as we see it

Broadcasters have had the right to editorialize ever since an FCC report in 1949 set down just how far station owners could go in expressing their opinions. The fact that relatively few stations have aired editorials since 1949 indicates how serious a step they consider it to be and how aware they are of the responsibilities involved.

At the Westinghouse Public Service Conference held in Baltimore last month, several radio and television station representatives demonstrated samples of the editorials they have broadcast. Most of them dealt with local problems and brought prompt action from the audience and from public officials. All the editorials broadcast were clearly labeled as the opinion of the station, just as printed editorials are labeled.

In Los Angeles, after several children had been killed in a private-school bus crash, a radio station's editorials brought a special session of the state legislature to consider laws making inspection of private-school buses mandatory. In San Francisco, a television station's editorials helped bring closer a public transportation authority which might solve that city's growth problem. In Miami, a TV station's editorials forced reconsideration of a life sentence imposed on a Negro boy for a first offense assault and robbery conviction. In Providence, R.I., a radio station's editorials spotlighting a nine-month-old supermarket strike brought action that ended it.

It is our belief that intelligent use by broadcasters of the right to editorialize can serve the public as vigorously and as fairly as do newspaper and magazine editorials. In the wrong hands, the ability to editorialize can be dangerous, but we believe that broadcasters will use the right carefully and that the audience will ultimately gain from broadcast editorials that are in the public interest.

NEW YORK Bob Stahl reports:

Feeling that the summer is a good travel season, STEVE ALLEN's bus sponsor wanted STEVE to stick with his NBC show through the hot months. They compromised, with STEVE and wife JAYNE MEADOWS taking off to Europe for eight weeks starting July 8. The show will stay with a new personality, not yet selected, subbing.

First, there is the treacly Santa Claus Type, or Groaner. Practically invented by Ralph Edwards, this critter inhabits the shows-with-a-heart—The Big Payoff and Queen for a Day. If you just broke your arm and your husband lost his continued job in the glue factory and all the children have dandruff, look up Bob Paige on Payoff, or Jack Bailey on Queen. You'll have a good cry.

Then there's the Screamer. He was born back in the early days of radio when Dr. IQ used to shriek: "And a Box of Snickers for That Lady in the Balcony!" Bert Parks is a Screamer and so, in a milder way, is Art Linkletter. Jan Murray, on Treasure Hunt, is a Screamer's Screamer. "That's right! That's right!" the Screamers scream, whenever a contestant correctly answers an elementary question.

And don't forget the Boyish Type: Hal March, Bill Cullen, Johnny Carson, George deWitt. These men are well past 30, yet they dimple and cajole. "Aw, come on, Gert!" they gush. "You're my sweetheart! Now, who hit 23 triples against lefthanded pitching in 1911?"

Finally, there's Jack Barry.

No Groaner, he; no Screamer, no Gusher—yet Barry, a 41-year-old former handkerchief salesman, might well pass as the very model of a modern major quizmaster. He's bland, affable, unctuous—and average. He also works hard, appearing five times a week as host of Tic Tac Dough, a daytime quizzier, and once a week as host of Twenty One.

In addition, Barry's rich. As a partner in Barry and Enright he earns a six-figure annual income, his share of profits accrued from the sale of such B&E produced shows as NBC's Tic Tac Dough, Twenty One and Dough Re Mi.

Perhaps Barry's success can be attributed at least in part to his attitude. He has an air of confidence about him (He once quit a $400 a week job as an announcer because his boss wouldn't make him an executive), and he is sanguine about his future.

"As for the future," he likes to say,

"just remember this: There'll always be quiz shows."

And how did Jack Barry reach this high estate?

To begin with, he was born in Lindenhurst, Long Island, March 20, 1918, the son of a man who owned a handkerchief business. In high school Barry led a jazz band, but after graduation from the University of Pennsylvania he deserted the muse and began selling handkerchiefs. He held this job until 1943, when, on a sales trip to Chicago, he was offered a spot as announcer on a local radio station. Barry took the spot ("I had a bad head cold—I was all out of handkerchiefs"), held it a year, then moved to a similar job in Trenton, N.J.—which he quit in a huff after working his way from $12 to $400 a week in a year. Soon he was employed at Mutual Radio in New York. There he met Uncle Don—and destiny.

For 10 years Uncle Don's program had been the biggest children's show on New York radio. Its proprietor, bluff and genial Don Carney, opened his daily stint with this ditty:

*Hello, nephews, nieces mine,
I'm glad to see you look so fine,
This is Uncle Don, your Uncle Don,
Hello, leetle friends, hello!*

These lyrics were addressed to the tykes in Uncle Don's studio audience, and it was Barry's duty to warm them up before the great man began to sing. He accomplished this aim by asking tricky questions of the mop-pets—and soon discovered that he was laughing harder at their answers than anyone else in the house.

Thus was born the idea for Jack's first quiz show—Juvenile Jury.

