination, he remarked, "I don't recall a single word about it, I don't know fellow, there's so much going through my office since 1961 and 1962 that I can't remember it all. I'm 75 years old. I don't have any records on it." Curtis Renfro was asked if he had ever had any intelligence community contact: "Not that I know anything about, if I had a call in my life from them I didn't know it." In 1963 Curtis Renfro gave the FBI the names of people for whom Marguerite Oswald had worked, in Vernon, Texas. Then he stated that he did not know or remember Marguerite Oswald. [FBI DL-100-10461, DL 89-43 11.29.63 p178] Bet these two dudes had never been suspected of being CIA agents before!

THE UNDESIRABLE DISCHARGE

On September 13, 1960, OSWALD'S Marine discharge was changed from Honorable to Dishonorable. He wrote to the Naval Discharge Review Board about this. On January 30, 1962, OSWALD sent this letter to the United States Navy: "In November 1959 an event was well publicated in the Fort Worth newspapers concerning a person who had gone to the Soviet Union to reside for a short period of time, (much in the same way E. Hemingway resided in Paris.) This person in answers to questions put to him by reporters in Moscow criticized certain facets of American life. The story was blown up into another turncoat sensation with the result that the Navy Department gave this person a belated dishonorable discharge, although he had received an honorable discharge after three years of service at El Toro, Marine corps base in California. I have always had the full sanction of the U.S. Embassy, Moscow, USSR, and hence the U.S. Government. In as much as I am returning to the U.S.A. in this year...I shall employ all means to right this gross mistake or injustice to a boni-fied U.S. citizen and ex-service man. The U.S. Government has no charges or complaints against me. I ask you to look into this case and take the necessary steps to repair the damage done to me and my family."

OSWALD: FEBRUARY 1962

January 15, 1962 to February 15, 1962. Days of cold Russian winter. But we feel fine. Marina is supposed to have baby on March 1, 1962. Feb 15, 1962. Dawn. Marina wakes me up. Its her time. At 9:00 a.m. we arrive at the hospital. I leave her in care of nurses and leave to go to work. 10:00 a.m. Marina has a baby girl. When I vist hospital at 500 after work, I am given news. We both wanted a boy. Marina feels well, baby girl, O.K.

February 23, 1962. Marina leaves hospital I see June for first time.

February 28, 1962. I go to regista (as presqbed by law) the baby. I want her name to be June Marina Oswald. But those beaurecrats say her middle name must be the same as my first. A Russian custom support by a law. I refuse to have her name written as "June Lee". They promise to call the city ministry (city hall) and find out in this case since I do have a U.S. passport.

February 29, 1962. I am told that nobody knows what to do exactly, but everyone agrees "go ahead and do it." "PO - Russki". Name: June Lee.

At the end of February 1962, OSWALD and Marina Oswald received word from the State Department that they could enter the United States and would be advanced the funds necessary for airplane fare. But Marina Oswald had to apply for a visa in a country other than the Soviet Union. The United States Congress had prohibited the State Department from issuing any visas in the Soviet Union unless a prior waiver was obtained from the Immigration and Naturalization Service. The Dallas Office of the Immigration and Naturalization Service had refused to waive these restrictions. When the Soviet Desk of the State Department found that Immigration and Naturalization Service would not make an exception for OSWALD, it wired the American Embassy, Moscow, and reported that the State Department was considering waiving sanctions so that Marina Oswald could enter the United States from the Soviet Union. The Soviet Desk of the State Department sent a letter to Immigration and Naturalization Service:

"SOV believes it is in the interest of the U.S. to get LEE HARVEY OSWALD and his family out of the Soviet Union and on their way to this country as soon as possible. An unstable character, whose actions are entirely unpredictable, OSWALD may well refuse to leave the USSR or subsequently attempt to return there if we should make it impossible for him to be accompanied from Moscow by his wife and child." When this had no effect, the Soviet Desk of the State Department reminded the Immigration and Naturalization Service in another letter that the Soviet Government "would be in a position to claim that the United States Government was preventing her from accompanying her husband and child," if she were not issued a visa by the American Embassy, Moscow. The Soviets could have used the OSWALD case in its propaganda war against the United States. D.E. Boster and Robert Owen were responsible for these letters. Robert Owen was probably identical with Robert Irving Owen, born February 26, 1921, who served at the U.S. Embassies in Helsinki from 1948 to 1950 and in Moscow from 1950 to 1951. [DOS EX 32 Fi294H; WCE 24A] Neither D.E. Boster nor Robert Owen was listed in Who's Who in the CIA. D.E. Boster commented, "Naturally, I was never in the CIA." D.E. Boster also stated: "There was nothing unusual about this case. I was not ever aware of any unusual requests regarding it."

OSWALD MARCH 1961

The last commiques are exchanged between myself and the embassy. Letters are always arriving from my mother and brother in the U.S. I have still not told Erich who is my oldest existing acquaintance that we are going to the State, he's O.K. But I am afraid he is too good a young communist league member so I'll wait till last min.

March 24, 1962 - Marina quits her job in the formal fashion.

March 25, 1962. I receive a letter from Immigration & Natur. service at San Antonio, Texas, that Marina has had her visa petition to the U.S. (Approved!!) the last document. Now we only have to wait for the U.S. Embassey to receive their copy of the approval so they can officially give the go ahead.

March 27, 1962 - I receive a letter from a Mr. Philles ( a employ. of my mother, pledging to support my wife in case of need.

On March 27, 1962, an Immigration and Naturalization Service official overrode the determination of the Dallas Immigration and Naturalization Service Office and waived sanctions, granting special permission for Marina Oswald to enter the United States without the third country visa application. It would take until May 1962 for the order to go into effect. Meanwhile, the American Embassy, Moscow, sent the Soviet Desk of the State Department a letter that suggested the OSWALDS immediately be sent on to Belgium. It was at this time that John Noonan, State Department, Office of Security, (who was listed in Who's Who in the CIA) sent J. Edgar Hoover a memorandum regarding OSWALD:

OSWALDs It has been determined that Oswald, the ex-Marine, is still an American citizen. Both he and his Soviet wife now have exit permits, and the Department has given approval for their travel with their infant child to the USA. There is a problem with his wife, however, in that SOV in the Department is trying to get a waiver of 243 (g) which requires that Oswald's wife pick up her visa for entry into the USA in Western Europe. As soon as this question has been settled they will be free to travel.

American Defectors: Status of in the USSR”

A copy of this memorandum was sent to the CIA. John Noonan, born November 25, 1918, became a State Department Special Agent on April 17, 1949. In October 1960 he joined the Intelligence Reporting Bureau as Chief. He was head of the Records Service Bureau by 1962; he became Supervisor of the Personnel Security Specialists of the State Department in 1968. [DOS Ex 35 (294) L; DOS secondary CIA referral #115 prim. ser. 0146; DOS prim. ser. 0148 sec. ser. 117; DOS Bio. Reg. 1955, 1974]

OSWALD: APRIL 1962

On April 26, 1962 a document was generated about OSWALD that was sent to the CIA.

The Routing and Record Sheet indicated:

From: RID

TO:

8. SR6 SUP Forwarded May 18, 1962 (Initials LAM)
9. SR6 (Deleted). Forwarded May 18, 1962 (Initials LAM)

OSWALD: MAY 1962

On May 4, 1962, the FBI reopened the OSWALD case. FBI S.A. John Fain was again the Case Agent and S.A. Kenneth Howe was now his supervisor. On May 8, 1962, Under-Secretary of State George Ball wired the United States Ambassador to the Soviet Union and informed him that sanctions had been waived in the case of Marina Oswald. On May 17, 1962, John Noonan of the State Department's Office of Security sent a report on the status of American defectors in the Soviet Union to the FBI. OSWALD was associated with "Gheesling" in this highly deleted memo. [FBI 105-82555-UNREC 191 6.5.62] On May 24, 1962 the OSWALDS appeared at the American Embassy, Moscow, to have their immigration papers validated.

BORIS PASTERNAK

After leaving the American Embassy, the OSWALDS checked in to the out-of-the-way Hotel Ostankino for a few days, the same hotel where the family of Boris Pasternak resided after his death. The word "Ostankino---(illegible) "B" was scribbled in OSWALD'S address book; next to it were the words, "8 O'Clock" followed by the number "5."

DD 10206

Clustered around this entry was a telephone number (DD 10206 or 19206). The CIA reported that the "double D does not appear to be a plausible Moscow telephone number, however under the number D-10206 the 1960 Moscow Telephone Directory lists the address: 60 Gorkogo Street, Apartment #2. The directory lists no name with the number. The address appears to be an apartment house in the Northwest part of Moscow. No traces on address. Neither the 1960 nor the 1962 Moscow Telephone Directory list the number D-19206. D19106 - The CIA reported: "Under the number D-19106 the 1962 Moscow Telephone Directory lists: the Savelovskiy Vokzal (Railroad Station) Restaurant at Savelovskiy Square which is located in the northwest section of Moscow. Next to this number was the number DD 19107. It belonged to a D. T. SPRISHEVSKAYA who lived at Gor'kogo 48, in an "a rather large apartment building in Northwest Moscow." The CIA had no traces on SPRISHEVSKAYA. ANGLETON reported: "Marina's aunt Valentina PRUSAKOVA nee (unknown), was born 23 February, about 1925, and had at least one sister: Dusya LNU, who apparently resided in Moscow as of 1962. Dusya may be identical with D. T. SPRISHEVSKAYA, listed in the 1960 Moscow Telephone Directory at Gor'kogo 48; her phone number, D-19107, was found noted without comment in OSWALD'S address book." How he arrived at this conclusion is beyond me! Two days later, on May 26, 1962, the OSWALDS checked out of the Hotel Ostankino and into the Hotel Leningradsky; here they were approached by an American couple who wanted to strike up a conversation.

On September 6, 1962, NH T-1 and NH T-2 furnished the following information: They stated that during the late part of May 1962, they took a pleasure trip to the Far East including Russia. They stated that one night, on or about May 28, 1962, they had dinner at the Leningradsky Hotel, Moscow, Russia. They stated that shortly after they were seated they were joined at the table by a man and a woman and that the man explained to him in English that this was a Russian custom. The sources stated that they then attempted to engage in casual conversation with the man, but he rebuffed any attempt at friendliness. He advised that because they felt certain from a general appearance that this individual was an American, NH T-2 stated that during the course of conversation that if this person did not want to be known as an American he should 'hide the label on his jacket.' The unknown SAC at this point stated to the sources 'You don't know, I may be a spy.' The sources stated that the subject would have no further conversation with them and shortly thereafter left the table with his girlfriend." [Johnson Lee & Marina p6; FBI NH 100-18158-12.6.63 - Needham]

In October 1962 Pavel Golovachev was questioned by the KGB about his attempt to obtain a copy of Doctor Zhivago from OSWALD. [Norman Mailer, Oswald's Tale, p313] On June 1, 1962, Marina Oswald received a medical examination at the American Embassy, Moscow, from Dr. Alexis H. Davison, a United States Air Force Assistant Attache (Medical). Davison was Assistant Medical Attache from May 1961 to May 1963, when he was declared persona non grata, due to his involvement in the Oleg V. Penkovsky spy case.

OLEG PENKOVSKY

Oleg Penkovsky was a Colonel in Soviet Military Intelligence. In May 1963 he confessed to passing 5,000 frames of exposed miniature-camera film to CIA agents. According to The Invisible Government: "The Russians charged that Penkovsky would hide his information in a match box behind the radiator in the hallway of an apartment house located on Pushkin Street, in Moscow. Oleg Penkovsky would then mark a circle with charcoal on 'lamppost No. 35' and telephone Captain Davison. Davison would go to the lamppost, the Russians claimed. If he found the charcoal circle it meant that something was ready to be picked up."

Dr. Alexis Davison told the HSCA:

Someone whose name he no longer remembers asked him to observe a lamp post on his daily route between his apartment and the U.S. Embassy. If he saw a black chalk mark on the lamp post and/or if he received a phone call in which the caller blew into the receiver three times, he was to notify a person who he no longer remembers. He was told nothing else about the operation. Davison participated in this operation for approximately one year. On just one occasion he observed the mark on the lamppost and his wife received a phone call signal. As instructed he reported these happenings. Since this signaling procedure was used just once, Davison believes that he was merely a backup contact. Moreover, since the two signals were received shortly before the Soviets publicly announced that they had broken the Penkovsky operation, Davison suspects that the Soviets had found out about this particular signaling procedure and had used it themselves in one instance for verification purposes. Davison was declared persona non grata just after his tour of duty in Moscow ended. He left in May 1963. He stated that he participated in no other operations, but that he did perform some desk work and the like for the Air Attache.

In response to questions concerning the OSWALDS Davison stated that he met LEE HARVEY OSWALD just once - in the waiting room of the Embassy's medical facility. He seems to remember that OSWALD was 'scruffy looking' and was wearing a turtle neck sweater. He assumes that he gave his mother's name and address to with LEE or Marina OSWALD, but he is uncertain. He does seem to recall intelligence debriefings on the Penkovsky Affair. Davison stated that he had received some intelligence training, which he characterized as superficial. This training mainly involved lectures on Soviet life, and instructions on remembering and reporting names and military observations. Later in the interview he stated that his brother worked for Air Force Intelligence.

Mrs. E. Mendoza of the CIA's Office of Security stated: "Davison was apparently never used clandestinely by the Agency but the charges against him appear in the Invisible Government in June 1964." On May 16, 1966, the CIA created a document that read:

Davison, Alexis Hal - 0-358:70 - Uncle-In-Law. Davison has never been employed or utilized by this Agency in any capacity. Information in his file reflects that he was assigned to the United States Embassy in Moscow in 1963 as the Assistant Air Attache (Medical) and was named by the Soviets as one of a number of U.S. and British Diplomatic personnel allegedly involved in the Penkovsky case. He was subsequently declared persona non grata by the Soviets and returned to the United States on May 6, 1963. [NARA 1993.08.03.16:52:13:370027]

The Rockefeller Commission requested information from the CIA on any relationship between OSWALD and Dr. Alexis Davison. The CIA's response was summarized in a Memorandum for the Office of the Inspector General:

1. Captain Davison, who was assigned to Moscow as Assistant Air Attache and American Embassy doctor until he was declared persona non grata in May 1963, was co-opted by the CIA Station in Moscow to provide passive communications support for Penkovsky. This support consisted of observing a signal site from his apartment and of standing by to receive a coded telephone signal from Penkovsky. Davison shared these functions with an Agency officer. The signal site and telephone signal were part of an early warning arrangement established with Penkovsky.

2. There is no record of any other operational involvement of Davison with Moscow Station reflected in the indices of the SE USSR Branch or the SE Division history of the Moscow Station.

3. None of the records consulted indicate any contact whatsoever between Davison and LEE HARVEY OSWALD.

4. Our files do not contain any record of any intelligence activities of Davison aside from the Penkovsky case. It should be noted, however, that at the time of Davison's assignment to Moscow, the CIA Chief of Station was not charged with the function of coordinating the intelligence activities of the service attaches in Moscow.

5. The above information is set forth without benefit of the official Penkovsky case file, which is the process of being recalled from the Archives. If review of the Penkovsky file suggests elucidation or amplification of above, pertinent information will be forwarded to your office. [CIA 1631-1089-rel. 4.22.82]

Tennent Bagley characterized Dr. Alexis Davison's involvement in the Oleg Penkovsky case as a one-shot deal. A CIA document indicated that Ray S. Cline contacted Air Force Intelligence in regard to Alexis Davison on May 31, 1963. [NARA 1993:08.03.17:09:45:650027] A CIA transmittal slip dated June 1963 to Chron. SAS. "Remarks: Note and send file to SRD. New file of Alexis Davison." [NARA 1993:08.03.17:08:17:210027] Another CIA document stated:

Acting Chief, FIOB/Security Research Staff February 1, 1971

Exposure of CIA Personnel #601 818

1. Per instruction of Deputy Chief, Security Research Staff, the following is a summary of information concerning several individuals who have been PNG'd from the USSR. This information was extracted from a FIOB memo dated January 20, 1971.

2. One paragraph in the referenced memo reflects that various news media such as the Sunday Staff, dated May 30, 1965, as well as the wire services publicized the naming of two American diplomats in Moscow as CIA spies by Nedelya, the illustrated weekly supplement of Isvestia. Nedelya contained an article entitled "Spy Mania and Naked Kings" on American Embassy spy activities. The article concentrated its attack on Mr. Malcolm Toon as the supervisor of several individuals who are known to the PNG'd from the USSR. These individuals are listed as follows: Davison, Alex Hal 358 170.

The name of Dr. Alexis Davison's mother, Mrs. Hal Natalia Alekseevna Davison, and her address in Atlanta, Georgia, were in OSWALD'S address book under the heading, "Mother of U.S. Embassy Doctor." Natalia Davison's father was a nobleman and Czarist General who joined the White Russian Guards during the Bolshevik revolution in 1917. After the Bolsheviks seized power, Natalia came to the U. S., but returned to the USSR in 1924. It was there that she met the father of Alexis Davison, while both were working for the American Red Cross. [A.P. Dispatch 12.16.62] The mother of Alexis Davison, Mrs. Natalia Alekseevna Belimisheva Davison, told the HSCA she had never been contacted or visited by OSWALD in Atlanta and had no interviews or contacts with intelligence people. In an interview with the HSCA, Alexis Davison said:

It was his job to perform physical examinations on Soviet citizens traveling to the United States. He recalls that most of these physical examinees were old, but he remembers two young women -- one who was a mathematics teacher from Southern Russia and who was married to an American. The latter was terrified of going to the United States. She said she and her husband were going to Texas. Davidson said that if they were in Atlanta they should visit his mother, a native-born Russian. His mother was never visited by either of the OSWALDS. This was not an unusual thing to do since my family had always been very hospitable to Russians who visited Atlanta.

A HSCA review of Dr. Alexis Davison's CIA and Defense Department files showed them to be consistent with his Committee testimony: "Accordingly, there was insufficient evidence for concluding that Dr. Alexis Davison was an intelligence contact for OSWALD in Moscow." Dr. Alexis Davison was an Air Force physician who was co-opted by the CIA. He had a security file and a cryptonym - Uncle-In-Law. He must have been briefed on OSWALD'S background, yet he still gave him his mother's address and suggested they visit her in Atlanta. Davison had a strong anti-Communist background. Why did he send a Communist to visit his mother? Sympathy? Mrs. Davison told this researcher "He very very often, up until now, gets all sorts of lame ducks in my lap and thinks I will be able to help them." Could he have felt sorry enough for Marina and her child and overlooked her husband's alleged affinity for Communism? Unlikely. He did not know whether Marina shared OSWALD'S views. Suspicion? Did Dr. Davison suspect that OSWALD was not a bone fide defector? Had OSWALD said something to make him believe the he (OSWALD) was on a mission? During this time OSWALD was reportedly rude to those he encountered. How did he win Dr. Davison's trust? There was more to this than simply southern hospitality. Richard E. Snyder returned to the United States in August 1961. He stated that he had let OSWALD return to America:

for humanitarian reasons, in a sense. He was a 20-year-old kid. I knew that if he stayed there he was going to show up sooner or later and want to go home. That was a recognized pattern. He did." Richard E. Snyder was asked why the Russians issued Marina Oswald an exit visa. Richard E. Snyder: "The visit of NIXON to Moscow opening up the American Fair ushered in a period of relaxation in Soviet affairs including finally, the release of a lot of people, wives for the most part of American citizens who had been holed up in the Soviet Union for years. Stalin would never let them go. I wrote a letter to Khrushchev for the Vice President detailing a number of cases and asking Khrushchev to give them consideration on the basis of reuniting their families. They were given a hard time, but they all got out. The Soviets, in general Russians, were very nationalistic and regarded it almost as a treasonable act to want to leave Russia for America, of all places, that sort of thing. They brought all kinds of pressure on the families, they got the constable after the girl, her place of employment got after her, and if she was recalcitrant, they fired her. All kinds of pressures. But if she stood her ground they finally let her go. As far as OSWALD, there was no reason not to let him go. He was not a Soviet citizen. I didn't expect they would give him any big problem except the normal bureaucratic foot dragging. All of the difficulties getting out involved non-Americans. I don't see any expediting at all in the part of the Soviets in the case of Marina. It was well within the bounds of my own experience. She left after I left, about a year later. From Moscow, Richard E. Snyder visited Washington, and then in September 1961, he was sent to the U.S. Embassy, Tokyo, where he remained until 1965. The CIA reported, "Extensive research had not revealed why Southern Europe Division would have run a name trace on Richard E. Snyder in September 1963. There are no internal cards on Richard E. Snyder and no leads as to why he would have come to their attention at that time." [CIA Memo to Office of Leg. Counsel From F.W.M Janney Sub HSCA Req. 6.8.78; CIA Memo. Shepanek to Breckinridge 8.23.78; CIA 04187] The CIA stated: "As of January 1964 the CI Staff was assigned the responsibility for the OSWALD investigation. The Snyder 201 was opened on March 12, 1964, on the basis of a Memo for the Record dated March 12, 1964, from SE Division." The CIA also reported:

7. In 1975 a file review was performed in the DDO of all 201's on U.S. citizens; whereby the 201 would be destroyed unless (deleted) the (deleted) codes applied. This review was usually done by Records Officers. Since this 201 was opened by the CI Staff (and Snyder was never used operationally by the DDO) the (deleted) code was the category deemed appropriate.

8. The 201 file opening sheet has a machine code number for the office that opens the 201 (the action desk). In this case it is Counter-Intelligence I/Research and Analysis. Each office has country codes, which would be used for operational use, and non-country codes, which are used for more administrative purposes (policy, management, admin. info. etc.) The number 737 (number 18 on the opening form) is a "non-country" file of interest to CI/RA. The 201 file was opened in March 1964 on the basis of an SE officer's Memorandum for the Record which was given the document number XAAZ 16997.

In 1965 Richard E. Snyder became Consul in Charge, U.S. Consulate, Nagoya, Japan, until 1967. In March 1968 Richard E. Snyder came under investigation by ANGLETON, Newton S. Miler and CI/SIG:

MEMORANDUM FOR THE RECORD

SUBJECT: Richard E. Snyder

1. On March 5, 1968, Mr. David McCabe Chief/SY/Special Activities Staff advised that Richard E. Snyder is now in Naha Okinawa and that he has not yet been interviewed concerning his Soviet contacts. The interest in interviewing Richard E. Snyder is based on our inquiry concerning the possibility he might have known and have been in contact with a Soviet who visited Japan using the alias Kolasov. McCabe did not have the details, but apparently there is a report which will be forwarded to us as soon as some additional information is received in SY indicating that Richard E. Snyder may have been in contact with Georgiy Petrovich Pokrovsky [201-4480] and McCabe asked if it were possible we had confused the interests in Richard E. Snyder that instead of Kolasov that we were really interested in Pokrovsky. I said I did not know but I would check and advise concerning the interview.

2. In connection with Pokrovskiy McCabe mentioned that he would be obtaining more information for forwarding to us about Peter R. Peterson and his connection and contacts with Pokrovskiy. McCabe said that Peterson, a SY officer, when he reviewed the Snyder reports which mentioned Pokrovskiy made the observation that he, Peterson, had known Pokrovskiy in New Delhi and that he had subsequently met him in Tokyo.

3. McCabe indicated SY was concerned and he noted that in connection with the John Discoe Smith case, he was not now completely satisfied that Peterson may have been providing information sufficient for us to get a complete understanding of his activities in New Deli. McCabe indicated that Peterson is apparently a bit difficult to control; that he is not always as alert and thorough I his interviews as he should be; and specifically that in view of the information noted above, it probably would be best if Peterson did not become involved I any interview of Synder.

N. Scott Miler CI/SIG

Richard E. Snyder's name may have surfaced in a CIA investigation of Kolasov. A CIA Name Listing dated June 12, 1968 was withdrawn from the Snyder file because it contained security classified information or otherwise restricted information. [CIA Job No. JFK Box 46 Folder 2] On June 20, 1968, the CIA generated this memo on Richard E. Snyder: "The Subject person has been identified in the East German list of Who's Who in CIA. State Department employee in Naha, Okinawa, possible contact and interview stated in a March 8, 1968, Memorandum, C/S4/Special Activities Staff interest. Thomas L. Cole Chief, Security Records and Communications Division." [File No. 0-541981] Who's Who in the CIA contained this listing for Richard E. Snyder: "Languages: French, German, Japanese, Russian 1940 to 1946, Captain in G-2 (Intelligence), U.S. Army, 1957 - begins work for CIA. OPA: Frankfurt/Main, Munich, Kobe, Moscow, Nagoya (Consul)." [CIA Sec. Rec. & Comm. Chief Thomas L. Cole]

RICHARD E. SNYDER'S 201 FILE WAS RESTRICTED

On October 5, 1970, the CIA checked its records on Richard E. Snyder and found that Mr. Burnes, Office of Personnel, had red-flagged Richard E. Snyder's file so that anyone making an inquiry about him would be referred to Raymond Rocca's Deputy, Paul Hartman, in Counter-Intelligence / Research & Analysis: "The 201 file reflects that Subject's contacts, in university circles, included Zbigniew Brezezinski (201-012574), born circa 1926 in Poland, who is married to the daughter of Edward Benes, famous Czech leader. At Agency request, Subject provided some information and a personal assessment of Brezezinski." [Memo. C/CI Support 10.5.70 from Jean Evans, CI/SIG cc: DC/CI]

SNYDER'S PERSONNEL FILE WAS RESTRICTED

Jean M. Evans of CI/SIG reported to the Chief, CI Support that Snyder 201 File was restricted to CI/R&A (Paul Hartman)...The file was restricted because of involvement with LEE HARVEY OSWALD...An article in the February 28, 1964, edition of the Northern Virginia Sun written by Robert S. Allen and Paul Scott [alleged that Snyder was a CIA agent who interviewed OSWALD in Moscow]."

The CIA told the HSCA:

1a. The Office of Personnel file on Richard E. Snyder had been red-flagged [restricted] at the request of the Deputy Director Operations / Counter-Intelligence of the CIA to be sure that all inquiries concerning Richard E. Snyder would be referred to the Office of the Director of Personnel for further check with DDO/CI.

1b. There is no additional information on the file in the Offices of the Director of Personnel on Mr. Snyder. All previous information was incorporated into Mr. Snyder's Official Personnel File on June 24, 1974. Since none of the documents bear a marking to indicate they were a "separate" file, there is no way of knowing which documents were incorporated into the Office of Personnel File in 1974.

When the HSCA reviewed Richard E. Snyder's CIA files it found that

...Snyder's CIA file revealed that, at one time prior to 1974, it had been red-flagged and maintained on a segregated basis. The file contained a routing indicator that stated that the file had been red-flagged because of a 'Director of the Central Intelligence Agency statement' and a 'matter of cover' concerning Snyder." The CIA stated that "the CIA Director's statement presumably refers to comments which former Director of the Central Intelligence Agency Richard Helms had made in 1964 concerning the OSWALD case, when Richard Helms was DD/P."

The HSCA:

The Agency was unable to explain specifically why someone considered it necessary to red-flag the Snyder file...the CIA's failure to explain adequately the red-flagging of Snyder's file was extremely troubling to the committee." Richard E. Snyder commented, "That's something the committee asked me and I said I hadn't the faintest idea why. I never had run across a reference to 'red-flagging' before this.

Another CIA document that might be relevant stated: "All CI/OA files are restricted to CI/OA. This particular file (deleted) was nothing but pages of names with no identifying data. No one knows what the list was, and it has since been destroyed and all index cards leading to it have been destroyed. The interest (CI/OA) was not in 1956; the name trace was in 1956. The other documents which turned up on the name trace were dated 1949. As of 1956 (when the name check was done) this file was in the Archives." [Shepanek to Breckinridge 8.23.78 CIA # 17157] Who in Counter-Intelligence was interested in anyone who was interested in Richard E. Snyder?

THE MATTER OF COVER

Richard E. Snyder explained that the matter of cover concerned the cover name he used in the CIA. When Richard E. Snyder joined the CIA his Office of Security File indicated that the CIA asked the FBI to conduct an investigation of Snyder who: "Will be employed under cover designation on (_). No CIA interest should be indicated during the investigation. Such portion of the completed investigation report as may indicate CIA connection should, under no circumstances, be disclosed to a third party without the prior approval of this Agency. Likewise, administrative detail, in connection with this investigation, should be so handled as to afford maintenance of the necessary cover." [CIA OS Ermal P. Geiss 7.26.49]

The CIA told the HSCA: "The Agency was unable to explain the reference to 'cover,' because, according to its records, Snyder had never been assigned any cover while employed...The [Snyder] case was of interest to CI Staff because CI Staff was assigned the responsibility for the OSWALD investigation."

The CIA's Office of Personnel also did not know what matter of cover DC/CI was referring to in his notation on the Routing and Record Sheet:

There is no record of any association with Snyder since his termination with the Agency in 1950; therefore the 'question of cover' statement must refer to something other than the Agency association. Central Cover staff has no record of Snyder at any time; so Snyder did not have cover set up for him, even while employed with the Agency.

The Office of Personnel does not know what 'matter of cover' DC/CI was referring to in his notation on the Routing and Record Sheet as there is nothing in Mr. Snyder's Official Personnel File to indicate his cover status while employed. The Office of Personnel does not what Project 9D-1-SDHOUSE was. However, it is apparent from a review of Mr. Snyder's personnel actions that he was never assigned to that project. [CIA Memo: Office of Leg. Coun. From: F.W.M. Janney Subject: HSCA Req.6.8.78; NARA 1993.08.05.14:14:30:060028]

SNYDER REJECTED FOR CIA EMPLOYMENT

On October 12, 1970 Richard E. Snyder received a letter rejecting his offer to be of service to the CIA on a part time basis. [signed by Robert S. Wattles] The Director of Security had been apprised of the rejection on October 11, 1970. Richard E. Snyder was asked about ANGLETON. "Oh yeah, everybody knows JAMES ANGLETON, ha ha. Just hold on a minute while I get on another phone, I'm not at the most comfortable one. I never heard of ANGLETON until a couple of years ago, I guess, when The New York Times article came out and that's when I first heard ANGLETON'S name. I was interested in those things. I don't know if ANGLETON was in the CIA at this time. I, of course, wasn't in that CIA branch." Richard E. Snyder was asked if had any knowledge of ANGLETON investigating him as possible double-agent: "Well, if he did of course, he didn't tell me about it. He was really getting paranoid in his last years - according to that article on him. R.E.S. as a mole? I'd be fascinated to learn about it. He was the head of CI, wasn't he?" On May 1, 1971, Richard E. Snyder became a independent contract employee with the Joint Press Reading Service. He remained in that position until July 25, 1975, when he asked that his contract be canceled effective August 10, 1971. Richard E. Snyder: "I applied as a possible translator of scientific articles from Japanese to English. This is a program which I guess is still on-going. As far as I knew it was run by the Commerce Department. I only did this briefly." The CIA reported:

1. On April 15, 1976 the Japanese Communists Party held a press conference in Tokyo and distributed a handout containing Richard E. Snyder's name as one of the many U.S. Government officials alleged to be affiliated with the CIA. Although the JCP named some bona fide Agency employees many were bona fide State Department employees or employees of other government agencies who had previously been listed in Who's Who in the CIA as a CIA Agent active in Japan.

2. The purpose of this memorandum is to document the security files of those Agency employees named by JCP as being formerly assigned to the [deleted as of 2010] plus those State Department employees for whom a security file exists. It should be noted that the Directorate of Operations is currently in the process of formally notifying those Agency employees formerly assigned to [deleted as of 2010] of their inclusion in the JCP list.

3. For complete details concerning Japanese Communist Party exposure, the reader is referred to a memo dated May 6, 1976, subject: Exposure of CIA Personnel, which is located in the security file of the same title, #601 818, Volume VIII.

4. Comments: Retired State Department employee who was on USJPRS contract May 31, 1971, through August 1975; former CIA employee October 1949 to September 1950. Listed in Who's Who in the CIA

THE SECOND LOOKOUT CARD

The State Department reported:

A lookout card for OSWALD should have been prepared in June 1962, when he received a repatriation loan...The purpose of the lookout card would have been to assure OSWALD'S compliance with this commitment. On receipt of notice of the loan from the Embassy in Moscow, the Department's procedures provided that Miss Leola B. Burkhead of the Revenues and Receipts Branch of the Office of Finance Clearance Section in the Passport Office of OSWALD'S, date and place of birth. If the Passport Office received only the name and not the date and place of birth of a borrower, it would not have prepared a lookout card under its established procedures because of lack of positive identification. Mr. Richmond C. Rowley was the Chief of the Finance Office and Mr. Alexander W. Maxwell was the Chief of the lookout card section. When he received this notice, Mr. Maxwell should have instructed Miss Nannie W. Burrey to prepare a lookout card on OSWALD...It appears, however, that such a lookout card was not prepared. Normally, an individual's passport file would indicate that such a lookout card was prepared but there is no such indication in OSWALD'S passport file.

OSWALD CROSSES THE IRON CURTAIN: JUNE 2, 1962

In 1977 the HSCA requested permission from the Soviet Embassy to conduct interviews of Soviet citizens reported by OSWALD to have had contact with him during Oswald's stay in the USSR. This request was refused, as was the Committee's request for additional Soviet documents concerning OSWALD'S surveillance. The HSCA stated: "Thus, information that the committee has collected and used concerning OSWALD'S stay in the Soviet Union...is only partially complete." [HSCA V12 p452]

OSWALD crossed the Iron Curtain at Brest on June 2, 1962. He proceeded to Helmstedt, Germany, a checkpoint between the two Berlins. No one searched OSWALD'S baggage or put an East German exit stamp on his passport. Documents that contained information relating to a "discussion of baggage search practices of a foreign security service at its immigration points" and "the travel of LEE HARVEY OSWALD and his wife Marina from Russia to the U.S." were denied in their entirety. [CIA 300-698, 353-720] From Germany, the OSWALDS traveled to Amsterdam, where the State Department supplied them with a small apartment during a brief stay there. On June 4, 1962, the OSWALDS departed from Holland on the S.S. Maasdam. The report the Dutch immigration authorities gave to the CIA Station in Amsterdam on OSWALD was still withheld. [CIA 395-745]

OSWALD'S HISTORIC DIARY

During his steamship voyage to New York, OSWALD augmented or completed his Historic Diary. The evidence that he wrote it as the events occurred largely rested on the degree of detail in the Historic Diary. If it were based on notes, where were they? It would be inconceivable to imagine OSWALD reconstructing the Diary from memory. The CIA disagreed:

OSWALD was restless; he was not a very original thinker and was obviously not a person who was used to expressing himself clearly in writing. Yet he sat down at some time and from notes or memory laboriously wrote out the historic diary. Was this his own idea? Or was he doing it at KGB direction in order to establish a legend for his stay in the USSR and the circumstances of his exit? The diary could be a complete cover story for period until his marriage, and a partial cover story from then until departure from USSR...Whether he wrote the diary on his own initiative or not, the pattern of prominent omissions and additions (with regard to the other available accounts of the same period) may indicate deliberate slanting in response to KGB wishes."

Marina Oswald said she thought LEE completed his diary in Russia. She was of the opinion that he wrote it in Minsk and that no portion was actually written in Moscow. Sometimes LEE would make entries for two or three days in a row and at other times not at all, depending on his mood. [CIA 280]

THE NOTES ON MAASDAM STATIONARY

While on the Maasdam OSWALD wrote:

I have often wondered why is it that the communist, ~~anarchist~~, capitalist and even the fascist and anarchist elements in America, always profess patriotism toward the land and the people, if not the government; although their ~~ideals~~ movements must surely lead to the bitter destruction of all and everything.

I am quite sure these people must hate not only the government but ~~our~~ the ~~peop~~ culture, ~~traditions~~, heritage and very people itself, and yet they stand up piously pronounce themselves patriots, displaying their war medals that they gained in conflicts ~~long past~~ between themselves.

I wonder what would happen if somebody was to stand up and say he was utterly opposed not only to the governments, but to the people, too the entire land and complete foundations of this society.

I have heard and read of the resurgent Americanism in the U.S. Not the ultra-right type but rather the polite, seemingly pointless Americanism expressed by such of the American foreign group and the freedom foundation.

and yet even in these veiled, formless, patriotic gestures, there is the obvious "axe being ground" by the ~~business with~~ invested interests of the sponsors of these expensive undertakings.

To where can we ~~there~~ turn? to factional mutants of both systems, to odd ball (illegible) Hegelian idealists out of touch with reality too religious groups, to revisionist groups as the absurd anarchism. No!

As soon as I became completely disgusted with the USSR Soviet Union and started negotiations with the U.S. American Embassy in Moscow for my return to the U.S. my "Red Cross" allotment was cut off.

This was not difficult to understand since all correspondence in and out of the Embassy is censored as is common knowledge in the Embassy itself. I have never mentioned the fact of these monthly payments to anyone.

I do so in order to state that I shall never sell myself intentionally or unintentionally ~~again~~ to anyone again.

as for the fee of $ _____ I was supposed to receive for this _____ I refuse it. I made pretense to accept it only because otherwise I would have been considered a crack pot and not allowed to appear to express my views. after all who would refuse money?!?

In the first part of this anti-Communist essay, OSWALD lumped Capitalism, Fascism and Anarchism together with his "beloved" Communism. OSWALD wondered why the Communists didn't come out and say they were for the destruction of Russian civilization instead of cloaking their hatred for Russia and its peoples and culture in a veil of patriotism? OSWALD compared World War II to a conflict between totalitarian states and not as a fight against Nazi tyranny: "displaying their war medals that they gained in conflicts ~~long past~~ between themselves." What did OSWALD mean when he wrote, in the context of an anti-Communist diatribe that: "I have heard and read of the resurgent Americanism in the U.S. Not the ultra-right type but rather the polite, seemingly pointless Americanism expressed by such of the American fore group and the freedom foundation. and yet even in these veiled, formless, patriotic gestures, there is the obvious "axe being ground" by the ~~business with~~ invested interests of the sponsors of their expensive undertaking." Did OSWALD approve of the ultra-right type of group rather than a respectable group such as the Freedom Foundation? OSWALD then stated the big business was behind these groups. Big business was behind the Freedom Foundation. What was the America Fore Group? The AMERICA FIRST group?

THE WITHERING AWAY OF THE STATE

In the communist experiment several factions and unavoidable developments have emerged which Marx and Engels could not possibly have foreseen their emergence with increasing clarity two monumental mistakes which Marx and Engels made...The first mistake is fairly well known even at this stage of communist development the "withering away of the state" as it was called. Marx envisioned that the abolition of class'es would lead to the gradual reduction of state apparatus. however this is not the case and is better observed than contemplated. the state rather becomes more extensive in that while the powers of central ministries or delegated they are not reduced and the dividing or a organ of state power into smaller units at lower levels so although some of the minister have actually disappeared to Moscow they have become more entrenched than ever at lower levels thus in dividing power you multiply units and in everyday life you become more and more dependent on these organs of state power. Wherever you turn you meet them and they touch the lives of people more and more, and a new bureaucracy, rather than a withering away of the state..."

THE MINUTEMEN

"...there have already been a few organizations who have declared that they shall become effective only after conflict between the two world systems leave the country without a defense or foundation of government, organizations such as the minute men for instance, however they are preparing to simply defend the present system and reinstate its influence after the mutual defeat of both systems materially which is more or less taken for granted. These armed groups will represent the remaining hard core of fanatical American capitalist supporters. There will undoubtedly be similar representation of this kind by community groups in communist countries. there will also be many decided religious segments putting forward their own alternatives and through larger memberships than the minute men etc. there will also be anarchist pacifist and quite probably fascist splinter groups however all these unlike the minute men and community partisan groups, will be unarmed. The mass of survivors however will not belong to any of these groups, they will not be fanatical enough to join extremists, and will be too disillusioned to support either the community of capitalist parties in their respective countries after the atomic catastrophe...in this way the minute men and their narrow support of capitalism have been most far-sighted, however they present only a suicide force whereas what is needed is a constructive and practical group of persons desiring peace."

OSWALD'S REPORT ON SOVIET LIFE

OSWALD also assembled a report on Soviet life which contained anti-Communist jargon ("fellow travelers such as Cubans"). The CIA:

Innocent indicators which could actually be indications of intelligence involvement: His pro-Soviet, pro-Marxist, etc. views, vocally expressed. No such person would be expected to be chosen for recruitment by the KGB. This is a very equivocal point. On the other hand, his book manuscript indicates a very anti-Soviet attitude, which could be his true feeling or a deliberate attempt, on KGB order, to disassociate himself with the pro-Soviet aspect of his pro-communist attitude. On the other hand, despite his putting such thoughts down in writing and actually having part of the manuscript typed by a public stenographer, he was in touch with the Soviet Embassy Washington about returning to the USSR as soon as possible with his wife and children...In the text of his proposed book, he turned against the USSR. This could certainly have been one of his own erratic shifts, but he might also have done it on orders from the KGB to disassociate himself from the pro-Soviet course. [Indications of Witting Intelligence Involvement by OSWALD]

OSWALD'S PRESS CONFERENCE

OSWALD wrote a set of questions and answers for a press conference he intended to hold when he returned to the United States.

1. Q. Why did you go to the USSR?

I went as a mark of discuss and protest against American political policies in forenign countrys, my personal sign of discontent and horror at the misguided line of reasoning of the U.S. Government ~~and people~~.

[He also wrote] I went as a citizen of the U.S. (as a tourist) residing in a foreing country which I have a perfect right to do. I went there to see the land, the people and how their system works.

[OSWALD wrote] "Are you a communitis? Yes ~~have~~ basically, allthhough I hate the USSR and socialist system I still thank marxism can work under different circumstances.

Q. Have you ever known a communist. not in the U.S.A.

[Then he wrote his alternative option] are you a communist? Have you ever known a communist?

Of course not. I have never even know a communist, outside of the ones in the USSR but you can't help that.

What are the othestanding differants between the USSR and the USA? None, except in the US the standard of living is a little higher, freedoms are about the same, medical aid an educational system in the USSR is better than in the USA.

[When he wrote in his alternative response, the differences were] freedom of speech travel outspoken opposition to unpopular policies freedom to believe in god. newspapers, Thank you sir, you are a real patriot.

What about statements you make to U.P.I. agent Miss Mosby in 1959? I was approached just after I had formally notified the U.S. Embassy in Moscow of my future residence in the USSR by the newspaper agencies in Moscow including U.P.I. API and time inc. who were notified by the Embassy. I did not call them. I answered statements to Miss Mosby of U.P.I. I requested her to let me OK. her story before she released it, which is the polite and usual thing. She sent her version of what I said just after she sent it. I immially called her to complant about this, at which time she apolized but said her editor and not her had added servel things. She said London was very excited about the story (there is how I deduced that she had already sent it) so there wasn't much else I could not about it. and I didn't realize that the story was even more blown out of shape once it got to the U.S.A. I'm afraid the printed story was faricated sensenlionilizism."

[In the other version he wrote] What about the statements you made to UPI agent Miss Mosby? I was approched by Miss Mosby and other reporters just after I had formally requested the American Embassy to legally liquate my U.S. citizenship, for a story, they were notified by the U.S. Embassy, not by me. I answered questions and made statements to Miss Mosby in regard to my reasons for coming to the USSR, her story was warped by her later, but in barest esscens it is possible to say she had the thruth printed.

[In one version OSWALD wrote] Did you break laws by residing or taking work in the U.S.S.R. I did in that I took an oath of allignce to the USSR.

[In another version he wrote] Under U.S. law a person may loose protection of the U.S. by voting or serving in the armed forces of a foringn state or taking an othe of allignce to that state. I did not of these.

[In one version OSWALD wrote] Isn't all work in the USSR considered state work? Yes of course and in that respect I also broke US Law in accepting work under a forign state.

[In another version he wrote] No. Technically only plants working directly for the State, usually defense, all other plants are owned by the workers who work in them.

[In one version OSWALD wrote] Why did you remain in the USSR so long if you only wanted a look I resided in the USSR from October 16, 1959 to sprig of 1961 a period of 2 ½ years I did so because I was living quite comfortably. I had plenty of money, an apartment rent-free lotso of girls ect. why should I leave all that?

[In another version he wrote] I resided in the USSR until February 1961 when I wrote the Embassy stating that I would like to go back. (My passport was at the Embassy for safe-keeping) they invited me to Moscow for this purpose however it took me almost ½ a year to get a permit to leave the city of Minsk for Moscow. In this connection I had to use a letter from the head from the head consular, to the Russian authrites in Minsk (the Russians are very beaurocratic and slow about letting foreingrs travel about the country hence the visa) when I did get to Moscow the Embassy immiately gave me back my passport and advised me as to how to get a exit visa from the Russians for myself and my Russian wife, this long and arduous process took months from July 1962 untill---1962, therefore you see almost one year was spent in trying to leave the country. thats why I was there so long not out of desire!"

These words were attached to the more radical version of OSWALD'S press conference.

~~1. Statement to reporter~~

~~2. 2 letters to Embassys~~

~~3. type recording to Radio Moscow.~~

~~1. tourist report to her h etc. (Not legible) moscow sights and sounds preliminary to log of events in moscow called "Moscow Tourist Travels"~~

~~2. asking for emformation about how to dissolve 1544 At 18 US CODE~~

OSWALD was unsure whether he would continue to maintain his leftist cover after his return to the United States, so he wrote two sets of questions and answers to a hypothetical press conference. These notes demonstrated his ability to simultaneously espouse two completely different political philosophies. Which was the real OSWALD? OSWALD the patriot? Or OSWALD the subversive? [WCE 100] The CIA commented: "The set of questions with double answers may be connected with the preparation of a cover story."

THE MANUSCRIPT

Russian exile Isaac Don Levine testified to the Warren Commission that Marina Oswald told him that OSWALD had smuggled a manuscript out of the Soviet Union, although this could be the Historic Diary. Marina Oswald told Priscilla Johnson that her husband had some papers taped to his body when he crossed the Iron Curtain.

OSWALD RETURNS TO AMERICA: JUNE 13, 1962
SPAS T. RAIKIN

When OSWALD, Marina, and their baby girl, disembarked in Hoboken, New Jersey, on June 13, 1962, they were met by Spas T. Raikin, an official of the Travelers Aid Society, with strong ties to at least two Nazi anti-communist militant organizations and to the CIA. This was no chance meeting. OSWALD'S address book contained the word SPAS with a line separating it from the rest of the Russian word for "thank-you." The address book contained the names of at least three more overt Nazis. How Raikin was assigned to OSWALD beats me. My guess is that he volunteered. It was no accident. The initial referral came from Miss Sootin at the Department of Health, Education and Welfare who requested "repatriate, may need assistance with general planning. This is not an official State Dept. referral since very little is known about the situation of how Mr. O got his family from Russia to Rotterdam. He is known to have paid most of his passage to New York and may have funds or definite plans of his own. If he does need help he can be referred to the Department of Welfare under the repatriation program. Try to interview as fully as possible and report to Miss Sootin on the content of the interview." [WCE 2655] The State Department had to have informed Sootin about the OSWALDs otherwise how would she have known what had transpired in Russia. Spas T. Raikin claimed OSWALD attempted to avoid him on the ship even though he had him paged via the public address system and was reluctant to speak with him or at least pretended to. Spas T. Raikin: "He might have felt I was a government man. There was no CIA point in my connection with OSWALD. It's just not there." OSWALD told Raikin that he has been "a member of the Marine Corps and while on duty with the United States Embassy in Moscow and got involved with a Russian girl, whom he married, and renounced his U.S. citizenship." Spas T. Raikin was contacted in April 1993. He stated: What light could I throw? It's in the Warren Report. There's nothing I can add. There are lots of myths, lots of truths."

He was asked whether his anti-communism had any significance in his being assigned to the OSWALD case.

This is a b.s. business. This has nothing to do with it. I don't know much about OSWALD. My contact with him lasted for one hour or so, and after that I forgot about him; little did I know about him before. I suppose you could find better authority to testify to this case; the FBI and CIA. They know much more than I do. My job was a low-paying job. Just meeting people. I met thousands of people in my six years. You meet them if somebody is confused, doesn't have money, doesn't have where to go. It was a social-work type of a thing. My function was to meet them at the ship...I was Russian-speaking. I handled all kinds of people. In this case I was Russian-speaking; that is why they assigned this case to me.

In answer to a question regarding whether his contact with Russian émigrés inspired interest on the part of the CIA Spas T. Raikin responded:

Never. I have never had contact with the CIA. They are an unusual kind of people. I have never been on friendly terms with them. I am probably on their blacklist. They think that I'm too independent and have my own opinions. I suspect this because I've been publishing exile magazines...

It was pointed out to Spas T. Raikin that the CIA had subsidized exile publications:

Nobody subsidized our [Bulgarian National Front] magazine. It was critical of policies. They were messing up things because they were infiltrated by communist agents. Kim Philby. They would plan dropping some people in Bulgaria and people from inside would inform the Bulgarian police of the mission...They were interfering in our exile Bulgarian affairs. Besides, I was not associated with these groups for long; I dropped my association in 1963. I left them because they were too much preoccupied with Russia. They were identifying all Russians with communism. I would not go along with that. They did not make distinctions between Russians and Communists. #### RAIKIN'S SECURITY FILE

As a result of the 1992 JFK Documents Act, Spas T. Raikin's CIA Office of Security File was declassified.

November 20, 1957

SUBJECT: RAIKIN, Spas T.

RI document 12-7-10-575, is an intelligence report on an airfield in Bulgaria, the source of which was Spas T. Raikin, Zdravo Kostadinov Damyanov and Stefen Petrov Peletekov, three Trudovaks who, on May 6, 1951, deserted their unit and made their way to Plovdiv and then to Greece.

The reason for their desertion was to join an alleged illegal group working in the mountains south of Plovdiv. Unable to make contact with the group, they wandered around the mountains obtaining provisions from relatives and friends. Unable to hold out any longer, they entered Greece on June 19, 1951.

Through interrogation it was learned that Spas T. Raikin was born October 26, 1922 in Zelenikovo. He is single and has two brothers, Petur and Stoyu, who are farmers in Zelenikovo. His father, Todor Petkov Raikin, is living and is also a farmer. Subject finished Theological Seminary in Plovdiv and the Theological Faculty in Sophia. He then taught for one year on the Sofia Faculty. On April 5, 1950, he was called up for military service and assigned to Bezmer airfield until December 22, 1950, when his unit was transferred to Balcchik airfield.

Subject's desire to desert was to join the fight against communism in the name of the Bulgarian Orthodox Church. When he found it was impossible to do so inside Bulgaria, he decided to escape to Greece and join such a church group there, if such existed. If none existed, he decided to form a militant illegal church group to fight communism inside Bulgaria.

RI document 33-2-0-56 is a dispatch from Chief of Station [15-16] dated August 3, 1951, which encloses a report from source. The report states that (Deleted) has questioned three Bulgarian refugees who were brought from Salonika on July 19, 1951. They are Spas Todorov Raikin, Straiko Damlanov and Stefan Petrov Peltekov. They will be housed at Lavrion.

RI document 12-7-5-147 is a dispatch from Chief of Station [15-16] dated August 6, 1951 enclosing an essay by the Subject on the Trudovak Service Bulgaria. The Trudovak Service is a military organization formed to procure manpower for construction centers. The covering dispatch states that it was reported that Subject was one of three Bulgarians who were brought down from Athens from Salonika on July 19 on the request of (delete)

RI document # 201-129455 (DFB-73956) is an FBI report dated November 21, 1956 at Chicago entitled "Vladimir Tyekoff Metchkahski; Internal Security-BU. The report was forwarded to CIA on December 3, 1956. Metchkahski is identified as a Bulgarian political exile who became disgruntled in the US and sought to return to Turkey. A Mr. Rakin (marginal note spells name Spas Raikin) was sent to Chicago by the World Council of Churches in New York to assist Metchkahski.

RI document 12-7-6-27 (SODB-42254) dated September 12, 1951, is a intelligence report concerning the Bulgarian Orthodox Church prepared from information furnished by Subject who considers himself an ordained priest in the Bulgarian Church. In preparing the information Subject used the nom de plume Prezviter Kosma. The field station comments that Subject was brought to Athens from Salonika on July 19, 1951 to work for (Deleted). [CIA document 11.20.57 signed by Joseph A. H. Special Agent Headquarters Field Office]

RI document 201-91430 (DFB-81628) is an FBI report dated April 10, 1957 at New York entitled "Iliia Vaugelof Georgief Ourdof; Internal Security-BU." The report was sent to the CIA on April 18, 1957. References to Subject in the report stems from his position as Secretary of the Bulgarian Escapee Program of the Church World Service, 215 Fourth Avenue, New York City. His only connection with OURDOF was in an official capacity. Joseph A. H. Headquarters Field Office.

Spas T. Raikin was employed by the CIA in 1957 when he worked for its Joint Press Reading Service in New York City. [Transmittal Of Investigative Report 11.29.57 From Chief Security Support Division to Chief, Personnel Security Division; ltr. from W.M. Knott to Chief, Foreign Documents Division 12.13.57; William P. Curtin, Headquarters Field Office 11.25.57 to Chief, Investigative Division; CIA Biographical Questionnaire] When the CIA ran traces on Raikin's references it found that Subject's CHR, Jan S.F. Van Hoogstraten, file #AI-3583, was the subject of an interrogation by OO/C Division. Van Hoogstraten is a representative of the Church World Services. Information recovered from a source reflected that Van Hoogstraten made indiscreet statements relative to refugee work. For further info concerning Van Hoogstraten see SRS File 2861, memo dated October 24, 1956. SRS June 5, 1957. (Card info - NFI).

Van Hoogstraten was connected with Roland Elliot, who had Communist associations. [CIA Name Check Analysis 8.21.57] In 1968 Van Hoogstraten was Church World Service director of Africa. On January 10, 1967 Spas T. Raikin filed out a form titled: "Background Information For Personal Service Contract." Raikin named John Broderick, FBI, 201 E 69th Street, as one of his references. When the CIA ran traces on Raikin it found a reference that connected him with Fulton Lewis Jr. CR R162588-A.

NIXON CONNECTION: COMMITTEE FOR FAIRNESS TO THE PRESIDENCY

In 1973 Spas T. Raikin was a member of the National Citizen's Committee for Fairness to the Presidency (NIXON). Members of this committee included Rabbi Korff, W. Clement Stone and Ernest Van Den Haag. W. Clement Stone was founder of Combined American Insurance Company and a major NIXON contributor. Ernest Van Den Haag who was a lawyer, economist and psychoanalyst, who worked for William Buckley at the National Review in 1956. Van Den Haag, a racist, was a supporter of William Shockley. Van Den Haag was connected to neo-Nazi Willis Carto through Roger Pearson. None-the-less Van Den Haag was listed as a member of the Council on Foreign Relations in 1992.

RAIKIN WAS THE SECRETARY GENERAL OF THE AMERICAN FRIENDS OF ANTI-BOLSHEVIK NATIONS.

The ABN's founder and leader was Jaroslaw Stetzko, who in 1941 had announced plans to unite with Hitler to "create a New Order in Europe and throughout the world."

RAIKIN WAS A MEMBER OF THE BULGARIAN NATIONAL FRONT

The Bulgarian National Front was part of the Anti-Bolshevik Nations group. Laszlo Pasztor, the founding chair and key figure in the Republican Heritage Group (the Republican Party) helped the Bulgarian National Front, headed by his friend, Ivan Docheff. As early as 1971 the GOP was warned that the Bulgarian National Front was a Nazi group. A Jack Anderson column quoted another Bulgarian-American organization, the conservative Bulgarian National Committee, which labeled Docheff's Front as "fascist." But the GOP took no action. [Jack Anderson, Washington Post 11.10.71] Professor Spas T. Raikin was a Front member. He said it grew out of a Bulgarian organization that in the 1930's and 1940's was "pro-Nazi and pro-fascist." Raikin was also a Jew-hater and wrote this in a letter to the New York Times:

By disengaging from Palestinian affairs, King Hussein has created, paradoxically, the much maligned Palestinian state territorially envisioned by the PLO, but politically under Israeli rule. The Israelis - not the Arabs - are the masters in this state, as the PLO had envisioned. This new Palestinian state is a version of South Africa, with its repugnant institution of apartheid and its blatant racism. King Hussein, having set a trap for the PLO, also transformed Israel into a racist state. This is the real challenge for Israel and the United States.

Spas T. Raikin was re-contacted in September 1993 and informed that the CIA had released his Office of Security file. He commented,

They did? What does it say there? Who is this employee, me? That's funny. Well, look, if you have the file why don't you send it to me. I was a professor all this time. The Joint Press Reading Service - I was translating something of no consequence. Some Agency from New York asked me to translate some work, but I found this whole thing very serious and very cheaply paid and I just dropped it...I suppose the Joint Press Reading Service was part of the CIA, yes. But the agency I worked for had an innocent name. I had some papers about this, but I threw them out. The CIA tried to recruit me right after I left Bulgaria. I told them I wasn't interested and I was going ahead with my studies. I did not apply for CIA employment in 1967. I was well into my profession by then. I might have become interested in doing some translation work. It was all done by mail. I never met anyone at this time. I have never been in touch with them. No direct contact except when I left Bulgaria. You are making too much out of this. I think Case Closed summed it up well.

Spas T. Raikin was asked why the CIA hired him, if he was on its blacklist:

I had been very critical about CIA intervention in Bulgarian exile affairs. Maybe the CIA thought my criticism was inconsequential. In our critical observations we avoided using titles and names and agencies. We used a coded language. We wouldn't directly attack them. I don't remember directly challenging them. I'm not changing my story. Mrs. Edna Norman gave me the OSWALD assignment arbitrarily. Are you trying to build-up a case against the CIA?

Spas T. Raikin was mailed a copy of his Office of Security File. He reacted: "It's so silly and stupid I didn't find anything of substance there. A number of things were wrong. I was a Professor in 1967. I was building a house that year. I took my job here which I liked, and I was not looking for a new job anyway. I have applied to the CIA for my file." In 1994 the CIA released Spas T. Raikin's application for CIA employment bearing his signature. [CIA Background Information for Personal Service Contract 1.10.67] It was mailed to him but refused. Raikin was a product of the Cold War: Prof. Spas T. Raikin was born in the village of Zelenikovo, district of Plovdiv, Bulgaria. After graduating from the Plovdiv Theological Seminary (1945) and the School of Theology at the University of Sofia (1949), he was drafted to serve his military service in a slave-labor type of unit from where he defected on May 6, 1951. After forty-four days foray in the Rodopi Mountain with an armed resistance group formed by him and his fellow defectors, he crossed the border into Greece. These events are the subject of this second volume of his reminiscences (The first volume is its Bulgarian version) published under the title "A Political Journey Against the Winds of the XX Century."

In exile he studied at the Universities of Athens, Geneva, Basel, and King's College in England, and after migrating to the U.S. - at Columbia University where he received a M.A. degree in Political Science and History (1959). Before retiring in 1991, he taught History of Civilization, Modern European History and a number of related subjects at the Rio Grande College in Ohio, the State University of New York at Potsdam and East Stroudsburg University in Pennsylvania. In exile he joined numerous organizations opposing communism and was the editor of several of their periodicals and publications. Unless there was an intelligence angle Raikin was overqualified for this Travelers Aid job. OSWALD was told that someone named Spas would meet when he returned and make sure he was well treated. Raikin knew OSWALD was an operation but his anti-Communist beliefs will never allow him to reveal this.

JANE RUSCOLL

Spas T. Raikin referred OSWALD to the Welfare Department. Jane Ruscoll, the Administrator of the Office of Special Services of the Welfare Department in 1962, was contacted in August 1993. She stated:

We had a program called 'The Repatriation Program.' His case was atypical in the sense that I recall he was the only one coming from Russia. If the FBI met people like OSWALD, they did not tell us. I had no suspicions about him - the State Department had cleared him. OSWALD was limited and politically naive - he went to Russia in 1959 and declared he did not want to be an American. There had to be some naivety about that. He was not a stupid person. OSWALD, through his reading, had sort of taken hold of an idealism, which in many respects communism did represent. The Soviets were going to have this wonderful society. And having come from a life of some poverty he looked at it as sort of a Garden of Eden. Although his aspirations have an admirable quality to them, he was well meaning, well intentioned, he was fooled by propaganda. I had no impression that he was connected with the CIA. One thing that bears it out is he wouldn't have come back without funds and having such difficulty and having his brother ask him for funds [$200] which he hated, if he was a big CIA apparatchik. He was intensely upset. He told me his brother was mortgaging his house. He didn't want to put him in that position. There's an inconsistency there. He wouldn't have impressed people as being desirable as an agent.

OSWALD told me that he had this girlfriend he was in love with before he met Marina. She appears in some pictures, she's a taller woman than Marina. He was very smitten with her. She left him, and he attempted suicide. When he wanted to get out of the country and was having difficulty, he told me that he had found that by trying to go to the head of agencies you were more apt to get an approval to an exception of policy. One of the things he said was, 'I'm going to commit suicide.' Now since he had made the previous attempt they did sort of put credence into that threat. He said that helped get him out of the country. OSWALD wanted me to call the State Department. I spoke to a woman in the New York State Department of Welfare who subsequently called the State Department. She asked, 'Could we have an exception to policy and pay his transportation and in effect tell the brother he did not have to pay?' The answer came back, no.

OSWALD told me that when he was at one of Marine camps, General Edwin Walker came to speak and all the men turned out for the talk. OSWALD, who didn't like the reputation that preceded Walker, stayed inside reading one of his books. This was something he told me. I'm probably the only one that hasn't talked before.

This was strange. CIA has an interest in Issacs after the assassination "Category of Report 00-C." – Domestic Contacts" Perhaps ANGLETON had an undocumented interest prior to the coup as he knew all of Isaacs aliases. When the CIA concluded its investigation it found Isaacs was a Jewish Hungarian immigrant, a naturalized citizen with a clear credit rating. Jane Ruscoll stated, "This is a mistake, he didn't use aliases. He was absent the day OSWALD came in. A worker in his unit spoke with him."

OSWALD EXPECTED TO BE DEBRIEFED BY ANGLETON

In a letter to his mother, OSWALD wrote:

Dear Mother:

Well here we are in Moscow getting ready to leave for the U.S.A. I'll be sending a telegram or otherwise informing you as to where we shall embark and so forth, everything is okay so don't worry about us we shall be leaving from Holland by ship for the U.S. on June 4, 1962 however I expect to stay over in New York for a day or so and also ~~new~~ Washington, D.C. for sightseeing. Love LEE.

If OSWALD had to get a loan from the American Embassy in order to return to the United States, where was the money going to come from to finance his sightseeing tour of Washington, D.C. Did OSWALD expect to be debriefed? Jane Ruscoll: "He was away for a long enough period of time to have traveled to Washington, D.C., assuming he had the funds to do that." [OSWALD Ltr. 5.30.62; WCE 198]

On the afternoon of June 14, 1962, the OSWALD'S flew from New York to Dallas. Robert Edward Oswald welcomed OSWALD, Marina Oswald and their daughter at his Fort Worth home.

GERALD PATRICK HEMMING

THE MAN WHO WROTE THE OSWALD SCENARIO

For the most up-to-date version of this Nodule go to <http://ajweberman.com/noduleX9.pdf>

HEMMING'S NAME WAS IN OSWALD'S ADDRESS BOOK

On the page opposite to the entry "Russ for Forin" the letters "Hemg" appeared disguised as the Russian word for "German." Hemming spoke perfect German. HEMMING told this researcher:

Those are my three FAA initials. H-E-M was how I signed off as a radar operator. You got OSWALD'S access to the New Orleans newspapers, but the Stuckey article was published in June 1962. I never gave him my name when I met him in Monterey Park. I didn't use my name when I visited him. The word reads H-e-m-e-u. I don't recognize that as a Russian word. It was written in the Soviet Union. Jesus Christ, you got a pimple looking like the fucking Goodyear Blimp. Quit pumping on the son-of-a-bitch! Three fucking letters out of a thousand.

HEMMING was born in Los Angeles, California, on March 1, 1937. He was one of eight children of a radio/TV repairman with a shop in Alhambra, California. HEMMING told this researcher:

I come from a culture that insisted on European education. My father was born in Colombo, Ceylon, to a wealthy English family. He owned newspapers in Calcutta and Bombay. He was born while his mother, a widow, was on a world tour spending the millions she had inherited. My father went to school in France and England. He loved the Germans. Came to the United States. Married my mother who was from Saskatoon, Canada. On my mother's side we have Indian and black blood. On my father's side pure fucking English/German. I'm raised to know what it is to have a library, the classics, all this shit. I used to play hokey and hit the used bookstores. In 1951 or 1952 I read Handbook for Spies by M. R. D. Foote.

The FBI reported:

GERALD PATRICK HEMMING, SR., father of the subject was born on May 31, 1902 at Ceylon, India, and entered the United States at New York City on July 11, 1919. He was naturalized in the Eastern District of New York on March 15, 1927. CATHERINE ELLEN HEMMING, nee SIMPSON, was born on March 18, 1913 at Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, Canada, and entered the United States at Bathe, Washington, on November 30, 1923. She was naturalized in the Southern District of California on November 26, 1943.

HEMMING told this researcher that he had appeared in the Los Angeles Times in 1951 for ...breaking into sporting goods stores for weapons and going to the desert with the weapons and some other guys and training them for guerilla warfare. As long as they obeyed the fucking law, did what I said, and didn't go off on a tangent, there were no problems. The Los Angeles Times called it a John Dillinger crime wave. OSWALD had one gun as a kid, I'm given to understand. I had a collection of weapons.

GERALD PATRICK HEMMING'S brother, Robert Hemming, verified that this incident did occur. In August 1995 HEMMING displayed the article to this author:

BOYS PLANNING
CRIMES SEIZED
29 Stolen Guns Found Hidden by Five Teenagers Set on Banditry.

SAN MARINO, March 5, 1951. Five teenage boys dreamed of launching a 'Dillinger crime wave' from a foothills hideout have been rounded up Police announced today. Captain Ed Norwine said the alleged gang members only 16 years old, admitted stealing the guns in three burglaries of San Marino and Alhambra stores so they could operate like Dillinger, the desperado of the 1930's.

LIVE SHELLS----

The youths assertedly boasted they planned to 'blitz' the San Gabriel Valley with holdups after setting up a hideout in the foot hills above Pasadena. Officers said the boys had read up on guerilla warfare, and even practiced with live shells in the San Gabriel Wash. The break came last night when officers on routine patrol noticed two boys standing in front of a sporting goods shop at 2496 Huntington Drive, while a third boy was trying to open the roof skylight. The boys admitted they were after more guns, then named their two confederates and told where their caches of arms were hidden.

RIFLES FOUND ---

Twenty one rifles, a shotgun and seven revolvers and automatics were reported found under the boys houses, together with burglary tools. A 3,000 round supply of ammunition was dug up from one of the boy's backyard. Three youths, jailed in Pasadena for investigation of burglary were taken today to Juvenile Hall. The other two, temporarily released to their parents, also will be questioned by juvenile authorities. Officers said the gang got its weapons by twice burglarizing a sporting goods store in Alhambra, California...

HEMMING, who spoke Spanish and German, dressed in a Hitler Youth Corps uniform. HEMMING told this researcher:

I studied the Nazis very closely. I read Mein Kampf in the original goddamn German. I had my picture taken in a Nazi uniform. I'm very close to that. I speak the fucking language and everything. I don't like these goddamn cracker son-of-a-bitches playing fucking Nazi. It's sickening. You got to be a German to be a Nazi. My philosophy is the whole world is full of assholes. Some of the these assholes are chimps, some of these assholes are homo sapiens.

When he dropped-out of high school in 1953, someone in HEMMING'S family forged a birth certificate for him and HEMMING joined the Marines. HEMMING refused to say how long he was in the Marines before his true age was discovered: "That's in an area with a lot of other mysterious shit. OSWALD wasn't tall enough to get away with the false age shit." Forced out of the Corps when his true age was discovered, he rejoined on April 19, 1954.

HEMMING IN THE MARINES

APRIL 1954 OCTOBER TO 1958

GERALD PATRICK HEMMING entered on duty with the U. S. Marine Corps on April 19, 1954, at the age of 17. HEMMING weighed 231 pounds and was 6' 4" tall when he joined the Marines. While in the Marines, HEMMING claimed he read and traveled extensively. He made international connections and was often "mistaken for a CIA agent" by CIA personnel:

One guy left classified data with me. Because I was so tall, everyone thought I was much older. When I was stationed at a particular place I was practicing some trade craft. I did it twice. Early in my career and late in my career.

HEMMING hinted at his friendship with OSWALD:

I had run into him before, he came to Subic Bay, I didn't know who the hell he was. He saw me. I didn't know him. I visited the radar sites. He was with a group of people. I didn't much pay attention to him. I might even have drank beer with him and not even remember it. Or at chow he might have been with a group of people driving from his unit over to the chow hall that could have overheard numerous conversations and sat there. In the Marine Corps when you are sent overseas to an outfit, you are sent on a draft. Usually when you are on a draft, you're not a critical MOS guy. A guy that may have been OSWALD came through on a draft and then stopped over in Kaneohe Bay, Hawaii and attempted to switch jobs from this draft with our radar people. He'd rather have not gone to Japan. If the man dealt with me there it was over a sandwich or a cup of coffee or some such shit. I was busier than a son-of-a-bitch. Now if it was in Iwakuni...

HEMMING told the HSCA he flew to Atsugi three times, but never saw OSWALD. According to Scott Malone, OSWALD and HEMMING could have met when they were both in Iwakuni, Japan. HEMMING told his children at he was barely acquainted with OSWALD at Atsugi. When HEMMING left the Marines his service data read:

Service Schools Successfully completed MAD, NATTC, JAX, FLA. 8 weeks (1954) Airman, C1 (p); NATTU NAS Olathe, Kansas, 12 weeks (1955) Air Control Manager, GCAScol C1 © 14 weeks (1955) Operators course; NTC, Bainbridge, Md. 15 weeks (1958) US Naval Prep Scol. Specialty number and title: 6711 Air Traffic Cont. Related Civilian Occupation and DOT number 1-19.01 Airplane Dispatch Clerk (air trans.) National Defense Service Medal, Good Conduct Medal. [HEMMING'S DISCHARGE given to this researcher by HEMMING]

HEMMING listed his military history on his CIA Application for Employment: "Airmen Prep School, NAS Jacksonville, Florida, Military Aviation, Air Control "A" Tower Radio Radar; NAS Olathe Kansas Flying November 1954 to February 1955; AC "C" Radar

Operator, Radar, Radio and Navigation; MAS Olathe, Kansas, Instrument Flight August 1955 to November 1955." HEMMING was a radar specialist who attended Air Traffic Control School (Federal Aeronautics Administration Tower License) and GCA Radar Final Control School and served in the 4th Marine Regiment (Far East), 3rd Marine Air Wing. During most of his four years and seven months in the Marines HEMMING was based in the Far East. OSWALD attended Aircraft Control and Warning Operators School, and served in the 1st Marine Air Wing in the Far East. [WR p683] OSWALD and HEMMING were both in the same geographical area at the same time. They could have known each other, despite the fact there was no paperwork that documented this relationship and when HEMMING filed a Freedom of Information Act request with the Navy he implied that no records of his early association with OSWALD existed:

I wish all memoranda from FBI, CIA et al. in reference, from 1959 through and including 1963, between myself and OSWALD (deceased, EX-PFC, USMC).

Gerald Posner wrote: "HEMMING served with OSWALD in Japan and was himself recruited by the CIA." [Case Closed f.n. p27] HEMMING never said he was stationed in the same unit as OSWALD or at the same location. He said he may have run across OSWALD, or OSWALD may have run across him, while he ...traveled around the Far East on a space available basis on an out-of-bounds pass and got to see the world. Anyplace I stayed it was because it had a radar site there or a control tower. I could stay at the control tower bunk area or in the radar site bunking area, because, I, like them, was part of the elite group of controllers. When they are trying to match you up, when you are putting somebody in and trying to get somebody close to somebody, you have to have identical interests and background. [HEMMING ONI FOIA Req. 12.22.76]

HEMMING was in to taking military flights. When OSWALD left the Soviet Union in 1962 he asked if he could catch a "military hop" to the United States from Berlin. HEMMING told this researcher:

Even if OSWALD served in the same unit with me I wouldn't recruit the son-of-a-bitch to kiss my ass. The guy had a fuckin' attitude. Let's say I'd been around him a long time, what the fuck was there to like about the son-of-a-bitch? He's like anybody else in the Air Wing of the Marine Corps. Just doing his time. I remember guys that served with me, and only two of them ever got in rubber boats with me and did shit, Marine Corps shit, doing it on their own time. Getting guys to do shit to improve their techniques and to improve their skills on their own time is a bitch. What would be the criterion for OSWALD to have the privilege of hanging out with me? Jesus Christ, that little fucking puke. The guy hadn't done shit. I'm not looking for fucking groupies, I'm looking for fucking counterparts.

On April 1, 1957, HEMMING attained the rank of Sergeant. He was honorably released from active duty and transferred to the Marine Corps Reserve on October 17, 1958. During the later portion of his Marine tour, HEMMING told this researcher he attended Bainbridge Naval Academy Preparatory School. Records confirmed HEMMING attended "NTC, Bainbridge, Md. U.S. Navy Preparatory School" for 15 weeks in 1958. [Armed Forces of the U.S. Report of Transfer or Discharge for JPH] That year he took a course at the Marine Corps Institute on Communist Guerilla Warfare. HEMMING said he was accepted into the Naval Reserve Officer Training Corps after

Bainbridge Naval Academy and he reportedly was to attend the University of Missouri. HEMMING said he changed his mind because he wanted to engage in Special Forces type activity. He served the balance of his tour at the Naval Academy, Annapolis, Maryland. HEMMING told this researcher:

I met with ANGLETON at his home near Tyson's Corner. It came at the end of my tour of duty. [1958] I was 21 years old. It was a casual fucking encounter. If I put my ass on the line in Cuba, I'm going to report on a high level. He was introduced to me as a high official, someone you could trust. I told some people this is what I am going to do, if this can be of benefit beyond me, beyond my personal experience, if it's of some value, let me know. They responded, setting up a couple of meetings. We weren't plotting and scheming like some secret fucking mission. I wanted to get the feel of being a Jedburgh. [OSS men who parachuted behind enemy lines.] I was doing the exact same thing. I wanted to make goddamned sure I wasn't going to do it wrong. I was going behind enemy lines and was going to pose as the enemy. I couldn't get it all from fucking books. There's trade craft in there that doesn't appear in goddamn books. He knew who I was. What I had been doing. Where I was going. I didn't report to ANGLETON. We're talking about a very casual conversation. ANGLETON: 'Young man, let me tell you this. You're jeopardizing your military career. And I can't say, 'Go do this, or go do that.' 'As far as service to your country, I don't see it whatsoever. However, I can make some arrangements that if you do get into a situation, you can be helped. If you get into a position where you learn something of benefit to your country it can be reported. But not on a day-to-day basis. Not even on an infrequent basis. It is more likely when you come out of there and it's all over, or, if you are in a position and somebody makes a decision, you may have to stay in place. But you won't know why, who or whatever and it's going to be a very difficult position. You won't even know that it's coming from me. You'll have to judge yourself whether certain words are used. Whether you remember them. Somebody's given you some key words...

He told me never to attempt to communicate with him from a hostile environment for any reason at all. He said, 'I'm not going to tell you it's not worth it. None of us ever know.' He's got a responsibility not to encourage me to go on this asshole Cuban thing. It would be admitting they had nobody in place. I didn't want to be a spy - a slime ball slipping in and out. I wanted some G/W experience. I was guaranteed I was not [carried on the CIA's books]. Goddamn right, from the outset. I wasn't working for them pricks, if I could be of service, real good.

The guy had homosexual tendencies after a few drinks. Maybe the guy found himself in a situation like that once a year. It's a fondling type situation. I'm not talking about a love affair. Grabbing somebody by the dick or something. That's what happened. The pattern was there. It didn't make me fucking happy. I was there. It happened to me more than once with more than one fucking intelligence type. I thought, 'Maybe it's a test?' No more disagreeable things occurred, so I guess I'd passed the test.

When HEMMING was told that I found this unlikely he remarked:

Out of one side of your mouth you are talking about the guy who may have assassinated the President of the United States but you want to keep his character intact. The guy didn't give a shit about money. The guy gave a shit about his organs and that was it. He didn't give a shit about his lifestyle, even though he was a patrician. Frank Wisner was the same way when I met him.

HEMMING told this researcher:

I saw ANGLETON four times in my life. I'm being recruited and I'm not interested in this shit. I'm interested in Special Warfare. I'm not going into the details of how I met ANGLETON. The only thing that interested me was talking to people who had been in the OSS. These are my fucking heros. They were interesting characters. This was in Virginia. I'm at the Naval Academy Prep School, then I'm at the Naval Academy, up the road from D.C. You know why I got along with ANGLETON? Cause I was raised in East Los Angeles with Mexicans. My old man hated them and beat my ass for hanging out with the beaners. First girls I dated were Mexican.

Mrs. Angleton was asked if she remembered HEMMING:

I have no memory of him at all. I don't think it ever happened. JIM had nothing to do with Cuba. Nobody would come to him about Cuba. What do you mean, 'Perhaps my husband had a hand in it?' You better have evidence. He never knew HUNT. He may have talked to him by phone or maybe he saw him in the office once in awhile. But he never knew him. I never in my life laid eyes on that man. Never heard of CHRIST. People came and went from the house. Be careful of what you're saying. I'm sick of this and I might file a lawsuit. You get a legend going and everyone wants to be part of it. My husband did know JIM McCORD. Not DAVID PHILLIPS.

HEMMING stated his entre into the intelligence community was through his uncle, Art Simpson, the brother of his mother, Catharine Ellen Simpson. HEMMING told this researcher: "He knew John McCone, who was involved with my uncle, Art Simpson. Simpson was one of the un-indicted co-conspirators in John McCone's war profiteering trial. He was found innocent." There was no trial.

Born into a prosperous San Francisco family on January 4, 1902, John McCone was a steel company executive until 1937, when he formed the Bechtel-McCone-Parsons Corporation. This company specialized in the design and construction of petroleum refineries for installation in South America and the Middle East. In 1939 John McCone entered the ship-building business; in 1946, Ralph E. Casey, an investigator for the Government Accounting Office leveled accusations of profiteering against him, and John McCone was called before the House Merchant Marine Committee. McCone was president of the California Shipbuilding Corporation, which was accused by the Government Accounting Office of having made $44 million in profits from an investment of $600,000. "Calship" was owned by Henry J. Kaiser. Henry J. Kaiser was in partnership with Howard Hughes during the war. [Robert Maheu, Next to Hughes, 1992, Harper Collins p133] Kaiser and McCone made convincing arguments, and the matter went no further. They were not indicted. The name "Simpson" was absent from the articles about these hearings. [NYT 9.26.46; Newsweek 10.7.46 p37; Wash. Post 9.26.46; Ross & Wise Invisible Government p193] After the war, John McCone purchased a million-dollar interest in Standard Oil of California which was owned by the Rockefeller family. McCone became a member of President Truman's Air Policy Commission in 1947 and in 1948 he became special deputy to James Forrestal, the Secretary of Defense. In 1956 John McCone stated: "The uninformed believe that radioactive fallout from H-bomb tests endangers life." In 1958 he became chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission. He was an avid supporter of the Dulles brothers and a devout Roman Catholic. On September 27, 1961, President John F. Kennedy announced the appointment of John McCone as Director of the Central Intelligence Agency. Many of the President Kennedy's advisors believed he should have appointed

Robert F. Kennedy Director of the Central Intelligence Agency, or he should have chosen a Kennedy man. [Ross & Wise Inv. Gov. p200]

On HEMMING'S application for CIA employment he listed this financial reference: "Haisa-Pacific Inc., Art Simpson (President)." HEMMING told this researcher: "That was the Asia Pacific Foundation. Simpson was on the board. It was a proprietary."

I HAVE THREE CREDIT REFERENCES IN THE UNITED STATES

8 IF YES, CHECK "YES" TO THE END OF THE LINE AND COMPLETE DETAILS

It was not the Asia Foundation, an organization that was funded by CIA. In 2010 I located an Asia Pacific Capital Advisors (213) 680-8811 345 S Figueroa Street Los Angeles, CA 90071. The Asia Society is located 350 S Figueroa St, Los Angeles, CA 90071 (213) 613-9934 The CIA worked the Rockefeller Foundation, and established numerous "bogus" foundations to "hide" it's funding of the Asia Society and other NGO's. Robert Hemming confirmed that his uncle, "Art" Simpson, was a partner with John McCone in Cal-Ship in San Pedro. HEMMING was telling the truth despite the fact I cannot locate any relevant traces on Art Simpson.

HEMMING - THE MISSING LINK

HEMMING had contact with OSWALD in the Marines, then had contact with ANGLETON. Was HEMMING the "missing link" between OSWALD and ANGLETON? Had he brought OSWALD to ANGLETON'S attention in an informal atmosphere sometime between December 1958 and October 1959:

Did I recommend OSWALD to ANGLETON? I was not interested in the business. I was making a career decision. I'm on my way into the Naval Academy, the Air Force Academy, or NROTC at a university. Or I'm going to transfer over into the Army. I was not impressed with the CIA. The only time I ever thought of bringing former Marines into working with me was when I was in Cuba. I invited some of them down. I was hard pressed to find somebody that had Special Forces type of skills. These guys were sharp and had been in the infantry in Korea then they went to the Air Wing, then they went to radar school. We had similar interests. But nobody was doing what I was doing in the Marine Corps. I was more or less on my own...OSWALD would have never had a contact at that fucking level. Fuck no. What the fuck for? That would be telling OSWALD that he's important. He's used as a pawn. He's a fall guy for the U-2 shit, then he's a fall guy for something else, and then he's a fall guy for the Kennedy thing. This guy doesn't know what he's being used for. You're wrong on ANGLETON.

HEMMING refused to supply the names of anyone who could corroborate his story. He said he testified about the ANGLETON meetings before the HSCA and that "JIM was shown it, and didn't like it." A summary of HEMMING'S HSCA testimony contained no reference to ANGLETON. Marina Oswald 1994: "I do not believe ANGLETON ran him directly. They have lots of people in between and they don't want their nose to show to be dirty. It's a grapevine connection."

HEMMING'S ANTI-BATISTA ACTIVITIES IN 1958

HEMMING told this researcher:

I ran into Cuban exiles at the gun shop up there in Bayonne, New Jersey. Totally causal thing. I was picking up some DEWAT (Deactivated War Trophy) Thompson submachine guns that had a lead plug in the barrel. No registration, no nothing. It's a piece of junk metal. Next door, in this other shop, they sold you a brand new barrel. This guy happened to mention some interesting people who came in. These guys were trying to get some wino American to buy them guns, cause they didn't have U.S. I.D. You had to have a drivers license. Since 1934, it's been illegal for a foreigner to buy a weapon in this country. If you're visiting this country, you can't buy a gun. The owner told me to clue these guys on where to buy the barrels and he'd throw in an extra piece for me. They needed somebody to buy it for them, so I bought it for them. It's as simple as that. Then I carried it down there for them. They didn't know how to do that either. They eventually clamped-down and told everybody to turn their DEWATS in.

HEMMING told the HSCA:

While still in the Marines, he spent more than one weekend in Cuba, contacting 26th of July people. Before his separation from the service, Naval Intelligence became aware of his activities in supplying weapons, and attempted to recruit him.

[HSCA Sum. HEMMING Depo Triplett 5.12.78] No military record has surfaced that substantiated this. In a Freedom of Information Act Request to the FBI dated August 27, 1975, HEMMING asked for documents on

Clandestine activities involving revolution against the Cuban regime of President Fulgencio Batista...Activities with Fidel Castro: Cuban Rebel Army and Rebel Air Force from 1958 to 1960. [ltr. to FBI from JPH 8.27.75; Johnson, Lee and Marina p327; CIA Routing and Record sheet 6.11.62; GPH FOI/PA Req.]

HEMMING left the Marines on October 17, 1958. He received an honorable discharge. In his CIA Biographic Resume HEMMING wrote that his first visit to Cuba occurred in February 1959. HEMMING commented:

That's what I was told to put down. They didn't want me saying I committed any crimes. They said, 'Forget everything before 1959 except Marine Corps service.' They told me not to put down any of my activities prior to January 1959. They didn't want the FBI to get wind of this shit. Then they would haul my ass in front of a grand jury on weapons smuggling charges. It was a matter of days. Very limited contact, but enough to get me put away. It was the first clue that I knew the FBI was after me. I didn't tell the FBI shit. It's a crime to lie to the FBI.

No evidence that HEMMING was involved in Cuban affairs prior to January 1959 has surfaced. The FBI reported February 1959 he went to Cuba, where he became involved in Cuban and Nicaraguan activity and served in the Cuban Rebel Army and Air Force at a salary of $70 to $80 per month on an irregular basis. In August 1960 he left Cuba and returned to California via Mexico. [FBI 105-86406-18] HEMMING stated: "After I got out of the Marines, I messed around in Mexico, Florida and Cuba." He told the HSCA that, "upon leaving the Marines, he became involved in obtaining weapons for the Cuban rebels."

OSWALD: CUBA ON HIS MIND

OSWALD expressed an interest in Cuba around the same time as GERALD PATRICK HEMMING did. Former Marine James Anthony Botelho advised the FBI that he would not have been surprised "if OSWALD would have gone to Cuba because he once mentioned he would like to go to Cuba to train Castro's troops because of the money he would earn." In early 1959 he told his mother and sister-in-law that he wanted to visit Cuba. Before he left Santa Ana, California, OSWALD applied for a passport. His application indicated that he would board a Grace Line ship leaving from New Orleans. "List each country to be visited: Cuba, the Dominican, England, France, Switzerland, Germany, Finland and Russia." The purpose of the trip was to visit Albert Schweitzer College and also visit the University of Tornu in Finland. [WR p687, CIA 591-252A]

OSWALD & HEMMING AT CUBAN CONSULATE JANUARY 1959

In early 1959 OSWALD and HEMMING visited the Cuban Consulate in Monterey Park, California, together. Neither man had been there before. In HEMMING'S Application for CIA Employment he stated that in February 1959 he

...bluffed his way into the Cuban Army, with no prior connections having been made in the U.S. He claimed to have contacted officials in the office of the Cuban Counsel in Los Angeles prior to his departure, and also to have talked to a few members of the 26th of July Movement including a [FNU] Topenez, but received no help.

HEMMING also claimed that after "returning from Cuba," he worked for Topenez at the Cuban Consulate. HEMMING expressed regrets that he hadn't taken OSWALD to Cuba:

I figure I should've taken him under my wing. Then maybe he wouldn't have gone to the Soviet Union. He would have had a fucking ball in Cuba with me.

THE SHOOTING INCIDENT AT THE CUBAN CONSULATE

HEMMING 1993:

January the first, Batista leaves, Castro takes over blah, blah, blah, big headlines. January 2nd. The heads of the 26th of July Movement in Los Angeles put their fatigues and their arm bands on and head over to Monterey Park to Manuel Valasquez's private residence which is considered to be on Cuban soil because it is the Cuban Consulate in Los Angeles. They show up there and Valasquez lets them in, he goes back to Prio, he had been there for 25 years. And he says, 'Sure, you know, the documentation from Havana is on its way' and he knew he could make a phone call to Havana and they would confirm it. These guys would be taking over the Consulate so that no documents would be destroyed and he was in full agreement with it. Now they took over the phones too in the home...The newspaper article told this story and about how old time friends of Valasquez, the counsel from Panama and the counsel from Nicaragua called up because Valasquez had called them and said, 'Don't come to the consulate because Castro's new government people - the barbudos - have taken over the place. Don't come by. We don't want any disputes here. Well, they called up the 26th of July guys - Ishmal Topenez, he's a high official of Cuban Intelligence now. Rafael Topenez same thing - they were the head guys there. When the phone rang they picked up the phone and answered, 'Cuban Consulate.' Well, the Panamanian Consul and the Nicaraguan Consul got together and strapped their guns on and called the place. 'We want to speak to our friend Manolo Valasquez, we don't want to speak to no goddamn barbudos.' 'Mr. Valasquez is taking a nap.' 'But we want to talk to him now. Well, we'll be over there in a few minutes.' And they pulled out like gangbusters and they come up to the door and they knocked on the door and Topenez and he said, 'We're so and so' and they had their jackets back showing their guns. 'So, you guys got guns, want me to swing the door back so you can see more guns?' Get your asses out of here. Slammed the door in their face. They opened fire. Right then. Shot the shit out of the door so they were just about to return the fire and they said cool it. Valasquez comes out: 'Jesus Christ, what's going on here?' The neighbors called the cops and everybody was there, the FBI, the State Department, the whole goddamn crew was there that day. Well the first thing that happened as follow up was that the L.A. County Sheriff set up a command post in an adjacent home down the street with a couple of officers there because half the fucking neighborhood moved out real quick, The revolutions coming - Castro is gonna bomb Los Angeles.

THE POLICE REPORT OF THE INCIDENT

6:30 p.m. Thursday January 1, 1959. At approximately 5:00 p.m. officer Hector Guarara of the LAPD called Sgt. Ray Warner to report that he had tried to contact the Cuban Consul, Manuel Valasquez. A strange voice had answered the phone and he had not been permitted to speak to Valasquez. Sgt. Ray Warner and Officer Sweeny contacted Valasquez at his home. They were told that there was no trouble. There were 35 to 40 people at his house but they said they had come to wish him a Happy New Year. At 5:50 p.m. Warner received a call from Angel Alvarado, Consul of the Republic of Panama. He said that Mrs. Alexander and Mrs. Delgado feared that Valasquez was being held against his will. Officers again went to the house. The Consul General assured officers that the men were guests in his home and nothing was amiss. Adolfo Camarena, Consul General of the Dominican Republic, and Roberto Membrano, Nicaraguan Consul were, during this time, at the Santa Anita Race Track. They drove together to Dr. Rosenda Forteza's house...While they were visiting Dr. Forteza, Mrs. Alexander called saying she was worried about Valasquez. Mrs. Alexander, who police were unable to locate or identify, was evidently calling everyone she knew. Camarena and Membrano proceeded to the Valasquez home. Camarena had a .38 caliber revolver in the glove compartment of his car. He loaded the gun - put extra shells in his pocket.

Armed with the revolver, Camarena pounded on the door of the Consul's house. The door was opened - a man asked, "What do you want?" Camarena screamed "You are all sons of bitches, what are you doing here? I am going to kill you all." The door was slammed in his face and Camarena immediately fired three shots through the door. He then ran around the back of the house, fired a shot in the air, returned to the front of the house, and fired two more shots. He reloaded his gun a fired into the air again. Possibly as many as four shots. An Alhambra Police Reserve Officer, Jack Yetinian, who lived across the street from the Consulate heard the shooting. He grabbed his revolver and ran out in the street, whereupon he fired a shot in the air and yelled at the enraged Camarena to calm down. The police were on their way. He later told police he was afraid that he would have to shoot somebody to stop the commotion.

This version of events was found among Bernard Fensterwald's files and was the result of an investigation by "JmcC." "JmcC" interviewed Captain Warner and told him that Boris Yaro, a photographer for the L.A. Times had suggested I talk to Warner and that he had suggested that I might find information about a particularly newsworthy person contained in the police report. Warner said Yaro is the interested person, about whom he had been speaking, and that Yaro was looking for the name of one particular individual among the list of people present at the Consulate that evening, that Yaro did not find the name in the police report, but that there was an additional list of names of July 26th people who were present but who did not come to the station, and that list was missing from the police records. He further stated that Yaro had been assigned by the Times to research this story, and that Yaro had, through Warner, purchased copies of the photographs from Larry Bartell. Yaro never contacted Warner again to confirm whether or not the individual he sought was present that night. Boris Yaro told Fred and Marilyn Newcomb and me at our meeting prior to visiting Captain Warner that he thought LEE HARVEY OSWALD had been present at the Consul's home.

Frontline researcher Gus Russo was unable to locate the photographs of OSWALD and HEMMING at the consulate. HSCA investigator Al Gonzalez: "Some sergeant in the Monterey Park Police Department had photographs and I requested a trip out there to search for the sergeant and I was turned down by Blakey."

OSWALD SHOWS UP

HEMMING stated in 1978:

So I'm in and out of the place on a daily basis and they told me look, you have diplomatic protection if you want it. So anyway I show up there just about every morning and on this day I got there one hour late. The first week in January and Topenez answers the door. Topenez and his brother headed the 26th of July Movement in Los Angeles. Everybody's happier than shit, said there was a Marine Officer here this morning. I said 'No shit.' These guys weren't sure whether I was Army or Marine or what have you. OSWALD stands up and comes on strong. The Cubans interpreted him to be an officer in the Marine Corps. He says 'I'm LEE.' I said, 'I thought you were OSWALD?' 'That's me, I'm LEE OSWALD.' On Topenez's orders we took the door off the office and put it on the front door to get rid of the fucking bullet holes and Topenez said, 'Hey, Ger, we've got a lot of work to do here and everything, if you guys want to talk why don't you step outside?' So we stepped out into the entre there, the dining room, and he's coming on strong like a fucking car salesman or something. This puts me on my guard. This guy's a razzle dazzle artist. Maybe he's nervous or something because of the shooting in the place. I wondered, 'What's his background?' Most investigators, CIC, CID, what have you, they come on razzle dazzle, pat you on the back, they're in charge of everything. So anyway I said, 'Well LEE, I understand you are an officer in the Marine Corps and are stationed nearby?' 'Well, I'm a non-commissioned officer.' Well, I thought, these Cubans don't know the difference when you say officer and NCO. I said, 'How did you tell them?' And he said, 'In English.' And I said 'Well do you speak Spanish?' And he said, 'A little bit, come si come sa.' 'That's Italian,' I says. 'Oh I can understand it alright but I don't speak their dialect.' So I said, 'Well you're an NCO - what's your rank. That covers quite a few stripes. 'Corporal.' Okay he's with the fucking CID then. Maybe he is a lieutenant and he's playing corporal today. So I said 'What can I do?' 'Well I hear there is a flight coming up from Havana and you think there would be room for me?' 'Well,' I says 'How do you know there is a flight coming up from Havana?' He said, 'Well, you know we were talking about it.' 'So you understand Spanish? They don't speak English. They know seven fucking words, they were talking about the plane that morning.' Well this tells me where he was getting his information from. He's telling me about the plane coming in and nobody knows that shit. I'm the first fucking gringo in the 48 states that knows this - it was just decoded the night before - the fucking flight was canceled at a later date - that's why I took a fucking military flight out of there. So anyway I said 'You say there's a flight coming up here on what airlines are there flights every fucking day? I don't think there's flights into Havana there's shooting and stuff still going on down there.' He said, 'No, there's a special flight that's coming up, is there room on it for me? There's a special flight coming up from Havana through Mexico City and all that and will get in here probably tomorrow or the next day. If possible I would like to catch a ride on down there. I wanna join the revolution.' I said 'What revolution? We won.' He said 'Oh they'll be others maybe, they have not consolidated, or what have you.' I says 'You want to join the revolution? You just told me you were a corporal in the Marine Corps. What are you gonna do, desert?' 'Oh I can get away, they wouldn't know.' 'You got an out of bounds pass, are you stationed around here?' He says 'Yeah, I'm an LTA Max Nine.' Right there, clickety, click, he know's I'm a Marine, obviously, because he's saying LTA Max Nine and he knows I was stationed at the fucking place and he even knew the unit designation, so I'm tempted to pursue a little bit further. He was looking at a fucking Army man, judging from the way I was dressed, working with the Cubans, yet he knows I'm a Marine and I was stationed there and I was in fucking radar too. How does he know this shit? Even the Cubans don't know that. Nobody knows that shit. So the hair is standing up on the back of my neck. I figure, Jesus fucking Christ, what's going down here? What's he trying to do, approach me or what was happening? Yeah, 'I am LTA Max Nine' that tells me a lot. Where ever you're LTA Max Nine you can go wandering around the fucking world on your own. You know, I got people covering me on my watches, you know how they work. Yeah, I know how they work, I went around the world a couple of times knowing how the watches work. You can get away for two or three months at a fucking time because the radar you only work two days of the week at the most. FAA regs. You got to that three off for every one on. If you can get part of your fucking crew to stand watch for you can disappear from the fucking place for weeks. Everybody did it. You can get a free military flight to anywhere in the world. You got to have an out-of-bounds pass. That was the way the regs. were at the time, of course they changed them latter.

I said, 'Well, look, maybe you haven't got enough money for a commercial flight, you probably could get in on a commercial flight, I understand you want me to use some leverage to get you on the plane. I said, 'Well, I'm not going on the plane, its a diplomatic flight from what I understand. I don't know shit about it. And they've assured me that I would probably get on the plane and check with you.' Well, that's interesting and he wanted to change the subject real quick and he says its kinda strange for a jarhead - a word Marines don't use - its kinda strange for a jarhead to wear an Army jump suit and Ridgeway hat. And I was about to say 'Who the fuck told you I was a Marine?' And I'm waiting for him to say, - we're standing out in the street - 'Aren't you worried that the M.P.'s will catch you out of uniform or something?'... 'The (unintelligible) that dropped me off here may not be able to find their way back so I'll go down to this boulevard down here and give them a call.' I said, 'Well, its only three blocks down the hill. You see there was no cars in the driveway, everybody who's coming here is being dropped off.' OSWALD says, 'Well, you think anybody will be coming by I don't mind waiting for awhile.' 'They'll probably mind you waiting.' He says, 'Okay.' Well, later on, I found out that clickety fucking clickety pictures of me and OSWALD were taken just standing there and the FBI was clicking away. Well, copies went to some other people and they still got them. I took a pretty good picture back in the old days.

In 1992 HEMMING stated:

He showed up working for somebody - he seemed to know quite a bit about me and was asking me pointed questions. He was trying to get me on the plane that was coming down from Havana to fly the 26th of July people back down. And the Cubans were leery of him so they run him off. At that time I figured he was Navy Intelligence. They'd been a shooting incident there two days before. He'd read about, supposedly, in the paper and that's why he showed up. OSWALD told the Cubans he was a non-commissioned officer which caused them to think he was an officer. And I asked him: 'You're an officer?' and he says, 'No, I'm an NCO.' He was a private at the time. And he had been working in the same unit I had been working in a year and half before. So ah, this is strange - the guys been to the same schools, he's from the base, he's in Santa Ana, I've been at El Toro. What's the program here? He seemed to know a lot about me too.

Asking pointed questions. So I took him out of the house and stood out in front and chatted with him and run his ass off and he came back again. I knew there were pictures being taken because I knew it was policy at the time. They'd been an international incident.

HEMMING said he told OSWALD that he couldn't help him, and OSWALD left with some friends. The diplomatic flight was canceled. It was stopped in Mexico City. HEMMING told the HSCA:

Right after Castro took power in Cuba, I was in the Cuban Consulate in Monterey Park and OSWALD arrived. OSWALD seemed to know a lot about my background, and I was suspicious. Some one might have thought I knew him better than I did." In 1994 HEMMING said that the local police department photographed everyone that went in and out of the Consulate, and took down automobile license plate numbers: "Anybody taking those pictures, anybody looking at those pictures, would presume we were buddies. I made a call back to the East Coast on the same day of the OSWALD incident. I asked somebody back there, 'Are you puttin' a counterpart on me?' If the guy had been of senior rank and older than me and had been in the old corps I might have taken a counterpart. I got a guy, similar background, claims he's Marine Corps, looks familiar and has made an approach to get in on the Cuban thing. It's a counterpart set up. Get me the fuck out of here. Nobody called back for a day.

In a later interview HEMMING elaborated:

What happened is - what makes it interesting is OSWALD tells Nelson Delgado that he's in touch with the Cubans and he was. It was obvious he had read about or had been shown - became aware of the shooting incident at the Cuban Consulate in Monterey Park which is about 11 miles east of Los Angeles, California, in the foothills. It's a place almost impossible to find. My old man's T.V. shop was about three miles down the road back in the suburban foothills. And if OSWALD had a guy drive him there -- now you'll see later on that he walked away from there. This is what aroused my attention and he wanted to get a ride and I wasn't leaving there for awhile.

HEMMING was asked if he was working for the Cuban Consulate? "I had some business there, yeah. I was working with the Cubans at the time." HEMMING told this researcher:

I gave OSWALD some encouragement in Monterey Park. He asked me a couple pertinent questions. I relaxed for a minute and I said a couple of things that might have encouraged him to go to Cuba. Then I caught myself. He stumbled and he made a couple of mistakes. We were talking about aircraft that I would be flying in Cuba. World War II type aircraft.

This was a tremendous opportunity. I was into that kind of thing. I was slipping. I'm encouraging this motherfucker to desert. I had to back track real quick. But he made a mistake. He knew I was a rated fucking pilot. This guy is standing in the driveway in Monterey Park. How the fuck does he know that? This would cause a fucking warning bell to go off when I was talking to him. And I've never mentioned that to anybody before. I didn't know him. He must have known me. He must have been peeking through the shithouse door. If I'd of fucking encouraged him and had gone out there and talked to him that night and said, 'Hey guy get a dependency discharge, come on down to Cuba, I'll make a space for you.' If I trusted the fucker, he might not have been used as the patsy and the assassination might not have gone down. He might not have fallen into that trap. But I know that ain't fucking true. It would have gone down with or without him. If I had let him go to Cuba and play like a little fucking John Wayne down in Cuba and got that shit out of his fucking system, who knows? But if it was an engineered operation, and the indications are that it was, they'd have found another patsy.

HEMMING 1995:

OSWALD didn't single me out, he was there talking to the Cubans. I took him outside the building. I told the Cubans, 'Don't think this guy is with me. You've already been instructed not to deal with any Americans, not to give any press conferences, you've got this guy inside the fucking house, he sees what's going on, you don't know whether he speaks Spanish or not, you're not supposed to be giving out any visas or anything like that, you don't have the authority to do a goddamn thing so what is this guy doing in the house? ...Here's this gringo wants to join the revolution and he's not being specific as to who...but he's using all these Marine Corps words...I'm wearing an army uniform...I'm in my rebel uniform.

HEMMING VISITS OSWALD AT EL TORO
NELSON DELGADO

When Fidel Castro took power in January 1959, OSWALD was stationed at the El Toro, California Marine Air Base. The Warren Report:

Another Marine, Nelson Delgado, met OSWALD soon after the latter arrived at El Toro. They were about the same age and had similar interests; OSWALD enjoyed trying to speak Spanish with Delgado, who spoke it fluently. Delgado regarded him as a 'complete believer that our way of government was not right' but did not think he was a Communist. Their discussions were concerned more with Cuba than Russia. They both favored the Castro Government and talked 'dreaming' Delgado said, about joining the Cuban Army or Government and perhaps leading expeditions to other Caribbean islands to 'free them too.' OSWALD told Delgado that he was in touch with Cuban diplomatic officials in this country; which Delgado at first took to be one of his lies but later believed. [WR p687]

Nelson Delgado told the Warren Commission:

Delgado: After a while he told me he was in contact with them...I seen this envelope in his footlocker, and it was addressed to him, and they had an official seal on it, and as far as I could recollect that mail was from Los Angeles, and he was telling me there was a Cuban Consul. And just after he started receiving these letters - you see he would never go out, but stay near the post all the time ...he had one visitor. It was a man, because I got the call from the MP guard shack and they gave me a call that OSWALD had a visitor at the front gate. This man had to have been a civilian, otherwise they would have let him in. So I had to find somebody to relieve OSWALD, who was on guard, to go down there to visit this fellow and they spent about an hour and a half, two hours, talking. I guess I came back. I don't know who the man was or what they talked about, but he looked nonchalant about the whole thing when he came back. He never mentioned who he was, nothing.

Liebler: How long did he talk to him, do you remember?

Delgado: About an hour and half, two hours.

Liebler: You never asked OSWALD who this fellow was that he talked to?

Delgado: No, no.

Liebler: Did you connect this visit that OSWALD had at the time with the Cuban Consulate?

Delgado: I did, because I thought it funny for him to be receiving a caller at such a late date - time. Also, up to this time he hardly ever received mail; in fact he seldom received mail from home because I made it a policy, I used to pick up the mail for our unit and distribute it to the guys in there, and very seldom did I ever see one for him. But every so often, after he started to get in contact with these Cuban people he started getting letter pamphlets and newspapers...he also started receiving letters, you know, and no books, maybe pamphlets, you know, little like church things we get in church, you know but it wasn't a church.

Liebler: Were they written in Spanish any of them?

Delgado: Not that I recall.

Liebler: Did you have any reason to believe that these things came to OSWALD from the Cuban Consulate?

Delgado: Well I took it for granted that they did after I seen the envelope you know...something like a Mexican eagle, with a big impressive seal, you know. But I can't recall the seal. I just knew it was in Latin, United, something like that. I couldn't understand. It was Latin.

The CIA:

Delgado's testimony has the cast of credibility. Granting that, it is of basic importance to focus attention on the male visitor who contacted OSWALD at El Toro Camp and talked with him for between one and two hours. The event was unique in Delgado's recollections and actually there is nothing like it - on the record - in everything else we know about OSWALD'S activity in the United States before or after his return to the United States. The record reflects no identification of El Toro contact. Delgado's presumption was that he was from the Cuban Consulate in Los Angeles. Delgado's presumption is that he was from the Cuban Consulate in Los Angeles.

Nelson Delgado, 53, died on January 17, 1993. The cause of death was cancer. [Interview with Mrs. Delgado] HEMMING told this researcher:

I was the man who made this visit. OSWALD was planning on deserting and going to Cuba and that night I'm picking up a military flight at El Toro. I told him to get a dependency leave and to stay away from Monterey Park cause he was just going to draw heat on himself. I was also making sure that I've got a little bit of evidence that I made an effort not to recruit the guy for a foreign conflict. I figured this guy is somebody that will cause me problems, you know. I figured this guy is dogging me. I figured I'd stop by and say 'Hey, you wanna go to Cuba - you can't desert - forget about this revolutionary bullshit.' He's gonna be testifying against me at a fucking federal trial. As I see it now, somebody is trying to use my connections to get OSWALD in. And a lot of other Marines. This took place almost five years after I [first] met ANGLETON. I met him in 1954. I'd been to Cuba several times running guns, and he, like a good federal employee, said 'Watch your ass. I can't condone this kind of shit. We're not in the law enforcement business. If you get nailed, you're through dealing. You don't work for us, you aren't under our umbrella.' I did a couple of weekends of courier duty for him toting shit around like in the old temporary buildings. But never an employee, never on the payroll.

No records that indicated HEMMING was the man who visited OSWALD have surfaced. HEMMING stated that OSWALD did not tell him his name or address when he encountered him at the Consulate. HEMMING was asked "If you didn't know who OSWALD was when you met him at the Consulate, how did you locate him at El Toro?" HEMMING 1995:

The second time he came I said, 'Hey, let me see your ID, I saw his ID.' He came back a second time after I ran him off. Some one calls me and says he's over there. 'Hey your friends back.' Friend, I said 'I ain't got fucking friends here.' They didn't know where I lived, they didn't know my real name. I went back there in my mother's car and said 'What the fuck is up sports?' Took him out to the driveway again. I figured, 'Well they got this place under surveillance - they're gonna get a goddamned picture. I said, 'Look, what is the thing? I told you these people can't do a damn thing for you. Number one, you say you're in the Armed Forces, your an LTA. What makes you think I would know what LTA is? What makes you think I'm a fucking Marine? These Cubans don't know if I'm a soldier or boy scout or fucking Marine. Who the fuck are you, you know?' I asked to see his dog tag. So we parted a little bit hot. I figure he's on my fucking trail for the stolen guns. So there's an additional charge. Remember Marines had deserted from Guantanamo to go into the mountains with Fidel. They nailed two guys on the base for causing that shit.

HEMMING was asked what the real nature of his relationship with OSWALD was: "I don't know. I would have to go jack my dick and think about that and invent some new bullshit story." HEMMING was asked why he failed to come forward and tell this to the Warren Commission or the FBI: "How come I didn't whip out my fucking dick at the goddamn school bus stop, asshole? Come forward? I'll come forward in your fucking mouth. Come forward?"

THE CIA CONSIDERS A HEMMING/OSWALD LINK JERROLD G. BROWN

Jerry G. Brown joined the Office of Security in 1956. Ron Kessler reported that as of 1994 Brown headed the CIA's Office of Security's Clearance Division. Jerry Brown worked with KGB "defector" Yuri Nosenko in 1964. Brown gave new recruits lectures on defectors. Since the CIA had no training program for handling defectors, such talks were the only formal indoctrination CIA officers received on the subject. Brown would say that Americans want to believe that Soviets defect for ideological reasons, to overcome tyranny and oppression. Not so, Brown would tell them. Soviet defectors do no really care about the political system. Nor do they experience any real difficulties in the United States because they are in an alien environment and have to learn a new language and culture. Rather the problems lie in their own psychological makeup: "These people have a distorted sense of their worth, and they think they are entitled to more than they have been given." Brown cited Nosenko as a good example of this.

JERROLD BROWN AND KARL KOECHER

In 1984 Brown worked on the case of Karl and Hanna Koecher. Karl Koecher was a Czech Intelligence Service (STB) officer who had the distinction of being the only deep-penetration agent placed within the CIA. Koecher orchestrated a fake defection, and arrived in the U.S. from Czechoslovakia, in transit from Austria. He became a naturalized United States citizen, and applied for a post at the CIA in April 1972. After passing a polygraph test, Koecher was hired by the CIA in February 1973 as a translator. With his wife, Hana, Koecher attended sex orgies and wife-swapping parties in Washington and New York. At the parties, Hana Koecher, also a Czech Intelligence Service officer, would take on four to five men at the same time. Many of the party goers were fellow CIA employees who swamped classified information as well as sex with the popular couple. The Koechers also frequented the S & M Hell Fire Club and the partner-swapping Plato's Retreat. He supplied the KGB with information which caused Aleksandr Ogorodnik, a key CIA asset in Moscow, to commit suicide after his apprehension by the KGB. Ogorodnik used CIA-supplied poison hidden in a fountain pen to commit suicide. For more than 20 months, ANGLETON was unable to detect Koecher's presence within the CIA. Author Ronald Kessler interviewed ANGLETON in April 1987, and brought up the subject of Koecher. ANGLETON showed no interest in the case. In 1982 a Czech working for the FBI turned Koecher in. The FBI followed him for two years without developing enough evidence to prosecute him. Just before the Koechers were about to move to Austria, Jerry Brown, and other intelligence officers, talked him into confessing by telling him that he was going to be doubled, which was simply untrue. Kessler reported: "Fierer asked Geide about Brown's statement that the couple would be free to go about their business. Did he tell Koecher that was untrue?"

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. And Hana Koecher says 'It sounds great, really great.' And Jerry Brown says, 'And I promise.' Did you at the time say to Koecher or Hana Koecher that he had no authority to promise, did you say that?

A. No sir.

Q. Did you tell him that promise was a lie?

A. No sir.

Because of this false promise of immunity from prosecution, after one month in prison, in February 1986, Koecher was traded in an East-West spy exchange for Soviet dissident Natan Sharansky. [Kessler, Spy vs. Spy page 128]

JERROLD G. BROWN ON THE OSWALD HEMMING CONNECTION

On April 8, 1977, Jerrold G. Brown, the Deputy Chief of the Security Analysis Group of the CIA stated:

1. Reference is made to the attachment which is a copy of a memorandum contained in Subject file dated November 7, 1960, from Chief, Contact Division/00 to Chief, Personnel Security Division/Office of Security captioned 'Jerry P. Henning, Jr. Ex-U.S. Marine who served in Cuban Army and Air Force 00-A-3170536,' a copy of which was sent to WH Division and Counter-Intelligence Staff. It is apparent that the HENNING referred to therein is identical with GERALD PATRICK HEMMING.

2. Of pertinence for the purposes of instant memorandum is that information contained in paragraphs four and five of the reference and related by HEMMING voluntarily to the Contact Division/ Los Angeles Office between October 11, 1960, to October 21, 1960, to wit: 'HENNING returned to California in October 1958...He left for Cuba by air via Miami on or about February 18, 1959, arriving in Havana on February 19, 1959. He claimed to have contacted officials in the Cuban Consul's office in Los Angeles prior to his departure.'

3. In substance relative to the above, the HEMMING file reflects that he served in the U.S. Marine Corps from April 19, 1954, to October 17, 1958. (The 201 file concerning HEMMING reflects that he served in Japan with a U.S. Marine Air Wing.) He then returned to the Los Angeles area for discharge and then left for Cuba February 19, 1959, and joined Castro's forces. He claimed to have contacted officials in the office of the Cuban Consul in Los Angeles prior to his departure.

4. The pertinence of the foregoing is that OSWALD served with a U.S. Marine Air Wing in Japan, and when OSWALD returned to the U.S., he was assigned to Santa Anna, California (Los Angeles area). Extensive testimony contained in the Warren Commission Hearing by OSWALD'S fellow Marines at Santa Ana contain the theme that OSWALD was interested in going to Cuba to join Castro (upon his discharge) in early 1959 and that in early 1959 OSWALD allegedly made some contact with the Cuban Consul's Office in Los Angeles.

5. The above, as well as the Office of Security file concerning HEMMING, which is replete with information possibly linking HEMMING and his cohorts to OSWALD, was brought to the attention of the Inspector General on April 6, 1977. Mr. Leader advised he would pursue the matter. [CIA Memo c/SAG from JGB re JPH OS #429 229]

On April 8, 1977, Jerry G. Brown sent the above document to Chief, Security Analysis Group, to Raymond M. Reardon, to the Deputy Chief, Security Analysis Group, and "Hunt, J." (James Hunt?) "This was prompted by a separate discussion with Mr. Leader on the OSWALD matter. Jerry G. Brown." On April 8, 1977, John Leader stated: "From a perusal of Agency files, which are meager, I have been unable to corroborate a possible relationship between OSWALD and HEMMING. A comparison of their (limited) records did not produce any matches. John Leader, Inspector General Staff." [CIA R. & R. Sheet 4.8.76 Doc 929]

HEMMING told this researcher:

It may appear to an outside observer that I had more than one contact with OSWALD. They know I'm fucking around with the Cubans in 1958. Someone has spotted him around me. They wanted me to insert him in Cuba. This fucking late-comer!!

WILLIAM MORGAN & GUTIERREZ MENOYO FEBRUARY 1959

HEMMING told this researcher:

I took the Guantanamo flight, and then entered Cuba. Then I went back to Miami, got a visa, and went back in. They weren't handing out visas to everyone. It was waiting for me when I got there. I made contact with Felix Pena's people, who I had delivered guns to, and said: 'Here I am.' And that's where the story starts.

In Cuba, HEMMING worked with William Alexander Morgan. William Morgan was born in Toledo, Ohio, on April 19, 1928. He was a paratrooper in the 82nd Airborne Division in Normandy and taught offensive hand-to-hand fighting as a member of the 35th Infantry Regiment of the 25th Division in Japan. He was court martialed in 1947 for armed robbery. Sentenced to five years at hard labor, William Morgan escaped from confinement and was a fugitive until 1950, when he was apprehended, dishonorably discharged, and imprisoned. CIA documents indicated that a "Wm. A. Morgan MS 2001-M" was the Subject of an Army Loyalty Investigation in 1943 and that "W. S. Morgan MS-3547 was given a CIA orientation course on September 8, 1956, but was not interviewed - see above. This man was identifiable with the Subject." HEMMING told this researcher: "W. S. Morgan could be the William Morgan. He was in the Escambray Mountains in 1957. How does a guy from Toledo end up in the mountains? He was a truck driver in Florida who got hooked up with hauling some guns that went to Menoyo's people." In February 1958, William Morgan went to Cuba. He soon became Commander of the Rebel Army in the Escambray Mountains, working with Eloy Gutierrez Menoyo. Eloy Gutierrez Menoyo was a former Havana bar owner whose brother, a Spanish Civil War veteran, was killed by Batista's troops in the unsuccessful attack on the Presidential Palace on March 13, 1957. On November 10, 1957, Eloy Gutierrez Menoyo formed the Second National Front of Escambray. By October 1958, his forces reportedly numbered 3,000 men. William Morgan was married on November 17, 1958, to Olga Rodriguez Farinas, a Cuban school teacher from Santa Clara, who had joined the rebel forces in the Escambray mountains, and later served as his secretary while he was Chief of the General Staff.

