Greg,
On the phone, I mentioned work on a transparency project. One part of it is a simple explanation or "user's guide" for the H.4.1. Please do not share this with anyone yet, but you can see the mocked up web page here:

Fw: Mock-ups

Mike,

For the Transparency project that I mentioned to you last week, I wanted to send along the following mockups to give you an idea of what we might be aiming for. I think we're inclined toward the first link (which incorporates the next two). The fourth link is an alternate version that Jim was less enamored of.

If you want to look at that to see where we're headed, it might make it easier to see what we have in mind.

Give me a call if you have questions.

In advance of our meeting this afternoon, the links below will take you to some mock-ups for your review and possible discussion at the meeting.

<http://m-pubdev/monetarypolicy/default.htm>
Click on Policymaking in left nav to see category. Click on the feature to go to a main index page.

<http://m-pubdev/monetarypolicy/bst.htm>
This is how the current navigation would like in the page. We're not big fans of this approach, but I think you said there is a possibility that some categories could merge.
Click on Inflationary implications of expanded balance sheet to see an example of an lower-level page.

Subject Balance Sheet Transparency Website

All...

The Chairman recently asked the staff to develop a "balance sheet transparency" website that could be made available to the public and that would address many of the types of questions raised in the press and by the Congress about the Federal Reserve's policy actions over recent months and the associated implications for the Federal Reserve's balance sheet. Our understanding is that he may refer to the website in his testimony next Monday and that the website would be unveiled around the time of his monetary policy testimony later in the month. The Chairman sketched out a rough outline of what he wanted on the website and we have taken a first shot at pulling it together. The URL for the website is listed below. At this point, we would greatly appreciate any comments that you and your colleagues can provide. In particular, we would especially value any comments that addressed...

Greg,
We're working on the transparency website this weekend to get it to the Chairman and Vice Chairman on Tuesday. I'm going to be revising the page on the balance sheet today and was hoping that you could get me that definition of the interdistrict settlement account. Also, have you seen the version of the release with the pop-up definitions? Look under "Table 1 description" on this link.

I think it's kinda nifty.

Brenda,
Thanks. It was a loooooong, weekend and not in the good sense that every other federal employee thought of it as a long weekend.

If you still have time and inclination for helping, that would be fantastic.

<http://pubdev.frb.gov/ma/bst/monetarypolicy/bst14.htm>

This is the page on the H.4.1. If you think that there is a couple or three sentences to give more information on table 10, that would be great. It currently has "Title Here Text Here " as a holding place for an explanation

You should ignore tables 8 and 9 for now, they are being updated. That updating should be done in a couple hours, so if you have time this afternoon, say after 2:00, and want to look over the whole page, that would be great. It would be awful to get the accounting wrong!

Thanks,

Hi Greg,
If you email the specific edits to me this afternoon, we can implement the changes over the weekend ahead of the launch on Monday morning.

Greg, I am out today and can't access the website. If the wording is wrong or misleading, could one of you contact Julie Jackson to make an appropriate edit, please.

Thanks.