At Mutual, Jack met Dan Enright, his present partner. Together they blocked out Juvenile Jury and its opposite extreme, Life Begins at 80. Both ran for years on radio and TV. Winky Dink and You, Tic Tac Dough, Twenty One and Dough Re Mi followed. Barry and Enright became one of the leading show packagers in New York.

In many ways success has come easily to Jack Barry, and perhaps this explains his pervading self-confidence, a confidence maintained in face of the fact that quiz shows seem to be loosening the grip they once held on the throat of the American TV audience.

"Sure," he says easily, "there's no denying that quizzes in general have faded a little. But shows like Twenty One and The $64,000 Question are holding their own. Money's important, of course, but the game is what makes these shows stimulating."

Of his contestants on Twenty One, Barry found Harold Craig, the farmer, to be the most natural. "Harold," he recalls, "was the same man at the end of his run as he was when he started. This fellow could be Lincolnesque."

But it was Charles Van Doren, Barry admits, who first put Twenty One on the map. Before Van Doren appeared on the scene, Barry and Enright used to have to comb the sidewalks in front of their studio for enough people to fill the house. Since then, they've been turning fans away.

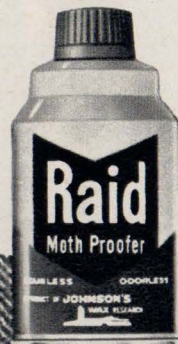

"He was the greatest personality we've had," Barry says nostalgically. "But Charles has changed somewhat—as anyone would have. He has lost that fresh, wholesome, starry-eyed quality. Now he's quite polished."

And did Barry, who is quite polished himself, think that shows like Twenty One and Tic Tac Dough served any more enlightening purpose on TV than that of mere entertainment?

"Mere entertainment? Well, there's nothing wrong with mere entertainment. Entertainment's the heart of TV. But I do think all our shows have stimulated the desire to become better informed. If I didn't think that—Well, I wouldn't want to think that we didn't do something useful."

o you "haven't a thing to wear." You've looked all over for a dress, but they're just not right for you. Well, you're in good company. You're just where Bess Myerson, Ida Lupino and Spring Byington used to be.

Some time ago these three found alteration charges were playing havoc with their clothes budgets. Bess, who is 5 feet 10, had a length problem; dresses in Ida's size had the "junior" look; Spring could not find clothes appropriate for her short, mature figure, young-at-heart personality.

In desperation, they began designing. Now each has a beautiful, well-fitting wardrobe—and Bess and Ida, who found a demand for inexpensive copies of their creations, have profitable sidelines to boot.

■ Bess Myerson (right) designed this sheath in turquoise velveteen to emphasize its paisley pattern.

■ Spring Byington's design (below) has a high bustline, 'marching' buttons for added height; peaked cuffs for arm length, and back panel for slim line.

■ Ida Lupino (left) combined the elegance of satin and the shyness of pink in this sophisticated, rose-clustered bustle-back gown.

Three stars who never say: 'I haven't a thing to wear' t's past midnight. On your TV screen an old-time cops-and-robbers movie shows a lovely young woman lying gracefully on the floor. Beside her is a gun. A detective stoops, wraps it in a handkerchief, stuffs it—hankie and all—into his pocket.

I

And throughout the viewing area, a hundred detectives sigh in exasperation, turn off their TV sets and go to bed.

Why? Because this fictional detective had effectively destroyed every fingerprint that might have been on that gun.

Here's how it's done on Desilu's syndicated series, Official Detective. The detective takes out a length of cord (detectives carry cord when they're out on a homicide call). Carefully, without touching the gun, he threads the cord through the trigger guard. He lifts the weapon by the cord and places it gently in a cardboard box partially filled with cotton. In case the prop man forgets the string, the gun can be picked up by inserting a pencil in the barrel. Or, in a pinch, with fingertips on the trigger guard only—not much chance of finding any prints there.

The actor does all this under the eagle-eyed inspection, off camera, of a real detective who has investigated dozens of real murders. For today the technical adviser is as much a part of Official Detective and other TV whodunits as the director or the cameraman.

In one Official Detective scene, an actress playing a policewoman had to flip a "mugger" because a man, with different muscles and bone structure, might do things differently.

Official Detective is particular about things like this. The series is based on actual cases from the magazine of the same name. The program is factual and the producers are determined not to ruin its stark realism with mistakes.

All scripts are sent to the "Official Detective Stories" magazine in Philadelphia to be compared with the published versions of the cases from which they were adapted, to check the accuracy of every detail.

So meticulous are the program's technical advisers that entire scenes have been retaken because of minor flaws. One script called for lab technicians in the background to "dust" a room for fingerprints as narrator Everett Sloane talked.

The cameras ground, Sloane talked. Then the advising detective let out a bellow. "No, no!" he cried. "Not there! Not like that!"