LEO CHERNE

In March 26, 1959, Leo Cherne, Executive Director of the International Rescue Committee, told Rudolph E. Gomez, Acting Chief, W/H Division, that:

...he had been in Cuba about a week before...While in Varadero he met a Mr. William Fidelston, (phonetic), a New York lawyer and a friend of his who was in Cuba on business. He told Fidelston that he would like to see Fidel Castro and Fidelston said that a friend of his, Comandante William Alexander Morgan [could help]...Upon his return to Havana Cherne saw Morgan at the Hotel Capri where Morgan is staying. Mr. Cherne said that Morgan was a most impressive person...Morgan claims 2,000 of his former troops are now in the Cuban Army and still loyal to him. Ché Guevara is very envious of Morgan, and had instructed Cienfuegos to have Morgan liquidated. Cienfuegos sent a person whose name began with 'B' and who was his second in command to liquidate Morgan. However, Morgan found out about the plot, was going to kill 'B,' but was stopped from doing so by Eloy Gutierrez Menoyo, who said he did not approve of killing a rebel. Morgan then came to Havana and met an American from Cleveland, Dominick Bartone, who is a well-to-do American businessman and who is trying to sell some Globemasters to Fidel Castro. Dominick Bartone befriended Morgan, and was paying for his room at the Capri. Cherne felt Morgan could be very valuable as he is on excellent terms with Fidel Castro. He knows something about the plans

Fidel Castro has to invade Panama, and is willing to give information in return for advice regarding how his status will affect his American citizenship...Morgan told Cherne that he wanted to do something to help the 3,000 families in the Escambray Mountains who have been bombed out. Cherne says it would cost about $600,000 to rehabilitate these people and probably the IRC could provide quite a bit of this money. Also, that in his opinion, whatever committee undertook this enterprise could gain access to and probably develop Castro with the objective of eventually putting it in the position that it could influence Castro...Cherne said that Morgan had given him a recognition signal which is a Cuban five cent piece dated 1946 with an indenture on the edge of the coin. That anyone who presented this coin to Morgan would know that he was a person in whom Cherne had confidence and his would establish his bone fides.

Leo Cherne was an economist who ran the Research Institute of America, Vice Chairman in 1972 of Democrats for NIXON and was associated with the Free Cuba Committee, the Council Against Communist Aggression and the Citizens Committee for Peace and Freedom in Vietnam. In 1963 or 1964 the International Rescue Committee received $15,000 in CIA funding. When President Gerald Ford appointed Leo Cherne to his Intelligence Oversight Board, John Crewdson of The New York Times reported this. Crewdson retracted some of the charges in his article the next day. The CIA released this document in 1993:

TO: Chief, Contact Division
FOR: Support (Crowley)
SUBJECT: Mr. Leo Cherne, Research Institute of America, New York, New York.

1. We had a long talk with SAC about one thing and another which included his contacts with Cuban refugee revolutionary leaders. He spoke of a lunch and long discussion he had recently with Raul Chibas (See New York Report No. 3383-1). In addition he spoke of his close connections with Sanchez Arrango, and the fact that he had other good relationships with other leaders of the Frente.

2. After reviewing his contacts with various revolutionary Cuban exile leaders and the fact that they seem to have complete respect for his knowledge of Cuba and Cuban affairs (in 1960 (illegible - document ripped) on the platform with Fidel at the 26 July celebration, he (illegible) that he felt certain that within a period of 90 days he could (illegible) a solid revolutionary front out of several groups and movements.

3. Although it was not stated, we felt the remark (illegible) tossed into the conversation to see what reaction it might be. Our reply was that we thought it was very interesting and that we (illegible) that he could probably bring it off. We suggested that he might (illegible) want to talk to others about it. He said that he had dealt with (illegible) Rudy Gomez, the DCI and the DDP people before, but he felt that Rudy Gomez had been transferred to a post in Chile. He may as a result apply to either the DDP or the DCI sometime soon. We also felt that even if the remark was provocative that he has been giving the matter considerable thought and may very well decide to do just that.

[CIA C/DCD 7.28.61 FOIA 07428]

On March 27, 1959 CI/OA requested a search on William Morgan in connection with his contemplated use by the Cuban desk/Western Hemisphere for purposes of contact and debriefing. On March 30, 1959, a Memo for the Chief, Western Hemisphere Division, read: "Central Cover Division concurs in your proposal to use the above individual for the purpose indicated. In keeping with the requirement placed upon Central Cover Division to maintain an accurate register of current non-official cover activity you are specifically requested to advise Central Cover Division / Non-official Cover promptly by memorandum when Subject has been activated. John C. Southard Chief CCD/NC." Was William Morgan going to kill Fidel Castro on behalf of the CIA? The CIA stated: "Western Hemisphere/III/Cuba canceled the request as of May 5, 1959." On May 7, 1959, the CIA stated that:

...a psychiatrist has described him as an 'extreme example of a non-vicious type of psychopath.' His father describes him as emotionally disturbed and in need of psychiatric treatment. In Havana, Subject's reputation is extremely poor and he is described as a braggart and a little on the goofy side. Subject's sister, Marilyn Morgan, AKA Vicky, is reported to be the mistress of Ruben Miro Guardia, the Panamanian revolutionary.

The FBI related: "Morgan has been described as a judo expert and claims he once was a bodyguard for Meyer Lansky. (Deleted) advised this Bureau that Morgan is emotionally disturbed and needs psychiatric help. On August 13, 1959, the CIA reported that on July 27, 1959, or on July 30, 1959, William Morgan told the FBI in Miami that he had contacted the State Department and Kubark in Havana and furnished information to a State Department representative about middle July. The CIA:

ORIGIN: Hugh O. Macauley

DATE: August 11, 1959

On 27 or 30 July William A. Morgan told ODENVY in Miami he had contacted ODACID and KUBARK in Havana and had furnished info to ODACID representative about middle July. Morgan withheld exact nature of information he claimed to have furnished. Request verification above statement.

Western Hemisphere Division Comment: reported Morgan's presence in Miami, Florida, where he reported to AMBOAR that he was the leader of a plot to assassinate Castro and that he had been interrogated by ODENVY in Miami on July 28, 1959.

William Morgan renounced his American citizenship on September 22, 1959. On September 30, 1959, an Indices Search Request, covert, was run on William Morgan. The dates and nature of six of these documents are withheld. On December 7, 1959, the CIA described Morgan as a "Formerly worked for MRD / Double agent for Fidel Castro." The CIA reported "There is a restricted (deleted) folder on the Subject of this 201 held under (deleted)."

THE BOMBING OF THE LE COUBRE

Evidence suggested that on March 4, 1960, William Morgan had an anti-Castro dock worker plant an explosive device aboard the French freighter Le Coubre, which was waiting to be unloaded in the Port of Havana. The Le Coubre was carrying several thousand tons of munitions destined for Fidel Castro's army. When the bomb exploded, 75 people were killed and 300 were wounded. [FBI MM 97-4073-8 p4; NYT 3.5.60, 3,6,60] On March 4, 1960, Oklahoman Jack Leroy Evans fled Havana and arrived in Miami. He explained to newsmen:

The munitions ship which blew up in Havana harbor with a loss of between 75 and 100 lives was sabotaged by an anti-Communist dockworker...Jack Lee Evans, 25, fled to Miami after the explosion, declaring that he was fearful that his knowledge of the plot might put him in a Cuban prison or before a Cuban firing squad. The unidentified dockworker, said Evans, carried a package containing six sticks of dynamite aboard the French freighter, Le Coubre. He was to light the fuse so that the explosion would occur at 5:00 p.m. Friday, after the dock workers quit for the day. Something went wrong, and the explosion came an hour and 21 minutes early causing heavy loss of life. Evans declared he had learned of the plot two days before the explosion, and actually saw the dockworker burn a three inch length of fuse to time it. It burned for 15 minutes. He claimed he also saw the package of dynamite. He said he went to Havana after an exchange of correspondence with William A. Morgan...Evans, a Navy veteran of the Korean War said he did odd jobs and was a bodyguard for Morgan until March 1, 1960, when he was given an assignment to buy cotton seed and machinery for beginning cotton cultivation in Cuba. He displayed a letter of introduction signed by Dr. Fidel Castro...Meanwhile, said Evans, he lived in Morgan's house on 16th Street in the Vedado section. Last Wednesday, said Evans, while visiting an oceanfront home in Havana he learned of the plot to blow up the munitions ship. Evans claimed he went to the ship with William Morgan and others before the explosion, and helped load machine guns and ammunition on a truck to take to the INRA (National Institute on Agrarian Reform) Building where he showed others how to assemble them...Evans said he made no effort to tell anyone the ship was to be sabotaged. Asked why he didn't tell Morgan, he said, 'Morgan never tells you anything and you never tell Morgan anything.' The Oklahoman said he was on the 18th floor of the INRA building when the explosion occurred...Ernesto Che Guevara was on the floor below us, and Morgan was downstairs somewhere. They all hopped into their cars and headed for the explosion scene. 'As soon as they were gone I went down and hurried to Morgan's house where I picked up my clothes and then went to the airport. I got aboard the next plane for Miami.' Asked if he thought Morgan was in on the sabotage plot, Evans replied: 'No I don't think so. He probably knew nothing about it...In Havana Morgan denied he had been aboard the ship with Evans commenting: 'The kid has to be out of his mind to say a thing like that. It's crazy.' Morgan said Evans came to Cuba two weeks ago looking for job 'to help the revolution.' He said Evans stayed at his home and he helped him get a job with INRA, but the young Oklahoman was in no way connected with his staff. Morgan said he last saw Evans at a government office Friday morning, the day of the explosion. He said his wife told him Evans returned to the Morgan home before noon, stayed until after the explosion and left shortly after for the airport. Morgan added that Evans left him a note saying he was going home to sell his horses and his cows and would return to Cuba in a week. Morgan said he himself did not go to the dock area until after the explosion. 'He appeared to be a nice boy and he made a good impression,' said Morgan, 'But he's off his rocker somewhere to say I was on the boat with him.' [Miami Herald E.V.W. Jones]

Evans had arrived in Cuba on January 5, 1959. HEMMING told this researcher:

Jack Leroy Evans puts the finger on William Morgan for the Le Coubre thing. Everybody is waiting for the hammer to fall. I just came back from Saint Julian where Fidel was meeting with Mikoyan. Fidel ain't buying the story that nothing was done here because security was real tight. I told Morgan we should leave Cuba.

The New York Times reported on March 13, 1960, that two Oklahomans [Roger Sharp and John Taylor] were arrested by Cuban authorities while they were photographing an agricultural exhibit at the INRA Building:

The Americans said it was apparent that the Cuban military authorities were attempting to establish some connection between them and a young Oklahoman, Jack Lee Evans...Major Morgan went to the Institute Building where Sharp and Taylor were being questioned. They told him they had never heard of Mr. Evans, it was reported. However, the two Americans were taken to military intelligence headquarters and questioned before being released about midnight.

The Cuban Government reported:

A former CIA agent made public statements about this participation of the CIA in the criminal act carried out against the French steamship Le Coubre, where 100 Cubans were killed and about 200 seriously injured. He offers details about his accomplishments by blaming a slight damage in the mechanism of the blowing equipment which was used. [Opening Statement of GOC given to Sen. McGovern. Released 7.30.75]

A document about William Morgan was titled, "FBI Current Intelligence Analysis March 6, 1959." In a Freedom of Information Act Request to the FBI, HEMMING asked for documents on his Activities with Major William Alexander Morgan, Cuban Rebel Army, from 1959 to 1960, with specific reference to anti-Trujillo (Dominican Republic) operations during the summer of 1959 and the S.S. Le Coubre steamship explosion in February 1960 at Havana Harbor.

According to Edward Epstein, OSWALD'S hero was "Major William Morgan...At one point, OSWALD suggested that Delgado accompany him to Cuba, where they both could emulate Morgan." In March 1960 the Second National Front of Escambray dissolved itself and became a part of the 26th of July Movement. Two of the signatories to this agreement were William Morgan and Eloy Gutierrez Menoyo.

HEMMING AND THE JULY 1959 NICARAGUAN INVASION

In September 1959 HEMMING was detained for complicity in the plotting of a "Castroite" invasion of Nicaragua. HEMMING told this researcher:

At that point in time, in late 1959, Camillo Cienfuegos had set up a third invasion. We'd already done the Dominican thing, there was four days of fucking disaster. Then we did the Haitian thing with Andre Fortes. There was about five days of disaster, everybody got fucking slaughtered, and I barely got out of there myself. The third one was a Nicaraguan operation.

It was all going to be done in Saint Julian. What I didn't know was that they were flying the B-26s out and filling them with bombs and unloading them, putting them in the bunker. All the bombs and the fifty caliber shells and rockets are being stored in the bunker. At Saint Julian we only had officially, we only had two F-51s, we had TDM that was being repaired, an AT-6 that we were putting together at Aeronautical technical school. But unbeknownst to me, all the Nicaraguans pilots and a bunch of Cuban pilots were getting everything ready at Saint Julian to get straight to fucking Puerto Cabazes [phonetic] and knock the shit out of them. A Nicaraguan named Francisco Frixione [phonetic] contacted a number of troopers in the Paratroop Regiment to recruit volunteers for a Nicaraguan expedition. About 15 of my paratroopers were involved.

The expedition turned out to be well infiltrated with anti-Castro personnel and Batistianos. Its primary aim was the acquisition of arms for anti-Castro revolutionaries, and to embarrass Fidel Castro by tying him politically to a movement designed to overthrow Anastasio Somoza. The expedition never left Cuba and Frixione's men were captured in Camaguey sometime during September 1959. HEMMING:

You had two invasions of Nicaragua. Somoza got into the act too, he was happier than shit. Nobody could figure why these people weren't shot, why there wasn't a state of siege declared. The real guerillas, things got real peaceful for them. Pastora told us right away that everything got peaceful as shit when this invasion stuff started going down. Like a fucking joke. They were all provocations.

In September or October 1959 Hemming told the HSCA that he observed Jack Ruby at the home of William Morgan:

Triplett: Have you ever had occasion to meet Jack Ruby?

Hemming: See him. I have just seen him in Havana.

Triplett: Have you ever seen him in Dallas?

Hemming: I doubt it.

Triplett: Did you talk to him in Havana?

Hemming: This was at Morgan's house in 1959. The only time I recall the guy and the way he talked and made reference to a couple of things. Everybody that was trying to get to Fidel that was stupid came to Morgan. They thought he was in. He was not. This was a – as I recall this, Morgan's place was full of people. Cleve Roberts was there from Channel 12 in Los Angeles, and I used to watch his news show all the time when I was a kid. He was there interviewing Morgan for some special and what have you. Later, when Morgan was executed, Cleve Roberts, I watched his news because I figured he would use a film clip from that interview at Morgan's place, and he did. I recall standing in the background, the camera swinging, and I was trying to stay out of camera range. A couple of his buddies from Toledo were there and all these pseudo-quasi mobster types hanging around. It was the most Americans I had ever seen there. Frank Emmick was there. Jack Ruby was there while the cameras were filming. This was September, October 1959. The only things happening then were people trying to sell jeeps or aircraft to Castro. I think the conversation then was Morgan referring to me. "Gerry tell them they are getting Belgium weapons" – that they got Italian artillery and they are getting British planes that they had paid for and that it is almost impossible to sell American equipment to Castro at this time. What I recall is, I had never seen the particular model of jeep that the Cuban Air Force had and some of the people in the Cuban army used. It was a miniature jeep. It is the same jeep the Post Office has right now with the sliding doors on it. I drove one one time and I almost turned it over. Here is this clown telling me he sold those jeeps to the Cuban Air Force. Ruby was to me --- I guess he was a Jew from Chicago --- and I am thinking: "Yeah, I could have killed myself in that jeep because of this guy" and how he is here, he does not know Morgan. Could not even send a telegram to Fidel at that point, in time because of the fiasco of the Trinidad Affair, the Trujillo thing, and how close Morgan came to getting axed on that particular venture. Here these people are showing up every day, finding their way to Morgan's place again. It is going to be full of these tourists and what I call feather merchants. I think I made a couple of choice comments about the jeeps and Morgan, I think, referred to Bartone. He was the one with Diaz Lanz and Fiorini trying to sell Fidel all these junk airplanes. I was quite familiar with that operation.

HEMING

The FBI reported:

On March 28, 1960, MM T-2, another Government agency which conducts personnel and intelligence investigations made available information concerning GERRY HEMING, who was then residing in Havana, Cuba. HEMING was described as an American with the Cuban Revolutionary Air Force, stationed in Pinar del Rio. It was reported that he claimed to be a T-33 jet pilot whose mission was to intercept airplanes based in the United States which fly over Cuba to destroy sugar cane fields. It was also reported that he had formerly been stationed in the Isle of Pines, Cuba.

This information also indicated that HEMING was an associate of Major WILLIAM A. MORGAN. Major WILLIAM A. MORGAN was a United States citizen who went to Cuba and fought as a revolutionary against the Government of BATISTA, which fell on January 1, 1959. MORGAN was later arrested and executed by the CASTRO Government on a charge of counter-revolutionary activity. The information from MM T-2 also reflected that HEMING was then wearing Army fatigues, was armed with a pistol, and wore a United States paratrooper badge. He said he had been in Cuba for two years.

HAMING

On April 4, 1960, MM T-3, another Government agency which conducts personnel and intelligence investigations, furnished information indicating that GERALD P. HAMING, a 23 year old United States citizen who had been born in Los Angeles, California, was then employed by the Cuban Revolutionary Air Force at San Julian as a parachutist and was then engaged in training Nicaraguans. At this time HAMING reportedly said that there were only 25 parachutists in Cuba, that all were willing to fight in Nicaragua and that they would come well armed. HAMING was described as having been a flyer who was a Marine in Korea and at the Guantanamo Naval Base and had been warned when he was fighting for Cuba that he could lose his United States citizenship. HAMING indicated that this was not important to him.

This information also reflected that HAMING had indicated an interest in going to Costa Rica to coordinate activities between Cuba and Costa Rican groups there. He was reported to have indicated a desire to travel to the United States under a false name and Cuban passport to sell liberty bonds in California and obtain arms and planes from a ranch in Texas. He was also reported to have proposed a scheme to steal two small planes from an air base in Texas and claimed that he had friends in the U. S. Marine Corps who would obtain arms from Marine Corps arsenals.

HAMING also is reported to have stated that when FIDEL CASTRO and Soviet diplomat ANASTASIAS MIKOYAN visited the San Julian Air Base, they discussed Soviet aid to Cuba, (including secret assistance in the form of men and arms).

It is noted that MM T-2 in a report dated July 19, 1960, furnished information regarding a small group of Nicaraguans, Americans and Cubans who composed the MOVIMIENTO DE LIBERACION SANDINO NICARAGUA (SANDINO MOVEMENT FOR THE LIBERATION OF NICARAGUA). It was reported that the goal of this group was to gather materials of war, money, and to recruit non-Cubans in Latin American countries and the United States to serve in the military forces with which they intended to invade the Republic of Nicaragua. The group had the support of FIDEL CASTRO and the Cuban Government as well as Comandante WILLIAM A. MORGAN and had been promised weapons, ammunition, clothing, and medical supplies. Among the individuals identified as members of this group was JERRY HEMING, who was reported to have fought in the Cuban revolution, to wear a Cuban Air Force uniform, and to be a Sergeant in the Cuban Air Force. As of the time of that report, HEMING was believed to be in Los Angeles, California, visiting his parents.

On April 4, 1960, HEMMING was mentioned in a CIA Intelligence Report titled: "Persons in Cuba Involved in Nicaraguan Revolutionary Affairs." The CIA reported:

In February 1960 Pastora Molina, Nicaraguan opposition leader who left Costa Rica about February 20, 1960, after leading guerilla attacks against Nicaraguan regime from Costa Rica border area for several months, was winning increasing support among Cubans who favored the overthrow of Nicaraguan President Luis Somoza. If Pastora initiated a campaign against the Nicaraguan Government, he could count on immediate substantial aid in arms and men from Cuba. The Cubans would arrange public demonstrations to seek aid for Pastora, ostensibly spontaneous, but in reality, pre-organized with governmental approval. Communists in Cuba would take advantage of the situation to penetrate the revolutionary movement, following the guidance of Che Guevara and Raoul Castro. Fidel Castro, Prime Minister, was not disposed to support foreign revolutions because he feared an invasion of Cuba, and wanted to be in a position to defend his country...Francisco Frixione, Nicaraguan revolutionary leader in Cuba had hoped to attend a meeting of opposition leaders but was unable to obtain a visa for the trip. Frixione and Enrique Lacayo Farfan, opposition leader in Costa Rica, were quarreling and no longer cooperated...The following paragraphs lists persons in Cuba in February 1960 who were participating in or supporting Nicaraguan revolutionary plans and gives known details of their activities: GERALD P. HEMING, a 23 year old United States citizen born in Los Angeles, California, was employed by the FAR at San Julian as a parachutist. HEMING was engaged in training Nicaraguans and said that there were only 25 parachutists in Cuba...all were willing to fight in Nicaragua and would go well armed. HEMING, also a flyer, was a Marine is (illegible) and at the (illegible) Naval Base, and had been warned when he was fighting with Castro that he could lose his citizenship, but it was not important to him. He said that the base at St. Julian could be used as a location from which to fly food and arms to rebels fighting within Nicaragua. He knew of a number of Belgium automatic rifles that could be made available to Nicaraguan rebels. According to HEMING, a Mexican island 150 miles from Cuba might be used as a base of operations for sending a plane or boat to Nicaragua, since it was poorly policed. He said he would furnish a C-47 aircraft when it was needed. Those associated with the revolutionary activities practiced discretion to avoid having rumors reach Fidel Castro, who did not favor the entire opposition movement, having become discouraged with the disagreements and lost faith among Nicaraguan rebel leaders. The Cuban Minister of Government was aware of these activities and was sympathetic to the cause...

Concerning travel, HEMING said he would like to go to Costa Rica to coordinate activities between Cuban and Costa Rican groups. He also hoped to go to the United States, traveling on false name and Cuban passport. He had spoken to William Morgan and believed that Morgan could obtain the passport for him. In the United States HEMING wanted to sell Liberty Bonds in California and obtain arms and planes from a ranch in Texas. He claimed he could do this by using connections he used to obtain similar material when he was aiding Fidel Castro. He also claimed he had gone to Havana to talk with Frixione about the trip, and supplying arms to Pastora. He had wild schemes to steal two small planes from an Air Force base in Texas, possibly Brownsville, and he said he had friends in the Marine Corps who would obtain arms from corps arsenals. Another scheme was to hold up a truck carrying clothing and arms from Virginia to Indianapolis on a regular bimonthly trip...According to HEMING when Castro and Mikoyan visited San Julian they discussed Soviet aid to Cuba, including secret aid in men and arms.

In a Freedom of Information Act Request to the CIA HEMMING asked for documents regarding:

Incident with Major Fidel Castro Ruz and Vice Premier of the USSR, Anastas Mikoyan, at Julian Air Force Base, Cuba, in 1960. Incident regarding United States Air Force C-54 aircraft with U.S. military personnel on board that illegally landed at San Julian Air Base, Cuba, 1960.

HEMMING told this researcher:

The first time they busted me, in July 1960, I was 79 days on death row, little monk cells, at La Cabana, where they were shooting people by accident in the middle of the night. They didn't have any room, so they put everyone in Gallery 14. JOHN MARTINO was there. William Morgan was there. The hardcore guys. I got out under another guy's name. When they transferred me to Secret Police Headquarters from La Cabana they called for this guy. I said, 'Hey, I'm him.' It was very fucking slick.

HEMMING also said that Che Guevara persuaded Fidel Castro's intelligence agents (the G-2, later known as the DGI) to release him from military prison on July 15, 1960. A July 19, 1960, OUSARMA report stated:

In Havana there is a small group of Nicaraguans, Americans and Cubans who composed the Sandio Movement for the Liberation of Nicaragua. Their immediate goal is the gathering of support in the form of materials of war and money from Cuba. And the recruitment of non-Cubans from Latin American countries and the United States to serve in the armed force with which they intend to invade the Republic of Nicaragua. Their ultimate goal is the establishment of their democratic form of government in Nicaragua the later expand to El Salvador, Honduras and Guatemala.

This group had the support of Fidel Castro and the Cuban Government as well as Commandante William Morgan and the Second National Front of Escambray, who have promised them weapons, ammunition, clothing and medical supplies. There is also a tentative commitment of money from the 26th of July Movement. Because of the political implications Fidel Castro has refused to commit troops for the movement, saying these must come from elsewhere.

Among the individuals identified as members of this group was JERRY [sic] HEMMING, U.S. citizen. Age about 26. Caucasian Height 6' 7". Talkative, of average intelligence, claims to have served in the U.S. Marines. Fought in Cuban revolution, wears Cuban Air Force Uniform. Claims to be a Sergeant in the Cuban Air Force. Stationed at Air Force Base in Pinar del Rio. Presently believed to be in Los Angeles, California, visiting." [FBI HQ 105-86406-p8, Army Intel. Report #2146986: Subject: Sandino Movement. Sam Kail?]

DAVID PHILLIPS was asked: "Now did there ever come a time to your knowledge when the Agency, around the time of the Cuban situation, was organizing bogus invasions of Nicaragua?" PHILLIPS refused to answer, citing his CIA secrecy oath. HEMMING was arrested a second time in August 1960. HEMMING left Cuba in late August or early September 1960. He flew to Mexico and remained there until October 1960. In Mexico City HEMMING made contact with the Sandinista underground. HEMMING claimed that one of his contacts was a woman named "Sylvia Duran." HEMMING told this researcher:

The Cubans thought I was in Central America with the Sandinistas. The Sandinistas thought I had gotten misplaced due to being arrested on my way out of Cuba."

His own version of his experiences was:

"After getting my companions out of Cuba, I made my way to the United States via Central America. Upon arrival in the U.S., I spent long hours typing out CIA reports. After a period of weeks with no orders from the CIA, I decided to drop my cover and proceed to the Miami area.

The FBI reported:

Regarding his past experiences: HEMMING mentioned that he went to Cuba in January 1959 and stayed until August 1960. He said he was in the Cuban Revolutionary Air Force, had worked closely with WILLIAM ALEXANDER MORGAN and had commanded the St Julian Air Force Base located in Pinar del Rio, Cuba, until this base was visited by RAUL CASTRO, head of the Cuban Armed Forces. HEMMING related that RAUL CASTRO did not like Americans in positions of command and had questioned HEMMING concerning his attitude in the event of an invasion of Cuba by American forces. HEMMING said that he replied that "If a man shoots at you, you shoot back regardless of the flag he flies". HEMMING also advised that he "out-sloganed the sloganers", indicating he had talked against American imperialists and adapted his comments to the expediency of the situation. He said in the spring of 1960, MORGAN's position in relation to the Cuban Government began to deteriorate and HEMMING was twice arrested on suspicion of counter-revolutionary activity. He said he continued to wear the uniform of the Cuban Revolutionary Air Force but lived in a hotel in Havana and was inactive for three months. He left Cuba in August 1960 and went to Mexico City where he spent two weeks after which he returned to California.

HEMMING entered the United States in October 1960. He was granted a security clearance by the CIA that month; however, this document is still classified as it links HEMMING to CIA. All we have of it is a document that titles it and indicates why it is being withheld.

When HEMMING returned to Los Angeles he contacted the Los Angeles CIA Domestic Contacts Division on in late October and on November 1, 1960. HEMMING:

Some proposals were made to me about going back in place. Then another was to take a team in, but I didn't approve of them. I could have gone back overtly. I was the head guy for the Sandinistas. I ran an air base there, flew supply missions and inserted personnel inside Nicaragua. Morgan had been busted and that raised the paranoia level. After Morgan was arrested, I'm talking to OO." The information he gave the Domestic Contacts Division concerned "the markings of Cuban aircraft, operational capabilities and locations, missions, etc. along with reports regarding anti-Communist or anti-Castro leanings of Cuban, Nicaraguan and other nationals within the Cuban Rebel Armed Forces. [CIA 89; JPH ltr. 8.27.75]

The CIA confirmed that "HEMMING was probably telling the truth about furnishing reports to the Field Office...The contact produced 14 reports on Cuba. Our initial contact with HEMMING was in October 1960..." The CIA "Initial debriefs are in OO-3 reports 3/169, 982, 3/170,124, 3/170,077, 3/170,536."

HEMMING'S DOMESTIC CONTACTS DIVISION INTERVIEWS

On October 11, 1960, (and subsequently on October 12, 1960, and October 21, 1960) the Domestic Contacts Division contacted HENNING, who related the following: He left High School in the middle of his junior year to join the U.S. Marine Corps (enlisted April 19, 1954 #1,488,24).. He reportedly rose to the rank of sergeant and during the later portion of his tour(he was discharged on October 17, 1958) he attended Bainbridge Naval Academy Preparatory School. HENNING claimed to have been accepted into the Naval Reserve Officer Training Corps subsequent to his attendance at Bainbridge, and he reportedly was slated to attend the University of Missouri. He changed his mind and decided not to enter the NROTC program because he wanted to engage in Special Forces type activity. He stated he tried several times to receive training of this type at Ft. Bragg and Ft. Benning but he was not successful. He then decided to leave the service and served the balance of his tour at the Naval Academy, Annapolis, Maryland.

HENNING returned to California in October 1958 and worked at various odd jobs including heavy labor, as he put it "...to get in shape." He left for Cuba by air via Miami on or about February 18, 1959. His reasons for going to Cuba are not completely clear in the mind of this writer (nor does the writer think they are completely clear in HENNING'S mind), but among the reasons undoubtedly are the following:

- a. A strong desire to experience the excitement and glamour of warfare, and particularly guerilla warfare, and the opportunity to gain experience in this field.
- b. The opportunity to combine the above mentioned desire with identification with a 'just' cause.
- c. A desire to see for himself what was going on in Cuba, and possibly to carve a niche for himself from which he might be able to influence later developments.

5. At any rate, HENNING reportedly bluffed his way into the Cuban Army, with no prior connections having been made in the U.S. (He claimed to have contacted officials in the Cuban Counsel's office in Los Angeles prior to his departure and also to have talked to a few 26th of July Movement members including a (FNU) Topenez, but received no help there).

6. He reported that Captain Johnny Mitchell, a U.S. national who in February 1959 was serving at Headquarters, General Staff, Camp Columbia, befriended him and obtained a pass for him. He talked to a number of Cuban officers including Maj. (FNU) Castillo and Maj. Camilo Cienfuegos. The latter sent him to Major Enrico Borbonet Gomez a Fort Benning trained officer (1948 or 1949) who was forming a paratroop regiment.

7. Major Borbonet reportedly did not like HENNING or want him in his unit, but HENNING obtained orders from Camillo detailing him to the paratroop regiment as an officer. Maj. Borbonet refused to accept him as an officer so he went into the unit as a Sergeant about the end of February 1959. He helped train paratroopers first at San Antonio de los banos Air Force Base and later near San Jose de los Lajas, a small town about 35 miles southeast of Havana on the central highway. See 00 reports (Deleted as of 2010) and (Deleted as of 2010) for FPI gathered from HENNING in initial debriefs. Advance copies of additional FPI collected from him will be forwarded if desired.

8. In December 1959 HENNING transferred to the Cuban Air Force, since the paratroop regiment was obviously bogged down in training and had not even completed one jump. He was stationed at Saint Julian Air Force Base (inactive) where he flew patrols and helped train militia during the day and led some reconnaissance patrols against the anti-revolutionaries at night. He obtained a discharge from the Cuban Air Force in mid-June 1960 (between June 10, 1960 and June 13, 1960) and finally left Havana about August 30, 1960 when he entered the U.S. via San Antonio, Texas.

9. While in the Cuban Army, HENNING became involved with a number of Nicaraguans who allegedly were interested in mounting an invasion of Nicaragua from Cuba. While the details of this story as related by HENNING are somewhat involved, the basic outline is roughly as follows: a Nicaraguan named Farfan contacted a number of troopers in the Paratroop Regiment to recruit volunteers for an expedition to Nicaragua. About 15 of HENNING'S troopers were involved. The expedition turned out to be well-infiltrated with anti-Castro personnel and Batistianos and the expedition appeared to have as its primary aim the acquisition of arms for anti-Castro revolutionaries and also to embarrass Castro by tying him politically to a movement designed to overthrow President Somoza in Nicaragua.

10. The expedition never left Cuba and Farfan's men were captured in Camagway sometime during September 1959. HENNING alleged that this aborted expedition got him interested in Nicaraguan activities in Cuba and he decided to find out more about them both for his own background and an attempt to protect his men in the Paratroop Regiment. He then initiated contact with a number of Nicaraguans, Cubans, Dominicans, etc. who had as their primary aim the overthrow of established governments either in Nicaragua or the Dominican Republic.

11. HENNING mentioned contact with Chester Lacayo, who reportedly was located at one time in Washington, D.C. and who was attempting to establish a base to train Nicaraguans in Cuba prior to invading Nicaragua; plus contact with (FNU) Ramirez, a Dominican national who had been involved in the stealing of a Cuban plane which was flown to the Dominican Republic; and Dr. Francisco Frixiones, a Nicaraguan exile who had been implicated in the assassination of ex-President Somoza and who had worked closely with Farfan until a break occurred between Frixiones and Farfan in December 1959.

12. HENNING was arrested by the Cuban G-2 on or about July 19, 1960, along with Frixiones and Harold Martinez (who HENNING described as the number two man in the Nicaraguan Movement located in Honduras). The three men were held for about five days then released. Frixiones, according to HENNING, now is located in Venezuela. Harold Martinez had planned to leave Cuba with HENNING and to spend some time in Mexico City. Harold Martinez could not leave the country, according to HENNING, because the Nicaraguan Communists in Cuba had applied pressure to the Cuban Communists in order to prevent his return to Honduras and or/ Nicaragua.

13. HENNING also noted that Alejandro Martinez, (Harold's brother) was the leader of a revolutionary column (Frente Revolucionario Sandino) which recently was captured by elements of the Honduran Army. Alejandro reportedly is now in prison in Honduras. HENNING also referred to two Americans located in Chicago, Jack Nordeen and John Sels, who recently were captured in Telucigalpa when they turned over some wounded Nicaraguan rebels to the Honduran Army.

14. These two Americans were removed from a Honduran prison and returned to the U.S. sometime between mid-June and July 1, 1961, under what were rumored in Cuba to be mysterious circumstances. Rumors in Cuba alleged that either CIA or FBI officials were instrumental in having these two men returned to the United States. HENNING states that is his opinion that they both merely were deported from Honduras. He connected these two Americans with a Nicaraguan in Chicago named Guillermo Majia who reportedly is awaiting trial in Chicago on charges of recruiting for a foreign government.

15. HENNING claims to be standing by in anticipation of a journey to Honduras in connection with the movement headed by the Martinez brothers. He maintains that the Martinez brothers are anti-Communists who believe that neither the Cuban nor the Nicaraguan Communists are to be trusted. HENNING claimed that Harold Martinez has close contacts with Cuban counter-espionage officials who have told him that the Counter-Espionage Corps (CEC) regards the other Cuban intelligence agencies (G-2, DIFAR and DIER) as infiltrated by Communists and as enemies of the CEC. HENNING reported that both the Martinez brothers and Frixiones were very much afraid that any move they participated in Nicaragua would merely open the door for the Nicaraguan Communists in Cuba to move in and exploit that chaotic situation for their own benefit.

16. HENNING may have decided to contact CIA because of remarks made by a Sgt. Aldo Busto and by Dr. Francisco Frixione. Busto, an ex-Batista soldier who was a fugitive from the Castro regime when HENNING left Cuba, reportedly said the CIA helped out in Guatemala and that it would be a good thing if they could help out in Cuba. Dr. Frixiones stated that Chester Lacayo had been close to right in contacting U.S. Secretary of State Christian Herter in an attempt to elicit support for Lacayo's Nicaraguan revolutionary movement.

17. While it is difficult to assess HENNING'S true motives for his past activities, and possibly still more difficult to ascertain where his true loyalties lie, it does appear that he might be useful either now or in the near future. From conversations to date (three short sessions) it appears that HENNING is not so closely allied with his Nicaraguan friends that he would find it impossible to concentrate his attention elsewhere. His interest in Special Forces type activity appears to transcend all other interests, and he probably would not hesitate to return to Cuba if such were thought useful.

18. His rationale in discussing his connection with the Nicaraguan movement (the Martinez brothers) ties in directly with his (and many others) general thesis of intelligence operations connected with revolutionary movements. HENNING maintains that the United States should utilize a number of Special Forces types who may be able to penetrate certain revolutionary movements at an early stage, attain positions of real influence within the organizations, and subsequently attempt to channel the movement's activities into areas which are most favorable, or at worst least detrimental to U.S. interests. He foresees the inevitable fall of President Somoza in Nicaragua and, furthermore, that this fall will be brought about by the Martinez brothers. He also claims to recognize the dangers of Communist takeover inherent in the overthrow of President Somoza, and he hopes that the United States will be quick to prevent such, presumably through the use of people like himself.

19. HENNING maintains that he is "first and foremost" an American, and that his true loyalty remains with this country. This may well be true, but it should be noted that his reasoning appears to be based primarily on his respect for the superior ability exhibited by the U.S. military personnel he has served with in the past. He appears to be little influenced by deep beliefs in democratic principles.

HEMMING told this researcher: "Whenever I checked in with 00, they told ANGLETON. He probably had a flag on my name. Before they can interview and debrief you they got to give a preliminary security clearance. It goes to ANGLETON. I was debriefed on October 11, 1960." On October 28, 1960, the CIA generated the following Official Routing Slip: "To Acting Chief, CI Station. (initials illegible). C/CI/SIG Remarks: This would appear to be your department. If not, please let me know. If yes, would you prepare a reply for Mr. Bissell's signature. Suspense November 7, 1960. DDP/ASST. The FBI reported in January 1961: "Although HEMMING claims to be anti-Communist, he is amoral...he is capable of anything..." [FBI HQ 2-16963-p2] On February 13, 1961, JOSE CRUZ HERNANDEZ, Los Angeles, California, manager of a Cuban relief house operated by the Society to Aid Cuban Anti-Communists, advised that on the previous day a man who said his first name was GERRY appeared at CRUZ's home.

GERRY appeared to be an American and said he was paratrooper in the Army of FIDEL CASTRO under the command of WILLIAM A. MORGAN. GERRY said that he had been a trainer of Militiamen in Cuba and that he had been to Nicaragua in 1959 and 1960. GERRY told CRUZ that he had been in Los Angeles a year and expected to return to Nicaragua, expressing the belief that Nicaragua would be successful in its revolution and would overthrow the SOMOZA regime there.

The CIA granted HEMMING a POA and reported:

HEMMING informed Hendrickson of the Los Angeles Field Office that he is moving to Miami, Florida, and would arrive there Monday, March 20, 1961. Subject stated he was going to contact Jimmy Gentry and at that time the two men were going to proceed with a plan of activities aimed at organizing a small group of 'Professionals' (experienced revolutionaries) who would attempt to conduct certain reconnaissance operations on the mainland of Cuba via parachute drops and either light plane or water pickups. Subject stated he wanted to do what he could in Miami to attempt to unite anti-Castro forces there and also lessened influence of a number of 'mercenaries' who had joined various of these movements and were doing it more harm than good while bleeding off much of the available money. [OO-1 3/163,427 March 31, 1961] One report indicates that in March 1961 HEMMING informed Hendrickson of the Los Angeles Field Office that he had moved to Miami Florida...DD/P has never had any operation relationship with HEMMING. Our records reflect no contact with HEMMING occurred until March 16, 1967. [CIA Memo Seq. Docs. HSCA 2.10.65; HSCA Seq. Doc.00055]

Another CIA report stated:

HEMMING was approved for an ad hoc contact clearance on March 6, 1961. He was the source of 15 contact reports on Cuba... Subject's file reflects an ad hoc clearance was granted on March 6, 1961, for debriefing on military, economic and political developments in various Latin American countries. At that time HEMMING was engaged in revolutionary activities in Nicaragua. On June 2, 1961, the Contact Office was advised that National Agency Name Checks on HEMMING disclosed no pertinent derogatory information.

The Bay of Pigs invasion of Cuba failed in April 1961; at that point HEMMING put together INTERPEN, aka PATRICK'S Raiders by taking over a group assembled by George Tanner of Miami. Many early INTERPEN members had previously been associated STURGIS and Rolando Masferrer. Others were attracted as a result of the publicity generated by STURGIS and HEMMING in the press. HEMMING'S crew lived at Nellie Hamilton's boarding house UNTIL July 1961 when she kicked their asses out because of all the law enforcement and media people who visited her boarding house. HEMMING described the group as composed of young Americans "who had been upset as the result of the unsuccessful Cuban invasion." On May 11, 1961 and May 18, 1961 the FBI in Miami, Florida, generated a document about HEMMING titled "Anti-Communist Legionnaires, File 2-312." The FBI reported:

On April 28, 1961, MM T-1 advised that the leader of the ANTI-COMMUNIST LEGIONNAIRES was a tall American, name unknown, who had been recruiting members for the organization with the view of conducting future military action against Cuba. On May 1, 1961, MM T-1 identified this American as JERRY (Last Name Unknown), about 6' 5" tall, weighing 230 pounds, and who claimed that he had been in jail in Cuba after having trained paratroopers in Cuba with the CASTRO Government and guerrillas and rebels in Nicaragua. MM T-1 said that about 20 members of this group had established a camp west of Miami in the Everglades where they were living on available vegetation.

On April 29, 1961, GERALD PATRICK HEMMING was interviewed in connection with another investigation. HEMMING said ,that he was one of the leaders of the ANTI-COMMUNIST LEGIONNAIRES and active in the organization. He said he had gone to Cuba in February 1959 and remained there until August 1960. While there he was a member of the Cuban Revolutionary Army, was later in the Cuban Revolutionary Air Force as a Sergeant and received a salary of $70.00 to 00.00 a month on an irregular basis. In about August 1960, he went to Mexico City and contacted members of the Nicaragua Revolutionary Movement. In September 1960, he traveled from Mexico to Los Angeles, California. HEMMING said that in about March 1961, he received a telephone call from one JAMES GENTRY in Miami, suggesting that he come to Miami in order to participate in Cuban anti-Communist revolutionary activities. HEMMING identified GENTRY as an American citizen who had previously served as a lieutenant in the Cuban Revolutionary Army.

In May 1961 this letter from HEMMING appeared in Sky Diver Magazine:

Greetings Smogville Jumpers:

Thought I would pass on some scoop. Many of the East Coast Sky Divers are to be found presently in the ranks of certain active anti-Castro rebel groups. These same groups are the ones conducting the P.T. boat raids and are the only ones running the B-25, B-26 and light aircraft parachute missions..."

HEMMING told this researcher:

May 1961. I typed a document up and a guy came around six months later and said, 'a woman complained in Michigan that her son was being recruited for operations in Cuba and you sent out this.' I sent out a bulletin to the people directing them to go to their nearest skydiver club, or the reserves, and don't come to Miami. I would get tons of letters from these assholes and I had to crank something up to stop 'em. And that's what ANGLETON had a copy of cause ANGLETON approved the son-of-a...

Later, HEMMING said:

He was being made aware that it was being done, and the reasons it was being done, because it would appear that I was recruiting U.S. citizens.

Contact with Venezuelans

On May 25, 1961 MM-T-1 advised that Hemming had made contact with a PRATO (first name unknown) an associate of Marcos Jimenez Perez, former head of the Venezuelan Government presently residing in Miami Beach, Florida. Hemming had offered his services to Jimenez Perez for future revolutionary activity in Venezuela. (deleted as of 2010) later took (deleted as of 2010) and (deleted as of 2010) members of INTERPEN and (deleted as of 2010) to see (deleted as of 2010). However (deleted as of 2010) was unable to confer with them because he was too busy with the matter concerning his (deleted) to be held in the United States District Court in Miami. (deleted as of 2010) said that (deleted as of 2010) wondered how it was possible for American adventurers such as the Interpen members to maintain a training camp, wear uniforms and practice military maneuvers in the United States after they have publically stated they plan to violate United States Neutrality Laws by proposed military attacks against Cuba. (deleted as of 2010) expressed some apprehension in cooperating with them for fear he would be arrested by United States authorities (deleted as of 2010) and (deleted as of 2010) at a later time concerning offering their services and these of Interpen to (deleted as of 2010).

Hemming had another plan to obtain a (deleted) to take his group on a commando raid against Cuba. However, he was unable to obtain access to this boat. MM T-1 explained that Hemming has a new and different plan daily, does not follow through on any of them, and none of them ever succeed.

CONSTANTINE N. KANGLES

An FBI document concerning HEMMING titled "Constantine N. Kangles," was generated on May 29, 1961. [FBI 105-3530] HEMMING told this researcher:

He represented Cuba and Fidel in some lawsuits that Chuck Ashmann, our lawyer, started. We met him through Bob Brown. He had a lot of influence with people. He was a Greek Jew. He worked with the OSS in Greece. Now they have an interest in me dealing with him after the Bay of Pigs. Isn't that interesting? I was trying to keep the prisoners from being executed.

The FBI reported:

HEMMING was re-contacted on June 8, 1961, at which time he stated that he had met JAMES GENTRY, mentioned above, in February 1959, at Camp Libertad, located near Havana, Cuba. HEMMING mentioned that he was also acquainted with various members of the Nicaraguan Revolutionary Movement, also known as the Sandino Movement, as this group had had a nucleus in Havana during 1959 and the early part of 1960. HEMMING stated that he had associated with the Cuban Revolutionary Army during the period February 1959 to August 1960.

On June 27, 1961, the United States Border Patrol advised that Inspector Harry Rhodes, of the United States Border Patrol at Homestead, Florida, received a call from fisherman off Julia Island in the Florida Keys that some shooting was going on. "Upon arrival, Inspector Rhodes discovered that HEMMING and his group were conducting a jungle survey training class, and HEMMING had in his possession only one .22 caliber rifle, a small amount of ammunition and some equipment. The rifle shot apparently ricocheted and barely missed hitting a nearby fisherman. Those with HEMMING were identified as [various men not prominent in the anti-Castro struggle]." On June 28, 1961,

F.J. Baumgardner sent a Memo to William Sullivan regarding: "Anti-Communist Legionaries, Neutrality Matters." The document stated that

The Washington Capitol News Service, June 27, 1961, indicated that JERRY PATRICK, head of INTERPEN, allegedly associated with Junta Revolucionaria de Liberacion Nacional, had been practicing parachute jumping with members of his organization. The Director inquired: 'What do we know of this?'

We are well aware of the recent activities of Patrick. His true name is Gerald Patrick Hemming; however he has used the last names of Patrick, Henning and Hannon. He is originally from California but arrived in the Miami area in early May 1961. He became the leader of a small group of men attracted to that by newspaper publicity on the Cuban situation. The group became known as the Anti-Communist Legionnaires. The members were reportedly living in the Everglades on snakes and swamp cabbage and had no housing. Miami has an informant (Deleted) who has reported the group has only 15 to 20 members who are described as mercenaries, vagrants and adventurers and unreliable delinquents with an average age of about 22 years. No training camp is maintained but periodically, the group goes into the Everglades for training purposes to impress Cuban and Venezuelan groups hoping to get donations. Hemming has reportedly visited most of the Cuban Revolutionary organizations seeking donation and offering his services but has been refused. The group seeks publicity; has no arms, equipment or transportation; is not accepted in the Cuban Revolutionary Movement; and the informant does not anticipate any expeditions by the group.

According to the news release HEMMING claims his group is associated with the Junta Revolucionaria de Liberacion Nacional. We have no information indicating any such affiliation. This latter organization is an anti-Castro group headed by Aureliano Sanchez Arango and was reportedly created in March 1961 following a meeting of 117 Cuban organizations. We are following the activities of the Junta from an intelligence standpoint and on April 25, 1961, we also requested the Department to advise if its activities indicated a violation of Neutrality Statutes warranting investigation. The Department advised on May 15, 1961 that it was soliciting views of CIA concerning the group. No additional reply has been received from the Department.

The group headed by Hemming has had a large turnover in membership. It has been variously known as the Anti-Communist Legion, Anticommunist Legionaries, Revolutionary Force for Democratic Cuba and now most recently, as the Intercontinental Penetration Force (INTERPEN). All information received concerning Hemming and his group and associates has been disseminated to State, CIA, military agencies, Customs, INS and to the Department. On May 23, 1961 the Internal Security Division was requested to advise if the activities of Hemming's group indicated violations of neutrality statutes warranting further investigation. No reply has been received to date from the Department. All pertinent information received concerning this group will continue to receive the above dissemination.

HOOVER HAND WRITTEN NOTE: "Follow up on Internal Security Div. It has been over a month since we asked for rulings." [FBI 2-1973-17]

On June 28, 1961, the FBI in Miami reported:

MM-T1 advised the membership has a high turnover, inasmuch as newspaper publicity caused these adventurers to come to Miami, but lack of any serious accomplishment causes them to become disillusioned and leave. At any one time, there are several members in jail in Miami for fighting, vagrancy and drunkenness. They beg food from Cuban grocery stores, are not employed, are usually without funds, and are dressed in Army combat clothes, boots, and a number of them wear beards. HEMMING and his group are interested in adventure and are willing to go to any Latin American country to engage in any revolution, not knowing the issues, reliability of the revolutionists, or the political ideology involved. HEMMING and his group are completely irresponsible and are not expected to accomplish any positive action and are stimulated by publicity given to them in the Miami, Florida, newspapers but lack of accomplishment causes them to become disillusioned and leave.

MM T-1 on June 5, 1961 advised that Tom Cain and Frank (LNU) Interpen members, about a month previously went to Chicago, Illinois and contacted headquarters of the Frente Revolucionarie Democratico (The Cuban Revolutionary Democratic Front FRD) an alliance group of anti-Communist organizations. Can and Frank were seeking aid and back for Interpen from the FRD.

MM-T1 said that at that time Interpen consisted of about fourteen members most of them were staying at 1925 Southwest 4th Street, the resident of a Mrs. Nellie Hamilton, who allows them to stay there free, and frequently provides meals for them.

MM T-2 (deleted as of 2010) and who has furnished reliable information in the past advised that Tomas Gamba is an assistant to Manuel Antonio Varona, the co-ordinator of the FRD. MM T-2 said that it would be extremely doubtful that Gamba or any other FRD official would in any way help or take into membership any American group of volunteers. MM T-1 subsequently advised that Hemming and (Deleted as of 2010) contacted (deleted as of 2010) at FRD headquarters on June 6, 1961. (Deleted as of 2010) the FRD's policy has always been against accepting Americans and it was extremely doubtful that Interpen would receive any aid from the FRD. MM T-1 explained that HEMMING and INTERPEN members have contacted many other Cuban organizations and individuals, seeking money donations, equipment and members, but they have always been refused.

The Miami Herald, on June 27, 1961, contained an article concerning INTERPEN...that stated the existence of this group was known by The Herald, but it became generally known to the public on June 26, 1961, after Florida Senator George A. Smathers disclosed that Cuban exiles are training in Florida. The article said that Senator Smathers disclosure on a nation-wide radio network brought other newsmen and television cameramen to INTERPEN headquarters on June 26, 1961. [w/h FBI HQ 2-1693-18 pages 10 - 11 Border Patrol / w/h HQ 2-1693-18 p3)

The CIA: "FBI reports 19-9/1 DBF 77030 May 15, 1961, and DBF 76893, May 11, 1961. Subject described as a Castro infiltrator. People in Miami afraid to move against him because of his strong personality and influence he has over those under his jurisdiction." [C/Contact CO Support]

SENATOR GEORGE SMATHERS

In 1994 HEMMING stated: "He was a friend because we had shit on him. He was getting payoffs from Somoza and Trujillo." When the media came, HEMMING stated: "INTERPEN was part of the International Anti-Communist Brigade, which was associated with the Revolutionary Junta of National Liberation, led by Aureliano Sanchez Arrango." [FBI 2-1693-18] In a Freedom of Information Request to the FBI HEMMING asked for records concerning his "Operations with Cuban exile group headed by Dr. Aureliano Sanchez Arrango that included employees of Howard R. Hughes (Hughes Tool Company) including C. Osment Moody et. al. organized crime figures, and CIA operatives from 1961 to 1962." On June 28, 1961, after Senator George Smathers' announcement, The Miami Herald published a feature story by Dom Bonafede about INTERPEN; the article had previously been withheld because the Herald claimed it concerned a sensitive area of national policy. The Herald:

Smathers disclosure Sunday night on a nationwide radio network brought other newsman and TV cameramen flocking around INTERPEN Headquarters Monday afternoon. The INTERPEN Garrison is led by GERRY PATRICK, a young giant who stands six feet seven inches tall. With his long wavy hair, neatly trimmed tuft of beard and Australian bush hat, he looks a little like Errol Flynn in his early matinee days...'We weed out all the crackpots and bums.'

The article went on to describe the training which the members of INTERPEN received - living on swamp cabbage and parachute jumping and concluded: "Another anti-Castro band of Americans in Miami is lead by Vincent Hannard, a former registered agent for Castro who went over to the other side." The CIA reported,

In May 1961, Vincent Joseph Hannard, Miami private detective, formed a group called the Freedom Fighters. This organization of about fifty men consisted of Cuban exile revolutionaries, American mercenaries and adventurers. The purpose of the group was to invade Cuba and overthrow Cuban Prime Minister Fidel Castro. HARGRAVES was one of the leading members of this group. The group dissolved after several months when they realized Hannard had been in a mental institution and was completely psychotic. In 1963, in U.S. District Court, Miami, HANNARD was sentenced to two years probation and $1,000 fine for impersonating a Federal Agent. In November 1961 HARGRAVES lived in Miami, with an unidentified American girl. He had long hair, a beard and was periodically engaged in burglaries. At that time he was associated with Rolando Masferrer Rojas, the former Cuban Senator who had a group of men in Miami who were planning military operations against Cuba. Also in 1961 HARGRAVES was active with GERALD PATRICK HEMMING, an American mercenary in Miami who had formed a group of 20 or 30 men for the purpose of invading Cuba. Most of HEMMING'S recruits were military deserters, fugitives, degenerates and psychopaths. HARGRAVES was one of the leading members of HEMMING'S group.

I tried to stop them from running the article. Bonafede was a CIA agent with journalistic cover. He was told to write the stories and invent a whole bunch of horseshit. We had no choice.

On June 29, 1961, Senator George Smathers held a press conference in Washington, D.C., and reported preparations for another invasion of Cuba were not receiving any cooperation from the U.S. Government. [FBI 2-1693-NR 6.29.61.] Senator George Smathers, a friend of Batista, had won his Senate seat using red-baiting tactics similar to those used by NIXON. In 1970, when files of the JFK Library were made public, a tape recording revealed that Senator George Smathers had pestered President Kennedy to assassinate Fidel Castro. President Kennedy refused, and told Senator George Smathers that the CIA frequently did things he did not know about and that he was unhappy with the Agency. He complained to Senator George Smathers that the CIA was almost autonomous. On June 29, 1961 HEMMING was mentioned in an FBI document titled: "Roberto R. Pino, Augstin Capo, Adolfo Perez-Prieto, Paul Mena, Niva Reyes Balsera, Leonardo Rolando Balsera, FBI Field 105-3895; Bureau 105-98261."

George Armistead Smathers died on Monday January 15, 2007. His father was a federal judge, his uncle was a United States Senator. He is survived by Bruce Smathers of Jacksonville, John Smathers of Arlington, Carolyn Hyder Smathers, and Virginia Meyers of Coral Gables. (NYT January 22, 2007) After INTERPEN received national publicity, a Department Of Justice spokesman warned STURGIS that an investigation of the International Anti-Communist Brigade was under way.

INTERPEN/INTERNATIONAL ANTI-COMMUNIST BRIGADE

The FBI reported:

On July 2, 1961 HEMMING with about five mercenaries and Cuban exiles dressed in military uniforms, put on an airdrop parachuting show for the press at the airport at Davie, Florida. Also in July 1961 HEMMING was contacting different Cuban exile groups in Miami offering them training camp facilities and seeking their contributions in dollar donations and weapons. (Deleted as of 2010) HEMMING claimed he went to Cuba and contacted representatives of the Cuban underground. Antonio Perez Quesada, Cuban exile boat captain, on interview admitted he took HEMMING and six others to Cuba on August 12, 1961 where they stayed about 42 hours. However, neither HEMMING or his men made any contact with the Cuban underground or militia.

On July 10, 1961, The Miami Herald ran an article by Dom Bonafede about HEMMING entitled "'We Choose How We'll Be Killed.'

In Cuba HEMMING joined up with Castro's hill-based rebels as a paratroop instructor. During this period he became friends with William Morgan...PATRICK still stands by Morgan. 'He was a pretty good damn head, damn good, the kind of guy hard to find...PATRICK also has a personal reason for wanting to return to Cuba. He left a Cuban wife behind. 'They, the Castro Government) don't know who she is. It wouldn't be good for her if they did. I think she is trying to get over here - but I don't know. I haven't heard from her in five months.

On July 11, 1961, six INTERPEN members were arrested in the woods near Forman Field and charged with vagrancy. [Miami Herald 7.11.61] July 1961 was the month that it was announced that STURGIS' International Anti-Communist Brigade merged with INTERPEN and became INTERPEN/International Anti-Communist Brigade. HEMMING 1994:

There was no merger. INTERPEN/International Anti-Communist Brigade never existed. It was a meeting with STURGIS at Forman Field one fucking day in May 1961. We were rivals, we didn't get along. Two of my guys wanted to kill FRANK'S ass. Whatley and Willis. Willis was a strange one from Chicago. Bobby Willis was arrested in Guatemala in 1954, caused a big stink because he gave his name as Otto Skorzeny. [A Nazi war criminal] One of Masferrer's boys, FRANK'S boys, along with Bucky (Jerry) Buchanan. He came over to us when he got tired of FRANK'S bullshit. None of his people ended up in No Name, no way José. Howard Davis worked a couple of deals with him.

I asked HEMMING: "If you and FRANK weren't buddies, how come one night you told me to meet you on a street corner in Little Havana if I wanted certain documents? When I showed up, you weren't there. A few minutes later, FRANK and this overgrown Cuban drove up to me as if they were going to assassinate me? I ducked behind a building when I saw them. FRANK got a big laugh." HEMMING explained:

They were tapping the fucking phones, the place was bugged, wherever the fuck we were talking. I didn't deal with fucking FRANK. During the Spotlight trial STURGIS gave [Attorney] Ellis Rubin a long list of things I had done to work against him. I remember two conversations with STURGIS.

On July 31, 1961 the FBI generated a report on INTERPEN. [FBI 2-312 (field) 2-1693 (Bureau)]

HEMMING AUGUST 1961

On August 11, 1961, MM T-1 advised that HEMMING had been in contact with ELOY GUTIERREZ MENOYO, a Cuban exile leader in the Miami area. According to MM T-1, GUTIERREZ was planning to send ten of his men by boat on a mission to Cuba. Four of the men were to stay in Cuba while others would spend some time on British islands north of Cuba, including Anguila Key where it was believed some arms have been buried.

On August 16, 1961, HEMMING and nine Cuban exiles who were connected to Eloy Menoyo piloted a fishing boat to Cuba and carried out an anti-Castro mission. The CIA: "INTERPEN had no Agency connection. Although HEMMING is not accepted by leading Cuban organizations, he is well-known to them." [Garrison Invest. CIA traces 12.2867 73.] In August 1961 a con man named George Damon tried to hustle CIA money from desperate exiles by claiming that "Jerry Patrick is now in Cuba and has as his mission, the demolition of generator stations. Patrick at the present time is setting off about a pound of TNT nightly to create terror and confusion. When Patrick's mission is completed he will receive $10,000." HEMMING offered his services to the CIA in August 1961. An Official Routing Slip [Allen v. DOD 07595-1398 8.28.61] read: "I received letter from Subject offering services again. (Deleted) is recommending no (illegible)." HEMMING 1994:

This came from Jim Sprague who ran a Naval Reserve Detachment right next to the Miami News Building and he was supposed to be ONI, he was really CIA, along with Steve Czukas of U. S. Customs.

On September 26, 1961 the CIA informed that FBI that a source had been approached by four Americans who said they wished to volunteer to fight for the liberation of Cuba. They were "Little" Joe Garman, William Dempsey, Jim Bruce a Korean War veteran from Texas, and Patrick Stepanick who said he fought with Eloy Gutierrez Menoyo. The CIA:

CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY

TO: FBI PAPICH

FROM: Deputy Director / Plans

SUBJECT: United States Citizens Who Wish to Volunteer to Fight for the Liberation of Cuba.

1. The following information received from a usually reliable source is forwarded as being of possible interest to the Bureau.

2. Source advised that he was visited by four Americans who were interested in volunteering to join an anti-Castro training group. The four men gave their names as Jim Bruce, who claimed to be from Texas and who fought in the Korean War, Pat Stepanick, who claimed he fought with Eloy Gutierrez Menoyo, William Morgan and other in the Escambray for more than one year; Bill Dempsey, who claimed to be a veteran of the Korean War and one referred to as "Little Joe" who did not give his true name. Bruce claimed to be the leader of the group, however Little Joe did most of the talking and according to the source, appeared to be most intelligent and competent of the group.

During the conversation with the source the group volunteered the the following information:

a. They had come from Texas and other distant places to join the Cubans and fight for the liberation of Cuba.

b. They can gather more than 100 combat experienced men at any moment and that these men have knowledge of arms, military training etc.

c. They are not politically minded and do not want to join or become a part of any private political movement.

d. They made the decision to fight for Cuba because they consider that the men directing the United States Government are "incompetent and incapable of action" if the (U.S. Government) men were to decide to help the Cubans 'it would be in a clandestine manner, would force the Cubans to follow orders from the United States and would lead them to another failure.' For the above reasons, the four Americans wish to join the Cubans and fight independently.

e. They would not mind losing their United States citizenship by fighting with the Cubans, however, they want to be guaranteed the right to remain in Cuba if the war is won and they survive. They feel the United States has lost all its international prestige due to inactivity.

f. That they are friends of 'PATRICK' (GERALD PATRICK HENNING) the man who has received some publicity in the Miami papers concerning his training of Cuban paratroopers.

g. They feel they can count on some groups of persons in Canada to join them.

h. They stated they had visited the Cuban Revolutionary Front offices on Biscayne Boulevard and had been sent to a recruiting office at 914 W. 12th Street.

i. They are temporarily residing at 1936 S. W. 3rd Street, Miami, and their economic situation is quite bad.

4. Source stated that he was under the impression that these four men wanted to be recruited immediately as they have no money and no resources to continue waiting; all they want is to be fed and sent to a training camp to fight with the Cubans.

5. A check of the file of this office reveals no identifiable information concerning Jim Bruce, Bill Dempsey and "Little Joe." On Patrick Stepanick was the subject of a report received from the Bureau, dated June 7, 1961. Gerald Patrick Hemming Jr. has been the Subject of numerous correspondences between the Bureau and this Agency. Any further information concerning the activities of the above individuals which might come to the attention of this office will be forward to the Bureau.

This document was also referred to as: "(Deleted) August 24, 1961 CSCI-3/767,435." [CIA 100-9-14 October 4, 1961; Info on HEMMING from various sources NARA 1993.08.03.19:05:37:060039] The CIA reported that on October 4, 1961, HEMMING: "Met with Eloy Gutierrez Menoyo and planned to establish base outside of U.S. for training and future attacks against Cuba." [CIA DBF 91349 10.4.61 100-9-14] In October 1961 the FBI generated five reports concerning HEMMING. Two concerned INTERPEN. One of these was dated October 4, 1961, and covered the investigative period from July 22, 1961, to September 21, 1961. Most of this document has been withheld. FBI informant Howard Kenneth Davis reported:

On August 14, 1961, MM T-1, who has been connected with Cuban revolutionary activities for the past four years, and who has furnished reliable information in the past, advised that Gerald Patrick Hemming had been in contact with Eloy Gutierrez Menoyo, a Cuban national living in Miami and a former member of the Cuban Revolutionary Army.

MM T-1 explained that Hemming is a twenty-four year old American soldier of fortune who previously served in the United States Marine Corps and who has been in Miami the past several months trying to organize an invasion force to overthrow the Cuban Government. MM T-1 said that Menoyo was planning to send ten of his men by boat on a mission to Cuba. Four of the men were to stay in Cuba. Another four would spend approximately ten days on Anguila Key, Cay Sal Bank, British islands located North of Cuba. This group would attempt to locate arms which they think are buried on Anguila Key. Menoyo was not expected to participate personally, but he is in charge of this operation.

On August 16, 1961, MM T-1 advised that on August 11, 1961, Hemming went to see Menoyo, with the idea of going to the Cay Sal Islands to obtain arms reportedly buried there. Menoyo said he was sending people to Anguila Key, to recover arms previously buried there. Menoyo offered to take Hemming along, if Hemming shaved his beard, got a haircut, and submitted to Menoyo's directions and instructions. Hemming quickly accepted. Menoyo reportedly has a large boat, location unknown, but docked at a place where his group would have to sneak aboard so they would not be seen. Menoyo planned to send about nine people on this mission. Four or five would wait at Anguila Key, and the other four would go to Cuba, where they would remain. Menoyo's boat presumably would return from Cuba to Anguila Key, and then to the United States. The whole trip was expected to take about ten days, and the exact purpose of this mission was unknown.

On about August 13, 1961, Hemming and the other nine people from Menoyo's group left Miami. Menoyo indicated that if the arms on Anguila Key could be recovered, he would sell them in Miami to Cuban revolutionists, steal them back, and again resell them. It was not known where this group went to board Menoyo's boat.

On August 26, 1961, MM T-1 advised that he had been in contact with Hemming, who said that he arrived back in Miami on August 24, 1961. Hemming said that he and about eleven others went to Cuba on a sixty-five foot commercial fishing boat, which had both power and sail. The group went to Cayo Frances located off Matangas and Camaguey Provinces in Cuba.

MM T-1 stated that they contacted the under-ground in Cuba, stayed in Cuba three or four days and subsequently returned to Miami. HEMMING said that when they left Miami they were stopped by the U.S. Coast Guard and when asked their destination, the Cubans pretended they did not speak English. The Coast Guard presumed that they were fishermen and let them go. MM T-1 said that they were a total of eleven men on the boat, and it was originally planned that four of the men, who had been trained with the Cuban refugee forces in Guatemala, would remain in Cuba. However, these four decided to return to the U.S. On August 28, 1961, MM T-1 advised that HEMMING had subsequently stated that this group had visited Cuba and visited Punto de Alegre, which is northwest of Camaguey Province, and had also visited Cayo Coco. The group took photographs which they considered to be of future military value. HEMMING said that they spent some time at one island, which had a militia camp, and that the captain of the boat used by the group, who is well known, went ashore with HEMMING and one of the men, and had contact with the underground.

HEMMING said that he had taken with him an M-1 rifle, .45 caliber pistol and a Shmizer (phonetic) machine gun. HEMMING said the boat, which provided their transportation to Cuba, anchored some twenty or thirty miles off the coast of Cuba while HEMMING and his group were ashore. When HEMMING and the group wanted to return to the boat, it was necessary for them to hijack a Cuban fishing boat and hold the occupants of the fishing boat as hostages until they arrived at their boat, anchored off shore. One of the hostages was a bank president, who was accompanied by his fourteen-year-old son.

HEMMING indicated that the boat used for this mission is now docked somewhere in the Miami River but he did not furnish the identity or location. On August 29, 1961 Lee Ruthford, United Press International employee, Miami, Florida, advised that he had recently talked to HEMMING who said that he had been to Cuba clandestinely on a boat with eleven men. He said they had visited each province of Cuba, and that four Cubans went ashore. According to HEMMING, these four Cubans had been trained with the Cuban invasion army in Guatemala in early 1961. RUTHERFORD said that although HEMMING admitted to him that he had clandestinely gone to Cuba, he did not clearly indicate the purpose of this mission other than that they had contacted the underground in Cuba.

On August 29 1961, JOSE M. GONZALEZ HERNANDEZ advised that HEMMING prior to his recent trip to Cuba had contacted GONZALEZ requesting a bazooka. GONZALEZ explained that he was unable to obtain such an article of war.

On or about August 23, 1961, Hemming went to GONZALEZ' store and said that he had gone to Cuba a clandestine mission, that he was with about eight others, and they had contacted the underground in Cuba. HEMMING said the underground claimed they have arms, but need a leader, and were prepared to overthrow the Cuban Government. HEMMING indicated that they used a small rowboat-type boat to row out to a motor launch and then the motor launch took them to the boat used for traveling to Cuba. HEMMING did not further identify the boats used. GONZALEZ requested that HEMMING make a report on this trip, and HEMMING immediately sat down at a typewriter and in front of GONZALEZ, typed the following report:

A reconnaissance and agent infiltration mission was executed the night of the 17th of Aug. '61. All personnel except one were Cubans. Transport was effected via use of a small fishing craft. Disembarkation was made at Cayo Guillermo near Caibarien, Cuba. The only surface craft encountered while entering the Cuban coast were commercial ships including one Russian transport encountered near Cayo Prances. There exists the possibility that the Soviet craft in the area are using their respective ships radar to detect clandestine surface craft infiltrating the Cuban coast.

The patrol craft utilized by the militia in the Camaguey-Las Villas zones are small fishing craft (less than 30 ft., less than 6 knots) on loan from the local cooperatives with normally less than 15 militiamen on board. The following information was procured:

1. The heavy artillery presently located at Punta Alegre is being dismantled for transfer to another local. The Local fisherman reported that last week (13-19 Aug.) the artillery opened fire on a presumed clandestine surface craft cruising off shore near the Cayos.
2. Contacts were made with the underground in the area and it was found that there are large numbers of militia and others that are willing to participate in anti-Castro activities and have arms and equipment procured from local sources and are only awaiting coordination and leaders to direct their activities.

3. The islands in and around Cayo Guillermo Cayo Frances were searched by a large number of militia 5 days prior to this recon mission. This patrol activity was stimulated by a report that counterrevolutionaries had a base of operations and arms caches on Cayo Frances. A militia camp containing 35 militiamen is located on the southeast end of Cayo Guillermo, but they conduct no patrols at present.

4. The Rebel Air Force has no aircraft patrolling the north coast of either province. The only aircraft observed were commercial passenger aircraft at odd intervals flying at high altitudes.

5. Indigenous personnel in the area are indifferent to both anti- and pro-Castro activities and though there is much discontent with the Castro regime they are lacking information (propaganda) and guidance as to the anti-Communist side of the situation.

6. The situation was compromised due to the fact that the agents could not be transferred to their pick-up point and the boat lasted for the exfiltration was not in the area. Three fishing craft had to be commandeered and hostages were utilized until transfer was made to the initial craft on the high seas.

7. Plans were made with the local underground for future contacts and operations that are due to begin immediately."
"END"

GONZALEZ said that the original of this report was given to a Cuban, who reportedly made it available to the Office of Naval Intelligence, Miami, on August 28 last. On August 30, 1961, Lieutenant Commander JAMES SPRAGUE, Office of Naval Intelligence, Miami, advised that his office had received the original of the above report on August 28, 1961, but that the source of the report was unknown to that office. On September 1, 1961, MM T-1 advised that MENOYO was planning another mission to Cuba in which HEMMING and the same people would participate.

MM T-1 said that HEMMING is staying at the Blue lay Motel, Miami Beach, where MENOYO lives and has his headquarters.

On October 19, 1961, the FBI contacted HEMMING

...concerning the nature of his trip to Cuba and he denied he had made any trip to Cuba in August 1961. He also denied that he had typed a report concerning this trip or that he had told anyone he made such a trip. He said that sometime during the middle of August 1961, he went fishing about 30 miles southwest of Andros Island in the Bahamas with eight or nine Cubans. He said he could not recall the name of the boat which they had used, but said they were gone about 11 days, but all they did was fish. [FBI 105-86406-18]

In a Freedom of Information Request to the Office of Naval Intelligence HEMMING asked for:

Memoranda, to and from FBI and ONI, in reference to my filing written, unsigned intelligence reports to ONI, through intermediaries, said reports including, but not limited to:

(A) A report referencing maritime infiltration operations against Communist Cuba, during 1961.

(B) Specifically, the report, forwarded to ONI, during August 1961, which reports details of my participation in a trip to the North Coast of Cuba, on a mission to insert four Cuban CIA Agents, who were on a classified mission.

The FBI reported:

On October 20, 1961, ANTONIO PEREZ QUESADA, 224 S.W. 4th Avenue, Miami, Florida, was interviewed and advised that he was the owner and captain of a fishing sloop named "Blanca Estella". He said that on August 12, 1961, he departed Miami in his boat along with nine other individuals, including GERALD PATRICK HEMMING, and proceeded out to the open sea. He said his boat arrived at about midnight, August 17, 1961, at Cayo Guillermo on the north coast of Cuba, where eight men went ashore and were unsuccessful in an attempt to contact members of the Cuban underground. These eight individuals remained at Cayo Guillermo for almost two days during which time they had no activity and after which they all decided to return to Miami. PEREZ related that in the process of departing from Cayo Guillermo, none of the Cubans were held as hostages temporarily but were later released and no violence was involved. He said that the "Blanca Estella" returned to Miami about August 24, 1961.

On November 2, 1961, the FBI Director generated a letter about HEMMING. [FBI 105-86406] The FBI:

On November 17, 1961, MM T-1 advised that a group of Cubans and Americans were leaving Miami on that date to participate in a week-end of training at a site about fifty miles west of Miami in the Florida Everglades. A camp was to be set up at this location for week-end training and eleven Cubans and six Americans were to participate including GERALD PATRICK HEMMING. The training was to be sponsored by the 30th of November Revolutionary Movement, an anti-CASTRO organization with headquarters in Miami.

On December 6, 1961, MM T-1 advised that HEMMING and his associates were no longer connected with the 30th of November Revolutionary Movement because they had been in contact with ROLANDO MASFERRER. MM T-1 said that HEMMING claimed to be working with the MASFERRER group and also claimed that this group was to receive assistance from the United States Government. ROLANDO MASFERRER was a Senator in the Cuban Government during the regime of FULGENCIO BATISTA.

HEMMING'S CIA EMPLOYMENT FORM: JANUARY 1962

A CIA Official Routing Slip was generated in January 1962. On January 26, 1962, HEMMING filed out a Personal History Statement for the CIA. HEMMING had applied for CIA employment as a Intelligence Operative (collection or preliminary analysis; Military Instructor). He listed High School and College level G.E.D. equivalency tests and stated that he was Mentor, Cuban Rebel Army & Anti-Communist activities in Cuba & the U.S.A...Guerilla warfare instructor due to experience in Cuts, USMC and past training in airborne operation, Special Forces Activities, arms, explosives and demolitions. Limited experience in intelligence gathering.

Havana Cuba (till August 1960) Los Angeles California (till March 1961) Miami Florida. After separation Cuban Rebel Air Force (June 1960) was involved with Nicaraguan Rebels. Departed Cuba August 1960 for Mexico, then to Los Angeles. Maintained contact with CIA until departure to Miami in March 1961. Worked with numerous anti-Castro groups in Miami. Formed group of instructors known as INTERPEN, worked close with Triple A, 20 de Mayo, II Frente Escambray, 30th of November Movement. I received an honorable discharge from the U.S. Marine Corps October 17, 1958. I was forced to separate from the Cuban Rebel Air Force due to the fact I was becoming involved with various anti-Communist elements and my position was becoming dangerous. DIPAR (Cuban Armed Forces Investigation Department) issued a shoot on sight order during March 1960. The DIPAR order was suspended seven weeks after issue. The Cuban Secret Police (G-2) arrested me on July 15, 1960. After being released was subject to strict surveillance thereafter.

HEMMING used David Hirt, Sanchez Arrango, FBI S.A. John J. O'Conner and Howard K. Davis as references. STURGIS was asked if he knew S.A. James O'Conner during his deposition in HUNT v. WEBERMAN: "Well, him, his name registers. I believe - I'm not sure - he was one of the two agents pertaining to the Bay of Pigs Invasion." HEMMING listed membership in Junta Revolucionario de Liberation National, Second National Front of Escambray, Triple A, 30th of November Movement, the 20th of May Movement, INTERPEN, The Beachhead Brigade for Cuban Freedom, the Sandinistas, and the International Anti-Communist Brigade. HEMMING stated the foreign intelligence organizations he had contact with were Cuban G-2, DIFAR, DIER, Confidential Section of the National Police, Counter-Espionage Section. HEMMING added:

In 1958 I graduated from the U.S. Naval Academy Preparatory School, but I chose to leave the service and infiltrate in the Cuban revolution. For quite some time I have had intelligence work, or enlisting in the U.S. Special Forces, as my goal in the future. I consider my past activities since 1958 as slightly irregular, free-lance appearing, but a very valuable chance at obtaining first hand experience into my chosen career." HEMMING listed these references: "Hasia-Pacific, Inc. Art Simpson, (Pres.) 1329 S. Figueros Street, Los Angeles 15, California; Spiegel Inc. 1061 W. 35th Street Chicago, 6, Illinois; Klein's 227 West Washington Street, Chicago, 6, Illinois.

HEMMING told the FBI that in about the middle of January 1962, he left Miami and went to Los Angeles, California, where he contacted a number of American businessmen who were interested in the present Cuban situation. In February 1962

MEMORADUM FOR: Chief, Support Branch
FROM: Deputy Chief, Operational Support Div.
SUBJECT: HEMMING, P.

1. On February 1, 1962 (deleted) Executive Officer, Contacts Division, Office of Operations, advised the undersigned that he had recently been in contact with the Los Angeles office his Division relative to the above individual.

2. According to (deleted), on the basis of an anonymous tip, the Los Angeles County Sheriff's office recovered a 45-caliber U.S. pistol, serial number 1504981-SA from a car in the Los Angeles. Subsequent to its recovery by the Sheriff's office the Subject [HEMMING] claimed the pistol indicating he was a CIA Agent who was on a training mission in connection with an assignment aimed at Cuba.

3. The Sheriff's office contacted the OO/C Los Angeles office who, in turn, requested the Sheriff's Office attempt to keep the matter out of the newspapers and that they would attempt to trace the identity of the individual. The local CID office of the U.S. Army also became interested in the matter; however, they were also requested to suspend any active investigation of the matter.

6. I also advised Joe Langam (deleted) WH Division who advised that the Subject is not of interest to Project JMATE nor has he ever been in the past, however forwarded to the undersigned the attached synopsis of information maintained by WH Division concerning Subject.

7. It is requested that you contact the SAC, LAFO to advise him of this matter and to request that he interview the Subject for purposes of determining the Subject's alleged status and what remarks were actually made to the LA Sheriff's office. Consideration should be given to the fact that this matter may well evolve into a case of stolen government property and / or impersonation. It may be well to suggest to the SAC, LAFO that initial contact be made with his counterpart at the OO/C LA Field Office to insure that the information received here at Headquarters was entirely accurate. Further consideration after the conclusion of the interview with the Subject should be given to possible dissemination of the results of the interview to the FBI in the event it would appear to be a matter in which they would be concerned. I suggest we call SAC LAFO in approaching the Subject because of his reputation and his obvious interest in para-military matters as well as the fact that he possesses firearms.

Stanton F. Ense.

Jerry Mollani, SO/TF/W stated on February 5, 1962, that no record of instant pistol was available in records. [CIA 19774 2.2.62; CIA FOIA 00023] In February 1962 a notation was made on this routing slip which was withheld as of 2010. The FBI reported

On March 30, 1962, HEMMING was interviewed and advised that he continued participating in Cuban revolutionary activities. He said he was not conducting any training at that time but that he still considered himself available to train Cuban exiles for some future military action in Cuba. He said that in about mid-January 1962, he went from Miami to Los Angeles, California, where he contacted a number of American businessmen interested in the Cuban situation. He said he had unsuccessfully attempted to convince these men to make financial contributions to be used by the Cuban exiles for a future action against the CASTRO Government or Cuba. He said that in mid-February 1962, he traveled to Mobile, Alabama, where he visited a friend named DAMON NAPIER. While in Mobile, he was arrested and jailed by the police there on a charge of impersonation and was held for one week. HEMMING said he had previously met NAPIER in Miami and that when he visited NAPIER in Mobile, it appeared to him that NAPIER was then involved with stolen automobiles and checks. HEMMING said following his week in Jail, he was released by the Mobile Police Department,

HEMMING told this researcher:

"In February and March 1962 I was in the East Wing of the White House meeting with the Kennedy people. We never had any problems from them until 1963." The FBI:

On March 26, 1962, MM T-1, an individual who has been active in revolutionary activity in the Miami area for the past 4 years advised that five men from the 30th of November Movement went into the Everglades west of Miami on the previous weekend where they practiced shooting M-1 Carbines. An American adventurer named GERRY HEMMING accompanied this group. On April 3, 1962 (Deleted) advised he understood that the 30th of November Movement was planning to send from 25 to 30 men to a training camp over the coming weekend. MM T-1 said that other organizations were also planning to set up their own individual camps, and that a base camp would be established to handle communications between the individual camps. [FBI 2-1693-55]

The FBI in Miami interviewed HEMMING at his home on April 9, 1962. He claimed his fund raising trip to Los Angeles in January 1962 had been a failure and that he no longer conducted paramilitary training. The FBI checked with its sources in the Cuban exile community and was told INTERPEN no longer existed, although HEMMING "continues to visit different Cuban revolutionary organizations, is tolerated by these organizations and continues to work for the establishment of some sort of a military training camp where he would train Cuban nationals for guerilla warfare in Cuba; however, HEMMING has no money for backing and no chance of establishing such a training camp." [FBI 2-312 (field) 2-1963 (Bureau)] On April 11, 1962, the CIA reported "As you know we have an extensive series of FBI reports on the activities of GERALD PATRICK HEMMING and his INTERPEN. If HEMSING is HEMMING this info should go in his file. Can we assume writer did send this to the FBI?" [CIA FOIA 00611 NARA 1993.07.01.16:11:11:620340] On that day the CIA generated a Routing and Record Sheet that went to Charles Mott and TFW/CI which was largely illegible. One line read: "Any interest in contract agent?" [NARA 1993.07.01.16:13:51:310340] The Los Angeles Field Office of the FBI reported "On April 25, 1962, Burt Levy contacted the Los Angeles Office by telephone and furnished information concerning contacts by the Subject in the past." Levy had written a guerilla warfare manual and HEMMING corresponded with him. Levy turned over the correspondence to the FBI:

Dear Bert: April 10, 1962. The answer to your second question is that we of the Interpen are not supported by any U.S. Gov't agency whatsoever. We are getting very little aid from limited sources. Our boys are easting refugee food and what bread that is donated to us. We are constantly banging heads with the CIA, FBI, etc. The authorities frown on our activities and are continually attempting to break up our camps. We are not amateurs at the game of hid-and-seeek so they don't have much luck. We are very far back in the Everglades, in places where even the Seminole Indians don't go. We have trained over 400 Cuban volunteers in the past year. Let me know how your contact with Col. Mills turns out. Yours, (signed) Gerry. [FBI 105-86406-7]

On April 3, 1962, MM T-1 advised that HEMMING's organization, Interpen, was not active, had no members, and that HEMMING was not a member of any Cuban revolutionary organization although he was continuing to visit certain of these organizations relative to the establishment of a military training camp where he could train Cuban exiles for guerrilla warfare.

On April 30, 1962, the FBI created a report titled, "Larry La Borde, HEMMING, Edward Collins, Antonio Cuesta. Internal Security, Cuba"

ANTONIO CUESTA

On April 8, 1963, Antonio Cuesta Del Valle advised that FBI that he is the leader of the Commandos L and was previously a member of Alpha-66. The latter organization was under the leadership of Antonio Veciana Blanch. Cuesta stated the Veciana abandoned Alpha-66 and joined The Second National Front of Escambray organization in the fall of 1962. Veciana took with him the name Alpha-66 so the original Alpha-66 organization changed its name to Commandoes L, which is the same organization that conducted raids against Cuba in 1962. Cuesta advised that on March 17, 1963, and on March 18, 1963, Commandoes L departed Miami in two boats, a 50-foot cabin cruiser, Alisan, and a 23-foot speedboat. These boats rendezvoused near Cat Cay...An attack against a Russian ship was made under cover of darkness during the early morning hours of March 27, 1963, by the 23-foot speedboat, containing Cuesta, Ramon Font, Alfredo Mir, Angel Puxes, Mario Alvarez and Antonio Perez. The raiders attacked a large Russian freighter in Caibarien Harbor, Cuba, firing a 20-millimeter cannon and other weapons, and then the raiders set off a homemade bomb, which was suspended beneath the surface of the water and against the hull of the Russian vessel. [NARA SSCIA 157-10003-10486]

On May 29, 1966, Antonio De La Cuesta was captured by the Cuban Navy after an aborted infiltration mission. Cuesta was seriously wounded. [Granma 6.5.66] Cuesta stated: "We were thrown into the water after a terrible explosion and were picked up by the same boats that attacked us. They rescued us when we were badly wounded. And that is how we were rescued rather than arrested." The Miami Chapter of the Cuban Revolutionary Council reported the Council had met HEMMING "and following the U.S. Government's policy of not accepting Americans into their organization, they maintained no contact with HEMMING." On April 30, 1962, the CIA sent a communication to the FBI about HEMMING:

On April 24, 1962, MM-T1 who has furnished reliable information in the past, reported the following data: LARRY J. LA BORDE, an American in Miami who is a sailor by occupation, claimed he contacted MAX (LNU), a CIA agent in Key West, Florida, on April 22, 1962, and advised him that the ship "SS WILLIAMS," operating out of Miami, Florida, was running machinery to Cuba. LA BORDE requested permission to blow up this ship on its return to Miami. According to LA BORDE, MAX gave him permission, and indicated LA BORDE would receive five thousand dollars for the job, when completed. LA BORDE is associated with ANTONIO CUESTA, GERALD PATRICK HEMMING, and EDWARD COLLINS in the plan to blow up the ship. CUESTA is a Cuban national who has previously participated in CIA operations against the present government of Cuba. HEMMING and COLLINS are American citizens, mercenaries and revolutionists, who are not members of any Cuban revolutionary organization, but are in constant contact with most Cuban anti-CASTRO organizations in Miami. MM-T1 states that LA BORDE claims to know the location of CIA warehouse in Key West Florida where arms are stored, and LA BORDE plans to burglarize this warehouse later. Informant advised that on 1962, LA BORDE, HEMMING and COLLINS went Key West, and on their return, claimed to have seen the CIA warehouse and said it was full of all types of arms and ammunition, has only one night watchman, and they think they could burglarize it without difficulty. However, they plan to wait until after they blow up the ship.

The informant advised that on April 24, 1962, CUESTA visited the Pier 3 area of the Miami Municipal Docks to familiarize himself with the area and devise a plan. CUESTA has decided to use an aqualung to attach explosives to the ship. He claims to be an experienced diver.

Informant said that LA BORDE previously worked on a subchaser owned by ALBERTO FERNANDEZ which was of operational interest to CIA, but has had no action in the recent past. LA BORDE claimed that MAX might overlook LA BORDE's burglarization of the CIA warehouse containing arms, if the destruction of the ship were successful.

On April 24, 1962, informant advised that La Borde and Collins on that date visited the Pier 3 area of the Miami Municipal Docks to familiarize themselves with the general area. La Border planned to leave that evening for New Orleans to bring back to Miami a yacht 75 feet long which he hoped would be donated to the anti-CASTRO cause by DIXIE WYNN, of the supermarket chain. LA BORDE was not certain that this yacht would be donated, but hoped that it would be. The informant said that LA BORDE recently bought a 1949 dark green Buick automobile for $160.00 and said that he would drive the automobile to New Orleans.

On April 24, 1962, Mr. GREG MARUCA, CIA Miami, was advised of the above information. MARUCA said that LA BORDE was of operational interest to CIA, but that he was dropped a couple of months ago. MAX (LNU), mentioned above, according to MARUCA is, in fact, a CIA agent in Key West, Florida and was contacted by LA BORDE. Contrary to the claim of LA BORDE, MAX tried to dissuade LA BORDE from an attempt to blow up the "SS WILLIAMS." MAX did not give LA BORDE permission to proceed, and CIA has not authorized this operation.

MARUCA said that LA BORDE had participated in CIA operations out of Key West, Florida, and knows the location of a warehouse containing arms. MARUCA considers him as being unpredictable and capable of blowing up a ship. MARUCA said LA BORDE was given money and a ticket to leave the Florida area and go to New Orleans, but had not done so. MARUCA said that if LA BORDE were arrested and brought to trial for attempting to blow up the ship, he would probably expose CIA operations, which CIA did not want. MARUCA asked if the FBI could "pick up" LA BORDE and convince him not to go on with his plan concerning the ship. MARUCA was advised that inasmuch as there was no federal violation within the Bureau's jurisdiction, the FBI did not plan to interview LA BORDE, and in view of the possibility of loss of property and lives local authorities should be notified of LA BORDE's plan.

Prior investigation concerning another matter reflected that the SS Williams is owned by TEOFILO BABOUN, a Cuban millionaire residing in Miami who is anti-Communist and anti-Fidel. The ship is presently a time charter to Inter Island Shipping Company, of which VICENTE RODRIGUEZ is President and Manager. The ship left Miami on April 19, 1962 bound for Phillisborough, St. Marti Netherlands West Indies, and it is expected to be back in Miami on approximately May 2, 1962 The ship was described as being 750 tons, 167 feet long, and Panamanian registry.

On April 25, 1962. MARUCA said that LA Borde then in Key West, Florida, owed the Blue Lagoon nine hundred dollars on his bill, and the owner was going to sign a complaint and obtain a warrant for LA BORDE's arrest. MARUCA also advised that CIA were advising the local police authorities and the Coast Guard of LA BORDE's plans.

On April 30, 1962, MM-T1 advised that CUESTA has three aqualungs and planned to teach HEMMING and COLLINS how to use this underwater diving equipment. HEMMING on April 27, 1962, talked to ALBERTO FERNANDEZ, who said that LA BORDE was in Key West, and HEMMING should discontinue his association with LA BORDE, because of his being irresponsible. HEMMING said that he, COLLINS and CUESTA were practicing with the aqualungs in the ocean at Key Biscayne, Miami, Florida, on April 27, 1962, when CUESTA said that they were being watched by a CIA agent whom CUESTA had previously known.

Informant advised that HEMMING has a friend who is a ship surveyor, who was able to ascertain that the "SS WILLIAMS" would be back to Miami, Florida on about May 11, 1962.

The informant stated that CUESTA claims that during the time he was working for CIA, ALBERTO FERNANDEZ received a certain quantity of money from CIA, to be used to buy food for the group operating a boat belonging to FERNANDEZ. However, FERNANDEZ kept the money.

Inasmuch as this matter concerning the blowing up of the "SS WILLIAMS" is not within the jurisdiction of the Bureau, and LA BORDE and CUESTA have previously been of operational interest to CIA, and there is apparently ill feeling between LA BORDE, CUESTA and CIA, the Miami Office anticipates no active investigation in this matter.

The Miami Office will follow this matter through contact with MM T-1 and liaison with CIA, and keep the Bureau advised.

Cuesto was eventually blinded in Commando raid against Cuba. [Miami Herald 9.5.81] An April 11, 1962, Routing and Record Sheet, from 1905 Quarters Eye read, "To 1: Any interest in OO contact? (deleted). This is not in my area of (?). If you have any..." An April 28, 1962, Routing and Record Sheet indicated that documents about HEMMING were sent to 1.B. Bond 2. (Illegible) 3. [NARA 1993:07.01.16:16:36:750340] In May 1962 the FBI determined that INTERPEN had ceased to exist and that HEMMING was "considered untrustworthy and completely unreliable by American mercenaries and Cuban revolutionists in Miami." [FBI 2-1693-56 5.16.62 pages 2-3 w/h]

The New Orleans States-Item ran this story on May 21, 1962:

NEW ORLEANS AND THE AMERICAS

GUERRILLAS AIDED BY LOCAL CUBANS

By WILLIAM STUCKEY

A small group of local Cubans have been sending guns and general military supplies to guerrillas and saboteurs in Cuba for the past three months. A member of the group, who wanted to remain anonymous, said the weapons and supply items are first sent to secret military camps in the Florida Everglades. From there the weapons are smuggled into Cuba to equip the anti-Castro underground, or are used by Florida based raiders in lightning sabotage strikes on the Cuban coast, the informant said.

The latest shipment of arms left over the weekend on a boat manned by American soldiers-of-fortune and ex-Marines. The boat was docked at a secret site in the New Orleans area during the loading operation. The informant insisted that his group is an informal organization and has nothing to do with the Miami based Cuban Revolutionary Council, headed by Jose Miro Cardona. "A lot of us got tired of those who speak in pretty phrases and who have political ambitions in Cuba" he said. "We are tired of wasting time. We looked for men of action and we found them."

The indications are that the local Cubans are affiliated, or are attempting to affiliate with the Revolutionary Student Directorate...The informant said that most of the guns and supplies shipped from here were donated by U.S. citizens in New Orleans or cities in other states.

William Stuckey told the Warren Commission: "Most of the organizations I had contact with...were violently anti-Castro groups, and there were a number of them in New Orleans. These people were news sources for me also. I used them quite frequently." Was Stuckey's source for this story one of the American soldiers-of-fortune and ex-Marines who were involved in this activity? Was his source Larry La Borde, FRANK STURGIS or GERRY HEMMING?

HEMMING JUNE 1962

On June 18, 1962, MM T-1 advised that HEMMING had recently purchased a quantity of skin-diving equipment from Water World on Biscayne Boulevard in Miami. MM T-1 said that HEMMING paid slightly over $1000.00 for the equipment involved. The CIA reported that HEMMING contacted it in June 1962, "but no action was taken because his activities were primarily of FBI interest." [CIA Memo to John Warner DEA 6.4.76] On June 12, 1962, the Los Angeles Field Office of the FBI generated a document on HEMMING. On June 11, 1962, PB\ Keefe concluded:

1. Corres.
2. AFS Inactive Tell him we have completed a review of his application and have no suitable position. 5B1 [Allen v DOD CIA 01226]

A Transmittal Slip stated: "The attached FBI (illegible) GERALD PATRICK HEMMING were forwarded by (Deleted) re: possible employment. From Administrative Staff." On June 21, 1962 HEMMING was sent a letter by Director of Personnel of the CIA, E.O. Erhotz that informed him no suitable position had been found.

The CIA reported, "In January 1962 Mr. Hemming submitted an application for employment to the Agency. The Office of Personnel checked with several components of the Directorate of Operations which expressed no interest in his services.

HEMMING, KOHLY AND ROBERT MORROW

From 1960 to 1963 Robert D. Morrow, a former CIA Technical Services Division technician, and Mario Garcia Kohly, ran an operation in Baltimore to counterfeit Cuban pesos which were dumped on the Cuban economy in order to disrupt it. Mario Kohly, of the Christian Democratic Movement, was an associate of NIXON and was a rival of Tony Varona in the Cuban Revolutionary Front. On July 27, 1962, an Official Routing Slip read:

TFW/PM (illegible initials) July 30, 1962, July 3, 1962 / TFW/PA-Prop (illegible initials) August 3, 1962 / C/TFW/CI (Deleted) (date deleted) TFW

(illegible and deleted): Attached correspondence to the Director of the Central Intelligence Agency may be of interest to you. Unless you consider it necessary, we are not planning to reply to Subject's letter. Please inform undersigned if you desire to take any action on this matter. No record of Morrow, his organization, or Hemsing Report cards, however, Hemsing is undoubtedly identical with GERALD PATRICK HEMMING, the "noted" guerilla trainer. TFW/EXEC BARKLEY July 27, 1962

[NARA 1993.07.01.16:08:51:560340]

A recently released version of this Slip contained: "C/TFW/CI [a (deleted)]. William Harvey was the Chief of Task Force W. HEMMING 1994:

JAMES ANGLETON was responding to an inquiry by Bill Harvey. Morrow was Robert Morrow, who wrote Betrayed. Robert Morrow was part of William Harvey's operation. It refers to Robert Morrow and Mario Garcia Kohly in San Juan, Puerto Rico. Robert Morrow wrote a letter to John McCone.

On August 8, 1962 Task Force W/Counter-Intelligence stated:

Morrow, who I think is slightly 'nuts' states twice in his letter that he has sent the same information to the FBI. Also the entire scope of this case is of primary interest to the FBI and not to us. Thus I think there should be no further action on this except to file it. If we answer Morrow we'll be bothered with more letters from him. I have placed a card on Morrow in our TFW/Support card file. (see thermo attached) Please file in 201-309125 GERALD PATRICK HEMMING.

On October 1, 1963, Robert Morrow and Mario Garcia Kohly were both arrested by the Federal Government. Both served a short time in jail for the counterfeiting operation. Morrow:

Kohly made himself unpopular with the Kennedy Administration by suggesting to the Attorney General that the missiles in fact had not been removed from Cuba after October 1962 and that his underground sources in effect told him that the Cuban missile crisis had not had a favorable outcome to the United States. Kohly believed for these and other reasons the Kennedy Administration was unfavorable to his anti-Castro activity. Consequently, Kohly approached NIXON to intercede for him." NIXON wrote a letter the judge in Kohly's counterfeiting case telling him of the useful services Kohly had performed for the United States Government in the past. In 1971 Robert Morrow ran for the President of the Baltimore City Council as a Republican and in 1972 he became the Republican nominee for Congress. "Robert Morrow feels it is possible that the Christian Democratic Movement was associated with people who were in turn associated with OSWALD. If this is the case he thinks it is not inconceivable that the CIA case officers of the Christian Democratic Movement exiles may have had knowledge of some potentially dangerous anti-Kennedy activities. [SSCIA 157-10005-10284]

Morrow was associated with HEMMING, Kohly and NIXON however, in Betrayed (later titled First Hand Knowledge) Robert Morrow claimed he worked with David Ferrie and Cuban exile Eladio Del Valle. He claimed to have delivered two Mannlicher-Carcano rifles to David Ferrie prior to the assassination. This researcher has been unable link David Ferrie to Eladio Del Valle. Nor could this researcher link David Ferrie directly to the assassination of John Kennedy. HEMMING told this researcher:

That's a totally separate deal. He didn't know what was going on. That's a long story in itself. Kohly wanted to do a hit on Fidel in the winter of 1961. Morrow was one of these compartmentalized, isolated assholes, that had a need to know zip. He knew a little bit about a few things and he's adding up two and two and it's coming up nine. It pissed me off when the book came out. Some of the things in there are the truth, but he wasn't privy to most of the sensitive shit. He imagined a bunch of shit.

LAWRENCE LA BORDE

In May 1962 HEMMING and INTERPEN members HARGRAVES, Loran Hall and former CIA maritime employee Lawrence La Borde (born August 27, 1909) were traveling back and forth between Miami and New Orleans. [HSCA Seq. Doc. 00037] Lawrence La Borde was a Port Captain in New Orleans who was formerly employed by the U.S. Department of Agriculture in Mexico in 1947 to 1949 as a small boat operator, but was fired for misconduct. The charges included excessive use of intoxicants, unauthorized use of firearms and failure to support dependent children. Lawrence La

Borde had been an asset of Project JMATE from March 17, 1961 to April 24, 1962, where he worked in Task Force W under William Harvey. [Harvey to ID/3 Tobiassen 4.24.62] HEMMING told this researcher:

He worked for an extension of ZR RIFLE. Ethnic cleansing of the new government after the Bay of Pigs. Larry La Borde was part of this. He put guys inside Cuba for live practice runs.

Lawrence La Borde was Captain of the Tejana III, which was used in CIA operations until 1962. The Tejana III was owned by Alberto Fernandez Hechavarria, a former wealthy Cuban engaged in the sugar industry. Alberto Fernandez Hechavarria was a Princeton graduate and had attended Prep School with John Kennedy. On March 20, 1961, H. K. Clayton, the Chief of the Investigations Branch of the CIA generated a memo for the Chief, Security Support Division on "La Borde, Lawrence J. #2415898 PCSA IB/3.

1. WH/4 has requested a Provisional Operational Approval in the name of the Subject on an expedite basis to permit his utilization under PROJECT JMATE." Clayton asked for an FBI check on La Borde.

MEMORANDUM FOR: Chief, WH/4/Security

SUBJECT: Crew Member, Tejana, Lawrence La Borde.

1. On September 29, 1961 Mr. Charles V. Piotti was debriefed upon his return from TDY at the TIDE area and his subsequent return to the Office of Logistics. Mr. Piotti advised of the following incident that occurred during his travel from TIDE to Washington while in Key West.

2. The chief engineer of the motor vessel Tejana, first name Larry (LNU), happened to meet Piotti at a small restaurant at lunch time when Piotti was in Key West. Larry recognized Piotti and proceeded to tell him that he, Larry, knew where Piotti had been and what he had been doing. He further went on to state in an indiscreet manner that he knew where all of 'you' people were at all times. Mr. Piotti did not pursue the situation further and attempted to exit gracefully. He stated that this is not the first time that Larry has been indiscrete in his discussion of Project activities. From previous contact with Larry, Mr. Piotti has observed him to be addicted to alcohol, or unsavory reputation and indiscreate in his conversation however this individual is the only engineer aboard the Tejana that can operate the vessel. In difficulties with the operation of the Tejana due primarily of Larry's being an American citizen, Larry has stated in effect that he does not care who gives orders. He will go on operations if he so desires. At various times he has further berated the Agency.

3. This matter is brought to your attention for possible action on your part.

On May 23, 1962, "NO-T-1," an FBI informant connected to the Cuban Revolutionary Council, advised that Lawrence La Borde contacted three members of the Cuban Revolutionary Council in early May and told them he wanted to help move supplies to anti-Castro Cubans within Cuba. Lawrence La Borde said that he had been active in fighting Castro before the Bay of Pigs, and was currently running guns from the Florida Keys to Cuba with CIA assent.

DISPATCH

TO: Chief, Task Force W

From: Chief of Station, JMWAVE

SUBJECT: (Deleted) Operational Comment on Newspaper Article.

1. In reply to referenced request for information with regard to the newspaper article to be published in the Denver Post [by Robert K. Brown] on June 3, 1963, the following is provided.

A. The source of the information in this article is almost certainly Lawrence J. La Borde who was associated with the motor vessel M/V Tejana III, which has been utilized in KUBARK operations on and off since early 1961. La Borde has at various times been Acting Captain of the Tejana, but basically served as its Chief Engineer as a result of his experience with pancake diesel engines which comprised the power plant for the ship. The Tejana is probably identical to the 'Florida' mentioned in the article on the basis that the size of the crew and the general crew replacements generally conform to crew changes that were made on the Tejana at JMWAVE's instigation.

B. La Borde was formerly employed by the U.S. Department of Agriculture in Mexico in 1947 to 1949 as a small boat operator, but was fired for misconduct. The charges included excessive use of intoxicants, unauthorized use of firearms and failure to support dependent children. Charles J. Hostynski, Chief, JMBAR, was the Agricultural Department Personnel Officer who handled La Borde's out processing in 1949. Hostynski's first true name is identical with the name appearing in the article as KUBARK's head man in the BARR area.

C. In April 1962 when Larry La Borde was informed that his services on the Tejana were to be terminated, he became quite bitter towards those KUBARK officials with whom he previously had contact necessitated by the mounting of maritime operations in which the Tejana was utilized as the mother ship. La Borde evidenced prejudice toward Hostynski whom he knew to be responsible for his being fired in 1949 in Mexico. His conduct on being separated included the making of reckless threats which were recorded at the time in WAVE 3023.

E. As background for Headquarters in formulating answers to questions which may be forthcoming re Subject article, it should be pointed out throughout 1961 WAVE, of necessity, relied upon wealthy Cuban exiles to provide boats to be used on maritime operations in the absence of unilateral boats or the ability to acquire them. Numerous problems developed mainly in the realm of security. The La Borde/Tejana situation was the most difficult one of these arrangements to control mainly as a result of (1) La Borde's American citizenship, and (2) that fact that Larry La Borde's qualifications as a pancake diesel motor engineer made him literally indispensable if the Tejana was to be utilized. The problems mounting out of the program to utilize Cuban exile boats on a contract basis led to a policy decision to replace such boats with unilaterally controlled boats as soon as time would permit. The phasing out of Cuban exile boats quite naturally was interpreted by the boat crews and owners to represent a decrease in anti-Castro activity and possibly an end to such activity. The anger among the crews at this possibility quite naturally resulted in a number of protests which, with the exception of Larry La Borde, were taken care of by the appropriate reassurances which of necessity could not reveal KUBARK's policy of continuing the anti-Castro campaign with unilaterally controlled vessels.

F. La Borde was finally removed from the WAVE area with the assistance of AMDENIM-1 who sent him to New Orleans with ample termination funds only to have him show up in the area again and become involved with any KUBARK sponsored exile groups, who, under the leadership of independent American soldiers-of-fortune who were regularly coming to the attention of the local press. La Borde was again assisted out of the area by AMDENIM-1 and has not been heard from for approximately a month prior to the arrival of the reference.

G. The PBPRIMER identified in the article as the KUBARK head of marine operations in the WAVE area is probably Bertrand R. Jobes, whose true first name is identical with the name in the article and who was associated with the Tejana in early 1961 when it was first picked up by KUBARK. Jobes reputation as maritime officer of course belies the derogatory statements made in the article.

2. In analyzing the possible immediate security ramifications of this matter on WAVE operations, it should be noted that the contract for Tejana was terminated in April 1962 and it is currently anchored in Miami under the owner's sole responsibility. None of the previous Tejana anchorages except the Mineral Carriers site are in present use and no operational boats are anchored there. The REEFER III is anchored close by this site and is being moved to a new location.

3. The above is a hasty effort to provide Headquarters with the basic information and can be further documented as required. It is believed that Headquarters' records contain a good bit of the information under varying subject files and operational reports. WAVE would like to suggest that in this instance the best approach may be to allow the material to die a natural death insofar as possible. Secondly, the preparation of a brief factual statement on the true nature of the source for giving to key officials and editors should serve to spike further publicity. It would seem that there is more than sufficient information available showing LaBorde to be a completely unethical ne'er-do-well to be able to so advise such persons as really have to know. The entire situation is of course extremely regrettable, but can be interpreted as a further example of the difficulties being encountered in endeavoring to mount an effective clandestine program against PBRUMEN from the WAVE area and through the PBRUMEN exile community with all of its national characteristics which do not lend themselves to clandestine operations.

William Harvey was angry:

We would appreciate it receiving your views on what might possibly be done to make life difficult for La Borde. Any proposal you might have, including possible use of the AMOT will most certainly receive favorable consideration and will probably be approved. Our aim obviously would be to ensure that Larry La Borde does not continue to be a source of misinformation and to be a general nuisance to all of us. [CIA 201-294688 6.29.62]

The FBI reported:

MM T-1 who has been actively engaged in Cuban revolutionary activities June 11, 1962, for the past four years advised that Larry LaBorde called Miami Florida the previous evening and said he expected the 67 foot schooner "Elsie Reichart" to arrive in Miami on or about July 14, 1962. LaBorde advised the boat would have four Americans and three Cubans aboard as crewmen.

MM T-1 advised that the schooner "The Mariner" is still located at Fort Meyers, Florida, needs an anchor and other repairs. Both of these boats are reportedly being operated by their owners and crews without monetary remuneration from LaBorde.

Bill Seymour, an American citizen who had previously been trained as a mechanic while serving in the United States Navy has been residing in Miami is closely connected with GERALD PATRICK HEMMING an American soldier of Fortune who is closely associated with persons involved in Cuban revolutionary activities in the Miami, Florida area. Hemming, who is a close friend and associate of LaBorde, planned to send Seymour to St. Petersburg to work on the boat's engine.

Captain Jose Rodriguez Soso, a Cuban national residing in Miami and a member of the Directorio Revolucionario Estudiantil, a Cuban revolutionary organization, has been in close contact with LaBorde and plans on sending another Cuban from, Miami to join the "Elsie Reichart" which recently sprung a leak in the hull, and whose, engine is still inoperative.

On June 21, 1962, HEMMING received a letter from the CIA informing him that he would not be hired. HEMMING told this researcher:

That's bullshit. CIA never sent me a letter about being hired or recruited for a goddamn thing. They never sent me a fucking message. I had contact with Justin Gleichauf from OO twice. One time was the Bay of Pigs. They sold out two of my guys who Somoza wanted dead. After that nothing face-to-face, all by pay phone. Gleichauf was liaison with law enforcement.

HEMMING, RABEL, BARTES & THE REVOLUTIONARY COUNCIL
LUIS RABEL

Luis Rabel Nunez, aka Luis Ravel, was the delegate of the Cuban Revolutionary Council in New Orleans from 1960 to 1961. Luis Rabel was the son of a native born American citizen and had been raised in comfortable circumstances, on an experimental rice farm next to that of the father of Fidel Castro. He had known Fidel when both were children. When interviewed in 1977, Luis Rabel said that he had resigned and moved to Venezuela in October 1962, since the Cuban Revolutionary Council had turned out to be a "complete fiasco." Luis Rabel said the names HEMMING or Lawrence La Borde did not ring any bells. When questioned in HUNT v. WEBERMAN, HUNT denied having known Luis Rabel. STURGIS's CIA 201 file contained an index cards that read, "FIORINI, Frank #284008 *RABEL, Joseph Luis FBI Rpt. August 3, 1962 p.4 (copy in file 10/77)." Francisco Antonio Bartes Clarens [CIA 201-289005 also CIA 201-289685], was the delegate of the Cuban Revolutionary Council in New Orleans from November 1962 to 1964. Frank Bartes succeeded Luis Rabel. Frank Bartes had been the president of a private railroad in pre-Castro Cuba. His firm, which employed thousands of workers and had assets of $100 million, was nationalized by Castro in 1960. Bartes was mentioned in an FBI Report July 11, 1960. (DBF 52-700) When he came to the United States, he operated a New Orleans Washeteria from 1961 to 1963. On JANUARY 3, 1961 the CIA generated an Access Restricted on Bartes. On JANUARY 3, 1961 an Indices File request yielded one result.

FRANK BARTES: INFORMANT

An FBI report of July 3, 1964 subject: Christian Democratic Movement (MDC) stated:

BARTES was the head of the CRC in New Orleans but that on or about June 4, 1964 he had received from Miami headquarters a notification that the CRC was being dissolved. Bartes advised the New Orleans office of the FBI that the New Orleans delegate to the MDC was Jose Manuel Cusco, who was not very active, and that the Miami chief was Jose Ignacio Rasco. (Comment: There is no record of CUSCO in the RI/Main Index.) A PRQ II on BARTES shows that he was an FBI informant (dates not given) and that his contact was with S.A. DeBRUEYS."

The CIA reported:

Subject's 201 file shows that on the basis of favorable information provided CIA by a U.S. citizen and former employee of Frank Bartes, William C. Davis, Headquarters queried Havana about him. (DIR-46206 July 15, 1960) Havana requested a POA for his use in JMATE on December 29, 1960. Whether any paramilitary or operational use was made of Subject cannot be determined from the files listed above. (Comment: It is requested that Western Hemisphere/Caribbean Operations Group answer this question). The POA was cancelled on August 30, 1961 at the request of WH/4 which has no further operational interest."

Frank Bartes connection to the Deputy Director/Plans began with a December 29, 1960, Provisional Operational Approval request that was granted January 30, 1961: "The request was canceled on August 30, 1961, and Bartes was not used during this interval. (Per JMWAVE 0483 December 4, 1967)." Frank Bartes had meetings with the Domestic Contacts Division: "The first contact of Domestic Contacts Division New Orleans with (deleted) occurred on May 4, 1961. Between that date and January 1967, a total of 13 meetings took place. Bartes is the source of six Domestic Contacts Division reports. Contact has not been terminated." [CIA Memo 8 1.12.68] While he was being debriefed by DCD Bartes asked to be put in touch with Phil Klepack, who had been an assistant to the United States Naval Attaché in Havana. On May 8, 1961 DCD reported:

Mr. BARTES said that there is some chemical the name of which he did not know which can be added to the oil in diesel locomotive which will cause the cylinders to freeze thereby paralyzing their movement. He said the particular additive which he heard of was practically impossible to detect and that therefore an examination of the oil in the locomotive would not indicate sabotage. However, be that as it may, this matter never did come to fruition and Bartes left Cuba on the day that diplomatic relations between the United States and Cuba were broken. The Consolidated Railways of Cuba has been intervened by the government and we understand that in the process Mr. Bartes has lost in the neighborhood of seven million dollars.

HEMMING told this researcher:

Bartes was a very distinguished guy, a close friend of Bill Pawley. He was of Spanish descent, very patrician. This ain't no flat nosed beaner, tortilla roller. This is a goddamn aristocrat. The guy is honorable.

On May 21, 1963, this article appeared in The New Orleans Times Picayune:

CUBAN COUNCIL ENVOY IS HEARD

Franklin, La. Man Honored for Editorial

Cubans have the feeling they have been sold out, not only by the American people, but by the American Government, Frank Bartes said Monday night...Bartes, a delegate of the Cuban Revolutionary Council spoke at a meeting sponsored by the DRE, Alpha-66, the Second National Front of Escambray and the Council. CARLOS BRINGUIER also spoke.

A Counter-Intelligence Research & Analysis memorandum stated: "On June 25, 1962, Lawrence La Borde, HEMMING, Howard K. Davis paid a visit to Frank Bartes in New Orleans and reached an agreement to train anti-Castro Cubans." [CIA Attach. No.5. Garrison 8.7.67]

BARTES INFORMS CIA RE: JUNE 25, 1962 MEETING WITH HEMMING

A memorandum from the Chief of the New Orleans Domestic Contacts Division Office, Subject, "Proposal Made to New Orleans Refugee Group for the Military Training of a Refugee Group in the State of Louisiana," stated:

1. On Thursday, June 28, 1962, Cuban Revolutionary Council Delegate among the Cuban refugees, Frank Bartes, spoke with Lloyd Ray, with whom he is on friendly terms and (illegible) he could give us some interesting information.
2. The information he gave us is certainly not foreign positive intelligence but it may be of some interest to the Counter-Intelligence Staff.
3. Bartes said that on Monday, June 25, 1962, he had been contacted by three U.S. citizens named Larry La Borde, HEMMING and Howard K. Davis. Bartes says that he had met La Borde some time ago in Miami. At any rate, these three people told Bartes and another Cuban refugee here in New Orleans at a meeting held in Bartes house that they were anxious to begin training of a group of Cuban refugees in the New Orleans area. They would train them as guerilla fighters and as demolition experts with the idea of infiltrating into Cuba.
4. Bartes says that he and another Cuban refugee from New Orleans went to Miami a month or so ago and at that time they met La Borde and La Borde had told them that he was interested in working with the Cuban refugees and that he had been previously been connected with a training camp in the Everglades and that camp was abandoned because of fires in the Everglades.
5. When Bartes returned to New Orleans, according to him, he called the local FBI office and asked them, if he could, in his words, 'clear' La Borde. The Bureau told him that it could not give him an official clearance, they would look into the situation and contact (illegible) would contact Mr. Bartes and Mr. Rabel, who is the nominal head of the Cuban movement in New Orleans.
6. Bartes says some days later the FBI contacted Luis Rabel and told him as far as La Borde was concerned, off [sic]. Curiously enough, both Bartes and Rabel took this to mean the FBI clearance of La Borde, so when La Borde and the other contacted Rabel and Bartes in New Orleans, they had no hesitancy in working with them.

7. We, of course, told Bartes that all of this was out of the question and we had absolutely nothing to do with such matters and could not offer any advice which he seemed to be asking for. He said, however, that the (illegible) was giving us this information was that these men (text covered) that the CIA is doing nothing and is preventing other people (text covered) and that they are anxious to do something to help the Cuban (text covered). And Bartes said that since he had furnished us with information (text covered) thought that we should know about the present situation.