Everything stopped while the officer, a fingerprint expert, explained. In the first place, he said the actors had been applying "dust" diligently to a plaster wall, and fingerprints just won't be retained on such a surface. In general, a technician doesn't look for prints with his dust. He looks with his eyes and special lights and uses dust only when he finds one.

Official Detective keeps its technical advisers busy, particularly in the matter of guns. Weapons are tricky things, and gun fans are the sharpest of all perfectionists. Don't try to determine the size of a shotgun from a few pellets, actors are told. It can't be done. Don't find a single empty shell from a revolver. It's possible, but revolvers usually eject all their shells at once when the gun is "broken." Don't hold your gun in your right hand, pointed down, and try to smash a door open with your right shoulder. You can lose a lot of toes that way.

Pea-pickin'

Tennessee Ernie Ford is

—except about

phony 'Ernie-isms'

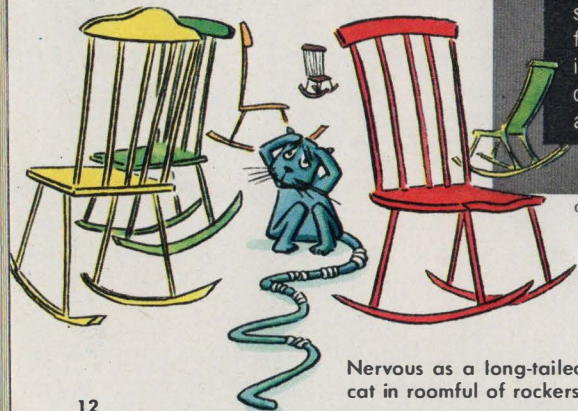

Mr. Ernest J. Ford of Moorpark Blvd., in Toluca Lake, Cal., resides next door to Mr. Bob Hope and was thus privy to Mr. Hope's financial status on the afternoon that the University of Oregon lost to Ohio State in this year's Rose Bowl football game—but not nearly as badly as Mr. Hope had expected.

"Robert," gloomed Ernie, "really lost a bundle. They druv him right into the ground."

Thus was born one more Ernie-ism for the book, an Ernie-ism being something said by Tennessee Ernie Ford. Ford himself, almost truculently, is the authority for the fact that 99 percent of his Ernie-isms are authentic ad libs, dredged up out of a Tennessee background to fit almost any given occasion.

CARTOONS BY ARNOLD ROTH

Nervous as a long-tailed cat in roomful of rockers.

Useful as a milking stool under a bull.

"Every once in a while," says Ford with true Southern emphasis on the "once," "the writers on the show try to come up with something for me to say, but you just can't make 'em up. They either come or they don't come. The big thing about them is that they're believable. Actually, I don't use them as often as people think."

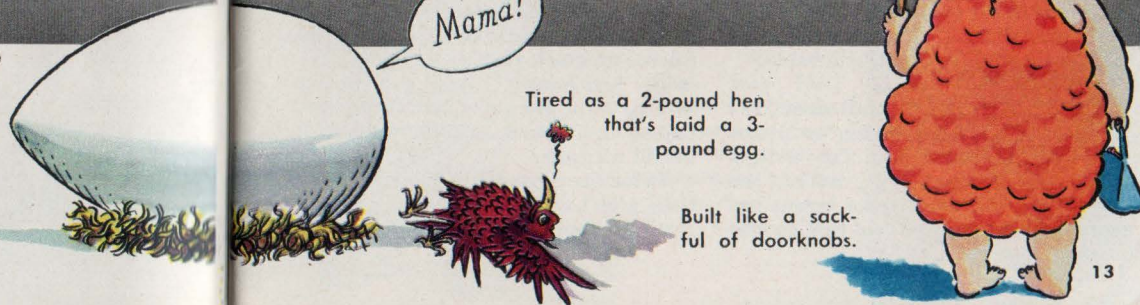

The first and perhaps most popular Ernie-ism was "pea picker," which Ernie insists doesn't mean a thing. "People just like to be called something, that's all," he shrugs. "When I was doing my radio show on CBS some years back, I got into the habit of saying, 'Hello, pea pickers!' to the studio audience, and they'd holler back, 'Hello, Ernie! That's all there was.'"

Born in Ford Town, Tenn., 39 years ago, Ford grew up with country people to whom back-to-nature metaphors and similes come as naturally as their Tennessee accents. "You'd say of a chronic complainer," he explains patiently, "that he'd get sore if they hung him with a new rope. Now, that wasn't meant to be a funny line. That was just normal conversation. You'd say of some young pipsqueak, 'You can always tell a new saddle by the way it squeaks.' Well now, that wasn't funny either. It's just like in another part of the country they'd say, 'Children should be seen and not heard,' that's all."

Ernie-isms have caught on to the point where people are beginning to compile them, most of the compilers being over-

Tired as a 2-pound hen that's laid a 3-pound egg.

Built like a sackful of doorknobs.

Ernie comes eye to eye with an Ernie-ism: 'Nervous as a frog on a freeway with a busted hopper.'

eager press agents anxious to capitalize on what might become a new fad. Shown one list of purportedly authentic Ernie-isms, put together by an overeager ad-agency press agent, Ford frowned at it and said, "I never said, 'Eager as an octopus at a milkin' contest,' and I never even heard of it. It doesn't make sense. It's not believable. I never heard of 'Nervous as a pucker on a guppy,' either. What's that supposed to mean?"

Ernie's two favorite "nervous" similes are "Nervous as a long-tailed cat in a roomful of rockin' chairs" and "Nervous as a frog on a freeway with a busted hopper."

"Now there," he says earnestly, "you got something. You put a frog on a freeway with a busted hopper and you got a frog in big trouble. It's believable. That thing about an octopus at a milkin' contest just isn't believable."

Ford generally waits until dress rehearsal before even trying to fit an Ernie-ism to a situation. The writers may make a suggestion, setting the scene, but it's Ernie who comes up with the right phrase. Told that he was supposed to feel worn out after a particularly vigorous comedy sketch, Ford came up with the line, "I feel like I been rode hard and put away wet." Any horseman would take that as a statement of fact rather than as a joke. "Flatter than a gander's arch" conjures up a perfectly reasonable picture of flatness to any country boy, while "useful as a milking stool under a bull" makes sense to almost anybody at all, including bulls.

One of Ford's favorites is "Hard as trying to sneak daylight past a rooster." He's irritated when it's written "dawn" instead of daylight, as it was on the agency list. "In Tennessee," he lets it be known, "it's either daytime or nighttime. Dawn is for poets."

Plain talking, Tennessee style, has paid off handsomely for Ford. It's been months since NBC took a chance on him after his five-a-week daytime show proved to be a success and threw him in against CBS's widely-publicized Playhouse 90. The latest ARB rating gave Ford—in political parlance—a dark-horse victory.

In Tennessee circles, however, it would be put a little differently. The competition, which was supposed to have been tougher than a hog's nose, is now squirming worse than a worm in hot ashes, while ol' Ern, who has caused as much talk as a new rooster in the hen house, is busy as a puppy in a roomful of rubber balls and contented as a swarm of June bugs in a barrel of mash.

As for the canard that Ernie's Ernie-isms aren't authentic, that contention is colder than a polar bear's nose.

he William Corcoran family of Sherman Oaks, Cal., is a typical, normal family in all respects save one: All seven of the children have been, some still are, professional actors and actresses.

The immediate star of the family is 14-year-old Noreen, who plays the role of Kelly in Bachelor Father, the CBS series starring John Forsythe. Her older sister, Donna, 16, was under contract to M-G-M for five years (between 8 and 13), and is now fretfully "at liberty." Bill, Jr., 18 and a freshman at San Fernando Valley Junior College, has given up acting after banking $16,000 and will study dentistry.

Of the younger Corcorans, Kevin, 8, has been on the Mickey Mouse Club and appears in the current Walt Disney feature movie, "Old Yeller." Hugh, 10, free-lances as a child actor. Brian, 6, and a first-grader, can be seen in "An Affair to Remember," with Cary Grant and Deborah Kerr. Kerry, 5, is also just beginning. But she has done work and been paid. She's a professional right along with the rest of them.

The Corcoran saga got its start back in 1947 when Mrs. Corcoran's health forced a move from their native Quincy, Mass., to Los Angeles. Bill Corcoran obtained a policeman's job at M-G-M. After he got to know the place, the grapevine reached him—a number of little girls were needed for a crowd scene in a picture. That was the start of Donna's acting career.

"After that," says Mrs. Corcoran, a plump, pleasant and energetic woman who runs her brood with a firm hand, "the rest of the kids just seemed to fall into place as they came along. Even Bill, Jr., took a crack at it."

10:00 5 9 MIKE WALLACE — Interview

Peter Ustinov

Wallace interviews Peter Ustinov, English playwright, actor and director. Though only 36, Ustinov has authored a number of plays, is currently starring on Broadway in his own "Romanoff and Juliet," and appeared on TV earlier this season as Samuel Johnson. Viewers have also seen him both as a quiz contestant and as a comedian with a remarkable command of European dialects. His movie appearances include "My Three Angels" and a portrayal of Nero in "Quo Vadis."

Wallace plans to ask Ustinov why he believes that humorists should be prepared to go to jail for their convictions, and why he contends that the best kind of humor is "subversive." Other topics of discussion may include Ustinov's opinions of Hollywood and American TV, why Ustinov considers acting an "economic crutch" and why he prefers to keep his performances to a minimum.

Atomic Timetable, Part 2:

Should atomic tests be stopped because of the dangers of radioactive fallout? Today's hour-long film, narrated by Edward R. Murrow, comes to grips with this controversial question.

Scientists are interviewed, including geneticist Hermann Muller; Willard Libby of the Atomic Energy Commission; Kenjiro Kimura, Japanese physicist; Merrill Eisenbud, chief of the AEC health program; J. Laurence Kulp, chemist.