8. The three men gave to Bartes the documents which (text covered) which is a clipping, or alleged clipping from the Denver Post of Sunday June 3, 1962, which castigates CIA and Dr. Miro Cardona, the other document which is undated, and which is signed by Luis del Nodal Vega who styles himself Military Coordinator MR 30 11, GERALD PATRICK HEMMING JR., G/W Instructor for INTERPEN and Howard K. Davis, G/W Instructor for INTERPEN, and is approved by Carlos Rodriguez Quesada, National Coordinator for MR 30 11, Arturo Gonzales Gonzalez MR 30 11, Dr. Odoardo Fonseca, M.D. MR 30 11. Bartes was also told by HEMMING and (text covered) this document had been presented to the CIA in Miami last year but that (text covered) come of it.

9. As we said above, we told Bartes that while we would be glad to have copies of any of the documents which he had, we could not and would not advise him in any manner, shape or form in connection with any such operation. He seemed to understand that we could not help him and when he left he said that he would tell the three men, La Borde, HEMMING and Davis, that he could not go along with them.

10. While Bartes did not tell us this, we did ascertain from a source who is a close friend of Bartes that he had seen Bartes with the men described above, and they looked like a bunch of thugs. He also said that Bartes had told him confidentially that he was dealing with these people as a representative of the New Orleans refugee organization but he did not give him any details. He did tell the other men, however, that these men were armed and therefore potentially dangerous.

11. We pass this information on for what it is worth. [LAR Memo Burke to Collins 1962] The CIA stated "Bartes reached an agreement with La Borde who, he said, was anti-CIA.

Frank Bartes told an investigator for Jim Garrison that:

...when he took over the Cuban Revolutionary Council in November 1962 membership lists had been prepared for the New Orleans Division and that these membership lists remained essentially the same for the New Orleans area. During the period of his administration Mr. Bartes had two informal meetings of the Council at his home and the persons he remembers as attending these meetings at his home are indicated by a check mark next to their name on Attachment No. 3. According to Mr. Bartes, Mr. Lawrence La Borde of this city would occasionally come to the meetings of the Revolutionary Council, but Mr. Bartes does not recall having Mr. La Borde in his home at any time to attend a meeting of the Council. Mr. Bartes recalls that Mr. La Borde introduced him to JERRY PATRICK HEMMING and to HOWARD DAVIS in late 1962 but he does not recall whether La Borde brought these two men to his home for the introduction, or whether the introduction was made elsewhere. He does recall, however, that on one occasion JERRY PATRICK HEMMING and HOWARD DAVIS came to his (Bartes) residence to try to obtain funds for a training camp in the Covington area, and to locate a site for the training camp. Mr. Bartes was not able to assist in obtaining funds for this project, but states that he did fly over the Covington area with HEMMING and Davis in an attempt to locate a suitable training area in early 1963 in an aircraft rented from the Pan-Air Corporation located at the New Orleans Lakefront Airport. He recalls that Howard Davis piloted the aircraft and that the conversation indicated that the training area, if one could be located, would be used to train a team of men to blow up the Shell Oil Refinery in Havana Harbor. Bartes expected that his operation had the sanction and support of our State Department and/or the CIA but later learned, through his superiors in Miami, that it was a private project of HEMMING and DAVIS and the end result was that it was not given the support of the Cuban Revolutionary Council.

These names were on attachment No. 3: CARLOS BRINGUIER, Arnesto Napolian Rodriguez, Manuel Gil and Orestes Pena. Frank Bartes told the HSCA: "Tony Varona was especially leery of the plan, also news reports of the camp contributed to the rejection of the idea." When questioned in HUNT v. WEBERMAN, HUNT denied knowing Frank Bartes.

In June 1993 Howard K. Davis recalled:

We did not establish a training camp there, but someone else did. The only reason it wasn't established was because the guy who took us to Louisiana was a CIA boat captain [Larry La Borde] down in the Florida area. After we had made arrangements and had done some preliminary work, he went to the newspapers and all of a sudden it was in the front page of the New Orleans newspapers. And they had a big story about how we were seen going up the Mississippi River in a PT boat. None of this was true.

WILLIAM A. PENNINGTON

On June 26, 1962, William A. Pennington, an unemployed male nurse, contacted Army Intelligence Region V, 112th INTC Group, New Orleans:

On June 26, 1962 William Pennington, presently a patient at U.S. Veterans Hospital, New Orleans, reported that he has been in contact with Luis Ravel (phonetic) [Rabel] concerning Pennington's possible recruitment for military service with anti-Castro forces. Ravel advised Pennington that President Cardona arrived in New Orleans on Sunday, June 24, 1962, and that 'plans are being made for a move soon.' Pennington interprets this to mean that an invasion of Cuba is imminent. Ravel stated that he hoped Pennington would soon be able to leave the hospital and arrange for a personal meeting with him. Pennington, who is being treated for a gall bladder disorder, expects to be released from the hospital within the next 10 days. Pennington requested that this office furnish him with U.S. Army Field manuals dealing with infantry tactics." Pennington was advised to request such publications through the U.S. Government Printing office.

On July 9, 1962, William A. Pennington told Army Intelligence that he had again been in contact with Luis Ravel concerning Pennington's possible military service with anti-Castro forces. On the evening of July 9, 1962, exact date unknown, a sailing vessel, equipped with two diesel engines, further description unknown, left the New Orleans yacht basin. Aboard the vessel was a landing party, strength unknown led by two United States citizens, Larry (LNU) [La Borde] and FRANK (LNU) [STURGIS]. Both of these individuals are former members of the United States Marine Corps. The vessel will reportedly anchor 20 miles off the Cuban coast, at which point the landing party will proceed to the beach by motor launch. The purpose of the landing is to bring out some people, however, Pennington does not know whether or not these unidentified persons desire to voluntarily leave Cuba. Through his conversations with Ravel, Pennington gained the impression that the individuals will be involuntarily brought from Cuba...Pennington was prepared to accompany the landing party; however, at approximately 12:00 p.m. July 9, 1962, Ravel advised him that the landing party was formed and that his services would not be needed. Ravel told Pennington that the vessel would participate in a similar operation in about two weeks. Pennington is to contact Ravel again on July 14, 1962. If Pennington takes any part in the operations of the anti-Castro forces, the expenses of his family will be defrayed by the Pemberton Theater Chain, Miami, Florida.

William A. Pennington also contacted the CIA, advising:

Larry La Borde, GERALD PATRICK HEMMING and Howard K. Davis...were anxious to begin training a group of Cuban refugees in the New Orleans area...the reason he was giving [CIA] this information was that these three men hate the CIA, and have said that the CIA is doing nothing to overthrow Castro.

William Pennington gave the Agency a newspaper article in which HEMMING, Howard K. Davis, and several members of the 30th of November Movement castigated it. [CIA F82-0428/5] Contacted in 1993, Luis Rabel stated that although the name sounded familiar, he did not remember William Pennington. He conceded that he met a lot of "screwballs and nuts that offered help" around this time. HEMMING told this researcher:

During the meeting with Luis Rabel we also met with Guy Banister, although the FBI shit doesn't mention it. We went next door to Luis Rabel's son-in-law to use his telephone. Banister was there.

WILLIAM PENNINGTON IS 'ROLLED OVER'

By July 17, 1962, William Pennington had been "rolled over" by the INTERPEN crew. When William Pennington made his next report to Army Intelligence, he told the agents that he "has now gone all the way and holds the rank of Captain' in the anti-Castro forces in the New Orleans area. Pennington vehemently attacked the U.S. Government in general, and the various federal and military intelligence agencies in particular for their failure to take any action to overthrow the Castro regime. Pennington also strongly attacked the maritime and trade policies which allows Greek, Liberian, Swedish, English and Canadian vessels to load military equipment and supplies at the Port of New Orleans for delivery to Cuba. Pennington requested information as to 'what would happen' if such a vessel were to be sabotaged in the Port of New Orleans, or 'pirated on the high seas.' Pennington's conversation implied he might possibly be contemplating such actions; however, he made no definite statement to that effect." This FBI document on Pennington cited an article by William Stuckey in the July 21, 1962, edition of the New Orleans States-Item about HEMMING. That was the last the Army Intelligence heard from Pennington. The HSCA tried to interview Pennington and found: "Information received from neighbors, who 'request no identification,' Subject is 'deceased.' Died approximately one and a half years ago. Family still resides at the above address and was not available for interview." [HSCA OCR William Brown 5.15.78] The parents of William Pennington told HSCA investigator William Brown that their son had died in 1976.

LA BORDE AND WILLIAM STUCKEY

William Stuckey advised the FBI on July 25, 1962, that Lawrence La Borde had contacted him. He claimed to have some connection to the CIA and to have sailed back and forth to Cuba between 1960 and 1961. "La Borde informed Stuckey that he was a soldier-of-fortune...and that he had worked with JERRY PATRICK, aka JERRY PATRICK HEMMING, an ex-Marine." In August 1962 Lawrence La Borde had reportedly duped certain persons into buying a schooner by saying he and a crew would operate it for Cuban operations. In September this CIA Dispatch was generated:

To: Director FBI Attention Mr. S. J. Papich
From: Deputy Director, Plans
Subject: ARGOINO FONSECA FERNANDEZ and the Harmandad Cubana

January 28, 1963

Argimino Fonseca Fernandez is organizing a group or association called Hermandad Cubana (Cuban Brotherhood) which includes about seven or eight Americans. Fonseca lives with two Americans in Miami, Florida. In the upper room of this house the group has arms and equipment stored. It is also selling fund-raising bonds; about twenty or thirty persons are engaged in selling them. Among the Americans who go around with Fonseca is one called "Larry" who, with another American in the group, was an instructor of Fidel Castro's troops during the early part of the Castro Regime. Fonseca makes no attempt to hide anti-American feelings, and he says that he does not want to have anything to do with this Agency personnel. He also said that if he had to join the army, the army would have to watch out for him. End of Dispatch. [CIA FOIA 18626]

HEMMING: JULY 1962

STUCKEY'S JULY 21, 1962 ARTICLE ON HEMMING HEMMING AND THE NEW ORLEANS TRAINING CAMP

William Stuckey did a feature story on HEMMING and INTERPEN for the July 21, 1962, New Orleans States-Item, which read:

NEW ORLEANS AND THE AMERICAS

ADVENTURER WORKS HARD TO ESTABLISH ANTI-CASTRO BASE NEAR COVINGTON

By BILL STUCKEY

Local Cubans and a shadowy American adventurer have been working feverishly - but unsuccessfully - for over a month to set up an anti-Castro guerilla training camp base near Covington.

The American soldier-of-fortune, The States-Item learned, is GERALD PATRICK HEMMING. He claims to be an ex-Marine.

PATRICK first popped into the news last summer when Miami newspapers found he was training anti-Castro guerillas in the Everglades.

He called his band the Intercontinental Penetration Force. Both he and INTERPEN however, dropped out of sight last fall after the FBI began checking to see if he was violating U.S. neutrality laws.

Last February, PATRICK showed up in New Orleans, apparently at the invitation of local Cuban Revolutionary Council leaders and other Cubans who wanted to take direct action against Castro. With the help of anonymous U.S. patrons, the Cubans began supplying PATRICK with machine guns, explosives and other military supplies.

PATRICK made regular trips here, slipping in and out of the port secretly in a modern, well-equipped PT boat.

Last spring, another anonymous U.S. patron offered PATRICK a large tract of land - complete with airstrip - on the north shore of Lake Pontchartrain. PATRICK agreed to set up a training base, handling classes of 50 or so Cuban recruits at a time. After completion of training, the guerillas would be like their Everglades counterparts, transported to Cuba secretly to work with the anti-Castro underground. The men also would have been used to make lightning raids on the Cuban coast to divert the attention of Castro's militia from important sabotage missions.

Luis Rabel, local delegate of the Cuban Revolutionary Council, confirmed last week the Miami Council Headquarters nixed the Covington base for undisclosed reasons.

Who is this PATRICK?

Rabel describes him as a rangy, six-foot-seven type who can shoot two heavy machine guns from the hip at the same time, cowboy style. Miami sources say he wears an Australian bush hat, a neat beard and wears his hair long and wavy. He's been described as an Errol Flynn type in appearance, a French musketeer type and as the "biggest, strongest and homsomet" man in INTERPEN.

Although he claims his group has little money, local Cubans guess that he has extensive financial backing. His equipment is of the latest model, and the power boat he brings here periodically is "at least a $20,000 job."

PATRICK tells the Cubans he was to topple Castro because the Fidelista regime imprisoned his Cuban wife on charges of "counter-revolutionary activity." She has been sentenced to 30 years.

About 30, PATRICK claims to have served with the Marine Corps for more than four years, including a stint in the Far East as a sergeant with the Marine Air Wing. However, when PATRICK first began to get headlines there, Miami sources said Marine records show no trace of either a PATRICK or a HEMMING.

PATRICK also says he was a paratroop instructor with Castro in 1958 and stayed on with the Cuban regime until August 1960. About the time he left Cuba, he was also involved in an "invasion" intended to topple the Somoza regime in Nicaragua.

Estimates of the size of his organization range from 30 to 100 men - Cubans, Americans, Latins, Canadians and others. "We weed out all the crackpots and bums" he said.

INTERPEN is connected with the International Anti-Communist Brigade headed by FRANK FIORINI...Both FIORINI and PATRICK at one time had connections with Sanchez Arango, former Minister of Foreign Relations and Education under pre-Batista President Carlos Prío Socarras. It's an educated guess that PATRICK'S big backer might be Prío, who reputedly left Cuba with a huge fortune.

Although the PATRICK guerilla base plan fell through here, there is enough happening to whet the appetite of any invasion-rumor connoisseur. Last April 1962 the New Orleans States-Item confirmed for the first time Cubans were trained here (New Orleans) at the old Algiers ammunition dump, for the Bay of Pigs invasion. There Cuban leader, an ex-Castro officer named Nino Diaz, returned to Miami when the New Orleans force was unable to land.

HEMMING 1994:

This was a burn article. It's bullshit. We used sail boats, fishing boats. Stuckey had a goddamn gun stuck in his fuckin' head. Why was he endangering our lives?" In a Freedom of Information Act Request to the CIA HEMMING asked for: "Reports not delivered to the Warren Commission showing that shortly after my visit to the New Orleans area to establish an anti-Castro training camp north of Lake Ponchartrain in 1962, government agents immediately thereafter co-opted our supporters and duplicated our efforts for unknown purposes.

OSWALD AND HEMMING AT FORT MEYERS BEACH IN MID-1962

HEMMING:

He turned up at Fort Meyers Beach. On a steel, two-masted 48-foot boat, another crew of people that Larry La Borde conned into sailing down the Miami with their vessels, to fight for freedom. OSWALD was seen around those people. He was on deck telling fucking ghost stories. I was gonna confront him: 'Who's this guy from Los Angeles says he knows me?' They called back up to the harbor master and he said this guy had left. OSWALD was the missing crew member at Fort Meyers Beach.

OSWALD AND HEMMING IN NEW ORLEANS IN MID-1962

HEMMING told this researcher:

OSWALD was at the fucking airport, got a glimpse of his ass at the airport when we got on the plane to do the first overflight survey in the scene in mid-1962. In New Orleans in 1962. We saw him. A familiar fucking face.

THE CIA'S TRAINING CAMPS IN THE NEW ORLEANS AREA

HUNT wrote that in early 1961: "Nino Diaz had been dusted off, and together with a hundred untrained followers, sent to the CIA's amphibious base on Lake Pontchartrain, Louisiana." [HUNT Day p156] In 1967 the FBI found no traces of this base:

During the years 1960, 1961, 1962, no information was obtained from sources regarding a camp where guerrilla training was given to Cuban exiles in the Lake Pontchartrain area. The only information contained in the files of the New Orleans Office regarding a training camp for Cuban exiles in the New Orleans area is contained in a New Orleans letter to the Bureau, dated March 23, 1961, in the case captioned "Clip" Bufile 105-89923, New Orleans file 105-1446 which sets forth information that William A. Royer appeared at the New Orleans office on March 13, 1961 and identified himself as a security officer in charge of an operation under the caption "CLIP" which is identified as the U.S. Army Element Composite Operation Group, Pentagon located at the Belle Chasse Ammunition Depot. He advised there were approximately 140 to 200 Cubans located at that base undergoing expert training in underwater demolition use of sabotage techniques and combat techniques, use of sabotage techniques and combat techniques. ROYER also advised that there was a ship at the docks below New Orleans, which was being loaded with ammunition and that the story they were giving out as a cover is the fact that they were working on a number of weapons and training personnel in the use of these weapons as well as experiments in various types of armament. ROYER explained that they had obtained a home at Pass Christian, Miss for use by approximately ten of these Cubans under cover of being foreign exchange student in the country who were using this base as a vacation spot. Be advised that GIL STRICKLER was the commanding officer in charge of this training group. ROYER indicated that he had briefed Chief of Police Joseph Giarrusso and other top officials of the New Orleans PD as well as Captain Bradley of the Louisiana State Police and had three persons is the US Border Patrol. Information was also set forth in this communication that on 3/10/11, Royer and Gene Shanks, who identified themselves as investigators for CIA contacted SA William F. Dukes and SA Percy V. Richardson at Gulfport, Miss. and furnished data relative to the nature of their operation. They also furnished information that they had rented house at 551 Rest Mach Blvd., Pass Christian, Miss. use as a training base for a limited number of Cuban volunteers under the guise of foreign exchange students. The New Orleans States and New Orleans item in its issue of 4/7/61 carried an article entitled "Invasion Cheers Refugees in New Orleans", which quoted Sergio Arcacha Smith head of the Cuban Revolutionary Front in Louisiana, as saying there were many New Orleans area Cubans in the invasion force but he refused to hazard a guess as to the number. Smith declared that none of the force recruited in New Orleans were Americans. Smith said that many of the revolutionists formerly were students in New Orleans and Baton Rouge and other recruits came to New Orleans from Texas and Oklahoma. SMITH said these individuals were sent on to Miami, Fla. and none were trained in New Orleans. Sergio Arcacha Smith, head of the Cuban Revolutionary Front (FRD) advised on 10/9/81, that the FRD no longer had office in the Balter Building in New Orleans, but that the offices of the FRD were then located at the home address of Smith located at 112 Egret St., New Orleans. Mr. ARCACHA related that the FRD had been largely inactive in the New Orleans area, adding that activities of the organization at New Orleans had been limited to collection of funds and clothing to be used to assist Cuban anti-CASTRO refugees in the New Orleans area. On 12/6/61, SMITH advised that although the activities of the FRD had been dissolved in the New Orleans area a Campaign known as the "Crusade to Free Cuba" would be continued under his guidance and also under the sponsorship of the Revolutionary Council. He explained that the FRD at Miami had merged into the Revolutionary Council. An article in the New Orleans Times-Picayune, a daily newspaper, on 12/2/61, carried a story captioned "Crusade Begins to Free Cuba". This article stated that a two month crusade to free Cuba had been started at the beginning of December, 1961 and would continue until the end of January, 1963. The article said that the founders claimed that the purpose of this crusade was to raise money to educate New Orleans of the danger that Communist orientated Cuba presents to the US. According to the article the Crusade to free Cuba had the support of the Mayor of the City of New Orleans and that a proclamation had been issued by Mayor Victor H. Schiro of New Orleans on 12/1/61, backing this crusade. The article further reported that local prominent citizens of the New Orleans area had been chosen to direct the crusade and the campaign chairman was W. A. Monteleone a hotel executive. [FBI 62-109060-4759]

On October 26, 1967, Donovan Pratt of CI R&A sent a Memorandum to C/WH/COG (Cuban Operation Group) the Subject of which was "Garrison Investigation: Belle Chasse Training Camp: "A recently published booklet concerning the Garrison case and entitled Plot or Politics? was written by States-Item reporters Rosemary James and Jack Wardlaw. The following appears on page 49: 'Meanwhile, Executive Assistant DA Alvin Oser...came across a third training camp near Belle Chasse, Louisiana.'" Pratt wanted to know everything about this site. This memo was routed to DAVID PHILLIPS who drafted this reply:

WH/C 67-336

MEMORANDUM FOR: Chief, CI/R & A

SUBJECT: Garrison Investigation: Belle Chasse Training Camp

REFERENCE: CI/ R & A Memorandum Dated October 26, 1967

1. Listed below is the information pertaining to the Belle Chasse training camp which was requested in reference memorandum.

a. The training site was activated on February 18, 1961 and the first group of trainees arrived on February 18, 1961.

b. The site was located eight miles from New Orleans at the U.S. Naval Ammunition Depot which had been inactive for five years.

c. The site covered 3,500 acres of marshlands adjoining the Mississippi River. The depot consisted of ammunition magazines storage areas, warehouses, various frame and brick buildings, many miles of interlocking railroad tracks and both hard surface and improved roads and the entire site was enclosed by a chain link fence. Since much of the terrain was unaccessible and unsuitable for training purposes, due to the marshy ground and poisonous reptiles, a limited area was used for actual training purposes. This area was located where the activity could neither be heard nor observed.

The base closed on April 21, 1961, and the training site was completely sterilized by Base and cleared Navy personnel after all demolition, ammunition, ordnance items, and field equipment was sterilized and air-lifted to a Midwest depot. Material on loan from the military was restored to original condition and returned to the appropriate military component.

e. Approximately 300 Cubans were trained at the site over a six week period. The only known list of trainees which was available at Headquarters has not been located to date. A search has been initiated for this list.

f. The training consisted of weapons firing, demolition, guerilla warfare, communications, UDT, etc. One group was trained as a strike force assault battalion and was sent to Guatemala on March 22, 1961, to join the Bay of Pigs invasion strike force.

g. The training camp location never came to public knowledge through press media. However, the New York Times and New Orleans radio and television stations reported that a Cuban training camp was located outside of New Orleans, according to information emanating from Miami. Inquiries were directed to high level military and Louisiana officials, who denied knowledge of such a camp and the site was not identified. Subsequent to the above publicity, the representative of a leading T.V. station appeared at the main gate of the installation and requested permission to enter and take pictures. Naval authorities denied permission and there were no further inquiries. The actual training site was quite some distance from the main gates of the depot which was identified by an inscription cut into the concrete 'U.S. Naval Ammunition Depot.' Whether the T.V. representative was trying to identify the location of the rumored training site or simply take pictures of a deactivated historical landmark for posterity, is not known.

h. The training camp was entirely Agency controlled and the training was conducted by Agency personnel.

2. During the initial phase of activation, the depot was sterilized to avoid any indication of government interest and to prevent disclosure of actual physical location of training camp to newly assigned trainees. For example, all U.S. Navy references on boxcars, buildings, etc. were painted out or destroyed. Although the first group of trainees transferred to the base from Florida knew they were going to an abandoned ammunition depot located near New Orleans, maximum precautions were taken to insure that the site location could not be pinpointed while the trainees were being transported from the airport to the camp. Despite all precautions, one incident occurred that is significant in view of the recent publication naming the Belle Chasse camp. One night, a group of trainees arriving at the Moisant Airport from Miami, were observed by Orlando Piedra, the former Chief of the Bureau of Investigation during the Batista regime. Piedra obtained the license numbers of the rental vehicles used for transporting the trainees to the camp. His license number was likewise observed by our security officer at the scene. Piedra, who is one of the individuals included in the CI R&A memorandum dated September 15, 1967 (page 3 -item 21), and memorandum #5 (paragraph 4-J) may be the individual who provided the information contained in the recent publication. In any event, it would be surprising indeed if some of the 300 trainees involved have not discussed their training activities in detail over the past six years. With the clue that the camp was located at an abandoned Navy ammunition depot outside New Orleans, a long-time resident such as Piedra, Arcacha Smith, Fowler, or La Borde, would eventually be able to narrow down the location despite the extreme security precautions that were in effect during the training period. Although only the commanding officers of the ammunition depot and Naval Air Station were knowledgeable of the activities on the grounds, an enterprising reporter or investigator could probably surface other corroborating bits of information which would help identify the training site. For example, despite the fact the majority of supplies and equipment was procured through Navy facilities, certain items were necessarily purchased on the local market, thereby producing a sudden influx of cash in an area that had been dormant for five years. In any event, although the Garrison investigation may eventually lead to identifying the site as a government installation, there has never been any evidence or publicity identifying the Agency as the actual operators of the training camp.

3. CI/R&A may wish to discuss further aspects of the Belle Chasse training camp with Mr. Gilbert Stricker former Base Chief, and Mr. Willaim Royer former Security Officer, who are presently assigned to Headquarters. Mr. Strickler can be reached at this SOD office and Mr. Royer can be reached at OS/SRS.

[CIA MFR 2.14.68 Sarah K. Hall] Why was this memo concerning the Belle Chasse training camp routed to PHILLIPS whose job relating to the Bay of Pigs was supposed to have only concerned propaganda? DAVID PHILLIPS had a detailed knowledge of this camp. If he hadn't organized it, he certainly had visited it. PHILLIPS was familiar with Larry La Borde, who was close to HEMMING.

BARTES

In June 1962 Frank Bartes reported [deleted] that Lawrence Joseph La Borde, GERALD PATRICK HEMMING Jr. and Howard Kenneth Davis called on him and said they wanted to train Cuban refugees as guerrilla fighters and demolition experts for use in Cuba. Bartes reached an agreement with La Border who, he said, was anti-CIA. [NARA Record Number: 1993.08.02.10:00:45:150060]

AMERICANS WHO WISH TO VOLUNTEER TO FIGHT IN CUBA

Counter-Intelligence Chief JAMES ANGLETON either generated or approved this report:

TO: Director, FBI. Attention Mr. S. J. Papich August 2, 1962
From: Deputy Director (Plans)
Subject "United States Citizens Who Wish to Volunteer to Fight for the Liberation of Cuba."

1. Reference is made to this Agency's CSCI-3,767,435 of October 4, 1961, Subject: United States Citizens Who Wish to Volunteer to Fight for the Liberation of Cuba.

2. The following information was received by this Agency from a usually reliable source concerning another interview on August 14, 1961 with the group in the above reference:

a. Source reported that "Little Joe" and Pat Stepanick came to ask him for help in obtaining a fragmentation hand grenade of the pineapple type. They also wanted source to accompany them on a mission planned by themselves to blow up the Cuban gunboat which was to be returned to Cuba that next day in exchange for the return of the Eastern Airlines plane. They said the object of this mission was to provoke an incident which would tend to force United States armed action against Cuba. Source said all efforts to obtain the grenade were fruitless.

b. According to source, the group with which the four Americans were working was called the Intercontinental Penetration Force (INTERPEN); "Patrick" (GERALD PATRICK HENNING) is the man who was acting as the chief of the group, and he had been training a bunch of Cubans in the Everglades. They relied a great deal on a man called "Larry" whose surname sounded something like Yidisepe. Identity cards for the members of INTERPEN were signed by a man called FRANK FIORINI, said to be of Italian descent. Source said there was another person who seemed to be higher in command than FIORINI; this person was described as a tall, stout man who had great prestige in the Junta de Liberacion headed by Aureliano Sanchez Arrango.

c. Source said that when he arrived with the two Americans at the place where they were living, a young man, allegedly a reporter for an American paper in Miami who spoke Spanish with a Mexican accent, was waiting for them. "Little Joe" said later that this man was their agent and had been the one to tell them about the Cuban gunboat plus information which had not been published in the papers. The newspaperman, according to the source, said that he had verified the fact that agents of this Agency had the district where the men were living under surveillance, and he was heard to refer to a bookstore. Source said he asked "Little Joe" to notify him how they knew when they were under surveillance, and there the newspaperman said the agents of this Agency gathered. Source reported that the attitude of these men was that the Bureau and this Agency must be regarded as enemies because they will not permit any action against Castro and Communism. Stepanick mentioned the fact that he had been arrested for vagrancy and held for 20 days in order to get rid of him.

d. According to the source, while he and the two men were waiting across the street from the Junta De Liberacion office they were joined by a tall young man with a mustache who said he was a Hungarian named Francoise. He said he spoke French and had fought in Indochina. Another man who joined them at the same place was a man whose left arm was missing. He claimed he was Joseph Canfield and was also known as "Gitano" outside of the United States..." [CIA CSCI 3/771,919 cc Department of State, Department of the Army]

HEMMING'S TRAINING CAMP AUGUST 1962

The CIA stated: "New Orleans District Attorney Jim Garrison has charged that Cuban training activities at Lake Pontchartrain were Agency sponsored. While this statement is false, the Cuban Revolutionary Front which later became the Cuban Revolutionary Council was Agency created and funded." [CIA OS Rasco Memo 12.14.67] HEMMING 1994:

Part of my cadre had operations in the Covington, Louisiana area, near Lake Pontchartrain, [where OSWALD grew up]. It was set up unofficially. We had scattered facilities at Mandeville, Houma, La Combe and Algiers. Howard K. Davis was there. No Name Key was our next training facility.

HEMMING convinced New Orleans District Attorney Jim Garrison that David Ferrie was at this camp. In a memorandum to William C. Sullivan, William A. Branigan advised: "Garrison alleged David Ferrie was a member of a group of anti-Castro Cubans who were located in 1961 and 1962 at Lake Pontchartrain, Louisiana (deleted). Nothing in Bureau files to indicate David Ferrie connected with this (deleted)." [FBI 109060-4634]. On February 1, 1977, Raymond M. Reardon of CIA's Security Analysis Group/Office of Security, wrote a memo for the Deputy Inspector General, which stated:

1. During our Task Force meeting on January 27, 1977, there was some discussion of the question of any Agency training activities having taken place in the vicinity of New Orleans. The attached debriefing of a former Staff Employee in regard to training and demolitions came across my desk recently. You will note that paragraph 3 contains a reference to Agency training conducted near New Orleans circa 1960. I have also seen references to some Agency training that had taken place at the "Old Algiers Ammo Dump" near New Orleans and this may be the site referred to in the attached debriefing.

2. This Agency training should not be confused with the infamous training activity which took place at Lake Pontchartrain circa 1962. The Lake Pontchartrain activity was run by GERALD PATRICK HEMMING as part of his Intercontinental Penetration Force (INTERPEN). There was no Agency connection with any INTERPEN activities. FRANK STURGIS of Watergate fame was also connected with INTERPEN activities." [CIA FOIA 18658 SAG Memo w/h re: H 9.10.75]

Questioned in 1993 Rabel stated, "I heard of it but I never went there. I think it was in operation at one time." Mr. Blackmer of the HSCA questioned him about this: "Did you ever go to Lake Pontchartrain to survey possible sites for any kind of (Access Restricted FBI/CIA)." Rabel was also asked about HEMMING:

Q. So did this man discuss with you the killing of Fidel Castro?

A. Oh, he had an obsession about it. In fact, he used to say, 'I just come back from Cuba. I took a shot at a man who had whiskers on.' I think this man was really unbalanced, truthfully. We were scared of him. We got to the point where we would - and yet he was crazy. That's the funny thing about it. He said all these kinds of crazy things. [HSCA Rabel Dep.]

HEMMING 1994:

Never had any conversations with him. He's a pudgy guy. What the fuck are we trading war stories with some pudgy fuck who ain't going on the boat with us?" HEMMING was intent on killing Castro: "We had a postmaster that was dying of cancer that volunteered to do the job. He was from Marathon, Florida. He had the balls to do one of those Islamic Jihad jobs.

William Stuckey wrote: "Both FIORINI and PATRICK at one time had connections with Sanchez Arrango, former Minister under President Carlos Prio...It's an educated guess that PATRICK'S big backer might be Prio." [New Orleans States Item 7.21.62] HEMMING told this researcher: "Marcos Jimenez Perez gave us more money than Prio did. Prio was a tightwad fuck." As a result of William Stuckey's article, on August 2, 1962, an FBI document entitled "Cuban Revolutionary Council, New Orleans, LA. IS - Cuba, NM File FRANK FIORINI" was generated: "Re New Orleans airtel to Bureau, July 10, 1962 transmitting a LHM concerning the possible establishment of a training camp in the New Orleans area. Enclosed for the Bureau and Miami is a copy of a news item that appeared in the New Orleans States-Item, July 21, 1962." [FBI 2-1499 NR 8.2.62]

The next day the FBI generated a document on HEMMING and the Cuban Revolutionary Council. [FBI 105-1698 NO 8.3.62]

HEMMING:

Sanchez Arrango arranged for two B-26's to be delivered. He had trouble moving the second one. That's where we came in. There would be interest in the movement of B-26s. That's a nasty bird.

On August 24, 1962, the FBI in Miami generated a document about HEMMING titled "Theodore Roosevelt Brigade." [FBI 105-6145 (field)] The FBI reported:

MM T-1 advised on August 3, 1962, that HEMMING was supposed to be the middle man in the sale of 250 pounds of C-4 explosive. MM T-1 advised, however, that HEMMING had been unable to obtain the explosive as of that time. He was to purchase the explosive for resale to one DAVID QUINTAS, 469 N.W. 48th Street, Miami, a Cuban exile involved in revolutionary activity.

MM T-1 advised that on August 23, 1962, QUINTAS contacted HEMMING and said that he hoped to leave Miami on the following day providing HEMMING could obtain a boat for transportation. MM T-1 said that on that same date, SAM BENTON, an American citizen who resides in Miami and who is employed as a private detective, arranged for the use of a boat which would be operated by HEMMING to carry QUINTAS and his men to the Bahamas and thereafter to Cuba. This boat was the "Outlaw 6", a thirty foot Chris Craft twin-engine cabin cruiser. HEMMING and QUINTAS were planning to take a total of nineteen Cubans to Anguila Key in the Bahamas to remain there for a few days where they would meet another group of Cubans and then proceed to Cuba.

MM T-1 advised on August 27, 1962, that four groups of Cubans had left Miami on the previous evening for Fort Lauderdale, Florida, and that they were maintaining telephone contact with QUINTAS in Miami for further instructions. It was planned that HEMMING would take the boat to a secure place where the Cubans and their equipment could be loaded without being seen by the U. S. Border Patrol or local police. The four groups of Cubans, however, returned to Miami and were not taken aboard the boat.

On August 28, 1962, Mr. J. H. WILCHESTER, U. S. Customs, Miami, Florida, advised that in the early morning hours of that date, Customs agents had observed the "Outlaw 6" at Pompano Beach, Florida, where it was being loaded with boxes, packages and steel drums. Mr. WILCHESTER said the boat contained no automatic weapons and among the several Americans aboard was GERALD PATRICK HEMMING, who claimed that they were going fishing. MM T-1 advised on August 28, 1962, that HEMMING had called Miami, Florida, to report that he had been stopped by U. S. Customs agent<sup>3</sup> and that he was returning to Miami. On August 29, 1962, MM T-1 reported that HEMMING and his crew had returned to Miami but that HEMMING was impatient to attempt another expedition and hoped to leave within two or three weeks.

The FBI summed it up:

In August 1962 HEMMING planned a military expedition to Cuba. He obtained a boat and recruited Cuban exiles, but at the last moment the exiles deserted him, U.S. Customs agents searched the boat, and then the boat broke down and became inoperative.

HEMMING RETURNS TO MIAMI SEPTEMBER 1962

HEMMING left Louisiana in late August 1962 and returned to No Name Key. HEMMING told this researcher:

Masferrer had used it with Diosdado's permission after Bay of Pigs. They fiddlefucked around there a couple of months. Did shit. We had no interest in the place until May, June 1962.

On September 6, 1962 the FBI in Miami generated a document titled INTERPEN.

MM T-1 advised on September 8, 1962, that GERALD PATRICK HEMMING and five other Americans left Miami that day for Big Pine Key, Florida, where they were going to start to train a group of Cuban exiles in infantry tactics, small arms, demolition, and military formation. On September 10, 1962, DARREL C. CARICO, U. S. Border Patrol, Key West, Florida, advised that he had gone to Big Pine Key on the previous day where he observed some sixteen individuals in possession of several Enfield rifles, various makes and calibers of pistols and other military equipment. CARICO said that the group consisted of six Americans, nine Cubans, and one Canadian, and included GERALD PATRICK HEMMING. He said that the group was planning to go to No Name Key, Florida, where they were to remain until about September 14, 1962, when they were to move back to their camp in the Florida Everglades. On September 18, 1962, Mr. J. H. WILCHESTER, Supervising Customs Agent, Miami, Florida, advised that Customs agents had visited the above-mentioned training camp and that they had confiscated several weapons which were in the possession of members of the training camp.

Customs confiscated several weapons to ensure they had not been modified in violation of Federal law. No arrests were made. [FBI 2-1693-64] HEMMING 1994: "Diosdado came there twice." That month, the CIA questioned an FBI source about the training camp. [Unmarked CIA Doc. Enc. 14 H, GP Jr. Ref. II Tracing Status: Not traced. Prior Reference - full para. deleted found in Allen v. DOD; Diosdado, Cesar 1774 Yale Ave Chula Vista, CA. 91913 telephone 619-421-5256] On September 24, 1962, the FBI in Miami generated a document titled INTERPEN.

HEMMING: OCTOBER 1962

HEMMING claimed that during 1962 he had obtained information on Soviet missiles in Cuba prior to, during and after the Cuban Missile Crisis of October 1962 which he furnished to then-Governor of Florida Farris Bryant and to the Office of Naval Intelligence in "reference to my liaison with certain Marine Corps and Naval Aviation officers involved in Cuban overflights, during the missile crisis." [HEMMING ONI Appeal 12.22.76] After the Cuban missile crisis, HEMMING appeared on Allen Courtney's radio program, and spoke openly about his activities training anti-Castro soldiers in the Keys. HEMMING told this researcher: "Courtney was a mean man who became our friend. He didn't believe the government would put people in jail who were really trying to fight communists." When Justice Department officials received news of this broadcast, they ordered another investigation of INTERPEN. HEMMING told this researcher:

There were some people who considered the whole Kennedy scenario treasonous. You have the Civil Rights Movement, you've got all this unrest that's going on. The Cuban missile crisis was considered a sell out, and then he's letting the niggers have the country? Treason. Many people, had they the connections, would have put money out. The only reason they didn't, was that they didn't have the connections. Maybe I was abrupt with people. Maybe my bedside manner wasn't that good, A.J. But I was kind of pissed off, especially after the Bay of Pigs. Some of my guys got wiped out down there, they were assets, the fucking company authorized these fucking people to be blown. I was demoralized that the greatest fucking power on the fucking planet couldn't pull off a simple fucking operation. After the Cuban missile crisis, nobody was doing a fucking thing. Jesus Christ, the fucking war is over? What the fuck is going on here? What the fuck is going on here? Have they given up? Tremendous demoralization was occurring. After the Cuban missile crisis Bobby Kennedy decided to join the fuckin' pack and say 'Everyone out of Cuba' to avoid further confrontations. They were scared shitless. They thought it was the end of the world. The team started forming after the Cuban missile crisis. That's when everything started. That's my best information. OSWALD shows up December 7, 1962.

MM T-1 advised on October 8, 1962, that HEMMING continued to operate his military training camp at No Name Key, Florida. On October 29, 1962, MM T-1 advised that most of the Americans who had been at the training camp at No Name Key had returned to Miami where they were planning to borrow or rent a boat to go on a military expedition to Cuba. On November 13, 1962, the CIA advised the FBI that it had "no operational interest in INTERPEN or in any individuals belonging to it." [FBI 2-1693-67] On November 19, 1962, the FBI in Miami, Florida, generated a document on INTERPEN. The FBI reported, "In November, 1962 HEMMING was working with a private detective Sam Benton in Miami. HEMMING was supposed to sink pleasure boats so the owners could collect insurance. The first boat he was to sink was a 31 foot CrisCraft, however, HEMMING became frightened and refused to sink the boat. Therein, the business enterprise between Benton and HEMMING was terminated.

SAM BENTON

In 1939 Sam "Benton" Finkelman (born July 4, 1920) stowed away on a Polish ocean liner going to Panama. The Panamanians deported him to Havana. After a five year wait because of a derogatory immigration report, Sam Benton was allowed to enter the United States on condition he join the Army Intelligence Corps. After the war, Sam Benton returned to Cuba and by 1958, became friendly with Juan Orta. In 1960 Sam Benton was arrested by the G-2. Released, he returned to America and joined the anti-Castro Cuban exiles. Sam Benton and Aurelio Sanchez Arrango started Cuban Relief Incorporated in 1962. By late 1962, the FBI investigated Sam Benton's connection to INTERPEN/International Anti-Communist Brigade; in January 1963 he became the Subject of an investigation into illegal gambling by the FBI, due to his association with Mike McLaney. Miami Police investigated Cuban Relief Incorporated in March 1963 because the only exiles who received its benefits were members of Aurelio Sanchez Arrango's Triple-A. Cuban Relief had collected $24,000 by mid-1963, on behalf of all Cuban refugees.

On November 13, 1962, MM T-1 stated that HEMMING and his followers were still eager to launch a military attack against Cuba and were in possession of some arms which included a Thompson sub-machinegun, rifles, and a case of dynamite. MM T-1 advised on November 14, 1962, that HEMMING had stated that his group would probably depart from the vicinity of Marathon, Florida and would defy U. S. Border Patrol and Customs agents if the Federal Government attempted to stop them from proceeding on this military expedition. HEMMING said his group would return fire on any Federal Government group that would try to stop including the United States Navy. Problems later developed, the boat was not used and the expedition was called off.

On December 2, 1962, MM T-1 advised that a thirty-five foot Cries Craft motor boat named "Sally" had been rented in Miami on December 2, 1962, for use by HEMMING and his associates. MM T-1 said they had raised $200.00 to put down as a deposit on the boat. They departed on that date from Miami en route to Marathon, Florida, where the boat was to be outfitted for a military expedition. MM T-1 advised on December 3, 1962, that HEMMING had purchased four 55-gallon drums which were to be taken along on the boat for reserve fuel. MM T-1 also reported that HEMMING had obtained an M-2 carbine, a Thompson sub-machinegun, four M-1 rifles, and a quantity of ammunition. He was also planning to steal a 20 mm. cannon which was in possession of an anti-CASTRO Cuban exile.

THE NO NAME KEY BUST - DECEMBER 4, 1962

U.S. Customs Agent Wallace Shanley had returned to the No Name Key camp in October 1962 and compiled a list of INTERPEN members. An FBI informant brought word: "INTERPEN plans to go to Cuba...to participate in guerrilla warfare and demolitions for a period of one to two weeks, and then steal any available boat and go to Cay Sal, Bahamas, where they can easily be rescued by the United States Coast Guard." The FBI: "MM-T1 HEMMING and 13 of his American associates, none of them Cubans, plan to leave Marathon, Florida, night of December 3, 1962, for military expedition against Cuba. On December 3, 1962, a FBI Letterhead Memorandum was generated about HEMMING, however it was still withheld. [FBI 2-1693-71]

December 3, 1962 Miami, Florida

Re: INTERCONTINENTAL PENETRATION FORCES (INTERPEN)
NEUTRALITY MATTERS

MM T-1, who has been involved in Cuban Revolutionary Activities for the past six years and who has furnished reliable information in the past, advised on December 2, 1962, that a 35 foot Chriscraft motor boat, "The

"Sally" was rented in Miami on December 2, 1962, for use by Gerald Patrick Hemming, and American adventurer and soldier of fortune. MM- T-1 explained that Hemming and his associates, about thirteen American mercenaries and adventurers had raised $200 to put down on this boat as a deposit.

On the afternoon of December 2, 1962 that boat left Miami en route to Marathon, Florida, where it will be tied up at Edward Germain's Docks, Marathon, Key, Florida, load and outfitted for a military expedition against Cuba.

After they land in Cuba they will split up into different groups, conduct commando raids and thereafter leave Cuba by stealing a Cuban fishing boat and go to Cay Sal, Bahamas, Islands, just north of Cuba. From there they plan to obtain transportation back to the United States. MM T-1 advised that Hemming planned to take automatic weapons on this military expedition and had already obtained on Thompson sub-machine gun.

On December 4, 1962, Miami U.S. Customs Agents Wallace Shanley and Cesar Diosdado arrested 13 INTERPEN members at No Name Key. The charges were: Conspiracy to violate the Neutrality Act and Possession of Arms, Ammunition and Implements of War and Conspiracy to Illegally Export Articles of War. Shanley would testify that Customs had been investigating the training camp for months. The raid netted HEMMING, Ronald Ponce De Leon, William Johnson Dempsey, William Houston Seymour, Edmund Kolby, James A. Lewis and Eleno Oviedo Alvares, HARGRAVES, Edwin A. Collins, Steve Justin Wilson, Lawrence Henry Howard, James Cavendish Garmen, and Remedio Arce.

HEMMING told this researcher in 1994:

Lewis died in 1970 on a treasure hunt at Eggemont Key, Tampa, Florida. He had discovered gold coins while doing underwater construction work. The stuff had no coral cover, and still glistened. They thought he stole someone's collection. The Internal Revenue Service got wind of the thing. Lewis got a re-breather, he went down by himself to get some coins, and he died.

Dom Bonafede wrote an account for the Miami Herald entitled "U.S. Nabs Anti-Castro Fighters - Why?" which read in part: "The existence of the group has been known for the last several months by Federal officials. But until their arrest, cadre members had not been interfered with by U.S. Agents. Cuban exile leaders speculated that the crackdown indicates a stiffened U.S. policy toward the anti-Castro resistance forces operating in Florida." [12.5.62] Miami Attorney Charles Ashmann secured the group's release. On December 4, 1962, Deputy Attorney General Nicholas Katzenbach called the FBI and asked whether "there was any CIA or other government involvement" with INTERPEN. In September 1984 there was an interest by the HSCA in the December 5, 1962, arrests: A CIA Official Routing slip indicated the document went to C/SAB on December 6, 1962 and C/SD/Y on December 6, 1962. From Chief, Operational Support Division "Lets have SD-4 look into those arrested to determine if any connection with (deleted as of 2010)." On December 7, 1962, (Deleted), CI Support Desk, OS/OSD/SD/4 generated this Memorandum for the Record the Subject of which was Cuban Underground Activities in Florida (Anti-Castro) #EE-29 229:

1. On December 6, 1962, discussed with Charles Matt TFW/PM regarding the 13 men seized in Florida. According to (Deleted) the Agency has no connection with the men who were arrested. He did say that the OO representative in Los Angeles had submitted a PHS on HEMMING. As far as Task Force W was concerned they have had no contact with this group at all.
2. MATT was asked where the group would have gotten their support and funds. MATT stated that they obtained their money jumping from parachutes, 'passing the hat around,' writing bad checks, etc. (In a name check run in the W indices, a Colby (fnu) was reported in July 1962 as approaching a representative of Standard Oil Company of New Jersey for financial support for his underground group).
3. TILTON PA PROP / TFW stated on December 6, 1962, that there was no connection between this group and the Agency.
4. In a name check in the TFW indices, there was only the attached information on GERALD PATRICK HEMMING and a Colby (fna) probably Edmund Colby [KOLBY]. All other names in the Washington Post article dated December 5, 1962 were 'no record.' Attachment, Indices check on HEMMING and Colby. [Document 60 from CIA file given HEMMING by CIA under FOIA]

On December 11, 1962 the FBI in Puerto Rico generated a document "Junta Revolutionaria Cubana" (JURE) that concerned HEMMING. [NARA 1993.07.30.15:08:21:090028] In January 1963 Charles Ashmann said the CIA and other government agencies were guilty of entrapment in HEMMING'S No Name Key bust. On January 8, 1963, the FBI reported: MM T-1 advised that although HEMMING claims to be anti-Communist, he is amoral, being for or against Communism depending on how it personally affects him; he is capable of anything and is motivated by a dream of future economic and political advantage and power in Latin America." [FBI Hq. 2-1693-76] On January 8, 1963, the FBI in Miami generated a document titled William J. Dempsey, aka Bill Internal Security - Cuba - Neutrality Matters. [FBI 2-312] A CIA representative discussed HEMMING'S case with U.S. Attorney Edith House on January 19, 1963. Edith House asked if HEMMING was connected with the CIA. The CIA representative expressed his conviction that HEMMING was not a KUBARK agent, but could possibly be in a position to identify CIA personnel, since HEMMING had come into contact with

Lawrence J. La Borde. [CIA From: JMWAVE to TFW 10 1.19.63 ] The No Name Key charges were dismissed on January 22, 1963, because the Justice Department failed to go ahead with the prosecution.

The January 22, 1963 issue of the "Miami Herald" contained an article captioned "Anti-Castro Trainees Freed; U. S. Doesn't Press Charges", which article related that Federal charges have been dropped "against 13 anti-Castroites arrested December 4th as they started to leave by boat for what Customs men believed was to be a hit-and-run attack on Cuba. "U. S. District Judge David Dwyer dismissed the cases because the Internal Security Section of the Justice Department failed to go ahead with the prosecution." In October 1977 the FBI reclassified documents about the raid on No Name Key as "SECRET, Date of Automatic Declassification: Indefinite." [FBI 2-1693 Miami Report 12.3.62, p1 para 3,5] On January 23, 1963, MM T-1 advised that the Inter-Continental Penetration Forces (Interpen) organization of HEMMING had recently purchased seven carbines and 1,500 rounds of ammunition for a future military expedition. MM T-1 said that HEMMING was then in Tampa, Florida, and was expected to arrive in Miami on January 24, 1963. Interpen was reported to be using an office at 160 Southwest 16th Avenue, Miami, which MM T-1 described as actually an office of the John Birch Society. On January 22, 1963, The Miami Herald contained a press release from Steve Justin Wilson, INTERPEN member which noted the group was returning to their training camp at No Name Key, and would resume training and would take along their arsenal of rifles, pistols, bombs and grenades.

On February 3, 1963, HEMMING wrote this letter to Dick Billings of Life Magazine:

"Dear Dick: We have been very busy here in Florida since arriving two weeks ago. We hit just about every newspaper between L.A. and Miami on the trip. Did interviews with most of them. Did T.V. interview in Dallas for two days. Spent time with General Edwin Walker both those days. Appears he plans to involve his element in the Cuban fight. Contacted the raider groups i.e. Alpha-66, DRE, Cardenas raiders, Major Vidal's raiders...We have completed the following: The DRE group is set for their first lecture in Denver...The DRE group leaders are extremely interested in showing their films and slides, stills, etc. in Texas and California. The only obstacle to their tour of lectures is lack of airplane tickets and funds for food, hotel, etc...The DRE maintains a teletype machine in the HQ, Miami, (UPI) so if you want to communicate on anything routine for me, then check with a buddy in one of the wire services. The Alpha 66 group and new Committee of Rebel Officers are available for lectures. They have English speaking members with real interesting backgrounds. Andrew St. George did a story on them in Life Magazine last December...Major Felipe Vidal, who speaks English, is available. He has done 23 missions in the last year...Enclosed find one handout issued by the new Revolutionary 'Elmer Gantry,' one Alexander Rorke, Jr. A phony...Rorke put the bad mouth on our group last month to Ruby Hart Philipps of the New York Times. This has been rectified. He is presently on tour throughout the East coast, prior to our witnessing his two hour revolutionary 'MacBeth' act in West Palm Beach last week, he had been claiming to have flown 'AIR COVER' for the DRE boys on their raid to Havana last summer. We took two of the leaders of that raid to his act, and he got a little a shook when he recognized them walking in on the middle of act #2. The DRE states that it met Rorke only once last year, and that was when Rorke showed up in Miami and asked them to 'loan' him some guns. Last December, on our arrest by Customs, there was present one Remigio Arce, 'Cucu,' who had captained Rorke's boat, the Violin III, on a run to Cuba. 'Cucu' got messed up by some of Rorke's orders on the run and ended up out of fuel about 20 miles off the North Coast of Matanzas Province. 'Cucu' called on a radiotelephone to a relative's house and asked for a fuel drop. We were asked for assistance by the relative. I called that night on the telephone via Miami Marine Operator and talked to 'Cucu,' and then to Rorke. He had already called for the U.S. Coast Guard for help (100 gallons gas). I advised him that we could have a boat rendezvous with him in about four to six hours if he would not want to jettison his illegal cargo. A few minutes passed and he stated that he had the Coast Guard in contact and would go ahead and refuel from them. It seems that the other American disagreed with this decision and they engaged a very seasick Rorke in a lengthy argument that continued all the way back to Key West. The other Americans were students that Rorke had conned into financing, and they were determined to go all the way to the island, which Rorke had no intentions from the beginning of doing. This Rorke has already been on a large number of aborted expeditions. He is the same Rorke that had an F8F Bearcat Navy Fighter confiscated in Fort Lauderdale three months back, after stupidly bringing it right under the noses of the Customs people. This way he looks like a hard-charging commando with out ever sticking his lily white neck out. After arrival at Key West the argument continued in a restaurant outside of the Boca Chica Naval Air Station. The students then had one of their smallest take on six foot two inch Rorke, and he proceeded to throw Rorke all over the terrain, breaking three ribs in the process. You will notice where Rorke claims that a 55 gallon oil drum fell on him during a storm with on a 'dangerous' mission to Cuba. Other claims to fame that are interesting:

1. That he works with Major Nino Diaz. Nino wants to break his head.
2. His build up of phony FIORINI is a riot. FRANK don't love him no more cause 'Fat Daddy' ain't getting his cut any more.
3. 'Underground Chief' Tico Herrera is sitting about ten feet from me now and he has never heard of Rorke, but would like to talk it over though.

4. He was not the first reporter imprisoned by Castro, he was arrested by Rafael Hugett, II Front Escambray, at Major William Morgan's house at 66th & 7th Avenue, Havana, August 7, 1959. I was there dad. He has been claiming to be Morgan's buddy recently, what a laugh. Morgan would have blasted him if given the chance. I did an operation with Ralph Hugett to Cuba in August 1961.

5. If he is a 35 year old World War II veteran, then he was a 17 year old teenage German provincial commander that captured mucho SS men.

6. FIORINI was never a member of Edson's Raiders, according to the service record book, the Raider Association etc...

7. Major Pedro Diaz Lanz is a crook, thief, swindler, traitor to his country. He was not the first chief of the FAR. The first was Captain Evans Rosales Bressler, released last month from Havana's La Cabana Fortress Prison sick with TB (he refused to fly against the invaders during April 1961). The 2nd Chief of the FAR was Captain Orestes Del Rio, who was my C.O. in the FAR at San Julian Air base. The third Chief of the FAR was Captain Enrique Molina Rivera, who is sitting in the next room tonight...

On February 7, 1963, the FBI generated a report on "Wallace H. Welch, HEMMING and Lorenzo Hall, Dallas, Texas." HEMMING told this researcher: "I was in Baltimore, Maryland, on February 7, 1963." The Retail Merchant's Credit Association of Fort Worth stated that the FBI inquired about OSWALD on February 7, 1963. FBI 2-1693-77 concerned HEMMING'S activities and was dated February 19, 1963. It was all withheld.

HEMMING'S LETTER TO GENERAL DEMOTTE

On February 12, 1963 HEMMING wrote a letter to General C.V. Clifton, Military Aide to the President, the White House, 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W. Washington, D.C. In this letter, HEMMING gave General Clifton a synopsis of this background in the Marines, then stated:

While attending the U.S. Navy Academy Prep School I became interested in the Cuban situation and upon graduation I decided to separate from the service and travel to Cuba. I received my Honorable Discharge at the U.S. Naval Academy in October 1958.

The FBI reported that in May 1963 HEMMING and Loran Hall traveled to Dallas, where they considered setting up a training camp. Wiley G. Yates stated:

In May or June of 1963 Wally Welch once more called me at work. This time he told me that Loran Hall was in Dallas and that he wanted me to meet Hall. I agreed to meet Hall outside my place of employment when I finished work for the day and I did so...Hall did not have a place to stay in Dallas so I suggested that he stay at my house which he decided to do. He told me and my wife that he was in Dallas to help raise money to finance the purchase of arms and equipment for a proposed invasion of Cuba by a group of exiles who were then training in Cuba, namely Big Pine Key and No Name Key. PATRICK, who was mentioned to me before by Mr. Welch, was assisting in training of this group...Hall spoke fluent Spanish and was supposed to be a personal friend of the Cuban leader Manolo Reyes. During the time he stayed in our home Hall made a great show of writing Ray about activities then underway in Dallas, but he never made any attempt to mail this letter, and still had it in his possession when he left two or three weeks later...My wife and I began to be suspicious of Hall because he made so little effort to carry through on the things that he said he was going to do. He seemed to be more interested in watching T.V. and getting free meals than in securing financial backing for the Cubans. Finally I told him I wanted some proof of his activities or else I wanted him to leave. He offered no proof and without the least argument, packed his few belongings and left." [ltr. Yates to Garrison 4.28.67]

HEMMING: MARCH 1963

In 1963 HEMMING visited Washington, D.C., after which the FBI sent reports to the Director and Deputy Director for Plans of the CIA; and to the Attorney General and his Deputy; to Army, Navy, and Air Force Intelligence. [FBI 105-86406-10] HEMMING claimed they concerned:

...conversations, at the White House, during March 1963, with General Clifton, military aide to President Kennedy...briefing at the Pentagon with Victor Krulak, U.S.M.C...under-Secretary of State Sterling J. Cottrell. [HEMMING ONI FOIA/PA Req. 12.22.76]

HEMMING complained about the lack of action against Fidel Castro. HEMMING told this researcher:

They wanted to know why CIA was not doing what we were doing, and why CIA was badmouthing us. Kennedy was enthusiastic. He went nuts about this crazy covert shit. I was there, book reader.

On March 12, 1963, the FBI in Washington, D.C. generated a highly deleted Letterhead Memorandum about HEMMING, copies of which we sent to the Attorney General, Assistant Attorney General J. Walter Yeagley, State, CIA and the military agencies and Kenneth O'Donnell at White House. HEMMING'S case number was now 105-86406, which indicated he was being investigated for Internal Security. [FBI 105-86406-10] HEMMING told this researcher:

The FBI thought I was checking out JFK'S routine and all that shit. They would check the United States Secret Service logs.

On March 30, 1963, HEMMING advised the FBI "that as a result of press publicity and letters received in July 1961, he devised a form letter. This form letter was to give general information concerning INTERPEN, dissuade persons from coming to Miami to join INTERPEN, and eliminate people without specialized training. (Deleted) advised that INTERPEN no longer exists. Members of the Cuban Revolutionary Council consider HEMMING a mercenary and maintain no contact with him."

HEMMING'S letter:

Dear Sir: Thank you for you letter requesting information concerning our organization. We have received many letters such as yours and we are pleased to find that there are thousands of young Americans that are anxious to actively participate in the fight against International Communism...As a self-supporting unit our present facilities are extremely limited, and we are accepting only those veterans that were in Special Forces trained as guerilla warfare instructors, survival, parachute qualified etc. Also we suggest that prior to an individual leaving his home he should have already purchased his own uniform, combat equipment, have a car and enough money to pay room and board until he can be placed with one of the units under our command Considering the aforementioned, should you still be interested in joining we suggest that prior to your departure to Miami you contact a local Sky Diver Club...

On March 30, 1963, HEMMING advised the FBI he was unemployed and explained that he "did not consider the above letter in any way an instrument of recruiting or any attempt to defraud or use the mails to defraud."

HEMMING AND GENERAL EDWIN WALKER APRIL 1963

During World War II, General Edwin A. Walker, a West Point graduate, commanded the 1st Special Service Brigade. It was an elite formation of 900 Americans and 900 Canadians. Soldiers in the unit were demolition experts, parachutists and skiers. In Korea, he commanded the 24th Infantry Division, holding the center of the United Nations line, during some of the heaviest fighting of the Korean war. In 1957 he led federal troops to force school integration in the Little Rock, Arkansas, public schools. A racist, Walker did this only after General Eisenhower refused to accept his resignation from the Army. Walker cited "the fifth column conspiracy and its influences on the home front" as the reason for his resignation. In 1961 General Edwin Walker returned to the news, when it was learned he passed out John Birch Society literature which stated that President Kennedy was a traitor to troops under his command. General Edwin Walker was relieved of his post in Germany by President Kennedy in 1961.

On October 1, 1962, General Edwin Walker was arrested for assault and for resisting or otherwise opposing federal officers, for conspiracy to prevent a federal officer from discharging his duties, and for insurrection and conspiracy to overthrow the U.S. Government, after he led a riot at the University of Mississippi. The University had admitted James Meredith, an Afro-American student. It took 3,000 troops to put down this riot. When General Edwin Walker could not post $100,000 bail, he was committed to the mental ward of the Federal Medical Hospital, Springfield, Missouri, by the Chief Psychiatrist of the Federal Bureau of Prisons, who diagnosed Walker as having a paranoid mental disorder. United States Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy approved this unusual procedure. General Edwin Walker gave the authorities his name, rank and serial number, then issued a statement through his aid, Robert S. Surrey. Walker was soon released on $50,000 bail.

General Edwin Walker was represented by Dr. Robert Morris, a former Counsel with the McCarran Committee (the Internal Security Subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee), who later became a prominent Republican and a member of the American Security Council. Dr. Robert Morris was also a former president of the University of Dallas and an unsuccessful candidate for the Republican nomination for Senator from New Jersey in 1960. Dr. Robert Morris was the candidate of the John Birch Society for U. S. Senate on the Republican ticket. Morris called Walker "America's first political prisoner." General Edwin Walker became a legendary hero to the far right. In 1962 Walker ran for the Democratic nomination for governor of Texas against John Connally and others. He received nearly 150,000 votes. General Edwin Walker knew HEMMING and raised funds for INTERPEN. He flew to Miami and met some of INTERPEN'S members.

In mid-April 1963, HEMMING wrote to President Miguel Ydigoras Fuentes and asked for permission to train anti-Castro fighters in Guatemala. HEMMING told this researcher:

BERNARDO De TORRES reviewed the memo. The letter was hand-delivered to Ydigoras at his home in Miami Beach.

On March 10, 1963, Miguel Ydigoras Fuentes met with Miro Cardona:

Miro said that Ydigoras complained about President John F. Kennedy and the U.S. Government in general, saying that neither have conducted themselves well with Guatemala and with him. He was critical of U.S. weakness in dealing with the Communist problem, particularly in respect to Cuba...Ydigoras said that in his own country, Guatemala, only a strong position and continual vigilance has prevented the Communist from striking a successful blow and taking over his country. [CIA Report # TDCS DB-3/653,704 3.10.63]

On May 10, 1963 the FBI in Miami generated a report on INTERPEN. In June 1963, HEMMING and about four of his men visited Carlos Zarraga Martinez, a Cuban exile who maintained a large supply of arms at his residence. HEMMING and his men pulled out guns and threatened Zarraga's life if he did not give them these arms. Zarraga turned over these arms and HEMMING left the house momentarily. While he was gone U.S. Customs agents arrived, confiscated the arms, and arrested HEMMING's men.

Subject: INTERCONTINENTAL PENETRATION FORCE

(INTERPEN) INTERNAL SECURITY CUBA NEUTRALITY MATTERS

Reference is made to previous information furnished concerning the captioned organization. On the evening of June 18, 1963, an informant who has furnished reliable information in the past advised as follows:

One Richard Lockley (phonetic) (Lauchli) of Collinswood, Illinois, driving a late model station wagon, was in Miami, Florida with a load of miscellaneous automatic weapons some of which he had reportedly sold to the Second National Front of Escambray and Commandos L. anti-Castro organizations, and to Joe Garman of the captioned organization. Lauchli has been taken around Miami by Frank Anthony Sturgis, also known as Frank Fiorini, and Gerald Patrick Hemming, American adventurers.

One Marino, an American residing in Hialeah, Florida, reportedly has a large quantity of arms in his home which he has tried to sell to Hemming. Hemming and about four other Interpen members planned to meet Marino on June 18, 1963 on pretext of purchasing the arms and then rob him of the weapons, Marino, however, did not keep the appointment. Reportedly an armed robbery of Marino's house was scheduled for June 19, 1963 by Hemming, Lauchli and the four Interpen members. Lauchli claimed that he would bring along a machine gun which he would use if the police were encountered in this undertaking.

The Bureau of Customs in Miami was furnished the foregoing information. Inquiry by our Springfield Office indicates the license on the station being driven by Lauchli was issued to Rich Albert Lauchli, Collinsville, Illinois. Information available to our Springfield Office indicates that Lauchli is a gun collector who has previously been investigated by the Alcohol, Tobacco Tax Division for illegal possession of automatic weapons. Lauchli was convicted in connection with the theft of 23 rocket launchers from the Jefferson Proving Grounds, Madison, Indiana, in March 1959. In 1959 Lauchli made an unsuccessful attempt to organize an internal security force that would serve as a last ditch resistance in the event of an enemy invasion of the United States. In 1961 and 1962 Lauchli was active as Regional Director of the Minutemen, an anti-communist guerilla warfare movement in the United States. Lauchli was arrested by local authorities in October 1961 for the illegal possession of automatic weapon during a Minutemen training session. Lauchli was born January 23, 1926 in Saint Louis, Missouri, and served as a paratrooper in the United States Army from March 1945 to October 9, 1946.

On June 20, 1963 Customs in Miami advised that arrests had been made in this matter and that weapons were confiscated. Roy Hargraves, Joe Garman, Mike Marino one Wilson and another individual were among those arrested. Hemming was not in the area when the arrests were made and Customs contemplates no action against him.

FBI Agent Robert Dwyer reported that in June 1963 HEMMING met Michael Roland Marino,

...an American who has dealt with the Cubans before on arms sales. Mike Marino had a small quantity of arms and HEMMING planned to rob them. HEMMING devised a plan, and on June 19, 1963, met with Marino at diner in Miami and negotiated an arms purchase. Mike Marino took four of HEMMING'S men to a Cuban's residence to show a .50 caliber machine gun offered for sale. HEMMING and another man later arrived at the residence, where HEMMING and his men drew their guns on Mike Marino and the Cuban living there and robbed them of uniforms, ammunition magazines, miscellaneous types of guns and the .50 caliber machine gun. Then HEMMING changed his mind and gave all this equipment back to the Cuban, Carlos Zarraca. HEMMING'S men took Mike Marino to Mike Morino's house to rob him, and HEMMING was to meet them there later. HEMMING lost contact with his group, and then found out that U.S. Customs agents had just raided Carlos Zarracha's house, confiscated all the arms, and had arrested Mike Marino and four of his abductors. On June 20, 1963, United States Customs Agents advised they confiscated a .37 mm anti-tank gun, a .20 mm cannon, a rifle, 300 rounds of ammunition and miscellaneous military equipment. Incidental to this raid, the Alcohol and Tobacco Tax Unit that day seized a 1963 Ford Falcon automobile, seven rifles, a .20 mm gun mount, some pistols, miscellaneous equipment and several hundred rounds of ammunition. Mr. Wallace Shanley, advised ROY HARGRAVES, Joe Garman, Justin Wilson, Michael Marino and Richard Whatley were arrested for possession of a machine gun.

When Marino's wife and children returned home unexpectedly HEMMING postponed the robbery. HEMMING told this researcher: "That's the Mike Marino caper. Customs and ATF snitches had conned Richard Lauchli out of a bunch of arms." HEMMING stated that Steve Justin Wilson died in 1986. The prosecution dropped the charges against Richard Whatley, and in October 1963, the case against the other members was also dropped. On June 6, 1963, Carlos Prio Socarras said that he would sponsor a military camp, and that HEMMING would head it. Final arrangements were to be made 20 days hence. [HSCA OCR 6.21.78 Martin J. Daly] The defendants were represented by Charles Ashmann and Robert Rust. [FBI 2-1693-95; USDC Miami 63-404-Cr-CF] A letter HEMMING wrote to General Edwin Walker in June 1963 stated:

GERRY PATRICK
3350 N.W. 18 Terr.
Miami, 35, Fla.
General Edwin A. Walker June 28, 1963
4011 Turtle Creek Blvd.
Dallas, 19, Texas.

Dear General Walker:

Please convey my best wishes to your family and friends, and I hope this letter finds you enjoying good health and work.

On behalf of the men of that serve in our Instructor Teams, and many others that serve in supporting roles, I want to convey the sincere gratitude of the entire Para-Military Liaison Group (volunteer) for your rapid response to call for assistance.

I received the six hundred dollars via Western Union later in the evening of the same day of my telephone call. Yesterday I received your check of the same amount which I am enclosing for return.

Allow me to elaborate on last weeks happenings. Four of my instructors were arrested by federal agents Wednesday night (June 19, 1963) and subsequently have languished in the hot, humid and badly ventilated Country Jail. These young men were well aware of the risks involved when they volunteered for a difficult and distasteful job. All four have been serving as volunteer instructors and liaison operative for the past three years, without pay, and with great personal sacrifice and hazard.

Of these men, Richard Whatley, a veteran of the U.S. Special Forces (Airborne), was captured by Mexican authorities last year, while on a mission to the Yucatan Peninsula. He and one other instructor were destined to be starved, tortured and degraded for a period of seven months before they were finally released. The Mexicans handed them over to the FBI at the border and they were again jailed at San Antonio, Texas, on a trumped up charge of auto theft. This charge was finally dropped three weeks later because the FBI "discovered" that the legal owner of the alleged stolen car was Howard K. Davis, my colleague and fellow senior instructor. Davis is a former Airborne Ranger, Korean veteran, Paramedic and is a veteran of the Sierra Maestre fighting in Cuba (1957 - 1958).

The aforementioned ex-Special Forces operative was present the night of our detention by Customs agents at Marathon Key, Florida, (December 3, 1962). He held no desire to return to confinement after only two short months of freedom from a Mexican prison. He did successfully avoid capture, and accompanied by his partner from Mexico, made his way safely to another island and later traveled to our camp at No Name Key.

Two months later, during February this year, Dick Whatley and three other instructors were assigned a mission that again involved crossing Mexico to Honduras. None of these men hesitated for a moment in accepting this assignment, even though it meant that should the Mexicans intercept them, they would, without doubt, spend many more months inside a Mexican prison. During four months they moved all over Central America and Mexico. They established excellent new contacts and reaffirmed old ones, and thus will benefit our future operations in those areas.

That mission cost them greatly in personal health, and hard earned funds. One of them required hospitalization on return to Miami. They all required medical treatment for skin ulcers, malnutrition, dysentery and other intestinal disorders, but only one, James Lewis, required surgery to remove fissures aggravated by the dysentery.

You can image what our moral problems are here. A great percentage of the men that serve as volunteer instructors to the Cuban Freedom Fighters usually are forced to quit after two or three embittered months. These men are mostly former Special Forces G/W instructors or are veterans of the Army Airborne, Marine Corps Para-Recon and other branches of the service and have received equivalent instruction. Men of this caliber are hard to come by, and harder to keep on the job once they find what the situation is.

Most of these men leave their homes, jobs and benefits to serve as volunteers without pay, plus they must purchase their own arms and equipment, which very often is later confiscated by the U.S. authorities. A man can take just so much of that and then he disobeys his own conscience and decides that Cuba and the fight against Communists is not worth it. Many of the volunteer instructors bring their hard earned savings with them and donate their all to the cause.

It is hard enough to instruct, go hungry for days, live like an animal for weeks, without having the added discomfiture of knowing the monthly wages you could have earned, are gone down the drain forever. The instructor that underwent surgery, James A. Lewis, since has been on a mandatory rest leave for two months. Jim is a licensed sailing skipper and is at present earning $650 per month, enjoying himself at his favorite hobby. He is Captain of a windjammer that hauls tourists around the Bahamas on the delightful ten day cruises. He is a typical salary level for our men. We have six others that are on rest leave at present. Normal procedure dictates that we require all our instructors to acquire seaman's papers so that if they need a vacation, they don't have to leave the general area in order to earn a good salary. This means they can go to sea for a month or two and earn an average of $475 per month. The lowest-salary man in the group is a mechanic that earns $455 per month at Miami Airport. Quite routinely they donate their earnings towards maintaining the camp, arms, equipment, gasoline, and in many cases they aid a Cuban group...

Much of our personal equipment, arms, clothing, etc. has been sent or delivered by us to the guerillas inside Cuba. At Marathon we lost about $6000 worth of arms and equipment confiscated by the authorities, not including the value of two automobiles, medicine and drugs, gasoline, charts, tools, spare parts etc.

We, as a group, feel that it is for a good cause, Our Country. We plan to continue as before, a small group contributing a small effort towards a big cause. Some of our men, Americans and Cubans, have in the past been captured and executed by Castro. Some are still in Cuban prisons. We cannot forget them or turn our backs and ignore their great contribution, their loss of life or liberty. I expect we will be arrested and jailed many more times before Castro is overthrown. We undoubtedly will lose more men on future operations, but we know this; when the Cuban prisoners are freed, when the mothers of the dead are to be faced, the first question on their lips will be: "What did you do during the fight against Castro?" I feel that when that day arrives, our group can answer, "Very little, but we were there."

Once again I want to thank you and reiterate that your loan of assisting funds will be returned shortly. Must close now, but hoping to hear from you soon, and with best personal wishes, I am,

GERALD PATRICK HEMMING Jr.
(JERRY PATRICK)

On September 30, 1963, the SAC of the Miami FBI office sent a LHM, which was highly deleted, to FBI Headquarters regarding HEMMING:

On September 13, 1963, Wallace Shanley, U.S. Customs, Miami, advised that Richard Whatley was one of the five arrested on June 20, 1963, by U.S. Customs, and charged with being in possession of a machine gun. This incident was a matter involving HEMMING'S plans to rob Mike Marino of weapons reportedly stored in Hialeah. At the time of his arrest, (deleted) but his fingerprints reflected his true identity and that he was also wanted as a parole violator from some other state. He was unable to make bond and the judge ordered a sanity hearing being given to Whatley. On September 9, 1963, he went to trial at U.S. District Court, Miami, and on September 10, 1963, he was found not guilty. (Deleted) advised that the other four individuals are scheduled for trial on October 22, 1963. These individuals are presently out on bond.

HSCA Outside Contact Report June 21, 1978. Identifying Information: Name Whatley, Richard (FBI File Review). Summary of contact: "The file on the above Subject, listed under the following numbers: 109-584;

Section 61, serials 3739-3781, 3742 ep 23 was reviewed by the undersigned. The report dated September 30, 1963, and is titled INTERPEN. A confidential source MMT-1 indicates that HEMMING visited on June 6, 1963, Carlos Prio Socarras at 5070 Alton Road, Miami Beach, Florida. Prio stated that he would sponsor a military training camp and that HEMMING would head it. Final details of the arrangements were to be made 20 days hence. On July 11, 1963, MM T-1 advised that HEMMING left Miami on July 3, 1963, and arrived in Dallas on July 4, 1963, where he conferred with General Edwin A. Walker who would not back any specific cause as he wanted to remain free to fight communism all over the United States. Following this meeting HEMMING then met with Lester Logue, geologist and oil man at the firm's office, 628 Meadows Building, Dallas, Texas. Logue told him that he had a (6-8) six to eight man group which is interested in fighting against communism but that he, Logue, could not participate as he couldn't afford to offend U.S. Government officials. Logue further states that he was working with a major in the United States Army Reserve, both of whom were do for future promotion and that shortly they would be attending an intelligence briefing in Washington, D.C. and that when they returned and briefed Logue they would then be in a position to help HEMMING in some way. Logue said that he would visit Miami, Florida, in about 10 days and set up an intelligence unit, send some men to handle the funds and also personally see some people about donating boats to HEMMING'S anti-Castro movement in Miami. Martin J. Daly.

On January 26, 1996, HEMMING was asked by this researcher, "Who was with you when you visited Prio, General Walker and Lester Logue?" He answered, "Howard Kenneth Davis." Howard K. Davis related: "I think I probably talked to O'Conner once or twice, or maybe three times. Now Ed Kolby knew him very well."

MM T-1 advised on July 11, 1963, that HEMMING had left Miami, Florida on July 3, 1963, and arrived the following day at Dallas, Texas, where he conferred with EDWIN A. WALKER, former Major General in the United States Army. According to MM T-1, WALKER told HEMMING he did not want to participate in Cuban affairs because he did not want to back any specific cause, but rather would be available to fight communism all over the United States. MM T-1 advised that HEMMING said he had also conferred with LESTER R. LOGUE, 629 Meadows Texas, a wealthy oil man, who told HEMMING that he had a six to eight-man group which was interested in fighting against communism. LOGUE said he could not participate with HEMMING at that time, for fear of offending United States Government officials, and thereafter HEMMING returned to Miami, Florida.

Loran Hall described a meeting he witnessed between General Walker and HEMMING:

They talked about INTERPEN. And he gave Walker a book, about this thick, that had the background of INTERPEN and how it would be set up and what their functions would be and it would be like the SOP and MOP and the whole bit for the INTERPEN. And he gave that to Walker and they talked about what it would take to set up an organization like this, that it couldn't be done in this country, but that it could be done in Latin America. And Walker says, 'You're doing a good job, keep it up, but the government is going to try to nail your butt' and all this stuff. And we left. [Garrison interview with Hall 5.8.68]

Loran Hall stated that when he visited Niko Crespi in July 1963, in Dallas, he was told that OSWALD was going to give a pro-Castro talk. Niko Crespi was one of the first rebels from the Sierra Maestre to defect to the United States. HEMMING knew him in Cuba. HEMMING told this researcher: "Is there any indication that OSWALD ever did anything pro-Castro in Dallas? You think the fucking White Russians would have put up with that bullshit?" HEMMING visited Dallas again in July 1963. He wrote Lester Logue on August 13, 1963, that "Luis Somoza visited Miami three weeks ago...Davy and I were in Dallas at the time of Somoza's visit to Miami." That would place HEMMING in Dallas on or about July 21, 1963. When HEMMING visited Dallas in July 1963, he "met with individuals threatening Kennedy's life." HEMMING elaborated, We'd begun to encounter more and more organizations of people in different cities with one thing on their mind, initially taking care of Castro, then doing something about the other 'problem' - that guy in the White House. These offers were made by organized elements that had financial backing within the United States.

In July 1963 federal and county officers invaded the No Name Key training camp in answer to a complaint from local residents, but HEMMING and the INTERPEN crew were not to be found. HEMMING told this researcher: "We did not use No Name Key in 1963. LARRY HOWARD took Loran Hall and William Seymour down there in 1963. That's the only time any one was on the Key. It was shut down after the bust." In July 1963 the FBI believed HEMMING was "involved in a plot to exfiltrate several alleged Soviet missile technicians from Cuba" known as OPERATION RED CROSS which was directed by JOHN V. MARTINO.

On August 6, 1963, MM T-1 advised that FRANK NELSON, an American adventurer from New York City who has been connected with Cuban and Dominican Republic (DR) revolutionary activities in the past, had recently visited Miami and conferred with HEMMING. NELSON claimed he was representing a friend, who was interested in buying PT-boats for shipment to some country in Africa. NELSON and HEMMING visited boatyards in the Miami area.

Circa August 1963 Loran Hall visited Frank Bartes and Lawrence J. La Borde in New Orleans. [Interview with Loran Hall 12.67 trans. by Lifton; Loran Hall/Weisberg interview

Yates to Garrison 6.28.68; Ltr. Duncan to Winslow 9.13.74; WCD 1546 p211] In September 1963 INTERPEN allegedly no longer existed. HEMMING's followers lost interest and felt HEMMING would never be able to launch any military action against Cuba. The majority of the recruits left Miami, others were run out of town by the police, and others were arrested for burglary, larceny and vagrancy. During this time HEMMING visited leading Cuba exile political figures and a number of American rightwing Conservatives asking for donations. He traveled to Dallas, Texas, Chicago, Illinois and other places but was unable to raise money.

On September 17, 1963, MM T-1 reported that HEMMING had had no further contact with LESTER LOGUE since HEMMING'S visit to Dallas, Texas in early July of 1963. MM T-1 said that HEMMING was still occupied in making plans for training camps, arms purchases and invasions of Cuba. MM T-1 advised on September 24, 1963, that HEMMING had returned to Miami from a trip to Chicago, Illinois on September 22, 1963. While in Chicago, HEMMING said he conferred with a Chicago attorney named CONSTANTINE KANGLES, who previously had connections with Cuban revolutionaries. MM T-1 said that KANGLES and HEMMING talked about the possibility of negotiating with the Government of Cuba for the release of prisoners.

On September 2, 1963, Loran Hall was arrested for violations of the Neutrality Act at Key Largo, Florida. Upon his release, Loran Hall visited the offices of the Cuban Revolutionary Council in Miami and protested his arrest. HEMMING told this researcher: "There was no Cuban Revolutionary Council office anymore. They didn't pay the rent. They're off the payroll in 1963." Loran Hall flew to Los Angeles on September 4, 1963. On September 11, 1963, he was joined in Los Angeles by LAWRENCE JOHN HOWARD and Celio Castro, who had driven in together from Miami. HEMMING 1994: "Celio was 71 at the time. He had a bad leg from the Machado revolution. He acted like he was 40. He was a stoned cold motherfucker." National States Rights Party member Stanley Drennan donated medical equipment and arms to Loran Hall for use against Castro. [Garrison interview with Hall 5.6.68] When Loran Hall, LAWRENCE JOHN HOWARD and Celio Castro left Los Angeles for Dallas around September 18, 1963, they stopped at the offices of Private Investigator and soldier-of-fortune Dick Hathcock. The FBI:

To: SAC Los Angeles (89-75)
From S.A. Jerome K. Crowe
Date November 23, 1963.
Subject: Assassination of President Kennedy.
Re: Memo of Robert H. Matheson, Jr. dated November 23, 1963.

Richard Hathcock, Allied International Detectives, Suite 310, 6605 Hollywood Blvd. Los Angeles, advised Roy Payne is his associate in the above enterprise. Hathcock advised as follows: He, Hathcock, has known one Dick Whatley for several years. Whatley, to the best of Hathcock's information, currently resides at 3350 NW 18th Terrace Miami, Florida., Whatley is a male Caucasian.

Prior to Hathcock's present occupation, he was the proprietor of Adventurers Corner, a shop at the corner of Sunset and La Brea, which sold articles from all over the world, and was an unofficial gathering place for adventurers in this area.

Shortly after the Bay of Pigs invasion in Cuba, Whatley, who Hathcock had not seen for some time, came into the Adventurers Corner and gave Hathcock a shoulder patch that had a skull and crossbones on it plus the words 'Brigada Internationale.' Whatley told Hathcock that he had been in Guatemala instructing troops down there, and that he had pulled out a week or two prior to the Bay of Pigs invasion, and hadn't participated in the invasion. Hathcock did not see Whatley again until about 7 or 8 months ago when he came to Hathcock's office with two other men, all three of whom were wearing green fatigues and one of the men was wearing a 'Mohawk' hair cut. The men were interested in getting into the wild animal business, and asked Hathcock where they could get some wild animals.

Approximately one year ago, JERRY PATRICK, whose true name is JERRY HEMMING, a male Caucasian, approximately 30 to 31, 6' 4", 230 pounds, well built, curly brown hair, handsome, and Lorenzo Pascillo, aka Lorenzo Hall and Skip Hall, a male Caucasian, 35 to 40 years old, 5' 11", 175 to 180 pounds, black hair, mustache, ruddy complexion from Wichita, Kansas, came into Hathcock's office which was then located at 6715 Hollywood Blvd. stating that they were broke and that they knew Dick Whatley, and Whatley had sent them to him. They had with them a set of golf clubs, and a 30-06 Johnson semi-automatic with a Bushnell, variable powered scope. Hathcock loaned them $100 - $50 on each item and it was his understanding that they were to pick up the articles as soon as possible. Hathcock only saw JERRY PATRICK once after that and that was approximately one week later when he came to his office.

Several months ago, since the men did not retrieve the articles, Hathcock sold the golf clubs. On September 18, 1963, Lorenzo Hall came in with $50 and retrieved the rifle. Shortly thereafter Hathcock received a telephone call from JERRY PATRICK, who was then residing at 2450 N.W. North River Drive, Miami, Florida, inquiring as to whether Hathcock still had the rifle. Hathcock told him he had given the rifle to Hall for $50 and this seemed to irritate PATRICK to some extent. Since then Hathcock has sent the receipt he received from Hall for the $50 to PATRICK to convince him he had returned the rifle.

On the day Hall retrieved the rifle, he sold him a Bolex Motion Picture Camera with telephoto lens which was then the property of Hathcock. Hall paid by two checks - one drawn on the Citizen's Bank on the account of the Committee to Free Cuba in the amount of $350 and another in the amount of $150 on the account of a resident of La Habra. Hathcock gave Hall back $100.

Hathcock advised that PATRICK and Hall are violently anti-Communist and anti-Castro and they both told him they fought in the mountains with Castro in Cuba, however, fell out with him after the revolution. Lorenzo told Hathcock he spent seven months in prison in Cuba, however, he eventually got back to the United States. PATRICK stated he fell out with Castro and eventually got back to the United States. (Hathcock has Xerox copies of newspaper articles from Florida in his office concerning the anti-Castro troops training there and PATRICK'S picture appears as one of the anti-Castro troops).

PATRICK, when in Los Angeles, had an address of 1209 South Atlantic, Alhambra, California, (Atlantic Radio and TV) and an address in care of Howard K. Davis in Miami. It is Hathcock's information that Davis was Castro's personal pilot, and a close friend of Dick Whatley. Lorenzo Hall now resides at 1191 College View Drive, Monterey Park, California, and Hathcock does not know where he is now employed. He last saw Hall about two weeks ago when he came by Hathcock's office to simply talk. Hathcock reiterated that both men are anti-Communist and very strongly anti-Castro.

On March 9, 1977, Hathcock recalled:

About two months before the John Kennedy assassination in Dallas, two men came to see me in my office. One was GERRY PATRICK HEMMING who was using the name JERRY PATRICK. The other man was Lorenzo Hall, who liked to be called Skip Hall, whose real name was Pacillio, which I understand is a Cuban name. These men came to see me one afternoon, stating that they had heard of me because of my many years of undercover investigation of communism on the state college campuses here, when I worked for the Hearst chain, and some other activities, anti-Communist activities I had been involved in. They were here, they told me, to raise money with which to buy medicines and equipment, military hardware for a planned invasion of Cuba. That they were going to train troops in Guatemala, which they actually did later. They told me that they were dead broke, and that they were going to be here for two or three weeks, they had some other contacts they wanted to see, raise money, but meantime they needed $100. They wanted to borrow the $100 and what they had for security was a set of golf clubs and a rifle which was a 30 caliber Johnson, modified to semi-automatic operation, which I believed held nine rounds, and was also equipped with a Bushnell, variable scope. I gave them the $100 and they left the golf clubs and rifle. For several weeks after that, I saw both men frequently, then my understanding was that JERRY PATRICK returned to Miami to set things in operation down there for the planned invasion of Cuba. What they had planned essentially was to blow up some oil storage tanks on the west coast. Lorenzo Hall stayed here, and was in the private eye office very often, almost every day. He told me that both he and PATRICK had originally been in Castro's Army when they believed that he was trying to free Cuba from Batista, found out he was a communist, had no interest in the people, and they turned on Castro with the result with the result that both were imprisoned, and sentenced to be shot. Both, through manipulations and through friends, managed to escape and get to this country. They showed me lots of photos, gave me documents and I do believe they told me about those things. Eventually, as I say, PATRICK went back to Miami and I did not see him after that. Shortly before the assassination, if memory serves me correctly, it was no more than ten days before the assassination, Skip Hall and a big, fat Mexican man whom I'd never seen before, and whose name I don't recall at this time, but I'm sure the FBI has it, came to see me, told me they were going to Dallas to pick up some medicines and some other material, they wanted to redeem the rifle. They gave me $50, told me to keep the golf clubs, I got a note signed by Skip Hall that he had picked-up the rifle, which I later gave to Jerry Crowe of the FBI...Skip Hall later told me he had turned the rifle over to a doctor friend of his in Miami, Florida. JERRY PATRICK told me later that was a damn lie, that he had talked to Hall, and as far as he could find out that was a lie about where the rifle was. But he told me he had never recovered the rifle. The rifle was in my office all those weeks, and one of the gentlemen who worked with me in the detective business, Roy Payne, who is a gun expert and gun nut assembled and disassembled and reassembled that rifle on numerous occasions. And I'm sure Mr. Payne can tell you a great deal more about that rifle than I can. The day after John Kennedy was killed in Dallas, I received a phone call from Jerry Crowe, an FBI agent here in Los Angeles, who asked me if I had an agent working for me who was named Roy Payne and I said yes. Jerry wanted to know if he could come by the office and see me and Mr. Payne, and we arranged for that meeting. It's my opinion that the reason he wanted to see Mr. Payne was because Payne's fingerprints undoubtedly were all over that rifle from his having handled it so many times. It's also my opinion that, unless that particular rifle had been found or in some way involved in the whole thing, that the FBI would have no interest in it...My name is LeRoy Barton Payne. I have heard and have listened to Mr. Hathcock make his statement and I agree with him in every aspect of his statement and I will, to the best of my recollection, account my experiences with JERRY PATRICK and Lorenzo Hall...They were here on a speaking and fund raising campaign for going back to Cuba, and, as I remember, they were out gathering various types of military accouterments, weapons, medicines. How they obtained these weapons was not part of the information given to Mr. Hathcock or myself. Lorenzo Hall did tell me that he had his closet in his apartment full of weapons, and that he was afraid the FBI was going to come in there and raid the place and take him along, and they were going to have to smuggle them out, and that they were getting ready to go back to Cuba. He drew us a map of an inlet on the shore south of Havana, or near Havana, that was the oil storage reservoir and tank farm. It showed on this map the tank farm and several storage docks, and what they had planned on doing was taking a boat to Kingston, Jamaica, refueling, and then going in as frogmen to take satchel charges of plastic explosives and set them on the storage tank farm and the dock area and destroy this to cripple Cuba by getting rid of all the fuel, oil, gasoline etc. that was presently stored for Castro. About I would say, ten days, 15 days, maybe a month, somewhere along in there, prior to present Kennedy's assassination, here I am fuzzy on the exact period. But Lorenzo Hall and a fat Mexican fellow come and redeemed the rifle. Now this rifle I had been told that it would, it had gone on several Cuban raids in the past, and knowing that it is very easy to modify a weapon such as this to make it full automatic, and that it did have nine rounds in the chamber, nine rounds in the weapon and one in the chamber, making it ten rounds that could be fired automatically, I took the weapon and test fired it, and then pulled it apart to make sure it had not been tampered with. It had not and was a straight semi-automatic weapon. It was a Johnson semi-automatic 30.06, it had a 30 power variable Bushnell scope, very much like a telephoto lens on a camera. I would say that this weapon, properly sighted in would put a hole in a dime at 500 yards. The bullets would be fired as fast as one could pull the trigger. Ten seconds, ten rounds or less. They picked this weapon up, and signed a note that they had picked it up, as I was present in the office when these two gentlemen were there to pick the weapon up. Approximately the next day or two, they left for Miami, and I made the statement to his Lorenzo Hall, well, that we'll be reading about you in the paper. Well, Dick and I went about our business as normal as far as the Agency was concerned and didn't really think about them except to say, well, we hadn't heard anything. Five days prior to the assassination of President Kennedy Mr. Hall was in Hollywood, California, in front of our building, talking with Mr. Hathcock and I stopped and talked to them, and of course I said, well, why don't you come over and let's get a cup of coffee and tell us what happened, and he says, well no, I've got to make the plane for Dallas. The situation with Mr. Hall is that he stated to me when I asked him, well, you know, what happened during the situation, we didn't hear anything. He said that the CIA confiscated and arrested everybody at the boat in Miami, and I asked him at that time why he didn't get himself arrested also, and he said, well, he was on the dock and could not be connected with the situation. They didn't have any evidence against him. I'm going to make an assumption now, or a relatively educated assumption.

On November 23, 1963, S.A. Crowe interviewed Payne, who subsequently reported:

Mr. Crowe came in and I opened the door for him and he showed me his identification, he had a big bundle of papers with him in a large manila envelope...he put his bundle down on the chair in front of the desk and took some papers out and said, 'I would like to ask some questions about Skip Hall and Roy Payne,' and I said, well, 'I'm Roy Payne, why don't you ask me whatever you want to ask.' He seemed rather surprised I was there. At least that was the impression I got. We discussed the situation about what had occurred and what has gone on with GERRY PATRICK HEMMING and SKIP HALL, then I did not see him for some time after that. I did however find that the FBI, or someone, was, I can only make the assumption, following me, and did tail me for some months after that. I had a brother-in-law who was, and I am not correct with this, he is deceased now, and his name was Harvey Berkey, who was assistant agent in charge of the local field office for the FBI here. In asking, or making an attempt to ask Harvey what the heck was going on, Harvey refused to talk to me, and I could not gain entrance to his house, he would not answer the door, nor did his wife and children. There was one occasion, I did run into Harvey Berkey outside of my office with Mr. Hathcock, and he did not want to talk to me at all and excused himself and said he had to go. I did, within a week after the President's assassination have occasion to go to Palm Springs, I believe it was on a Thursday, and I stayed in a small motel upon entering in the town and about 3:00 a.m., I had occasion to see two gentlemen go through my vehicle pretty thoroughly, and they had keys to enter and to go through the car, they went through the glove compartment, I had evidence prior to that my vehicle had been entered and searched, as our offices, which had been moved...We had suite 310, which covered several rooms, and we did have a system to show if our offices had been entered, such as, seeing as we had the only keys, and our offices had been entered and the files had been searched several times. We feel, or I felt, that our telephone, both at home and the answering service for the office, had been tapped. This went on for several months. The next night, Saturday, after the assassination, I had to drive to Santa Maria, and was there overnight. There were three vehicles that followed my car up Pacific Coast Highway, all the way up to Santa Maria, and then again picked me up the next day when I went through several of the small towns in the rural area, and up to Highway 99, which is now I-5, and then coming back to the ridge road. The same Subject vehicles that had followed me the next day after the assassination were the same vehicles that I saw in Palm Springs for the, a week later, along with the same gentlemen that were in them. Like I say, this went on for quite some time, two to three months after the assassination. One afternoon, about ten days or two weeks after the assassination, I received a telephone call at the office from Lorenzo Hall. I said, 'Hey buddy, you better have a lot of witnesses, because you were in Dallas at the time of the assassination,' and he said 'I've got witnesses to prove I was right in the middle of the lobby of the Hilton Hotel, and a hundred people know I was there, and I was nowhere near where Kennedy was assassinated.' I have never heard from again the Lorenzo Hall. I did, on one occasion, go and drive out to visit with JERRY PATRICK HEMMING, who was living in Monterey Park. He discussed with me, at the time, turning over the rifle to them, and he didn't like the idea that the rifle went down there, since he felt it was his rifle and the golf clubs that were also hocked at that time of the original meeting were Hall's, and that the rifle was his and other than that conversation. I have never had any further contact with HEMMING." [Baxter Ward Affidavits 3.9.77 to Cong. Dodd] Richard Hathcock told Kenneth D. Klein that Loran Hall "came in and took the rifle, he was alone and said he was going to Dallas. [NARA HSCA 180-10102-10154 also see NARA FBI 124-10265-10288]

In 1978 HEMMING told this researcher:

It was my weapon. We were short of money at the time and I told Hathcock, I said you know, you come up with some money but I want to leave some security and I don't feel like taking my weapon and shit back to Miami anyway, so I'll leave some gear for you. He said 'You don't have to do that. I said I'll do it because it would be more secure because some asshole ripped me off for my records - Saul from that McDonald book. Saul conned my relatives out of a lot of weapons. I trusted him, Dick Hathcock was on the Company [CIA] payroll anyway and he was anxious to know what was happening and all that shit so it was an entrée - you just don't walk into somebody's door. It's always good to get in their debt a little bit - it's a technique - it allays their suspicions...Hathcock was into all the mob, Rosselli, Hollywood stars bullshit, and then he went to work for Channel Seven News, then for the guy that's county supervisor now, Baxter Ward. Roy Payne used to work for Hathcock. I met Roy Payne in the middle of the night in Santa Monica in 1967 and he was shitting all over himself. He says, 'They're either gonna get you or get me, or they're gonna get both of us? I don't know why.' I said: 'Who's your girlfriend Roy?' 'Maria Cellini.' That's Dino Cellini's sister. That's why they are going to kill you. They think you know too much about Dallas. You got the wrong girlfriend, kid. Go to Mexico.

HEMMING stated in 1994:

The gun was not in pawn. It was in Dick Hathcock's private possession. The excuse to get the weapons out of the car, was to leave them with Hathcock, for a $50 loan. I didn't want the weapons in the fucking car. We'd been busted at No Name Key. You can't carry weapons when you're under indictment. I didn't want to be set up on a weapons charge, so I had to make sure there was no goddamned weapons in the car.

HEMMING stated the Committee to Free Cuba was a private citizens group of which Representative John Rousselot was a member: "My uncle managed his campaign." Loran Hall stated that the Committee to Free Cuba was "headed up by Dr. - I don't remember his name now - anyway it was good guys that had Philbrick on the committee." [Misc. After Loran Hall redeemed HEMMING'S rifle from Dick Hathcock on September 18, 1963, Loran Hall, LAWRENCE JOHN HOWARD and Celio Sergio Castro drove to Dallas pulling a trailer load of weapons and medicine. They arrived in Dallas on September 28, 1963, and registered at the Lawnview Motel. On October 5, 1964, the FBI determined that Hall telephoned Lester Logue or his secretary, Gloria Kouthart. Loran Hall, LAWRENCE JOHN HOWARD and Celio Sergio Castro visited Gloria Kouthart who HEMMING said would be helpful in fund raising. Wiley G. Yates of Dallas, Texas, reported:

In September 1963 Mr. Hall once more appeared at my home in Mesquite. My wife was quite surprised to see him since we had no contact with him since he left earlier in the summer and since he came during the day while I was at work and completely unannounced. This visit occurred during the week of September 23, 1963, to September 28, 1963...At this time Hall was accompanied by a large burly looking Latin American man. Both Hall and the man who accompanied him had full beards. Hall said that he wanted to talk to me and would contact me. Hall called me at work and asked me to meet him at the Dallas motel where he was staying, which I agreed to do. I called Hall at the motel and told him that I would be at home that evening, and that he could come over if he wanted to see me.

Later that evening he came to my home, accompanied by the large burly Latin-man of that afternoon, and other small Latin-American appearing man, who according to Hall, spoke no English. Both of his companions were as unkempt in appearance as Hall and were supposedly Cuban exiles who were training for the Cuban invasion...I want to make it clear that none of these three men in any way resembled OSWALD...I do not think that it could have possibly been the same man that accompanied the other two men to the Odio apartment from the description that Mrs. Odio has given. Hall did not introduce his two companions except to identify them as Cuban exiles.

Loran Hall also telephoned Robert Morris from his motel room. HEMMING had suggested Loran Hall call Robert Morris for a donation. [FBI DL 100-10461 10.8.64 Richard J. Burnett] Loran Hall told Jim Garrison:

Q. Who took you to Robert Morris?

A. PATRICK. PATRICK knew right where to go. In fact he called him on the phone and we went right up there. And he says something about, well, would you like to meet General Walker, or something like this and PATRICK says yes, this is one of the fellows we want to see.

HEMMING 1994:

Loran Hall went there to get some money from Lester Logue. Hall was visiting people behind my back. LARRY HOWARD had a falling out with Hall about this. I didn't suggest Loran Hall call Robert Morris. He did it behind my back. I only introduced him to Logue, and here he is, a month later, contacting my Dallas people and knowing everything about them. Logue gets nervous. I told Logue, 'Give the son-of-a-bitch a few bucks, get rid of his ass, he may be working for the FBI trying to set us all up.' We'd been warned months before that Hoover was after our ass with a passion." Loran Hall, LAWRENCE JOHN HOWARD and Celio Sergio Castro left their trailer load of arms in Dallas, and left by bus for Miami on October 4, 1963. From Miami Hall drove back to Dallas with William Houston Seymour to pick up the trailer load of arms and medicine he had left there. They arrived in Dallas on October 12, 1963, and checked into the same YMCA where OSWALD had stayed on October 3, 1963. Wiley Yates reported: "Sometime later, in October, Hall once more visited my home and pleaded with me to give him what supplies I might have. On this visit he was accompanied by a Caucasian male, who much more closely resembled OSWALD, than his companions of his previous visit. They stayed for only a few minutes so positive identification would be impossible. This is the last time that I saw Hall...Enclosed you will also find a copy of a letter from GERRY PATRICK HEMMING to Mr. Wally Welch, which came into my possession during this time, and which describes the activities in Florida." On October 17, 1963, just before Loran Hall and William Houston Seymour left Dallas, they were arrested for possession of dangerous drugs. William Houston Seymour believed that the Dallas Police Department mistook Loran Hall for a beatnik because of his beard, and stopped and searched him on that basis.

Loran Hall:

HEMMING tipped off the cops...I was being set up for the Kennedy killing. Not as a conspirator or a patsy, but as a smoke screen. My arrest was for the records. To show that Loran Hall was in Dallas just before the President was killed. Anyone investigating the assassination would come up with my name and figure this guy might have a reason for the killing because Kennedy didn't back the anti-Castro movement. They would waste time investigating me while the real killers covered their tracks."
[Interview with Harold Weisberg; National Enquirer 9.1.68]

HEMMING 1994: "They got caught driving a fucking trailer around with that asshole driving who gets tickets every fifteen fucking minutes." Loran Hall and William Houston Seymour left Dallas for the Florida Keys on October 19, 1963. Life Magazine reporter Tom Duncan interviewed Loran Hall in Florida:

Hall was in a sticky position due to barbiturates in his possession, although arms and ammunition were parked safely in trailer separated from vehicle. No charges made, and while no specific name mentioned as to who wielded influence, later heard from GERRY PATRICK HEMMING that Lester Logue, oilman, was responsible...Got to Miami and he stored the equipment and began looking for a boat...Hall finally made connection with Manuel Aguilar, head of FRAC (Frente Revolutionaria Anti-Communist), for use of Aguilar's boat, the Pitusa.

Tom Duncan recalled that Loran Hall and Manuel Aguilar departed: "around nightfall on Tuesday, October 29, 1963...Earlier, Hall, Aguilar, Howard and Seymour and I had driven to launch site suggested by Aguilar...Hall suggested use of my car to tow the boat, with no weaponry. To avoid debate, I agreed. I drove Aguilar's car." The mission was aborted because Hall had been stopped by Caesar Diosdado of the United States Customs Service. [Ltr. To Gordon Winslow 9.15.74 from Tom Duncan] On October 31, 1963, Hall was arrested for the illegal possession of arms. HEMMING told this researcher: "They had the Johnson, a couple of Carcanos, a Springfield, two M-1 Gerands and a couple of fucking carbines." On November 1, 1963, HEMMING filed a complaint with the Miami Police Department that read: City of Miami, Florida

Inter-Office Memorandum

To: C.H. Sapp, Det. Sgt. Intelligence Unit

From G. Zenoz, Policeman 1/c Intelligence Unit.

Date November 1, 1963.

JERRY PATRICK 2450 N.W. North River Drive, Apartment K. As instructed by Det. Sgt. Sapp I met above Subject at 201 S.W. 21st Court Apt. #2. Subject stated that one man, Loran Hall, stole two rifles from his apartment last night. One rifle being a Jungle Carbine #R5841; the other being a Savage 22 rifle with a scope. Hall was seen as he left the Subject's apartment carrying two rifles. Recently, in California, Loran Hall stole a Johnson 30-06 rifle from this Subject. Hall is staying with Cuban Manuel Aguilar at 829 S.W. 9th Ave, 373-3829.

HEMMING told this researcher: "Hall bullshitted Hathcock that he was going to deliver it to me." Loran Hall, weary of constant harassment from various Federal Agents, returned to Los Angeles on November 10, 1963, and retired from the anti-Castro struggle. On November 23, 1963, Sid Marks, a FBI Potential Criminal Informant and Private Investigator from Gardena, California, advised FBI S.A. Robert Matheson that "...about 30 days ago or a little more he was in the private detective office of Dick Hathcock and an associate of Dick Hathcock's Roy Payne, described as White Male American, 6', 210 pounds, shaved bald head, was there and prior to going out asked source if a fellow came in to get a rifle and $50 from him. An individual named Skip came in and got a high powered rifle which source, who is not familiar with weapons, advises looks identical to one he saw on TV today. Skip is described as Mexican male, white, 6' age 40 to 45, slender, and a loud mouth. Source says that Payne and Skip are anti-Kennedy and pro-Castro from remarks. Says nothing else available regarding Skip Payne was ambulance driver for the Los Angeles Police Department. [FBI 62-109060-7815; NARA FBI 124-10066-10042, 10043, 10044]

Hathcock was lying about when he first met Whatley. He knew Richard Whatley when Whatley was doing movie work. This was in the 1950's. He worked at a place called Nature's Haven. That cross-eyed lion, that was his cat. That's where he first met Dick Hathcock, because Hathcock did all the star's bullshit, for the movie stars. The CIA used him as an informant. Whatley started out on the Cuban scene working for STURGIS. After Bay of Pigs, he got jobs for some of the people in the team who worked with STURGIS.

Dick Hathcock told the FBI that Loran Hall or HEMMING were unknown to him prior to this meeting. When Gaeton Fonzi questioned him in 1976 he said: "It was through HEMMING and Loran Hall that I met Richard Whatley." Gaeton Fonzi asked, "You met HEMMING and Loran Hall prior to knowing Richard Whatley?" He said, "Oh yeah, sure. I'm positive about that." HEMMING told this researcher:

I had met Hathcock a couple of times talking about some other business, and then, when it was time to go down the road, Hall didn't have any fucking money for the car. Hall is talking about visiting with SANTOS, and I figured this guy is going to show up in Miami either fucking way, so I better keep a short leash on this son-of-a-bitch. So I introduced him to Hathcock.

HEMMING stated that he recovered the weapon from Dr. Crockett of Miami in January 1964.

HEMMING told this researcher: "Hall never knew the trailer was in Miami. He and William Houston Seymour traveled to Miami from Dallas by Greyhound bus. Loran Hall was back in Dallas two days before the assassination talking to Lester Logue. Hall was in Dallas on November 22, 1963.

The Dallas FBI ordered the Los Angeles FBI to "show charges fully resolved." [FBI Dallas 89-43-4096] The Los Angeles FBI created a Letter Head Memorandum. After it was approved by William C. Sullivan, it was sent to Dallas and Miami. When the FBI turned over its Kennedy assassination documents to the Warren Commission, the Letter Head Memorandum was rewritten, and filed with crank reports. Warren Commission Document 1179 concluded: "No further investigation was conducted as it is obvious that the rifle mentioned above was not used in connection with the Kennedy assassination." HEMMING instructed Loran Hall to take a rifle, with a scope sight, out of pawn just before the assassination and bring it to Dallas because he was setting Loran Hall up as an alternate patsy. HEMMING told this researcher: "Not likely. Loran Hall couldn't shoot fucking straight. He could even fucking talk straight. This guy is a snitch for more than one fucking agency." Had HEMMING filed the police report so that it would be discovered after the assassination? HEMMING told this researcher:

Well, it was kind of known before the assassination, so that would preclude using that rifle, wouldn't it? If a warrant is sworn out for somebody, and a rifle is identified, it's not likely somebody is going to run around using that tool. The weapon was never registered or identified with me anyway. I told the Miami City Police that he stole it in Miami. He brought it, in his possession, to Miami. He had stolen property in his possession within the Miami City limits. I was trying to get him busted with that rifle. We thought about beating the shit out of him, but it would have been a fucking shoot out. They were laying in wait for us. Loran Hall was a snitch for the Los Angeles FBI. Hall tried to snitch me out in 1959 when I went back to Los Angeles. After my father died in January 1963, Hall shows up at my mother's new house before I got the address. He said he wanted to get involved. We drove back to Miami together. Did an interview with Bill Stuckey. Stayed at STURGIS' buddy's place in Dallas - Wally Welch. Hall went to Tampa, without my knowledge, and started dealing with TRAFFICANTE after he arrived in Miami with me. Then came back and was dealing with STURGIS. He's hooked up with a guy named Manuel Aguilar, a Castro agent. He's got a safehouse and he's out recruiting my people. I wondered 'What the fuck is going on here?'

HEMMING tried to put this researcher into one of his patsy scenarios. He offered to drive me to a university laboratory where one could allegedly construct a homemade atomic bomb so he could work off a beef. HEMMING 1994:

You were going to meet Cokie Zimiri. He was looking for some critical mass summaries at the time. He'd explain how he was going set up a nuclear device. I was not trying to set you up. He wanted to tell the press how it was possible to set up a nuclear device. He was an inventor and a physicist.

In April 1976 HEMMING was asked by Dick Russell during an interview for Argosy Magazine: "You told the Senate investigators that Loran Hall was somehow involved." HEMMING:

Yes, on the day of the assassination, I made a call from Miami to Texas. And I pointedly asked, 'Is Lorenzo Hall in Dallas?' I made the call about 1:30 p.m. or 2:00 p.m. He was there. My contact had seen him in Dallas the day before.

Russell: Why were you suspicious of Loran Hall?

HEMMING: Because he left Miami with the stated intent to kill Kennedy. He had my weapon, a Johnson 30-06 breakdown rifle with a scope on it, that had been prepared for the Bay of Pigs. I'd left it with a private investigator who had previously worked under Agency auspices on the West Coast. Hall got the weapon when we ran short of funds on a return trip from L.A. to Florida, and we ended up using Hall's car.

Russell: You were working closely with Hall?

HEMMING: He came to work with our group in 1963. Then he ran afoul with some people and immediately went to work with a group that I thought was infiltrated by Castro's agents. Hall ignored this. He siphoned off a couple of people who had worked with me in the past, and started organizing his own operation with FRANK STURGIS and some other guys...He knew how to do the job...But I think someone was trying to put him there so he would be one of the patsies.

HEMMING 1994:

After the thing went down, I called Lester Logue. Lester, having been a big guy in Republican politics, started making calls. I said, 'Did Loran show up there?' Logue says, 'Yeah, he was here yesterday.' I said, 'That son-of-a-bitch has got my fucking rifle, I don't know if he's part of this shit. If he shows up on your doorstep blow his fucking head off, cause he's come to kill you.' Hall could have ended up in the fuckin' school book depository himself. He was another fuckin' OSWALD being led down the path. Being put into position where he could have taken a fall. A fall guy.

HEMMING told the HSCA that people around Lester Logue suggested that President John F. Kennedy should be assassinated and that the same group came to Miami and made a similar offer to Alpha-66. HEMMING told this researcher:

Totally wrong. I met Logue through Robert Morris. He was chairman of the Republican Party Committee, and a personal friend of NIXON. He was an oil geologist. You don't have Lester plotting and scheming to take out anybody. Not that he didn't say something like that now and then. It's not my testimony. I wore a goddamn wire, [when I testified before the HSCA] you simple fuck. The main person talking to Lester Logue was DeMohrenschildt. Lester had heard about OSWALD and had been told by other parties that this kid has a strange background. Lester made a couple of inquiries about OSWALD and they tell him 'He's okay.' I was in touch with Logue at the same time DeMohrenschildt was in touch with Logue. This was when DeMohrenschildt was in touch with OSWALD. Logue died while we were making the movie, JFK.

LORAN HALL AND JIM GARRISON

In December 1967 New Orleans District Attorney Jim Garrison subpoenaed Loran Hall to testify about the assassination of President John F. Kennedy. California authorities quashed Jim Garrison's subpoena citing Loran Hall's alibi for November 22, 1963. Nevertheless, Loran Hall voluntarily appeared at Jim Garrison's office and conveyed that "other individuals had caused Loran Hall's name to be mentioned in the Warren Commission Report." A CIA document stated:

1. On September 10, 1975, Ruth S. Taylor, DDO/LA/COG/CI, contacted the writer regarding the 201-file concerning Loran Eugene Hall temporarily held by writer. Taylor advised that DDO/DCD was making inquiry concerning Agency involvement with Hall. Taylor reviewed the 201 and the writer advised Taylor that she could alert DCD that the Office of Security, specifically the writer, has a file on Hall and could possibly assist DCD.

2. On September 10, 1975, Sean Ryan DCD/OSO, contacted the writer, advising that the FBI in Los Angeles had contacted the DCD in Los Angeles for information concerning any Agency affiliation with Hall. Apparently, Hall had contacted the FBI in Los Angeles and is to be interviewed by the on September 10, 1975, on an allegation made by Hall that he was a gunrunner for the Agency in the early 1960's. Ryan was completely unfamiliar with Hall's background and a short briefing was provided by this writer. DCD was alerted to their prior interest in Hall, the only known Agency connection, when he was of interest for debriefing relative to Cuban matters. DCD was further alerted to their prior interest in debriefings of a close associate of Hall in the early 1960's, GERALD PATRICK HEMMING. Ryan was also advised that HEMMING, in the early 1960's, was closely connected with FRANK STURGIS who has recently made unfounded claims of Agency involvement, specifically in connection with STURGIS's arrest as one of the Watergate burglars.

3. Loran Hall was one of the principals of New Orleans District Attorney James Garrison's investigation of the assassination of President John F. Kennedy. Garrison placed Hall in Dallas, Texas, at the time of the Kennedy assassination, claiming that also Hall was one of the individuals who visited Sylvia Odio prior to the assassination. Odio had long claimed that one of the individuals with Hall was LEE HARVEY OSWALD. The Warren Commission chose to discount Odio's testimony, but her testimony has been one of the major basis of contention given by Warren Commission critics.

Jerry G. Brown,
Deputy Chief, Security Analysis Group.

Bruce Solie commented: "Suggest that the FBI liaison be advised. Office of Security would be interested in results of Loran Hall interview." Loran Hall, interviewed by telephone in May 1977, stated:

Hall: Who's GERALD PATRICK HEMMING? Never heard of him. Who is he, some left-winger?

WEBERMAN: He was with INTERPEN and the International Anti-Communist Brigade.

Hall: That's a Communist organization.

WEBERMAN: The International Anti-Communist Brigade is a communist organization?

Hall: Yeah, I wouldn't know anybody like that. Anybody with a name like GERRY PATRICK HEMMING has either got to be a Communist or CIA.

WEBERMAN: Well, I think this man was a dedicated anti-Communist.

Hall: Who? GERRY PATRICK HEMMING? If it's the one I heard about he's CIA. I've got nothing to talk to you about. Anybody who associates with GERALD PATRICK HEMMING has either got to be CIA, FBI or an asshole. I got nothing to say. Hey, nobody is going to print anything I got to say, nobody. That's fine. I'm in no hurry to get my head blowed off. HEMMING is a CIA punk. I've known the son-of-a-bitch for fifteen years. He turned his own goddamned crews in so he wouldn't have to go to Cuba. He has fingered me on my own goddamn deals and caused me to get arrested. Ah fuck. Hey man as it stand right now there's only two of us left alive. That's me and SANTO TRAFFICANTE as far as I'm concerned we're both going to stay alive because I ain't gonna say shit. I ain't gonna have some asshole come up to me and blow me away...The only thing I'm saying is that if any of you assholes come near me you better have a fuckin' army with you baby. Cause I got my shit together and I'll blow the first one of you motherfuckers away that even comes near me. That you can put in print.

The HSCA questioned Loran Hall about the statement he made during this conversation:

Triplet: Have you ever made the statement to the effect that as of now there are only two of us left that is me and SANTO TRAFFICANTE, as far as I am concerned we are both going to stay alive, because I am not going to say anything. Have you ever made a statement to that effect?

Hall: You have got the tape of it Mr. Triplet, yes I did.

Triplet: What did you refer to as far as there are only two of us left?

Hall: There was a meeting in New Orleans. I mean Miami that was to set up the Pawley-Bayo raid on Cuba. And of that meeting, to the best of my knowledge, there is just the two of us left alive.

Triplet: Did that statement have any reference to the assassination of President Kennedy?

Hall: No it did not.

On June 8, 1977, Loran Hall told the HSCA:

I was in Monterey Park, California, and Los Angeles...On November 22, 1963, I called Mildred Hyatt to establish my whereabouts. She called me back. [I visited] IPCO Hospital Supply. I had made a statement to an FBI man in Dallas, probably within a month and half of the time the President was killed...something to the effect that someone ought to kick his ass or blow him away...In those days I really didn't give a damn about Kennedy. I testified under oath before Garrison...I then went to Sacramento to see Governor Reagan's aide, Mr. Meese...After the Garrison subpoena was served on me...I was on my way down to the attorney's office when I was forced off the canyon road...a few days later, it was New Years Eve, and I was hit in the arm with a needle and given infectious hepatitis. On the third time that someone had taken a socket wrench and removed three bolts off my steering column and I almost had a head on collision with a retainer wall as a result of that.

When Loran Hall sought medical treatment, his doctor believed he was a heroin addict. Loran Hall told the CIA about these incidents. When asked if he ever received money from the Agency, he said that Sam Giancana had given him $20,000. On October 5, 1963, MM T-1 said that HEMMING and his group was considering the release of some abandoned buildings at the Clewiston, Florida Airport for use as a military training site. On October 16, 1963, MM T-1 advised that some parts for a .23 mm cannon, along with a .20 mm cannon itself, arrived in Miami that day. It is unknown how this cannon or the parts arrived, but HEMMING took possession of it. MM T-1 advised on November 8, 1963, that HEMMING and the above-mentioned group returned to Miami, Florida on November 6, 1963, after having conducted an unsuccessful search operation for RORKE and SULLIVAN.

"INTERPEN - Neutrality Matters. Classification: None given. FBI File No. None given (Miami)" dated November 14, 1963, was the last pre-assassination FBI document about HEMMING. HEMMING told this researcher: "The November 1963 report concerned Werbell and Felipe Vidal." On February 10, 1965, Western Hemisphere/SA/INTEL became aware of a statement made by ROY HARGRAVES that he went on a CIA mission to Cuba on October 22, 1962, and that he trained men in the organization of Felipe Vidal. The CIA reported:

In October 1959 Felipe Carlos Vidal Santiago arrived in Caracas, Venezuela, as the Cuban Naval Attaché. In January 1960 a CIA representative contacted Felipe Vidal when it became known he was disaffected with the Castro regime. Felipe Vidal defected from his position on March 7, 1960, and fled to Bogota, Colombia. A Provisional Operational Approval was granted to Felipe Vidal on March 15, 1960, and this was later superseded by a CSA, granted on October 27, 1960. This Agency planned to use Felipe Vidal as Chief of the Cuban Revolutionary Front Maritime Force. It was later learned Felipe Vidal was an opportunist, and associated with people whom the CIA frowned upon. He was considered a security risk and interest in him was terminated in August 1961. Vidal then aligned himself with various exile groups, notably the Frente Liberacion Nacional (FLN). Vidal appeared before the Immigration and Naturalization Service on numerous occasions for violations committed while engaging in anti-Castro activities with various exile groups. On one occasion he related to the INS and FBI that he was at one time a CIA agent and furnished them some background information regarding his activities while working for us. While attempting to infiltrate Cuba in March 1964, he was captured. He was executed by the Government of Cuba on May 26, 1964. At no time after August 1961 was this Agency affiliated with Vidal. There is no record of this Agency having utilized the services of ROY EMORY HARGRAVES. He may well have infiltrated Cuba on October 22, 1962, as he claims and also trained some men in Vidal's organization, but this was neither a CIA mission nor CIA men that he claims to have trained. NOTE: As Vidal is dead, do not see how an issue could be raised over HARGRAVES statement that he went on a CIA mission to Cuba on October 22, 1962, and that he trained the CIA men in Vidal's organization. HARGRAVES lawyer would have a picnic on this. WH/SA-INTELL.

HEMMING AND OSWALD AT THE SPORTSDROME RIFLE RANGE NOVEMBER 1963

OSWALD was driven to the Sportsdrome Rifle Range several occasions by HEMMING, including Saturday November 9, 1963, Sunday, November 10, 1963, Sunday November 17, 1963, as part of the set-up. A credible assassin had to have practiced, and HEMMING knew that OSWALD'S presence at the rifle range would be detected, and reported after the assassination by the good 'ole boys in adjoining booths. HEMMING also had to obtain spent shells from OSWALD'S Mannlicher-Carcano to plant in the Texas School Book Depository on November 22, 1963. HEMMING fired OSWALD'S Mannlicher-Carcano and OSWALD fired HEMMING'S "sporterized" Mannlicher-Carcano. HEMMING put the spent shells from OSWALD'S rifle in his pocket, and OSWALD put the spent shells from HEMMING'S weapon in his pocket. HEMMING said he liked OSWALD'S gun, and offered him double what it was worth. He told him to bring it to the Texas School Book Depository on November 22, 1963. By that time, HEMMING would have the money to purchase the weapon from OSWALD, because everyone in INTERPEN, including OSWALD, was going to come into some money. After the assassination, several men who were at the range that day told the FBI that they had seen OSWALD there. However, after the assassination, the FBI, determined, to portray OSWALD as the lone assassin so it would not be accused of having overlooked a broader conspiracy, suppressed all indications that OSWALD had a questionable associate - such as the tall man who accompanied him to the Sportsdrome Rifle Range. According to the Warren Commission Report, four Sportsdrome witnesses were convinced that the person they had seen was OSWALD, however, Ruth Paine, Michael Paine and Marina Oswald testified that OSWALD was watching pro football at the home of Ruth Paine in Irving, Texas, on Sunday, November 10, 1963, when the first of the Sportsdrome witnesses sightings of OSWALD occurred, and was with him on the other occasions when the Sportsdrome witnesses placed him at the range.

Jenner: It is your opinion, based on your recollection of all the association of LEE OSWALD with you and at your home, that it could not have been possible for him to have taken a weapon, such as the rifle involved here, to any range, shooting range, sportsdrome, gun range, or otherwise, on any occasion when he was in Irving, Texas, residing or staying as a guest in your home?

Paine: The only time when he was there and I was away long enough for him to have gone somewhere and come back, and I now know that I can recall was Monday November 11, 1963. I have described my presence at the home on November 9, 1963, and November 10, 1963. And to the best of my recollection, there was no long period of time that I was away from home when he was there. I may also say that there is no way of getting from my home unless you walk or have someone drive you...It has been reported in the press that he had been seen at a firing range on the weekend of November 9, 1963, November 10, 1963, and the following weekend and it all seemed to me important to say what I could on the subject if I had any contrary information, and I did any time the reporters asked me about it.

The testimony of the Sportsdrome witnesses was dismissed in favor of the Paines' and Marina Oswald. No impartial witnesses came forward and corroborated the testimony of Ruth Paine, Michael Paine, and Marina Oswald. OSWALD never went to the movies, or to a grocery store etc. all weekend, so no one else except these two dubious individuals and a frightened Marina Oswald, put him in Irving, Texas. The Sportsdrome Rifle Range witnesses were all credible, and there was no indication they had ever perpetrated a hoax, before, or after, the assassination. Ruth Paine and Marina Oswald were putty in the hands of the FBI. Michael Paine went along with it out of a sense of loyalty to his wife. When S.A. Hosty made it clear to Marina Oswald and the Paines that the FBI and the Warren Commission were determined to prove OSWALD was the lone assassin, the three were willing to account for his presence whenever necessary. Marina Oswald was afraid of being deported for sexual immorality, Ruth Paine was either afraid she would either have to come out of the closet, or expose someone in her family who told her Oswald was "alright." Michael Paine:

I am sure my wife didn't lie. If people had asked me, seldom do I keep records enough so I can say where I was, or what I was doing, on a certain day. My wife is a lot better at it, so I don't recall what evidence, what records she was basing that statement upon. So she could have, I won't say she said things that weren't true, but they were true to her belief, I'm sure.

Ruth Paine was asked about this by this researcher:

I'm sure they're sincere. They didn't get a name, right? What I tried, when I went before the Commission, was to be sure that I had dredged everything I could from my memory so that I could remember what happened. Out at my house, I would remember, that's real clear. Which makes the other sightings, whether it's the rifle range, or going into the furniture store, were at times when I knew he was with me. I know what I saw. I don't have to reconcile my testimony with theirs. It's a question of what I know. It's pretty simple for me. You're the one with the problem. How did Posner deal with that? I think he thought they were pretty reasonable people too. He did talk to me at one point and he said these people seemed credible.

There was no reason to believe Ruth Paine, Michael Paine, and Marina Oswald. It was their word against Bogard; it was their word against the Sportsdrome witness. These average Americans did not trace back to ANGLETON as Ruth Hyde Paine did. The Warren Commission:

Rifle Practice - Several witnesses believed, that in the weeks preceding the assassination, they observed a man resembling OSWALD practicing with a rifle in the fields and wooded areas surrounding Dallas, and at rifle ranges in that area. Some witnesses claimed OSWALD was alone, while others said he was accompanied by one or more other persons. In most instances, investigation has disclosed that there is no substantial basis for believing that the person reported by the various witnesses was OSWALD.

One group of witnesses, however, believed they observed OSWALD at the Sportsdrome Rifle Range in Dallas at various times from September through November 1963. In light of the number of witnesses, the similarity of the description of the man they saw, and the type of weapon they thought the individual was shooting, there is reason to believe that these witnesses did see the same person at the firing range, although the testimony of none of these witnesses is fully consistent with the reported observations of the other witnesses.

The witnesses who claimed to have seen OSWALD at the firing range had more than a passing notice of the person they observed. Malcolm H. Price Jr. adjusted the scope on this individual's rifle on one occasion. Garland G. Slack had an altercation with the individual on another occasion, because he was shooting at Slack's target; and Sterling C. Wood, who on a third date was present at the range with his father, Dr. Homer Wood, spoke with his father and very briefly with the man himself about the individual's rifle. All three of these persons, as well as Doctor Wood, expressed confidence that the man they saw was OSWALD... Although the testimony of these witnesses was partially corroborated by other witnesses, there was other evidence which prevented the Commission from reaching the conclusion that LEE HARVEY OSWALD was the person these witnesses saw. Others who were at the firing range remembered the same individual, but, though noting a similarity to OSWALD, did not believe the man was OSWALD; others were either unable to state whether the man was OSWALD, or did not recall seeing anybody who they feel may have been OSWALD. Moreover, when interviewed on December 2, 1963, Slack recalled that the individual that he saw had blonde hair, and on December 3, 1963, Price stated that on several occasions when he saw this individual, he was wearing a 'Bulldogger Texas style' hat and had bubble gum or chewing tobacco in his cheek. None of these characteristics match those known about LEE HARVEY OSWALD.

Moreover, the date on which Price adjusted the scope for the unknown person was September 28, 1963, but OSWALD is known to have been in Mexico City at that time; since a comparison of the events testified to by Price and Slack strongly suggest they were describing the same man, there is reason to believe that Slack was describing a man other than OSWALD. In addition, Slack believed he saw the same person at the rifle range on November 10, 1963, and there is persuasive evidence that on November 10, 1963, OSWALD was at the Paine's home in Irving and did not leave to go to the rifle range. Finally, the man Price assisted on September 28, 1963, drove an old car, possibly a 1940 or 1941 Ford. However, there is evidence that OSWALD could not drive at that time, and there is no indication that OSWALD ever had access to such a car. Neither OSWALD'S name, nor any of his known aliases, was found in the sign-in register maintained at the Sportsdrome Rifle Range, although many customers did not sign this register. The allegations pertaining to the companions who reportedly accompanied the man believed to be OSWALD are also inconsistent among themselves and conform to no other credible information ascertained by the Commission. Several witnesses noticed a bearded man at the club when the person believed to be OSWALD was there, although only one witness thought the two men were together; the bearded gentleman was located and he was found not to have any connection with OSWALD.

It seems likely that the identification of Price, Slack and Woods was reinforced in their own minds by the belief that the man who they saw was firing a rifle perhaps identical to OSWALD'S Mannlicher-Carcano. The witnesses agreed that the man they observed was firing a foreign-type, bolt-action, rifle, with the ammunition clip immediately in front of the trigger action, and that a scope was mounted on the rifle. These features are consistent with the rifle OSWALD used for the assassination. The witnesses agreed that the man had accurate aim with the rifle.

However, the evidence demonstrated that the weapon fired by the man they observed was different from the assassination rifle. The witnesses agreed that the barrel of the gun which the individual was firing had been shortened in the process of "sporterizing" the weapon. In addition, Price and Slack recalled that certain pieces were missing from the top of the weapon, and Dr. Wood and his son, and others, remembered that the weapon spouted flames when fired. None of these characteristics correspond with OSWALD'S Mannlicher-Carcano. Price and Slack believed that the gun did not have a sling, but the assassination weapon did have one. Sterling Wood, on the other hand, recalled that the rifle that he saw had a sling. Price also recalled that he examined the rifle briefly for some indication as to where it had been manufactured, but saw nothing, whereas the words 'Made In Italy' are marked on the top of OSWALD'S Mannlicher-Carcano.

The scope of the rifle observed at the firing range does not appear to be the same as the one on the assassination weapon. Price remembered that the individual told him that his scope was Japanese, that he had paid $18 for it, and that he had it mounted in gun shop in Cedar Hills, although apparently no such shop exists in that area. The scope on the Mannlicher-Carcano was of Japanese origin, but it was worth a little more than $7 and it was already mounted when he received the rifle from a mail order firm in Chicago. Sterling Wood and Slack agreed that the scope had a somewhat different appearance from the scope on the assassination rifle.

Though the person believed to be OSWALD retained his shell casings, presumably for re-use, all casings recovered from the area where it is believed that OSWALD may have practiced have been examined by the FBI Laboratory, and none has been found which was fired from OSWALD'S rifle. Finally, evidence discussed in Chapter IV tends to prove that OSWALD brought his rifle to Dallas from the home of the Paines in Irving, on November 22, 1963, and there is no other evidence which indicates that he took the rifle or a package that might have contained the rifle out of the Paine's garage, where it was stored, prior to that date. #### THE SPORTSDROME WITNESSES

Malcolm H. Price Jr. had to retire from his job at Ling-Temco-Voight because of a heart condition. He worked at the Sportsdrome Rifle Range to support his wife and five children. Malcolm Price Jr. was a confused witness. Malcolm Price Jr. told the Warren Commission he first saw OSWALD at the range on Saturday, September 28, 1963, when he drove up in a 1940, or 1941, model Ford. Malcolm Price Jr. told his boss Floyd Davis about OSWALD. Floyd Davis told J. P. Adamcik, and K. L. Anderton, of the Dallas Police Department, on December 2, 1963, that Malcolm Price Jr. said he had seen OSWALD "on Saturday, November 9, 1963, and Sunday, November 10, 1963, as well as Sunday, November 17, 1963." Price was questioned by the Warren Commission:

Liebler: I would like to have you state your full name for the record.

Price: It is Malcolm Howard Price, Jr.

Liebler: Where were you born?

Price: I was born at Graham, Texas.

Liebler: How long have you lived in Grand Prairie, Texas?

Price: Oh, about 13 years.

Liebler: When were you born?

Price: April 6, 1928.

Liebler: Where are you employed?

Price: I am retired, I am unemployed.

Liebler: I understand that's primarily because of the fact that you have a heart condition?

Price: Yes, that's right.

Liebler: Are you married?

Price: Yes; I am.

Liebler: Do you have any children?

Price: I have five.

Liebler: Are you familiar with Sportsdrome Rifle Range?

Price: Yes; very familiar with it...I have helped them there - I'm not, as you say, employed, but I do help them from time to time. They are close friends of mine, and I have helped them get the things set up and get it started...Virginia and Floyd Davis.

Liebler: The Commission had information to the effect that sometime during November 1963 you saw a gentleman at the rifle range whom you subsequently came to believe was LEE HARVEY OSWALD?

Price: That's right. The first time I saw this person was in September, the last week, the last Saturday of September, and that was the afternoon they opened the rifle range.

Liebler: On the last Saturday of September? That would be Saturday, September 28, 1963?

Price: Yes.

Liebler: Tell me the circumstances under which you first saw this fellow?

Price: Well it was just about dusky dark, and he came in an old model car, I would judge it was possibly a 1940 or 1941 model Ford.

Liebler: Was anyone with him?

Price: No; he was by himself, and I have heard that he couldn't drive, but he was driving that day because he was the only one in the car, and he came down and inquired if there was anyone there that could set a scope, a telescope on a rifle, and I told him that I could, and he said, well - he had one that he had had mounted and boresighted, but it hadn't been fired on a range, and that he would like to have it sighted in, so I went down and set up a target on a hundred yards. Actually he set up the target himself and I drove my car and turned my headlights on the as I proceeded to set the rifle. I fired the rifle approximately 12 to 18 times, I would say, and I zeroed in on it a hundred yards, and Mr. Floyd Davis came in from work before we left, and he also drove his pickup down and turned his lights on the target.

Liebler: On the opposite side of the target from your car?

Price: Yes; and Mrs. Davis went home - she was tired and wasn't feeling too good, and she went home as soon as he got down there.

Liebler: As soon as Mr. Davis did?

Price: Yes.

Liebler: Did Mr. Davis see this fellow at that time?

Price: Well, I don't know whether he saw him or not. He apparently don't remember it.

Liebler: You have discussed it with Mr. Davis?

Price: Oh, we have talked about it some, but he doesn't - he don't even recall turning his headlights on.

Liebler: Now, did this man fire the rifle himself?

Price: He fired three shots after I had got it set to where I could fire a pattern, with three shots in a bull's eye. I turned it over to him and I said, "Now I am satisfied with it, you try it."

And he fired three shots and scored bull's eyes with all three - a very tight pattern. He said, "Well, I am completely satisfied."

Liebler: How much did you charge him for zeroing the rifle in?

Price: I didn't charge him anything. I charged him $1 for the use of the range, and that was all. I just did that as a favor to Floyd to help him get his business in. I figured this was just another hunter who had come down to get his rifle zeroed in for deer season.

Liebler: Did you have any other conversation with this fellow at that time?

Price: No, that was all. It was rather abrupt. He didn't talk too much, and I was kind of surprised that he didn't fire the rifle more. He just fired three shots and he said "Well, that's good enough," and he got up and left.

Liebler: Did he leave the shell casings lying there at the range or did he take them with him?

Price: No, he took them with him - he picked them all up after the rifle was fired and took the shell casings along with him.

Liebler: You have an opportunity to observe the rifle, did you not?

Price: Yes, I had it in my hand.

Liebler: Would you be able to identify it?

Price: Well I believe I would - it was a foreign made rifle, and I wasn't too familiar with it at the time.

Liebler: Did you see it again?

Price: On two other occasions that he was there.

Liebler: Before we go on to that, you indicated that in order to see the target you have to turn the lights of the automobile on and that of Mr. Davis' truck on is that right?

Price: Yes.

Liebler: Was it light, up at the rifle range, from where you fired?

Price: Oh yes, we have neon lights there.

Liebler: So you didn't have any difficulty in seeing this fellow?

Price: No - no difficulty at all.

Liebler: Then this fellow just put the rifle in the car and drove off?

Price: Yes.

Liebler: Did he have a gun case or anything like that?

Price: Well, if he did, he didn't bring it down to the firing house.

Liebler: He didn't have anything he wrapped the rifle in?

Price: Not that I know of. In fact, the best I remember, when he got out of the car, he just picked the gun up out of the back seat because it wasn't wrapped in anything or wasn't in a case.

Liebler: Did you see this fellow again?

Price: On two other occasions - one was two weeks later and at the turkey shoot. It was Sunday, though, it was on a Sunday.

Liebler: It would have been in October sometime, and then is that right?

Price: Yes it would.

Liebler: The last Saturday in September, which is the day you indicated was the first time you saw him was September 28, 1963?

Price: Yes; that was the day they opened. They opened in the afternoon.

Liebler: And two weeks later would have been October 12, 1963, and the Sunday following would be October 13, 1963; is that right?

Price: Yes, somewhere around there. They had a turkey shoot, and I went down to participate in a turkey shoot, and he was sitting in a Booth Six or Booth Eight, and was firing on a hundred yard line with a heavy bore rifle and I didn't talk to him then, but the third time that I saw him there I did.

Liebler: Did you see this time in October, the day of this turkey shoot; did you see he had the same rifle you had observed?

Price: No, I didn't pay too much attention to that. I just saw him as he came by and he went on down to the booth. There are people that come down there and some of them have as high as six or seven different rifles. This Mr. Slack that you just talked to - I noticed him in particular because he had quite a variety every time he come down there - he had three or four rifles with him.

Liebler: There's nothing that happened on this second time that you saw him that particularly stands out?

Price: Well - not that I know of personally, but I do understand there was a hassle between him and Mr. Slack over shooting the wrong target or something like that. I was over at the opposite end shooting at a target for the turkey shoot, and I didn't pay attention to that. That was their business.

Liebler: Who told you there was a hassle between this guy and Slack?

Price: It was Mr. Davis and Mrs. Davis.

Liebler: But you, yourself, don't remember anything that happened on this day, as far as this fellow was concerned?

Price: No.

Liebler: Now going back to the first time you saw him, was there anyone there at the rifle range besides this man, Mr. Davis and yourself?

Price: At the first time I saw him - me and Mrs. Davis was the only one there, and we were just fixing to close up and go home and he came in and, like I said, inquired if there was anybody that could set a telescope. I took him down to set his telescope, and we stayed there that much longer, and Mr. Davis came in, and Mrs. Davis went on home.

Liebler: Did Mrs. Davis have the opportunity to see this man?

Price: Not that I know of - she knew there was somebody there, but she was inside the building.

Liebler: There was nobody else there?

Price: There was no one else there.

Liebler: When was the next time you saw him, the third time?

Price: Well, I don't remember just exactly when it was, but it was - it could be anywhere from one week to three weeks later - I don't remember exactly, but it was on a Sunday, Sunday, was the only time I went down there after that in a good while.

Liebler: Mr. Price, this is Mr. Davis from the attorney general's office for the State of Texas. Mr. Price has testified that he saw OSWALD out at the Sportsdrome Rifle Range.

Price: I don't remember the exact date on that, but the third time that I saw him he did have the same gun. And I asked him if it was still doing the job, if it was still set, and he said, "It was shooting just fine," and Mr. Slack was there at the time and at this particular time - that might have been the day they had the hassle there, I don't know, but they were sitting right next to one another - Mr. Slack was in Booth 9 and OSWALD was in Booth 8, and he commented on his telescope.

Liebler: Who commented on the telescope?

Price: OSWALD.

Liebler: Commented to you?

Price: Yes; he asked me to look through it, and he said, "It's one of the clearest telescopes that I have ever seen - one of the brightest." He said, "It's a Japanese scope, and I gave $18 for it."

Liebler: He told you that he paid $18 for it?

Price: Yes; he said that it was - he remarked that it was a four-power telescope, and he said it was mounted on Redfield mounts. You see, they make mounts for several different guns, but I don't know one mount from another myself. I just took his word for it that it was a Redfield mount, but I looked through the scope and it was very clear. It was bright, and we compared it with two scopes that Mr. Slack had on his gun, and a fellow that was shooting on the right side in Booth 7 - I don't know who that was, but we compared it with three different American-made scopes and his telescope was brighter and clearer by far. You could read the lines and numerals on the target very plainly with it...

Liebler: Did he tell you where he had it mounted?

Price: He said he got the thing from a gunsmith in Cedar Hill for a debt, the gun, and that he bought the scope and the gunsmith mounted it for him.

Liebler: The same gunsmith?

Price: Yes.

Liebler: And that was in Cedar Hill?

Price: It might be; but I don't know of any gunsmith in Cedar Hill. [The Warren Commission determined no such gun shop existed. WR p320]

Liebler: But you remember that he did tell you it was done by a gunsmith in Cedar Hill?

Price: Yes; then, I questioned him about it, I told him, I said, "I didn't know there was a gunsmith in Cedar Hill." He said, "Yes, one over there, and he owed me some money, and he gave me this gun to settle the debt" and he said, "I bought the scope, and he mounted it and boresighted it."

Liebler: Was there anyone with him that day, or was he by himself?

Price: I don't know; I don't know whether he by himself or not.

Liebler: Did you see anybody else that seemed to be with him?

Price: No; there was a lot of people there, and everybody was milling around talking to everybody else, and I don't know whether he was with anyone or not.

Liebler: Now, what about that fellow that was in the booth on the other side of Mr. Slack, do you remember anything about him, I think you said.

Price: All I remember about him was that he was a big fellow with a long black - it was either black or dark red beard.

Liebler: Did you talk to him at all.

Price: Other than just to comment on his scope - I didn't have any conversation at all with him.

Liebler: Are you talking about OSWALD now?

Price: No, I'm talking about the fellow with the beard.

Liebler: Did you look through his scope too?

Price: Yes, I did.

Liebler: Did OSWALD talk to the fellow with the beard?

Price: Well, I suppose - he spoke to all of them - to OSWALD and Slack both, about the clarity of the telescope.

Liebler: Were you there when they were talking about the clarity of OSWALD'S telescope?

Price: Yes.

Liebler: Did you see this fellow that you think was OSWALD come or go from the range, or did you just see him there then?

Price: I just saw him there. I just saw him there a couple of times.

Liebler: A couple of times that day?

Price: No; two separate times I believe, that OSWALD was present at the range both times that he was, as I remember, but I don't know whether they were there together or not.

Liebler: We are getting our wire crossed - you're talking now about the fellow with the beard.

Price: Yes.

Liebler: You meant that he was there on the range at a couple of different times?

Price: Yes, he was there both times I saw OSWALD.

Liebler: That you saw OSWALD?

Price: That I saw OSWALD, yes. The second and third time.

Liebler: But you never saw them come and go together?

Price: No; I didn't pay any attention to who came - whether they came or left together, or how they got there, but just that one particular time - he was the only one there.

Liebler: You never noticed how OSWALD came to the rifle range, and left the range?

Price: That's right.

Liebler: Except that first time you saw him?

Price: That's right.

Liebler: Did you see the rifle closely that day - you must have handled it looking through the scope?

Price: Oh yes, I handled it. It was a Mauser-type rifle.

Liebler: What do you mean by that? I don't know anything about rifles.

Price: Well, it's strictly a military rifle and it's patterned after the German Mauser.

Liebler: A bolt-action rifle?

Price: A bolt action and the general outline it had - about oh, possible a six shot clip that set just ahead of the trigger, and I understand that it was a 6.5 Italian, but at that time I didn't know. I thought it was a Mauser, because there's a friend of mine in Grand Prairie that has an Argentine Mauser that was 7.6, and it looked very familiar - they looked a whole lot alike.

Liebler: Did you have a chance to look at any of the writing, or printing, that was stamped on the rifle?

Price: Well, the only thing that I could see on it - I looked for a brand name so I could see approximately where it was made, and the only thing I could find on it was a serial number.

Liebler: Did you look closely for a brand name?

Price: I didn't examine it too close.

Liebler: But you did see the serial number?

Price: I saw the serial number and the gun wasn't blued at the time - it had a bright finish on the barrel. It looked like it had been placed in a lathe and turned down, as far as - well, in an attempt to sporterize the gun.

Liebler: It had been worked on in some manner in an attempt to sporterize it?

Price: I thought it had.

Liebler: How far did the barrel protrude from the stock of the rifle, how far did it stick out from the end of the stock?

Price: Possibly six or eight inches at most.

Liebler: Had the stock been cut back in an attempt to sporterize the rifle?

Price: Well, not that I could tell - it was similar to a German Mauser and they have, you know, they have got a full length, almost a full length stock with a wooden piece on the top of them also.

Liebler: And the wooden piece on the top was still on this rifle - which did you see?

Price: No, I don't believe it was.

Liebler: It had been taken off?

Price: Yes.

Liebler: And it had been taken off as part of an attempt to sporterize the rifle?

Price: Yes.

Liebler: Had the end of the barrel been cut off?

Price: I don't know whether it had been cut off or not.

Liebler: You say the barrel had a shiny finish?

Price: Yes, it did at the time.

Liebler: I will show you two pictures that have been previously marked "Exhibits 3 and 4" on the deposition of Mr. Greener, and ask you if you recognize that as the rifle that this man had at the range.

Price: Except from the sling and forepiece - I would say they are the same gun. The gun had no sling on it. It did have the mounts on the side for a sling.

Liebler: It didn't have a sling on it?

Price: It didn't.

Liebler: What do you mean when you say forepiece?

Price: The forepiece is this top wooden piece; of course that could be taken off and replaced very easily.

Liebler: The wooden piece that is on the top of the barrel, is that what you are referring to?

Price: Yes.

Liebler: And you say that was not on the rifle that you saw?

Price: No; it wasn't. This barrel has a step along in here somewhere.

Liebler: A step?

Price: A step along in here building up to a larger diameter, and another one here, which you can see.

Liebler: It get larger by degrees as it come back toward the action, is that right.

Price: That's right, and that's the reason I thought at the time that it had been placed in a lathe and turned down, but I'm not too familiar with the foreign-made guns, and I have learned since then that all Mauser rifles are of that type - they are made that way.

Liebler: With these steps as they come back toward the action?

Price: That's right.

Liebler: Is this the same kind of scope that you saw on the rifle that OSWALD had, the fellow you thought was OSWALD?

Price: Yes; it had large receivers at both ends and I believe, now, I might not be right about the brand name, but I believe it was a Tascosa, since I examined it - it was a Japanese made scope. They make several different brands of those things - it could be any of them, but I believe, as I remember it, it was a Tascosa.

Liebler: So, if you took the sling off this rifle and took the top wooden piece off the barrel, you think it would look pretty much like the one that this fellow had?

Price: Yes...

Liebler: When did you first become aware of the fact it was OSWALD - when did you first think that it was OSWALD?

Price: When I saw him on television when they were transferring him from the Dallas jail.

Liebler: And did you recognize him right away as the fellow you had seen at the rifle range?

Price: Yes; I contacted the FBI the next day. I debated on it all night whether I should call them or get mixed-up with it, or not.

Liebler: Did you mention it to anyone else, when you saw him on television.

Price: Yes; my family.

Liebler: Did you talk about it with anyone else before you told the FBI?

Price: No.

Liebler: Whom did you talk with at the FBI, do you remember?

Price: Charlie Brown.

Liebler: Let's see if we can establish the date of the last time that you saw this man at the rifle range. Do you recall that the President was assassinated on Friday, November 22, 1963? Can you tell us approximately how long prior to the assassination this time was that you saw the man?

Price: The last time I saw him was a week before Thanksgiving; Sunday before.

Liebler: The Sunday before Thanksgiving - that's the last time you saw him at the rifle range?

Price: That's the last time that I was down there at the rifle range - the last time I went there until after, oh, a month or so after the assassination.

Liebler: You mean it was the Sunday immediately preceding Thanksgiving?

Price: That's right; I was down there for the turkey shoot that we had.

Liebler: You saw him at the rifle range that day?

Price: Yes.

Liebler: Well, the last Sunday before Thanksgiving was after the assassination.

Price: It was after?

Liebler: Yes; and you saw this man at the rifle range, you saw OSWALD at the rifle range after the assassination?

Price: I believe I did, because that was the last time I went down there.

Liebler: What makes you say it was the Sunday preceding Thanksgiving, are you sure about that?

Price: Well, I am not exactly positive but it was getting close to Thanksgiving because I was trying to get a turkey.

Liebler: Do you remember whether you saw him after the assassination?

Price: No.

Liebler: You are not sure one way or the other?

Price: I know I haven't seen him after the assassination - I was down there the last time and I was thinking it was a week before Thanksgiving, but anyhow, it was before the assassination, the Sunday before but they were holding a turkey shoot.

Liebler: The Sunday before the assassination would have been November 17, 1963, that would have been two Sundays before Thanksgiving.

Price: Well, it might be right - that's been so long ago - I'm not sure about the dates, I don't remember dates too well.

Liebler: But you were pretty clear in your mind you didn't see OSWALD after the assassination.

Price: That's right.

Liebler: Have you ever seen him since?

Price: I have never seen him since. I have been down there quite often since December.

Liebler: Down at the rifle range?

Price: Yes.

Liebler: And business at the rifle range has fallen off since the assassination, rather sharply, hasn't it?

Price: Well, for a while it continued, but it has fallen off very sharply in the last month and a half except for Sundays - they do have good business on Sunday...

Liebler: The last time you saw this man at the rifle range - do you remember if there was anybody else there that you know?

Price: Garland Slack.

Liebler: And you saw Mr. Slack?

Price: Yes.

Liebler: Anybody else?

Price: Well, there was this big fellow, I don't know who he is.

Liebler: Have you ever seen him since?

Price: No; I haven't. I understand that Mr. Davis saw him one time because he called me and told me that he had saw him, about two weeks ago, and he turned the license number of the car over to the FBI.

Liebler: Did you ever see him talk to this big fellow other than to talk about this telescope on this time you have told us about?

Price: Well not that I particular remember.

Liebler: Did you form any impression as to whether they were together or not?

Price: No.

Liebler: You couldn't tell one way or the other?

Price: No. I didn't pay attention to it. There was - I just thought of it - a doctor and his son there at the same time and they were firing a .308 caliber Winchester, I believe - it was either a Winchester or a Remington, and anyhow, they had identical guns and they were sharpening up for, I believe, they said they were going to Canada and they were there at the same time.

Liebler: Was this the Sunday, the last time you saw him?

Price: Yes.

Liebler: Do you know their names - do you know what their names are?

Price: No; I don't - I don't know their names - I have heard it, but I don't remember it.

Liebler: Would you remember it if I mentioned it to you?

Price: Well, I might.

Liebler: Is the doctor's name - Dr. Wood?

Price: That don't sound like it - there was doctor there and his son - I know they were father and son.

Liebler: About how old was the son?

Price: In his early 20's I believe.

Liebler: And did they talk to this fellow about the telescope?

Price: I don't remember if they had any conversation with him or not.

Liebler: What makes you mention that?

Price: It's just the fact that they were there at the same time, and I know they were talking to Garland Slack, and there is a possibility that they either observed or talked to OSWALD, because he was sitting next to Slack.

Liebler: You have nothing else that you want to add - I don't think of any more questions. I want to thank you for coming down and cooperating with us to the extent that you have...

Price: Well I try to help all I can. I don't remember dates too well - it's been quite some time. I can remember faces but I can't remember names and dates worth a hoot.

Liebler: Well we appreciate your coming down here.

Davis: Thanks again - we appreciate your coming down.

Price: You bet.

THE MYTH OF THE OSWALD "DOUBLE"

OSWALD was in Mexico City on September 28, 1963, when Price placed him at the Sportsdrome Rifle Range. The error of Malcolm Price in regard to OSWALD'S alleged visit to the Sportsdrome Rifle Range in October 1963, and the testimony of seemingly innocent Ruth and Michael Paine led this researcher to have once believed in the existence of an OSWALD "double." This researcher should have examined the testimony of Malcolm Price, and realized that Price was clearly confused about dates, and said so on several occasions: Malcolm Price was indefinite about the date of his second encounter, and his last encounter with OSWALD. If he was unsure of these encounters, was he mistaken about the one that occurred on September 28, 1963? In reality it was OSWALD who appeared at the Sportsdrome Rifle Range, not an "OSWALD double." Malcolm Price was shown several different photographs of OSWALD, and Curtis La Verne Crafard, a employee of JACK RUBY. Malcolm Price pointed to both OSWALD and Curtis La Verne Crafard, then said that he was the man he had seen at the range. Malcolm Price told the Warren Commission that only one of its pictures had any resemblance to the man at the range - a photograph of OSWALD that highlighted his pointy nose and receding hairline. Malcolm Price, 48, died of a heart attack in 1976. Mrs. Price was contacted in July 1993. She related,

When we saw OSWALD on television on the night of the assassination he said 'That was the same man who had been down there.' He was convinced it was OSWALD, and he was not someone who went around making up things. My husband doubted Ruth Paine's testimony. My husband had no reason to make up anything. He said that to us, here, and I don't know how the word got out, he said that, then someone wanted to interview him. He always had a real bad heart all his life, but he never missed a day's work at LTV, where he worked for 13 or 14 years. We had five children. I have no reason in the world to think he made this up. He was sincere.

Mrs. Lovell Penn reported: "Two men were standing by a car, which was a 1957 black and white Chevrolet bearing Texas license." Floyd Davis reported: "This Mr. Price did say that OSWALD was in an old model Chevrolet when he was out there on this Friday, the 9th, because it was late in the afternoon when he came out there...He definitely thinks that it is the same man OSWALD on November 9, 1961, and November 10, 1963. I don't believe he said there was anyone with him, and he come out there just at dark, right before dark and was driving an old-model Chevrolet, or was an old-model Chevrolet." Note that OSWALD was spotted in Cedar Hills by Mrs. Penn, and then OSWALD told Price he had been to a gunsmith shop in Cedar Hills.

GARLAND GLENWILL SLACK's (born May 9, 1904; died August 1978 of heart disease) testimony supported Malcolm Price:

Lieber: I would like you to state your full name for the record, if you would?

Slack: Garland Glenwill Slack.

Liebler: Where do you work, sir?

Slack: I work for myself. Heating contractors and real estate development.

Liebler: How many people do you have working with you?

Slack: Just my wife and I now. We are on a semiretired basis. We were in the water business and we sold out our water business to the city of Dallas in June 1963, and we are on a semi-retired basis.

Liebler: How old are you Mr. Slack?

Slack: 58.

Liebler: Are you married, do you have any children?

Slack: Yes, Johnny Glenwill Slack is a mechanical engineer. He is working on a government project in Richmond, Indiana, and Marilyn Slack, she is the wife of an Air Force man, Vernon Stone, stationed at Burke Burnett. I have six grandkids. Our profession, we are real estate business. We just sell what we own. We own half a million dollars worth of property on the Military Parkway, and the heating business, we only do what people can force us to do, our old friends jobs that we had put in 30 years ago. And we are on an area selling off our land around us. We subdivide and sell off ten or 12 lots, and when we get that finished, we subdivide another tract.

Liebler: Are you familiar with the Sportsdrome gun range?

Slack: Yes; quite familiar with it.

Liebler: Do you know the man who owns it or who runs it?

Slack: Yes, he ran a ditching machine, and dug water ditches for the waterworks. I didn't know that until after we got real well acquainted, and I knew I had seen him, but I never could figure out until "Doc" Carter and Charlie Brown, they knew my full name and found out where I worked, and who I was, and I said I knew him but where, I didn't know.

Liebler: Were you out at the rifle range at any time in November 1963.

Slack: Yes; we were there the Saturday before Armistice Day. We marked it on our calendar. That was November 9, 1963. We were out there late in the evening and there were not very many people there, because we got there in the really closing time. But we didn't shoot the rifle because they wanted the people to go home. But we went back Sunday for this turkey shoot.

Liebler: What was the date?

Slack: Now that was November 10, 1963.

Liebler: You went back to the rifle range the immediate following Sunday, is that right?

Slack: That is right, November 10, 1963. OSWALD was there Sunday, November 10, 1963. He was there on Sunday, November 17, 1963. Sunday, November 10, 1963, was the turkey shoot. I contacted him three or four times trying to get him to pay a dollar and get in the turkey shoot. Ten men were paying a dollar a shoot, and he commented he could win the turkey, but he didn't have the dollar.

Liebler: This was on November 10, 1963, is that right?

Slack: But had no direct contact no more than asked like the ten other fellows I talked to. That was my impression of him. The next, Sunday, November 17, 1963, is where he and I had the run in, where he shot my target. I paid two bits and put up a target, and before I got ready to shoot it, somebody would shoot a hole in it. So Lucille, my wife, she was with me. She was keeping score. We got to noticing who it was, and maybe he would shoot anybody's target, and I raised the devil. I didn't see why I have to pay my two bits and pay for a new target sheet and I'm shooting at Booth 9 and the rifle range operator came and told him not to shoot at my target after that, and that is how I remembered the part in his hair, and the look on his face. And I told him, I said, 'You are not going to win no turkey shooting rapid fire.' He shot rapid fire about three or four times, and they had a cap full of shells and they were shooting - I mean he was burning up the ammunition. And I talked about this going back to Snug Harbor, because somebody is going to get hurt, because everybody's shooting at everybody else's target. And there was a bunch of ruffians shooting pistols, and there was lots of people. And I remember when I told him that, he gave me a look that I would never forget. That is the only reason I remember him when they showed him on television. It made me sick, and I tried to figure it out. It took me a day to figure out where I had seen him. I said, Lucille we own the waterworks, and we know a lot of men, and do a lot of things. We have a fish hatchery, and we contacted maybe five or six people we don't know every day, and I didn't sleep at night for three nights until I pinned down where we saw him. And I went to the rifle range and these four or five other people knew he had been there, but they were afraid to say anything about it. But when I asked the manager, I said, 'OSWALD was over here,' and he said, 'Yes, I know he was.' And they was afraid it would hurt their business. I told Charlie Brown and Doc Carter where I saw the fellow, and I think it was; everyone doubts if they knew anything at all on him, so they met me over there, and between the three, they admitted sure.

Liebler: Who is this Charlie Brown that you referred to ?

Slack: He is the FBI man. He and Doc Carter, they came out two different times and I talked to them.

Liebler: Carter is also and FBI agent?

Slack: One was Secret Service, and one was the FBI.

Liebler: You mentioned there were other people out at the range who saw OSWALD. Do you remember their names?

Slack: No sir; because I was not taking their names. But I do know that they got the boy that worked on his rifle scope on Wednesday. That was in the middle of the week, between November 10, 1963, and November 17, 1963. They got his deposition, because the boy, I know, put his scope on his rifle for him...I read about it in the papers about a week afterwards.

Liebler: You have no direct knowledge yourself about the scope?

Slack: No; there were so many different fellows working on the rifle range, there was possibly three or four boys who did it, and I never really connected which one it would be, because I wasn't doing any investigating anyway. See what I mean? I felt that knowing the guy and connecting it together, if I just kept my mouth shut and tried to just remember seeing the fellow, there was a lot of that done. It was done in our own family. In other words, Vernon Stone was with me and Jimbo, he is 12 years old, the boy, and when it dawned on me where I saw him, and I knew that I had my son-in-law take my gun, my custom made gun out of OSWALD'S, take it out of his hand and put it in the car, because I was afraid he would steal it, and I told Vernon by long distance on the telephone, and Vernon did too, and well, he had already made up his mind that he never had seen that fellow. He didn't want to remember, anything, and Jimbo doesn't either. He didn't want to remember.

Liebler: What is this incident about the rifle? Did OSWALD have your rifle at any time?

Slack: He handled my rifle and he handled my targets, that was November 17, 1963.

Liebler: Did you say anything to OSWALD other than -

Slack: The only time - I didn't specifically say to OSWALD. I said to all the boys, to seven or eight shooters, about that rapid firing, and about shooting other targets, rather than the one they bought and paid for. If they were in chair seven, and there was a number down 100 yards, Number Seven, he was supposed to shoot Number Seven.

Liebler: Other than that, you didn't say anything to him?

Slack: That is all I said.

Liebler: Did you have a chance to see the rifle he had?

Slack: I absolutely saw the rifle.

Liebler: What kind of rifle was it?

Slack: It was an Italian type rifle, but it never showed in the newspapers a picture of that rifle. In other words, if the first picture that came out of the officer holding the rifle, that was on the floor of the Book Depository, if that was the gun, I had never seen that gun before, and I know rifles and I know scopes.

Liebler: What was the difference between it and the rifle you saw?

Slack: The one that he had was a small three quarters, about seven hundred and fifty thousandths diameter tube, a small tube no bigger than your thumb, with the windage gauge. They were practicing. It was a cheap scope. Well, $5.66 scope. But it was sporterized. You cut the wood off of them. Short barrel.

Liebler: In other words, this rifle that OSWALD had was a sporterized rifle? It had been rebuilt?

Slack: Just as advertised. I have seen besides the OSWALD, I have friends that have those rifles. I wouldn't shoot a toad frog with one of them, because I know they are just junk. In other words, you take that rifle as it was manufactured, and you cut the barrel off eight inches, and you take all the wood off the top of the barrel and cut this off her and varnish it, and you have it blued, and it makes a pretty little gun. It was one that he had wrapped up and handed over the fence, but they had two other guns that type. They had no scopes on them.

Liebler: Was there somebody else?

Slack: That Sunday there sure was. The tall boy had the biggest feet of any kid I ever saw, and about the time he would go to shoot, he would kick with his feet, and I said if my feet was that big I would bump somebody too. He was the boy that drove him to the rifle range on November 17, 1963. They found the boy. He had no connection with him except that he had driven him there.

Liebler: How do you know they found him?

Slack: I read it in the paper. I don't know what his name was. Don't know where they found him, but they found him and he had no connection with him, no more than I had. He just probably begged a ride, and he took him to the rifle range, but they had three guns. Lucille remembers the boy handing the guns over the fence, and they were throwing the guns in the back of an old-model car and taking off like they did. And I recognized that because a gun, a good gun, you are not supposed - they just threw those old guns in that car, or they took two of them. Of course, one was wrapped up in a blanket, a dirty looking old grey blanket that had a red trim, I remember. I remember that because, because we found an old blanket at our house and I told Lucille I was trying to think, I knew it was something common, this good gun, it was wrapped and tied up. The sporterized Italian gun was tied up, and he handed it over the fence nicely. And he had a grey and red maroon, looked slick as satin, and I remember it well, what a gun case - you see everything at a shooting place - some bring a rifle in a tote sack - for a gun case. The other thing I remember about that blanket he had wrapped around his gun, it was tied up with a rag string that was torn about an inch and a half wide out of a filling station type wipe cloth, a ribbon, pink, and he had torn it up and - to use as a rag string.

Liebler: Do you remember what kind of car these fellows drove?

Slack: No, I couldn't remember it, and Lucille couldn't except it was an old model car.

Liebler: Was it a sedan?

Slack: A four-door sedan, and it was a dark color, and he left there like a crazy bunch of hoodlums. And Lucille would remember that because she made a remark to me. You know how boys take off and make dust fly.

Well we had - in other words, without having some reason, you wouldn't notice what kind of car it was.

SLACK IS SHOWN PHOTOGRAPHS OF OSWALD AND CRAFARD

Liebler exhibited photographs of the Mannlicher-Carcano to Slack. Slack maintained it was not the gun he saw at the range. Garland Slack was shown the same photographs Malcolm Price had seen. He said that Curtis La Verne Crafard was not the man that he had observed. When shown a photograph of OSWALD, he said it depicted the same man he had seen at the Sportsdrome Rifle Range with some differences. Garland Slack gave the FBI a target which he believed OSWALD had handled so the Bureau could examine it for latent fingerprints. [FBI DL 89-43-1810] No prints were found.

Slack: Now this newspaper man, Gruber, a Washington pressman, was he some of your bunch?

Liebler: What was his name?

Slack: Gruber.

Liebler: What about him?

Slack: He is the fellow that came to see me about three weeks ago. He called me three or four times and gave me a lot of trouble, and I give him to understand that I didn't want to talk with him, because the newspapers had, I thought, made too big a show of it. And they used my name and address. They didn't put my picture with the assassination, or the picture, but I expected it any time to come out, but I have a good friend with the Times Herald, Mr. Albert Jackson, and I called Albert and I told him not to send his men because I was not talking to the newspaper. My phone was tapped, and they came out the next day, and everything that I told Albert, the newspaperman, and I told him that, because I didn't want it to get in the paper. He never put it in the paper. My old friend he never got anything but the News, they got it all.

Liebler: What made you think your phone was tapped?

Slack: I think it was because they had things in the paper.

Liebler: Who do you think tapped it, the newspaper people?

Slack: The FBI and the Secret Service they didn't tap it. They don't do things like that.

Liebler: The Secret Service doesn't?

Slack: No.

Liebler: What about the FBI?

Slack: They said they did not do it, and I blamed it on the newspaper. And they came and made a television picture of me, and gave me an interview. And I wanted to know what identification they had and who they were with, and they fooled around and made about a three minute conversation and they never did show it, but it was never shown anyplace. Just news hounds. And they put up a big front that it was the Warren Commission.

Liebler: Who were they?

Slack: The television guys from Fort Worth, and they were in such a hurry to leave, they just took my picture and took off. They had 15 minutes to get to Fort Worth, and I never heard any more of it at all.

Liebler: I don't think they had anything to do with the Warren Commission.

On September 1, 1964, J. Lee Rankin requested that the FBI interview Lucille Slack. On September 10, 1964, Mrs. Lucille Slack told the FBI

...that on November 17, 1963, she went with her husband to the Sportsdrome Rifle Range. She stated she was certain of the date, November 17, 1963, as her daughter, son-in-law and grandson had visited them on November 9, 1963, November 10, 1963, and November 11, 1963, and her son-in-law and grandson had accompanied Mr. Slack to the Sportsdrome Rifle Range on November 9, 1963, and November 10, 1963, whereas her son-in-law and grandson did not accompany the following Sunday, November 17, 1963. She stated they arrived at the rifle range about noon, and after Mr. Slack had purchased his ticket, and had talked to some people, she carried a 30.06 rifle from their car through the building to Mr. Slack who was in the far west shooting stall, believed to be Booth 9. She stated she remained with him until dark. Mrs. Slack stated she did not see LEE HARVEY OSWALD, or anyone who resembled him, at the Sportsdrome Rifle Range. She claimed she did not recall Mr. Slack being involved in any altercation; however, she did remember someone firing on his target on two different occasions, and he told Mr. Davis, owner, Sportsdrome Rifle Range, about this, and received new targets. Mrs. Slack advised she recalled seeing a great big man with a beard, who was wearing ear muffs, a red plaid shirt, and green pants. She stated he was shooting big guns and was shooting from stall number four or five. She stated she did not see anyone with this person and believed he was alone at the rifle range.

Mrs. Slack advised that on the night of November 22, 1963, Mr. Slack, after seeing LEE HARVEY OSWALD'S picture on television, mentioned to her he believed he had seen OSWALD before. Mrs. Slack stated that Mr. Slack first thought that OSWALD was a truck driver for the Dallas City Water Works. She explained that she and Mr. Slack owned the Urbandale Waterworks, but had turned this business over to the Dallas City Works on July 1, 1963, and for about eight weeks subsequent thereto, a number of the Dallas City Waterworks trucks were in and out of their place. She stated that following Thanksgiving dinner on November 28, 1963, Mr.

Slack told her he had seen LEE HARVEY OSWALD at the Sportsdrome Rifle Range. She stated they drove to the rifle range and talked with Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Davis. She stated they did not want to talk about LEE HARVEY OSWALD being seen at the rifle range, saying it might hurt their business. She stated they did mention that a dentist and his son had been at the rifle range and had claimed OSWALD was there the day they had been there.

In an effort to resolve discrepancies in information furnished by Mr. Slack concerning this incident, Mrs. Slack contacted Mr. Slack during this interview. According to Mrs. Slack, Mr. Slack maintained that OSWALD was at the rifle range on November 17, 1963, and that he had been brought there by a man named 'Frazier' from Irving, Texas. Mrs. Slack stated she felt her husband was confused as to the date when he observed the individual he believed to be OSWALD at the range, but he was sincere in the statement he had previously made to Agents to the FBI and during his testimony before the President's Commission. #### POSNER'S ATTEMPT TO DISCREDIT SLACK

Gerald Posner quoted Garland Slack out of context: "You see, you read the papers and you get to where you imagine things and you find yourself imagining that you saw somebody..." Here is the context:

Liebler: Could you recognize the side of his face?

Slack: But not positive enough until I got to see him at the time he was shot. You see, you read the papers and you get to where you imagine things and you find yourself imagining that you saw somebody and I never had anything that made me as sick for three days. Absolutely made me sick of stretching my brain or trying to figure out what the contact we had with the guy. [WC V10p398]

Garland Slack's imagination would not have caused him to be sick to his stomach for days. Only the truth would have caused this visceral reaction. Garland Slack had never perpetrated a hoax prior to this report or after this report. He was a responsible citizen who would not have lied to his own wife. He was not a publicity seeker. Although he was confused on several points, he was telling the truth about having seen OSWALD. Note Mrs. Lovell Penn said OSWALD acted nasty. Witness E.P. Bass described OSWALD as rough in appearance and very rude. Albert Guy Bogard admitted that OSWALD had scared him when the two went for a test drive. Garland Slack told the FBI that OSWALD was ready for a fight and looked cocky. Slack's description of OSWALD'S personality conformed with other reports.

DR. HOMER WOOD

The Dallas Police Department reported:

This date, December 2, 1963, I went to 220 West 10th Street and interviewed Dr. Homer Wood. He stated that on November 16, 1963, he took his son Sterling Charles Wood, w/m/13, to the Sportsdrome Gun Range, 8000 West Davis, to zero in his rifle. Sterling was assigned to the Booth 4, and shortly after he got in the booth, he saw OSWALD walk up an enter Booth 5. After OSWALD had fired a few rounds, Sterling noticed that his rifle was spitting a long steam of fire from the end of the barrel and that prompted Sterling to ask OSWALD what kind of rifle and scope he was using. OSWALD told Sterling he was using a 6.5 mm Italian make carbine with a 4X scope. No other conversation transpired. Sterling and Dr. Wood observed that OSWALD fired approximately eight to ten rounds, and that each time he was careful in ejecting the hulls, that they were caught in his hand and put into his pocket. OSWALD checked his target at least one time, then left the range by himself. He was driving some type of car, but Sterling does not remember what make or color it was. When Sterling and Doctor Wood checked Sterling's target, they also looked at OSWALD'S target and both concurred that he did some good shooting, since all the rounds fired except one hit the bull's eye. Dr. Wood and Sterling are sure that OSWALD was using the sling when firing the rifle.

The Warren Commission questioned Dr. Wood:

Liebler: Please state your full name for the record.

Wood: Homer Wood.

Liebler: You are a dentist, is that correct?

Wood: That is correct.

Liebler: Would you state briefly your educational background.

Wood: Well I had two years of pre-dental at Southern Methodist University, and four years at Baylor University College of Dentistry, Dallas, Texas.

Liebler: Are you a native Texan?

Wood: I am a native Texan, yes.

Liebler: Born here in Dallas?

Wood: Born in Besse May, Texas. It is a dead town now.

Liebler: When were you born?

Wood: July 4, 1910.

Liebler: How long have you been practicing dentistry?

Wood: Since 1938.

Liebler: The Commission is advised that sometime during November 1963, you and your son, whose name I understand is Sterling Charles Wood, went to the Sportsdrome Rifle Range, is that correct?

Wood: That is correct. If I recall correctly, it was on November 16, 1963. That was a Saturday afternoon.

Liebler: Are you clear in your own mind that it was a Saturday that you went to the range?

Wood: Yes.

Liebler: Was that the only time you went to the rifle range during November?

Wood: That is correct.

Liebler: What time of day did you go out there?

Wood: I was listening to the Southwest Conference football game. My boy kept asking me to "Hurry daddy, I want to go try my scope out on my gun," and I listened to half of the game. I presume when he got out there it was around 3:00 p.m. in the afternoon. At the rifle range, I am not definite, but it was between 3:00 p.m. and 5:00 p.m. We left before 5:00 p.m.

Liebler: Left the range before 5:00 p.m.?

Wood: Yes, sir.

Liebler: Did you get an opportunity to finish listening to the game?

Wood: No; we didn't hear any more of the game.

Liebler: Tell us what happened after you arrived at the range?

Wood: Well, the range was pretty busy because it was just before deer season and most of the fellows out there were sighting in their scope, and we waited a short while to get a place for my boy to sit down to sight in his scope. Then when he did - now do you want me to start here with OSWALD?

Liebler: I want you to tell me just what happened.

Wood: Okay. My boy was shooting his rifle, and there was a fellow sitting to his right. I thought it was an off brand gun. It wasn't shooting like the other rifles there. When he would fire the rifle, at the end of the barrel there would be a big ball of fire coming out at the end of the barrel, and that is what attracted my attention to this fellow.

When I said to my son, I said, "Son be careful, I am afraid that gun is going to blow up." And I was kind of laughing and joking around with the other fellow that was waiting in -waiting to sight in their scope, and I would hand him cotton, and I would say. "Get ready, this fellow is getting ready to shoot this 105 Howitzer." And I said to my son, step back, or lean over, or be careful, and he said "Daddy, that is alright. It's an Italian carbine."

So they fired several rounds, and after they would fire three or four rounds, then the keeper out there would say let's go look at our targets, and we would go down, and I would look at my boy's target, and he wasn't doing so good, but the second round we went down there and we noticed this fellows target to our right, and my boy made a statement, "Daddy, this fellow is not having much trouble." So I did notice his target, and most of his shots was within the target, but there were a few that was outside the target, from an inch to two inches outside of it.

Liebler: Outside the bull's eye?

Wood: Bull's eye. And that is a far as - do you want me to go into the OSWALD deal now, or just want me to go on and tell what he did, or are you going to ask me some questions?

Liebler: I want to ask you first of all, did you talk to this fellow at all?

Wood: I didn't say a word to the fellow, but my son did.

Liebler: Did your son tell you at the time what he had said to the fellow?

Wood: He didn't tell me at the time, no sir. He told me later on.

Liebler: He told you after the assassination, is that correct?

Wood: Yes; after the assassination he told me that.

Liebler: He told you what he said to the fellow after the assassination. Now you mentioned previously that when you warned your son to be careful of that rifle because of your fear that it would blow up and your son had told you, don't worry, it is an Italian carbine, is that correct?

Wood: Well -

Liebler: And that is substantially what he had mentioned to you at the range, that it was Italian?

Wood: Yes.

Liebler: Do you know whether your son spoke to this man before he told you it was an Italian carbine, or not?

Wood: I feel sure he did not speak to the man before.

Liebler: Your son's statement was based only on his observation of the rifle, is that correct?

Wood: On his observation of the rifle and what he knows about guns, but he knows quite a bit. He studies about guns a lot.

Liebler: Do you think your son would be qualified to make a statement in this regard?

Wood: I feel sure, more so than I am. I know very little about guns, but he knows quite a bit.

Liebler: Did you observe this fellow leave the rifle range before you?

Wood: I did not, but I didn't notice when the change was made, but my son said he did. He noticed that the fellow came there after my boy and this fellow had left, before my boy had finished. The reason for that was, that my boy was having some trouble sighting in his scope, and he asked the keeper to help him. This fellow was there less than most of the fellows that was out there.

Liebler: Do you remember the name of the keeper?

Wood: I do not. He was a tall fellow; all I know.

Liebler: Slender?

Wood: Slender, yes.

Liebler: Do you know Mr. Floyd Davis?

Wood: No, sir; he might have been the fellow that was helping my son, I don't know. But I recognized his picture later in the paper when it came out, and - that this fellow was there practicing, and I recognized the fellow as the fellow who had helped my son.

Liebler: Helped your son sight in his scope?

Wood: Helped my son sight in his scope, and I don't know who owned the range. I have no idea.

Liebler: Did there come a time subsequent to that, that you were able to identify this man that you had seen there as LEE HARVEY OSWALD.

Wood: Would you repeat that?

Liebler: After you saw this man you left the rifle range. Then later on the next Friday the President was assassinated, and at sometime subsequent to that time, did you connect up LEE HARVEY OSWALD with this man that you saw at the rifle range?

Wood: I did.

Liebler: Tell me when and how you did that?

Wood: I saw him flashed on the television screen at home several times. They would interrogate him and bring him down the hall and bring him back to his cell. This particular time I mentioned to my wife, I said to her "Honey, that looks exactly like the fellow that was sitting next to Sterling at the rifle range." But I am not going to say anything to Sterling, because I want to see if he recognizes him and if he thinks it was. Well, I would say within 30 minutes, or an hour, he was flashed back on the screen and he said to me, "Daddy, that is the fellow that was sitting next to me at the rifle range."

Liebler: So that you, independently of your son, first noticed the resemblance between OSWALD-

Wood: And mentioned it to my wife.

Liebler: And Sterling was not in your presence at that time?

Wood: No, sir; he was not in the room.

Liebler: Then later he came into the room, saw OSWALD'S picture on the television, and said to you that that was the guy that was out on the rifle range that previous Saturday, is that correct?

Wood: Yes.

Liebler: You did not mention to Sterling in any way the resemblance between OSWALD and the fellow at the rifle range prior to the time he mentioned it himself?

Wood: No. They mentioned on the newscast that he was an ex-Marine. Well, I figured an ex-Marine will be a husky sort of fellow, and I kept watching him, and he didn't look like a Marine to me. But he was a Marine, but he didn't seem to have the build. He looked to me as a fairly frail man, not too strong, and that is the reason I wasn't thinking too much about it until he was flashed on the screen and then his profile just came to me that that was the man that was out at the rifle range.

Liebler: What did you do then after you had this conversation and Sterling's observation?

Wood: I said I think I should report that to either the Dallas Police or the FBI.

Liebler: Did you do so?

Wood: I did not until the following Monday. On Sunday, the next morning - this was Saturday night - on Sunday morning we went to church and my wife said after church, let's go down and look at the place where the President was assassinated. We haven't been down, so we went down there and looked over the area and we walked back to our car, and I would say it was between 12:00 p.m. and 1:00 p.m., and I turned on the radio in the car and it said OSWALD had been shot.

So I said to my wife, well I don't know whether it would do any good to turn it in or not, and I didn't turn it in. But later on, on Monday I had a fellow in my office who works for the State's Comptroller's office and told him about this incident and he said, "Dr. Wood, I certainly would turn it in. Any thing that you could do will help." So after I left the office, I called the FBI and told them I had some information that might be of importance to them concerning the OSWALD case, and they talked to me, and this was Monday. And I told them I was leaving town. I think I told them, I am not positive, but we went out, me and my wife and son went out to Uvalde deer hunting, and while we were out there - this was on, we went out on Tuesday, and we were there Wednesday night, and Will Fritz of the Dallas Police force called me and questioned me about my son and me and were we sure, and I said we were fairly sure that it was, and he wanted to know when we were coming back, and I said that me and my wife were thinking about going to Mexico so it will be Sunday before we return. And he said, when you return would you please call me. Well, that was on the following Monday and I called Will Fritz and he had two men from homicide come out and talk to me. And on my lunch hour, two FBI agents came out and talked with me.

Liebler: Was this on Monday, too?

Wood: It was on Monday, I believe. I am fairly sure it was on Monday, because I called as soon as I came back, and I recall that when I called, there was the homicide, two officers from Will Fritz's office came, and as well as I remember, they called my office girl, the FBI called my office girl and asked could they come out to see me, and they came around my lunch hour, and I talked to the FBI at the time...

Liebler: Did the FBI or Dallas police show you any pictures of OSWALD when they interviewed you?

Wood: Both the Dallas police and the FBI, I think, showed me the same photograph that each showed me as they came out.

Liebler: And you identified that man in that photograph as the fellow you had seen at the rifle range?

Wood: I put it in this category that I couldn't be absolutely positive, but in my mind I was positive it was OSWALD that I saw out at the rifle range.

Liebler: They showed pictures also to your son, did they not?

Wood: He said they did, yes sir.

Liebler: You weren't there when they did?

Wood: They interviewed my son at school. The Secret Service came out to his school, I think, a couple of times to see him, and an officer from Will Fritz's office came out once or twice to school to see him, and the FBI came out, I think, at the house on two occasions just before I got off from the office, and I never was there when my son saw either of them.

Liebler: Do you know that the FBI subsequently showed your son a picture of the rifle used to assassinate the President?

Wood: I knew this.

Liebler: Were you aware of the fact that your son indicated that the picture that the FBI showed then [him] was not the same rifle that was in possession of this man at the rifle range?

Wood: I am not aware of that. I am aware of the fact that he - he thinks he said that the rifle they first showed him was the rifle, but the scope was not the same scope that he showed them [him]. I think that is what my boy said. I don't know for sure whether they showed him two different pictures or not, but one time they came out, the FBI come and stayed a very short while, and said is this the scope? That is the way I understand my wife to say, and my boy said, no that is not the scope.

HOMER WOOD IS SHOWN PHOTOS OF OSWALD AND CRAFARD

Dr. Homer Wood was shown the same photographs exhibited to Malcolm Price and Garland Slack. He rejected the photo of Curtis La Verne, and identified OSWALD as the man at the range. Dr. Homer Wood was questioned about having seen OSWALD:

Liebler: Do you have any doubt about it?

Wood: In my mind, there is no doubt. If I just had to swear on a Bible, I couldn't, but in my mind, it is him.

Liebler: Well, of course you realize you are testifying under oath?

Wood: I know he is a dead man and all that, but I must say in my own mind it is him, I am positive...

Liebler: Do you know of anybody else that was at the range when you observed this fellow, who also observed him?

Wood: Yes, I told the FBI of Kenneth Longley. Dr. Longley's son, a dental surgeon, a friend of mine, was talking to me at the time they were shooting. He was getting ready to take over one of the booths, and I understand that later the FBI went out to interview him. And he had two friends with him. They interviewed them too, but I have forgotten their names.

Liebler: Did they observe this individual too?

Wood: Other than what I have said, the conversation that I was concerned about, and I handed them each cotton to put in their ears when he fired this rifle, and I don't know how much observation they made of the man.

Liebler: Have you discussed with them the question of whether or not this man was LEE HARVEY OSWALD?

Wood: I had seen Dr. Longley's son. He had a front tooth knocked out and Dr. Longley brought him over to my office, but nothing was mentioned about OSWALD or this man at the rifle range.

Homer Wood, contacted by this researcher in July 1993, stated: "The more I get into it, the worse it gets. I get nothing out of it. Last time my son Sterling talked about it was with the FBI. He was in Junior High, and they had him crying, and saying he was a liar, and all that stuff, so I'd rather not get into it. My boy saw whoever was with him, my boy says he didn't drive, he just got in the car. We got out of the way when he started shooting. He called us from school one day about it. I was not that good of an observer, I was just talking about my son. He said it looked like him.

Dr. Homer Wood, a professional dentist, testified that he had seen OSWALD at the Sportsdrome Rifle Range Saturday, November 16, 1963. Homer Wood stated the time of OSWALD'S presence was between 3:00 p.m. and 4:00 p.m. OSWALD first caught the attention of Dr. Homer Wood when Homer Wood noticed a "ball of fire" coming out of the barrel of OSWALD'S gun each time he fired. HEMMING told this researcher: "The old Italian ammo gives off flashes of fire. Unburned powder. Old powder that's got damp over the years, still burning as it comes out the barrel, which causes a blow torch effect. Like at the Sportsdrome." Homer Wood had seen OSWALD.

STERLING C. WOOD

Sterling Wood, age 13, was questioned by the Warren Commission. Sterling Wood said he was at the Sportsdrome Rifle Range Saturday, November 16, 1963, at about 1:30 p.m. for about one hour.

Liebler: Would you state your name for the record?

Sterling Wood: Sterling Charles Wood.

Liebler: How old are you?

Sterling Wood: Thirteen.

Liebler: Do you go to school?

Sterling Wood: Yes sir, Boude Story Junior High.

Liebler: The Commission has been advised that you and your father went out to the Sportsdrome gun range on West Davis at about 8000 West Davis sometime in November, is that correct?

Sterling Wood: Yes, sir.

Liebler: Can you tell us the date that you went out there?

Sterling Wood: It was the Saturday before. It was six days before the President was killed. It was a Saturday.

Liebler: The Saturday before he was assassinated?

Sterling Wood: Yes, sir.

Liebler: Who all went out to the range, you and your father?

Sterling Wood: Yes, sir.

Liebler: Can you tell me about what time you got out there?

Sterling Wood: I would say it was about 1:30 p.m. right after my daddy was off from work.

Liebler: How long did you stay out there?

Sterling Wood: About an hour.

Liebler: You went there to sight your rifle in for deer hunting?

Sterling Wood: Yes.

Liebler: Did you go deer hunting?

Sterling Wood: Yes.

Liebler: Now I understand that you and your father saw a man out there firing in the booth next to you?

Sterling Wood: Yes sir.

Liebler: Can you tell us what happened right there at the rifle range that day?

Sterling Wood: Yes, sir. I came out there. I had been shooting for about ten or 15 minutes, and he came up next to me and he started shooting, and he only shot about eight or ten times. I noticed every time he got through shooting, he would take the breech and open it up, and put the shell in his pocket. We went down to check our target and I remembered that his was almost always in the bull's eye. And as we came back to shoot again, I talked to him. I said, "Sir, is that a 6.5 Italian carbine?" He said, "Yes, sir."

Liebler: Why did you ask him that question?

Sterling Wood: Because I read gun books, and I was pretty sure that it was a 6.5 Italian carbine, and I wanted to make sure.

Liebler: Have you told your father about this, that it was an Italian carbine?

Sterling Wood: Yes.

Liebler: How did you express it?

Sterling Wood: I said, "Daddy, it looks like a 6.5 Italian carbine," and I asked him if it was a four-power scope, because it was funny looking, it wasn't American, and he said, "Yes it was."

Liebler: Had you talked to your father about this fellow, or this rifle, before you talked to this guy?

Sterling Wood: I think I said that it looked like an Italian make gun to me.

Liebler: You said that to your father?

Sterling Wood: Yes.

Liebler: Can you remember why you mentioned that particular gun to your father?

Sterling Wood: Well, call it an Army rifle.

Liebler: How could you tell that?

Sterling Wood: Well, you could tell it had been scratched up and it was a surplus gun. It was probably - you can tell it was probably used in the war.

Liebler: Was there anything else peculiar about this rifle that made you mention it to your father?

Sterling Wood: It had a sawed-off barrel, shorter barrel than most rifles were.

Liebler: How long did the barrel of the rifle stick out?

Sterling Wood: About how far out of the stock?

Liebler: Would you say that it was about three or four inches?

Sterling Wood: Yes.

Liebler: Would you say the barrel was sawed off?

Sterling Wood: You could tell it was shorter than most military rifles, and every time he shot, a spit of fire would come out, and I could feel the heat when he shot every time...it wasn't too much bigger than a yard stick.

Liebler: Did you talk to this fellow any more than just ask him what you have already told us?

Sterling Wood: No, sir.

Liebler: And he only said two words to you?

Sterling Wood: Yes.

Liebler: Did he leave the range before you left?

Sterling Wood: Before I did.

Liebler: Did you see him go?

Sterling Wood: Yes.

Liebler: How did he go?

Sterling Wood: He left with a man in a newer model car.

Liebler: Did you see the model?

Sterling Wood: No, I didn't. They went into the parking lot. They went around and I heard the car door slam and they took off, but it was a newer model.

Liebler: What kind of car?

Sterling Wood: It was a Ford if I remember.

Liebler: Was it a convertible or station wagon?

Sterling Wood: It was a hard top.

Liebler: About this other fellow that this guy was with, was he a big man or just -

Sterling Wood: About the same size this man was.

Liebler: About how tall would you say this man was?

Sterling Wood: Oh, about 5' 9".

Liebler: Now the FBI talked to you about this once before or a couple of times, didn't they?

Sterling Wood: Yes.

Liebler: Did the FBI ask you now how this fellow left the range?

Sterling Wood: What do you mean by that?

Liebler: Did he ask you, did he go and get in a car or did he leave with somebody else?

Sterling Wood: Yes, sir.

Liebler: Do you remember them asking you this?

Sterling Wood: Yes.

Liebler: What did you tell them?

Sterling Wood: I told him that they left in a newer model car. He had to go around through the main office because that was 30 yards down and he had to come around, and he left in a newer model car with this man, and he wasn't driving.

Liebler: That the man who you saw firing was not driving?

Sterling Wood: Yes.

Liebler: Did you tell the FBI what kind of car it was?

Sterling Wood: I think I told him, I am pretty sure it is a Ford. That is what I remember because I like Fords and I remember what a Ford looks like.

Liebler: Did you tell the FBI that this fellow, who you saw shooting this rifle, left with another man?

Sterling Wood: Yes, sir.

Liebler: You are pretty clear about that?

Sterling Wood: Yes, sir.

Liebler: And you also told that the fellow you saw shooting the rifle wasn't driving the car, is that right?

Sterling Wood: Yes, sir.

Liebler: Now later on the next week, after the President was assassinated, did you see a picture of this man, or observe his picture on television, or the radio, or newspaper, or see him in any other way?

Sterling Wood: Are you talking about OSWALD?

Liebler: The man that was firing at the rifle range?

Sterling Wood: That is what made me notice him.

Liebler: Tell us about that.

Sterling Wood: The man out at the rifle range had a mean stern face. You could tell he was a cold man, and that is what made me look at him more than I did anybody else. So when I saw the picture on television that night, I was sure it was him.

Liebler: You spoke to your father about it?

Sterling Wood: Yes, we went out to get a paper about the assassination and I said, "Dad, that looks like the man to me." And he said it did, too.

Liebler: Did your father mention it to you first, or did you mention it to your father?

Sterling Wood: I mentioned it to him first.

Liebler: Was your mother there when you mentioned it to him?

Sterling Wood: No sir, she was out. We had gone to get a paper.

Liebler: The first time you saw this guy's picture was in the newspaper, is that right?

Sterling Wood: Yes: I kept remembering how he looked and I finally told my dad.

Liebler: You told your father that this guy you saw at the rifle range looked like OSWALD, based on the picture of OSWALD in the newspaper?

Sterling Wood: Yes, sir.

Liebler: Now did you ever read in the newspaper anything about OSWALD'S ability to drive an automobile?

Sterling Wood: No, sir: I didn't read anything about that.

Liebler: Do you remember whether or not OSWALD could drive a car or not?

Sterling Wood: I think he could because my mother told me something about him going to Mexico, is that right...I thought he could drive.

Liebler: Did this other man that he was with fire a rifle at all?

Sterling Wood: No, sir.

STERLING WOOD IS SHOWN PHOTOS OF OSWALD AND CRAFARD

Sterling Wood was shown the same photographs as the other witnesses. He rejected the photograph of Curtis La Verne Crafard and identified OSWALD. He said the rifle that OSWALD used at the Sportsdrome was not identical with the Mannlicher-Carcano that was purchased by OSWALD. Sterling Wood stated that Charles McDowell and Kenney Longley might also have observed OSWALD that day. Sterling added that OSWALD was a very good shot: "He was the most accurate of all the targets I noticed."

THERESA WOOD

Liebler: Do you recall that sometime after the assassination of the President, your husband saw a picture of OSWALD either in the newspapers, or on television, and said something to you about it? Do you remember that?

Theresa Wood: Yes.

Liebler: Tell me what happened and the circumstances and what you saw?

Theresa Wood: He thought he was the same man he saw out at the gun range. In fact, he was sure of it. And he asked Sterling and Sterling said, "Yes, daddy, it is the same man." And they were very, very, sure of it at the time.

Liebler: Now was Sterling in the room? Did your husband first see OSWALD'S picture on the television or in the newspapers; do you remember?

Theresa Wood: I don't remember exactly. I think it was in the newspapers, or somewhere. They had three pictures of him. I think it was in the newspapers, could have been on television.

Liebler: Was Sterling there at the time your husband first spoke of this to you?

Theresa Wood: No, I don't think so. I think he later asked Sterling.

Liebler: Do you remember whether he asked Sterling, or whether Sterling mentioned it of his own accord without any prompting from his father? Do you remember now what happened?

Theresa Wood: No, I don't remember exactly. I know they were both talking about it. They were both pretty sure that he was the man.

Liebler: But you have no recollection at this point that your husband first saw a picture, and said to you, now in substance, that this looked like the man he saw on the rifle range and he wanted to wait and see if Sterling recognized him also, and that he purposely did not mention it to Sterling, but waited to see if Sterling would come forward with the same idea? Do you remember that happening?

Theresa Wood: No; my husband was very, very sure. In fact, he was positive. And there was a friend that they met at the range. He called him to see if he thought, or if he had recognized OSWALD.

Liebler: What was that friend's name?

Theresa Wood: It was Kenny Longley.

Liebler: You didn't talk to Longley, did you?

Theresa Wood: No.

Liebler: Your husband did.

Theresa Wood: I think my husband called, but never did talk to the boy. The boy was in school.

Liebler: Do you know if he ever talked to the boy about it afterwards?

Theresa Wood: I don't think so. Kenneth Longley though was a good ways off or something, and I don't know whether he really saw him. According to my husband he said he could have.

THE DALLAS POLICE DEPARTMENT INTERVIEWS FLOYD DAVIS

L.C. Graves: December 2, 1963

We talked to Floyd Davis, owner of the Sportsdrome gun range at about 10:00 p.m. tonight. He lives in the Sunset Trailer Park. Mr. Davis and his wife say that they couldn't say that they had seen OSWALD at the gun range. They said they opened the range on October 16, 1963, and have been there every day except for three days. Mr. Harold Price, who lives on Rice Street in Grand Prairie, works for Mr. Davis at the range. Price told Davis that OSWALD has been out there to the range on November 9, 1963, and November 10, 1963, as well as Sunday, November 17, 1963. Price also told Davis he had helped him set up his scope. Price says that OSWALD wouldn't talk to anyone at the range, and that he would shoot his rifle three or four times real fast, wait a little while, and fire three or four more fast shots. Price said that OSWALD had not carried his rifle in through the gate, that someone handed it over the fence to him after he got inside. The rifle was wrapped in something and tied with string. Davis doesn't know anything about the person who was supposed to have handed him the gun.

Price thinks that a white male, who looked like a foreigner, 250 to 300 pounds, with a beatnik beard, was with OSWALD when he was at the range.

A man named Mr. Slack, who works for the Water Department in the Urbandale Sub Station, is also supposed to have seen OSWALD at the range on the above date. Mr. Davis says that his records and some 605 brass shells was turned over to the FBI man who contacted him on December 1, 1963.

FLOYD GUY DAVIS' WARREN COMMISSION TESTIMONY

Floyd Guy Davis was questioned by the Warren Commission on April 1, 1964. He said he did not remember having seen OSWALD on Sunday, November 17, 1963 but he did remember someone getting into a fight with Garland Slack.

Davis: Well the only thing that I know that happened there was some people that said they had seen OSWALD out at the range on three different occasions. I believe it was on November 9, 1963, November 10, 1963, and November 17, 1963. And they informed the FBI that he was out there. The two I am sure that contacted me was Mr. Malcomn Price, or Howard Price, and Garland Slack, and the FBI in turn came out and talked to me. That is Malcomn Howard Price, he worked with me. He does now. At that time he was helping us out there get the range started, and he has a heart ailment where he don't hold a regular job, so he helps us out there a little bit on the range.

Liebler: Did he tell you he saw an individual he thought was OSWALD at the range?

Davis: He sure did.

Liebler: Did he tell you what date he thought he saw this man?

Davis: He said on November 9, 1963, November 10, 1963, and November 17, 1963.

Liebler: Three different occasions?

Davis: Yes sir.

Liebler: Were you at the range on those days?

Davis: I was there, but not at the same time he was talking about on November 9, 1963, and November 10, 1963. Now on November 17, 1963 I was there, and the two individuals he brought up in his testimony, I remember them being there, but I don't remember their faces.

Liebler: How do you mean you remember them being there?

Davis: Well, Mr. Slack, there was this Booth 9 on the rifle range -

Liebler: On what date?

Davis: On the November 17, 1963; and I was holding this turkey shoot at the same time. Mr. Slack came to me and was complaining about someone shooting his target. So there was two young fellows. I can remember the approximate height of them, but I don't remember what their faces looked like, that they were in Booth 8. I do remember the person that was in Booth 7 though, because I don't know if you have talked with Mr. Charlie Brown in the last two weeks or not on this.

Liebler: Mr. Brown, the FBI agent, yes.

Davis: There was a fellow with a black beard in the Booth 7 at the same time. I remember him because he was outstanding you know, and I went to see these fellows in Booth 8, and was giving them heck about shooting at the wrong target. And this other fellow, I remember him because he wouldn't say anything to me. I tried to speak to him on two or three different occasions because he had a lot of guns and I thought he would be a good customer.

Liebler: The fellow with the beard?

Davis: Yes.

Liebler: He was how tall, approximately?

Davis: He was over six feet and weighed a good 250 pounds. A big bruiser.

Liebler: I think we can assume that was not LEE HARVEY OSWALD.

Davis: They were trying to find him. Charlie Brown was trying to find this person, and two weeks ago on a Sunday morning I saw him in an automobile out on Davis, I believe it was.

Liebler: The big fellow with the beard?

Davis: The big fellow with the beard. And I got the license number on the car, and the type of car it was, and called it into the office. I haven't heard anything from Mr. Brown since then, whether he got the information, but I am sure he did when I turned it into the office.

Liebler: Now let's review this. Mr. Slack was in Booth 9, is that correct?

Davis: Yes.

Liebler: This big fellow was in Booth 7?

Davis: Right. And there was two young fellows in Booth 8. One of them was 5'6" or 5'7" somewhere in that vicinity, and the other one was about 6' and he was blackheaded. I can remember that. As far as remembering their faces, with that turkey shoot we had 225 people that day, I can't remember what they looked like.

Liebler: You say these two fellows, one was approximately six foot tall or over, is that correct?

Davis: Yes.

Liebler: Was he heavy or slender?

Davis: No; he wasn't particularly heavy set, he was just a medium build.

Liebler: He was not of a light build however?

Davis: No he wasn't. He was just about my size. I would say 160 to 170 pounds.

Liebler: How tall are you?

Davis: Six-one.

Liebler: And you weigh?

Davis: I weigh about 160, but I was a little bit heavier around that time.

Liebler: Did you determine which of the fellows was shooting at Mr. Slack's target?

Davis: No, sir.

Liebler: Did you speak to both of them or all three of them?

Davis: Not as an individual. I spoke to the group to be sure they were firing at the right target and to watch where they were facing because they were shooting at the wrong target.

Liebler: This Mr. Slack, now then, believes that one of the two of these fellows could have been LEE HARVEY OSWALD, is that right?

Davis: Yes, that's right.

Liebler: Mr. Slack has told you that?

Davis: Yes, sir.

Liebler: And Mr. Price was also there that same day?

Davis: Yes.

Liebler: He also indicated that he thinks one of those two gentlemen was OSWALD?

Davis: Yes.

Liebler: You, yourself had an opportunity to observe both of these gentlemen, did you not?

Davis: Yes, I sure did.

Liebler: I want to show you some pictures which had been previously marked...[Davis rejected the photograph of Curtis La Verne Crafard, and said the man looked like OSWALD]

Davis: It sure looks like him. I couldn't say definitely that it was him, but it sure looks like him...This Mr. Price did say that OSWALD was in an old model Chevrolet when he was out there on this Friday, the 9th, because it was late in the afternoon when he came out there. And Mr. Price helped him sight that rifle in. Helped him sight the scope in on the rifle, and he had two comments to say about the rifle, sir. I am not for sure, I don't know anything about it, but he said the markings, all but the serial number, had been filed off this particular rifle.

Liebler: Did Mr. Price say that?

Davis: Yes, sir. All he said that the scope was the clearest scope he had ever seen for a small scope...

Liebler: How long have you known Mr. Price?

Davis: Well, I have actually only known him since the rifle range opened. But two of his boys helped us at the racetrack, or helped my wife last summer. As far as an individual person, I didn't know him until we opened the gun range, other than to speak to him.

Liebler: How older fellow is he?

Davis: Mr. Price is approximately 35, and he does have a heart condition that the doctors won't let him work, as far as any work is concerned, and that is why he stays down at the range, more or less to watch it for us.

Liebler: In your opinion, is he a reliable fellow?

Davis: He is very reliable or I wouldn't have him down there.

Liebler: You don't think he would say he saw OSWALD, if he didn't in fact see him?

Davis: No, sir. In fact, he told us about this before he called the FBI. But he was afraid - he had five children, and he was afraid that it was some Communist plot or some gang that had done this, and he was afraid for his children or he would have called them sooner.

Liebler: He is not a publicity seeker?

Davis: No, he wasn't. I would say he was very sincere of this. It might have been a case about a double identity, or someone that looked a lot like him. I would say definitely that he thought he saw him. There was also some doctor or lawyer in Oak Cliff, and his son, that he said he saw him out there on November 17, 1963.

Liebler: That was on November 17, 1963?

Davis: That was on November 17, 1963.

Liebler: Was that Doctor Wood?

Davis: I believe it was.

Liebler: Was that Doctor Wood?

Davis: I believe it was.

Liebler: Dentist?

Davis: He might be a dentist. They told us at the range - Charlie Brown, I believe, afterwards, of the FBI, said that he wasn't sure if it was him, but they told us previously they were sure that it was OSWALD.

Liebler: Do you know whether the cases that you gave the FBI were cases that were used in a rifle that were used by these gentlemen that were firing from Booth 8, on November 17, 1963?

Davis: From what Mr. Price told me, he was down at the range helping out on that particular target He saw these fellows pick-up all the shells and - they shot that day, which is very frequent, because they reload a lot of that ammunition, but these particular fellows did pick them up.

Liebler: Did your wife observe these two individuals on November 17, 1963?

Davis: No, sir; she was in the office, she doesn't remember them, or she said that she didn't remember them. She doesn't remember this part I was telling you about, Slack coming to them and complaining about their shooting the wrong target.

Liebler: Who else said they saw OSWALD on November 9, 1963, and November 10, 1963?

Davis: That was Mr. Price.

Liebler: That was Mr. Price?

Davis: Yes. Mr. Slack said he saw him on November 17, 1963.

Liebler: November 17, 1963, only?

Davis: Yes, sir.

Liebler: Mr. Price was not at the range on November 17, 1963.

Davis: Price was at the range on November 17, 1963, yes, also.

Liebler: Did he say that he thinks these gentlemen were with Mr. OSWALD?

Davis: He thought this one individual that was with this taller fellow in booth number eight was OSWALD.

Liebler: Both Mr. Slack and Mr. Price came to that conclusion, is that correct?

Davis: Yes.

Liebler: Am I correct in understanding then that both Mr. Price and Mr. Slack observed these two gentlemen on November 17, 1963, but only Mr. Price observed them on November 9, 1963, and November 10, 1963, is that correct?

Davis: Yes, sir.

Liebler: Do you know whether Mr. Price thinks they are the same men?

Davis: He definitely thinks that it is the same man OSWALD on November 9, 1963, and November 10, 1963. I don't believe he said there was anyone with him, and he come out there just at dark, right before dark and was driving an old-model Chevrolet, or was an old-model Chevrolet.

Liebler: Was it just a car or a station wagon?

Davis: I don't remember. He just said it was an old-model car, and he could have meant a station wagon when he said an old car.

VIRGINIA LOUISE DAVIS' JOURNAL

Mrs. Virginia Louise Davis verified her husband's story and told the Warren Commission she had noted OSWALD'S visit in a journal:

Liebler: Can you tell us the date that Mr. Price said he took OSWALD in, or this man who he thought was OSWALD, who was the last customer?

Mrs. Davis: I don't know the exact date, but I wrote it in my journal, but I don't have it with me.

Liebler: When you refer to the journal, what do you mean?

Mrs. Davis: It is a daily record I keep of everything that happens at the range. When we first opened, everyone had to sign it. But the FBI picked-up the sign in slips and checked it out, and of course, OSWALD wasn't on it, but at the time we did not have fences up, and anyone could get on the range without us knowing it.

In August 1964, J. Lee Rankin wrote this to the FBI: "In the interview report prepared by Special Agents Carter and Brown on December 2, 1963, covering their interview with Mrs. Davis' husband, Floyd Guy Davis, it is stated that Mr. Davis 'furnished a list of members who have registered to shoot at the range.' I do not believe that the Commission is in receipt of this membership list.

From several statements obtained from the Davises, it is not clear precisely what records were maintained at the rifle range during 1963. Hence, we request that you have them clarify what records reflect the names of persons present at their rifle range during those months, and that you attempt to get for the Commission a copy of all such records which you have not previously obtained. In addition, please attempt to obtain a copy of the 'journal' or 'daily record' to which Mrs. Davis referred, for the months of September, October, and November 1963. The Commission is particularly interested in any entries in Mrs. Davis' journal which she may have made on September 28, 1963, October 13, 1963, November 10, 1963, November 13, 1963, and November 17, 1963, and a few days on either side of these dates.

If your Bureau previously has obtained any membership lists, or other similar records, from the Davises, we would appreciate receiving a copy of them, so that we will have a complete set of everything which has been obtained in regards to the rifle range.

On September 1, 1964, the FBI noted:

The Commission requested Mrs. Davis and her husband Floyd Guy Davis, operator of the Sportsdrome Rifle Range, to be reinterviewed to clarify what records they maintained at the rifle range on October 1963, through November 1963, which would reflect the names of individuals present at the range during those months. In a previous interview with Mrs. Davis she commented that no written registers were kept when OSWALD was alleged to have practiced at the range, however, when she furnished a deposition to Mr. Liebler of the President's Commission, she commented she had written in her journal regarding a date that a man thought to be OSWALD had been at the range. The Commission was interested in any entries in Mrs. Davis' journal and they further indicated the desire to have a complete set of documents of records which have been obtained in regard to the rifle range. #### HEMMING AT THE SPORTSDROME RIFLE RANGE

HEMMING was at the range with OSWALD but he was not the big bruiser with the beard. He was the man who was in the same booth with OSWALD as described by Davis. The big bruiser was Michael Bentley Murph.

MICHAEL BENTLEY MURPH

Floyd Guy Davis told the FBI that the fat man with a beard he associated with OSWALD returned to the range on March 15, 1964. Floyd Guy Davis got his license plate number. The FBI traced the plates to Michael Bentley Murph, who said he was at the Sportsdrome Rifle Range:

On a Sunday, either November 3, 1963, or Sunday November 10, 1963, about one and a half hours before sunset, he went alone to the Sportsdrome Gun Range in a 1962 white over red, four-door Chevrolet, bearing 1963 Texas License PW 2958, which vehicle is registered to his employer, Southern Lead Rolling Company, to test fire two Remington rifles. One rifle was a Model 721, .300 Super, Holland and Holland, and the other a U.S. Rifle, .30 caliber M 1903A3. Neither rifle had a scope, only open sights.

He did his target practice in about third position from the west end of the firing point. As he remembers the position was Booth 7 or Booth 8. The best he can remember is that there was a white male, and a white female, firing together at the west end of the firing point. On the east of his position were some six or eight other individuals and possibly two or three others on the gun range. He was not acquainted with anyone who was at the range that day and could not recall well those who were there. He believes he was the only lone individual and all others were in groups of various sizes. Upon viewing a photograph of OSWALD he advised OSWALD is unknown to him other than through the news media. He does not recall seeing anyone at the Sportsdrome Rifle Range resembling OSWALD. He does not recall anyone shooting a rifle with a scope, and believes most everyone else at the range was shooting .22 caliber rifles. He spoke only briefly with the persons on his left or right and this limited conversation was in regard to clearing firing points so everyone could go forward and examine their targets.

He is described as: Age 27, Born November 6, 1936, Height 5'11" weight 300 pounds, Hair dark brown, Eyes brown. It is noted Murph had a four year growth beard. When at the Sportsdrome Rifle Range, as described above, which is the only occasion he has ever been at the Sportsdrome Gun Range, he was wearing his firearms earmuffs. He had a red sweat shirt and green work trousers, but he does not recall if he was wearing these. He arrived at the range about one and a half hours before sunset and left after sunset.

The Warren Report stated: "Several witnesses noticed a bearded man at the club when the person believed to be OSWALD was there, although only one witness thought the two men were together; the bearded gentleman was located and he was found not to have any connection with OSWALD."

MALCOLM PRICE SPOTS MURPH

Malcolm Price said that OSWALD was accompanied by a man, who fired from booth seven, "who looked like a foreigner 250 to 300 pounds with a beatnik beard...a big fellow with a long black or red beard...OSWALD was present at the range both times that he was."

Price: All I remember about him was that he was a big fellow with a long black - it was either black or dark red beard.

MRS. SLACK SPOTS MURPH

Mrs. Slack advised she recalled seeing a great big man with a beard, who was wearing ear muffs, a red plaid shirt, and green pants. She stated he was shooting big guns, and was shooting from stall number Booth 4 or Booth 5.

MALCOLM PRICE SPOTS MURPH

Malcolm Price stated: OSWALD was accompanied by a man, who fired from booth seven, "who looked like a foreigner 250 to 300 pounds with a beatnik beard...a big fellow with a long black or red beard..."

GARLAND SLACK SPOTS MURPH

Garland Slack described the man who accompanied OSWALD on Sunday, November 10, 1963, as tall, having a lot of hair, dark complexion and full beard, "a tall boy wearing a beard." [FBI 62-109090 NR 9.2.64, 62-109060-3765]

STERLING WOOD

Wesley Liebler asked Sterling Wood about the other man OSWALD might have been with:

Liebler: About this other fellow that this guy was with, was he a big man or just -"

Sterling Wood: About the same size this man was...oh about 5'9".

In 1993 Homer Wood stated, "How could Sterling tell how tall he was when he was seated in his car? Driving, how could he tell? My son could have been mistaken."

FLOYD GUY DAVIS SPOTS MURPH AND HEMMING

Although Floyd Davis did not remember OSWALD, he stated that OSWALD was not with Michael Murph, but with another man. Floyd Davis stated:

OSWALD was at the Sportsdrome Rifle Range Sunday, November 17, 1963, - the day of the turkey shoot - "two young fellows were in Booth 8. I do remember the person that was in Booth 7. [ Michael Murph] This was when I went to these fellows in Booth 8, and I was giving them heck about shooting at the wrong target. Mr. Slack, was in Booth 9 on the rifle range...On November 17, 1963, and I was holding a turkey shoot at the same time. Mr. Slack come to me and was complaining about someone shooting his target. So there was two young fellows, I can remember the approximate height of them but I don't remember what their faces looked like, that were in Booth 8. I do remember the person that was in Booth 7, though, because I don't know whether you talked to Mr. Charlie Brown in the last two weeks or not on this-

Liebler: Now let's review this. Mr. Slack was in Booth 9, is that correct?

Davis: Yes.

Liebler: This big fellow was in Booth 7?

Davis: Right. And there was the two young fellows in Booth 8. One of them was 5' 6" or 5' 7", somewhere in that vicinity and the other one was 6' and he was black headed. I can remember that but as far as remembering their faces, with the turkey shoot we had 225 people that day, I can't remember what they looked like.

Liebler: You say that these two fellows, one was approximately 6' tall or over, is that correct?

Davis: Yes.

Liebler: Was he heavy set or slender?

Davis: No; he wasn't particularly heavy set, he was just a medium build.

Liebler: He was not of a light build, however?

Davis: No; he wasn't. He was just about my size. I would say 160 to 170 pounds.

Liebler: How tall are you?

Davis: 6'1"

Liebler: And what do you weigh?

Davis: I weigh about 160, but I was a little bit heavier about that time.

Liebler: Did you determine which of the fellows was shooting at Mr. Slack's target?

Davis: No, sir.

Liebler: Did you speak to both of them, or all three of them?

Davis: No as an individual. I spoke to the group to be sure they were firing at the right target and to watch where they were facing because they were shooting at the wrong target.

Liebler: This Mr. Slack, now then, believes that one of the two of these fellows could have been LEE HARVEY OSWALD?

Davis: Yes, that's right.

Liebler: Has Mr. Slack told you that?

Davis: Yes sir.

Liebler: Malcolm Price was also there the same day?

Davis: He said he was.

Liebler: He also indicated that he thinks one of those two gentlemen was OSWALD?

Davis: Yes...There was a fellow with a black beard in the Booth 7 at the same time. I remember him because he was outstanding you know, and I went to see these fellows in Booth 8, and was giving them heck about shooting at the wrong target. And this other fellow, I remember him because he wouldn't say anything to me. I tried to speak to him on two or three different occasions because he had a lot of guns and I thought he would be a good customer.

Liebler: The fellow with the beard?

Davis: Yes.

HEMMING'S DOPPELGANGER

HEMMING 1994:

That was not me. I call him the döppeganger. His name is John Orr. He was in on Iran Contra. He looks just like me. I weighed about 200. Skinny as a fucking rail. I was 6' 5". If there are people out there who have gotten the idea that I'm a player, it makes them nervous. These aren't bad people themselves. Sorry about that. It's all a misunderstanding. I had no business in Dallas after July 4, 1963, and July 5, 1963. I was never in Dealey Plaza until 1975 when I was on my way down to Ecuador. I was working for the Florida Life Insurance Company collecting a dollar and a half from little old ladies. I worked for them until we left for the Guatemala trip and that was the end of that.

It was pointed out to HEMMING that OSWALD'S visits to the range occurred on weekends. HEMMING told this researcher:

Who the fuck would fly 800 fuckin' miles? The standard plane that was available at the time was the Aztec and that flew 175 miles an hour. But you could get faster planes like Learstars, which were Navy Ventura bombers converted to Executive shit. It whipped along at about 275. It would take two hours to fly across the Gulf from Miami to Dallas. A B-25 could even do it faster...Did he practice with that weapon? I take it under consideration. The guy would have had to have practiced somewhere, it had to be a remote area, buses don't run to remote areas, and they don't want him to have a friend with a car - that's completely out - so he's got to ride a bus to a place within the city that is a range to fire his weapon. Where's the box of ammo, where's the empty shell casings? Where is the gun cleaning kit, where are the extra clips that hold the fucking bullets? It could be a completely innocent thing or that one of these mysterious friends that he'd never want to identify, whoever encouraged him to get the weapon, or bought the weapon for him, or all that bullshit, he on his own decided, 'Hell, I'll call up Sammy, or Slime Ball, and pop a few caps. My next problem is getting fucking ammo. Well maybe Slime Ball or Sammy. 'Well let me look around.' And it took him a few weeks and he found some ammo.

HOMER WOOD

Dr. Homer Wood was asked to look at a photograph of CHRIST and asked if this was the man who accompanied OSWALD to the Sportsdrome Rifle Range:

You gonna get me in a knock down and drag out divorce from my family, but I'll look at it. You better start researching the divorce columns. I was in the service, I'm patriotic. I don't want to be a hero. My son was the hero. He made the statement and he came home from school. We saw it on TV and that's when we turned it in. Kids are a lot better observers than older people. In fact my son, when he was 10 and 12 years old could identify every car on the road. How he did that, I don't know. My son is a foot surgeon. A good one too.

Homer Wood said the man was definitely not CHRIST, and "I asked my boy and he said 'No.' CHRIST looked fairly old to me." Homer Wood was sent a photograph of HEMMING and asked if this was the man OSWALD had been with. He said, "I never received it." It was sent out again. Homer Wood said: "I'm not interested in that situation. Too many problems with it. I don't like to be rude. Discontinue, will ya?"

THE MIAMI AIRPORT

On Monday, November 18, 1963, President John F. Kennedy arrived in Miami at 5:00 p.m. In 1978 HEMMING told this researcher:

They tried to get us to Dallas. They got us to the airport when Kennedy came through Miami on November 18, 1963, supposedly to eyeball the crowd for Castro double agents who might try to harm the President. I made sure our people weren't carrying any weapons. We were there and there was going to be a hit. We got in a helicopter and went over to the beach. [In 1994 he denied having said this.] Now when that didn't work they tried to get us to Dallas. They tried to get us in the same city.

In 1984 HEMMING told this researcher he was at the airport:

FBI S.A. George Davis was the man who contacted us on Saturday, November 16, 1963. I had never dealt with him before. He told me to go down to the undercover office of military intelligence. We had a meeting, during which they explained to us why we were needed at the airport. Nick Navarro, Tony Fontana, BERNARDO De TORRES and Secret Service Agent Ernesto Aragon were there. Aragon had posed as a Postal Inspector to set up Robert K. Brown in 1962. I met him. These people are dirty, but I will give them the benefit of the doubt - that they were doing what they were fucking told to do. That they have gravitated to positions of prominence since then, means somebody thinks they know something.

They wanted our group to be at the airport when Kennedy came through Miami on November 18, 1963. Gorman disobeyed orders. There was going to be a hit by the Santana brothers. During the shootout with the Castro double agents the President would catch a slug. Learn the goddamn business. That's the way it's done. We were supposed to be left there with fuckin' holes in our head. A hit was going to go down there and we were going to be left holding the bag, asshole. Now when that didn't work, they tried to get us in Dallas.

HEMMING was asked if any files existed on this incident:

Who the fuck keeps files on a crazy fucking operation like that? Were we seen there? Yeah. STURGIS was photographed there.

In a Freedom of Information Act request dated January 3, 1977, addressed to the United States Secret Service, HEMMING asked for Reports reflecting the request of an intelligence agent that my associates and I be present at Miami International Airport, to assist in the 'security' of the visit of President Kennedy to Miami on November 15, 1963.

STURGIS was questioned about his presence at Miami Airport. He said he knew nothing of it. "That's too far back, really..." Joseph Gorman, contacted in Bowling Green, Kentucky declined comment. HEMMING called Joe Gorman:

Well, I talked to Little Joe and he said no, he didn't bring his 45. If he did he would have probably taken a shot at him. I mean that's how he felt. What if somebody thought that was our attitude too? That we'd all been running our mouths and bad mouthing Kennedy. What if they thought Joe was representative of the group? What the fuck you think they're puttin' us there for?

During another conversation HEMMING stated:

We got within spitting distance of Kennedy. We were right there in the receiving line. We're in the gauntlet line. And that's supposed to protect him from anybody trying to rush in and do something. Their attitude is a guy with knife, a bomb, a gun, is gonna rush up. They're not into this kind of rifle sniper type bullshit for some reason. We were the only ones that would recognize Castro double agents. Diosdado had engineered the Santana brothers being taken off the U.S.S. Oxford and being sent to No Name Key the year before. Now, according to George Davis, one of the Santana brothers was reported back in Miami for a hit on JFK. They needed people that could recognize Santana in an instant.

Howard K. Davis confirmed HEMMING'S Miami Airport story. Gordon Winslow located photographs of the event, but could not locate HEMMING or Howard K. Davis. Gordon Winslow: "HEMMING didn't know President Kennedy gave a speech out there that day." HEMMING told me about the airport incident in 1978. In 1994 he denied that he did this:

I first told Oliver Stone about the airport incident in 1990. I didn't even tell my own brother, so why should I tell you, slipdick? It wasn't likely OSWALD was there that weekend. It is only likely if they really were prepared to do the hit at the airport. Now that hit would have gone down in front of a lot of people.

Wallace Shanley stated: "I have no knowledge of his being at the airport. But it is plausible. There are such people, and HEMMING would have some competence in identifying them."

PATRICK'S RAIDERS

THE INTERPEN CREW

STURGIS and HEMMING'S INTERPEN / ANTI-COMMUNIST BRIGADE militia attracted many former members of the Cuban rebel armed forces. Several of these men had done time in Castro's prisons. INTERPEN was a para-legal organization: U.S. citizens were forbidden by law to be combatants in foreign military operations. INTERPEN was partially financed by dispossessed casino owners who had operated under Batista. Other funding came indirectly from the CIA. Former INTERPEN member Howard K. Davis was asked about this. He responded, "Well, we got it from Cubans. Cuban donations. Of course they could have gotten it from the CIA. In fact we knew that some Cubans did get their money from the CIA and they would then..."

Before he went into private practice in Miami, INTERPEN'S Attorney, Charles Ashmann was an Assistant to the Florida State Attorney General. HEMMING reported: "He was prominent in politics. A power broker." The CIA reported:

Subject does not have a security file, but limited information concerning him appears in reference files. He is described as a 33 year old attorney with the law firm of Guilmartin, Schneiderman and Ashmann of Miami, Florida. In September 1960, Ashmann, representing the Harris Advertising Agency of Miami, attached planes belonging to Cubana Airlines and garnished funds belonging to the Cuban Government, because the Cuban Government refused to pay $429,000 which it owed the Harris Agency. At the time, Fidel Castro was attending a 1960 United Nations meeting. When Ashmann confiscated the Cuban airliner which had taken Castro to New York, Castro was forced to obtain a ride back to Havana in Premier Khrushchev's plane. [National crime syndicate associate Sam Benton also was instrumental in seizing four planes on behalf of the same company, to satisfy a debt owed by the Castro Government to a client].

Most of Ashmann's clients were Cuban exiles and anti-Castro commandos. He had stirred up speculation in the press that he was employed by the CIA, but Ashmann denied any affiliation with the Agency and in fact stated that most of his clients were outspoken in their hostility to the Agency.

In January 1963, a cable describing Ashman as 'publicity seeking Miami attorney' who was representing JERRY PATRICK HEMMING who had been arrested on charges of violating U.S. Neutrality laws by an attempt to form an expedition to invade a foreign country.

Howard K. Davis, (CIA 201-0189473) born August 11, 1930, had been a high-ranking member of the Rebel Air Force of Fidel Castro. He related, "I flew mostly into where Raoul Castro was, and saw Raoul, and spoke to him a good bit. I have been described as Castro's 'personal pilot.' I was not." When he began to oppose Castro, the Border Patrol placed the name of Howard K. Davis on a list of persons banned from renting aircraft. The CIA described him as an acquaintance of many Miami-based anti-Castro Cubans and reported: "Station files show...during the middle and late 1950's Davis was at least an acquaintance, if not a colleague, of William Morgan, assassinated by Castro in Cuba. It is known that Davis has known Robert K. Brown for some time. Subject appeared on Allen Courtney's Miami radio show on November 27, 1962, with Edward LeRoy Collins and GERRY HEMMING and Charles Ashmann." In 1957 the 26th of July Movement placed a bomb in Allen Courtney's driveway. CIA Office of Security traces on Howard K. Davis:

Howard K. Davis born August 11, 1930 was an associate of GERALD PATRICK HEMMING involved in anti-Castro and anti-Duvalier groups and lived in Miami. Subject could not be identified with any one of the same name in Office of Security indices. Howard Davis, subject of OS file #107537 was born March 7, 1937. Howard Davis, subject of OS file #25489 was born February 8, 1900. The only information we have on Subject is that contained in attachment 14 of your Memo dated August 7, 1967 on GERALD PATRICK HEMMING." [CIA 40490 3.21.68]

Hemming told the HSCA:

Howard had stayed on after the revolution with Orta, living at the palace and what have you, and quite often was on the scene when the first casino people, what have you, by-passed everybody and went to the President when it appeared Castro was going to be military commander and these casino people and property owners felt that Orta was going to have a strong palace government, they rerouted. Howard Davis was on the scene And became one of these people. Later Raoul Castro deported because of aligning himself with Orta in other matters. They probably felt he was working for Uncle Sam anyway, and once in Miami, working with Sturgis and these other people, reacquainted himself with these people. Our prime point of contact with Jimenez Perez was Howard Davis.

In May 1963 the CIA's JMWAVE base was "queried regarding possible use of Subject. Said it had no interest." [Allen v. DOD CIA 40490] The CIA's Locator Data indicated that Howard K. Davis' file was "Permanently charged to C/CI/R&A 2B1405, 1345, 04.08.67." CI/CA issued an Information Correct Card regarding Howard K. Davis. Howard K. Davis was FBI source MM-T1.

LAWRENCE JOHN HOWARD (born January 17, 1933) came from a group headed by Guy Gabalon called the Drive Against Communist Aggression. In 1961 Gabalon ran an anti-Castro office in Los Angeles. When he ran for Congress in 1964 Loran Hall was his campaign manager. When the CIA released HOWARD'S 201 File, rather than release the 201 File of JOHN LAWRENCE HOWARD, it released the 201 File of Lawrence Henry Howard (born November 3, 1913 in Bridgeport, Connecticut. [CIA 201-756375] When the CIA did an INDEX SEARCH AND 201 CONSOLIDATION REPORT on HOWARD on July 24, 1975, it located one applicable reference dated November 10, 1959. The nature of this reference has been withheld. HOWARD claimed to know Pedro Diaz Lanz, Enrique Molina "thinks he flew Rorke to Mexico and suspects he was working for Castro," ROY HARGRAVES, INTERPEN associate - in contact still in 1968," FRAC, "group HOWARD was working with in Miami - went on three raids," and Tony Varona, who "thought HOWARD was double-crossing him because he was involved in training about 50 men from New York area who were interested in deposing Papa Doc Duvalier in Haiti. Oscar Pino, working with Masferrer, more or less 'infiltrated' these men into HOWARD'S training camp on the Key while HOWARD was in Miami." [Garrison interview with HOWARD 2.25.69; NARA HSCA 180-10085-10185]

William Houston Seymour was born December 1, 1937 or January 12, 1937 at Fort Benton, Montana. On January 10, 1968 the FBI ran a file check on William Houston Seymour. Serials 89-69-1797, 1809 page 2, 1839 page 2. On September 2, 1977, the CIA ran an INDEX SEARCH AND 201 CONSOLIDATION REQUEST on William Houston Seymour much of which was withheld from research. William Houston Seymour's address was listed as 1008 Simmons, Tucson, Arizona. A document that was attached to this request read: "Seymour, W.H. Wash-CIA-Int-28 Folder #1 p.14 60-749/16 Requested from DDP Records Center 'Will Follow' RI/Archives References 362070." The first traces on William Houston Seymour in the CIA'S highly illegible MAIN INDEX SEARCH RESPONSE: "****Locator Data Order From IP/CFS January 1, 1959 01774066." The second trace read: "Seymour 201-0011838 (Deleted) 07732A01 June 55 Enclosure 1. ***Locator Data: Order from IP/CFS (Deleted) 07732 March 17, 1975, 06667012." The CIA discovered traces on a (FNU) Seymour in Trieste in 1949, which was unidentifiable with the Subject. The fourth trace "Seymour 201-007038 (Deleted) 60682A01 November 30, 1971. Locator Data: Order from IP/CFS 6C-52 (Deleted) December 14, 1971 02949487 Aperture Card Available See Aperture Card Attached. END OF REPLY - 4 records listed."

During the FBI's investigation of the Minutemen in 1963, the names Loran Hall and William Houston Seymour surfaced. The reason for this was classified. The FBI: "Loran Hall and William Houston Seymour's present whereabouts are unknown, but it would appear, from information concerning them, they are adventurers and mercenaries, and it is not believed they warrant attention at this time with respect to the Subject organization, or until or unless some more specific information identifying them with Subject organization is received." Edmund Kolby's name appeared on a CIA index card titled "FRD - Cuban Revolutionary Front 34244B /D October 21, 1960 p1 KOLBY, Edmund 350653 /U 64." The CIA: "COLBY (FNU) (Illegible) received from a representative of Office Original Coordination of Standard Oil of New Jersey. During week July 8, 1962, source visited by Colby. Subject's first name, address (illegible) dressed, wearing glasses, speaking with slight stammer. Apparently U.S. citizen from Eastern section of U.S. Source said he spent six years in Army with Special Services, now working on project training Cubans unconventional warfare Florida, Everglades. Claimed spent three or four months a year on merchant ship. This supported him during the rest of the year while worked on training project. He expressed little love for the CIA or the U.S. Government and gave source copy of article that appeared in June 3, 1962 issue of the Denver Post 'Cuban Exiles Have Learned to Hate CIA.' Reason visiting source is to get financial backing for his project. Very critical of money given to underground groups while his group gets no financial support...Subject was not specific activities of group. Mentioned getting food and medical supplies into Cuba and 18 day course guerilla warfare." [CIA-DO1251-1500 Source CSCI-3/772,387 8.22.62 WH-740, 7.17.62 also MFR Sub: Cuban Underground Activities in Florida (Anti-Castro) #EE-29 229 Thomas A. Ogden, CI Support Desk OS/OSD/SD/4] HEMMING told this researcher:

Kolby was born in Finland. He was with the U.N. partisan forces behind the lines in North Korea. He's the black sheep of the family. Doesn't know how to drive a car. Stammers a little bit. Looks just like Wally Cocks, Mr. Peepers, he was on a number of operations. He lives in Miami. Works for the Department of Agriculture. Kolby didn't run around soliciting support. They came to him.

OSWALD'S address book contained the name "Colby." This may have referred to Edmund Kolby since his name was often misspelled. For example, a December 7, 1962, Counter-Intelligence Support Desk Memorandum stated: "In a name check run in Task Force W indices, a Colby [FNU] was reported in July 1962 as approaching a Standard Oil representative for financial support for his underground group." [Thomas A. Ogden CI Support Desk OS/OSD/SD/4] The FBI stated that the address book entry referred to Ted Colby, a Revlon Corporation salesman, since the number 1147 appeared directly behind the Colby entry, and Ted Colby lived at 4711 Homer Street in Dallas. [USSS #CO-2-34,030-197 p2] HEMMING told this researcher: "Kolby was in and out of New Orleans on merchant ships. Kolby told me in 1962 when he come off a merchant ship that he had ran into some assholes in New Orleans who I thought was Larry LaBorde, who was in a bar talking about training camps. Kolby don't talk." [Kolby's Last Known Address 4035 N. Meridan Ave Miami, Florida]

The CIA reported, "Loran Hall served in the U.S. Army 1947-1952, West Germany, and was given an honorable discharge for medical reasons. According to his father he has suffered a nervous breakdown and is still subject to severe depression. He claims to be a soldier of fortune who once served Castro's cause, but some who know him think that he is lying." In 1958 INTERPEN member Loran Eugene Hall [201-253411] smuggled arms to rebel commander Camillo Cienfuegos. On April 21, 1959, the Castro regime arrested Loran Hall on property owned by Camillo Cienfuegos for training recruits to conduct an expedition against Nicaragua: "I was a member of a group inside Cuba in the early parts of 1959 and I was part of the group that was to have gone into Nicaragua for the purpose of assassinating Somoza, and with me at that time was a man called Miro Cardona." [NYT 4.22.59] Camillo Cienfuegos was killed in a mysterious aircraft accident. Loran Hall was imprisoned for three months, and then released in July 1959. The CIA's Office of Security reported:

Subject's file reflects that 00/Contacts requested an ad hoc clearance in July 1959 to debrief Hall at the time of his return to his home in Wichita, Kansas, after his release from a Cuban prison. The FBI interrogated Hall for two hours at the Wichita FBI office on July 16, 1959 and released him. They had no objection to the Agency contacting Hall after that date but from the FBI it was learned that Hall was an unlikely Subject from which to obtain truthful information, and his value was considered questionable. The request for clearance from 00/Contacts was, therefore, canceled on October 29, 1959. The reports of the FBI interrogation of Hall in Wichita dated July 28, 1959 are contained in this file. His file also contains a copy of a 00 report dated September 12, 1963, and September 18, 1963, concerning a polygraph examination of Hall on 'invasions of Cuba.' This examination was given by a Mr. Robert Berrick, President of the West Coast Lie Detection Center. At that time (September 1963) Hall made a speech before the John Birch Society and he was referred to the West Coast Lie Detection Center by a representative of the John Birch Society...Hall revealed himself to be vehemently anti-Jewish during the polygraph examination and expressed his view that of the 142 top advisors in the U.S., 104 at least were Jews and that the man directly under J. Edgar Hoover at that time had at one time been deported from the U.S. for Communistic activities. The polygraph report stated that Hall had been arrested for forgery. [CIA D00213 1.9.68]

HEMMING claimed Loran Hall had never been to Cuba prior to April 1959 and was there for three days before he was arrested for meeting with an anti-Castro figure. In May 1968 Loran Hall told New Orleans District Attorney Jim Garrison "Prior to my being arrested over in Cuba I met five or six Americans that was over there during the revolution, like FIORINI, Thompson, Austin Young, I met quite a few of the...HEMMING told me he had been with William Morgan and I can never recall having seen HEMMING all the time that I was in Havana. I can never remember seeing him." He described his release: "Cienfuegos got me out. Put me in a command car and drove me to the airport."

INTERPEN appealed to people whom HEMMING described as having "a low level mentality," like Edward Anderson Collins. Collins was born at Shreveport, Louisiana, on August 21, 1935. HEMMING told this researcher:

Collins had come from ECONCON in Europe. He was reporting to Wallace Shanley's people.

Edward Collins worked in the Dixon Language School in Miami and had ties with racist groups like the Ku Klux Klan and J.B. National Stoner's National States Rights Party. James Earl Ray's brother, Jerry Ray, was J. B. Stoner's bodyguard. In May 1962 both the FBI and the CIA were investigating Edward Collins, "regarding a bomb threat." [FBI 105-110398-2 5.1.62] The name COLONS appears in OSWALDS address book on a page opposite contiguous with HEMMING's name.

ROY HARGRAVES was HEMMING'S primary action agent. HARGRAVES (CIA SF #518 334) was born February 14, 1940, in St. Louis, Missouri. He was 5' 10" tall, 165 pounds, hazel eyes and brown hair. His father was a laborer. On May 16, 1957, HARGRAVES was charged with AWOL and escape at Lackland Air Force Base, Texas.