Scenes are shown of a plane flying through a mushroom cloud; the underground detonation of an A-bomb; the Lucky Dragon, Japanese fishing craft whose crew became victims of fallout; microscopic films of human cells affected by radiation; experiments with animals and human volunteers; analysis of the strontium 90 content of a human bone; the measurement of fallout; and beneficial uses of radioactive isotopes.

Cameramen film fallout test at Hanford, Wash.

TO THE MANY FRIENDS OF

Many of you are concerned about the change in time to 8 o'clock Wednesdays (a school night, especially!).

In weighing the decision to make the change, we recognized that some of the program's good friends would be unhappy—and that distresses us, of course. But a program like "Beaver," which in our view is not so much a children's program as it is a family program suitable for young children to watch, deserves to be seen by even more people than now can do so. To be sure, we want the youngest to be able to enjoy it, but we also want it to entertain as many parents and older children as possible, and the change in time will accomplish just that. Believe it or not, only about half the people turn on their television sets as early as 7:30 Friday—while just a half hour later, but earlier in the week, two out of three homes have turned their sets on. Across the whole United States, this amounts to millions of extra homes... and, we hope, hundreds of thousands of extra families to whom we can demonstrate the values of owning a Remington® Portable Typewriter.

In its new time, some of our good friends are going to have to make a difficult choice. Naturally we hope that at your house the young in age and the young in heart will somehow find a way to keep on watching "the best new program of the year."

Hopefully yours,

The impact of 'Horror Show' emcees is becoming a national phenomenon

Three seasons ago station KABC-TV in Los Angeles introduced an eerie female named Vampira as hostess for a series of horror movies. Long-haired, sharp-nailed Vampira, in a shroud-like gown, presided over the film presentations, talked continued with her friends the bats and did her considerable best to create an unearthly atmosphere in the studio.

Like a good ghost, Vampira departed, after stealing a few headlines. But had this Ghoul of the Golden West realized what an awful precedent she was setting, she might never have crawled from under that slab.

Last fall, when the "Shock Theater" package of such old horror movies as "Frankenstein," "Dracula," "The Invisible Man" and various "Sons" thereof, started the rounds, stations set about digging up weird personalities to give the films that nice extra touch of spine-tingling horror—a spooktacular collection of leering, smirking, black-clad other-world characters.

These creeps (or more politely, hosts) have now become the tail that wags the dog, attracting more of a following than the films themselves.

In staid Philadelphia, for example, a weirdie named Roland (he has an unseen creature named Igor who devours mailmen) presides at WCAU-TV. Roland has really become a Frankenstein. When he held a reception at the studio, devotees blocked traffic for hours, carried away Roland's collection of shrunken heads and other trinkets, and threatened, for a while, to dismantle the studio brick by brick.

Roland (actually actor John Zachery) is typical of the "monsters of ceremonies" who spend their TV lives amid coffins, rattling chains, werewolves and other goodies.

On Chicago's WBKB, for instance, Terry Bennett has an assistant, a red-haired model named Dorothy Johnson, whose sole function is to scream. Terry rips off women's fingernails (false) and lights his cigarets with them. On one occasion, he cut out a woman's heart (slab of beef liver), listened to it beat and sent it to a Lonely Hearts Club. He also serves "shocktails" made of embalming fluid.

San Francisco's KRON has Terrence (Russ Coglin). During a showing of "Wolf Man," Terrence commented that his family "once had this problem but it hasn't shown up in my generation." He then slowly scratched his chin with a hairy wolf claw.

A Miss Tarantula Ghoul operates at KPTV, Portland, Ore., with the assistance of a rattlesnake, Heathcliffe; a shy tarantula, Sir Galahad, and Milton, a retired gravedigger who is the gardener for her haunted house.

Then there's George Byram, of KBTU, Denver, Col., who roams catacombs filled with madmen and monsters. He also has made himself disappear bit by bit and, while headless, has delivered commercials.

At WTVJ, Miami, Fla., Chuck Zink sets the scene with coffin, floating hats, grisly hands clutching the air. Among Bill Camfield's props at KFJZ-TV, Ft. Worth, is a "human heart" so realistic a cameraman got ill on sight. WMBD-TV's Milton Budd introduces Peoria, Ill., to his "son"—created by superimposing his own head in his hand. "Dr. Lucifer" rises slowly from a casket to greet WBAL-TV audiences in Baltimore, Md. WKBN's David Allen, his head suspended in an eerie mist, entices Youngstown, Ohio.

And on and on, to the stations that employ vacant chairs, disembodied voices, unearthly music.

Many of the horror hosts are adored by large and growing fan—or rather, fan-atic—clubs, have been honored guests at school social functions and have ratings that are the despair of their saner competition.

All of which proves something. Just what, we don't know.

By the thousands: some of the 13,000 enthusiasts who swarmed into WCAU-TV for Roland's open house. Squads of police responded to keep order.