He received a dishonorable discharge from the Air Force in 1958, after nine months of confinement in a military prison. HEMMING told this researcher:

He was charged with being AWOL and they were going to raise it to desertion. The Feds wanted to charge him with the Mann Act. HARGRAVES was trying to get his discharge cleared up in 1962. OSWALD would do the same a year later. There's some coincidence for you. People got the impression he was my enforcer and it made them nervous.

On February 13, 1958, HARGRAVES was arrested for burglary in South Phoenix, Arizona. On May 5, 1958, he was charged with Grand Theft. His probation was revoked and he was sent to the Arizona State Penitentiary for two to three years. On May 23, 1958, the Board of Paroles and Pardons, Phoenix, Arizona, sentenced him to two to three years in prison. On December 12, 1959, he was "rel by expiration." In June 1960 he was in Bossier City, Louisiana, and Benton, Louisiana, where he was arrested for investigation of burglary. On April 17, 1961, he was arrested for vagrancy in El Paso, Texas. By May 1961 he was back in Miami where he was arrested for vagrancy and shoplifting. HARGRAVES listed his occupation as "decorator." [NARA FBI 124-10031-10034]

ROY HARGRAVES AND THE 30th OF NOVEMBER MOVEMENT

The 30th of November Movement was named for an anti-Batista uprising on November 30, 1956. It was composed primarily of labor union members and leaned politically toward socialism and nationalization. The group began anti-Castro activities, including guerrilla actions, sabotage and exfiltration of members from Cuba. The 30th of November Movement was an effective Cuban underground organization until infiltration by Castro agents and Cuban Government repression following the Bay of Pigs invasion crippled its activities. The leader of the 30th of November Movement, Carlos Rodriguez Quesada, escaped to the United States. The 30th of November Movement joined the Cuban Revolutionary Council, but was expelled for having helped organize the hunger strike in Bayfront Park in Miami. [FBI 105-107224-A NR 3.19.62] The strike was planned as a peaceful demonstration during President Kennedy's visit to Miami from March 10, 1962 to March 12, 1962. The CIA reported: "Carlos Rodriguez Quesada commenced by stating that the Cubans are united at Bayfront Park to seek a solution to Cuba. The solution to Cuba is war. The Consejo members are traitors to that cause." [CIA 201-286382] This caused a split within the 30th of November Movement. By May 1962 there were two factions: one, led by Carlos Quesada, refused to associate with the Cuban Revolutionary Council; the other faction, the November 30th Revolutionary Movement, still associated itself with the Cuban Revolutionary Council. In July 1962 the FBI reported that the 30th of November Movement and the November 30th Revolutionary Movement were both inactive. By 1963 Carlos Quesada and the 30th of November Movement had joined Junta Del Gobierno de Cuba en Exilio which was headed by Paulino Sierra. Several reports reviewed by the HSCA raised questions about Quesada's motivation for joining Junta. One report indicated Quesada was seeking respectability to cover illicit dealings. Another report called him unreliable and untrustworthy, "a man who surrounds himself with thieves, drug addicts and homosexuals." In late February 1963 eight members of the 30th of November Movement tried to land in Cuba in pirated Cuban fishing boats that had been hijacked to Elbow Cay, Bahamas, then sent back to Cuba with exile crews. This operation may have been funded by Paulino Sierra. The FBI reported:

On about February 20, 1963, Cuban newspapers published in Havana reported that the three persons left on Elbow Key along with five other persons, not known to the 30th of November Movement, were captured by the Cuban Government. Cuban newspapers stated that these individuals had a large quantity of money including money from Nicaragua. However, none of the three individuals left on Elbow Key had any money when they were left there. About 15 days ago, the mother of Juan Reyes Morales in Cuba ascertained that the eight captured individuals were still in jail and had not been executed. She made a telephone call to Miami notifying Reyes's father who then notified the 30th of November organization. With the exception of the three individuals who were left on the island, the 30th of November considers the other five persons captured as being fishermen and as having nothing to do with the infiltration plan nor any knowledge of it...ROY EMORY HARGRAVES. HARGRAVES is a close friend of Eleno Oviedo Alvarez [one of the men arrested by the Government of Cuba]. After news came of the capture of the eight individuals, HARGRAVES came to the offices of the 30th of November Movement and wanted the details of the capture along with pictures of the individuals and other evidence so he could facilitate a large amount of press publicity which would enable them to collect enough donations to be used to free the captured eight persons. The 30th of November Movement planned to handle the matter through the Organization of American States and the Cuban Revolutionary Council and declined HARGRAVE'S offer. They put him out of the office and when he later returned they threatened to call the police if he came back. Neither HARGRAVES nor his associates, soldier-of-fortune and mercenary GERALD PATRICK HEMMING, or Miami attorney Charles R. Ashmann, had any previous knowledge of the infiltration plan, did not participate, and had no connection with it. [FBI 105-92196-50]

On February 28, 1963, Charles Ashmann called a press conference and charged that Cuba violated the sovereignty of the British Government by going ashore at Elbow Cay and capturing eight Cubans there. The FBI reported:

Ashmann produced, in front of the press, a false statement from an unnamed Cuban anti-Communist organization which stated that the eight arrested were innocent fisherman and were in no way responsible for the capturing of the two Cuban fishing boats. Ashmann also produced false receipts which he obtained from the owner of the East Coast Fisheries

Company, Miami, Florida, showing that the eight were innocent fisherman whose only activity was fishing. MM T-2 explained that none of the group of eight was a fisherman: Ashmann's purpose is to confuse, cause doubt and to obtain for himself press publicity. On February 28, 1963, Ashmann made a number of telephone calls to the British Ambassador in Washington, D.C., concerning this matter, and stated he was going to bring pressure on the British Government to force the Cuban Government to release the eight captured individuals to British authorities, and then Ashmann would obtain their release from the British. On March 1, 1963, at 2:30 a.m. Ashmann and GERALD PATRICK HEMMING left for Washington, D.C. to confer with the British Ambassador to the United States. On March 1, 1963, inquiry was made at the residence of William Fuller, 1870 S.W. 12th Street, reflected that ROY EMORY HARGRAVES had been previously staying there, but his present whereabouts is unknown. [FBI 2-1693 NR 3.18.63; FBI 105-92196-45 pp.7,8 - pages 5 and 6 w/h]

Carlos Quesada was expelled from the 30th of November Movement in January 1964.

THEORY: THE ECHEVARRIA INCIDENT

Evidence suggested that Cuban exile Homer Samuel Valdivia Echevarria (CIA #201-767409; born September 3, 1931), who was connected with the DRE and the 30th of November Movement, learned from Paulino Sierra that President Kennedy was going to be assassinated. Prior to November 22, 1963, Homer Echevarria told a Secret Service Confidential informant:

For the information of all offices concerned, 2-1-266 advised on November 26, 1963, that he had heard that one Tom Moseley, allegedly had been attempting to negotiate a sale of machine guns to one Homer S. Echevarria, and that Echevarria allegedly made a comment the day before the assassination of President John F. Kennedy that 'we now have plenty of money -- our new backers are Jews -- as soon as 'we' (or 'they') take care of Kennedy'...The informant was unable to continue this conversation with the suspect because of the presence of other bus drivers...On November 26, 1963, 2-1-266 advised that he believed that Thomas Moseley and Homer Echevarria, described below, were going to attend a meeting in order to negotiate for the sale of automatic weapons to Echevarria's group.

On the evening of November 26, 1963, 2-1-266 met with United States Secret Service Agents Joseph E. Noonan and Edward Z. Tucker and FBI Special Agents Robert A. Baker and Walter C. Rogers. 2-1-266 stated that Moseley allegedly had approached Echevarria some time in September 1963 on the possibility of Echevarria's being able to use some machine guns which Moseley could supply, in order that Echevarria's group of Cubans could invade Cuba. 2-1-266 advised that the day before President Kennedy was assassinated Moseley again had approached Echevarria about the purchase of these machine guns, at which time Echevarria stated 'we now have plenty of money -- our new backers are Jews -- as soon as 'we' (or 'they') take care of Kennedy...' 2-1-266 also alleged that Echevarria advised Moseley that before any deals could be consummated, Echevarria's superiors would have to approve Moseley and satisfy themselves that he was not a CIA agent."

"2-1-266," who was apparently supplying information on Thomas Moseley, was Thomas Moseley. The United States Secret Service spelled it Mosley to further shield his identify. Tom Moseley "reported that he had knowledge of a group of Chicago Cubans, allegedly anti-Castro, who were bitterly opposed to President Kennedy." This was the 30th of November Movement. When interviewed in 1993 by this researcher Homer Echevarria denied he had foreknowledge of the Kennedy assassination: "Who invented that? You bet it's not true." Homer Echevarria denied having been a part of the 30th of November Movement: "Nah, not at all. Not at all. You apparently want to impress somebody. No. That is not true." Thomas Moseley was Homer Echevarria's co-worker at the Chicago Bus Company. Thomas Moseley had smuggled arms for Carlos Prio Soccarras in the early 1950's, by bribing Customs officials. He was arrested by Batista for this activity. Homer Echevarria 1994:

Oh gee, I don't know that. I talked casually with Moseley when we meet at the bus depot. He told me he was in the bureau of narcotics and firearms, whatever. That he used to work for them. I don't know if that was the truth, or not. The only thing I knew is that he used to carry arms, you know. I never carry arms or anything, but he showed me, and he said, 'If you need something, I will have it for you.' I said 'No, no, no, no. That is problems. I don't want that.'

The United States Secret Service investigated the background of Homer Echevarria Jr. After he left Cuba on July 6, 1960, Homer Echevarria went to Miami and then to Dallas, Texas, where he worked for the C. J. Simpson Oil Drilling Company. When the company moved to Michigan, Homer Echevarria moved there. The United States Secret Service examined the home and business telephone records of C. J. Simpson. The USSS questioned the Simpson's landlord and discovered that prior to the Castro takeover, the Simpson's had extensive oil holdings in Cuba and were members of the wealthy elite. A few months later, Homer Echevarria moved to another city in Michigan, where he worked for an oil driller whom he had known in Batista's Cuba. He told a neighbor he was "very bitter toward Fidel Castro since his parents were wealthy Cuban plantation owners when Fidel Castro took over and they lost everything, including their prize breeding bull, which was worth $7000, which Fidel Castro used for an ox roast. The family was trying to raise money in this country for a possible Cuban invasion." In 1994 Homer Echevarria commented,

I was not that bitter like you said because number one, they took over properties and so on, but you don't care about properties. What you care about is life, my friend. And life is precious. One of things, and I thank god for that, is that I have not really so-called 'hate' Castro because of anything material that he took from us. Because, after all, we were poor people and my father was the pioneer of the oil industry in Cuba really, Echevarria Oil. He was called the crazy man of the town because he said there was oil there. Kerr-McGee drilled and found oil. We went from rags to riches. We were well to do. No wanting. When Castro took over I came over with Mr. Wagstaff, from the Simpson Drilling Company. My father only had ten grand when he got here. We started a drilling company. When a few dry holes came up we got out of the business. I lost a couple of thousand.

Within a few months Homer Echevarria moved to Alabama, where he lived with Ben Nodel (born October 25, 1892; died May 1974). Ben Nodel and Homer Echevarria had worked for the same company in pre-Castro Cuba and were good friends. When the United States Secret Service questioned Ben Nodel he claimed the Echevarria family was not especially bitter because "they had been able to salvage their fortune when they fled Castro's Cuba." [USSS CO-2-340030 #621, #1223; USSS CO-2-2034030, #1225; USSS CO-2-34,030 #523]

In July 1961, Homer Echevarria was living in Chicago, Illinois:

For a considerable time Echevarria has been condemning the United States and has spoken extensively on forceful recovery of Cuba by anti-Castro groups...Investigation has established that Echevarria's telephone, No. 278-2922, was installed on September 24, 1963. No toll calls have been made from the phone. On November 27, 1963, Special Agents Noonan and Tucker proceeded to the Chicago office of the FBI and conferred with FBI Agent Walt Rogers. A copy of the photograph of Echevarria, appearing in the files of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, was given to Agent Rogers.

During this interview Agent Rogers advised that he knew Evelio Echevarria Martin (CIA 201-767410; born March 21, 1905) prior to this date, and that that very morning he had been introduced to Homer Echevarria. This meeting took place at a grocery store located at 2351 West North Avenue, Chicago, and was a favorite meeting place for these people.

He stated that the meeting with Homer Echevarria was by chance, and that he was introduced as an agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Agent Rogers believed that since he had met Homer Echevarria that very morning, he, Rogers, should probably stay in the background of the investigation.

Special Agent Rogers stated that from the information provided by the interview with 2-1-266 on the previous night, it was his belief that the organization to which Echevarria belonged was the 30th of November Movement and that this group was primarily interested, at least in the Chicago area, in obtaining money and disseminating propaganda of an anti-Castro nature. From his conversation it appeared that the Bureau had reliable information regarding the activities of this group. It was also felt by S.A. Walter C. Rogers that it was highly unlikely that this 30th of November group would be involved in illegal activities.

S.A. Robert A. Baker said he met Homer Echevarria at a Cuban grocery store. S.A. Robert A. Baker claimed this was coincidence. The morning after having interviewed Thomas Moseley about Homer Echevarria S.A. Robert A. Baker happened to meet Homer Echevarria? Unlikely. S.A. Robert A. Baker was there to instruct Homer Echevarria "keep his mouth shut" and not discuss the assassination of President John F. Kennedy with Secret Service snitch Thomas Moseley. S.A. Robert A. Baker burned Thomas Moseley, who caused the FBI problems because the official policy of the FBI was to blame the assassination solely on OSWALD. Homer Echevarria:

No. No. They'd never do that. S.A. Walter C. Rogers, that name I remember. My father came out of Cuba in 1962. He was asking for somebody to tell what he knows from the anti-Castro activities in the island. That he has seen some missiles. My father in Cuba was active in counter-revolution, you know what I mean? He was supporting a group that was in the middle of the island. I don't remember the name. It was somebody that have a lot of balls and fight against Castro. They don't really belong to any group definitively. They have not lost the spirit, like the Cuban people now, let me put it that way. I sympathize with any anti-Castro activity right now. I remember maybe speaking with Rogers one time in my house. But from that to the other activities is a lot of...I don't recall Baker or a meeting in a grocery store. I remember Rogers.

FBI S.A. ROGERS AND THOMAS MOSELEY

S.A. Robert A. Baker also knew Thomas Moseley. Acting Special Agent-in-Charge Maurice Martineau reported: "In this regard the informant had previously told me that shortly after the robbery of a Brink's truck in Chicago he had gone to the FBI with what he thought would be pertinent information relating to that robbery. It appears that it was on that occasion that Special Agent Baker had interviewed the informant."

THE SECOND MEETING

The United States Secret Service determined:

Inasmuch as this investigation reflected a threat to President Johnson, the United States Secret Service would have primary jurisdiction...

Subsequently on the evening of November 26, 1963, 2-1-266 advised that Thomas Moseley had telephoned Echevarria, and that Echevarria had directed Moseley to meet him at Echevarria's house at 12:00 o'clock on November 28, 1963, at which time Moseley and Echevarria were going to meet Echevarria's superiors, who would confer with Moseley...About noon November 28, 1963, source went to home of Echevarria... at which time Moseley and Echevarria discussed the policies of President Johnson. Echevarria allegedly described President Johnson as a common person who would get things done. Echevarria stated that President Kennedy was an intellectual, a rich man's son who 'did not give a damn about people,' while President Johnson would work with people. In any case, President Johnson would not stand in their way.

Another document stated that Homer Echevarria was reported by the source

...to say that President Kennedy was a rich, well-educated man who lacked interest in the common man so the unnamed group could not deal with him. President Johnson on the other hand was described by Homer Echevarria as a friendly, cowboy type, one with whom they deal without difficulty.

After this discussion Echevarria made a telephone call which he could not complete. He allegedly then asked his wife for the correct number. When this was provided Echevarria supposedly said, 'Oh I must have been calling the Beauty Shop.' After completing the second call, Echevarria and Moseley departed in Moseley's car.

Near the intersection of Milwaukee and Logan Square, Chicago, Echevarria told Moseley to pull over and park. After parking, an unnamed Cuban, described below, entered the car. This party dominated the conversation from this point." Moseley told the Cuban that he could provide him with 100 machine guns, ten machine pistols and seven anti-tank rifles. "The Cuban then asked Moseley if he could obtain material for sabotage and Moseley told him to write down what he wanted and he would attempt to obtain it...2-1-266 obtained this list from Moseley's person and it was turned over to the Secret Service, to be processed for whatever fingerprints might be contained thereon.

The unknown Cuban then told Moseley that he was going to ask him two questions, the answers to which would determine whether or not his organization would do business with him. The first question was 'How do you feel about the assassination of President Kennedy?' to which Moseley shrugged his shoulders and said, 'It's no skin off my nose either way.' The second question was, 'Who do you know from Cuba and how can we check up on you?' to which Moseley replied that he knew Michael Ponce (phonetic) and that he, Moseley, had been arrested by the Chicago Police Department for this very same activity in which he was now engaged, and that to verify this all that had to be done was to check the records of the Chicago Police Department. The unknown Cuban stated that he knew Michael Ponce and that the organization to which he belongs would check the records of the Chicago Police Department.

2-1-266 stated that Michael Ponce had formerly been a regular Naval officer in the Cuban Navy under the Dictator Batista and that he knew that Tom Moseley had been involved in gun running activities with Ponce in the early 1950's."

Another document stated: Moseley and Echevarria "acting upon the latter's direction, drove to the vicinity of Logan Square to pick up a second Cuban male. The purpose of the meeting was to arrange a possible sale of guns by the source to the second Cuban and his organization. Echevarria never introduced, but said he belonged to quote Student Federation Revolutionaries unquote possible DRE. The second Cuban was given list of guns the source could furnish and in turn listed the items that he wanted, including explosives and detonators allegedly for sabotage purposes. The second Cuban said he had two questions to ask the source the answers to which would determine whether or not they could do business. Question one. How do you feel about the assassination of President Kennedy? The source replied quote I have not been hurt thereby so it does not matter one way or another unquote. Question two. How can we check on you. The source replied that he had been arrested by Chicago Police Department in 1952 for activities similar to those in which he was now negotiating.

2-1-266 stated that the meeting produced the following results. Moseley informed Echevarria and the unknown Cuban that he was a member of a group of six persons and that they had one 'banker.' Two of the members of this group owned a small screw factory (It should be noted at this point that automatic weapons can readily be obtained as souvenirs if the barrels have been plugged, and that it is the practice of gun-runners to obtain these plugged weapons, take them to an unscrupulous screw machine operator, and have the barrels reamed out, since the plugging is mainly lead.)

Moseley informed the two Cubans that since the assassination of President Kennedy a great deal of 'heat' had been created and that his party was willing to provide the guns to the Cubans for a nominal down payment if the Cuban group could provide them with the responsible party in the Chicago area who would vouch that the remainder of the money would be paid to them after the deal had been consummated. Moseley informed the Cubans that his group was saving six guns and should there be a double-cross they intended to take retribution.

The unnamed Cuban stated that this sounded acceptable and that if Moseley checked out at the Police Department their organization would get in touch with him through an attorney. This attorney would provide Moseley with a list of equipment which they desired, and all dealings from this point on between Moseley and the organization, would be handled through the attorney. The unnamed Cuban also stated that the list of equipment would be written in a code which would be taught to Moseley by Homer Echevarria.

Moseley was asked how he could be contacted. He stated that in the past it had been his practice to enter an ad in the personal column of a lock newspaper using the code name 'Black Foot.' It was agreed that should this group at any time in the future wish to contact Moseley they would run an ad in the personal column of the Chicago Tribune...The unnamed Cuban said the telephone number would be a pay phone, which would be covered by either him or a member of his organization for one half hour before and one half hour after the time stated in this ad...

Also discussed at the time was the subject of the backers. It is the feeling of 2-1-266 that at least some of the backers of this group are hoodlum elements, and that the backers are not restricted to Chicago. 2-1-266 stated that the unnamed Cuban is a member of the DRE.

On November 29, 1963, Special Agent Noonan was interviewed by Special Agent Walter Rogers...Rogers stated that the unnamed Cuban fit the description of one Francisco Blanco, a representative of the DRE who he met at the grocery store located at 2351 West North Avenue, Chicago, shortly after his introduction to Homer Echevarria on November 27, 1963. It was learned from Agent Rogers that OSWALD had attempted to join the DRE in New Orleans and that while OSWALD was under consideration by that group, he was discovered by members of the group distributing literature for the Fair Play for Cuba Committee:

Agent Rogers stated, in regard to an attorney who might be working with the DRE, that one Paulino Sierra, an attorney in the Chicago area who became interested in the anti-Castro movement, could possibly be the contact for Tom Moseley. Agent Rogers stated that Paulino Sierra has claimed to have a great deal of financial backing and has attempted to organize the great number of anti-Castro movements in this country. There are allegations that the financial backers of Sierra is hoodlum money, but that Sierra has denied this and states that his backers are American businessmen." [WCD 81]

ANALYSIS THE SECRET SERVICE COVER-UP

Although the initial meeting between Thomas Moseley and Homer Echevarria occurred sometime before November 22, 1963, a United States Secret Service report dated December 3, 1963, on the Homer Echevarria incident in the Hearings and Exhibits of the Warren Commission began: "In December 1963 a white American male of unknown reliability had been attempting to negotiate a sale of machine guns to a Cuban Revolutionary whose name is known." Despite the fact that Moseley had been burned, the meetings between Moseley and the Cuban exiles continued, however, no mention was made of any foreknowledge of the Kennedy assassination. The United States Secret Service concluded: "At no time did any of the conversation between the American and the Cuban reflect that the activities in which the Cubans were engaged in any way had any connection with the Kennedy assassination. None of the persons involved in this investigation had any connection with the assassination, nor was there any indication that any of the persons involved had any information concerning the Kennedy assassination. The investigation is continuing along lines other than that involved in the assassination." [WCE 2959]

TOM MOSELEY'S CREDIBILITY

"United States Secret Service Agent Noonan not certain of the reliability of the source although he has been utilized as informant in counterfeiting operations. Noonan plans to give source a lie detector test probably December 3, 1963." On November 26, 1963, Maurice G. Martineau, Acting Special Agent in Charge, United States Secret Service, Chicago, stated "Informant 2-1-266 had proved reliable in a recent counterfeiting case handled by this office." [WCD 498] The FBI:

Two FBI agents together with two United States Secret Service agents interviewed Moseley tonight. Moseley previously known to one of the participating Bureau agents [S.A. Robert Baker] as being of questionable accuracy, in that Moseley previously furnished to Bureau agent information which proved to be non-pertinent to a pending criminal case, although this information had been originally described by Moseley as of great importance.

Maurice Martineau of the United States Secret Service reported:

On November 27, 1963, I interviewed the informant, at which time he assured me that he had not gone to any other agency with this information prior to coming to this office...It will be noted from above that the FBI agents apparently had information as to the identity of our informant prior to their meeting him, as described above. On November 27, 1963, Deputy Chief Paterni verified that the identity of the informant had not been given to the FBI at the Washington level. On November 27, 1963, after my telephone call to Deputy Chief Paterni, Agents Tucker and Noonan again interviewed Special Agent Walter Rogers, FBI, at his office. Rogers was asked if he or Baker knew the identity of our informant prior to their meeting with him, and he stated that they did not. He further stated that the reason he was accompanied by Special Agent Baker when he interviewed the informant was because Baker, being attached to the major theft section of the FBI, has had extensive experience in interviewing informants. On further discussion of this matter with Agents Tucker and Noonan, I am informed that at the time of this meeting Agent Tucker joined the FBI agents in the latter's car prior to taking them to the automobile in which the informant was waiting. It is now Agent Tucker's recollection that he mentioned the informant's name to the FBI agents prior to taking them to the automobile where they were introduced to the informant. However, after the interview and out of the presence of the informant and Agent Tucker, Special Agent Noonan was discussing this matter with FBI Agents Rogers and Baker, at which time Agent Baker made the comment 'I'm along because I knew Moseley.' From this it would appear that the identity of the informant was known to the FBI prior to this meeting, which explains why a special agent of the FBI assigned to the major theft section was present for this interview. On December 28, 1970, J. Edgar Hoover wrote:

A review of this material indicates it pertained to a matter investigated by the Secret Service. No investigation was conducted by the FBI with respect to the allegations concerning Echevarria. Review of FBI records indicates the source who furnished the information concerning Echevarria had been contacted previously by the FBI in an unrelated matter. Our records do not indicate, however, that Special Agent Walter Rogers on November 27, 1963, advised Special Agents of the United States Secret Service the identity of the informant was not known to the FBI nor does Special Agent Rogers presently recall making such a statement. Under the circumstances, it would appear the decision as to whether this material should be made available to the public should rest with the United States Secret Service. [Hoover to Rhoads FBI 62-109060-6979]

The FBI:

Interview tonight reflected that the Secret Service source has been in contact with one Homer Echevarria, a Cuban co-employee of the source in Chicago. Chicago indices negative regarding Echevarria. Echevarria family in Chicago have reputation as stable members of the Cuban community. Moseley, for several weeks, has indicated to Secret Service his hope of meeting higher up person in anti Castro movement, through Echevarria, in order to find out more regarding plans for purchase of guns. This meeting has not materialized...Secret Service concern based entirely on statement allegedly made by Echevarria to Moseley regarding Kennedy. [FBI 62-109060-532]

THE 30th OF NOVEMBER MOVEMENT

The United States Secret Service report stated that Homer Echevarria was a member of the 30th of November Movement. The HSCA: "By December 3, 1963, a fuller picture of Homer Echevarria was obtained. By that date it appeared that Homer Echevarria was a member of the 30th of November Movement." In another section the HSCA stated: "[The United States Secret Service] learned that Homer Echevarria might have been a member of the 30th of November Movement." In 1994 Homer Echevarria told this author:

Exactly I was not in any group. I was not in the 30th of November Movement group or the DRE. I knew people in the 30th of November, but I was not active in any group at all. But with the people in Chicago, I used to know them, yes. I knew Prado. [Prado was the Chicago delegate of the 30th of November Movement] I was never at a meeting with Juan Francisco Blanco-Fernandez, no. My brother came out of Cuba at the end of 1960 because he was in the, how you call, in the students that was in Santa Clara, with his student group, I don't know what was the name of it, or whatever. He came over in hurry. Because my father had some connection with the American Embassy, with the Military Attache at the time, Sam Kail, who knows? He was over here in 36 hours. I never tried to buy arms for the 30th of November, I didn't know Quesada. I will be glad if the FBI and United States Secret Service check on me. I am an open book, my friend.

Homer Echevarria's statement was supported by an FBI report that stated:

Echevarria is known anti-Castro person who regularly attends meetings of various anti-Castro organizations in Chicago. He is not a leading figure in any organization. He came to Chicago from Cuba about two years ago with his father, Ebelia Echevarria, and has maintained steady employment as Chicago Transit Authority bus driver. He is married and has one child.

Ebelia Echevarria has furnished general information regarding Cuban matters to Chicago Office as a source of information. Reliable Cuban source of information Jesus Martinez advised S.A. Walter C. Rogers on November 29, 1963, he had spoken to both Homerio and Ebelia Echevarria. Martinez quoted Homerio as stating that because of the assassination of President Kennedy quote democracy has lost a great champion unquote. [FBI 62-109060-1581]

JUAN FRANCISCO BLANCO-FERNANDEZ

Although this case was under the jurisdiction of the United States Secret Service, S.A. Walter C. Rogers played an active role. After having questioned Thomas Moseley about his second meeting, S.A. Walter C. Rogers informed Thomas Moseley the other Cuban he met with was DRE Miami representative Juan Francisco Blanco-Fernandez. Juan Francisco Blanco-Fernandez [CIA 201-332676] had entered the United States illegally in October 1961. He was detained and given an indefinite parole. Juan Francisco Blanco-Fernandez became Chief of the Military Section of the DRE in Miami. On August 17, 1962, he and 17 other DRE members participated in a raid on Miramar section of Havana. On August 30, 1962, the Chief of the Investigations Division sent a memo to the Assistant Deputy Director of Security (Investigations and Operational Support) Subject, Blanco, (Fernandez) Juan Francisco #280 757 [Deleted] ID/3. G. Marvin Gentile CI/OA [Counterintelligence Operational Approval] has requested the results of Subject's FBI check be returned to their office no later than September 11, 1962." On September 21, 1962, this document was generated:

Chief/ CI/OA

Deputy Director of Security (IOS)

1. (Deleted).
2. The OS indices were searched in the Subject's name and revealed no record. The FBI has conducted no investigation on Subject.
3. No further action is contemplated by this office unless otherwise requested by you. For the Director of Security. Victor R. White.

In November 1962, Juan Francisco Blanco-Fernandez was sent to Fort Jackson, South Carolina, for a special six-month training program. [USSS CO-2-34,030, #626] S.A. Walter C. Rogers also spoke to Juan Francisco Blanco-Fernandez in advance of this meeting and again burned Thomas Moseley. On May 6, 1964 the CIA fluttered Fernandez. Homer Echevarria 1994:

That is fiction. I don't even recall Juan Francisco Blanco-Fernandez's name. I don't remember the second meeting. If you think about Kennedy, that was a bad deal. All the poor guy did was to be concerned that something big will happen. And so on. And he don't deserve what they did to him. That was real bad, real bad. What I hear about that is what everyone else hears. One says Castro, one says Cuban exiles did it.

PAULINO SIERRA AND THE MOB

Homer Echevarria had heard "We have plenty of money now, our new backers are Jews. As soon as they (or we) take care of Kennedy" from Paulino Sierra.

When Paulino Sierra was approached by Burton M. Mold and John R. Lechner Cesar Blanco said that Paulino Sierra told him that the syndicate "bragged about the money they had at their disposal, stating, 'We have millions behind us' and we are offering you a chance to become of the prominent Cuban leaders on the U.S." Cesar Blanco also stated "Paulino Sierra...had been approached by some gamblers 'from the West' to work with them. They mentioned they had 'plenty of money behind them.' Jews meant Jewish gambling interests in Las Vegas. Homer Echevarria: "I don't recall anybody by the name Paulino Sierra. Never heard of him." On July 18, 1963, Ernest I. Aragon, a United States Secret Service Agent based in Miami, submitted a report on Paulino Sierra. This report was never given to the Warren Commission. When it was sought under the Freedom of Information Act, the United States Secret Service stated it had been destroyed in 1968. Ernest I. Aragon conducted the investigation of Juan Francisco Blanco-Fernandez for the United States Secret Service, and met with a confidential source. Ernest I. Aragon learned that Juan Francisco Blanco-Fernandez was in Chicago in late November 1963. [USSS CO-2-34,030 Dir. 397 Thacker 12.9.63; WCE 2959] HEMMING told this researcher: "Aragon was a Miami guy. He was the one trying to nail Bob Brown by posing as a postal inspector. I knew him personally."

PAULINO SIERRA AFTER THE COUP

From 1964 to 1966 Paulino Sierra worked for the Government of Guatemala "on matters pertaining to the Central American Common Market." From 1968 to January 26, 1968, Paulino Sierra worked at the Cook Country Law Library as an International and Foreign Librarian. On February 28, 1968, the Chief, Security Records Division, sent SCS/OS the results of a search of the FBI's records for information on Sierra.

February 3, 1964: Sierra was mentioned in a report captioned Anti-Castro Activities.

February 11, 1964: Second National Front of Escambray. Alpha 66.

February 28, 1964: FBI document concerned Sierra and was sent to the CIA.

March 17, 1964: Comie Omnibus Aliados (COA - Allied Bus Committee)

July 25, 1964: FBI document captioned Legion Baragua.

September 8, 1964: Fuerzas Armadas De Cuba En El Exilio (FACE).

May 14, 1965: captioned Jose Luis Aquilar DeLeon, NP for OS use.

June 30, 1965: captioned Elado Del Valle Guitierrez.

July 19, 1965: Plot to assassinate Premier Fidel Castro during October Holidays 1965.

On January 26, 1968, Paulino Sierra filled out a CIA Biographic Data Employment Form. On February 23, 1968, Paulino Sierra was denied an ad hoc clearance on the basis of derogatory information. [Memo for Chicago Field Office From Thorne to Watkins 2.23.68] In January 1968 Paulino Sierra filled out a CIA Biographic Data sheet. The FBI stamped "Refer to Data Re: Eladio Del Valle Guterrez which was sent your Agency dated June, 30 1965, p.1. Refer to Date Regarding: Plot to Assassinate Castro During October Holidays, 1965." [CIA 80T01357A Box 45 Folder 31 w/h]

TOM MOSELEY THE THIRD MEETING

Secret Service Agent Joseph Noonan advised December 2, 1963, that Thomas Moseley contacted:

Homer Echevarria on December 1, 1963 in furtherance of plan to sell arms to as yet unnamed anti-Castro group. No additional comment made by Echevarria concerning death of President Kennedy. Thomas Moseley and Homer Echevarria agreed to try to bring together the Cuban male who talked to source on November 28, 1963 and source's superior, Robert Motto, for further talks relative to the financing of the proposed sale of explosives and guns. If materializes, Motto, a Secret Service agent, will carry recorder. Moseley has agreed to take lie test, but this will not be given if Moseley can arrange the proposed meet between Cuban and Motto. [FBI 124-10164-10063 - NARA 124-10164-10063]

EVALUATION OF THE ECHEVARRIA INVESTIGATION

The Warren Commission regarded all of the preceding with suspicion and Warren Commission Counsel David Slawson believed Juan Francisco Blanco-Fernandez and the DRE should have been investigated because of tie-ins with other leads. When the Homer Echevarria investigation was dropped by the United States Secret Service, for reasons which remained classified, David Slawson gave up his investigation. [USSS CO-2-34,060-397, #1222 -1225 #874, #973, #626, #523, #336, #193; WCE 2959; FBI 62-109060-6979, 1581] The HSCA criticized how the United States Secret Service handled the Homer Echevarria incident: "The Secret Service did in fact possess information that was not properly analyzed and put to use..." [HSCA R 236,134] The Homer Echevarria incident could ultimately be traced back from Homer Echevarria to Paulino Sierra to HEMMING. [Miami Police Dept. Report Lt. Ford Unit 12 R.J. Burns/mlh; FBI 105-121010-3] HEMMING told this researcher:

I worked with the 30th of November Movement. Frank Pais's organization. I knew Homer Echevarria. Never heard of Francisco-Blanco. Quesada was the interim military coordinator of November 30th when we found the organization. Carlos got a lecture from us right off the goddamn bat. We set you people up with a training camp. We're training your fucking people. We delivered them a load of explosives. By the end of 1961 the organization started coming apart. The guys who had gone to the training camp started their own organization. They had been conducting operations. If they weren't conducting operations, we wanted nothing to do with them. We found that the CIA had been supporting them, and cut them off, and it was very clear what the policy was. Now the excuse could be that they were cut off because they were cowards. Once we were satisfied that they were operational, that they weren't bullshit artists, we dealt with them. Quesada made a fairly simple decision. They had been cut off from CIA funds, they had nothing going for themselves, and they made a brave decision. 'Fuck the CIA, we're gonna do something.' They were put back on the payroll in return for not doing any more operations. They took the money and screwed the CIA. I was surprised when HUNT walked into the 30th of November Movement headquarters, which was a private residence converted into offices. But he was in some kind of an uproar at the time, having to deliver money and put these people on the payroll. They'd pulled the case officers off of 30th of November, so he had to personally show up. Quesada became a politician. He has run for Mayor of Miami time and time again. I ran into Homer Echevarria when I went to Chicago. When we were picking up some arms from Lauchli in Collinsville in the Summer of 1963 we stopped in Chicago to check on Paulino Sierra and Kangles. While there, among a large number of people, I met Echevarria. I never heard anyone I dealt with saying that kind of shit. Paulino Sierra or Echevarria never said that kind of shit. The reports are lying.

HOMER ECHEVARRIA AND THE CIA

On December 3, 1964, the CIA contacted the Echevarria family:

(Deleted) explained the need for contacts in Cuba. Neither Subject nor his father had any contacts worthy of KUBARK'S purpose. However, they felt that they knew many people in the United States who had good contacts. They said that they would devote considerable thought to people who might have contacts.

On January 6, 1965, WH/SA/EDE generated a document about the Echevarria family for WH/SA/IOS. On January 14, 1965, the Deputy Chief, WH/SA directed an Operational Trace Request to the Chief of Station, JMWAVE. On January 25, 1965, the Chief of Station at JMWAVE reported: "The only Station trace on the individuals listed in UFGW 4732 is a carded reference based on OSMA 16588, dated January 24, 1964, pertaining to Subject E Andrew K. Reuteman." On February 5, 1965, the CIA telephoned Homer Echevarria about the same Subject. On February 8, 1965, Edward P. Brown generated a memorandum about Echevarria for WH/SA/IOS. On February 8, 1965, the CIA notified the FBI that it intended to contact Echevarria in regard to "Operation Stateside #381." On February 8, 1965, Deputy Chief, WH (SA), John L. Hart, requested a Provisional Operational Approval for Homer Echevarria: For contact, assessment and possible use as an FI asset in Headquarters S/W program." In 1969 John L. Hart was HUNT'S immediate supervisor. The Provisional Operational Approval was granted on February 25, 1965, and then canceled on August 26, 1965, because of "Failure to submit PRQ-II as required under CSI No. 10-5 or to indicate any further interest in obtaining approval for the operational use of Subject." On August 23, 1967, the CIA checked with the Immigration and Naturalization Service in regard to Echevarria. [CIA 201-767409 - 1994 CIA Release] Homer Echevarria commented, Everything you are telling me is a big lie or somebody is manufacturing something. That is a lie. Could somebody else be using my identity? I will take a lie detector test. I never worked for CIA. It is a bunch of lies. I never filled out a biographic data sheet. Mail me a copy."

Homer Echevarria was mailed the relevant documents. He responded: "All you send me is a check that everybody gets when they want to be citizen besides the fact that when my father's name came up, he tried to give some information to the U.S. Government. Really, I stand by what I told you before." He was asked if he knew HEMMING:

Not really. No. That don't ring my memory bank. Let me put it this way. If I can be of any help, I would to be. But that name don't ring any memories in me. I might have met him, but I don't recall that. It was so many years ago my friend.

A Top Secret document SSS-53-265 on Homer Echevarria was filed in the Top Secret Safe in SR/OSR/BIO. [NARA 1994.04.26.09:23:43:250005]

RICHARD LAUCHLI, TOM MOSELEY AND THE MINUTEMEN

Richard Albert Lauchli of Collinsville, Illinois, was an arms dealer who had supplied Fidel in the late 1950's. Richard Lauchli was co-founder of the Minutemen in the St. Louis, Missouri, area until September 1962, when he parted company with Minutemen co-founder Robert DePugh. CIA Office of Security traces on him were heavily deleted. [Allen v. DOD CIA] The Minutemen was organized in June 1960 by right-wing paramilitarists whose goal was to become a partisan guerrilla force after the Soviets took over the United States. Minutemen literature furnished instructions in the use of explosives and also gave details for the making of explosive compounds from such readily accessible ingredients as a common fertilizer, ammonium nitrate. OSWALD wrote:

There have already been a few organizations who have declared that they shall become effective only after conflict between the two world systems leaves the world ~~country~~ without defense or foundation of government, organizations such as the minutemen for instance...The armed groups will represent the remaining hard core of fanatical american capitalist supporters...there will also be anarchist pacifist and quit probably fascist group splinter groups however all these unlike the minute men and community partisan groups, will be unarmed." [WCE 25 p14] He also wrote: "There are organizations already formed in the United States, who have declared they shall become effective only after the military debacle of the United States. Organizations such as the Minutemen...are simply preparing to redefend in their own back yards, a system which they take for granted will be defeated militarily elsewhere, a strange thing to hear from 'patriots.' These armed groups represent hard core American Capitalist supporter's. There will also be a small armed communist and probably fascist groups. There will also be anarchist and religious groups at work.

Richard Lauchli was a paratrooper in World War II, was fined $100 in 1957 for possessing firearms unlawfully transferred or made. In 1960 he was fined $500 for burglary of 23 bazookas. He was arrested at the Minutemen training session at Shiloh, Illinois, in 1961 but charges of illegal possession of weapons were dropped. Richard Lauchli and Donald Sturgis were arrested after on May 19, 1964, after a high speed chase over country roads near Clinton, Illinois. Treasury agents who made the arrest set up a trap to buy a large supply of weapons in the name of South American revolutionaries. Posing as buyers, agents set up the sale and arranged to close the deal at a farm house near Clinton. Richard Lauchli and Donald Sturgis received $17,000 in marked bills.

ARSENAL SEIZED—An unidentified U.S. Treasury Department agent examines some of the 1,000 submachine guns seized in a raid on the home of a Collinsville, Ill., man recently paroled from a federal prison sentence for firearms law violations. Agents seized the machine guns and other arms Thursday afternoon at the home of Richard Lauchli Jr., a former Minuteman, and at a farm about two miles from Lauchli's home on the edge of Collinsville. AP/WideWorld

A federal grand jury in Springfield, Illinois, indicted Richard Lauchli and Charles M. Von Kriegsfeld of Cicero, Illinois, on September 23, 1964, in connection with the seizure of a cache of weapons. Richard Lauchli pleaded guilty of transferring a machine gun without having a federal tax stamp and was sentenced to two and one half years in prison. Charges against Richard Lauchli included illegal manufacture of firearms, interstate transportation and receipt of firearms and conspiracy to sell firearms. Charles M. Von Kriegsfeld, a weapons dealer, was indicted for his part in the conspiracy. Named as a co-conspirator, but not indicted was Donald Sturgis. Thomas Moseley testified against Richard Lauchli. In The Minutemen, Harry Jones reported "Thomas Moseley, a Chicago bus driver who did part time work as an undercover for Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms and other federal investigative agencies, testified that as he and 'General Joe Camillo,' actually an Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms Agent, were collaborating with Richard Lauchli over the purchase of numerous weapons, Lauchli tried to impress the General that he was no amateur as an arms supplier. Moseley quoted Lauchli as saying: 'Well, I've supplied in the past guns to Castro...I know the personal pilot of Raoul Castro in Cuba [Howard K. Davis].' [Jones, J. Harry, The Minutemen, Doubleday 1968 p83] Richard Lauchli said, "I'm not in it for the money, I just wanted to pull some hairs from Castro's beard." HEMMING 1994:

Lauchli went to prison four fucking times serving his country. You know. Making special munitions and shit. He had an arsenal. Lauchli hated Bobby Kennedy. Thomas Moseley was a snitch to the Chicago P. D. who brought the United States Secret Service in. He was actually an undercover cop, they later found out. A narcotics detective.

On January 31, 1968, the CIA generated this document:

SUBJECT: Lauchli, Richard J. (See also Pederoso, (Amores) Acelo)

ALLEGATION: Richard Lauchli "one of the founders of the Minutemen," was allegedly caught by the FBI in a raid on an arms cache at Lake Ponchartrain in August 1963.

CIA CONNECTION: None.

SOURCE: January 1968 Ramparts article by William Turner.

OFFICE OF SECURITY INDICES RESULTS:

Negative except for a reference to his name in an Air Force Intelligence Report dated December 9, 1964. The report stated that Richard Albert Lauchli, who claimed he is a former paratrooper, was Minuteman leader in the St. Louis, Missouri area until September 1962 when he claimed he parted with Robert DePugh (Minuteman Leader); was arrested by United States Treasury agents in 1964 in connection with the non-registration of a large number of automatic weapons purchased from U.S. Army surplus and allegedly restored to operating condition by Lauchli. Lauchli reportedly organized his own group patterned after the Minutemen called Counterinsurgency Council. No significant following was noted for this group.

DETAILS:

FBI reports concerning the seizure of dynamite on July 31, 1963, at LaCombe, Louisiana were found in the Agency 201 files of Acelo (Amores) Pedroso and Dominador Espinosa Hernandez. These reports revealed that the purchase of the dynamite was traced to Richard Lauchli of Collinsville, Illinois, on July 10, 1963, from the American Cyanamid Company, St. Louis, Missouri. It was a cash purchase and Lauchli arranged for immediate delivery by picking up the items in his own delivery truck from the company's magazine at Millstadt, Illinois. Lauchli had made other purchases of ammunition from the American Cyanamid Company through his own company, LOXCO, Inc. 2010 Keebler Street, Collinsville, Ill."

Richard Lauchli was paroled on February 20, 1969, from a 10-year term in the federal penitentiary at Terre Haute, Indiana. He was arrested April 27, 1969, by federal agents who said they had seized a cache of about 750 submachine guns and a large quantity of arms and ammunition at his nearby farm. He was sentenced in 1970 to 12 years in prison for violations of the National Firearms Act, to be served concurrently with an earlier 8 year sentence. Richard Lauchli was paroled on May 1, 1972. In June 1976 Richard Lauchli told the St. Louis Post-Dispatch that federal law enforcement agencies know more than they are telling about the assassination of President Kennedy "but I don't want to say which ones because I'm friendly with them. Some day it will all come out but now just isn't the time." [St. L Post-Dis. 7.7.76]

Robert K. Brown was one of INTERPEN'S guerrilla warfare instructors. Robert K. Brown was born in Monroe, Michigan, on November 2, 1932. In the mid-1950's, he attended Army Intelligence Analyst Training School in Fort Holabird, Maryland. Robert K. Brown became involved in the anti-Batista movement in December 1957. He helped organize the 26th of July Movement at Colorado University and then traveled to Cuba in 1958. Robert K. Brown, contacted in July 1992, stated: "I went down to Cuba in the summer of 1958 for ten days. I went down there to work on my Masters degree in February 1959 for a couple of months. I met STURGIS briefly at the Hotel Tropicana. I went back down the same time in 1960, came back, and then I went down to Miami to work on my thesis. I ran into these guys in the Spring of 1962. They had a little half-assed camp in the Everglades. I didn't get down to their camp on No Name Key." When Robert K. Brown returned to America in April 1960, he offered to train INTERPEN members. Robert K. Brown: "I have different perspective on this. I've known GERRY for 25 years. He deals in a fantasy land. As far as conducting raids, to the best of my knowledge, he never went on one goddamn raid into Cuba. After the Bay of Pigs there was a significant quantity of Americans who came down to Miami, young guys that wanted to be soldiers-of-fortune and get a piece of Castro. After a couple of weeks of sleeping on park benches, they'd finally get smart and go home. Now there was about a dozen guys that stayed on until the last hurrah in 1969. These guys were involved in a lot of peripheral plots. As far as accomplishing anything, I always characterized them as soldiers-of-misfortune. HEMMING was the most talented of the lot. But he was dealing in this mystical land of make believe."

In June 1962 Robert K. Brown had written an article entitled, "Cuban Exiles Have Learned to Hate The CIA." He held the CIA responsible for the lack of anti-Castro activity in the Miami area. He accused the Cuban Revolutionary Council of having cut back exile funding. Robert K. Brown went through the CIA's garbage. Because of his propensity for raiding trash bins and dumpsters in his CIA surveillance, Robert K. Brown was described by DAVID PHILLIPS as "one of the first garbologists." Robert K. Brown recalled, "We found out about an alleged CIA front. All we had was the location and the name 'Caribbean Marketing and Research.' I pulled out a document marked Secret. I called Jay Mallin who referred me to an FBI Agent. The next night there was no garbage there at all." The CIA reported:

Robert K. Brown attended the Infantry Officers Associate Career Course at Fort Benning, Georgia, beginning in October 1963 and appeared to his classmates and faculty members as being irrational in his outlook on anything connected with Communism. This change of opinion on Brown's part concerning Castro resulted in his active participation in the affairs of Cuban exiles and attempts to raise funds for weapons to be used against Castro. These anti-Castro efforts on Subject's part was believed to demonstrate a lack of discretion incompatible with the standards of members of the Counter-Intelligence Corps. On September 25, 1964, Subject's Intelligence MOS was revoked and he was declared ineligible for any intelligence assignment. It was noted that most of Subject's overt activities, both pro and anti-Castro, took place after his release from active duty with the CIC MOS and during a period when he still had a Reserve Obligation.

Robert K. Brown was asked about his whereabouts on November 22. "That's one you can't pin on me, Weberman. I was in the training battalion at Fort Benning, Georgia."

Joe Cavendish Garman "LITTLE JOE GARMAN" was arrested in Frankfort, Kentucky, on November 8, 1959, and charged with CCDW. On August 19, 1960, he was arrested for illegal transportation of alcoholic beverages for resale. He was fined and given 30 days in jail. On July 10, 1961, he was arrested for vagrancy in Fort Lauderdale, Florida.

RICHARD WHATLEY: HEMMING told this researcher that Whatley came over to INTERPEN from the STURGIS' group. Robert K. Brown interviewed Whatley on September 16, 1972.

Q. What knowledge do you have of the Operations STURGIS participated in?

A. I built him a bomb, out of an oxygen bottle. Capped it, fused it, filled it with 50# of C-3 plastic explosive. He dropped it. It did not explode because it was 'safetied' the safety device had not been removed. There is no doubt in my mind that STURGIS was involved with the Pittsburgh Mafia because I was there. I watched them play poker when there was $20,000 on the table. TRAFFICANTE and his boys. STURGIS was our leader, but it turned out the ultimate conclusion was that TRAFFICANTE was his backer. He was our money.

Q. What relationship was there between TRAFFICANTE and the Pittsburgh crowd?

A. They were all together as far as I know. Rothman taking orders from Pittsburgh Phil and Phil taking orders from TRAFFICANTE. In that hotel owned by Rothman. [Westmoreland Tribune Review 10.25.77 Doris O'Donnell]

FRANK STURGIS'S REAL NAME (FIORINI) WAS IN OSWALD'S ADDRESS BOOK

The name "Forinis" appeared in OSWALD'S address book.

Asked to assess that entry in 1978, STURGIS responded:

A. If that name is me, I guarantee he got me in there to be set up to be killed, because at that time I was very strongly anti-Communist, my name was in the paper quite a bit, and he, supposedly by his wife's testimony, made an attempt to kill General Walker, who was an outspoken --

Q. John Connally was in the address book.

A. Whatever; and RICHARD NIXON, and so forth.

Q. Do you feel that you were in the same class on a hit list of OSWALD'S?

A. If that is my name there. I don't think that's my name there, but if that is my name, I would assume that this is his reason.

The words "Russ for Forin" also appeared. The letters "I-n" were written in a different ink. HEMMING: "F-o-r-I-n. He's using a phonetic misspelling to indicate something else. You're correct."

FRANK FIORINI STURGIS 1924 TO 1945

It was unclear when FRANK FIORINI'S mother, Mary Vona, was born. In 1945 Mary Vona listed her age as 35 years old on her daughter's birth certificate. Frank Angelo Fiorini wed Mary Vona in 1920 in Norfolk, Virginia; their son, FRANK ANTHONY FIORINI was born on December 9, 1924. Both Frank's mother and father were first generation Italian-Americans. The Fiorini family was in the produce business. Italian was spoken quite a bit in the household so Frank grew up bilingual. STURGIS told the Rockefeller Commission that his father's name was Angelo Anthony Fiorini. "Both of my mother's parents were born in Italy, and both of my father's parents were born in Italy." His parents were divorced in 1926 shortly after Frank's older half sister, Carmella, age 6, was killed in a fire. FRANK FIORINI moved to the home of his aunt, Kathleen Parsons, in Philadelphia. This dwelling was a former servant's quarters. Also living there were Frank's Aunt Katherine and her son, Joey, who was a few years younger than Frank. He was very close to his cousin and considered Joey a brother. Unfortunately, Joey was killed during the Korean War. Frank was deeply affected by his death which he blamed on the Communists in North Korea and their ally, Red China.

FRANK FIORINI lived in Philadelphia from 1930 to 1942. In 1939 Mary Vona married Ralph Sturgis. During his deposition in HUNT v. WEBERMAN, STURGIS was not asked if his stepfather legally adopted him, but the FBI found no indication of this during its investigation. FRANK FIORINI went to Catholic school then attended Roosevelt Junior High School, Philadelphia, and Germantown High School, Philadelphia. At 16, his I.Q. was 96. After two years of high school, FRANK FIORINI became an apprentice machinist, and worked in a ball bearing factory. STURGIS would later claim that:

Before the war I had strong leanings toward becoming a Catholic priest. And, if the war hadn't come about, I would have. But then the war came, and I felt very patriotic and very strong in wanting to defend this country: patriotism became a substitute for the priesthood . . . .

MILITARY SERVICE

In his senior year of high school, Frank joined the Marines in Philadelphia on October 5, 1942. Because he was only 17 years old his mother had to give her written permission. His term of enlistment was for "THE DURATION OF THE NATIONAL EMERGENCY". In October 1942 he trained at Parris Island, South Carolina. His infantry weapons record listed him as a "sharpshooter." STURGIS was shipped to the Pacific jungles, where, on March 16, 1943, he volunteered for the Marine's toughest unit, the First Marine Raider Battalion, First Marine Raider Regiment, First Marine Amphibious Corps - the legendary Edson's Raiders, where he was a message center man.

STURGIS said he "Went behind enemy lines and disrupted communications and supply lines, sent back intelligence information...prisoners if possible." [High Times Interview] He also served as an Automatic Rifleman and later as a "Rifle Gr. Lor.-(937)" He left Norfolk, Virginia, on December 15, 1942, and arrived in American Samoa in January 1943. On March 1, 1943, STURGIS left American Samoa and sailed to New Caladonia. In May 1943 he left New Caladonia for Guadalcanal. He participated in action against the enemy on New Georgia Island, British Solomon Islands, from July 4, 1943, to August 29, 1943. On September 4, 1943, STURGIS' unit was given this commendation:

The part played by your force, (Deleted), is a story of sacrifice and hardship that will long live in the pages of American Military History. In the face of heavy odds of weather, dense jungle, and savage resistance by the enemy, in virtually impregnable positions, your forces carried the fight to the Jap, in the (Deleted) region, relentlessly and with superb heroism, pinning the enemy to the ground and with the aid of elements of the (Deleted) Division, flanking him from the south, forced him to eventually withdraw. M. F. Harmon, Lt. General.

Secretary of the Navy James Forrestal wrote this commendation:

For outstanding heroism in action against enemy Japanese forces, during the invasion of Guam, Marianas Islands, From July 21, 1944, to August 10, 1944. Functioning as a combat unit for the first time, the First Provisional Marine Brigade forced a landing against strong hostile defenses and well camouflaged positions, steadily advancing inland under the relentless fury of the enemy's heavy artillery, mortar and small arms fire to secure a firm beachhead by nightfall. Executing a difficult turning movement to the north, this daring and courageous unit fought its way yard by yard through the mangrove swamps, dense jungles and over cliffs and though terrifically reduced in strength under the enemies fanatical counter-attacks, hunted the Japanese in caves, pill boxes and foxholes and exterminated them. By their individual acts of gallantry and their indomitable fighting teamwork throughout this bitter and costly struggle, the men of the First Provisional Brigade aided immeasurably in the restoration of Guam to our sovereignty.

STURGIS was in Guadalcanal in January 1944 and engaged in combat with the enemy on New Georgia Island, British Solomon Islands. On March 17, 1944, STURGIS embarked on board APD's and sailed from Guadalcanal and participated in the seizure of Emirau Island. On March 23, 1944, he was back in Guadalcanal. On May 30, 1944, STURGIS embarked on board an LST at Guadalcanal and sailed there from on May 31, 1944.

On July 21, 1944, he disembarked at Guam Island, Marianas Group, and participated in action against the enemy. He was wounded in the right wrist in Guam on July 21, 1944, (STURGIS had a one inch scar outside his right wrist), and won the Purple Heart in August 1944. No disciplinary action was noted in his records. He had attained the rank of Corporal. His principal duties were "Machine Gun crew man, Automatic Rifleman F. T. Leader." He left Guam on March 14, 1945, and disembarked March 15, 1945, at Okinawa, and participated in action against the enemy. He left there on May 7, 1945. On May 30, 1945, STURGIS left Guam and arrived in Seattle, Washington, on June 17, 1945. STURGIS: "I was considered, with my Marine training for those years, to be an expert in all types of weapons." [Rock. Comm. Test. p25] While on leave, STURGIS fathered a son, Ronnie Sturgis, born July 1, 1944. Ronnie Sturgis advised the FBI in 1967: "My father abandoned me. My mother died when my father was overseas. I first contacted my father in 1960, after I saw an article about him in Parade magazine."

ALMOND KINZELL HULSEY

STURGIS' mother, nee Mary Vona, divorced Ralph Sturgis and married Almond Kinzell Hulsey, (born January 4, 1913 died April 1974) a 32 year old bus driver for the Miami Transit Company, in 1945. STURGIS told the Norfolk Police Department his mother's name was Mary Hulsey. [FBI 139-4089-146] Hulsey and Mary Vona Fiorini Sturgis had a child: The Navy reported:

To Whom This May Concern: June 4, 1945

Subject: Mrs. Mary Fiorini, mother of Corp. FRANK A. FIORINI, USMC.

1. Subject Mrs. Fiorini is a patient under the care of medical officers at this dispensary before and since the delivery of her last baby on February 24, 1945 at the U.S. Naval Dispensary, Miami Beach, Florida. At present she is very much concerned with the care of herself and the infant who is a feeding problem.

2. According to the credited information from Subject, Mrs. Fiorini, and from Navy Relief investigators, she is a dependent-in-fact of her son, Corp. FRANK A. FIORINI, who has served with the Marines overseas for three years and was wounded in action. Her present infant is the child of a civilian who disappeared five and a half weeks after their marriage. She must take care of the child and herself without help, and lives on the dependant's allowance contributed by her son in the Marines. It is therefore natural that she desires that her son be transferred to duty in this locality and she does in fact need assistance which is not otherwise available. At the same time she is very proud of her son, as a Marine, and does not wish him to leave the service.

CARMELA FRANCES HULSEY

Mary Vona gave birth to Carmela Frances Hulsey. Carmela Frances Hulsey committed suicide on February 9, 1971. [FBI 139-4089-861, 122, 911 w/h] The FBI reported:

The following investigation was conducted by S.A. Joseph O'Brien at Norfolk, Virginia: On August 10, 1972, a photograph of one Carmela Francis Moore, who is described as a white female, date of birth February 24, 1945, 5' 3" tall, weighing 103 pounds, blue eyes, blonde hair, was exhibited to Angelo Fiorini, the father of subject FRANK ANTHONY FIORINI. Angelo Fiorini identified this photograph as being a step-sister of subject FIORINI. Angelo Fiorini advised that this girl had accidentally died in the city of Norfolk, Virginia, approximately a year and half ago. Fiorini stated that prior to her death, MOORE, whose maiden name was Hulsey, had been divorced from her husband Michael Moore and had subsequently remarried. Fiorini stated that Francis was born to his former wife Mary, and her second husband, whose name was Hulsey. Fiorini said he did not know what Moore's married name was at the time of her death. Fiorini indicated that Moore used to work as a photographer for one Milton Maser. Maser is deceased; however his business accounts were previously handled by one Herb Levin.

Through Levin the FBI was able to determine the Moore had remarried under the name Aubrey. Aubrey's death certificate indicated that she had died on February 9, 1971, by suicide, as Aubrey shot herself.

1945 TO 1956

STURGIS was discharged as a Corporal on October 23, 1945 due to demobilization. Prior to his discharge from the Marines in 1945, STURGIS entered Sun Valley Naval Center, Idaho, because of "exhaustion and possible psychoneurosis" and "somnambulism." STURGIS told High Times Magazine:

I didn't realize that volunteering to join the service would radically change my whole concept of life. I was wounded twice. I received several medals and commendations. My last major operation was in Okinawa. I was sent back from a hospital ship with shell shock, they called it 'psychoneurosis hysteria.' I jumped ship many times to get back to my unit. I couldn't sleep. You see, the rule in the Pacific at that time was that if a man was wounded twice he was sent back to the United States automatically. Well, not only was I wounded twice, I spent over the enlisted time and even volunteered to stay longer.

High Times asked: "So they thought you were crazy?"

Well, I'd been in so many battles, I think possibly I was trying to prove something to myself by going into the service - not ever having killed a person in my life, then being trained and brainwashed to kill people in all different aspects of warfare and hand-to-hand combat. Killing people with a knife. Silent killing. I was trained at this and I was very good at it.

STURGIS suffered from combat fatigue. STURGIS escaped three times from the Sun Valley Naval Center before he was given a medical release. [Jack Anderson Wash. Post 12.60] He received an Honorable Discharge. STURGIS' home was listed as Miami, Florida, on the Discharge. STURGIS had become a Marine at age 17 and engaged in combat almost immediately. If not for World War II, FRANK STURGIS may have become a priest. STURGIS survived years of intensive combat including Iwo Jima, Okinawa and Guadalcanal, which was located in the Solomon Islands. He loved combat and action. He was in so many battles that eventually he began to show signs of mental instability.

BETTY FIORINI

In 1945 STURGIS moved to Miami, where he married Nora Odell Thompson, aka Betty Fiorini, born June 13, 1938 at Radford, Virginia. Nora Odell Thompson had a record of arrests for prostitution. The FBI reported: "According to the records of Norfolk, Virginia, Police Department, Thompson was last arrested at that city on August 7, 1953." STURGIS told Robert Olsen of the Rockefeller Commission that "He started getting involved with Cuban people in Miami in about 1945. Carlos Prio was first forced out of Cuba by Batista in 1946. STURGIS' uncle was married to a Cuban woman and was either in exile or was visiting Florida." [RCD Olsen telephone conversation with STURGIS 4.29.75] STURGIS and Nora Odell Thompson moved to Norfolk, Virginia, in June 1946, so that STURGIS could join the Police Force there. He was employed as a Norfolk City Patrolman from June 5, 1946, to September 7, 1946. According to his nephew Jim Hunt, "Within a few months, he found evidence of corruption in the form of a pay-off system that existed within the force which he brought to the attention of his superiors. Instead of doing something about it, they told him to overlook these illegal activities." On October 5, 1946 Frank had an open confrontation with a sergeant over this at roll call and resigned that same day. The FBI reported that he quit the Police Department, no reason given, and worked as a bartender and nightclub manager of the Virginia Tavern, in Norfolk, Virginia. James Hunt reported, "For the next 18 months he managed a Norfolk tavern called Havana-Madrid, which catered to foreigners, particularly Cuban merchant seamen. On November 9, 1947 Frank joined the Naval Reserves and was stationed at the Norfolk Air Base. STURGIS was in the United States Naval Reserve at the Norfolk Air Station from November 9, 1947 to August 30, 1948. During this time Frank was able to continue to work at the bar in addition to learning a skill in the Navy he would use throughout his life—flying airplanes. Frank was honorably discharged from the Navy on August 30, 1948 and the next day he joined the Army, his third and final armed services branch. He was immediately deployed to Berlin where he became a member of General Lucius Clay's honor guard." During his Army tenure in Berlin and Heidelberg, Frank worked in an intelligence unit and had a top secret clearance. As a Marine Raider, Frank had his first involvement in intelligence activities during the island-hopping campaign in that sometimes he would sneak behind enemy lines and gather data and intelligence information. In the Army, the primary intelligence target was the USSR. Frank's intelligence work consisted of collating and analyzing intelligence data.

Documents indicated STURGIS was granted a Top Secret clearance and he handled reports from Allied agents in Berlin. In May 11, 1949 Frank was granted an honorable discharge so he could help support his mother who was in financial need. In 1949 he was the owner and manager of the Whitehorse Tavern. [Dept. of Navy FOIA req. 5720 ARAD 5U000597 3.14.95 B.L. Thompson; Watergate FBI file on STURGIS] After receiving an honorable discharge he joined the United States Merchant Marines in 1950 and traveled to and from Europe. The Norfolk, Virginia, Police Department files reflected that FIORINI was fingerprinted as an applicant for a National Defense Program on January 27, 1950. STURGIS: "I went to Europe in the early 1950's. I was with the Army Security Agency in Heidelberg, Germany, which was EUCOM Headquarters. While I was there I met a young lady with the Israeli Intelligence that I found out later on was a Hungarian actress...I was going to Officer's Candidates School, and I declined on that." [Rock. Comm. Test.]

While stationed in Berlin, he rescued a beautiful Hungarian actress. As Frank told High Times:

Well, I was in Berlin with a soldier friend of mine and we heard some screaming and ruckus that was going on in an alley. We went to investigate because we heard a woman's voice. And we got mixed up with three young Germans and had a nice little battle with them. The girl was pretty well beaten. Later I found out that she was a Hungarian actress, Jewish, and the three Germans belonged to the Nazi youth party that was still operating underground in Germany. Having saved her life, I developed a very good relationship with this young lady who started visiting me in the barracks and all. I didn't realize until later that she was the girlfriend of one of the army colonels who was on General Clay's staff. The Colonel found out about us and shipped me out of Berlin. Through a fickle finger of fate I wound up with the Army Security Agency. When I returned to the States, I was still going with her. I became suspicious of some of her activities. I found out she was working very hard for the liberation of Israel and I told her I would certainly help her in Israel if I could because I was very sympathetic to the underdog. I returned to Europe, met her again and helped her in her activities over a period of years. I assisted her as a courier in some of the work she did for Israel. As the years went by her work became more serious and there were some things I could not do, for her. Eventually, I lost contact with her, and to this day, I don't know if she is dead or alive.

He moved to Miami and found work as a taxi driver. In June 1950 he was arrested for beating Nora Odell Thompson. From 1952 to 1954 STURGIS owned and managed a bar in Virginia Beach, Virginia. In 1952 his Dependency Discharge was changed to an Honorable Discharge. On September 23, 1952, STURGIS filed this petition:

VIRGINIA: IN THE CIRCUIT COURT OF THE CITY OF NORFOLK

IN RE: FRANK ANGELO FIORINO

PETITION FOR CHANGE OF NAME

To the Honorable Clyde H. Jacob, Judge:

Your petitioner, FRANK ANGELO FIORINO, respectfully represents the following facts:

1. That he is a resident of the Commonwealth of Virginia, and was born in the city of Norfolk, Virginia, on December 9, 1924, and has resided and been domiciled in the City of Norfolk, State of Virginia, since his birth.
2. That he is the son of Mary Fiorino (whose maiden name was Mary Vona) and Angelo Fiorino, and that Mary Fiorino, the Mother of FRANK ANGELO FIORINO, divorced her husband, Angelo Fiorino, about fifteen years ago, and that his Mother married one Ralph Sturgis, and that he has been living with his Mother, ever since birth in the City of Norfolk, State of Virginia.
3. Your petitioner desires to change his name from FRANK ANGELO FIORINO to FRANK ANTHONY STURGIS, for the reason that he has been living with his mother all of his life, and that she is known as Mary Sturgis, and that it is also the desire of his step-father to have his name changed from FRANK ANGELO FIORINO to FRANK ANTHONY STURGIS. (Signed) FRANK ANGELO FIORINO. On September 23, 1952, STURGIS petition was granted.

STURGIS was questioned about this name change in the course of HUNT v. WEBERMAN:

Q. Did you use the name STURGIS prior to 1953?

A. No. I always used FIORINI.

Q. Did you use STURGIS prior to 1953?

A. No. No; only when my name was changed because my stepfather, because of my stepfather, his name was Ralph Sturgis.

Q. So in 1953, you adopted the name STURGIS legally.

A. Yes.

Q. And from that time forward you shifted from FIORINI to STURGIS?

A. I only use FIORINI on legal matters.

Q. Do you remember how old you were when your mother remarried?

A. God. I can't remember. I believe she was married either in Carolina, or in Virginia.

This petition contained numerous false statements. First, the name FIORINO instead of FIORINI was used. FRANK signed the document "FIORINO." FRANK was living with a prostitute at the time, not with his mother and father. Ralph Sturgis had either divorced Mary Vona, or left Mary Vona when she became involved with Hulseley and gave birth to his child. By the time STURGIS returned to Norfolk, Ralph Sturgis was long gone, so his story that he wanted to adopt his stepfather's name was totally false. STURGIS told the Rockefeller Commission: "Well, the reason for that was that I felt there were too many Fiorinis, Frank Fiorini especially. I don't know. My mother wanted me to change the name, really, she influenced me to change the name from FIORINI to STURGIS, because she had a bad situation with my father and hated the Fiorini family. So naturally she convinced me, I want you to change your name to STURGIS from FIORINI."

On September 20, 1954, Betty Fiorini was shot in the head and killed by Lyghia Buckwater. The FBI described both women as prostitutes. Buckwater was sentenced on October 15, 1954, to 15 years in prison for second degree murder. The FBI reported:

On instant date, Bureau agents interviewed subject's former wife, Juanita Fiorini Sturgis, presently remarried and known as Juanita Nelson...Nelson advised that she met Subject in approximately 1954 and married him at Norfolk, Virginia, in May 1956. Subject deserted her in March 1957, at which time he apparently went to Cuba to work for Castro as a mercenary. During the time she knew him, Subject was employed as a tavern manager at various bars in downtown, Norfolk, Virginia, also, Subject allegedly engaged in gambling activities; however no specifics known regarding this. Also, Subject worked for an insurance company, name unknown, and at Walker Realty, Norfolk, Virginia, as a real estate salesman. Nelson stated that the Subject had been married one time before; however she did not know where Subject had married his former wife, known to her only as Betty. Nelson said that Subject's former wife, Betty, was shot and killed by another woman, but did not know the exact location or date of this incident. Nelson stated that on one occasion prior to her marriage to STURGIS, she took a trip down with him to Miami, Florida; however she did not know what her husband did at that time. After their marriage in May 1956 they returned to Miami, Florida, for a trip, at which time Subject attended pro-Castro meetings at a convention hall on Flagler Street in downtown Miami. This trip was of short duration and the last one she took with the Subject to Miami. During the time they resided together, Nelson wrote several letters to various Cubans in Miami and Cuba for the Subject. In these letters, the Subject offered his services to Castro as a mercenary. Just prior to his leaving Norfolk, Virginia, for Cuba in March 1957, STURGIS started a check-kiting scheme so that he could finance his trip to Cuba. Subject was never prosecuted for this, nor did he ever repay the money. Nelson was not sure at which bank this scheme was perpetrated. Nelson stated that she divorced the Subject sometime in the early 1960's; however, she could not remember the date. After the Subject returned from Cuba, she remembers seeing him on three different occasions in Norfolk, Virginia. On the first occasion, Subject was still in the employ of Fidel Castro and was passing through Norfolk en route to New York City on official business for Cuba. The second time she saw him was in the home of James Kestner, a writer for the Virginian-Pilot and Ledger Star, daily newspapers in Norfolk, Virginia. Nelson thought that this meeting took place in 1960 and believed it was after STURGIS had left Castro. Nelson said she saw STURGIS one other time in Norfolk, Virginia, and thinks it was around 1965, however, she could give no details regarding this meeting. Nelson said that while the Subject was working for Castro she met him on two or three occasions in hotels in Washington, D.C. and New York City. During the last meeting in New York, STURGIS told Nelson he was disenchanted with Castro's activities and was thinking of talking to the CIA...On instant date, records of the Circuit Court, Norfolk, Virginia, indicated that Subject's wife, Juanita Fiorini was granted a divorce from Subject under the name FRANK ANTHONY FIORINI (STURGIS) on May 2, 1961. She was awarded a decree vinculo matrimonii and divorce was based on desertion. Instant date (Deleted) advised Subject, under name FRANK FIORINI, attended the college of William and Mary College at Norfolk, Virginia, as a part time student during the spring semester, 1954 and fall semester 1954 and 1955.

Subject was dropped on January 24, 1955 for non-attendance. [FBI 159-4089-474]

CUBAN AFFAIRS 1956

STURGIS traveled to Miami in 1956, where he met Carlos Prio Soccarras. STURGIS: "I had family on my mother's side living in Miami. One of my uncles lived there married a Cuban woman. My uncle's name was Angelo Vona. And this is how I got involved in the Cuban situation. She lived here in exile during the time of Fulgencio Batista. She was one of President Carlos Prio's people." At this time, Carlos Prio Soccarras was funding Fidel Castro, who allegedly had promised to restore him to the presidency, should his revolution against Fulgencio Batista prove successful. No one ever questioned STURGIS' uncle, Angelo Vona, who was allegedly married to a Cuban exile. We have to take his word that this was how he first became involved in anti-Batista activity. Former U.S. Customs agent Wallace Shanley recalled the FRANK FIORINI of the late 1950's:

FRANK was trying to bring arms into Santiago, Cuba. He and another soldier-of-fortune had gathered up a collection of this and that, without any clear mandate from Fidel or anybody. They didn't seem to have any real connection. They just wanted to get it in, and use these arms as an entré and so forth. They usually obtained the arms from Interarmco, but as I remember, it was such an assortment of gun shell type materiel, I can't see this as a clear shipment from Interarmco. It was an amateur effort. Now a young man came to me and he said, 'I am working with this guy named FRANK FIORINI, he's down in Cuba now. I have kinda lost my stomach for this business, and besides, I've fallen in love with a girl. I need $500, and I want to get the hell out of here and see no more of FRANK FIORINI.' I sent him to someone at the Cuban Consulate who was very skilled in security matters. He promised the kid $500. The kid gave me an affidavit whereupon I searched FRANK'S house and in the house I found what I expected - an arms cache. The Consul said, 'We nailed that guy FIORINI down in Santiago and we have him down there. We're kind of done with him. We kinda of weakened him, and we don't think he wants any more of it. What would you do if he came up here?' I said 'I would arrest him.' When he returned I gave FRANK a preliminary hearing. He wasn't represented, so the Commissioner asked him if he had anything to say. He said, 'Oh yes' and he pulled up his lose shirt and his back was a mass of welts. It was all colors of the rainbow. But FRANK always had this wonderful smile. Fidel was very much indebted to him. It was hard to get arms in there.

When STURGIS returned to Norfolk from Miami, he was arrested for immoral conduct: cohabitation with Juanita K. Terrell. On May 11, 1956, he and Juanita K. Terrell were married. The family of Juanita K. Terrell was close to Carlos Prio Soccarras, and she had been the Subject of an FBI investigation. He met with Juanita K. Terrell in Washington, D.C., just before a flight to Cuba in March 1957. STURGIS told High Times Magazine about when he first met Fidel Castro: "It was in Miami at the Flagland Theater, [in 1957] where he had a meeting with the Cuban colony. One of his principal underground chiefs in the Miami area was the owner of the Pollack Restaurant in downtown Miami. So, through Mr. Pollack, who I got to know, I met Fidel. I was introduced and Fidel says, 'I can use people like you. With your past experience, I can use people like you in the revolution.' Fine, when you need me, call me, I told Fidel. In 1957 FRANK sold his interest in the Norfolk bar he owned called The Top Hat to his partner, Sam Bass, and moved to Miami.

INTERARMCO

STURGIS obtained weapons from International Armaments Company - INTERARMCO - of Alexandria, Virginia. Samuel Cummings, the President of INTERARMCO had been associated with the CIA in Guatemala in 1954. Many of the rifles that STURGIS obtained from Interarmco were surplus 6.5 millimeter Mannlicher-Carcanos. STURGIS was asked about this coincidence. STURGIS:

I possibly could have purchased Mannlicher-Carcanos, if they had them, yes I could have. As a matter of fact, you are recalling something for me which is...

In 1964 the FBI speculated OSWALD'S ammunition came from four million rounds of 6.5 millimeter ammunition that had been sold to the Marines in 1954. When the FBI ascertained the Marine Corps did not use this caliber, the agents conjectured that the Marines were merely a CIA cover used to make the purchase. HEMMING told this researcher: "INTERARMCO was selling tons of that shit in 1963."

1957 TO 1958

In late 1957 STURGIS met Pedro Diaz Lanz, then a young rebel air force pilot stationed in Santiago de Cuba, and established contact with the CIA at the United States Consulate there, and at the U.S. Embassy, Havana. In On January 28, 1958 the FBI generated a document about STURGIS titled: "Richard Meredith Sanderlin, Miami, Florida" [Allen v. DOD #04490] STURGIS was picked up in Miami for "Illegal Possession of Munitions of War" on July 24, 1958. [FBI 2-1499, serials 1-20] The FBI reported:

On July 24, 1958, United States Customs Service raided two residences in Miami, Florida, and seized large quantities of rifles, machine guns, ammunition and dynamite. One of these residences was rented to FRANK STURGIS. STURGIS returned from Cuba on July 30, 1958, and on his arrival in Miami he was arrested by the United States Customs Service for violation of Federal law.

STURGIS was charged with violations relating to the conspiracy to illegally ship arms from the United States. United States Customs Agent Wallace Shanley recalled:

FRANK and I go back a long ways when he was running guns for Carlos Prio Soccarras. He was an interesting kid. When he first showed up on the surface there, I visited his house. He was going by the name of FRANK STURGIS 'cause his real name had a mafia twang to it. He had a lot of pictures of himself in boxing poses. And I thought, this kid's going to be interesting. He proved to be, over a long period of time. FRANK is a survivor. The whole problem was these hit and run attacks against Fidel. Castro was going to respond excessively. He had these damn missiles cocked and loaded. He wanted no more attacks from the United States. He called them invasions. Kennedy took a paralyzed oath that no more of that would go on. Border Patrol moved in 200 men. The FBI had its 'tamale squad' in the area.

On July 29, 1958, the Miami FBI generated a document about STURGIS: "26th of July Revolutionary Movement." (no file #) On July 30, 1958 the FBI Field Office in Washington, D.C., generated a Letter Head Memorandum about STURGIS. Frank Anthony Sturgis (true name) with aliases Frank Attila, Fred Attila, Fred Frank Fiorini Washington DC (no file #) On July 30, 1958 CIA generated a document about STURGIS. A few months later the federal charges against STURGIS were dropped and STURGIS never went to trial. The FBI reported:

On March 19, 1959, Pat Moller, United States Attorney's Office, Miami, Florida, advised that the office contained no report regarding arrest of the Subject. She stated that a card file reflected that the Subject was given a hearing on July 30, 1958, and was released on $500.00 bond. The specific charge was Illegal Possession of Munitions of War. She said that no time for the Subject's trial had been set, and that there was no notation that there is a warrant outstanding against the Subject.

A report on STURGIS dated October 8, 1958, by the CIA, stated: "Subject is in custody of Cuban Army Military Intelligence Service on suspicion he acted as a 26th of July Movement courier between Miami and Santiago de Cuba. Details of activities in Cuba contained in DBF 8393, July 30, 1958." [CIA FOIA F810351D01854] On October 10, 1958, the CIA generated an Index Card (deleted)-02765) that stated STURGIS was a "suspected courier for the 26th of July Revolutionary Movement, Cuba." According to STURGIS, CIA Agents in the American Embassy, Havana, affected his release from detention.

SMUGGLING GUNS TO CUBA FROM MEXICO

The CIA reported that on November 4, 1958,

STURGIS left Mexico for San Francisco to meet Richardo de la Lorie and Pedro Diaz Lanz, Cuban rebel pilots...Called Gustavo Arcos from Yuma, Arizona, saying not able to locate de la Lorie. Arcos gave him de la Lorie phone number in Phoenix. De la Lorie, in conversation (phone) w/Silvio Pena on November 8, 1958, said he had reserved hotel room, Hotel Roosevelt, San Francisco for subject. Pena told Lorie regarding contents Subject's car that he took everything." [Deleted 2754, IN 25120 TDCS-3/377,361 11.10.58]

In December 1958 the CIA became aware that STURGIS purchased a Curtis C-46 for $85,000 from Aerovias Sud Americano with a certified check drawn against the First National Bank, Phoenix, Arizona, on or about November 7, 1958. FBI documents concerning this purchase were heavily deleted [FBI 2-1499-34; FBI 2-1499 NR 176 12.10.58] probably because the information originated with the CIA. On November 7, 1958, the FBI Miami generated a report on STURGIS 2 - 192 (field) and 2-1499 (Bureau). On November 15, 1956, FIORINI filed a Declaration of Temporary Sojourn with the Collector of Customs, El Paso, Texas. On or about November 13, 1958, the C-46 left the United States. On November 25, 1958, the Mexican newspaper Excelsior reported 11 persons were arrested on November 20, 1958: "A news clipping from the Mexico City daily newspaper, Excelsior, of November 25, 1958, entitled "Actions Against Cuban Rebels at Apatzingan - Judicial Action at Morelia Against the Eleven Smugglers," reported that 11 persons had been arrested at Uruapan at dawn on November 20, 1956 when they were discovered endeavoring to send arms to the rebels of Fidel Castro in Cuba." The article listed the following as having been arrested: Jose Martinez Machados, Enio Leyva Fuentes, Manuel Carbowell Duque, Orlando Ventura Reyes, Pedro Luis Diaz Saenz, FRANK FIORINI, Manuel Hernandez Turro, Gustavo Arcos Dercles, Jose Alberto Mendez, Isaldo E. Rodriguez Lopez, Armando Franco Maynez, and Roberto Willarte. The article concluded by stating that FRANK FIORINI "the pilot of the plane" and Pedro Diaz Lanz had requested permission to be interviewed with an attorney present and that this request had been granted. The CIA reported: "One FRANK FIORINI arrived in Mexico City by car with Richardo de la Lorie and Pedro Diaz Lanz, Cuban Rebel pilots. November 25, 1958. Subject was arrested in Michoecan, Mexico." [TDCS-3/376,555; TDCS-3/379,043] The CIA noted "FRANK FIORINI (American) was released by Mexican authorities c/a December 5, 1958, but must report regularly to Mexi authorities until case is dismissed. [TDCS-3/380,304] Pedro Diaz Lanz had been smuggling materiel to Fidel Castro since 1957. Wallace Shanley stated:

Alan, just the feeling for the man and the situation: FRANK was doing something clandestine. FRANK did no snitching during 1957 to 1959. The place to do that, and get money for that, was the Cuban Consul, Eddie Hernandez. Not the FBI. The FBI had little money. Eddie would have laid some real money on you. He was not snitching on Fidel. Afterwards, when we head into the complex game of the CIA, FBI and everybody else, FRANK played all the different parts.

By the end of 1958, STURGIS had won the trust of Fidel Castro: "I'd go buy guns and equipment. I'd package them up, bring them to the air field, load them on the plane, run over and back to Cuba. I had to do all these things myself, personally, in order to get close to him. I had to show him that I had the intelligence to get him equipment that he needed very badly. I spoke to him while I was in Mexico, over one of the clandestine radio transmitters we had in Ecuador that would transmit directly to Cuba. And I knew him. The things I did to get close to that man. I got very friendly with him...I infiltrated the 26th of July Movement. Nobody knew that. That's why Fidel said I was the most dangerous agent the CIA ever had. Because he found out." Due to the efforts of Pedro Diaz Lanz, STURGIS rose from captain to first deputy commander in the Cuban rebel air force.

CIA Headquarters replied: "Base should deal with FIORINI under strict Consular cover STURGIS was in contact with the Central Intelligence Agency in 1959, just as he told the Rockefeller Commission. The CIA withheld the names of the personnel he was in contact will nor has the CIA released any reports based on information furnished by STURGIS. On July 25, 1958 Customs Agent Wallace Shanley confiscated an arms cache belong to Cuban Revolutionary exiles:

Shanley stated that a packaging operation apparently was carried on and that he estimated there were 50,000 rounds of ammunition and 250 guns, 130 rifles, 10 hand grenades and some dynamite. He said Richard Meredith Sanderlin, also know as Rex, had been arrested in connection with the above ammunition and that one of the persons who rented one of the above residences was Frank A. Sturgis also known as Frank Campbell. Shanley said Sturgis and Sanderlin were Marine Corp veterans who had connections with the action group of the July 26 revolutionary movement in Miami.

STURGIS COMMANDS THE FIRING SQUAD AT SAN JUAN HILL

On January 7, 1959, an Associated Press article appeared in the Norfolk, Virginia, Ledger Dispatch, a general circulation daily, regarding former Norfolk resident FRANK STURGIS. The article listed STURGIS' wife as Juanita Sturgis, Fairfax Hotel, Norfolk. His parents were listed as divorced Angelo Fiorino and Mary Sturgis, who lived in the same apartment house, Bank Street, Norfolk. Another article in the Ledger Dispatch reflected that STURGIS was a frequent visitor to a clinic where another Norfolk man, Richard Meredith Sanderlin, who had been hospitalized after being wounded fighting for Castro, was recovering. On January 8, 1959 (Deleted) INS, Norfolk, advised that "according to Section 349, Immigration and Nationality Act, Sub Paragraph 3, both STURGIS and SANDERLIN lose their American citizenship automatically, upon recognition of new Cuban Government by United States, which recognition was accomplished on January 7, 1959." [FBI 2-1499-14] On January 13, 1959, STURGIS, the CIA reported, was "under investigation probably registration act violations." [DIR-80002 OUT-61839 1.13.59] The CIA reported on January 14, 1959,

2. Rebels plan recruit 3,000 men to make up for those wishing separation and to fill positions in Army. Source (Deleted). (Deleted) reports separation staging and training camp established old Army firing range, San Juan Hill, Vista Allegro section. FRANK FIORINI in charge. (Deleted) appr 3 informed 4:00 p.m. at this camp. People this area report almost daily arrival new recruits from countryside." [CIA DOO2068]

On January 15, 1959, the wire services carried a story that STURGIS, previously believed dead, was in Cuba. Evidence of this was a photograph of STURGIS standing on a mass grave of 59 of Rolando Masferrer's Tigres, machine gun in hand. The photograph gave the impression he had just massacred the Tigres in their stronghold of San Juan, Santiago de Cuba. Another CIA document stated: "Subject claims he is under orders of Raoul Castro and awaiting orders to begin training 1,000 militia members in SACU (Santiago, Cuba) area. Source (deleted) Apr 2. FC: Number may be exaggerated." [TDCS 3/383,32 1.6.59] Another document stated: "In charge of a separation center, training camp and staging area SACU area." [TDCS 3/384,56 1.15.59] On January 20, 1959, Vice Consul Bernard Femminella of the U.S. Consulate, Santiago De Cuba, advised that he was informed that an individual known as FRANK

FIORINI was with the revolutionary forces in the vicinity of Santiago De Cuba. On January 30, 1959, the CIA received information STURGIS had a falling out with Raoul Castro over incorporating Army officers in the training program. Reportedly left SACU for Havana, where he is working with Air Force Chief.

On January 30, 1959, the Legat, Mexico City sent a highly deleted cable to the Director of the FBI.

Subject: CHANGED (Deleted) IS - CUBA. ReBullets to Miami dated November 20, 1958, and December 5, 1959, in captioned matter; also Mexico letter to the Bureau dated January 26, 1959, in case entitled FRANK ANTHONY STURGIS aka -RA. The title of this case has been marked CHANGED to reflect the addition of the maternal surname of the subject (Deleted) Available details concerning these arrest were set forth in my letter of January 26, 1959, in the STURGIS case. The information is as follows. [page deleted 2-1499 NR 1.30.59]

STURGIS was the commander of the camp in San Juan, Santiago Province, Cuba, where the 59 men were killed. He gave the order to the firing squad. STURGIS claimed he needed permission to allow St. George to photograph a mass execution. STURGIS did not need permission to do anything at the base since he was the highest ranking officer there. St. George arrived too late, so STURGIS posed on the grave of the men he had sent to their death. This act of mass murder, and STURGIS' early gun running activity, was why Fidel Castro trusted him. STURGIS could never have admitted to ordering or approving this mass execution - not with the relatives of the victims living in Miami. This photograph linked STURGIS indelibly with Fidel Castro's revolution. It also linked the 26th of July Movement with mass murder.

STURGIS' CIA CONNECTIONS IN CUBA IN 1959

STURGIS told the Rockefeller Commission:

Well, when I was on my way the first ten days of the revolution was over with I told (deleted) that I was on my way to Havana and he suggested that I contact Colonel Nichols and a Major Van Horne.

Both of these men were at the American Embassy. STURGIS continued:

And I believe (deleted) was at the (deleted) at that time, in 1959. And he was a CIA agent. (Deleted) was also there, the CIA. And I believe that he was Station Chief at the Agency. Contacting Colonel Nichols I was asked to recruit military people, and so forth. And through the recruiting of agents for the Embassy, many of them, naturally, recruited by me, had contact with me, and they said, 'Well, I am in touch with (deleted), or I am in touch with (deleted)' and so forth. In the close circle you know who is who, like I was trying to explain to the gentleman here. An agent doesn't come out and say 'I am a CIA agent.' You don't do those things...I am not sure sir whether I met Major Van Horne, and I am not sure that I met (deleted) and I am not sure I met (deleted). There is a great possibility that I did...The regular army was being disbanded, the weapons were being taken away from them. And Fidel needed time in order to get this raggidy muffin rebel force that he had, with no shoes, and so forth. I was in charge of the military police for the Air Force.

STURGIS AND DAVID ATLEE PHILLIPS: 1959

During his HUNT v. WEBERMAN deposition STURGIS was asked about PHILLIPS. STURGIS: "See, DAVID PHILLIPS - let me go back to DAVID PHILLIPS -- he worked in Havana. I am not sure whether I ever met him or not, because he was the man that I would be in touch with; but there is the possibility that he man have ran across me in the embassy and I didn't know who he was." From 1955 to 1957 PHILLIPS served as a CIA undercover agent in Cuba and Lebanon. On April 1, 1955, PHILLIPS accepted an appointment with the CIA as a Staff Employee at $9,600 a year. On February 7, 1956, he became a Staff Agent. On January 12, 1958, his pay was raised to $11,835 per year. On August 19, 1958, he became a contract agent at $7,200 per year. His term ended on March 13, 1960. Since that date PHILLIPS was a Staff Employee of the CIA. [Memo: To Chief, Contract Personnel Division Attention (Deleted) From Compensation and Tax Division, Office of Finance 6.16.66] From 1958 to 1961 PHILLIPS ran a public relations firm, DAVID A. PHILLIPS Associates, in Havana, Cuba. PHILLIPS was questioned about his relationship with STURGIS in Havana:

Q. Was FRANK FIORINI STURGIS working with you at the time [Havana 1959 to 1961]?

A. Never worked with me. And as far as I know, and I think I am in a position to know, never worked with the CIA.

Q. In a previous deposition Mr. STURGIS indicated he had done some work for you in Cuba in the early 1960's. Do you know why he would make that statement?

A. Yes. It's quite possible because of the fact that during the period which led up to the Bay of Pigs, I was responsible for all sorts of different operations which involved a group perhaps. And if the group were large, perhaps someone would say, uh-huh, this is PHILLIPS that I was working for. I don't recall having worked -

Q. (Interposing) On a one-on-one basis?

A. I might very well. I met a lot of people. I certainly don't recall.

Q. Did HUNT work with STURGIS during Bay of Pigs?

A. If they were I did not know about it. As a matter of fact, based on my experience in the CIA which had a long experience in Cuban and Latin American affairs, it's my belief that Mr. STURGIS never worked for the CIA.

Q. Okay. But you --

A. (Interposing) I am not saying he didn't know Mr. HUNT and might have worked with Mr. HUNT.

Q. Okay. But as far as your personal knowledge is concerned, you don't know --

A. (Interposing) Well, it is far beyond my personal knowledge. On many, many, occasions when I was CIA Chief of Latin American Operations at CIA, it was my job to answer inquiries from Congress, and people like that, about the affiliation of STURGIS - was he also FRANK FIORINI? Yes - his connections with the Agency. And I recall quite vividly that the answer always came up that he had not been on our payroll.

STURGIS also knew the Press Attaché at the U.S. Embassy, Paul Bethel, Time correspondent Jay Mallin, and Military Attaché Sam Kail. HEMMING told the HSCA that Sam Kail had trained Batista's troops, and was connected with the Bureau for Suppression of Communism. HEMMING stated Paul Bethel introduced him to PHILLIPS in Cuba and in the United States. When STURGIS testified before the Rockefeller Commission he named several men who were his CIA contacts. Certain names were deleted. These might have been Ross Crozier and Sam Kail. He probably did not mention PHILLIPS. PHILLIPS reports generated in January 1959 would be helpful in determining if a relationship existed between the two men. STURGIS:

Going back to the first week of the revolution in Santiago, I saved the life of a man by the name of Stretch Rubin...I took Stretch Rubin away from some rebel soldiers who wanted to shoot him. He had a bag of money on him...he was like a collector for the outfit...Later on I found out that he worked for Norman Rothman.

During his deposition in HUNT v. WEBERMAN STURGIS was asked if he had contact with Rothman in the United States: A. Well, I ran across him on the Beach with my Cuban friends. "Hello," "Goodbye," "Have drink" and then leave. That's it.

STURGIS: SUPERINTENDENT OF GAMES OF CHANCE

STURGIS told Michael Canfield:

The woman who was in charge of gambling, Pastora Nunez, was up in the mountains with me. It came under her Ministry. Fidel, one day at the Prime Minister's office, asked me if I would help Pastora Nunez with the gambling casinos. I told him yes, which of course, was a short time, because I had all these other jobs, and I was involved with all this intelligence work. I was in touch with all the Havana casino operators. I knew, I met, SANTOS TRAFFICANTE, I met the Lansky brothers, I met Charlie 'the Blade' Tourine. [born March 26, 1906] I knew Dominick Bartone [CIA 201-269887] and Dino Cellini. I met Errol Flynn. Heh, heh. I met a lot of movie actors there. I had an office where I would issue casino licenses...that's where I got to meet many of the gaming house operators...Fidel ordered me to close the casinos for ten days. The owners knew he was planning to shut them down permanently. They were mad. Those casinos were worth $100 million a year to the national crime syndicate. Every important mob boss in the United States had points [a percentage] in the Cuban casinos. Each point was worth 30 to 100 grand. Meyer Lansky and TRAFFICANTE were the top men in Cuban gambling. Meyer Lansky had direct business dealings with Batista. TRAFFICANTE was in partnership with Norman Rothman. He had several casinos, including the Sans Souci. I met Mike McLaney there. He was in charge of the Casino Nacional.

STURGIS told the Rockefeller Commission:

Stretch Rubin introduced me to Jake Lansky...McLaney, I believe he was operating the National Hotel gambling casino. TRAFFICANTE Jr...At one time Fidel personally told me, FRANK, I am going to run all of these American gangsters out of Cuba...I am going to put them all in jail if possible...I didn't tell them at that time, at the beginning that Fidel was going to get rid of them. What I did do was make my inspection of all the casinos that came under my jurisdiction at the time, and advise them of the new laws that were being put into law, advise them of the tax stamps that had to go on each piece of equipment.

An FBI document confirmed: "In 1959 FRANK FIORINI was a government inspector of gambling at the Tropicana Night Club, Havana, Cuba."

THE MOB CONTRACT ON FIDEL CASTRO - NO GREEN LIGHT

Paul Meskil reported: "STURGIS was on friendly terms with several gambling racketeers, including Hyman Levine, a Lansky mobster who ran Havana's Comodoro casino. One evening, during a casual conversation, Levine observed that it would be 'worth a million' to the syndicate to get rid of Castro. STURGIS didn't rise to this bait and Levine changed the subject." In early 1959 STURGIS said that Charlie Tourine approached him and offered him one million dollars to assist the mob in killing Fidel Castro. Meyer Lansky had put out the contract on Castro. Meyer Lansky had left Havana shortly after Fulgencio Batista departed. Norman Rothman was to act as the go-between. Nevertheless, STURGIS still lacked the go-ahead from his contacts at the American Embassy, and discussed this with TRAFFICANTE, Charlie Tourine and John Rosselli. In February 1959, two squads of assassins waited for STURGIS to get the "green light" from the CIA before dispatching them. STURGIS told Paul Meskil:

The first discussion of assassination with my CIA contacts was in February 1959. I was making reports on all the Communist activity in the military. I suggested that this would be a good time to assassinate Fidel. I said I would organize it and follow through. I would arrange an important conference at Campo Libertad. All the top commanders would come to the base in their jeeps and cars. I was going to station gunners on the roofs, set up a crossfire. I would have wiped out Fidel, his brother Raul, and all the top military commanders in 30 seconds. I asked my contact in the Embassy to get a green light on this. Whether this was to come from the top level in Washington or from a lower level I don't know. The whole idea was to kill all of them at once. Unfortunately if some of the anti-Communist officers were in there at the same time, they would have to go too. The lives of some of the anti-Communist commanders would have to be sacrificed in order to get Castro and his crew.

STURGIS told Canfield:

When I was in Cuba there, I told my CIA contact, I said, look, pass the word upstairs, 'You want me to kill Fidel?' I'll kill him if he comes to the Air Force base. I'm here in control of the military police, of the security of all the Air Force bases in Cuba. I said, 'If he comes here with Ché, if he comes there with all the top military people, with many of the ministers, I can kill him in two minutes. If you people want it done, I will do it with my people...and I'll just wipe the whole three jeeps right out, just taking two minutes to do it. Or, if you want me to do it inside the base. But I am in a position to do it, see. Because I was very close with Fidel.

The green light for the assassination was never given. STURGIS told the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin:

They wanted to know what my plan was and I said I would station my men on the rooftops of a billet near the entrance to the base and delay Castro's car as it entered. Then I was going to take off my cap as a signal to my men and they would have opened fire on him with machine guns. Well, they wanted to know how many innocent people I would have to kill and I said, 'Who cares?' [Phil. Evening Bulletin 6.17.76]

STURGIS told the Rockefeller Commission:

My excuse was for the protection of the entourage, Fidel and the military commanders that he had with him, he had a hometown bunch with him...This information was given to the American Embassy. I again did these exercises to try to get a diversion that if I would get the nod to do the execution, that I would have some means of diversionary tactics to draw attention away from the people who did the execution...I would say about six weeks after the revolution was over with there was a great deal of discontent among many of the top ranking military officers...we all discussed the assassination then...They were split on the idea of assassinating them. So they asked my opinion. And I told them 'Well, in war, innocent people do get killed.' Nichols told me to standby." The second plan "came in the last part of February, if I am not mistaken. Things came to a fever pitch. Even the American Government, through other agents inside of Cuba, in the military and so forth, were getting a lot of information about Communist activity.

CAMELLO CIENFUEGOS

STURGIS claimed he recruited Commander Camello Cienfuegos on behalf of Colonel Nichols. Camello Cienfuegos gave him enough information "that one night when I broke into the Chief of the Army headquarters -- he was Chief of the Army. I broke into their files and I did photograph and steal documents. I turned them over to Colonel Nichols." On February 2, 1959 the FBI Miami generated a report on STURGIS 2 - 192 (field) and 2-1499 (Bureau). An FBI report entitled Richard Meredith Sanderlin was generated on February 12, 1959, at Miami. [FBI 105-1643] On February 27, 1959, a document was generated by the FBI in Norfolk, Virginia, about STURGIS. [FBI 97-13 Field] 2-1499 (bureau)

THE PANAMANIAN INVASION: FEBRUARY 1959

In February 1959 HEMMING, William Morgan and STURGIS secretly marshaled a invasion of Panama. STURGIS: "Morgan said he was preparing an invasion of Panama...he wanted me to be second in command." STURGIS told Paul Meskil:

Major Morgan spoke to me confidentially. He said he was preparing an invasion of Panama and the Canal Zone. He wanted me to be second in command of the expedition. I told him I was interested but not in a leadership position. I said, 'Bill you got to be crazy, the American Government's got a military force there. You're willing to go against your own country? He said, 'Hell, the U.S. never did anything for me.' The conspirators planned to overthrow the Panamanian Government and close the canal. They were going to send a ship, loaded with explosives, through the canal locks. They were going to blow up and sink the ship somewhere near the locks, so that the gates and locks would be destroyed. Morgan figured it would tie up the canal for at least two months. He was all set to go. He had the men, guns, ships, planes, everything. I contacted the American Embassy in Havana and notified the CIA agent in charge. I took Colonel Erickson Nichols to the airbase and showed him the camouflaged planes that were to be used for the invasion and I named all the people who were involved in the conspiracy.

Those names included Margot Fonteyn, who was married to Roberto Arias, former Panamanian ambassador to Britain and son of a former president of Panama. The invasion was supposed to take place while Castro was visiting the United States. Pedro Diaz Lanz set up Camp Columbia, a training camp on the outskirts of Havana. Miro Cardona, a Panamanian national, called for the invasion. On March 3, 1959, the CIA received information that Miro Cardona "confirmed the fact that a group is ready to leave Cuba during the week." Roberto Arias rented a yacht and deposited an arms cache somewhere in the Pacific Ocean. On March 11, 1959, the CIA received information that the group intended to invade Panama.

STURGIS additionally expatriated himself by accepting an appointment on March 23, 1959, in the Cuban Air Force as a liaison officer with the United States Air Force in Cuba. The CIA reported: "Letter of March 23, 1959, reported Subject was appointed liaison officer between Cuban Air Force and United States; in March 1959 Subject stated to a Consular Officer that he was serving as chief security officer, Cuban Air Force, liaison officer, Cuban Air Force, and Cuban Government Inspector for gambling." [FS Telegram 1675; Havana 1.18.60] STURGIS: "Well the situation was getting very hot there. And I had to request from the Chief of the Air Force a document naming me as a go between liaison officer between the Cuban Air Force and the American Embassy. This was cover for me being in touch with American officials and the American Embassy." STURGIS presented a proclamation signed by Pedro Diaz Lanz to the American Embassy, Havana. An FBI report about STURGIS was generated on March 25, 1959, at Norfolk, Virginia. Subject: Richard Meredith Sanderlin [97-100 Field, 2-1499 (Bureau)] STURGIS visited the Miami FBI Office on March 31, 1959. During an interview with Bureau representatives, STURGIS described himself as a captain in the Cuban Armed Forces and exhibited documents to this effect which he described as credentials. [FBI 2-149941] The titles and contents of two of these reports were withheld.

An FBI report on STURGIS was generated on April 6, 1959, at Miami, Florida. On April 7, 1959, STURGIS was of interest to the St. Louis, Missouri, FBI Office. [Field 97-109] The Norfolk, Virginia, FBI Office filed a report on STURGIS dated April 13, 1959. [Field 97-13] On April 18, 1959, a ship carrying 35 of "Morgan's Raiders" sailed from Cuba toward Panama. On April 18, 1959, after receiving a report that the invasion ship had left from a port under William Morgan's control, the Panamanian Government order Arias' arrest. Panamanian authorities found that John Wayne had deposited $525,000 in Arias' bank account between November 19, 1957 and April 5, 1959. John Wayne said he was partners with Arias in a shrimp-exporting business. Six days later the crew landed and were taken into custody by Panamanian authorities. STURGIS associate Alexander Rorke was waiting to rendezvous with the group. STURGIS and William Morgan were arrested in Cuba. William Morgan was soon released. STURGIS stated:

In June 1959, the Cuban Intelligence did receive information that I was spying and the Second Chief of Cuban Intelligence -- who is my friend to this day -- asked to speak with me across the street from the Havana Hilton at night time, and told me to leave the country immediately because I was going to be placed under arrest for spying against, being a traitor, and this was the Second Chief of Cuban Intelligence.

The Panamanian "invasion," such as it was, was a provocation that took Fidel Castro by surprise; he was obliged to publicly dissociate himself from it. HEMMING told this researcher:

The Panama thing went bad in the latter part of February 1959 and everyone was on their guard. This wasn't sanctioned by Fidel, it wasn't sanctioned by anybody. And none of the assholes that went on this invasion were rebels, they hadn't been in the mountains, they all had short hair. The guy that organized the Panama invasion was William Pawley. He suckered John Wayne's people and everybody into the thing. Pawley met him when they were making a movie about the Flying Tigers.

PEDRO DIAZ LANZ

In early June 1959, Fidel Castro fired 25 of his top Rebel Air Force officers, including Pedro Diaz Lanz. Pedro Diaz Lanz said he had a dispute with Fidel Castro that month over Communist infiltration of the Cuban Armed Services. An order went out to eliminate Pedro Diaz Lanz. Fidel Castro suspected him of having sabotaged a plane which crashed with Raoul Castro aboard. In 1977 Pedro Diaz Lanz told HSCA investigator Gaeton Fonzi that Fidel Castro had assassinated two of his brothers, one an artist who was apolitical, and the other an invalid.

On June 17, 1959, the FBI sent this memo to its Miami Field Office

Office Memorandum United States Government
To Director, FBI (2-1499)
From; SAC Miami (2-192)
Subject: Frank Anthony Sturgis aka Frank Fiorini
IS-Cuba- RA

ReBulet to MM, captioned as above, dated June 5, 1959, instructing Miami to furnish information regarding activities of Subject [STURGIS] and recommendation for approach to him.

On April 7, 1959 MM (deleted)-S advised SA George E. Davis, Jr. that Fiorini is a Captain in the Cuban Air Force, and that Raul Castro, Chief of the Department of Defense of Cuba was believe to be investigating FIORINI for anti-Communist sympathies. (134-(deleted) Sub A-139)

On May 6, 1959 PSI (deleted Howard Kenneth Davis) (protect) stated that FRANK FIORINI had until recently, been serving as liason man by the FAR (Cuban Air Force) and U.S. Embassy in Havana, Cuba. The Embassy notified him, however, that he might lose his United States citizenship and that he had to decide between the United States and Cuba. FIORINI thereupon decided to remain in Miami in order to retain his United States citizenship. He is now conducting investigations for FAR but not for FAR intelligence. These investigations relate to individuals suspected of smuggling guns into Cuba, smuggling people out of Cuba and related matters. MM (deleted)-S said FIORINI is living at the Ankers Motel, Miami Beach, Florida. (134 (deleted) Sub A-144)

On May 26, 1959, MM (deleted) S advised SA DAVIS that FRANK FIORINI wants to become a public relations man as a "cover" for his activities as an investigator. (134-(deleted) Sub A-146.),

By letter dated October 22, 1958, from J. WALTER YEAGLEY, Acting Assistant Attorney General, Internal Security Division, Department of Justice, to the Director, FBI, and captioned, "FRANK ANTHONY STURGIS; RA", it was concluded that from information contained in the report of SA ROBERT JAMES DWYER dated September 23, 1958, at Miami, same caption, that "The subject had acted within the United States as an agent of a foreign principal so as to require his registration under the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938 as amended. Accordingly, this Division is soliciting the subject's registration under the Act and you will be advised as to the outcome of our efforts in this regard."

On April 13, 1959, Mrs. RUTH BRADY, Registration Section, Internal Security Division, United States Department of Justice, advised SA DONALD HOTEING that her records failed to reflect that subject is registered as a foreign agent of a foreign principal. On June 9, 1959, J. A. TURNER and EMIT PHILLIPS, Investigators, Lmmigration and Naturalization Service, Miami, Florida, advised SA WILLIAM A. WRIGHTMAN that that office had no current information regarding or interest in the subject.

On June 9, 1959, WALLACE SHANLEY, Investigator, United States Customs Service, Miami, advised SA WIGHTMAN that his office had no pending investigation regarding subject and was in possession of no information not previously disseminated to the Miami Office.

Past investigation of subject indicates he is an opportunist who will seize upon any situation whereby his own personal gain or self-glorification can be furthered. He has become involved with highly placed figures in the present Cuban Government for these reasons and not, as he has stated in the past, in an effort to assist the United States Government.

FIORINI has made no effort whatsoever to cooperate with the FBI on an operational level, his "cooperation" in the past having been for the sole purpose of attempting to avoid prosecution by the Federal Government. FIORINI's record gives no indication that he is reliable or trustworthy. Accordingly, no approach to FIORINI is being made by the Miami Office since it is likely that such an approach would result in embarrassment for the Bureau.

Inasmuch as the Miami Office is not in receipt of a reply from the Internal Security Division regarding the letter of October 22, 1958, it is requested that the Bureau contact the Internal Security Division for an opinion regarding subject's status within the purview of the Registration Act.

By airtel dated June 8, 1959, captioned, "CUBAN FAIR FORCE, FPM - CUBA", the Bureau was requested to re-contact the State Department regarding FIORINI for a current determination as to his possible registration and status regarding the Cuban Government. [FBI-2-1499-29]

On June 26, 1959 a source who is in a position to furnish reliable information advised that Frank Fiorini, a captain in the Cuban armed forces, had returned to the United States on June 25, 1959. Fiorini advised the source that five East Germans were momentarily expected by the Cuban Government to assist the Cuban military forces in some manner, most likely as instructors.

FRANK STURGIS returned to the United States from Cuba on June 25, 1959.

STURGIS told the Rockefeller Commission that he flew a plane that was registered in his name to Miami. At first, STURGIS and his wife were living in Norfolk, Virginia. He spent much of his time in Washington, D.C., trying to renew his pilot's license and nullify the cancellation of the registration of the B-25 bomber he had left Cuba in. On July 1, 1959, STURGIS claimed he went into Cuba and carried out the exfiltration of Pedro Diaz Lanz, despite a shoot-on-sight order issued by Fidel Castro. The CIA claimed it "clandestinely exfiltrated Pedro Diaz Lanz from Cuba." Wallace Shanley recalled: "Before Pedro Diaz Lanz left he took over Radio Havana for an hour. A car was waiting, and they beat it out of there." Pedro Diaz Lanz appeared on national television, then traveled to Washington and testified before the Senate Internal Security Sub-Committee. Wallace Shanley stated that Pedro Diaz Lanz supplied him with copies of Fidel Castro's letters of credit, ordering strategic items from the Soviet Union through the Bank of Nova Scotia, Canada. Wallace Shanley recalled:

Lanz was a high class guy. Of all the people I've met of the Cuban persuasion, he is the finest one. He was very pro-American, but he was also pro-Cuban. He wanted very much to believe that Fidel was the answer. Fidel was the answer, he was the blessing of that country, it needed one during Batista's day. Cuba was victimized by American capitalism. It was one big Texas border town. No housing, schools or hospitals. Tin shacks. Pedro thought: 'They got rid of the capitalists, and Fidel was giving Cuba a tremendous leap forward.' In this respect, one day, there was an airstrip in Fort Lauderdale called Prospect Hills. It wasn't used much, it was an auxiliary field during the second World War. It was now a pumping station. Well, when a meter reader went out there and discovered Lanz's Lodstar being loaded with arms, he reported it to me. I soon located the aircraft, empty, in West Palm beach. I didn't have a case. Pedro was there. He had $200,000 in $100 bills in a paper bag. He offered me the money and asked me not to seize his plane. He said, 'We have to use people like FIORINI to get it registered in America. That's the hard part of it.'

In the fall of 1959 the State Department was about to honor Cuba's request for the extradition of Pedro Diaz Lanz. Pedro Diaz Lanz was viewed by many liberals as a traitor and a criminal. HUNT wrote that the attacks against him "recalled liberal attacks on Senator Joe McCarthy." After Pedro Diaz Lanz was re-subpoenaed by the Senate Internal Security Committee, the extradition proceedings were dropped.

HUNT AND LANZ

HUNT gave Pedro Diaz Lanz a job as a pilot with the Cuban Revolutionary Front, despite the objections of the State Department. The State Department considered Pedro Diaz Lanz an "unstable reactionary." In Give Us This Day HUNT wrote: "I saw a haggard unshaven young man in a flying jacket...his eyes burned in his gaunt face. I told him I admired his exploits. He and his friends had contributed some funds as a down payment on an old B-25. DAVID PHILLIPS underwrote a loan of $4,000 for an overhaul." STURGIS told the Rockefeller Commission: "E. HOWARD HUNT gave X amount of thousands of dollars to, at least okayed this money for the B-25 bomber to be repaired and then readied in condition for any operations inside of Cuba." When questioned under oath, Pedro Diaz Lanz denied he met HOWARD HUNT. [Lanz Depo. HUNT v. WEBERMAN] Evidence existed that Diaz Lanz was over-hauling an aircraft at this time. On January 9, 1961, the CIA noted:

1. The alleged $2,800 payment is presumed to be part of the money given to Pedro Diaz Lanz by Saralegui as a personal loan in support of Pedro Diaz Lanz's anti-Castro activities.

2. Pedro Diaz Lanz is, of course, preparing his aircraft for the Vuelo de Verdad and instructions given by him to aircraft technicians including the possible use of national flags on the nose of the aircraft would confirm that Pedro Diaz Lanz intends to visit a number of countries.

3. BERNARD BARKER says that he has met STURGIS on only one occasion with a group of people and has never seen him before or since. The alleged address of BARKER provided by STURGIS is not correct.

4. It is to be noted that STURGIS has lost the confidence of Diaz Lanz and has been treating with such people as Rasco in an attempt to involve himself in anti-Castro activity. You will note that Diaz Lanz expressed concern that STURGIS "might get involved in such a way that impair the plans of anti-Castro groups."

5. Pedro Diaz Lanz alleges that he and his people are being 'hounded' by federal agents and inspectors whose interest in their plans has been piqued by plane overhauling activities and that these federal officials asked leading and provocative questions.

6. The entire Executive Committee of the Cuban Revolutionary Front, or course, as well as the propaganda commission is fully acquainted with preparatory plans for the flight and it is, therefore, not strange that the plans have become known outside that immediate group.

7. However, a review of the Customs report, together with the above, would indicate that the essential element of plausible denial still remains."
[CIA 201-259129]

STURGIS formed the International Anti-Communist Brigade (IACB) on July 4, 1959. STURGIS claimed its first action was to land 20 men in Cuba who would then compose the core of an anti-Castro guerrilla group in the Escambray Mountains. On July 6, 1959, STURGIS said that five East Germans were expected by the Cuban Government to assist Cuban military forces, probably as instructors. On July 13, 1959, a CIA Routing Slip regarding STURGIS to Mr. Kulen remarked, "CIA Official Routing Slip TO: (Deleted) See request for FBI approval! Kulen advises he has discussed w/00/C [Domestic Contacts Division or DCD]. FBI has an interest & requests 00/C delay contact w/Subject. From (Deleted)." [Unmarked CIA ref. to F 81-0351 D0349; Allen v. DOD 00632 521; CIA D00577] The FBI received information on July 27, 1959, that STURGIS reportedly accepted an unidentified amount of money from Rolando Masferrer for a purpose which was not stated: "Informant said that apparently FIORINI did not produce results for Rolando Masferrer, and Rolando Masferrer reportedly had his goons looking for FIORINI." [FBI 100-344127-26 p16] In September 1959 the FBI at Miami, Florida, generated a document about STURGIS. [Date illegible]

LEAFLETING RAID OR BOMBING RAID?

On September 29, 1959, the FBI generated File #97-227, subject, Albert Henry Lopez Lopez. STURGIS was mentioned in this report. [CIA FOIA F81-0351 D0532] The CIA reported: "Subject [STURGIS] left for the Dominican Republic on weekend October 10, 1959, traveling with Enrique A. Garcia, registered Dominican Agent. [CIA DBF 35573 10.26.59] On October 27, 1959, STURGIS and Pedro Diaz Lanz began flying a series of "leafleting raids" over Havana. The Cuban Government reported:

INVESTIGATION:

Republic of Cuba.

Ministry of National Defense. Army.

Headquarters of the DIER (Department of Investigation of Rebel Army).

Ciudad Libertad. October 27, 1959.

To His Honor the Judge of Investigations of the Sixth Section. Havana. Sir. The undersigned, Abelardo Colome Ibarra, Commander of the Rebel Army, Chief, Department Investigations, Rebel Army, has the honor to inform you that, by reason of events which took place on October 22, 1959 in the city of Havana, wherein airplanes or small light aircrafts participated, which vessels, according to existing news supposedly came from some part in the North American territory; said planes having dropped manifestos and shrapnel over defenseless people, I delegated on the Police Agents of this body Ramon Rodriguez Acuna and Luis Cambrana who, in the course of their investigations learning the following: That on the said date, in the afternoon hours, two or more airplanes or small light aircrafts dropped from above the city some subversive propaganda slips whereby defamation was made of the Cuban Government and its Revolutionary Laws. Also they dropped shrapnel where the greatest concentration of public was found at the said time; especially where people assemble to get off buses, thus causing a sad balance of numerous persons wounded to different degrees, also two dead, about which occurrence the proper authorities are already aware of through the actuations carried out at the various stations of the National Revolutionary Police. Likewise, the said Agents have known that the attacking planes were piloted by individuals disaffected to the Revolutionary Government under the direction of Ex-Commander Pedro Diaz Lanz, who was formerly, and until very recently, Chief of the FAR (Revolutionary Air Force)...they managed to know that as the site known as 'Esquina de Tejas' was one of the places most effected by the throwing of shrapnel from airplanes or small light aircrafts, the result was several persons wounded and a man killed in consequence of the wounds suffered of which fact the Judge of the Sixth Investigation Section, Havana, is already informed, this being the court where case number 3007-59, was established, duly informed regarding the crimes of Imperfect Homicide, Infraction to Law 425-959, Serious Injuries and others.