HALF TALLULAH— HALF GROUCHO.

and Miss Gingold insists she is not the greatest cigar smoker
since Gen. Grant

As the baggaman entered her New York home, Miss Hermione Gingold, in mauve pajamas, was proclaiming something into the telephone.

"And furthermore," she concluded, "it is absolutely not true that I am the greatest cigar smoker since Gen. Grant. That's a lie!"

Miss Gingold, often seen on The Jack Paar Show, returned the phone to its cradle and began to throw shoes into a suitcase.

"With the dawn," she said airily, "I am off for Hollywood, where I have been cast as a witch in a cinematic version of 'Bell, Book and Candle.' In addition, I shall play a New York cafe society matron in the test film of a TV series for George Burns. It's called Theodora."

"I will, however, return to Jack Paar if he'll have me. I love TV. I almost invented TV in England, you know. We used to wear black lipstick and yellow make-up on TV over there. I always said television would never last. Whether this prognosis was correct, time will tell."

Born in the shadow of London's Old Vic, Miss Gingold was a noted Shakespearean actress before turning to musical comedy, motion pictures and television. She made her TV debut in 1953, when Ed Sullivan discovered her in the Broadway review, "Almanac," and beckoned. In rapid succession she did five Sullivan Shows and four Omnibuses. She was then placed on the panel of a quizzer called One Minute, Please!, in which it was her function to speak for one minute without stopping, on any subject that might pop into her head. She was later interviewed by Ed Murrow on Person to Person and took that occasion to inform the world that she is happy to have been named Hermione because "Hermione Gingold" on a theater marquee "is such a long name that there's no room for another name beside it."

"I'm the only Hermione I know," she said to the baggaman. "There's an Hermione in Shakespeare, of course, in 'A Winter's Tale,' I believe, but I doubt if we're related."

Speaking of Shakespeare, did Miss Gingold ever have the urge to desert comedy and return to the Bard?

"Now, before we proceed any further with this ridiculous discussion, let us get one fact straight: I'm not a comedienne. I'm a character actress. It's almost impossible for me to work with most comics. That's what I like about Jack Paar's show. Jack and Dody Goodman are easy to work with. They're really not comedians either.

"I don't get along with most Broadway comedians. I like it best when I can destroy them with an 'Oh, really?' or a 'My deah!' or something equally devastating."

Miss Gingold, once described by S. J. Perelman as "Half Tallulah Bankhead and half Groucho Marx," is an expert on humor styles in Great Britain and the United States.

"If anything, the American is quicker on the uptake than the Briton. One can afford to be a little bit off-beat here. I remember my first line in 'Almanac' in New York was supposed to be 'Ah, Mortimer, there's a terrible smell of gas!' Instead, I said, 'Mortimer! There's a terrible smell of stale diamond bracelets!' They loved it, but I don't think it would have gone over in England."

The telephone rang again and Miss Gingold plucked at it majestically.

"Yes, yes!" she sang out. "I'll meet you down at Schrafft's. The last time we were there, you may recall, you pelted me with raisins."

And at this point, Miss Gingold's baggaman stole silently away.

Frankenheimer directs Diana Lynn in Playhouse 90 drama.

TOP DIRECTOR
AT 28

Luckily, $1000-a-week John Frankenheimer turned down that $27.50 parking-lot job offer from NBC in 1953

y this season's end John Frankenheimer will have directed nine 90-minute TV plays for CBS's Playhouse 90. On each he will have spent an estimated 300 hours. For each he will have been paid something like $5700.

Frankenheimer, at 28, has established himself as one of television's outstanding directors. Such successes as "Forbidden Area" (the first Playhouse 90), "The Comedian" and "Winter Dreams" have been acclaimed. Similarly, since, in popular art, there are two ways of being outstanding, some of Frankenheimer's failures—notably "Eloise" and "The Death of Manolete"—are generally regarded as among the worst flops of the electronic stage.

Frankenheimer is one of half a dozen directors coddled by producer Martin Manulis as the guiding geniuses of the series' 3510 expensive minutes of dramatic entertainment per season. Like the others, he enjoys the privilege of selecting his own stories. Last season he directed 11 plays from 800 stories submitted, developing scripts to his taste, casting "compatible" stars and overseeing such production details as hanging a set with velvet walls at 6 A.M. after a night of rehearsal, as he did for "A Sound of Different Drummers."

He's a perfectionist, too, sometimes conducting conferences with colleagues all through the night. The futuristic ceilings on the sets of "A Sound of Different Drummers" were born at Frankenheimer's kitchen table at 5 A.M., when art director Walter Herndon suddenly cried, "I've got it! How about Chinese silk?"

Frankenheimer literally dreamed up the big face of Mickey Rooney that dominated the set in "The Comedian." "It was so frightening it woke me up. I realized it would dramatize the character's egocentricity perfectly if we put a door in it."

It is, however, the wakeful, daylight Frankenheimer, preoccupied less with dressing a set than with creating make-believe people, who is apt to enrich a Thursday night. "Actors," says producer Manulis, "love John. He digs deeper into character than many Broadway directors." What is Frankenheimer digging for? "The usual," he says. "Motivation. Sympathy. Excitement. What makes people tick."

Frankenheimer's $1000 a week salary and enormous prestige (says Dana Wynter: "I'd work for that man for nothing") are in stark contrast to his first crack at TV. Discharged from the Air Force in 1953 in Hollywood, he applied at CBS and was offered a job as a page at $35 a week. At NBC, he was offered $27.50 as a parking lot attendant. In New York he fared better—CBS paid him $135 as an assistant director.

Today Frankenheimer, married and the father of two small children, says producer Manulis is "the only reason" he remains in TV. "Ultimately I'd like to do one of two things: direct movies on my own terms, or else I'd like to buy a couple of cameras and take off around the world. A picture is a picture whether you take it with a TV camera or a Leica."

verybody is familiar with the tired old situation of the male lensman shooting the lady glamorpuss on the exotic bearskin rug. So here's what showbiz calls the switcheroo: Glamor-girl photographer shoots man. How to get the TV set away from the kids

Because my kids and their friends are always three deep in front of our TV set watching Lassie, Robin Hood or Popeye at precisely the time when I—the ostensible lord of the manor—crave adult TV entertainment, I must resort to certain subterfuges to gain possession of our set. Here are my methods:

1. Pull the electric plugs from the wall. The kids will come crying: "Daddy, the television don't work!" Scold them for burning out the picture tube—and for the bad grammar. When they go outside to play, reinsert the plug and quietly tune in Omnibus or Face the Nation.

2. Arrive early. Establish possession of the set before the kids can claim it. Insist on squatter's rights. (This will not always work.)

3. Bring home a fistful of comic books and write "Peter Houlahan" on each cover. Tell kids that Peter will be over in an hour to pick up his books. Kids will desert TV for comics and you can meanwhile watch The Great Challenge. (Drawback is that this substitutes the comic book habit for the TV habit.)

4. Make popcorn. Before the kids have a chance to spill it all over your furniture, send them with gift bowls of popcorn to the neighbors, to see TV there. Sit home on clean sofa and enjoy The Twentieth Century.

5. Explode a tremendous firecracker in driveway outside the house. Kids will rush out to see what's going on.

Slip into house, lock all doors, and take over. (This works only once, should be saved for an emergency.)

6. Establish chart and point system for getting kiddies to bed early: a gold star (10 pts.) for retiring at 6 P.M.; a silver star (5 pts.) for retiring at 7, etc.—and prizes to be awarded for certain quotas of points. (This system works only for a while.)

7. Try outright bribery. Offer kids two bits apiece for giving up their program. (Main flaw: Establishes bad precedent; can be expensive.)

8. Turn thermostat to 95 F. Sweat kids out of the house. (Uncomfortable—you may have to follow them.)

9. Operate spark coil apparatus in garage. TV set will crackle like gunshot, driving kids away. (If kids are watching an old Western film, however, your artificial disturbances may not be noticed.)

10. Bring home live rabbit. When "Mickey Mouse" program starts, let rabbit slip away on your lawn. Kids will chase it around the neighborhood. Relax and enjoy the opera.

As the reader can see, this list is merely a beginning. With imagination and talent, any alert parent can add to this repertoire—and to his viewing.

ickey Spillane's Mike Hammer could easily be the worst show on TV.

Mike Hammer is the hero of six novels by Spillane, which have sold more than 20,000,000 copies. They abound in murder, torture, sadism and assorted vice.