The shrapnel was later identified as fragments from a grenade. In all, 40 people were wounded and two were killed during the "leafleting mission."

2 dead 45 wounded

Diaz Lanz, deserter and traitor to his country, is the assassin who directed the air attack against Habana. This is the man who dishonors Northamerican hospitality and wanders freely along the boulevards of Miami. Those who attacked Pearl Harbor were judged and condemned as war criminals. Diaz Lanz has committed the same crime.

STURGIS: "The CIA gave me the money for the plane. Lanz was pilot, I was co-pilot. The big guns at the Navy Station and the Cabana fortress opened up, but the angle of the guns was such that they were firing from the heights, into the city. At least 36 people were killed or wounded. When we returned to Miami, the Customs Service took the plane."

STURGIS' B-25

The FBI reported:

On October 27, 1959, (Deleted), Aircraft Review Section, Federal Aviation Agency, Washington, D.C. made available to S.A. (Deleted) for review, the file for the North American Model TB-25N, Serial Number 44-288874A, Registration Number 9876-C. A bill of sale dated October 6, 1958 described the seller and purchaser, respectively, as the U.S. Air Force, Norton Air Force Base, San Bernardino, California, and Aviation Rental Service, Fleming Field, South St. Paul, Minnesota. The B-25 was sold for $2,190. By bill of sale dated April 13, 1959, Aviation Rental Service sold same to Ben W. Widtfeldt, in care of Biegert Aviation, Sky Harbor, Phoenix, Arizona. On May 12, 1959, Widtfeldt sold same to FRANK A. FIORINI, 2160 Southwest 4th Street, Miami, for $1 and other valuable consideration. FIORINI, as owner, applied for certificate of registration on May 12, 1959, and received same on July 13, 1959. At this point McDaniel advised that FIORINI in the company of an unidentified male, appeared personally at the Federal Aviation Agency, Washington, D.C. to receive the certificate of registration for this aircraft.

By letter dated September 4, 1959 Carlos B. Fernandez, attorney, Congress Building, Miami, Florida, who on his letterhead described himself as "Vice Consul, Uruguay (Hon.)," wrote the Federal Aviation Agency regarding the above aircraft stating he represented the Government of Cuba, which is the true and rightful owner of said aircraft. Fernandez said at the time of the purchase of the aircraft, FIORINI was acting on behalf of the present Government of Cuba and the funds which were used to purchase it were provided by the present Government of Cuba. Fernandez said on behalf of the Government of Cuba he was filing a suit in the Circuit Court of Dade County to determine the true owner of said aircraft." [FBI 2-1499-45]

STURGIS: "I suspect that the man who sold me the airplane did work for the CIA." On October 21, 1959 STURGIS and Pedro Diaz Lanz flew a leafleting mission to Cuba. On October 30, 1959 U.S. Customs impounded STURGIS' B-25 on the grounds the owners did not obtain an export license for the leaflets.

STURGIS AND PEDRO DIAZ LANZ VISIT GUATEMALA

STURGIS stated: "In December 1959 he "went to Guatemala with Diaz Lanz for a meeting with the President, to arrange for bases there for the invasion forces. And naturally, there were Cuban and Russian agents there, so there were big headlines in all the newspapers. All over Latin America on the television and on the radio, that I was there trying to get bases, to invade Cuba. I had to leave the country because of all the publicity. In order for the United States Government to protect itself, when I got back a (unintelligible) grabbed me and lifted my citizenship, which was a ploy on their part to appease Fidel."

CIA documents verified the fact STURGIS and Pedro Lanz did try to approach Miguel Ydigoras Fuentes.

SOURCE: American Resident of Mexico in contact with anti-Castro Groups.

1. According to Marcos Diaz Lanz, former Deputy Chief of the Cuban Rebel Air Force in exile since July 1959, prior to his trip to Guatemala he and an unidentified companion met with Arturo Ramirez Pinto, Guatemalan Ambassador in Washington, D.C. Ramirez granted Diaz a visa and scheduled a meeting between Diaz and Guatemalan President Miguel Ydigoras for December 29, 1959, the day that Diaz was supposed to arrive in Guatemala. Diaz described Ramirez as extremely outspoken concerning Guatemalan support of anti-Castro activities. On arrival in Guatemala Diaz found out Miguel Ydigoras Fuentes was out of town. On December 30, 1959, Diaz Lanz met Lt. Eugenio Perez Cowley in his hotel lobby. Diaz Lanz described Eugenio Perez Cowley as an agent in Guatemala of Ché Guevara, leftist head of the National Bank of Cuba, and after meeting Eugenio Perez Cowley, he was not disposed to meet Miguel Ydigoras Fuentes. A few days later, Pedro Diaz Lanz was told by a police agent that he should leave Guatemala, as pressure was being put on the Guatemalan Government. TDCS-3/421,283 reported that Eugenio Perez Cowley had been assigned to the Cuban Embassy, Guatemala, to engage in covert activities on behalf of the Cuban Government.

2. Diaz Lanz blames Jorge Garcia Granados, personal advisor to President Ydigoras, and the Communists for his expulsion from Guatemala. According to Diaz Lanz, this purpose of this trip was to move anti-Castro operations out of the United States, utilizing the sympathy of other Latin Americans to foster support to take the pressure off the U.S. in the eyes of Latin America. While in Guatemala, Diaz Lanz said that he spoke with (FNU) Gonzalez Simi...and other high ranking figures in the Guatemalan Army, who appeared to be sympathetic toward the anti-Castro cause. (Headquarters Comment: Carlos Gonzalez Simi is private secretary to President Ydigoras. Ruben Gonzalez Simi is Minister of Defense).

A follow up report stated:

Ramiro De La Fe, Cuban exile who had helped Diaz Lanz while in Guatemala, and the brother of Ernesto, who is imprisoned in Cuba, said that the real reason for Diaz Lanz mission to Guatemala was to ask Ydigoras permission to use Guatemalan territory as a base of operations for a campaign to overthrow Castro. According to De La Fe, Diaz Lanz brothers claimed that they had visited (illegible) and everything there was arranged. They also claimed to have all the money, arms and men necessary. De La Fa said that Sergio Diaz Brui and FRANK STURGIS, who had accompanied Marcos to Guatemala, had returned to Miami, but he did not mention the departure plans of Marcos Diaz. [CIA Report Nos. TDCS 3/423,897 1.8.60, 3/423,455, 3/424,841 1.19.60]

A CIA index card reported: "Arrived in Guatemala December 30, 1959, and contacted Colonel Oscar Morales Lopez who chief of Aviateca (Guat airline); also with Subject was Captain Sergio Diaz and Captain Pedro Diaz Lanz. They wished to talk with President Ydigoras to explain Castro intends to control CA; they desire obtain moral support of Guatemala and impress need to unite CA against Castro." [CIA CS 3 423455]

LOSS OF PASSPORT & THE CITIZENSHIP QUESTION

On March 21, 1960, file #2-192 (Bureau File #2-1499) was generated. It concerned STURGIS. On April 25, 1960 (Deleted) Office of Security, United States Department of State had decreed that FRANK ANTHONY STURGIS was held to have expatriated himself under Section 349 (A) (3) of the Immigration and Nationality Act by accepting, on March 23, 1959, an appointment by the Cuban Air Force as Liaison Officer between the Cuban Air Force and the United States Air Force. A certificate of loss of nationality was approved January 29, 1960. [FBI 2-1449-49] The FBI reported that on "January 7, 1960 (Deleted) INS, Miami, advised that FRANK FIORINI, INS, reported to that office on January 7, 1960, and furnished a statement under oath concerning his connection with and membership in, the Cuban Armed Forces, denying any membership or association which would in any way jeopardize his citizenship status." The FBI Office in Miami advised the INS that this was untrue: "In response for a request for any pertinent admissible evidence concerning this matter, your office in Miami was advised that Subject had voluntarily appeared at this Bureau's headquarters on March 31, 1959, at which time during an interview by Bureau representatives he described himself as a captain in the Cuban armed forces and exhibited documents which he described as credentials to this effect." [FBI 2-1499-41] On January 14, 1960 the FBI reported:

Today, Joseph Therman, investigator for the INS advised State Department interested in FIORINI case and was making inquiry, central office, INS, which office phoned Therman directly instructing him to expeditiously prepare detailed brief of proposed presentation of facts before hearing. Vincent J. Hannard, registered agent of the Cuban Government, advised Special Agent William B. Holloman on January 14, 1960 that he is aware a hearing will be held concerning Fiorini on January 20, 1960. Hannard says he feels sure he will be able to have one or two officials of the Government of Cuba come to Miami for the INS hearing to testify that FIORINI was a member of the Cuban Army subsequent to January 1, 1959. He said these officials would be able to bring documents with them to substantiate their testimony. Hannard said he was going to talk with Fidel Castro during the coming week end and would be able to advise this off on January 18, 1960 definitely whether these officials would be able to testify. Thurman was advised of the information from Hannard without divulging Hannard identity, on January 14, 1960, and was asked whether the testimony of these Cuban officials was desired. Thurman said that he could not give any assurance that an INS meeting is going to be held because this matter is being handled on the Washington level and is a hot potato. He indicated that proceedings against the Subject did not depend so much on available evidence as it did on the feelings of the State Department. When Hannard again contacts this office he will be told that no definite date for a hearing has been set. Hannard has requested that his identity be concealed in this matter.

On February 24, 1960, Thurman INS, advised that a hearing was held in the office on February 23, 1960, for the purpose of determining whether Subject was subject to deportation on the basis that he entered the United States illegally without a visa, being an alien, upon return from Guatemala. The hearing was to provide evidence showing Subject to have expatriated himself due to service in the Cuban Armed Forces, subsequent to January 1, 1959, as provided in Section 349A of the Immigration and Naturalization Act. Thurman explained that the U.S. Department of State had already issued a Certificate of Loss of Nationality to Subject, thereby placing the burden of proof on him to show that he had, in fact, not lost his citizenship through such service. Thurman said that Subject recited the 5th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution when asked pertinent questions regarding his connection with the Cuban Armed Forces, but that a decision formerly rendered by the Board of Appeals of INS held that at such a hearing, should the defendant remain mute or claim the 5th Amendment, material bearing upon that point could be duly entered into evidence." [FBI Miami 2-1499-45]

On April 26, 1960, Thurman Investigator, INS, Miami, Florida, advised that Luke White, Special Inquiry Officer for INS, had just handed down a decision regarding the expatriation hearings being held by that office concerning FIORINI. FIORINI was held to have voluntarily expatriated himself through service in the Armed Forces of Cuba, subsequent to January 1, 1959, and has been ordered excluded from admission to the U.S. Consequently, through loss of U.S. citizenship, FIORINI would have needed alien documents to properly enter the U.S. on his return from Guatemala on January 6, 1960. Thurman said that FIORINI holds citizenship in no other country and is therefore a stateless person. Thurman said that FIORINI would theoretically be ordered to return to Guatemala, but that no decision had yet been reached in this concern.

Senator George Smathers intervened and another hearing was scheduled.

On May 5, 1960, an informant for the United States Border Patrol reported that "he went to FIORINI'S residence evening of May 5, 1960, and was issued a military uniform and boots. (Deleted) related this source said 28 individuals scheduled to participate in an invasion against Cuba, but FIORINI himself would not go. Two M-1 rifles and two carbines were shown to this source by FIORINI, and source said these men are being trained for rifle practice in the Everglades." [FBI 2-1499-48, 49] On May 10, 1960 the Headquarters of the FBI generated a document about STURGIS entitled "Neutrality Matters." On May 10, 1960, the FBI sent a memo to the State Department Office of Security about STURGIS. This Memo concerned Juan Bautista Perez Mendez (File #100-93178). On May 13, 1960, a document about STURGIS was generated by the Miami Field Office of the FBI.

On August 4, 1960, STURGIS' appeal was pending before the Board of Immigration Appeals in Washington, D.C. On August 4, 1960, Tyler C. Winton, Special Details Officer, U.S. Border Patrol, Miami advised the FBI that a source informed him that FIORINI was inactive in the anti-Castro field. [FBI 2-1499-50] On August 11, 1960, FBI File # Norfolk 97-13 (Bureau file #2-1499) was generated about STURGIS. Subject: (Deleted). On August 18, 1960, the FBI generated an addition to Miami Field Office File #2-192 about STURGIS. Another FBI document on STURGIS was generated on August 24, 1960, at Norfolk, Virginia. On August 30, 1960, the CIA reported: "Subject's pilot's certificate has been revoked by FAA and his appeal of the order expatriating him is still pending." [CIA DBF 56442(?)] FBI reports were generated on STURGIS in Norfolk on September 28, 1960, and Miami, October 27, 1960, Washington December 16, 1960, Neutrality Matters, Miami, December 28, 1960. Howard Osborn of the CIA's Office of Security reported to Arnold Parham of the FBI that "In December 1960, an informant of the FBI who lived with Subject at that time said subject claimed he was working with and being sponsored by the Agency for some future military action against the Government of Cuba."

STURGIS AND THE JUAN ORTA PLAN TO KILL CASTRO 1960

STURGIS was still determined to kill Fidel Castro. One of his plots utilized the personal secretary of Fidel Castro, Juan Orta (born May 27, 1906), to plant a bomb in the office of the Prime Minister. STURGIS told Paul Meskil that he had recruited Juan Orta for anti-Castro espionage in post-revolutionary Havana:

I had access to the prime minister's office, I knew Fidel's private secretary, Juan Orta. I recruited him to work with the Embassy. I planned to go to Fidel's office with a briefcase full of explosives which I would leave there. When Fidel entered the office a signal would be given and the bomb would be set off by an electronic device across the street.

Juan Orta had entered the United States in July 1955. In 1957 he became President of the 26th of July Club in Miami and was charged with making false statements to a Federal Grand Jury in U.S. District Court there. Judge Emmett Choate accepted the guilty plea of Juan Orta and levied a fine of $400 against him. Juan Orta and Carlos Prio

Socarras were the Subjects of Federal indictments for Neutrality Act violations in 1958. Orta and Prio were ordered to appear in Federal Court in New York City. [FBI 109-430-2202 10.29.58] Juan Orta had been serving as an intermediary between Fidel Castro and Carlos Prio Socarras. When their case came to trial in 1959, both Carlos Prio Socarras and Juan Orta received suspended sentences, after obtaining a change of venue from New York to Miami. In January 1960 Juan Orta was in charge of the Castro plan to kidnap Pedro Diaz Lanz. The CIA noted: "In 1959 and 1960 STURGIS was very closely connected with Pedro Diaz Lanz." In April 1961 Juan Orta sought, and was granted, political asylum in the Venezuelan Embassy, where he remained until 1964, when he was granted safe conduct to the United States. [FBI 109-430-2316, 105-57681 NR 10.16.59; FBI FOIA Req. #59,998] HEMMING told this researcher:

The kidnap attempt was a cover for flying in and out of the country. You have to have a plan. Otherwise Fidel is going to hear that you're moving around talking to strange people.

A 1977 CIA Task Force Report on assassination schemes against Castro "recognized that STURGIS, through his gambling activities and relationships with various casino operators, may quite possibly have known Juan Orta, and also raised the question of whether STURGIS may have been a source of information to Castro regarding Juan Orta's participation in any assassination plot." The Task Force Report admitted its information was based on "newspaper stories" that Are not necessarily reliable sources of information. However, because the statement by STURGIS in 1975 indicated a familiarity with Juan Orta's availability to play the role of assassin in 1960, additional attention was given the statement in the press, to see how it might fit into other things that are known. What follows is subject to reservations that one must attach to the reliability of newspaper stories. The New York Daily News stories (20-25 April 1975), and another story by the same author on 13 June 1976, refer to possible relationships between Sturgis and Trafficante, also mentioning a Norman Rothman as a gambling partner of Trafficante. The Office of Security wrote a memorandum in 1975, in conjunction with the first set of New York Daily News stories, noting that there was a connection between Sturgis and Rothman in 1960, citing FBI reports. It is pertinent to note here that in addition to the role STURGIS is reported to have had with the Castro Government in relation to the gambling activities, Juan Orta's availability for the assassination assignment was understood to be due to his having lost payoffs that he once received from gambling interests. One can deduce that STURGIS and Juan Orta could have known one another because of their connections with gambling activities as well as having contacts with the men heading the gambling organizations.

[CIA FOIA #1057] The CIA acknowledged that STURGIS was the first individual to publicly link Juan Orta with Fidel Castro death plots:

9. Of extreme pertinence to instant memorandum is that information contained in the April 21, 1975 article by Paul Meskil which is apparently based on an interview with STURGIS to wit: The third (assassination) scheme involved planting a bomb in Castro's office. "I had access to the Prime Minister's office, I knew Fidel's private secretary, Juan Orta. I recruited him to work with the Embassy. (American Embassy in Havana)." To the writer's knowledge, the name of Juan Orta was never publicly linked to an assassination plot against Castro before the above-noted article. It is also highly interesting that Juan Orta was in fact the assassin to be utilized in the Agency operation, Phase One. It is of note that even the November 1975 Senate Select Committee report "Alleged Assassination Plots Involving Foreign Leaders" did not identify Juan Orta by name as a participant in Phase One, nor did this report identify Rolando Cubela by name as being a participant in Phase Two. However, the Paul Meskil article of April 24, 1975 outlines Phase Two and does identify Cubela as a participant.

In 1993 the CIA admitted: "Juan Orta was a Castro Government official circa 1960 to 1961 and was a contact of SANTOS TRAFFICANTE. Juan Orta was originally selected by TRAFFICANTE to make an assassination attempt against Castro." [CIA D000136 9.7.76] In discussing the possible methods of accomplishing this mission, mobster Sam Giancana suggested some type of potent pill that could be placed in Castro's food or drink: "Sam indicated that he had a prospective nominee in the person of Juan Orta, a Cuban official who had been receiving kickbacks payments from the gambling interests, who still had access to Castro, and was in a financial bind. Technical Services Division was requested to produce six pills of high lethal content. Joe O'Connell delivered the pills to Juan Orta. After several weeks or reported attempts, Juan Orta apparently got cold feet and asked out of the assignment." [CIA OS Osborn Memo for DCI 12.9.70 CIA D-000149] The CIA reported "Poison pills were transported to Cuba in late February or March 1961, and delivered them to the man who was to administer them. That man, however, had already lost his position with the Prime Minister's Office and returned the pills after a couple of weeks." [E.H. Knoche to David Belin 3.7.75] In October 1960 CIA Headquarters was advised by a source that STURGIS and Aquiles Chimza "departing Miami Night October 7, 1960, for Cuba to engage in sabotage activities on behalf of Allanza. Western Hemisphere Division Comment: Above information reported today (deleted) by Cuban Revolutionary Front contact in N.Y. (deleted) for Jake Esterline C/Western Hemisphere Division/4 D. PHILLIPS WHW/4/PROP R. Seehafer C/WH/1/FI (deleted)." [CIA FOIA D0022072] Ralph Gilbert Seehafer was in Peru from 1954 to 1959, Ecuador from 1962 to 1963, the Philippines from 1963 to 1968, the Dominican Republic in 1971 and Nicaragua from 1971 to 1973. The FBI generated a report on STURGIS on October 27, 1960, File #MM 2 129 (Bureau File #2-1499).

On January 20, 1961, the FBI generated a report that was File #2-41, subject, FRANK ANTHONY STURGIS - Neutrality Matters, Seattle, Washington as a result of WILLIAM BEAN having furnished the following letter received in the mail on January 14, 1961.

Jan 10, 1961 my old dear companyero BILL, This is the 'Tongue,' your old soldier of fortune buddy from Pathfinder. How be thy body? I'm doing good. Since I've been out I've received $100.00 a month from Uncle Sam, 50% wartime disability for my back and leg. I told you I'd make out. Now dig! I belong to an anti-Castro counterrevolutionary force here in Miami. We are going to go into the _____ mountains in Cuba as a guerilla force. There are twelve of us Americans the rest of course, Cubans. COME AND JOIN UP! enclosed is the address. I am under FRANK FIORINI (my leader). Our group is called 'Brigade internacionale.' We can use good men. If we succeed in overthrowing Castro we'll be rich, if not, dead.

OPERATION 40 AND THE DOMESTIC ASSASSINATION PROPOSAL MARCH 1961

The FBI reported that Orlando Bosch advised that STURGIS had permitted STURGIS to go on a raid with MIRR. Bosch stated that this raiding party traveled by boat but had failed to land in Cuba and that he was dissatisfied with FIORINI'S performance, whom he described as a soldier-of-fortune and publicity seeker. On March 3, 1961, the FBI in Miami generated a document about STURGIS, "Internal Security, Cuba, Registration Act, Cuba."

ANGUS McNAIR AND THE DIVERSIONARY LANDING

In March 1961, Alexander Rorke, STURGIS and Frank Nelson organized a group of men who were to create a diversion by landing on a different beach during the Bay of Pigs invasion. The first step in effectuating this plan involved sending Angus McNair and others into Cuba to meet Howard Anderson, 41, a reputed CIA Agent who owned a chain of gasoline stations in Havana and commanded the American Legion post there. Anderson had been in close touch with the Humberto Sori Marin Group of high level anti-Castro conspirators. After they were captured, he was instructed to determine if other Cuban officers were in on the plot and if they would attempt to carry it out. He was also to advise the CIA of the progress of the diversionary action to be launched by Operation 40 in Pinar del Rio. Shortly after midnight on March 19, 1961, Angus McNair was captured by Castro's border patrol. Anderson was arrested on his way to meet with McNair. A Castro double-agent had betrayed the conspirators. McNair and Anderson were shot on April 19, 1961 two days after the Bay of Pigs invasion began. McNair was alleged to have been related to Senator Smathers. Seven Cubans were executed including Humberto Sori Marin. Before Angus McNair embarked, he told STURGIS: "I'm going because Fidel Castro killed an American soldier, William Morgan." On April 11, 1961, a group led by Nino Diaz (born January 25, 1925), an associate of STURGIS and Pedro Diaz Lanz, set out for Cuba on a 42-foot motor launch. Nino Diaz had joined the rebel Army of Fidel Castro on April 1, 1958, and was discharged with the rank of Major. Nino Diaz's group landed in Cuba four days later, only to discover that their contacts had been arrested. Journalist Edith Kermit Roosevelt described their situation:

Included among the Freedom Fighters were a group of Cubans who were dispatched by a person or persons in the Kennedy Administration on a futile suicide mission during the aborted Cuban invasion attempt." On April 17, 1961, the day the Bay of Pigs Brigade landed in Cuba, the diversionary group ran out of supplies. On April 18, 1961, Nino Diaz's men were rescued by a United States Naval vessel just outside Cuba's territorial waters. In 1976 Michael Canfield asked STURGIS to describe his reaction to the fate of the diversionary group. STURGIS: "Oh I was mad! We had people inside of Cuba. That's when I started to do...ahh, you know we were doing green light operations. Green light is permission. No problem. And after a while they cut the assistance to the underground. They did it because of the policy. The President says 'Stop all things,' and they stop them. I can't lay the blame on one man, but he takes responsibility for the whole thing. I figured he made a deal in that we had to cut back. I felt that was wrong. He deserted the people. I felt that was wrong.

OPERATION 40 APRIL 1961

STURGIS told Paul Meskil that he was part of the CIA's OPERATION 40, an infiltration and intelligence gathering group that was to go into Cuba before the Bay of Pigs assault. Meskil stated that some former CIA agents described OPERATION 40 as an "assassination squad." STURGIS stated:

It was top CIA project. Most of the men in it were Cubans who had been trained by the U.S. Army. I am not saying that OPERATION 40 had an assassination squad. There were reports there was one, but I'm not saying so.

Paul Meskil reported that the Chief of OPERATION 40 was Joaquin Pedromo Sanjenis, a former Castro aide who defected and became a CIA agent. Two of his cousins also worked for the Agency. Canfield asked STURGIS about OPERATION 40:

STURGIS: Well, I was an associate, while I participated in OPERATION 40. OPERATION 40 was formed before the Bay of Pigs invasion; it was a Top Secret Government operation; it consisted of many Cuban intelligence officers who worked for the CIA and this organization. Their job primarily was to train people to infiltrate a foreign country, to make contact with people in the political sector of the government, plus there was also a group formed, in which was the assassination section, which I was part of; that, if necessary, this assassination group would, upon orders, naturally, assassinate either members of the military in the foreign country, political party members of the foreign country that you were going to infiltrate, and, if necessary, some of your own members, who were suspected of being foreign agents. Now at the same time, I was asked by my friend, who was a CIA agent, he asked me if I was interested in participating, or doing an assassination with the Company. I told him yes, providing that I would sit down with his case officer and go over the details, and I would do it.

Canfield: Domestic or foreign?

STURGIS: It would be domestic.

Canfield: Here in the United States?"

STURGIS: Oh yeah. The reason for that, he asked me how I would go about it. And I told him, well, if it was going to be domestic, well, I could do it several ways. I could do it either in the Everglades, I could do it by boat, or I could do it by air. But, that if it was going to be done, I did not want nobody to be part of this, I would do it by myself, but I definitely wanted to meet the officer who wanted this done, and I wanted to see him, and get it right from him, so that I would be sure that it would be someone with authority, and not just a low level agent, such as he...I told him that. He told me that he would make contact with someone higher up, and pass on that information and so forth.

Canfield: Did this come out of Operation 40?

STURGIS: This is what the Operation 40 was trained for...

Canfield: What about domestic activities, did they ever attempt a domestic assassination?

STURGIS: Not to my knowledge, no. But the only thing I can say on that is, when I was asked to do domestically, myself --

Canfield: Right.

STURGIS: Of anyone else, no, not to my knowledge; which brings the why all this stuff I've been reading in the papers where they want me to be part of an investigation of the assassination of President Kennedy, I have no knowledge of anything like --

Canfield: Did anyone ever approach you about --

STURGIS: The assassination? Yeah, oh yeah.

Canfield: No, I mean, to do the assassination.

STURGIS: No, no, oh no. The Cubans were very angry with the Kennedys, they were furious with the Kennedys because of the failure of the Bay of Pigs invasion. But the only thing that I had as far as the assassination was concerned, naturally, is the investigation by the FBI. And they said, "Well FRANK, this is strictly a voluntary thing, if you want to talk with us, if you don't want to talk with us' - And they told me that they felt I was one of the persons capable, if I wanted to assassinate somebody as high as the President of the United States, that I was capable of --

Canfield: You were approached though to do assassination jobs -

STURGIS: Oh yeah. Also an associate. And it can be proven that he is, or rather was, at that time, a CIA agent.

Canfield: Was he involved in Watergate?

STURGIS: Well, I don't want to go ahead and say at this point. But if I'm ever called in front of a Congressional Committee, which I assume I will be, I will tell them...

Canfield: Did they ever tell you who was to be assassinated?

STURGIS: No.

Canfield: Do you have any ideas?

STURGIS: No, no. I don't even know if it was another agent, or a double agent, or a fool or what. The only one who would know are the people involved in CIA.

Canfield: They never did assassinate anyone in the United States?

STURGIS: Not to my knowledge, no...On this assassination thing, I would figure well, it's gonna have to come up from some a little higher than this agent right here. It's gonna have to come from someone with a little authority.

Canfield: Did you tell him that?

STURGIS: Oh, yeah.

Canfield: And what was his response?

STURGIS: He told me he would make contact with someone higher up, and pass on that information, and so forth.

Canfield: Did you ever get any feedback from him or anyone else?

STURGIS: No.

Canfield asked STURGIS: "Were all members of OPERATION 40 trained in assassination?" STURGIS replied that only 20 men were.

STURGIS told the Rockefeller Commission:

All I knew is that he was an agent, and at a latter date, it was proven that he was an agent. So my contacts with this man throughout the years, how he worked, my close contact with him, in Miami, the way of operation, the way he handles himself, the people that he was in close contact with, that the top political and military people who were in exile that he was in touch with, the formation of the Bay of Pigs itself before the invasion came through this particular man. He was part of forming this -- at least of the Revolutionary Council. And I was approached by him and I told Jose Joachim Sajennes Pardomo. I said, 'What do you think?' The idiot, I hope this never gets publicized, I said this idiot took me out and we had some lunch, and he asked me if I wanted to do an assassination attempt for the outfit. And I looked him square in the face and told him, 'Why did you come to me?' And he says, 'Well FRANK, like who else? You are a man that the Chief knows your background, and I know your background, and I know you are capable. And if anybody can do it, you can do it. But the thing is would you be interested?' And I said, 'Yes I would be.' The discussion of money was not involved in it, because I would not do anything for money. I don't know [who the target was]. He said he would contact his chief, and he would --- he told me to contact him later on, and I think he gave me a certain day to contact him, and I said 'Okay.' You must remember that how I know this man as an agent, because he does the same things as I do in his life, he types away, or at least, he has a wife who types away, he makes all the reports, and stacks them in a file cabinet. I have heard him talk to his case officer on the telephone. And to me that was very stupid of him in doing that even to me who was his friend. That is a stupid way of doing things. Because he did not suspect that I was in touch with Jose Joachim Sajennes Pardomo, he cannot know. And the only time he suspected that I had anything to do with the CIA is when we were in prison, and the man on the television said, 'Yes,' he used to work for the CIA. I am talking about the agent and me who was part of the Watergate group. And he was dumbfounded and said, 'What, you work for the CIA?' And I said, 'Yes sir, you dumb bastard you, I was turning you in to my case officer.' I knew he was an agent, but I didn't know that I was in contact --- I never used the word -- or at least I don't think I did, and I hope I haven't used it today -- that I said I was an employee of the CIA or that I was connected with the CIA. I had a second meeting with him at the Ranch house, and he told me, he says, "Well, there is interest FRANK.' He said 'About this assassination,' and I said 'Fine.' And then he started to questioning, how would you do it? There are several ways of trying to do assassination. The things I have to know is who the person is, that is number one, it is important, and where the person is at, which is important. And then, I will have to go ahead and go to the place where this man lives...I said I wanted to tell you something, I will do this because you are a friend of mine, and because you asked me. But I will want more than that. And he said 'What is that?' I said I want it from somebody higher than you, from somebody with authority. If you tell me --- and you are my friend, and I believe you -- but I want it more from somebody else who has some authority. You have a case officer. I want your case officer to tell me to do an assassination plot and I will do it. But coming from you, you are my friend, my buddy, but I have got to have more than that for my protection.

Olsen: Did he ever put you in touch with his case officer?

STURGIS: I knew who his boss was.

Olsen: Who was his boss?

STURGIS: "EDUARDO"...It either had to be "EDUARDO," who I never met or it had to be possibly (deleted as of 2010) after "EDUARDO" left.

Olsen: Did (deleted as of 2010) take his place?

STURGIS: I believe so, I believe (deleted as of 2010) did take his place as this party's case officer.

Olsen: And then you did not actually have any contact with his case officer?

STURGIS: When I told him what I think it kind of stung him a little bit. And he said, 'Well, okay, all right. Then you will go through with it?' And I said 'Certainly I will go through with it, I don't care who the hell it is!' I said, 'You let me know.'

HUNT, BARKER AND STURGIS 1961

On April 4, 1975, STURGIS was re-questioned about the proposed domestic assassination. He went off the record then said BARKER was the CIA agent who approached him. [SSCIA 157-10005-10191]

Olsen: Yesterday we were talking about an approach which was made to you in Miami sometime after you returned to the United States from Cuba in 1959, in which you were asked if you would be willing to undertake an assassination?

STURGIS: Yes, sir.

Olsen: Would you tell us this morning who it was that approached you with that subject?

Olsen: Mr. STURGIS has asked that we go off the record, during the course of which Mr. Navarro was invited to leave the room and he is now absent from the room. The only parties present in the room at this time are Mr. STURGIS and myself. Now the question that I put to you, FRANK, was: Can you identify for us at this time who it was that approached you with the question of whether you would participate in the performance of an assassination?

STURGIS: BERNARD L. BARKER.

Olsen: And when was it, as best you can recall, FRANK, when that approach was made?

STURGIS: I believe it was approximately 1961, either before the Bay of Pigs or after the Bay of Pigs

Olsen: Was it shortly before or shortly after?

STURGIS: I would be very honest with you, I don't remember.

Olsen: Well the Bay of Pigs operation actually took place in April 1961, didn't it?

STURGIS: 1961, yes sir.

Olsen: As I understand from your testimony yesterday, when you were approached about this you indicated you were willing to do so.

STURGIS: Yes sir.

Olsen: But you thereafter checked with Joaquin Pedromo Sanjenis about what he thought about it, and Joaquin Pedromo Sanjenis indicated to you that he thought you should cooperate with BARKER, but that you should make sure that it was going to be an authorized operation by insisting to BARKER that the word come to you directly from someone who has identified himself as BARKER'S Case Officer. Is that a fair statement of what you have just told me?

STURGIS: Either his Case Officer or his Station Chief.

Olsen: Did you know at the time who BARKER'S Case Officer was?

STURGIS: I assumed at the time that it was possible that it was "EDUARDO," who he was the assistant under "EDUARDO."

Olsen: But, am I correct in understanding now that you do not know whether EDUARDO was still on the scene or whether he had been replaced?

STURGIS: No, sir, I do not know. Now let me say this. I did ask HOWARD HUNT do you use the code name EDUARDO while we were in Danbury, Connecticut, and present -

Olsen: Now are you talking about 1972?

STURGIS: Now we are talking about 1972. I asked him if he gave any orders to BERNIE, or BARKER, or MACHO, whatever -- these names -- I called him by these names.

Olsen: In other words BARKER was known as either BERNIE or MACHO?

STURGIS: Right.

Olsen: Okay.

STURGIS: I did ask HOWARD: Did you ever ask MACHO BARKER to do an assassination, to approach me on an assassination. He says "Hell no."

Olsen: All right then. Did you thereafter -- going back to the 1961 -- did you have any further conversation with BERNARD BARKER about the subject?

STURGIS: Yes, sir. I was advised not to discuss the assassination attempt with him -- to let BERNIE bring up the subject -- whenever I saw him. BERNIE did bring up the subject.

Olsen: Where did you talk to BERNIE the next time about this subject?

STURGIS: It was either one or two places; it was either at his home in the -- I believe the northwest section of town, or at a dinner that he invited me to at a steak house -- and I believe it was a Ranch House; this Ranch House was located on 36th Street just before LeJuene Road.

Olsen: And what happened when you next met with BARKER about the subject?

STURGIS: He told me that this invitation was -- his Case Officer said "Take FRANK out and have dinner."

Olsen: And what did he do? Did he explore your further willingness to undertake this?

STURGIS: Yes. Bernie asked me how I would go about it were the subject about the assassination, and he asked me how I would do it. And I told, him, I says, "It would all depend. I don't want to know the man or the victim's name at this time, but it would depend on the man, his position, for me to determine how I would get rid of the man."

Olsen: And also where.

STURGIS: Where -- the location, right. Also, in the conversation I told him -- he went into detail with me, and he said that there was a possibility that he would like to go on the thing with me. And I told him, "Well BERNIE, I don't like anybody to come with me; I'll be very honest with you. I prefer to do it myself" because naturally I did not want to have a witness to something that I would do even if he is an agent or not, that I would do the thing. He said, "Well, how could I know that it was done?" I says "Well there are several ways; No. 1, the person would eventually be reported missing; No. 2, I will cut off his ear or his finger and give it to you" I says "because there won't be no body to recover." I told him -- he says, "How would you do it?" I says, "Well, I could go to the Everglades; I could dig a hole and put lye in it -- the lye will eat up the body. I could take an airplane and fly over the Gulf Stream weighted down -- I would have to cut his stomach and intestines so that he wouldn't float. Even weighted down a body will float unless you cut open the insides of his stomach and intestines. Or, I says, "I could go out with boat into the Gulf Stream and use explosives in order to destroy the body completely."

Olsen: Did you know at the time where this assassination attempt was to be undertaken in Florida?

STURGIS: No, sir. I again -- knowing how agents work because I in turn have trained some people as far as intelligence was concerned; there is such a thing called compartmentation, and even though I was willing to go on this assassination, at the time I did not want to know who the person was in case if I did not do the assassination and someone else did the assassination, at least if it was uncovered that I would not be brought in as some one who knew of the conspiracy to assassinate someone here if it was in the United States or a foreign country.

Olsen: FRANK, did anything further transpire about this assassination? Other than this second conversation with BARKER?

STURGIS: No sir. Nothing came about because I nailed him to the wall, telling BARKER that I would want someone much higher than he who would identify himself, his position with the company, and then I would do the operation.

Olsen: Did anybody ever contact you then who was higher up in the company?

STURGIS: No sir. No one, but I still maintained my friendship with BARKER throughout the years.

Olsen: So that ended the matter in respect to assassination?

STURGIS: Yes, sir.

Olsen: All right, here we go back on the record. Continuing then, FRANK, did you ever have any further contact with anyone who you believed had any connection whatever with the CIA about an assassination?

STURGIS: No sir. MACHO BARKER was the only one at that time. Now MACHO asked me to help some other leaders who naturally were in touch with him. You must understand that because he asked me -- you can understand his position; his position was political under EDUARDO; as I said before, E. HOWARD HUNT or EDUARDO was a political officer with CIA with the planning of the Bay of Pigs invasion.

Olsen: Well, what I'm getting at is this: Did anybody ever contact you -- that is anybody who had any connection whatever with the CIA, contact you about an assassination after the one that you have just described to us?

STURGIS: In the United States, no.

Olsen: How about outside the United States?

STURGIS: Well, there is a very thin line here. I have discussed assassinations of several top Cuban political and military leaders with the Havana Station.

Olsen: When you say with the Havana Station, who in the Havana Station?

STURGIS: Well, with the United States Embassy, Colonel Nichols.

Olsen: This was while you were still in Cuba?

STURGIS: Yes, sir.

Olsen: Before leaving there in June 1959?

STURGIS: Yes sir. That's in the first part of January and February 1959.

Olsen: Well, these were all discussed with us yesterday on the record when you described to us the discussions that took place among officials of the Cuban Air Force and Cuban Army about plans to assassinate Fidel Castro and Che Guevara?

STURGIS: Yes, sir.

Olsen: And people of their entourage.

STURGIS: Yes, sir.

Olsen: And you described yesterday some exercises that were worked up, plans that were drawn up with respect to possible places to perform the assassinations?

STURGIS: Yes, sir.

Olsen: And then you described to us yesterday the fact the Colonel Nichols had on the occasions when you had discussed it with him --- Colonel Nichols had urged you to hold off on any such assassination.

STURGIS: Right...

Olsen: You mentioned to me when we talked over the telephone, FRANK, that you had some contact with or some relationship with a planned assassination of Premier Castro in New York. What was that what you were referring to?

STURGIS: There was a time, I don't remember the exact date, that Fidel was in New York; there was a conspiracy or at least talk of a conspiracy to want to kill him. Now as far as the CIA is concerned, I don't believe that they were involved or any agents were involved in that conspiracy wanting to assassinate Fidel.

Olsen: Was this then something that was discussed among elements of the Cuban exiles in Florida?

STURGIS: Yes sir, New York and Florida.

Olsen: Did you have any contact or know of any contact whatever in connection with such discussions of assassinating Premier Castro in New York -- did you have any contact whatever with anybody in the Government of the United States?

STURGIS: That is very difficult to answer, Mr. Olsen, because of the dates involved. I would think that I had contact with the Agency, but again I will state that whatever they knew about, or were involved in any conspiracy, myself I do not know.

Olsen: Well, when you say you had some contact with somebody from the Agency, did you have such contact with somebody from the Agency about such an assassination.

STURGIS: No, sir. No, I did not.

Olsen: Was there any contact that you had of any nature relating to any assassination any place with any official of the United States Government, other than the ones that you have already described to me?

[OFF THE RECORD]

Olsen: All right, we are going back on the record again. Mr. STURGIS having said he was having difficulty thinking about exactly what answer he would give to the question that was posed because he didn't want to use up tape time while he was engaged in his thinking process. He has -- while we have been off the record -- explored the subject with us further and is now prepared to answer the question. Go ahead, FRANK.

STURGIS: After that meeting with BARKER, I, as far as I know, with the Cuban friends of mine who were working for the company or who was working under the company, there was a great deal of talk among the Cubans about wanting to assassinate Fidel Castro in New York, inside of Cuba, or in Latin America because Fidel did make several trips. There was talk, but as far as I know I don't know if CIA sponsored any of the Cubans in any attempt to kill Fidel or finance them in any attempt to kill him, nor supported any attempt by the Cubans to want to kill him, or whether these Cubans were simply patriots or were working for, or associated with, the CIA.

Olsen: You don't know then, FRANK, whether any of this conversation about killing Fidel Castro was initiated or promoted or sponsored in any fashion by the CIA?

STURGIS: I do not. No, sir.

Olsen: Okay. Now, was there any other discussions about assassinations that you could tell us about that you participated in or knew of, other than what you have already described to us?

STURGIS: No, sir. At this point I cannot think of any other attempt or discussion in any other assassination attempt on any one.

Olsen: Did you ever have any conversation with anybody about assassinating President Kennedy.

STURGIS: No sir.

Olsen: Did you have any part whatever in planning or carrying out the assassination of President Kennedy or any other public figure of the United States?

STURGIS: I have not been involved in any of that sir.

Roethe: I would like to ask one more question. You indicated at the very beginning of our interview yesterday that you would tell us the truth, in whatever you answered and that there may be occasions when you might want to hold certain things back, and that you would tell us if you were doing that. I wonder if there has been any instance now where you held anything back from us, not by telling us a lie, but by simply not telling us everything that there is to tell.

STURGIS: Where it concerns the conspiracy or assassination attempts on the President of the United States, Martin Luther King, Bobby Kennedy or any American Government official, I have told the truth; I have not held back anything whatsoever.

In an April 23, 1975 Memo for File, Robert Olsen wrote:

While STURGIS claims that he was asked by BARKER in 1961 if he would be willing to undertake an assassination attempt, he acknowledges that he did not even know who was involved or whether it was inside or outside the United States...I intend to check out the claim STURGIS makes that he was asked in 1968 by a CIA agent (allegedly Jose Joachim Sajennes Pardomo) to organize an operation for the hijacking of a Russian ship...I also intend to check out his claims to take on an assassination of some unknown person. Incidentally, there is a possible connection on this matter. In 1960 and 1961 HUNT was active in the organization of a Cuban government-in-exile in the United States. In this role he had contacts with BERNARD BARKER, who was under contract with the Agency. HUNT states in his book that he had recommended to the Agency that an assassination of Castro be carried out before or contemporaneously with the Bay of Pigs invasion. It is not inconceivable that HUNT would have asked BARKER to check out the possibilities of finding an assassin to carry out such a job if approval were ever given to his recommendation.

OPERATION 40 was created as an adjunct to the Bay of Pigs invasion, and was to continue as a subsidiary intelligence agency if the invasion proved successful. OPERATION 40 intelligence officers were to supply the names of suspected Communists to the assassination section. The suspects would then be terminated. During his deposition in HUNT v WEBERMAN STURGIS was asked:

Q. Did you understand that Operation 40 contained an assassination section?

A. Operation 40 consists of a bunch of Cuban officers some of whom I have been familiar with, some are my friends, and their job training by the United States Government were this: When the Brigade landed in Cuba, Operation 40 was to follow. The officers involved in this operation were to make contact with Cuban political elements inside Cuba, both political, military and so forth, who would give assistance to the Brigade and to the underground because Operation 40 was an intelligence organization who had this contact in Cuba. So naturally, in order to make the invasion successful you had to co-ordinate the activities of the Brigade and, also, of the help that it could receive from both the political and the military elements that were in Cuba to assist, you know, in the invasion; and if necessary, if an assassination had to be part of it, naturally it would be part of it.

Q. Do you know if the Diaz Lanz brothers were associated with Operation 40.

A. I doubt it very much. Pedro Diaz Lanz, Marcos and myself included were part of a special air group that was formed and I was associated with that air group because the B-24 bomber was in my name, registered under, at that time it was FAA, and this same B-24 bomber, which the CIA was given money to, was the same bomber on October 25, 1959, that flew over Havana, Cuba, and the pilot was both myself and Pedro Diaz Lanz, Marcos Diaz Lanz and another Cuban was in the bomb bay, where we dropped hundreds of thousands of leaflets over the City of Havana, accusing the Castro Government of being a Communistic government.

In subsequent interviews, STURGIS was far less candid: "I am not saying that OPERATION 40 had an assassination squad. There were reports that there was one, but I am not saying so...I don't recall when I was approached to commit a domestic assassination. Artime did know the people in OPERATION 40 though..." The SSCIA questioned HUNT about OPERATION 40:

Baron: Senator Schweiker, who is a member of our Committee, has expressed an interest in a quote by FRANK STURGIS that you might be quite familiar with, where he granted an interview to the author of a book called Coup D'Etat In America and he said that he was in some sort of assassination group within what he called OPERATION 40 at the CIA, which was supposed to, upon orders, be capable of assassinating foreign military and political leaders, or suspected double agents. What light can you shed on that?

HUNT: I think FRANK STURGIS has become a captive of his own imagination. It has finally been established, I think to everyone's satisfaction, that he never was a CIA employee. While I am fond of FRANK personally, I don't think a lot of credence ought to be accorded his fantasies.

The HSCA interviewed Marcos Diaz Lanz. He said that although he and Pedro Diaz Lanz refused to join the Bay of Pigs invasion, they were told that they would be in charge of a Special Air Group. That group never coalesced and the Lanz brothers never went to Guatemala.

On March 7, 1961, Alexander Rorke was approved for contact with the CIA Domestic Contacts Division by Sheffield Edwards and William A. Osborne: "Inasmuch as Subject is a reporter, any classified information released to him during contact with him, should be carefully identified as such." HUNT reported "FRANK was certainly involved in the recommendation of various exiles, who he knew personally, to be included in the Bay of Pigs invasion, but he was not part of the Brigade itself. There's a chance he may have infiltrated the island at one point and scouted the territory, but he was not with the invading force. [American Spy Hunt p119]

Prior to the Bay of Pigs invasion of April 1961, HUNT made BERNARD BARKER his chief assistant. The CIA: "As a result of his excellent record with the CIA in Havana, and favorable assessment by a senior CIA official in Miami in January 1960, BARKER was hired under a contractual relationship with the CIA Miami Office effective April 4, 1960, at the rate of $300 per month for full time service." BARKER was asked about this in the course of HUNT v. WEBERMAN: "I worked for Mr. HUNT in the Bay of Pigs invasion. This training I received with the rest of the Cubans from a government agency." Aside from HUNT, BARKER'S Case Officers were Joseph S. Piccolo of Western Hemisphere Division/4 and Jacob D. Esterline. The CIA: "Mr. HUNT was assigned to the Agency's Cuban Operations in Miami Florida area from June 1960 through October 1961. In that connection he was Mr. BARKER'S supervisor as of September 1961." BARKER would soon be viewed by the CIA as a security problem since he was strongly associated with the CIA in the exiles thinking and "statements or opinions expressed by him concerning various individuals or exile groups were either mistaken for 'official leaks' or 'policy.'" A recently released handwritten CIA document, titled BERNARD BARKER, reviewed his early activities for the CIA:

Alexander Irwin Rorke Jr. (born August 9, 1926) was a close associate of FRANK STURGIS. [FBI 97-4623-46- 9.12.61] Alexander Rorke was the son of a New York City Assistant District Attorney. In 1919, Alexander Rorke Sr. (born June 29, 1877; died January 1967), prosecuted and convicted the founders of the Communist Party of the United States. He then became a New York State Appellate Judge. Alexander Rorke Jr. was a graduate of St. John's University and attended the Georgetown University School of Foreign Service. At the age of 17, he enlisted in the U.S. Army. Alexander Rorke served as a military intelligence specialist during World War II, responsible for the security of five German provinces. He participated in the capture of SS men, and in the first postwar roundup of Communist agents in the Allied military zones of Germany. Returning to college after the war, Rorke who was 6' 3" tall and weighed 200 pounds, became a track star and Forensic Commissioner of the National Federation of Catholic College Students, and an undefeated inter-collegiate debating champion. He was an FBI clerk from February 5, 1951, to May 11, 1951. In 1952 he married Jacqueline Billingsley. The father of Jacqueline Billingsley, Sherman Billingsley, was a former bootlegger with several convictions, who owned a Manhattan night club known as The Stork Club. The Stork Club was frequented by numerous organized crime figures as well as by FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover. Alex Rorke was acquainted with Dominick Bartone.

DOMINICK BARTONE & WILLIAM MORGAN

When Fidel Castro came to power mobster Dominick Bartone attempted to win his favor by smuggling him several plane loads of arms. Dominick Bartone worked out a deal with Jimmy Hoffa in which the Teamsters Union would lend a "Cleveland Group" $300,000 to buy several surplus cargo-aircraft. Then Dominick Bartone would supply the arms and the pilot who would fly the plane to Cuba. Dominick Bartone was indicted for this activity. [FBI 105-70973]

STURGIS claimed that circa May 1959 he set up a meeting between William Morgan and national crime syndicate associate Frank Nelson. Frank Nelson had been a friend of Fulgencio Batista, and had previously owned a good deal of Cuba's lobster industry. STURGIS said Frank Nelson informed William Morgan he represented the interests of Raphael Trujillo, and could offer William Morgan $500,000 for his cooperation in organizing a Cuban invasion from the Dominican Republic. William Morgan allegedly accepted the offer.

On May 1, 1959, the FBI received a report of funds being funneled to William Morgan: "Within the past few days $25,000 was delivered to William Morgan...William Morgan has reportedly agreed to establish a new revolutionary anti-Castro front in the Escambray area...Carlos Prio...and the Dominican Republic are supplying the other arms and equipment...According to the source, Fulgencio Batista and Orlando Piedra are making large contributions." [FBI 105-70973 - Morgan] The anti-Castro forces in the Dominican Republic were led by General Jose Pedraza, who had served under Batista.

Alexander Rorke told the FBI that Dominick Bartone supplied a plane "which was used by the Cubans and Dominicans for the invasion of the Dominican Republic which took place on June 19, 1959." [CIA OS 8.24.62 Sheffield Edwards] On June 25, 1959, the Miami FBI was instructed to clarify "the statement in retel to effect that William Morgan was with Dominick Bartone, who was arrested May 22, 1959, by Customs, Miami, relative to seizure of plane loaded with arms for Dominican Republic. Miami should advise statements source and basis for allegation that William Morgan visited Miami in order to receive $10,000 from Dominican Consul Ferrando." Headquarters was advised that according to a source of the Miami Field Office, William Morgan met with [FNU] Ferrando in Room 1133R of Dupont Plaza Motel in Miami, a room registered to Dominick Bartone. The FBI received information that William Morgan was awaiting "arrival in the Dominican Republic of $200,000 worth of guns" which allegedly had been purchased in England by Amadeo Barleta, who had been the Subject of a Bureau investigation during World War II for being a "rabid pro-Fascist." [FBI 100-344127-NR 7.2.59] On August 10, 1959, a CIA source reported that William Morgan met with Dominick Bartone and several anti-Castro Cubans at Dominick Bartone's home in Miami. William Morgan was given $140,000 in cash. The CIA discovered that Dominick Bartone was sending William Morgan money through a Panamanian bank. When William Morgan returned to Havana he publicly declared that he had received $75,000 from counter-revolutionaries. Had STURGIS introduced William Morgan to Dominick Bartone, rather than to Frank Nelson? Peter Clapper of the Rockefeller Commission noted on May 6, 1975: "Bob: It may be of interest that Dominick Bartone, a mafia member in Cleveland, has told the Cleveland Plain Dealer reporter Mary Wogel that he was hired in 1959 by STURGIS to help with assassination plotting against Fidel Castro. Ms. Wogel called to volunteer the information." [CIA RCD 5.6.75 mistakenly labeled by Archives as HSCA 180-10107-10419] In August 1959 Alexander Rorke flew to Cuba to finalize the plans for the invasion of Cuba from the Dominican Republic with William A. Morgan. When he arrived at the home of William A. Morgan, he was arrested by the G-2. Alexander Rorke was incarcerated from August 9, 1959 to August 14, 1959. Alexander Rorke criticized the State Department for not having gotten him released quickly enough. The reason he was arrested was that William Morgan had reported the plot to Fidel Castro, so when a plane-load of Trujillo's men landed in a sugar cane field outside Havana the next day, the militia arrested them. An FBI informant explained:

In mid-August 1959 an anti-Castro group in Cuba began fighting, but William Morgan double-crossed the anti-Fidel Castro forces and through his actions entrapped a plane that was sent from the Dominican Republic in answer to a false broadcast by William Morgan for aid by the anti-Castro forces then fighting. (Deleted) other forces from the Dominican Republic which were prepared to leave to fight in Cuba were canceled..." [FBI MM 2-225]

The CIA reported: "Rorke recently returned from Cuba where he was held without charge from August 9, 1959 to August 14, 1959. Had gone to photograph invasion of that country by a force from U.S. and had made arrangements by a friend in Miami to be advised two days prior to invasion. The friend was Dominick Bartone." The FBI reported that Rolando Masferrer met with "Norman Rothman, hoodlum and gangster, Miami Beach, August 1959, concerning double cross of William Morgan, but Rolando Masferrer reportedly does not want anything to do with any plot to assassinate William Morgan...Informant said that also they discussed having an American crime syndicate sign a contract to produce the assassination of Morgan on behalf of Raphael Trujillo, Dominican Dictator, who would furnish money. (Deleted) Masferrer does not want to take part in any plans to assassinate Morgan, and does not plan to become a party to such a plot...Rothman is in contact with Enrique A. Garcia, an employee Dominican Republic delegation to the United Nations, who is also in contact with Masferrer." [FBI 100-344127-26 - pages 11 to 14 w/h]

THE YANKEE WHO SAVED THE REVOLUTION

William Morgan told Fidel Castro that Alexander Rorke had no part in the Dominican plot; Alexander Rorke was released and deported, having spent nine days in a Cuban jail. William Morgan became "the Yankee who saved the revolution." As a reward, he was given a frog leg farm outside Havana. Alexander Rorke returned to New York City. Rorke told the FBI about his experiences as a prisoner of Castro: "Rorke advised that in August 1959, he had gone to Cuba on a T.V. news assignment and to participate in counter-revolutionary matters. He stated that while there he was arrested on orders of Raul Castro, was shot at, subjected to round-the-clock interrogation and 'brainwashing attempts.' He stated he was held for nine days at the Cuban Army Base, Camp Libertad, located outside Havana."

On September 17, 1959, the CIA generated an index card about Dominick Bartone titled "Regarding Association with William Alexander Morgan, 201-251145, and Information Concerning a Plot to Assassinate Castro." In November 1959 Rorke was interviewed by radio station WABC in New York City:

Rorke indicated he had received many threatening telephone calls at his home after his initial interview with WABC regarding his derogatory remarks concerning Fidel Castro. He stated that while he was held prisoner in Havana he was told that he would be taken care of by Castro agents working in the United States if he spoke out against Castro's regime. He indicated there was a large Castro espionage ring working in the United States with personnel operating on diplomatic passports. His information, Rorke claimed, came from such persons as Major William Morgan. Rorke further advised that he had been approached in the United States by one Frank De Llundu who had worked for Castro in the United States during the revolution. De Llundu advised Rorke to stop criticizing the Castro regime. The report went on to indicate the details of Rorke's meetings with various other individuals, including Frank Nelson, an American who formerly operated a frozen food business in Cuba, and Dominick Bartone, President of the International Trading Company. According to Rorke, Bartone was apparently involved in arms and plane sales and one of these planes had delivered revolutionaries into Nicaragua. Rorke believed that Bartone also sold the plane which was used by the Cubans and Dominicans for the invasion of the Dominican Republic on June 19, 1959. Rorke indicated he had been in contact with Cuban exiles, namely General Manuel Benitez and Dr. Emilo Nunez Portuondo.

On November 17, 1959, Rorke advised the FBI that "he had received information from a source whom he considered reliable that there would be another demonstration in the Panama Canal area against the U.S. Government. His source related that, in addition to the march through the Canal Zone, riots were also expected in Panama and that they would take place before November 28, 1959. [FBI 109-12-223-273 encl. P.1 also see FBI 105-82088-14 p.1] On November 30, 1959 the NY Office of the FBI advised "that during the past two months they had been in contact with Rorke who was held by Cuban authorities in Havana during August 1959. Rorke had maintained contact with various revolutionary groups and individuals in the U.S. such as (deleted)."

As Dr. Emilo Nunez Portuondo, former Cuban Ambassador to the UN, and ex-Cuban General Manuel Benitez. "On October 21, 1959 Rorke advised that he had learned from the niece of the President of Panama that Dr. Emilio Nunez Portuondo was then in Panama talking to the representatives of the Panamanian Government trying to line up support for a provisional government for Cuba." [FBI 66-2542-3-34-5111 p.3] On December 30, 1959, Rorke told the FBI:

Detailed information concerning his anti-Fidel Castro activities during the period of July 1959 to December 30, 1959. He mentioned numerous individuals with whom he was in contact both within the US and outside the US in regard to Cuban political and revolutionary matters. The following references contain information furnished by Rorke in Miami Beach and New York City concerning his association with Dominick Edward Bartone. Rorke advised that on instructions from Bartone, in August 1959, he traveled to Cuba to participate in counter-revolutionary activities. He stated that as a result of these activities he was arrested by Cuban authorities and held without formal charges for approximately nine days. [FBI 97-3222-8 FBI 97-4623-179 pages 5, 19]

ALEXANDER RORKE AND JOHN F. KENNEDY

On June 30, 1960, J.C. King, Chief / Western Hemisphere Division, generated this Memorandum for the Record: "General Cabell called to say that he in turn had been called by Andy Goodpaster. A friend of the President's, Alexander I. Roarke, Jr. of NBC had telephoned to offer information which he thought might be of interest pertaining to Cuba and possibly the Dominican Republic... Action has been given to Mr. Reynolds and he has been authorized to use an OO man in New York to make the first contact with Roarke. I am to report back to General Cabell." In July 1960, pursuant to a request from OO/Contacts Division, CIA File EE-27955 was opened on Alexander Rorke. In 1975 the CIA described Alexander Rorke as "former witting collaborator (relationship terminated)."

July 6, 1960
MEMORANDUM FOR: Chief WHD
SUBJECT: Alexander I. Roarke, Jr.

1. Pursuant to a request at the end of last week from General Goodpasture of the White House, a representative of OO/C in New York City interviewed the Subject on July 5, 1960.

2. Following a rambling narrative of his experiences over the years in Central America and the Caribbean, Mr. Roarke came to this major, which was the most capable Cuban exiled military leader, and the one who is most deserving of U.S. support is Pedro Diaz Lanz. Mr. Roarke knows Diaz Lanz and was planning to appear with Diaz Lanz on a television program...Mr. Roarke considers Diaz Lanz superior to General Pedraza, Francisco Cajigas and Antonio Varona, all of whom he claims to know.

3. Mr. Roarke said that the Somozas have agreed to give Diaz Lanz a military base in Nicaragua. Mr. Roarke himself intends to organize an American Committee to back Diaz Lanz. He will call it the Committee to Rescue Latin America from Communism or something similar..

J.D. Esterline Chief, WH/4.

On June 30, 1960, there was a telephone conversation between "Reynolds-Daniels" about Rorke:

He originally worked for the New York City Office of the FBI as clerk. Since then he has been known to impersonate federal agents, although he has not been apprehended for it. He is the son-in-law of Sherman Billingsley. Roarke was jailed in Havana last year and feels that the State Department did not spring him quickly enough --- evidently he spent a couple of days in jail. Ever since he has been viciously attacking the State Department. His father is a U.S. federal referee and this guy is now unemployed and considered a pest. The local bureau here avoids him like the plague and possibly you might want to get a rundown from the Bureau. He might use us as a springboard if he get too involved, but we will be glad to talk to him if you want us to. This information is from an unofficial contact in the Bureau who is on the Cuba desk. He, in turn, has been very helpful to us unofficially. Please protect source. To ops support. Start a 201 file. RR (illegible) July 12, 1960.

Another CIA document stated:

MEMORANDUM FOR: Chief, Personnel Security Division, OS July 13, 1960
FROM: Chief, Contact Division, 00
SUBJECT: Request for Security Checks

1. Security checks are being requested on the U.S. citizens described in the attached Biographical Data Forms. Please furnish any information obtained as a result of your checks which relates to the security aspects of contact with them.

2. These persons are to be used for routine exploitation as sources of foreign positive intelligence. Virginia L. Thorne for E. M. Ashcraft.

By February 1961 the CIA concluded:

Wrote article on anti-Castro activities in Cuba for Argosy. 00 says he appears to be an adventurer type operating on fringe of Cuban counter-revolutionary activities. He has an ability to weave a few items of limited dissemination into a fabric of open knowledge and thus sound extremely knowledgeable. 00 recommends no further contact with him. #### GERALDINE SHAMMA

In early 1960, Alexander Rorke went to Havana to contact Geraldine Isabella Shamma (born March 14, 1905; died June 9, 1989). In September 1960 the G-2 arrested Geraldine Shamma, who was on a mission for exile leader Manuel Artime Buesa. Geraldine Shamma believed Manuel Artime betrayed her:

MEMORANDUM FOR: SA/LD
ATTENTION: Mr. William Sturbitts
SUBJECT: Geraldine Isabella Shamma, with aka's

REFERENCE: Letter of March 8, 1976 from George R. Richards, Attorney for Geraldine Shamma

1. According to information in Agency files, Geraldine Shamman (sic) de Carrera, an American, was detained by the Rebel Army Investigation Department (DIER), at her home in Miramar, on November 5, 1960. Wayne Gilchrist, an Embassy Officer, visited Mrs. Shamma on November 29, 1960. She confided to him that the specific charge against her was that she was the right hand man of the Secretary General of the Cuban Revolutionary Front in Miami, Manuel Artime. Mrs. Shamma further stated that her reported role with the Cuban Revolutionary Front was that of liaison between Manuel Artime and certain Americans (not further identified) interested in the counter-revolutionary movement. Mrs. Shamma told Mr. Gilchrist that she denied to her interrogators that she had anything to do with the Cuban counter-revolutionary movement, but informed him, confidentially, that she was actually working with Artime and his group. She gave no details regarding the type of assistance she had been rendering. Gilchrist noted that for several months before her arrest, Geraldine Shamma was a contact of Major Van Horn, Colonel Erickson S. Nichols and Miss Betty Perkins of the American Embassy's Air Attaché Office. During her interrogation by the DIER, Mrs. Shamma was asked why she visited the embassy so often to see the Major and Miss Perkins.

2. There are several references in the Agency files which indicate that the Cuban Intelligence Service believed Mrs. Shamma to be an agent of the CIA. There is absolutely no indication in Agency records indicating that Mrs. Shamma was in any way involved with the CIA.

3. The FRANK FIORINI who allegedly recruited Mrs. Shamma to work for the U.S. Government has never worked for the Agency. Cite Page 252 "Findings" Para 1, STURGIS testified under oath that he had never been employed by the CIA or had ever served it as an agent, informant or other operative.

4. There is no indication in Agency records that the Major Robert Van Horn and Air Force Attaché Colonel Nichols (Col. Erickson S. Nichols) cited in the referent letter ever worked for the Agency.

STURGIS told the Rockefeller Commission Geraldine Shamma

Was an American woman who was married to Captain Shamma. Her marriage name was Suarez. So her name was Geraldine Suarez Shamma. They owned a tobacco business in Cuba which amounted to about $20 million. I recruited her for the Embassy. And her contacts were several people there, or at least one major person, and that was Major Van Horne. Her job was to meet and make contact with top officials in the government, which she did. She had a fabulous home and gave parties. Many of the top military commanders went over to her home. She was the contact with the American Government with the underground organization.

STURGIS related, "Because of her activities going back and forth between Miami and Cuba with the underground and the U.S. Government, she was eventually captured and put in a Cuban prison." Geraldine Shamma had rented a safehouse on Brickell Avenue in Miami, where recruits would be screened for MRR membership. MRR, the Movement Of Revolutionary Recuperation, was the political arm of the Bay of Pigs Brigade. STURGIS told Michael Canfield: "She was the go-between for the underground in Havana and the people here. That was Artime's group, MRR. We had a place on Brickell Avenue...that was the meeting place for the MRR organization." Geraldine Shamma: "The Agency paid for it and I maintained it. The boys who came over from Cuba to go into the Brigade would be sent to this safehouse first, and there, they'd be screened by the CIA." HUNT had a nearby apartment. STURGIS told the Rockefeller Commission: "The Cubans who came from Havana would come to the safehouse which she maintained herself with her own money, not CIA money, her own money. BERNARD BARKER would call her up, and she would tell him who was there and he would come over to pick up these Cuban exiles to be sent over to be interrogated or debriefed. This is what BERNARD BARKER would do. And E. HOWARD HUNT, I believe, may have come over there. I don't think he did, but anyway, she met him traveling back and forth from Havana, where she met him I don't know off hand. You would have to ask her." Robert Olsen asked: "You mean you have subsequently heard or learned that she possibly had some contact with HUNT?" STURGIS: "Oh, I knew that for years, because, remember, I was in Brickell Avenue in Miami, too." In December 1960 an FBI informant who lived with STURGIS said that STURGIS claimed he was working with, and being sponsored by, the Agency for some future military action against Castro. [CIA FOIA #73-4] On December 16, 1960 the FBI sent a memo to the Office of Security, Department of State, File #2-1499, subject, STURGIS, Neutrality Matters. Geraldine Shamma was released from prison in Cuba on March 17, 1963, as a result of a deal arranged by James Donovan. When she landed in Homestead Air Force Base, Florida, she told the press: "If President Kennedy wants to welcome me, he can damn well fly down here!"

JAMES BUCHANAN

STURGIS, Pedro Diaz Lanz and Victor Paneque recruited the Buchanan brothers, James and Jerry, for membership in the International Anti-Communist Brigade. James Buchanan, (born April 22, 1937, at Brevard, North Carolina) the senior of the Buchanan brothers, was married to Edna H. Rydzik in January 1963 in Miami Beach. In 1957 James Buchanan worked for the Hollywood Florida Sun until he ran off with the wife of an employee of the City of Hollywood. James Buchanan then became a reporter for The Pompano Beach Sun-Sentinel. While he was at the Sun-Sentinel he had an affair with one of the secretaries there and her husband came to the offices of the paper and threatened to shoot James Buchanan and the secretary. [FBI 105-82555-3787] James Buchanan was the author of a series of articles critical of the Kennedy Administration. In December 1959 Buchanan visited Cuba where he aided in the escape of Austin Young from a Cuban prison. Austin Young had been sentenced to a 30 year term for counter-revolutionary activities. The FBI reported: "Austin Young was recaptured a few days after his escape in a downtown hotel and Buchanan was arrested. Buchanan's lawyer said the reporter will probably have to spend the Christmas holiday in jail while awaiting trial. The military tribunals will be in recess from December 22, 1959 until January 4, 1960 and Cuban civil courts normally recess for about the same period. Mr. Buchanan's case now is before the Cuban Supreme Court, which will determine if he will be tried before a military or civil court. Mr. Castro said in a television speech Thursday night that Mr. Buchanan will have to be tried by revolutionary courts which could either be military or civil. Government officials scoffed at a report of a possible death sentence for the reporter. Mr. Castro himself hinted that it would be a good idea to order Mr. Buchanan 'deported, never to return to Cuba to molest us.'" [FBI 64-44828-a Miami Herald 12.19.59] In September 1962 James Buchanan was quoted as complaining that the Federal Government was interfering in his activities: "The Feds are driving us up the wall. They're haunting the hell out of us, knocking over our weapons shipments and raiding Miami houses."

JERRY "BUCKY" BUCHANAN

Jerry Buchanan, Jim Buchanan's brother, 22, attended Riverdale School in Norfolk, Virginia, and then served in the Army. He was stationed on the Czechoslovakian border. In June 1959 he was the Subject of a Miami investigation for impersonation based on use of Army identification in the name of Jesse L. Murphy used to cash bad checks. The complaint, which charged Jerry Buchanan with Impersonation, was dismissed at Miami when he was located at Ft. McPherson, Georgia, in April 1959, serving a sentence for AWOL. In September 1961 Jerry Buchanan trained with Rolando Masferrer on No Name Key in Florida: "There were 60 of us" Buchanan said, "About half Cubans and half Americans. The island was mostly swamp and we were sleeping out in the open. In November 1961 a friend of Buchanan had been shot by a Cuban in a training accident. a growing antipathy between the two groups finally led Buchanan to leave the island with the Americans, all of whom subsequently joined FIORINI'S International Anti-Communist Brigade." On May 16, 1961, Jerry Buchanan told his hometown newspaper, The Norfolk-Ledger, "There are hundreds of Americans in Miami right now who'd like nothing better than a crack at giving Castro the boot. Cubans are nice people but, under pressure, they don't remember orders." [N-L 5.16.61] The Buchanan brothers flew supply missions from a secret base in the Bahamas to anti-Castro guerrillas in the Escambray Mountains. Victor Paneque helped locate these men. In April 1963 British authorities captured 13 of Cuban exile Orlando Bosch's men on a small West Indies island. Jerry Buchanan was the only American among the 13 arrested. The funds for this anti-Castro action had been furnished by a Chicago-based Cuban exile, Paulino A. Sierra, who collected money from Las Vegas gambling interests. [CIA 201-739652] Dr. Paulino Alberto Sierra Martinez was a minister in the Batista Government. He left Havana in 1960 and settled for a time in Miami, where he worked as a translator. Paulino Sierra spoke, read, and wrote, four languages. In 1962 Paulino Sierra moved to Chicago, where he was admitted to the bar and became active in exile affairs. In August 1962 the CIA requested that the FBI run an expedite check on Paulino Sierra. CIA Office of Security records came up negative. [Victor R. White 7.21.62; G. Marvin Gentile, H. K. Clayton 8.30.62] The CIA reported that on:

...March 16, 1963, Martin Pella, who is acquainted with Sierra also, said he had learned more from Ceasar Blanco about the Blanco-Sierra meeting with 'gamblers.' Blanco told him that during the latter part of February 1963 he and Sierra were approached by and met with (in Sierra's apartment) Burton M. Mold and John R. Lechner. They said 'We need your brains.' We'd like you to write a document covering the best solution as to how to put together the different political groups of Cuban refugees. They told Ceasar Blanco and Paulino Sierra that they were very familiar with the Cuban situation because they represented substantial investments in Cuba. When asked what investments they mentioned real estate, hotels and 'other operations connected with them.' Ceasar Blanco asked for some names of people to further identify the two and they mentioned Jake Lansky. Ceasar Blanco having been in charge of Public Order in Havana, recalled Lansky as the brother of Meyer Lansky, U.S. gangster and syndicate man and told Pella that Mold and Lechner had to be from the 'syndicate.' [CIA Subject: U.S. Gambling Syndicate Interest in Cuban Matters]

A March 1963 CIA report revealed that Paulino Sierra mentioned an offer of $10 million in backing for guarantees of Cuban gambling concessions after Castro was thrown out.

WILLIAM BROWDER

William Browder was Paulino Sierra's sponsor in Chicago. William Browder told the HSCA he recalled that a man:

...approached Sierra with an offer of substantial financial assistance to over overthrow Fidel Castro, in exchange for gambling concessions. Mr. Browder said he and Sierra gave this information to the FBI because they did not want Sierra to become involved with gambling interests. As Mr. Browder was then a member of the Chicago Metropolitan Crime Commission, he was sensitive to the ramifications of such involvement. [HSCA Int. 11.29.78 Orr]

Felipe Vidal also investigated Sierra and reported this to the FBI:

Paulino Sierra addressed a group of about 80 Cubans and introduced an American, whose name was not given. The American then addressed the group and said he worked for a company whose name was not given, and that he had good contacts in the Standard Oil Corporation. The American indicated he was from Chicago and was willing to help the Cuban exiles if they could establish unity among the different political groups. The American stated he had fifteen million dollars available and would up seven point five million if the Cubans would put up seven point five million and thereafter they would attempt to overthrow the present government of Cuba.

This document contained information from a CIA report on Paulino Sierra dated May 17, 1963. In this document an FBI informant described Paulino Sierra as "a man without scruples, who has thrown aside the Cuban Liberty Alliance, and is now trying to sell the identical plan to other anticommunist organizations, such as Alpha-66." [FBI 109-584-3596] Paulino Sierra arrived in Miami on May 15, 1963, and invited Cuban exile leaders of all political persuasions to meetings where unification for a Cuban military invasion was discussed. Pedro Diaz Lanz, Carlos Rodriguez Quesada and Philippe Vidal were invited to this meeting. Paulino Sierra said he represented a group of wealthy Chicagoans, along with the interests of United Fruit and Standard Oil who wished to combine its efforts with those of Cuban exiles to overthrow the Castro regime, with or without United States Government approval. [CIA IN 38659 CITE WAVE 8422] Paulino Sierra claimed his backers were willing to provide $30 million. On May 28, 1963 the Director of the FBI sent The Attorney General a letter about Paulino Sierra. [FBI 105-121010-3]

Our Chicago Office has identified the person accompanying Sierra as William N. Trull, formerly an entertainer and currently residing in Chicago. Both Sierra and Trull have been interviewed, possibly unbeknown to each other and have told inconsistent stories. Sierra, who originally came to this country as political refugee and is presently employed by the Union Tank Car Company, claims that Trull made the original approach to Sierra. According to Sierra, Trull made the approach after reading about Sierra in a Chicago newspaper and told Sierra he represented men willing to give economic aid for the overthrow of Castro provided that all the Cuban groups were unified. Allegedly, Trull told Sierra that the people that Trull represented would be interested in loaning up to 30 million dollars on a strictly business proposition. As a result Sierra made arrangement for Trull to accompany him to Miami and speak to Cuban groups. William N. Trull advised our agents that he had been identified as a friend of the Cubans as a result of having performed as an entertainer for many Cuban groups in Chicago. He said that during March 1963 he was contacted by Sierra, who after three meetings between the two men, requested Trull to accompany him to Miami to promote attempts to unify Cuban groups looking to overthrow Castro. According to Trull, he at first decline to go with Sierra but when Sierra called him from Florida and wired him airline tickets, Trull flew to Miami, where he stayed at the Ponce De Leon Hotel. Sierra asked Trull to speak to Carlos Prio Socarras, former President of Cuba and an individual who possibly was Eusebio Mujal, former Cuban labor union leader. When assured by Sierra of personal financial benefit, Trull agreed to inform Prio and Mujal that he was representing wealthy American interests who had business propositions to make for the Cubans concerned if they could unify with Prio as President and Sierra as Executive Secretary. According to Trull, he talked to Prio and Mujal as requested by Sierra and then addressed a meeting of approximately seventy groups. Trull advised there is no truth to the statements he made but was told by Sierra that the latter had a commitment from a group of Cleveland Ohio hoodlums who have interests in gambling casinos in Las Vegas. Allegedly this commitment is to the extent of fourteen million dollars, made with the understanding that if Castro is overthrown, then the group organized by Sierra gains power in Cuba and the Cleveland group will receive 50% of the gambling casinos to be set up. Trull advised that he does not intend to inform Sierra that he has been interviewed by FBI agents and will continue to play along with Sierra to ascertain further details of Sierra's involvement with gambling interests. Our agents will remain in contact with Trull and further developments will be brought to your attention.

1. The Deputy Attorney General

1. Mr. Herbert J. Miller, Jr. Assistant Attorney General

1. Mr. Walter Yeagley Assistant Attorney General

NOTE: Deputy Attorney General Katzenbach called Assistant Director Evans concerning the meeting at MM attended by Sierra and Trull. Katzenbach said that the AG had received a CIA report concerning the meeting and requested that the FBI look into the matter as there was an indication that the allegedly backing promised might be hoodlum or gambling money. State and CIA being advised separately. [FBI 105-121010-3 5.28.63]

The Chicago FBI Office closed its investigation of Paulino Sierra in June 1963 on the recommendation of S.A. Robert a. Baker and S.A. Walter C. Rogers, who concluded that Paulino Sierra was involved in a con job, rather than in any real activities, hoodlum or otherwise. The United States Secret Service still had an active interest in Paulino Sierra in 1963. While visiting Nicaragua in June 1963, Paulino Sierra told an associate of Manuel Artime he represented United States gambling concessions in Cuba. [HSCA V10 p98] He spoke with Luis Somoza while he was in Nicaragua. The Chicago FBI investigated Paulino Sierra under federal anti-racketeering statutes. The CIA reported on November 7, 1963:

COUNTRY Cuba / Colombia

SUBJECT Attempts of Paulino Sierra to Establish Base of Operations for Anti-Castro Activity in Colombia.

Date of Info. June 1963

Source: Paras. 2, 3, 4: a member of Cuban exile organization in Colombia who has furnished reliable information in the past.

Headquarters Comment: The information in paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 is the result of queries made after receipt of the information reported in paragraph 1, which was made available by a reliable source. Paulino Sierra has not been entrusted with any mission by the CIA; the letter mentioned in paragraph 2 presumably is a figment of his imagination.

1. Ali Castro, who resides on the island of Andres, Colombia, was approached in early June 1963 by a group of Cuban exiles to support, from Colombia, a plan for anti-Castro activity. According to Ali Castro, the Cuban exiles told him that they had the sympathy of the CIA and the Colombian Government that both would agree to "look the other way" at a plan to deliver supplies to men fighting in the Escambray if the Cuban exiles would do everything themselves. Ali Castro indicated that apparently the exiles approached him with the plan because the area where they planned to transfer materials that were to be flown and dropped in the Escambray is very well known to him. Ali Castro said that there would be no problem with the Colombian Government, but is dubious about the reaction in official United States circles.

2. About June 1963, Paulino Sierra, who was visiting Bogota, Colombia, said that he had a letter from the CIA, which authorized him to discuss with Colombian officials the possibility of establishing a Cuban government-in-exile, or the use of Colombian territory as a base for operations against Cuba. Paulino Sierra was carrying all sorts of documents purporting to show that he represented a majority of the Cuban exile organizations.

3. Sierra reportedly spoke with Guillermo Leon Valencio, President of Colombia. Other Colombian officials who spoke with Sierra were expressing interest in learning something about him. [CIA Col. Sta. Report No.CSDB-3/657,755]

By July 1963 Paulino Sierra said he had built a coalition of predominantly right-wing anti-Castro groups who were willing to unify behind Carlos Prio Socarras as Cuba's President, and Paulino Sierra as Secretary of State, in a provisional military government-in-exile, known as the Junta Del Gobierno De Cuba En El Exilo. United States Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy ordered the FBI to look into the Junta.

PAULINO SIERRA AND HEMMING

On August 28, 1963 Paulino Sierra was investigated in connection with the American Educational League, Los Angeles. By late August 1963, Paulino Sierra contacted Richard Lauchli to purchase guns. Paulino Sierra asked HEMMING associate Steve Justin Wilson to deliver the guns to Miami. Another HEMMING associate, Dennis Linns Harber, assisted Paulino Sierra in the transport of military equipment. [HSCA V10 p99] Paulino Sierra offered HEMMING associate Joe Garman $11,000 to lead a Cuban raid. [Hinckle Deadly Secrets p206] An FBI document generated on September 16, 1963, read: "Sierra is Subject of anti-racketeering case being handled by Special Investigative Division in view of possibility Sierra is being backed by the criminal element. This matter had been discussed with Special Investigative Division which has no objection to our proposed investigation." [FBI 105-124049-1, 5] In September 1963 Carlos Prio Socarras announced that he was joining forces with Paulino Sierra and other exiles to form a force independent of that of Manuel Artime. [CIA TDCS DB-3/656,908 - 9.27.63] On October 11, 1963, the FBI in Miami was investigating Paulino Sierra for Neutrality Violations. [FBI 105-124049] On October 15, 1963, the CIA reported that Paulino Sierra's group "has made a pact with group of Subject 201-326634 for collaboration raid against Habana oil refinery." HEMMING told this researcher in 1994:

Sierra came down and tried to recruit us and flashed a lot of money and connections. Mob / Teamster money. Sierra dealt mostly through intermediaries. He's an aristocrat. I dealt with him personally.

When the CIA did a document search on HEMMING it discovered a document titled

MANUEL AGUILAR AND PAULINO SIERRA

On October 22, 1963, Paulino Sierra was in Miami where he gave Cuban exile Manuel Aguilar money to purchase weapons from Steve Justin Wilson. Steve Justin Wilson took the money and refused to give Manuel Aguilar the weapons. The Miami Police Department reported:

Received call to 135 SW 19th Avenue Apt #2 at 1:59 a.m. October 11, 1963, supposed armed robbery by Cuban Male Rafael Hernandez of 135 SW 19th Avenue Apt #2 which happened at Riviera Supermarket. Complainant Aguilar with friend, Manuel Beraza, stated that Subject Hernandez and friend Steve Wilson attempted to sell them a car. At Riviera Supermarket complainant states after questioning that he was not really buying a car, but was completing a purchase of guns and ammunition from Subject. He states that he gave a $400 deposit to Subject two days ago and made date to meet Subject at Riviera Supermarket to pick up guns and pay $642.00 more to complete the deal. Complainant states that Subject came to market in car with a large wooden crate in the trunk, supposedly holding guns etc. Complainant states Subject transferred crate to his car and then he took out the money to pay Subject, but decided to open crate first. He states Subject's friend put a gun in his back and Subject took the $642 and fled in car. Complainant opened crate and found concrete blocks, grass inside...Original owner of money was Paulino Sierra who donated it to Complainant who is head of FRAC: Frente Revolucionario Anti-Communist. All money was recovered.

[Miami Police Report 10.15.63 CR 7906] Manuel Aguilar Alvarez, was born June 3, 1929 in Havana. He came to the United States in 1961 from Cuba in a small boat to Key West.

Dennis Harber, Isidoro Borga and Bernardo De Torres

PAULINO SIERRA AND DENNIS HARBER

In October 30, 1963, Paulino Sierra's boat was seized by government agents. The CIA reported:

Source: a member of a group of Cuban emigres trained in the techniques of information collection. This group has provided useful reports for over two years. This information was obtained from Manuel Lozano Pino. Manuel Lozano Pino, member of Dr. Paulino a. Sierra's Organizing Committee says that the group intends to institute a suit over the seizure of the PITUSA I by U.S. Government agents. It is the opinion of the committee members that there was no reason for stopping the craft when it was being transported by trailer to Key West by Dennis Lynn Harber. The members maintain that no offense was committed at the time the boat was intercepted." [CIA 201-737652 11.2.63] On November 7, 1963, Paulino Sierra was investigated by the Miami FBI, in connection with Alpha-66. [FBI 121010 NR 11.7.63] On November 14, 1963, the CIA reported that the secretary of Paulino Sierra's organizing committee resigned because of a disagreement over Paulino Sierra's pact with "leftist" organizations such as the 30th of November Movement: "Sierra had agreed to finance the operations of these organizations in return for which the leaders would support Sierra's aspirations to be Cuban President for 18 months [following liberation]. [CIA F82-0430/210]

STURGIS' CITIZENSHIP IS RESTORED

The FBI reported:

On February 8, 1961, Elmo M. Rainbolt Chief Patrol Inspector, United States Border Patrol, informed that during the late evening hours of February 3, 1961, and the early morning hours of February 4, 1961, Border Patrol Inspectors Gullede Baker and Lewis G. Finklea accompanied the Miami Harbor Patrol, at the request of the Miami Police Department, on a surveillance of the tugboat Gil Rokie.

About 1:15 AM, February 4, 1961 the Gil Rokie was taken from its location and the Harbor Boat Patrol, with Inspectors Baker and Finklea aboard pursued it immediately after the tug boat got under way. According to Rainbolt in an attempt to stop the tugboat, officers of the Harbor Patrol fired warning shots after the tugboat failed to heed the Patrol boat's siren. Several shots were fired by a .22 rifle, .38 caliber pistol, and a shot gun using regular ammunition. It is unknown whether this warning fire was returned from the tugboat, according to Rainbolt and the crew on the tugboat attempted to run close to the shore at Northeast 43rd Street, Miami, and ran aground. The men then attempted to escape by wading and swimming ashore. Four were arrested, and one individual, whose identity is unknown at this time, managed to escape. After the tugboat ran aground, the individuals were observed throwing firearms over the side. The tugboat had field packs and ammo (M-1) in quantity aboard. On February 9, 1961 MM T-1 advised he had ascertained from conversations with individuals associated with Proctor and Fiorini's groups that three unidentified male Americans had participated in the theft of the tug boat and escaped the police. [FBI 2-1499-48]

On February 23, 1962 the in the course of a report on MMRC, a breakaway organization that once included Pedro Diaz Lanz, the FBI reported that STURGIS, Sergio Diaz Bruel and Carlos Garcia had formed Hampton Roads Salvage and had purchased three boats. [FBI 105-108646] On April 24, 1961 the CIA in Miami, Florida reported:

STURGIS claimed to be a member of the anti-Castro group, FRD. Subject has camp 40 miles from Miami, with Max Villa Jr. in charge. Camp site deserted as of January 1961. On February 4, 1961, a tugboat Gil Rokie was stolen from Miami by group, some of whom were later arrested, and had previously stayed at Subject's Miami residence. Source reported Subject on February 26, 1961 had returned from what he described as his unsuccessful attempt to get into Cuba. Newspapers reported Subject's U.S. citizenship restored after he made appeal to INS. Some of thieves were Alex Rorke, Bob Rostallion, Dick Whatley. a Ken Proctor was also involved. [CIA DBF-75627 4.24.61 also see DBF 89191 9.22.61]

In March 1961 Senator George Smathers obtained a hearing for STURGIS before the Citizenship Review Board of the State Department, which, according to the Immigration and Naturalization Service official handling the matter, was unusual:

Technicalities on which subject's expatriation case ordered reopened deal with the fact that subject repeatedly took 5th Amendment to questions asked to him at previous hearing and Pedro Diaz LANZ did not testify on subject's behalf although he was supposed to have done so. Case was ordered reopened to hear testimony of those two persons which, according to the INS official handling the matter, is very unusual and not according to precedent. It is noted that when SA Kellogg saw subject at home of Pedro Diaz Lanz, subject was casually questioned about the status of his expatriation and without being specific he said that he was rather confident that it would be taken care of "in Washington." [FBI 2-1499-60]

The citizenship of STURGIS was restored on March 14, 1961. The INS in Miami did not appeal this determination. [FBI 2-1499-89 2 pages w/h] Under Secretary of State Christian Herter stated he had "inadvertently" signed the loss of citizenship order. [AP Dispatch 5.12.60; Messick Hoover p154 W/G Ex. 9913; Miami Herald 1.19.71 Messick Lansky p191]

STURGIS AND BARKER 1961 TO 1962

BARKER'S Operational Monthly Report for June 1962 indicated that he was contacted by the CIA on June 5, 1962, June 11, 1962, and June 18, 1962. BARKER'S reports, none of which were disseminated, included information on the activities of FRANK STURGIS originated with FRANK STURGIS and:

...possible sources of Miami Herald report on Manolo Ray's outshining Miro Cardona in ODYOKE's eyes. While it is hoped that in the near future Subject will develop sources of more disseminable information, his current reporting is of definite operational value and of interest for the files. Operationally, Subject's sources were scrutinized. He listed for the case officer some 180 individuals who had been the direct source of previous reports and who would give him information on request. These sources run almost the entire gamut of Cuban exile organizations. Unfortunately, however, all of these sources know, or could easily find out, that Subject was and probably still is a KUBARK agent. Pointing out the negative value of this reputation (while admitting it is not without its positive side) the case officer has Subject to submit a plan by which the more significant targets might be tapped in a more indirect fashion so that we might find out what certain groups are doing and planning that they would not want to tell someone who might be expected to report back to KUBARK... [To: C/TFW from JMWVE 7.13.62]

MEMORANDUM October 1973

SUBJECT: FRANK FIORINI STURGIS

Following is information from further review of FIORINI's official file in response to Daniel E. Schultz' inquiry to the Agency dated September 27, 1973.

There are four volumes to FIORINI'S 201 file, the majority of its content being reports from the FBI dated from 1958 through April 1969.

Agency information included a cable from Santiago De Cuba dated January 7, 1959 stating FIORINI claims to be chief of the 26 July Arms buyer in Miami and willing to cooperate 100 percent in supplying info. Cable stated it possible FIORINI may lose value to rebels but believe worthwhile CIA endorse his staying on. Headquarters CIA replied that FIORINI had been under FBI investigation for possible registration act violations and base should deal with FIORINI under strict consular cover and not make any commitments which might be later construed as U.S. Government approval of his activities. Wish to reiterate here that FIORINI was never employed by the CIA.

The following is worth of note. FIORINI was involved in November 1961 to December 1961 leaflet dropping flights over Cuba. The FBI queried the CIA about allegations that the flights by FIORINI and Alexander Rorke Jr. were entirely supported by CIA with CIA arranging Air/Sea rescue, and that all of FIORINI'S actions were known to CIA Miami and his activities being done on CIA instructions. Headquarters CIA was satisfied allegations not true but trouble in view of fact FIORINI was in contact with CIA rep Florida who used name "BARKER" who supposedly gave FIORINI phone number for CIA Miami office. FIORINI was to call this number if he was arrested or stopped on flights and the CIA would 'get him out.' These Cuban over flights were not authorized by the CIA and the FBI was alerted to the fact it was not a CIA operation. (BARKER was generally known in the Miami area as a CIA source.) Since BARKER was a close friend of FIORINI, BARKER, shortly before the Bay of Pigs invasion, was asked by the CIA to attempt to obtain from FIORINI information concerning the activities of FIORINI. BARKER met with FIORINI several times a month from fall of 1961 to July 1962. BARKER reported on STURGIS on July 13, 1962, and on July 19, 1962. Barker insisted when queried by CIA case officer, that he never revealed classified information or operational data including JMWAVE phone numbers to FIORINI. FIORINI told BARKER that the leaflet op was conceived by Sergio Rojas. A Headquarters cable to JMWAVE dated July 1962 stated that Rojas had been non-operational since February 1962. Chris Hopkins.

1. In reply to FBI, please avoid possible embarrassment in attempting protect BARKER who generally known in Cuban exile community as KUBARK source.

2. BARKER close friend and sometime confidant of FIORINI since initial contact at KUBARK behest shortly after Cuban invasion. BARKER says he admires FIORINI and speaks frankly with him on matters known or knowable his sector but insists he never revealed classified info or operational data including JMWAVE phone numbers. They have met several times a month on average since last fall.

3. Following is summary debriefing July 16, 1962 requested in reference and review all A-1 reports FIORINI contacts.

4. Investigation of reported Phantom Cell flight over Camaguey October 21, 1961 assigned A-1 who November 9, 1961, reported that all other leads having come to dead end he played hunch and approached FRANK FIORINI with "FRANK I know." Latter surprised and somewhat embarrassed gave reasonably full details: Sergio Rojas who called FIORINI early October from N.Y. for conference with him and Diaz Lanz brothers in Miami. Rojas agreed with FIORINI better operate without Diaz Lanz brothers who had been briefed. They later used this knowledge in attempt to claim sponsorship. FIORINI hired four U.S. pilots at $1,000 each and two Beechcraft for $2,000 took off from Miami International for Nassau with crew of three in each plane. Rorke flew with FIORINI. From Nassau they took off separately for Camaguey and Santiago but storms prevented Santiago so that both drops totaling 400,000 pamphlets made over Camaguey. Planes returned Nassau thence returned Miami. Rojas meanwhile went Nicaragua to use successful drop as trump card in play for Somozo backing in future Ops.

A-1 reported December 13, 1961, that another over flight planned for December 9, 1961, aborted when Bob Swanner, one of four pilots on previous drop apprehended on landing at Nassau since aircraft rented at Miami for legal flights only. Further British investigation revealed eight bundles prop leaflets at Roman Key with Al (LNU) who runs Key for British owners named something like Bethel. FIORINI, Rorke and Bill Johnson (last probably one of the previous crew) arrested on arrival Nassau via commercial flight where they were to meet Swanner for final phase Op. Released after questioning they provided bail for Swanner and returned to Miami. Rorke took responsibility to arrange Swanner release while FIORINI asked A-1 put in good word at KUBARK to relieve U.S. Government border patrol pressure promising keep BARKER generally apprised future activities.

C. On February 2, 1962 A-1 reported that Robert Swanner of Miss. and Robert Thompson of Melbourne, Florida, missing in Comanche Cub after overflying Matanzas (Bodies never found) and that Rojos planning to bomb Havana electric plant with Lewis M. Leach Jr. of Ontario, California, in Mosquito bomber obtained through "Dip" Childress of Amarillo, Texas. Leach to receive $200 per week for preparations $2,500 for raid and $10,000 for wife in case of his death. Alternate target two oil tanks in Havana Bay waterfront. FIORINI charged with arrangements for Ops base.

D. On February 24, 1962, A-1 reported that Somoza in Coral Gables February 21, 1962, to February 23, 1962, said he discussed with both Diaz Lanz and Rojos and that U.S. Government had suspended all funding of them. Somoza told FIORINI future raids could start from Nicaragua but would not be allowed to return there.

E. On March 17, 1962, FIORINI gave A-1 photos taken of Roman Key from Piper Comanche which was later lost in raid over Matanzas.

F. On April 15, 1962, A-1 reported that FIORINI, Diaz Lanz and crew of 30 had that day sailed from Biscayne Bay on 70 foot yacht for island in Bahamas where Diaz Lanz claimed he had arms for 50 men but was turned back by U.S. Coast Guard. FIORINI confided that Op was to be Cuban landing but feels Diaz Lanz did not intend to go through with it and seeking publicity attempt.

G. After reports on latest Phantom Cell Op checked on FIORINI'S whereabouts with wife (common law?) Diaz Lanz and Oscar Mestre, who had been active in past with FIORINI and Rorke. On June 22, 1962 FIORINI called on A-1 and reported he had been in upstate New York procuring weapons for Diaz Lanz including 57 MM Recoilless rifle several automatic weapons with night lights (sic) and plenty of ammo which he delivered to Diaz Lanz on June 21, 1962. FIORINI also said that Diaz Lanz has backing of 68 Tampa lawyers which guarantees $1,800 a month in addition to stipends from New York and Puerto Rico. Moreover a group of recently arrived Venezuelans talked with FIORINI and Diaz Lanz about their providing a large amount of dollars for Naval action against Cuba. Names of Venezuelans unknown to FIORINI. [This info was supplied to the FBI by the CIA as information on STURGIS' activities in FBI 2-1499-103.]

H. On July 9, 1962 A-1 reported that Berry (illegible) used for Phantom Cell Ops base vice Roman Key with next Op scheduled July 26, 1962. That he and Diaz Lanz financially backed by group of North Americans which he is unwilling to name; and that he recently landed an 11 man infiltration team in North Oriente via Santa Domingo Key. On his arrest he claimed Mr. Fickey of immigration persecuting him; that cans of phosphorous found in his car low volatile stuff with which he experimenting not type used as incendiary. To protect his source he told Fickey phosphorous to kill rats. Asked BARKER to intercede with KUBARK for him.

[CIA 7.18.62 To: Dir. From JMWAVE]

On July 9, 1962 the FBI requested, from the CIA,

All available information or KUBARK dealings with or approval or activities Alexander Rorke and FRANK FIORINI. Inquiry based on allegations that November, December 1961 leaflet flights over Cuba by the pair were entirely supported by KUBARK with KUBARK arranging air/sea rescue and all FIORINI actions known KUBARK Miami and in fact being done on KUBARK instructions. William K. Harvey C/TFW Releasing Officer. [CIA 201-242256]

STURGIS told Robert Olsen of the Rockefeller Committee: "BARKER'S Station Chief in early 1961 was (Deleted), who was also in (Deleted) Station, where he was pro-Fidel. (So was (Deleted))." Olsen's handwritten notes indicated: "CIA personnel Jack Stewart CIA in Havana 1958 to 1959. 1968 Merida, Mexico. Rogelio Gonzalez Corso 1959 Havana M.R.R. Chief (military) (code name Francisco) contact with me or Geraldine Shamma. Rafael Hanscom U. R. Ray Sandstrom Ft. Lauderdale lawyer for STURGIS. Richardo Lorie and Salvador Alle."

Humberto Sori Marin, Rafael Hanscom and Roger Gonzalez Corso, Manuel Lorenzo Puig Millan, Nemesio Rodriguez Navarrete, Gaspar Dominguez Trueba and Eufemio J. Fernandez Ortega were arrested by Castro's militia on April 1, 1961. Rogelio Gonzalez Corso's code name was "Francisco." He was the number one target of Cuban intelligence, who lived in safe houses and worked with CIA Agent Felix Ismael Rodriguez. [Felix Ismael Rodriguez, Shadow Warrior, p75; Hinckle, Fish is Red page 72] Major Humberto Sori Marin, a former Havana lawyer, had drafted the Castro penal code which made firing squad executions legal. Sori Marin had been adjutant General of Castro's army, presiding at the 1959 war crimes trials that sent hundreds of Battista loyalists to the firing squads, and Castro's first Minister of Agriculture. But by 1961 he had turned against the Castro regime. STURGIS told the truth about his CIA contacts and was definitely "in the loop."

ALEXANDER RORKE: SEPTEMBER 1961 TO DECEMBER 1962

On September 6, 1961, the FBI in Dallas sent a teletype to the Director and to the New York Field Office regarding Rorke and Serge R. Rohas:

Today Lionel Childress, dealer in used aircraft, Amarillo, Texas, advised owns two Mosquito Bomber stored at Alamo Municipal Airport, San Antonio, Texas, which he has been trying to sell. States about two months ago was contacted telephonically from New York City by Rorke about planes and discussed deal various times on phone since then. On September 2 Rorke called and said would be in Amarillo September 3 to talk over deal and see planes. Rorke arrived Amarillo September 3 accompanied by Serge R. Rojas, who advised he was formerly Cuban Ambassador to England under Castro but had defected. Rorke stated intended to buy bombers in name of Panamanian Photography Company, fly them to Guatemala or Nicaragua arm them and use planes for bombing Standard Oil Company Refinery at Belot, Cuba, near Havana. On September 4 Childress flew subjects to San Antonio in his private plane, they viewed bombers and returned to New York City September 5 by plane stating they would let Childress know of their decision. Childress states subjects claimed to represent no group other than themselves and wished to make bomb strike to help in raising money from expropriated oil and sugar companies for further action against Cuba. Subjects indicated UNOFFICIAL approval of CIA. Childress states will not sell planes to Subjects unless Subjects furnish proof of government sanction. Rorke reportedly formerly free lance writer in Cuba and twice imprisoned by Castro. Bureau and New York requested to advise if Subject's activities known to proper authorities and if further action by Dallas desired. LHM follows. Informative Note Date September 7, 1961 Nasea advised 6:30 a.m. September 7, 1961. Indicated matter of possible interest to Sampson re Neutrality matters. Files culled re subs. BR [FBI 97-4623-4]

In September 1961 the White House ordered U.S. Customs to begin an investigation of Alexander Rorke. On September 12, 1961, J. Edgar Hoover sent a letter to Kenneth O'Donnell, Special Assistant to the President that concerned Rorke. This document reviewed Rorke's Standard Oil Refinery bombing plot and concluded:

Note: CIA told us Rojas had presented plan to White House officials as well as CIA. In view of the White House interest and since this matter is within the jurisdiction of Customs, we are making no further inquiries. Dissemination to State, Customs and other interested Agencies as well as instructions to field, being handled separately. CIA advised SA W. O. Cregar 9/8/61 it had no objection to Bureau stating CIA had no connection with this matter and that CIA in this instance would be revealed as source. Rorke served as Bureau clerk for 3 months in 1951 voluntarily resigning to devote full time to his studies. He has previously been connected with anti-Castro activities. In 1960 while gathering data concerning an illicit affair of Castro he impersonated a Bureau agent and was strongly admonished. [FBI 97-4623-3]

The CIA reported:

The latest information on Rorke is dated September 12, 1961 and indicates that he arrived in Amarillo, Texas, on September 3, 1961 accompanied by Sergio Rojas, former Cuban Ambassador to Great Britain. They planned to purchase bombers in the name of a Panamanian photography company and take them to Guatemala or Nicaragua where they would be armed for use in bombing the Standard Oil Company refinery in Havana. Such bombing they claimed, would help raise money for further action against Cuba. They claimed they represented only themselves and indicated that they had unofficial CIA approval. [Memo for DCI from Sheffield Edwards 8.24.62]

STURGIS flew another anti-Castro leafleting mission in October 1961:

In 1961 Subject headed an organization called the International Anti-Communist Brigade which he claimed had 5,000 men. He has been involved with GERALD PATRICK HEMMING who is head of the International Penetration Forces, another anti-Castro group. He flew an anti-Castro leaflet dropping mission over Camaguey, Cuba, in October 1961. The $10,000 for the leaflets reportedly came from Julio Lobo who has been an Agency contact...Subject has never been recruited by the Agency but has been associated with Mr. Eugenio Rolando Martinez Careaga, an Agency contact, since the early 1960's. In 1968 Subject resided in Northwest Miami and was employed as a used car salesman by G.M. Used Cars of Miami. [CIA FOIA 73-4]

In July 1964 Julio Lobo was involved with Teofilo Babun in a plan to kill Fidel Castro.

CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY

June 10, 1964

Memorandum For: The Director of Central Intelligence

Subject: Plans of Cuban Exiles to Assassinate Selected Cuban Government Leaders

1. The following report was compiled from information obtained by Agency officers from persons who were parties to the actions described. Agency officers made clear to each of the sources that the United States Government would not, under any circumstances, condone the planned actions. Presumably, the sources of the report, in submitting this information, were motivated, in part, by the belief that by disclosing the information they would obtain immunity against legal action should they succeed in implementing the plan.

2. A Cuban exile was approached on March 2, 1964, by an acquaintance who wished to discuss a plan, which was still in the embryonic state, to assassinate Fidel Castro. The acquaintance was described as a businessman and a shipowner who owns at least one ship which sails under the British flag, and who also has a legally sanctioned interest in distributing and placing slot machines in gambling houses. The involvement of the acquaintance in the slot machine business brings the man in contact with elements in the underworld, primarily through his partner, who is a former police officer from St. Louis, and through whom there is a tie-in with elements of the Cosa Nostra. The Cosa Nostra elements are alleged to have numerous contacts still available to them in Cuba and they have offered to assassinate Castro for $150,000 no advance funds were requested. If the mission cannot be accomplished, or if the plan is unsuccessful, an amount not to exceed $10,000 would be paid for the travel and living expenses of five men involved in the mission. The Cuban exile commented that he believed he had been approached with this plan because of his family's great wealth. He told his acquaintance that he was not interested and suggested an approach might be made to someone who has much more money.

3. Another Cuban exile reported that Byron Cameron, owner and operator of the M/V Cayman Hope, whose address is Caribe Trading Company, Fort Lauderdale, Florida, met persons attending the meeting were Teofilo Babun Franco, co-owner of the Antillean Marine Shipping Corporation, Miami, and two of Babun's employees, Oscar Fernandez Viego and Eliseo Gomez Fernandez. Babun and Cameron are friendly shipping business competitors in the Caribbean area. During the course of conversation at this meeting, Cameron mentioned that he was in contact with an unidentified group which would be willing to assassinate selected Cuban officials for cash; specifically the Cameron group is interested in assassinating Fidel Castro, Raul Castro and Che Guevara.

5...The contract for payment would be honored only upon the presentation of evidence that the three Cuban officials died at the hands of the assassins connected with Cameron's contacts.

6. In early April 1964, Eliseo Gomez Fernandez met with Jose "Pepin" Bosch. Bosch agreed to advance $100,000 and Babun and his associates would advance $2,500 for expenses. Julio Lobo Olavarri, a wealthy Cuban exile in New York, subsequently agreed to the terms, provided that his name was not involved. Accordingly, Babun gave Cameron $2,500 on April 24, 1964. Cameron then advised his group, and on April 25, 1964, he reported that his group had already called its man in Cuba and told him to proceed as planned and that "their other man" would be heading for Cuba shortly. The final comment was 'we hope to have some good news for you between May 20, 1964 and May 25, 1964.' Lobo planned to fly to Miami on May 19, 1964 to arrange for the transfer of $100,000 to a safety deposit box, the keys to which are to be held jointly by Cameron and a confidant of Lobo.

7. The identities of the persons in the Cameron group and how they plan to proceed with this mission are not known. Babun's associates are reluctant to make any unnecessary inquiries because they have invested $2,500 and because Cameron made it fairly clear at the beginning that the Mafia was involved. Cameron revealed during the negotiations that his contact was a police officer in the St. Louis, Missouri, Vice Squad, who was about to retire and who had numerous connections in the Mafia. Cameron implied that the other man in question was in Spain. Cameron knows that he could be indicted for conspiracy and if there is any treachery on his part, Babun and his associates would not hesitate to sink his ship, the MV Cayman Hope.

8. In late May 1964, a prominent Cuban exile who spoke with Jose "Pepin" Bosch reported that Teofilo Babun and Eliseo Gomez had a plan underway to assassinate Fidel Castro for the payment of $150,000. Bosch claimed that he had committed himself to furnish $50,000 and that he was hoping he could get the balance of the money from the United States Government or from other sources. Bosch indicated that he believes that a quick change for the better in the Cuban situation can be brought about only by the physical elimination of Fidel Castro and that his elimination is well worth $150,000. In pursuing his attempts to raise an additional $100,000, Bosch is planning to ask Julio Lobo to contribute at least $50,000. Richard Helms. Note: It is requested that this agency be informed of any action contemplated in regard to the persons mentioned in this report before such action is initiated. [FBI 105-131629-5].

The Attorney General
Director, FBI
Plans of Cuban Exiles to Assassinate
Selected Cuban Government Leaders IS- CUBA.

Reference is made to previous information concerning the alleged existence of plans involving organized crime elements in the United States and Cuban exiles to assassinate Fidel Castro, Prime Minister of Cuba, and other Cuban leaders. On July 16, 1964, you were advised, in part, that Teofilo Babun Solman, a Cuban exile who allegedly is involved in this matter, maintained upon re-interview that Eduardo Garcia, another Cuban exile, was present during a discussion he had with Julio Lobo of New York City and that Garcia could verify that he made no requests of Lobo for funds to carry out the above-mentioned assassination plan.

On July 17, 1964, Eduardo Garcia Molina of New York City advised that when he first learned of the plan in late January or early February 1964, he telephonically contacted the CIA at Washington, D.C. from Miami, Florida, and was told at that the CIA wanted no part of the plan. He stated that the plan was explained to him by Babun and that the details were known to Babun's employees, Eliseo Gomez Fernandez and Oscar Fernandez Veiga.

According to Garcia, Babun has close business ties with Byron Cameron of Fort Lauderdale, Florida, who is very sympathetic to the Cuban cause. In discussions with Babun, Gomez, Fernandez and Cameron all agreed not to disclose information concerning the plan if questioned by U.S. authorities. Garcia stated that the details as he knew them were as follows: The assassins, not Americans, would be of Spanish nationality who would go into Cuba with the proper documents and under a legitimate cover of doing business with Cuba. Cameron had an unknown contact with an unknown St. Louis, Missouri, police officer who had indirect contact with the would-be assassins. Babun was very anxious to see this plan carried out and contacted Cubans for money to pay the assassins. Garcia stated he did not recall the exact amount of money involved but it was about $100,000 to $150,000.

In May 1964, Babun and his wife were in New York City on a personal matter and while there Babun and Garcia went to see Lobo. During the discussions with Lobo, Babun told of the plan to eliminate the Cuban leaders. Lobo stated he would give serious thought to the plan. Garcia stated that Babun misinterpreted Lobo's statement and asked Lobo to contribute the entire amount or one third in the name of Babun who would pay Lobo after they returned from Cuba. Garcia stated there was a discussion between Lobo and Babun about a contract at the placing of money in escrow but to his recollection these matters were brought up by Lobo and not Babun.

Garcia stated that the name Jose 'Pepin' Bosch never came to his attention in this matter and the pertinent results will be made available to you. [SSCIA 157-10002-10208; FBI 105-131629-19] Copies of this report were also sent to Walter Yeagley and Herbert J. Miller.

On July 31, 1964, W. O. Cregar furnished D.J. Brennan with the following information:

Plans of Cuban Exiles to Assassinate Selected Cuban Government Leaders IS- CUBA.

The Nationalities Intelligence Section has requested Liaison to determine if the sources mentioned in CIA Memorandum, dated April 8, 1964, (disseminated locally to our Miami Office by CIA's Miami Office) and the sources referred to in the CIA's letter, dated June 10, 1964, (CSDB 3/661,353) could be made available to the Bureau for interview.

The sources of the CIA's memorandum of April 8, 1964, and CIA's letter of June 19, 1964, are identical. They are Miguel Guillermo Truyol and Oscar Fernandez Viega. CIA is of the opinion that the FBI has interviewed both individuals. In this regard it is noted that both individuals are employed by a small firm in Miami whose officers and employees are aware of the plan to assassinate selected Cuban government leaders. CIA is of the opinion that if the Bureau were to re-interview the two sources, it would suggest to them that the FBI's interest in a re-interview resulted from information received by this Bureau from the CIA. Sources have expressed the opinion to the CIA that, should it become known that they were reporting this type of information to CIA, they would immediately be fired from the firm where they are presently employed. As a result of the above CIA has asked that we not re-interview subject, however they have asked that should the Bureau deem re-interviews imperative, the following conditions be applied.

- (1) FBI would re-interview all people concerned and treat all the interviewees in a like manner.
- (2) Interview so conducted so that information originally furnished from CIA's sources will not appear either to sources or to others interviewed as the basis for re-interview.
- (3) CIA will not be revealed as the source of information on which re-interviews are predicated. [NARA SSCIA 157-10002-10226]

The Director of the FBI sent an airtel to the Miami FBI Field Office entitled "Plans of Cuban Exiles to Assassinate Selected Cuban Government Leaders IS- CUBA" that stated: "Reurairtel July 14, 1964. On July 30, 1964, CIA furnished following information:

The sources of the CIA's memorandum of April 8, 1964, and CIA's letter of June 19, 1964, are identical. They are Miguel Guillermo Truyol and Oscar Fernandez Viega. CIA considers the above mentioned sources as valuable assets. Bufile in this matter indicates (deleted). Immediately submit your recommendations (deleted) bearing in mind results of investigation already conducted. In addition suairtel whether Byron Cameron who allegedly is involved in this matter has returned to Miami from Mexico and whether the interview with him has been conducted...NOTE: We have been conducting investigation at request of Attorney General of alleged plans to assassinate Cuban Government leaders. Allegedly, U.S. hoodlum element and Cuban exiles are involved. We have furnished all pertinent information developed to date to the Attorney General, and other interested agencies. Investigation to date has failed to disclose any connection between hoodlum element in the United States and Cuban exiles. Miami office requested we determine CIA sources of information contained in CIA communications dated April 8, 1964, and June 10, 1964. We contacted in this connection and information set forth above is the result." [NARA SSCIA 157-10002-10227]

January 26, 1977 Jane Zerance of CIA'S LAD/JFK Task Force reported, Findings DBA 78251 (FBI document) dated August 18, 1964 concerning plan to assassinate Fidel Castro. A person by the name of Byron Cameron reportedly had contact with someone who in turn had a tie-in with elements of Cosa Nostra. Prices allegedly agreed upon were 100K to assassinate Castro; 20K for Raoul Castro and 20K for Che Guevara. Cameron denied these allegations.

HEMMING told this researcher:

They were dropping bombs, burning sugar cane fields and dropping leaflets. You just don't do one thing. Leaflets don't weigh shit.

The CIA received a Customs report stating Julio Lobo had financed Alexander Rorke:

Rorke is well known in Cuban clandestine circles and has been involved in most of the deals of Commander Diego Paneque, Luis Diaz Lanz, Sergio Rojas, now alleged to be working in the State Department, studying economics in Berlin, Germany and/or Israel. Rorke also had some dealings with Julio Lobo who is alleged to have given financial assistance to FRANK STURGIS in the amount of $10,000 for a leaflet raid in the Camaguey area some time back. [CIA D002280 11.25.62]

On October 16, 1962, Alex Rorke met with (Deleted) and told him:

- (1) He is not associated with or knowledgeable of Alpha-66.
- (2) He is no longer associated with FRANK FIORINI or Nino Diaz.

Rorke mentioned Oscar Mestre in connection with anti-Castro activities. This information was signed (Deleted) TFW/PM.

The CIA reported December 11, 1961: "Robert Frank Swanner arrested in Nassau for break of air navigation rules and smuggling. Articles smuggled were 350 pounds anti-Castro pamphlets for Cuba drop. Also involved were U.S. citizens William J. Johnson, FRANK STURGIS, and Rorke. Smuggling charges not being pressed." On July 21, 1962, a syndicated article appeared in 40 newspapers throughout the United States, which quoted Alexander Rorke as having said the Kennedy Administration had the CIA set up "a controlled opposition movement" to Fidel Castro, and was "planting agents in all Cuban exile groups to see to it that no military action is organized..." [Long Island Press Edith K. Roosevelt 7.21.62] On August 26, 1962, the FBI reported that Alexander Rorke was being funded by Cuban exile Laureano Batista Falla. [FBI 97-4623-151] On August 28, 1962, Alexander Rorke made his last FBI contact when he telephoned its Miami office. [FBI 97-4110-42 encl. p.1] He was in New Orleans in October 1962, lecturing at Tulane University. On November 23, 1962 Rorke was a guest speaker before the Lyceum-Tulane Association, New Orleans. When the FBI did a search of its files for references to Alexander Rorke, this trace appeared: "On November 26, 1963, (deleted) New Orleans, Harold Alderman advised that he had engaged in no activity in New Orleans in furtherance of the aims of the Fair Play for Cuba Committee, with the possible exception of the stand he took in a debate at Tulane University with the writer Alexander Rorke in October 1962." [Document containing ref. FBI 97-4623-179. Ref: 44-24016-634 p808 SI 105-82555-454 p688] Rorke had engaged in a heated argument with a Robert Reisman, a member of the Fair Play for Cuba Committee, at the end of his lecture at Tulane: "During the lecture, Rorke made derogatory comments concerning Fidel Castro. He spoke on the current crisis between the U.S. and Cuba and was critical of the Washington Administration in handling the situation. He was particularly critical of the failure of the U.S. Government to back the Bay of Pigs invaders."

On November 23, 1962, Rorke's boat, The Violyn III, was towed by the Coast Guard to Key West at his request. He denied that his destination was Cuba. President Kennedy's Cuban policy had not deterred Alexander Rorke and after the December 1962 raid by U.S. Customs Agents on HEMMING'S No Name Key training camp, he began a series of excursions into Cuba utilizing The Violyn III (Wallace Shanley had confiscated Bill Johnson and Alexander Rorke's aircraft). Alexander Rorke later publicly claimed that the CIA had advance knowledge of these raids and had helped financed them. Wallace Shanley:

As a Customs Officer I started having trouble with the CIA. They tried to spirit certain witnesses out of my reach. I would pick up some guys and they would demonstrate that all the materiel they had been provided by the CIA. There came a time when I decided to stick it up their ass - they were not above the law in the United States. They just thought they could do anything.