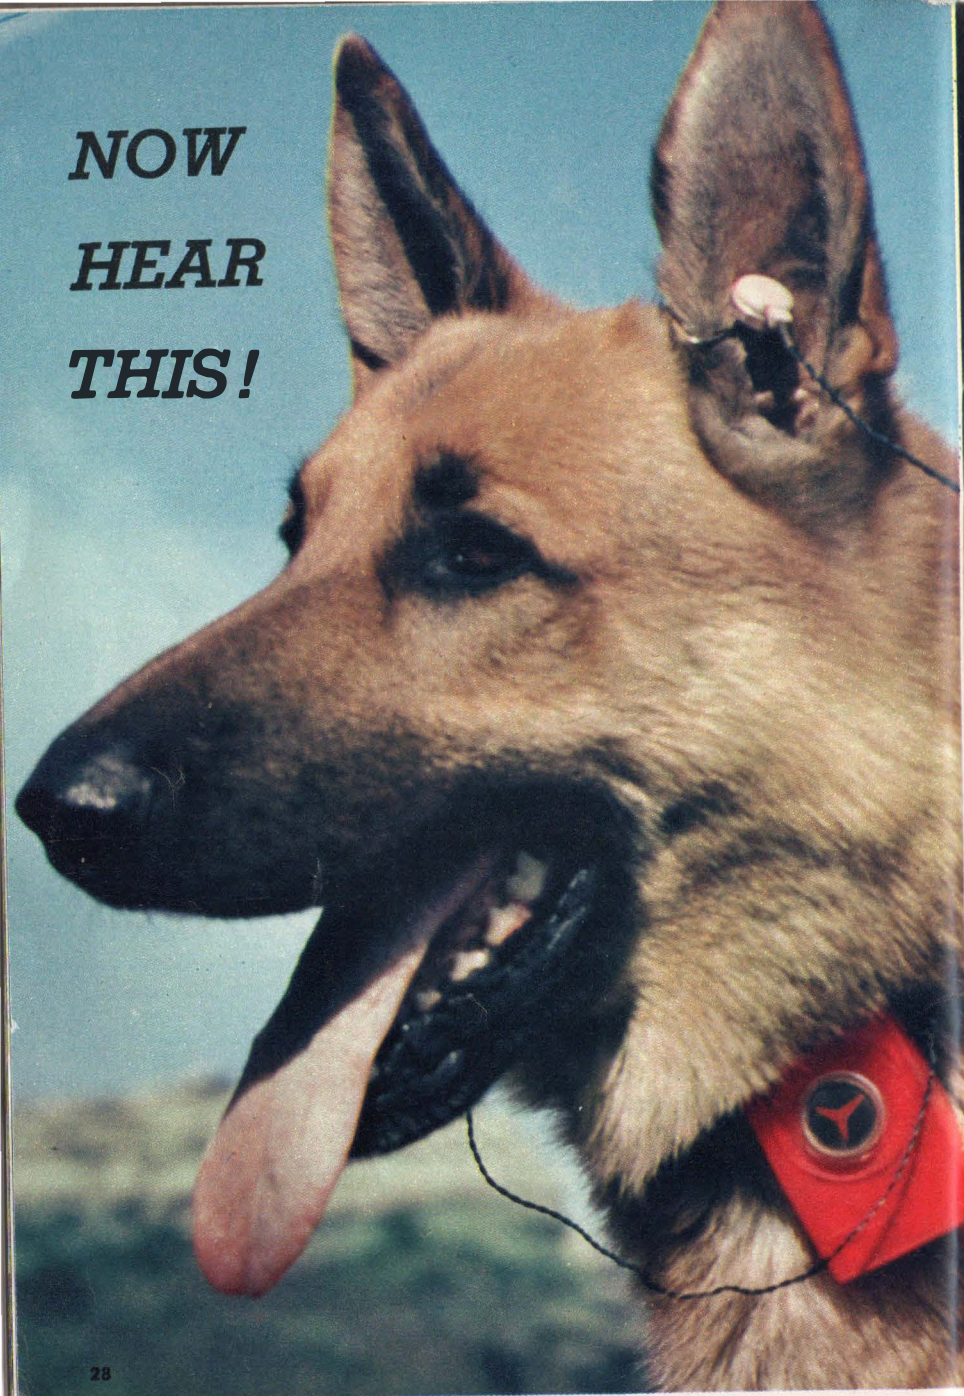

In his first adventure on the air, Mike got busted over the head with a vase. Then someone was booted down a flight of stairs. Mike later gave a blackmailer the works, made what appeared to be a highly successful pass at a married woman, and turned up too late to prevent a double murder.

In following weeks Mike got involved with a dame who put the lead to a guy on the waterfront, a chambermaid's boy who went rotten, and a dope ring—or a white slave ring, or something.

On TV, Mike is played by Darren McGavin, who looks something like Spillane. But Mickey himself says he had nothing to do with picking McGavin. Furthermore, attests Spillane, he had nothing to do with the show. "I just took the money," he says, "and went home."—F. DeB.

When Mike isn't killing people, he's kissing them. (This one's lovely Diane Brewster.)

commands from afar

hough the pictures on this page may seem to indicate it, Rin Tin Tin is not hard of hearing. The famous dog is wearing a tiny radio and earphone which enable him to receive instructions from as far as 300 yards away.

Conceived by two publicity men, Ed Fischer and Wayne Thoms, the miniature transmitter-receiver solves one of the most difficult problems faced in making pictures with canine performers—how to give them orders during the filming of “long-shots.” The animal trainer can’t shout effectively over wide stretches of ground and often his arm signals can’t be seen clearly. Now, however, with “Audio-Command” (that’s what Fischer and Thoms dubbed their 4½-ounce gimmick), trainer Frank Barnes merely has to speak in a normal tone of voice into a small microphone and Rinty, far off in the distance, will “attack,” “crawl” and “jump” as ordered.

Oddly enough, “Audio-Command” started off as a publicity stunt. Fischer and Thoms dreamed up the system only as a means of getting space about Rin Tin Tin in newspapers and columns. Then they suddenly realized their idea could be of practical use. They contacted a firm of radio equipment specialists, and described their notion. It took only a few days and less than $50 to turn the idea into a reality.