On July 3, 1961, and July 5, 1961, documents which mentioned STURGIS entitled "Revolutionary Junta of National Liberation" were generated in Miami. On July 31, 1961, STURGIS was mentioned in an FBI document entitled: "Intercontinental Penetration Force." On August 4, 1961, a document was generated by FBI Headquarters about STURGIS and on August 17, 1961, a Secret FBI document about STURGIS was generated in Miami. On September 8, 1961, he was mentioned in an FBI document entitled: "Alleged Recruiting Activities, Revolutionary Junta of National Liberation." Another FBI document on STURGIS was generated on September 22, 1961, in Miami. On September 25, 1961, STURGIS, Pedro Diaz Lanz and Marcos Diaz Lanz formed incorporation documents for Hampton Roads Salvage Company of Florida. On October 9, 1961, the CIA reported that STURGIS "has offered his services to Carlos Prio Soccarras as a military advisor and planner for some future armed operation in Cuba. Prio and Subject were observed one day in September studying some maps of Cuba. Source believes Subject is employed by Prio." [Army Intelligence Report ID 2/182,837]

OPERATION CELLULA FANTASMA

In December 1961 STURGIS launched Operation Cellula Fantasma, a leafleting operation against Cuba. He apprised Michael Canfield:

You have to remember one thing. I've jumped from airplanes. I've made bombing raids, I've bought agents, you know, threw them out of airplanes with parachutes. I took weapons behind foreign countries for the underground. I've risked my life quite a bit.

An Operation Cellula Fantasma press released stated: "Operation Phantom has continually harassed Fidel Castro with its air and sea missions to his island since the early days of his takeover. It was only ten months after the Cuban Revolution, as Castro was purging his rebel ranks of those not in step with his newly revealed Communist ideals, that the first phantom bomber buzzed Havana."

SWANNER AND THOMPSON

On the weekend of December 15, 1961, to December 17, 1961, one of the Operation Cellula Fantasma leafleting flights failed to return to a commercial airstrip at Norman's Cay in the Bahamas. Aboard this flight were Robert Thompson and Robert Swanner, who had been hired by STURGIS to fly this mission. STURGIS was listed on the Agricultural, Customs, Immigration and Public Health Manifest as a crew member on a private flight from Palm Beach to the Bahamas along with Swanner and Thompson. A Bahamas Customs Baggage Declaration indicated that STURGIS entered the Bahamas on December 14, 1961. When the company which rented STURGIS the airplane tried to collect the insurance on the missing aircraft, the insurance company charged the aircraft had been used as an instrument of war, and refused to pay the insurance claim to the rental company. During a civil trial, J. David Finger of Melbourne Airways was asked about his business dealing with William Johnson:

A. At approximately 9:30 p.m. I called Bill Johnson at MU 1-5864, and was informed that Johnson was not in; he would return my call later. I kept calling him until a man by the name of Rorke answered the phone and informed me he could speak for Mr. William Johnson. And I asked him to find out from Mr. Johnson the whereabouts of the airplane and pilot, and he had informed me they had run into a little difficulty and that the airplane would be returned the following day. After completing my conversation with Rorke, I called the Border Patrol and gave them the information. On Wednesday, December 20, 1961, in a conversation with the Border Patrol, I was informed that a flight plan had been made by Robert Thompson with West Palm Beach Radio, destination Andros Island from Fort Lauderdale. That evening I again called William Johnson and spoke to Mr. Rorke again, who was very abusive; first claiming he did not know who I was and then stated to me, "Why should I tell you anything? You will only report it back to the Border Patrol." He had found out from the Border Patrol that everything he had stated to me had, in turn, been told to them. At this point I was given information [from the Border Patrol] that a Mr. Swanner, also holder of a pilot's license, accompanied our pilot from Fort Lauderdale. That is all I found out about that.

Q. When you were told by Rorke the first time you talked to him on the telephone there had been a little difficulty or the plane ran into some difficulty, did you ask him what the difficulty was?

A. Yes, but he was very evasive, he would not say. On February 3, 1962, while I was visiting Miami, I received a phone call from William Johnson who asked me if I had flown my own airplane into Miami from Melbourne. I said no. I told him I had driven down and what was it all about? He then told me that Neal Church of National Insurance Underwriters and another investigator were going to fly to Norman's Cay where supposedly the seats and door of the Apache 262 Pop were located.

Q. Were you curious about that information?

A. Yes. He also stated I should get a good lawyer.

Q. Did Johnson know this fellow Thompson, your pilot, before; do you know where?

A. Yes, they had many conversations up at Melbourne when they were up there...Whenever Johnson would come around the airport and Thompson was around, they would have a conversation.

Q. Did you know this fellow, Swanner?

A. No, sir. Never knew he existed.

Q. Did you know a fellow named FRANK FIORINI.

A. Just heard of him, never met him.

Q. At the time of the flight this fellow Thompson was your employee? By your, I mean Melbourne Airways.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long had he worked for you?

A. I think Bob was with us about nine months at that point, or less. I am not sure of the exact amount of time.

Q. Had Mr. Johnson requested any particular pilot when he called?

A. Yes, he requested that Bob fly, saying that he knows his ability and qualifications to fly over water and he felt safer with him.

JAMES HAZEN JONES

In testimony, a fishing-boat captain who transported the crew to Norman's Cay recounted the downed plane had been carrying anti-Castro leaflets. James Hazen Jones had managed a fishing resort in the Isle of Pines and was in the real estate business before he left Cuba in June 1959 after he received a warning from the G-2. Jones moved in with William Johnson in Miami. Jones first met Johnson in 1958: "I met him in the Isle of Pines. Two or three other fellows came over with him in a small airplane." In Miami, Johnson introduced Jones to STURGIS. Jones also knew Swanner, who was a former crop duster from Mississippi. Jones also knew Rorke. Jones testified that he attended a meeting before the flight at which Swanner and Johnson were present. Either Thompson or STURGIS was also present. At this meeting it was determined that Jones and FIORINI would proceed to Norman's Cay by boat and Thompson and Swanner would fly there in a private plane. Johnson rented a boat from Miami Yacht rental which was piloted by Jones, who was a certified Ship's Captain. Jones testified the leaflets he was supposed to deliver to Norman's Cay consisted of stickers that read "Castro Failed," and leaflets which instructed the Cubans in sabotage and intelligence gathering. The leaflets were signed "The Phantom." Another of the leaflets read: "Set fire to transportation, Set fire to the bridges, Set fire to the warehouses, Set fire to the factories." The caretaker at Norman's Cay, Alden Lockhart Watt, allowed FIORINI and Jones to use his pick-up truck to transport the leaflets to an area adjacent to the airstrip. Jones and Rorke then proceeded to the Bahamas by boat to officially enter the island. By the time they returned to Norman's Cay Swanner and Thompson, after several bottles of beer, had left for Cuba. STURGIS was at the landing strip. Jones testified that STURGIS came to Norman's Cay with him by boat: "FRANK is very susceptible to seasickness, and he was seasick on that trip." When confronted with the customs transire he said that FRANK flew over with Swanner and Thompson, and Rorke, Johnson and himself traveled by boat. During cross examination Jones was asked:

Q. Do you know who employed Rorke and FIORINI?

A. No, I can't honestly say. I don't actually know for certain.

Q. Do you know if they were working for a Cuban agency, let's say a group of Cuban refugees.

A. They could be. That's all I could say. I know that they did work at different times for Cuban agencies.

Q. Do you know whether any of these people involved -- and I would include you in the question -- had any connection with the Government of the United States?

A. That I can't say.

Q. You can't say or you don't know?

A. I don't know, I don't know.

WILLIAM JOHNSON

William Johnson testified that Robert Swanner, who lived in Johnson's home, chartered the aircraft. He said that when the aircraft left Norman's Cay it was headed for Caicos, not Cuba. Johnson did not see any leaflets aboard the aircraft. William Johnson said he had known Watt since 1960. After the plane departed FRANK and himself went fishing and Rorke took photographs. According to STURGIS associate William Johnson, the leaflets consisted of instructions on how individual Cubans could interfere with the Cuban economy. In June 1993 William Johnson was contacted:

We rented the airplane for CIA. We were doin' all the raids for Pedro Diaz Lanz. He was the one raising the money from Somoza. Pedro was gettin' the credit. STURGIS, Swanner and Thompson flew to Norman's Cay. I came over in a boat with the leaflets. STURGIS was going to fly that night, but the first takeoff was with STURGIS on the ground. Swanner and Thompson never came back. We went out lookin'. CIA took the leaflets that were left off a small key where we had put 'em. The Navy launched a search for them, but they were never found. There was a lot of complication there, nobody knew nothing, everything was quiet and hushed-up.

Swanner had previously received a letter from the State Department ordering him to stop violating Cuban sovereignty. Swanner's widow testified that she believed STURGIS and her husband were working for the CIA. Although the testimony of STURGIS (January 18, 1965) later turned up missing from the Archives of the Dade County Courthouse, newspaper accounts indicated he testified, denied knowledge of the leafleting flight and insisted he was on a fishing trip. The jury decided in favor of the rental company. [Cir. Ct. 11th Jud. Cir. Dade Country Fla. No. 63L 511 Gordon] On December 19, 1961, the press reported that two planes from an unidentified Caribbean base had flown over Cuba and dropped anti-Castro leaflets, along with two parachutists with radio equipment. When Bahamian authorities arrested members of STURGIS' group for illegal entry, they were told the drop had been authorized and sponsored by the CIA in New York. [FBI 2-1499-NR 1.4.62] On December 22, 1961, a Secret FBI memorandum concerning OPERATION PHANTASMA was sent to William C. Sullivan from S. B. Donohoe.

Press reported on December 19, 1961, that two planes from an unidentified Caribbean base had flown over Cuba on December 17, 1961, and had dropped over 250,000 anti-Castro leaflets and two parachutists with radio equipment. Financial backing reportedly came from former Cuban diplomat (unidentified) who defected from Castro Government. Press noted this was second such mission, the previous one having been made on October 21, 1961 by two planes which dropped anti-Castro leaflets over Camaguey, Cuba. On December 21, 1961 CIA Headquarters advised it was financing Sergio Rojas former Cuban Ambassador to Great Britain, who was engaged in this type of anti-Castro propaganda activity and that Rojas could have engineered the 12/17/61 leaflet dropping without CIA's cognizance since CIA does not oversee his detailed activities. CIA had previously advised in October 1961 that it was financing Rojas and his associates were responsible for the leaflet dropping over Camaguey in October 1961. CIA noted, however, that it was not involved in this particular operation and did not know it was to take place. On December 19, 1961 Border Patrol, Miami, which has been keeping a close watch on Florida Cuba flights advised our Miami Office that the 10/21/61 flight was apparently CIA operation and stated that planes were flown from island in Bahamas to Cuba. It is noted one of participants was Frank Fiorini, former Castro follower engaged in anti-Castro activities who, in October 1959 participated in anti-Castro leaflet-dropping raid over Cuba with Pedro Diaz Lanz, former chief of Cuban Air Force. This raid received considerable press coverage and was thoroughly investigated by us. Border Patrol further advised that another leaflet drop from the Bahamas had been scheduled for 12/8/61 by Fiorini and his associates. However, this was not carried out apparently because of arrest of member of group by Bahamas for illegal entry. Fiorini's group claimed proposed leaflet drop had been authorized and sponsored by CIA in New York. Border Patrol learned that CIA had furnished the leaflets, however CIA stated it did not know if it had sponsored the proposed flight but thought it had. In this connection Border Patrol noted that one CIA group does not know what the other is doing with result there is considerable confusion. Border Patrol in addition, advised it believed the December 17, 1961 flight had also been sponsored by CIA and that it had been made by Fiorini and his associates in the same planes they had used in 10/21/61 flight. Border Patrol doubted that any radio operators had parachuted into Cuba. It appears foregoing flight were financed by CIA and we are conducted no investigation. It also appears that CIA is giving money to Rojas to carry out these flight as he sees fit and that CIA is unaware of and does not want to know the details. In this way CIA can – in theory – claim it was not involved in the flights and did not know why they were scheduled.

A notation by J. Edgar Hoover on the document asserted:

This jungle of irresponsibility is almost inconceivable particularly since (? Sisco) outcable a few months ago. It is (?) more reason we should not be 'sucked' Cuban invasion etc as some have been inclined to get us in. H. [FBI 109-584 NR 1.4.62 Donahoe to Sullivan]

March 20, 1963

MEMORANDUM FOR: Stanley J. Grogan, Assistant to the Director

SUBJECT: Robert Swanner and Robert Thompson, Pilots Allegedly Shot Down over Cuba in December 1961.

REFERENCES: A. Articles by Al Wood in Orlando Sentinel March 12, 1963. Article by Al Wood in Orlando Evening Star, March 12, 1963. Article by James Buchanan in Pompano Beach Sun Sentinel, March 12, 1963.

1. On December 19, 1961, this Agency became aware of some aspects of the incident described in referenced reports. According to our records this was the third overflight of this kind attempted. On October 21, 1961, a leaflet drop was apparently made over Camaguey, Cuba, by U.S. citizens. On December 8, 1961, to December 9, 1961, authorities at Nassau intercepted and stopped a plane and U.S. citizens preparing to conduct a similar leaflet drop over Cuba. On the weekend of December 15, 1961, to December 17, 1961, another overflight was conducted by U.S. citizens and from this attempt two pilots and a plane failed to return.

2. Investigation by U.S. authorities of the activities cited above has been hampered by a welter of conflicting stories from second and third hand sources, as well as by inconsistent statements by the alleged participants. However, the following summary appears to be accurate. William Johnson has said that he, Robert Swanner and FRANK FIORINI made the October 21, 1961 overflight. Alexander I. Rorke, a freelance newsman and photographer who has been long on the fringes of Cuban exile activity, has claimed that he flew on this mission as an observer. On December 8, 1961, Robert Swanner was intercepted in Nassau in an aircraft chartered from Sunny South Aircraft, Fort Lauderdale. Swanner was met in Nassau by Johnson, Rorke and FIORINI. This group tried to get a permit to fly to Great Exuma Island, but the permit was denied; the plane impounded and Swanner fined $500 for illegal entry inasmuch as he had no authorization to fly the plane outside the U.S. On December 10, 1961, a search of Norman Cay produced nine packages of anti-Castro leaflets similar to the ones used in the October 21, 1961 operation. On December 14, 1961, Thompson flew from Melbourne, Florida, to Fort Lauderdale in an Apache aircraft No. 2062P, belonging to his employer, J. David Finger, and allegedly chartered by Johnson for an eventual flight to Nassau. In Fort Lauderdale, Thompson picked up Johnson. It is not clear whether Swanner and FIORINI were picked up in Fort Lauderdale, Tampa or West Palm Beach, but it is certain that at some point Johnson left the group and the FIORINI, Swanner and Thompson flew to Andros Island. On the evening of December 17, 1961, Finger reported to the FAA at Melbourne at Apache No. 2062P, with Thompson as pilot, was missing. On December 18, 1961 Rorke, FIORINI and Johnson reportedly chartered a plane in Miami for a trip to Bimini and Cay Sal. Rorke allegedly identified himself as a CBS photographer looking for photographs of pink flamingos. The plane flew a criss-cross pattern over Cay Sal and returned to Miami International Airport. There has been no information concerning the whereabouts of Thompson, Swanner and Apache No. 2062P until March 19, 1963, when the story attributed to an unidentified Cuban farmer appeared in the referenced press items.

3. As to the question of CIA involvement in the activities of the men cited herein, Johnson, FIORINI and RORKE have, at various times, claimed CIA sponsorship, although Rorke and FIORINI have also intimated they themselves, were the sponsors. In fact, none of these men had any sponsorship by CIA whatsoever. Sergio Rojas Santamarina, Castro's Ambassador to London from 1959 until June 1966, at which time Rojas broke with Castro because of conviction of the latter's communist orientation, appears to have been the Cuban exile sponsoring the operation. (Deleted) The policy which guided the Agency during the months in question permitted a great deal of latitude in dealing with Cuban exiles and, although little or no control over their activities was demanded, the authorization, funding and conduct of air operations against Cuba by this Agency were specifically forbidden. It is quite likely that Rojas, in his zeal to strike effective blows against the Castro regime, and despite this Agency's repeated expressions of disinterest in air operations, convinced at least Alexander Rorke and FIORINI that the leaflet drops were sanctioned by the CIA. About one week before the October overflight, and about one week before the December incident, CIA began to receive reports of impending leaflet drops over Cuba. As noted above, after the October 21 operation, Rorke and FIORINI claimed they had been involved. It was not until December that this Agency became aware of the full extent of the three overflights and the details of the involvement of Thompson, Swanner and Johnson. With the exception of Rojas none of the men mentioned herein have ever been employed by the Agency in any capacity.

4. In March 1962, Mr. Raymond J. Dwyer, a Miami attorney representing Finger in connection with possible litigation against the insurer of the Apache aircraft, approached this Agency for information inasmuch as there were widespread rumors of U.S. Government involvement in the incident. Mr. Dwyer was informed that this Agency had no connection with the flight in question or with the individuals named by him - Finger, Johnson, Thompson, Swanner and STURGIS.

5. In June 1962 this Agency received from State Department a query from Senator Robert Byrd on behalf of Mrs. Blanche DeBolt, Elkview, West Virginia, mother of Robert Thompson. Mrs. DeBolt was seeking clarification of various rumors concerning Thompson's whereabouts. This Agency informed State that we had no information that would substantiate any of the rumors.

6. This Agency has checked the transcripts of Castro's speeches from December 14, 1961 to December 31, 1961. He made no reference to having shot down two aircraft which were dropping bombs and leaflets on Havana and Mantanzas. As to the other elements of the incident as reported in references, this Agency can furnish no information on the following:

a. Mrs. Swanner story of having driven Swanner, Johnson and FIORINI to Fort Lauderdale to load a boat with leaflets.

B. The $500 checks reportedly given to Mrs. Swanner and Mrs. Thompson by FIORINI.

C. Mrs. Swanner's reported trip to Andros Island with her son and a friend of her husband.

D. The mysterious phone calls to Mrs. Swanner, Mrs. Thompson and others.

E. The role of Gene Asbury and Norman Gratsky or Gradsky.

7. The JOHN MARTINO mentioned in one of the referenced articles is probably JOHN VINCENT MARTINO who was sentenced by Cuban authorities in 1959 to 13 years in prison on the charge of counter-revolutionary activities. MARTINO was released and returned to the U.S. in October 1962, not in December as reported. MARTINO was not, and is not, employed by this Agency in any capacity.

THE FATE OF SWANNER AND THOMPSON

The Sun Sentinel - Fort Lauderdale News reported that two Cuban farmers testified at a trial in Miami years later that they had seen the red and white plane shot down by artillery over a sugar cane field around December 16, 1961. [The Sun Sentinel - Fort Lauderdale News 4.25.72] The Philadelphia Evening Bulletin reported: "The most positive word so far on their fate came recently when a refugee farmer brought from Cuba aboard the mercy ship Shirley Lykes, told newsmen he saw the plane crash after it was hit by Cuban anti-aircraft fire, killing both the pilots. The farmer, who asked that his name be withheld, said he saw a Piper Apache make a low pass over the city of Matanzas on December 15, 1961, dropping anti-Castro leaflets to workers in nearby sugar cane fields. He said the plane was hit and crashed into a sugar mill." [3.29.63]

STURGIS AND PRESIDENT JOHN F. KENNEDY MARCH 1962

STURGIS:

I've taken Presidents of foreign countries to speak to our President, that was John F. Kennedy, and there are records of it...Now, I met President Kennedy. I took President Carlos Prio of Cuba to speak with Kennedy. President Prio is a good friend of mine. I go to President Prio's home...it would have been very easy to take out the President. As a matter of fact, on the second floor of the hotel, they set up a reception for 200 people and I and ex-President of Cuba, Carlos Prio were part of the 200 people who spoke to President Kennedy. As a matter of fact, it was very easy for me to take President Prio through the security set-up that was around the President. There was no problem in taking President Carlos Prio and myself to see the President...I made arrangements for Prio with telephone calls to D.C." [Combination of STURGIS' Depo in HUNT v. WEBERMAN and Canfield interview]

STURGIS told Robert Olsen of the Rockefeller Commission: "Carlos Prio former President of Cuba (overthrown by Batista) was introduced to JFK by STURGIS at Fountainbleu Hotel in Miami Beach."

On April 29, 1962, The New York Times that the feeling that United States Government was moving toward some form of co-existence with the Castro regime was growing among Cuban exiles in Miami. Pedro Diaz Lanz said that "co-existence is already here." He said that not a single supply boat for the Cuban underground had been able to evade the United States authorities for many months and the Cuban underground in Cuba was without any help or support from the exiles in the United States. Lanz felt the orders to do this came "directly from Washington." Sometime in 1962 Task Force W's William Harvey generated a document that connected STURGIS to William Johnson in a 1961 smuggling indictment.

In June, July, September, and October 1962, STURGIS was overheard on an FBI electronic bug planted in a Miami bail bondsman's office. On October 14, 1972, the FBI reviewed its ELSUR files in connection with STURGIS:

Information regarding STURGIS is set out below. (Deleted) FRANK ANTHONY STURGIS aka FRANK ANGELO FIORINI, FBI Number 948 362C. (Deleted) b) No electronic surveillance was conducted on any premises of which STURGIS was the owner, lessee or licensee. c) Electronic eavesdropping device. d) No trespass. (Deleted) The above three communications were also disseminated to the Jacksonville, New York, Tampa and Washington Field Offices. These four offices have been requested by teletype to advice of any further dissemination on their part. (Deleted) Miami electronic indices negative under known additional aliases of FIORINI, namely Joseph Di Alberto and Joseph D'Alberto.

HEMMING told this researcher the Miami bail bondsman was Ed Stanton but subsequent research revealed it was Harold Solomon. On June 12, 1962, the Security Branch Chief of the Miami CIA Station received a call from the FBI:

DISCUSSION George Davis, FBI called and spoke to Chief, Security Branch. Mr. Davis wanted to know if FRANK STURGIS was one of our people. He indicated that FRANK STURGIS was believed to be involved in some type of operation which was to drop leaflets and also to have a bombing raid on Cuba. The writer was advised by (deleted) that as far as they knew, the Subject was not one of our people. There were, however, a number of cards in his name. Mr. Davis was called by the writer and advised that as far as the writer could ascertain, Subject was not being used by us. Mr. Davis stated that he would appreciate having any current information we he might have or that might come into our possession in the future regarding the following: Subject's current activities; associates; proposed bombing raid; when it will take place; location of base of operations; etc. The write advised him that in the event we should come into possession of such information it would be passed on to his office. OSWALD, STURGIS, BUCHANAN NOVEMBER 1962

1

An article appeared in the November 26, 1963, issue of the Pompano Beach, Florida, "Sun Sentinel", a daily newspaper published in Pompano Beach, Florida. The article stated that FRANK FIORINI, Head of an Anti-Communist Brigade, said that LEE H. OSWALD had telephone conversations with the Cuban Government Gr-2 Intelligence during November, 1962. FIORINI claimed that OSWALD contacted Miami based supporters of FIDEL CASTRO, Prime Minister of Cuba, and that OSWALD had connections with the Cuban Government in Mexico and New Orleans, Louisiana,

FIORINI claimed that OSWALD handed out Pro-CASTRO literature in Miami in November, 1962, tried to infiltrate Cuban anti-CASTRO organizations in Miami and is known to have a bad temper,

MM T-1, who is personally associated with BUCHANAN and FIORINI, advised on November 27, 1963, that the author of the article is JAMES BUCHANAN who is considered by persons active in Cuban revolutionary matters as being unreliable,

This source also advised FRANK FIORINI, also known as FRANK ANTHONY STURGIS, is well known as a Soldier of Fortune, adventurer and mercenary who has been involved in Cuban revolutionary activities for the past six years,

On November 27, 1963, FRANK FIORINI, 2505 Northwest 122nd Street, Miami, Florida, advised he had not seen the above-mentioned newspaper article but had made some off hand comments to BUCHANAN on the telephone the previous day. FIORINI said his comments were guesses, speculation and rumor based on information about OSWALD carried in the press. FIORINI claimed BUCHANAN misquoted him and he had no information that OSWALD ever contacted the Cuban Government, was ever in Miami or Mexico, ever passed out pro-CASTRO literature or tried to infiltrate Cuban anti-CASTRO organizations.

FIORINI explained that there is much rumor and speculation in Miami by Cuban exiles concerning the possibility that OSWALD was connected with the Cuban Government. FIORINI explained he was just reporting this speculative material to BUCHANAN and he had no idea if it was true or false.

On November 26, 1963 Kennedy assassination James Buchanan, FRANK STURGIS, JOHN MARTINO and others launched a campaign to blame the Kennedy assassination on Fidel Castro. The propaganda operation started with an article dated November 26, 1963, which appeared in the Pompano Beach Sun-Sentinel that quoted STURGIS:

OSWALD was in Miami in November 1962 [Hemming claimed OSWALD had been in Miami in December 1962] and had contact with Miami-based supporters of Fidel Castro who were agents of the G-2. OSWALD gave out his Fair Play for Cuba Committee literature, and Jerry Buchanan, who was with my group, did tell me there was a possibility that OSWALD was in the area, and that he had a fight with OSWALD.

Buchanan claimed he knew the name of the printer where OSWALD had his literature printed. STURGIS was questioned about this during his deposition in HUNT V. WEBERMAN:

Q. Do you remember Mr. Buchanan giving out a news story that alleged that LEE HARVEY OSWALD was in Miami in 1963?

A. Oh yes! As a matter of fact, his brother, Jerry Buchanan, was one of the people that was with my group and Jerry did give me some information to the fact that he thought there was a possibility that one of the persons, now, you must remember that during that particular time there were hundreds of Americans in the area, plus Canadians, in this area here, trying to make contact with various Cuban groups in order to be involved against Cuba, and Jerry did tell me that there was a possibility that OSWALD was in this area and that he had a fight with OSWALD. He wasn't sure but this was what he told me.

On November 27, 1963, STURGIS told S.A. James O'Conner that his comments in the article were guesses and speculation, and that he had no hard information. S.A. James O'Conner sent a report to Washington concluding that STURGIS was unreliable, and that his story had no basis in fact. The reports of S.A. James O'Conner in which STURGIS linked OSWALD to Fidel Castro were withheld. [FBI 62-109090-63rd NR 172 Hoover] On April 22, 1964, the Director of the FBI sent this message to the Miami Field Office:

Bureau also desires Jim Buchanan to be interviewed in order to pin down, once and for all, wild statements concerning alleged activities of OSWALD in Florida which for the most part appear to emanate from MARTINO and Buchanan. If Buchanan uncooperative, set forth results in LHM form suitable for dissemination to President's Commission at which time consideration will then be given to suggesting Buchanan as well as MARTINO be subpoenaed before President Commission. Handle promptly and surep results. [NARA FBI 124-10035-10367]

The FBI reported:

James Buchanan, former reporter for the Pompano Beach Sun-Sentinel, stated he has no personal or firsthand knowledge of OSWALD or OSWALD'S activities. He stated his newspaper stories on OSWALD were obtained from sources he regarded as reliable, whose accuracy he did not question. He declined to reveal the identity of a printer at Miami whom he alleges printed pro-Castro literature for OSWALD. Concerning the alleged fight between his brother, Jerry Buchanan, and OSWALD, he maintains this information was received from a Cuban named Sanchez, a member of the organization 'Los Pinos Nuevos,' and has never talked to his brother about this alleged fight. He says he knows no person who was a witness to the presence of OSWALD in Miami, but thought his brother, Jerry Buchanan, should be contacted in that respect. When informed that his brother had been contacted and had furnished a varying account, Buchanan said he knew only what Sanchez had told him. Efforts to identify Sanchez through anti-Castro organization Los Pinos Nuevos, or through interview of one Jesus Sanchez, resulted negatively.

BUCHANAN'S SECOND STORY

A second article in the Pompano Beach Sun-Sentinel stated:

OSWALD tried to infiltrate several other major organizations in Miami, including the Anti-Communist Brigade, which is headed by Major FRANK STURGIS, a former Commander in Castro's Air Force. STURGIS said his outfit turned down OSWALD'S application, because they could not find out anything about his background. STURGIS told me, "We have already established that he was in contact with G-2 agents while here in Miami. We are trying to get the billing record from the telephone company. He called Havana. OSWALD was known to have a bad temper while here in Miami...His other G-2 connections were in Mexico this past summer, and in New Orleans, just five weeks ago. We are in the process of checking out the leads. We already have a few names and places. Men are on the scene interviewing people who may have witnessed the meeting in Mexico City and in New Orleans..."

The Miami FBI Office responded:

The Miami Office does not contemplate interview of Jim Buchanan inasmuch as the previous concerning an article by Buchanan, reported in Miami report dated January 25, 1964, in instant caption, reflected that Buchanan deals in rumors an unverified information which he attributed to anonymous sources. [FBI Rep. of James O'Conner 4.4.64]

Eugenio Martinez, John Martino, Eddie Bayo and Virgilio Gonzalez

MARTINEZ AND GONZALEZ WERE WATERGATE BURGLARS

Allen Courtney suggested that S.A. James O'Conner interview JOHN MARTINO, but MARTINO was traveling from city to city on a lecture tour for the John Birch Society. Instead, S.A. James O'Conner interviewed JOHN MARTINO'S associate, Nathan Weyl, who told him OSWALD was a G-2 agent.

On December 2, 1963, S.A. James O'Conner interviewed MARTINO, who told him that a confidential source had told him OSWALD was in Miami in October 1962, and made several telephone calls to Cuba from the home of a suspected Castro double-agent. MARTINO said that when OSWALD distributed his Fair Play for Cuba Committee literature in Bayfront Park, Jerry Buchanan attacked him. In January 1964, MARTINO told one of his audiences that he had special knowledge of OSWALD. According to MARTINO, when OSWALD was in Mexico in October 1963, he caught a clandestine flight from the Yucatan Peninsula to Havana, Cuba. S.A. James O'Conner contacted MARTINO a few days after he made this speech. He told S.A. James O'Conner his source for OSWALD'S clandestine trip to Cuba was a high official in the Castro Government. On December 3, 1963, STURGIS supplied the CIA with information on a possible air strike over Cuba. [Index Card (Deleted)-04183] On February 7, 1964, Helene Finan, Chief of the Office of Security, Security Research Staff, CIA, debriefed Hede Massing regarding her knowledge of the circumstances surrounding the Kennedy assassination. [CIA 3.26.64 03681; CIA 1288-1022] Hede Massing, a former Soviet spy who was once the toast of Vienna, had once been married to Gerhart Eisler, an agent of Moscow. Senator Joseph McCarthy used Massing to observe the behavior of American Government employees in Europe. Massing worked with Roy M. Cohen in this regard. [Senator Joe McCarthy - Richard Rovere, Torch Books, 1959] The FBI stated: "Massing worked, and might still work, for the Central Intelligence Agency." [FBI Dallas 100-10461-4075] ANGLETON'S Deputy, James Hunt, was in contact with Hede Massing. [FBI 3.31.64 Branigan to Sullivan; FBI 105-82555-2993, 2464, 2906]

Subject reported on various personalities she heard discussed while she was visiting Sylvia and Nathaniel Weyl in Florida from December 30, 1963, to January 8, 1964.

JOHN MARTINO

Mr. and Mrs. MARTINO visited the Weyls one evening when Massing was present. John Martino and Nathan Weyl are co-authors of the book, I Was Castro's Prisoner, which was published in November 1963. Massing, at this point, cautioned the writer to remember that all she was relating regarding the Weyls remarks were rumors, and or, gossip, and that source has no means of checking the truth of their statements. JOHN MARTINO is the individual who carries the stories to Nathaniel Weyl and both JOHN and Nathaniel are deeply entrenched with the Cuban anti-Castro forces. MARTINO claims to have a friend in Miami who keeps him well-informed on Cuban matters.

MARTINO and Nathaniel spoke of a trip that MARTINO had made to Cuba with an American newspaper woman, one Lapin and two CIA agents. Nathaniel Weyl did not accompany them. It is Massing's opinion that Nathaniel, who is a coward, just welshed on the trip, but that he did finance it. The purpose of the trip was to contact a Cuban who was serving as liaison for the four Russian Generals in charge of training and organizing the Cuban military. The Cuban, who met the group in the water, at the edge of a beach in Cuba, told them that the four Generals wanted to escape and seek asylum in the United States. MARTINO is going ahead with a follow-up plan whereby on a given signal, he and a group would sail to Cuba to pick up the Generals. Weyl is going on a long lecture tour and will not be able to accompany the pick-up team to Cuba.

LEE HARVEY OSWALD

The Cuban friends of the unnamed individual in Miami know that OSWALD contacted the Cuban MI-6 by telephone from a private home in Miami. They also know the man who furnished the information on OSWALD to the FBI.

From the reports given by the Cubans to this unknown individual, it seems very definite that RUBY went to Havana to make a shady deal with a creature by the name of Praskin, who works with the Cuban Communists and who is also tied up with call girls in Cuba.

A friend of Weyl, who ran for the Presidency of Cuba in 1958, shortly will testify before the Senate Internal Security Committee. Massing says this information may be confidential. Sourwine of the Committee, contacted Weyl to get in touch with this individual.

[Massing Debriefing 2.7.64 Helene Finan NARA 1993.08.04.18:45:23:780037]

On February 27, 1964, a memorandum from William Branigan to William C. Sullivan was generated:

CIA has furnished a memorandum through Liaison channels indicating that according to a confidential and reliable source, whose sources are unknown, LEE HARVEY OSWALD allegedly was telephonically in contact with MI-6 (Cuban Intelligence) from a private home in Miami, Florida. Further allegations indicate JACK RUBY, alleged assassin of OSWALD, went to Havana, Cuba, to make a shady deal with 'Praskin' who works with the Cuban Communists and was a dope pusher used by the Communists; that a friend of the source claims there is more to Marina Oswald than meets the eye; that Marguerite Oswald, mother of the Subject, is an old line communist and that OSWALD'S return to the United States was part of a Russian 'gimmick.'

CIA has confidentially advised that source of the above data is Hede Massing, a resident of New York City known to the Bureau and CIA, and CIA has no objection to this Bureau contacting her and advising that the information furnished by her to the CIA had been furnished to the FBI.

Bureau files reveal Massing is a former Soviet agent who defected in 1938. She has been utilized by the CIA and has been a source of information of the New York Office since 1947 concerning Soviet espionage. By letter February 4, 1964, captioned 'Foreign Political Matters -Cuba - IS - Cuba. New York' submitted information furnished by Massing concerning JOHN MARTINO and Nathaniel and Sylvia Weyl, which information was similar to that furnished by the CIA in the above-mentioned memo; however, the data concerning OSWALD and RUBY above apparently was not furnished to the New York Office by Massing.

MARTINO has previously been interviewed by Miami, at which time he pretended greater knowledge of Cuban affairs than he actually possessed. He also indicated various statements made concerning LEE HARVEY OSWALD were based on information received from unidentified Cuban aliens, and he no firsthand knowledge or information concerning OSWALD. The unnamed individual in Miami referred to by Massing on page 2 of CIA memo could possibly be MARTINO.

By airtel February 26, 1964, New York was instructed to immediately re-interview Massing for all the information in her possession concerning the OSWALD matter, specifically ascertain basis for all statements made by her to the CIA and immediately set forth additional leads necessary to definitely pin down these allegations. [FBI 105-82555-2464; Branigan to Sullivan 2.27.64]

J. Edgar Hoover initialed and expedited this memorandum. S.A. James O'Conner had received orders from J. Edgar Hoover:

With regard to the information furnished by MARTINO, Bureau desires that MARTINO be pressed to force production of his source in order to pin down this allegation. If he continues to be evasive and uncooperative on this point, set forth results of recontact with him in LHM form suitable for dissemination for President's Commission. Consideration with then be given to suggesting MARTINO be subpoenaed before President's Commission. [FBI 105-82555-33199 - page 2 w/h]

On March 13, 1964, S.A. O'Conner interviewed Nathaniel Weyl, who said he ...was not sure of the identity of his source, with respect to the information that LEE HARVEY OSWALD had contacted the Cuban intelligence by telephone from a private home in Miami. He said that his source for this information may have been a newspaper article written by James Buchanan. He recalled that Buchanan had quoted FRANK STURGIS, described as an individual active in the Cuban situation at Miami, as stating that STURGIS knew that OSWALD had made such a call from Coral Gables, Florida, to the Cuban intelligence office in Miramar, Havana, Cuba. Mr. Weyl said his source for this information may have been JOHN MARTINO, who, in turn, may have obtained the information from either BUCHANAN or STURGIS...With respect to the information that JACK RUBY had made a trip to Havana, Cuba, to deal with an individual named PRASKIN, Mr. Weyl stated he had been informed of this by an old friend, Carlos Marquez Sterling, resident at Washington, D.C...Mr. Weyl said he did believe that OSWALD had been in Miami, Florida, in the past, and it was his recollection that Jim Buchanan, or possibly the latter's brother, Jerry Buchanan, had told him that OSWALD had attempted to infiltrate anti-Castro groups in Miami, but had been rejected by these groups because he was uncommunicative as to his background. Mr. Weyl said that it was probably Jim Buchanan who told him that his brother Jerry had been involved in a scuffle with OSWALD in downtown Miami, and that Jerry Buchanan had punched OSWALD. Mr. Weyl said this incident was supposed to have occurred when OSWALD was observed distributing some pro-Castro literature in Miami...He said he recalled that OSWALD reportedly attempted to join the anti-Castro organizations known as the Directorio Revolucionario Estudiantil (DRE) (Cuban Student Revolutionary Directorate), and Unidad Revolucionario (UR) (Revolutionary Unity). Mr. Weyl said he had no corroborative information concerning the alleged stay of OSWALD in Miami, other than the news articles by Jim Buchanan and contact with Fernando Cabada, described as a leader of UR.

S.A. O'Conner interviewed Fernando Fernandez Cabada, who said he never furnished information to the Weyls regarding OSWALD. On March 24, 1964, S.A. James O'Conner re-interviewed MARTINO.

With respect to information that Cuban friends of MARTINO knew that OSWALD had contacted the Cuban Intelligence Service in Cuba by telephone from a private residence in Miami, Florida, MARTINO claimed this was correct information. He refused to identify the source of such information, claiming that to pinpoint the source could conceivably result in harassment, if not more serious consequences, to the source or his family in Cuba.

MARTINO stated the information concerning such an alleged telephone call by OSWALD to Cuban intelligence did not originate with his friend, Felipe Vidal Santiago, a Cuban exile active in anti-Castro activities. He also stated the information had not originated with STURGIS, an American citizen residing in Miami, who has been engaged in anti-Fidel Castro activities, and who headed an organization called the Anti-Communist International Brigade. Mr. MARTINO stated that the information in this respect had not been received from James Buchanan, although he had discussed the information with Buchanan. MARTINO stated he would contact his confidential source as soon as the latter had returned from Tampa, Florida, to Miami, expected to be March 22, 1964, and would seek to obtain his consent to interview by the FBI.

With respect to the other alleged information that Cubans with whom MARTINO might have contact had stated that JACK RUBY had gone to Havana, Cuba, to engage in a shady deal with one (FNU) Praskin, who was also alleged to work with Cuban communists and be tied up with call girls in Cuba, MARTINO stated as follows:

This information came in the form of a letter from Cuba, which was shown to MARTINO by a Cuban whom MARTINO said was named Jose Madero. He said Madero, a man in his late 30's, had infiltrated back into Cuba as of December 1963, and was thus no longer available. MARTINO said he had known Madero when he was incarcerated in Cuba during the period July 1959 to October 1962. MARTINO said the letter was not directed to Madero, but to another individual not known to MARTINO. He said he had no idea where the letter might now be located. He said the letter related that Praskin had a business on Sanja Street in Havana, and that he supplied American girls to 'Girlie Shows' operated by Chinese in Havana. He said the letter made no mention of the nature of the shady deal alleged to occur between RUBY and Praskin, and did not indicate when RUBY had gone to Havana or how he had traveled...

MARTINO stated this same source had informed him that OSWALD had stayed in the home of a pro-Castro Cuban in Miami, Florida, and had paid this pro-Castro Cuban the cost of a long distance telephone call made from the home of the pro-Castro Cuban to Cuba. MARTINO further stated that according to his source, the pro-Castro Cuban, after the assassination had occurred, made the statement, 'I didn't think it would go this far.' in referring to OSWALD.

MARTINO said that additional information to establish that OSWALD had been in Miami was received was received by him from Jim Buchanan. He said he used to give a lot of stories on the Cuban situation to Buchanan, and during the days immediately following the assassination, Buchanan, during a telephone call, told him that Buchanan's brother, Jerry Buchanan, had a fistfight with LEE HARVEY OSWALD at Miami, Florida, about a year prior to the assassination. According to MARTINO, OSWALD at that time was attempting to get aboard a boat [Alexander Rorke's Violyn III] that was being used by Jerry Buchanan and anti-Castro exiles in connection with their anti-Castro plans. Mr. MARTINO told Jim Buchanan that he intended to use this information in his speeches if it were true, and Buchanan told him to go ahead and do so. Mr. MARTINO stated he never used the information, however, because he considered it 'confidential to the government' and he was 'Not fighting that battle.'

MARTINO also told S.A. O'Conner that OSWALD had secretly flown from the Yucatan Peninsula in Mexico, to Cuba, and that his source had the name of the printer in Miami OSWALD used to run-off his Fair Play for Cuba Committee leaflets, and even had a copy of the check OSWALD used to pay the printer. The funds had been withdrawn from the account of the Miami Chapter of the Fair Play for Cuba Committee. The FBI:

The only hearsay readily traceable to origin is alleged fight between OSWALD and Jerry Buchanan at Miami about beginning of 1963. MARTINO has in the past pretended greater knowledge of Cuban affairs than he actually possessed, and has declined to divulge his sources. Instructions previously furnished Miami to pin MARTINO down and attempt to press to force production of his source. During interview on March 26, 1964, Jerry Buchanan stated he was one of a group which fought with members of the Fair Play for Cuba Committee distributing pro-Castro literature, Bay Front Park, Miami, in October 1962. Following assassination, he recognized OSWALD as having been one of the members of the Fair Play for Cuba Committee which his group had fought. Also stated OSWALD had been in Miami in March 1963, distributing pro-Castro literature, and stated his brother, James Buchanan, a newspaper reporter, has specific information concerning OSWALD'S being in Miami during these periods. This should be pinned down and run out as above. [NARA FBI 124-10035-10367]

When the FBI checked Jerry Buchanan's parole records, it found that he was released from the Florida State Penitentiary on October 16, 1962, and was in Tampa, Florida, during the period October 21, 1962, to October 30, 1962. HEMMING told this researcher:

Jerry Buchanan wasn't in the can. He's on the streets. How the fuck do they know where he is? He might have been down rolling fags in the Men's Room at Bay Front Park.

On April 7, 1964, S.A. James O'Conner questioned STURGIS again. STURGIS said he had "quit the IACB because James Buchanan had called John Kennedy a Communist." STURGIS denied hearing about a fight in Bayfront Park between OSWALD and Buchanan. On April 27, 1963, after many visits from S.A. James O'Conner, MARTINO told him that his source was coming to Miami for a meeting of Manuel Artime's group, MRR. MARTINO agreed to approach him on behalf of the FBI. MARTINO was warned that unless this matter was resolved, he would be called before the Warren Commission. MARTINO'S response was: "What can they do, put me in jail?" The SAC of the Miami Field Office stated:

As pointed out in referenced Miami teletype, Miami considers MARTINO to be unreliable. It is further believed that MARTINO would probably welcome a subpoena before the President's Commission, as it would add to his stature, and furnish him additional notoriety on which to capitalize in his lecture engagements which he gives on Communism and Cuba. It is felt, however, he would be as equally evasive with the President's Commission as he was with the Miami Office, and there is no evidence to indicate he could furnish the Commission with anything but untraceable hearsay and speculation. [FBI 105-82555-3995]

The FBI briefly considered having James Buchanan testify before the Warren Commission. [FBI 105-82555-2993] S.A. James O'Conner conducted his final interview with MARTINO on May 11, 1964. MARTINO told him Cuban exile "Oscar Ortiz" was his source for his information on OSWALD. S.A. James O'Conner had the Immigration and Naturalization Service check its files for Oscar Ortiz; it found no such person. The Immigration and Naturalization Service informed S.A. James O'Conner that MARTINO had previously furnished it with erroneous information based on a nonexistent source. STURGIS told S.A. James O'Conner that he personally "could not remember OSWALD." In 1975 STURGIS told this to Robert Olsen of the Rockefeller Commission:

Doesn't ever recall meeting OSWALD. Doesn't know of his (OSWALD) ever coming to Miami. Had no part, direct or indirect, with assassination of the President. Has made past investigation of Kennedy assassination. Thinks there could have been conspiracy...Has been in Dallas several times. Not at time of assassination. Never met Ruby. Feels it's more than just speculation. Lots of hatred vs. Kennedy among Cubans. Very good probability that there was a conspiracy. Some kooks on Tel. have something to say about Kennedy assassination. Radical left can't stand idea that it was one of their own that shot Kennedy. CIA can't control everybody connected with Agency. Could be a question about contract agents. Warren Commission was put there to write the history as government wanted it - not to tell the whole truth. Thinks there's lots of evidence, yet, of conspiracy to be found in Miami. Never met any of the Dallas Derelicts. Miami was hotter anti-Kennedy place than Dallas. Cubans there were upper class and middle class. Stole their way to wealth in Cuba and are now engaged in Cuban crime wave on East Coast. Now have Cuban crime syndicate in U.S. This was the group recruited by Company to overthrow Castro.

When S.A. James O'Conner asked STURGIS if he had another source linking OSWALD to the G-2, STURGIS referred him to MARTINO. MARTINO'S source did not exist. On another occasion, when STURGIS was asked for the name of his source, STURGIS pointed to James Buchanan. When James Buchanan was asked for his source, he pointed to STURGIS. These guys were the Tweed Gang of disinformation.

DRE DISINFORMATION BACKS UP STORY

The second James Buchanan article in the Sun-Sentinel that linked OSWALD to Fidel Castro also accused the FBI of preventing the DRE from distributing information that would have supported James Buchanan's initial article. James Buchanan claimed that certain members of the DRE knew of OSWALD'S visits to Miami, and knew of the Bayfront Park incident. S.A. James O'Conner went to the Miami office of the DRE. Everyone there had no knowledge of the FBI preventing the distribution of any of the DRE's information on OSWALD, with the exception of DRE member Eduardo Diaz Lanz, the brother of Pedro Diaz Lanz and Marcos Diaz Lanz, who said he vaguely remembered the story. Eduardo Diaz Lanz had brought STURGIS to the DRE office several times following November 22, 1963, and said he may have given him the information during one of these visits. S.A. James O'Conner again questioned STURGIS, who told him that Eduardo Diaz Lanz told him that the FBI prevented the DRE from releasing proof of OSWALD'S G-2 connections. STURGIS told S.A. James O'Conner that Jerry Buchanan had told him about OSWALD'S visit to Miami, about his fight with OSWALD in Bayfront Park, and that OSWALD had tried to infiltrate the International Anti-Communist Brigade.

On June 13, 1962, STURGIS was the subject of a FBI reported entitled "Pro Gobierno Constitutucional de Cuba." On June 15, 1962 he was the Subject of a Miami FBI Report - "Neutrality Matters."

Subject is an American soldier of fortune who participated in pro-Castro activities prior to Batista downfall and who became anti-Castro shortly after Castro assumption of power. In October, 1959, he participated in anti-Castro leaflet-dropping mission over Cuba along with Pedro Diaz Lanz, former Chief Cuban Air Force. He has reputation of being liar and braggart. Miami informant has recently advised that Fiorini, by which name subject is more commonly known, claims to be planning three raids over Cuba, one of which will be for propaganda purposes. Fiorini also claims that he needs sulphur to make fire bombs to be dropped on Cuban sugar cane fields and that he is preparing dynamite bombs for dropping on undisclosed Cuban targets. Informant pointed out that it is difficult to evaluate the accuracy and truthfulness of information furnished by Fiorini since he has a propensity for bragging exaggerating things in order to enhance his own importance. Another informant has reported that Fiorini claims to be preparing raid over Cuba utilizing base outside United States and that this raid should differ from previous leaflet-dropping mission in that, in addition to leaflets, bombs would be dropped and there would be strafing. Fiorini did not state when raid would take place but has indicates that considerable preparation is necessary prior to its initiation. According to informant, Fiorini reportedly told unidentified newspaperman that incident would not involve violation of U. S. laws since all activity would occur outside United States. Customs representative, Miami, advised that Subject in May 1962 contacted Alex Rorke, New York newspaperman who has been associated with STURGIS in Cuban revolutionary activities in the past, and told him he had about 40 boats in the South Florida area ready for military action against Cuba. Reportedly Rorke has formed organization in New York area to raise funds for Fiorini and Rorke has allegedly engaged in this activity. [FBI 2-1499-93]

The CIA reported that on June 21, 1962, STURGIS delivered an unknown quantity of weapons to Pedro Diaz Lanz. On June 23, 1962 Pedro Diaz Lanz was observed at the wheel of the boat, Q-USA heading in a southeasterly direction of Key Biscayne. On June 28, 1962, the Washington Headquarters of the FBI cranked out a report on STURGIS that was classified SECRET. On June 28, 1962, Inspector Willis Smithson U.S. Border Patrol advised that William Johnson had returned to Miami Yacht Rentals on that date and was making arrangements to lease a 36' foot Chris-Craft vessel known as the Miss B. That night the U.S. Customs Service searched the Miss B at a dock in front of a residence at 1985 North Hibiscus Drive, but only turned up anti-Castro leaflets. The FBI reported:

On June 30, 1962, Mr. Frickie advised that on that morning the North Miami Police Department observed a 1958 Cadillac four-door sedan, white over turquoise, bearing 1962 Florida License 1WW 647, to arrive in front of the residence at 1985 North Hibiscus Drive, Keystone Point, North Miami, Florida. It is noted previous investigation has disclosed that this automobile is registered to FRANK FIORINI, which is the true name of FRANK STURGIS. Within the automobile, among other things, was found three 11 lb. cans of Mallinckrodt phosphorous.

Customs seized the phosphorous and STURGIS's car but no charges were filed.

On June 30, 1962, Mr. Fickie said he received a telephone call from an individual who identified himself as William Johnson and asked what happened to Fiorini. Fickie told him that STURGIS' automobile had been seized that morning. Johnson expressed surprise and stated Fiorini had been trying to borrow his automobile that morning and Johnson was of the opinion that STURGIS was 'trying to pull a fast one on me.' Johnson did not give any additional information to Fickie.

Records of the Border Patrol, Miami, Florida, disclosed that on June 30, 1962 a telephone call was received from Sunny South, an aircraft rental company located in Fort Lauderdale, Florida, for check-out of a prospective customer. Subsequent investigation by Border Patrol revealed that a man came to Sunny South and represented himself as Robert Frank Swanner who wanted to rent a twin Beech aircraft for three days to go to Nassau, Bahamas. The original Robert Frank Swanner is well known to officials at Sunny South and it was ascertained from investigation that this individual was not Robert Frank Swanner III who, along with Robert L. Thompson has been missing since December 14, 1961 when they made a flight in an Apache Aircraft, believed to have been made over Cuba. The individual who had come to the aircraft company on June 30, 1962 was described as a much older man and inasmuch as this individual said he was from Oklahoma, it was their belief that he might be the younger individual's father. [Even though the person at Sunny South identified a photo of Swanner's dad as the man who wished to rent the aircraft it was ascertained that Papa Swanner was locked up at the time]

On July 3, 1962, STURGIS claimed that 20 of his men had landed in Cuba "to support and extend anti-Castro uprisings in the Matanzas Province of Cuba." [FBI 2-14999-99 mostly w/h] STURGIS was picked up by the Miami Police Department for questioning. [The Miami Herald 7.3.62] On August 15, 1962, STURGIS was the Subject of an FBI Report at Miami that was classified SECRET:

It was previously reported on June 13 and June 15, 1962 that Frank Anthony Sturgis of Miami, Florida, is allegedly making preparations for a bombing and leaflet dropping raid over Cuba. On July 5, 1962 it was reported that FIORINI, according to newspaper reports at Miami on July 3, 1962, claimed that 20 trained, Cuban guerillas had made a successful landing by boat in Cuba's Matanzas Province. FIORINI claimed the landing of these men had been effected from a 40 foot boat. It was also reported on July 5, 1962 that Fiorini claimed that Pedro Luis Diaz Lanz, former Chief of the Cuban Air Force during the Castro regime, now residing in exile in Miami, has no connection with his activities. On June 22, 1962 [a CIA source of known reliability] was in contact with Frank Fiorini, who had returned from upstate New York on a trip. Frank Fiorini advised the source of MM T-1 of the following: Pedro Diaz Lanz has been very active lately in raising funds...MM T-1's source continued that on June 19 or 20, 1962, Marcos Diaz Lanz, brother of Pedro Diaz Lanz informed Fiorini that the Venezuelan money had arrived and asked Fiorini to procure certain weapons that were necessary for the operation. Lanz was anxious to obtain several bazookas. Fiorini claimed he had located these weapons in New York and agreed to proceed there to obtain them. When he arrived in New York the armament had been sold but Fiorini said he was able to obtain a brand new .57 mm recoilless rifle with plenty of ammunition. MM T-1's source went on to state that Fiorini said that he had decided on obtaining this equipment since it had a much longer range than the bazookas, and at least Diaz would have, if not the same thing, something better than he had bargained for. Upon Fiorini's arrival in Miami on June 22, 1962 he delivered the equipment to Marcos Diaz Lanz. Laying it on the floor of his living room. Fiorini claimed that Marcos Diaz had commented that the equipment was brand new and that it had night light attachments. MM T-1's source was not certain what Fiorini meant but he was of the opinion that Fiorini had been able to also obtain what he termed several automatic weapons which could have been M-3's, also they may have possibly been Browning automatic rifles.

MM T-1's source also learned that Fiorini had been asked if he intended to participate in the Diaz naval project. Fiorini hedged around the question, stating that he doubted very much that Diaz would actually comply with the obligation to the Venezuelans. It was MM T-1's source's opinion that if Diaz does not decide to go ahead with the naval project, Fiorini will be involved in it. It was the source's opinion that Pedro Diaz will not do anything except something that may have publicity value. On July 5, 1962, Mr. Edward Pickie, United States Customs, Miami, Florida, advised that on July 1, 1962, a firm known as Hampton Roads Salvage Company of Florida had applied for and been granted approval to change the classification of a vessel from pleasure to commercial use. Pickie said this boat is named the Q-USA...According to the boat registration certificate the vessel is to be used in connection with commercial fishing.

MM T-2 also pointed out that it had been confirmed that Fiorini had purchased a .57 mm recoilless rifle through the Rich Lauchli Ordnance Experimental Company, Collinsville, Illinois. This rifle was sold to Fiorini for $200.00 Fiorini brought the rifle to Miami and was planning to sell it to a Cuban named Oscar Pino. MM T-2 said Fiorini claims that he is the purchasing agent for one of the anti-Castro organizations which comprises nine different segments. MM T-2 pointed out, however, that it is not known if such is true or not as Fiorini has a reputation for being a braggart and a bald liar. MM T-2 also said that he had learned that Lauchli, who sold the above rifle to Fiorini, had claimed he was given the name of Fiorini through a newspaperman named Robert K. Brown, a reporter for the Denver Post.

On July 24, 1962, MM T-4 advised that Fiorini was in the Miami area and had indicated interest in carrying out some type of plan to bring about the assassination of Fidel Castro, his brother Raoul, and other top Cuban government leaders. MN T-4 advised that Fiorini's plans appeared to be in the talking stages and that there appeared to be nothing imminent at that time. MM T-4 pointed out; however, that Fiorini had previously mentioned having a quantity of bombs and on July 24, 1962, discussed the possibility of storing some of them at the office of Harold Solomon, Bail Bonds. MM T-4 related that when Fiorini suggested the idea to George Levine, one of the partners in the business, he was promptly told to give up the idea.

On July 25, 1962, MM T-2 advised he had learned that on that date Fiorini had been in possession of eight bombs. These bombs were described as being made of iron pipe, each 10 inches long, two inches in diameter, and containing approximately one and one-half pounds of powder. Fiorini also claimed that he had some bomb casings which are filled with napalm. ! Fiorini said he was planning another mission over Cuba which would involve the use of these bombs utilizing Twin Beach Aircraft. Fiorini claimed that the operation would originate from somewhere in the Bahamas but did not indicate the specific location of the base, nor the island.

PHANTOM RAIDERS BOMB AND STRAFE CUBAN PORT

CARIBBEAN JUNE 25, 1962. Early Thursday morning, 3 unmarked World War II type B-25 bombers based at an undisclosed Caribbean Island here successfully penetrated Cuba's coastal defense and scored a daring raid on the port city of xxxxx. The bomber, piloted by members of BRIGADA INTERNACIONAL ANTI-COMUNISTA (IACB) flew in off the water at treetop level dropping 100 pound bombs in several passes over the harbor area. Explosives and incendiaries ripped into docks, warehouses and storage bins in the target areas. Amid the fires and confusion machine guns chattered as one of the aircraft veered off to a pre-arranged drop zone and parachuted foods, leaflets and medical supplies in the surrounding area to the hungry Cuban people.

On July 3, 1962 MM T-2 said it was his personal opinion t that Fiorini is lying; that he has not been successful in any of his undertakings and he reiterated that he is of the belief that Fiorini is fabricating data to these newsmen as he is being interviewed by them. On July 5, 1962, STURGIS was the subject of an FBI Report at Miami. This highly deleted report stated that William Johnson had rented a 20 foot Chris Craft vessel on June 21, 1962. [FBI 2-1499-102] On July 13, 1962, a document was generated about STURGIS by the FBI that was illegible. On July 5, 1962, the Director of the FBI sent USAAG J. Walter Yeagley a highly deleted memo: "(Deleted) In view of this and since the Border Patrol in Miami is also conducting investigation in this matter, we are not conducting an investigation of the Subject's activities..." [No Serial - Xerox of carbon] On July 21, 1962 U.S. Customs seized 100,000 of STURGIS' anti-Castro leaflets plus his Cadillac. [Miami Herald 7.22.62] William Johnson commented: "FIORINI had a Cadillac - this didn't sit well with the other troops. He and the stripper he was living with had tremendous fights over who would use the Cadillac. Cubans resented the Cadillac as they felt he should have given his all for the revolution." On July 24, 1962, the CIA received information that STURGIS was planning his next Cuban overflight for July 26, 1962. The fairly reliable CIA source stated: "Subject and Diaz-Lanz are being financially backed by a group of North Americans." [CIA FOIA #2-1499-103] Also in July 1962, there was information that William Johnson rented a yacht for anti-Castro activities. When the Border Patrol found and searched this vessel, it discovered a press release stating the International Anti-Communist Brigade had launched an air raid against Castro, which rained leaflets on Cuba advocating that anti-Castro elements within the country break up in small cells in order to carry out acts of sabotage. On July 31, 1962

STURGIS was the subject of an FBI Report entitled "Pro Gobierno Constitutucional de Cuba." A CIA Index Card dated August 15, 1962, reported: "a twin engine plane dropped food, medicines and anti-Castro pamphlets into a remote area of western Cuba's Pinar Del Rio Province early yesterday it was reported today. The food, apparently intended for the enemies of Fidel Castro, was dropped at an unspecified spot. The leaflets fell on the village of Cortes, Las Martinas and El Campo. A fighter plane from the San Julian Air Base tried to intercept the invader but was unable to do so. The flight was arranged by a Cuban refugee group headed by STURGIS." On September 11, 1962, Counter-Intelligence received information on Alexander Rorke and STURGIS. [CIA CSC1 3/772,888]

PEDRO DIAZ LANZ'S ANTI-KENNEDY PROPAGANDA SEPTEMBER 1962

September 27, 1962,

Report No. 11

Subject: Anti-Kennedy propoganda, edited and distributed by Pedro Diaz Lanz, Cuban exile leader in this area.

Source: Pedro Diaz Lanz

On Wednesday, September 17, 1962, I was visited by Pedro Diaz Lanz, who gave me the included mimeographed sheet. This paper is in tone with the constant conversation of Diaz Lanz, to the effect that Kennedy and most of his administration are communists, and are betraying Cuba and the Cubans, as well as the citizens of the United States. This paper was shown to FRANK FIORINI, who told me that Diaz Lanz had edited it.

Comments: From previous conversations held with Lanz, I noticed certain similarities in phraseology that coincided with the general tenor of a conversation held with Rorke a month ago. I asked him if he had spoken to Diaz Lanz, as they both sounded the same. He admitted he had. It is believed that Rorke has influence with Diaz Lanz in this matter. B. [CIA 00078]

On December 26, 1962, STURGIS was the Subject of an FBI Report, Subject: Felipe Vidal Santiago at Miami classified SECRET. [FBI File 105-6466 Field] On February 25, 1963, STURGIS was the Subject of an FBI Report at Miami titled Pedro Diaz Lanz [FBI Filed 105-1598] On February 26, 1963, STURGIS put three exiles and an arms cache ashore in Cuba. [CIA TDCSDB 3/653, 545 3.6.63] On March 30, 1963 the FBI generated a document entitled, "Anti-Castro Strike against Cuba Scheduled for Week of March 26, 1963 Internal Security Cuba Neutrality Matter. Date March 30, 1963 Miami Florida. No file number. SECRET.

JERRY BUCHANAN: MARCH 1963

The FBI: "In connection with the investigation of the case entitled 'LEE HARVEY OSWALD' (105-82555), Zacarias Acosta, Los Pinos Nuevos leader, advised as follows: In March 1963 Jerry Buchanan had engaged in anti-Castro operations together with 16 members of Los Pinos Nuevos. Acosta was one of the 16 Cubans who, in the latter part of March 1963, had departed in the boat, The Violyn III, with a load of arms and munitions. At a point off Key West Jerry Buchanan was put aboard the Violyn III from a small launch that was also occupied by Alexander Rorke and FRANK FIORINI." [FBI 105-82555-3787 p19 - Acosta DOB 9.6.1894 died 10.80] The Violyn III was stopped in the Bahamas, heavily armed, and on its way to attack a Soviet freighter. The British seized the boat. Jerry Buchanan, the only United States citizen aboard, told the press he had "Presidential authorization" for the mission; as his superiors he named his brother James, as well as STURGIS and Alexander Rorke. HEMMING reported Richard Lauchli sold dynamite to Los Pinos Nuevos.

The CIA reported that

As of March 24, 1963, FRANK FIORINI with Bill Johnson and Alex Rorke were planning a strike against Cuba. The operation includes a combined boat and aerial attack, in the latter phase a Beechcraft aircraft will be used as a bomber. During the week of March 18, 1963, FIORINI and Johnson cached three one hundred pound bombs at a base in the Caribbean. FIORINI stated there are seven such bombs available and they will be dropped out of the side door of the Beechcraft. Bill Johnson* previously stated that he participated in a leaflet raid on Matanzas Province which involved a twin-engine Beechcraft. He operates from a landing strip on Norman Cay. This Cay has a cove for handling boats and supplies are stored on this Cay. *Bill Johnson in full control of all MIRR ops. [CIA CSCI 3/771,919]

On March 27, 1963,

Wallace Shanley, U.S. Customs, advised that about one month ago Frank Fiorini contacted him concerning alleged plan under discussion by unidentified persons to drop bombs by plane over Cuba. Fiorini told Shanley he considered this plan ridiculous and would immediately notify Shanley if any attempt was made to put plan into action. Shanley has not since heard from Fiorini. It is to be noted CIA information was received by CIA sources from Fiorini and Johnson both of whom are regarded as professional adventurers of questionable reliability. On March 26, CIA Miami advised it possessed no additional information. [FBI 2-1803-4]

On March 30, 1962, the Coast Guard raided Norman's Key, searching for the Violyn III.
The FBI:

Following the Interagency Conference which was held in Miami on March 30, 1963, Sterling J. Cottrell, Coordinator of Cuban Affairs, Bureau of Inter-American Affairs, Department of State, received a telephone call from his headquarters in Washington, D.C. Following this conversation, Cottrell remarked to Harvey (Illegible), State Department representative in Miami, and a representative of our Miami Office, that the United States Coast Guard had dispatched a Patrol plane to Norman Key on the basis of information which had been furnished by the (Deleted) indicating that the Subject and others were proceeding (deleted) in connection with some anti-Castro undertaking which was to take place in the immediate future. Cottrell remarked that his headquarters had just been notified that the United States Coast Guard had not found the Subject or any of his associates on the Key, and that only one boat was there, which was occupied by United States Senator George Smathers of Florida. Later, when advised that Cottrell had received another telephone call from Washington and had been instructed to treat the information concerning Norman Key and Senator Smathers as confidential to avoid embarrassment concerning this matter, he asked the representative of our Miami office to also treat the matter in this fashion. It is not known what, if any, connection there might be between Senator Smathers' alleged presence and that of the Subject and his associates at Norman Key at or about the same time.

William Johnson reported:

I was there the whole trip. Smathers was FRANK'S buddy. It was funny how we were able to leave and everything else. FRANK may have turned it in. There's a lot of funny things about FRANK. I have some of the blackouts, and I filled them in and it shows that FRANK was the one that did the snitching. His name fit right in. There's only two left. Me and him. And I don't know why he left me to hang around. If he could have thought of a way to get rid of me, he would have done it.

On April 1, 1963, the United States Coast Guard advised the British authorities captured the Violyn III that morning in the vicinity of Norman Key, Bahamas. The boat contained 16 Cuban nationals, and one American adventurer, Jerry Buchanan who has a known criminal record. The British authorities escorted this boat to Nassau, Bahamas, and turned the Violyn III over to the United States Coast Guard for escort back to the United States. [also see Szulc NYT 4.3.63] On April 3, 1963, JMWAVE sent this message to the Director of the CIA: "Supdata (Deleted) from FRANK FIORINI. It is believed that FIORINI knows that when he gives information to BARKER it does get to U.S. Government and probably FIORINI wishes alert U.S. Government agencies to pick up raiders at Anguilla." On April 3, 1963, William Sullivan of the FBI sent this Memo to W.R. Wannall, also of the FBI: "Mr. Evans' memorandum earlier today regarding Cuban matter pointed out that Mr. Guthman of the Department requested information for the President's press conference this afternoon concerning an alleged television or radio broadcast by someone named who claimed that certain students from New England colleges have engaged in week end missions to Cuba." The FBI determined that when the Violyn III was taken into tow by the Coast Guard, there were several college students aboard. [FBI 12-1499 NR 184 4.10.63] "It is noted that Rorke and two of his close associates, Bill Johnson and FRANK STURGIS have been under investigation by the Customs Service for repeated attempts on their part to engage in forays against Cuba. No information has been received by the FBI specifically showing that students from the New England area have actually participated in raids against Cuba but the Customs Service may have additional data with regard to this matter as a result of its investigations." [FBI 2-1449 Enc.] The FBI reported:

On April 4, 1963, local newspaper, radio stations and television in Miami reported that the Violyn III had departed from Nassau and was en route to Miami with a U.S. Coast Guard escort. Miami Attorney Charles Ashmann made press announcements that the crew of the Violyn III would not be return to the United States.

In the early morning hours of April 5, 1963 MM T-3 advised that Ashman claimed the Violyn III would rendezvous with the other unidentified boat and would complete its infiltration mission to Cuba.

On April 5, 1963, MM T-4 a representative of another Government Agency, advised that on the afternoon of April 4, 1963, the Violyn III left Nassau, Bahamas, on a general course for the United States, and at that date was on the north tip of Andros Island in the Bahamas. Because the Violyn III was in shallow water, the U.S. Coast Guard discontinued its surveillance of the Violyn III by boat, and surveillance was taken over by U.S. Coast Guard aircraft. At about 8:20 p.m. the Violyn III turned off its running lights and had not been seen by the coast guard since that time.

On April 5, 1963, Chester A. Woish, Chief Investigations Branch, Immigration and Naturalization Service, Miami, advised that the Violyn III had just arrived at the seawall, Key Biscayne, Miami. The Cubans aboard were to be taken by INS authorities to the INS detention facility at Opa Locka, Florida, where interviews were to be conducted, and any United States citizens on board were to be taken by INS authorities to INS Headquarters in Miami, where these individuals would be interviewed for any possible violations of Federal law concerning U.S. passport regulations. (The yacht was forced to put out a distress signal en route to Cuba).

The Coast Guard seized the Violyn III. Rorke told The New York Times

...that the United States Government, through the CIA, had advance knowledge of the trips. He classified the operations as re-supply missions or trips to land agents in Cuba and said the only shots fired from the

Violyn III had been defensive, after the boat had been fired upon. Mr. Rorke contended that the CIA had financed trips of the Violyn III. These were leaflet raids in October and December 1961. However, Mr. Rorke said the CIA had not backed any excursions of the boat in recent months. [NYT 4.3.63]

The FBI reported:

On April 5, 1963, U.S. Customs Service, Miami, seized an American motor vessel, the Violyn III, on grounds there was probable cause to believe that arms and munitions of war had been exported or removed from the United States in violation of law, aboard this boat. This vessel had been purchased by Alexander Rorke, a United States citizen, newspaper photographer and adventurer who had been closely associated with STURGIS in anti-Castro activities. (Rorke disappeared in 1963 after departing South Florida by plane on a trip to Mexico and is presumed to be dead.)

(Deleted) advised U.S. Customs that due to arrangements made with Rorke, they had committed this boat to the use of an anti-Castro organization known as Los Pinos Nuevos. They admitted that they had loaded the vessel with three one hundred pound bombs, and proceeded to Norman Key in the Bahama Islands, where the bombs were hidden, pursuant to a plan for a later attack against Cuba. However, these plans went awry after the Violin III was seized by the British in April 1963 in the Bahamas with 17 Cuban-bound anti-Castro exile raiders aboard. [FBI 2-1499-134]

On April 8, 1963 the FBI generated a document entitled, "Anti-Castro Activities Washington D.C. No file number. On April 10, 1963, the FBI generated a report about STURGIS at Miami that linked him with the Second National Front of Escambray entitled "Ejereito Cubano Anticomunista (Frente Escambray) (Cuban Anti-Communist Army) (Escambray Front) Registration Act, Neutrality Matter." No file number for this document was shown on the CIA's list of FBI documents about STURGIS. On April 25, 1963, the FBI at Miami generated a document about STURGIS entitled "Anti-Castro Strike Against Cuba Scheduled for the week of March 25, 1963." Again, no file number was provided.

THE NICO LOPEZ HAVANA OIL REFINERY RAID

On April 25, 1963 FBI generated a document entitled, "Anti-Castro strike against Cuba Scheduled for the Week of March 25, 1963; Internal Security – Cuba. Date April 25, 1963 Miami, Florida." No file number. On April 26, 1963, Alexander Rorke announced that on April 25, 1963, he and several other men had flown over Havana and dropped napalm and penolite bombs on the Nico Lopez Oil Refinery, however the refinery tanks failed to explode. The Miami Herald carried an account of the attack. Laureano Batista of Christian Democratic Movement, Geoffrey Francis Sullivan, and Steve Justin Wilson tossed homemade bombs out of a twin-engine plane Alexander Rorke piloted, only 50 feet above Cuban oil refineries. Alexander Rorke described how the men lit napalm bombs with their cigars and dropped them on installations formerly owned by Shell and ESSO, which refined most of Cuba's Soviet oil. Alexander Rorke stated: "The bombs went off but the tanks didn't blow." Rorke said the photographs he took of the raid did not develop. On April 27, 1963, the FBI interviewed Geoffrey Sullivan. He told them that on the night in question he had flown Alexander Rorke to Washington, D.C., then continued to Meridan, Connecticut, where he landed at 9:00 a.m., April 26, 1963. The FBI verified this.

THE FBI CLAIMS THE RAID WAS A HOAX

The FBI persuaded the Kennedy Administration that the bombing was a hoax: "As a matter of fact, there are indications that this whole operation as related by Rorke may have been a hoax. Persons who know Rorke believe this to be possible. Many of the circumstances of the case are inconsistent with the premise that a bombing took place. Although Rorke said the bombs exploded, a Cuban exile advised that people living in the refinery area did not hear any explosions. Cuban newspapers contained pictures of the bombs supposedly dropped on the refinery; however the bomb casings were not dented or damaged as necessarily should have been the result if dropped from an airplane. Moreover, the Cuban radio stations apparently did not report any bombing until after the news releases in the United States. Also, the text of the Cuban Government's protest of the 'bombing' to the United States generally followed the United States news reports in describing the alleged incident.

With regard to possible grand jury action in this matter, it is the conclusion of this Division that such action is not warranted. Subject (Deleted) has refused, on the advice of counsel, to furnish pertinent information unless he is granted immunity from prosecution. We do not believe such immunity is justified in this instance. In view of the generally uncooperative attitude of subjects Sullivan and Batista it is most likely they would invoke the provisions of the Fifth Amendment and refuse to furnish testimony which might incriminate them. As to Rorke, he no doubt would repeat the story he has already given or would invoke the Fifth Amendment. Should he testify along the lines of his public statements and deny that he took an airplane from the United States in connection with the alleged bombing raid, we would not only still lack a prosecutable case but, moreover, we would not be in a position to proceed against Rorke for violation of the perjury statute. It should also be noted that the evidence is not sufficient to invoke the neutrality statutes. For the foregoing reasons criminal prosecution in this case is not contemplated. [FBI 79-29181-3, 97-4623-148]

STURGIS AND HEMMING TELL SHANLEY RAID WAS A HOAX

The FBI:

With respect to the claim of captioned individual that he had bombed Havana last night, SAC Grapp of Miami advised Mr. Belmont at 6:15 p.m. today that he had talked to Wallace Shanley, Supervising Agent of United States Customs in Miami. Shanley does not think there was a raid by Rorke. He knows Rorke personally and has interviewed him a number of times and thinks Rorke is nuts. Shanley said he has interviewed Rorke's close associates, Frank Sturgis and William Johnson, who think Rorke has flipped his lid. Shanley said Customs has conducted investigation and is continuing investigation to determine if there was a raid or if this is a fabrication.

With respect for the motivation for Rorke fabricating this story (Deleted) pointed out that he knows Rorke is in financial distress at the present time. He observed that at the meeting in Washington today, Rorke introduced a young Cuban named Laureano Batista Falla and implied that this person participated on this raid. Batista Falla comes from a wealthy Cuban family and has a large personal allowance. Shanley expressed the opinion that Rorke, by creating favorable publicity for Batista Falla, hopes to ingratiate himself with Falla and obtain money from him.

Mr. Belmont advised Mr. Grapy that Rorke is to address the Cuban Professionals in Exile tonight at 9 p.m. at the DuPont Building here in Washington and requested Grapp to so advise Shanley so that Customs could interview Rorke at that time if they desired to do so. Grapp said Cantons wanted to interview Rorke if they could find him. [FBI 97-4623-35 also FBI 97-4623-151 8.26.63]

CIA furnished the following information relating to radio broadcasts in the Miami area concerning an alleged raid over the Havana area on April 25, 1963. On April 19, 1963 Frank Fiorini, 2515 NW 122nd St, Miami, (not further identified) reported that the planning for a strike against Cuba included Laureano Batista Falia (97-4326), Orlando Bosch Avila and Manuel Artime Buesa (not further identified). Artime was to provide seven or eight thousand dollars for the strike. Artime went to see "Chiri" Mendoza, a rich Cuban exile and asked him for ten thousand dollars. Mendoza refused Artime's request and reportedly called Bosch and told him Artime was a crook. According to Fiorini, Bosch was very anxious to obtain the money and carry out the strike on his own, as he had a promise of a very large sum of money for the next strike if he was successful on the first one. [FBI 97-4263-107 p. 90, 91, 94 SI 97-4623-36 p. 2, 3 (12, 35, 36)]

The HSCA reported:

In April 1963, FRANK STURGIS supplied information that Laureano Batista Falla, Orlando Bosch, Manuel Artime and Alex Rorke were jointly planning an air strike over Havana on April 25, 1963. According to STURGIS, the strike was to originate from an airstrip in Puerto Rico and the target was a sugar refinery. The bombs were homemade, assembled by Batista. Rorke announced publically that the strike had taken place as scheduled, which took the other planners by surprise. STURGIS claimed the strike was still in the planning stage and financial backing had not been completed.

STURGIS told the FBI that the raid never took place and was just a publicity stunt.

THE BORDER PATROL

Additionally, the FBI reported Alexander Rorke's airplane had been under surveillance by the Border Patrol.

At 7:01 p.m. (on the evening of April 25, 1963), these two men, plus an additional individual believed to be Hanssruedi Tanner, a Swiss alien, took off in this aircraft without filing a flight plan. After becoming airborne, they asked for permission to head south. Four hours later, at 11:01 p.m., they asked permission of the control tower at Vero Beach to proceed to Washington, D.C. The Border Patrol further advised that some time prior to the take off from Palm Beach Airport, Sullivan, the pilot, purchased two navigation charts at the airport. One of these charts was described as being for Cuba and the other one Havana... Washington Field Office has further learned from the Federal Aviation Agency at Washington National Airport that the twin engine Beechcraft airplane arrived in Washington, D.C. at the National Airport at 8:00 a.m. on April 26, 1963, having left Vero Beach Florida at 11:00 p.m. on the night of April 25, 1963. The Federal Aviation Agency noted that possibly the plane had stopped en route since it would not require this amount of time to fly from Vero Beach to Washington. The plane departed from Washington National Airport, destination unknown, at 8:37 a.m. The plane filed no flight plan." [FBI: Note for Ray Wannall 4.29.63] The Border Patrol observed nothing loaded onto the plane before take-off. The Border Patrol advised that a check with radar station at Key West Naval Air Station reflected there were no outgoing or incoming unidentified tracks on radar on April 25, 1963, between 7:00 p.m. and 11:00 p.m. however, a plane, by low level flying could possibly escape detection on radar screen. Rorke's plane had 5 gasoline tanks and had a speed of 124 knots and was believed by the FAA to be capable of making a flight from Palm Beach to Havana and return non-stop.

THE CUBAN REACTION

The FBI conducted interviews with other Cuban refugees who had been in Havana when the raid occurred. They heard gunfire and a low-flying plane during the period in question.

Mrs. Hilde Suarez Diaz, a blind Cuban who had arrived on the American Surveyor at Port Everglades, Florida on April 29, 1963 was interviewed at the Immigration and Naturalization Service in Miami. She was interviewed in the presence of her daughter, Graciela Marie Suarez Y Diaz. Mrs. Suarez stated she had resided at 14509 Central Street, Guanabcoa, which is a suburb of Havana, Cuba. Her home is located several blocks from the Shell Oil refineries. She recalled that about three or four nights prior to her departure on April 25, 1963, at about 8:30 p.m. to 9:15 p.m. she heard gunfire. Four or five minutes later, she heard an airplane flying overhead. She said it did not appear that the plane was flying directly over the refinery, however, she was unable to state the direction or the altitude at which this plane was flying." [FBI Miami 2-346 5.9.63]

On April 27, 1963, Cuban press and television announced the April 25, 1963, bombing attack against the Nico Lopez Oil Refinery. Cuban newspapers showed pictures of a 100 pound practice bomb which did not explode, and a quantity of one-pound Trojan Pentolite primers, which did not explode, and a container allegedly filled with Napalm, which also did not explode. There were also photographs of material appearing to be Primacord and an detonating cap. The Cuban media reported:

About 10:00 p.m. on April, 25 1963, a twin engine plane coming from the north, flew low over the Nico Lopez Refinery and dropped a 100-pound bomb and several cans of inflammable material of the napalm type that did not explode. The plane then flew off in the direction from which it had come. Later, the North American news agencies disseminated a report that one Alexander Rorke said in the city of Washington some hours after the incident took place, that he was in the twin-engine plane that bombed the refinery.

Havana media explained that the attack failed due to a faulty fuse. On May 2, 1963, Cuban Deputy Prime Minister Raoul Castro complained: "If the United States wasn't in cahoots with the raiders who bombed a Havana oil refinery, it has at least shown tolerance toward the attack [since] the criminals received great publicity without any action being taken against them." The FBI questioned Deleted about the raid:

On March 7, 1963, Batista Falla said that as head of the Military Section of the MDC, he could state that this alleged raid was not sponsored by the Christian Democratic Movement, although the official press release on April 26, 1963, was issued by the Christian Democratic Movement in Caracas, Venezuela. Batista refused to answer any questions concerning his involvement in this matter, and called Rorke an imbecile for making a premature press announcement from Washington, D.C., April 26, 1963. Batista said the raids against Cuba would continue by Cuban exiles from the United States until either the United States jailed these Cuban exiles or deported them from the United States. [FBI 97-4110-51]

On June 8, 1965, the FBI stated: "Investigation reflected that he [Rorke] did undoubtedly participate in a bombing raid against oil refineries in Havana on the night of April 25, 1963, in company with Geoffrey Sullivan and two other individuals, with Sullivan serving as the pilot of their twin engine Beechcraft. [FBI 105-139922-3] The Nico Lopez raid was widely reported in the press. The New York Times called it the first air strike over Cuba since the Bay of Pigs. Alexander Rorke's actions made the Kennedy Administration appear as if it was unable live up to its agreement to curtail raids on Cuba. Rorke also made it appear that Cuba's air defenses were easily penetrated and if America gave the exiles a free hand, they could overthrow Castro. Rorke had to be stopped. On May 17, 1963, J. Walter Yeagley, Assistant Attorney General, Internal Security Division, noted this to J. Edgar Hoover, in relation to the Nico Lopez raid,

This Division has under consideration the possibility of instituting grand jury action in this matter. However, prior to making such a decision it is requested that the following additional investigation be conducted by the Bureau. It is requested that the texts of broadcasts by Cuban radio station RELOJ, or any other Cuban station, relating to the alleged bombing raid be obtained.

It will also be appreciated if you will attempt to ascertain whether any incendiary, explosive or other material suitable for making bombs was purchased or otherwise obtained by any of the persons reportedly connected with this matter. In this regard it is noted that Gifford Pinchot, Miami, indicated he knew Rorke and the others were going on a bombing raid over Havana and admitted he went with them to a junk yard near Miami International Airport to pick up some 10-gallon cans (apparently used as bomb casings). You may also wish to investigate the possibility that such purchases were made by Rorke, Sullivan or Wilson prior to their arrival in Florida on April 23, 1963." [FBI 97-4623-114]

The FBI: "Facts were submitted to the Justice Department and prosecution was not authorized, whereupon FBI investigation was terminated."

STURGIS and MARCOS AND PEDRO DIAZ LANZ

On May 2, 1963, STURGIS told an American source he was again working with the Diaz Lanz brothers:

FRANK FIORINI, American adventurer involved in anti-Castro activities for some years, told an American source on May 2, 1963, that he had been approached by Marcos Diaz Lanz to patch up differences and cooperate in an "anti-Castro activity" with Marcos and his brother Pedro Diaz Lanz. Marcos said he had received a telegram from Pedro in Washington on May 1, 1963, saying that financial assistance has been received. Marcos supposes that the money came from a Cuban in Washington who had supported the Diaz brothers in the past.

The FBI reported that on May 4, 1961 the CIA furnished:

Three page leaflet in the Spanish language entitled, Open Letter to the People of Cuba and to the Exiles in General from Commander Pedro Diaz Lanz. This leaflet consisted of a vitriolic attack upon Manuel Artime, Cuban exile leader of MRR, and upon the administration of President John F. Kennedy, which he claimed was supporting Artime as the leader of the anti-Castro movement at that time. He repeatedly referred to Artime as 'pre-fabricated' by the Administration.

OPEN LETTER TO THE AMERICAN AND CUBAN PEOPLES

At a time when the Cuban crisis has reached its most critical moment, I feel I have the right and duty – as a free man and a tireless fighter for democracy – to make public the veiled but true facts concerning the operation which ended in the betrayed pre-fabricated invasion in which the patriots, victims of deceit, were met by Castro's Communist forces upon their arrival to our Country. International Communism must be more than satisfied! The interrogations undergone by the few betrayed patriots who were captured of those who landed in Cochinos Bay are the indisputable proofs which the Reds will wield against the United, thus corroborating each of the accusations which Castro has been making to this effect. On the 20th of March I wrote a letter to President Kennedy. Following is the letter made public, faithfully translated with certain necessary omissions due to its primary strictly confidential nature:

International Communism contemplates the Cuban situation as an advantageous step toward their takeover of cert certain areas and their strengthening in others, for their faster conquest of Latin America and even further....The sinister Communist plan may be said to be as follows:

- 1) Prevent – at any cost – the consolidation and generalization of rebellions in Cuba.
- 2) Prevent that the efficient and necessary supply support from the exiles reaches the patriots in Cuba.
- 3) Prevent the establishment of an homogeneous and competent military nucleus, not only well trained and well equipped, but also having the necessary moral conditions to lead the war in Cuba.
- 4) Create the division and discouragement among the Cubans in exile.

A certain "Agency" and its group known as the "sector of the friends" are headed by a naturalized American known as "Mr. Bender." They are responsible for the direct control of the supplies support given to Cubans to overthrow the Castro government. Manual Artime's Deputy, known as "FRANCISCO" has been almost the only person who had arbitrarily received the equipments causing serious problems among the "braves" who work in the underground as "he" speculates with the armament to achieve subordination of the desperate patriots no matter to what organization they belonged. Just a few days ago, as if to have an excuse for himself in the face of an accusation, he has handed some arms – a very small amount – to other groups.

Mr. President I wish to call you attention to the training camps. These camps have become the preoccupation of almost all of the Cuba in exile, and the laughingstock of Fidel Castro. These camps are where terror, anarchy and the unjustified arbitrariness through the power and influence in the “sector of friends” reign. Damp prisons, electric fences and inhumane treatment for those who – justly or unjustly – have been confined to the cells. They have to eat with their hands as they have been denied the use of knife and fork. It is incredible to know that in many cases a pistol has been taken off safety and pointed at their temples; they have been threatened with death. And so many other things on which witnesses can testify.

The leaders of the Democratic Revolutionary Front through the prostitution of the management of their operations and their excessive ambitions and personal concerns. Those persons who have committed crimes in the past and present regimes are the object of the hate and repudiation of all the Cuban people. These “gangsters” are considered common criminals rather than war criminals and solely by their presence they obstruct the achievement of the unity of honest Cubans.

The leaders of the People’s Revolutionary Movement who publicly stated in a pamphlet their doctrine which in its essence, for its ideals aspirations, can be identified as the Communist doctrine. In spite of this, these organizations received – somehow – the necessary supplies support. This group might be placed with the Communist tactics as the second front after the fall of Castro.

Our principles are very simple: we do not recognize any of the “false-imposed leaders” of this crusade. We do not accept Dr. Manuel Artime, direct descendant of Communists, who is neither a doctor nor a Captain as he never fought before, who had no moral support to make the appeal he made to the Cuban people making them believe that he was broadcasting from Cuban territory so that they would unite the Pre-Sold Invasion. In this invasion many of the rebels who went had only a few weeks training, while some others who had several months experience stayed behind in the camps. Consequently Artime is one of the persons who must be directly blamed for the massacre of more than a thousand lives of young Cuban heroes. The “invasion” headquarters tried to save itself and abandoned their troops. But the widows, orphans, parents and relatives of our recent martyrs must shout treason. Pedro Diaz Lanz.

Bernard Barker reported the following to the CIA in May 1963:

2. Fiorini said that he had spoken twice during the month with General Clare Chennault, Jr. who phoned from California. Chennault indicated his desire to participate in the anti-Castro effort, and asked Fiorini about the different organizations in the Miami area and their leaders. Fiorini's reply put Manuel Artime at the head of the list and noted that lack of financial backing was Artime's most pressing problem. In the second phone call, Chennault recommended that Artime solicit aid from the representatives of the Chinese Nationalists in Washington, and urged that his (Chennault's) name be used. Fiorini promised to pass this on to Artime when the latter returned to the U.S, from a tour of Latin American countries.

In June 1963 STURGIS furnished BARKER with information on "Planned raid on Cuba by Diaz Lanz Brothers" and "Current Activities of FRANK FIORINI." According to an FBI report of June 1963 "FRANK STURGIS" was a prime suspect in the murder of a Virginia casino operator. Was the FBI was referring to another "Frank Sturgis?" In July 2006 this researcher was contacted by Todd Rittenhouse of the Suffolk Virginia Police Department's cold case squad who had seen this reference to Sturgis on the Internet. Detective Rittenhouse said that the man who was killed was MEYER JACOBSON, shot dead in February 1963 and Frank, and his two half-brothers (who lived in the area and are now deceased) were suspects. The description Rittenhouse gave me fit Frank perfectly as did the fact that machine pistols were used in the robbery. The leader of the crew was described as being very polite and killed Jacobson only because he resisted. Frank would have learned about Jacobson either during the time he was a member of the Suffolk Virginia Police Department or when he was driving a taxi. Gaeton Fonzi reported that on June 13, 1963, STURGIS prepared for a raid on Cuba with Marcos and Pedro Diaz Lanz. The FBI generated three documents on FRANK that month: "Subject: Intercontinental Penetration Forces (INTERPEN) Internal Security – Cuba Neutrality Matters Date: June 21, 1963, Washington, D. C. File no: 2-1693 Subject: Pedro Luis DIAZ Lanz Internal Security - Cuba Neutrality Matter,- Date: June 21, 1963, Miami, Florida File no: 105-1598 Classification: SECRET Subject: Intercontinental Penetration Forces (INTERPEN) Neutrality Matter Date: June 21, 1963, Miami, Florida File no: 2-312"

During his deposition in HUNT V. WEBERMAN, STURGIS was asked:

Q. In November of 1963, did you visit Dallas, Texas?

A. Possibly. You must understand that I was doing a series of operations in the Caribbean area and I went numerous times to Mexico, so there is a good possibility.

Q. Do you remember how many times you visited Dallas in November 1963?

A. I don't recall offhand.

Q. Do you remember the reason for the visit specifically to Dallas, other than this --

A. I was just passing through, because I went through Dallas, I went through Nuevo Laredo, I went through many different cities.

Q. Do you remember any motels that you may have stayed at in the Dallas area?

A. No. Anytime I went to Dallas, I went through Dallas. I never stayed anywhere in Dallas.

Q. Did you ever leave the airport when you were traveling?

A. I went through, I drove through, because most of the time that I went to Mexico, I drove through Texas.

Q. But you never stayed overnight in Dallas or Fort Worth?

A. Never stayed overnight in Dallas, Texas.

Q. Does the name Town and Country [ ring a bell]?

A. In New Orleans?

Q. In New Orleans.

A. I stayed at the Town and Country at one time when I went through New Orleans. I was headed to Central America.

The CIA reported that Pedro Diaz Lanz and STURGIS planned a raid on the night of either July 31, 1963, or August 1, 1963. [CIA Daily News Summary 8.1.63] STURGIS admitted he might have been in Dallas in November 1963. CIA documents indicated STURGIS planned to go to Dallas in June 1963. The documents did not indicate whether or not STURGIS actually made this trip. Was his trip to Dallas for Artime an excuse to go there to arrange the details of the Kennedy assassination? OSWALD was in New Orleans at this time. Did STURGIS meet with Jack Ruby?

BARKER, STURGIS

BARKER'S CIA Monthly Operational Report for January 1963 indicated he supplied information on "The operations conducted by Alex Rorke and FRANK FIORINI, after forays into Cuba. Both reports give information on private initiative methods of U.S. nationals involved in the Cuban revolutionary effort. Report Number 38 gives advanced information on a projected air strike against Cuba during the early part of February by Alex Rorke." [TO C/SAS from JMWAVE 2.15.63]

A CIA document titled "BARKER" stated:

1. In January 1963 BARKER gave his case officer a report on one of FRANK FIORINI'S forays into Cuba. No other details given (deleted) (deleted) February 15, 1963.
2. In February 1963 BARKER reported on a caching op into Cuba by FIORINI. No further details. WAVE 5400 (deleted) March 13, 1963:

DISPATCH

TO: Chief, Special Affairs Staff [Desmond FitzGerald]

FROM: Chief of Station, JMWAVE

SUBJECT: BERNARD BARKER, Operational Monthly Report February 1, 1963, to February 28, 1963.

1. Subject was contacted on February 6, 1963, February 14, 1963, February 20, 1962, February 21, 1963 and February 28, 1963. He was paid $500 salary for the month.
2. Although no dissemination was credit to Subject during the month, several of his reports were of sufficient interest as operational information to merit special attention. Forecast of an air raid on Cuba being planned by Alex Rorke was cabled in WAVE 5400 with news of an infiltration and caching operation completed in late February by FRANK FIORINI and Bill Johnson. [CIA FOIA # D002278]
3. In April 1963 BARKER reported information regarding an exile raid on Cuba. The information came from FIORINI. Per the subdata on the intel cable, FIORINI knew that when he gave information to BARKER it would reach CIA. WAVE 6695.
4. BARKER provided information re FIORINI raids in June 1963 (deleted) July 19, 1963.
5. BARKER recruited a number of valuable assets for the Station (Havana) including (Deleted)."

The CIA commented:

FIORINI has previously offered information in the knowledge that this information would become available to the U.S. Government. It is believed that FRANK FIORINI wished this information to get into official channels so that American authorities would be on the lookout for this second raider boat. On April 2, 1963 in the general area off the northern coast of Cuba ranged from three to seven feet, and wind was reported in gusts up to 30 knots. The probability that FIORINI is concerned about the welfare of the raiders in possibly a small craft should not be discounted. The possibility that this might be a 'smoke screen' should also not be discounted. [CIA Report No. TDCSDB 3/654,021 4.3.63]

A CIA Index Card dated April 2, 1963, stated: "Subject stated that he has spent the better part of the weekend of March 30, 1963, and March 31, 1963, flying in the Bahama Island area in light plane looking for Violin III." [TDCSB-3/653,986 4.2.63]

On June 23, 1963, BARKER'S progress report for May indicated he had filed two reports based on information from STURGIS.

a. UFG-2781 (cable) from FRANK FIORINI and Pepin Bosch, FRANK FIORINI'S Agreement to Participate in Air Strike Against Cuba

b. UFG-2901 (cable) from FRANK FIORINI. Request by Venezuelan National that FRANK FIORINI Purchase Arms for Him.

c. UFG-2922 (cable) from Pedro Martinez Fraga, Possible Cooperation Between Manuel A. de Varona and Manuel Artime.

2. One item of information which Subject received from FRANK FIORINI on May 28, 1963, was considered possibly of interest to Headquarters, but probably best not forwarded in reports format. FIORINI said he had spoken twice during the month with General Claire Chenault, Jr., who phoned from California. Chenault indicated his desire to participate in the anti-Castro effort, and asked FIORINI about the different organizations in the Miami area and their leaders. FIORINI'S reply put Manuel Artime at the head of the list, and noted that lack of financial backing was Artime's most pressing problem. In the second phone call, Chenault recommended that Artime solicit aid from representatives of the Chinese Nationalists in Washington, and urged that his (Chenault's) name be used. FIORINI promised to pass this on to Artime when the latter returned to the U.S. from a tour of Latin American countries."

On July 26, 1963, BARKER'S Operational Monthly Report indicated that three disseminable reports were credited to BARKER during June 1963: "UFG-2006 (cable) from FRANK FIORINI, "Planned Raid on Cuba by Diaz Lanz Brothers." UFG-3108 (cable) from FRANK FIORINI, "Current Activities of FRANK FIORINI." A CIA document stated:

The Diaz Lanz brothers and FRANK FIORINI, frustrated in their plans for a bomb-and-leaflet raid over Havana on July 28, 1963, reportedly had planned a new raid on the night of either July 31, 1963, or August 1, 1963.

According to a trained observer who talked with FIORINI, the latter will leave his house at about 7:00 p.m. on July 31, 1963, and head for Marathon Key in the Florida Keys. FIORINI'S trip is to be a decoy to draw off any FBI surveillance team. Pedro Diaz and Marcos Diaz Lanz plan to leave their cars parked in front of their homes to make it appear that they are inside and their wives are under instruction to say they are asleep. However, on the night of either July 31, 1963, or August 1, 1963, the Diaz Lanz brothers will attempt to reach clandestinely the Weir Williams Ranch where the plane to be used in the raid is located. The Source reports that FIORINI said the plane will carry several bombs made from 100-pound practice bombs cut down to a smaller size and filled with nuts and bolts for shrapnel. [CIA TDCS-DB-3/655.833]

On September 17, 1963, the CIA reported:

TO: Chief, Special Affairs Staff

FROM: Chief, JMWAVE

SUBJECT: BERNARD BARKER Operational Progress Report August 1, 1963, to August 30, 1963. Ref. (Deleted) August 19, 1963.

I. OPERATIONAL

1. Subject continued his wide and varied contacts among Cuban exiles and with Americans involved in anti-Cuban activities. There was no appreciable change in his operational pattern.

II PRODUCTION

2. Subject responded to several requests for local investigations on individuals and groups, and produced eight formal reports of which five were disseminated.

a. UFG-3359 (cable ) Rescheduling of Air Strike and Leaflet Raid on Havana, August 8, 1963.

b. UFG-3403 (cable) Creation of Junta de Gobierno de Cuba en el Exileo.

c. UFG-3414 (cable) Air Strike over Santa Clara, Las Villas on August 15, 1963.

d. UFG -3443 (cable) Plan to Bomb a Soviet-Make PT Boat in the Service of the GOC.

e. UFG-3462 (cable) Possible Raid on Cuba by Eddie Arthur

3. With the cooperation of FRANK FIORINI, Subject was able to keep JMWAVE informed of the activities of the Diaz Lanz brothers in their attempts to mount an air raid over Cuba. JMWAVE in turn, was able to pass this information to local security agencies in time for them to thwart the plans.

5. Subject also turned up a possible operational lead toward the penetration of Julio Lobo's activities. [CIA FOIA D002250- Date typed 9. 17. 63. also CIA FOIA 00073] Another CIA report stated: "There was no particular change in his operational pattern. Subject also turned up a possible operational lead toward the penetration of Julio Lobo's activities." [CIA FOIA 002250 201-251689]

RORKE & STURGIS & THE WARNING FROM U.S. CUSTOMS JUNE 1963

On June 24, 1963, the FBI generated a document, which was 95% withheld, Subject Alexander Irwin Rorke Jr. Miami Florida [FBI 105-107224; FBI 97-4623-NR 150 6.27.63] This document probably concerned a request for weapons made by Carlos Penin Enfante of the the MRP to the CIA for money to purchase 2 cannons and a submachine gun and ammo for a raid on Cuba. The CIA reported "Luis contact for the purchase of weapons is a relative of his. The person who sells them recently bombed an oil refinery in the city of Habana. Luis said that this person, who is now being checked by the FBI, procured the aircraft used for the raid, bought the gasoline for the aircraft and was on board during the bombing mission."

In August 1963 a B-25 aircraft, Serial N9365-C, belonging to Geoffrey Sullivan and Alexander Rorke was spotted in Puerto Rico. In early September 1963 FRANK STURGIS, Alex Rorke and Geoffrey Sullivan, were called into U. S. Customs headquarters and warned about the consequences of conducting any further raids on Cuba. Alexander Rorke told Paul Scott and Robert S. Allen that the Supervising Customs agents of Region II threatened him with fines and imprisonment if he continued helping the anti-Castro raiders. On September 14, 1963, W.R. Wannall sent a memo to William C. Sullivan, Subject, Cuban Raids: "Reference my memorandum September 14, 1963, concerning conference at office of (deleted) in order to coordinate by various U.S. agencies to curb illegal air raids over Cuba. Various steps by specified agencies were agreed on at the conference, all at curtailing raids." Rorke was mentioned in this document. When Alexander Rorke demanded to know who authorized these warnings, he was told: "It comes from the White House, from the President." Paul Scott and Robert S. Allen continued: "According to a high government source, this strong-arm crackdown on Alexander Rorke is a symbol of the new White House campaign to assure Premier Khrushchev that the U.S. will not permit [raids on Cuba]." The Border Patrol posted a 24-hour guard on Alexander Rorke's aircraft.

On September 16, 1963, the CIA reported:

STURGIS and Pedro de la Camera, Civilian aviator with U.S. pilot's license stated September 13, 1963, they willing to set up flight to Cuba with passenger aboard to drop Propaganda leaflets over Cuba. FIORINI'S flight would leave Florida at an altitude of 150 feet, enter Cuba through Matanzas Province, flying over Santa Clara and Caribbean, and then return to Florida. They stated they rent aircraft at $50 per hour at Opa Locka Airport. Aircraft can carry 600 pounds of cargo. FIORINI stated September 16, 1963, he was prepared to carry out offer to fly propaganda material to Cuba despite fact he had received a registered letter from U.S. authorities restricting him to the continental U.S. with a penalty of $25,000 and/or three years imprisonment for violations of that restriction. FIORINI asked $5,750 for overflying Santa Clara and Caribbean in Las Villas Province, Cuba; $2,000 to be paid in advance and the balance upon completion of mission. [CIA CSCI 3/771,919]

STURGIS' BRIEFCASE: SEPTEMBER 1963

On October 30, 1963, a CIA report was generated:

REPORT COVER SHEET Report No. UFG-3962
FROM: JMWAVE October 30, 1963
REPORTING OFFICER Henry J. Sloman
REPORTING OFFICER Oliver P. Papock/ uta
APPROVING OFFICER: (illegible)
Background Data and Comments:

Source: September 20, 1963, AMOT Report DD-414 from AMLINT-1. Despite fact FIORINI officially missing, believe this material should get at least ODENVY dissemination, for their information and completion of records. Ref. UFG-3720.

FIELD INFORMATION REPORT

COUNTRY: CUBA DATE OF REPORT OCTOBER 30, 1963
SUBJECT: Documents, Correspondence and Maps which were observed in a Briefcase which was Determined to Belong to FRANK FIORINI.
DATE OF INFO: September 18, 1963.
PLACE AND DATE ACQ: United States, Miami, (September 20, 1963).

SOURCE: A member of a group of Cuban émigrés trained in the techniques of information collection. This group has provided useful reports for over two years. The information is from an individual who inadvertently came into possession of a briefcase, which upon being opened, was determined to belong to FRANK FIORINI.

1. The following papers, maps and documents were observed in a briefcase which was found by chance, and which was determined to belong to FRANK FIORINI when it was opened in an attempt to identify the owner.

a. Air Navigational Charts, published by the Aeronautical Chart and Information Center, United States Air Force, for the following areas:

(1) Bahama Islands JN 47 N, 5th Edition USAF Operational Navigation Chart.

(2) Gulf of Guacanayabo, ONC 586. Bahamas Islands, United Kingdom-Cuba.

(3) Chetunal Bay British Honduras, Guatemala, Honduras, Mexico, World Aeronautical Chart.

(4) Yucatan Channel 587 Cuban-Mexico.

(5) Hispaniola 648 Dominican Republic, Haiti, Puerto Rico.

(6) Virgin Island 649 Caribbean Sea...

b. List of addresses and individuals (see attachment #1)

c. List of military equipment for what appears to be a 196 man unit (see attachment #2)

d. Certificate of incorporation of Anti-Communist Crusade Foundation, Inc. which was filed with the Secretary of the State of Florida, Tallahassee on June 12, 1961...

e. List of miscellaneous weapons and purchase. This was related to a card with the following information: LOXCO (Incorporated) Lauchli Ordnance Experimental Company Collinsville, Ill. Rich Lauchli DI- 4-3195. According to this card LOXCO would produce special machinery and do general machine work. (see attachment #4)

f. Copy of a letter from Robert K. Brown Box 387, Rte 3, Boulder, Colorado, dated June 30, 1960, addressed to Pedro Diaz Lanz in care of David Rosen, Biscayne Building, Miami, Florida. Brown claims to be a freelance journalist, who "was duped by Castro," spent several months in Cuba working part time for the Associated Press, and who, as of the date of the letter, was to contact anti-Castro movements and "help in any way possible." (see attachment #5)

The information contained in STURGIS' briefcase was sent to the FBI:

TO: Director FBI November 19, 1963
Attention Mr. Sam Papich
FROM: Deputy Director (Plans)

SUBJECT: FRANK STURGIS, Documents, Correspondence and Maps which were observed in a Briefcase.

1. The attached copies of maps, papers and documents were received by a representative of this Agency from an individual of undetermined reliability who inadvertently came into possession of a briefcase which, upon being opened in an effort to identify the owner, was determined to belong to FRANK STURGIS. The date of the information was September 18, 1963, and the following is a list of the contents of the briefcase:

CSCI-3/778,713
SAS/CI LDemos:pap (November 13, 1963)
Based On: UFG-3962 October 30, 1963.
Source: AMOT Rpt DD-414 from AM-LINT-1
File No. 19-500

The attachments were withheld. On January 22, 1964, ANGLETON composed CSCI-3/779,505 which was transmitted to the Customs Commissioner. This communication failed to list the maps. It ended: "January 13, 1964, SAS/CI (Deleted) gdr Based on CSCI-3/778,713 sent to FBI only and they requested we forward copies of above listed addresses to CSCI. File (Deleted)." The CIA has not released the attachment to this document containing the names, telephone numbers and addresses of STURGIS' associates. HEMMING told this researcher: "He lost his briefcase just before the Alexander Rorke flight. The stubble bum clown lost it at North Perry Airport." STURGIS did not lose the briefcase; it was stolen from him by Cuban exiles on the instructions of someone in the CIA - JAMES ANGLETON.

THE DEATH OF ALEXANDER RORKE AND GEOFFREY SULLIVAN

On September 20, 1963, STURGIS, Alexander Rorke and William Johnson held a meeting about their next action. HUNT'S former attorney, Ellis Rubin, stated he witnessed Alexander Rorke and Geoffrey Sullivan take off in a twin-engine aircraft on September 24, 1963. They had filed a flight-plan for Panama, but landed at Cozumel, south of the Yucatan Peninsula in Mexico, where they refueled and took off again at 7:30 p.m. They were never heard from again. Ellis Rubin observed he was the last person to see the men alive.

HEMMING'S SEARCH PARTY: OCTOBER 1963

The FBI generated a report entitled INTERPEN, September 30, 1963, Miami, Florida. The first search and rescue expedition, organized by Ellis Rubin, departed on October 2, 1963, and returned on October 6, 1963. The FBI reported:

On October 20, 1963, Robert Dorsay said he had just returned from Cozumel, Mexico, Telucigalpa, Honduras; and Managua, Nicaragua. Dorsay stated that he had determined Rorke's plane arrived at Cozumel at 7:00 p.m. September 24, 1963. At Cozumel, several people recalled there were three persons aboard, two of them clearly identified as Rorke and Sullivan and the third person was described as a Latin-appearing male, 5'10", fair complexion, and about 32 years old. The airplane was refueled, and took off at 8:00 p.m., ostensibly for Telucigalpa, Honduras. Robert Dorsay said he had ascertained that Rorke's plane had no life raft, life vests, and no Very Pistol; therefore speculated that if the aircraft was down at sea en route to Telucigalpa, there is no point in searching for the occupants of the plane. He said it was possible that the airplane might have gone down between La Cieba and Telucigalpa, in which case there would be the possibility that the occupants of the plane were still alive. DISPATCH SECRET

FROM: Chief of Station, JMWAVE

SUBJECT: Operational/TYPIC

Re to relationships between Pauline Sierra and other Amer. Nationals

ACTION REQUIRED: Please make copy available to SAS/Intel.

REF: UFG-3871

The following information obtained from AMCLATTER-1 was not disseminated in ref.

According to Reinaldo Pico, leader of Alianza de Trabajadores Cubanos, Paulino Sierra was receiving funds from an American named Van Gorkon (phonetic) however Sierra was claiming that the funds were coming from KUBARK. According to Frank Fiorini, the latter had been permitted to read the local ODURGE files wherein he saw an accusation that Gilberto Rodriguez Fernandez of Sierra's group was an agent of AMTHUG. 201-42669 October 17, 1963 UPGT-6553

On October 30, 1963, STURGIS furnished the CIA with information on the Anti-Communist Crusade Foundation and organization chartered by STURGIS, Laura Norris and his bride to be, Janet Mann. [Deleted-03962] The second search party departed Miami on November 2, 1963, sponsored by HEMMING:

DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY
STAFF COMMUNICATIONS OFFICE

FROM: USAMA GUATEMALA
TO: DA
FOR: ACSI AND AFNIN...FOR G-2

On November 4, 1963, at 1:00 p.m. local, a private aircraft owned and piloted by C.F. Bush, Hollywood, Florida, landed at Puerto Barrios Mip Base with following aboard: HEMMING, Howard K. Davis of Miami, Charles Collier, representative of insurance company in Dallas, Texas, Ivan Kay, attorney for Collier, Miami; Steve Justin Wilson and ROY HARGRAVES, Ralph Hernandez Nordase, whose professed occupations were parachutists and Allan Kennedy, student pilot of the Riddle Flying School, Miami. With the exception of Bush and Collier they all claim residence residency in Miami, Florida. DC-3 acft no NC 160455. Aircraft allegedly chartered by insurance Charles T. Collier, Superintendent of Claims, International Aviation Underwriters, Incorporated, 211 North Ervay Street, Dallas, Texas. Alleged mission of party to search for acft piloted by one Sullivan with one Rorke as passenger presumably lost on or after September 24, 1963, somewhere in Central America. Rorke is said to be son-in-law of Billingsley, owner of Stork Club in New York City and son of Supreme Court Justice, State of New York. Alleged interest of mission was two-fold.

(1) Collier and Kay representing insurance interest were trying to locate aircraft which rumors had may not have been lost.

(2) Rest of party was engaged to search for Rorke presumably on the insistence of Mrs. Rorke and the father, out of personal friendship towards Rorke who allegedly was "One of the crowd." Party claimed to have given Guatemala previous notice of arrival by sending a wire from Belize, British Honduras. No such wire has arrived in Guatemala to date. Party consequently arrived without appropriate permission from Guatemala, without visas, and in the case of six members, without passports. Guatemala's alert intelligence posture resulted in aircraft being placed under military guard. GOG reported that on initial questioning various members of party gave conflicting stories as to their origin and destination. With this suspicion created, the Guatemalan Air Force transported all personnel to Guatemala City where they arrived at 6:30 p.m. local November 4, 1963. U.S. military personnel were advised that under other circumstances the aircraft would have been impounded and members of the party incarcerated. COP (Dr.) Jose Luis Aguilar De Leon, Secretary to the Chief of Government, made it clear to the party that only because of friendship and personal respect existing between Guatemalans and U.S. military personnel, prevented impounding of aircraft. Party was entertained at Guatemalan Air Force club and kept under loose surveillance throughout stay. Various members of the party were able to visit local restaurants and places of amusement in company of Guatemalan personnel. All their personal identification that had been previously confiscated in Puerto Barrios were returned, and acknowledged by the group before departure. The personnel were placed in the custody of U.S. military officers. GOG officials permitted party to be billeted at Motel Plaza, and Palace Hotel, Guatemala City. The following day, U.S. military was contacted by GOG to obtain opinions and assistance in order to avoid international incident. U.S. military officials were invited to the National Palace by Dr. Aguilar De Leon, and were assured every cooperation to avoid unpleasantness. Aguilar De Leon was informed by the U.S. military that the party was obviously a private venture and was not, as suspected by the Guatemalans, acting against the Guatemalan Govt. or any part thereof. Dr. Aguilar De Leon, in the presence of U.S. Army military members Bush, Collier and Kay and at another interview, interviewed rest of the party. The account which the U.S. military members had previously given to Dr. Aguilar was verified by these subsequent interviews. To further convince Guatemala that this was not an action against their government, Charles Collier provided insurance file on Rorke aircraft for duplication and file by G-2 Guat Army. At approximately 9:00 a.m. local November 5, 1963, the original file was returned to a member of the U.S. military, and in turn to Collier. U.S. military was further advised that no action against the party would be contemplated, that the chief of government had however insisted that the aircraft leave with all personnel at earliest hour. Aircraft departed 1:30 p.m. on November 6, 1963, for Belize with one P-51 as escort in presence of U.S. military members and Dr. Aguilar. Comment by Guat 572 and 574. For your guidance, it should be expected that considerable publicity will be sought in particular by HEMMING, who alleges to know Senator Strom Thurmond, as well as Hernandez, HARGRAVES and Wilson. End comment. Aircraft had on board one shotgun, two pistols and parachutes. Personnel in party other than Bush, Collier and Kay behaved in a slovenly manner. One member wore Army fatigue trousers and boots with old Army shirt. Some party members stated that reason for their being forced out of Guatemala so soon was that Alexander Rorke is indeed in Guatemala and Guatemala Government is deliberately detaining Alexander Rorke. Comment Guat 572 and 574. Dr. Aguilar personally assured party that if Rorke's aircraft had met with an accident in Guatemala the Guatemalan Government and he in particular would have known about it. The matter of Special Forces was of course discredited by U.S. military members. As of time of departure nothing appeared in local press regarding this incident. GOG officials indicated they intended no press release. End comment. One Ralph Hernandez Nordase, per identification, a Cuban national, behaved particularly in a belligerent manner. Those members professing interest in locating Rorke must be considered as potential fabricators when dealing with the press which they indicated they intended to do. HEMMING professed to have this operation. Ivan Kay said he intended to prepare official statement on entire trip in which he hoped to neutralize any unfavorable press releases in this regard. Mr. Kay upon request by Mr. Aguilar turned over undeveloped photographic film which Dr. Aguilar promised to develop, examine and return to Mr. Kay via U.S. military. The whole party was handled by the Guat Govt in a most courteous and at no time were any individuals abused. Comment U.S. Army Attache. Operations of this nature by irresponsible U.S. citizen do not tend to improve relationship with GOG. [FBI 97-4623-161]

The FBI reported that in October and November 1963, "(deleted) soldier-of-fortune participated in search for two lost Americans." The party returned to Miami on November 6, 1963. On November 20, 1963, the FBI noted: "(Deleted) Subject was described as similar to Alexander Rorke who is missing in flight to Central America. (Deleted)." [FBI original filed in 105-113149-2] In March 1987 the FBI released one highly-deleted page on Alexander Rorke dated November 29, 1963. This document could have shed some light on the fate of Alexander Rorke, but the only part of the page not blocked out stated: "On November 29, 1963, we received the following information from a source whose reliability has not yet been established." [FBI 97-4623 NR 12.20.63] On December 4, 1963, the CIA sent the FBI information on Alexander Rorke which was still withheld as of 2010. [FBI Brennan/Papich 105-82555-NR 154 -3 (?)] On December 20, 1963, the FBI reported: "Sources and informant advised they have different ideas what might have happened to Rorke and Sullivan. All sources and informant's believe Rorke and Sullivan are dead and did not go to Cuba. They feel that if Rorke would have been captured in Cuba the Castro Government would have used the incident for propaganda." [FBI 97-4623-168]

During HUNT v. WEBERMAN STURGIS was asked:

Q. Where was the last time Alexander Rorke was seen alive?

A. I had a meeting with Alex, I believe with Bill Johnson, one or two other persons with Alex the day or possibly two days before he disappeared.

STURGIS told Michael Canfield: "And if you remember there was a big search by the United States Coast Guard, both air and sea, a number of years ago, when Alexander Rorke left Opalocka Airfield and he was going to Nicaragua, and supposedly it is rumored that he was shot down near Cuba, into the water, there were reports that Alexander Rorke was captured, but there was nobody inside of Cuba that was captured by the name of Alex Rorke. I assume he got shot down over water, and his body and the plane disappeared. I, with a number of other people which I will get to at a later date, sat with Alex Rorke where his airplane was parked at Opalocka Airfield which is close by here, the day before he made his ill-fated trip. And I will get the names of everybody that knew about the trip and so forth, that the FBI investigated. I believe even the CIA investigated that, I'm not sure, but they may have been in on the investigation, plus other agencies of the United States Government, (unintelligible)...of his disappearance."

William Johnson reported: "Rorke had a falling out with FRANK." William Johnson was asked if the falling out concerned the assassination of President John F. Kennedy. He responded, "That could be part of it. But you gotta remember something. Rorke said that if he ever disappeared, it was the CIA or the FBI would knock him off. And that trip was a funny trip because I think somewhere down the line FRANK had something to do with the disappearance of Rorke and Sullivan."

Marita Lorenz stated: "Alex wouldn't go along with the Kennedy assassination; he was a former Jesuit priest. Alex disappeared about two months before the assassination. He had warned me to go home and stay away from FRANK. Years later I asked FRANK, 'Did you kill Alex Rorke?' FRANK said, 'Come on. You know who killed him. The CIA killed him. He didn't want to go along with the plans they had.' He kept telling me, 'The Company did it.' I told him, 'Listen asshole, you're the Company, right?'" She claimed that STURGIS, not Ellis Rubin, was the last person to see Rorke alive and that she was contacted by the FBI about the disappearance of Alexander Rorke and asked if she thought STURGIS did it. The FBI reported: "The following references in the file captioned FRANK ANTHONY STURGIS concern information concerning the activities of Alexander I. Rorke during the period 1961 to 1963." STURGIS' file contained 25 references to Rorke.

On October 6, 1963, Pedro Diaz Lanz appeared on Channel 10 Television Station, Miami. During this program Diaz Lanz criticized Manuel Artime, saying that Artime had U.S. sponsorship and that he had been indoctrinated in Communism in Cuba by his father. [FBI 105-72630-109 p2 encl. P.2,7,8] The last pre-assassination FBI report on the CIA's list of FBI documents about STURGIS was generated on October 24, 1963. "Subject: Second National Front of Escambray." (SNFE - Alpha-66) No file number was given. On October 24, 1963, the name STURGIS appeared in a CIA document about Alpha-66 and his connection with its airplanes. The CIA reported: "See above document page 14 for information regarding FRANK FIORINI'S connection with Alpha-66 airplane." [Allen v. DOD CIA 04490; CIA DBA 55602] On November 13, 1963, CSCI-3/778,713, based on "(deleted) - 3962 October 30, 1963," was generated. The CIA list of documents about STURGIS resumed with a document dated May 19, 1964.

Around Thursday, November 7, 1963, STURGIS said he visited Dallas to see a gun connection. HEMMING 1994:

I first heard of Rorke in 1963. Courtney told us he was giving a fund raising speech at the Hotel Diplomat. He was there with James Buchanan and STURGIS. He didn't show his fucking face in Miami till 1963. The closest he came was Fort Lauderdale. They were warned by the Cubans to stay the fuck out of Miami. 'You're raising a lot of goddamned fucking money. Where is it going? To your buddy STURGIS and all those motherfucking thieves?'

On December 16, 1963, the FBI questioned HEMMING,

...who is personally acquainted with Alexander Rorke Jr. and who has been (deleted) advised the only time he ever heard of Anti-Communist International was a couple of years ago. (Deleted) a would-be organization with a similar name, HEMMING said was unable to furnish any other information concerning the organization. HEMMING advised that some three weeks before Alexander Rorke and his pilot, Geoffrey Sullivan, went on the bombing raid against Havana, Cuba, he received a telephone call from Rorke concerning some disagreement they had had. HEMMING agreed to meet with Rorke and straighten out the disagreement. At a subsequent meeting, Rorke came with his pilot, Sullivan, to talk about a proposed bombing trip against a Cuban oil refinery. HEMMING advised Rorke of the hazards involved, and said that the north coast of Cuba had excellent radar defenses, however, there are avenues or corridors into Cuba which Cuban radar does not cover. HEMMING claimed that from talking to recently-arrived Cubans, he had been able to ascertain information about these corridors. HEMMING previously told Rorke and Sullivan where these corridors were, but to find these corridors one would have to be an excellent navigator and be completely familiar with the north coast of Cuba. HEMMING doubted that Rorke and Sullivan could have ever found these corridors. Concerning Rorke's present whereabouts Advised he participated in the search mission to Central America on October 2, 1963 and found no traces of Rorke. HEMMING presumes he is dead. He continued that he did not know the source of Rorke's funds; he doubts if Rorke's wife had put any more into Rorke's operations, and she continues to live in Hollywood, Florida. Hemming said, however, that he understood Rorke made considerable money from lectures, influenced members of the John Birch Society to give large contributions, and obviously had considerable money from them.

On December 17, 1963 Frank Fiorini, aka Frank Sturgis, Miami, voluntarily came to the Miami Office, accompanied by his friend and associate, William Johnson. It is to be noted that both Fiorini and Johnson have admittedly been implicated in anti-Fidel Castro activities in the Miami area for a period of several years. Fiorini stated he first met Rorke of New York City, through a mutual friend, Pedro Diaz Lanz, an exile Cuban leader, in about 1960. Shortly thereafter Fiorini went with Rorke to New York City, and was introduced by Rorke to Mr. Robert Speller, who owned a publishing firm known as Speller and Son. He also operated the Transglobal News Service. Mr. Speller issued to Fiorini a press identification card dated April 27, 1961, for Fiorini to identify himself with in the event he should be captured in Cuba.

Fiorini explained that at that time he, himself, was head of an organization known as the Anti-Communist International Brigade, which had no connection whatsoever with the Anti-Communist International headquartered in New York City. Fiorini said he organized the Anti-Communist International Brigade in Miami. Fiorini met in the office of Mr. Speller a man introduced as Haviv Schieber, who appeared to be in his late fifties, and who was represented as being the leader of the Anti-Communist International, New York City. Schieber described himself as being anti-Communist, and said he had belonged to an underground organization in Israel which fought against the British. Fiorini believed this organization was "Hagana." Schieber also said he was presently opposed to the administration of Ben Gurion in Israel, and he was living a self-imposed exile in New York City. Speller disclosed that he was financially backing the Anti-Communist International. Fiorini learned that the organization was supposed to have some influential members in the New York area. Fiorini explained that Rorke had wanted Fiorini to meet these people in order to obtain financial backing for anti-Castro commando-type action on behalf of Fiorini's own organization, the Anti-Communist International Brigade. Fiorini said that Speller offered financial support to him, but never came through with a single nickel.

Fiorini said that the last contact he had with the Anti-Communist International was in the latter part of 1961. At that time, Schieber was attempting to send a bearded commando, name unknown to Fiorini, to Cuba for the purpose of assassinating Fidel Castro, but this individual never succeeded in getting into Cuba. Fiorini recalled that on two or three occasions he stayed at Schieber's apartment, but he was unable to recall the address of this apartment.

Fiorini said that Gifford Pinchot, who resides in New York City, is acquainted with Schieber. Fiorini said that Gifford Pinchot is the same individual who had been associating with Alexander I. Rorke when Rorke publicly claimed a successful bombing raid over Cuba on April 25, 1963. Fiorini said that there never was any connection at any time between the Anti-Communist International and the Anti-Communist International Brigade. Also, he never received any indication that the Anti-Communist International ever established an organization or a branch in the Miami area. So far as he knew, it was restricted to the New York area.

Fiorini said that in about the summer of 1963 Rorke told him and William Johnson that he had a plan to bomb the Guantanamo Base, and that he had obtained some money to buy one or more B-26 planes. During this conversation, Rorke mentioned the name of Schieber, but Fiorini was unable to recall in exactly what manner Schieber's name came up. Rorke returned to New York City after Johnson and Fiorini talked Rorke out of attempting this raid.

However, during the same general period of time, Rorke told Johnson and Fiorini that he had been receiving some financial support from the ACI. He also mentioned a Countess in Connecticut who had been contributing money. Neither Rorke nor Johnson was able to recall the name of this Countess. Fiorini also recalled that Rorke told him and Johnson shortly before and during the U. S. blockade of Cuba in October, 1962, and for some time thereafter that he would like to bomb a Russian ship in Cuban waters. Rorke said that the ACI wanted to create an incident between the Soviet Union and the United States. Fiorini said that three weeks prior to Rorke's bombing raid over Cuba in April 1963, Fiorini and Johnson were supposed to deliver three bombs to Norman Cay in the Bahamas for Rorke to pick up on another raid which he planned on a Russian boat off the coast of Cuba. However, when Fiorini and Johnson learned that this was the specific objective of Rorke, they buried the bombs and thwarted Rorke's plan. When Rorke returned to Miami, he became very angry with Johnson and Fiorini, and they had little to do with each other until about four days prior to Rorke's ill-fated departure on September 24, 1963. At that time, Johnson and Fiorini met Rorke, a Miami pilot known as Jack Griffin, and Geoffrey Sullivan, who was Rorke's pilot. This meeting took place in Opa Locka, Florida, where Rorke had a B-25 airplane. During this meeting Rorke explained that he had some connections with former Nicaraguan President, Luis Somoza, who had offered Rorke an air strip, free gasoline, and free weapons, but that Rorke had to be in Nicaragua by the following Thursday if he were to take advantage of this opportunity. During this meeting, Sullivan departed in the B-25 because he felt that the U. S. Customs Service was about to seize this plane. The discussion continued without Sullivan. None of the individuals participating in the discussion had any money to finance the trip to Nicaragua. Rorke invited Johnson and Fiorini to participate with him in the trip to Nicaragua. Johnson suggested that the group rent a private plane to go to Nicaragua to see Somoza in order to firm up the plan. It was agreed that each of the five would try to raise money for the trip. On the following Monday (September 23, 1963), Rorke called Johnson at about 7 P.M. Johnson recalled that he told Rorke he had been unable to raise any money, whereupon Rorke said he had raised some money and for Johnson to be at the Opa Locka Airport in the morning. Rorke also related to Johnson that he had written some bad checks and was anxious to get to Nicaragua as soon as possible to make connections with Somoza, then to return to New York City to obtain enough money to cover the checks. Rorke said from New York City he would wire money to Bill Johnson to transport Rorke's B-25 plane to Nicaragua.

Johnson said that on the following morning Johnson went to work with Jack Griffin at the CMA Auto Sales Service, South Dixie Highway, Miami. Griffin had a rented Cessna plane at nearby Kendall, Florida. They had planned to fly this Cessna to Opa Locka, telephone Frank Fiorini to meet them there, and then depart with Rorke and Sullivan for Nicaragua. However, it was raining hard when they reached the Kendall Airport, and they did not go to Opa Locka. Also, they never received any telephonic communications from Rorke. Johnson said that on the following day, Jack Griffin telephoned the Atlantic Aviation Company at Opa Locka, and was informed by the owner there that Rorke took off from Fort Lauderdale in a rented Beachcraft Bonanza on September 24, 1963.

Johnson recalled that on the Sunday before Rorke's departure, Rorke was waiting for a Cuban known as Enrique Garcia aka Enrique Molina. Enrique had telephonically contacted the Atlantic Aviation Company at Opa Locka, and wanted to buy a B-25 airplane. Johnson said that this Cuban, Enrique Garcia, was supposed to have been with Rorke when Rorke picked up the Beachcraft Bonanza to depart Fort Lauderdale. Rorke allegedly told the owner, or Manager, of Atlantic Aviation that Garcia was his "connection," and that Rorke had turned this deal over to Johnson and Fiorini but that they had been unable to handle it.

Both Fiorini and Johnson said that they never again saw Rorke, and that Rorke had not indicated in any way that he planned, at that time, a bombing raid over Cuba or any other place. The last they knew, Rorke intended to fly to Nicaragua. Also, Rorke made no mention of the AC1 in connection with his last plans. Both Fiorini and Johnson said that Enrique Garcia, who had formerly been a Captain in the Cuban Air Force, is a member of the MDC, and is closely associated with Laureano Batista Fella. They said they had never seen Garcia in person, but had made inquiries and had established to their personal satisfaction that Garcia has not been seen in the Miami area or anywhere else since Rorke's departure. Both Fiorini and Johnson speculated that since Garcia apparently accompanied Rorke and Sullivan on their last trip, it appeared to them that perhaps Laureano Batista may have had some knowledge of their flight.

Both Fiorini and Johnson stated that Rorke was in financial straits in September, 1963, and had spoken of being behind in his car payments, payments on his plane, and payments on the "Violyn III." Neither Fiorini nor Johnson could recall having met anyone named George Adams nor Mrs. Mark Byron, who may have some connection with the ACI.

HEMMING told this researcher: "Bullshit. They never questioned any of us who was on the fucking rescue operation about Rorke."

ENRIQUE MOLINA RIVERA

HEMMING was asked about his disagreement with Alexander Rorke. HEMMING:

Rorke and STURGIS had allowed this Enrique Molina Rivera to sit in with his group. I said 'The fuckers a Castro agent.' I had briefed Rorke's pilot how to stay alive flying over Cuba...I said if you want to stay alive you won't tell anybody else. Don't tell Rorke, Rorke's an asshole. Then, a couple of days later, I find Enrique Molina Rivera and STURGIS are at the same goddamn apartment complex talking and meeting. This pissed me off. I told Rorke, 'You ain't gonna get another goddamn briefing. This fucker is a Castro agent, I know him from Cuba.' This guy threatened to kill me. This guy threatened to kill fucking TRAFFICANTE. He's the one that ran the little prison where TRAFFICANTE and Loran Hall and Hughes and them were kept. The guy would talk about the last time he talked to Raoul Castro, which would be a week before, on the fucking telephone. That's how psycho this cocksucker was. He didn't hide it. He's against the revolution as an arm of the Russians because of the missile crisis and all that shit, but he's still friendly with all the figures. He figures its all being kept from Fidel and Raoul. They're being kept in the dark by the Russians. They're dumb enough to associate with the asshole.

Loran Hall leaves the Sixth Street and Fourth Avenue safehouse with Enrique Molina Rivera, okay. He's next seem around the corner in a little apartment complex that looks like a motel with Sullivan and Sturgis and Rorke. Rorke was thinking of using Loran Hall. Loran Hall's buddy, Manuel Aguilar, was a Castro agent. STURGIS says, 'I know him, he's okay.' He admitted to being a fucking Castro agent.

I told Rorke not to talk in front of STURGIS, he's an asshole. STURGIS had kind of moved in on the guy. He made the mistake once again of saying he was my boss. Rorke was probably involved in a scheme to insert a guy into Havana as one of the American left-winger types that goes into Havana. We had later information on them.

Enrique Molina Rivera was on the plane with Sullivan and Rorke. The plane landed at St. Julian, Cuba, where they snuffed his ass. [HEMMING had been Adjutant of St. Julian Air Base] The Cubans didn't publicize it because they had one of their own boys riding on the bird. They were not going to say he was shot too.

Ellis Rubin called me and asked me to talk to Rorke's wife. He wanted people who were familiar with Rorke's operation. I told her it was possible they had contaminated fuel, not from the States but from down there. I told her to call the Coast Guard.

It was strange because Sherman Billingsley is one of the guys who knows Hoover's secrets. Him and his old lady. And Rorke is allowed to do all kinds of shit cause his father-in-law is fucking Billingsley. But we figured he's working for fucking Hoover. See, Rorke had been busted by William Morgan in Morgan's house during the Trujillo invasion. Rorke was playing newsman there. Morgan arrested his ass. He was coming in there to do a big press release about how Trujillo's troops have invaded Cuba in July of 1959. So we knew Rorke from Cuba. Who's he working for? Who gives a shit? But he's working for somebody.

In a Freedom of Information Act Request to the Secret Service HEMMING requested:

Reports not delivered to the Warren Commission referring to the disappearances of Alex Rorke, Jeff Sullivan, Enrique Molina Rivera during a flight from Miami, Florida, to Cozumel, Mexico to Honduras on September 25, 1963, which flight took place during the same period that LEE HARVEY OSWALD allegedly departed for Mexico for a meeting at the Cuban Embassy in Mexico City.

During HUNT v. WEBERMAN, BERNARD BARKER was asked about Alexander Rorke. He observed:

He was flying down here [Miami] as far as I know. He was with some CIA operations. I told him, 'One day you are going to get yourself killed.' One day I read in the newspapers that he disappeared. I think his father was the one who called me to see if I could find him...I checked up on it. I liked Alex. He was a good man. [Discussion off the record] I told him his operation was penetrated...[by Castro].

HOOVER AND SHERMAN BILLINGSLEY

MEMORANDUM

To: Mr. Wick January 31, 1966

From: Mr. A . Jones

Subject: Rorke

On Friday, January 28, 1966, Richard E. Berlin, President of the Hearst Corporation who is well known to the Director and to the Bureau telephonically contacted Mr. DeLoach. Mr. Berlin advised that he had a very pathetic letter from Mrs. Alexander Rorke, Jr. who was formerly Jacqueline Billingsley, the daughter of Sherman Billingsley. In her letter to Berlin Mrs. Rorke stated she was desparate and asked Berlin if he could be of any assistance in helping her locate her husband. Berlin in turn advised Mr. DeLoach that he would be most appreciative of any information we could give him regarding Rorke which might be of possible assistance to Mrs. Rorke.

INFORMATION IN BUFILES:

Alexander I. Rorke, Jr. was a clerical employee in our New York Office from 2-5-51 to 5-11-51 at which time he resigned to pursue further education. Information was subsequently received that as a free-lance photographer he had been connected with anti-Castro activities, engaged in flights over Cuba in a leaflet distribution campaign and had become involved with persons in purchasing bombers for use in bombing Cuba. At one time he was being counseled by CIA; however that Agency informed on 6-25-62 that it had no operational interest in Rorke, considering him to be too much of a "loose talker." In April 1963, Rorke publically announced having bombed Havana, Cuba, and the Attorney General was interested in this claim and we conducted extensive investigation. Facts were submitted to the Department and prosecution was not authorized whereupon our investigation was terminated.

In September 1963 Rorke and a companion left Florida in a rented plane allegedly for Honduras. He is considered dead by other soldiers of fortune with whom he associated. Rorke's father is a former Assistant District Attorney of New York County and he wrote to the Director on November 12, 1963 requesting assistance in locating his son. His letter was orally acknowledged by our New York Office and it was pointed out to Mr. Rorke that his own son apparently disappeared while outside the limits of the United States and that our jurisdiction is confined to this country and its possessions.

We have subsequently received letters from both Rorke's daughter and uncle asking for our assistance in locating Rorke, and in each case, they have been advised of our jurisdiction and the fact that we could not be of assistance. The family of Rorke have apparently conducted an investigation on their own, and have widely circulated both in this country and Latin American countries a circular concerning Rorke offering a reward to 'the first persons to produce them in any part of the United States.' All indications as far as Bufiles are concerned Rorke is dead. We have no verified information concerning him since he left a Florida airport in September 1963.

RECOMMENDATION:

That Mr. DeLoach telephonically contact Mr. Berlin and advise him in confidence of the above information and that we cannot be of help to Mrs. Rorke."

J. Edgar Hoover wrote this on the document: "No. I do not want in any way to get involved in this. So Berlin might advise Billingsley or his daughter & it would be public property. Billingsley & I broke many years ago cause I would not utilize Bureau facilities to prevent the marriage. H." [FBI 79-29181-3] Alexander Rorke was declared legally dead in 1968. [Document containing ref. FBI 97-4623-179. Ref: 44-24016-634 p808 SI 105-82555-454 p688]

Alexander Rorke was in a perilous business, but his association with HEMMING and STURGIS proved to be even more perilous. HEMMING blamed Rorke's death on Enrique Molina, a Castro double-agent. HEMMING claimed Enrique Molina was the third man on Rorke and Sullivan's ill-fated flight. The personnel at North Perry airport in Hollywood, Florida, said a third person had been with Rorke and Sullivan when they departed. As stated, the FBI received a similar report from someone who visited Mexico. In neither of these reports was Molina identified. Molina was not mentioned by name in any CIA or FBI reports. He is the missing man in all this. HEMMING told this researcher, "Molina has not been heard from since." HEMMING had a disagreement with Rorke prior to his death and HEMMING hated Molina. STURGIS had a disagreement with Rorke, and although HEMMING claimed that STURGIS was sympathetic to Molina, there was no evidence of this in FBI or CIA documents. HEMMING and STURGIS sabotaged Rorke's plane, because they believed he was being duped by Castro's intelligence service.

THE RORKE PAPERS

Chief, Contact Division January 7, 1964
ATT: Support (Travis)
Chief, New York Office

1. On January 3, 1964, Douglas E. Gentzkow called on the listed phone and, without furnishing further identification, requested an urgent personal interview with a CIA representative. He declined to give details concerning the purpose and subject of the meeting, stating only that it would be concerned with Latin America.

2. We met Gentzkow in the early afternoon hours at a Manhattan hotel and had a two hour interview with him. Gentzkow identified himself as a third year cadet at the United States Military Academy at West Point. He showed us his identification card C-65265 which indicates that he was born on March 14, 1942, he is 6 feet 2 inches tall; weighs 190 pounds; color of hair, brown; color of eyes, blue. Gentzkow, who appears to be serious minded, told us that because of the delicate nature of the information in his possession, he was unable to divulge his sources, but would be glad to "help the Agency in the national interest." He then proceeded by stating that he was aware of CIA's interest in the Cuban situation, and that the information, if used by the enemies of the U.S., could seriously damage the reputation of our government.

3. Cadet Gentzkow, who is a member of Company K-2 at West Point, stated that "his friends" told him about the existence of the documents now in the safes of various New York banks that have serious derogatory information concerning the Cuban prisoner exchange matter. According to these documents, "many Castro agents among the prisoners returned to the U.S. have been planted by the Cuban Government to commit espionage and sabotage in the U.S." Gentzkow repeatedly declined to divulge the names of his sources; he simply stated they were U.S. citizens who might decide to publish these documents with the possible idea of hurting the interest of our Government. Gentzkow did not elaborate on this point; however, he promised his full cooperation and stated that he might be in the position to photograph the documents and place them at our disposal. According to his information, some of the documents also contain descriptions of secret military installations in Cuba.

4. Gentzkow emphasized that in contacting the CIA, he was anxious to avoid delay which might possibly arise from following the usual military channels. He stated that he was a good friend and admirer of Alexander I. Rorke, Jr., a freelance television reporter in New York, who together with Geoffrey Sullivan, had disappeared on a flight to Central America in a rented, twin engine plane in the fall of 1963. He heard that Rorke was dead and he owes it to his memory "to do something" about the Cuban situation.

5. Gentzkow requested utmost discretion, stating that if his approach to the CIA became known to his superiors at West Point, it might damage his career. He feels, however, that the information is so vital to the interests of the United States Government that he decided to put aside all personal considerations and offer his cooperation to CIA. He added that he would make an effort to photograph the documents during the week of January 6, 1964, "before enemies of our country have an opportunity to publish the allegations." Finally he indicated that he would get in touch with us either on January 11, 1964, or January 12, 1964, to advise us about new developments.

Jay B.L. Reeves.

On January 7, 1964, Gentzkow called the New York Office of the CIA and he was told that he should not risk his military career for "a project whose value might prove disappointing and might involve individuals of questionable trustworthiness. Subject seemed to accept and certainly understand our comments but responded that he would still attempt to go ahead on his own without reference to any contact with CIA." [CIA WH-1621 report from BALOG]

On January 22, 1964, Douglas Gentzkow discussed the contents of these papers with a representative of the Domestic Contacts Division. He said that "the danger of publication of the alleged derogatory information was no longer imminent... Gentzkow told us that he was able to see some of the documents pertaining to 'the situation in Cuba.' The documents turned out to be some typewritten and penciled notes of Alexander Rorke. According to Gentzkow, these notes and a photograph showing Rorke in the company of President Somoza of Nicaragua were taken out of New York bank vaults by a daughter of Sherman Billingsley, owner of the Stork Club. Another daughter of Billingsley is married to Rorke. It seems that Gentzkow and the unmarried daughter of Billingsley are "going steady," hence the great interest of the West Point Cadet in the fortunes of the Rorke-Billingsley families. Gentzkow gave us his notes prepared from the Rorke papers." The notes stated:

4. There is a base located at Porte Berris (?) and supported by President Somoza. Allegedly, this base trains anti-Castro Cuban refugees for another invasion. According to rumors, the CIA has a hand in the training of these refugees. In connection with this plan, the name of Laureano Batista is mentioned as one of the leaders of the invasion forces.
6. The name of Bill Morgan, formerly of the 308th Battle Group, is mentioned as a double-agent, that is, an agent for the CIA, and an agent of the Castro Government
7. The papers Rorke papers mention Dominick Bartone, President, International Trading Company, connected with Hoffa of the Teamsters Union. On this point Gentzkow was vague and could not elaborate.

8. Gentzkow told us that Frank Nelson, a "businessman" from New York City, had films and papers in his possession which, if published, would also damage the reputation of the CIA and the Government.

9. The name of June Cobb as a double-agent appears in the Rorke papers. In addition, the name of Waldo Frank is mentioned; however Gentzkow could offer no elaboration on Frank. According to the Rorke notes, June Cobb forced, in the Fall of 1960, the cousin of Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge [Marita Lorenz erroneously claimed to be related to Lodge] to have an abortion when Lodge's cousin was six months pregnant with Fidel Castro's child. About three years ago, we saw a copy of Confidential magazine giving details about this alleged abortion.

In September 1960 Fidel Castro ordered William Morgan to take his troops into the Escambray Mountains and mop up the anti-Castro guerrillas there. William Morgan had betrayed the Trujillo plot because it had no chance of succeeding; now he began supplying the anti-Castro forces with weapons. Fidel Castro was informed, and William Morgan was imprisoned. On March 11, 1961, a military tribunal in Havana sentenced William Morgan to death. William Morgan denied his guilt until the moment he was executed, and declared to the press: "I will walk to the wall with no escort." He was shot on March 12, 1961.

The CIA reported:

Viola June Cobb (201-0278841, born August 24, 1927) was born in Ponca, Oklahoma, and left home for Mexico City in 1947- 1948 after her father remarried. She has since lived in Ecuador, Cuba and Mexico, and has been involved with the men and politics of a number of Latin American countries. During these years she developed a host of friends and acquaintances, both U.S. and Latin, that included political leaders, journalists, diplomats, professors, some of which do not enjoy general social acceptance. Her friends vary from rightists to extreme leftists, but she always seemed to be more attracted by the more bohemian, revolutionary types.

Miss Cobb was employed in the office of Fidel Castro in Havana, doing translations and public relations work from September 1959 to 1960. After spending some time in the United States, she moved to Mexico, where she has generally been unemployed. In October 1961, she traveled to Guatemala regarding the Arvelo book, but was arrested, and in November was expelled on the basis that she had been a Castro agent whose mission in Guatemala was to distribute pro-Castro and Communist propaganda.

Miss Cobb has told several people of her cooperation with the U.S. Government and undoubtedly many suspect her association with U.S. Intelligence. Yet she continues to be on friendly terms with Latin American and American Communists and leftists.

Another CIA document stated:

Memo to WH/4, WH/4/CI, WH/4/FI

Subject: June Cobb, Note given to her by Castro agent in Miami.

Date: June 10, 1960

From: (Deleted)

Prior to her departure from New York, June Cobb visited the Cuban Consulate in New York City as requested prior to her departure from Havana. While there she was introduced to an American citizen named Bernie Brenner, a newspaperman from the Miami Beach Sun. Brenner is a friend of Cobb's boss, Juan Orta, the administrative assistant to Fidel Castro. Brenner gave Cobb a note in an envelope that was sealed for delivery to Orta. Cobb opened the note and copied the contents which were as follows:

"Tell 'O' that Manny (Manuel) Arquez is 'hot, real hot.' The Feds are on him. Aguirre the Priest fingered him in Washington. There is a fed working right there in the post office with him. They have some letters marked just waiting for him to open one. He's hot. The State Department - also tell him not to use those replicas of dollar bills the tourist department is using with something written on the back. George Southworth is working with the Feds. I got him drunk with a 'les' (lesbian) and a straight girl with some pictures one night. He said he was going to put the shaft to Capt. Ouerra. Tell Doris Padrone who lives in 8 y 19 Apt. Building with a baby by Orlando Padrone that the feds are trying to get to her. Fidel brought her to Cuba because she knew things that she shouldn't know. Arquez can go to Cuba the 13th. June Cobb visited the Cuban Consulate, 24 hour tail.

June Cobb called (deleted as of 2010) Director of (deleted as of 2010) in New York through whom I originally met Miss Cobb, asking him to contact me for she had a message for me. (deleted as of 2010) called me at (illegible) and I called Miss Cobb at a phone booth in the Hotel Drake. She told me of the above. I had her give the notes to (deleted as of 2010). She passed them to him at the East Side Airlines Terminal in New York on the evening of June 7.

Burch: According to information given verbally by Harry Hermendorf when (deleted) went to the airport and approached Cobb, she waved him away. He waited at some distance while she scribbled away at the notes; she then folded them in a newspaper and left them for him to pick up. Harry did not say whether she walked away immediately after leaving the notes, or whether she folded them in the paper than waited for the two supposed member of the Cuban Consulate to join her before boarding the plane. JP

On June 23, 1960, the results of June Cobb's lie detector test was judged to be "questionable and until resolved by a second LCFLUTTER suggested that no approval be granted."

MEMORANDUM FOR THE RECORD October 17, 1960
SUBJECT AMUPAS/1 Boston Tapes
Discussion between Subject and Ralph True.

According to Subject a week or ten days ago in New York, Estelle (Stasia) Sokolowska revealed to Cobb that she (Stasia) had been told last winter (1959-1960) by Marita Lorenz and her mother, and also by Diane Alexandria (Diane didn't even know Cobb) and by the FBI that Cobb was involved in the narcotics and abortion rackets. Stasia told Cobb that she was questioned by the Bureau at 69th & 3rd and was told by the FBI that Cobb was involved in narcotics traffic with Yanes Pellitier in Cuba and was using Stasia as a pawn. Mrs. Lorenz was trying to get $3000 for Marita's operation. She sent a letter to Fidel. She called Cobb and Embassy about her daughter being held in Cuba against her will. Yanes immediately put Marita Lorenz on a plane (December). After Christmas Lorenz sent letters and telegrams to Fidel. Since Cobb's arrival in New York, Diane has seen a great deal of her - she is eager to hear about Yanes. She helped Cobb get in touch with Stasia.

Diane mentioned some in CIA she sees --- has made allusions to "this friend: she repeated to Subject things he said. Has discussed this period, (January, February, March) with Subject. How she told stories about Subject. Slipped unintentionally, said Mr. Daniels, never again mentioned it. Last winter, in apartment downtown someone came to apartment to question her. She had earlier been questioned by Frank O'Brien. Refused to talk to Daniels. Returned from Cuba last summer.

When questioned by the FBI was asked to get in touch with Marita Lorenz. Did so in Connecticut -- became friends and very much involved with them. They were about to vend the story about Marita and Fidel; she did not mention her love for Yanes. Yanes came up and Diane learned that he was involved with Marita -- to her surprise and grief. Continues to see Lorenz. When January rolled around, Pedro Diaz Fonte (Yanes' aide) came up.

Diane involved with Lorenzs. Someone approached said he was from Washington. She said categorically he was CIA. Checked with O'Brien. O'Brien confirmed that he was. Then when she saw him again he said, "You're a pretty clever girl; you went to the Bureau to check on me." He invited her to D.C. and she was apparently questioned in D.C. About that she did not go into detail. Continued to see Daniels later.

Daniels took her to lunch at Quo Vastis, kept inviting her out, saw her privately, also in Connecticut. Subject can't say they were intimate but Diane said Daniels was in love with her; she might even be pregnant. On one occasion she told Daniels she was going to Nurses Training and he said, "That's a good idea." She said, "You bastard, I can't I'm pregnant." (document continues)

June Cobb knew HEMMING and referred to him in a letter:

Since my last note to you about Stash's continuing deviations, I have learned that she went alone to Honduras -- that is, at least, she did not go with Harold, but rather she went as a courier, sent by Harold's brother Alejandro, from Havana to Telucigalpa, and, as a matter of fact, was passed along through rebel contacts to Harold quite as a surprise to him. Then she stayed about ten days, went back to Cuba, left most of her clothing and came here. Apparently she gave the boys all the money she managed to take with her. About $400 I understand, and she called somebody here to send her money to come down. At this point, in other words, she is quite incorporated with them. Harold, before arriving in Telucigalpa, had been in Mexico. Before she went down to Cuba she had been writing and receiving letters from him in Mexico. He didn't realize she was in Cuba, until he saw her in Telucigalpa, but apparently on her arrival in Cuba she had contacted the other boys, Chester Simpson, JERRY HEMING, and Harold [sic] brother Alejandro and they all decided for her to make the trip over to Honduras.

On March 8, 1963, June Cobb was granted a restricted POA:

A Provisional Operational Approval issued by CI Staff grants the same authority granted in Operational Approval unless otherwise specified by CI/OA. It is based, however, only on preliminary file checks and investigation and subject to further final review when all investigation is completed. This POA authorizes continued contact with Subject and elicitation of information of interest to Kubark. Assessments made of Subject indicate emotional vacillation and potential susceptibility to leftist indoctrination. She should, therefore, be handled with exceptional caution, and care should be exercised not to disclose to her modus operandi or information of a too sensitive nature.

This was included in a document dated March 22, 1963, signed by J.C. King. On March 13, 1963, (Deleted) generated this Memorandum for the Record: "She has been considered unreliable and is not a good security risk. Therefore we do not recommend her for operational use."

RORKE'S NOTES CONTINUE

10. Rorke deals at length with "the 'fishy' selection of Manuel Artime as head of the Bay of Pigs invasion forces. Rorke also mentions former Marine Lt. Col. FIORINI, with whom Rorke had been planning sabotage activities against Castro.

12. The Rorke papers discussed the activities of General Walker and the alleged role of the writer Norman Mailer in starting the Fair Play for Cuba Committee.

13. Rorke states that the International Media Company owns the Gibraltar Trading Company. According to Rorke, the latter controls "the CIA operated Radio Swan."

15. Gentzkow indicated he would be glad to photograph the Rorke papers...He feels that there is a strong possibility that the Rorke family, or Frank Nelson, might decided to publish the derogatory information in their possession. He is of the opinion that the publication may coincide with the affirmation of Rorke's death. At present, the family has no definite proof about the fate of Alexander Rorke. The cadet further stated that Billingsley had discussed the Rorke case with his "good friend," J. Edgar Hoover, Director of the FBI, and is ready to take up the disappearance of Rorke and his pilot with the "highest U.S. authorities." The Rorke-Billingsley families resent the absence of U.S. Government action in the disappearance of Rorke and Sullivan. They cannot understand that while the administration has collected over 50 million dollars to ransom the Cuban prisoners from Castro, "it did not do a thing for patriotic Americans like Rorke and Sullivan."

16. We told Gentzkow that we would get in touch with him concerning his offer to photograph the Rorke papers. We feel, of course, it would be wise to close this case and decline the services offered by our cadet. Perhaps you'll agree the whole thing is rather nebulous and it would not be in the best interests of the Agency to get involved in the Rorke-Billingsley family affairs. In view of this we plan no further contact with Gentzkow. [Memo from Jay B.L. Reeves to Travis; Documents marked WH-1621 Rorke Security File NARA]

Mayo Stuntz, Chief, Domestic Contacts Division, informed Sam Halpern about the Rorke papers: "Sam, we sat on this as it came in since we did not know how it would develop. We wondered why a West Point Cadet would risk his career on such a deal. We require no answer unless you want us to follow up on some of his story." Sam Halpern was involved with OPERATION MONGOOSE, the successor to the Bay of Pigs, which was headed by William K. Harvey. Sam Halpern was critical of a plan to assassinate Fidel Castro with an exploding sea shell. [Powers, Man Who Kept the Secrets, pgs. 172, 190] Halpern noted "Told Mayo Stuntz 11:20 February 13, 1964, via telcon that SAS wants no part of this and is out of it except to turn papers over to the OS. Also told him my strong belief that Agency should turn info over at least to Army Security and secondly to FBI, the latter regarding Rorke." Copies of the 00 interviews with Gentzkov were sent to DO/OS, SAS/Registry, Miss Weiler, Sam Halpern, EXO/SAS, and SAS/Security (Lodner). The Chief of SAS Security sent the 00 interviews to the Chief/SAS/Support, the Director of Security and Ethel Mendoza, the Chief, Security Research Service. Mendoza wrote this on the Routing and Routing Sheet:

February 28, 1964, Robert Travis advised:

1. 00/C passed to no other agency.
2. 00/C doesn't believe any action should be taken which would jeopardize (deleted) choices.
3. Has no knowledge regarding Billingsley contact with FBI.
4. Recommended no action to Halpern verbally, most especially if SAS has no operational interest.

Ethel Mendoza

(P. S. Also mentioned that 00 received source report that Rorke repeatedly claimed to be a CIA agent.)

On February 18, 1964, Desmond FitzGerald, Chief, Special Activities Staff, sent a memo to Ethel Mendoza regarding Gentzkow: "Special Activities Staff has never had any operational interest in Rorke. Note that the Rorke disappearance has been discussed with the FBI by his father-in-law, Sherman Billingsley, which indicates the Agency should pass the attached data to the FBI." [CIA FOIA D-00862] FitzGerald suggested, that in light of the fact that Gentzkow bypassed military channels, "it is suggested that the passage of the contents of the reports to the FBI and resolution of whether Gentzkow's contact with Agency should be reported to ACSI is a matter to be discussed between the Office of Security and the Domestic Contacts Division." E. Mendoza, of the CIA's Office of Security, sent this memo to the Deputy Chief, Security Research Staff:

4. I called Robert Travis of the Washington Field Office (Support) of Contact Division to determine what other information was known to him in regard to instant matter. He advised that at the time he furnished copies of the 00/C (New York) memoranda and teletype to SAS, he had specifically recommended that no action whatsoever be taken in the matter unless SAS had some pressing operational reason for so doing: that no material be accepted from Gentzkow, and the Agency not become further involved in the matter.

5. A review of the Office of Security files reflects that a good deal of what Gentzkow thought to be highly sensitive information has already appeared in public print; that Alexander Rorke made wild charges concerning CIA's lack of action against Fidel Castro, yet at the same time claimed that he himself was a CIA agent whose operations had been financed by the CIA.

RECOMMENDATION:

6. In all probability, Gentzkow's contact with CIA is primarily based on his belief that Alexander Rorke had been a CIA agent, as Rorke has repeatedly claimed. Since Mr. Travis of 00/C Support is of the opinion that Gentzkov's offer of assistance should be declined, and since SAS has stated they have never had any operational interest in Rorke (and apparently have no interest in Rorke's papers), I believe OS should concur in 00/C's recommendation.

7. With regard to passage of Rorke's papers to the FBI, it might be suggested to Gentzkov that he turn over Rorke's possessions to Rorke's father for whatever disposition he may wish to make of it.

William Knott wrote this on Mendoza's memo: "Concur in 6., but feel that passage of the info as recommended in paragraph 7 should be made only on the stipulation that Rorke Sr. advise the FBI of the existence of the papers." Howard J. Osborn, DD/Security, concurred with Knott. Douglas Gentzkov was contacted in April 1994 by this researcher:

There were probably two or three telephone communications with the CIA after that, and at least one face-to-face meeting. The records aren't really complete. After a period of some weeks, after I had drafted something and forwarded it to a Mr. Baylog, he actually came to me for the information. I gave him my notes. He told me to purchase photographic equipment to copy the documents. He would reimburse me. After I gave him the salient points, he asked me to stay in touch with him by phone. I did that. A short period of time after that, he said they really didn't have any interest in the information. I never had them in my possession, they were at the Billingsley's home. The papers talked about Kennedy's escapades, it mentioned in the papers that there were photographs of him involved in his various liaisons, I think with some underworld figures, not Exner. There was a whole array of information critical of Kennedy's handling of the Bay of Pigs. The ransom of the POWs. There was at least one ransom paid by the family for Rorke.

The Rorke papers never surfaced. The only clue to their contents was Gentzkov's notes. The CIA was supposed to be an intelligence gathering organization, yet the Agency dismissed the contents of Rorke's notes without even looking at photographs of them. Why? The CIA felt it might have a "hot potato" on its hands. Sam Halpern wanted to turn Gentzkov over to Army Intelligence and the FBI. However, it was decided that no action would be taken and it would be recommended to Rorke's father that he turn over these notes to the FBI. There was no indication that the FBI ever received the notes.

STURGIS ASSOCIATE MARITA LORENZ

Ilona Marita Lorenz, a member of the International Anti-Communist Brigade, reported that STURGIS was often the recipient of cash payments from HUNT: "When cash was needed, it came from a CIA man she knew only as 'EDUARDO.' He would meet FRANK and Alex from time to time in a safe house in Miami. 'EDUARDO' was funding our thing. When we went to pick up the money I stayed in the car. I saw him when he opened the door of this little white house we used." Years later Marita saw a newspaper photo of HUNT and immediately recognized him as the elusive 'EDUARDO.' [Meskil N.Y. Daily News 4.20.75] Jerrold Brown of the Security Analysis Group noted: "In the first article Marie Lorenz alleges that E. HOWARD HUNT, known to her as 'EDUARDO' was the paymaster for STURGIS and Rorke. HUNT has publicly claimed not knowing STURGIS until at least the late 1960's." During his testimony to the Rockefeller Commission STURGIS hinted that he had received money from HUNT. Marita Lorenz told the truth about the HUNT, STURGIS relationship in the early 1960's. Unfortunately, Marita Lorenz was a congenital liar and her fantasies about having met "OZZIE" discredited what she witnessed as an associate of STURGIS.

MARITA LORENZ 1939 TO 1959

During HUNT v. WEBERMAN Marita Lorenz told this researcher her life story: "I was born August 18, 1939, in Bremen, West Germany. My mother, who was born in Delaware on October 15, 1905, was an American citizen named Alice June Lofland, who moved to Germany in July 1931 and met my father, Heinrich Frederich Lorenz [born April 8, 1898; July 15, 1966]. They were married several months later and divorced in February 1946. My father was a commodore of ocean liners. During the war, he was to participate with the liner, The First Bremen, in an invasion of England, which was called off at the last moment by Hitler. My father was a hero in Germany, a Fleet Commander, yet I have found papers among his effects that indicated he was working for the Allies, Admiral Canaris.

"I lived in Badmunstein during the war, 20 minutes away from Frankfurt. After the war, my father worked for the Occupation Forces and my mother was a stringer for The Chicago Tribune and worked for military intelligence. I first came to this country in May 1950 when my mother got a job with the CIA and moved to Washington. Her cover was with the Defense Department. In 1958 we moved to New York City, where my father brought in passenger liners from Germany."

The father of Marita Lorenz, Heinrich Lorenz, was an Abwehr spy. He did not work for the Allies. On June 3, 1938, Heinrich Lorenz was arrested for conspiring to steal blueprints of the latest model United States Navy destroyer. His codefendant was a German born naturalized American citizen. On November 4, 1938, a public trial was held in New York City. A CIA document noted: "The [Marita Lorenz] file contains information that an individual of the same name was connected with German intelligence during WWII." Heinrich Lorenz was released from a British POW camp in October 1945. He had been "captured during World War II when his ship sank while acting as German Navy officer." Upon release, he was employed at the U.S. Army

Exchange, Bremerhaven, Germany. Heinrich Lorenz was classified as an unskilled laborer. [NYT 6.4.38, 7.15.66, 1.18.59, 11.8.38, 6.5.38]

ALICE JUNE LORENZ

Marita Lorenz filed a CIA Freedom of Information Act request for herself and her mother. In the cover letter, the CIA stated it had found "a number of documents" on Marita Lorenz. The CIA's response said its files, and those of the OSS, contained numerous references to Alice June Lorenz. Marita Lorenz's CIA file contained a reference to her mother's employment by the OSS: "Previous employment - too numerous to mention, covers to 1945 in Germany, mostly U.S. Government related." Alice June Lorenz had been a spy. The document also stated that from October 1953 to at least April 1955, Alice June Lorenz worked at the Office of the Chief Engineers, Gravelly Point, Washington, D.C.

VALERIE CLAIRE LORENZ

The CIA reported:

Office of Security traces in the name of Heinrich Lorenz revealed that he was the father of Valerie Claire Lorenz (SF #117 245). Information in the file, coupled with information in the attached articles, positively identifies the younger sister of Valerie Claire Lorenz, one Ilona Marita Lorenz, as being identical with the Marie Lorenz mentioned in these articles. Valerie Claire Lorenz, born on October 9, 1936 at Bremerhaven, Germany, was the Subject of a Covert Security Clearance request in March 1955 by the Monetary Branch / Finance Division. Valerie Claire Lorenz graduated from Roosevelt High School, Washington, D.C. in June 1954. As of March 1955 she was employed as a secretary to F.P Harman, Jr. (SF# 67 493), vice-president of the National Bank of Washington and as such, would have access to sensitive financial transactions being administered by the Monetary Branch through Harman. The covert security clearance was granted in July 1955 and canceled because of her resignation on August 21, 1959. There is no subsequent activity in the file.

Marita Lorenz' brother, Joachim D. Lorenz attended Catholic University in Washington, D.C. and planned to attend Georgetown University and enter the diplomatic corps. Her other brother, Manfred Lorenz, studied music in New York City. Marita Lorenz's maternal aunt, Lucy L. McConchie, was employed at the Pentagon. Her husband, Thomas McConchie, was a Major in the U.S. Army.

MARITA LORENZ AND FIDEL CASTRO FEBRUARY 1959

Marita Lorenz stated:

I first met Fidel Castro during a cruise on one of my father's liners, it was February 28, 1959. I will never forget that date because I fell in love with Fidel at once. I was on board, in my father's stateroom, and Havana was the last stop on the cruise. We were in the harbor when Fidel and about 40 barbudos got on board. He told my father he had stood on the balcony of the Havana Hilton and he saw a liner in the bay. He had never been aboard a passenger liner, so he took a launch and he came aboard to visit. Fidel had dinner with us and he asked for my phone number in New York. I gave it to him and three days later, when I came home from school, I got a call from Fidel Castro, Prime Minister of Cuba! He wanted me to come to Cuba. He sent a Cubana Airliner to pick me up and I lived with him in the Havana Hilton for eight months. He treated me well. It was very interesting. He made me a member of the 26th of July Movement.

Marita Lorenz claimed Fidel Castro sent an airliner to New York City to fly her back to Havana. On January 23, 1960, she told the FBI that, after she met Fidel on February 28, 1959, "she remained with Castro after her father departed from Havana and for the most part, has remained in Havana since February 28, 1959, with the exception of a few short visits to her mother."

PREGNANT WITH CASTRO'S CHILD APRIL 1959

I realized I had become pregnant in April 1959 when I accompanied Fidel during his visit to the United States. When I returned to Cuba I met FRANK STURGIS. Fidel and I, and his aides, went to the Havana Riviera Hotel to close it down. FRANK was in a 26th of July Movement uniform, as was I. Fidel had ordered the waiters to turn over the tables and throw down the slot machines because he opposed gambling. FRANK edged over to me and said, 'I know about you. I have to talk with you. Tell your man Fidel he is making a mistake ripping up this joint. Try to tell Fidel that his country needs tourism.' But Fidel didn't like vice, and he wanted gambling out of Cuba. FRANK went on, 'I work for the Government, the United States Embassy here in Havana. I will get back to you. You must help your country.' It was difficult to arrange a meeting with STURGIS because Fidel had me under 24-hour guard. I went to the restaurant of the Havana Hilton and FRANK slid into an empty seat next to me and said, 'You are going to work for me. I work for the CIA.' He wrote on the place mat, 'Take papers from Fidel's files.' I moved a seat away and my guards started to talk to him and said, 'Compañero, if Fidel saw you, he would be very jealous.' Even though I was pregnant with his child I began to steal papers from Fidel for FRANK and I told FRANK all I knew of Fidel's travel plans.

Twenty-year-old Marita Lorenz occupied a suite in the Havana Hilton where she became Fidel Castro's mistress. Castro had a weakness for women. He might have gotten her pregnant. Marita Lorenz knew STURGIS. She might have spied on Fidel for him, however, no evidence has surfaced that she removed the files of Fidel Castro and turned them over to STURGIS, who, in turn, allegedly gave them to the CIA.

MARITA LORENZ'S ABORTION SEPTEMBER 1959

FRANK was secretly in charge of an anti-Castro military camp, Camp Columbia, along with Pedro Diaz Lanz. FRANK gave me a miniature camera to photograph documents with. Then the attempts on Fidel's life started. When I ate with Fidel, we had room service, Fidel would call in two guards, one would test the food before Fidel would eat it. Fidel once had me put under protective custody because he heard of an attempt on his life, a shooting, an ambush...Several months later, on September 19, 1959, I was forcibly aborted and left to die in the Havana Hilton Hotel. I don't remember much of that, except the pain, which you never forget. I was flown to New York City and treated there.

On September 19, 1959, Marita Lorenz had an abortion in Cuba: "Miss Lorenz stated that she is not too clear on the details of this matter, but she is positive she had done nothing to cause the miscarriage, but she has been told rumors that she had been drugged, taken to a hospital and an abortion was performed. Miss Lorenz could not positively say whether this was true or untrue, for this reason, plus the fact that she had adopted a child in Havana after her miscarriage." Whether she had a miscarriage or an abortion was unclear to Marita Lorenz. In retrospect, if Marita had given birth to Fidel's child, it would have proven to be a great embarrassment for Fidel. Her miscarriage was probably induced. There was no evidence that Marita adopted a child after her miscarriage except for her self-serving statement. In 1992 Marita Lorenz claimed that she had not had an abortion on miscarriage but had given birth to Fidel Castro's son, Andre Castro. Marita Lorenz forged an FBI document to support her story:

During October 1959, Lorenz bore Fidel a child who was named Andre. Lorenz was provided with a drug to induce labor and woke up in the delivery room to discover her child had 'died.' Camilio Ceinfuegos told Lorenz that Fidel Castro was occupied with business in another province and could not see her...During December 1959, Castro sent Jesus Llanes to New York to speak with Lorenz. Lorenz was asked to sign a document stating that Fidel had not murdered their child, and that she, Marita Lorenz, would cease exploiting their relationship for propaganda purposes. Lorenz was offered money which she refused. Llanes showed Lorenz a photograph of her child, Andre. The baby was in good health. Llanes explained Andre had been kept from his mother for security reasons. Llanes explained that the baby should remain in Cuba and Andre's very existence a secret. All of the above was necessary for the baby's safety.

The NY FBI Office stated: "The document in question contains no identifying or file marks so that it is impossible to ascertain the validity of the report as an FBI document. This response should not be considered an indication whether or not records responsive to your request exist in FBI files." [ltr. James J. Roth to AJW 1.8.93] Marita Lorenz returned to the United States in October 1959.

MARITA LORENZ DECEMBER 1959 THE POISON PILLS

Marita Lorenz told the FBI: "Her health improved and she made a trip to Havana in December 1959, but returned to New York a few days thereafter." [FBI 105-83564-6] Marita Lorenz stated:

FRANK introduced me to Alex Rorke, a wealthy adventurer who worked for the CIA and FBI. Two months later, Alex took me to FBI headquarters in New York City. Alex said, 'You could knock off Castro. It would save everybody a lot of trouble. Why don't you kill him? It would be easy to put poison in his food. It would change history.' I agreed, and flew to Miami with Rorke, where FRANK gave me two capsules full of poison powder which I was to sprinkle in Castro's coffee. I flew to Havana, put on my 26th of July Movement uniform and went to see Fidel.

"He asked me why I had left him. He ordered food and coffee sent up. When it came, he fell asleep on the bed. I couldn't poison him. I told FRANK that the capsules had melted in the cold cream where I had hidden them. I made love with Fidel instead of killing him." Marita Lorenz told Paul Meskil the she flew to Havana:

The lobby was full of reporters and other people waiting to see Castro, but he wasn't there. One of his aides recognized me and took me up to Fidel's suite. She waited nervously in Castro's private room until he came in a few hours later. As soon as he smiled and hugged her she knew he didn't suspect she had visited the suite a few months previously and stolen his secrets. And he certainly didn't suspect that she had come back to kill him...Finally he ordered food and coffee sent up. When it came, he fell asleep on the bed, in his fatigues with a cigar in his mouth. I had no confidence left, but I knew this was the chance to do it. I went into the bathroom and opened the jar of cold cream. I stuck my finger in it and the whole thing came out like yuck. I couldn't find the capsules, they had melted. It was like an omen. I couldn't just dump a glob of cold cream in his coffee, so I shut the jar and went back to the bedroom and I watched him sleeping. Finally I lay down on the bed beside him, I thought, 'To hell with it, let history take its course.' FRANK and Alex met me when I flew to Miami the next morning. They asked me what happened and I said the capsules melted. FRANK was very upset, he said 'Stupid, stupid why did you put them in the cold cream.

During the course of HUNT V. WEBERMAN Marita Lorenz was deposed.

Q. Did there come a time when you went back to Cuba at the request of the company, or the CIA?

A. Yes.

Q. What was your mission that time?

A. To kill Fidel.

Q. Who sent you?

A. FRANK. I was given two capsules, and I was talked to for a couple of weeks in a safe house. The capsules I was told were botulism toxin, something like that. I agreed because of loyalty I guess, and I was the only one that could do it. In other words, they butter you up pretty good, that you are the only one. But when I was on the plane going in and I saw the outline of the shores, I knew I couldn't do it and I got frightened, and I put them in the cold cream. Fidel had G-2 men at the airport. And my suitcase sat outside while everybody was being screened to go in. And I stuck them before in the bathroom in a jar of Pond's cold cream, and the suitcase being out in the sun I guess melted them, dissolved them. I mean

I couldn't pick them out anymore. I opened the suitcase again when I got to the Hilton and Fidel was there, and I flushed them down the bidet.

Q. Did you do anything else on that mission?

A. I worried.

FOREIGN POLITICAL MATTERS, CUBA.

RENYLET December 9, 1959, and Butel December 15, 1959. RENYLET set forth information regarding interview of Marita Lorenz, 344 W. 87th Street, NYC, and her relations with Fidel Castro, Captain Jesus Yanez Pelletier, military aide to Castro, and other Cuban officials. (Deleted) Bureau will be advised of any further developments, Miami advised by mail. [FBI 105-83564-1]

Jerrold Brown commented: "Relative to Lorenz's claim in the attached article that she and Alex Rorke (in conjunction with the assassination attempt against Castro) visited FBI offices in New York and had a "conference with the two agents who had questioned her previously and a CIA official" it is interesting to note that Lorenz was interviewed by S.A. O'Brien on December 22, 1959. The file of Alexander I. Rorke, Jr. reflects that he was interviewed on December 30, 1959 by SA Francis J. O'Brien, FBI, New York."

Note: Lorenz, who currently resides in New York City advised N.Y. Office during recent interview that she is personal acquaintance of Castro and other Cuban leaders. At the time, she furnished general information concerning the Cuban situation and Cuban Government personalities. New York disclosed plans for further interview.

Bufiles disclose that Pelletier, military aide to Castro, last entered the U.S. in diplomatic status July 16, 1959. We have no recent information indicating that Pelletier planned to come to this country. New York disclosed that Pelletier contacted Lorenz December 22, 1959 and expressed interest in having her return to Cuba. Lorenz's mother concerned as she believes Pelletier may take Lorenz to Havana with him against her wishes. New York teletype indicated that Lorenz was absent from her home after Pelletier reportedly invited her out for a couple of hours. PD, New York, notified of her absence and it later determined she told police she had been Christmas shopping. In view of Pelletier's position it is believed we should attempt to ascertain his activities in this country. New York aware of Pelletier's background. [FBI 105-83564- NR 1.4.60]

Reurlet January 8, 1960, captioned 'Foreign Political Matters - Cuba.'

For your information, the data contained in referenced communication may be of interest to other government agencies. You should therefore furnish Bureau all information obtained from the Subject and from Marita Lorenz concerning Fidel Castro under his caption in form suitable for dissemination. Information obtained concerning the activities of Pelletier should also be submitted under his caption in form suitable for dissemination.

With regard to Eddie Jaffe and Charles Wilson you should open separate cases of these individuals and conduct independent investigation to determine this connection with Cuban affairs. In view of the unsettled conditions in Cuba, you should give the matter expeditious attention.

NOTE: Raffelson who claims to be a girl friend of Jesus Yanez Pelletier, personal aid to Fidel Castro, furnished NY information concerning her association with Jaffe and Wilson and her activities in Cuba during the Summer of 1959. She also disclosed that Marita Lorenz, former girl friend of Fidel Castro, is now living in New York City. She indicated Lorenz recently threatened to expose Castro and Pelletier to US newsmen if they do not give her money for an operation. According to Raffelson, Lorenz became pregnant as a result of association with Fidel Castro. She later suffered an abortion which was induced by a pill given to her by Pelletier. She indicated she is now in need of an operation as a result of the abortion.

NOTE: (Deleted) Marita Lorenz, former girlfriend of Fidel Castro, is now living in New York City.

On January 19, 1960, Lorenz entered Roosevelt Hospital in Manhattan for an internal operation to correct the damage to her uterus. She was released on January 22, 1960. On January 23, 1960, the FBI interviewed Marita Lorenz in the presence of her mother. The information she supplied was autobiographical and not of a significant nature.

HAD THE FBI ENCOURAGED LORENZ?

Documents indicated that Marita Lorenz and ex-FBI clerk Alexander Rorke first met with FBI S.A. Francis J. O'Brien as early as November 20, 1959, or December 9, 1959, before Lorenz went to Cuba. These early interviews of Rorke and Lorenz have yet to be released. Had the FBI given Marita Lorenz the impression that her actions were sanctioned by the U.S. Government? After reviewing Marita Lorenz's file, the FBI concluded: "No indication whatsoever in any of the numerous references reviewed indicated that Lorenz had ever been asked, in any manner whatsoever, to perform a task on behalf of the FBI, either in the United States or in Cuba. It is the opinion of the NY FBI Office that Lorenz had in fact accompanied FIORINI and Rorke, who were well known to her, to Miami believing their actions were sanctioned by the U.S. Government and in fact, at their behest, embarked on a plot to assassinate Castro." Information on Rorke and FIORINI which appeared after this statement was deleted. [FBI 62-109060-7572X NR 4.7.77] An FBI report revealed that "In 1960, Rorke, while gathering data concerning an illicit affair, impersonated a Bureau agent and was strongly admonished."

The CIA 1977 CIA Task Force Report stated: "In reference to the Lorenz-STURGIS poison pill plot, the Task Force Report noted the similarity of this plot to the details in an October 18, 1960, FBI memorandum, describing a plot to kill Castro." In the October 18, 1960, memorandum Giancana spoke of a girl who was going to drop a pill in some food or drink of Castro. The HSCA concluded: "The identity of this 'girl' referred to by Giancana has not been conclusively ascertained although it was public knowledge that Marita Lorenz was given poison capsules and that she did return to Cuba." [HSCA V5 pp. 157, 177] The CIA concluded this October 1960 date was "too early for the CIA/syndicate operations and therefore the syndicate may have been acting independently." [Jerry G. Brown DC/CIA SAG] The CIA stated: "If, in fact, Giancana's statements do refer to the LORENZ/STURGIS matter, it can be logically concluded that STURGIS was acting at the behest of Giancana [and not the CIA]."

Who was behind the poison pill plot? The attempt was sponsored by STURGIS and he bragged about it to his friends in the mob. Why did the plot fail? Marita Lorenz lied to everyone, even her "case officer" FRANK. She had no intention of killing Fidel Castro and probably removed the poison capsules from her cold cream before she entered Cuba, rather than risk detection and imprisonment. FRANK had a weakness for prostitutes. He believed Marita Lorenz was sincere, however, she doubled-crossed him as she did everyone else. In her HUNT v. SPOTLIGHT testimony Marita Lorenz said that HUNT was part of the poison pill scheme.

MARITA LORENZ JANUARY 1960

On January 23, 1960, the day after her release from Roosevelt Hospital, Marita Lorenz called the FBI. She said that Jesus Yanes Pelletier had taken her to a hospital in Havana where the abortion was performed and that she had received a call from him that morning during which he said that "he was hiding in Havana and was going to defect from the Castro Government." She told the FBI that, since her return to New York City, she had received several telephone calls from Jesus Yanes Pelletier and Castro, who requested that she return to Havana. Marita Lorenz went to the New York FBI office and furnished information on the activities of the 26th of July Movement in New York City. (Marita Lorenz had been a member since August 1959.) She described the movements of Jesus Yanes Pelletier when he visited New York City in December 1959 to the FBI. She told the FBI that Jesus Yanes Pelletier had offered her $1,000 for her medical expenses, since he was the one who was responsible for her pregnancy. [FBI 105-83564-3] On February 17, 1960 J. Edgar Hoover expressed an interest in Castro's former mistress. [FBI 105-83564-2]

MARITA LORENZ FEBRUARY 1960

Jerrold Brown reported:

Variations of all the names of Ilona Marita Lorenz and her family have been checked against the Office of Security indices with no additional results with the exception to a reference to the file captioned 'Cuban Intelligence Activities' (SF #350 643). An FBI New York Office file dated February 10, 1960 captioned 'Cuban Intelligence Activities in the United States' reflects, in substance, that Lorenz on December 22, 1959 advised S.A. O'Brien, FBI, that Jesus Yanes Pelletier, Cuban Revolutionary Army and Military Aide to the Cuban Prime Minister (Castro), had arrived in New York City on December 18, 1959. Lorenz reported that she went out with him on the night of December 19, 1959, to the La Baracca Restaurant. She believed Pelletier was in New York collecting intelligence information for the Castro Government." [Memo for Chief, SAG 6.1876]

STURGIS stated that Pelletier helped SANTOS TRAFFICANTE Jr. obtain his release from prison in Cuba: "He was a Captain. Marita knows this party. He was a mulatto and I'm trying to remember his name. Captain Yanes Pelletier, I think it was, and he above all was very close to Fidel and I think, from information I got, that Yanes Pelletier was very involved an instrumental in getting SANTOS released." In February 1960 the FBI sent information on Marita Lorenz to the CIA. That month Marita Lorenz told the FBI that she had been threatened by a Castro agent: "Subsequent to this, efforts were made by Cuban diplomatic personnel in the United States to force her to return to Cuba via Mexico. She was physically mistreated by one such representative in February 1960, which she said was prominently reported in the press of the United States." [FBI 105-83564-6] The threats allegedly came from Pedro Perez Font, a Castro henchman, who made the statement that Lorenz's family would be taken care of after Lorenz refused to sign a statement that an associate of Castro's, and not Castro, was responsible for her pregnancy. Font left for Cuba after making these statements. Immediately thereafter Marita Lorenz departed New York and journeyed to Bremerhaven to reside with her father.

MARITA LORENZ MARCH 1960

In March 1960 Marita Lorenz gave the FBI information of the July 26th Club of New York City along with information on June Cobb. On April 1960 Alice June Lorenz sent an angry letter to Castro:

Sir: With reference to the seduction of my daughter, Marita, a minor and United States citizen, whom you lured to Havana under false pretenses, early in 1959, without her parents knowledge or consent, and ravished in the Hilton Hotel, Havana, Cuba. Said act committed by you was later compounded by a forced and careless criminal abortion upon my daughter, performed by a Dr. Ferrer, in his office at 27 Vedada, Havana, Cuba, on September 18, 1959 when my daughter was over five month pregnant with your child; said abortion being accomplished under the direct supervision of your aide, Captain Jesus Yanez Pelletier, who transported by daughter in a drugged condition, in a Cuban Government car to the abortionist's office, where this illegal operation was performed without my daughter's knowledge or consent.

Copies were sent to various media outlets and political and religious leaders. The letter received no publicity except for a May 1960 article in Confidential Magazine entitled "Castro Raped My Teenage Daughter."

MARITA LORENZ / INTERNATIONAL ANTI-COMMUNIST BRIGADE

When I returned to the United States, I joined the International Anti-Communist Brigade and OPERATION 40. I was an associate member of the Cuban Revolutionary Council. I was assigned to OPERATION 40 by FRANK, my troop commander. In 1960 I took a blood oath to join FRANK'S secret assassination group. I was trained in the Everglades. I was the only female member. Diaz Lanz was a member of OPERATION 40 as was Orlando Bosch, GERRY HEMMING and Alex Rorke. There was a man named "EDUARDO." He wasn't always with us, but he would visit us in our safehouse. "EDUARDO" was the man we depended on for money to keep going, for supplies. "EDUARDO" we went to once a month, and he handed FRANK an envelope. I first met "EDUARDO" at a safehouse in Miami on Brickell Avenue. He was alone, wearing a white suit. I was told, 'He's the Company's man.' After Watergate, I realized

"EDUARDO" was really E. HOWARD HUNT. I saw HUNT and STURGIS together back then at least 30 times. I saw HUNT with GERRY HEMMING and with Diaz Lanz. Lanz was in the car with us when he picked up money and they knew each other. I saw HUNT with Orlando Bosch in Orlando's house.

MEMORANDUM

DIRECTOR: FBI

SAC, MIAMI (105-1747)

SUBJECT: FOREIGN POLITICAL MATTERS- CUBA
INTERNAL SECURITY CUBA

Re New York letter 12/9/59 and NY teletypes 1/23/60 and 12/22/59 concerning ILONA MARITA LORENZ who claimed to be close to FIDEL CASTRO RUZ, became pregnant and subsequently had a miscarriage.

Edwin C. Karden, Miami Beach, Florida, is known to the Miami Office, as having been involved periodically in counter-revolutionary activities. Karden obtained a card from the Dade County, Florida Department of Public Safety naming him as an Honorary Deputy Sheriff, has engaged in investigations and is considered a nuisance to the Miami Office and the Sheriff's Department.

Karden claims to investigate Communist activities, as the Miami Office for information, provides non-specific information, drinks excessively, is considered unreliable, and is treated with great circumspect by the Miami Office.

On December 22, 1960 Karden called the Miami Office and stated that Marita Lorenz had arrived in Miami, was sent to Miami by the New York Office of the FBI, was under protective custody of the FBI, and is associated with Frank Nelson and Alex Rorke, both known to the Bureau and New York Office. Karden asked the Miami Office what he should do with the girl and what steps the FBI at Miami would take to protect her against possible physical harm by Castro sympathizers. Karden was directly advised in no uncertain terms that Lorenz was not in the protective custody of the FBI, and was not sent to Miami by the New York Office. On December 24, 1960 Marisol Alba Vazquez who is well known to the Bureau and who is presently involved in a CLIP operation explained that she lives across the street from Karden, who called her that day, wanted her to talk to Lorenz, and wanted Alba to provide for Lorenz's support and care. Alba refused to have anything to do with the situation. Alba explained to the Miami Office that Karden is known to her as a narcotics user, a drunkard, is unreliable and that Alba's attorney, Ben Cohen, a well known Miami Beach criminal lawyer, advised her to have nothing to do with Karden.

On January 9, 1961 MM (deleted)-S advised that on January 8, 1961 Frank Fiorini, Alex Rorke and Lorenz were to meet that evening and attended a unity meeting together. This meeting was sponsored by Luis Conte Aguerro.

MM (deleted) advised that it appeared that RORKE and LORENZ were going to join the anti-CASTRO movement of FIORINI, a de-naturalized American citizen who lost his United States citizenship for serving in the Cuban Revolutionary Army of CASTRO. MM (deleted) stated LORENZ was reportedly in the protective custody of the FBI. Mrs. NIEMOELLER of the Catholic Welfare Bureau telephonically contacted the Miami Office on January 9, 1961, and stated that she was calling to report an incident that occurred on this date. Mrs. NIEMOELLER advised that last week, JOSE IGNACIO ACOSTA, Editor of the Spanish newspaper, "Cuba Libre", came to the Welfare Bureau and was accompanied by a young girl named ILONA MARTITA LORENZ. Since the regular social worker was unable to handle the situation, this couple was told to return on this date and talk with Mts. NIEMOELLER. NIEMOELLER stated that ACOSTA introduced LORENZ to her and gave her copies of his newspaper, in which appeared a story concerning LORENZ. NIEMOELLER stated that in substance the story was as follows:

LORENZ is the daughter of an American woman, ALICE LORENZ, who resides at New York City, and a German father. LORENZ father is a ship's captain, and was the captain of the German ship, The Bremmen. This ship came to Havana, Cuba, and FIDEL CASTRO came aboard the ship, and was 'taken' by LORENZ. The ship proceeded to New York City, and CASTRO sent for LORENZ and set her up in the Havana Hilton, where he was free to come and go. After this had gone on for awhile, LORENZ became pregnant, and when she was about five and one-half months pregnant, an abortion was performed. Accordingly, CASTRO paid all of the bills, and LORENZ went to New York City, where she was admitted to the Roosevelt Hospital due to the results of the abortion. LORENZ also went to Germany where she spent some time in a hospital. When LORENZ returned to New York City, her life was threatened, and the FBI afforded her protection

Mts. NIEMOELLER stated that ACOSTA met LORENZ in New York, where he had gone to get a story, that she came down here because she wants to fight Communism in Cuba, and here she feels safe. ACOSTA stated that LORENZ could work, has a high school education, and also attended Hunter College in New York. ACOSTA indicated that the Welfare Bureau should provide an apartment and food for LORENZ until she went to work. NIEMOELLER indicated that LORENZ told her that she is living with Mr. and Mrs. ERWIN KARDEN, Miami Beach, Florida. and NIEMOELLER told ACOSTA and LORENZ that LORENZ should remain there until Father WALSH, who runs the Welfare bureau, returns from Washington, D. C. and a decision is made. NIEMOELLER stated that after leaving her, ACOSTA and LORENZ went to the Protestant Welfare Bureau with the same story, and due to this fact she felt she should call this office and advise what has been happening.

Mrs. NIEMOELLER stated LORENZ was in possession of a newspaper clipping from the "Cube Libre" newspaper of JOSE ACOSTA, stating that she was under the protective custody of the FBI. On January 10, 1961, LORENZ was interviewed by SAS ROBERT JAMES DWYER and DAVID C. SPINGLER, at which time she was admonished for stating she was under the protective custody of the FBI, and was told to cease and desist from any future statements. LORENZ said she met KARDEN in New York City through JOSE ACOSTA, KARDEN claims to have lost investments in Cuba and hates FIDEL CASTRO, and that she travelled to Miami of her own volition.

She said she met Alex Rorke, free lance photographer, in Miami several days ago, and through him met FRANK FIORINI, whom she had previously met in a hotel in Havana when FIORINI was wearing the uniform of a Captain in the Cuban Revolutionary Army. Rorke had left for Guatemala on January 9, 1961, to write a story about the invasion force that would invade Cuba. During the time Rorke was in Miami, he stayed at the residence of FRANK FIORINI. Lorenz said that FIORINI is friendly and working with Orlando Bosch and Victor Paneque of MIRR. Lorenz stated that FIORINI is in contact with Chris Mendoza, wealthy Cuban exile, and invited Lorenz to go on an expedition with him to Cuba because of her propaganda value. Lorenz stated she declined FIORINI'S offer, wants to obtain employment in Miami, but may return to her mother's residence in New York City.

LORENZ said that FIORINI is friendly and working with Dr. ORLANDO BOSCH and VICTOR PANEQUE of the Movimiento_Insurreccional de Recuperacion Revolucionario de Cuba (K/RR). It is noted the MIRR is being taken into the CLIP operation LORENZ stated that FIORINI is in contact with CHIRI MENDOZA, wealthy Cuban exile, and invited LORENZ to go on an expedition with him to Cuba because of her propaganda value. LORENZ stated she declined FIORINI's offer, wants to obtain employment in Miami, but may return to her mother's residence in New York City.

On January 10, 1961 ROBERT HOPKINS, CIA, Miami, was advised of RORKE's departure for Guatemala to write a news story concerning CLIP operations. HOPKINS was very concerned and stated he would take immediate steps to preclude such a thing from happening. Miami has main cases opened on BOSCH, PANEQUE, the MIRR, FIORINI, and has informant coverage on these different individuals and organization. If Lorenz becomes actively engaged in Cuban revolutionary activities in Miami the Bureau will be kept advised." [FBI 105-83564 NR 168 2.1.61]

The CIA reported that an FBI document dated April 24, 1961, stated that on "January 8, 1961, Lorenz, STURGIS, Alex Rorke (deleted) were to meet that evening and attempt a unity meeting of anti-Castro Cubans. The unity meeting was sponsored by Luis Conte Aguero, one of the leading anti-Castro Cubans. I have uncovered nothing to date concerning an assassination attempt." [Chris Hopkins LA/COG/CIOS 6.14.76]

On January 10, 1961, the FBI interviewed Marita Lorenz. The FBI told her to stop saying that she was under its protective custody because of alleged threats from Fidel Castro. Marita Lorenz told the FBI that "Marita Lorenz was never a member of the International Anti-Communist Brigade. No females were allowed in the group. Her story about being part of OPERATION 40 was also a lie. She was informing on STURGIS."

MARITA LORENZ AND OSWALD

After the Bay of Pigs invasion, April 1961, I noticed a change in FRANK. Instead of talking about getting rid of Fidel he began to talk about getting rid of John Kennedy. He said 'Kennedy has to be hit, there's no two ways about it.' In the summer of 1962, on one of our many trips up and down the coast, running guns, we hit a camp near a lake, in New Orleans. Alex Rorke was there. So was GERRY HEMMING. So was OSWALD."

HEMMING told this researcher:

That would have been the strangest goddamn thing in the world. That's crazy shit. Rorke did not surface till the end of 1962.

MARITA LORENZ AND MACROS JIMENEZ PEREZ

Marita Lorenz lived in Miami in 1961. In June 1961 she was introduced to the deposed President of Venezuela, Marcos Jimenez Perez. CARLOS MARCELLO visited Venezuela frequently while Marcos Jimenez Perez was in power. Marcos Jimenez Perez had ties to an associate of Meyer Lansky. The man who introduced Marita Lorenz to Marcos Jimenez Perez, Ruben Pratts, subsequently demanded a commission on the money that Marcos Jimenez Perez had given Marita Lorenz in return for her sexual favors. Marita Lorenz went to the FBI and told the Bureau to investigate the man for having violated the White Slave Act. She said that after Pratts introduced him to Perez, she advised him that "she was out of work and in poor financial condition. Perez offered to help her get a job. He also gave Lorenz his telephone number and asked her to call him. Lorenz thereupon left the apartment without any additional pertinent activities being conducted. Lorenz called Perez ten days later, visited him, and became sexually intimate."

On March 9, 1962 Marita Lorenz gave birth to Monica Mercedes Perez. In the Summer of 1962 Marita Lorenz was in Miami, taking care of her newborn infant, and was not traveling around with STURGIS. In August 1963 Perez was extradited to Venezuela. He had been accused of embezzling $13.5 million. Marita Lorenz served him with a paternity suit before his extradition. [Time 8.23.63]

MARITA AND OZZIE

Later that year, in October 1962, a man named OZZIE came to visit our training camp in the Everglades. Alex Rorke took a photograph of me, OZZIE, GERRY PATRICK HEMMING, FRANK STURGIS and Diaz Lanz. After the Kennedy assassination I realized OZZIE was OSWALD. I was with OSWALD three or four times before November 22, 1963. I questioned FRANK about OSWALD'S connection. He said, 'Don't worry, he's okay, we are going to use him.' FRANK told me, 'He's one of us. He's a sharp guy.' I took this to mean that OSWALD also worked for the Company. He was part of OPERATION 40, the assassination section. I thought he was going to be used in a plan to kill Castro.

Marita Lorenz did not meet OSWALD. The Dealey Plaza crew was professional. HEMMING told this researcher: "Why expose a fucking whore to something like this? It's total bullshit." Marita Lorenz's "photograph story" was another lie. She claimed that she turned the picture over to FBI S.A. Al Chestone. FBI Special Agent Al Chestone, contacted in May 1978, stated:

I am going to come on strong because I'm tired of this, you have been in touch with her? Have you spoken to Paul Meskill about what he thinks about her now? Paul has come to realize she knows not of what she speaks. I was in touch with her husband in connection with my own work for the Justice Department and she is a lovely lady, she wants to be a police woman more than anything else, she would do anything for her country. There are a lot of things she says that she sensationalizes, takes things out of context. She is imagining that she gave me a picture. I never got a picture from that lady. I don't know what she is talking about. Never, never did she give me a picture. In all the years I dealt with her and her husband she never discussed the assassination or this OSWALD trip. The photograph that she's talking about never once did she bring this up until after I - last year -what the hell is she talking about? There were times when she said she was part and parcel of the other agency, the CIA...I said I don't want to know anything more about it...I can honestly say I don't know what she is talking about...she did not give me a picture...If she had given me a picture of OSWALD do you think I would have sat on it? It would have been my responsibility to follow it up. I would have taken action on it. I would have written a report on the darned thing. But this is concocted...She once told me 'Uncle Al, come to think of it I didn't give you the picture. That's true too.' I said, Hey, com'on Marita, you're damn right you didn't give you the picture.

Why didn't Marita Lorenz copy the photograph before she gave it to the FBI? During Lorenz's testimony to the HSCA she said that the photograph was taken in 1960. She later amended this response and said it was taken between August 18, 1963 and September 20, 1963.

Marita Lorenz claimed that on Saturday, November 16, 1963, OSWALD was in Miami with STURGIS, HEMMING, Pedro Diaz Lanz, Orlando Bosch and others. According to Marita Lorenz, OSWALD was present at a meeting where the assassination of President John F. Kennedy was discussed. She also claimed that she was a member of the team who drove from Miami to Dallas, shortly before the assassination. On November 29, 1963, a business man from Cincinnati, Ohio, reported to the FBI that during a visit to Miami a taxi driver told him "he could positively identify OSWALD as being in Miami when President Kennedy was last in that city for a visit on Monday, November 18, 1963. OSWALD was with two other male individuals." S.A. James O'Conner questioned two taxi drivers about the report. Both said they had seen OSWALD, although they furnished the FBI with inaccurate descriptions. [FBI 62-109060-1201; Cinn. FBI Office 62-2758; FBI 62-19060-386, 1408]

THE CAR TRIP

Marita Lorenz:

On the weekend before the Kennedy assassination I saw OSWALD with Orlando Bosch at Bosch's home. Pedro Diaz Lanz and FRANK STURGIS were there, as were the Novo brothers, who were from New Jersey. They were going over Dallas street maps, circling places. I thought they were going to hit another armory. They were talking about locations. I can't remember any specifics, but the event was supposed to occur in Dallas in November. There was talk of a high powered rifle. The word 'Kennedy' spoken to Bosch [sic] which made me say, 'What about him?' All eyes were on me, studying me, when OSWALD started a dispute with FRANK and Bosch about my presence. I spoke with OSWALD that night, someone told me he spoke German, and I found out that he did. FRANK told me I would be going to Dallas with him tomorrow. It was during the weekend, so it was hard for me to get a baby sitter on such short notice. We left after midnight in two beat-up looking cars and drove to Dallas. About eight of us, with FRANK'S 'baby,' a high powered rifle, scope and silencer attached, in the trunk of our car. Before we left, we were briefed by FRANK, Bosch and Pedro Diaz Lanz. No phone calls, no speaking Spanish in Texas, no leaving for restaurants. Supplies and 'kits' were dumped in the truck. We wore dark street clothes...I was in the car with the Novos, FRANK and Orlando Bosch. OSWALD rode with HEMMING and Pedro Diaz Lanz. The car I drove in was beat-up, they had guns in the back. It had big tail fins, four doors, Florida plates. No one talked about the Dallas operation during the trip. Just, 'When we get there nobody goes out, no papers, no broads.' I asked FRANK who was paying for the trip and he told me, 'The Company.' The guns in the car looked like OSWALD'S [Mannlicher-Carcano]...When he arrived in Dallas we stayed at the Cabana Motel."

The idea that STURGIS took Marita Lorenz to Dallas was absurd. She was only 23 at the time. STURGIS had fought in World War II. So had HUNT and CHRIST. How much experience could Marita Lorenz have had as paramilitarist? Marita Lorenz said that when they got to the Cabana Motel in Dallas, JACK RUBY ordered STURGIS to send Marita Lorenz away. As she was leaving, she saw HUNT check into the motel. During her deposition in HUNT v. SPOTLIGHT, Marita Lorenz said she saw HUNT hand STURGIS and envelope full of money inside the motel. In her testimony in HUNT v. SPOTLIGHT, Elizabeth McIntosh testified that HUNT was at a meeting during the afternoon of November 21, 1963, at the CIA, so he could not have been in Dallas. She could not place him at the Agency on November 22, 1963. A Mrs. (FNU) McManus also said HUNT was in Washington on November 21, 1963.

According to Marita Lorenz, the squad consisted of herself, OSWALD, HEMMING, Pedro Diaz Lanz and Orlando Bosch and Guillermo and Ignacio Novo. The Novo brothers immigrated to America in 1954, after their father was killed in an explosion in Havana. They graduated from high school in lower Manhattan. Guillermo Novo received a Degree in Chemistry, and Ignacio Novo became a shoe salesman. In late 1959 they organized the first anti-Castro demonstration in the United States. Ignacio Novo became a leader of the Cuban Nationalist Movement, and in August 1960 he arranged for Cuban exile groups to form a united front against Castro. The Cuban Revolutionary Front was one of these groups. Little information was available on the anti-Castro activities of the Cuban Nationalist Movement between 1960 and 1964. In December 1964, the Novo brothers fired a bazooka shell at the United Nations building in New York. The shell fell into the East River, 200 yards from the shore, damaging nothing, and the Novo brothers were arrested for the attack. Tony Ulasewicz participated in their arrest. Stanley Ross testified that someone had telephoned him before the attack and predicted the missile would fall short of its target. Several months later, the Novo brothers confessions were ruled inadmissible. [NYT 12.24.64, 12.12.64] In 1967 the Novo brothers were convicted of hiding explosives for Orlando Bosch, and both were sent to prison. The conviction of Ignacio Novo was overturned, but the conviction of Guillermo Novo was affirmed. In 1968 Ignacio Novo and Orlando Bosch bombed the Consulates of several Western Bloc countries which did business with Cuba. The next phase of this operation was to be the execution of Castro officials outside the United States. Guillermo Novo was paroled in late 1975, but his parole was revoked after he traveled to Chile to meet with Orlando Bosch and members of the Chilean military junta.

When the Novo brothers were subpoenaed during a Federal investigation of the Orlando Letelier assassination, they disappeared. About 23 other Cuban exiles, mostly veterans of the Bay of Pigs Brigade, were subpoenaed. In 1977 the members of the Bay of Pigs Brigade elected Ignacio Novo as their military leader. Guillermo Novo and Alvin Ross Diaz were arrested for cocaine trafficking by the Miami Organized Crime Bureau in April 1978. The name, address and telephone number of Pedro Diaz Lanz was found in the address book of Alvin Ross Diaz. Danny Benitez made the arrest. STURGIS was an informant for Danny Benitez, although STURGIS repeatedly denied ever having heard of the Novos brothers. When STURGIS was questioned about the Novo brothers in 1978, in relation to the charges made by Marita Lorenz, he said he had never heard of the "Nova brothers." During his deposition in the course of HUNT v. WEBERMAN STURGIS was asked:

Q. Do you remember the Novo Brothers, Cuban exiles that are presently in New Jersey?

A. De Novo?

Q. Guillermo Novo?

A. The name - I don't recall the name at the present time. It's possible. Like I said, I know many Cubans.

STURGIS had to have at least heard about the Novo Brothers. STURGIS was associated with Carlos Prio Socarras, who in his later years, worked closely with the Novo brother's Cuban Nationalist Movement. HEMMING told this researcher:

Of course STURGIS knew the Novos. The Novo connection comes through Navarro. He had lunch with the Novos on two occasions at Centro Vasco.

On May 5, 1978, Ignacio Novo was arrested in the basement of his brother-in-law's house in Jersey City, New Jersey. The Novo brothers were sentenced to life in prison on March 24, 1979. The next month, a valise exploded while being loaded on an airliner at Kennedy Airport. The Cuban Nationalist Movement took credit for the explosion. They demanded the immediate release of the Novo brothers. [O'Leary Washington Star 4.28.78]

Marita Lorenz may have seen the Novo brothers in connection with anti-Castro activities and so she decided to work them into her story. HEMMING told this researcher:

First, the Novo brothers hadn't even been invented yet. Talk about one of the Novos being present in the Brigade. He wasn't in the Brigade. She gets the Novo brothers later on from the Letelier business. PHILLIPS pulled that stunt.

The HSCA interviewed Orlando Bosch. He said he had met Marita Lorenz once, in 1962, when he planned an air raid on Cuba with Alexander Rorke. The HSCA: "Lorenz later called him and said she wanted to get involved in anti-Castro activities, but Bosch turned her down and never saw her again. He further stated he had never traveled west of New Orleans in his life." Pedro Diaz Lanz was interviewed by the HSCA: "Immunized testimony was received in Washington, D.C., on April 28, 1978, from Pedro Diaz Lanz who denied Lorenz's allegation and explained his whereabouts on November 22, 1963." HEMMING denied making the car trip to Dallas with STURGIS. The HSCA questioned STURGIS about Marita Lorenz's allegations. He testified

Sir, that is an absolute lie. I have never been with Marita Lorenz and OZZIE as she calls him, or Pedro Diaz Lanz or Marcos Diaz Lanz, or Doctor Orlando Bosch, or JERRY PATRICK, which she claimed all of us besides some other Cubans [STURGIS again pretended that he was unfamiliar with the Novo brothers], were in two automobiles and left Miami Florida two days before the assassination of the President of the United States. She is a liar. I took a polygraph examination to that effect that I have never been involved at any time in conspiring to kill the President of the United States, nor was I with her in any automobile with these people or any other people going to Dallas to plot to kill the President of the United States. She is an absolute liar.

STURGIS told Paul Meskil: She said she drove from Miami, Florida, to Dallas, Texas, and in the automobile were, I'm not sure of all the names, myself, her, she mentioned Orlando Bosch...a couple of Cuban brothers, which I think she got mixed up there because there are only two Cuban brothers, Pedro Diaz Lanz and Marcos Diaz Lanz, and also, the person who financed this trip to Dallas was E. HOWARD HUNT...I naturally denied it.

On May 31, 1978, Marita Lorenz testified before the HSCA. She told her usual story: "The HSCA found no evidence to support Lorenz's allegation." [Lorenz references: FBI 31-88948-6 Miami; FBI 105-83564,-1 NR 2.1.61, 1.23.60 Airtel, LHM 1.23.60, NR 1.25.60, 2.10.60, 2.17.60, 1.22.60, 1.26.60; FBI 105-83564-1.20.61; Miami 31-88948-6 Invest. Report 8.22.62-10.12.62] HEMMING told the HSCA that he had the 'impression' that STURGIS was in Dallas the week of the assassination." HEMMING told this researcher: "The thing is there was a caravan. The possibility that she knew about the STURGIS caravan...Do I know that the caravan actually left, yes. At that fucking period of time, I can't pinpoint it, there was an attempt to get Phillippe Vidal and Tony Cuesta to go to a financial meeting in Dallas, Texas, by STURGIS. They didn't know him from Adam, so they called us. We didn't have broads hanging out with us. She said STURGIS admitted something against his interest while he was fucking her, no way. No way STURGIS is gonna admit to shit. She might have put two and two together. Marcos Jimenez Perez, that Padron bitch that ended up with Manuel Artime who was hanging out at Marcos Jimenez Perez's house too. Colonel Pardo. Anyone of them could have made comments in that point in time. Things were being discussed. She is putting two and two together because evidently STURGIS went to Marcos Jimenez Perez and needed some funds to go raise some money in Texas. And she picked up on this story about the cars going to Dallas. The strange thing was, why the fuck didn't they fly? It's 38 fucking hours of driving. Jesus fucking Christ, they had no I-95 then. I don't discount that Marita saw something. I don't discount that she may have seen somebody, there was a caravan or talk about a caravan. Now we don't discount the fact that she saw or heard reference to it, but as far as pin-pointing the personalities, that's bullshit.

HUNT told this to the HSCA in 1978:

During the retrial of HUNT v Spotlight, the defendant's attorney, Mark Lane, trotted out a woman named Marita Lorenz who claimed to have been a former Fidel Castro mistress smuggled out of Cuba by Frank Sturgis under his alias, Frank Fiorelli. Described as a "curvy, black-haired...American Mata Hari" by New York Daily News reporter Paul Meskil, she was an oval-faced, doe-eyed, innocent-looking woman, sporting a classic Jacqueline Kennedy hairstyle. She laid out a bizarre scenario in which I, Sturgis, Hemming, Oswald, and a few murderous Cubans drove from Miami to Dallas to perpetrate the crime of the century. The woman was an amazing tale-spinner who could have had a great career as a spy novelist, but her testimony has been widely discredited, with a full account written by Gaeton Fonzi, a staff investigator for the HSCA, in The Last Investigation. Did I get into a car loaded with guns in Miami and head for Dallas, as alleged by Marita Lorenz? The answer is no. Did I know Marita Lorenz? No. I didn't know her, and I wouldn't have wanted to know her. She was the type of person whom Frank Sturgis was accustomed to handling. She and Sturgis did know each other, and he reportedly conceived a plot to send her to Cuba to reunite with Castro, where she was supposed to administer poison pills to the dictator while he was asleep. She claimed that she met up with her jubilant lover but failed to give him the pills, because she had hidden them in a jar of cold cream, and they had melted. But if that's true, Sturgis never told me about it before she told the story, so I would have to assume it never took place, as Sturgis was not a person who would avoid taking credit for an operation as worthwhile as that.

HEMMING 1995: "The caravan left for Dallas on Tuesday, November 19, 1963."

The initials "WH" appeared on the flyleaf of OSWALD'S address book. Howard Hunt was the liaison between CIA and the Eisenhower White House in regard to Bay of Pigs. Years later Bernard Barker's address book listed Hunt under WH as you can see below.

Watergate burglar Rolando Martinez' personal telephone directory listed HOWARD HUNT. Next to the phone number it noted: "W. House." HUNT'S name was listed under the letters "W. H." in BERNARD BARKER'S address book. HUNT was asked what would lead Mr. BARKER to use the initials W. H? HUNT: "I assume that WH was for White House."

EVERETTE HOWARD HUNT was born on October 9, 1918, in Hamburg, N.Y., into a family of English and Welch heritage which traced its lineage to the Revolutionary War. Hunt's Point, in the South Bronx section of New York City, was named after one of HUNT'S ancestors. HUNT'S father, Howard Hunt Sr., was a friend of OSS founder William J. Donovan. When HUNT was eight, his family moved to Miami, where Howard Hunt Sr. entered a business partnership which eventually failed. In Give Us This Day, HUNT described the incident which led to this. On a Saturday, Howard Hunt Sr.'s business partner stole $5,000 from him, then flew to Havana. The next day, Howard Hunt Sr. flew to Havana, found his partner, put a gun to his partner's head, and got all of his money back. The moral to be gained from this story, according to HUNT, was: "An operation conducted with surgical efficiency and maximum speed leaves minimal scars on those involved." This story can be interpreted so that a different moral is extracted from it: rather than report the incident to the local authorities, Howard Hunt Sr. went to Cuba and was willing to execute his ex-partner for $5000. The moral implied by this incident: if you are double-crossed, murder is permissible.

During his teens HUNT suffered from dyslexia and stammering. He graduated from Brown University in 1940, where he majored in English literature and journalism. He received an Associate Baccalaureate Degree. He was accepted as a play writing student at Yale Drama School. HUNT enlisted in the Naval Reserves. HUNT reported: "Enlisted United States Naval Reserve, August 27, 1940, as Apprentice Seaman, appointed to U.S. Navy Midshipman's School...served aboard USS Destroyer Mayo, discharge by reason of being not physically qualified for retention." In February 1941 HUNT entered the United States Navy. He was on active duty for five months before he was given an honorable medical discharge in late 1942.

Tad Szulc reported: "According to incomplete records [HUNT] was injured aboard a ship doing Atlantic convoy duty." HUNT was discharged because of a hearing problem. [FBI 139-4089-1627] HUNT wrote East of Farewell, a fictionalized account of North Atlantic convoy duty, and sold it to Alfred Knopf Publishers. From October 1942 to February 1943 he worked for Time Inc. (March of Time) where he prepared and edited scripts for a monthly newsreel, and produced Naval training films. He was hired by Time and became a war correspondent in the South Pacific from February 1943 to July 1943. HUNT covered the battle of Guadalcanal. HUNT stated: "I flew as an observer with VT11, Henderson Field, Guadalcanal, 1943, soloed SO3C type, March 1943, New Hebrides." He returned to New York City in 1943, where he worked for Fortune magazine and wrote Limit Of Darkness, which he sold to Random House.

HUNT JOINS THE OSS: DECEMBER 1944

HUNT enlisted as a private in the United States Air Force: "After basic training at Fort Dix and Miami Beach, I qualified for Officer Candidate School...After being commissioned, I was sent to Air Force Intelligence School at Orlando, Florida, where, after two weeks as a student, I was placed on the faculty." While he was in Air Force Intelligence, HUNT passed rigorous OSS testing and investigation: "A few days later General William E. Donovan summoned me to his office. There he confirmed that I had been accepted for duty in the OSS and was henceforth relieved of further Air Force duties." During his OSS training period, HUNT met Navy Lieutenant James Donovan and future CIA officers Lawrence Houston and Walter Kuzmuk. HUNT cited Bennett Cerf of Random House as a credit reference. HUNT named Quentin Reynolds as a reference. HUNT stated: "Graduate of Air Combat Intelligence School, AAFSAT, AFTAC, Florida. Wide experience with intelligence sources and procedures as part of current duties in AFTAC Air Room, plus special research into propaganda analysis (a standard lecture for the Army-Navy Staff College), plus professional writing and experience as naval officer at start of war. As a War correspondent, I found out that my experience as a naval officer helped me effect easy liaison with Task Force and Air Group commanders in the theater. I am known as a novelist and short-story writer, and contribute to national magazines upon the request of individual editors. December 9, 1944." HUNT was assigned to OSS Detachment 202, headed by Paul Helliwell (born September 17, 1914). From January 17, 1945 to August 18, 1945, Paul Helliwell served as Chief, Special Intelligence Branch, OSS, China Theater. When the war ended, Paul Helliwell was placed in charge of postwar intelligence, and awarded the Bronze Star with Oak Leaf Cluster. In January 1950 he joined the CIA. In 1951 Paul Helliwell helped set up and run Sea Supply Corporation, a CIA proprietary. ANGLETON associate John Hart headed a CIA group of 76 men training the Thai Police via the Sea Supply Corporation. [Indochina Resource Center Study 1.77] Paul Helliwell served as a paymaster during the Bay of Pigs invasion in April 1961. HUNT listed his OSS and military duty: "CBI Reports Officer, Lecturer on Psychological Warfare at Army-Navy Staff College." HUNT served in the Far East until January 1946. After the war, he went to Mexico on a Guggenheim Fellowship. Later he took up residence in Los Angeles and Miami.

HUNT was an Economic Attaché at the American Embassy, Paris. HUNT'S associates there included Glen Morehouse, a Paris CIA Station officer, Richard Bissell and Frank Wisner. At the Economic Cooperation Administration, Vienna, HUNT produced an anti-communist film directed toward labor groups, entitled Mit Vereinten Kraefte. In 1948 HUNT was employed by the Economic Cooperation Administration and served in Paris as and aide to Averill Harriman: "A background investigation conducted by the FBI in July 1949 revealed no indication of instability on the Subject's part, but it was later learned that Subject had been refused an increase in salary with the Economic Cooperation Administration and had been permitted to resign. He was described as highly intelligent, but blindly selfish, and egotistical." HUNT'S employment history stated: "May 1948 to February 1948, Economic Cooperation Administration, Public Relations, J. F. Fleming, U. S. Media Specialist. PR work plus speech writing for Ambassador Harriman; film production. Reasons for Leaving: My publishing affairs deteriorated to such an extent that my presence in America became imperative for financial reasons." On November 23, 1949, HUNT was fingerprinted by the FBI for the CIA.

DOROTHY WETZEL HUNT: 1949

Dorothy Wetzel De Goutiere, born Dorothy Davis to Mrs. Jane Davis, worked for the State Department in Bern, Switzerland, between July 1944 and January 1946 tracing Nazi money in Europe. From April 1946 to May 1947, DOROTHY De Goutiere worked for the Treasury Department, Shanghai, China. She joined Economic Cooperation Administration in April 1948. In this capacity she traveled to Paris and became part of the staff of William Averill Harriman, an administrator of the Marshall Plan. She married HOWARD HUNT on September 7, 1949. The CIA reported that "DOROTHY LOUISE HUNT [OS 355,750] was investigated for Agency employment in 1948. Her former husband [Goutiere] was described as an habitual drunkard and not inclined to remain in any one place for any length of time. She did not enter on duty, having accepted a position with the Economic Cooperation Administration in Paris. Our Paris sources later reported that Subject's wife was formerly his mistress and was openly flouted as such for several months. She was then described as an amoral and dangerous individual who underhandedly attacked those persons who incurred her enmity." The De Goutiere in question was probably George De Goutiere, an artist. Saint John Hunt recalled, "She had married first, to an alcoholic French count of some kind; he was later killed in an automobile crash (who knows, certainly not I). She was exotic looking; dark thick hair with a widow's peak, strong high cheekbones, and a well developed full busted figure. She was German and Sioux Indian, and her skin was richly olive toned." [Bond of Secrecy St. John Hunt. Sarasota Herald Tribune July 7, 1948.]

In 1949 HUNT'S book, Bimini Run, was published; Warner Brothers paid HUNT $35,000 for the movie rights. On May 18, 1949, HUNT filled out a PERSONAL HISTORY

STATEMENT for the CIA. HUNT cited Major J.K. Singlaub as an employment reference. General Singlaub became commander of the Joint Unconventional Warfare Task Force in Vietnam in 1968 and was involved in Operation Phoenix. In 1984 Singlaub headed the World Anti-Communist League. John K. Singlaub had been in HUNT'S OSS unit. On November 8, 1949, HUNT filled out a Personal Status Report. In November 1949 HUNT joined the Office of Policy Coordination (CIA) where he became an International Organization Editor. He remained there until December 1950.

1950 TO 1953

On February 17, 1950, HUNT was informed by the CIA's Office of Security that his wife held left-wing attitudes regarding certain minority groups:

With regard to his wife, Mr. HUNT states that she is one of these individuals who carries the torch for minority groups and always has been too ready to take up the battle when any derogatory remarks are made concerning members of these groups. He advised, however, that she is becoming less pugnacious about this because he has constantly made it a point to request her not to express her opinion so strongly. Mr. HUNT advises, as a matter of fact, that at the outset he used to bait his wife on these matters, but as he realized how strongly she feels about them, he ceased the practice. It seems as though Mrs. Hunt becomes so upset concerning racial and minority prejudices that the resultant condition is really injurious to her health. Mr. HUNT advises that he will have a heart-to-heart talk with his wife and ask her to tighten up on the control of her emotions. He will further suggest to his wife that she take the chip off her shoulders, and if remarks are made which disturb her, she should assume the attitude of considering the source. Mr. HUNT believes his wife is becoming less susceptible to remarks which have enraged her in the past. He has promised me to adopt a policy of discontinuing social relations with individuals who constantly discuss matters which are repugnant to his wife. I was very favorably impressed by Mr. HUNT'S attitude concerning my admonitions, and I respect him for his forthright denouncement and evaluation of his wife's shortcomings. I am firm in my belief that Mr. HUNT is thoroughly patriotic, completely anti-Communist, and that there will be no repetition of past complaints. I sincerely recommend that we close the book on this issue, and start over with a clean slate. (Deleted) OS.

THE DEATH OF CAPTAIN EUGENE KARP

On February 27, 1950, HUNT wrote a memo about his association with U.S. Naval Officer Eugene Simon Karpe.

MEMORANDUM FOR: OSE

SUBJECT: Captain Eugene Karpe, USN, deceased.

1. During 1948 to 1949 I served in Europe as an official of the Economic Cooperation Administration, ranking as an Attache of the American Embassy, Paris.
2. During various periods of temporary duty in Vienna (August to October 1948) I came to know Captain Karpe socially. He came to Vienna frequently on week ends from his Bucharest post, staying, like myself, at the Bristol Hotel.
3. On at least two occasions he flew with me in General Keyes' aircraft from Vienna to Paris, and I had the distinct impression that he wanted to spend as little time as possible in Bucharest because of the annoying and constant surveillance of secret police.
4. On one occasion, returning unexpectedly from Vienna, I encountered Captain Karpe at the Bristol and asked him why he was again in Vienna. He replied that there had been a series of incidents in Bucharest involving servants of Embassy personnel (shadowing, interrogations, etc.) And that I could not imagine how rigorous was the life there for Americans. He added jokingly that he could not even visit a urinal in Bucharest without being accompanied by the Secret Police.
5. At no time did Captain Karpe appear despondent; rather he impressed me a conscientious officer who was undergoing tremendous hardships, but sought relaxation from surveillance at every legitimate opportunity.
6. In October 1949 I encountered Captain Karpe in the Army & Navy Club in Washington, and asked him if his Bucharest assignment had terminated. His answer was rather vague, and my total impression was that he felt I was lucky to be out of Europe, and that he was not anxious to return to Romania.
7. Our association was more than casual, for we had mutual friends in the Navy; one of his classmates, in fact, having been a fellow officer of mine.
8. Although I knew Mr. and Mrs. Robert Vogeler socially in Vienna, I was not aware Captain Karpe knew them, as later events indicate.

HOWARD HUNT PBII/HH/mee.

William Harvey was sent a copy of HUNT'S memorandum regarding Karpe. Eugene Simon Karpe fell off the Orient Express on February 25, 1950:

A track walker found the body of Captain Eugene Simon Karpe of the United States Navy, a friend of imprisoned Robert A. Vogler, in a railway tunnel south of Salzberg yesterday. His passport was missing. United States Army investigators and Austrian police said they believed Captain Karpe's death had been accidental. American officials in Washington said they were not eliminating the possibility that the officer had been slain. Austrian police said that Captain Karpe, en route to the United States after three years as Naval Attaché in Romania, evidently had fallen from a door of the Arlberg Orient express on a curve...Captain Karpe, 45 years old, was sent to Rumania in 1946 as a naval member of the Allied Control Commission. Officers said all passengers appeared to be legitimate travelers and that there was no reason to suspect them of having had any part in Captain Karpe's death.

HUNT and Eugene Simon Karpe were acquainted with Robert A. Vogeler, who had been sentenced to 15 years in prison for espionage by a Hungarian People's Court on February 20, 1950. Robert A. Vogeler was a roving ITT representative who allegedly plotted to sabotage the Hungarian state-owned telephone company. Vogeler was released after having served one year of his sentence. He denied being a spy ; he said all he had done was keep in touch with "Fish" Karpe. [NYT 2.25.50] On Tuesday, March 2, 1950, United States Army investigators:

...said today that it was possible in the darkness of a Salzberg tunnel Karpe could have been thrown accidentally from the Arlberg-Express." On November 8, 1950, William D. Miller, Assistant Chief, Overseas Branch, sent George P. Loker, Jr. Chief, Special Security Branch, a memo: "Subject (Deleted) OPC) (Deleted) of SAC has been changed to above. Former (deleted) was (deleted). On December 14, 1950, the Chief, Special Security Branch, was informed by the Chief, Overseas Branch, that "(deleted) (Pseudo - Office of Policy Coordination) Please cancel your security clearance dated December 7, 1950. The decision has been made that the Subject is to be considered a semi-covert employee (deleted)."

Just before HUNT left for Mexico he reported:

The chaotic day was made more difficult by the sudden arrival of two insurance investigators who questioned us about the mental health of our former French maid, who had become so unhappy at the Auchinclosses' estate, Merrywood, that she tried to commit suicide by jumping off a balcony. She was being cared for at Georgetown Hospital, and the investigators were trying to figure out the precipitating events for her actions. We told them what we could, cut short our interview as the taxi arrived, and departed for National Airport. We changed planes in Dallas and flew south to Mexico City, where we would spend the next three years and where our two daughters would be born. [HUNT American Spy]

MEXICO CITY DECEMBER 1950

HUNT'S first assignment for the Deputy Director/Plans took him to Mexico City where he became head of operations against the Soviets under Chief of Station Winston Scott. The CIA stated: "Subject entered on duty as an Intelligence Officer GS-13 on November 8, 1949. In December 1950 he was assigned as Chief of Station Mexico City, and then served as Chief of Mission until August, 1953." HUNT was trained in Secret Writing, Flaps and Seals and Photography. HUNT described his role in Mexico City as "Chief of the Office of Policy Coordination Station in Mexico City in 1950 to 1952 or 1953." A highly deleted document about the Mexico City CIA Station: "(Deleted) COS Winston M. Scott (deceased) (Deleted) an (retired) (Deleted) (retired) (Deleted) on (retired in Mexico) COVERT ACTION (Deleted) HOWARD HUNT (retired)."

On April 1, 1953, this document about HUNT was generated by the CIA:

MEMORANDUM FOR: Chief, Security Control Staff

SUBJECT: Publication Clearance - HUNT

1. Mr. HUNT is Deputy Chief of a (Deleted) of the Western Hemisphere Division and he has been operating (Deleted).
2. Mr. HUNT has been granted security clearances for several novels during his employment with this Agency. In 1949, just prior to employment with the CIA, he published Day of the Serpent, a fictional work on the OSS in China. He has achieved considerable national prominence as an author of World War II stories.
3. On the last of his PHS he stated that an estimated one million pocket edition copies of two of his books are in circulation. His present publisher, Fawcett Publications, publishes the 25 and 35 cent books which are sold in drugstores, newsstands, hotels, stations etc. throughout the United States. It seems quite probable that Mr. HUNT would be known as a writer by persons in the (Deleted) and that his work would be read by some (Deleted) even though it is in English. It is not known whether or not the pocket book publishing companies have exported their publications in (Deleted).
4. Darkness on the Land is the title of the novel for which security clearance is now requested. There appear to be several objectional aspects in the novel when it is considered in combination with the fact that the author is (Deleted) in Latin America.
5. It would seem that the author's fixation in regard to the superiority of the Nordic to the Latin and Indian races, which permeates the entire novel, would be most offensive to Latin Americans. The Latin American might well argue that Mr. HUNT, like Erskine Caldwell, has taken a sample of the illiterate, amoral minority in Latin America and used it to depict a whole culture.

On September 17, 1953, HUNT generated a MFR on Cornelius Van Manen, a Dutch citizen who was entering the United States military: "Subject stated that it was unfortunate that Hitler did not succeed in his conquest of Europe...HOWARD HUNT SE/CPP." On December 4, 1953, HUNT was granted clearance for attendance at lectures of the Armed Forces Industrial College. HUNT worked with Colonel Edward Landsdale, an Army counterinsurgency expert. During his career with the CIA, HUNT was listed as assigned to the following Staffs and Divisions: PB II, WH/?, SP/?, PY/?, PP/CR/TV, SE/PP, WH/4, DODS/ R & P, DO/CA, OPSER, C/E/CA. In 1953 HUNT earned an Appreciation from Chief, PP, for assistance rendered in the preparation of "PP Operational Aids." In 1953 HUNT won another Appreciation from P.T. Culbertson, American Embassy, (Deleted) for ability, discretion and judgement displayed while assigned to (Deleted).

HUNT served as Case Officer for William F. Buckley Jr. in the early 1950's. William F.

Buckley Sr. had been an owner of the Pantipeec Oil Company in Mexico. In the early 1920's, Mexican nationalists sent him to the United States. His fortune remained intact, and he used it to again speculate in oil, ultimately amassing a fortune. When Pantipeec reopened in Mexico it was part of an oil empire worth an estimated $110 million. [Markmann The Buckley's William Morrow 1973 p33] Born in 1925, William Buckley Jr. studied at the University of Mexico and then at Yale, where he wrote a tome attacking liberalism, God and Man at Yale. When William F. Buckley Jr. returned to Mexico in July 1951, he had some familiarity with the country and language. He resigned from the CIA in 1952 and joined the staff of The American Mercury. In 1955 he founded his own magazine, The National Review. William F. Buckley helped organize the American Committee to Aid the Katanga Freedom Fighters, who opposed Patrice Lumumba. William F. Buckley's CIA file was still withheld as of 2010. The CIA: "Third party information (Summary of Bill Buckley's relationship with the CIA)."

E. HOWARD HUNT AND BORIS PASH

In 1954 HUNT was in contact with the CIA's assassination unit. HUNT recalled:

The CIA had set up a small group to arrange for assassinations of suspected double-agents and similar low ranking officials...I was told by my CIA superiors in 1954 that Boris T. Pash, an Agency official, was in charge of the assassination unit...Boris Pash was the man in charge of an area that dealt with removals by violent means...I never asked Boris Pash to plan an assassination mission, I simply asked him if he had the capability.

Boris Pash, a former Army intelligence agent, headed the Alsos Mission during World War II. Its target goals were the capture of German scientists and the termination of the Nazi atomic bomb program. After the war, Boris Pash, an associate of John Earman, helped Nazi scientists enter the United States. [Lasby Project Paperclip p203; HUNT Depo. in HUNT v. WEBERMAN First Depo. undated; Hersh Old Boys p226] Boris Pash joined HUNT at the Office of Policy Coordination in 1949, where he worked in the Office of Special Operations, Program Branch 7 (PB/7). ANGLETON and William K. Harvey directed the Office of Special Operations. DAVID

PHILLIPS was asked: "Do you know if William K. Harvey knew Mr. HUNT or ever worked with Mr. HUNT, to your knowledge?" He responded: "I think it is quite possible since they both were in the Agency for a long time." The Operations Planning Director of the Office of Policy Coordination, who supervised PB/7, confirmed it was responsible for assassinations and kidnapping. The Deputy Chief of PB/7, who served under Boris Pash, testified he had a clear recollection that the written charter of the Office of Special Operation included the following language: "PB/7 will be responsible for assassinations, kidnapping and other such functions as from time to time may be given it."

HUNT was questioned about Boris Pash by the SSCIA:

I will have to go back considerably in time to the period in 1954 and early 1955 when I was staff officer of the Southeast European Division of the CIA. My title was Chief of Political and Psychological Warfare for Southeast Europe. As such I had staff responsibility to the Chief of the Division for all political and psychological warfare matters that involved the following countries: Albania, Rumania, Greece, Yugoslavia and Bulgaria...I was of course in daily contact with the chiefs of the various country branches and it came to my attention that we were having considerable difficulty with our Albanian Guard Unit, I believe it was called, which was then located in West Germany. This guard unit had been drawn largely from the retainers of King Zog of Albania...That is bodyguards, members of his personal staff, probably some relatives...The Agency in fact, had been encountering a lot of difficulty with losing agents, Albanian agents who parachuted into the area. And as a result of the rapid disappearance of our parachuted agents, it became a matter of some concern to the Division. To the best of my recollection, the presence of a double agent or a penetration agent, in the Albanian guard unit was suspected, if not assumed. To that end there was some discussion, the details of which are no longer clear to me, about the best way to cleanse the unit of whatever offending individual there might be, the penetration agent. And I don't recall whether I was specifically commissioned to look into the method of cleansing, or whether it was a matter of my personal interest. But in any event, I inquired around among knowledgeable people in the Agency and it came to my attention and I hate, again, to be so indefinite, although I will speculate on who might have directed me to this particular unit. I was told that somewhere within the overall political and psychological staff there was located a man with a small office. This man's name was Colonel Boris Pash, and my understanding was that Colonel Pash had been doing business, let us say, with the Agency in West Germany for quite a while. I sought out Colonel Pash. I was directed to his office and I found sitting with him another Agency officer named [Martin Lazarus]. I'm not sure whether it is (Deleted).

Mr. Baron: It's a Greek name. (Deleted) is his correct first name, but he goes by (Deleted).

Mr. HUNT: Very good. But in any case, he was known throughout my career as (Deleted). And I was at that point on, let's say, a search mission to determine whether the alleged capability of Colonel Pash in 'wet affairs,' which is how it was referred to, that is, liquidations, would have any relevance to our particular problem of the Albanian disappointments. [By liquidation I mean] assassinations, kidnappings, removals, let's say. So I spoke to Colonel Pash in Mr. (Deleted's) presence. I explained the problem to him, although at that juncture I'm quite sure that we had not identified the Albanian suspect. So we were talking hypothetically. And I might say parenthetically, at this juncture, that it became clear many years later that the actual informant was Kim Philby, the British MI-6 Chief who was keeping everyone apprised of our Albanian activities. So in fact, we had no nominee for Colonel Pash's special attentions. However, I broached the problem on a hypothetical basis to Colonel Pash, who seemed to, he didn't pick up on it immediately. He seemed a little startled at the subject. He indicated it was something that would have to be approved by higher authority, and I withdrew, and never approached Colonel Pash again. This took place in Colonel Pash's office, which, to the best of my recollection, was in the complex in the old JKL series of CIA buildings along the reflecting pool. They have since been demolished. And in Exhibit Four here I give a breakdown, to the best of my recollection, of the PP staff at that time, which we can go into. I don't want to really interrupt the continuity of what I have to say, but just for clarification, so everyone will know what we're talking about, and who was situated where at the time. Then I can go into that apart from this, if that's all right with you. I should also say, and I'm sorry I didn't mention this earlier when I first inquired around for the location of Colonel Pash and his assistant, that reaction I encountered was a rather jesting one, and the impression I gained was here were a couple of men who were drawing salaries and doing very little. And so when Colonel Pash seemed reluctant to become involved in responding affirmatively to my questions, my inference was that Colonel Pash and (deleted) could well not have such a capability, but for the purposes of employment and status, this was the job they had. But they didn't want anyone to call upon them to activate their particular abilities.

Now that was my impression and I was a little disgusted by it. I think I talked to the Chief of the PP staff later, who was, of course, well aware of the Albanian problem and I said I didn't get any satisfaction from Pash, but it doesn't really make any difference because we don't have the name of the suspected individual.

Baron: Just to stop here for a second and clear up some of these details, were you under the impression that what you called wet affairs, assassinations, kidnappings or other removals from the scene of troublesome individuals was the primary function of this unit?

HUNT: Yes, in fact the only. As far as I knew, they had no other function. If they had another function I was never made aware of what it was...

Baron: Did whoever gave you the information about Boris Pash indicate to you that there were any other units in the CIA that could take care of such problems by means of assassinations?

HUNT: No. My distinct impression and recollection is that the function, if indeed it existed, and I believed it then to have existed as I do today, was centralized or focused in Colonel Pash and (Deleted).

Baron: Now what would have been the formal title of the unit that Colonel Pash and (Deleted) were running?

HUNT: If it had one I never knew it...as I recall my conversation with him was a relatively brief one. I stepped in the door, met him, saw (Deleted) who I knew briefly or at least knew him by sight, and I sat down and said we have this problem in the Albanian Branch. We may need somebody liquidated in Western Germany. Can you handle it if the day comes, or if it comes to that? And he seemed a little startled. I have already indicated that.

Colonel Pash indicated or said to me that it was a matter that would have to be approved by higher authority and as a relatively low ranking officer in those days, I thought he was probably referring to Frank Wisner. And indeed he may have. It never got pushed up to Frank Wisner's level because there was no direct approach or a request for such approval was ever made...Now his saying that to me was of course bureaucratically quite appropriate. There was nothing inappropriate in such a response. It neither indicated an enthusiasm for the proposal for that line of work, nor was it a washing of his hands. I felt that he was just glad that he had to reach for higher authority, that it was a deflection, and that he would just as soon not hear any more about it, not because of any moral consideration or anything, but simply from a bureaucratic point of view. He was comfortable where he was and don't bother me.

I left with the impression that Colonel Pash was glad that he wasn't going to have any business for me or that he had successfully deflected whatever approach I might be making to him because it would give him and (Deleted) an opportunity to drink more coffee and to draw their salaries from the Agency while affecting to do a job that they were perhaps not equipped to do.

Now again, that impression I had when I left was at variance with what I had heard before I came in, where I heard he and (deleted) or he at least had been active in West Germany in wet affairs, particularly kidnappings and that sort of thing. If not personally, certainly he could arrange to have it done. That was my distinct impression. Otherwise I would not have sought him out...I had known previously that he had been associated during the war with the Manhattan Project and that he had a security background...it was my impression that Boris Pash had been active a couple of years at least before I knew him in West Germany with the sort of thing that we had been discussing so far today...kidnappings mostly in West Germany and West Berlin..." HUNT'S overall impression after their conversation was that Boris Pash's function was to carry out assassinations "albeit reluctantly, because my impression was that he was a man who really didn't want to be disturbed. He was comfortable where he was."

When HUNT was asked to list others who were aware of Boris Pash's function: General Robert Cushman, John Richardson, John Baker (former Chief of the PP Staff), Milton Buffington, Tracy Barnes (former Chief of the PP Staff). HUNT stated:
