The 'suggested programme' of the Sydney Musical Festival, to be held in May next, has now been issued in a skeleton form. In addition to 'two concerts of a much different character and two orchestral concerts,' the works to be performed are Elijah, Messiah, Dream of Gerontius, Faust (Gounod), and excerpts from Aida. Seventy-five professional players and 'twenty best amateurs' of Sydney will form the nucleus of the orchestra, and the choir will number 500 voices, including the best singers obtainable from local societies and choirs in and around Sydney.

At the Hôtel Métropole, Brighton, on March 2, a banquet was held in connection with the successful Musical Festival recently held in the town. Alderman Botting presided, and the chief guests of the evening were Mr. Joseph Sainton, the conductor of the festival, and Mr. Robert Taylor, conductor of the Brighton Sacred Harmonic Society. The latter, in an amusing speech, in referring to 'the musical landmarks of this watering-place,' recounted some of his experiences during the last forty-three years as a resident of Brighton.

Mr. William Short, the principal trumpet player in His Majesty's private Band, has just returned from his extensive adjudicating tour throughout Australia.

Answers to Correspondents.

While we are most anxious to answer questions to the best of our ability, we cannot undertake to send replies by post, nor can we give the names of teachers or concert-agents.

S. E. B.—With regard to the tune 'Crucifixion,' by A. Cnophius, No. 158 in the 'Methodist Hymn Book'—mentioned last month—we are able to furnish the following information: A. Cnophius was Andreas Knöpken (vide Julian's 'Dictionary of Hymnology,' p. 629), but he had nothing to do with the tune. As will be seen in the above book of reference, his name has been erroneously attached to 'Herr Christ, der einig Gotts Sohn,' which is noted in the 'Dictionary of Hymnology,' p. 271. The words are by Elisabeth Cruciger; the tune was published with the words in the Erfurt Enchiridion of 1524, but no one knows who is the composer. The tune is in Erk's 'Vierstimmiges Choralbuch' (1863), No. 103, and in Zahn's 'Psalter und Harfe' (1886), No. 237. If there is anything more to be discovered, it would be found in Zahn's 'Melodien.' We are greatly indebted to an esteemed correspondent for the above information.

M. E. A.—(1) Beethoven's Pianoforte sonata in D (Op. 10), first movement, bar 54, &c., Mr. Dannreuther, in his 'Musical Ornamentation' primer, says, 'Appoggiature, short; though Czerny directs them to be played long.' Thus you see that his rendering agrees with the Cotta edition and with Paer; on the other hand, as you say, Mr. Franklin Taylor, in Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians,' endorses Czerny's view. When doctors differ, who shall decide? We are in agreement with Dannreuther as giving the passage more character. (2) Heller's 'Promenades d'un solitaire,' No. 1, in F sharp, bar 34, after the change of key-signature, the last note in the bass is B sharp.

YARB.—(1) For 'humorous part-songs (or glees), not too difficult to memorise for amateur quartet, T.T.B.B.' try: Come away (Schäfer), The frog (Newton), Street music (Clarke), Three chafers (Trühn), The keys of Heaven (arranged by Elliot Button). (2) For easy instrumental trios, suitable for village concerts, see: Six Trios, 2 vns., 'cello, and p.f. (Corelli); Suite of five pieces, 2 vns., viola (ad lib.), 'cello, and p.f. (Purcell); Four pieces, for the same instruments (Dolmetsch); and Romanzetta, vn., 'cello, and p.f. (Smari).

E. J. P.—Your repertoire might be extended with the following bass songs: Rossini, 'Pro peccatis' (Stabat Mater); Haydn, 'Rolling in foaming billows' (Creation); Spohr, 'Woe, horror, grief' (Calvary); Mozart, 'Non più andrai' (Figaro); Benedict, 'Rage, thou angry storm'; Mendelssohn, 'I'm a roamer' (Son and Stranger); Handel, 'Le profonde vie' (Ottone); Rossini, 'Largo al factotum' (Il Barbiere); and Hatton, 'The ocean.'

L. M. G.—You had better seek the aid of a coach in preparing for the examination you name. It is not so much a matter of 'books'—though your teacher would advise you in this according to your state of preparedness—but of practical help and suggestions. The fact that you have passed the Cambridge Senior Local Examination in music should encourage you in your theoretical studies.

G. A. J.—No, the clarinet is not a supremely difficult instrument to learn. You should start on a thirteen-keyed instrument. This you could obtain from Messrs. Boosey & Co., who would supply you with a scale of ingering and a tutor, so that in far away Persia you could begin to teach yourself one of the most beautiful of all wind instruments.

F. H.—Bands for Boys' Brigades may be constituted thus: (1) drum and fife, (2) bugle, (3) brass, (4) pipe. When you have decided upon the form of the band—the drum and fife is most usual—you should write to Messrs. Boosey & Co. for an estimate of the cost of the instruments and for advice which they are sure to be willing to give.

ENQUIRER.—Dvorák's 'New World' Symphony (complete) published in three forms—(1) full orchestra, (2) pianoforte solo, (3) pianoforte duet. The Largo, of which there is an arrangement for organ, is scored for the usual strings and wind, in addition to horns (4), trumpets, trombones (3), bass tuba, and drums.

N. K.—Elgar's Symphony was produced at the Free Trade Hall, Manchester, by the Hallé Orchestra, on December 3, 1908; it received its second performance at Queen's Hall, London, on December 7, 1908, when it was played by the London Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Richter conducted on both occasions.

J. W.—Strings for all instruments—including your special one, the harp—should be good, and before being taken into use they should be kept air-tight. All strings are subject to strain and atmospheric conditions, thus their consequent deterioration in durability is obvious.

W. W.—As we have so frequently stated in this column, in order to obtain a reliable opinion upon the value of old violins, the aid of Messrs. W. E. Hill & Sons, of New Bond Street, should be invoked, who, in return for a fee, would supply you with the needful information.

CHORISTER.—We are afraid that your first question is in the nature of a conundrum, which we must reluctantly give up. The address of the Royal College of Organists is Kensington Gore, London, S.W.

H. D. R.—Bizet did not compose a Mass, therefore the 'Agnus Dei' to which you refer is an isolated piece. He also composed an 'Ave Maria,' and a 'Regina Cœli.'

ANTIPODEAN.—The following composers have written pieces for the viola d'amore: Ariosti, Hammer, Marais, C. Meyer, Milandre and Van Waffelghem.

S. K. L. E.—We are endeavouring to trace the hymn-tune of which you send the opening bars; if we are successful, the answer will be given next month.

R. A. H.—So far as we know 'The curfew' is the only piece for the organ composed by Edward Horsman, but there may be others.

CADER.—Kindly repeat your questions, and we will endeavour to answer them, though we do not undertake to answer abstruse interrogations.

SEMIQUAVER.—We regret that we cannot express an opinion upon the reliability of the institutions you mention.

M. E. G.—The Mass (or Communion Service) to which you refer is by the late Mr. Frank L. Moir, the song composer.

T. A. B.—The slow movement of Beethoven's first String quartet (Op. 18, No. 1) may be played at about quaver = 108, or 112.

M. R.—See answer to 'W. W.'

A few questions are held over.

The work of the orchestra included Tchaikovsky's 'Marche Solennelle,' the 'Peer Gynt' Suite, and Elgar's 'Sursum Corda,' in which the organ part was played by Mr. H. R. Souper. Miss Nellie Robertson was the solo vocalist.

The first-named work was heard for the first time in Dundee, and its performance created much interest; it was, on the whole, extremely well rendered by both choir and orchestra, the latter led by Mr. W. H. Cole. Mr. Stephens's ballad, conducted by the composer, also met with a cordial reception. The solo vocalists were Madame Agnes Nicholls, Mr. Cynlais Gibbs and Mr. Robert Burnett, and Mr. W. P. Fleming, who conducted the first and last-named works, may be congratulated on the successful result of his training.

HYDE.—Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion was performed by the Choral Society in the Mechanics' Hall on March 16—an ambitious attempt justified by a very creditable performance both by choir and orchestra (led by Mr. N. (FOUNDED 1741).

THE MADRIGAL SOCIETY offers TWO PRIZES, being the “Molineux Prize” of TEN POUNDS, with the Society’s Medal, and the “Society’s” Prize of FIVE POUNDS, for the best and second best APPROVED MADRIGALS, in not less than four, nor more than six parts, the upper part or parts to be for one or two Treble Voices.

The character of the Composition to be in accordance with that of Madrigals of the best style and form, with imitative part-writing; not a mere Part-Song or harmonised Melody.

2. That the signature be repeated at the head of each page at least;
3. That the intended “Tempo” be clearly indicated;
4. That the words, to be selected by the Composer, be written out in full on a fly-leaf at the beginning; and
5. That not more than one Composition be submitted by each competitor, which must not be in the Composer’s autograph.

The Madrigals to be delivered, addressed to the Secretary of the Madrigal Society, Woodside, Caterham, Surrey, on or before October 1, 1909, each Composition having a device or motto affixed thereto, with the Composer’s name in a sealed envelope bearing a corresponding mark. EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

This edition of Merbecke's Communion Service is based on Rimbault's reprint of 1871, after a careful comparison with a copy of the original edition of 1550 belonging to the Library of Christ Church, Oxford. The Plain Song is presented as nearly as possible in the form in which it first appeared, only such changes having been introduced as are required by the altered wording of our Prayer Book.

ANTHEMS ANCIENT AND MODERN
(134).

THE BIRMINGHAM GAZETTE SAYS:

"Should prove a boon and a blessing to the Church throughout the world. Surely there never was such a book in such a compass. There can be no doubt as to the brilliant future awaiting this most surprising book."

THE CHURCH TIMES SAYS:

"Great care has been taken in selecting from among the works of well-known composers those which have stood the test of frequent use and are recognized of standard excellence, whilst the new compositions are of such merit as to warrant the belief that they will win a wide acceptance. We wish for this admirable collection the cordial reception it certainly deserves."

THE MUSICAL JOURNAL

Regards it as epoch-making in the matter of providing congregations with good anthems at the lowest possible cost. Think of it—a hundred and thirty-four anthems for three shillings. The collection deserves a hearty welcome.

THE PALL MALL GAZETTE SAYS:

"An excellent collection, convenient in form, clear in justly both of music and letterpress, contributed to by composers of setting merited fame. We are assured it will meet a real need, and consequently receive a hearty welcome alike from clergy, choirmasters, choirs and congregations."

HELD UNDER THE PATRONAGE OF

HIS MAJESTY THE KING

AND

BY THE

WORSHIPFUL COMPANY OF MUSICIANS

AT

FISHMONGERS' HALL

JUNE AND JULY, 1904.

The Music Loan Exhibition of the Worshipful Company of Musicians was a great event in the history of that ancient corporation. At the same time it had a deeper import and wider significance by reason of its inherent interest. His Majesty the King graciously gave it his patronage and, moreover, headed the list of lenders. Notable collectors and others generously contributed to its completeness by the loan of beautiful instruments, rare books, unique manuscripts, fine pictures, &c., many of which had never before been exhibited, nor are they likely again to be gathered together.

Such Exhibitions, however, come and go, and leave not much more than a memory behind. Therefore it is all the more desirable that some permanent record should exist and be made available of so important and unique a display as that of the Musicians' Company. This desideratum has been supplied by the special illustrated catalogue announced for publication on May-Day.

This handsome Volume is divided into six main sections:—

|                |                |                                 |
|----------------|----------------|---------------------------------|
| MUSIC-PRINTING | INSTRUMENTS    | MANUSCRIPTS (Music and Letters) |
| PRINTED MUSIC  | PORTRAITS, &c. | MISCELLANEOUS.                  |

Every exhibit is not only fully and carefully described, but the copious notes freely scattered throughout the volume add to the interest of its subject-matter and increase the value of the book both as a treasured library possession and as a useful book of reference.

Illustrations—title-pages, instruments, portraits, &c.—and facsimiles form a most important and attractive feature of this édition de luxe Catalogue. The portraits include a photogravure reproduction of Hudson's full-length oil-painting of Handel, preserved at Gopsall and belonging to The Earl Howe; and among the well-executed facsimiles are autographs of Bach, Handel (a characteristic letter, of three quarto pages, written to Charles Jennens), Mendelssohn, Orlando Gibbons (the only known autograph of the composer), Henry Purcell, and others.

THE KING'S MUSICK

A TRANSCRIPT OF RECORDS
RELATING TO MUSIC AND MUSICIANS
(1460—1700)

EDITED BY

HENRY CART DE LAFONTAINE, M.A.

(Formerly Incumbent of Berkeley Chapel, Mayfair.)

This interesting and informing volume has been compiled from the inexhaustible store of documents preserved at the Record Office. From that vast, untilled field has been literally dug out a mass of information concerning the maintenance and ordering of musicians attached to the English Court between the years 1460 and 1700, an eventful period covering the reigns of the Tudor and Stuart Kings. Moreover, the transcripts herein set forth in chronological order furnish many details of the lives of old-time musicians. Thus "The King's Musick" is not only of interest to students of music, but throws fresh light upon an era of the art which is of great value to the historian of English music.

The editor of the volume, the Rev. H. C. De Lafontaine, has supplied notes on the Masque and on Costume, &c.; furthermore, he has had the invaluable co-operation of Miss Stainer in checking the entries and in compiling an adequate index, a most important and indispensable adjunct to a work of this kind.

"The King's Musick" is a monument of patient and painstaking research, and the book is one which renders signal service to the literature of English music.

TECHNIQUE AND EXPRESSION IN PIANOFORTE PLAYING BY FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

In the course of my experience as a teacher of the pianoforte, an experience extending over many years, certain ideas have from time to time suggested themselves to me which have proved useful—to myself, as enabling me to express more clearly that which I desired my pupils to understand, and to my pupils, as tending to facilitate their comprehension of the various difficulties they have had to encounter, at the same time leading them to perceive the most practical means of overcoming them, and thus accelerating their general rate of progress.

These suggestions relate to both the mechanical and intellectual sides of the study of pianoforte-playing, or, briefly, to Technique and Expression, the chief matters implied by the first of these terms being the production of various qualities of tone, the choice of suitable fingering, and the best methods of attacking certain difficulties; while the second, which may perhaps be more aptly designated the means of expression, includes rhythm, phrasing, variety and gradation of tone, the use of the pedals, et cetera.

SCORE-READING EXERCISES

BY EMILY R. DAYMOND.

PREFACE.

This second book of Score-Reading Exercises is intended for the use of candidates for the A.R.C.O. Examination, and for other Examinations which include among their tests reading from three treble clefs and a bass clef. The examples in which the notes are detached or grouped in an unusual way are specially intended to give practice in reading Choruses from ordinary Vocal Score, a process which the arrangement of the notes according to the syllables renders somewhat difficult. The Exercises are arranged in order of difficulty. E. R. D.

LONDON COMPETITIONS.

Kensington and South London are the first two centres in London to hold their 1909 festivals. Stratford (for Essex and the East and North-East districts) began on March 20 and continued its operations until April 3. The Girls' Clubs will sing on April 3, the Alexandra Palace Festival (Herts and North Middlesex) will be held on May 6, 7, 8, and that for East London and City districts will be held at the People's Palace, Mile End Road, from May 10 to 15. We report the Kensington and South London Festivals in our present issue. Stratford, where we hear the entries are highly satisfactory, will be dealt with later on.

KENSINGTON AND WEST LONDON.

March 2, 3, 4.

Originally catering only for female-voice choirs, this organization now includes competitions for mixed-voice choirs, orchestras and solo-singing, while the area appealed to has been considerably enlarged. It is matter for regret that musical organizations in this district of London are somewhat slow to recognize the benefits that are to be derived from active participation in the competitive movement. Only in the female-voice section could the entries on this occasion be described as satisfactory. It is gratifying to add that the excellence of the singing in this department provided an admirable object-lesson in the educational advantages of the competitive scheme. It is to be hoped that a like advance will soon be shown in the more recently constituted classes. A welcome feature of the choral and orchestral competitions was the compulsory sight-test that all had to undergo.

In the orchestral class Mr. Lyell-Taylor adjudicated. The test-piece was a Gavotte by Bach, and the result was as follows:

- 1st. London Diocesan Bandette (Miss Margaret Haws).
- 2nd. South Place Orchestra (Mr. T. E. Barralet).

Abbeville Orchestra (Miss E. A. Cattell).

In the sight-test, the Abbeville Orchestra were awarded the prize.

The choral test-pieces and results were as follows:

FEMALE-VOICE CHOIRS (not previous prize-winners).

Test: "The maybells and the flowers" (Mendelssohn).

Cavendish Choral Class (Madame Grace Evans).

S. Michael's Choral Class (Miss C. E. Denison).

- 1st. Soho Girls' Club (Mr. Harry Smith).

- 2nd. "School for Singers" (Miss Hilda Eastwood).

FEMALE-VOICE CHOIRS (open class).

Test: Coronach" (Schubert).

- rd. Soho Girls' Club (Mr. Harry Smith).

"School for Singers" (Miss Hilda Eastwood).

S. Michael's Choral Class (Miss C. E. Denison).

- st. Cavendish Choral Class (Madame Grace Evans).

S. Edward's Club (Mr. W. Holmes).

- sd. West Central Club Choir (Mr. Harvey Grace).

Soho was first in sight-reading and S. Edward's and avendish tied for the second place.

MIXED-VOICE CHOIRS (not previous prize-winners).

Test: "Go, lovely rose" (Gounod).

t. Barrett Street E.C.S. (Mr. W. Kendall).

- d. Cavendish Choral Class (Madame Grace Evans).

MIXED-VOICE CHOIRS (Sight-reading).

- 2nd. Mr. H. Scott-Baker's Choir.

- 1st. Mrs. Mary Layton's Choir.

Cavendish Choral Class.

Barrett Street E.C.S. Choir.

In the solo-singing classes the tests were:

FOR MEZZO-SOPRANOS.

"O Lord, Thou hast searched me out"

Sterndale Bennett.

"Love the pedlar" .. .. German.

"Rose among the heather" .. .. Schubert.

FOR BARITONES.

"Ho! Jolly Jenkin" .. .. Sullivan.

"Maid of Athens" .. .. Gounod.

"My love's an Arbutus" .. .. Stanford.

Miss Osborn and Miss M. Methven were first and second out of six competitors in the one class, Mr. R. Yates and Mr. J. Blackwood first and second out of three competitors in the other. The judges were: Dr. Walford Davies in the female-voice section and Mr. Henry R. Bird in the remainder. The audiences were small, a fact accounted for by the execrable weather.

The school teachers of the neighbourhood preferred to support a concert rather than a competition. This event was held on the evening of March 4, and it is gratifying to record that on this occasion a large audience was present. Under Dr. Arthur Somervell's direction, children from the following elementary schools: the "Fox" L.C.C. School, St. Mary Abbot's School, Portobello Road L.C.C. School, Addison Gardens L.C.C. School, St. Barnabas and St. Philip's School, and Buckingham Terrace L.C.C. School, went through a programme that included the following pieces:

"The Sabbath morn" .. .. Mendelssohn.

"Pluck ye roses" .. .. Schumann.

"Coming of May" .. .. Ethel M. Boyce.

"O lovely peace" .. .. Handel.

and seven national songs. The Addison Gardens School choir and orchestra also contributed agreeable items, and there were vocal solos. Mr. M. H. Atkin accompanied. During the concert the prizes were distributed by Mrs. Arthur Somervell.

SOUTH LONDON.

March 13, 15, 17, 19, 20.

This year's festival was held in the Town Hall, Wandsworth, a comfortable, if not very large auditorium. This is the fourth year of the event, and the entries constituted a record in the history of the undertaking. Last year it was estimated that there were 1,400 competitors, and this year there were 541 entries and about 2,000 competitors. Mr. T. Lester Jones is the secretary. He has earned the thanks of the South London community for his assiduous attention to the heavy duties of his post.

The forty-nine classes enumerated in the syllabus include solo and concerted singing, pianoforte, organ, violin, and violoncello classes, quartet playing, sight-reading, musical theory, the composition of a short piece for violin and pianoforte, and a prize was offered for a biographical sketch of Mendelssohn. The adjudicators were Mr. Henry R. Bird, Mr. J. T. Field, Mr. Alfred Gibson, Dr. G. F. Huntley, Dr. H. Walmsley Little, Dr. A. Madeley Richardson, and Dr. W. G. McNaught. The management is spirited and able, and therefore inspires the confidence of competitors. We regret we are unable to do more than briefly chronicle the chief results, which were as follows:

Violin Solos (under 12).—Siddartha Oliver.
Violin and Pianoforte Duet (juniors).—Winifred A. Evans and Isabel Hoare.

 for several years by the Y.M.C.A., having so greatly, it was found necessary to hand over to a special representative Council in the neighbourhood. The number of classes, thirteen, was on this occasion—the fourth—to thirty-one. The entries show great increases,

MORLEY (YORKSHIRE).

February 27.

For the second time the Morley Vocal Union, who have often been successful in other competitions, organized a festival of their own. The scheme included open classes for male and mixed-voice choirs, a local mixed-voice class, a children's choir class, and one for baritone solo.

The choral entries were highly satisfactory, especially in the male-voice section, which attracted ten choirs.
 The tests were: Goss's "Hark, heard ye not" and an "own-choice" piece. The winners were Todmorden
 (Mr. Harold Lees). They did not satisfy the adjudicator in Goss's piece, but did better with MacDowell's "From the sea." The Wyke Glee Union were second, and Leeds Musical Union (whose "own-choice" was Hegar's "Phantom Host") came third. For the mixed-voice choirs the test was Mackenzie's "The singers." Five choirs entered, and Bradford Vocal Union, conducted by Mr. Hiram Ball, won the first prize with Elgar's "My love dwelt in a northern land" as their second piece. York Centenary Choir came second, and Mr. Wilson Foster's York Select Choir third.

The six local choirs provided an interesting contest. They were more successful with pieces of their own choosing than with the prescribed test, Onseley's "How goodly are Thy tents." The Morley Baptist Choir were winners with Pinsuti's well-worn "The sea hath its pearls." Ebenezer Primitive Methodist were second, and Gildersome Baptist third.

In the elementary school choir contest Bridge Street C.S. (Miss Gertrude Appleyard) secured the first place, Westerton the second. Mr. Fred Clough was the winning baritone. Dr. E. C. Birstow, organist of Leeds Parish Church, adjudicated.

In the course of the evening the combined mixed-voice choirs sang Dudley Buck's "Hymn to Music," and the combined male-voice choirs Hollingworth's "Life and health to England's King."

BOLTON. February 27.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS' SOCIAL LEAGUE SINGING COMPETITION.

The competitive meetings newly organized under this title made a good beginning. There were four musical contests. Miss Nellie Hunt won the prize for solo-singing. Misses Mary Bradley and Eleanor Haslam were the successful duet singers, and Alfred Partington was the prize-winner for violin-playing. In the choral class, Victoria Wesleyans were the only competitors. The adjudicators were Mr. F. W. Jackson, Mr. R. S. Wood, and Mr. A. Kay.

PUDSEY. March 6.

The third festival held under the auspices of the Pudsey Mechanics' Institute Glee Society was highly successful, both in the matter of entries and as regards the attendance of the public. The scheme of competitions is varied from year to year. On this occasion three solo classes and one choral class made up the syllabus. In every section competitors were required to sing an own-choice piece, in addition to the prescribed test. The solo results were as follows:

|                       |       |                  |
|-----------------------|-------|------------------|
| Pianoforte (under 16) | .. .. | Marjorie Bakes.  |
| Soprano solo          | .. .. | Miss F. Verity.  |
| Baritone solo         | .. .. | Mr. H. Horrocks. |

In the competition for male-voice choirs, Bayley's "When evening casts her shadows round" was the prescribed test. Six choirs competed. Morley Vocal Union (Mr. S. Smith) were first with Cooke's "Hohenlinden" as their own-choice; Hunslet Musical Union (Mr. R. Pickard) were second with Whitfield's "Wide o'er the brim"; and Outwood Church Glee Society were third with Elgar's "Feasting I watch." Mr. F. James was the adjudicator. There were crowded audiences at both the afternoon and evening meetings.

MANCHESTER.

The good work which the Clarion Vocal Union is doing by cultivating a taste for unaccompanied vocal music amongst the working classes was exemplified here on March 13, at what may be termed a "semi-final" contest, held to decide which of the Lancashire choirs should meet those of Yorkshire and Northumberland in the eleventh annual contest for the Clarion Challenge bâton, to be held at Leeds on April 3.

The four choirs appearing in this "preliminary" hailed from Burnley, Manchester, Oldham and Openshaw, and each sang Dr. Rogers's "The river floweth strong," the result being that Openshaw (Mr. Chilton), Oldham (Mr. Chadderton), and Manchester (Mr. T. Corlett) were selected to appear in the final contest, Openshaw being awarded a prize bâton for the best rendering of the test-piece. The fraternal spirit which exists between these choirs was shown in the manner of judging, the adjudicators on this occasion being the conductors of the various Yorkshire choirs, thus returning the compliment of their Lancashire confères, who had already sat in judgment on the Yorkshire choirs.

SALFORD.

The twenty-third of the seventh series of Municipal Concerts took the form of a choral and solo-singing competition, and so numerous entries that a preliminary weeding-out process were adopted in the solo-singing classes. They were allowed to select their own songs, thus affording a long and varied concert programme. The soprano class was taken by Miss Maud (Barnsley), with Chaminade's "L'Été"; Miss Sargison (Abbey Hay) was placed first amongst the contraltos with Adrian Ross's "Under the tree"; Mr. George H. Griffiths carried off the chief prize with Blumenthal's "Evening song"; while place amongst the basses was awarded to Mr. Dalgleish (Prestwich), who sang Mozart's "Siegno."

Prizes were offered for both male and female quartets, but as there was only one entry for each class the prize was withheld. Chief honours in the male-voice section fell to the Lyric Male-Vocalists (Nelson), with Battye's "Child of the sun."

Though only three choirs competed for the "Frankenburg" Challenge shield (presented by the Corporation of the Borough), the contest was a very interesting one. The Salford Vocal Society, conducted by Mr. Blacow, proved the winners with seventy-five entries, followed closely by the Lyric Male-Vocalists, conductor, Mr. J. Sargison, with seventy-three entries. They were only separated by one mark from the Lyric Male-Vocalists, Glee and Madrigal Society, which, led by Mr. Corlett, carried off the shield last year. The prize piece was Elgar's "Evening scene." The Dr. Thomas Keighley, prefaced his awards with practical advice and valuable hints to singers and vocalists in particular.

DOVE AND CHURNET VALLEYS, ASHLEY.

April 29.

This is the second festival held in the district, and the year's event was overwhelmingly successful. It was held in a spacious marquee. This year the competition was held in the commodious premises of Denstone Lodge, Lady Florence Duncombe is the president and Mr. J. Sargison is the secretary. The adjudicators will be Dr. Thomas Keighley and Mr. Harry Evans.

WORCESTER COMPETITION.

A meeting was held at Kidderminster on March 12, in connection with the Worcestershire Musical Competition, which are to take place at Kidderminster on March 13 and 14. Sir Sydney Lea, Bart., president of the county, attended and gentlemen from the county. Sir Sydney Lea said that the county was honoured in having been selected as the venue at which the Worcestershire competitions were to be held. The competitions deserved to be thus supported. He was glad the committee were arranging for classes and lectures at work, and further that in the elementary schools was going on for improving the music. A. L. E. Griffiths described the aims of the competition as being to encourage choral societies and musical clubs in the county. No effort was more worthy than that for nothing did more to brighten the lives of the people than music, and village choral societies amongst the most useful social agencies. M. Bromley Martin (hon. secretary) said that the enlargement of the scope of the competition was a result in a large entry, and it seemed as if the county were being taken up with great enthusiasm. The subscriptions would amount to something like £1,000.

CARLISLE.

The report of this festival given in our issue of March 27, was reduced from press cuttings which, in some instances, transpired, were not correct. The heading "The Carlisle Choirs" should have added "and Church of England Choirs," and the "Cathedral Choir" should have been "Cathedral Voluntary Choir Boys" (the regular choir is not permitted to compete). "Farrington" should be "Fawcett," "Upperley" should be "Upperley," and "Triphend" should be "Triphena."

INCORPORATED BY ROYAL CHARTER, 1830.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND STRATHEARN, K.G.

PRINCIPAL—SIR ALEXANDER CAMPBELL MACKENZIE, Mus.D., LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.A.M.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC offers to students of both sexes (whether amateur or professional) a thorough training in all branches of music under the most able and distinguished Professors. In addition to receiving individual lessons in the various branches of the Curriculum, students have the advantage of attending the Orchestral, Choral, Chamber Music Classes, and the weekly Lectures on music and musicians. Evidence of progress is given at the Fortnightly and Public Concerts and by periodical Operatic and Dramatic Performances.

There are three Terms in the Academic year—viz., the Michaelmas Term, from Michaelmas to Christmas; the Lent Term, from early in January to Easter; and the Midsummer Term, from early in May until the end of July.

The Fee for the ordinary curriculum is 11 Guineas per Term.

A large number of Scholarships and Prizes are founded and are competed for periodically.

Students who show special merit and ability receive the distinction of being elected by Directors Associates of the Institution, and are thereby entitled to the use after their names the initials A.R.A.M. Students who distinguish themselves in the musical profession after leaving the Institution may be elected by the Directors Fellows of the Royal Academy of Music, and are thereupon entitled to the use after their names of the initials F.R.A.M.

Subscribers have the privilege of attending the Lectures and Public Concerts and of bringing friends in proportion to the amount of their subscriptions.

An examination of persons trained independently of the Academy is held twice a year—during the Summer and Christmas vacations—successful candidates at which are elected Associates of the Academy, and are thereupon entitled to the use after their names of the initials A.R.A.M. The syllabus is issued annually at Easter. Last day for entry for the Summer Examination, June 30; for the Christmas Examination, October 30.

An examination of persons engaged in the Training of Children's Voices is held in January and during the Christmas Vacation, and a certificate will be granted to successful candidates.

Prospectus, entry form, and all further information may be obtained on application.

F. W. RENAUT, Secretary.

“THE TIMES”

says of Macdonald Smith's teaching—“The excellence of his methods has been abundantly proved.”

You are not asked when you take up the Macdonald Smith System of Perfect Touch and Technique to understand anything of the science on which it is founded. All the scientific work has been done for you, and you have only to follow plain rules and carry out simple exercises; the “excellence of his methods” then appears of itself.

A Mus. Bac. says: “I would not be without your exercises for ten times the fee.”

SIGHT-PLAYING BECOMES EASY

ONCE ITS UNDERLYING PRINCIPLE IS MASTERED—AND APPLIED SYSTEMATICALLY.

This principle is that between the notes on the sheet of music and the muscular action of depressing the keys there can and should be a permanent association of such strength that the fingers fall automatically on the right keys at sight of the notes. This automatic association can easily be acquired by anyone after only three months of a quarter-of-an-hour's daily practice, and will enable a musician to play at sight any piece within his or her technical abilities. For a full explanation of this, write for BOOKLET (sent POST-FREE ON application) on

THE EHREMYER SYSTEM OF PIANOFORTE SIGHT-PLAYING.

The following is a report from a pupil after first lesson:—

Torquay, April 1, 1909.
“Dear Sir,—I have now finished the First Lesson, and I should like to tell you how delighted I am. It is most wonderful. I can already, after only 11 days practice of your System, play pieces that before I could not manage. I can't understand how it is—my fingers fall on the right keys by themselves. I seem to get the hands in the right form directly I see the chord, and that is what I could not do before. I am very glad I read of your System, and hope it will become widely known.”
I am, Dear Sir, yours sincerely,

THE 'SURPRISE' SYMPHONY AND A SURPRISE.

Welcome, great master ! to our favour'd isle,
 Already partial to thy name and style ;
 Long may thy fountain of invention run
 In streams as rapid as it first begun ;
 While skill for each fantastic whim provides,
 And certain science ev'ry current guides !
 Oh, may thy days, from human sufferings free,
 Be blest with glory and felicity !
 With full fruition, to a distant hour,
 Of all thy magic and creative pow'r !
 Blest in thyself, with rectitude of mind,
 And blessing, with thy talents, all mankind ! *

Haydn was fifty-eight years old when he paid the first of his two visits to this country. He came at the invitation of his friend John Peter Salomon, and arrived in London on New Year's Day, 1791. He passed the night under the roof of John Bland, the music publisher, at 45, High Holborn, whose shop stood on the site now covered by the First Avenue Hotel. Thence he removed to rooms, in a house that also no longer exists, at 18, Great Pulteney Street, where Salomon lived or lodged, and with whom he shared rations. Their landlord was an Italian cook, 'who gives us,' records Haydn, 'four excellent dishes ; we each pay 1 florin 30 kreuzers a day, exclusive of wine and beer, but everything is terribly dear here.' Later on our composer changed his lodgings because of the street cries which greatly annoyed him, and located himself in rooms amid the then rural amenities of Lisson Grove !

Haydn was welcomed to England in the poem by Dr. Burney quoted above, and he was received with open arms by all the concert-giving and musical societies of the day. Within a few days of his arrival he was invited to a Court ball, an unprecedented honour, since he had not been presented at Court. 'He attended the Handel commemoration in Westminster Abbey,' says Pohl. 'He had a good place near the King's box, and never having heard any performance on so grand a scale, was immensely impressed.' When the alleluiah chorus rang through the nave, and the whole audience rose to their feet, he wept like a child, exclaiming : 'He is the master of us all.'

A little-known incident of Haydn's visit to England is connected with Oxford. An advertisement of a concert to be given on May 18, 1791, by one Hayward, a member of the Music Room Orchestra in the University city, contained the following announcement : 'The Harpsichord by Mr. Haydn, from Vienna, who comes entirely to serve this Concert, and is returning to London the next Morning.' The day came, but no Haydn ! Not a little chagrin was thus caused, and three days after the concert Jackson's Oxford Journal contained an explanation in these terms : †

Mr. Hayward . . . is exceedingly sorry for the disappointment occasioned by Mr. Haydn's not attending the Music Room that Evening, contrary to a solemn Promise given, as he had actually said, he would be ready to get into the carriage with the singers, and Mr. Burtebart, who was to have come with him at an early hour ; but when the carriage went to take him up at Lisson Grove, near Paddington, he begged Mr. Torezani to acquaint Mr. Hayward, that he was obliged to attend a rehearsal of an opera that morning, but that he would follow afterwards in a post-chaise, so as to get to Oxford by seven o'clock. Why he did not come, Mr. Hayward will endeavour to learn, in order to give every satisfaction imaginable to the company present that evening at the Room.

On May 28, Jackson's Oxford Journal contained the following apology from the pen of the distinguished composer :

'Whereas at the request of Mr. Jung, an acquaintance of mine from Vienna, I faithfully promised to play the harpsichord at Mr. Hayward's Benefit Concert, the 18th instant (which day I had appointed myself), but was prevented from coming on account of a rehearsal at the Opera House, which lasted from two until half-past four on that day, I take the liberty by this paper to express the greatest sorrow for not having been able to stand by my promise. As the University of Oxford, whose great reputation I heard abroad, is too great an object for me not to see before I leave England, I shall take the earliest opportunity of paying it a visit, and hope at the same time to make a personal apology to those ladies and gentlemen who were kind enough to honour Mr. Hayward with their company.

JOSEPH HAYDN.'

At the ensuing Encænna (July, 1791), Haydn fulfilled his promise to visit Oxford, when he received the honorary degree of Doctor of Music, and conducted a performance of one of his symphonies, he himself giving the tempi at the organ. The 'Catalogue of all Graduates' contains the entry :

Haydn, Joseph, Composer to His Serene Highness the Prince of Esterhazy, cr. Doctor of Music, July 8, 1791.

For his degree exercise he sent the following composition, which he afterwards used for the first of the 'Ten Commandments,' the whole of which he set as canons during his stay in London :

Canon cancrizans, a 3 voci.

Thy voice, O har - mo - ny, is di - vine.
Thou shalt have none other gods . . . but me.

He also arranged the canon to be sung by four voices :

Thou shalt have none other gods . . . but me.

Haydn seems to have been very proud of his doctor's robes. He wore them at a concert given on the day after the degree had been conferred, and in response to a tremendous outburst of enthusiasm, he raised his gown as high as he could and said, in English, 'Thank you,' at which the applause was renewed again and again. 'I had to walk about Oxford for three days in this guise,' he wrote, 'and only wish my Vienna friends could have seen me.' In his diary he records: 'I had to pay one and a half guineas for the bell peals at Oxford when I received the doctor's degree, and half a guinea for the robe. The journey cost six guineas.'

The newly-created Doctor was soon elected a member of the then recently formed Musical Graduates Society, the history of which was given in the Musical Times of December, 1892. The records of that Society state that :

A new and illustrious member was then added to the list by the University of Oxford, who conferred the Degree of Dr. in music upon the celebrated Haydn, and it was with much concern to Mr. Callcott, who held the sixth meeting at Kensington Gravel Pitts, on the third of August . . . that Dr. Haydn's summer engagements prevented his attendance. At the eighth meeting, however, given by Dr. Dupuis, at Grosvenor Gate, October 26, the presence of the new member was highly gratifying to all.

In the following year Dr. Haydn gave his brother-graduates a dinner at Parsloe's, a well-known coffee house on the west side of St. James's Street. This hospitable event is thus recorded in the Society's 'account' of their proceedings :

Dr. Haydn, previous to his leaving England, gave the graduates his dinner on the 20th of June [1792], at Parsloe's, in St. James's Street, to which, at his particular request, Mr. Salomon was admitted, partly as the intimate friend of Dr. Haydn, partly as an interpreter, Dr. Haydn having not made sufficient progress in the English tongue.

Haydn enjoyed several excursions in the neighbourhood of London, and stayed with Mr. Brassey at his country house twelve miles from the city, where he gave lessons to Miss Brassey. On his return to town he had the honour of being invited to both the Lord Mayoral banquets at the Guildhall, the outgoing Lord Mayor on November 5, and the new one on November 9. Haydn sat at table No. 2 with Mr. Silvester, 'the greatest lawyer and first Alderman of London.' He further records in his diary :

The viands were neat and well-cooked ; wine of many kinds and in superfluity. The company sat down at 6 o'clock and rose at 8. The Lord Mayor was escorted according to rank and with many ceremonies before and after dinner ; his sword and a sort of gold crown were carried before him and there was music of trumpets and a brass band. After dinner the distinguished company of table No. 1 retired to a separate room to drink coffee and tea ; we other guests were taken into another room. At 9 o'clock No. 1 goes into a smaller hall whereupon the ball begins ; in this hall there is à partie, an elevated place for the high nobles where the Lord Mayor is seated upon a sort of throne with his wife. . . . Nothing but minuets are danced in this room ; but I couldn't stay longer than a quarter of an hour ; first, because of the heat caused by so many people being crowded into so small a room, second, because of the wretched dance music, two violins and one violoncello composing the whole orchestra.

Thence I went into another room which looked more like a subterranean cave. There the dance was English ; the music was a little better because there was a drum which drowned the blunders of the fiddlers. I went on to the great hall where we had dined ; the music was more sufferable. The dance was English, but only on the elevated platform where the Lord Mayor and the first four members had dined. The other tables were all newly surrounded by men who, as usual, drank right lustily all night long. The most singular thing of all, however, was the fact that a part of the company danced on without hearing a note of the music, for first at one table, then at another, some were howling songs and some drinking toasts amidst the maddest shrieks of 'Hurra ! Hurra !' and the swinging of glasses. . . . It is remarkable that the Lord Mayor needs no knife at table, as a carver, who stands in front of him in the middle of the table, cuts up everything for him.'

By invitation of the Prince of Wales, Haydn went to Oatlands to visit the Duke of York, then newly married. The Prince played the violoncello : all the music was by the genial 'Papa,' and his royal hosts even made him sing some of his own songs. By command of the Prince, Hoppner painted Haydn's portrait, which now hangs at Hampton Court Palace. Visits to Cambridge, Windsor Castle, Ascot Races, and Slough—where he stayed with Herschel and saw his wonderful telescope—were among the pleasant diversions of the master's first visit to England.

He attended in 1792 the annual service of the charity children held in St. Paul's Cathedral, and in his diary thus records his impressions. 'Eight days before Pentecost I heard 4,000 charity children sing the following song in St. Paul's Church. One performer beat time to it. No music ever moved me so much in my life as this devotional and innocent piece :

N.B.—All the children are newly clad, and walk in procession. The organist played the melody neatly and simply, and then all began to sing at once.

The above strain will be recognised as a double chant by John Jones, then (1792) organist of the cathedral. It appeared in a small oblong book entitled :

SIXTY | CHANTS | Single and Double |
Composed by | JOHN JONES | Organist of St.
Paul's Cathedral | and by him Respectfully
Inscribed to the | DEAN and Chapter.
1785. Price 5s. | Printed for the Author, by Longman & Broderip, No. 26 Cheapside & 13
Hay-Market.

At the back of the title-page is the following prefatory note :

The Psalms of David being either Rejoycing, Penitential, or Historical, Those Chants which best suit such sentiments are mark'd with an R, P, or H; but where the Psalms Change from Rejoycing to Penitential, in the same Morning or Evening Service Numbers XXX, of both Single and Double Chants are particularly adapted.

The chant which so affected Haydn appears in the above book exactly in the following form—that is to say, the organ part, as all the chants are printed in score with organ accompaniment printed beneath the voice parts :

No. XXIV.

R.

It will be observed that in bar 12, Haydn noted the melody differently from that given in the published version; also that as he wrote it in the key of E, it may be inferred that the organ at St. Paul's was a tone higher in pitch than that to which he was accustomed in Vienna.

Haydn left London towards the end of June, 1792, having stayed in England eighteen months, and having thoroughly enjoyed this his first visit to these shores.

HAYDN'S MUSIC-MAKINGS IN LONDON.

As already stated, Haydn came to England at the instigation of Salomon, who engaged the master to compose and 'conduct' (according to the fashion of the time) six symphonies at the subscription concerts given by Salomon during the spring of 1791. The advertisements of these important music-makings state that 'Mr. Haydn will be at the harpsichord and compose for every night a new piece of music.' The six concerts were given on consecutive Friday evenings at the Hanover Square Rooms, beginning on March 11, 1791. The programme of the opening night must be given in full, at least so far as the scanty details as published in the Morning Chronicle will admit :

PART FIRST.

Overture—Rosatti.

Song, Signor Tajana.

Concerto Oboe, Mr. Harrington.

Song, Signora Storace.

Concerto Violin, Madame Gautherot.

Recitative e Aria, Signor David.

PART SECOND.

New Grand Overture—Haydn.

Recitative e Aria, Signora Storace.

Concertante Pedal Harp and Piano Forte,

Mad. Krumpholtz and Mr. Dusseck.

Rondo, Signor David.

Full Piece—Koseiuch.

Mr. Haydn will be at the Harpsichord.

Leader of the Band, Mr. Salomon.

Tickets transferable, as usual, Ladies to Ladies, and Gentlemen to Gentlemen only.

The Ladies' tickets are Green, the Gentlemen's Black.

The Door in the Square is for Chairs only.

It will be observed that Part II. opened with a 'New Grand Overture,' at that time the designation for a symphony. In this instance it was No. 1 of the famous 'Salomon Set,' whereby Haydn so greatly enriched, by his inimitable geniality and melodic charm, the symphonic form. The Morning Chronicle, in an appreciative notice of the concert, said :

SALOMON'S CONCERT.

The First Concert under the auspices of Hadyn was last night, and never, perhaps, was there a richer musical treat. It is not wonderful that to souls capable of being touched by music, Haydn should be an object of homage, and even of idolatry; for like our own Shakespeare, he moves and governs the passions at his will.

His new grand Overture was pronounced by every scientific ear to be a most wonderful composition; but the first movement in particular rises in grandeur of subject, and in the rich variety of air and passion, beyond any even of his own productions. . . .

And we were happy to see the concert so well attended the first night; for we cannot suppress our very anxious hopes, that the first musical genius of the age may be induced, by our liberal welcome, to take up his residence in England.—(Morning Chronicle, March 12, 1791.)

Space will not permit of detailed reference to the remaining five concerts of the series, except to say that violin concertos were played by Salomon and Master Bridgetower (for whom Beethoven afterwards wrote the Kreutzer Sonata), and that on April 8, a Divertimento (MS.) by Haydn for two violins, two violas, violoncello, double-bass, oboe, flute, and two horns, was performed. An extract from a notice of the second concert, which the Prince of Wales attended, must be quoted as showing that there were musical critics of discrimination more than a century ago. The reference is to the symphony by Haydn then performed :

Every instrument is respected by his Muse, and he gives to each its due proportion of efficacy. He does not elevate one, and make all the rest contributory as a mere accompaniment ; but the subject is taken up by turns, with masterly art, and every performer has the means of displaying his talent.—(Morning Chronicle, March 19, 1791.)

Haydn's first benefit concert took place on May 16, at the Hanover Square Rooms. The sum of £200 was guaranteed to him, but the receipts amounted to £350. Among other music-makings in which the master took part during the first year of his visit to England, mention must be made of his setting of the 'Seven Last Words,' first performed here in its original version and under the composer's direction, at the King's Theatre, Haymarket, on May 28, 1791.

Before closing the record of this year (1791), two quotations must be given. The first is from Haydn's diary and simply reads :

Mozard (sic) died the 5th day of December, 1791.

The second, from the advertisement columns of the Morning Chronicle, shows how greatly Haydn appreciated the kindness of the English people :

Mr. Haydn extremely flattered with his reception in a Country where he has long been ambitious of visiting, and penetrated with the patronage with which he has been honoured by its animated and generous Inhabitants, should think himself guilty of the greatest ingratitude, if he did not take the earliest opportunity of making his most grateful Acknowledgments to the English Public in general, as well as to his particular Friends, for the zeal which they have manifested at his CONCERT, which has been supported by such distinguished marks of favour and approbation, as will be remembered by him with infinite delight as long as he lives.

THE 'SURPRISE' SYMPHONY AND A SURPRISE !

So successful was his first set of concerts (in 1791) that Salomon organized a similar series in the following year. At the last of these concerts — Hanover Square Rooms, March 23, 1792—Haydn 'conducted' his famous Symphony in G, known as the 'Surprise' by reason of the explosive and unexpected chord in the Andante movement. In his notice of the performance the musical critic of The Oracle ingeniously evolved a 'Surprise' programme of his own. He said :

Act 2d. opened with a first performance of the Grand Overture composed by Haydn for this evening. The second movement was equal to the happiest of this great Master's conceptions. The surprise might not be unaptly likened to the situation of a beautiful Shepherdess, who lulled to slumber by the murmur of a distant Waterfall, starts alarmed by the unexpected firing of a fowling piece. The flute obbligato was delicious.—(The Oracle, March 24, 1792.)

As to the origin of this 'Surprise' chord, it is said that some of the heavily-dining concert-goers of those days were wont to drop off to sleep during the performance of the slow movements of the symphonies. Haydn therefore decided to arouse them from their slumbers by his jocularity. 'There all the women will scream,' he is said to have remarked to his friend Gyrowetz, who happened to call on Haydn as he was writing this movement. So the story goes. But—that rousing chord was an afterthought. It does not appear in the original autograph! So far as we can discover, this interesting fact is now made known for the first time. 'What is your proof for this surprising and remarkable statement?' the astonished reader will probably ask. Here is the answer.

Haydn's autograph score of this particular movement (the Andante) of the 'Surprise' symphony is in the possession of Mr. Felix Moscheles. One day, during the present year, Mr. Moscheles showed his treasure to Sir Alexander Mackenzie, who at once detected the omission of the 'Surprise' chord. A few days later, Mr. Moscheles pointed out Sir Alexander's discovery to the present writer, who, on seeing the MS., said: 'I should like to reproduce this first page in the Musical Times, in connection with the centenary of Haydn's death.' With his usual kindness Mr. Moscheles then and there consented to the reproduction, with the result that our readers can see for themselves the original non-surprise form in which Haydn wrote the opening bars of the slow movement of his celebrated symphony. At the same time the facsimile furnishes one of the most interesting instances of an afterthought in music, one that is contained in a composition which has obtained world-wide celebrity.

Reference to Haydn's second visit to England (in 1794), some extracts from his diary while in this country, and his compositions to English words, must be deferred to a later month in this centenary year.

In the meantime, our best thanks are due to Mr. P. V. M. Benecke, Mendelssohn's grandson, for kindly lending the interesting portrait of Haydn, formerly in the possession of his grandfather, that forms one of our special supplements ; to Dr. W. H. Cummings for the signature of Haydn, taken from the title-page of the cantata 'Ariana a Naxos'; and lastly and specially to Mr. Felix Moscheles, Mendelssohn's godson, aforesaid.

F. G. E.

Scarcely any man can stand beside the great Mozart. I only wish I could impress upon every friend of mine, and on great men in particular, the same depth of musical sympathy, and profound appreciation of Mozart's inimitable music, that I myself feel and enjoy.—Haydn, in a letter written in December, 1787.

NEWARK-ON-TRENT

AND

DR. JOHN BLOW.

A trio of interests—historical, architectural, and musical—give distinction to 'The Key of the North,' for thus has Newark been designated owing to its strategic position. Its fine old castle, dating from 1125, has withstood three sieges. In the dark days of internecine strife, those grey massive walls must have frowned down upon the horrors of battle. Now, as one beholds this picturesque ruin, with the river silently flowing by, those same walls seem to smile at the little children playing on the greensward in the glorious sunlight of a perfect spring day. Here King John died in 1216, and in 1646 Charles I. gave himself up to the Scotch army. The latter event doubtless inspired John Jenkins to compose the instrumental piece entitled 'Nuwark Seidge,' one of several Ayres (à 4) by that prolific 17th century composer. The coda, in the minor key, is doubtless a lament for those who fell at the siege.

In another part of the town the halo of antiquity sheds its hoary rays over the Beaumont Cross. The earliest known date of this stone erection is 1367. The theory that it is one of the 'Queen

Eleanor' crosses finds support in the fact that the queen died (in 1290) at Harby, between Newark and Lincoln; and that the funeral procession, on its sad and weary journey to Westminster, probably passed through Newark, where the mourners and attendants could enjoy the hospitality of the castle, then and long after the property of successive bishops of Lincoln.

Should the visitor, as did the present writer, find himself at Newark on a market-day, he would gaze upon an animated scene in the spacious market-place. (See the illustration below.) Here he would find much to interest him beyond the buying and selling of sundry wares, and the tempting display of country produce, the whole suggesting 'the animation and colour of a mediæval town of Normandy or the Rhine.'

Two interesting literary associations are recalled in standing in the market-place of Newark. It was at the 'Saracen's Head'—where an inn of that name has stood from at least the year 1341—that Jeanie Deans stayed when on her journey to London (Sir Walter Scott's 'The Heart of Midlothian'). At a corner of the market-place were the premises of Messrs. S. & J. Ridge, printers and booksellers a century ago. Messrs. Ridge printed, for private circulation, the first book of poems published by Lord Byron. This was a quarto volume of sixty-six pages, published in November, 1806, and without a proper title, only a fly-title, 'Fugitive pieces,' and without the author's name. As objection was taken by the Rev. J. T. Becher to one of those boyish versifications, Byron recalled the whole impression and burned the copies in Mr. Becher's presence. Two copies only escaped the flames; one of them is imperfect, and from the other a facsimile reprint was issued in 1886. The poet very soon, however, prepared another issue of his poems. This appeared in a small octavo volume, printed by the Ridges, in January, 1807, and bearing the following title-page, &c.:

A MISERERE IN THE PARISH CHURCH.

POEMS | on | various occasions. | Virginibus Puerisque
Canto. | Hor. Lib. 3 Ode 1. | Newark: Printed by S. & J.
Ridge. | MDCCCVII.

To THOSE FRIENDS, at whose request they were printed, for whose amusement or approbation they are solely intended; these TRIFLES are respectfully dedicated by the AUTHOR.

The only apology necessary to be adduced, in extenuation of any errors in the following collection, is, that the Author has not yet completed his nineteenth year. December 23, 1806.

Only 100 copies were printed. Of these, one is preserved in the British Museum and contains some annotations in the handwriting of the poet: e.g., above the poem 'To a beautiful Quaker' is pencilled 'Whom the author saw at Harrogate.' Some earlier poems of Byron's were printed, on single sheets, by the Ridges, who also published the 'Hours of Idleness' (1807). At that time Byron was staying with his mother at Southwell, within easy reach of Newark, to superintend the earliest issues of his poetic muse from the press of Messrs. Ridge.

On the west side of the market-place is the 'Clinton Arms,' from the windows of which Mr. Gladstone in 1832 addressed the electors of Newark. He was then a young man of twenty-two and a Conservative in politics, but he succeeded in being elected to Parliament as the member for Newark, this being his first appearance at Westminster. Seven years later, in 1839, Mr. Gladstone presented an organ to Christ Church, then recently erected. A brass plate on the instrument reads:

Removed from the old organ in the gallery when the church was restored, 1880. Presented to Christ Church, Newark, by William Ewart Gladstone, Esq., M.P., November, 1839.

The worthies of Newark include two creative musicians—William de Newarke, in the early part of the 16th century, and the more famous Dr. John Blow. Of the latter more anon. The Patent Rolls show that in the first year of his reign Henry VIII. appointed William of Newark to be Master of the boys of the Chapel in the Hospice of the King, at pleasure, and in the same reign the office was granted to John Newark. Previous to this, William had been granted an annuity of £20 by Richard III. (1483). In the recently published volume 'The King's Musick,'* we find that 'William Newerk' was one of the 'Gentlemen of the King's chapell' at the funeral of Queen Elizabeth, wife of Henry VII., in February, 1503. In the year 1509 he died, having apparently held the office of Master of the boys in the King's Chapel for a few months, in which he was succeeded by William Cornyshe.

Seven vocal compositions by William of Newark are to be found in the Fayrfax volume preserved at the British Museum (Add. MSS. 5465). Their quaint titles are as follows:

The farther I go, the more behynde. 2 voices.
What causyth me wofull thoughts. 2 voices.
So fer, I trow, from remedy. 2 voices.
O, my desyre, what eyleth the? (Imperfect.) 2 voices.
But why am I so abusyd? 3 voices.
Yowre counturfeyting with doubyll delyng. 3 voices.
Thus musyng in my mynd. 3 voices.†

The sixth in the above list was printed by Burney in his 'History of Music' (vol. ii., p. 541), the first stanza reading:

Yowre counturfeyting with doubyll delyng
Avaylyth nothyng, an wote ye why?
For ye with your faynyng hath such a denying
To make a belevyng, nay hardly.
Hit were to grete pyte that women truly,
Hade so grete foly that cowde not tell
When that they do lye;
They speke ye so swetely and thinke the contrary,
That knowe we well.

THE PARISH CHURCH.

The architectural glory of Newark is its beautiful parish church. Dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, the fine spire of this stately edifice is familiar to all travellers on the Great Northern Railway. It is not, however, until the church has been visited and carefully inspected that its manifold beauties, external and internal, can be realised. The spire of the church is the same in height as the body of the fabric is in length (252 feet), and who can fail to be impressed by the magnificent series of great Perpendicular windows along the whole of the north side of the church, and the lofty clerestory which surmounts them? As has been well said, 'The elegance and grace of the whole design, the balance of its proportions, the beauty of its ornament, which yet refrains from all floridness or redundancy, combine to give the church a dignity and stateliness which is unsurpassed.'

Two fragments of an earlier church (Norman) remain—the unusual crypt under the present sacarium and the crossing piers at the intersection of the nave and transepts. The graceful tower, a splendid example of Early English, was begun about 1230, but as its final stage and the spire were not added until some ninety years later, the upper portion of this imposing landmark belongs to the Decorated period. In 1313 the south aisle was begun, and work was probably started on the nave in 1390. Not, however, until the close of the 15th century was the church completed, the last the parclose and rood screen is a handsome and imposing feature of the chancel. The misereres, dating from the first quarter of the 16th century, are twenty-six in number, and their carvings are of the usual grotesque designs. (A specimen is given on p. 302.) At the back of the altar is a series of thirteen cathedra, or stone seats, beneath crocketed canopies. In the centre of the cornice is a figure of the patron saint of the church, the Magdalen, holding the alabaster box of ointment. Two chantry chapels, dated 1500 and 1505 respectively, flank each side of the altar. One of them contains a curious painting, in two panels, known as the 'Dance of Death.' Newark can boast of one of the four largest brasses in England. It commemorates Alan Fleming, a stone of the chancel being placed in position in the year 1498. Newark Parish Church appeals to the eye as a stately edifice in which strength and beauty are blended in perfect harmony. There is an element of lightness throughout the building. If one part of the graceful structure calls forth admiration more than another, it is the chancel aisles, by reason of their great width and height—indeed, the chancel is a church within a church, and yet the proportions of the building as a whole appear to be perfect.

The fittings and ornaments of the church are worthy of their beautiful surroundings. Carved by Thomas Drawswerd, of York, and finished in 1508, citizen who died in 1361. This brass, of Flemish workmanship, is one of the finest examples of its class. Now placed above the north door, but formerly in situ (see p. 307), is an altar-piece representing the Raising of Lazarus. It was painted by William Hilton, R.A. (1786–1839), and presented to the church in memory of his father, a native of Newark. A reproduction of this picture in stone forms one of the panels on the artist's tomb in Lincoln Cathedral.

The church library is housed in a room over the south porch. It consists of a collection of some 1,200 volumes, mostly theological and of the 17th century, presented by Bishop White, of Peterborough, a former vicar of Newark. Some of the books, however, have disappeared, including a York Hymnal, printed at Rouen in 1517. This was found concealed in the choir on removing the seats when the church was restored in 1855, and unfortunately was sold by the churchwardens for £50, the proceeds being devoted to the restoration fund. There remains, however, a Sarum Missale, printed by R. Pynson in 1520; a copy of the London edition of the Sarum Missale (1554), and a Porteforium (London, 1556). The Sarum Missale, printed by Pynson, although sadly damaged in places, is a very interesting volume. There are manuscript insertions of names of saints in the Kalendar, and 'Bishop' is written in for 'Pope.'

A Mr. Darbie appears upon the scene in 1663, as the accounts record the following payments to that gentleman :

Expended upon Mr. Darbie in treating with him about the repairing the organe . . . xliiir. vid.
Paide Mr. Darbie in parte of xxvii. due to him for mending ye organe . . . xli.

It is quite certain that at the Restoration the organist and choir of Newark Parish Church were suppliced. 'A note of such church things as were delivered by the accomptants unto the churchwardens' (1660) contains the following items: 'A surplice for the viccer, one for the organist and six surplices for the six boys'; also 'seven towels that go about the choir.'

The earliest known reference to the organs of the church is found in the churchwardens' accounts of 1627, which contain this refreshment entry :

Ale for the organ mender ... .. iiijd.

In 1628 the payments included 'George Fishbourne, organist, xxxvs.,' and 'John Walker, dog whipper, iiijd. ; also

To the same, for pulling the organs ... .. ijs.

In May, 1646, the disbursements included :

To return to the organ of olden times. In 1797 a writer describes it as 'a disgrace to everything around it ; the case is painted with ruddle, and the pipes in front are as foul as time and neglect could make them.' Seven years later this instrument was sold by auction, judging from the following communication which appeared in the Gentleman's Magazine of February, 1804 :

I read an advertisement purporting that there was to be sold by auction at the Town Hall of Newark on Trent, February 16, 'A capital old Organ, in a painted case, maker's name unknown ; standing in the parish church of Newark, and consisting of the following stops and open diapasons, viz., principal, fifteenth, two trumpets, cornets, two flutes, sesquialtera (sic), and two twelfths. Further particulars may be had, and the organ viewed, on applying to Mr. Bridges-organist, Newark.

In the same year (1804) a new organ was built for the church by G. P. England. In his manuscript organ-specification book (now in the possession of the present writer), Dr. E. J. Hopkins gives the following description of the instrument :

THE ARMS OF THOMAS MAGNUS.

(From a drawing by Messrs. Sheppard & Lockton, Newark.)

This organ at first stood at the west end of the church, but in 1814 it was placed upon the screen, as shown in the illustration opposite. The screen was strengthened in order to bear the weight of the instrument, and some ornamental ironwork was added, the whole, including all the fine old woodwork, being painted white! In 1836 improvements were made by Bishop at the suggestion of Mr. (afterwards Dr.) Dearle, the organist. At the reopening service, in December, 1836, a local newspaper thus eulogised the performances of the organist :

Mr. Dearle's Voluntaries and playing were truly delightful. His spirited manner of playing the Chorusses, and his fine glossy tones, produced by great judgment in blending the stops . . . completely satisfied us that Newark can now boast of having one of the best organs in the Kingdom, played by one of the best organists.

At the restoration of the church, 1853-55, by Sir Gilbert Scott, the organ was again removed, this time to the south aisle of the chancel, where it now stands. Messrs. Foster & Andrews added some stops, and later on, in 1866, Father Willis rebuilt and enlarged the instrument, which now consists of four manuals and about fifty sounding stops. A further rebuild has now become necessary, especially in regard to the worn-out action. Sir Frederick Bridge has been consulted in this important matter, and during the present year the needful renovation will doubtless be carried out. In the meantime the specification of the organ may be deferred.

THE SONG SCHOOL.

In the year 1529, Thomas Magnus founded a twin educational institution, a Grammar School and a Song School, in his native town of Newark. He is described in the 'Dictionary of National Biography' as an ambassador, but he was also an ordained clergyman, and became an archdeacon, though in later years (he died in 1550) his 'duties were hardly religious,' and 'whatever religious opinions he had seem to have been at the service of the King.' With regard to the Song School founded by Magnus, Mr. A. F. Leach, in his erudite work, 'English Schools at the Reformation, 1546-8 (1896),' says: 'Of all the wealth of Song Schools which then existed outside the Cathedrals, the Oxford and Cambridge Colleges, and Winchester and Eton, all have perished, except the Song School at Newark, which, being a new foundation, or re-foundation, together with the Grammar School of Dr. Magnus, escaped being reckoned as a Chantry, and has survived, though in a mutilated form, to this day.' Mr. Leach significantly adds: 'How many Purcells have we lost, how many Wesleys, not to guess at Beethovens and Mozarts, for lack of the proper endowment of organists and of Song Schools!'

By his deed of gift Magnus gave certain lands and properties, therein recited, of the clear annual value of £42 8s. 4d., to be administered by trustees. Part of this sum shall yerely be payde and ymployde to and for the Exhibition and fyndyng of two seculer honest Prests whereof the one Prest shall have sufficient Connyng and Leryng to teche Gramer, and the other Prest Connyng and Leryng to teche playne Song, pryk Song, descant and to play at the Organs; and the said two Prests frely shal teche and instruct all Persons and Chyldren that wyl in Newark aforesaid come to Schoole with theym, and shal be dysposed to lerne Gramer, pryke Song, playne Song, and descant; That ys to saye, the one of the same Prests to tech Gramer, and the other playne Song, pryk Song, and descant And that the same Prests, or either of theym, shall not have nor take, or require to have, or take for his or theyr techyng any thyng, oneless yt be frely and liberally gyven unto the by the Frendys of the Scolers, or by the same Scolers in way of Rewarde, without any former Covenant or Promys except yt be for techyng to play at the Organs; Provided that the sex Cheldren hereafter mencyonyd be not in any wyse charged for the same techyng, or leryng to play at the Organs.

The scope and practical carrying out of the benefaction of Magnus may be gathered from some further extracts from the deed of gift. It resting to find that in addition to plainsong, ryk song' and descant, the children were to be instructed in organ playing :

That there shal be sex Chylder chosen apte and mete to be taught to syng, and they to be taught by the said Maister of Song Scoole their playn Song, pryk Song, descant and play at the Organs. So that their Maister and the sex Chylder, every Sunday and other Festyvall or Holy-day, be sent and do mayntayn dyvnye Service in the high Querre the Church of Newark aforesaid with syngyng and playing at the Organs.

St. Paul's Cathedral and St. George's Chapel, Windsor, were the models set before the Master of the song school in regard to the singing of anthems :

The said Maister of the Song Scoole, and the sex Chylder, shall nyghtly kepe our Ladyes Antyme in the saide Church in the Place accustomed ; and forthwith after that Antempne doon, another Antempne of Jhesus to be by theym solempnely and devoutely song afore the Rood in the Bodye of the Church of Newarke aforesaid ; the same Scoolmaister and Chylder Knelyng in manner and forme, as at the Antempne of Jhesus hath and ys usyd to be song before the Roode of the North Dore in the Cathedrall Church of Seynt Paule in London, and in the Colledge of Wyndesore, with lyke Prostrations and devout Maner.

The last quotation speaks for itself :

The said Childer to have their Heere of their Hedes long, and not polled, honestly and clene kept by the Oversight of the Maister of the said Song Scoole, who shall have the orderynge of the said sex Childer, as well in good and vertuous Maner, as in their Lernynge. The said Childer to be chosen, elect, and taken by the saide Maister, as he shall seme them apte in Age and their Breste for syngynge, all Affection and Favour of the same Maister in any wyse put aparte. And that all and every of the sex Childer aforesaid shall enjoie the said poore Rewarde of xxvii. viii. soe long as they doe sing in their Chyldys Brestys, and abide with their saide Maister, and do mayntayne dyvyne Service in the said Church, and not after nor longer.

The first master of the Song School was a Newark musician named Robert Kyrkbye, who is referred to in a deed of the town, dated 1507, as a 'singingman'; therefore in appointing him Magnus made choice of a local man. Kyrkbye, who held office for the long period of forty-two years, is buried in the parish church. His monumental inscription, of which we give a rubbing, has now found a place on the east wall of the vestry.

ORIGINAL SIZE  $7\frac{1}{2} \times 16$  INCHES.

(From a rubbing specially made for this article by Mr. F. Cook, Verger of the church.)

An early, if not the immediate, successor of Kyrkbye was Edward Manestie. To him succeeded George Ffysburne. In this connection it is of great interest to find that, in addition to the other subjects specified by Magnus, the violin was taught at Newark Song School three hundred years ago. An entry in the Corporation Minutes, under date 30th September, 37th Queen Elizabeth, reads thus :

That the day and yeare above wrytten Edward Manestie, late school mayster of the songe schol in Newarke-uppon-Trent in the Countie of Nottinghame, delievered upp unto the handes of Willm Standley alderman and the assistants of the same towne and parishe, the setts of singing bookes belonginge to the children querristers of the songe schol as followeth, all which was delivered unto the hande and custodie of Geo. Ffysburne now occupying the place of Songe School.

Imprimus five violine bookes with blacke covers.
 „ five songe bookes covered with parchment.
 „ four antheime bookes.
 „ two setts of Service bookes of iv. pts., viz. : viii. bookes.

Imprimus five mathringall bookes.
 „ eight setts of other olde bookes.
 „ five surplazes for quirristers besides one for the Mr.
 „ five quirristers' gownes.
 „ five violins, and there remayneth in Mr. Manestie hands an antheime of service, which is writt against and by him and is to be delivered the alderman for the schol.

Space will not admit of detailed accounts of those who have held the office of Master of the Song School—an appointment which carries with it the organistship of the parish church—and it is doubtful if a complete list exists. Among the more distinguished of the Masters are Saml Wise, afterwards organist of St. Mary's Church Nottingham, the composer of some instrumental music; Lloyd Rayner, afterwards organist Lincoln Cathedral, where he was 'arraigned as reproved for playing one anthem while Mr. Bim was singing another'; John Alcock, appointed at the age of seventeen and a son of Dr. John Alcock of Lichfield Cathedral; Thomas Jackson, who chants and hymn-tunes have found a place in most collections ; John Calah, afterwards organist of Peterborough Cathedral ; Edward Dearle, from 1835 to 1864 ; and Samuel Reay, composer of 'The dawn of day,' from 1864 to 1901.

Mr. William Thompson Wright, the present holder of the office, is a native of Southwell, of which his father was, and his brother, the Rev. Joseph Wright is, the headmaster of the Grammar School there. Mr. Wright began his musical career as a chorister of Southwell Cathedral, and became an articled pupil of the organist, Mr. Arthur Marriott. He then studied for three years at the Royal College of Music, and was for a short time organist and choirmaster of Homsey Parish Church. In 1889 he became organist of St. Leonard's Church, Newark, a post he resigned upon being appointed to the parish church in 1903. Mr. Wright is also assistant-organist of Southwell Cathedral.

The Song School at Newark no longer exists as founded by Magnus nearly four hundred years ago. The funds have been largely used for the Grammar School side of the original benefaction ; this, and some irregular dealings in years gone by with the land which yielded the income, have practically proved the death-blow to a benevolent foundation which had such splendid potentialities. At the present time the endowments provide (1) a house, in which there is a practice-room for the church choir, called the Song School, rent free for the organist of the parish church—unique perhaps in

DR. JOHN BLOW.

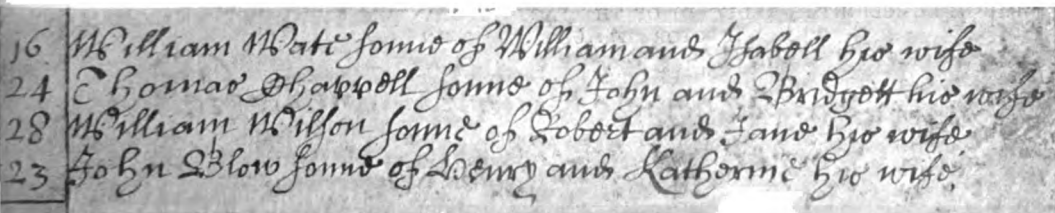

Was Dr. John Blow a native of Newark ? The answer to this question would appear to be in the affirmative. Mr. Thomas M. Blagg, a zealous and well-informed antiquary of Newark, was the first to mention the famous musician as a Novarcensian. In a letter he wrote to the Athenaeum of December 7, 1891—duly commented upon in the Musical Times of January, 1902, p. 30—Mr. Blagg stated that he had been working at the registers of Newark Parish Church, with the result that he had found marriage and baptismal entries which go far to prove the point he had raised.

The entries are as follows :

FACSIMILE (SLIGHTLY REDUCED) OF THE FACULTY GRANTING THE LAMBETH DEGREE OF DOCTOR OF MUSICK TO JOHN BLOW.

Unfortunately no list of Song School boys has been kept, but it may be assumed that Master Blow was educated under the auspices of the Magnus foundation. Moreover, it may further be assumed that, at the Restoration, Captain Henry Cooke, Master of the Children of the Chapels Royal, raided the country in order to recruit the King's choir, as he was fully entitled to do by royal warrant or custom. Captain Cooke perchance made his way to Newark, then famous for its Song School, and having found a clever boy in Master Blow, brought him away to London.

Dr. W. H. Cummings may be credited with having clinched the matter, so far as at present it can be clinched, in the researches he made for his recent paper on Dr. Blow, read before the Musical Association. He called attention to the words 'of Newark' in connection with the Lambeth degree of Doctor of Music conferred, during a vacancy in the Archbishopial See, on John Blow, of Newark, by Dr. John Tillotson, Dean of Canterbury, on December 10, 1677.

By the special and kind permission of the Master of the Faculties, Sir Lewis Tonna Dibdin, K.C., D.C.L., we are enabled to give a photograph of the faculty which granted the degree. With the exception that the original contains this marginal note, 'facultas Joanni Blow pro gradu doctoris in Musica,' a facsimile of the faculty appears on the opposite page. Although the evidence is not wholly conclusive, there seems very little doubt that Dr. John Blow was born at the interesting old town of Newark-on-Trent.*

For valued help in the preparation of this article the best thanks of the writer are tendered to Mr. T. M. Blagg, F.S.A., Mr. George Sheppard, Borough Surveyor of Newark, and Mr. W. T. Wright, organist of the parish church; also to Mr. T. Richards for his excellent photographs.

Occasional Notes.

The recent performances by the students of the Guildhall School of Music (recorded in our last issue) of Hérold's chef-d'œuvre 'Le Pré aux Clercs' suggests a note on the history of that opera, from information kindly furnished by an old opera-goer. 'Le Pré aux Clercs,' written by Planard on a tale of Merimée and composed by Louis Joseph Ferdinand Hérold (1791-1833), was for many years one of the most popular works ever performed at the Opéra Comique, Paris. Produced on December 15, 1832, the opera was from the very first a great success, a success of which the gifted composer only enjoyed the first-fruits, as he died at the early age of forty-two, on January 19, 1833. On October 10, 1871, the 1,000th presentation of the opera took place at the Salle Favart, Paris, with the rentrée of Madame Carvalho and the début of the tenor Duchesne, who had previously served in the Franco-German war. In 1875, Mlle. Marguerite Chapuy—the original Micaela in 'Carmen'—made a great success as Isabelle. 'Le Pré aux Clercs' again inaugurated the theatre on its becoming the property of the State in 1879, with Mlle. Billbaut-Vauchelet as a valued member of the cast. The opera was played for the 1,482nd time at the Théâtre des Nations, now the Sarah Bernhardt Théâtre, at the centenary of Hérold, but in 1898 the work was withdrawn from the répertoire after 1,589 performances. We believe, however, that it is now played at the Trianon-Lyrique, but not at the Opéra-Comique.

In this country 'Le Pré aux Clercs' received its first representation at the Adelphi Theatre on September 9, 1833, in English, and called 'The Court Masque, or Richmond in the olden time,' the locale being shifted to England, temp. Henry VIII. The adaptation was attributed to Planché, but according to the list of works given in his testimonial edition of extravaganzas, he was responsible for the songs only. William Hawes 'arranged' the music. The cast included Miss Novello, presumably Cecilia, afterwards Mrs. Serle. On April 1, 1834, it was given at Covent Garden as 'The Challenge,' the lyrics again by Planché, the adapter unknown, this time keeping to the original locale. The part of the Queen was taken by Miss Inverarity, of whom Thackeray said that 'her mouth was big enough to sing a duet.' As usual the opera was spoiled by the interpolation of songs by inferior composers—e.g., Blangini and Tom Cooke. The Athenæum, however, praised Planché for the deft way in which he had fitted the English words to the music. Two revivals in the French language have to be recorded (1) St. James's Theatre, under Mitchell, May 2, 1849; and (2) at the Gaiety, under John Hollingshead, on June 15, 1875. On June 26, 1880, 'Le Pré aux Clercs' was given at Covent Garden in Italian with Albani as Isabelle. A ballet was interpolated, the music of which was by an inferior hand, Mr. Gye being evidently ignorant of the fact that Hérold had written, with great success, the music for several ballets at the Opéra, notably 'The Sleeping Beauty,' the Naiad dance of which was one of the early successes of Taglioni in this country. The whole ballet was successfully given at Drury Lane, February 13, 1833, when Pauline Duvernoy, afterwards Mrs. Lyne Stephens, made her début in this country.

The Musical League announces that the first festival under its auspices will be held at the Philharmonic Hall, Liverpool, on September 23, 24, and 25, when the programmes will consist chiefly of the works of living British composers. M.M. Debussy, Vincent d'Indy, Max Schillings and Gustav Mahler have promised to give their support and to endeavour to be present to conduct works of their own. The Liverpool Welsh Choral Union, under Mr. Harry Evans, will undertake the choral works that are to be performed. The committee of the League has been much strengthened, and the secretary is Mr. Norman O'Neill, 4, Pembroke Villas, Kensington, W.

Messrs. Breitkopf & Härtel have recently discovered among some old papers in their archives at Leipsic the parts of two Violin concertos by Haydn. It appears that these parts (in manuscript) have been lying on their premises, unknown to themselves, for 140 years! The concertos are now published for the first time. Messrs. Breitkopf & Härtel state that about the middle of the 18th century Johann Gottlieb Immanuel Breitkopf, son of the founder of the firm, had instituted a library of orchestral material (MS.) of which the works now discovered formed a part. Haydn composed this pair of concertos between the years 1766 and 1769 for his friend Luigi Tomasini, leader of the Esterhazy Orchestra, and that in a MS. catalogue of his works in the master's own writing, one of the pieces is referred to as 'Concerto per il Violino, ex C, fatto per il Luigi.' The Adagios of the concertos are said to be equal to the finest movements of their kind that Haydn ever wrote. It is a remarkable coincidence that these important additions to violin literature should have been discovered and published for the first time during this centenary year of the composer's death.

The Finnish Senate, which has power to award each year prizes varying from £60 to £240 to authors and artists, has this year voted an annual life pension of £200 to Finland's foremost composer, Jean Sibelius.

* A biographical sketch of Dr. Blow, with special portrait, appeared in the Musical Times of February, 1902.

Mr. Maclean Borthwick writes from Glasgow as follows:

Your remarks in last month's issue on Bach performances in Scottish churches ought to be supplemented by some reference to a recital of the 'St. Matthew' Passion which took place in Wellington United Free Church here on Wednesday, March 24, under the baton of Mr. J. B. Ritchie. Full credit for a highly successful performance is however principally due to the talented organist and choirmaster of the church, Mr. Fred Turner, whose heart and soul were in the work from beginning to end, and who not only trained the chorus (about 120 voices) throughout the winter, but played all the accompaniments to the choruses and solos on the organ at the actual performance. When it is pointed out that Mr. Turner is blind, the herculean nature of the task he set himself to accomplish—and which he certainly accomplished in brilliant fashion—will be best appreciated by those really conversant with the monumental character of the great work. The church, one of the largest and most influential in the city, was crowded to the doors, and I have heard nothing but praise of the recital from everyone who was privileged to hear it. If I mistake not, this is the first rendering of the 'St. Matthew' Passion which has ever been given by any purely church organization in the west of Scotland. The performance was, as is usual in our churches, opened and closed with prayer by the minister of the church, the Rev. George H. Morrison, M.A.

It is worth noting also that Mr. Turner will in October celebrate his semi-jubilee as organist and choirmaster of the church, and in addition to the Passion he has engineered performances of 'Redemption,' 'Elijah,' 'Creation,' 'The Last Judgment,' 'The Woman of Samaria,' 'Messiah,' 'Hymn of Praise,' &c., &c., and the work chosen for next winter is 'St. Paul.' And all from memory!

The Haydn Festival and Congress of the International Society of Music, to be held at Vienna between the 25th and 29th of this month, is an event of great importance, and especially to British musicians. Why? Because Sir Alexander Mackenzie has been elected President of this International Congress. This is a matter for hearty congratulation, and the genial Principal of the Royal Academy of Music is sure to prove worthy of the honour conferred upon him, and through him upon this country. The list of papers that are to be read in many tongues during the Congress is almost appalling in its length and comprehensiveness. Welcome relief from these discourses and their consequent discussions will be afforded by the 'Festival Entertainments' which have been arranged. These include performances of a Grand Mass and 'The Seasons' by Haydn; an opera representation; and two concerts; in addition to visits to Vienna institutions and an expedition to the burial place of Haydn at Eisenstadt, thirty-miles from Vienna. Those who are privileged to attend this Haydn Festival and International Congress will find their time fully and profitably occupied. The official programme contains this 'Note': 'Sir Alexander Mackenzie has been requested by the British Government to represent them on this occasion.'

Herr Max Reger is announced to make his first appearance in London at Mr. William Ackroyd's chamber concert at Bechstein Hall on Monday evening, May 10. On that occasion the programme will consist entirely of Herr Reger's compositions, which will include the Trio for strings (Op. 77*b*), the Suite for violin and pianoforte (Op. 103*a*), the String quartet in D minor (Op. 74), and some songs. The composer will play the pianoforte at this and at the second concert—also of his own works—to be given on the afternoon of May 14. Herr Reger may be certain of receiving a warm welcome on this his first visit to London.

The difficulties connected with the conductorship of the Hallé Concerts at Manchester, to which we referred in our April issue, have been overcome. As the arrangements for the continuance next season of performances of Wagner operas in English at Covent Garden have fallen through, Dr. Richter was free from the conductorship of those performances. Therefore the Committee of the Hallé Concerts Society, taking immediate advantage of the circumstance, have concluded a three years' engagement with the eminent conductor, and his original relationship to the Orchestra, and to the concerts within and outside the city, is thus restored. The negotiations with Messrs. Nikisch, Weingartner, Mottl, Wood and others, which in any case were of somewhat doubtful issue, have therefore lapsed.

It is proposed to collect the letters of Dr. Joseph Joachim with a view to publication. The task of selecting and editing them has been entrusted to the distinguished violinist's eldest son, Dr. Johannes Joachim, and to his friend and biographer, Professor Andreas Moser. As the editors are anxious to have before them as complete a collection of the letters as possible, they would be glad if those who are in possession of any of Dr. Joachim's communications, and who are willing to help, would communicate with either of the following: Dr. Johannes Joachim, 17, Wilhelm Weber Strasse, Göttingen; Professor Andreas Moser, 28, Luther Strasse, Berlin, W. 62; Mr. Harold Joachim, 9, Keble Road, Oxford.

The famous Beethoven portrait by J. Stieler which—as reported in our issue of last December—its owner, Countess von Sauerma, wished to dispose of, has been acquired by the head of the Leipsic firm of music publishers, C. F. Peters. Geheimrat Wegeler, of Coblenz, no doubt a descendant of Beethoven's friend of that name, was another bidder for the treasure, for which, strange to say, no inquiries or offers were made from abroad.

The draft prospectus of the Hereford Musical Festival, to be held in the first week of September, has now been issued. The following is an outline of the scheme:

Messiah; Be not afraid (Bach); Creation (Part I.); Mass in D, Beethoven; Lazarus (selection), Schubert; Parsifal (Good Friday music and Grail music); Job (or some other work), Parry; The Apostles; Noble Numbers (new), Walford Davies; Symphony in A flat (Elgar); and a new Orchestral Suite, founded on old English melodies, by Mr. Granville Bantock. The usual Chamber Concert, peculiar to a Hereford Festival, will also find a place in the arrangements.

Dr. G. R. Sinclair, organist of the cathedral, will occupy his accustomed place as conductor of the Festival.

Mr. W. W. Cobbett is offering a first-prize of £50, and Captain Beaumont a second-prize of £20, for the composition of a Sonata for pianoforte and violin. The competition is open to composers of all countries, and the judges are Baron D'Erlanger, Messrs. William Shakespeare, Paul Stoeving and W. W. Cobbett, assisted by Efreim Zimbalist. Manuscripts are to be addressed 'Cobbett Competition,' care of Messrs. Breitkopf & Härtel, 54, Great Marlborough Street, and to be sent in before October 31.

A Windsor correspondent calls attention to the fact that the late Sir George Elvey was knighted when he was fifty-five years of age, and that the Roman numerals not only give this, but also his name—L.V.

FACSIMILE OF THE TUNE 'ROCKINGHAM' AS IT FIRST APPEARED IN DR. EDWARD MILLER'S

'THE PSALMS OF DAVID' (1790).

Hymn-tunes form so important a feature of church music in all denominations, that any fact or incident relating to their histories is often of interest. So with 'Rockingham,' one of the most beautiful of all our devotional metrical-melodies. Its authorship is assigned to Dr. Edward Miller, the celebrated organist of Doncaster Parish Church in the 18th century; but he would have been the first to disown the paternity of the tune. As will be seen in the sub-joined facsimile of the first appearance of the tune as we now know it—in Miller's 'The Psalms of David' (1790)—Miller expressly states, 'Part of the melody taken from a hymn tune.' The question may naturally be asked: 'From what source did the old psalmist derive the familiar strain?' The late Rev. Henry Parr, a pioneer student of hymn-musicology, answered the inquiry thus: 'The original seems to be an Anapaestic tune named "Great Helford," by Seeley and others.' Now, Seeley's 'Devotional Harmony' did not appear until 1806, so late for Dr. Miller to have taken the melody from that collection.

There is convincing evidence to show that 'Rockingham' was evolved from a tune named 'Tunbridge' which appeared in a tiny tome, measuring 4 by 2½ inches, bearing the following title:

A SECOND SUPPLEMENT | TO | PSALMODY IN MINIATURE. | Containing an addition of new Hymn Tunes, chiefly | used at the Lock, Tabernacle, Tottenham Court, Lady | Huntingdon's, and Mr. Wesley's, Chaples (sic), Dissenting Meet | ings &c. &c., Many of which are not in any other Collection.

Correctly figured for the ORGAN.

London: Printed & Sold by the Editor, No. 18 Clerk | enwell Green. Sold also by Messrs. Thompson, No. 75 St. Pauls Church Yard. Where may be had Psalmody in Miniature 3 Books Price each 6d. The 1st Supplement Price 6d. & Instructions in Miniature for learning Psalmody Pr. 6d.

The title-page to the third edition of the complete collection—'Psalmody in Miniature, in V Books'—is dated 1783; but while the first Supplement is dated (1778), the second Supplement is undated, its publication may however be assigned to about 1780, in time for Dr. Miller to make use of its contents.

Mr. J. T. Lightwood, of Lytham, possesses the identical copy of 'Psalmody in Miniature,' including both Supplements, which formerly belonged to Dr. Miller. Although there is no written name in the book, there are scattered about its pages various annotations in a handwriting which Mr. Lightwood has identified as Dr. Miller's, by comparing it with similar notes in a volume of hymn-tunes which avowedly belonged to the Doncaster organist. Through the kindness of Mr. Lightwood we are enabled to reproduce in facsimile the tune whence 'Rockingham' was evolved, with Dr. Miller's annotation :

Tunbridge. P.M

would make good long m.

It will probably be remarked that Dr. Miller might have acknowledged that something more than 'Part' of the melody was taken from a hymn-tune. Anyhow, the above tune is without doubt the origin of 'Rockingham.' The name of its composer has yet to be discovered. In the meantime 'Tunbridge' cannot but be admired, the introduction of the flat seventh in the first line being particularly beautiful.

Some additional notes on 'Rockingham' will be found in the Musical Times of November, 1901.

The first meeting of the London District Centre of the Free Church Musicians' Union, was held in the Binney Institute adjoining the King's Weigh House Church on March 30, under the presidency of Mr. Horace Holmes, chairman of the Centre. A paper was read by Dr. F. N. Abernethy on 'Organ accompaniment in Divine Service.' Mr. H. F. Nicholls, the general secretary, also delivered an address upon the advantages of the Union, and explained that there were now two kinds of members, viz., those officially appointed organists and choirmasters who are active members, and any interested in Free Church music who may become honorary members. An interesting discussion followed, in which Mr. John Spink, the London secretary, Mr. J. E. Leah, treasurer, and Mr. Arthur Berridge took part. The Union has suffered a sad loss in the death of Mr. J. P. Attwater, organist of Clapham Congregational Church, who was one of the first members and supporters of the movement.

Mr. C. H. Moody, organist of Ripon Cathedral, delivered a lecture at Saltburn, Yorkshire, on April 1, his subject being 'The evolution of the Anthem.' In addition to an example of ancient plain-song, the choir of the parish church sang the following anthems in illustration of Mr. Moody's interesting discourse: 'Rejoice in the Lord' (Redford), 'O Lord, Thy word' (Tye), 'All people that on earth do dwell' (Tallis), 'Bow Thine ear' (Byrd), 'Rejoice in the Lord' (Purcell), 'In Thee, O Lord' (Weldon), and 'The Wilderness' (Wesley).

Mr. J. T. Hughes, who recently resigned the office of organist and choirmaster of West Derby Parish Church, Liverpool—the duties of which he has discharged with distinction for twenty-four years—has been the gratified recipient of a presentation consisting of an address and a cheque for £130. During the fifty years which have elapsed since the consecration of West Derby Parish Church, there have been only three organists: Mr. Ridley, Mr. W. T. Best, and Mr. Hughes.

Mr. J. Herbert Olding has been presented by the vicar, on behalf of the wardens, choir, and congregation, with an illuminated address, and a substantial cheque, on the occasion of his retirement from the office of organist and choirmaster of St. Saviour's Church, Brixton Hill, which he has held for nearly eighteen years. On the occasion of the presentation, best wishes were expressed for his success in his new appointment at Christ Church, Mayfair.

At the Easter Vestry of Manchester Cathedral, held on April 14, the Dean (Bishop Welldon) stated that it was considered desirable to spend the sum of £4,000 on the cathedral organ, and that an effort would be made to raise the money.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

Dr. H. A. Harding, honorary secretary of the Royal College of Organists, and in connection with that institution, delivered an interesting and thoughtful lecture at the Royal Hotel, Cardiff, on April 13, taking as his subject 'Allusiveness in musical composition.'

Dr. Harding began by calling attention to the practice of allusiveness in literature, where it was very common, whereas in music it was decidedly rare. When one found a device so common in one art, and its natural equivalent so rare in another, he thought that a little speculation was not out of place. The lecturer proceeded to give several apposite quotations of literary allusiveness from Milton, Gray and Tennyson, and some interesting instances of the analogous device in musical compositions by Bach, Mozart, Mendelssohn, Schumann, Berlioz, Mackenzie, Parry, Stanford and Sullivan. He said that there was obviously no place for any such 'allusiveness' in pure or abstract music, but the general current of musical composition had for a long time been setting in the direction of programme music, and this afforded many opportunities for its use. Would quotations from classical works be generally detected by audiences? He was afraid not, mainly because of the faults of our educational system.

Dr. Harding pleaded for a deeper and wider study of literature by musicians, as also of music in the educational centres of the United Kingdom. He added that a higher level of knowledge and intelligence in listeners would be an enormous gain.

The long and well-selected list of analogous literary and musical examples chosen by Dr. Harding is a most interesting one, and the honorary secretary of the Royal College of Organists is to be congratulated upon having broken new ground in his instructive discourse.

On Sunday afternoon, March 28, Handel's 'Messiah' (Parts II. and III.) was sung at St. Stephen's Church St. Albans. Mr. George F. Wood accompanied throughout on the organ, and the trumpet obligato to 'The trumpet shall sound' was played by Mr. F. W. Stanley, of the Hert Yeomanry.

At Emmanuel Congregational Church, Bootle Mendelssohn's 'Lauda Sion' was rendered by the choir under the direction of Mr. A. E. Workman, with Mr. W. A. Roberts at the organ.

Gaul's 'Ruth' was performed at the United Methodist Church, Freeman Street, Grimsby, on Sunday, April 11. Mr. W. Levers, choirmaster, conducted, and Mr. Sidney Post was at the organ.

LENTEN SERVICES.

CATHEDRALS.

No service held throughout the year at St. Paul's Cathedral equals in impressiveness the rendering of Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion. And the rendering on Tuesday evening in Holy Week (April 6) formed no exception to the high standard annually maintained for nearly forty years. Sir George Martin conducted, and in the unavoidable absence of Mr. Charles Macpherson, Mr. Stanley G. Marchant was at the organ. As in former years, a full orchestra and special choir co-operated in an impressive rendering of the great work.

At Norwich Cathedral, on March 4, Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion was most impressively sung under special conditions—two choirs, two orchestras, and two organs, one instrument having been specially erected for the occasion by Messrs. Norman & Beard. Thus the event was unique in the history of music in East Anglia. For three hours, and without a break, an immense congregation, estimated at between three and four thousand people, listened to the great Cantor's strains with the greatest reverence and attention. The solo violinist was Mr. E. L. von Weeks; Dr. Bunnett and Mr. Madden Williams respectively presided at the two organs; Mr. E. Mason played the cembalo part on the pianoforte, and Dr. Frank Bates, organist of the cathedral, conducted.

Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion was sung, with organ accompaniment, at special services held in Lincoln Cathedral on March 19 and April 2. The choruses were rendered by the cathedral choir, augmented by the members of the Lincoln Musical Society, and the soprano and alto solos were sung by the whole of the cathedral choir boys. Dr. G. J. Bennett, organist of the cathedral, conducted, and Mr. H. S. Trevitt presided at the organ.

The Holy Week daily services at the Cathedral Church, Birmingham, included selections from Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion, anthems by Palestrina, and Allegri's Miserere, sung under the direction of Mr. Edwin Stephenson, organist and master of the choristers. To a carefully compiled word-book of the anthems, &c., Mr. S. Royle Shaw contributed an interesting preface in which he described the music that was sung.

Bach's 'St. John' Passion was sung in St. Patrick's Cathedral, Dublin, under the direction of the organist, Mr. Charles G. Marchant, on the first four evenings in Holy Week.

VARIOUS CHURCHES.

The first performance in Richmond of Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion was given in the church of St. Matthias, Richmond Hill, on March 31, with full orchestral accompaniment. Mr. Kenneth C. Burns, organist of the church, conducted, and Dr. G. F. Huntley presided at the organ.

Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion was sung, accompanied by a double orchestra of strings, at St. Peter's Church, Devizes, on April 2, under the direction of the Rev. D. H. Weeks, with Mr. C. C. Samsion, of Oxford, at the organ.

Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' and Spohr's 'Last Judgment' were sung at Hinckley parish church on March 23 by the combined choirs of the church and local choral Society. Mr. Paul Rochard, the organist of the church, played the accompaniments throughout, and Mr. C. J. King, organist of St. Matthew's Church, Northampton, conducted.

Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' was performed at St. Michael's Church, Coventry, by the St. Michael's Festival Choral Society, on March 22, under the direction of Mr. Walter Hoyle, organist of the church.

At Highbury Congregational Church, Cheltenham, the sacred cantata 'The Life Everlasting,' by Mr. H. A. Matthews, was performed on March 27.

Handel's 'The Passion of Christ' was sung at Tewkesbury Abbey on March 28, under the direction of Mr. Alfred W. V. Vine, the organist and choirmaster of the church, who accompanied this interesting work throughout.

Mr. Edmund Rogers's cantata 'The Pilgrim's Progress' was sung at SS. Michael and All Angels' Church, Star Street, Paddington, on April 4, under the direction of the composer.

Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater,' in its English version, 'At the foot of the Cross,' was sung on Good Friday at St. Thomas' Church, Sunderland, under the direction of the organist, Mr. Percy P. Watson.

Mr. Harold Moore's 'The Darkest Hour' was sung at St. James's Church, Bath, without a conductor, but with Mr. H. C. T. Gill at the organ. The same work was also given at Victoria Road Wesleyan Church, Southsea, under the direction of the organist, Mr. W. J. Groves.

Spohr's 'God, Thou art great,' Stanford's Te Deum. Magnificat, and Nunc dimittis were sung, with orchestral accompaniment, at Peshurst Parish Church, on April 14, under the direction of the organist, Mr. Reginald E. Groves.

At Holy Trinity Church, Bedford, under the direction of Mr. Henry T. Tiltman, organist and choirmaster, the following works were sung during Lent: Bach's motet 'Jesu, priceless treasure,' and the same composer's church cantata, 'Watch ye, pray ye.'

STAINER'S 'CRUCIFIXION.'

As in former years, Stainer's 'Crucifixion' was sung at many churches, including St. John's, Angell Town, Brixton (organist, Mr. Warren Tear); St. Mary's, Walton-on-Thames (organist, Mr. Henry T. Gilberthorpe); St. Peter's, Sudbury, Suffolk (organist, Mr. E. E. Vinnicombe); and Holy Trinity, Bedford (organist, Mr. Henry T. Tiltman); St. Mary's, Granston, Pembrokeshire (organist, Mr. J. Hancock - Davies); Adderbury Parish Church (organist, Mr. H. H. Fowler).

GOUNOD'S 'REDEMPTION.'

Gounod's 'Redemption' was sung at several churches, including the following: St. Margaret's, King's Lynn (Mr. Arthur Shirley); Lillington parish church, Leamington (Mr. A. E. Gibbs); St. Luke's, Hackney (Mr. F. S. Marsh); parish church, Romford (Mr. Matthew Kingston); parish church, Walton-on-the-Hill, Liverpool (Mr. Albert Orton); Sutton Wesleyan (Mr. R. Vaughan Seddon).

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. William J. Comley, St. Saviour's, Lambert Road, Brixton Hill.
Mr. H. Stanbrook, St. Paul's Church, Slough.
Mr. H. C. L. Stocks, Parish Church, Yeovil.

Reviews.

Folk-song Airs. Books I. and II.

Folk-dance Airs. Collected and arranged for the piano-forte, by Cecil J. Sharp.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Mr. Sharp has provided in a compact form, folk-song airs that are distinctly pleasing; moreover they are of English origin, and of considerable value from an antiquarian point of view. The folk-melodies in the first two books consist of more or less familiar folk-song tunes, but the companion book of traditional dance airs has been recently noted by Mr. Sharp from country performers. The latter book more particularly calls for notice.

It is obvious that many of these melodies are traditional survivals of the 18th century country dance tunes, which were published in such quantity during that period. For instance, although 'Constant Billy' here varies considerably from its early printed version, and also from a traditional set which Mr. Sharp has published elsewhere (Morris Tunes, 1st set), yet 'The maid of the mill,' from Shield's 'Rosina' (1783) has undergone little change. The latter is a simple tune, and must have been kept well before the public by the frequency with which the opera used to be performed on the provincial stage. 'The Princess Royal,' which is frequently and erroneously attributed to Shield, also retains its salient features, and so too does 'Jockie to the fair.' Of the tunes that are less recognizable, 'The Triumph' is totally unlike that once popular dance, and may easily have become misnamed, while 'London Pride' seems to be from a basis of 'Boyne Water,' and with less similarity 'Old Heddon of Fawsley' may have come from the same source. 'Green-sleeves' seems to be more of the Scots version that is fitted to 'Tak' your auld cloak about you' than the usual English copy. 'The marriage vow' is probably a traditional remembrance of Dryden's song in 'Marriage à la mode,' 'Why should a foolish marriage vow.' The Derbyshire Morris dance is fairly well known in that county, and in Lancashire, Yorkshire and Cheshire. The country fiddlers who presided at village merry-makings were well up in the old country dance-tunes, which they either picked up by ear or played from printed copies. They did not hesitate to alter or adapt according to their fancy, and the airs, being unfettered by words, are frequently handed down to us in a modified form, among others which no doubt are the individual and original compositions of such rustic performers.

Mr. Sharp has contributed some valuable notes, and if he had added the original printed versions of certain of the airs, an interesting comparison would have been possible. Nevertheless, both publications are acceptable contributions to Folk-music.

Musique Ancienne. Par Wanda Landowska, avec la collaboration de M. Henri Lew-Landowska.

[Paris: Mercure de France.]

There is a very prevalent idea that the art of music is only a few centuries old, that it has made rapid progress, and that it is now at its zenith. The author of this interesting volume reminds us that the same idea has always been entertained. In 1725, Brossard thought that the art had reached its highest point, and Richard Strauss has expressed his belief that the finest works of the past were only created as footstools à notre avènement.

With regard to the contempt poured upon old music by some progressivists, the writer of this book compares them to the children of the Fiji Islands, who kill their parents as soon as they show signs of old age. Madame Landowska, however, has no desire to extol the past at the expense of the present. 'One may,' she says, 'of course prefer one period of art to another, but music is not a schoolgirl rising from one class to another, and only just now receiving her highest certificate.'

Madame Landowska is an accomplished performer on the harpsichord, and in speaking of transcriptions, she refers specially to the liberties taken with music written for the harpsichord. Transcribers, she remarks, complain of the limited compass of the old instrument, of its feeble, monotonous tone, and many other drawbacks, all which prove, she says, that such people have never handled, perhaps never been near a harpsichord. As regards the complaint of feebleness of tone, the author in another chapter gives an interesting quotation from Carl Philip Emmanuel Bach's 'Essay on the true way of playing the clavier,' in which he says the harpsichord ought to be used for strong music (zu starcken Musicken), the clavichord for solos. And he adds, 'The new forte-pianos, if well built, can be used for solos, or with just a few instruments.' The pages concerning the ornaments so frequently to be met with in harpsichord music, deserve special notice. Brief quotations point to the important part which they played. Emmanuel Bach considered them necessary; 'an appoggiatura out of place, a shake, a roulade, can destroy the effect of an entire scene,' said Gluck. Madame Landowska remarks that Forkel and others would have us believe that Bach made little use of them. To the eye it may appear so, but as a matter of fact the composer frequently wrote out his ornaments in full. By way of emphasising this, a facsimile of the Andante of the 'Italian' concerto, as engraved by Bach, is given, and side by side the music as it would appear if the ornaments had been merely indicated.

We have given, we hope, some idea of the contents and style of a book in which many important subjects are treated in a pleasant and practical way.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

Passacaglia. Composed by Alexander Friedrich von Hessen (Op. 7).

[Martin Cohen, Nürnberg.]

The extreme modern development of the Passacaglia is seen in this piece by Herr von Hessen. The original theme of sixteen notes, at first given out unaccompanied, remains in evidence throughout the composition, being surrounded with harmonic embroideries of increasing elaboration and difficulty. The technical demands are beyond the powers of any but the most advanced executants. The effect will be brilliant rather than beautiful.

Three Inventions. Composed by Arthur Somervell.

[Bosworth & Co.]

Dr. Somervell's pianoforte music has always had a style of its own. With an idiom that irresistibly recalls Handel, he expresses ideas and employs methods of procedure that belong essentially to a later age. The present examples are highly characteristic.

Rêverie d'Amour. Composed by Alfred Hollins.

Grüße der scheidenden Sonne. Composed by Carl Reinecke.

Sarabande. Composed by W. Wolstenholme.

[The Vincent Music Co.]

Melody is the chief feature of Mr. Hollins's Rêverie, which moreover is conceived and carried out with good musicianship. It is not difficult, but the key (G flat) and the part-writing towards the end require experience in the performer. Herr Carl Reinecke's piece is graceful, expressive, and moderate in its technical demands; it contains passages of original design and agreeable effect.

The sound qualities of Mr. Wolstenholme's writing are well shown in his 'Sarabande,' in which ingenuity in the construction of melody and harmonies of a simple but telling character play an important part.

Symphony in A flat. By Edward Elgar. Arranged for pianoforte solo by Sigfrid Karg-Elert.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Mr. Karg-Elert has transcribed Elgar's Symphony with remarkable skill and attention to detail. He has realised the importance of practicability in the pianoforte arrangement, but has in many places, with good reason, made this feature a secondary consideration. The chief object of the transcription is not to provide a solo pianoforte piece, but rather to represent on two staves what was written on twenty staves in order that those who do not understand a full score may study and improve their acquaintance with the Symphony. The harmonies and interweaving of parts are reproduced as fully as possible, and the tone-colours employed by the composer are indicated by reference to the various instruments or groups of instruments.

PART-SONGS.

Sorrow and pain. Prithee, why? By C. Hubert H. Parry.
Phyllis is my only joy. The pride of youth. By John E. West.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Sir Hubert Parry's 'Sorrow and pain' is described as a meditation. To the dignified and momentous lines of Lady Charlotte Elliott the composer has wedded musical strains of fitting solemnity, in which the characteristic style of his more serious moments is revealed at its best. The soprano and basses are divided, and the consequent six-part harmony is majestic, flowing, and, as would be expected by one who are familiar with Sir Hubert Parry's music, coloured by frequent suspensions rather than by the use of remote chromatic harmonies. There is, however, a striking monodic progression on the words 'Love, faint with ease, as life anew from Grief,' with which the poem concludes. The music twice rises to a climax, but is for the most part expected to be sung piano; its solemn and impressive character is preserved throughout.

The words of 'Prithee, why?' are supplied by Sir John Gillingham's well-known poem, which has been set to music many times and in many forms. Sir Hubert Parry has himself included it in his 'English lyrics.' His new setting, for mixed voices, is full of humorous touches and dainty effects. It is mainly diatonic, and therefore presents no difficulty to choralists. The artistic character of the music does not fail, as in some settings, on the last four words.

In his two latest part-songs, Mr. West upholds his reputation as a writer of graceful choral music. 'Phyllis my only joy' is an example of his skill in avoiding monotony of rhythm and his felicitous invention as a melodist. 'The pride of youth' shows the same characteristics as well as considerable dramatic feeling. Choral societies who study these pieces will find ample repayment in the many interesting points of expression which they present, while there is no great technical difficulty to trouble them.

Edward MacDowell. A Study. By Lawrence Gilman.

[John Lane.]

It is four years since Mr. Gilman contributed to Mr. John Lane's excellent 'Living Masters of Music' series a monograph on his friend Edward MacDowell. Since then that gifted composer and estimable man, after a sad decay of his great mental powers, has passed into the silent land, to the regret of those who knew him and his music. What more natural, therefore, than that Mr. Gilman should enlarge his biography of Dr. MacDowell, by contributing much new matter and revising and extending the critical chapters on the composer's music. The author has discharged his task in the spirit of a hero-worshipper, and yet without seeking to overrate the subject of his biography. He has portrayed the life and labours of a true artist and very lovable man in a manner that merits commendation, therefore the book is one that should attract many readers not only in America, the land of MacDowell's birth, but here in England, which he visited and where his works find favour by those who can appreciate the creations of a thoughtful and ideal-seeking composer.

INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC.

Quartet in B minor. For pianoforte, violin, viola and violoncello. By Thomas F. Dunhill. (Op. 16.)

Sapphic Poem. For violoncello and pianoforte. By Granville Bantock.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Among the rising composers of the day Mr. Thomas F. Dunhill is rapidly taking a place, and his pianoforte Quartet in B minor should bring him many new friends. The work is in many respects pleasurable and refreshing. It lacks, with advantage, the perplexities of key and tempo changes too prevalent in ultra-modern music, but gains thereby, as a natural corollary, a healthy, spontaneous utterance which rivets attention from beginning to end. There are the usual four movements. The opening Allegro (B minor) is fresh and vigorous, with a second subject theme (D major) which might well be labelled with Elgar's favourite expression—Nobilmente. The Adagio non troppo (G major) has some highly expressive passages; especially do we like a beautiful episode in E flat major, set at first for strings alone. The Scherzo (B minor) which follows, might have been alternated with a second Trio, as in so many of Schumann's works; for the theme would well bear the strain of a third repetition. The Trio (F sharp major) is particularly bold and resolute, forming a striking contrast to the lighter and more playful mood of the Scherzo. The Finale—after a short introduction molto lento, e serioso—opens with a solo on the G string of the violin, with pianoforte accompaniment. This theme—as to a great extent are all the themes—is in diatonic harmony; but as showing that the composer has an extensive command over modern progressions, there are many brilliant harmonic passages throughout the quartet. The greater credit to Mr. Dunhill that he knows how and when to restrain his hand!

Sappho, the Greek poetess, was famed for a 'power of metre that cannot be surpassed,' and in a musical Sapphic illustration one naturally expects vivid rhythmic utterances. Mr. Bantock's 'Sapphic Poem,' for violoncello and pianoforte—originally written for the solo instrument and orchestra—will not disappoint even the most expectant. The initial tempo indication— $\frac{3}{4}$ —with its varying triple and duple accents, is maintained more or less throughout the work, the two instruments constantly blending the contrasting rhythms at the same time. This may probably be taken as exemplifying the peculiar 'Sapphic metre,' in which the dactyl foot intersperses with the trochee. At one place the unusual tempo  $\frac{2}{3}$  is adopted. Liszt uses a similar signature in his oratorio 'Christus,' as an express indication that there are to be two groups of three beats each. In the present case the violoncello plays, in  $\frac{2}{3}$  tempo, six groups of triplet quavers, while the pianoforte ( $\frac{3}{4}$ ) accompanies with two groups of six quavers, which, in the light of the  $\frac{2}{3}$  signature, are evidently intended to the subdivided into two groups of three beats. Apart from, or rather in spite of, his intricate rhythmic alternations, Mr. Bantock's music strikingly describes the vivid passion, sincerity, depth of feeling, and haunting, graceful delicacy which are among the chief characteristics of the famous Sapphic lyrics. The violoncello part requires a master-hand for its interpretation.

Obituary.

The following deaths are recorded with regret.

On March 20, at Leicester, at the age of eighty-seven, Mrs. G. A. LÖHR, widow of the late G. A. Löhr, and mother of Mr. Harvey Löhr.

On March 29, at Ashurst Lodge, Worthing, Mr. A. H. COLLET, an amateur well known in London musical circles.

On April 1, at his residence, Spring Bank, Preston, Mr. JOHN GREENWOOD, professor of music and a member of the firm of Messrs. John Greenwood & Son, pianoforte and music dealers, of Preston. Mr. Greenwood, who had recently attained his seventieth year, was formerly organist of two Wesleyan Chapels in the town of which he had long been one of its most respected citizens. An excellent pianist and a composer of merit, he will be greatly missed by a large circle of friends.

At the venerable age of eighty-three, GEORGE PERREN answered the call of the great reaper at Hove, on April 7. For many years he had lived in retirement, but there are many who will remember him as an excellent and reliable tenor vocalist. He sang in the choir of Lincoln's Inn Chapel, and was afterwards one of the principal tenors of the Pyne and Harrison English Opera at Covent Garden. He founded and directed English opera at the Crystal Palace, and was an acceptable singer on the concert platform. An artist of genial disposition, Mr. Perren was an amusing raconteur, and he had considerable talent as a painter, both in oils and in water-colours.

JOSEPH HEMING died on April 17, at 46, Burnt Ash Hill, Lee, in the eighty-eighth year of his age. A zealous and artistic amateur with a life-long devotion to music, he was the founder of Henry Leslie's Choir. As one of the earliest pupils of John Hullah, he was associated with him as far back as the year 1843 in the newly-formed choir of King's College Chapel, in the Strand. For thirty years he was a church chorister in London, fifteen of which were passed in the choir of Lincoln's Inn Chapel. An enthusiast in the cultivation of part-singing, Mr. Heming, in 1852, formed a picked choir for the practice of unaccompanied vocal music. This was conducted at first by and afterwards by Henry Leslie, who, like was an amateur musician. In October, 1852, became the famous 'Henry Leslie's Choir,' a committee of two—Heming and Leslie. For Mr. Heming, who had a jewellery business in Coventry, took an active part in the management of the choir, and had called into existence, but which is now a past, yet of pleasant memory.

RUPERTO CHAPI, a distinguished Spanish composer of many operas and zarzuelas, an oratorio, symphonic poems, an orchestral fantasia, &c., died at Madrid on March 27, 1851, at the Madrid Conservatoire. Señor Chapi was a member of the Society of Authors and Composers, and it was such that thirty thousand people are said to have attended his funeral, which thus assumed a national character.

THOMAS MACE AND 'MUSICK'S MONUMENT'

At the meeting of the Musical Association in King's Rooms (Messrs. Broadwood's), Condor Street, on April 20, Dr. W. H. Cummings in the chair, Dr. Watson read a paper on Thomas Mace in connection with his historic work, 'Musick's Monument.'

The lecturer treated his subject from a threefold view: (1) the Man, (2) the Book, and (3) the Monument. In the first place he deduced from the internal evidence of the book many details of the life and character of Mace as a lutenist. From the inscription at the foot of the book which prefaces the volume, Dr. Watson inferred that Mace was born in the year 1613. He thence drew that Mace was a singing boy in 1626, with the knowledge of the lute, which he says he began to play when he was nine years old. From Mace's inscription in the book it appears that Mace was a member of the firm of Messrs. Mace & Co. (I mean a Priest at St. Dunstons Church) as a Master of Musick—the lecturer in assuming that Mace was an ordained clergyman, a member of the Church of England. If so, this would explain the tone of much of the writing in his book, one that is full of religious sentiment, and probably constitutes excerpts from his religious writings. From the text of the book it was further deduced that Mace was a member of a distinctly musical family, that his own passion for music generally, and for the lute in particular, was as unmercenaryly insatiable as that of any man of his age. He declares it to be.

Dr. Watson dwelt at some length upon Mace's life and constructive genius. He referred to the instructions which the old writer gives for taking care of the lute, for repairing and reconstructing his favourite instrument. Mention was made of Mace's construction of a new form of a newly designed instrument called the Double Lute, which was evidently a pedal harpsichord; also of the 'Organ,' of which at the time of writing his book he possessed the only examples. The Double Lute was made by Mace's own hand, under the patronage of the heroic lutenist's all but the only contemporary. Reference was also made to the ingenious plan of Mace, probably the first design of an English Patent.

The disasters to the professional and pecuniary life of the worthy Thomas Mace which his deafness and blindness dwelt upon, and the suggestion was made that Mace should have been helped by his friends, with that cheery courage so eminently characteristic of him, to turn his attention to literature for a livelihood.

With regard to Mace's proposed Music-Room at the University of Oxford, argued from the contents of 'Musick's Monument' especially from the 'Publick Consorts,' to refer, that public concerts were given in Cambridge only in anticipation of those of John Banister and Thomas Britton, in London, but securing for Cambridge the credit that historians have conferred upon Oxford. Dr. Watson then traced his hero to London, and in doing so he pictured him there, lost in the whirl of the great city.

In the second division of his subject, Dr. Watson summarised the miscellaneous contents of Mace's book, making special mention of the author's incorrigible propensities, and referring to the conditions of church music in the 17th century as the result of the vicissitudes of the Cromwellian period during which Mace lived, and through which church music had passed.

In treating of the third division of his subject, the Instruments, Dr. Watson, after a passing reference to the Viol and Theorboe, turned to the author's treatise on the Lute, which takes up the larger part of the 'Monument.' It was pointed out that in employing his pen in praise of his beloved lute, Mace was fighting a hopeless cause, and that the lute was doomed in the presence of what he calls 'the scoulding violins,' partly because of the lute's weaker tone and its fretted construction, and by reason of the confusion of tunings which made playing in concert practically impossible, unless with a 'chest of viols' purposely kept and tuned. Dr. Watson proceeded to speak of the varieties of tuning, leading therefrom to Mace's own particular system. This he explained in detail, and practically illustrated the method on the pianoforte. This portion of the lecture was made very lucid and specially interesting by the little book of illustrations which the lecturer had specially prepared. Together with the reproduced portrait of Mace, of the instruments, and plans, mentioned in the lecture, this booklet contained tuning diagrams and photographic reproductions in tablature of several of Mace's exercises, and under each illustration was printed Dr. Watson's translation of the exercise, written by him in ordinary notation.

CHORAL UNIONS.

Four of these young and progressive choral societies, drawn from the London County Council evening continuation classes, have given concerts during the past month. By their enthusiasm and assiduous practice the choralists are gaining experience and a wide outlook, the results of which are seen in the increased confidence of their singing and the ability to undertake modern works of considerable difficulty.

BATTERSEA, CLAPHAM, AND WANDSWORTH.

At the Battersea Town Hall, on April 2, this Choral Union gave their seventh Festival Concert under the direction of Mr. George Lane. The chief features of the programme were Beethoven's 'Ruins of Athens,' and Hamish MacCunn's 'The Wreck of the Hesperus.' The difficulties that usually beset the organizers of these concerts are the imperfect balance of the choirs and the executive shortcomings of the amateur orchestras; but no fault could be found on this occasion with either of these departments. The only matter for regret was that a larger audience did not attend to appreciate the high standard of the performances. The soloists were Madame Kate Nicholls, Miss Nellie Nutt and Mr. John Prout. The remainder of the programme consisted of part-songs, songs and orchestral numbers; the latter included Weber's 'Oberon' overture, performed in a manner that reflected the highest credit on the players and their conductor.

NORTH-WEST LONDON.

Trained by Mr. H. P. Dakin, this Choral Union is smaller in numbers than similar organizations in the Metropolis, nevertheless it is full of vitality. On April 3, at the Northern Polytechnic, choir and orchestra carried out with success a programme that included Elgar's 'The Black Knight,' Macfarren's 'May-day,' Oliver King's part-song 'The three fishers' and Cooke's 'Strike the lyre.' The usual orchestral body, drawn from the same sources as the choir, was employed in the two cantatas, other accompaniments being supplied by Mr. G. T. Pinches at the organ. The choral singing throughout gave evidence of good training and musical ability. The solo singers were Miss Winifred Marwood, Mr. Gerald Adams and Mr. Felix Hotchkiss.

HACKNEY AND FINSBURY.

This, the largest of the Choral Unions in London, is fortunate in having Mr. Allen Gill as its conductor, and the results of his inspiring guidance were well exhibited at the Alexandra Palace on April 3. On this occasion Haydn's 'Creation' was the chief work presented, and the 1,000 voices of the choir made the best use of the opportunities offered by Parts 1 and 2 of the oratorio. Choral excellences were still better displayed in the miscellaneous part of the programme, which included Gounod's 'By Babylon's wave,' 'Hail, bright abode,' from 'Tannhauser,' Smart's 'Good-night, thou glorious sun,' and the Kermesse scene from 'Faust.' The balance of voices presented the usual feature—an overwhelming preponderance of ladies—but the tone was bright and the attack and finish clean, while the singers responded readily to Mr. Gill's demands for expression. The efforts of the orchestra, whether in accompanying or in playing alone, were at least characterized by confidence. The soloists were Madame Alice Motterway, Mr. Samuel Masters and Mr. Harry Dearth. Mr. G. C. Richardson was at the organ.

WEST LONDON.

'The Messiah' was performed under the direction of Mr. W. T. Oke, at Queen's Hall, on April 22, by this choir of 650 singers. Probably no larger body has ever sung in the Queen's Hall. The ordinary accommodation for executants was of course totally inadequate, therefore all the sopranos were placed in the auditorium circles. This scattered arrangement of the singers, together with a certain hesitancy on the part of some of the orchestral players, added to the difficulty experienced by Mr. Oke in securing precision of attack. The performance was, however, on the whole highly satisfying and creditable. The solo parts were sung by Miss Carrie Lanceley, Miss May Head, Mr. Henry Turnpenney and Mr. Henry Bailey. Mr. F. G. Shuttleworth was at the organ.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

On April 1 the operatic class gave the third act of 'Carmen' and the second act of 'Die Zauberflöte,' having given at their previous performance the second act of Bizet's work and the first act of Mozart's. Under the direction of Mr. Edgardo Levi, admirable performances were given at the Institution, in which both the acting and the singing were deserving of the highest commendation. The chief characters in 'Die Zauberflöte' were taken by Miss Margaret Ismay, Miss Gladys Booth, Miss May Horton, Mr. Henry Sanders, Mr. James Saker, Mr. Andrew Jones, and Mr. Cecil Pearson. In 'Carmen,' Miss Bella Newstead played the chief character; Miss Gertrude Newson was Micaela, and Messrs. Saker and Wilson Thornton took the parts of Escamillo and Don José. A choir lent efficient support, and accompaniments were played by Miss Burgess at the pianoforte and Mr. B. J. Dale at the organ.

On April 2 the accomplishments of the orchestral class were exhibited at Queen's Hall in a miscellaneous programme. Two new works by students were brought forward: a Concert Overture in D by Mr. Oskar Borsdorf, and a Prelude by Mr. Morton Stephenson, both of which revealed sound training and considerable inventive power. Tchaikovsky's Pianoforte concerto in E flat was played by Mr. Francis Hutchens, and Godard's Concerto Romantique for violin and orchestra was interpreted by Master Stanelli de Groot. Miss Catherine C. Matthews also appeared as a pianist, and Miss Edith Penneville as a flautist. Vocal numbers were contributed by Miss Florence I. Wray, Miss Lily Fairney, Miss Gertrude Walton and Mr. James Saker. Sir Alexander Mackenzie conducted with his accustomed resourcefulness.

QUEEN'S HALL CHORAL SOCIETY.

Choral societies in London are still on the increase, and their number, size and ability are at length becoming adequate to the importance of the Metropolis as a musical centre. Whether the supply will create a demand—as it has to a large extent done in the case of orchestral music—depends largely upon the perseverance of conductors in evoking an appreciation for new music. The matter also depends largely upon composers.

In making their first appearance at Queen's Hall on March 31, the new Queen's Hall Choral Society and their conductor, Mr. Franco Leoni, performed the following works :

|                                     |                            |
|-------------------------------------|----------------------------|
| Ulysses and the sirens .. .. .      | Paul Puget.         |
| Gallia .. .. .                      | Gounod.             |
| Forest-song .. .. .                 | Erik Meyer-Helmund. |
| Herbststurm .. .. .                 | Grieg.              |
| The wedding of Shon Maclean .. .. . | Hubert Bath.        |

M. Puget's cantata showed nothing in common with the modern tendency of his fellow-countrymen, being straightforward in its melodies and progressions, dramatic and expressive by means of both. The solo-portions—undertaken by Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Maria Yelland and Mr. Ben Davies—mainly contributed to its success. The choir were heard to better advantage in Gounod's 'Gallia.' They were on still firmer ground in Mr. Bath's new work, which brought to light a hitherto unrevealed side of the composer's talents. As an impressionist, Mr. Bath has failed to touch any deep chord; as a humorist and composer of light music he made an instant appeal. His setting of Robert Buchanan's poem 'The wedding of Shon Maclean' contains all the gaiety, rhythm, Scots snappiness, and local colour that its name suggests, with farmyard sounds and a fugue thrown in.

The tone, volume and blend of the choir proved that the voices had been well picked. It remains to secure that complete sympathy between conductor and singers that is necessary for light and shade and subtle touches of expression. Under Mr. Franco Leoni these qualities may confidently be expected to be in evidence before long.

NEW SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The youngest but one of our first-class orchestras continues to improve under the guidance of Mr. Landon Ronald. Their recent performances show that the players have acquired the ability to respond to their clever conductor's call for brilliant readings. On March 24 they gave their first performance of Elgar's Symphony. It is doubtful whether Mr. Ronald's impetuous and original reading of the work will gain universal favour. There are many who look to a lively style of interpretation for relief from the austere tone of the Symphony. But there are passages that under Dr. Richter's dignified direction were as brilliant and exciting as one could wish, and it serves no good purpose to accelerate these portions. The concert gained additional interest from the production of a Violin concerto by Mr. Hamilton Harty. Apart from a few slight indications of the composer's lack of experience, the work was thoroughly pleasing; the thematic idiom is distinctly national, and the rich scoring and genial character of the music were noticeable throughout. M. Joska Szigeti was a capable exponent of the solo part.

On April 7 the concert began at 9 p.m. Whatever may be said for or against this plan, it is certain that the inconvenience caused by late-comers was lessened. The following works were performed :

|-----------------------------------------------------|--------------------|---------------------|
| Overture .. .. .                                    | Carneval .. .. .   | Dvorak.      |
| Comedy Overture 'The Pirotot of the Minute' .. .. . |                    | Bantock.     |
| Pianoforte concerto in B flat minor .. .. .         |                    | Tchaikovsky. |
| LEONID KREUTZER.                                    |                    |                     |
| Symphonic poem .. .. .                              | 'Don Juan' .. .. . | Strauss.     |

Mr. Kreutzer, who made his first appearance in England on this occasion, played with decision, breadth, and first-class technical facility, if not always with certainty. Tchaikovsky's concerto gave him no opportunity of displaying interpretative depth or subtlety. Mr. Bantock's fanciful little sketch, conducted by the composer, was very much to the taste of the audience, which, we are glad to record, was a good one. The works by Dvorák and Strauss brought into strong light the virtuoso side of Mr. Ronald's conducting and of the playing of the orchestra.

In consequence of the great development of the Tobias Matthay Pianoforte School, the scene of its operations has been removed to a habitation of its own in the attractive premises situated at 96, Wimpole Street.

LONDON CHORAL SOCIETY.

The programme of the concert at Queen's Hall on March 24 consisted entirely of works new to London. Of these the most considerable was the second part of Mr. Granville Bantock's 'Omar Khayyám,' produced at Cardiff last year. It proved in all respects a worthy successor to the first part. Mr. Bantock's fund of orchestral colour-device shows no signs of exhaustion, and the peculiar Oriental fragrance of his harmonic scheme remains a prominent and attractive feature. Another work produced at a provincial festival and performed in London for the first time on this occasion, was Mr. Julius Harrison's prize cantata 'Cleopatra.' The remaining number on the programme was Mr. Charlton Speer's setting, for chorus and orchestra, of Macaulay's 'Battle of Lake Regillus,' which was given its first performance. This was in direct contrast to the other works, as the chief, almost the only, desire shown by the composer was to present a stream of pleasant and singable melody. To many this will commend itself as the most worthy desire the composer could entertain. The London Choral Society and the London Symphony Orchestra gave admirable performances under Mr. Arthur Fagge's direction.

ESPERANTO AND MUSIC.

A demonstration of the possibilities of Esperanto as a language for singers was given at Queen's Hall on April 3, under the direction of the London Esperanto Federation. Whether the new language will ever create its own school of music, separate from and contrasting with the existing national schools, time alone can show. Of its intrinsic merits as a vocal medium, however, this concert left no room for doubt. Among the many Esperanto translations of familiar English and German songs that were presented, there were few that did not gain in pure beauty of sound by the substitution of the new language. The programme contained Wesley's motet 'In exitu Israel' and Brahms's 'Vineta,' sung by Mr. Edward Mason's choir. The list of artists included Miss Ada Forrest, Miss Maria Yelland, Master Albert Cecil, Mr. Charles Saunders, Mr. Watkin Mills, M. Szigeti and Mr. Harrison Hill. Mr. H. B. Mudie spoke in Esperanto and Mr. G. J. Cox in English.

London Concerts.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

In giving a performance of Bach's B minor Mass at the Albert Hall on March 25, this Society again showed their capacity for broad effect and sustained dignity of style. Their previous interpretation of this glorious work gave the impression, confirmed and deepened on this occasion, that these singers are, much to their credit, heard at their best in Bach's music. The merit of the present performance was due not solely to the efforts of the choir, but also to those of the soloists, Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Maria Yelland, Mr. Lloyd Chandos and Mr. Charles Knowles. Sir Frederick Bridge conducted with his usual ability. The customary performance of the 'Messiah' was given on Good Friday evening.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

On March 24 an orchestral concert, under the direction of the Principal, Dr. W. H. Cummings, was given at the City of London School by the students. Haydn's Symphony in E flat (No. 8 of the Salomon series), Brahms's Serenade in D, and a 'Preludio' by Signor N. Lardo comprised the orchestral items. Miss Lillian Tooley and Miss Fanny Cuthbert were the vocalists, both of whom made a favourable impression.

The musical score is arranged in three systems. Each system contains four staves: two vocal staves (Soprano and Alto/Tenor) and two piano accompaniment staves (Right and Left Hand). The key signature is two flats (B-flat and E-flat), and the time signature is 2/2. The score includes various musical markings such as rit. (ritardando), p a tempo. (piano, at tempo), f (forte), mf (mezzo-forte), and dim. (diminuendo). ## LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

On April 7 an extra concert was given at Queen's Hall, under Dr. Richter's direction, at which Elgar's Symphony was played for the third time by this splendid organization. Whatever may be said for the romanticism or brilliance of other conductors' readings, as against the dignity of Richter's, the Symphony as a whole is more momentous and telling under his beat. Beethoven's 'Fidelio' overture, the 'Good Friday' music from 'Parsifal' and Brahms's 'Academic' overture were the other purely orchestral numbers. An interesting feature was a triple Pianoforte concerto in C major by Bach, played by Mr. Leonard Borwick, Mr. D. F. Tovey and Mr. York Bowen.

At the concert on April 17, M. Emil Mlynarski was the conductor. He came with a great reputation, and worthily upheld it. His methods are unconventional and unpicturesque, but they are decisive and certainly produce good results. His command of the orchestra and interpretative breadth were best displayed in Tchaikovsky's E minor Symphony, which by this time must be thoroughly familiar to all London concert-goers. An impressive performance of Strauss's 'Tod und Verklärung' was given, and a skilful one of the Scherzo from a Symphony by Stojowsky—a piece of music of the clever and brilliant order. Madame Olga Samaroff played Grieg's A minor Pianoforte concerto with considerable charm and delicate feeling.

QUEEN'S HALL ORCHESTRA.

Distinction set its seal on the concert of March 27, at Queen's Hall, in the first appearance in England of M. Vincent d'Indy. The distinguished French composer conducted his Trilogy for orchestra—(1) Wallenstein's Camp, (2) Max and Thekla, and (3) The death of Wallenstein. The work had already been heard, under Mr. Henry J. Wood, in London—No. 1 in 1896, and Nos. 2 and 3 in 1902; therefore it is only necessary to say that the full significance of the music was made manifest under the baton of the conductor-composer. Madame Schumann-Heink made a welcome re-appearance with beautiful renderings of Mozart's 'Non piu di fiori' ('La Clemenza di Tito')—the corno di bassetto obbligato finely played by Mr. F. Gomez—and in three songs by Schubert: 'Die junge Nonne,' 'Der Tod und das Mädchen,' and 'Der Erlkönig,' the accompaniments orchestrated respectively by Liszt, Mottl, and Berlioz. The concert opened with the 'Der Freischütz' overture and closed with Elgar's Suite for orchestra, 'The wand of youth' (No. 2), conducted by Mr. Henry J. Wood.

THE BEECHAM ORCHESTRA.

On April 19, another programme of the kind that only Mr. Beecham's concerts provide, was carried out with complete success. English music was worthily represented. A tone-poem 'Into the twilight,' by Mr. Arnold Bax, showed all the ability in harmonization and orchestration usually possessed by the young English composer, and more than the usual intellect and restraint. The Prelude to Act II. of Miss Ethel Smyth's 'The Wreckers' has already commended itself to musicians. An excerpt from the same opera was gracefully sung by Fräulein Signe von Rappe, who was also heard, and to better effect, in songs by Brahms and Strauss. Mozart's Concerto No. 4, in D, for violin and orchestra, was sympathetically played by Mr. Philip Cathie. The remainder of the long programme consisted of Smetana's overture 'The bartered bride' and Rimsky-Korsakoff's 'Antar' symphony. The orchestral playing in this, as in the rest of the programme, was of the highest order, and Mr. Beecham conducted with his well-known skill.

AMATEUR ORCHESTRAL SOCIETIES.

At the concert given by the Stock Exchange Orchestral and Choral Society at Queen's Hall on March 31, Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony and Wagner's 'Meistersinger' overture were the chief orchestral numbers conducted by Mr. Allen Gill. Miss Myra Hess played Grieg's Pianoforte concerto, and Miss Cecile Whitefield sang an air from 'Les Huguenots.' Spofforth's glee, 'Come, bounteous May,' Sullivan's 'The rainy day,' and MacDowell's 'Dance of the gnomes,' were sung by the male-voice choir, trained by Mr. Munro Davison.

The Strolling Players' Amateur Orchestral Society gave their last concert of the season at Queen's Hall on April 1. The standard of execution attained by these instrumentalists may be judged from the programme, which included Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony, the Introduction to Act III. of 'Lohengrin,' and Schubert's 'Rosamunde' overture. Of these works adequate interpretations were given under Mr. Joseph Ivimey's baton. Mr. Aldo Antonietti played Vieuxtemps's Violin concerto in D minor; Miss Grainger Kerr sang three songs by Mr. Hubert Bath, with orchestral accompaniment, conducted by the composer; and Mr. Julien Henry contributed other vocal excerpts.

SOCIÉTÉ DES CONCERTS FRANÇAIS.

Compositions by M. Vincent d'Indy, M. Albert Roussel and M. Déodat de Séverac supplied material for the concert given on March 24. The programme as a whole exemplified much of the strength and little of the weakness of the modern French style. M. Roussel was represented by a Pianoforte trio played by Mlle. Antoinette Velnard, M. Baillon and M. Maurech; M. de Séverac by a Pianoforte suite, 'En Languedoc,' charmingly played by Mlle. Velnard; and M. d'Indy by some smaller pieces. Madame Jane Batori-Engel appeared as a vocalist. Throughout the concert the performances were of the highest class.

LONDON CHAMBER CONCERT ASSOCIATION.

The last of the series of concerts given by this excellent organization during the present season took place at the Royal Palace Hotel, Kensington, on April 3. A Suite for string sextet, by Mr. J. H. Schein, and examples of chamber music for flutes, strings and pianoforte by Haydn and Bach were given. A Chaconne for string quartet, by Purcell, given at an earlier concert, was repeated. Mr. Harold Bonarius played two movements from a Concerto by Tassarini, for solo violin, with accompaniment of stringed instruments.

ST. MARGARET'S CHORAL SOCIETY.

In choosing Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' for their concert at St. James's Hall on April 2, the St. Margaret's Musical Society (Westminster) and their conductor, the Rev. Jocelyn Perkins, showed a spirit of enterprise for which the good training and artistic purpose evinced by their performance afforded considerable justification. The chief departments in which their efforts showed the need of an improved standard were the balance and sonority of the voices and the executive ability of the amateur orchestra; the zeal of the members and the 'enthusiasm of their conductor will doubtless in due time remedy these technical shortcomings. The soloists were Miss Nora Meredith, Miss Enid Gabbell, Mr. Frederick Norcup and Mr. W. H. Bullock.

ALEXANDRA PALACE.

On March 27 the Alexandra Palace Choral Society performed Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius.' In their previous renderings of Elgar's oratorios this body of singers have shown sympathies and abilities that enable them to meet the executive difficulties and peculiar expressive demands of these works with complete success. On this occasion their musical intelligence and technical skill were again to the fore. Mr. Harold Wilde undertook the part of Gerontius, Miss Gertrude Lonsdale that of the Angel, and Mr. George Utley the bass parts. Mr. Allen Gill conducted with his usual mastery.

MR. HOWARD-JONES.

Having attained a position of authority as an interpreter of Brahms's pianoforte music, Mr. Howard-Jones can always rely upon the support and admiration of earnest-minded concert-goers. At his Brahms recital at Bechstein Hall on March 27, the audience were numerous and appreciative, but not conspicuously judicial. The Sonata in F minor (Op. 5) was the chief number on the programme, which included also four Intermezzi, in addition to other detached pieces, and the Variations on a theme by Handel.

Suburban Concerts.

The Dulwich Philharmonic Society gave a performance of Gounod's 'Redemption' at the Crystal Palace on March 27, when the choir sang with great taste and refinement under the careful direction of Mr. Arthur Fagge. The solo vocalists were Madame Siviter, Miss Natalie Campbell, Miss Kate Rooney, Mr. Frank Mullins and Mr. Robert Radford. Mr. C. H. Kemping was at the organ. The concert marked the final appearance with the Society of Mr. Arthur Fagge, who received an ovation on his retirement from the position of conductor after nine years of admirable work.

The Chiswick and Gunnersbury Philharmonic Society gave their second concert of the present season on March 30, at Chiswick Town Hall. The programme was mainly selected from the works of Mendelssohn, in celebration of the centenary, the chief feature being the 'Hymn of Praise,' which received an excellent interpretation under the conductorship of Mr. David M. Davis. The choir sang with spirit and expression; and the orchestra (led by Mr. MacDermott) did good work in the Symphony and in the accompaniments to the Pianoforte concerto in G minor, in which Miss Mabel Miller was the soloist. The solo vocalists were Miss Gordon Pillans, Miss Isabel Spencer and Mr. Coates Lockhart.

The Ealing Choral and Orchestral Society gave an excellent performance of Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' at the Town Hall, Ealing, on March 31. The soloists were Madame Verrinder, Miss Esther Yunson, Mr. Cynlais Gibbs and Mr. Charles Tree. The singing of the choir was marked by dramatic force and vigour, the intonation being especially good. Mr. J. Cliffe Forrester conducted.

The Fulham and District Choral Society gave a performance of 'Elijah' in the Town Hall on April 1, with much success, under the conductorship of Mr. George Wilby. The principal vocalists were Miss Euneta Truscott, Miss Edith Romea, Mr. Gwilym Richards and Mr. Graham Smart. Mr. Wilby was presented by the Mayor of Fulham, on behalf of the choir and orchestra, with a silver-mounted ivory baton, as a mark of esteem and appreciation at the conclusion of a very successful season.

The Norwood Vocal Society gave a concert at the Crystal Palace on April 1, when the principal features of the programme were Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen' and Dunhill's cantata 'Tubal Cain.' These works received careful interpretations by the choir and orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Ernest A. Weaire. The solo parts were sung by Miss Ada Tunks, Miss Dora Hughes, Mr. Samuel Masters and Mr. Reginald Borough. Miss Hilda Masters played Mendelssohn's Andante and Rondo Capriccioso.

The Battersea Polytechnic Choral Society and Orchestra performed the new concert selection from Gounod's 'Faust' and Bridge's 'Forging of the anchor' on April 3. The solo vocalists were Miss Carrie Tubb, Miss May Williams, Mr. Frank Webster and Mr. Herbert Tracey. Mr. G. R. Ceiley conducted.

Mr. Munro Davison's Choral Society performed Spohr's oratorio 'Calvary' on April 20, at the Northern Polytechnic, Holloway. The soloists were Miss Kate Cherry, Messrs. Albert Maiden, Frank Osborne, Herbert Evison and William Forington. Mr. Herbert Hodge and Miss Maud Crouch officiated at the organ and pianoforte respectively, and Mr. Munro Davison conducted.

Stanford's 'The Revenge' was performed by the choir of Askew Road Wesleyan Church, Chiswick, on April 20, conducted by Mr. Eustace Pett, organist and choirmaster of the church. The programme included Sullivan's 'O gladsome Light,' Elgar's 'Pomp and circumstance' march No. 1, and a new song, 'Love's triumph,' by the conductor, which, admirably sung by Mr. Frederick Pitman, was encored. Mr. Louis Mantell presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. Alfred C. Toone at the organ.

The Herne Hill Choral Society gave a concert at Brixton Hall on April 20, when the principal work in the programme was Parry's 'Pied Piper,' the solo parts in which were sung by Mr. Frederick Lake and Mr. Reginald Davidson. The attack, intonation and enunciation of the choir, conducted by Mr. F. W. Holloway, were excellent. The programme included Barnby's 'Lullaby' and Beale's 'Come, let us join the roundelay.' The other soloists were Miss Ethel Williams (vocalist), Miss Edith Evans (violoncello), Miss Maude Horne (violin) and Mr. F. W. Holloway (pianoforte).

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Vienna, April 15, 1909.

The first performance of Richard Strauss's 'Elektra' proved a sensational event which was long and eagerly discussed. Let it be said at once that the success with the audience was unmistakable, that the composer and all the singers were at the finish called before the curtain some twenty times, and that on the part of the Direction of the Court-Opera everything possible had been done to secure a first-rate performance. That a work, the action of which is throughout exciting, produces an even more drastic effect if set to music rushing restlessly along and seasoned with every possible dynamic and acoustic sensational effect, goes without saying, and consequently the majority of the audience, who belonged to the most select circles of Vienna, sat under the spell of a nerve-shattering, exciting production, which lasts without any interruption for two hours, and ends with a Finale in which things are worked up to a state of frenzy. Anyone, however, who still is blessed with a correct musical ear and sound nerves, while admiring anew Strauss's virtuoso-like treatment of the orchestra, and his command of dramatic effect, will feel the superabundance of torturing, brutal dissonances as painfully as the lack of real invention. The short melodic fragments with which the music seems here and there adorned are either commonplace or wanting in originality; all effects are merely external, and in the whole tragedy there is scarcely a passage which could move us deep down in our souls. The vocal parts have lost all melodic importance, and are reduced to dry declamation. One stands puzzled before the question: whether and how in this direction can music-drama possibly still further 'develop backwards'?

But in 'Elektra' we are, at any rate, impressed with the strong individuality and enormous technical accomplishment of the composer, and these may explain the great 'theatre success' of the work. It is different with the opera 'Zaza,' by Leoncavallo, which was given for the first time at the 'Volksoper' on April 5, a work, however, which does not seem likely to be frequently repeated. Speaking generally, we are getting heartily sick of all these dramatic monstrosities which move ever farther away from real music and from all that is vocal.

The concert season terminated with a performance of Verdi's 'Requiem,' and a most solemn rendering of Bach's 'Passion according to St. Matthew.' In the 'Requiem' the Court-Opera orchestra and the Singverein took part under the direction of F. Weingartner. The 'Passion' united a large number of executants, viz., the Singverein, the Männergesangverein, a choir of boys, and the orchestra of the Konzertverein, under Schalk. Johannes Messobach sang the part of the Saviour with overpowering depth of expression.

RICHARD VON PERGER.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Birmingham Symphony Orchestra and the Birmingham Select Choir and Madrigal Society combined in giving an interesting popular concert in the Town Hall on March 20. Under Mr. George Halford's baton, the orchestra played Schubert's overture 'Rosamunde,' Grieg's 'Peer Gynt' Suite No. 1, and Tchaikovsky's 'Casse Noisette' Suite, in a manner that left little to be desired. Mr. Willy Lehmann achieved artistic success by his splendidly executed solos, Granville Bantock's 'Elegiac Poem' and Saint-Saëns's Allegretto from the Violoncello concerto. Mr. Edwin Stephenson conducted the choir, a practically new organization which is progressing in an admirable manner. The selection of part-songs included excerpts from Brahms, Granville Bantock, Ravenscroft, Coleridge-Taylor, Elgar, Havergal Brian and Orlando di Lasso, all of which were rendered with intelligence, admirable phrasing and commendable balance of tone.

Dr. Hans Richter most generously offered his services to conduct the special concert of the Birmingham Symphony Orchestra, given in aid of their recently-established benevolent fund, which took place in the Town Hall on March 31. The Orchestra gave a fine reading of Beethoven's C minor Symphony, as they did of the 'Zauberflöte' and 'Tannhäuser' overtures. Miss Edith Evans (soprano) and Fräulein Gabriele Wietrowetz (violinist) also kindly volunteered their services, the former contributing Schubert's 'Die Allmacht' and the latter giving for her solo Brahms's Violin concerto in D (Op. 77). During the interval Mr. Sück, on behalf of the Orchestra, presented Dr. Richter with a silver cigar casket, bearing a suitable inscription. Dr. Richter briefly thanked the Orchestra, and said 'If you are earnest in your work you will succeed, in spite of your enemies.' He quoted the German adage 'Viele Feinde, viel Ehre (Many enemies—much honour).'

The orchestra of the Midland Institute School of Music gave a concert in the large Lecture Theatre on March 22, under the conductorship of Mr. Granville Bantock, which has to be recorded as one of the best achievements yet attained under the same régime. Of special interest was the fine performance of an overture from a Suite in C, by Bach, scored for two oboes, bassoon and strings, the figured bass portion being given on the organ by Mr. W. F. Newey. Wagner's 'Siegfried Idyll' and Haydn's Symphony in B flat also received an excellent rendering. Madame Marie Fromm played with her customary technical skill and musicianly insight Beethoven's C minor Pianoforte concerto, in which she was admirably accompanied by the orchestra.

The Birmingham Choral Union chose for their last concert of the season Rossini's 'Stabat Mater,' which was given in the Town Hall on March 27 under Mr. Thomas Facer's direction. The soloists were Miss Emily Breare, Miss May Peters, Mr. Walter Lawley and Mr. Sidney Stoddart. Rossini's work was preceded by Elgar's 'Sursum Corda,' most artistically rendered on the organ by Mr. C. W. Perkins and admirably accompanied by the orchestra. Of special local interest was the first public performance of a posthumous Pianoforte concerto in E major (Op. 18) by Edward Bache, accompanied by the orchestra. Mr. Arthur Cooke played the solo part with consummate art and finish.

The Birmingham Festival Choral Society sang Verdi's 'Requiem' in the Town Hall on April 1, followed by Wagner's 'Good Friday' music and 'Grail Scene' from 'Parsifal.' Dr. Sinclair, and Mr. R. Blackall, the assistant chormaster, devoted much time and energy in the preparation of the choral section of the 'Requiem' and secured artistic results of no mean order. Miss Perceval Allen, Miss Dilys Jones, Mr. Walter Hyde and Mr. Robert Radford formed an excellent quartet of soloists.

The Sutton Choral Society gave a most successful rendering of Elgar's cantata 'King Olaf,' at the Sutton Town Hall on March 25, Mr. Joseph H. Adams, the conductor, having evidently spared no pains in its preparation. The choir now forms a well-balanced ensemble of excellent singers. Miss Euneta Truscott sang the part of Gudrun with much charm and impressiveness, Mr. Henry Turnpenney assumed the part of King Olaf with distinction, and Mr. Ivor Foster was well cast for Ironbeard.

The Midland Musical Society's annual Good Friday concert, given in the Town Hall, was this year of more than usual attraction, the programme being devoted to a performance of Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater,' in its English version, 'At the Foot of the Cross.' The rendering of this beautiful work was distinctly meritorious, indeed this old-established Society has done nothing finer under Mr. A. J. Cotton's conductorship. Excellent help was rendered by the principals, Madame Laura Taylor, Madame Marguerite Gell, Mr. Walter J. Ottey and Mr. Herbert Parker. Mr. Perkins presided at the organ.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The season of the Queen's College Chamber Concerts was brought to a close on March 19, when Brahms's 'Gipsy Songs' (Op. 103) were well performed, the singers being Madame Drinkwater, Miss M. Johnston and Messrs. Briggs and Newell. Beethoven's Trio for pianoforte and strings, in B flat (Op. 11), and Schumann's Quartet (Op. 47), and violoncello solos by Mr. Dezzo Kordy filled the programme.

The Hallé Orchestra, with Dr. Hans Richter as conductor and Signor Tamini as vocalist, gave a concert—one of Mr. Phillip's Subscription Series—on March 26. There was an excellent bill of fare, including, for the orchestra, Beethoven's seventh Symphony and overture Leonora No. 3, prelude and closing scene ('Tristan'), and Dvorák's Slavonic Rhapsodies.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL, BATH AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

There was a large attendance at Colston Hall on March 27, when the Bristol Choral Society gave their last concert for the season. Two works were given—Brahms's 'Requiem' and Max Bruch's 'Fiery Cross.' The soloists in the former work were Madame Emily Squire and Mr. Montague Borwell, who gratified the audience by their excellent interpretation. The chorus numbered 450 singers, and the orchestra (Mr. A. W. Payne, leader) consisted of seventy players. Mr. G. Herbert Riseley was at the organ. The dramatic cantata of Max Bruch, a novelty here, won great favour and was excellently rendered, Mr. William Thomas (formerly of Bristol Cathedral) being associated with the other principals. Mr. George Riseley conducted with his accustomed resourcefulness.

On April 1, Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion was sung at Bristol Cathedral, with Mr. Hubert Hunt at the organ. The choir was strengthened by members of different choral societies in the city, and in addition to the cathedral chorists there were about twenty other boys from various churches in the city. The congregation took part in the chorales, and the entire work was impressively rendered.

An orchestral concert was given at the Victoria Rooms on April 1, under the direction of Mr. Maurice Alexander. Most of the players are members of the Bristol Symphony Orchestra, Mr. F. S. Gardner being leader. The principal work performed was Tchaikovsky's Pianoforte concerto (Op. 23), with Mr. Herbert Parsons as the soloist. Other contributions by the band were the overture to 'Der Freischütz,' Wieniawski's 'Souvenir de Moscow' (with Miss Marjorie Evans, the youthful violinist, playing the solo instrument), the Vorspiel to Humperdinck's 'Hänsel and Gretel,' and the walse from Tchaikovsky's 'Eugen Onégin.' The vocalist was Miss Ethel Bird.

There was a numerous attendance on April 3 at the Victoria Rooms, when the Bristol North Choral Society gave a concert which possessed many features of interest. The principal works were Gounod's 'Messe Solennelle,' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast,' both of which received careful interpretation. The soloists in the Mass were Miss Mary Lund, Mr. Walter Heal and Mr. James Coleman (Lichfield Cathedral), and in the cantata Mr. Heal expressively sang 'Onaway, awake!' There was an efficient orchestra led by Mr. F. S. Gardner. Mr. C. W. Stear conducted most efficiently.

The annual concerts—two in number—in aid of the funds of the Amalgamated Railway Servants were given at Colston Hall on April 9. Miss Marjorie Eaton, Miss Lucy Nuttall, Miss Pauline Allen, and Mr. Cynlais Gibbs were the vocalists; Master Willie Davies was solo-violinist, and the Military Band of the Royal Marines (conductor, Mr. Frank Winterbottom) played at intervals.

The West Bristol Choral Society at the Victoria Rooms, on April 21, gave a creditable performance of Haydn's 'Creation,' chorus and band numbering 110. The soloists were Miss Eveline Gerrish, Mr. Reginald Rhymes, and Mr. Herbert V. Spiller. Mr. Charles Read was the conductor.

At Bath Abbey, on April 9, the cantata 'The Cross of Christ,' by Thomas Adams, organist and director of the music at St. Alban's, Holborn, was effectively rendered. The tenor and bass soloists were respectively Mr. A. E. Gough and Mr. L. Fisher. Mr. Albert E. New was at the organ.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Dublin Philharmonic Society (conductor, Mr. Charles G. Marchant) gave their third concert for the season on March 23. The programme consisted of Mendelssohn's 'Trumpet' overture and the unfinished opera 'Loreley,' and Parts 1 and 2 of Haydn's 'Creation.' The soloists were Madame Clementine de Vere-Sapio (who made her first appearance here as an oratorio singer on this occasion, though well and favourably known as an operatic artist), Mr. R. G. Matthews and Mr. Charles Kelly.

On April 5, the Dublin Orchestral Society gave a concert at which Dr. Esposito conducted Beethoven's seventh Symphony, Schumann's 'Genoveva' overture, Elgar's 'Enigma' variations (repeated by request, owing to their great success at the concert of March 11), and a selection from 'Die Meistersinger,' including the overture.

During the week commencing March 29, the Amateur Operatic Society, under the conductorship of Dr. Esposito, gave a most successful series of performances of 'Ernani' (four times) and 'Faust' (three times). A complete orchestra was engaged for the week, and added greatly to the success of these representations.

In the Aberdeen Hall, on March 23, Mr. Percy Whitehead gave a song recital assisted by Miss Nettie Edwards (soprano), Mr. Clyde Twelvetrees (violinocello) and Mr. C. W. Wilson (pianoforte). Mr. Percy Whitehead, the possessor of an unusually beautiful baritone voice, sang Somervell's 'Maud' cycle extremely well, in addition to a selection of classical songs. Miss Nettie Edwards was heard to advantage in Leonora's air from Beethoven's 'Fidelio.' Mr. Clyde Twelvetrees played Mendelssohn's 'Variations concertantes' and some shorter pieces, including a melodious 'Meditation' from his own pen.

The Dublin Oratorio Society, conductor Mr. Vincent O'Brien, gave their usual 'Holy Week Festival' concert in the Theatre Royal on April 6. The programme consisted of Rossini's 'Stabat Mater,' and some miscellaneous selections. The solos were sung by Miss Evangeline Florence, Madame Joan Holland, Mr. Walter Hyde (his first appearance here), and Mr. Hamilton Earle. Mr. Arthur Darley was leader of the band.

The next musical event of importance will be the Feis Ceoil or Irish Musical Festival, which will be held during the week beginning May 17. The principal event of the week (besides the various competitions) will be the first performance of Mr. G. Molyneux Palmer's prize cantata 'The Abbot of Inisfallen,' Benedetto Palmieri's prize 'Irish' symphony, and Norman Hay's prize part-song. Mr. Joseph O'Mara, Mr. T. Tertius Noble, M. Achille Rivarde, Signor Albanesi, and Mr. A. J. Dunn (bandmaster 'Faugh-a-ballaghs') will be the adjudicators in the various competitions.

The band of the Royal Marines, Chatham Division, can point to an excellent record of orchestral music performed by them during the past winter season. Symphonies by Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert, and Mendelssohn head a long printed list of music upon which the bandmaster, Mr. Charles Hoby, and his excellent bandmen merit hearty congratulation.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At the last of Mr. Denhof's Chamber Concerts, on March 27, the Walenn Quartet made their first appearance in Edinburgh, and had a highly favourable reception. Miss Jean Waterston, accompanied by Signor Ricci, was heard to advantage in songs by Orffice, Debussy, Fischeff and other composers.

The Edinburgh Northern Choral Society, conductor Mr. J. A. Crichton, gave its annual concert in the Music Hall on March 27. The programme included selections from Gounod's 'Faust,' and Bridge's 'The Inchcape rock.' The choir did its work in a praiseworthy manner, singing with fine quality of tone and a commendable degree of steadiness. The soloists were Miss N. Y. Speedie, Mrs. Marion Christie, Mr. W. S. Hamilton and Mr. Bridge-Peters.

Mr. Moonie's choir (conductor, Mr. J. A. Moonie), supported by Mr. Amers' celebrated Newcastle Orchestra (leader, Mr. Perry), gave its annual concert in the Music Hall on March 30. The works performed were Coleridge-Taylor's 'Bon-bon Suite' (its first performance in Edinburgh), Félicien David's 'The Desert' (for male voices) and Frederic Cliffe's 'Ode to the North-east wind.' The 'Bon-bon Suite' is a delightful little work, and should soon become popular with choral societies, abounding as it does in beautiful effects and affording ample scope for refined singing. Throughout the evening the singing of the choir was practically above reproach, alike as regards tunefulness, unanimity of attack, balance of parts and interpretative excellence. Special mention is due of the rendering of 'The Desert,' which displayed a delicacy in treatment of nuance rarely attained in male-voice choral singing. The soloists were Mr. George Campbell (baritone), Mr. W. H. Oldham (tenor), and Messrs. James Taylor, James Smith and John Cowan. The spoken passages in 'The Desert' were impressively rendered by Mr. R. C. H. Morrison, the well-known elocutionist.

The annual concert of the Edinburgh Western Choral Society was given in the Music Hall on April 7, when Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' and some part-songs comprised the programme. The singing of the choir was greatly enjoyed, and gave evidence of much painstaking work on the part of the conductor, Mr. Gavin Godfrey. The soloists were Miss Christie Macdiarmid, Miss Maggie Wilson, Mr. Ashbridge Miller and Mr. James Bailie.

Amongst other concerts which have been given during the month, mention may be made of a vocal recital by Miss Marion Richardson, March 23; concert by the Morning-side Orchestral Society, March 25; Orpheus Amateur Orchestral Society, March 26; Philharmonic Orchestral Society, March 29; Mr. Winram's Orchestra, March 29; Edinburgh Amateur Orchestral Society's last concert of the season, April 5; performances of Bach's 'St. John' Passion, in Broughton Place Church, conductor, Dr. W. B. Ross, March 25; Gounod's 'Redemption,' in St. Oswald's Parish Church, conductor, Mr. Nalborough, March 27; Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion, in St. Mary's Cathedral, conductor, Mr. T. H. Collinson, April 2, and a concert by the Choral Union Advanced Class, conductor, Mr. James Dowie, April 10.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Glasgow Amateur Operatic Society gave five very successful performances of 'The Gondoliers,' from March 30 to April 3. Under Dr. D. F. Wilson's able and energetic guidance, the Society has in a few years attained a high position among similar organizations in the city, and their rendering of Sullivan's sparkling opera this year was such as would have done no discredit to a professional company. A feature of the performances was the excellent singing of the choir.

The annual concert of the Western Amateur Orchestra, now conducted by Mr. John Mactaggart, took place on April 1. In a judiciously selected programme, which included Haydn's Symphony No. 2, in D, the band played exceedingly well, the wood-wind and brass sections being much above the usual amateur standard. Vocal solos were contributed by Mr. John Burnett.

On April 2 the Teachers' Choral Society, under Mr. Alec Steven, gave a praiseworthy rendering of Romberg's rarely heard 'The Lay of the Bell,' the accompaniments being played by a small orchestra led by Mr. John Daly.

The last concert for the season of the Glasgow Bach Choir was given in the Cathedral on April 7, when an abridged form of the 'St. Matthew' Passion was sung. Although somewhat lacking in power, the choir sang with considerable effect, particularly in the less dramatic numbers. As on former occasions, Mr. Herbert Walton's masterly handling of the organ in the accompaniments greatly enhanced the performance. The solo music was in the experienced hands of Miss Betty Booker, the Hon. Norah Dawnay, Messrs. Webster Millar, Francis Harford and Walter Harvey. Mr. J. M. Diack conducted.

MUSIC IN GLOUCESTER AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The County Orchestral Society gave their annual concert on April 10, when an appreciative audience listened to a splendidly rendered selection of music. Variety was infused into the programme by some part-music, sung by the Gloucester Orpheus Society, an exceedingly happy departure. In addition to Dr. Brewer, the following composers of their own works conducted at this concert: Sir Hubert Parry, Mr. C. Lee Williams, Dr. C. H. Lloyd, and Mr. W. H. Reed. The programme included Mendelssohn's 'Hebrides' overture, Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony, Dr. Brewer's two pieces, 'Age and Youth,' a Serenade for strings, by Elgar, and the suite 'Venitienne' by Mr. W. H. Reed. The Orpheus Society sang 'O my love's like a red, red rose' (Dr. Brewer), 'Let my voice ring' and 'Fly to my mistress' (Dr. Lloyd), 'The phantom host' (Hegar), 'Hang Fear' and 'Orpheus' Lyre' (Sir Hubert Parry), 'Peace' and 'The Pedlar' (Mr. C. Lee Williams).

The concert given by the Gloucester Choral Society in the Shire Hall, on April 20, was of a miscellaneous character, the Society singing only part-songs, and the beautiful madrigal 'Sweet honey-sucking bees' (Wilbye). The soloists were Madame de Vere-Sapio, Miss Muriel Pickup (violin), Mr. Roland Jackson, Mr. Dalton Baker, and Mr. W. H. Squire.

Newent Choral Society, which has been revived after a lapse of two or three years, gave an excellent rendering of Dr. A. Herbert Brewer's 'Emmaus,' on March 26. The performance was given in the parish church and, for the occasion, the Society's conductor, Mr. W. H. Morgan, organist of Highnam, resigned the baton to the composer. The solo parts were taken by Miss Hull, of Hereford, and Mr. A. J. Ranson, of Gloucester Cathedral. The orchestra played Mackenzie's 'Benedictus.'

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The concerts of the Welsh Choral Union were brought to a successful termination by a splendid performance of Mr. Granville Bantock's 'Omar Khayyám' (Part I.), which powerful and original work received its first hearing in Liverpool on March 27. Thanks to the enterprise of Mr. Harry Evans, conductor of the Union, the complex music went with an enthusiasm which infected his singers, orchestra and audience alike. The zeal and efficiency of the Welsh singers were again remarkable, and the composer himself, who was present and cheered to the echo, has since written a letter to Mr. Evans which describes in apt terms its own high appreciation of the performance. The vocal soloists were Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. John Coates and Mr. Frederic Austin.

The Cloughton St. Cecilia Society brought its twenty-first season to a close on April 3, when Brahms's 'Requiem' and Mendelssohn's 98th Psalm ('Sing to the Lord') were performed. The high efficiency of the Society, which is conducted by Mr. Appleyard, was again demonstrated, and a feature was the singing of German's four-part song 'Oh lovely May,' dedicated to this Society, which had to be repeated.

The concluding concert of the Societa Armonica's season took place on April 3, when the programme contained Mozart's G minor Symphony, Elgar's 'Enigma' variations, and a lively overture by Sinigaglia entitled 'Le Baruffe Chiozzotti.' Max Bruch's second Violin concerto in D minor was skilfully played by Mr. Brian Imlach, a member of the orchestra. The vocalist, Mrs. Howard Stephens, was successful in Mendelssohn's scena 'Infelice,' and Mr. V. Akeroyd conducted.

The twelfth and closing concert of the seventieth season of the Philharmonic Society was signalled on March 23 by a concert performance of Beethoven's opera 'Fidelio,' Prefaced by the 'Leonora' overture (No. 3), an admirable rendering of the work was conducted by Dr. F. H. Cowen, the vocal principals being Madame Agnes Nicholls, Miss Lillie Wormald, Mr. Walter Hyde, Mr. Frederic Austin, Mr. Robert Radford, Mr. Webster Millar and Mr. George Baker. Making allowance for the absence of costumes, scenic effects and stage-action, the music was heard to special advantage.

Mendelssohn's centenary was marked by a performance of the 'Hymn of Praise' on March 30, very efficiently sung by the Methodist Choral Union. Conducted by Mr. Percival Ingram, this excellent choral combination, some 250 voices, also sang 'Come, with torches,' and the beautiful 'Vale of rest' with commendable finish and expression. In the 'Hymn of Praise' Mrs. Henry J. Wood, Miss Florence Hector and Mr. Charles Saunders were effective soloists. A feature of the miscellaneous items was the playing of Mr. John Lawson in the Andante and Finale of the Violin concerto.

Mendelssohn's 'Lauda Sion' was effectively sung on March 24 by the choir of Emmanuel Church, Bootle, the vocal soloists being Miss Mary Langdon, Miss Edith Buchanan, Mr. L. Mercer and Mr. R. Wynne Jones. Under Mr. Albert Workman's able direction, the accompaniments were sustained by a stringed orchestra and the organ, at which Mr. W. A. Roberts presided.

The coming of age of Mr. W. Hulme Lever, of Port Sunlight, was musically marked by a performance by the Port Sunlight Philharmonic Society in the village Auditorium on March 25, when a cantata for chorus and orchestra, 'Heliogorus,' words by Mrs. Hemans, and music by Mr. F. B. Cheshire, was performed. Mr. John Cheshire, the composer's father, conducted, and Mr. Alfred Ross led the orchestra. The music of the cantata possesses considerable interest and contrast in dramatic and choral treatment. Mr. Cheshire was cordially 'called,' and presented with a silver-mounted baton by Mr. W. H. Lever, to whom the work is inscribed.

A well-chosen programme of sacred music was submitted by the Oxtun Harmonic Society at the closing concert on April 2. Under Mr. H. E. Hunt's direction the choir was heard with appreciation in Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer' (soloist, Miss F. Louttid), Gerard Cobb's setting of the 62nd Psalm, and two chorales by J. S. Bach. The soloists included Miss Mary Heath and Mr. A. H. Davies.

It is with great regret that the dissolution of the Orchestral Society has to be recorded. At the annual general meeting on April 5, the balance sheet presented showed a deficiency of £414, including a loss on last season of £250. A similar diminution of public support was disclosed at the meeting of the shareholders of the Liverpool Symphony Orchestra, whose concerts in the Sun Hall have hitherto received favourable attention. It is satisfactory to learn that in the case of this excellent local orchestra, which is run by its members on a co-operative basis, the concerts will be experimentally resumed next season; but they are to be fewer in number and held in a more central hall.

A young local soprano, Miss Edina Thraves, gave a successful vocal recital on March 22, when she was assisted by Madame Marguerite Stilwell (pianoforte) and Mr. Arthur Catterall (violin). Miss Thraves's singing commends itself not only by its brightness and vivacity, but also by the intelligence and skill which controls her sweet and flexible voice. Her selection ranged from Pergolesi to Hugo Wolf, whose 'Verborgenheit' was charmingly sung.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Edith Robinson Quartet played specially well at their concert on March 29, Miss Robinson leading with fine, well-governed spirit. The programme contained the Haydn Quartet in D (Op. 20, No. 4); a Sonata by Bach (from the 'Musical Sacrifice'), for flute, violin and pianoforte, in C minor, played by Mr. Edward De Jong, Miss Edith Robinson and Mr. Charles Risehari; and Beethoven's String quintet in C (Op. 29). In the quintet Miss Lily Simms took the second viola. Mr. J. Campbell McInnes contributed two groups of worthy songs with characteristic earnestness. The last of the Promenade Smoking Concerts, on April 3, was furnished with a plébiscite programme, which included Haydn's 'Farewell' Symphony, Berlioz's 'Hungarian March,' and the 'Tannhäuser' overture; Mr. Robert Radford was the vocalist. For the last concert of the season of the Manchester Vocal Society, Dr. Henry Watson prepared another of his delightful programmes of old-time music. The accompaniments to the vocal selections required, and were provided with, the services of violins (3), viola, double-bass, flutes (2), viola d'amore, viol da gamba, harpsichord (Dr. Watson) and organ. The works of foreign composers filled the first part of the programme, the Flemish school of madrigalists being represented by Crecquillon and Arcadelt; the Italian school by Striggio, Pergolesi, Palestrina, Marcello and Marenzio; Rameau stood for France, with a delightful little chorus from one of the composer's ballets; and greatest of all, with the church cantata 'God's own time is the best,' sung to the original accompaniments, Bach stood for Germany and for all the world of polyphonic music. The second part of the programme was filled with more popular examples of Early-English music.

For the first time in their annual opera performances, the students of the Royal Manchester College of Music have dared the stage. On April 6 they gave a complete performance of Gluck's 'Iphigenia in Aulis' at the Gaiety Theatre. Dr. Brodsky, the Principal, conducted. The band, recruited from the Hallé Orchestra, was excellent, and the students, if naturally lacking in histrionic skill, could not well have been more note-perfect or word-perfect.

A fully scored concert-overture, written by Mr. C. H. Fogg, the organist of the Hallé Concerts, was performed on March 29 by the Altrincham Orchestral Society, a very capable suburban organization of which Mr. Fogg is the conductor. An interesting vocal and violoncello recital was given on April 1 by Miss Alice Mandeville and Miss Adelina Leon.

MUSIC IN NEWCASTLE AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Jarrow Philharmonic Society added their quota to the Mendelssohn celebrations on March 24, when 'The Hymn of Praise,' the 'Hebrides' overture, and two smaller items of the same composer's were given. Miss Eva Rich, Mrs. George Dodds and Mr. G. W. Riley were the soloists, and Mr. George Dodds conducted. A feature of the concert was the excellence of the wood-wind, a department of our local orchestras which is not always distinguished for its good qualities.

On March 29 a recital of scenes from Debussy's opera 'Pelleas and Mélisande' was given by M. Engel and Madame Bathori-Engel. Their performance (Madame Engel both plays and sings) can only be described as perfect.

The Northumberland Amateur Orchestral Society, conducted by W. C. Horsley, gave its annual concert on April 1. The chief item was Svendsen's second Symphony. On the same evening the Whitby Bay Choral Society made its début in 'Elijah.'

The Classical Concert Society gave its last concert of the season on April 2, when Mr. Donald Tovey (pianoforte) and the Misses von Aranyi (violinists) gave a recital chiefly devoted to Bach, Beethoven and Brahms.

On April 21 a good performance of Berlioz's 'Faust' was given by the Darlington Choral and Orchestral Society. The orchestra, which contains a large amateur contingent, gave a most satisfactory rendering of the elaborate instrumental portions, and the chorus showed the careful training of the conductor, Mr. T. Henderson. Miss Edith Evans, Mr. R. Burnett, and Mr. R. Mulling, a tenor with a fine rich voice and artistic method, who sang the work at very short notice, were the soloists.

MUSIC IN NORTH STAFFORDSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Hanley Glee and Madrigal Society (conductor, Mr. John James), with the Queen's Hall Orchestra, gave a festival concert on March 25 in the Victoria Hall, Hanley. The principal feature was Dvorák's 'Spectre's Bride,' last heard here at one of the defunct North Staffs Triennial Festivals in 1896. There is in this cantata a spontaneity of utterance, a never-failing grip of orchestral effect, a natural feeling for dramatic instinct, which will keep it alive for many years. The choral and orchestral work was flawless, and Madame Emily Squire, Mr. Walter Hyde and Mr. Robert Burnett were excellent principals. Mr. Henry J. Wood, who conducted, left nothing of Dvorák's illuminating work unrevealed. Bach's motet 'Be not afraid' was heard at this concert for the first time in this district, and its performance was one of fine understanding, grip and expression. Its close marked a triumph for Mr. John James and his choristers. Elgar's 'On the Alur' was given with much delicacy. The remaining items were the 'Leonore' overture No. 3 (Beethoven), Rhapsody in F, No. 1 (Liszt), and the 'Tannhäuser' overture (Wagner).

Persistent rumours are rife that the Triennial Festival is to be revived. The late festivals were given under the presidency of Mr. A. F. Coghill, a local musical amateur and philanthropist, and during their short existence brought to public notice Edward Elgar with his 'King Olaf,' and several other works were produced at these music-makings. The present time is certainly more ripe than was the case twenty years ago, and we look forward to the advent of the next series of Triennial Musical Festivals.

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Boston Choral Society gave a good performance of 'Elijah' on March 23, when the title-role was undertaken by Mr. Montague Borwell. The band and choir were under the direction of Mr. G. H. Gregory, and the orchestra was led by Mr. J. E. Hilton.

The performance of the 'Dream of Gerontius' by the Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society on March 25, is entitled to great praise: Brahms's 'Song of Destiny' occupied the first part of the programme. The solos were ably rendered by Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Webster Millar and Mr. Francis Harford; Mr. Lyell-Taylor led the orchestra, and Mr. F. Wyatt rendered good service at the organ. Mr. Allen Gill conducted.

Gaul's 'Joan of Arc' was sung by the Bolsover Harmonic Society on March 31, under the direction of Dr. Stratton. The choruses were well sung, and the soloists were Mrs. White, Mr. Monaghan and Mr. H. Reynolds.

The Ilkeston Harmonic Society gave a performance of Haydn's 'Creation' on April 6. Miss Carey Kershaw, Mr. Walter Lawley and Mr. Cuthbert Allan were responsible for the solos, and Mr. C. J. Robinson conducted an appreciative performance.

The annual concert of the combined forces of the Choral Union and Orchestra of the Nottingham Evening Continuation Schools took place on April 22, under the direction of Mr. Arthur Richards. The works chosen for performance were Mendelssohn's 95th Psalm, and a selection from 'Tannhäuser.' It is matter for congratulation that the united forces numbered nearly two hundred performers.

The Council of the Royal Manchester College of Music have decided to institute a new department in the College for the special training of music teachers, and Dr. Walter Carroll, of Manchester, has been appointed Professor of the Art and Practice of Teaching.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The closing day of March found the Heeley Musical Union, an energetic suburban choral organization, busy with Cliffe's 'Ode to the North-east wind,' of which the choir, ably directed by Mr. Maurice Tomlinson, gave a spirited performance. Mr. Cliffe's brilliant little work is extremely popular with choralists round about Sheffield, where, at the festival of 1905, it received its first hearing. Mention must also be made of an excellent performance by the Tankersley Choral Society of a cantata, 'Ariadne in Naxos,' composed by Mr. George Blake Walker, a well-known South Yorkshire amateur musician. Mr. Joseph Soar conducted.

On April 1, Mr. F. Shimeld directed a well-prepared performance, by the Hillsborough Choral Society, of Rossini's 'Stabat Mater,' while at the other end of the city the Norton Lees Society submitted to their subscribers a programme which included 'King Harold' (Cunningham Woods), 'Blest pair of Sirens' (Parry), and Sullivan's 'Te Deum.' Mr. I. White was the conductor.

Passion Week and Eastertide produced more than the customary number of performances of Stainer's 'The Crucifixion,' which in this district appears still to be increasing in popularity. Maunders' 'Olivet to Calvary' was also performed at several churches. Special devotional music was also sung at Attercliffe Church (Mendelssohn's 'Christus') and St. Mary's Church (Mendelssohn's 22nd Psalm).

The list of choral concerts of the month should also include appreciative reference to successful concerts by the Heeley Wesley Choral Society, conducted by Mr. E. G. Laycock (Elgar's 'Weary wind of the West' and Fanning's 'Song of the Vikings'); the Sheffield Male Glee and Madrigal Society (conductor, Mr. W. H. Robinson), and a new organization, the All Saints' Church Institute Choral Society, which made its debut under Mr. B. M. Bellamy in Bennett's 'The May Queen.'

Towards the end of last month the amateur orchestral societies of the city gave much appreciated concerts. The senior body, the Amateur Instrumental Society, performed, under Mr. J. Duffell, Beethoven's C minor Symphony, Schumann's 'Manfred' Overture, and Mendelssohn's 'Midsummer Night's Dream' music. The symphony was particularly well played, the Andante being the best of the four movements.

The Sheffield Philharmonic Orchestra comprises two sections. The members forming the numerous and thriving probationary branch are instructed and directed by Mr. J. H. Parkes. Their programme included German's 'Welsh' Rhapsody and Holbrooke's 'Pantomime' Suite. The senior orchestra followed with a concert at which Sterndale Bennett's G minor Symphony and Shapleigh's 'Ramayana' Suite were the principal works played. Mr. Parkes again conducted.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

LEEDS.

The most notable incident of the past month's music at Leeds has been the visit of the Moody-Manners Company (March 29—April 3), for the series of operas they offered was one of more than ordinary interest. Indeed, it may be doubted whether a provincial town has ever had an opportunity of hearing, during a single week, a programme of more general interest than is represented by 'Meistersinger' (two performances), 'Eugen Onégin,' 'Madame Butterfly' (two performances), 'Aida,' 'Traviata' and 'Faust.' It is satisfactory to be able to add that this artistic enterprise, due in a great measure to the efforts of the Leeds Playgoers' Society, was rewarded by crowded houses, the really musical public of the district being strongly represented. The Carl Rosa Company followed, on April 26, with a good but more stereotyped programme.

On March 24 the Leeds Philharmonic and Subscription Concert season came to a close with 'Acis and Galatea,' followed by the third part of Schumann's 'Faust.' Refined and sympathetic performances were secured by Sir Charles Stanford, who succeeded in giving to Handel's Serenata the lightness of touch which it requires and which is so often missed. The work was given without additional accompaniments, the figured bass in the airs being supplied by the conductor on the pianoforte, supported by a small and select orchestra grouped round him. The principal soloists were Miss Edith Evans, Mr. Ben Davies and Mr. Herbert Brown.

On March 31 the Leeds Choral Union gave a fine performance of Brahms's 'German Requiem,' under Dr. Coward's direction. Miss Jenny Taggart was quite at her best in the soprano solo, and Mr. Ivor Foster gave a warm and sympathetic interpretation of the baritone part. For the second part of the concert a bright and forcible performance of Bach's Magnificat was given, in which the other soloists were Miss Fyans, Mrs. Leigh, and Mr. Albert Watson.

During Holy Week (on April 5) the customary performance at the Leeds Parish Church of Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion took place, and one was more impressed than ever by the manner in which the music has become understood by the executants and appreciated by a large proportion of the congregation—not merely as a work of art, but as a sincere and direct effort to present the story of the Passion as vividly as possible to the hearer. Dr. Bairstow was the organist, and the familiarity which a long series of these performances has engendered, enabled a conductor to be dispensed with.

On April 7, Handel's later Passion Music (c. 1716) was given at St. Chad's, Headingley, also with organ only and under the direction of the organist, Mr. H. Percy Richardson. The abridgment suggested by the Rev. J. Baden Powell was made use of, taking just an hour and embodying all the principal episodes, the only addition being the soprano air, 'The rose fall oft we see,' which takes the form of a Siciliana. Though the music lacks the distinction of Handel's much later oratorios, it is characteristic and forms a dignified setting of the text, very suitable for use on such occasions as this one.

At the Leeds Musical Evening of March 23, Mr. Zacharewitsch gave an enjoyable recital of violin music, including Tchaikovsky's Concerto, which was finely played, if perhaps with needless exaggerations. In pieces as far apart as Bach's Prelude and Fugue in G minor and Wieniawski's 'Faust' Fantasia, the executant's powers were strikingly displayed, and a Caprice of Paganini was among his happiest efforts. On March 27, Miss Alice Simpkin's string quartet of ladies gave an afternoon concert, the programme including Schumann's Pianoforte quintet, Brahms's Horn trio (with viola), and a movement from a Quartet by B. Holländer, in all of which Miss Simpkin and her associates showed efficiency and musical feeling.

The Armley Choral Society, one of the most efficient of the smaller choruses at Leeds, gave a performance of Elgar's 'King Olaf' on April 20, which, though it had to be somewhat curtailed as regards the orchestral details, was very effective, and reproduced admirably the fresh vigour of the music. The choir is excellent in material, well-trained and full of fire, and Mr. Pickard, the conductor, made the most of his well-tuned singers. The principals were Madame Goodall, Mr. G. W. Riley and Mr. James Shaw.

OTHER TOWNS.

The Bradford Festival Choral Society gave a concert on March 26, chiefly consisting of unaccompanied choral music, of which Palestrina's 'Stabat Mater' and Bach's motet, 'Sing ye to the Lord' were the most striking features. Coleridge-Taylor's fine choral ballad, 'Beside the ungathered rice he lay,' and Parry's 'Blest pair of Sirens' were also given, the former with pianoforte, the latter with organ, and though well sung under Dr. Cowen's direction, lost something in the absence of an orchestra. Mr. G. F. Sewell, one of the oldest members of the Society and its secretary and historian, died recently, and in his memory Spohr's 'Blest are the departed' was sung.

For the last of the Huddersfield Subscription Concerts, Dr. Richter and the Hallé Orchestra gave, on March 30, a programme including César Franck's 'Symphonic Variations' for pianoforte (Mr. Fred. Dawson) and orchestra, a work of real charm which is very seldom heard. Mr. Dawson also gave a most brilliant performance of Saint-Saëns's 'Afrique' fantasia, and Dr. Richter conducted Tchaikovsky's fourth Symphony, of which a very forceful reading was presented.

On March 22 the Pudsey Choral Union, of which Mr. H. H. Pickard is the conductor, gave a Mendelssohn programme. The 'Hymn of Praise' was its chief feature, and in the second part Mr. Pickard took the solo part in the Cappriccio Brillante for pianoforte. Madame Fidler and Mr. S. Hempall were the principal vocalists.

The Scarborough Philharmonic Society, under Dr. Ely, gave an excellent, but apparently not very popular, programme on March 22. Dr. Vaughan Williams's beautiful setting of Walt Whitman's poem, 'Toward the unknown region,' composed for the last Leeds Festival, has not been heard as often as its merits would warrant, and was the more welcome on this account. It was well sung, though the powerful climax was not perfectly realised. The 'Eroica' Symphony, very creditably played, and the first and second parts of the 'Creation' completed the programme. The principals were Miss Williams, Mr. Fallas and Mr. Godley.

At Hull, the Symphony Orchestra ended the most successful season it has experienced with an extra 'benefit' concert, on March 24, when Beethoven's C minor Pianoforte concerto (with Mr. Berkeley Williams as soloist) was very ably played, and a powerful reading was given by Mr. Wallerstein of the 'Finlandia' of Sibelius. The 'Coppelia' suite of Delibes ended the concert very pleasantly.

On March 30 the Hull Vocal Society, of which Dr. G. H. Smith is the conductor, gave a miscellaneous concert, consisting chiefly of unaccompanied music. A well-chosen series of compositions by Samuel Wesley ('In exitu' and 'In praise of music'), Mendelssohn ('Judge me, O God'), Brahms ('In Autumn'), Tchaikovsky ('Hymn of the Cherubim'), and T. Tertius Noble ('Evening song') were well sung, and Mr. Noble's piece met with a particularly hearty reception. Miss Perceval Allen and Mr. Herbert Brown sang solos, and Miss Madge Murphy was the violinist.

On the same evening the York Musical Society gave, under Mr. Noble's direction, Verdi's 'Requiem,' with Miss Bywater, Miss Carrie Jones, Mr. Albert Watson and Mr. F. Austin as principals. Mozart's G minor Symphony was also given.

On March 31 the Middlesbrough Choral Union gave a most interesting performance of Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion. Mr. Webster Millar's artistic and highly sympathetic reading of the Narrator's part was a prominent feature, and the other solo parts were most ably sung by Miss Gertrude Walton, Miss Gertrude Lonsdale and Mr. F. Harford. The accompaniments to the recitatives in music of this period always present a difficulty, and the conductor finds it not easy to attain effectiveness and at the same time to have a due regard to the composer's intention. In this case, Mr. Kilburn, who conducted, had arranged these accompaniments for wood-wind (without oboes) and horns, with a result which was at any rate more homogeneous than the alternations of pianoforte and orchestra.

After Easter all serious music in Yorkshire may be said to cease, and it assumes a more al fresco character, but there is certainly one exception in the weekly Symphony concerts at the Harrogate Kursaal, which take place on Wednesday afternoons, and afford the means of hearing a good deal of interesting music, very efficiently played under Mr. Julian Clifford, whose understudy, in case of his continued ill-health, will be Mr. Churchill Sibley. Among the works promised are Elgar's new Symphony, Glazounow's sixth symphony, a symphony by Mr. Arthur Holloway, Dukas's 'L'Apprenti Sorcier,' Debussy's 'L'Après-midi d'un Faune,' Charpentier's 'Impressions d'Italie,' Stanford's variations on 'Down among the dead men,' &c, the enumeration of which will indicate the standard set in the programmes. At the opening concert on April 21, which Mr. Sibley conducted, Mr. Bertram Shapleigh's pleasing and characteristic suite, 'Ramayana,' was played under the composer's direction.

Dr. G. H. Smith delivered an interesting lecture on 'Old Hull Musicians and their Music' at the Royal Institution, Hull, on March 27, under the auspices of the Hull and East Riding College of Music, of which he is the principal.

Foreign Notes.

BERLIN.

The ninth Symphony Concert of the Royal Orchestra was conducted by Herr Robert Laugs, of Hagen, in place of Dr. Richard Strauss, who has taken a holiday. His programme included Elgar's 'Enigma' Variations, which before him Felix Weingartner and Arthur Nikisch had conducted in Berlin, and which on this occasion were once more greatly appreciated.—Serge Wassilenko, another Russian composer hitherto unknown to fame, gave a concert of his own compositions with the Philharmonic Orchestra. The programme included a Symphony in G minor, two symphonic poems, 'The garden of death' and 'Flight of witches,' and three songs with orchestral accompaniment.—At the second concert of the Musikalische Gesellschaft, Herr Eduard Levy produced what he styles a Mass with the title of 'An die Allmacht' (To the Almighty) for solo quartet, chorus and orchestra. The text, by the composer, was a non-sectarian paraphrase of the Latin text of the Roman Mass. The music lacks invention and warmth of expression.—At a concert given by the pianist, Robert Forster Larrinager, and the violinist, Ossip Schnirlin, the recently-published posthumous Sonata movement by Johannes Brahms, dating from 1853, was played for the first time in public, and proved a splendidly virile and impassioned piece, displaying all the great qualities of the master's early works. It will be remembered that this movement formed part of a Sonata composed by Schumann, Brahms and Dietrich (each being responsible for one movement), as a present for Joseph Joachim on his arrival at Dusseldorf on a visit to his friends.—At the Court Opera, Méhul's 'Joseph in Egypt' has been revived in a 'new version' by Dr. Max Zenger, which, like Felix Weingartner's 'version,' recently produced at Vienna, does away with the spoken dialogue, supplying recitatives instead, as well as connecting links between dialogue and Méhul's original pieces, and generally makes for quickened movement of the action. The performance, conducted by Dr. Carl Muck, and with Herr Ernst Kraus and Fräulein Frieda Hempel as Joseph and Benjamin respectively, was most excellent and gave great pleasure to the audience.

BRANDENBURG.

At the last Philharmonic concert a new 'Tragic Fantasia' by Ernst Wennrich was successfully produced.

BRUSSELS.

Contrary to general expectation, M. Edgar Tinel's new opera 'Sainte Catherine d'Alexandrie' is meeting with brilliant success which it is hoped will be maintained till the end of the season and beyond. It is said that few, if any, Belgian operas have been so successful as this 'Katharina,' as it is styled in Brussels, which is now attracting many crowded and appreciative audiences to the Théâtre Royal de la Monnaie.—At the last popular concert, two rarely-heard oratorios, viz., Saint-Saëns's 'The Deluge' and Chabrier's 'The Shulamite' were performed, while the Théâtre Molière revived an old treasure in the shape of Grétry's 'Zemire et Azor.'—M. Raoul Laparra's gruesome three-act lyric drama 'La Habanera' was performed for the first time at the Théâtre Royal de la Monnaie on March 25, and impressed the audience sufficiently to warrant their giving the composer a 'triple ovation in recognition of the truly novel sensations they had experienced,' as a local musical paper puts it.

CHEMNITZ.

The Municipal Orchestra, under Professor Pohle, produced on March 13 a new Concert Overture, bearing the title of 'Befreiung' (Deliverance), composed by a Dutch musician, Kor Kuiler. Notwithstanding that the work is clear and straightforward in expression and workmanship, it met with much success.—The enterprising Kantor of St. Luke's Church, Georg Stolz, recently produced the third part of Felix Draeseke's cycle 'Christus' ('The Lord's death and victory') at his church, and with the assistance of excellent soloists, a first-rate chorus, and the Municipal Orchestra, secured a worthy rendering of the impressive work. He thus earned the thanks of all admirers of the veteran musician, who, even if his music will not live, will ever be known as one of the original members of that 'small but formidable circle of musicians who in the famous Weimar days formed the new German School.'

COLOGNE.

Exceptional success attended the production of a new Symphony by Ewald Strasser at the last Gürzenich concert, conducted by Generalmusikdirektor Fritz Steinbach.

DRESDEN.

'Das Tausendjährige Reich' (The 1000 years' realm) is the title of a new sacred choral work by Albert Fuchs, which was recently produced here with great success by the Robert Schumannsche Singakademie. The libretto certainly has the advantage of novelty, for it deals with the terrible December 31, 999, when Christians expected the end of the world at the stroke of midnight.—Not content with their existing Court Theatre, Dresden citizens are agitating for a new, finer, and larger building to suit the present-day needs of their city. Oberbürgermeister Bentler has accepted the presidency of a 'Theater-Verein' which will see to the collecting of the necessary funds, while the municipality has already agreed to provide a site in the former Orangerie-Garden.

ESSEN.

What may prove an interesting 'novelty' to the present generation, an 'Oriental Singspiel' entitled 'Die drei Wünsche' (The three wishes), will be heard at the Municipal Theatre next season. The composer is the well-known writer of German ballades, Carl Löwe, and his work, the full score of which is in the Royal Library, Berlin, has been as good as lost since its production in Berlin in 1833.

LISBON.

What appears to have been, and is at least described as a 'brilliant success,' attended the recent production at the San Carlos Theatre of a new four-act opera, 'La Borghesina,' words by M. Golisciano, music by M. Augusto Machado, director of the local Conservatoire of Music.

MAYENCE.

A one-act opera, 'Safé,' by H. Hadley, was successfully produced here at the Municipal Theatre. The libretto, by E. Oxenford (translated into German by Dr. Otto Neitzel) is based upon a Persian fairy-tale. The composer, who conducted, was repeatedly called before the curtain at the close.

MILAN.

Signor Luigi Mancinelli's new one-act opera 'Paolo e Francesca' was produced at La Scala Theatre without, however, making that deep impression which had been expected. Richard Strauss's 'Elektra' met with a decidedly mixed reception at its recent first performance at La Scala Theatre, part of the audience applauding vigorously, while the remainder indulged in noisy protests. At subsequent performances, however, enthusiasm only prevailed. Dr. Strauss was present at the fifth representation.

MONTE CARLO.

Dr. Saint-Saëns's latest work takes the form of some important incidental music to a drama in five acts entitled 'La Foi' (The Faith), by M. Brieux. Produced by M. Raoul Gunsbourg at the Casino Theatre on April 10, the music had for some time past been announced for performance by a number of Paris managers; but whatever arrangements had been made, they fell through, and hence the strange spectacle of a spoken drama during the course of an operatic season. As M. Brieux's work deals with such a solemn subject as the importance of Religions, and the background is laid in ancient Egypt, M. Saint-Saëns's music is not lacking either in dignity or picturesqueness. The drama was well received.

MUNICH.

The 'Münchener Konzertverein' announces that during the course of this year's Mozart-Wagner festival performances in the Prinz-Regenten and Residenz Theatres (July 31-September 13), a cycle of concerts is to be given under the direction of Herr Ferdinand Löwe, at which the whole of Beethoven's nine and Brahms's four, as well as the best known of Anton Bruckner's nine Symphonies, will be performed.

NEW YORK.

M. Jan Blockx's opera 'Princesse d'Auberge,' was enthusiastically received at its first American performance at the Manhattan Opera House.—Mr. Walter Damrosch repeated the late Hans von Bülow's experiment of performing Beethoven's Choral symphony twice at the same concert. The experiment was successful, for very few of the audience left the hall at the close of the first performance. An innovation of which the redoubtable Hans would certainly not have approved, was the assigning of the vocal solo parts to a small chorus of thirteen voices. Cui bono?

NICE.

Thanks in no small measure to a very excellent performance under the composer's direction, a new opera 'Le double voile' by Louis Vuillemin, a recent student of the Paris Conservatoire, met with great success at its recent production here.

PARIS.

At a concert of the Société Nationale de Musique, on March 13, a number of orchestral novelties of varying degrees of beauty and effectiveness were produced. They included M. Pierre Coindreau's 'symphonic tale' 'Le Chevalier Moyme et les Diables dans l'abbaye'; M. H. Mulet's 'La Toussaint'; M. Inghelbrecht's 'Pour le jour de la première neige au vieux Japon'; single movements from symphonies by M. Marcel Orban and M. Paul Le Flem. Two songs with orchestral accompaniment by M. Florent Schmitt were also produced, and M. Vincent d'Indy came forward specially to conduct a fragment from 'Eginéa,' by Madame Blanche Lucas, sung by the composer.—At the Concerts Sechiari some important fragments from 'Le Réveil du Bouddha,' by Mr. Isidore de Lara, were brought to a successful first hearing.—At the Opéra Comique, Gluck's 'Iphigenia in Tauris' was revived 'for a few nights only,' and, with Madame Caron as the heroine, proved an artistic event of the rarest kind.—M. Delune displayed excellent creative gifts at a concert given by him at the Salle Gaveau, on March 26, when he produced an inspiring 'Symphonie chevaleresque,' a set of variations on a theme by Händel, and a violoncello concerto.

STOCKHOLM.

Wagner's 'Tristan' has at last reached Sweden, nearly half-a-century after its production at Munich! The event took place at the Royal Opera on February 11, and proved most successful. The performance was excellent, the orchestra, under Armas Järnefelt's direction, especially being faultless.

STUTT GART.

'Princessin Brambilla,' described as a 'heitere [bright] Oper,' in two acts, by Walter Braunfels, was produced at the Court Theatre on March 25, and warmly greeted as a work displaying exceptional melodic and dramatic gifts, and moreover marking the twenty-six year old composer as a coming man in the realm of opera. In the libretto, which Herr Braunfels himself has freely adapted from E. T. W. (Amadeus) Hofmann's tale of the same name, his chief aim has been musically to depict the Roman carnival, which is one of the reasons why the chorus plays a quite exceptionally important part in the composer's scheme. This fact is all the more noteworthy, seeing how the tendency to do without the chorus has grown in recent years.—In connection with the forty-fifth annual festival of the Allgemeiner Deutscher Musik Verein (Tonkünstlerversammlung) to be held here on June 2-6, it has been decided to give performances at the Court Theatre of the operas 'Mise Brun,' by F. Maurice, and 'Princessin Brambilla,' by Walter Braunfels.

TURIN.

A new three-act opera, 'Hellera,' words by Luigi Illica, music by Italo Montemezzi, was produced at the Royal Theatre on March 17, but though the music displayed many excellent qualities and the performance was beyond reproach, the work obtained no decided success.

TOURNAI.

Anton Dvorák's oratorio 'Saint Ludmila,' was on April 18 performed for the first time in Belgium at the annual festival of the local Société de Musique. The French version of the libretto was by May de Rudder, who, in the Guide Musical of April 11, published an interesting and highly appreciative article on the powerful work, the many great beauties of which should secure for it a wider popularity than so far it has attained.

WEIMAR.

A posthumous symphony for orchestra and organ, in E major, by the late E. W. Degner, was produced in the local Herderkirche at an impressive In Memoriam celebration conducted by W. von Bausnern, the new director of the Grand-ducal Music School, in which office Degner was his predecessor.

ZERBST.

Liszt's very rarely heard 'Graner Festmesse' will form one of the chief attractions of the Anhaltische Musikfest to be held here during May. New choral works by Josef Reiter and Franz Mikorey will also be produced.

The programme of the Bournemouth Symphony Concert at the Winter Gardens, on April 1, included Mr. J. Hathaway's prelude 'In te, Domine,' and suite 'Songs of the Swiss mountains,' which were performed—the last-named for the first time here—under the direction of the composer. Wagner's overture 'King Enzo,' also for the first time, and Beethoven's Symphony No. 7, were played under the conductorship of Mr. Dan Godfrey. It may also be mentioned that Elgar's Symphony was given for the second time at these concerts on April 17, under Mr. Godfrey's direction. With the exception of Manchester, this is probably the only provincial town that has given more than one performance of the Symphony.

Dr. Charles Harriss announces his third Empire Concert, in aid of the funds of the Victoria League, which is to be held at the Royal Albert Hall on Saturday afternoon, May 22. A fine array of solo vocalists, including Madame Albani and Sir Charles Santley, will take part, also the Royal Choral Society, London Symphony Orchestra, and military bands. The conductors will be Sir Frederick Bridge, (England), Sir C. V. Stanford (Ireland), and Dr. Charles Harriss (Canada). The Dominion will contribute sixty Union Jacks to the decorations of the building.

Dr. F. H. Torrington skilfully conducted an impressive performance of Gounod's 'Redemption' at Massey Hall, Toronto, on April 10. According to notices in the local newspapers, the rendering of the choral portions of the work, by the Toronto Festival Chorus and the West Toronto Festival Chorus, was highly commendable, and the orchestral players, about seventy in number, did their work well. An audience of some 3,000 people enthusiastically testified to the enjoyment that the evening's music had afforded them.

Sir Frederick Bridge presented the prizes and certificates to examinees (London centre) of Trinity College of Music, London, at Bechstein Hall on April 8. Dr. C. W. Pearce, director of examinations, occupied the chair, and the annual report was read by the local secretary, Mr. A. W. Sebastian Hoare.

A new opera, entitled 'Mietje,' by the Dutch composer Benoit Hollander, will be produced at the Hampstead Conservatoire on May 11, under the auspices of the London Academy of Music. The music is said to be of a very high order and great interest.

Mr. W. Wilson Foster has been appointed music-master at the College, Scarborough.

Answers to Correspondents.

While we are most anxious to answer questions to the best of our ability, we cannot undertake to send replies by post, nor can we give the names of teachers or concert-agents.

A. F. W.—There is a charming Suite for orchestra by Bizet, entitled 'Jeux d'enfants.' The pieces forming the Suite were originally written for pianoforte duet and consist of twelve numbers. Bizet scored, and charmingly scored, five of these—Marche, 'Trompette et Tambour'; Berceuse, 'La Poupée'; Inromptu, 'La Toupie'; Duo, 'Petit Mari, Petite Femme'; and Galop, 'Le Bal.' The Duo is a dainty piece, and the Galop is irresistible; but the entire group cannot fail to give pleasure if the pieces are well and poetically played. See also the attractive Suites by Blasser, Borodine, and Délibes ('Sylvia' and 'Coppelia'). The above can be obtained from Messrs. Novello.

S. J. P.—(1) In chanting the Psalms the first and second verses of each Psalm are usually sung full, and the remaining verses antiphonally, the Gloria Patri being, of course, sung by all the voices. (2) Helmore intended to give settings of the Psalms as introtos for Sundays and Feasts throughout the year, but did not carry out his intention. The Introtos section (Part IV.) of 'The Prayer Book Noted,' by Mr. A. H. Brown, is published by Messrs. Crerar & Smith.

SECRETARY.—An ivory and gold-mounted baton is about as ornamental and useless a present as you could make to a conductor. Far better give him a set of books of reference, or a piece of silver plate (if he be a married man), or something personal that he could wear or use: thus he would keep his choir always in remembrance. Instead of a conducting-stick, why not a walking-stick?

A. F. B.—For your string-quartet evenings the music would be much more effective if a small platform were to be erected in the middle of the room. Your audience would then be seated around the players. This was the plan adopted by the late John Ella at his Musical Union matinées at the old St. James's Hall, and at the Joachim Quartet Concerts in the same building.

E. M.—A choir can be trained either on 'the Tonic sol-fa course' or the 'old notation course,' or even a combination of the two notations. As to the 'quickest and most instructive mode of training,' that is a matter to be decided according to the sight-reading capacity of the members of the choir in either of the above-named notations.

LYRA.—We do not know of any public statue to a composer erected in London, but this honour perpetuates the memory of the late Sir Robert Stewart in Dublin, by the statue of him on Leinster Green in that city.

A. T. C. L.—The 'average standard' in regard to pianoforte pupils is a little vague, but the following contain some of the easier pieces by Grieg: Lyrische Stückchen (Op. 12), Poetischer Tonbilder (Op. 3), and Humoresken (Op. 6).

M. H. J.—An illustrated article on Exeter Cathedral appeared in the issue of this journal for October, 1902, and of King's College, Cambridge, in April of the same year.

R. D. J.—So far as we can ascertain, there is no book published containing analyses of Bach's organ fugues similar to those that analyse the '48' preludes and fugues.

M. C. Y.—(1) The song you wish us to trace is 'Violets,' by Ellen Wright, published by Messrs. Ricordi & Co. (2) To Messrs. W. E. Hill & Sons, 140, New Bond Street.

VOBIS.—Your voice trouble is probably due to defective breathing. You had better consult a specialist in breathing or in voice production, but be sure you go to a reliable man.

MARCUS.—An illustrated biographical sketch of Sir John Stainer appeared in the Musical Times of May, 1901.

CHARITY (New South Wales).—All the three operas you mention are copyright, and will remain so for many years.

G. F. B.—Thayer's biography of Beethoven has not been published in the English language.

J. J. H.—The tune-books you mention are not of great intrinsic value.

These were excellently played under the conductorship of Mr. William H. Reed. Miss Lettie Dibdin sang 'Nobil Signor,' from Meyerbeer's 'Huguenots,' and 'Come out, my dears,' by Dessauer, and Miss May Pleasance Gunn played Tchaikovsky's Melodie for violin (Op. 42). The choir and orchestra, numbering 120 performers, gave a very satisfactory rendering of the many fine choruses in the oratorio under the conductorship of Mr. W. R. Heckles, and the solo vocalists were Madame Sara Waggott, Mr. E. H. Knight (alto), Mr. G. C. Cradock and Mr. Llewellyn Roberts.

LEAMINGTON.—Sir Frederick Bridge delivered the last of the series of lectures arranged by the Leamington Entertainment Society, in the Town Hall, on March 26, his subject being 'Milton and Music,' with special reference to the 'Masque of Comus.' The lecture was illustrated with the music of Henry Lawes and others, which Sir Frederick has recently arranged in connection with the Masque, the vocal music being sung by Miss Oswyn Jones and Mr. Graham Smart, accompanied by a sextett of strings led by Mr. Walter Warren.

LEYTONSTONE.—The choir of the Congregational Church, conducted by Mr. T. H. Goodwin, gave a performance of 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast' in Barclay Lecture Hall on April 2. The accompaniments were played by a string band, with Miss A. B. Jones at the organ, and the solo vocalists were Madame Kathryn Kind and Mr. Samuel Masters.

LITTLEHAMPTON.—Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' received an excellent performance by the Philharmonic Society on April 20. The conductor was Mr. A. G. Whitehead and the soloists Miss Ennetta Truscott, Mr. Anderson Nicol and Mr. Robin Overleigh. The accompaniments were admirably played by an orchestra of thirty-two performers, led by Miss M. Woolgar, but the honours of the concert fell easily to the choir, who were excellent throughout.

LOUTH.—The Choral Society gave a concert in the Town Hall on April 15, when Mendelssohn's 95th Psalm and Barnett's 'Ancient Mariner' were creditably performed under the conductorship of Mr. Owen M. Price, who also appeared as baritone soloist in the cantata, his place as conductor being temporarily filled by Mr. J. E. Hilton, who led the orchestra. The other solo vocalists were Miss Gertrude Woodall, Miss E. C. Drake, Miss E. M. Wilkinson and Mr. Harry Stubbs.

MAIDSTONE.—The seventh annual concert of the Choral Union took place in the Corn Exchange on March 29, when a remarkably fine performance of Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius' was given. The Society, under the able and enthusiastic direction of Mr. Wilson Parish, has progressed with an ever-increasing ambition, and the rendering of the oratorio reflected great credit on the conductor and his forces. Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. Webster Millar, and Mr. Montague Borwell were able representatives of the solo parts.

NEWPORT (Dundee).—Handel's 'Acis and Galatea' was performed by the Choral Society in Blyth Hall on March 26, under the direction of Mr. W. J. Calderwood. The choir sang in the cantata with intelligence and dramatic effect, and were also heard in 'How sweet the calm' (Blackburn), Elgar's 'My love dwelt in a northern land,' and Weelkes's 'Sweete floweres.' The orchestra was led by Mr. Froebel, and the solo vocalists were Miss Jeannie White, Mr. W. S. Hamilton, Mr. F. H. Morrison and Mr. W. D. Jeffrey.

NORTH WALSHAM.—The Amateur Musical Society gave a concert in the Church Room on April 14 under the direction of Mr. A. S. Wilde, when the chief feature was Locke's 'Macbeth' music, which was performed by the choir and orchestra, numbering over eighty. The solo parts were sung by Miss Gladys Riches, Miss Letitia Burton and Mr. Albert Garcia, whose fine voice gave special effect to the part of Hecate. Considerable interest was added to the performance by the recitation of a complete selection from the play by Mr. Charles Fry, who was warmly applauded at the conclusion.

PERTH.—The St. John's Choral Society gave an excellent rendering of Sullivan's oratorio 'The Light of the world' in St. John's (East) Parish Church, on March 31. The soprano and baritone solos were ably and respectively sustained by Miss Sara Maconochie (of Edinburgh) and Mr. Llewellyn Roberts (of Durham Cathedral). The accompaniments were played on the organ by Mr. Albert Midgley, and Mr. Frederick Midgley conducted.

PONTEFRAC.—The Choral Society performed Scenes 1 and 2 from 'The Song of Hiawatha,' on March 23, with a chorus and orchestra of 160, under the direction of Mr. R. B. Walker. The choir sang with refinement, and the orchestra was heard to advantage in the accompaniments, as well as in pieces by Bach, Schubert, and Mendelssohn. The solo vocalists were Miss Mabel Manson, Mr. S. Hemsall, and Mr. Fowler Burton. Mr. E. Jagger was the accompanist.

SOUTHPORT.—On March 26, the final concert of the season by the Choral Society took place in the Cambridge Hall. An attractive programme had been arranged, which included several items for string orchestra. Mozart's 'Serenade in G major,' Tchaikovsky's Suite in C major, (Op. 48), and Bach's Gavotte and Rondo from the sixth Sonata were all admirably played. In the performance of Gade's 'Spring's message' and S. Coleridge-Taylor's new choral ballad (Op. 54, No. 1), 'The slave's dream,' the choir were particularly successful, while John E. West's 'Give me more love,' Parry's 'Ye thrilled me once' and Elgar's 'My love dwelt in a Northern land' were also excellently rendered. The solo vocalists were Miss Eileen Price and Mr. Walter J. Ottey. Mr. Clarke has, by his sound musicianship, his earnestness and persistency, accomplished excellent work in the town of Southport.

SPLISBY.—The Choral Society gave a successful concert in the Drill Hall on April 20. In Mendelssohn's 42nd Psalm the choir sang admirably, showing the result of careful training by their conductor, Mrs. Prestwood P. Hodgson. The soprano solos were admirably interpreted by Miss Underwood. The orchestra acquitted itself creditably in German's 'Coronation march' and an Intermezzo by Czibulka, and was exceptionally good in accompanying the choir in a choral fantasia on Wagner's 'Tannhäuser.'

SUNNINGDALE.—The Choral and Orchestral Society's last concert of the season took place on April 21, when Handel's 'Acis and Galatea' and Mendelssohn's 'First Walpurgis night' were given under the direction of Mr. R. Barrett-Watson. The soloists were Miss Florence Griffiths, Miss Wilhelmine Fink, Mr. Wright Beaumont, and Mr. Allen Engles.

TREHARRIS.—Handel's 'Samson' was performed at the Public Hall on Good Friday, April 9. The choir and orchestra (led by Mr. Whittaker) gave a capable rendering of the work, under the conductorship of Mr. John Powell. Mr. W. J. R. Davis was an able accompanist.

VENTNOR.—The second annual concert of the Undercliff Choral Society took place on April 15, at the Town Hall. The chief feature of the programme was Stanford's 'The Revenge,' the successful performance of which reflected much credit on Mr. Hallam Sanderson, the conductor of the Society. The artists who appeared were Miss Edith Serpell, Miss Nora Macfarlane, Mr. Charles Wyatt and Master Willie White.

WAKEFIELD.—The Philharmonic Society performed Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' in the Corn Exchange on April 2. The work was creditably rendered by a full orchestra and choir under the direction of Miss Ethel Nettleton, and the solo vocalists were Miss Lilian Whittaker, Miss Emily Hart, Mr. Wilfred Hudson and Mr. Herbert Parker.

WALTON-ON-THAMES.—A performance of Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' was given by the Choral Society conducted by Mr. Henry T. Gilberthorpe, in the Public Hall, on April 1. The solo vocalists were Madame Jean Rees-Pedlar, Miss Dorothy Compton and Mr. Malcolm Boyle. The accompaniments were played by Dr. Mason's string orchestra, the wind parts being filled in on the harmonium by Mr. W. Cary Bliss. The second part of the programme included 'Hear my prayer,' and 'Judge me, O God,' the 'Son and stranger' overture, and the 'War march' from 'Athalie,' the last two items conducted by Dr. Mason.

WHITCHURCH, SALOP.—A performance of Gounod's 'Redemption' was given by the Whitchurch Choral Society in the Town Hall on April 21, when the vocal principals were Madame Annie Walker, Miss Charlton, Mr. James Morgan and Mr. Charles James, of whom the soprano and bass merit a special line of praise. Assisted by an orchestra of twenty, led by Mr. James Dunworth, the chorus of seventy sang with intelligence and considerable effect, the performance as a whole reflecting credit on the conductor, Mr. W. E. Rogers, the able and respected organist of the Parish Church, whose unwearied labours for many years in the cause of good music in this town deserve unstinted praise.

WORCESTER.—The Musical Society's second concert this season took place in the Public Hall on April 20, when Haydn's 'Spring,' Elgar's 'Black Knight,' and Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony were performed under the able direction of Mr. W. Mann Dyson. The choir was heard to great advantage, not only in the first two works, but also in Mendelssohn's part-songs, 'On the sea,' 'Remembrance,' and 'Praise of Spring.' The orchestra, led by Mr. W. Henry Dyson, also merit commendation, notably for their performance of the Symphony. Miss May Eaves, Mr. Ernest Howell and Mr. F. Lightowler were the solo vocalists.

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE
OF THE
MUSIC LOAN EXHIBITION

HELD UNDER THE PATRONAGE OF
HIS MAJESTY THE KING
HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN

AND

THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES

BY THE

AT

FISHMONGERS' HALL

JUNE AND JULY, 1904.

The Music Loan Exhibition of the Worshipful Company of Musicians was a great event in the history of that ancient corporation. At the same time it had a deeper import and wider significance by reason of its inherent interest. His Majesty the King graciously gave it his patronage and, moreover, headed the list of lenders. Notable collectors and others generously contributed to its completeness by the loan of beautiful instruments, rare books, unique manuscripts, fine pictures, &c., many of which had never before been exhibited, nor are they likely again to be gathered together.

Such Exhibitions, however, come and go, and leave not much more than a memory behind. Therefore it is all the more desirable that some permanent record should exist and be made available of so important and unique a display as that of the Musicians' Company. That desideratum has been supplied by this catalogue.

This handsome Volume is divided into six main sections:—

|                |                |                                 |
|----------------|----------------|---------------------------------|
| MUSIC-PRINTING | INSTRUMENTS    | MANUSCRIPTS (Music and Letters) |
| PRINTED MUSIC  | PORTRAITS, &c. | MISCELLANEOUS.                  |

Every exhibit is not only fully and carefully described, but the copious notes freely scattered throughout the volume add to the interest of its subject-matter and increase the value of the book both as a treasured library possession and as a useful book of reference.

Illustrations—title-pages, instruments, portraits, &c.—and facsimiles form a most important and attractive feature of this édition de luxe Catalogue. The portraits include a photogravure reproduction of Hudson's full-length oil-painting of Handel, preserved at Gopsall and belonging to The Earl Howe; and among the well-executed facsimiles are autographs of Bach, Handel (a characteristic letter, of three quarto pages, written to Charles Jennens), Mendelssohn, Orlando Gibbons (the only known autograph of the composer), Henry Purcell, and others.

THE KING'S MUSICK

A TRANSCRIPT OF RECORDS
RELATING TO MUSIC AND MUSICIANS
(1460—1700)

EDITED BY

HENRY CART DE LAFONTAINE, M.A.

This interesting and informing volume has been compiled from the inexhaustible store of documents preserved at the Record Office. From that vast, untilled field has been literally dug out a mass of information concerning the maintenance and ordering of musicians attached to the English Court between the years 1460 and 1700, an eventful period covering the reigns of the Tudor and Stuart Kings. Moreover, the transcripts herein set forth in chronological order furnish many details of the lives of old-time musicians. Thus "The King's Musick" is not only of interest to students of music, but throws fresh light upon an era of the art which is of great value to the historian of English music.

The editor of the volume, the Rev. H. C. De Lafontaine, has supplied notes on the Masque and on Costume, &c.; furthermore, he has had the invaluable co-operation of Miss Stainer in checking the entries and in compiling an adequate index, a most important and indispensable adjunct to a work of this kind.

"The King's Musick" is a monument of patient and painstaking research, and the book is one which renders signal service to the literature of English music.

TECHNIQUE AND EXPRESSION IN PIANOFORTE PLAYING BY FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

In the course of my experience as a teacher of the pianoforte, an experience extending over many years, certain ideas have from time to time suggested themselves to me which have proved useful—to myself, as enabling me to express more clearly that which I desired my pupils to understand, and to my pupils, as tending to facilitate their comprehension of the various difficulties they have had to encounter, at the same time leading them to perceive the most practical means of overcoming them, and thus accelerating their general rate of progress.

These suggestions relate to both the mechanical and intellectual sides of the study of pianoforte-playing, or, briefly, to Technique and Expression, the chief matters implied by the first of these terms being the production of various qualities of tone, the choice of suitable fingering, and the best methods of attacking certain difficulties; while the second, which may perhaps be more aptly designated the means of expression, includes rhythm, phrasing, variety and gradation of tone, the use of the pedals, et cetera.

(BOOK 2)

BY
EMILY R. DAYMOND.

PREFACE.

This second book of Score-Reading Exercises is intended for the use of candidates for the A.R.C.O. Examination, and for other Examinations which include among their tests reading from three treble clefs and a bass clef. The examples in which the notes are detached or grouped in an unusual way are specially intended to give practice in reading Chorus from ordinary Vocal Score, a process which the arrangement of the notes according to the syllables renders somewhat difficult. The Exercises are arranged in order of difficulty. E. R. D.

SEVENTH AND REVISED EDITION.

A HANDBOOK OF EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC

CONTAINING

600 QUESTIONS WITH ANSWERS

BY
ERNEST A. DICKS,

Fellow of the Royal College of Organists.

The scope of this book covers the whole ground of theoretical examinations in music. It supplies an invaluable equipment to candidates entering for the various Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge held periodically throughout the country, and it will be found extremely useful to those who are preparing for the higher grades of Diploma and Degree Examinations.

The book is therefore very comprehensive. Its range includes questions and answers in Theory, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Fugue, Acoustics, Musical History, Organ Construction, and Choir Training.

By no means the least valuable part of the volume is that section, consisting of upwards of one hundred pages, which contains reprints of past examination papers set by the Associated Board, Trinity College, and the Incorporated Society of Musicians; the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, London, Dublin, Durham, and Edinburgh, and the Victoria University; The Royal Academy of Music, The Royal College of Music, and The Royal College of Organists. The advantage of having so many specimens of these actual examination papers within one cover is too obvious to need further comment or commendation.

PREFACE TO THE SEVENTH EDITION.

Through the kindness of Dr. E. H. Turpin the seventh edition of the Handbook of Examinations in Music includes the latest type of Papers set by Trinity College of Music, London, in their scheme of Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge.

The work will also be found to have been considerably enlarged by the addition of fifty specimen questions, with answers. They have been designed for the most part after the manner of those set in the Theory Paper for the L.R.A.M. Diploma, and also that required by candidates for the Higher Practical Examinations held by Trinity College of Music, London. The author earnestly hopes that these additions will considerably enhance the value of the Handbook, and render it increasingly helpful to students. E. A. D.

THE ORGAN WORKS

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH

J. F. BRIDGE, MUS. DOC. OXON., AND JAMES HIGGS, MUS. BAC. OXON.

In this, the first complete English Edition of John Sebastian Bach's Organ Works (the Chorale Preludes excepted), the distribution of the parts between the hands is, in all doubtful cases, clearly indicated by the notes that are to be performed by the right hand being printed on the upper of the two manual staves, while the notes that are to be played by the left hand will be found on the lower of the two manual staves. As far as possible care has been taken not needlessly to divide a middle part between the two hands when it can be conveniently performed by one hand continuously. The text has been carefully collated with former Editions, but generally where it differs from Griepenkerl's reading (Peters) it will be found to agree with the more recent Edition of the German Bach Society. Much thought has been given to secure convenient points for turning over, a matter of considerable importance to the performer. (See the "Great" G minor and the "St. Ann's" Fugues.) Suggestions as to the rate of performance and general treatment are given without encumbering the page with too detailed directions, and it is hoped the work in its complete form will be found a boon to the earnest Organ Student.

SECTION A.—TECHNICAL PRACTICE. IN SIX BOOKS.

The foundation of "A Modern School for the Violin" is laid by means of a series of Six Books dealing exclusively with the important subject of DAILY TECHNICAL PRACTICE. The First Book of Technical Practice (Book 1A) is limited to the 1st Position; the Second Book (2A) to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the Third Book (3A) to the first five Positions; and so on. Bowings and other technical devices are introduced in a similarly progressive manner throughout. Each Book of Technical Practice is divided into "Lessons" (or Chapters), and each Lesson contains a number of short repeating Exercises on some definite point of Violin Technique—as Fingering, Bowing, &c., with the needful explanations. Included in each Book will be found a complete set of Scales and Arpeggi, arranged according to the particular stage of advancement reached.

Taken as a whole, this Section is intended to facilitate, and to insist on, a thorough, steady, and continuous progress in the mastery of the Instrument, this being the only possible means of preparing the groundwork for artistic achievement with all its lasting delights.

SECTION B.—STUDIES. IN SIX BOOKS.

Section B is formed of a series of original and selected Studies, in Six Books. Each Book of Studies (Section B) is carefully co-ordinated, in respect of difficulty and range of subject, with the correspondingly numbered Book of Technical Practice (Section A). Thus the First Book of Studies (1B) is written in the 1st Position; the Second Book (2B) in the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the 3rd Book (3B) in all Positions up to and including the 5th; and so on. It should further be explained that the two Sections are designed to complement one another, and that the "School" must be practised, not in single Books of Technical Practice and Studies alternately, but in pairs. Thus, Books 1A and 1B are to be taken concurrently, then Books 2A and 2B, 3A and 3B, and so on, and the appropriate pairs are now issued bound together in cloth (see Cloth Bindings below).

The

Competition Festival Record

(COMMENCED AUGUST, 1908.)

No. 10.

As it is not possible to chronicle in the Record very many of the detailed results of the numerous competitions recently held, a general summary may be of interest in helping to estimate the progress of the competition festival movement.

AN ADJUDICATOR'S TOUR.

Under this head I propose to give a brief account of the festivals in which I have been concerned as adjudicator.

WHITBY.

March 24.

The principal promoters of this scheme are the Misses C. and M. Yeoman, who reside near Whitby. The event is styled "The Eskdale Tournament of Song." The word "tournament" seems a good one for the purpose. It is better for English use than "Eisteddfod" and better than "Festival," a word which has acquired a special signification in connection with a series of concerts. The Whitby event was to have included a children's day, which had been industriously prepared for, but owing to illness all the schools were closed in March. A day in May will probably be arranged for.

The adult classes competed in twelve sections on March 24. The entries were fairly numerous, and occupied the whole day from 9.45 a.m. to 10 p.m., with one or two brief intervals. There was some good pianoforte-playing prepared and at sight, and the violin and solo-singing classes brought forward some well-trained performers. Seven church and chapel choirs sang an anthem, a hymn, and chants. "Evening has lost her throne" (Bantock) and "Night whispers" (Mœllendorff) were severe tests for choral societies, but Pickering and Fylingdales showed excellent capacity in dealing with the technical difficulties of these pieces. The first place fell to Pickering. Four men's choirs sang Edward German's popular "O peaceful night," that from Whitby Parish Church coming first, and four excellent female-voice choirs sang Cowen's charming trio, "In our boat," Fylingdales winning the prize. Besides the foregoing there were quartets, and village choirs, and sight-reading for solo singers. On the whole it was clear that the tournament had attracted and greatly stimulated local executants, and it was obvious to me that much progress had been made since last I had the pleasure of hearing these far-east York folk. The audiences were good, and their warm interest was manifest.

Some of the competitions were held in the evening, and formed part of the concert, at which Mr. Albert Garcia gave a song recital.

HEXHAM (NORTHUMBERLAND).

March 26, 27.

This interesting old town is midway between Carlisle and Newcastle. It is a convenient centre for a wide district. The festival is now in its fifth year and seems firmly established. The local gentry give it their support, and the schools and local musical organizations are fully interested. Thirteen schools sent choirs, and seventeen adult choirs contributed to the various choral classes. There were no classes for soloists, vocal or instrumental. In the junior day the proceedings commenced at 9.30 a.m. and continued until 5.0 p.m. The educational value of the competitive scheme was admirably illustrated by the results achieved by the school classes, which in many cases reached a high standard. Among the most successful were Haltwhistle (Mr. Koenleyside), Ovingham (Mr. T. Dixon), Ryton Thorp (Mr. J. Weatherley), and Blyndon Secondary (Miss E. A. Spikes). In all these choirs the voice production, enunciation, attack, intonation, certainty of execution, and expression were of the highest order. Sight-singing was equally meritorious.

The adult choirs competed on the second day. Again some of the performances reached a high level. In the chief class the tests were any passage from Haydn's "Spring" and the part-song "Thro' groves sequestered" (J. Holbrooke). Haltwhistle was again successful with its Vocal Union and Primitive Methodist Choir (Mr. W. H. Batey). One of the most remarkable performances of the day was that of Haltwhistle in the female-voice class, the test for which was the exacting trio "Sound sleep" (Dr. Vaughan Williams). Ovingham (Mr. J. Walton) also contributed several excellent performances, and two first-prizes fell to them. Combined performance has always been a feature at this festival. This year Haydn's "Spring" was given at the concert by the united choirs, assisted by an efficient string band from Newcastle. The audiences were good throughout both days.

STAMFORD HILL (LONDON, N.).

March 29, 30.

This competition is managed with great spirit by the Young People's Guild connected with the Congregational church. The audiences throughout were large and intensely interested. The scheme is of an Eisteddfod character, inasmuch as it included white needlework (a lady's nightdress case), recitations, impromptu speeches, violin and pianoforte playing, junior and adult vocal solos, musical composition, and classes for choirs. Five choirs had entered, but only three competed. The Northholme Choir, under Mr. C. W. Jones, gained the first place.

COLERAINE (N. IRELAND).

April 2.

This was the first venture of its kind in this small town. It was originated by Mrs. C. C. Huston, and it was owing chiefly to her persistent advocacy that the interest of the townsfolk was roused. On this occasion only the juniors were appealed to. There was much subdivision of the competitors into mixed (girls and boys) choirs, boys' choirs, girls' choirs, and there were two solo-singing classes. Altogether there were forty-two entries. The Model School (Mr. Robinson) sang especially well, and Killowen (Mr. Bryan) was also successful. The vocal tone on the whole needs more sweetness, and there is much to be done to secure ease of delivery and dainty rhythm. As it was expressly to help the teachers to secure these graces that the festival was organized, there is no doubt that by next year a great improvement will be effected.

BELFAST.

April 3.

This festival has grown out of that managed for several years by the Irish Temperance League, and is now thrown open to a wider circle, the League still giving its co-operation and monopolising one or two sections of the scheme. The moving spirits of the enlarged organization are Miss McKisack and Mr. F. T. Moffett, both highly-esteemed local music professors. It says much for their zeal in the cause of musical progress in the city that they give so much of their time to the festival. Professor Morton, of the Belfast University College, was also an active worker. The chief sections were as follows: Children's Choirs, National Schools, Selected Juvenile Choirs, Challenge Shield (Junior), Temperance Choirs, Commercial and other choirs in four classes. The entries were numerous, and considerable enthusiasm was shown.

In the junior classes the following choirs won first-prizes: Mrs. Whale's Choirs, Orneau Road School (Miss M. C. Roddie), St. Simon's (Miss Brownlee). In the Band of Hope section, Donegall Road (Mr. F. Neil) won the shield. In the Commercial Choir section, the New Hope Street Choir (Mr. J. Hadden) was in one division first, a choir of McBride and Williams (Mrs. MacIlwaine) coming close behind, and the Mulhouse Factory Choir (Miss M. C. Roddie) was first in another division. In another choral class the Newington Female-Voice Choir (Mr. T. Montagu) was successful. The proceedings lasted all day. They were held in the fine Ulster Hall. There is every reason to believe that the movement will now still further expand.

MOUNTAIN ASH.

Easter Monday, April 12.

This South Wales town is surrounded by numerous other small towns, and is a convenient centre for a great gathering. Moreover, Mountain Ash rejoices in the possession of a spacious pavilion, built, I believe, for a National Eisteddfod. It holds about 12,000 people, and for its size its acoustic properties are fair. But for the purpose of hearing individuals, and especially instrumentalists, it is very far from being adapted. The consequence was that on the present occasion when the hall was full, violinists, school and other small choirs had to perform as best they could to the accompaniment of the ceaseless din of the movement and talk of the vast crowd. The Eisteddfod is held annually for the special object of supporting the local Cottage Hospital, and therefore makes an irresistible appeal. The two chief events were that for the large mixed-voice choirs of from 150 to 180 voices (test-piece, "By Babylon's wave," Gounod), and that for men's voice choirs of from 60 to 80 voices. Six mixed-voice choirs competed, one of which was English, namely, the North Staffordshire Choral Society (Mr. Whewall). Their most formidable opponents were the famous Rhyminy Choir (Mr. John Price). Both choirs sang very finely, but on the whole I thought Mr. Whewall's Choir displayed the most musicianship, the cleaner execution. So I awarded them the first position, thus reversing what I afterwards understood was the position of the same two choirs in the same piece at the Eisteddfod held on the same day at the neighbouring town of Abergavenny, where Mr. Granville Bantock adjudicated.

In the men's-voice choir the test was Elgar's new piece, "The Reveille," the technical and interpretative difficulties of which are great. Eight choirs sang, and the result was a clear victory for the Mountain Ash Society (Mr. Herbert Llewellyn).

Another interesting event was the class for choirs of girls. The test-piece was the pretty two-part song "Over the fields of clover" (A. Geibel). The contest was a close one. Liverpool—a far cry—sent its celebrated village choir (Mr. R. T. Edwards), and they sang very sweetly and with painstaking expression, but as I preferred the charmingly rhythmic and vocally natural performance of Troedyrhiw (Miss Katie Jones), I gave them one mark more than I did Liverpool.

The day was wet, but nothing seemed to damp the ardour of these Welsh folk. The Eisteddfod was undoubtedly a great success. Mr. Merlin Morgan assisted in adjudicating.

STRATFORD (EAST LONDON).

March 20 to April 5.

It is gratifying to report that this old-established festival was held this year with unprecedented success. A year or two ago fears were entertained by some of its promoters that the institution of the People's Palace festival would seriously injure the prospects of the Stratford event. But others of a more sanguine temperament were of opinion that the general stir of other festivals in the vast metropolitan district, and especially amongst the densely populated real East, as distinguished from the far-East of London, would help to increase rather than to diminish interest in the older festival, and it seems they were right. The following are the chief results:

This is fully reported in a pamphlet issued shortly after the conclusion of the festival, in which the whole of the results, with the adjudicators' remarks on every competitor, are set forth.

MORPETH (WANSBECK).
 April 2 and 3.

These competitions are confined to the area six miles north and south of the river Wansbeck. Musical activities in this district are emerging from the tutelar stage and can now show a creditably high standard of performance. The entries were uniformly satisfactory except in those set apart for "Novice" choral societies and church choirs; perhaps this title was too uncomplimentary.

The chief senior competitions resulted as follows :—

LONDON WORKING GIRLS' CLUB UNION.
 April 3.

At the twenty-second annual festival, Dr. Walford Davies was the adjudicator. In the advanced class the tests were "The corall'd caves of ocean" (Henry Smart), and "In our forest dell" (Hatton). The marks obtained were :—

The test for the elementary choirs was "Evening" (Mendelssohn). Nine clubs competed :—

St. Ursula's (Mr. Deane).
 2nd. Chelsea (Miss Fry).
 Tower Hill (Miss Violet Hoare).
 St. John's, Westminster (Miss Douglas).

DENBIGH.
 April 9.

In the musical section of this Eisteddfod, Mr. Harry Evans was the adjudicator. The Cronant Children's Choir (Mr. W. Humphreys) were victorious in the juvenile contest. The winning male-voice choir was Llandyrnog (Mr. J. T. Jones), and the winning mixed-voice choir, Denbigh United (Mr. Robert Lloyd).

ABERGAVENTNY.
 Easter Monday, April 12.

It is a remarkable tribute to the widespread love of choral music in Wales that it was possible to hold, with success, two great gatherings on the same day in contiguous districts. The committees of Mountain Ash and Abergavenny worked in unity and amity, and arranged their time-table so as to allow competitors to appear at both events, and, further, they chose the same pieces as tests. This resulted in two of the great mixed-voice choirs singing at both places. Rhymney (Mr. J. Price) conquering the North Staffordshire choir (Mr. J. Whewall) at Abergavenny, and the positions being reversed at Mountain Ash. The test-piece was Gounod's "By Babylon's wave," and in the men's-voice choir class the test was Elgar's "Reveille." Six choirs sang, and Kenfig Hill (Mr. W. Rees) was victorious. Mr. Granville Bantock adjudicated.

MORETON-IN-MARSH.
 April 13 and 14.

These competitions are organized under the auspices of the Stour Choral Union. The entering choirs are divided into two groups, to each of which a day is assigned; the classes on the two days are similar, but the test-pieces different.

For the first group Miss Arkwright adjudicated. The competing choirs were :—

Stretton (Miss Fishbourne), winners in sight-reading, male-voice and accompanied chorus sections.
 Churchill (Mr. W. H. Anson).
 Ettington (Miss Emily Butcher).
 Sibford (Mr. Louis Hartmann), winners in section for unaccompanied part-singing.
 Upper Slaughter (Miss Lucy Merrifield), winners in female-voice section.
 Weston-sub-Edge (Rev. W. F. Adams).

Mr. E. J. Dent and Dr. Allen adjudicated upon the second group, which consisted of:—

Blockley (Mr. F. Chaundy).
Hook Norton (Miss M. Dickens), first-prize for unaccompanied part-song.
Kington (Mr. G. W. Webb).
Moreton (Mr. G. Mace), winners in female-voice and accompanied chorus sections.
Winchcombe (Mr. W. E. Haslam), winners in sight-reading and male-voice sections.

The challenge banners for the highest aggregate marks in each group of competitions were awarded to Stretton and Winchcombe. A feature of the festival, to which as much importance is assigned as to the competitions, was the combined singing of the choirs under Dr. Allen's direction.

LONDON DIOCESAN CHURCH OF ENGLAND TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

At the choral competitions held at St. George's Institute, S.W., on April 17, the following were the chief results:—

Choirs of twenty-six and upwards.—Test: "Carnovale" (Rossini). St. James's, Holloway.
Choirs of less than twenty-six.—Test: "The cuckoo sings in the poplar tree" (Macfarren). St. Jude, Mildmay Park.
For ladies' voices, Two-part (not less than ten).—Test: "Good-night" (Lewis). St. James's, Holloway.
For any C.E.T.S. Branch. Unison song (not less than ten).—Test: "The flight of the earls" (Old Irish). St. Stephen, Portland Town.

RADCLIFFE.

An example of what our northern co-operative societies are doing to develop local musical talent, was furnished at the first musical festival organized by the education committee of the Radcliffe and Pilkington Co-operative Society, one of its main objects being to encourage the formation of a co-operative choral society for the district. The festival provided classes for pianoforte and violin players, vocalists, mixed-voice quartets, and church or chapel choirs. Three choirs entered for the choral contest, and sang Coward's "Lord, Thou art good" (unaccompanied). The adjudicator, Mr. F. W. Turner, awarded the first-prize to Radcliffe Bridge Wesleyan (Mr. W. E. Barnes), and the second to St. Paul's Wesleyan (Mr. Howard Morris).

COMING EVENTS.

The Alexandra Palace Festival (for Hertfordshire and N. Middlesex) will be held on May 6, 7, 8. There is every promise of success, as the entries are again very satisfactory. The chief day will be the 8th (Saturday), when numerous school choirs and choral societies will compete. The whole event will culminate in an evening concert to be given under the direction of Mr. Allen Gill.

The People's Palace Festival (East London) will be held on May 10 to 15. The entries are very large, and will occupy the evenings of the first five days and the whole of Saturday, the 15th. They include seven choral societies, fourteen church and chapel choirs, twenty-three female-voice and four male-voice choirs, fourteen children's choirs, twenty elementary, three secondary, and two continuation school choirs, thirty-eight vocal quartets and trios, one instrumental trio, two string quartets, and two orchestras. On the 15th there will be a children's concert at 4 p.m., conducted by Dr. Somervell, and the prizes will be distributed by the Archdeacon of London. At 8 p.m. there will be a concert of prize-winners, &c., conducted by Dr. McNaught—soloist, Miss Muriel Foster (Mrs. Ludovic Goetz)—and the prizes will be distributed by H.R.H. The Princess Alexander of Teck.

The Syllabus of the Blackpool Festival (October 13, 14, 15, 16) is now issued. It is an imposing document of thirty-seven pages. The tests selected show that much thought has been expended over the scheme. The book can be obtained from the hon. sec., Mr. Lionel H. Franceys, Williams Deacon's Bank, Blackpool, for fourpence, post-free.

STECK PIANOS.

Although the STECK has won Medals, Diplomas and Prizes at Expositions, has been eulogized by Wagner and Liszt, and enjoys an unsurpassable reputation for reliability all over the Continent and America, it is not on these counts alone that it appeals to the connoisseur.

WHAT THE STECK IS TO-DAY is its greatest claim to the consideration of piano-purchasers. Every modern improvement, every detail that makes for excellence in piano construction, is embodied and brought to perfection in the STECK. It is one of the few really great Pianos of the world.

You are invited to call at Æolian Hall and play the STECK, or to write for our fully-illustrated Steck Catalogue "M.T."

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

In the course of my experience as a teacher of the pianoforte, an experience extending over many years, certain ideas have from time to time suggested themselves to me which have proved useful—to myself, as enabling me to express more clearly that which I desired my pupils to understand, and to my pupils, as tending to facilitate their comprehension of the various difficulties they have had to encounter, at the same time leading them to perceive the most practical means of overcoming them, and thus accelerating their general rate of progress.

These suggestions relate to both the mechanical and intellectual sides of the study of pianoforte-playing, or briefly, to Technique and Expression, the chief matters implied by the first of these terms being the production of various qualities of tone, the choice of suitable fingering, and the best methods of attacking certain difficulties; while the second, which may perhaps be more aptly designated the means of expression, includes rhythm, phrasing, variety and gradation of tone, the use of the pedals, et cetera.

HENRY WATSON.

THE MAN: THE BOOKS: THE INSTRUMENTS.

Life's experiences are often dearly bought by the coins of poverty and hardship. But when to the purchase-money are added brains, character, perseverance, thrift, and true-heartedness—the gilt-edged securities of personality—then the investment is sure of dividends that cannot be estimated in mere pounds, shillings and pence. It is possible for a man to be born too rich, or even too clever, to make his way in the world. On the other hand there are countless instances of men who have glorified poverty and dignified honest toil by their well-gotten success in life and the benefits they have conferred upon the community. Such a man of sterling worth, honoured and honourable in his calling, forms the subject of this biographical sketch.

THE MAN.

Henry Watson was born at Burnley on April 30, 1846, of humble but musical parents. His father was an overlooker in a factory, and played the serpent and the trombone in the local band. One of the boy's earliest musical recollections is holding cards of music in the street and at band practices for his father to play from, whereby Master Henry became a living music-desk. Like many another Lancashire operative, his grandfather was a musical man and quite an authority in his small way. At the age of three, Henry lost the most precious treasure that a child can possess—his mother. Soon afterwards his father married again, and the family removed to Accrington. There Henry passed the tenderest years of his childhood. He was allowed to run wild, he hated school, and his surroundings were the very antithesis of culture. But music, the divine art, saved the boy from a career that might have been disastrous. At the age of nine he received the present of a dulcimer. This simple instrument absolutely fascinated him. He taught himself to play it, and, writing down the names of the airs he learned by ear, he soon compiled a list of some 300 tunes to choose from. Shortly afterwards music took a stronger hold of his affections. 'I was about ten or eleven years old,' Dr. Watson says, 'when I received the only pianoforte lessons I ever had. They were given me by Thomas Hargreaves, of revered memory, and a teacher—formerly an engraver—of Accrington, on a old square pianoforte of five octaves, which cost me less than £5. The fees, fifteen shillings a quarter, had to be scraped together somehow or other. My inventive propensities must have developed early, because nothing pleased me better than to take the old instrument to pieces, to repair the action, and to add new strings, &c. I soon became known as an accompanist. At local fairs and functions I was paid seven and sixpence a night to play solos and accompaniments in public-houses, playing away till one o'clock in the morning, amid surroundings not the most refined.

HENRY WATSON AT THE AGE OF EIGHT.

At those free-and-easy sing-songs I had to vamp the accompaniments and symphonies to the songs. A man would come up to me and say: "Do you know so and so?" "Ay," I would answer in Lancashire fashion, and then we started off. Let me add that on Sundays the public-house music was always sacred!

At the age of thirteen our hero went to a boarding-school for a short time, where, as an equivalent for fees, he helped with the music, but the master of the school died, and the boy once more became adrift in the world. Towards the end of 1859—age thirteen—he obtained a situation as errand-boy in a music shop then recently opened at Blackburn. His wages were five shillings a week, out of which he had to pay his train fare daily from and to Accrington. His duties were to light the fires and sweep out the shop. An illuminating side, in another sense, to his menial avocations was his master's performance, on a Cadby grand pianoforte, of Thalberg's 'Home, sweet home,' which sent a thrill through the whole nature of the music-loving errand-boy.

'I had not completed my fourteenth year,' Dr. Watson recalls, 'when an unexpected and curious incident occurred in my career. One Monday night I was rehearsing a boy troupe of Christy Minstrels—of which I was the "boss"—at the home of one of the minstrels, when a messenger came asking me to play the pianoforte at a travelling panorama show (American Slavery) in the town. I rushed off at once, only

At the end of the second week of the show I was asked if I would like to travel. I said "Yes," especially as I was to receive £1 a week and my travelling expenses—indeed, I considered myself a rich man, or I should say, boy, as I was only fifteen.

'From Accrington we went to Manchester, which has been my home for nearly fifty years. We started the "show" in a wooden shed behind an old second-hand bookstall, in Corporation Street, where the Trevelyan Hotel now stands. The wonderful stores of that bookstall held me fascinated by the hour together, and yielded me my first cheap musical purchases. It was the time of the cotton famine in Lancashire, and business was bad; but I was still able to send home some contributions to the household expenses. "Now," said Brown, "We'll try Yorkshire." But as trade was not flourishing in that neighbouring county, my employer decided to try the Channel Islands, a part of the world he had not "professionally" visited for some time previously. After three or to find that the entertainment—such as it was—had begun, and that someone was already "doing" the music. The proprietor of the panorama was a black man, a freed slave, the once well-known Box Brown. He had assumed the "Christian" name of "Box" to indicate the means by which he was smuggled from Virginia to Philadelphia. "I have got a blind man," he said to me, "to play the pianoforte; you can play the harmonium." This I did, with resultant orchestral effects. "Must I come again to-morrow night?" I asked. "Yes," said my good-natured employer, "the blind man can't see the scenes and you can." I duly obeyed, and played on the pianoforte all sorts of selections and songs—"I'm afloat," for instance, at a sea-picture—as the scenes were moved along, the blind man now officiating at the harmonium. The pay was only a few shillings a week, but I liked the work and the experience it gave me four days spent in London, we started in a big circus building at Jersey on Easter Monday, 1860, subsequently visiting Guernsey and Alderney. After three months in the Channel Islands we toured in Cornwall, the native county of Mrs. Brown, to whose bonny little mulatto girl "Uncle Harry," as I was always called, gave frequent lessons in the toddling art. At Stonehouse we exhibited in the Town Hall, where I revelled in playing the big organ when illustrating the scenes. But a new phase in my life was being rapidly prepared for me.

While on this panoramic tour in the closing months of 1860, young Watson received a letter from home requesting his return, as an opening had been found for him in the music-business of Messrs. Edward Henry & Co., Manchester. He was not altogether loth to return, for one of the many brass-bands of Lancashire operatives that tramped the country to raise the wind in a double sense during the cotton famine, had so thrilled him by its music as to make him feel homesick. After staying in London for a day on his return he went to Manchester. He left Euston at six o'clock in the morning, travelling by the only third-class train of the day, and the journey (188 miles) occupied exactly twelve hours; during which time he never tasted food. No wonder that he was glad to get home after his panoramic wanderings with the famous Box Brown. 'I began my apprenticeship with Henry & Co.,' Dr. Watson recalls, 'on New Year's Day, 1861. According to my indentures, I was to find my own food and clothing and to receive a wage of twelve shillings per week for the first year. I had a very varied experience during my four years' apprenticeship: tuning and repairing pianos and organs, showing off instruments, playing over songs and pieces to customers. I was much in request at concerts and entertainments. I played for "Pepper's Ghost," for Frederick Maccabe and Henry Irving; and, just to mix it a little, at De Jong's and the Gentlemen's Concerts. I also used to play over music to Charles Calvert in connection with his fine Shakespearean revivals, and I became more and more in demand for the "classical" requirements of dance music. For a week at a time I used frequently to play at dance parties night after night, from eight p.m. to three or four o'clock in the morning. At this exhausting work, in hot rooms, I sometimes earned as much as £12 per week, one half of which dropped into my own slender pocket. But as I was then the practical mainstay of the household this extra pay for night work proved specially acceptable. I wanted to aim at something higher, but my circumstances then compelled me to keep at this lower level.'

The opportunity for 'something higher' came in the year 1867, when the late Mr. Henry Wilson provided the chorus for Charles Calvert's Shakespearean performances at the Prince's Theatre, Manchester, Henry Watson accompanying at rehearsals. So excellent a theatrical chorus had he gathered together and skilfully trained, that the question was asked: 'Why not make a permanent society of this choir?' The answer to that interrogation was the formation of the Manchester Vocal Society, of which the first meeting was held in August, 1867, the first concert taking place on October 28 following. The earliest officers of the Society were Mr. B. St. J. B. Joule, president; Dr. J. Dixon Mann, vice-president; Mr. T. H. McCormick, secretary; Mr. Henry Wilson, a noted local teacher of singing, music director; and Mr. Henry Watson, accompanist. Very early in its career the Vocal Society's concerts were referred to in the Musical Times. In the issue of February 1, 1868, we read: 'It is worthy of mention that the Society consists of 30 members, with voices of great power and culture; who, without a conductor, sing with much precision and refinement the most difficult part-music.' In the following month (March, 1868), under 'Manchester,' another notice made mention of Dr. Watson's name, perhaps the first time it appeared in the columns of this journal:

The Vocal Society gave its third Concert at the Hulme Town Hall, on Monday, the 10th ult., before a large audience. The programme was extremely well selected; most of the pieces being given for the first time in Manchester. Amongst the most important novelties was Pearsall's ten-part song, 'Sir Patrick Spens'; this was given with marvellous precision, and an attention to light and shade quite surprising, considering that the Society has no conductor. It was enthusiastically encored. Barnby's 'Sweet and low' received a similar compliment, which it well merited, not only on account of the composition itself, but for the very chaste manner in which it was rendered by the choir. 'Tell me, my heart,' was sung with good taste by Mrs. Cowley Squier, who made her first public appearance on this occasion; she was exceedingly well received, and her song unanimously re-demanded. Miss M. Tomlinson, Messrs. Senior and Salt, were equally successful in their respective solos, and Mr. H. Watson accompanied with great discrimination. Altogether the Concert proved that the Manchester Vocal Society can maintain (without fear of deposition) the position it has gained of the first chorus body in Manchester.

While Henry Watson was busy with his terpsichorean engagements, Mr. Wilson remarked to him: 'Why don't you get more work at concert and less at dances? There is nothing at the end of this dance business.' Mr. Watson took the hint and relinquished his dance-playing engagements after several years' experience of that fatiguing work. At that time the subject of this biographical sketch was still assistant at Henry's music-shop in Manchester. In 1869 Mr. Hutchings, of Messrs. Hutchings & Romer, recommended him to an assistantship at Oxford, with Messrs. Russell & Co., the well-known music sellers in the University city

The salary bait of £3 10s. a week proved so tempting that Henry Watson went to Oxford, where he remained about nine months. He returned to Manchester, and with the assistance of Mr. Joseph Bracewell, commenced a music business on his own account in partnership with Mr. William H. Bracewell; Miss Bracewell, afterwards Mrs. Watson, providing an interesting link in the relationship. A shop was opened in Market Place, and the business was carried on from 1870 to 1875, when the land on which the shop stood was sold for other purposes—at £84 per square yard. 'While still in business,' says Dr. Watson, 'I found myself gradually drifting into the profession of music, my name being so much before the public, yet I continued my theatrical experiences in connection with the choral work for the Shakespearean revivals and other performances. Indeed, I have to confess that I have appeared on the stage myself in the dignified part of the officer in "La Fille de Madame Angot." On another occasion I sang as one of the wooden-legged pensioners in Alfred Cellier's "Sultan of Mocha," produced at the Prince's Theatre, Manchester, November 16, 1874. I bought for £40 the copyright of that opera—of which the libretto was written by my old friend Mr. Albert Jarrett. My investment, let me own, was a very profitable one; I made all the pianoforte arrangements of the work; and after the opera had had its vogue, I sold the copyright in it to a firm of London music-publishers for a remunerative sum. At that time, in addition to rapidly-increasing teaching engagements, I had a good pianoforte-tuning and repairing connection; I could turn my hands to anything honest; in fact, if I was not the master of one trade I was the Jack of many.'

His degrees in music came about in a sort of haphazard way. In 1878 he was accompanist at the concerts given by Mr. De Jong, at Blackpool, for the season May to September. Here he again met Dr. Henry Fisher, who had previously been one of his fellow-apprentices at Henry & Co.'s music shop. At that time Dr. Fisher was having his exercise for the degree of doctor of music publicly performed in Blackpool. 'Why don't you go in for a degree?' he asked his friend Watson, who replied, 'I have never studied harmony and counterpoint, but I'll try.' With that indomitable pluck and untiring energy which have characterized him throughout the whole of his strenuous life, he set to work at once to work up for the degree of Bachelor of Music at Cambridge. In this connection he does not forget to express his obligations to Dr. Fisher, whose friendly aid in his studies he speaks of as invaluable. At the first examination he came out with honours among the first half-dozen of the seventy candidates who went up. Not a little of his success was due to the way in which he had assimilated Bach, and gathered information from the self-study of other composers. He took his Mus. Bac. degree in 1882. The Doctor's degree was not obtained without some difficulty and disappointment in regard to the exercise. He ultimately wrote a 'full-blown oratorio,' consisting of seventeen numbers, all of which, except the overture, satisfied the examiners (Macfarren, Stanford, and Leslie). Nothing daunted, but encouraged by Macfarren's remark—'This man can do better'—he rewrote the overture, sitting up all one night to do it, with the result that he obtained the degree of Doctor of Music in 1887.

For many years Dr. Watson's teaching engagements have been restricted to singing pupils. 'I never had a singing-lesson, as such, in my life,' he says. 'But I have always kept my eyes and ears open, and in so doing have learned all I know from my long and varied experience as an accompanist of singers, good, bad, and indifferent. Am I wrong in assuming that there are some of each sort?'

PHOTOGRAPH OF A MEDALLION OF MADAME MALIBRAN.
FROM THE ORIGINAL IN THE HENRY WATSON MUSIC LIBRARY.

One of the only two authentic busts of Madame Malibran in existence, was modelled by her second husband—De Beriot—and is now at the Théâtre des Italiens, Paris. The other, photographically reproduced above, is the work of William Bally, a sculptor residing in Manchester at the time of Malibran's death, which occurred during the Festival there in 1836. De Beriot, her husband, left Manchester almost before the breath was out of his wife's body, leaving very positive instructions that no drawing, sketch, or death-mask was, under any circumstances, to be taken of the deceased. By some means, however, Bally contrived to circumvent this injunction, and from a mask he then took, made this beautifully executed medallion. It was bequeathed to Mr. John Meadowcroft, who left it to his nephew, Mr. John Towers, formerly of Manchester, in whose possession it was most carefully preserved, until in August, 1908, it was purchased for the Henry Watson Music Library.

At the opening of the Royal Manchester College of Music in the year 1893, Dr. Watson was appointed professor of the choral and ear-training department of that excellent institution, an office which he still holds. His choral conducting experiences have been remarkable. He is specially proud of having held the office of music director of the Gentlemen's Glee Club, Manchester (founded in 1830), for a longer period—sixteen years—than any of his predecessors. Except during his temporary absence at Oxford for a few months, he has been connected with the Vocal Society (Manchester) since its foundation in 1867, first as accompanist and since 1885 as director of the music. He is also conductor of the Stockport Vocal Union, an office he has held for twenty-nine years. In addition period of thirty-three years, exclusive of the time when, as a boy aged eleven, he deputised at Accrington Parish Church. The following is a list of the church appointments he has held: St. Mary's, Droydsden, near Manchester; Bank Street Chapel, Bury; deputy organist of St. Clement's, near Oxford; organist to Lord Ellesmere, at Worsley; St. Paul's, Manchester; Wesleyan Chapel, Higher Broughton; St. John's, Higher Broughton; St. Paul's, Kersal Moor; St. Peter's, Manchester, in succession to Mr. B. St. J. B. Joule and Mr. William Goldthorpe; Congregational Church, Palatine Road, Withington, near Manchester.

Dr. Watson is lecturer on musical history and instruments at Victoria University (Manchester). He has lectured there and elsewhere on Shakespeare from the musician's standpoint; Musical composers and their characteristics; the Violin and its ancestors; Thomas Mace and Musick's Monument; and early 'English viols. His compositions include the opera 'Fair Rosine,' Psalm of Thanksgiving, Shakespearean cantata, ballads from Judge Parry's 'Fairy tales,' and incidental music to 'Antony and Cleopatra,' &c.

THE BOOKS.

Forty years ago Dr. Watson began the formation of his great music library with one or two volumes of Novello's oratorios, which stood on a tiny shelf, on the top of his cottage pianoforte. Now the volumes number more than 30,000! If, like Dominie Sampson, the reader is disposed to exclaim 'Pro-di-gi-ous!' what will he say on learning—if he does not already know—that Dr. Watson, by a deed executed in 1899, has given the whole of his splendid collection of music and musical literature to the Corporation of Manchester for the use of the public for ever! At present the volumes are located in the generous donor's own house—No. 30, Chapel Street, Salford, where he has lived for thirty-nine years—and in the adjoining house which has been taken by the Corporation of Manchester for the purpose. In the deed of gift Dr. Watson stipulates that he shall retain the control of the books so long as he continues to exercise his profession; but the volumes are always accessible to students who wish to consult them. Some day they will be deposited in a building, the site and character of which are now being discussed, which shall be worthy of this splendid collection and of the city which is so fortunate as to be the possessor of so munificent and public-spirited a gift as the 'Henry Watson Music Library.'

Asked to relate any special incident in his book-collecting experiences, Dr. Watson takes down from his shelves what were the original contents of two vellum-bound volumes. 'These,' he says, 'had been thrown aside, as they were considered by their former owner to be of little or no value. Instead of being destroyed, however, it was suggested that they should be handed over to Mr. G. W. Bebbington, of Knutsford, who eventually submitted them to me; at the same time he asked me to accept them, with a request that they should be added to the Music Library. The two volumes to the foregoing appointments, he formerly conducted the Stretford Choral Society, the Accrington Choral Society, the Athenæum Musical Society (Manchester), the Cheetham Glee and Choral Union (Manchester), and the Chorley Choral Society. At one time he was conductor of eight different choral societies, the duties of which necessitated the preparation of forty-two different programmes every season. At a recital in the Free Trade Hall of his opera 'Fair Rosine,' composed for and first performed by the Manchester Amateur Dramatic Society, in November, 1882, the members of these Societies, numbering nearly 400 voices, combined to furnish the chorus.

THE INSTRUMENTS.

The instruments of various times and countries which Dr. Watson has collected, and which he has presented to the Royal Manchester College of Music and to the Corporation of Manchester, are about 300 in number. A brief description of those exhibited at the College is contained in the following preface, written by Mr. Stanley Withers, Registrar of the College, to the printed catalogue :
'In 1900 Dr. Watson made over to the College the musical instruments which have ever since been a familiar and ornamental feature of the Lees Hall of the College. His belief was that this collection would serve a useful educational purpose in an institution devoted to the cultivation of music.
'The collection already contains examples of the musical instruments of many countries and races, and ranges in æsthetic interest from the crude efforts of aboriginal savages to the highly-wrought products of eastern craftsmanship. But, rightly viewed, all the instruments have an interest of their own, irrespective of the degree of artistic invention that has gone to their creation, because the most primitive in form and the most elaborate have this in common, that they represent the conscious efforts of their makers to express musical ideas and musical emotions.

Chiefly noteworthy, perhaps, are the old English instruments, which embrace a period of several centuries and are now quite obsolete. The value of the collection, however, is historic rather than antiquarian. Quaint and curious instruments have not been sought after so much as early examples of typical ones in modern use. By this means students are enabled to trace the development of familiar instruments from their rude beginnings to the artistic excellence of the present day. The growth of the pianoforte, for example, may be studied in its various stages, from the primitive dulcimer, through the virginal, clavichord, spinet and harpsichord, to the square piano, the immediate forerunner of the modern grand. In the set of old English viols may be seen the precursors of the violin, viola and violoncello. The collection also illustrates the evolution of several types of wood-wind and brass instruments in common use. It is hoped that in course of time it may be enriched by specimens of most of the representative instruments known to have been used by man.

No better conclusion to this remarkable life-story of Dr. Watson could be found than that furnished by his old friend, Mr. Albert Jarrett, who writes :

‘I have known no one who more fully and peculiarly has possessed and reflected the harmonious and cheery spirit of music than my friend ; no one less afflicted with the impulses that stifle effort under the pressure of cynical criticism ; and no one more sympathetic towards those who either earnestly practise music’s art, or honestly love it. The part of foster-father, indeed, is the rôle which Dr. Watson has played towards music in Manchester ; and the leavening influence that such advocates, teachers and exemplars as he exert upon any art cannot well be calculated because it cannot at all be traced.

‘The charm of my friend’s character is heightened by the modesty which makes him unconscious of it. The cheery unction in him to which I refer ultimates in and garnishes that saving grace, a bountiful humour. And the humour is all the more attractive because it does not leap out of itself in professionally studied flashes, but bubbles up continuously, to enliven, and to cast its pleasing spell upon all my friend’s personal relationships. Dr. Watson by no means belies the theory that good nature goes hand in hand with good humour. His crowning act of generosity in presenting his splendid library and collection of instruments for public possession and service the world knows all about ; but the world does not know, and never will know, what manifold aid —“all for love and nothing for reward”—he has rendered to the cause of music in Manchester : to those who study it, to those who search the highways and the byways of its history, and to those who appeal to it in charity’s frequent name.

‘I do not know when my friend is most interested and most interesting—with his choirs, with his books, with his camera, or with his lathe and tools. His books are ranged and cribbed in shelves and devices of his own fashioning. His harpsichords could tell many a tale of his industrious ingenuity. The time-pieces of his household are as aggravatingly rhythmical and accurate of beat as metronomes, and his own humour saves me in the small exercise of mine when I address him as “Sam Slick, the clockmaker.”

‘But sometimes when he is lovingly turning his concerts to the exploration of old-time music and musical instruments, when the capture of some fresh treasure for his library absorbs him, or when some neat and serviceable mechanical making or repairing delights him, then, rather than Haliburton’s hero, he calls dear old Thomas Mace to my mind, prompting me to think that sympathy of gifts and feelings—happily not of fortunes—explains his admiration of, and love for, the enthusiastic author of “Musick’s Monument.” In brief, let me say that Manchester has a fortune in the gifts of personal worth and intrinsic value in my friend Henry Watson.’

THE DRUM IN ENGLISH LITERATURE.

Looking back through the long years of English literature, it would almost seem that men of letters have prided themselves on their ignorance of music. Wolcot, the poet, who wrote the words of some songs set by Jackson of Exeter, confessed, ‘I scarcely know the oboe from the double drum’ ; and the history of music in literature is for the most part a record of neglected or despised opportunities. In prose there has been no one to do for music what Pater did for painting in his ‘Studies in the Renaissance’ ; nor have poets, with the exception of Browning, gone beyond references of a general character.

The word ‘drum’ does not appear to have been in common use until the latter half of the 16th century. The earliest reference given by Sir James Murray is to the ‘Records of the Borough of Nottingham’ for 1540-1, search among which yielded the two following entries in the ‘Paymentes for the Sodyourez’ [soldiers] :

Item to Dampport, telyor, for pleyng of hys drome afore Master Mayre and ye men yat he toke muster of at Chapel Barre	vjd.
Item to Dampforthe, telyor, for pleyng of the drome an other tyme befor Master Mayre	xijd.

It is interesting to notice how rapidly the market value of Mr. Davenport’s art rose ; it may be conjectured that by the date of the second performance he had attained the rank of a ‘star.’ In those days everything unusual was popularly invested with properties more or less supernatural ; and perhaps even the sartorial drummer’s thwackings were listened to with a reverence impossible in a more material age. Bacon’s laborious attempt to explain the ‘action’ of the drum in precise terms is worth quoting as an instance of the state of acoustical knowledge at that time. It occurs in 'Sylva Sylvarum,' in the section majestically entitled, 'Experiments in consort touching the magnitude and exility and damp of sound.' 'In drums,' remarks the great philosopher, 'the closeness round about, that preserveth the sound from dispersing, maketh the noise come forth at the drum-hole far more loud and strong than if you should strike upon the like skin extended in the open air.' Lesser men had probably already come to the same conclusion.

One of the earliest allusions to the drum is also one of the most fascinating and suggestive. The word is found in Shakespeare's plays seventy times—in most instances without a qualifying epithet; but here and there his regal touch is manifest in some such memorable phrase as 'the spirit-stirring drum' or 'loud, churlish drums.' And in the Fourth Act of 'Antony and Cleopatra' there occurs a phrase that has been the subject of much conjectural emendation: 'Hark! the drums Demurely wake the sleepers.' The scene is a camp at dead of night, and the strategy of the situation demands a reveille of subdued character, so that the enemy may not be aroused. It is quite likely, too, that in the early 17th century the reveille in the English Army was of the same measured and solemn character as it is known to have been in the Low Countries. In this light, the use of 'demurely,' with its peculiar timbre, is one of those touches that reveal Shakespeare's unapproachable sovereignty, and are worth volumes of commentator's notes.

Only one other passage appears worthy of mention by the side of this: it is taken from 'The Egoist,' and is as incisively comic as that of Shakespeare is suggestively profound. Of Sir Willoughby Pattern in conversation with the learned and orotund father of Clara Middleton, Meredith says, 'He was about as accordingly coupled with Dr. Middleton in discourse as a drum duetting with a bass-viol; and when he struck in he received correction from the pedagogue-instrument. If he thumped affirmative or negative, he was wrong.' It would be interesting to know whether Meredith refers definitely to the kettle-drum: 'thumped' seems to indicate that he does.

Among the few references to the drum that are more than casual, is the humorous episode in 'Waverley' of the beating of the 119th Psalm. It will be remembered that, just as a certain major was about to begin a third bottle of Burgundy, the sound of a drum was heard 'beating no measured martial tune, but a kind of ub-a-dub-dub, like that with which the fire-drum startles . . . The drummer . . . commenced with 'Dumbarton's Drums,' when he was silenced . . . and commanded to beat the 119th Psalm. As his was beyond the capacity of the drubber of heep skin, he was fain to have recourse to the offensive row-de-dow, as a harmless substitute or the sacred music . . .' Is it possible that his incident—if not the length of the Psalm!—suggested to Tennyson the line, 'At last he beat is music out'?

Southey mentions a most miraculous drum at Brousa that was said to sound of itself every night—an Æolian drum, it might be called. Finally, a curious inquiry was raised in The Athenian Oracle, a magazine started in the early years of the 18th century for the discussion of all kinds of questions. It was asked why the drummers of Namur almost invariably escaped injury, though continually under fire. The reply was to the effect that they carried their drums before them, and the shots that went in at one side seldom came out at the other. Thus may musical instruments, like pocket Bibles, be the means of saving life.

Occasional Notes.

An interesting sequel to the article on Newark and Dr. John Blow in our last issue is furnished in the recently-published volume 'The King's Musick: a transcript of records relating to music and musicians (1460-1700).' In the Lord Chamberlain's accounts, under date July 4, 1661, we read: 'Warrant for the payment of £23 16s. 9d. to Henry Cooke, master of the children of the Chappell, for fetching five boys from Newark and Lincoln for his Majesty's service.' As Master John Blow became one of the children of the Chapel Royal, it may be assumed that he was one of the five boys whom Captain Cooke, as the master of the children was called, raided at Newark and Lincoln. Moreover, the date admits the assumption, as John Blow was then twelve years old. His voice appears to have broken in May, 1665, as a warrant of that date mentions him and Pelham Humphryes as being among the 'children whose voices are changed and are to go from his Majesty's Chappell.' Dr. Blow himself ultimately became Master of the Children. In that capacity he also requisitioned boys for the Chapel Royal by virtue of a royal warrant which permitted such practices. On March 8, 1678, an 'Order' was made for the payment to him for the following items:

For the children learning on the lute	...	30	0	0
For those learning on the violin	...	30	0	0
For those learning on the theorbo	...	30	0	0
For fire and strings in the musick room in the Chappell	...	20	0	0
For ruled paper pens and inke	...	2	10	0
For strings for the lutes and theorboes	...	5	10	0
		£118	0	0
For 8 days going to Salisbury and bringing a boy from thence	...	6	0	0
		£124	0	0

Signed: JO. BLOW.

A warrant, dated December 5, 1677, is for the payment of £120 3s. for similar duties, &c., as in the first of the above accounts, and for 'the cure of a broaken legg of one of the children.'

According to Le Ménestrel, a choir of fifty Indians recently performed 'The Messiah' at Port Samson [? Port Simpson], in British Columbia. The soloists were of the same race, and the event is said to have attracted a crowded audience in which natives from the neighbouring districts preponderated. 'The success of the work was very great with this audience of Red Skins,' writes Le Ménestrel, 'of whom we know chiefly from novels, and whom we imagine to be without culture.'

Mr. John Arthur Rodgers, assistant-conductor of the Sheffield Amateur Musical Society—whose recent concert is noticed on p. 383—was born at Sheffield on January 7, 1866, and has passed his life in that choral-famed city. After having received his general education at the Sheffield Royal Grammar School, he studied music—organ, pianoforte and harmony—first, with Mr. J. W. Phillips, with whom, in another capacity, he is now so happily associated, and next for five years under Mr. E. H. Lemare, then organist of the parish church. He afterwards took some lessons in pianoforte-playing from Mr. Frederick Dawson. Mr. Rodgers held the office of organist successively at St. Jude's (Eldon) and St. Barnabas' churches. During the past sixteen years he has successfully discharged similar duties at St. Mary's, one of the largest and most prosperous churches in Sheffield. His skill as a trainer of church choirs is shown in the excellent singing of the voluntary choir (fifty voices) and in the long line of gifted solo boys who have come under his tuition at St. Mary's. A busy teacher in several branches of music, the versatility of Mr. Rodgers finds an outlet in various directions.

MR. J. A. RODGERS.

ASSISTANT-CONDUCTOR OF THE SHEFFIELD AMATEUR MUSICAL SOCIETY.
(Photograph by Mr. Henderson, Fargate, Sheffield.)

For seven years he has conducted the Sheffield Glee and Madrigal Society; he is a member of the selection and chorus committees of the Sheffield Musical Festival, and of the testing sub-committee; and he has acted as adjudicator at competition musical festivals. Since 1896 he has held the important post of musical critic of the Sheffield Daily Telegraph, in which his column of musical notes, week by week, is an attractive feature; and he contributed the annotations to the programme-books of the last Sheffield Festival. Mr. Rodgers, who is a Licentiate of the Royal Academy of Music and an Associate of the Royal College of Music, finds relaxation in amateur theatricals, foreign travel, golf and bicycling. A good all-round musician and a man of cultured tastes, he worthily maintains all the best traditions of Yorkshire music in his native city of Sheffield.

English composers of operas, or of sacred dramas, may take heart when they consider the failure of Dr. Camille Saint-Saëns to get his early operas performed, and this in spite of there being at that time three subventioned opera houses in Paris. His first four-act opera, 'Le Timbre d'argent,' accepted at one time or another by three managements, did not obtain a representation until February 23, 1877, at the Théâtre Lyrique, Paris, when it was produced with but moderate success. His one-act opera, 'La Princesse jaune,' produced on June 12, 1872, at the Opéra Comique, was a failure at the time, though we believe it has since been revived there with success. His best stage work, the sacred drama 'Samson et Dalila'—the libretto by the composer's cousin, Ferdinand Lemaire—was completed in 1872. Two years later the second act was sung at the country house of Madame Viardot-Garcia—to whom the work is dedicated—the singers being the hostess herself, M. Nicot and Auguez. On the recommendation of Liszt, 'Samson et Dalila' (complete) was produced at Weimar, on December 2, 1877, an excellent German translation having been made by Richard Pohl. Eduard Lassen, Liszt's successor there, conducted. Frl. von Muller and Herr Ferenczy sang as the hero and heroine, and, according to M. Pougin, Herr von Milde, in spite of his years, was remarkably good as the High Priest. Its success was immediate, so much so that performances were given in other German cities, inclusive of Hamburg, in 1883, with Rosa Sucher as Dalila. In Paris selections were given, but only at concerts.

Immediately before the production of Saint-Saëns's 'Ascanio' at the Opéra, 'Samson et Dalila' was first performed in France, on March 3, 1890, at the Théâtre des Arts, Rouen, under the management of M. Henri Verdhurt, with Mlle. Bossy, M. Lafarge and Mondaud as soloists. On account of its great success, Verdhurt performed the work at the Eden Theatre, Paris, on October 31 of the same year (1890), with Mlle. Bloch, Talazac and Bouhy as soloists. On November 23, 1892, 'Samson et Dalila' was mounted at the Opéra under Bertrand, with Madame Deschamps-Jehin, Vergnet and Lassalle as principals, and with Mlle. Laus as principal dancer, this time with triumphant success. Since then the sacred drama has never been absent from the repertory. Its one-hundredth performance was given in 1898, and up to 1906 it has been played no fewer than 227 times. Its popularity is none the less with the management by reason of its comparative shortness, which enables it to be utilised as a 'curtain-raiser' for a three-act ballet, a distinction it shares with 'Rigoletto,' 'Der Freischütz' and even 'La Favorita.'

In England 'Samson et Dalila' was first sung in its entirety but as a concert work on September 25, 1893, at the Promenade Concerts, Covent Garden Theatre, under the direction of Mr. (now Dr.) F. H. Cowen, with Miss Edith Miller and Mr. Bernard Lane as the hero and heroine respectively, the two artists replacing at short notice Mlle. Sanz and Lafarge. M. Eugène Oudin was the High Priest and Mr. McGrath the old Hebrew. Its real success, however, in this country was on December 3, 1896, when the work was given at the Queen's Hall under Mr. Alberto Randegger, with Madame Brema, Mr. Edward Lloyd and Mr. Andrew Black as the principal soloists, since which time the work has become popular in the concert-room. The first stage representation of the opera in this country, at Covent Garden, on April 26, is referred to on p. 385.

Students of music cannot fail to be interested in any new method of printing orchestral scores, especially in regard to the transposing instruments thereof. Messrs. Ricordi are publishing in miniature scores the whole of Beethoven's symphonies, the method adopted removing all difficulty of key transposition. In a letter accompanying the first and second Symphonies sent us for review, the publishers state 'the chief feature of this edition is that the parts for the "transposing instruments" have been translated so as to show directly the exact pitch of the notes played, thus enabling anyone possessed of average musical knowledge to read and understand the details of the score.' But this is not all. The editor, Signor Umberto Giordano, the distinguished Italian musician, has abolished—or, rather, partly abolished—the C clef, contenting himself with the G and F clefs, 'which the universal study of the pianoforte has rendered absolutely familiar to the student and amateur.' How does Signor Giordano get over the viola difficulty? To quote further from Messrs. Ricordi's letter: 'The use of the G (or treble) clef for the viola superimposed on the characteristic C clef gives a distinctive sign preventing any confusion in the mind of the reader.' Here is this new and hybrid clef-sign as it appears in the viola stave of the second

Symphony  A foot-note states: La chiave della Viola  corrisponde all' 8ª sotto

In the letter already quoted from, the publishers say: 'The conservative musician who is accustomed to see an array of various clefs and contradictory key-signatures may object to such innovations. But after all the whole object of musical notation is to present to the mind through the eye a picture of what the ear hears, and any change which conduces to the simplifying of this must be for the better. There is no virtue in mere complexity.' No one can gainsay the last sentence in this quotation. We shall be glad to hear the opinions of our readers upon this orchestral notation innovation; in the meantime the two specimen scores which Messrs. Ricordi have sent us are beautifully and clearly printed, and they are published at a reasonable price.

The 'Handel-Mendelssohn Festival' at the Crystal Palace is the altered title of the triennial music-making so long exclusively associated with the composer of the 'Messiah.' The centenary of the birth of Mendelssohn happening to fall this year caused the promoters to arrange for performances to be given of the greatest choral works of both composers. The programme of the festival is as follows:

Grand Rehearsal Day	Saturday, June 19	12 noon
Mendelssohn's Elijah	Tuesday, „ 22	2 p.m.
Selection from Handel's Israel in Egypt and other works; also Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise	Thursday, „ 24	„
Handel's Messiah	Saturday, „ 26	„

The principal soloists will be Miss Agnes Nicholls and Miss Edith Evans; Madame Clara Butt; Messrs. Ben Davies and Walter Hyde; Messrs. Watkin Mills, Kennerley Rumford, Robert Radford and Sir Charles Santley. The London Symphony Orchestra (led by Mr. W. H. Reed) has been engaged as the solo band: Mr. Walter W. Hedgcock, musical director to the Crystal Palace, will occupy, for the sixth time, his accustomed place at the organ; and, for the third time, the festival will be conducted by Dr. Frederic Cowen.

Longevity and vitality, tightly clasped, go hand in hand in the operations of the Madrigal Society. Founded in the year 1741, it is the oldest musical organization in the world, and yet in its 169th season the Society is in the full vigour of youth. At the Ladies' Festival, held at the Holborn Restaurant on May 12, Mr. E. E. Cooper, the honorary librarian, said that the membership was complete—forty good men and true who meet together for the delightful diversion of singing unaccompanied part-music. According to ancient custom, dinner precedes the vocal fare, though one course that formerly found a place in the menu, black pudding, no longer graces the festive board. Rule 11 in the original constitution of the Society was to the effect 'That only guests should be invited who are learned in music.' If all the favoured guests of the Society to-day cannot claim to be 'learned' in the art, they are fully appreciative of the fine old madrigals as sung with such enthusiasm by the members. This feast of song, following a feast of edibles, again characterized the recently held Ladies' Festival, with the result that a very enjoyable evening was spent under pleasant conditions. The venerable President of the Society, Mr. Charles T. D. Crews, occupied the chair, and Mr. Oscar W. Street worthily maintained the geniality and hospitality of his forbears in discharging the duties of host and honorary secretary. The following selection of madrigals was sung under the able direction of Sir Frederick Bridge:

Laudate nomen Domini (Motet)	Tye.
All creatures now are merry minded	Bennet.
The silver swan	Orlando Gibbons.
Flora gave me fairest flowers	Wilbye.
Thyrsis, sleepest thou	Bennet.
Sweet honey-sucking bees	Wilbye.
In pride of May	Wielkes.
Fair Orián in the morn	John Milton.
Sister, awake	Batson.
April is in my mistress' face	Morley.
Lady, when I behold	Wilbye.
Down in a flowery vale	Festa.
In these delightful pleasant groves	Purcell.
The Waits—Fa, La, La	Saville.

It is always pleasant to record an act of philanthropy whether at home or abroad. At Lugano, on April 30, Mr. Willem Coenen, for many years resident in London, organized a concert in aid of the Society for the protection of animals (Société tessoine cantonale pour la protection des animaux). The programme opened with Bach's Concerto in G for two pianofortes à quatre mains, and closed with Mr. Coenen's 'Caprice Concertant' for eight pianofortes à quatre mains. The sixteen performers were Milles. E. and F. Bossi, K. and M. Cattaneo, Fisch-Pelli, Madame Franken, Milles. A. Galli, Kleinschmied, Lubbock, Madame Mewes-Béha, Milles. Orgill, Ragazzi, A. Schabelitz, Madame Scotti, Milles. A. de Stankiewicz and Vassalli. Vocal solos were contributed by Mlle. Rinalda Pavoni and Mr. Goss-Revel, and the concert-giver played, with his wonted enthusiasm, 'Etude de concert' (Liszt) and 'Bunte Reihen' (Coenen-Liszt). We understand that Mr. Coenen had some difficulty in obtaining the necessary eight pianofortes, but this was overcome by the loan of seven instruments which, with his own, made up the necessary number, 'all beautifully in tune.' The local newspapers contained flattering notices of what seems to have been a successful concert. The critic of the Popolo e Liberté concluded his notice in these terms:

Eccellente e caratteristico il concertone degli otto piani, musicato e diretto da quell'artista che è il M. Coenen, anima della ruscitissima festa: par la cronaca dirò che la sala pareva una grandioso fiore tanto vi era rappresentata la bellezza femminile, e saltando da cosa si piena di ideale alla più perfetta volgarità, dirò che l'incasso raggiunse le lire 700. Dur.que successo, ed allora, a quando un'altro?

Mr. Alfred Hollins sailed in the s.s. 'Briton' on May 15 for Cape Town, preparatory to giving a series of organ recitals in South Africa. He will remain in the colony for about three months, and then return to England en route for Canada. In that part of Greater Britain Mr. Hollins will also be heard as a masterly exponent of organ music. For performance on these tours he has composed a Pastorale (in G), which he has dedicated to Mr. Denholm Walker, joint organist of the City of Cape Town. On May 10 'Alfred the Great,' as the late W. T. Best used to call him, gave a farewell organ recital at St. George's United Free Church, Edinburgh, of which he is organist, before an immense audience which completely filled the building.

Dvorák's oratorio 'Saint Ludmila' received its first performance in the French language at Tournai, Belgium, on April 18. The occasion was the grand annual concert of La Société de Musique de Tournai—president, M. le Comte Stiénon du Pré—which took place in the Salle de la Halle aux Draps. The soloists were Mlle. Elsa Homburger (St. Ludmila), Mlle. Philippi (Svatava), M. Plamondon (Bořivoj) and M. Frölich (Ivan). The translation of the work into the French language has been made by Mlle. May de Rudder. Subjoined are some extracts from the notices of the Belgian newspapers on the performance:

Curiosity to hear the oratorio was great. The success was triumphant and well merited. One feels how much the musician is impressed by the beauties of nature, and that he is compelled to express its many voices. . . . As to the choruses, several are magnificent, above all the Wedding Chorus and the majestic Kyrie at the end. The performance was irreproachable at all points. The precision, correctness and full tone of the choir were beyond praise, and the conductor, M. de Loose, deserves the credit of giving one of the greatest successes of the Society.—(Le Soir, April 20)

Taken altogether, 'St. Ludmila' is a very fine work, of incontestable artistic value. The most important part of the oratorio—and that which commended it chiefly to the Musical Society of Tournai—consists of the choruses. Some of them are of great beauty; for instance, that of the Pagan crowd celebrating the return of Spring, the Chorus of Priests and Priestesses of Baba, that which signals the arrival of Ivan, the Hunters' chorus, and above all the final chorus of which the picturesqueness of its design is really magnificent. The interpretation, which did honour to M. de Loose, conductor of the Society, gave the impression of perfect correctness, and was full of spirit and life as regards the chorus, and the soloists were all of a high degree of excellence.—(L'Indépendance Belge, April 21.)

A work as remarkable for the richness of its orchestration and for the character of its themes as for its rhythmic originality and its vocal inventiveness. That Dvorák frequently finds inspiration in the divine sources of Bach and Handel, and that his music has direct affinity with Russian music, is incontestable, but it is no less true that his 'St. Ludmila' can take rank among the best works of modern musical art.—(La Chronique, April 22.)

The recent troubles in the capital of Turkey recall an imaginary concert-bill, doubtless emanating from America, which included the following attraction:

HERR VON KIKUPAROW

His first appearance since his return from Constantinople.

The only bass boss for us.

Church and Organ Music.

THE NEW ORGANIST OF CHRIST CHURCH CATHEDRAL, OXFORD.

Dr. Basil Harwood has resigned the organistship of Christ Church Cathedral, an office he has held with distinction for nearly seventeen years. Mr. Henry George Ley, who has been appointed to the vacancy, was born on December 30, 1887, at Chagford, of which Devonshire parish his father, the Rev. G. L. H. Ley, is rector. He began music very early, so early indeed that at the age of two he managed to struggle through the melody of 'As with gladness men of old,' on the pianoforte! He received his first lessons in music from his mother, and afterwards from Mr. E. E. Vinnicombe, then organist of Chagford Church. In April, 1896, he became a chorister of St. George's Chapel, Windsor. At the age of ten he played the voluntaries, and accompanied his first service in the Chapel at the age of twelve.

(Photograph by Mr. J. Seame, Oxford.)

Master Ley usually played the service at St. George's on Saturday mornings. One such occasion the present writer well remembers, when the boy accompanied the entire service and played the voluntaries with the greatest composure and in faultless manner. Sir Walter Parratt stood by and looked approvingly on; but without a word of comment, still less of apology, he gently pushed in one or two fancy stops which the chorister-organist had prepared for the opening voluntary! A portrait of Master Ley, seated at the organ of St. George's Chapel, appeared in the Musical Times of March, 1902. From St. George's Choir School, Windsor, Henry Ley went to Uppingham School, where he obtained the first musical scholarship that had ever been given there. He studied the pianoforte under Mr. Paul David, music-master of the School, and theory and organ with Mr. W. Greatorex, the assistant music-master. At Uppingham he frequently appeared at the School concerts, and at Mr. Paul David's farewell concert he played in Mozart's Concerto in E flat for two pianofortes. From January, 1905, to July, 1906, he was a student at the Royal College of Music, where he studied under Sir Walter Parratt, Sir Frederick Bridge, Sir Charles Stanford, Dr. Wood, and Mr. Marmaduke Barton. He was elected a Council exhibitor during his eighteen months' studentship, and used to play organ solos at the College concerts. He passed the examination (organ and theory) of Associate of the Royal College of Music in 1906.

While at the College he lived at Windsor. Sir Walter Parratt, who has taken the kindest interest in the young man's career, allowed him the great privilege of practising on the organ in St. George's Hall, Windsor Castle. At that time he held an organ appointment at Farnham Royal, near Slough, and used frequently to deputise for his old and much-esteemed master at St. George's Chapel.

In October, 1906, he was elected Organ Scholar of Keble College, Oxford. He conducts the College Musical Society, is a member of the Oxford University Musical Union, and for the last two terms he has been President of the Oxford Musical Club. For the services at Keble College he composed a Morning Service (Te Deum and Jubilate) in C minor for voices in unison, which has been published. In due course he will proceed to the arts and musical degrees of the University.

Mr. Ley, who enters upon his new appointment on June 24, is the youngest cathedral organist, being twenty-one years of age; but he is two years older than were Sir George Elvey and Sir John Stainer when they, at the age of nineteen, entered upon their respective duties as organists of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, and Magdalen College, Oxford. He goes to his new duties not only thoroughly well equipped, but well seasoned, so to speak, with the great traditions of dignity and reverence associated with St. George's Chapel, Windsor. The future career of Mr. Ley will be watched with interest: in the meantime he is being heartily congratulated upon having been appointed to so important an office as organist of Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford.

CHORISTER LIFE IN THE EARLY SIXTIES.

As an interesting sequel to the article on Carlisle Cathedral which appeared in our April issue, we have pleasure in giving some extracts from a paper bearing the above title, written by Mr. James Walter Brown, a much-esteemed resident in the Border city. Mr. Brown, who became a chorister of Carlisle Cathedral in March, 1860, may tell his own tale without further introduction:

Our rehearsal room was in the Fraternity, entrance to it being obtained by way of a flight of stone stairs on the north side, a little to the west of the slype. It was a grimy room which, far away in the misty past, had once been white-washed; and on the side nearest the cathedral there was a small anteroom, in which stood an old oak chest. Upon it stood a battered tin basin, very dirty, having a tiny bit of yellow soap beside it, so that boys might exercise their proverbial cleanliness by frequent ablutions. High up over this anteroom was a sort of gallery, stored with odds and ends of all kinds, fittings and rubbish taken from the cathedral during its restoration a few years before—open to the rehearsal room, and forming a happy hunting-ground for venturesome boys who could climb his giddy height.

We met for practice each morning at a quarter-past eight, under the charge of the head boy for the time being, until about nine o'clock, when Mr. Ford came. The head boy was then a somewhat important personage, being held responsible for the misdemeanours of his juniors in position, and as these were frequently his seniors in years he occasionally had a warm time of it.

When a boy was duly elected to a place in the choir his troubles only began, for he was not considered duly initiated until he had gone through the four ceremonies of having his nose ground, his teeth sharpened, being christened, and introduced to the ghost. Over these functions the head boy presided, all the others acting as his acolytes. The nose was ground sometimes with a peat, but in my case with a Cornwell's geography—the cover in which it was bound being of the nature of a rasp, the teeth were sharpened with a brick, and the christening was accomplished by holding the victim's head under 'the choristers' pump,' while successive relays of boys deluged him with water. Every boy was always known afterwards by the nickname then given to him.

At the foot of the stone pulpit in the Fraternity, which was then called 'the confessional,' was a dark recess, having an iron-studded oaken door, and it was in the mysterious twilight of this gloomy cell that the ghost held his court. A procession having been arranged, with the neophyte in the rear between two of the older boys, the room was slowly circumambulated to the strains of the Dead March in Saul, dolefully played on the old square piano. Finally, the awe-stricken youngster was introduced to the 'ghost,' who was, of course, one of the boys got up for the occasion, and left alone with him for some minutes. To most boys this was a fearful ordeal, particularly so as all their superstitious fears had been worked on for days in preparation for the event. Once there was nearly a tragedy: one of the bigger boys, who had been peeping through the keyhole, rushing in just in time to prevent the novice from dashing out the ghost's brains with a big coal-hammer.

When I was in Durham, many years afterwards, I found that all these ceremonies had been practised in just the same way by the choirboys there, time out of mind. The only variation was that instead of interviewing the ghost, the new boy had to spend a quarter of an hour by himself in a stone coffin, down in the crypt.

It would be interesting to trace the origin of these customs, which had become traditional in cathedrals so far apart as Durham and Carlisle, long before the days of railways, and possibly even of stage coaches.

THE HONOURABLE CORPS OF GENTLEMEN-AT-ARMS.

Four centuries have come and gone since King Henry VIII., in the first year of his reign, formed the Honourable Corps of Gentlemen-at-Arms, in other words, the King's Bodyguard, but originally styled the Band of Gentlemen Pensioners. To commemorate the 400th anniversary of the raising of this Corps—with the exception of the Yeomen of the Guard the oldest in England—a special service was held at the Chapel Royal, St. James's Palace, on May 17. The presence of nearly the whole of the Corps—numbering upwards of forty commissioned officers who have seen active service—resplendent in their brilliant uniforms, provided an imposing spectacle, as viewed from the organ gallery of that historic sanctuary in which the service was held.

The musical arrangements were under the direction of Dr. Walter G. Alcock, organist and composer of His Majesty's Chapels Royal, who wore the full-dress robes of a Durham Doctor of Music. Dr. Alcock was assisted by his deputy, Mr. G. S. Roper, and the organ was reinforced by six other instruments, two trumpets, three trombones, and drums. These were played by students from the Royal Military School of Music, Kneller Hall, who were stationed in the Strangers' Gallery, on the east side of the Chapel, facing the organ gallery. During the assembling of the congregation the following pieces were played on the organ combined with the brass and drums:

Grand Solemn March in E flat ...	Henry Smart.
Overture to the Occasional Oratorio ...	Handel.
Imperial March ...	Elgar.

The entry of the Corps was heralded by a fanfare, specially composed by Dr. Alcock; thereupon the Children and Gentlemen of the Chapel sang, in procession, the hymn 'Rejoice to-day with one accord.' Psalms xxiii. and cxxi. were chanted to a double chant in E, composed by Dr. Alcock for the Maundy Service, and the anthem was Handel's 'Zadok the Priest.' After Canon Edgar Sheppard, sub-dean of His Majesty's Chapels Royal, had given a short address, the hymn 'Now thank we all our God' and the National Anthem were sung. Elgar's 'Pomp and Circumstance' March (in D), as furnishing the out-going voluntary, concluded an impressive and memorable service.

SONS OF THE CLERGY FESTIVAL.

The 255th annual festival of the Sons of the Clergy was held in St. Paul's Cathedral on May 12. A full orchestra and a choir of 250 voices were located under the dome, and, as on many previous occasions, Sir George Martin conducted. The service opened with Sir Charles Stanford's choral overture 'Ave atque vale,' composed in commemoration of the death of Haydn and the birth of Tennyson in 1809, and conducted by the composer. 'Stainer in A,' first sung at the festival of 1873, furnished the music for the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis, and the anthem was a setting of the hymn 'Jesus, Thy boundless love to me'—translated from the German of Paul Gerhardt by John Wesley—specially composed for the occasion and conducted by Dr. Basil Harwood. Following a long-established custom, the Old 100th Psalm was sung before the sermon, and Beethoven's 'Hallelujah' chorus brought the service to a triumphant conclusion.

CATHEDRAL SERVICES.

ELY.

Mozart's 'Requiem' and Handel's 'Messiah' were performed in Ely Cathedral in the morning and afternoon respectively of May 11. The choir was drawn from Cambridge, Bury St. Edmunds, Lynn and Ely. There was a full band, which was chiefly professional. The soloists were Miss Gladys Honey, Madame Lambe, Mr. Joseph Reed, Mr. H. F. Wykes and Mr. A. Haigh. Mr. J. F. Chubb and Mr. H. C. L. Stocks presided at the organ, and Mr. George Minns at the pianoforte. Dr. A. W. Wilson, organist of the cathedral, conducted. Large congregations attended both services.

EXETER.

Two special Services of Praise were held at Exeter Cathedral in the afternoon and evening of April 21. The singers—all the men and boys being surpliced—and players upon instruments numbered about 350, and were placed on an orchestra specially erected at the west end of the building. The choir consisted of the recently amalgamated Exeter Oratorio Society and Western Counties Musical Association, and the band was led by Mr. J. Pardew, of Plymouth. Mr. E. M. Vinnicombe presided at a temporary organ erected at the west end by Messrs. Hele & Co., of Plymouth, and effective use was made of the 16-ft. and 8-ft. pedal stops of the cathedral organ, the latter played by Mr. F. G. Pinn, sub-organist of the cathedral. Handel's 'Messiah' was sung at the morning service, and Wesley's 'The wilderness' and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' at the evening service. The soloists were Miss Ada Forrest, Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Walter Hyde and Mr. Watkin Mills. Dr. D. J. Wood, organist of Exeter Cathedral, conducted in the morning and Dr. H. J. Edwards, of Barnstaple, in the evening, these gentlemen being joint-conductors of the amalgamated Societies. The reverent and devotional character of both services was all that could be desired. The words of the circular, signed by the Dean, announcing the event, said 'The main object of the Services will be to afford to the musical talent of the neighbourhood an opportunity of joining in a great and united demonstration of Praise, and thus to raise the tone of musical life and thought throughout the Diocese.' This object was abundantly realised in a manner calling for hearty commendation.

LICHFIELD.

The bi-centenary of the birth of Dr. Samuel Johnson is to be celebrated at Lichfield, his native city, in September next. The commemoration will include a special service in the Cathedral, for which Dr. Arthur B. Plant has been invited to compose a special 'Johnson' anthem. Dr. Plant, who has accepted the invitation, is a native of Lichfield, and was formerly a cathedral chorister there.

ST. ASAPH.

Bach's church cantata 'Thou guide of Israel,' Bridge's 'Rock of Ages,' and Bach's eight-part motet, 'Come, Jesu, come' (unaccompanied), were sung in St. Asaph Cathedral on April 22, by an augmented choir from Denbigh, St. Asaph and Rhyl. The cathedral organist, Mr. W. E. Belcher, conducted the unaccompanied motet, and the tenor and bass solos were sung by Messrs. Gordon and Harris, cathedral lay-clerks.

WINCHESTER.

The centenary of the death of Haydn in 1809 was observed in Winchester Cathedral on May 6 by a performance of the 'Creation,' under the direction of Dr. Prendergast, organist and master of the choristers. The solos were undertaken by members of the cathedral choir, those for soprano, 'With verdure clad' and 'On mighty pens,' by the whole of the choristers together. The choral portions were sung by the Cathedral Oratorio Choir, and the orchestra included both local players and members of the Church Orchestral Society, the total number of performers being over 200. Dr. Sweeting, organist of Winchester College, presided at the organ.

SPECIAL SERVICES.

The Association of Church Choirs for the Deanery of Jersey held its second annual festival in St. Mark's Church on May 13. About 400 voices, representing fifteen choirs, half of whom were surpliced, took part. The music included: processional hymn, 'Lift high the cross' (Rev. James Baden-Powell); Psalm 118, to Walmisley's chant in A; Magnificat and Nunc dimittis (J. T. Field); Anthem, 'Great is the Lord' (E. A. Sydenham); in addition to hymns sung to the tunes 'Bishopgarth' (Sullivan), 'Sanctuary' (Dykes), and 'Word of God eternal,' to a setting by J. Baptiste Calkin. The service and anthem were conducted by Mr. J. Hubert, organist of the Parish Church of St. Heliers, and conductor of the Association. The organizing secretary is the Rev. C. W. Balleine, Rector of St. Clement.

The Presbyterian Church of England Association of North London Choirs held its twenty-first annual Service of Praise at Park Church, Highbury, on April 27. The anthem was Schubert's 'Song of Miriam' (soloist, Mrs. Miriam Mauchlen). Mr. T. Ernest Murray was at the organ, and Mr. John Cook conducted. The opening and closing voluntaries were played respectively by Mr. Howard Vernon and Mr. H. C. J. Churchill.

At Brixton Church a selection from Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' was sung at the Oratorio Service on Sunday afternoon, May 2, under the direction of the organist, Mr. Douglas Redman. The full professional orchestra was led by Mr. F. Weist-Hill, and Mr. Welton Hickin was the organist. This was the last of these successful oratorio services held during the present season, but they will be resumed on the first Sunday in October.

At St. Bede's Church, Liverpool, on May 12, the combined choirs of St. Bede's and St. Michael's in the Hamlet sang Stainer's cantata 'The Daughter of Jairus.' Mr. T. T. Ford, organist of St. Michael's, presided at the organ, and Mr. Ernest H. Smith conducted.

ASCENSION DAY SERVICES.

Bach's fine Ascensiontide cantata 'Lobet Gott in seinen Reichen,' was sung as the anthem at St. George's Chapel, Windsor, under the direction of Sir Walter Parratt.

At Westminster Abbey, the evening canticles were sung to Macfarren in E flat, settings which deserve to be better known. The anthem was Bridge's 'Hymn to the Creator' (The song of St. Francis of Assisi), performed at the Worcester musical festival of 1884. As one of Sir Frederick's best choral works, it is admirably suited for a church festival. The choir was augmented to fifty voices, including the children of the Chapel Royal, and the organ was reinforced by trumpets, trombones and drums. Dr. Alcock presided at the organ, and Sir Frederick Bridge, assisted by Dr. Borland, conducted the music of an impressive service.

At a special service held in St. John's Church, Ryde, Isle of Wight, on April 26, Stainer's Evening Service in A and Hiller's 'Song of Victory' were sung by the Oratorio Choir, accompanied by strings and organ. The solos were sung by Mrs. Fellowes, the orchestra was led by Mr. J. E. Bonn, Mr. Edward Gilbert presided at the organ, and Mr. Walter C. B. Smith, organist of the church, conducted.

Mr. W. W. Starmer, organist and choirmaster, gave a special organ recital in St. Mark's Church, Broadwater Down, Tunbridge Wells, on April 25. On that occasion the programme was selected from the compositions of the recitalist written for special occasions during the past twenty-one years, 1888 to 1909, during which he has held the office of organist and choirmaster. The following is a list of the pieces: Fest March, Pastorale ('The Angelus'), Gavotte and Musette, Invocation, Postlude, Romance, and Fantasia in D minor.

Mr. Charles Seal, for the past thirty-seven years organist of Macclesfield Parish Church, has been presented with an Erard grand pianoforte and a cheque for fifty guineas in recognition of his long and valued services to the cause of music in Macclesfield and the district. The great esteem in which Mr. Seal is held was shown by the complete success of the invitation to subscribe to the testimonial fund, the sum of £152 having been contributed in six weeks and in a remarkably spontaneous manner.

Dr. J. Kendrick Pyne was the chief guest at the annual dinner of the Oldham and District Organists' Association, held at the Masonic Hall, Oldham, on April 27. In response to the toast of his health, the ex-organist of Manchester Cathedral gave some interesting reminiscences of his career as a church musician.

SOUTH COAST MUNICIPAL ORCHESTRAS.

I. BRIGHTON.

It is impossible to over-estimate the good effect of municipal effort in furthering the cause of music. Instances of an enlightened policy in this direction on the part of the city fathers are not lacking. Open-air performances by bands in the summer, the support of orchestras, and even choral societies, are steps in the right direction towards giving innocent enjoyment exercising a beneficial influence upon the community. Money is well spent in so good a cause, and where music is financially aided by Mayors and Corporations, the charge on the rates is in inverse ratio to the good that is done. We propose, from time to time, to record such well-merited enterprise, beginning with towns on the South coast.

'Attractions' form a valuable asset in the popularizing of an English watering-place, especially one that, like Brighton, enjoys a 'season' all the year round. Music occupies an important place in this asset 'attractions.' In not a few places, however, it is of the outdoor, 'Merry-widow' type, played by a band of wind instruments in a pier pavilion, or in public gardens, during the bathing season. This was the case at Brighton until two years ago. But in June, 1907, the Corporation wisely decided to engage a Municipal Orchestra, the cost thereof to be charged upon the rates of the town. A band of twenty-eight performers, under the direction of Herr Franz Meisel, was formed, costing £100 per week for a period of three months. At the end of that time—and, mirabile dictu, at the pressing demand of the inhabitants!—the players were re-engaged for a further period of three months. Moreover, upon the expiration of the second period, another re-engagement followed, but on a reduced scale—twenty-two performers at a cost of £85 per week.

In June, 1908, on the resignation of Herr Meisel, the Corporation appointed Mr. Joseph Sainton as their Musical Director, and in view of the success of the experiment in every direction, and of the many representations made to the Council, a Municipal Orchestra of forty performers was engaged to play during the summer season at a cost of £130 per week. The original idea was the reduction of the band, and corresponding expense, for the remainder of the year. At the termination of the engagement, however, the success of the new conductor and orchestra, especially their performances at the Dome Symphony and Classical Concerts, was so great that the Council felt justified in keeping the orchestra at its original strength, but at an increased cost of £150 per week. The result, largely due to Mr. Sainton, is that a high standard of efficiency has been reached, and the performances of the orchestra have been highly appraised and greatly appreciated by both visitors and residents.

The Brighton Municipal Orchestra—most ably led by Mr. Percy Frostick, a soloist of repute—consists of forty performers, distributed thus :

First violins	8	Clarinets (one changing to Bass clarinet)	2
Second violins	4	Bassoons (one changing to Contra fagotto)	2
Violas	3	Horns	3
Violoncellos	3	Trumpets	2
Double-basses (one changing to Tuba when required) ...	3	Trombones	3
Flutes	2	Percussion	2
Oboes (one changing to Cor Anglais) ...	2	Harp.

During last summer the orchestra gave three performances daily (excepting Sundays) in the Pavilion Grounds whenever the weather was suitable. On Wednesday evenings a special symphony or other classical concert was held in the Dome, but on each other evening illuminated promenade concerts were given on the Eastern Lawn. When the weather was unsuitable for outdoor performances the concerts took place in the Winter Garden at the Aquarium. In July last, distinguished vocalists were introduced at these excellent municipal concerts, a practice which has been retained.

Since then the programmes of the performances have undergone many changes, and now the orchestra performs daily (including Sundays) every afternoon and evening in the Winter Garden at the Aquarium, except on Wednesday evenings, when special symphony concerts take place in the Dome.

The Brighton orchestra had the distinction of being heard beyond their municipal borders when they were specially engaged by the St. James's Hall Syndicate at a concert held in St. James's Hall, London, on November 21 last. The culminating point up to the present time in their history is the recent musical festival—perhaps the first initiated by a municipal body in this country—the great success of which is fresh in the minds of our readers.

And now a few words about the conductor, Mr. Joseph Sainton. He was musically educated at the Leipzig Conservatorium, where he studied under Weidenbach and Dr. Carl Reinecke. Upon leaving Leipzig, he spent a year at Nice, Monte Carlo, and Milan for further study, and afterwards toured in South Africa, giving numerous pianoforte and organ recitals with great success. He then became organist of Pretoria Cathedral, but soon afterwards returned to Europe, where he made a determined but unsuccessful attempt to establish himself at Vienna. Having exhausted his savings, he gave lessons in English, played the pianoforte at cafés, and obtained small engagements as rehearsal-accompanist of artists performing in operettas and theatres. After a year's experience of this precarious means of livelihood, he became convinced that there was no hope for an English musician in the Austrian capital. Thereupon he returned to England, five years ago, to start at the bottom of the ladder.

Upon arriving home he was almost immediately engaged as conductor of touring comic-opera companies—'The Belle of New York,' 'Floradora,' &c. Some pantomime companies availed themselves of his conducting services, and during two winter seasons he was engaged as musical director at the Crystal Palace Theatre, when he wrote, arranged and conducted the music of two very successful pantomimes at Sydenham.

Mr. Sainton's first appointment under a public body was that of the District Council of Clacton-on-Sea in 1906, when he discharged the duties of conductor and entertainment manager at that east coast resort. After an unusually successful season at Clacton he was unanimously appointed musical director to the Corporation of Bridlington. In the middle of his second season there (1908) he was chosen by the Brighton Corporation as their musical director. The Bridlington people—with whom he was under contract to the end of the season—generously offered him an addition of £4 per week to his salary (raising it to £16 per week) and a contract for four years if he would terminate his negotiations with Brighton. He naturally felt, however, that the south coast town, where he would have a permanent orchestra of forty performers, would provide a more extensive field for his exertions, and that at Brighton more important and better work could be done. At his urgent request the Bridlington people thereupon released him from his contract, upon his paying them the sum of £150 as compensation.

Mr. Sainton is very happy at Brighton, where he has met with well deserved and continued success. The Dome concerts on Wednesday evenings have obtained a great reputation, and several eminent composers have conducted programmes of their own works at those well-organized music-makings. It was at Mr. Sainton's urgent recommendation to the Corporation that vocalists are now engaged every week for all the municipal concerts, and he also urged the retention of the orchestra of forty performers as an all-the-year-round fixture. The recent festival was originated, planned, and carried out by him in every detail after his recommendations had been approved by the Corporation. In addition to conducting the orchestra, Mr. Sainton occasionally plays pianoforte concertos and solos at the Dome concerts, and as he has the engaging of all the artists, vocal and instrumental, for all the concerts—in fact, the entire arrangements—his hands are by no means those of the 'unemployed.' In reply to our question as to the cost of the Orchestra upon the rates of the town, he says: 'As an orchestra of this number (forty performers) was only started in June last, the financial side of the question will not be gone into until the end of the first year; but I believe that the Orchestra will pay for itself without any charge on the rates.' This is good news, and a proof that such efforts, properly directed, bring their reward both financially and artistically. It is quite certain that Mr. Sainnton is the right man in the right place at the Queen of Watering-places. Long may success continue to attend him in his work. Bournemouth will furnish the next sketch of this series of articles on 'Municipal Orchestras.'

Obituary.

The following deaths are recorded with regret:

MR. T. W. STANIFORTH.

On March 25, at Sheffield, THOMAS WORSLEY STANIFORTH, a well-known organist of Sheffield, where he was born June 7, 1845. He formerly held organ appointments at St. Peter's Church, London Docks—for the laying of the foundation-stone of which church he composed his popular tune to 'Jerusalem, my happy home'—St. Paul's, Brighton; and St. Paul's, Regents Park; and he was at one time music-master at Highgate School. In addition to being a brilliant and artistic performer on the organ and pianoforte, Mr. Staniforth took a great interest in the musical history of Sheffield, and he was an excellent raconteur.

MR. B. J. LANG.

On April 4, at Boston, Mass., BENJAMIN JOHNSON LANG, aged seventy-one. Born at Salem, Mass., on December 28, 1837, he studied under his father, F. G. Hill (of Boston), Alfred Jaell, and Gustav Satter, and subsequently became a pupil of Liszt's. Since 1852 he has been an organist of various churches in Boston, his last appointment having been at King's Chapel, from 1885 to the time of his death. Mr. Lang became conductor of the Apollo Club in 1868; the Cecilia Society in 1874; and the Handel and Haydn Society in 1895. His last notable public appearance was as conductor of part of the programme at Symphony Hall, Boston, on the night of the Lincoln Memorial service, February 12, when he directed the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a choir. As pianist, teacher, and conductor, Mr. Lang has for a long period been in the foremost rank of musicians in Boston, where he introduced a large number of works by foreign and native composers. His compositions include an oratorio 'David'; symphonies and overtures; much chamber music; pianoforte music; many church compositions; songs, &c.

MR. J. P. ATTWATER.

On April 10, at 42, Orlando Road, Clapham Common, JOHN POST ATTWATER, at the age of forty-six. As a boy of eleven years old he was appointed organist of the Wesleyan Church in his native town, Faversham, Kent. On his arrival in London in 1884 he became organist of Studley Road Congregational Church, Clapham, and from 1885 to the time of his early and lamented death he most efficiently held the office of organist and choir-master of Shafton Square Congregational Church, where his musical ministrations were highly appreciated and will be greatly missed. Outside his church work he was well-known as principal of the music department of the Battersea Polytechnic, where, on separate evenings of each week, he had an orchestra and a choral society of one hundred voices. Mr. Attwater was also conductor of the South-London Musical Club, a male-voice choir of nearly one hundred picked voices. In 1895 he obtained the Fellowship of the Royal College of Organists; in 1897 the Licentiate-ship of the Royal Academy of Music (pianoforte); and in 1905 the degree of Bachelor of Music at Durham University. A man of genial temperament, Mr. Attwater will be greatly missed in South London musical circles, where he was well-known as an accomplished, hard-working and earnest-minded musician. A memorial fund, in order to provide for the education of Mr. Attwater's two children, is being raised; of this, Mr. John Morrish, 55, Kodenhurst Road, Clapham, S.W., is the honorary secretary.

MR. A. J. JAEGER.

At 37, Curzon Road, Muswell Hill, on May 18, after a long and trying illness, AUGUST JOHANNES JAEGER, a most gifted amateur in music. A native of Düsseldorf, where he drew his first breath on March 18, 1860, he came to England in December, 1878. His enthusiasm for music was born with him. Even as a small boy he would follow the military bands, and how very proud he was at being allowed to hold the music of one of the performers! The year 1882 was one of great joy to him, for he then heard Wagner's operas for the first time, and he probably laid the foundations of his illness by going without necessary food in order to provide the means for a ticket at the Opera. Endowed with a highly developed musical organization, August Jaeger was not only a keen critic but he had the rare gift of being able to write upon the art in an attractive style and in perfect English. For many years he was a valued contributor to the Musical Times, even, indeed, almost up to the hour of his death.

In 1890 Mr. Jaeger entered the publishing department of Messrs. Novello. There he found full scope for the exercise of his knowledge of music and musicians, and it is only the bare truth to say that he discharged his important duties with a zealous enthusiasm worthy of all praise. As one of the 'friends pictured within' of Sir Edward Elgar's 'Variations on an original theme for orchestra,' Mr. Jaeger's name and personality will long be preserved in 'Nimrod,' one of the most beautiful strains in that masterpiece. On December 22, 1898, he married Miss Isabella Donkersley, a distinguished student of the Royal College of Music, for whom and her two young children the greatest sympathy will be felt by the many friends and fellow-workers of true-hearted August Jaeger.

The remains were cremated at the Crematorium, Golder's Green, Hampstead, on May 22. Dr. Walford Davies presided at the organ and the choristers of the Temple Church took part in a simple and impressive service.

SONGS.

- To Freedom; The dead Christ; Fly, messenger, fly; Standing beyond time.* Words by Edward Carpenter. Music by Rutland Boughton (Op. 24).
Compromise. Words by Georgette Agnew. Music by J. D. Davis (Op. 41, No. 2).
To welcome you. Words by Harold Boulton. Composed by A. Goring Thomas.
Songs of Friendship. Words by Augusta Clayton-East. Music by Reginald Somerville.
Arise, ye subterranean winds. By Henry Purcell. Edited by John E. West.
The self-banished; True constancy; Undaunted love. By Dr. John Blow. Edited by Dr. W. H. Cummings.
 [Novello & Co., Ltd.]

In the songs from Mr. Rutland Boughton's pen, we have four fine examples of the modern 'art' song. The words, chosen from Edward Carpenter's 'Towards Democracy,' are deeply contemplative and transcendental in expression. The musical settings, in their seriousness and thoughtful style, do not fail to accord with the spirit and character of the lines. The emotional significance of each song is depicted by a musical figure which is kept in evidence by the pianoforte part, and gives character to the whole. In his application of this method Mr. Boughton's marked originality is well displayed. For their execution the songs require a medium voice; for their interpretation, a sympathetic temperament.

Mr. J. D. Davis's 'Compromise' is also written in a deeply philosophical vein. A constant figure runs through the pianoforte part, giving rise in its course to effects of singular beauty. The accompaniment, which is subdued nearly throughout, contains many points that seem to demand orchestral treatment. The song is for a contralto or baritone vocalist.

Goring Thomas's graceful style and pretty fancy are well exemplified in 'To welcome you.' Both vocal part and accompaniment contribute to the daintiness and charm of this trifle—a song for the drawing-room, but perfectly artistic and far removed from the commonplace.

In his three 'Songs of friendship'—of which the titles are 'Do you remember?' 'Not now as once,' and 'At one'—Mr. Somerville has adopted a phraseology that is the opposite of abstruse. The elements that make for popularity, however, do not in this case impair the artistic merit, for there is variety in construction and original invention. The range of these songs is that of a contralto voice.

Mr. West has employed skill and kept an eye upon practical considerations as well as upon effect in editing Purcell's famous song. 'Arise, ye subterranean winds' is a deservedly popular bass air, and has lately become a competition favourite.

'The self-banished' is Dr. John Blow's best-known song. The other two examples in the present group, however, are also beautiful examples of the song-writing of the period, of which a marked feature is the constantly moving, but nevertheless solid, bass. A new lease of life should be granted to these compositions by their edition at the hands of Dr. Cummings, who, as an authority on the composer, is particularly well qualified for the task.

Personal recollections of Wagner. By Angelo Neumann. Translated from the fourth German edition by Edith Livermore. [Archibald Constable & Co., Ltd.]

Sidelights upon the life and work of a great genius become of great historical value. In the case of Wagner they are of peculiar interest, especially when they irradiate from so ardent a disciple of the master as Angelo Neumann. His recollections date from the early forties, the place being Vienna, where our author was a member of the Royal Opera. 'When I returned to my hotel,' records Neumann, 'after our first performance of "Don Giovanni," I was greatly annoyed by a man in the next room, who seemed to be pacing up and down in the most horribly squeaky boots. It continued so incessantly and the noise was so irritating that I finally rang for the porter and asked what sort of a caged lion it was they kept next door? To my great surprise the man answered that my restless neighbour was Richard Wagner!' The 'caged lion' and Neumann not only became firm friends, but Wagner owed not a little of his success in Germany to the propagandist zeal of the author of these 'recollections.'

The book is crowded with incidents and anecdotes relating to the performances of Wagner's operas, in which the composer played the part of stage-manager in the character of an enthusiast. No point of detail escaped his notice, and his impetuosity on more than one occasion conduced rather to amusement than to artistic interpretation. In rehearsing 'Lohengrin' he took each part in turn—even Elsa! One incident of especial interest is of the early conducting experience of Herr Arthur Nikisch, as a very young man. The entire quotation is too long to be given here, and any curtailment would spoil it, but it pleasantly records how 'Arthur Nikisch entered the ranks of the foremost conductors in Germany.'

As Angelo Neumann managed the earliest performances here of 'The Ring' at Her Majesty's Theatre, in 1882, any details of those wonderful representations are naturally interesting to English readers. The entrepreneur came with a letter from the Crown Prince of Prussia, afterwards the Emperor Frederick, to his brother-in-law, King Edward, then Prince of Wales, who consented to see the Wagner enthusiast. 'When I appeared for my audience,' he says, 'the Prince received me with gracious urbanity, offered me a cigar, and asked me to explain my plans, saying he had just had a personal note from his brother-in-law, Prince Frederick. He assured me he was most keenly interested in the success of my venture, and begged me to let him know if he could be of any assistance. I said I had come to request the honour of his presence and that of the Princess at the first cycle of the Richard Wagner operas. "How many performances does this make that you want us to attend?" "There are four evenings in the cycle," I answered. Instantly he said, "That's impossible—utterly impossible!"—and asking me to sit beside him at his desk, he opened a ledger and showed me. "You see for yourself. There are the dinners my wife and I have accepted for the season—and here are the dinners we give ourselves." The list reached well into July.'

For the remainder of Neumann's interview with King Edward the reader is referred to the book, in which he will find much to interest him. Suffice it to say that His Majesty attended 'not only four nights, but actually eleven,' and so great was the success of the performances that Wagner telegraphed his congratulations to his faithful friend in these rhyming words:

Bayreuth, May 30.

You've played your part
For Wagner's art,
Accept these thanks
With all my heart.

The volume contains portraits of Wagner, Neumann, Anton Seidl, and Hedwig Reicher-Kindermann, and a facsimile of a letter from Wagner to Neumann, received after the death of the master. These 'recollections' have been translated into excellent English, and the book is a welcome and valuable addition to Wagnerian literature.

VIOLIN MUSIC.

Sonata in D major. For violin and pianoforte. By Richard Jones. (No. 7 of Old English violin music. Edited by Alfred Moffat.)

Auf Wiedersehen. For violin (viola or violoncello) and pianoforte. By A. Herbert Brewer.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Mr. Moffat, for his collection of Old English Violin Music, has unearthed another work in a Sonata by Richard Jones. This ancient worthy must have been a fine violinist, judging from his compositions and the fact that he was leader of the band at Drury Lane Theatre in 1730; otherwise, little is known of the composer, who, according to Hawkins, went by the name of 'Dicky Jones.' The sonata opens with an imposing Prelude, succeeded by an excellent Allemande which concludes with a brilliant Presto. As usual with old-time compositions, the last movement is in the character of a Gigue, preceded by a short Largo. The violin part contains many admirable passages for the practice of chords, double-stopping, wrist work, &c., and the music throughout is effective and interesting.

After hearing Dr. Brewer's delightful little violin solo, 'Auf Wiedersehen,' one instinctively repeats the title—'Auf Wiedersehen!'—for there is a pretty charm about this graceful lyric which captivates the ear, and induces a request for repetition. When they require a short and not difficult solo, violinists would do well to keep the piece near to hand. It is also published, transcribed for the violoncello and viola respectively. In the viola copy we notice an innovation, which, if it became general, would quickly bring that instrument into greater favour among amateurs. With the exception of a few bars necessitating the use of the C string, the whole is written in the treble G clef instead of the usual alto C clef. We know of players who habitually copy out their viola parts into the treble clef; as, using their instrument but seldom, they lack the constant practice which alone gives facility for ready reading in the alto clef. 'Auf Wiedersehen' should be a welcome addition to their repertoire.

Johannes Brahms. The Herzogenberg correspondence Edited by Max Kalbeck. Translated by Hannah Bryant [John Murray.]

Brahms, unlike Mendelssohn or Wagner, was a lax correspondent. When he did condescend to write to his friends, he usually sent them scrappy little notes, or said as that he had to say on a postcard, therefore any addition to the English language to our knowledge of Brahms through his letters, is most acceptable. The preface to this volume states: 'The following correspondence between Johannes Brahms and Heinrich and Elisabeth von Herzogenberg extends over a period of twenty-one years (1876-1897), and shows the gradual ripening into intimacy of a friendship the seed of which was sown some ten or twelve years earlier in Vienna, where Brahms had established himself in 1862.

As may be expected, the letters of Brahms here printed are much more laconic than those he received from the Herzogenbergs, but they are thoroughly characteristic of the writer. 'I could never write a fat letter on ordinary paper,' he says; again, in a sentence near the end of one of his communications, 'If I were a well-behaved person, my letter would be just beginning,' and so on. Not a little amusement will be derived from some of the expressions in Brahms's letters. In reference to his songs in manuscript (from Op. 69 to 71) he says: 'Perhaps you may be induced to write and tell me what you think of my green-stuff.' 'You have only to sit down to the piano, put your small feet on the two pedals in turn, and strike the chord of F minor several times in succession, first in the treble, then in the bass (f and pp), and you will gradually gain a vivid impression of my latest'—his 'latest' being the third Symphony. 'The orchestra here [Vienna] play my new symphony with crape bands on their sleeves because of its dige-like effect. It is to be printed with a black edge, too.' This letter is signed 'Ever your unwashed J. Br.' Brahms, like other composers, found difficulty in obtaining words suitable to be set to music. He writes: 'They are not beathenish enough for me in the Bible. I have bought the Koran, but can find nothing there either.' In regard to his great Pianoforte concerto in B flat, he says: 'I don't mind telling you that I have written a tiny, tiny piano concerto with a tiny, tiny whisp of a scherzo. It is in B flat, and I have reason to fear I have worked this udder, which has always yielded good milk before, too often and too vigorously.' On a postcard he writes: 'Take the precaution to read the police news these days anyway. . . . I may have been charitably run in!—Your poor J. Br.' It is quite certain that Brahms, like Beethoven, was often in an 'unbuttoned' mood.

That Brahms had his serious moments, even in letter-writing, is proved in this welcome volume—one that should attract and is sure to interest many readers. Miss Hannah Bryant is to be congratulated upon having done her work as translator excellently, and the value of the book is enhanced by a beautiful portrait of Brahms taken in middle life.

PART-SONGS FOR MIXED VOICES.

He left the upland lawns. By C. H. Lloyd.

The dear little shamrock. By H. Elliot Button.

To a bee. By T. Wilkinson Stephenson.

Sleep. By R. H. Walthew.

Where the bee sucks. Arranged by Geoffrey Shaw.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Dr. Lloyd's part-song 'He left the upland lawns' has a serious aim. The words, by Ernest Myers, are a sonnet on Milton, and deal briefly with the poet's career in highly metaphorical terms. The quiet dignity of the music is in keeping with the theme, and the complete absence of any meretricious effect is a virtue that should ensure ready acceptance. The piece is written for five parts, the sopranos being divided.

The well-known Irish tune 'The dear little shamrock' has been very effectively arranged and somewhat idealised by Mr. Button. It is often the fate of such arrangements to be stored up for use only on patriotic occasions; Mr. Button's example, however, deserves better treatment. It is well adapted for quartet singing.

After a buzzing introduction of eight bars by the tenors, Mr. Stephenson's part-song 'To a bee' pursues a normal and extremely simple course. There is melody and movement in the parts, and scope for ability in interpretation, but nothing that will present any difficulty to executants.

Mr. Walthew's 'Sleep' exhibits all the qualities of grace and artistic ideals that the composer's previous efforts have led us to expect from him. Some purely harmonic effects are obtained, but they add little to the technical demands of the piece.

Mr. Shaw has evolved an extremely effective and well-vised part-song from Arne's 'Where the bee sucks.' He has found scope for contrapuntal and imitative treatment, and as given to the lower voices interesting parts which do a good deal more than accompany the melody. At the same time the character of the original song is preserved.

Musical Monstrosities. By C. L. Graves. Illustrated by George Morrow.

[Sir Isaac Pitman & Sons, Ltd.]

Music's muse is amusingly aberrated in Punch by the sprightly pen of Mr. C. L. Graves. The yellow-covered volume now before us, reprinted for the most part from the columns of Punch, contains abundant material for laughter. Here is a specimen of the author's irrepressible humour: 'A fresh evidence to the popularity of Sir Edward Elgar is forthcoming in an unexpected quarter. We understand that in temperance circles his famous melody is now invariably sung to the words "Band of Hope and Glory."' Again, in 'A monumental memoir of the famous musical mausoleophil,' i.e., Mr. Algernon Ashton. 'Part I.—Birth. Dispute as to birthplace. Bury, Bury St. Edmunds, Aigues-Mortes, Tombstone City (Ariz.)—all contend for the honour. Early musical precocity: fondness for the black notes on the piano; insists on putting a mute on his toy violin. . . . Makes a collection of death's-head moths. First appearance in public. Plays the "Funeral March of a Marionette" and sings "The death of Nelson."' Further quotation from this shillingsworth of fun is unnecessary, but a word of praise is justly due to Mr. George Morrow for his capital illustrations.

SHEFFIELD AMATEUR MUSICAL SOCIETY: ITS HISTORY AND A CONCERT.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

The Sheffield Amateur Musical Society, founded in February, 1864, is the oldest choral organization in Sheffield. Mr. H. Walter Ibbotson was its first president and conductor, moreover, thirty-one years ago he composed a sacred cantata entitled 'A Song of Thanksgiving.' Mr. Ibbotson's enthusiasm for the welfare of the Society was shared by his zealous colleague, Mr. H. H. Earl, the first honorary secretary. The earliest rehearsals were held in the Bath Saloon, which also served as a venue for various social gatherings, e.g., dances, amateur theatricals, &c. The first concerts of the Society were given to invited audiences in the Surrey Street Music Hall, an acoustically perfect building whose walls have resounded to the strains of Paganini, Jenny Lind and other celebrities, and also to the Sheffield Festival Choir in its early days; but, to the great regret of Sheffield music-lovers, the building is at present a dismantled warehouse. The Society was established as a 'singing-class'; and even now, though in all other respects its operations and aspirations are fully up-to-date, the senior members affectionately refer to the Society as 'the class.' One of the original rules reads:

That on every third evening, in lieu of the gamut practice, Solos or Concerted Music may be sung by any members of the class, due notice of their wish having been given to the committee; but it must be distinctly understood that the Solos, &c., shall be Sacred Music only (unless they be such pieces as are already in practice by the Society), the appointment of these, as also the Solo Parts of the concluding evenings, to be entirely under the control of the committee.

For many years the Society was a strictly private one, and run on exclusive lines. Tickets of admission could not be purchased, one of the rules being that 'members and their friends only shall be admitted.' To some extent the same semi-privacy is still maintained. There is no 'box-office,' and extra tickets are sold only to subscribers. A subscription of one guinea formerly carried with it six tickets for each of the two concerts per season, but latterly that number has been reduced. About forty years ago Mr. Ibbotson resigned the office of conductor, and was succeeded by Mr. C. F. Schollhammer, then a young German teacher of music who had just settled in Sheffield. Mr. Schollhammer discharged his duties with distinction for thirty-five years. On his resignation in 1904, he was presented with a testimonial in the form of a cheque for nearly £200 in recognition of his valuable services to the Society. The presentation, which took place in the Town Hall under the presidency of the Lord Mayor, was duly recorded, with a portrait of Mr. Schollhammer, in the Musical Times of January, 1905.

The list of works performed by the Society is one of which its conductors and members may well be proud, for it shows an enterprising spirit embracing both ancient and modern schools of musical thought. For instance, Brahms's 'Song of Destiny' received one of its earliest performances in England, on May 30, 1876, by the Sheffield Amateur Musical Society, who also gave, on May 31, 1877, Bach's Magnificat in D (complete), for the first time in this country! As time went on, other societies came into existence at Sheffield, but the senior organization continued to maintain its position, nor did it slacken its enterprise. The music of Elgar obtained its first hearing in Sheffield twelve years ago with a performance given by this Society of 'King Olaf.' Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' was another 'discovery' by these progressive Amateurs.

Upon the resignation of Mr. Schollhammer (in 1904) Mr. Henry J. Wood was appointed conductor, and Mr. J. A. Rodgers, assistant-conductor, a 'dual control' which has worked most smoothly and amicably. Mr. Wood conducts the Winter concert, which is chorally prepared by the assistant-conductor, the 'chief' attending three of the later rehearsals. The Spring concert is entirely prepared and conducted by Mr. J. A. Rodgers. Previous to the new régime the Spring concerts were orchestrally accompanied by an octet of strings, the wind parts being supplied 'on the pianoforte'! The committee wisely made a change whereby a full professional orchestra of sixty players is engaged for both concerts. The works performed during the past five years include the following: Requiem (Brahms); Requiem (Verdi); The Apostles, Banner of St. George, Black Knight, and King Olaf (Elgar); Pied Piper (Parry); and Last Post (Stanford)—all new to Sheffield; Acis and Galatea (Handel); Magnificat (Bach); Stabat Mater (Dvorák); Redemption (Gounod); Job (Parry); Ode to the North-east wind (Cliffe); and Song of Destiny (Brahms). On February 3 last the choir of the Sheffield Amateur Musical Society made their first appearance in London—indeed, it was the first time they had sung out of Sheffield—when they took part in the Mendelssohn Centenary concert held at Queen's Hall.

Mr. E. Willoughby Firth, a true friend of music in Sheffield, is the president of the Society. The honorary secretary is Mr. E. B. Glossop, a talented musician and born administrator, also well-known in Sheffield musical circles; his predecessor for nine years was Mr. J. B. Marrison, another admirable organizer and courteous official. Last, but not least, the organist and accompanist of the Society is Mr. J. W. Phillips, the much esteemed pianist and organist of the Sheffield Musical Festival, who has held that important office among the Amateurs for thirty-one years. A biographical note, with portrait, of Mr. J. A. Rodgers will be found on p. 374 of the present issue.

The ninety-first concert of the Sheffield Amateur Musical Society—held at the Albert Hall, Sheffield, on May 4—was one of the best ever given by them. Its chief feature was Elgar's 'King Olaf,' a work which, in its dramatic purport, is a true test of choral and orchestral technique. Without going into minute details, it may suffice to say that the Sheffield singers and players did all that the work required of them. The choir sang as though their hearts and brains as well as their voices were in the music, and the band gave an excellent rendering of the picturesque orchestration, which forms so important a feature of 'King Olaf.' From first to last it was evident that the choir had been carefully trained in entering into the poetic spirit of the strains assigned to them, not as chorus-singers per se, but as flesh and blood folk actively participating in the various incidents of the story. The massive tone of the choir was thrilling in a choral-like passage such as 'Receive us, King'; and then, by way of contrast, how tenderly beautiful were the quality and blend of their voices in 'As torrents in summer.' In this the emotional charm of the music was deeply intensified, and, moreover, the pitch was sustained. So well did these good Sheffielders sing this section of the work, that they should turn their attention to the rich store of English madrigals, one of which would be a welcome feature in the miscellaneous part of a concert programme.

The soloists, Mrs. Henry J. Wood, Mr. Webster Millar, and Mr. Joseph Lycett—the last-named a well-known Sheffield singer much in request—did their work most satisfactorily, and Mr. J. W. Phillips rendered effective assistance at the organ. Praise is due to the band; they played so well and so carefully that a little over-assertiveness in the piano passages—a somewhat frequent blemish—may on this occasion be excused.

The second part of the programme was as follows:

Symphonic Poem	No. 4, from 'My Fatherland'	Smetana.
	THE ORCHESTRA.
Song	'Lohengrin's Narration'	Wagner.
	MR. WEBSTER MILLAR.
Song	'Panis Angelicus'	César Franck.
	MRS. HENRY J. WOOD.
Violoncello,	MR. MAURICE TAYLOR; Harp, MR. COLLIER;
	Organ, MR. J. W. PHILLIPS.
Song	'Osmin's air' ('Il Seraglio')	Mozart.
	MR. JOSEPH LYCETT.
Choral Epilogue	{ 'It comes from the misty ages' }	Elgar.
	{ ('The Banner of St. George') }

In Smetana's richly-scored symphonic poem the orchestra found full scope for their brilliancy and attack, and in the final piece the choir more than confirmed the good impression they had made earlier in the evening. No less successful were the solo vocalists in their efforts to give pleasure, and the rendering of the obbligati to the César Franck piece, so artistically sung by Mrs. Wood, calls for high commendation.

Mr. J. A. Rodgers not only had his forces well in hand, but conducted with an alertness and an insight into music that was quite remarkable. He certainly had the score in his head and not his head in the score; indeed, it was very gratifying to find a local musician so well equipped for the discharge of such important duties as those of an orchestral and choral conductor. The next time the choir comes to London, Mr. Rodgers should have an opportunity, as he doubtless will, of showing his skill both as a chorus-master and one who can wield the baton to advantage. A very large and enthusiastic audience attended this most enjoyable concert, upon the success of which all concerned are to be heartily congratulated.

AN INTERNATIONAL SCHOOL-GIRL MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

What with Empire concerts to bind the colonies to the mother-country, and international school-girl festivals of song to strengthen the entente cordiale, music is taking upon itself a new function as an ambassador of peace among the nations, and bids fair to become a force to be reckoned with in world-politics. The visit paid to Paris last month by a choir of 100 girls, ranging in age from 15 to 23, pupils of secondary schools in the London district, was the first of its kind, and it is to be hoped the first of a series of annual events. The English girls remained in Paris for a week, from May 10 to May 17. Their visit culminated and achieved its main object in a combined concert given in the Palais du Trocadéro, on the afternoon of May 14, by the English choir and a similar but larger French choir. Distinguished patronage, a delighted audience, and the novelty and excellence of the entertainment helped to make the occasion completely successful.

The idea was originally mooted by ladies and gentlemen connected with the Université de France and the 'Chorak des Lycées de Jeunes filles de Paris.' Early in the year a circular was issued calling attention to the existence of this 'Chorale' and its annual concert given in the spring, and expressing the hope that a similar choir would be organized in London with a view to taking part in the next concert.

at Paris. The circular was signed by Mlle. Irma Dreyfus and M. J. Combarieu, and set forth the following committee: President, M. Liard, member of the Institut, Recteur of the Académie; Inspector, M. J. Combarieu, professor at the Collège de France; General Secretary, Mlle. Kuss, Mistress of the Lycée Victor Hugo, Paris; and Conductor, M. G. Pierné, composer. It was further stated that the Parisian choir was under the patronage of the Minister of Public Instruction; MM. Massenet, Paladilhe and Lenepveu, members of the Institut; M. Louis Diémer; Madame Litvine; and a number of ladies in Parisian society.

Such a scheme was beautiful in theory but beset with dire difficulties in practice. Fortunately a willing and all-capable organizing genius was at hand in the person of Miss Cecilia Hill, of Wentworth Hall, Mill Hill, Secretary of the Girls' School Music Union, and it was under her guidance and under the auspices of this Union that the English choir was organized and the visit to Paris engineered. One of the chief difficulties encountered was the reluctance of headmistresses to countenance the new venture, and to allow their pupils to embark on this perilous enterprise in foreign climes and to be in the care of strangers. Some, however, were persuaded, and others needed no persuading. Ultimately, contingents from the following schools brought the number of chorallists up to 100:

Wentworth Hall, Mill Hill.	St. Mary's College, Paddington.
North Hackney High School.	Bromham Road High School,
Camden School for Girls.	Bedford.
Highbury Hill High School.	Clapham High School.
Highfield School, Croydon.	Holborn Estate Girls' School.
The High School, Berkhamstead.	Lewisham Grammar School.
Southwood Hall, Highgate.	North Hackney High School.
Croham Hurst, South Croydon.	Northfield, Stamford Hill.
Burlington School.	Miss Callis', Thornton Heath.
Paddington High School.	High School, Thornton Heath.
Blackheath High School.	North Park College, Croydon.
Girls' High School, Sutton.

The musical direction was placed in the hands of Mr. Norman O'Neill, who proved from the beginning admirably fitted for the task. He was especially in sympathy with the design forming part of the original scheme, that national airs should contribute largely to both the French and English programmes. With this in view the following songs were put into rehearsal: Early one morning, Now is the month of Maying, O Bay of Dublin, The flight of the Earls, The rising of the lark, The ash grove, Ye banks and braes, Wi' a hundred pipers. To the foregoing were added Elgar's three-part songs for female voices, The Snow, and Fly, singing bird. A few days previous to crossing the Channel the English girls gave a preliminary concert in London.

The party were taken to Paris under the care of Messrs. Lunn, who, on their arrival, also installed them in various Pensions and hotels, and boarding-houses. The next few days were occupied with a round of sight-seeing, receptions and rehearsals. Divided into groups, the English chorallists visited the Lycées Victor Hugo, Lamartine, Racine, Fénelon, and Molière, where they were welcomed with the pageantry of a Roman triumph but with considerably better taste. The chief of the functions of this class, however, was the visit of the whole choir to the Sorbonne, where they were received in state by M. Liard, Vice-Recteur de l'Université, and other august personages. The Société des Instruments Anciens discoursed old-world music on quaint viols; Madame Marie Buisson and M. Lucien Fugère sang, and young people danced to choral accompaniment. Miss Hill and Mr. O'Neill became 'Officiers d'Académie' on the spot. A visit to Versailles with a musico-gastronomic entertainment at the village Lycée was another noteworthy feature of the week's round of enjoyment.

Meanwhile the call of duty was not forgotten. Two rehearsals were held in the Trocadéro, when all misgivings in the minds of Gallic musical experts as to the quality of the English singing were immediately set at rest. None could fail to be impressed with their discipline and with the beauty of their vocal tone; with the latter especially, as it contrasted with that of the French choir. The same rehearsal brought out another distinction which, like the first, was afterwards emphasised at the concert. This was the superior rhythmic instinct of the French singers, and in close connection with it their better enunciation of the words. The English chorallists had something to learn from their French sisters, but not so much as they had to teach them.

The director of the French choir, M. Gabriel Pierné, was among those who noticed how much more responsive were the English singers to the signals of the conductor.

The afternoon of the festival found a crowded audience in the body of the hall—a building of splendid seating accommodation but doubtful acoustical properties—and an animated prospect of light-hearted girlhood in front. The visitors, dressed in white, were on either side of the conductor's desk; behind them was the Colonne Orchestra; while an extensive and diversified background was provided by the French choir of 500. The English contributions to the programme have already been enumerated. They were performed under Mr. O'Neill's direction with his own orchestral accompaniments, except of course in the case of Elgar's compositions. Elgar's three-part songs were the most difficult numbers in the English music, but the folk-songs were better appreciated. O Bay of Dublin, Now is the month of maying, and Ye banks and braes, were received with enthusiasm, and Wi' a hundred pipers with furor and cries of 'bis,' to which Mr. O'Neill yielded. Under M. Pierné the combined choirs sang a Hymne by M. Bourgault-Ducoudray, Hymne à la nuit by J. P. Rameau, and La légende de frère Jacques by M. Paladilhe. The music sung by the French choir alone consisted of three national airs—En passant par la Lorraine, Le vent frivoltant and Le roi chou—a chorus by Gluck, Les Prêtresses de Diane, and a chorus from M. Saint-Saëns's opera, Samson et Dalila. Encores were again asked and given. M. Alexandre Guilman executed two improvisations on the organ, and the orchestra played M. Saint-Saëns's symphonic poem Phaëton, under the composer's direction, Lalo's overture, Le Roi d'Ys, and Une fête chez Capulet from Berlioz's Roméo et Juliette under M. Pierné. Le Ministère de l'Instruction Publique and M. Liard, Vice-Recteur de l'Université, were interested listeners. The welcome accorded to the visitors by the public was extremely gratifying, and their unstinted applause made the occasion completely successful and put the singers on good terms with themselves and their sister artists. Incidentally, it may be mentioned that the proceeds were devoted to the 'Œuvre de la protection de l'enfance contre la tuberculose.'

A return visit is already under discussion unofficially. The essentials should present no difficulty to organizers on this side, but it may well be doubted whether it will prove within the powers of English hosts to rival the natural grace, refinement and instinct for variety and continuity of enjoyment that distinguished the reception of the English girl-choir in Paris.

ROYAL OPERA.

The season was auspiciously opened at Covent Garden Theatre on April 26, when Dr. Camille Saint-Saëns's opera 'Samson et Dalila' was accorded its first stage representation in England. Madame Kirkby Lunn added to her reputation in her fine impersonation of Dalila, while another English artist, Mr. Murray Davey, in the part of Abimelech, made a promising first appearance. The music assigned to Samson was sung by M. Fontaine, who, like Mr. Moore, an American bass, as Le Grand Prêtre, was a new-comer. The opera, superbly mounted according to the best traditions of Covent Garden, was conducted by M. Frigara, from Nantes, who made his début in this country with success. The veteran composer, who came from Paris specially to superintend the rehearsals of his opera, was called before the curtain at the close of the performance and heartily cheered. Some historical notes on 'Samson et Dalila' are given on p. 374 of the present issue.

This being the jubilee year of Gounod's 'Faust,' what more natural than that a performance of that ever-popular opera should be given early in the season? This took place on April 27, under M. Frigara, who deepened the favourable impression he had made on the previous evening. Madame Edvina (the Hon. Mrs. Cecil Edwardes) reappeared with increased success as Marguerite, and the cast included Mlle. Symione, a new-comer (Siebel), Madame Bérat (Martha), M. Fontaine (Faust), Mr. Moore (Valentine), and M. Marcoux (Mephistopheles). Puccini's 'Madama Butterfly,' conducted by Signor Campanini, filled the bill on April 28, and introduced a singer new to Covent Garden in the person of Signor Leliva, who took the part of Pinkerton.

'Die Walküre,' under Dr. Richter's incomparable leadership, was performed (in German) on April 29. On that occasion Herr Schützendorf (Wotan) and Miss Van Dresser (Sieglinde) made their first appearances here with acceptance, and the cast included three English singers of high repute in Madame Kirkby Lunn, Mr. Walter Hyde and Mr. Francis Harford.

Mascagni's 'Cavalleria Rusticana' and Leoncavallo's 'Pagliacci' were the twin performances on April 30. In the first work Mlle. Desana (Santuzza) and Signor Carasa (Turidda) proved to be distinct acquisitions to the company, the latter especially winning golden opinions. Another newcomer was Miss Moresta, an English vocalist, who sang the music of Lola. Madame Tétrazini made her reappearance in 'La Traviata' on May 1, when she repeated her former triumphs. Signor Sammarco was Giorgio Germont and Mr. John McCormack appeared as Alfredo. On May 3 Madame Tétrazini sang with wonderful brilliance in 'Lucia di Lammermoor,' and Mr. Murray Davey, as Raimondo, made his first appearance here. All four operas were conducted by Signor Campanini.

Under the baton of Mr. Percy Pitt a good performance of Gluck's 'Armide' (sung in French) was given on May 10. Mlle. May Féral, in the title part, made her first appearance on any stage. Well equipped, both from a vocal and histrionic point of view, she made a most favourable impression and proved to be an artist of great promise. Great enthusiasm characterized the performance of Verdi's melodious opera 'Rigoletto' on May 14, due in no small measure to the superb singing of Madame Tétrazini, whose vocal achievements recalled the palmiest days of Italian opera. Signor Campanini conducted.

DEBUSSY'S 'PELLÉAS ET MÉLISANDE.'

On April 30, 1902, M. Debussy's opera 'Pelléas et Mélisande' was produced at the Opéra-Comique, Paris, when it was accorded a very mixed reception. Whatever may be the present attitude of M. Debussy's countrymen towards his remarkable music, it is quite certain that here in England the French master's works are listened to with respect and not a little enjoyment. Therefore great interest was excited when the Royal Opera Syndicate, in their prospectus, announced a performance of 'Pelléas et Mélisande,' in fact this was regarded as one of the chief events of the season.

When Wagner's 'Ring' was first heard in London, musicians were puzzled: it seemed to them void of both form and melody. And it took many years before that wonderful creation was understood and appreciated. M. Claude Debussy's 'Pelléas et Mélisande,' which was performed for the first time in England on May 21, will probably cause much discussion. Just here and there a short phrase is heard, which might pass for the beginning of a melody; for the rest the vocal parts are declamatory, the voice rising and falling as in excited speech. The continuous music and representative themes present nothing new, but this avoidance of all purely musical interest on the stage, and, in comparison with Wagner, moderate use of the orchestra, will cause surprise. Of the Bayreuth reformer's 'Ring' the public generally were, and to some extent are still, satisfied to listen to the rich instrumental music without troubling much about what is being sung on the stage. Debussy's music by itself is disjointed, meaningless—though it perfectly fulfils its purpose. The French composer has written in a forcible, yet wonderfully restrained style, which, like the declamation of the singers, never distracts attention from Maeterlinck's mystic, dream-like poem. 'Pelléas et Mélisande' is a remarkable and impressive work, and one which, as it becomes familiar, will grow in interest.

Mlle. Féart impersonated Mélisande, M. Marcoux, Arkel, M. Warnery, Pelléas, and M. Bourbon, Goland. The performance, under the direction of Signor Campanini, was an ideal one, and the staging of the work fully maintained the best traditions of Covent Garden.

The remaining operas performed last month, up to the time of going to press, were in the nature of repetitions. Special mention must, however, be made of the fifth performance this season of 'Samson et Dalila,' on May 18, as it introduced M. Affre, who impersonated Samson. For many years this excellent tenor singer has been one of the mainstays of the Paris Opéra, and his appearance in England was none the less welcome although so long delayed.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The ninety-seventh season of the Philharmonic Society was brought to a brilliant termination on May 13, when the twofold attraction of Herr Arthur Nikisch and Elgar's Symphony drew to Queen's Hall an immense audience. Although the distinguished conductor had directed performances of Elgar's Symphony in Germany, this was the first time that he had revealed its beauties in England, hence the special interest of the occasion. To draw comparisons between the readings of this or that conductor, however eminent those conductors may be, is an unnecessary excursion among subtleties; the question is, did Herr Nikisch obtain a full and sufficient rendering of the Symphony? To this there is but one answer, and that a most emphatic and unqualified affirmative. From the first note to the last the hearer came under the magic spell of a man who, in addition to being a born conductor, has the twofold qualification of a poetic temperament and skilled musicianship—one, who, having mastered the score and fathomed its potentialities, exercises a magnetic influence over his colleagues of the orchestra, with the result that he obtains an interpretation which is aglow with emotional fervour, whether in the tender tones of the lovely slow movement, or in the strenuous climaxes of the concluding Allegro. Such was evidently the opinion of the audience, for at the close of the Symphony they gave vent to their feelings in bursts of applause that were as hearty and genuine as they were long-continued—indeed, it is many a day since such a scene of enthusiasm was witnessed at a Philharmonic concert.

The remainder of the programme does not call for detailed comment. The ever-welcome and exhilarating 'Meistersinger' overture, which began the concert, was no less brilliantly played than the Symphony. Mr. John Coates sang the Forge songs from Wagner's 'Siegfried'; and Tchaikovsky's symphonic fantasia 'Francesca da Rimini,' followed by the National Anthem, concluded a most enjoyable evening's music.

It is satisfactory to learn that Herr Nikisch is to conduct the last concert of the Society next season. Sir Edward Elgar will have charge of the first concert, the other conductors engaged so far being Herr Bruno Walter and Signor Mancinelli. In four years' time the veteran Society will attain its hundredth year.

ITALIAN OPERA AT THE CORONET THEATRE.

For a short and bright period, London is falsifying the accusation of lethargy in matters operatic. While the grand season is in full swing at Covent Garden, and the Moody-Manners company are touring the suburbs, Signor Cav. F. Castellano's company, under the direction of M. Louis Hillier, are giving a season of opera in Italian at the Coronet Theatre. They are an experienced company, with an ample repertoire and well versed in traditional customs. Many of the principal artists, of whom there is a long list, possess admirable voices, and many are confident and whole-hearted in their acting. The work of the chorus and orchestra is such as to lend firm support. Some of the costumes worn by the former were picturesque to a degree.

On the opening night, Bellini's 'I Puritani' was mounted, and under Signor J. M. Wehills' direction performed in a manner that completely satisfied the audience. The warmth of the welcome accorded to the singers, and the particular style of vocal feat that seemed to arouse the greatest enthusiasm, pointed to the presence of a large number of the performers' compatriots in the theatre. Of the operas new to England, included in the repertoire, Leoncavallo's 'Zaza' was the first to receive performance. This opera, which was produced at Milan in 1900, is founded on the play by MM. Berton and Simon, and it is on the dramatic side that its chief merit lies. Leoncavallo has achieved no success so great as his early 'I Pagliacci,' and as long as he chooses to wed music to restless and superficial action that does not permit of constructive coherence, so will he still fail to produce a masterpiece. Another novelty was a new setting of 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' by Signor Monleone, performed on May 10. The libretto differs little from that used by Mascagni, but the musical treatment is more advanced in its means of expression, and often makes appeal to the musical intellect rather than to popular taste. For this reason the opera is not likely to achieve so great a vogue as its predecessor. Other unfamiliar works such as Donizetti's 'Elisir d'amore' and 'Don Pasquale' are included in the scheme.

QUEEN'S HALL SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

Much interest was aroused by the first visit to London of the Norwich Festival Chorus, which took place at the concert of April 24. On that occasion Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius' was performed, a work well calculated to set off the abilities of the choir in the best light, for it was chiefly on the intellectuality and spirituality of their reading of the oratorio that the reputation of these excellent singers, made at the recent Norwich Festival, was founded. These qualities were again manifested at their London visit, and were sufficient in themselves to constitute a high standard.

There can be no doubt that the Norwich choir has a successful future in store, and will continue to bring credit upon the able chorus-master, Mr. Haydon Hare. The solo singers were Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. Gervase Elwes and Mr. Herbert Brown.

On April 27 a concert was given in aid of the Endowment Fund for members of the Orchestra. Miss Muriel Foster (Mrs. Ludovic Goetz) graced the concert with her presence and sang Elgar's 'Sea pictures' and other solos. Mendelssohn's Violin concerto and Saint-Saëns's Rondo Capriccioso were played by Lady Speyer, and familiar orchestral numbers made up the rest of a long programme. Mr. Henry J. Wood conducted both concerts.

LONDON CHORAL UNIONS.

SOUTH-EAST LONDON.

The seventh annual concert of the South-East London Evening Schools Choral Union drew a large audience to the Great Central Hall, Tower Bridge Road, on May 15. The choir and orchestra of five hundred performers were conducted by Mr. A. G. Gibbs, under whose guidance, seconded by that of the various school music instructors, they had been rehearsing at thirty-five centres in the South-East District during the winter.

The programme included Elgar's 'King Olaf,' Bach's cantata 'O Light Everlasting' and a long miscellaneous selection, to which the choir, orchestra and soloists all contributed items.

The main work, 'King Olaf,' had evidently received much thoughtful attention. The attack was, on the whole, precise and spontaneous; the young singers seemed to feel the dramatic charm of the music and to respond with alacrity when called upon. Unfortunately, the tenors and basses were so much in a minority that many of the effects aimed at were not entirely attained. The choir sang the beautiful unaccompanied song 'As torrents in summer' with whole-hearted enjoyment of its pure melody. The soloists were Miss Carrie Tubbs, Mr. Gwilym Richards and Mr. Julien Henry.

Bach's cantata 'O Light Everlasting' opened somewhat amply, but an improvement came with the Finale, which was sung with much spirit. The soloists were Miss Gertrude Burridge and Mr. Gwilym Richards.

The incidental and descriptive notes to the programme, compiled by the secretary, Mr. A. Pinhorn, were of great service to the audience. Organ solos were contributed by Mr. J. R. A. Crouch. Miss Florence Fryer presided at the pianoforte.

LAMBETH.

The combined choirs of the twelve contributory schools of the Choral Union gave their concert at the Surrey Masonic Hall on May 8, under the direction of Mr. Charles Metcalf. With the aid of an orchestra more than usually efficient, an excellent performance of the third portion of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' trilogy was given, which was a tribute to the care with which the choir had been rehearsed. The moral epilogue to Elgar's 'The banner of St. George' and Oliver King's 'The three fishers' were also in the programme. The musical superiority of the ladies' voices was turned to good account by the performance of Elgar's three-part female-voice part-songs 'The snow' and 'Fly, singing bird.' Miss Dorothy Webb, Mr. Melvin Nightingale and Mr. D. Byndon-Ayres were capable vocal soloists.

MR. BENOIT HOLLANDER'S NEW OPERA.

A new light opera entitled 'Mietje,' from the fertile pen of Mr. Benoit Hollander, was brought to a hearing on May 11 at the Hampstead Conservatoire of Music. Mr. Hollander, who has written the book as well as the music, has hit upon a story that provides interest without complication, since it tells of the unswerving affection for his playmate of a waif who is brought up by honest Dutch fisherfolk. He was the son of a mysterious stranger and his wife who arrived at the village one dark night. The mother dies, and the father, after confiding in the Burgomaster, leaves, promising to return. The child grows up and develops a love for Mietje, the daughter of his foster-father. Their union is about to take place when the Burgomaster announces that the bridegroom elect is the son of a marquis and must establish his claim. He parts from Mietje in order to do so. Love prevails, and having secured his heritage he returns to and weds the maiden of his choice.

The music by Mr. Hollander is planned on the lines of grand opera, inasmuch as it is continuous and the design is filled in with considerable ingenuity. The subject, however, does not lend itself readily to this form of treatment, and in spite of his melodious gifts and skill of craftsmanship, the composer is not entirely successful in making it clear that he was justified in adopting the particular form chosen. Treated purely in lyrical fashion the opera would have been more effective. Its reconstruction in such a form would secure for it every chance of popularity, for the songs are graceful and pleasing. Madame Windsor-Locke as Mietje, Mr. Wallis Anderson as Willem the hero, and Madame Blanche Newcombe, Mr. William Waite and Mr. Arthur Durand as the representatives of the other characters, together with the chorus and orchestra, helped in securing a most favourable reception for the work. Mr. Henry Beauchamp and Mr. Charles Fry were jointly responsible for the smooth production which was given under the direction of the London Academy of Music.

HERR MAX REGER.

The first visit to this country of Herr Max Reger has provoked a great deal of discussion as to the artistic value of his instrumental works. His tendency to view the task of composition almost in the light of a mathematical problem will always find more detractors than admirers; but it is to a certain extent a matter of choice or individual temperament whether music that has the minimum of poetic basis can be considered worthy of esteem. Mathematicians often speak to each other of the 'beauty,' 'charm' or 'grace' of a particular theory or solution. Herr Reger's working-out of musical problems may, in certain minds, have a similar appeal to the æsthetic sense.

Two concerts were given at Bechstein Hall, on May 10 and 14, the programmes consisting entirely of his works. On the first occasion a String trio (Op. 77b), a Suite for violin and pianoforte (Op. 103a), and a String quartet (Op. 74) were played; on the second occasion a Suite for violin and pianoforte (Op. 93), a Pianoforte trio (Op. 102), and Variations and Fugue on a Beethoven theme for two pianofortes (Op. 86). The string players were members of the Ackroyd Quartet; pianoforte parts were played by the composer, who was joined by Herr Richard Buhlig in the last-mentioned work. The grace and beauty of the songs, including the well-known 'Wiegenlied,' sung by Mrs. Henry J. Wood, showed that poetry does enter into Herr Reger's composition.

A reception in honour of Herr Max Reger was given by the Concert-goers' Club at the Royal Academy of Music on May 11, when Mr. Alfred Kalisch delivered an address, in German, welcoming the distinguished guest of the evening. Songs and chamber music by the eminent composer were sung and played respectively by Mrs. Henry J. Wood and the Ackroyd Quartet.

EMPIRE CONCERT.

Patriotism was of course the key-note of the third Empire Concert at the Royal Albert Hall on the afternoon of May 22, when a vast audience assembled in response to Dr. Charles Harris's appeal on behalf of the Victoria League. Nearly every part of the Empire had its representative among the numerous artists who took part in the programme—India alone excepted, Miss Irene Strauss, who was to have represented that great possession, being unfortunately prevented from appearing. The occasion was naturally one that called rather for enthusiasm than criticism. Two novelties, however, claim special remark: these were 'Chorus of Empire' and 'Empire of the Sea,' for chorus and orchestra, written for the occasion by Dr. Harris. Both were characteristic and vivacious settings of patriotic words by Mr. Wilfred Campbell, and there can be little doubt that the latter with its waltz-refrain will become popular. They were sung con amore under the composer's direction by the Royal Choral Society, accompanied by the London Symphony Orchestra and Band of the Coldstream Guards. Eaton Fanning's stirring patriotic song and chorus, 'Our Island home,' the solo sung by Mr. Lemprière Pringle, also aroused much enthusiasm. Other important items were Elgar's 'Land of hope and glory,' Bridge's 'Ballad of the Clampherdown,' conducted by the composer, and Mackenzie's breezy 'Britannia' Overture, the last played by the combined bands under the direction of Dr. Mackenzie Rogan. Madame Albani, Miss Catherine Aulsebrook, Mr. Frederick Norcup, Mr. Lemprière Pringle, Mr. Dalton Baker and Sir Charles Santley were the vocalists, and Miss Marie Novello solo pianist, Mr. H. L. Balfour organist and Mr. Stanley Hawley accompanist. The great building presented a particularly animated and brilliant appearance, the flags and trophies which ornamented the front of the boxes, the new Union Jacks presented by Canada, and the uniforms of the military bands imparting colour and brightness to the scene.

London Concerts.

LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

A symphonic poem 'Siena,' by Mr. George Dyson, first played at a Patron's Fund concert two years ago, was performed by this orchestra under the direction of Herr Arthur Nikisch at the Queen's Hall on May 20. The work describes in vivid colours the 'Palio' or race for the Standard, an annual event at Siena. It is a clever composition, original in invention, and well suited to Herr Nikisch's temperament. Additional interest was lent to the concert by the first appearance in England of Herr Edgar Wollgandt, a violinist whose performance of Brahms's Concerto roused general admiration. The programme also included Wagner's 'Faust overture' and Beethoven's C minor Symphony.

MR. BEECHAM'S CONCERTS.

Mr. Beecham's sterling support of British music is unfortunately but necessarily actuated by a spirit of sacrifice, for the public declines to attend his concerts in spite of their constant demonstration of the value of native creations. The audience at Queen's Hall on May 17 was sparse enough to make the patriotic musician's blood boil, and some of the music performed would have done little to cool it. Of Mr. Joseph Holbrooke's 'Ulalume,' for instance, it is sufficient to say that it adequately represents Edgar Allan Poe's uncanny poem. Mr. J. B. McEwen's 'Grey Galloway' is a dour reminder of native heaths. In Mr. W. H. Bell's 'Arcadian suite,' an amplification of an earlier work, the fresh invention and firm hand of the composer were again revealed. The rest of the programme was by foreign musicians and comprised Mozart's C major Symphony (K. 425) and César Franck's 'Variations symphoniques' for pianoforte and orchestra, played by Miss Hilda Saxe. The orchestral playing was, as usual, of the highest order.

NEW SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Mr. Landon Ronald's gifts as a conductor are nowhere better displayed than in his interpretations of Tchaikovsky's music. At the concert given at Queen's Hall on April 23, the fourth Symphony was played. The struggle between humanising and barbarous influences embodied in this work found Mr. Ronald in his true element, and roused him to one of his most inspired moods. His capabilities as a composer were also exemplified by the inclusion in the programme of his 'Birthday overture.' A novelty of an unusual character was Mr. Filson Young's orchestral version, with an original Prelude, of Schumann's Fugue on the notes B A C H. Except as establishing Mr. Filson Young's skill in instrumentation, the work presented no strong justification for its performance. The soloist was Mr. Francis Macmillen, who played Mendelssohn's Violin concerto.

M. CHARLES WIDOR.

The concert of compositions by M. Widor, given at Queen's Hall, with the London Symphony Orchestra under his conductorship, on May 4, called attention to a French composer, the extent and high merit of whose output entitle him to prominence among creative musicians of his country. His name has been kept alive in England by his organ works, but his refusal or inability to fall into line with modern vagaries has deprived him of due recognition as a composer in all forms. The chief work played under his direction at Queen's Hall was a Symphony for organ and orchestra (Op. 69), the soloist being Mr. Arthur Mason. The other orchestral works were a Fantaisie in A flat for pianoforte and orchestra, the solo part of which was capably executed by Mlle. Olga Samaroff, and a 'Bacchanale' from the 'Walpurgis Night.' If there was nothing in the French composer's utterances that could be called great or deeply inspired, the ripe musicianship and often broadly melodious nature of his music were constantly in evidence. Of the vocal numbers sung by Miss Dora Eshelby, 'Nuits d'Etoiles' deserves special mention as one of the best examples of M. Widor's style as a song-writer.

THE HANDEL SOCIETY.

Before an audience that filled all parts of Queen's Hall, this Society, with the co-operation of Mr. James Brown's New Philharmonic Society from Richmond, carried out a long and exacting programme on May 18. Brahms's 'Triumphlied,' with its Bach-like runs and division into double chorus, made great demands upon the executive powers of both choir and orchestra. Sir Hubert Parry's 'Ode to Music' was almost equally difficult. More within their grasp were Sir Charles Stanford's 'The last post' and his five 'Songs of the sea,' the baritone solo part of which was sung by Mr. Thomas Meux. Both the composers last mentioned conducted their own works. Among the orchestral numbers performed under the baton of Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor, conductor of the Society, were Sibelius's 'Finlandia' and Bizet's charming suite 'Jeu d'enfants.'

OLD-TIME CHAMBER MUSIC.

Pursuing their design of giving a series of recitals of old chamber music, Miss Grace Sutherland and Mr. Frank Thistleton carried out a programme at Bechstein Hall, on April 28, for which Suites for pianoforte and strings by Telemann (1681-1767) and Locatelli (1693-1764), together with a Concerto for violin and pianoforte by Haydn, supplied the chief interest. The work by Haydn was the second of the two concerti that have only recently been brought to light, and had probably never been given in England before. The Suite by Telemann was also new to this country. At the concert on May 17 a similar programme was offered, with additional interest imparted by the names of two English composers. These were Henry Eccles (1670-1742) represented by a violin sonata, and Anthony Holborne represented by a set of short pieces with fanciful titles composed about 1590 and arranged for strings by Miss Stainer. Other works performed were a pianoforte and string erto by Bach, a Rondo for pianoforte, violin and violon- by Mozart (hitherto unpublished), and Couperin's :what ponderous musical joke 'L'Apothéose de Sulli.' ill be seen, therefore, that the doings of Miss Sutherland Mr. Thistleton are well worthy of the attention of est musicians. The concert-givers were assisted by rs. Woodhouse, Wyand, Turrell and Hobday as umentalists. Mr. Ivor James, Mr. Campbell McInnes Miss Mattie Kay were very capable vocalists.

RUSSIAN MUSIC.

part from the slight acknowledgment of the claims of icky-Korsakoff and Glazounoff, and more recently orsgorsky, English people are apt to summarize Russian : as 'Tchaikovsky et præterea nihil.' The efforts of Sergei Kussewitzky, the conductor and double-bass oso, to gain recognition for the younger school of ian composition should do much to remove this :portionate view. At the orchestral concert of Russian : given by him at Queen's Hall on May 11, there was ng in the programme that did not fully justify its sion. A Fantasia by Moussorgsky—orchestrated after death of the composer by Rimsky-Korsakoff—was ial and effective as a delineation of the supernatural, ugh leaving room for doubt whether the orchestrator realised the intention of the composer. Five out of the movements that form the Symphony in C minor 26), by M. Scriabine, showed a blend of the national cosmopolitan idioms that only awaits experience and quent freedom of expression to invest the composer's with distinction. Great merit was also shown in the s of the two brothers, MM. Jules and Georges Conus, were represented by a Violin concerto and numbers of rchestrated suite 'Scenes Enfantines' respectively. Herr Kreisler was the violin soloist, and M. Kussewitzky icted.

MR. SMALLWOOD METCALFE'S CHOIR.

. Smallwood Metcalfe's choir gave their first concert on 4 at St. James's Hall. They sang a number of part-, new and old, of which the most modern in date and were Granville Bantock's 'On Himalay' and Alcock's m out the dewy meadow,' the latter having been illy composed for the choir. It cannot be said that singing evinced more than an incomplete recognition of :quirements of the choral art. If, however, they pay ame attention in the future to points of expression, ing and gradation of tone, that they have hitherto ed to securing unity and precision in attack and accent, will attain a high standard of proficiency. Other ers in the programme were Walter Macfarren's 'You my love,' Ravenscroft's 'In the merry Spring,' Eaton g's 'Moonlight,' Stanford's new 'Heraclitus,' and s 'The snow,' for female voices. The solo vocalists led Sir Charles Santley, and Mr. Smallwood Metcalfe cted.

: Société de Concerts Français devoted their programme pril 26 to the works of MM. Maurice Ravel and t Schmitt, young composers of the impressionist l whose methods are distinguished by their individuality, rincipal artists were Madame Jane Bathori-Engel and nile Engel (vocalists) and Mlle. Mary Vadot (pianist). g the examples of vocal music were a set of character s in bird life—'Le Paon,' 'Le Martin-Pêcheur,' and 'Intade'—by M. Ravel, and 'Tristesse au Jardin' by hmitt. The latter composer was also represented by a of songs for four voices with pianoforte duet paniment.

the third concert given by Mr. Francis Macmillen, took place at Queen's Hall on May 18, M. Leopold vski made his first appearance in England as a ctor. Employing unexaggerated methods, he obtained ent results from the New Symphony Orchestra, both accompanying Mr. Macmillen in Lalo's 'Symphonie nrole' and Saint-Saëns's B minor Concerto, and in :buting separate numbers. The most interesting of the latter was an orchestral Suite by M. Ippolytoff Ivanoff, entitled 'Caucasian Sketches,' which proved a pleasant piece of light music based upon themes of Eastern character. The efforts of both violinist and conductor met with hearty approval.

Upon their first visit to this country the Dresden String Quartet brought forward several new works. At each of their two concerts, which took place at Bechstein Hall on April 30 and May 3, they played an example of chamber music by Mrs. A. M. Barton. The Trio in F major, played at the second concert, proved to be of greater merit than the Quartet played at the first. A Quartet in C sharp minor by M. Felix Draeseke was also performed, and the programmes were completed with works by Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven.

Miss and Master Mozart, as 'prodigies of nature,' gave a concert in Hickford's Great Room, Brewer Street, Regent Street, on May 13, 1765. It was a happy thought of Miss Mathilde Verne to commemorate the event by giving a Mozart concert on May 13, the 144th anniversary of Miss and Master Mozart's concert, in the same Room. The interesting programme was well carried out by students of the 'Mathilde Verne school of pianoforte playing,' and Mrs. Harrison, the writer of the article on Hickford's Room in 'Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians,' gave a brief historical account of the old and famous building in which the concert was held.

At Steinway Hall, on May 7 and 8, Mrs. Kennedy-Fraser, of Edinburgh, gave two interesting recitals of the 'Songs of the Hebrides' which she has collected and arranged. She introduced the songs with island tales and legendary lore, and spoke of the isles in which she had collected the airs. The gifted recitalist had the valued co-operation of her brother, Mr. John Kennedy, and her sisters, Miss Margaret Kennedy and Mrs. Tobias Matthay.

Suburban Concerts.

The East Finchley and Muswell Hill Musical Society brought their seventh season to a close on April 22 with a performance of Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' and Elgar's 'Black Knight,' in the New Lecture Hall, East Finchley. The solo vocalists were Miss Carrie Tubb, Miss Edith Clegg, Mr. Harold Wilde and Mr. Harry Dearth. Mr. George R. Ceiley conducted, and Mr. Charles F. Carter was at the pianoforte. During the interval the honorary secretary of the Society, Mr. C. Bull, was presented by Mr. Ceiley, on behalf of the members and others, with an illuminated address and a handsome cheque as a mark of their high appreciation of his unremitting labours on behalf of the Society during its existence.

The Catford Philharmonic Society concluded its season on April 23, when the programme included Sir Frederick Bridge's cantata 'The flag of England,' the march and graceful dance from Sullivan's 'Henry VIII.' music, Bishop's overture 'The miller and his men,' and a number of unaccompanied part-songs, among which may be mentioned 'The Arethusa,' 'Come, lasses and lads,' and 'Here's a health unto his Majesty.' Madame Carlotta Ide was the solo vocalist, and the concert was under the conductorship of Mr. Charles W. Wilkes.

The Ealing Philharmonic Society, under the conductorship of Mr. E. Victor Williams, brought their twelfth season to a successful close on April 24 with an excellent performance by choir and orchestra of Coleridge-Taylor's new choral work 'Bon-Bon Suite,' followed by the new concert selection of Gounod's 'Faust.' The soloists were Miss Norah Newport, Miss Carda Walker, Mr. Gwilym Richards and Mr. Julien Henry, who were all satisfactory. Miss Dora Whitlie gave a very creditable rendering of Schumann's Pianoforte concerto. Mr. H. W. Pierce accompanied.

The Streatham Choral Society gave their fifty-first concert in Streatham Hall on April 26, when the programme consisted of Dr. Walford Davies's 'Everyman' and Elgar's 'Banner of St. George.' A full professional orchestra, led by Mr. W. Easton, assisted the choir of the Society, and the solo vocalists were Miss Ethel Lister, Miss Gwladys Roberts, Mr. Henry Beaumont and Mr. Albert Garcia. An excellent performance was conducted by Dr. Cuthbert Harris.

The New Philharmonic Society of Richmond performed Walford Davies's 'Everyman' and Brahms's rarely-heard 'Triumphlied' at the Castle Theatre on April 28. The rendering of these works reflected the greatest credit on all who took part, especially on the conductor, Mr. James Brown, whose training of the chorus and orchestra brought its full reward. The admirable efforts of the chorus were ably supported by the orchestra, led by Mr. F. Weist Hill, and the solo vocalists were Miss Ethel Lister, Miss Grainger-Kerr, Mr. Henry Turnpenney and Mr. Albert Garcia.—The same programme was presented by the Staines Choral Society, conducted by Mr. Brown, on May 13, when the choir was augmented by thirty members of the Richmond Society. The soloists on this occasion were Mrs. Strickland, Miss Madge Wells, Mr. Vivian Bennetts and Mr. Walter Dodds, and the orchestra was led by Miss Catherine Reeves.

The Brockley and Lewisham Orchestral Society gave its inaugural concert at St. Peter's Hall, Brockley, on April 29, when the programme included Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony, Mackenzie's 'Benedictus,' Grieg's 'Peer Gynt' Suite, Pastorale and Torch Dance (MS.), by Vincent Thomas, the nursery rhymes of Walford Davies, and a MS. Quintet (by F. L.). Miss Evangeline Florence was the solo vocalist, and Mr. Frederick Leeds conducted.

The Lewisham Choral Society completed their eighteenth season on Thursday, April 29, when they performed Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens' and Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' in the Blackheath Concert Hall. The choir sang with a sincerity and enthusiasm which was proof of the zealous training by their conductor, Mr. Frank Idle. The vocalists in the last-named work were Miss Ada Forrest, Miss May Peters, Mr. Gwilym Richards, Mr. F. R. Cutler and Mr. Watkin Mills. The orchestra, numbering over fifty, was led by Mr. George Wilby.

The Easter concert of the St. George's Choral Society, Tufnell Park, took place in St. George's Church Room on April 29, when Coleridge-Taylor's choral 'Bon-Bon Suite' and selections from Handel's 'Judas Maccabaeus' were performed, under the able direction of Mr. W. Henry Thomas. The solo vocalists were Mrs. Sydenham-Smith, Misses Ada and Edith King, Mr. Fred. King, Mr. Sadleur Browne, and Mr. Charles Knowles.

The combined orchestras of Surbiton and Weybridge, directed by Mr. Joseph Ivimey, gave a concert in the Assembly Rooms, Surbiton, on May 1. The programme included Bennett's overture 'The Naiades,' Schubert's Symphony in C (last two movements), and Tchaikovsky's '1812' overture. These works received an admirable interpretation under Mr. Ivimey's experienced direction. Mr. Campbell McInnes was the solo vocalist, and Miss Warwara Irmannoff, solo violoncellist.

The Bermondsey Settlement Choral and Orchestral Union and the Hither Green Choral and Orchestral Societies combined forces at the Bermondsey Town Hall on May 1 in a performance of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' trilogy. The singing of the choirs reflected great credit on the training of Dr. John E. Borland, who is the conductor of both Societies, and very able service was rendered by the combined orchestras. An efficient trio of soloists was provided in Madame Edith Hands, Mr. Charles Saunders and Mr. Charles Tree.

The Crystal Palace Orchestral Society concluded its season on May 1, when a concert selection from Edward German's opera 'A Princess of Kensington,' specially arranged by the composer, received its first performance. The choir displayed admirable qualities of tone and attack, and the orchestra played brilliantly and with much intelligence. The programme included the Intermezzo and Barcarolle from Offenbach's 'Les Contes d'Hoffmann' and the Valse from Tchaikovsky's 'Eugen Onégin.' The solo vocalists were Miss Edith Evans and Mr. Harold Wilde, and Mr. Walter W. Hedgcock conducted.

A special recital of Spohr's 'Calvary' was given at the Northern Polytechnic on Sunday, May 2, by Mr. Munro Davison's Choral Society. The recital was intended principally for the benefit of the poorer classes, no charge being made for admission, and nearly 1,000 persons listened with reverent attention to the beautiful music of this oratorio. The principal solo vocalists were Miss Kate Cherry, Messrs. Albert Malden, Frank Osborne, Herbert Evison and William Forington. Mr. Herbert Hodge and Miss Maud Crouch assisted at the organ and pianoforte respectively, and Mr. Munro Davison conducted.

Mr. Edward Bending's recently-formed Orchestral and Choral Society gave their first concert on May 4 at the Hampstead Conservatoire, when Mr. John Francis Barnett's cantata 'The ancient mariner' was performed. That the choir had evidently been well trained was especially noticeable in the choral numbers, 'And now the storm-blast came' and 'The upper air burst into life,' the difficulties of which were mastered in a manner that reflected the highest credit upon the conductor. In the more delicate portions of the work—the chorus for female voices, 'The bride hath paced' and the quartet, 'Around, around flew each sweet sound'—Mr. Bending showed how much care and attention he had bestowed upon the orchestral accompaniments. The soloists, Madame Jessie Norman, Miss Florence Gilbert, Mr. Samuel Masters and Mr. Bantock Pierpoint, well deserved the applause of the audience.

The St. Martin's Choral Society, Gospel Oak, gave a concert in the Parish Hall on May 6. The programme included Cowen's 'St. John's eve' and Eaton Fanning's 'The miller's wooing,' accompanied by a capable string orchestra, under the direction of Mr. G. A. Hardesty. The soloists were Miss Kate Cherry, Madame Kate Bauer, Mr. Frederick Norcup and Mr. George Stubbs. Miss Bessie Hawkins, who also contributed a pianoforte solo, was an able accompanist.

The Willesden Green and Cricklewood Choral Society gave an excellent performance of Gounod's 'Redemption' at the Hampstead Conservatoire on May 6. The choir sang throughout with spirit and intelligence, especially in 'Unfold, ye portals everlasting,' and received able support from the orchestra, led by Mr. H. R. Starr, with Dr. Davan Wetton at the organ. Much credit was due to the conductor, Mr. F. W. Belchamber, for the able training of his forces. The solo vocalists were Misses Jessie Norman, Maggie Tavener, and Bella Newstead, Messrs. Ronald Pomeroy, Reginald Johnson, and Stanley Newman.

The St. Paul's Choral Society, North Finchley, gave a performance of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' trilogy, complete, at Woodside Hall on May 6, under the conductorship of Mr. Herbert J. Baggs. The performance by choir and orchestra was highly creditable, and the solo parts were sung by Miss Minnie Coy, Mr. Henry Plevy and Mr. Sydney Iloit.

The St. Saviour's Choral Society, Denmark Park, gave a performance of Haydn's 'Creation' in St. Saviour's Church on May 12, under the conductorship of Mr. James W. Smith. The solo vocalists were Miss Edith Potter, Mr. Archibald Blair, and Mr. H. Culverwell. Mr. F. W. Sutton presided at the organ.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Royal Society of Artists' musical matinées in connection with the Spring exhibition of pictures, so successfully carried on under the direction of Mr. Oscar Pollack, opened on April 10 and will terminate on June 12. As heretofore, the artistic standard of these enjoyable concerts is being fully maintained.

The last Saturday popular orchestral concert for this season, organized by the Birmingham Symphony Orchestra, was given in the Town Hall on April 24 under Mr. Arthur Payne's conductorship. The programme included the 'Flying Dutchman' and 'Tannhäuser' overtures, the 'Siegfried Idyll,' and a charming and well-orchestrated 'Pizzicato Caprice' by William Henley. The vocalist was Miss Lucy Nuttall, of Manchester.

An event of special interest to Birmingham was the performance of Gluck's opera 'Iphigenia in Tauris,' at the Midland Institute, by the students of the School of Music Opera Class, which took place in the large Lecture Theatre on April 28, a repetition following on the 30th of the same month. Having already successfully produced Gluck's 'Orfeo' and 'Iphigenia in Aulis,' the promoters were justified in essaying 'Iphigenia in Tauris,' which has actually been in preparation for the last two years under Mr. J. A. Breeden's schooling. Mr. Granville Bantock, who had an excellent orchestra under him, conducted the opera with care and resourcefulness. The whole performance, in spite of so ambitious an effort, reflected the utmost credit on the executive and reached a high level of musical art. The chorus sang admirably, and the principal parts were histrionically and vocally far above the average of a school performance. Iphigenia was allotted to Miss Elsie Cornish, whilst Orestes and Pylades were allotted to Mr. G. A. Neale Peck and Mr. Frank Mullings. The staging, grouping, and ensembles left nothing to be desired.

The fifth annual season of the Theatre Royal Promenade Concerts, extending over three weeks, was inaugurated on May 10. Mr. Landon Ronald, who again conducted, had under his baton a well-equipped band of seventy performers. Among the principal novelties produced were Elgar's new Symphony and suite 'Wand of Youth,' No. 1, both of which were well performed under Mr. Landon Ronald's inspiring leadership.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The fourth annual concert of the Clifton Male-Voice Choir, held at Redland Park Hall on April 22, was attended with success. Under the direction of Mr. Walter P. Price several part-songs were carefully rendered, among them being 'Sunrise,' by Mr. Arthur Salmon, sung in public for the first time. Songs were contributed by Miss Maude England and Mr. A. W. Bishop, and Miss Marjorie Evans, the child violinist, gratified the audience with her solos. Mr. F. Southby was the accompanist.

The Bristol New Philharmonic Society, at the Victoria Rooms on April 24, under the direction of Mr. Arnold Barter, gave excellent performances of Handel's 'Acis and Galatea,' Dr. Vaughan Williams's 'Toward the Unknown Region' and Jensen's 'Feast of Adonis.' The principal vocalists were Miss Winifred Thomas, Mr. Henry Turnpenney, Mr. Reginald Rhymes and Mr. Montague Worlock. The band was led by Mr. Harold Bernard.

The Bristol South Male-Voice Choir gave a concert in the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association, at Knowle, on April 28. In addition to pieces by the choir—conductor, Mr. C. A. Inman—there were songs by Miss Pauline Allen, Mr. Lionel Venn, Mr. G. H. Huxtable and Mr. Cecil Eyre, and the Haydn Quartet were also among the vocalists. Mr. Maurice Alexander skilfully executed some violin solos, and Miss Tressie Horler and Mr. C. A. Inman played some pianoforte duets.

The Keynsham Baptist Choir gave a concert on April 28 in the Drill Hall. In addition to the efforts of the choir, songs were contributed by Miss Lily Underhill, Miss Elsie Cridland, Miss Lily Marsh, and Mr. William Thomas. Instrumental compositions were played by Mrs. S. Fairclough (pianoforte), Mr. F. Board (violin), Mr. H. C. Lawrence (flute), and Mr. S. Fairclough (violoncello). Miss May Sheppard was the accompanist, and Mr. A. J. Thomas directed the performance.

An excellent concert was given by the Bristol Symphony Orchestra at the Victoria Rooms on May 3, Mr. Hubert Hunt being the conductor. A large audience was deeply interested in the performance of Elgar's Symphony, which had not previously been heard in Bristol. The fine work received a careful interpretation and was heartily applauded. The programme included Saint-Saëns's Violoncello concerto (Op. 33). The soloist, Mr. Percy Lewis, played brilliantly and was well supported by the orchestra. Other compositions were Cherubini's overture to 'Anacreon' and a Slavonic Dance by Dvorák. Mr. F. S. Gardner was the leader of the orchestra, and two operatic airs were sung effectively by Miss Lucy Nuttall.

On May 5 the Clevedon Philharmonic Society gave an attractive concert in the Public Hall, the works presented, under the direction of Mr. C. W. Stear, being Haydn's 'Spring,' from the 'Seasons,' and Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen.' The soloists were Miss Joan Dalrymple, Mrs. G. Evans, Mr. H. Partridge (of Wells Cathedral) and Mr. Arthur L. Wills. A small but efficient orchestra was led by Mr. F. S. Gardner. In addition to the cantatas the choir were heard in German's part-song 'O peaceful night,' which proved so attractive that it was repeated.

The Weston-super-Mare Philharmonic Society finished the season on May 13 with a concert at Knightstone Pavilion. The soloists were Miss Madeleine Applegate, Miss Gertrude Winchester, Mr. John Roberts and Mr. Arthur Trowbridge (of Wells Cathedral). The band consisted of some of the principal players from Bristol (Mr. F. S. Gardner, leader), and Mr. Edward Cook conducted. In the first part of the programme Barnett's 'Ancient Mariner' was effectively rendered, and in the second part an excellent interpretation of Cowen's 'John Gilpin' was given, in addition to three of Mendelssohn's part-songs.

Clifton Choral Society gave a concert at Redland Park Hall on May 19, and under the direction of Mr. A. E. Hill, organist of St. John's Church, performed Cowen's 'Sleeping Beauty.' The soloists were Miss Madeleine Applegate, Miss Gertrude Winchester, Mr. Reginald Rhymes and Dr. Noel Longley. Mr. Harold Bernard led the orchestra. An excellent rendering of the cantata was appreciated by a large audience.

MUSIC IN CROYDON.

The Central Croydon Choral Society gave an excellent concert in the Public Hall on May 1, when the programme consisted of a selection from the works of Handel, including 'Belshazzar,' 'Acis and Galatea,' 'Judas Maccabæus,' 'Jephtha,' and 'Samson.' The soloists were Miss Est D'Argo, Miss Gilderoy Scott, Mr. Cynlais Gibbs and Mr. Humphrey Bishop, all of whom acquitted themselves to the satisfaction of the audience, the fine singing of Miss D'Argo being particularly admired. The rendering of the choruses was, on the whole, good, but some of them were taken at too rapid a speed. A full orchestra, led by Miss Frances G. Ison, played the 'Occasional' Overture and accompanied the vocal music. Mr. Roland A. Richards was, as usual, the able conductor.

An interesting concert was given by Mr. Cecil Baumer and Mr. Stanton Rees in the Public Hall on May 4. A notable feature of the evening's music was the first performance of a Sonata for pianoforte and violin, composed by Mr. Baumer, a young musician who is to be complimented upon the healthy character and lucid form of his music. The Sonata, well played by the composer and Mr. Stanton Rees, met with an enthusiastic reception. Mr. Baumer displayed sound technique and promising artistic perception as a pianist in Tchaikovsky's Variations (No. 6) and other pieces. Mr. Coleridge-Taylor joined Mr. Rees in a capital rendering of his attractive 'African Dances' for violin and pianoforte, and the Andante and Finale of Wieniawski's Violin concerto in D minor. The vocalists, Miss Emetta Truscott and Mr. Robert Carr, proved themselves to be able artists, and Madame Ayres was a sympathetic accompanist.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Welsh Choral Union, instead of being disbanded for the usual summer recess, is paying the penalty of fame in having to work while others play. The fact of being chosen as the official choral body of the Musical League, which is to hold its first festival of three days in Liverpool in September next, entails weekly rehearsals at present under Mr. Harry Evans. These, however, are not looked upon as any particular hardship by the Welsh choralists, who are in love with their work.

The Spring concert of the St. Helen's Musical Society, which comprises an orchestra of eighty performers and a choir of 150 voices, was given with considerable success in the Theatre Royal, on April 26. The programme included Stanford's 'The Revenge,' Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast' (soloist, Mr. John Bardsley), and, as orchestral pieces, Tchaikovsky's '1812' overture and Max Bruch's G minor Violin concerto, in which the solo part was ably played by Mr. Thomas Southworth. Dr. S. B. Siddall and Mr. G. E. Stuteley respectively conducted the choral and orchestral pieces.

Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Departure,' sung with pianoforte accompaniment, formed the programme of the Waterloo Choral Society's concert on April 23, which was conducted by Mr. Appleyard.

During their recent week's engagement at the Shakespeare Theatre the Carl Rosa Opera Company celebrated, on May 14, the fifty-sixth anniversary of the production of Verdi's 'Rigoletto.' It is many years since this opera was played in Liverpool, and the large audience present testified that the revival was viewed with interest. The performance, under the direction of Mr. Goossens, was in keeping with the best traditions of this famous company.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Our season of music terminated this year a little earlier than last. The orchestra of the Beethoven Society, numbering seventy amateur performers, under the honorary conductorship of Mr. E. Gordon Cockrell, played exceptionally well at their concert on April 27. The selections included the Andante movement of Haydn's Symphony in D (No. 7 of the Salomon set), Scharwenka's 'Andante religioso' for strings; and the 'Der Freischütz' overture. Miss Edith Webster, of the Royal Manchester College of Music, gave an excellent performance of the solo part of Liszt's 'Hungarian' Fantasia, as arranged by the composer for pianoforte and orchestra. Mr. Norman Allin (baritone), also a College student, was the vocalist. Perhaps the most novel, interesting, and popularly attractive feature of the concert was provided by Mr. Cockrell's Male-Voice Choir, who sang admirably Grieg's 'Landkjending' ('Landerkennung') and three choruses from Mendelssohn's incidental music to 'Edipus at Colonus.' Choral music has this season received commendable recognition in connection with the orchestral programmes; and this concert furnished one more most welcome justification as well as illustration of the practice.

A concert in aid of the building fund of the Hall of Residence for women students of the Manchester University was given at the University Hall on May 20. Mr. Théodore Dubois, the veteran French organist and composer, was the conspicuous attraction of the programme, the first part of which was devoted all but exclusively to his compositions, which included organ solos played on the fine organ by Mr. Dubois. The artists engaged were Madame Durand-Exte (vocalist); Madame Chailley-Richez (pianist); Mr. Marcel Chailley (violinist); and Mr. Fernand Pollain (violinist), all of whom have won praise in connection with the series of French concerts previously given in Manchester. Added interest was conferred upon the extremely successful concert by the classical dancing of Mlle. Sandrini and the recitations of Madame De Favezin to melodrama music from the pianoforte.

MUSIC IN NEWCASTLE AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Bishop Auckland Musical Society, under the conductorship of Mr. N. Kilburn, on April 28 performed Dvorák's 'Spectre's Bride,' a work which they were almost the first to introduce in the North of England. Although this Society is small numerically, the performances they give are usually among the most successful of those by choral societies, and the choice of works is always of a high standard.

On May 12 the Newcastle and District Catholic Choral Society, a body of 150 vocalists, performed, with organ accompaniment, Rossini's 'Stabat Mater.' It is to be hoped that, having gone the round of the most popular, and generally not the best, specimens of music written for the Catholic Church Service, they will in the future let the public of Newcastle hear some of the more interesting and unfamiliar works which lie neglected.

MUSIC IN NORWICH AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

An interesting vocal and violin recital was recently given at the High School, Norwich, by Miss Alice Spelman and Miss Margaret Prior, the Norfolk scholar at the Royal College of Music. The former sang with much charm various songs, including 'Mélisande in the wood' (Goetz), 'Softly awakes my heart' (Saint-Saëns), and, with Mr. George Bryant, the duet 'Still as the night' (Carl Götz). Miss Margaret Prior and Miss Ethel White played Edward Schütt's Suite for violin and pianoforte in D minor, and Miss Prior played solos by Wieniawski, Tchaikovsky, Lederer and Sarasate. Mr. Bryant contributed songs by Teresa del Riego, William Wallace, Tonnellier and Maud Valérie White.

The last recital of the winter season of the Saturday Evening Popular Concerts, given under the direction of Dr. Bunnnett, was attended by the Mayor, Sheriff and Corporation. Miss Leonora Russell and the Rev. Precentor Rynd were the vocalists, and madrigals and part-songs were given by the cathedral choristers and members of the Nave Service and Norwich Festival choirs.

Two concerts were given by the Norwich Philharmonic Society at St. Andrew's Hall, Norwich, on the afternoon and evening of May 6. At the afternoon concert Mr. Boris Hambourg played Saint-Saëns's Violoncello concerto and Tchaikovsky's Variations on a Theme Rococo for violoncello and orchestra. Miss Ethel Lister was the vocalist, and the orchestra played Schubert's 'Unfinished' symphony, Mozart's 'Figaro' and Mackenzie's 'Little Minister' overtures, and Elgar's 'Wand of Youth' Suite, No. 1. At the evening concert the Norwich Choral Society, associated with the Norwich Philharmonic Society, gave a successful rendering of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Departure' and selections from Gounod's 'Faust.' The soloists were Miss Ethel Lister, Mr. Webster Millar and Mr. Robin Overleigh. There was a large audience on each occasion, and Dr. Bates, who conducted, is to be congratulated on the result of the concerts.

MUSIC IN THE SOUTH-WEST COUNTIES.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE THREE TOWNS.

Dr. Weekes's Choral Society gave a 'musical evening' at Plymouth on February 6, supported by a contingent of his Orchestral Society. The most important items were Mendelssohn's 95th Psalm (O come, let us worship) and Somervell's setting of 'The power of sound.' The Mannamead and Mutley Choral Society, conducted by Mr. Manley Martin, performed excellently, on February 10, in the northern suburb, Smart's 'The bride of Dunkerron,' with Madame Lillian Langdon, Messrs. Orlando Joliffe and G. S. Meadows as principals. The 'Emmanuel' Choral Society—which is located further north still, and concerns itself exclusively with sacred music—gave a Mendelssohn night on April 28. On the same date the Orpheus Male-Voice Choir, conducted by Mr. David Parkes, co-operated with the orchestral band of the Royal Garrison Artillery in a concert, at which the fine choir sang Cornelius's 'The rider's song,' Marchant's 'The rising storm,' Schubert's 'Great is Jehovah' (soloist, Miss Alice Prowse), with orchestra, and the Soldiers' Chorus in Gounod's 'Faust.' The most important achievements of the band, conducted by Mr. R. G. Evans, were the 'Tannhäuser' overture and Saint-Saëns's Violin concerto (soloist, Miss Helen Sealy.) Solos were given by Miss Prowse and Mr. Parkes.

In Emmanuel Church, Mr. Reginald Waddy has continued his monthly organ recitals, making special features of 'composers' evenings.' Mr. Frank Winterbottom has given three Symphony concerts at Stonehouse on February 8, March 15 and April 2, at which Sterndale Bennett's Symphony in G minor, Tchaikovsky's Pathetic symphony, and the Symphonic variations of Boëllmann (soloist, Mr. C. G. Pike) were respectively performed. Dr. Weekes's Orchestral Society, on February 17, played two Symphonies, Haydn's in E flat and Brahms's in F, the latter being conducted by Mr. Walter Weekes.

In opera the performances, with much courage and credit, of Grand Opera by Mrs. Herring-Mason's Class are deserving of praise. During the week beginning January 25 'The masked ball' and 'The barber of Seville' were given; and 'Maritana' was well performed during the week beginning April 12. Mrs. Herring-Mason gave wonderful support with the pianoforte.

OTHER DEVONSHIRE TOWNS.

Dartmouth Musical Company presented 'The Prudence of Peggy' on January 20, conducted by Mr. Friendship, who also arranged the music; the Exmouth Operatic and Dramatic Society performed 'The Pirates of Penzance' on January 28, conducted by Mr. F. J. Shapcott. Haydn's 'The Creation' was performed by the Newton Abbot Choral Society on February 3, in commemoration of the death of the composer. Mr. W. J. Bown conducted, and the principals were Miss S. Pitt Soper, Messrs. Cynlais Gibbs and Andrew Shanks. The Holsworthy Society, with Mr. H. H. Bennett as conductor, does good work under considerable difficulty. On February 4 'Elijah' was performed with great credit, the soloists being Madame Cissie Herbert, Miss Lamerton, Messrs. A. Collings and A. E. Old. The same oratorio was given on the following day by the Tiverton Musical Society, conducted by Mr. R. Bareham, the soloists being Madame Carrie Switer, Mrs. Wallace Masland, Messrs. A. Collings and S. J. Bishop. The band was led by Mr. F. Wellington, and Dr. D. J. Wood, of Exeter Cathedral, was at the organ. The West Teignmouth Society performed 'The Messiah' on February 25, excellently for a small class. Mr. T. H. Webb's pupils gave a concert on March 20, and on April 28 he conducted a miscellaneous concert given by the Torquay Musical Association, which included 'The Hymn of Praise.'

The Plympton Choral Society, which flourishes under Mr. Walter Weekes's direction, gave Somervell's 'The power of sound' on April 14, and part-songs. Working in an isolated moorland district, the Buckland Monachorum Choral Society manages to accomplish a creditable amount of work, and on April 15 Van Bree's 'St. Cecilia's Day' was sung under the conductorship of the Rev. E. J. White; and overcoming similar difficulties, the Chagford Society, on April 16, gave Cowen's 'The rose maiden,' under the direction of Mr. R. Percy Collings, with the Misses E. Toole and Irene Evans and Messrs. Dean Trotter and Walter Belgrove as soloists. North Devon remains dependent solely on the Barnstaple Musical Festival Society, the idea of the resuscitation of the North Devon Festival having fallen through for want of organizers. Dr. H. J. Edwards, conductor of the Barnstaple Society, has confined his attention almost entirely, for the purposes of education and culture, to part-singing, and at the concert given on April 19 the excellent work done was exhibited in part-songs, including examples by Lloyd, Elgar and Mendelssohn, and Wesley's motet 'In exitu Israel.'

The Exeter Choral Society, though only six years old, has attained wonderful ability, and a surprisingly good performance was given of the 'Hiawatha' trilogy on May 7, reflecting the utmost credit on the training of Mr. Allan Allen. Eighty members of the Wellington Philharmonic Society joined the Exeter chorus, and the singing was excellent in pitch, sentiment and rhythm, Miss Ida Kahn and Messrs. Charles Saunders and Charles Tree were the principals. The special services in Exeter Cathedral are noticed separately on p. 378.

Exeter Amateur Operatic Society have reached a high standard, and their annual performances are regarded as events of importance. Under the musical direction of Mr. Allan Allen, during the week beginning February 8, they filled the local theatre daily with their fine representations of 'The Gondoliers.' The Misses Gertrude Roberts and W. Maude Balchin, Mesdames Stowell and Sturdy, Messrs. Charles Bartlett, S. Parrington, A. P. Dusk, and F. V. Squire took parts. On February 17 the 'Mountebanks' was given by the Torquay Amateur Operatic Society, with a fine chorus of fifty, conducted by Mr. G. H. Stone. 'H.M.S. Pinafore,' on April 15, received an excellent rendering from members of the Bude Society, conducted by Mr. John Henry, assisted by Miss Fagan. A fine performance of 'Patience' was given during the week of April 27 by the Kingsbridge Operatic Society, conducted by Mr. W. Beer, the chorus singing well and the small but efficient band being led by Mr. F. W. Pope. 'Trial by Jury' was given by the Barnstaple Amateur Operatic Society, on April 28, conducted by Mr. Ernest Manning, with Mr. Percy Parish leading the band.

'The Banner of St. George' was sung by the Society at Okehampton, conducted by Mr. S. J. James, on May 5; and Barnett's 'The Ancient Mariner,' by the Totnes Choral Society, on May 6, under the direction of Mr. Herbert Worth. The first part of the 'Hiawatha' music and Macfarren's 'May-Day' were excellently sung at Cwerkere on May 6 by the Choral Society, conducted by Mr. E. N. Taylor. A part-song, composed by Mr. H. Imbert Terry, entitled 'A hymn to night,' was conducted by him and well received. Mr. Harold O. Jones, conductor of the Ashburton Choral Society, performed German's 'Merrie England' in concert form. No man works harder against difficulties than does Mr. Jones, and the rendering was highly creditable, special praise being due to the chorus for their really beautiful singing.

Mr. Harry Crocker deserves praise for his persevering efforts in the cause of instrumental music at Torquay. His orchestral class gave a concert on April 15, at which Mozart's Symphony in G was played, and on the 29th of the month Mr. Crocker's Haydn String Quartet gave their last concert for the season, playing excellently Beethoven's Quartet in F (Op. 18) and Tchaikovsky's in D (Op. 11). Miss Marie Belton was the vocalist. Mr. A. J. James conducted the Teignmouth Orchestral Society's thirty-third concert on April 22, when Schumann's Symphony in B flat was played.

CORNISH TOWNS.

A new Choral Society has made its appearance in Falmouth, under the direction of Miss E. Blight, known as St. Mary's Catholic Choral Society. On January 4 they gave an excellent raison d'être in their creditable renderings of Gaul's 'Joan of Arc,' assisted by an orchestra led by Miss Clarice Richards. A 'Maid of Orleans' medal was presented to Miss Blight, and it is hoped that the Society having started so well will continue to flourish. The Torpoint Choral Society has begun a new lease of life under the direction of Mr. F. W. Moreton, and on January 13 performed 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast,' and on April 21 Gounod's 'De Profundis' and Mendelssohn's 'Loreley,' with gratifying success. Marazion Male-Voice Choir, conducted by Mr. J. H. Trudgen, brought forward on February 3 a good programme of glees and choruses; the Devoran Choral Class, numbering fifty voices, gave 'Ruth' on February 13, conducted by Mr. W. R. Cock; and on February 17 Lostwithiel Choral Society performed Cowen's 'The Rose Maiden,' directed by Mr. E. A. Russell. 'Elijah' was given on February 18 by the Society at Launceston, which is under the able direction of Mr. C. S. Parsonson; and at Looe, on the same date, Elgar's 'The banner of St. George' was finely sung under the direction of Mr. Harold Lake, with Madame Lily Langdon, Messrs. John Gill and W. H. Stephens as soloists. Liskeard Choral Society deserves special notice for the fine quality of singing exhibited in Haydn's

'The Seasons' on April 16, conducted by Mr. A. C. Faull, with Madame Tydfil Freeman and Messrs. Charles Saunders and G. S. Meadows as principals. Falmouth Philharmonic Society, conducted by Canon Corfe, sang 'The death of Minnehaha' on April 20, the principals being Miss Gertrude Woodall and Mr. Albert Garcia, Miss Mabel Hoskins leading the band. 'Joan of Arc,' given again by the Camborne Choral Society on April 21, closed the season for the district with good effect. Mr. H. V. Pearce conducted and Mlle. Valerie Holzschneider led the band.

Again the only instrumental music to be recorded is the concert given on February 17 by the Falmouth Sevčik Orchestral Society, which does good, though arduous work, under the direction of Miss Bertha Treweeke.

Foreign Notes.

BERKELEY (CALIFORNIA).

Bach's B minor Mass was performed in the Greek Theatre on April 23, under the skilled direction of Dr. J. F. Wolle. The work had been in rehearsal for many months, Dr. Wolle having organized a Bach choir here (as he had done previously in Bethlehem), and the result was a performance of this masterpiece which reflected the greatest credit on all concerned, especially the conductor. The solo vocalists were Mrs. Grace Davis Northrup, Mrs. Orrin Kip McMurray, Miss Alice J. Andrews, Mrs. Lillie Birmingham, Mr. Carl E. Anderson and Mr. John Carrington. Miss Elizabeth Simpson was the organist. The concert is said to have been the finest musical performance ever given in this locality.

BERLIN.

The Singakademie, conducted by Professor Georg Schumann, celebrated the centenary of Haydn's death by giving a splendid performance of the master's ever-fresh 'Seasons' on May 3. The same work was chosen by many other choral societies throughout Germany, while 'The Creation' was strangely neglected.—At a 'popular concert' of the Philharmonic Society, under Dr. Kunwald, the first (in C major) of the recently-discovered Violin concertos by Haydn was played for the first time since it found a resting-place in Messrs. Breitkopf's archives some 140 years ago. The charming work, beautifully played by Herr Anton Wittek, greatly pleased the audience, the slow movement, a fascinating Arioso, having to be repeated. In all three movements the cembalo, played on this occasion by Dr. Kunwald, forms part of the orchestral accompaniment.—At the Komische Oper, Eugene d'Albert conducted the two-hundredth (!) performance of his opera 'Tiefand' that has so far been given by the said Institution, which has thus undoubtedly created a record with a contemporary serious work of high artistic aim. The audience accorded the gifted composer one ovation after another.—Professor E. E. Taubert has been chosen a member of the Senate of the Academy of Arts, as successor to the late Professor Albert Dietrich.

BERNE.

A musical festival was held on May 7-9 in connection with the opening of a new casino. The programme included Beethoven's Choral Symphony, Berlioz's 'Faust,' and Bach's 'Magnificat,' and the festival concluded with a special 'Schluss-Akt,' meant as an act of homage to Dr. Karl Lanzinger, who conducted, and who, with this festival, bade farewell to the musical life of Berne, as the head of which he worked enthusiastically and successfully for many years.

BOSTON (U.S.A.).

A new Symphony in B minor, by Gustav Strube, was produced on April 2 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and well received. Herr Strube, a former pupil of the Leipzig Conservatorium, is a member of the famous orchestra which produced this work, like many others from his pen in previous seasons.

BREMEN.

The first German performance of Dvorák's opera, 'Die Teufels-Käthe,' took place here at the local Municipal Theatre, without, however, meeting with much success. The best part of the work is the second act, which contains a number of fascinating dances.

COLOGNE.

Felix Weingartner's opera 'Genesius,' which has not been performed for some years, was revived here at the Municipal Opera House before a crowded audience. The composer, who conducted, was enthusiastically greeted.

FREIBURG IM BREISGAU.

A chamber music festival, held here on May 4, 6 and 7, included a new Trio by Julius Weissmann.

GOTHA.

Those who expected that Count Zeppelin's sensational flights in his airships would inspire some composer in some way or other have not been disappointed. Herr Friedrich Schuchardt is the composer, and 'Im Reich der Lüfte' (In the realm of air) is the title of his symphonic poem, produced here recently at the Court Theatre.

HALLE.

A new choral work, 'Dem deutschen Männergesang,' for solo quartet, chorus and orchestra, by a local musician, Herr B. Heydrich, was produced here by the Hallesche Liedertafel with great success.

HAMBURG.

The much-discussed and criticised Brahms monument, by Professor Klinger, was unveiled with due solemnity—in presence of the Burgomaster and Senate of the city, with speeches, &c.—in the new Hamburger Musikhalle on May 7, the master's seventy-sixth birthday.

HANOVER.

Gluck's 'Maienköningin' and Haydn's 'Der Apotheker' were recently added to the repertoire of the Court Theatre. Nor did these charming old 'novelties' fail to please the audience.

KIEFF.

'Janek,' a Polish opera by R. von Zelenski, the Director of the Cracow Conservatoire, was recently produced here and enthusiastically received. Local critics commend the work specially on account of its melodiousness.

LEIPSIC.

Mozart's 'Zauberflöte' is the latest of the many operatic works which German musicians and stage-managers are bringing out in 'new versions.' Herr Dr. Hans Loewenfeld has rendered this service for Mozart's last opera, and his 'version,' with new costumes and decorations designed by Professor Heinrich Lefler, was produced at the local Stadttheater on April 18, and enthusiastically received. The performance lasted four hours!

LISBON.

Wagner's 'Ring of the Nibelung' has been performed here for the first time in its entirety at the Royal Opera San Carlos. Herr Franz Beidler was the conductor, and the gigantic work was given without any cuts strictly after the Bayreuth model.

NEW YORK.

During the past season of the Manhattan Opera House, R. Strauss's 'Salome' was performed no fewer than ten times. Another novelty, Massenet's 'Le Jongleur de Nôtre Dame,' was given seven times.—Gustav Mahler has been appointed conductor of the Philharmonic orchestra for a term of three years.

PRAGUE.

Anton Rubinstein's almost forgotten oratorio 'Paradise lost' was twice recently revived here by a combination of several Bohemian (Tchec) choral societies and the Bohemian Philharmonic. Great success attended both performances.

PARIS.

M. J. Massenet's latest annual opera, 'Bacchus,' was produced at the Grand Opéra on May 5, and proved by no means one of the composer's best works. The first act, strangely enough, is spoken, instead of being sung, by the characters on the stage, so as to give the poet, the late Catulle Mendès, a chance to come by his own! The performance, conducted by M. Henri Rabaud, a pupil of M. Massenet's, was excellent.

SCHWERIN.

The fourteenth Mecklenburg musical festival took place here on May 23-25. Beethoven's Choral Symphony and Mass in D, Brahms's C minor Symphony, and Arnold Mendelssohn's 'Paria' were included in the programme.

STUTTGART.

The annual festival of the Allgemeiner Deutscher Musikverein is to be held here from June 2 to 6. On the first day the members of the Society will be the guests at tea of the King of Württemberg at Schloss Wilhelmina. The programme includes the performance of three operas: 'Misé Brun,' by Pierre Maurice, 'Maja,' by Adolf Vogl, and 'Princess Brambilla,' by Walter Braunfels. There will also be two concerts of chamber music—works by Hans Pfitzner, Volkmann, Andreae, and Waldemar von Bausnern—an orchestral concert—works by Paul Scheinplüg, Ernest Boehe, Fritz Volbach, and Franz Liszt—in addition to a lecture delivered by E. Jaques-Dalcroze. Herr Volbach's new work, a Symphony in B minor, is looked forward to with much interest.

TUNIS.

E. Humperdinck's delightful opera 'Hänsel und Gretel' was recently performed here by a French troupe. 'Hänsel und Gretel' in Tunis! It sounds incredible.

WEIMAR.

A monument to Eduard Lassen, former General-Musikdirektor of Saxe-Weimar, was recently unveiled in the local cemetery. Though the composer of much excellent music, Lassen is known to the present generation chiefly by his melodious setting of 'All Souls' day.'

The Cape Town Municipal Musical Festival will be held in the week of July 12 to 19, under the direction, as heretofore, of Dr. Barrow-Dowling. Accompanied by an orchestra of eighty performers, the choir of 300 voices will consist of the combined choral societies of the district, and in the two performances of Gabriel Pierné's 'Children's crusade' 400 children will be added to the choral force employed. A Mendelssohn centenary concert will be given, and Dr. Charles Harriss is to conduct his cantata 'Pan' at one of the miscellaneous concerts. Another item of South African news, and as showing the musical activities of the Colony, is that Mr. Albert Archdeacon and his party sailed in the s.s. 'Dover Castle' on May 23 in order to take part in choral festivals, each of two days' duration, during July and August in the following places and under the conductors whose names are given: Port Elizabeth, Mr. Horace Barton; East London, Mr. W. I. Chapman; Grahamstown, Mr. W. Deane; Durban, Mr. J. Frank Proudman; Johannesburg, Mr. L. R. Glenton; Kimberley, Mr. A. H. Ashworth; and Bloemfontein, Mr. George Deale.

The thirty-seventh annual festival of the London Sunday School Choir will be held on June 16 at the Crystal Palace, when a concert will be given by 5,000 juvenile singers under the conductorship of Mr. J. Weillard Mathews. At 7 p.m. the Handel Orchestra will be filled by a choir of 4,000 adults with full band, conducted by Mr. William Whiteman, when selections from Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul,' the 'March to Calvary' from Gounod's 'Redemption,' Purcell's 'Come, if you dare,' and anthems and part-songs by Garrett, Lee Williams, Smart, Roland Rogers, and others will be sung. It is intended to raise a permanent memorial to Mr. Jonathan Barnard in recognition of his life-long efforts in the cause of the service of song, and subscriptions will be thankfully received by Mr. George Merritt, 282, Commercial Road, E., or by the Hon. Sec., Mr. W. A. Hinton, Bryn Euryn, Bertha Road, Hornchurch.

Dr. A. H. Mann writes from King's Field, Cambridge: Can any antiquary tell me if it is at all likely that late in the sixteenth or early in the seventeenth centuries a set of part-books would be sent from one choral establishment to another, solely for the purpose of securing compositions from the composers themselves? In other words, is it likely that a set of books would be sent, say, from Lichfield to Westminster, to obtain the compositions by Orlando Gibbons? My reason for asking is this: I have some MS. music-books which probably belonged to a college or cathedral body, and in these volumes there are various handwritings, among them the well-known 'Glorious and powerful God' (slightly different from Ouseley's edition), of which each part is written and signed by Orlando Gibbons.

The following candidates gained the gold and silver medals offered by the Associated Board of the Royal Academy of Music and the Royal College of Music for the highest and second highest honours marks, respectively, in the Advanced and Intermediate Grades of the Local Centre Examinations in March-April last, the competition being open to all candidates in the British Isles:—Advanced Grade Gold Medal, Miss Margaret Stoddart, Jersey Centre (violin); Advanced Grade Silver Medal, Miss Helen M. Radcliffe, Bristol Centre, (violin); Intermediate Grade Gold Medal, Gladys Daniel, London Centre (violin); Intermediate Grade Silver Medals, Mr. Richard J. Millidge, London Centre (harmony); Miss Isa M. Meikle, Edinburgh Centre (harmony); and Miss Dorothy Thuell, Truro Centre (violoncello).

The last concert of the season given by the Cheltenham Philharmonic Society on May 11, at the Town Hall, was in every way a most gratifying success. The new cantata 'King Alfred,' performed for the first time in Cheltenham, is the result of the collaboration of two local persons, the librettist being Mrs. Alice Parsons, and the composer Mr. E. A. Dicks, organist of St. Luke's Church. The vigorous and patriotic lines have been well set to music, and the performance was on the whole a good one. The soloists were Miss Alice Hare, Miss Irene Cadman and Mr. Charles Tree. The cantata was followed by Stanford's 'The Revenge,' which gave the choir full opportunity to show their merits, and the programme concluded with Act III. of 'Tannhäuser,' with the soloists already mentioned. Mr. C. J. Phillips conducted with his usual ability and energy.

A well-varied and artistic programme was presented by Miss Mabel Aves, Misses Cicely and Dora Keith, at the Steinway Hall on May 14, ably assisted by Mr. Von Stratum (violin) and Mr. Edmund Woolhouse (violoncello). Miss Aves revealed a good and well-trained soprano voice in songs by Goring Thomas, Cowen, and others. Miss Cicely Keith played Lachner's Prelude and Toccata (Op. 57) and other pieces with refinement, delicacy of touch and good expression, and Miss Dora Keith displayed much charm and archness in several musical recitations, notably in the Helen and Modus scene, the latter part being cleverly played by Mr. Stanley Leverton.

An interesting choral concert will be given in the Royal Horticultural Hall, Vincent Square, Westminster, on Wednesday evening, June 2, at which Mr. Coleridge Taylor's 'Bon-bon choral suite' (conducted by the composer) and Elgar's 'The Banner of St. George' (conducted by Dr. W. G. McNaught), will be performed by a choir and orchestra of 250 performers. Miss Clara Butterworth and Mr. Julien Henry are the soloists; the choruses will be sung by the Novello Choir assisted by the Ealing Philharmonic Society (conductor, Mr. E. Victor Williams), the orchestra of the latter organization, with professional assistance providing the accompaniments.

Miss Ada Forrest, the South African vocalist, will shortly commence an extensive tour in South Africa. Beginning at Cape Town, she will visit most of the important towns in the Colony, the Orange River State, Natal and the Transvaal, in addition to giving two concerts in that ~~part~~ incognita to English singers—Delagoa Bay. Miss Forrest, who is assured of a very hearty welcome in her native land, will return to London in September.

The Prince of Wales presided at the eighty-second anniversary festival of the Printers' Pension, Almshouse, and Orphan Asylum Corporation, held at the Hotel Cecil on May 21, when His Royal Highness had the supreme satisfaction of announcing that the subscription list amounted to the splendid sum of £13,210. The Prince, in an eloquent speech, paid a high and worthy tribute to the industry, thought, attention, and accuracy of printers, and how much the community are indebted to them and their work.

The 171st anniversary festival of the Royal Society of Musicians was held at the Hotel Cecil on May 3, Sir Edgar Speyer, Bart., in the chair. Dr. W. H. Cummings, the honorary treasurer of the Society, announced the list of donations in connection with the festival, which amounted to over £1,600, including £200 from the chairman, and also legacies of £500 from an organist, the late Dr. Armstrong, of Kendal, and another of £500 from the late Dr. Richard Wilkinson.

The Music Loan Exhibition Catalogue, published by Messrs. Novello last month, has met with a very favourable reception. The Scotsman says: 'The entries are instructively annotated, and the various sections brought in by introductions by specialists, brief, indeed, but full of point and well digested antiquarian learning. The Catalogue, in a word, forms an important and valuable addition to English musical literature.' The Bookseller, in an appreciative notice, thus refers to the general get up of the volume: 'The whole catalogue is full of the greatest interest to every lover of music. It has been sumptuously conceived and sumptuously carried out. The thick paper, the wide margins, the beautiful print, indeed every detail, illustrates the loving care which the publishers have expended on their part of the work, which has made the whole volume a permanent delight to every music lover who may be fortunate enough to obtain a copy.'

Mr. James B. Clark has been presented with a Bechstein grand pianoforte, together with a duet music-stool, by the members of the Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union, as a token of their warm appreciation of the manner in which he has efficiently and unsparringly discharged the duties of honorary secretary for the last ten years. Much regret is naturally felt that Mr. Clark has had to resign the secretaryship on medical advice, as he has rendered splendid service to the Society by his businesslike qualities and genial bearing. The presentation was made on April 26 by the much-esteemed president of the Choral Union, Mr. John Pattinson.

At three special matinées of 'Macbeth' given at the Garrick Theatre on May 7, 14 and 21, the Overture and Incidental music, composed and conducted by Mr. Edmond Rickett, deserve special mention. Mr. Rickett has not only been successful in obtaining a Scots atmosphere, but the music is well scored, with the result that it materially contributed to the success of the performances.

In connection with the classes for training teachers of music at Trinity College of Music (London), Dr. John Warriner delivered, on May 5, the introductory lecture of the new term course, when his subject was 'How to prepare for the Art of Teaching examination.'

Messrs. Challen have made a pianoforte specially for use as the saloon of the s.s. 'Earl Grey,' built by order of the Canadian Government. The case work is beautifully finished in satinwood, with maple panels, and the instrument as a most artistic appearance.

Congratulations are due to Mr. J. W. Aldous, of Lancaster, upon his success in winning, with his choir, for the second year in succession, the hundred guineas challenge shield, the chief event in the Morecambe musical festival competition.

Mr. E. H. Lemare is to give two recitals on the re-built organ in Bridlington Priory, on June 1, when his programme will include three of his most recent compositions: 'Toccata Concerto,' 'Soutenir,' and the 'Schenley' Overture.

Dr. H. P. Allen read a paper before the Musical Association on May 18, the subject of his discourse being some considerations of the effects of orchestral colour upon sign and texture in composition.

Mr. Frank Idle has been appointed conductor of the choral and orchestral societies at the People's Palace, Mile End.

Answers to Correspondents.

QWITOUTHU.—You will find much useful and reliable information regarding the first appearance of chants in the biographical preface to the Rev. Henry Parr's 'Church of England Psalmody.' We regret that we cannot give replies to your several detailed questions as to the copyright of chants. It is quite possible that those composed by Barnby, Oakeley, Goss, Gauntlett, and Garrett are copyright; this would depend upon the date of their publication. The law of copyright as applied to chants is the same as that of any other literary or musical property, that you must not make copies of any copyright chant without having first obtained the permission of the owner or owners of the copyright.

S. E. L.—H. F. Chorley's words, beginning 'God, the all-terrible,' and adapted to the music of the Russian National Anthem, are not a translation of the Russian hymn. A free translation is as follows:

God save the Czar!
Strong and wise be his reign
To our blessing and fame.
Dreadful to our foe
Guardian of our faith;
God save the Czar.

A. S. C.—The following chamber music may meet your requirements: Six sonatas for violin and bass (Kreutzer); three sonatas for violoncello and bass (Romberg); Romanza for violin and bass (Sturm); 'Angelus,' for violoncello, bass and pianoforte (Molbe); Sonatina for pianoforte, two violins, and bass (Mozart).

J. P. H.—We cannot think of any better method of learning to sing recitative than by listening to the best vocalists. Mr. Randerger once told us of the great value to him of going to concerts and the opera with score in hand and making pencil notes as the musical notes came from the singers' voices.

X. H. A. X.—The full-score of Mendelssohn's 'Midsummer Night's Dream' music is procurable in the Peters edition, price 8s. net. The second part of your question needs to be a little more specific—stating composers and the works required—and then we will endeavour to answer it.

A. E. B.—If the words are copyright you must first obtain permission from the owner or owners of the copyright before you can set them to music. Even though the writer of the words be no longer in the flesh, it by no means follows that the copyright has expired.

J. F.—We are afraid that the volumes of violin music you name are not of any intrinsic value. Messrs. W. E. Hill & Sons, 140, New Bond Street, would advise you as to the worth of your viola by Banks and the guitar-lute by Preston.

J. G. W.—You probably mean the Musical Competition Festivals and dates 'that are to be held round Lancashire.' This information is contained in the Musical Competition Festival section of the School Music Review.

F. J. B.—It would be as well if you were to address your question to the Clerk of the London County Council as to 'What qualifications are necessary to obtain a post as Musical Adviser under the London County Council?'

SEMI.—If you send your lyrics to composers who you think would set them, you can address the said composers care of their publishers, who would doubtless forward the letters.

D.—Madame Bodda Pyne died, in London, on March 20, 1904, aged seventy-one. Mrs. German Reed died at Bexley Heath, March 18, 1895, aged seventy-seven.

A. F.—Messrs. Novello are about to publish an English version of Schubert's cantata 'Lazarus' for the approaching Hereford Musical Festival.

J. S.—The small notes in Henselt's Frühlingslied, Op. 15 (Lengnick's edition) are a simplification of the original.

NO NAME.—There is no difference 'between the execution of A and B': either chord will do for its execution.

ONE OF THE LAST LETTERS OF
 MR. GEORGE MEREDITH.

LONG AGO
 NEW SONG BY TREVOR EVANS.

MR. GEORGE MEREDITH SAID:

"DEAR SIR,—I beg that you will let it be known to Mr. Trevor Evans how much I feel indebted to him for the song, music and verse, which he has commissioned you to send me. Wales has always been the land of song. I rejoice that we have a distinguished singer of his own pieces, who will bring this rich gift of the Land of the Mountains prominently before the public."—April 9, 1909.

THE WESTERN DAILY MERCURY SAYS:

"Wales has produced a genius as a singer and song-writer in the person of Mr. Trevor Evans, who made such an impression at the Plymouth concerts. His song "Home" became an instantaneous success throughout the country. His latest song, "Long Ago," is a masterpiece, and has clearly flowed straight from the heart."—April 12, 1909.

Both "LONG AGO" and "HOME" may be had in two Keys.

No. 1. Suitable for Soprano and Tenor.

MODERN ORGAN ACCOMPANIMENT

BY

A. MADELEY RICHARDSON.

"The matter of the book is excellent. Its advice is full of wisdom, and everywhere one sees the restraint and reverence of the worshipful spirit."—Musical Herald.

"If generally put into practice would do much to elevate the standard of Church music in this country."—Notes Guardian.

"The author's directions are admirably clear and to the point. The book is one which our organist readers will do well to study."—Musical News.

"Full and comprehensive. The work should certainly be in the hands of all students of the organ."—Musical Standard.

"Dr. Richardson is entirely successful, and we have no hesitation in saying that every organist will be the richer for the possession and study of this volume."—Musical World.

"The work just gives that stimulus and supplies that information for the average organist which has long been a desideratum."—Church Family Newspaper.

"A valuable addition to our literature on the use of the organ in divine worship. Fifty-two pages of this excellent book are devoted to plain-song accompaniment, a study in itself which every Church organist should read."—Western Morning News.

"A most valuable and practical work for one who aims at being a good organist, and one that he may always keep by his side for many a year."—Catholic Times.

"The best chapters in the book are those relating to the accompaniment of plain-song, and these alone would fully justify the issue of the volume."—Sheffield Daily Telegraph.

"At once methodical, practical, and comprehensive."—Methodist Times.

"A big book and a great one,—well worth its money."—Musical Opinion.

"No organist who has to play a Church service can afford to be without it."—New Music Review.

"Replete with admirable hints."—Church Standard, Philadelphia.

"Will be of immense value to students. It is a scholarly and helpful work, and should be possessed by professional and amateur organists alike."—Music.

"From the pen of one of the most distinguished musicians of the modern English school. A splendid volume."—Catholic World New York.

AN ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE
OF THE
MUSIC LOAN EXHIBITION

HELD UNDER THE PATRONAGE OF

HIS MAJESTY THE KING

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN

AND

THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES

BY THE

AT

FISHMONGERS' HALL

JUNE AND JULY, 1904.

The Illustrations consist of 11 Photogravure Plates, 9 full-page Illustrations, and many Facsimiles, &c., incorporated in the Text.

The Music Loan Exhibition of the Worshipful Company of Musicians was a great event in the history of that ancient corporation. At the same time it had a deeper import and wider significance by reason of its inherent interest. His Majesty the King graciously gave it his patronage and, moreover, headed the list of lenders. Notable collectors and others generously contributed to its completeness by the loan of beautiful instruments, rare books, unique manuscripts, fine pictures, &c., many of which had never before been exhibited, nor are they likely again to be gathered together.

Such Exhibitions, however, come and go, and leave not much more than a memory behind. Therefore it is all the more desirable that some permanent record should exist and be made available of so important and unique a display as that of the Musicians' Company. That desideratum has been supplied by this catalogue.

This handsome Volume is divided into six main sections:—

MUSIC-PRINTING	INSTRUMENTS	MANUSCRIPTS (Music and Letters)
PRINTED MUSIC	PORTRAITS, &c.	MISCELLANEOUS.

Every exhibit is not only fully and carefully described, but the copious notes freely scattered throughout the volume add to the interest of its subject-matter and increase the value of the book both as a treasured library possession and as a useful book of reference.

Illustrations—title-pages, instruments, portraits, &c.—and facsimiles form a most important and attractive feature of this édition de luxe Catalogue. The portraits include a photogravure reproduction of Hudson's full-length oil-painting of Handel, preserved at Gopsall and belonging to The Earl Howe; and among the well-executed facsimiles are autographs of Bach, Handel (a characteristic letter, of three quarto pages, written to Charles Jennens), Mendelssohn, Orlando Gibbons (the only known autograph of the composer), Henry Purcell, and others.

THE ORGAN WORKS

OF

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH

J. F. BRIDGE, MUS. DOC. OXON., AND JAMES HIGGS, MUS. BAC. OXON.

IN this, the first complete English Edition of John Sebastian Bach's Organ Works (the Chorale Preludes excepted), the distribution of the parts between the hands is, in all doubtful cases, clearly indicated by the notes that are to be performed by the right hand being printed on the upper of the two manual staves, while the notes that are to be played by the left hand will be found on the lower of the two manual staves. As far as possible care has been taken not needlessly to divide a middle part between the two hands when it can be conveniently performed by one hand continuously. The text has been carefully collated with former Editions, but generally where it differs from Griepenkerl's reading (Peters) it will be found to agree with the more recent Edition of the German Bach Society. Much thought has been given to secure convenient points for turning over, a matter of considerable importance to the performer. (See the "Great" G minor and the "St. Ann's" Fugues.) Suggestions as to the rate of performance and general treatment are given without encumbering the page with too detailed directions, and it is hoped the work in its complete form will be found a boon to the earnest Organ Student.

COMPLETION OF A Modern School for the Violin

BY

AUGUST WILHELMJ AND JAMES BROWN.

THE purpose of this Work is to provide, in one systematic and comprehensive scheme, all that is necessary for the acquirement of the Art of Modern Violin Playing.

"A Modern School for the Violin" consists of Six Books devoted to Daily Technical Practice, Six Books of Studies for Violin alone, and a large number of Pieces with Pianoforte Accompaniment, the Violin parts being specially edited for the purposes of teaching.

SECTION A.—TECHNICAL PRACTICE. IN SIX BOOKS.

The foundation of "A Modern School for the Violin" is laid by means of a series of Six Books dealing exclusively with the important subject of DAILY TECHNICAL PRACTICE. The First Book of Technical Practice (Book 1A) is limited to the 1st Position; the Second Book (2A) to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the Third Book (3A) to the first five Positions; and so on. Bowings and other technical devices are introduced in a similarly progressive manner throughout. Each Book of Technical Practice is divided into "Lessons" (or Chapters), and each Lesson contains a number of short repeating Exercises on some definite point of Violin Technique—as Fingering, Bowing, &c., with the needful explanations. Included in each Book will be found a complete set of Scales and Arpeggi, arranged according to the particular stage of advancement reached.

Taken as a whole, this Section is intended to facilitate, and to insist on, a thorough, steady, and continuous progress in the mastery of the Instrument, this being the only possible means of preparing the groundwork for artistic achievement with all its lasting delights.

SECTION B.—STUDIES. IN SIX BOOKS.

Section B is formed of a series of original and selected Studies, in Six Books. Each Book of Studies (Section B) is carefully co-ordinated, in respect of difficulty and range of subject, with the correspondingly numbered Book of Technical Practice (Section A). Thus the First Book of Studies (1B) is written in the 1st Position; the Second Book (2B) in the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the 3rd Book (3B) in all Positions up to and including the 5th; and so on. It should further be explained that the two Sections are designed to complement one another, and that the "School" must be practised, not in single Books of Technical Practice and Studies alternately, but in pairs. Thus, Books 1A and 1B are to be taken concurrently, then Books 2A and 2B, 3A and 3B, and so on, and the appropriate pairs are now issued bound together in cloth (see Cloth Bindings below).

BY

EMILY R. DAYMOND.

PREFACE.

This second book of Score-Reading Exercises is intended for the use of candidates for the A.R.C.O. Examination, and for other Examinations which include among their tests reading from three treble clefs and a bass clef. The examples in which the notes are detached or grouped in an unusual way are specially intended to give practice in reading Chorus from ordinary Vocal Score, a process which the arrangement of the notes according to the syllables renders somewhat difficult. The Exercises are arranged in order of difficulty. E. R. D.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

SEVENTH AND REVISED EDITION.

A HANDBOOK OF EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC

CONTAINING

600 QUESTIONS WITH ANSWERS

BY

ERNEST A. DICKS,

Fellow of the Royal College of Organists.

The scope of this book covers the whole ground of theoretical examinations in music. It supplies an invaluable equipment to candidates entering for the various Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge held periodically throughout the country, and it will be found extremely useful to those who are preparing for the higher grades of Diploma and Degree Examinations.

The book is therefore very comprehensive. Its range includes questions and answers in Theory, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Organ, Acoustics, Musical History, Organ Construction, and Choir Training.

By no means the least valuable part of the volume is that section, consisting of upwards of one hundred pages, which contains reprints of examination papers set by the Associated Board, Trinity College, and the Incorporated Society of Musicians; the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, London, Dublin, Durham, and Edinburgh, and the Victoria University; The Royal Academy of Music, The Royal College of Music, and The Royal College of Organists. The advantage of having so many specimens of these actual examination papers within one cover is too obvious to need further comment or amendment.

PREFACE TO THE SEVENTH EDITION.

Through the kindness of Dr. E. H. Turpin the seventh edition of the handbook of Examinations in Music includes the latest type of Papers by Trinity College of Music, London, in their scheme of Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge.

The work will also be found to have been considerably enlarged by addition of fifty specimen questions, with answers. They have been added for the most part after the manner of those set in the Theory paper for the L.R.A.M. Diploma, and also that required by candidates for the Higher Practical Examinations held by Trinity College of Music, London. The author earnestly hopes that these additions will considerably enhance the value of the Handbook, and render it especially helpful to students. E. A. D.

Price, cloth, Three Shillings and Sixpence.

LIVERPOOL CHILDREN'S FESTIVAL.

April 24.

Success again attended these competitions, inaugurated three years ago, and an entry list representing about 1,000 children was attracted. Dr. McNaught, Mr. Harry Evans and Mr. W. P. Hartwell Jones adjudicated. In the chief competition, for which Elgar's "The snow" was the test, the following choirs sang:

- Nottingham Girls (Mr. W. Turner).
- Garston Juvenile (Mr. M. W. Humphreys).
- Linacre (Mr. O. R. Williams).
- Sutton (Mr. W. Knapper).
- 1st. Revue, Blackpool (Mr. J. R. Rigby).
- 2nd. Rhos Bethlehem Juvenile (Mr. Jacob Edwards).

In the class for local elementary schools the Hebrew schools (Mr. W. G. Hughes) were first, and Laurence Road (Mr. A. Dennison) second prize-winners; the other competing choirs were:

- Park Hill H.G. (Mr. W. Horton Maxwell).
- Holy Trinity, Walton Breck (Mr. W. Scott).
- Clint Road (Mr. O. R. Owen).
- St. Cleopas (boys) (Mr. J. A. Lewis).
- Dovedale Road (Mr. Alfred Musker).
- Birchfield Road (Mr. Ernest E. Jeffries).
- Venice Street (Mr. A. E. Evans).
- Holy Trinity C.S., Wavertree (Mr. W. Dickin).
- Webster Road (Mr. Jos. Stead).
- "Rathbone" (Mr. T. J. Gawne).
- St. Clement's (Mr. A. R. Campey).
- Arnot Street (Mr. H. J. Herd).

Dr. McNaught, in announcing the awards, said that never in all his experience had he heard finer singing than by these children's choirs. He could hardly have dreamt it possible that children should have been trained to sing with such perfection. In a competition for folk-song singing, Holy Trinity, Walton Breck (Mr. W. Scott) were successful. Fourteen choirs sang own-choice unison songs, and it must be confessed that, on the whole, the performance was marvellous. The success of the festival is largely due to the energies of Mr. R. T. Edwards, trainer and conductor of the Liverpool "Village" Choir, which has made a name in the North by its competition successes.

BRIGG (N. LINCOLNSHIRE).

April 26, 27.

There were 38 entries in the adult classes, and 60 in junior classes. South Killingholme was first in the male-voice trio class, Thornton Curtis first in the male village class, and Crowle in the chief choral class. Sight-singing was made much of in the junior classes.

Crowle boys did very well in this class and others. Certificates were given on each evening. The principals were Miss Gladys Honey, Miss Barbara Brooke, Mr. George Cary-Elwes, and Mr. Pedro de Zulueta. Harry Evans adjudicated.

RETTFORD.

April 27, 28.

A slight falling-off was shown in the entry list, but not in the quality of singing. In the various juvenile choral tests the winners were East Retford National Boys' Glee Club, North Grove and St. John's, Worksop, for the singing of test-pieces; Retford Wesleyan, Clayworth and East Retford National Girls' Glee Club for sight-reading; East Retford National Girls' Glee Club for sight-reading. The successful adult choirs were East Retford (female voice), Hensley and Bawtry (village), Welbeck Abbey (male-voice), Tuxford Church (male and men), Edinstowe (sight-reading), and Rampton (mixed-voice choirs). In the last class the tests were Stanford's "Corydon, arise" and Brahms's "The trysting-place," and eight choirs competed. The adjudicators were Mr. Sydney Nicholson and Mr. Theodore Walrand.

SOUTH KESTEVEN (BOURNE, LINCOLNSHIRE).

April 28, 29.

This competition is in its second year. It is promoted by the Countess of Ancaster, who herself conducts a choir, and she is loyally aided by Miss Bell, the secretary, and a local committee. The singing was often very good, and was pronounced by Dr. McNaught, who adjudicated, to be an improvement on that of last year. Mr. W. H. Wing conducted performances of the combined choirs.

ASHBOURNE, DERBYSHIRE.

April 29.

This festival was inaugurated last year, and owing to its unexpected success it was held in a specially erected marquee, as there was no hall large enough in Ashbourne. This year the promoters were fortunate enough to secure the use of Denstone College, a large boys' school a few miles outside the town. As there are two large halls and many other conveniences for dealing with large numbers in these commodious premises the festival received a great impetus, and attracted not only numerous entries but large audiences. The children's singing showed much excellent training, and the adult choirs showed that the lessons of last year had not been learned in vain. It is worthy of note that Mr. Herbert Newbould, a local enthusiast and an expert choir trainer, brought in no fewer than fifteen entries. His choirs were generally successful. We regret not to be able to give details. We must be content to offer hearty congratulations to Lady Florence Duncombe on the results of her spirited enterprise, and to Dr. Bull, who so admirably organized the event. The adjudicators were Dr. McNaught and Mr. Harry Evans.

BURY.

April 29, 30, MAY 1.

A slight falling-off in the number of entries, chiefly noticeable in the solo classes, was the only feature of this year's festival that was not satisfactory. The judges, Mr. T. MORECAMBE.

May 5, 6, 7, 8.

This premier event did not reach its best results in matter of entries or audiences. There are special circumstances to account for this. Trade languor and this depression rapidly tells upon a place like Morecambe. Then, the institution of so many and competitive festivals in the district is apparently doing a supply greater than there is demand. But notwithstanding these set-backs, which all who value the festival must hope are but temporary, the musical standard of the performances in the chief classes were still of the highest. It is rumoured that some choirs kept back because of the difficulty of the part set as tests. This may very well be true; but if Morecambe standards to be whittled down to the capacity of second-rate choirs? It must never be forgotten that during the last ten years or so Morecambe tests have not merely revolutionised the choral technique of many of the best equipped choirs in the country, but in turn have reacted upon the best composers. If Mr. Aldous's Lancaster choir could get nearly full marks by a marvellous performance of an epoch-making part-song, it is shown that such positions are possible to good choirs when led by a man of insight and skill. We have not space just now to discuss this and other questions that arise in connection with the Morecambe programme. It must be sufficient to say that broadly, in this particular at least, the festival maintained its lead. Much of the musical success of the event was due to the long-sustained and untiring efforts of the music librarian and conductor of the Morecambe Madrigal Society.

As usual, a feature was made of the concert. A special festival choir was prepared by Dr. Coward and did first-rate service. The programme included cantatas "Hero and Leander" (C. H. Lloyd) and "God's own time" (Bach), and Richter's Mass. The Orchestra supplied accompaniments and played occasional pieces.

he adjudicators were Dr. H. Walford Davies, H. Coward, Dr. G. R. Sinclair, Mr. S. H. Nicholson, C. H. Fogg and Miss E. Robinson. Dr. McNaught absent for the first time since 1898. The chief lists are given below:—

DONCASTER. AN INTER-COUNTY FESTIVAL.

May 4, 5, 6.

This festival was inaugurated two years ago for the purpose of allowing the chief competitors of the festivals held at Retford, York, Brigg, Pontefract, &c., to compare notes with one another. It was also hoped that the new centre would stir up other districts including Doncaster. This year's event drew a good number of entries, and to a great extent justified the hopes of its promoters, among whom as the chief must be mentioned Mrs. Peake, of Bawtry Hall. On the children's day the platform presented a gay and animated scene. The Doncaster Wesleyan Boys won two first-prizes, Wath-on-Dease another, Bawtry and Crowle were also successful in their class. Maypole-dancing was admirably managed, Mrs. Walker's party from Bawtry coming first of three. In the instrumental section the Hon. Mrs. Sandays' string quartet party was placed first by Mr. Jacoby, and the Doncaster Orchestral Society (Mr. Charles Reasbeck) gained the first place for string orchestras and were awarded seventy-two out of eighty marks for a performance of Grieg's "Peer Gynt" Suite. Other first-prize winners were South Killingholme, Rainskill, Ulceby, Retford Wesleyan, Darrington Ladies' Choir and Doncaster Musical Society. Dr. McNaught adjudicated in all but the instrumental sections. Concerts in which well-known professional performers took part were great features of the gathering. Miss Gladys Honey, Miss Barbara Brooke, Mr. Gervase Elwes and Mr. Pedro de Zulueta sang Dr. Walford Davies's "Nursery Rhymes," and each contributed songs. At the first concert Mr. Jacoby played violin solos, and at the second that marvellous child, Miss Vivien Chartres, exhibited her skill on the same instrument. The audiences at the competitions were fair, but at the first concert the fine hall looked bare. It may be hoped that the great satisfaction of the audience at both concerts will help to improve attendance at the next festival.

WEYBRIDGE (WEST SURREY COMPETITIONS). May 5, 6.

Under the management of the Misses Egerton, and with Mr. T. Tertius Noble as adjudicator, the fifth annual festival was held with the usual success.

In the junior competitions St. James' Boys', Weybridge; Stepgates, Chertsey; Great Bookham Girls'; St. Paul's Girls', Addlestone, were first-prize winners. The other competing choirs were School of Handicrafts, Chertsey; St. Paul's Boys', Addlestone; and St. James' Girls', Weybridge.

DORSET CHORAL ASSOCIATION. Weymouth, May 6.

The first Dorset Eisteddfod has long been a source of pleasurable anticipation to the countryside, and has more than realised expectations. A preliminary "weeding out" process held at different centres left twenty-nine choirs to take part in the competitions at Weymouth. The various first-prizes were won by Dorchester Madrigal Society (chief choral class), Poole and Parkstone (town choral societies), St. John's, Weymouth (men and boys' choirs), Winfrith (large villages), South Perrott (small villages), Weymouth Harmonic (male voice), Dorchester Ladies (female voice). At the final concert all choirs combined to sing Handel's "Round about the starry throne," conducted by Mr. Harry Evans, who, with Mr. T. F. Dunhill, adjudicated.

CENTRAL AND EAST ESSEX (WITHAM AND CHELMSFORD).

May 7, 8.

This festival has grown considerably since it started in 1906, and the competition held this year marked a further step in its progress. The children's day attracted twelve schools. It was held at Witham, and Mr. B. Luard-Selby adjudicated. In the competition for small elementary schools, Kelvedon School (Mr. W. J. Brett) were winners, and in that for children's choirs other than elementary schools or church choirs, Layer Marney S.S. were successful. In each case there were three entries.

The entries in the open class for elementary schools were as follows:

- Hatfield-Peverel (Mr. A. Bennett).
Witham C.S. (Mr. E. C. Quick).

The adult competitions, in which Dr. H. P. Allen was the adjudicator, were held at Chelmsford on the second day. The principal choral classes resulted as follows:

THE WORCESTERSHIRE FESTIVAL, KIDDERMINSTER, May 10, 11, 12.

This festival has been in existence for a good number of years, and has been held usually at Malvern or Worcester. It was thought desirable to stir up interest in a new quarter of the county, and this year the event was held at Kidderminster. The citizens welcomed the festival and gave it every possible facility. The entries, spread over three days, were fairly numerous. The public attendances at the competitions and concerts were fair but not wholly satisfactory. There were five entries for the pianoforte trio class, the test being Schumann's Op. 63. Miss Dickens's party was placed first. A string orchestra from Moseley, under Mr. Richard Wassall, played remarkably well. In an open female-voice choir class, in which the tests were: "Weep ye no more" (Buck) and "The Violet" (Bennett), the Coventry Girls' and Women's Institute, under Mrs. Petty, gained an unmistakable victory over three ladies' choirs. Their performance of both the tests was beautiful and touching. In the village choir class there were six entries, the first place falling to Whittington (Mr. A. Barry). In the town choir class the Kidderminster Society (Mr. Irving Glover) came within one mark of Stourbridge (Mr. G. Jackson). Dr. McNaught adjudicated.

The choirs were united with an excellent orchestra in order to perform Mendelssohn's "As the hart pants," Franck's setting of the 150th Psalm, and Bach's "The Lord is a sun and shield." These and other pieces were very adequately given under the baton of Mr. Ivor Atkins. The festival owes much of its success to the efforts of Miss Bromley Martin, the secretary.

BRISTOL.

May 10 to 13.

For the seventh annual Eisteddfod the adjudicators were Mr. Kennerley Rumford, Mr. Daniel Price, Mr. Thomas B. Knott, Mr. Sydney Blakiston, Mr. Hans Wessely, Mr. Ernest A. Dicks, and Mrs. Tobias Matthay. A feature of the festival was the competition in pianoforte playing for which the prize was a £50 pianoforte. There were forty-one entries, and Miss Effie Rogers (Birmingham) was the lucky prize-winner. The successful competitors in solo-singing were:

- Soprano (50 entries).—Miss Tavener.
Classical Soprano Song (31 entries).—Miss Pauline Allen.
Baritone (22 entries).—Fred Phillips.
Bass (10 entries).—A. Lathey.

In the men's-choir competition, the Eroica Choir, Bristol, received first-prize.

PEOPLE'S PALACE.

May 10 to 15.

This festival, now in its second year, again fully demonstrated its utility. There are large numbers of competitors, but the meetings are not very well patronized by the public. In the adult section the Barclay's Bank Musical Society (men's voices), under Mr. J. W. Lewis, very much distinguished themselves, and Mr. G. Day-Winter's mixed-voice choir and his female-voice choir also won prizes. Nine institute and girls' club choirs sang in one class, the St. James's Young Women's Guild, under Mrs. Knowle, winning the first place. Ten other female-voice choirs competed in another section, the Shoreditch C.E. Women's Help Society (Mrs. W. A. Warren) coming first. The Clarnico Choral Society, under Mr. T. H. Warner, was unchallenged in the commercial choirs section. Fourteen choirs from places of worship came; St. Mary's, Stratford, and Lycett Wesleyan were first in their respective sections.

The adjudicators were Dr. H. Walford Davies, Dr. W. G. McNaught, and Dr. A. Somervell.

A junior concert, conducted by Dr. Somervell, was given on the afternoon of the last day, and an evening concert, conducted by Dr. McNaught, on the evening of the same day. Mr. C. A. Macpherson was the organist. On the latter occasion prizes were distributed by H.R.H. Princess Alexander of Teck. Miss Edith Barran is the secretary of the festival.

TONBRIDGE AND DISTRICT.

May 11, 12.

The eighth annual competition of the Tonbridge and District Musical Festival Association took place at Sevenoaks on the above dates. The judges were Dr. Walford Davies and Mr. Charles Jacoby. At the children's concert and prize-giving, the shield and picture, held for one year, were presented to the two schools, Leybourne and Hildenborough, who won them in the individual school examination conducted by Mr. W. G. Rothery in March.

There was a very successful concert in the Club Hall when Dvorak's "Patriotic Hymn" was performed by the combined choirs, conducted by Dr. Walford Davies and accompanied by the Tonbridge Orchestral Society. This Society, conducted by Mr. H. C. Stewart, sang "Coriolan" (Beethoven), and "Fingal's Cave" (Mendelssohn). Dr. Walford Davies and Mr. Jacoby played a Brahms Sonata (violin and pianoforte). The prizes won in competition were distributed by the Countess of Kerry.

In the chief choral competition Mendelssohn's Psalm "As the hart pants," Elgar's "My love dwell in a northern land" and Bantock's "On Himalay" were the tests. Of the two choirs who entered, Darrington proved superior to Brotherton; a result that was repeated in the sight-reading test. Other winners in the open classes were Monkfryston and District (female-voice and Normanton (male-voice). In the local classes prizes were taken by Darrington (female-voice), Backworth (male-voice), Wentbridge (madrigal-singing and Darrington (mixed-voice village choirs). In the junior competitions, Wragley National, Pontefract Wesleyan and Knottingley National Schools were successful. Mr. Harry Evans adjudicated.

BERKS, BUCKS AND OXON.

May 11, 12, 13, 14, 15.

This well-managed event continues to draw in thousands of competitors. This year about 500 individuals took part. Instrumental and vocal prizes were strong features. Mrs. Commeline's Beaconsfield Choir secured a challenge shield. Other successful choirs were the Wallington Ladies', the Brightwell Musical Society, St. Michael's and All Angels', Hughenden St. Margaret's Orchestra, the Rev. C. S. Evershed Windsor Choir, the Henley Singing Class, Holy Trinity Church Choir, and the Beaconsfield Girls' Festival Society. We regret we cannot afford space to report other winners.

On the last evening the combined choirs met at St. George's Chapel and sang Mendelssohn's 42nd Psalm and a Bach cantata, conducted by Sir Walter Parratt.

THE ROYAL NATIONAL EISTEDDFOD.

1: JUNE 15 TO 18 AT THE ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

1: This event promises to be of great interest. Londoners will avail themselves of the opportunity of hearing some of the finest Welsh choirs, as well as the English choirs that have entered.

1: The chief choral mixed-voice class will be held on Friday, June 15, and the male-voice class on Friday, June 18.

1: We regret that we are unavoidably obliged to abstain from the reports of some recently-held competitions.

THE BLACKPOOL FESTIVAL.

1: IN view of the festival to be held this year on October 13 to 16, the following extract from the report on the last festival will be read with interest:

1: Dr. McNAUGHT.

1: To my mind the most important feature of the 1908 Festival was the Special Concert in which the newly-organized Festival Chorus took so prominent a part. There are not likely to be any important developments of the competitive side of the scheme, for the simple and satisfactory reason that the standards of execution in the chief classes are already as high as probably they are ever likely to be. But the scope for expansion in the way of concert performance is practically illimitable, if the material available and potential can be focussed on great choral works. If this end can be achieved, the already handsome educational edifice of the Blackpool Festival will be appropriately crowned. But such a pious hope can only be one of the objectives of a festival which makes its appeal to so wide an area. We have to reckon with local patriotism which has its proper pride in more or less perfect local units, and which may not be so keen to lose identity in a large chorus.

1: Whatever the justice of the result arrived at by us in the box, we all strained to the utmost our attention and powers of comparison. No one is infallible, not even (to vary a well-known remark) the least experienced of the friends of choirs that were not successful.

1: Mr. LANDON RONALD.

1: From a musical point of view, I can only say that I was literally astonished at the high status that was maintained. Most of the choral singing was, to my mind, a revelation, and though, perhaps, the orchestral playing interested me even more, I must admit that the deepest impression I carried away with me was the most truly remarkable choral singing I had ever heard.

1: In conclusion, I can only assure you of my heartiest sympathy with the movement, and my admiration for the splendid enthusiasm and keenness shown on all sides.

1: Mr. ALLEN GILL.

1: I had heard often of the singing of those North country choirs, but what I heard hardly prepared me for their wonderful singing, such enthusiasm, such tone, such a mastery surmounting of technical difficulties. It filled me with amazement and delight. They were so wonderfully responsive, too, to their conductor's wishes. It was with difficulty I restrained myself to the required coolness of an adjudicator. I wanted to applaud with the crowd, but Dr. McNaught would not let me. He reminded me of my duties. The singing of the Male-Voice Choirs in particular impressed me.

1: There is no doubt that these competitive festivals have a tremendous educational value, and that they are doing much to keep alive the love of choral music, which is the particular heritage of the English people.

1: Mr. HARRY EVANS.

1: The great development of your unique festival has led me to expect uncommon proficiency in the performance of the music selected for competition, and the many instances of this high standard of merit, especially in the choral and orchestral classes, on Saturday, provide an ample and fitting reward to the extensive labours of the promoters. But there is one still more striking result. I refer to the way you have succeeded in "training your audiences." The patient, intelligent way they followed what was in many cases intricate, and in some rather obscure music, spoke volumes for the work done by your festival in this direction, and the development of musical art depends so much on the "training of the audience."

1: Some of the singing in the Male Choir Classes (alto lead) was exceptionally good, whilst in the Ladies' Choir Class we had the most delicate, refined, and charming singing one could wish to hear. That the choirs should be able to "tackle the tests" you set them is most hopeful and commendable, but that they should get through with such excellent results sets all doubts at rest as to the future of choral singing in the North. I wonder whether orchestral-playing will show a corresponding advance in your festival! Let us hope so.

Mr. PAUL VALLON.

I regret to say that the baritone class, as a whole, compared somewhat unfavourably with the baritones whom I had the pleasure of adjudicating at the Festival of last year.

In this class no voice was disclosed of any exceptional power or beauty of tone; not only was this the case, but the class, as a whole, was remarkable for the amount of throatiness displayed. This is a fault (unhappily, generally more prevalent in tenors) which in itself precludes any voice-colouring, or high artistic achievement, however musically inspired the singer may be.

The rapid alternation of short pieces of recitative and aria proved too much for most of the competitors. The majority failed to distinguish between the broader and more "open" style necessary for recitative, and the more subtle "cantabile" style suitable for arias.

Amongst the competitors in Class 19 (contralto dramatic solo), there were many fortunate possessors of very fine voices. A goodly number were also extremely intelligent and musically gifted, but their vocal technique, as a rule, left very much to be desired.

Madame EDITH HANDS.

When Edmund Burke, the eloquent, had addressed his constituents, his fellow-member, slow of speech, rose and said, "I say ditto to Mr. Burke," and forthwith sat down. Following his example, I say "ditto" to the experienced and most capable special representative of the Daily Telegraph, whose admirable articles on the 1908 Blackpool Festival have emphasised the fact that, while preceding festivals were excellent, this year's is "facile princeps," not only in numbers but in quality. The voices were not only first-rate, but the readings were most artistic and the general tout ensemble much nearer perfection.

Mr. CHAS. H. FOGG.

Class 33, "Rondo" (Mozart), was the most successful of the pianoforte classes. The piece was well played, with just the lightness of texture necessary in execution, and well interpreted.

Class 31, "Allegretto Grazioso" (Cyril Scott), and Class 34, "Fireside tales," Nos. 1 and 2 (MacDowell). These were the disappointing sections. In the first, the candidates did not seem to appreciate the modern harmonization, or the new colouring suggested. In the second, the romance and poetry of the first piece by MacDowell were entirely wanting, and the execution of the second piece a trouble to all the executants. A return to the classics seems advisable, and a new class for older players joining for the advanced pianoforte class.

Mr. DAN PRICE.

My expectations were certainly high. The renown of this celebrated Festival has gone far and wide, and my expectations were not disappointed.

The voices were nearly all good in quality and well-produced, but I was more struck by the general good taste displayed in the singing than by the voices. Good voices are much more often met with than good style, but good style and taste were the outstanding features in this competition, and, in my opinion, this is almost entirely due to these competitive festivals, which have a wonderful effect in quickly raising the standard of musical culture and refinement in the localities where they are held.

THE ASSOCIATION OF MUSICAL COMPETITION FESTIVALS.

DATES OF COUNCIL MEETING AND CONFERENCE.

The Council meeting of this Association will be held on July 14, and the annual Conference on July 15, at Messrs. Broadwood's, Conduit Street, London, W.

WHEATLEY STREET GIRLS' AND WOMEN'S INSTITUTE CHOIR, COVENTRY.

At the recent Kidderminster (Worcestershire) competition one of the most remarkable incidents was the beautiful singing of the Wheatley Street Institute Choir. The test-pieces in the female-voice class were:

Trios { "Weep you no more" Buck.
"The Violet" Bennett.

Some of the other choirs of ladies sang very well, but the tone, precision, accuracy and deep expressiveness of the Wheatley Choir easily placed them first. At our invitation Mrs. Petty has written a short account of her method of working. It will be seen that the beautiful result secured was not owing to the working girls and women having greater natural capacity than the ladies against whom they were pitted, but to industry, science and all-round enthusiasm. Mrs. Petty says:—

The choir originated in this way. For eight years my husband was music-teacher at the Coventry Pupil Teachers' Centre. After the last annual concert the outgoing students begged that he would form them into a permanent choir. He talked the matter over with Miss Dix, the principal of the Wheatley Street Girls' and Women's Institute, and suggested that a girls' choir would form a nice feature of the work of the Institute. She immediately fell in with the idea, consulted the education authority and secured their consent to the formation of two classes—elementary and advanced. I was appointed teacher, and was fortunate in getting together a very intelligent set of girls to begin with. They are mostly teachers and office-workers. The advanced class (which is the choir) consists of twenty-eight members. The first rehearsal was held in September, and they have been continued weekly until last week. Each rehearsal lasts two hours.

As I know that voice-production is the rock upon which all pleasurable singing is built, I begin each lesson with half-an-hour's practice of exercises, scales, and "Concone." Then for the next hour we sing part-songs or classical songs in unison. I hear each "part" individually—not each individual individually—as occasionally they (the "parts") demand special treatment. The last half-hour is devoted to solo-singing. Two girls are told off to bring songs which they prepare at home. This forms a useful as well as an interesting and recreative finish to the night's work, giving the soloists confidence and preparing them for concert singing. Being a trained singer myself (contralto), I am able to "pattern" all difficult phrases. This I find the shortest way to secure a fine result, the pupils imitating the style in a manner which could not be secured by hours of talking. The only training in conducting I have received I picked up from my husband, in whose choir I sang for eight years. This choir was once described by the late Dr. Turpin as "Perfect," and by Dr. McNaught as "one of the seven or eight best choirs in the country." I model my conducting on his and emulate his style.

THE

TENTERDEN STREET, HANOVER SQUARE.

INSTITUTED, 1822.

INCORPORATED BY ROYAL CHARTER, 1830.

Patron: HIS MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND STRATHEARN, K.G.

PRINCIPAL—SIR ALEXANDER CAMPBELL MACKENZIE, Mus.D., LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.A.M.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC offers to students of both sexes (whether amateur or professional) a thorough training in all branches of music under the most able and distinguished Professors. In addition to receiving individual lessons in the various branches of the Curriculum, students have the advantage of attending the Orchestral, Choral, and Chamber Music Classes, and the weekly Lectures on music and musicians. Evidence of their progress is given at the Fortnightly and Public Concerts and by periodical Operatic and Dramatic Performances.

There are three Terms in the Academic year—viz., the Michaelmas Term, from Michaelmas to Christmas; the Lent Term, from early in January to Easter; and the Midsummer Term, from early in May until the end of July.

The Fee for the ordinary curriculum is 11 Guineas per Term.

A large number of Scholarships and Prizes are founded and are competed for periodically.

Students who show special merit and ability receive the distinction of being elected by the Directors Associates of the Institution, and are thereby entitled to the use after their names of the initials A.R.A.M. Students who distinguish themselves in the musical profession after quitting the Institution may be elected by the Directors Fellows of the Royal Academy of Music, and are thereupon entitled to the use after their names of the initials F.R.A.M.

Subscribers have the privilege of attending the Lectures and Public Concerts and of introducing friends in proportion to the amount of their subscriptions.

An examination of persons trained independently of the Academy is held twice a year—viz., during the Summer and Christmas vacations—successful candidates at which are elected Licentiates of the Academy, and are thereupon entitled to the use after their names of the initials L.R.A.M. The syllabus is issued annually at Easter. Last day for entry for the September Examination, June 30; for the Christmas Examination, October 30.

An examination of persons engaged in the Training of Children's Voices is held in September and during the Christmas Vacation, and a certificate will be granted to successful candidates.

Prospectus, entry form, and all further information may be obtained on application.

CLUMSY

is generally due to lack of development in certain muscles of the fingers, hands and arms, and in the nerves which control them. These are the instruments the brain uses in piano playing.

The more imperfect the instruments, the more defective is the playing. Effective means must therefore be used to develop these muscles and train these nerves. Hard practising at the keyboard is laborious and rarely successful; the training given by Macdonald Smith goes however so successfully to the root of the matter that pupils often describe results as "magical."

(BOOK 2)

BY

EMILY R. DAYMOND.

PREFACE.

This second book of Score-Reading Exercises is intended for the use of candidates for the A.R.C.O. Examination, and for other Examinations which include among their tests reading from three treble clefs and a bass clef. The examples in which the notes are detached or grouped in an unusual way are specially intended to give practice in reading Choruses from ordinary Vocal Score, a process which the arrangement of the notes according to the syllables renders somewhat difficult. The Exercises are arranged in order of difficulty. E. R. D.

SEVENTH AND REVISED EDITION.

A HANDBOOK OF EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC

CONTAINING

600 QUESTIONS WITH ANSWERS

BY

ERNEST A. DICKS,

Fellow of the Royal College of Organists.

The scope of this book covers the whole ground of theoretical examinations in music. It supplies an invaluable equipment to candidates entering for the various Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge held periodically throughout the country, and it will be found extremely useful to those who are preparing for the higher grades of Diploma and Degree Examinations.

The book is therefore very comprehensive. Its range includes questions and answers in Theory, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Fugue, Acoustics, Musical History, Organ Construction, and Choir Training.

By no means the least valuable part of the volume is that section, consisting of upwards of one hundred pages, which contains reprints of past examination papers set by the Associated Board, Trinity College, and the Incorporated Society of Musicians; the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, London, Dublin, Durham, and Edinburgh, and the Victoria University; The Royal Academy of Music, The Royal College of Music, and The Royal College of Organists. The advantage of having so many specimens of these actual examination papers within one cover is too obvious to need further comment or commendation.

PREFACE TO THE SEVENTH EDITION.

Through the kindness of Dr. E. H. Turpin the seventh edition of the Handbook of Examinations in Music includes the latest type of Papers set by Trinity College of Music, London, in their scheme of Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge.

The work will also be found to have been considerably enlarged by the addition of fifty specimen questions, with answers. They have been designed for the most part after the manner of those set in the Theory Paper for the L.R.A.M. Diploma, and also that required by candidates for the Higher Practical Examinations held by Trinity College of Music, London. The author earnestly hopes that these additions will considerably enhance the value of the Handbook, and render it increasingly helpful to students. E. A. D.

PROGRESSIVE STUDIES

FOR THE PIANOFORTE

EDITED, ARRANGED IN GROUPS, AND THE FINGERING REVISED AND SUPPLEMENTED

BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

THIS Collection of Studies is intended to illustrate the various elements of a complete course of pianoforte technique, to provide students with the means of attacking and overcoming the different special difficulties which have to be mastered. With this view, the Studies have been arranged in groups, those in each group being placed in progressive order, and having reference to some one particular difficulty. The greater part of the studies themselves have been selected from the standard works of the most eminent Study-writers, and with these are included numerous others, which, though of equally great practical utility, have hitherto been less generally accessible.

PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

IN TWO SETS (EIGHT BOOKS), PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH BOOK.

This present collection of studies is designed to provide teachers with a short course of Pianoforte Technique adapted to the needs of the average pupil, the intention being to spare the teacher the labour of choosing a sufficiently varied selection from the large mass of material existing, and at the same time to ensure that the different departments of technique shall be undertaken in the order which experience has proved to be the most beneficial.

The Studies are grouped in two Sets, and are so arranged that the different Books in which they are contained may be taken in consecutive order, but pupils who are already further advanced than the elementary stage represented by Set I. may commence at once with Set II., which will be found to be complete in itself, and to illustrate all the essential elements of technique.

Where additional studies are desired, or studies on certain subjects which are not touched upon in this series, the larger collection, published under the title of "Progressive Studies" (from which the present examples have been selected), is of course available.

JULY 1, 1909.

THE HAYDN-FESTIVAL AND INTERNATIONAL MUSICAL CONGRESS AT VIENNA.

This is a wonderful place. The old town lies in the middle of it all, and is full of wonderful palaces and houses. Every square or street almost has a statue or group of statues in it, and not mere dummies, but beautiful interesting works, really lovely to look upon. The shops are gorgeous and the people charming.

SIR GEORGE GROVE, on Vienna.

No less felicitous than appropriate was the holding of the third Congress of the International Musical Society during the centenary year of Haydn's death; moreover, the meeting-place was the city wherein the 'father of the symphony' lived, and moved, and had his being—the Vienna of Beethoven, Schubert, and Brahms. Another note in the concordant harmony of events was the fact that a British musician, in the genial personality of Sir Alexander Mackenzie, was elected to preside over the Congress on this memorable occasion. Could the concatenation of circumstances have been more happily devised? We shall see.

The Festival-Congress week covered the period between Monday and Saturday, May 24-29. On the first of those feast-days the votaries of modern music and others had the opportunity of putting their palates to the test by the tasty hors d'œuvre of Dr. Strauss's opera 'Elektra.' Simpler but no less appetising fare awaited the members of the Society when they informally foregathered, for friendly interchange of greetings, in the Volkshalle of the Rathhaus, and listened to the excellent singing of some popular part-songs by the Austrian Society for the Cultivation of Folk-music.

Tuesday, May 25.—The preliminary business of the Congress began at nine o'clock in the morning with a representative gathering of various sections of the International Musical Society, when Sir Alexander Mackenzie, already the Society's resident and who had been appointed by the Foreign Office as British delegate, was elected to the presidency of the Festival and Congress. E. Oskar von Hase, treasurer of the Society, then read the report of the last Congress, held at Leipzig, in 1906 (the first took place at Leipsic in 1904), and a general discussion followed on the past and future working of the Society.

At eleven o'clock, Haydn's well-known 'Mariazeller Mass,' in C (No. 15 in Novello's edition), was performed in the Hofburg Kapelle, with full orchestral accompaniment, under the direction of Herr Karl Luze. This festival mass —composed by Haydn in 1782 for Count Anton Liebe von Kreutzner, of Mariazell, in Styria—was one in the composing of which the master is said to have taken particular pleasure; anyhow, it is certainly an excellent specimen of that cheerfulness which characterises Haydn's religious music. The opening-day's proceedings concluded with a performance, free to members, in the Hofburg Theatre, of 'Julius Cæsar,' as adapted by Hermann Conrad.

Wednesday, May 26.—The Congress proper was inaugurated at the great Musical Assembly Rooms by an address delivered by His Excellency Dr. Laurenz Mayer, Bishop of Vienna, an office which, as of old, is half civil and a part of the Court establishment. In his speech the venerable prelate welcomed the members to Vienna and to the Haydn Centenary Festival. The president (Sir Alexander Mackenzie) and the vice-presidents were then introduced by Professor Dr. Guido Adler. Thereupon Sir Alexander, after accepting the honour of office for himself and the vice-presidents, declared the Congress open. The vice-presidents included:

Director O. G. Sonneck, Washington	} America.
Professor G. C. Gow, Poughkeepsie
Professor Dr. Angul Hammerik, Copenhagen	} Denmark.
M. Vincent d'Indy, Paris
M. Charles Malherbe, Paris	} France.
Professor Hermann Kretzschmar, Berlin
Professor Hermann Kretzschmar, Berlin	} Germany.
Don Ambrogio Amelli, Monte Casino
Don Lorenzo Perosi	} Italy.
M. Valentin, Secretary of the Academy of Music, Stockholm
Professor Wagner, Switzerland

The president then cordially thanked the State, the Country, the City, as well as the Musikverein for their warm welcome, and briefly touched upon the objects and aims of the Congress, one that was so well and numerously represented by distinguished delegates of all nationalities. 'And where do we meet?' he asked. 'Why, in a city which has long been acknowledged the home of science and art, a city whose traditions are worthily being maintained at the present moment. Here we all feel the breath of musical genius. In imagination we can call up the figures of Beethoven, Schubert, and Brahms as they walked along the streets of the city in which they worked in the flesh. Their spirits still hover around us. Could any better territory be found for a gathering of cosmopolitan musicians? We are proud to honour the memory of the "father" of them all—Haydn. And I am glad that all the great composers had intimate relationships with England. As to Beethoven and his gratitude to my country, ask history. England received Haydn with open arms; he liked us well and gave us of his best. We are proud to think that his oftenest played orchestral works bear the name of the "London Symphonies." Moreover, it was to England and English choral societies that the world owed the impulse which resulted in the "Creation" and the "Seasons." Oxford gladly added his name to the roll of its doctors of music.

The childlike simplicity and humour of Haydn's music still delights us all. The happy combination of his centenary and the holding of the International Congress is a matter for hearty congratulation, and, as a natural result, I foresee a closer union and more perfect harmony between musicians of all countries.' The president's speech was very warmly received and applauded.

Count Karl Stürgkh, Minister of Culture and Education, gave an address of welcome. Speaking in French, he pointed out the great development of the science of music since Haydn's day, and dwelt upon the importance of the Congress and the official support which music received in Austria. Then the Ober-Bürgermeister, Dr. Lueger, in a witty speech, welcomed the Congress in the name of the city of Vienna. 'You will find,' he said, 'that when six men meet here they all speak in different languages, unintelligible to each other, but when music sounds, we all understand!' After he had spoken of his own predilection for folk-music and the popular strains so dear to the Viennese, he invited the members to the Rathhaus to supper that evening, adding, 'I do not know what you will get, so I will not make any promises, but I hope you will be satisfied.'

At noon a most enjoyable Haydn-Festival concert was given in Musikvereins-Gebäude, under the able direction of Herr Felix Weingartner. The programme opened with the Overture in D. This was followed by an excellently thought-out oration on Haydn by Dr. Guido Adler, who graphically outlined the composer's personality and life-work. To this succeeded the Austrian National Hymn, performed by the choir and orchestra; the first symphony (1759) and the last (London, 1792); while the Te Deum in E, for chorus (the Wiener Singakademie), orchestra and organ concluded a brilliantly executed concert of music entirely composed by Haydn, that called forth unbounded enthusiasm.

In the afternoon, at the University—founded in 1365 by Duke Rudolf IV.—the detailed work of the Congress begun with the delivery of three lectures. The first of these interesting discourses was given by M. Charles Malherbe, archiviste of the Paris Opéra, in which he emphasised the readiness of the French people to receive the music of other nations. Then, by special request, Sir Alexander Mackenzie gave an address on Mendelssohn, the centenary of whose birth coincided with that of the death of Haydn. This address, spoken in German, was well received. The third discourse, by Dr. Alfred Heuss, of Leipsic, was an interesting paper on Handel, in which the lecturer, in defending Handel's plagiarisms, likened him to Napoleon!

In the afternoon visits were paid to the graves and monuments of Gluck, Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert, Johann Strauss, and Brahms.

Brilliant indeed was the scene at the banquet given by the City of Vienna in the Rathhaus, when, in the evening, some 1,200 guests were sumptuously and hospitably entertained under the genial chairmanship of Dr. Lueger, the Burgomaster.

The musical fare provided was no less palatable than the edible portion of the entertainment, as an orchestra played popular waltzes and dance music with true Viennese élan. Among the speeches was one by the president of the Congress (Sir Alexander Mackenzie), who, speaking in German, said: 'This is the second time to-day on which I have appreciated and envied the Burgomaster's fluent tongue and ready wit. I must tell him that when I spoke this morning of the figures of great composers walking in the streets of Vienna, I had another name on the tip of my tongue. I will mention it now, Johann Strauss. The men of science gathered together at the Congress are as fond of dancing as anyone—when they get the chance! If the meaning of the word "classical" is that which serves as a model for all time, then the "Blue Danube" is certainly a classic. I know that the Burgomaster is a doctor, but I am almost sorry to be told that he is a jurist. He ought to be a doctor of music. We need such, and we had better make him one before the Congress is over. One crow I have, however, to pluck with him. Yesterday, I was glad to learn that the next Congress will be held in London. To-night I feel less happy about that information. The City of Vienna has completely spoiled and overwhelmed the members of the International Musical Society by its remarkable treatment of us. Truly this banquet is the double-counterpoint of hospitality! But I know that London will rise to the occasion, even though it might not attempt to vie with the brilliance of the entertainment provided for us this evening.' Needless to say that the speech was enthusiastically received.

Thursday, May 27.—At an early hour in the morning a large company proceeded by train to Eisenstadt, twenty-six miles south-east of Vienna, in response to the invitation of Prince and Princess Esterhazy, to view the resting-place of Haydn. It will be recalled that Haydn was Kapellmeister to the Esterhazy family for thirty years (1761–90), after which he received a pension. On November 7, 1820, his remains were exhumed from the Hundsturm cemetery, Vienna, where they were laid to rest in 1809, and re-interred in the churchyard of Eisenstadt, one of the seats of the Esterhazy family, at the foot of the Leuthian Hills. In addition to many other floral tributes from numerous Gesangvereine the English and Colonial wreaths laid upon Haydn's grave were as follows: The Royal Academy of Music, by Mr. E. E. Cooper, Chairman of the Committee of Management; Messrs. Novello, by Mrs. Frank Pearson, daughter of Mr. Alfred Littleton; and Canada, by Dr. Charles Harriss, the official representative of the Dominion. Haydn's Imperial ('Nelson') Mass was performed in the church, and in the great hall of the palace—where Prince and Princess Esterhazy personally received the visitors and dispensed true Hungarian hospitality—a Symphony by the old 'Papa' was capitolly played, and selections from the 'Creation' and the 'Seasons' were spiritedly sung, nearly all the performers being amateur musicians.

The proceedings of this eventful and enjoyable day terminated with a brilliant reception at the Hofburg, attended by the Court officials and Corps Diplomatique. The Emperor was represented by the Archduke Leopold Salvator, who amiably conversed in turn with prominent members of the International Musical Society who were presented to him by Bishop Mayer.

Friday, May 28.—While the technical work of the Congress, in the reading of sectional papers, continued throughout the day at the University, an interesting historical concert took place in the smaller room of the Musikverein. Compositions by Michael Haydn—a divertimento for flute, violin, viola, horn and bassoon, and two part-songs for male voices—and by his more distinguished brother, were admirably performed by the Rosè Quartet and members of the Imperial Opera Orchestra. Madame Wanda Landowska, one of the greatest living performers on the harpsichord, played some pieces with much acceptance, and Madame Charles Cahier—an American singer, partly of Scots extraction, engaged at the Hofoper—sang delightfully five of Haydn's arrangements of Scottish songs in their original language. The programme was repeated on the following (Saturday) morning.

In the evening a remarkably fine performance of Haydn's 'Seasons' took place at the Musikvereins-Gebäude, under the inspiring direction of Kapellmeister Loewe. The choral singing of the Wiener Gesangverein was notable for its sonority and smoothness. Later in the evening a reception, which lasted into the small hours of the morning, was given in the Ministerium of Culture and Education by the Minister himself. The members of the Society, together with a host of distinguished painters, musicians, actors, and the haute monde of Viennese society, were kindly received by her Excellency Frau Anka Baronin Bienerth, wife of the president-minister, and his Excellency Karl Graf Stürgkh.

Saturday, May 29.—In the afternoon the Congress held its final meeting. At the conclusion of the business the president again thanked the authorities, both public and private, for their great and unremitting kindness. He dwelt upon the great importance and advantages which the Congress had derived from the synchronization of the two events, and made a pointed reference to the future results which would accrue from the friendships which had been formed during that memorable week. 'I must pay,' said Sir Alexander Mackenzie, 'a sincere and praiseworthy tribute to the activity of Dr. Guido Adler, whose perfect organization and all-pervading presence has made everything so easy and pleasant. He is well-named "Guido," for he has guided me like an elder brother throughout the week.' Finally, the president formally announced that London would be the next meeting place of the Congress, a statement which was enthusiastically received by all present. He added, in the words of the Burgomaster, 'I do not know what you will get, but I hope you will be satisfied. Be that as it may, you will find the same hearty intention and spirit prevail in London which has been so warmly manifested here in Vienna. Therefore, I will not speak a word of farewell, but only say a rivederci in London.'

In the evening, under the direction of Herr Felix Weingartner, at the K. K. Hof-Operntheater, performances were given of three one-act operas :

La Serva Padrona	Pergolesi (1710-1736).
L'Isola disabitata	Haydn (1732-1809).
Lo Speciale (Der Apotheker)

The last-named work proved to be most enjoyable. It has been well described as a little (comic) opera 'full of sunny merriment from beginning to end.' During one of Haydn's visits to England, a friend complimented the master, as he naturally would, on the charm of his symphonies, when Haydn exclaimed, 'Ah! but if you could only hear my operas.' A performance in London of the 'Apothecary,' with its hilarious humour and merry music, would be most welcome.

After the opera performances a free-and-easy meeting (Zwangloses Abschiedssouper) at the Kursalon, free of speeches, brought the week's engagements to a genial conclusion.

The artistic entertainments were all of the highest order, and gave every evidence of an incredible amount of minute preparation. In this connection among others the names of Messrs. Weingartner, Loewe, and Rosè deserve special mention for the incessant and very hard work throughout the entire proceedings—work so artistic and enthusiastic as to cover them with glory. The friendly intercourse and amiability of the Viennese reached the high-water mark of perfection. All countries were represented at this enjoyable Festival-Congress, besides in addition to Brazil, the Chinese Embassy sent Mr. Hou Te' Vang, who was present at most of the functions as the representative of the Celestial Empire.

Much of the success of the Festival-Congress was due to the president, Sir Alexander Mackenzie, for the tactful and adaptable manner in which discharged his important duties; to him we are indebted for much of the information contained in the foregoing notice of an eventful week.

In addition to those already named, the following were amongst those present on this memorable occasion: Herr Artaria, Dr. Hugo Botstiber, Herr Angelo von Eisner-Eisenhof (all of Vienna), Prof. Dr. Max Friedlaender (Berlin), and Dr. Adolf Sandberger (Munich). The visitors from England included Miss C. Stainer, Dr. W. A. Aikin, Messrs. Herbert Antcliffe (Sheffield), E. J. Dent (Cambridge), and A. H. D. Prendergast. Another Englishman, lately resident in Vienna, Mr. A. E. Bosworth, showed most courteous and valuable attention to his fellow countrymen. Last, but not least, the heartiest and fullest recognition is due to Dr. Guido Adler, of whom a biographical sketch is given on p. 445, and to Dr. Charles Maclean, the indefatigable and unwearied secretary, for their invaluable and self-denying labours in connection with the great success which attended the Haydn-Festival and International Congress, held at Vienna in this year of grace one thousand nine hundred and nine.

SHEFFIELD PARISH CHURCH.

Few, if any, of the old parish churches in England fail to present some attractive feature, it may be architectural, historical, or musical, or all three combined. Sheffield furnishes an interesting example. Should the wayfarer turn from its busy streets towards the 'God's acre' in the centre of the city, he will find a building of hallowed associations that will repay study from the threefold point of view.

The earliest church of Sheffield of which traces exist, is of the 12th century. Of this building only a few stones, ornamented with chevron enrichments, remain, having been built into the walls of the chancel of the present edifice. To the 15th century belong the tower and rocketed spire, and some parts of the chancel; the last-named has a comparatively modern external casing and windows. The nave is more or less modern, practically a hundred years old. From the end of the 18th century the church was rectangular; but the addition of transepts, in the year 1880, has restored the cruciform shape of the earlier structure.

From the historical point of view the most interesting feature of Sheffield Parish Church is the Shrewsbury Chapel. Situated in the south-west angle of the chancel, it was erected about the year 1510 by George Talbot, fourth Earl of Shrewsbury, who, including his minority, was Lord of Sheffield and Hallamshire for the long period of seventy years.

This place of sepulture contains some remarkably fine monuments. Chief among them is that of the recumbent effigies of the Earl and his two countesses. The inscription on the tomb states that the bodies of both spouses there rest in peace with their lord and master; but this information, being a little too previous, suffers from lack of accuracy, as the Earl's second wife was buried with her ancestors—the Walden family—at Erith, in Kent! The Earl is sculptured with a coronet and clad in the robes of a

Knight of the Garter; his feet rest on a talbot, a rebus to which heralds and sculptors were much addicted, and his hands are joined in prayer. This fine monument is in a splendid state of preservation, having fortunately escaped the terrible ravages associated with the Civil Wars. In the centre of the chapel is another Shrewsbury tomb of later date, bearing the arms of George, the sixth Earl, and erected in 1585 by him as a memorial of his first wife and their four sons. The Earl seems to have been dissatisfied with this unpretentious memorial, as, previous to his death in 1590, he erected a lofty monument on the south side of the chapel. Under a canopy, supported by Corinthian columns, is a reclining effigy of the Earl, clad in armour. The long Latin inscription is by John Foxe, the martyrologist, the rough draft of which is preserved among the Harleian Manuscripts in the British Museum. Foxe died, however, three years before the Earl, who was not content to trust his executors with the memorial, but had it completed, minus the date of his decease, in his lifetime, one of his objects being to rebut aspersions on his character with regard to the custody of Mary Queen of Scots. (It will be remembered that, in 1570, Mary Queen of Scots was brought to Sheffield Castle and committed to the care of the Earl of Shrewsbury, and that she remained there in durance vile for fourteen years.) The Shrewsbury Chapel also contains an ancient relic in the old altar-stones of the church, bearing the crosses with which such stones were marked before the Reformation. At that time, when altars were abolished, these stones were used for flagging, the measurements being suitable. They formed the flagging on which stood the Communion table, and in 1857, as interesting relics, were placed in the Shrewsbury Chapel, resting on stone packings.

The only remaining piece of the old furniture of the church is the ancient sedilia of richly-carved black oak, wherein sat the three chaplains, or priests, who assisted the vicar in his ministrations. (See the illustration above.) In a Parliamentary Report of the year 1649 these three 'assistant ministers,' as they were called, were 'all able and powerful preachers, who have for their salarye fortye markss a-piece.' The registers of the church—which is dedicated to St. Peter—date from 1560, and are in a good state of preservation. They record the interment in the churchyard of one Joseph Taylor, who died on October 26, 1811, and is said to have introduced oratorios into Sheffield, though that claim to distinction might possibly be challenged. Anyhow, epitaph collectors may be glad to add that of Joseph Taylor to their specimens:

To praise his Maker was his joy,
To teach the same was his employ.
Great HANDEL'S notes he forward brought,
MESSIAH was the first he taught.

This oratorio quatrain is followed by a quotation from the 'Messiah,' and the words 'If God be for us, who can be against us?' The registers also record the burial of John Hall, who died, at the Duke of Norfolk's Hospital, in 1794. This old man was the composer of the oratorio 'The Resurrection,' a work several times performed in the town and district. One of his hymn tunes, in the old fugal style, received the commendation of Dr. Crotch. Until about 1850, his compositions were occasionally heard in Sheffield, notably a favourite chorus, 'Shout the angel choirs,' accompanied by musical bells. An oil-painting still exists of John Hall, Sheffield's earliest known composer.

In viewing the interior of Sheffield Parish Church no one can say that 'A prophet is not without honour, save in his own country, and in his own house.' On the south wall of the chancel is the first work in sculpture of Sir Francis Chantrey (1781-1842), who was born four miles from Sheffield. It is a fine bust of the Rev. James Wilkinson, a former vicar of Sheffield, and was executed in 1806. For this excellent piece of work the young sculptor appears not to have been over-remunerated, as an entry in the accounts of the Church Burgesses reads:

Pd. F. Chantrey per E. Rhodes for a bust of the Revd. James Wilkinson £10 10 0

In the Iris, or Sheffield Advertiser of 1802, Mr. Francis Chantrey advertised to take portraits in crayon at 24, Paradise Square, 'and trusts in being happy to produce good and satisfactory likenesses, and no exertion shall be wanting on his part to render his humble efforts deserving some small share of public patronage.' Again, in 1804, Chantrey advertised that he had commenced taking models from life, and hoped to 'excite the liberal sentiments of an impartial public.'

While on the subject of the furniture of the church, it may not be without interest to give a few extracts from the accounts and minutes of 'The Twelve Capital Burgesses and Corporation of the town and parish of Sheffield in the County of York.' This corporate body was created by letters patent of 1554, in the time of Queen Mary II, in order to administer the church finances, which are being by them discharged in the present day. In 1704 the Church Burgesses paid for a Bass in the Reading Desk, the sum of 6d. This expenditure was not, however, for a vocal occupant.

of the said reading desk, but for a kneeling-mat! Twenty-six years later (in 1730) the following entries were made :

Pd. John Hall ye carpenter for making ye Desk in ye Chansell to put ye three Books of ye Marters in which Mr. Toll made a present to ye Church... ..	13 6
Locks, screws and twelve yards of Chaine to make ye Books fast	10 4
Pd. Mr. Haxby for lettering and gilding foxes Book of ye Marters... ..	2 6

Under date of December 4, 1765, is found this disbursement :

Pd. Thomas Wilkinson for an umbrella for Church vse	£2 15 10

At the end of the 18th century pews were sold by auction, as the accounts of 1792 record :

It is now time to turn to the musical associations of Sheffield Parish Church. The earliest known reference to a musical instrument is in the will of John Wickersley, of Broom Hall, Sheffield, dated April 24, 1528. This testamentary document reads :

SHEFFIELD PARISH CHURCH, LOOKING EAST.

John Wickersley of Brome Hall in the parishe of Sheffield, esquier, of hoole mynde and good memorye, al though I be seke in bodie. To be beried in the Roode chapell within the parishe church of Sancte Peter in Sheffield, as nye unto the ymage of the same Roode as conveniently maye be . . . I will that my said ex^{rs} cause the loft in the Roode chapell, wher th' organnes now standes, to be new buylded, and by on sute of vestymnts to be used at the Roode altar for the well of my sall, and all my frendes' saulles.

The instrument referred to in John Wickersley's will is doubtless the same 'organnes' for which the Church Burgesses disbursed the following amounts in the 16th century :

6th Nov., 1560.—Item William Taylor received of Rowland Shepherde for his rents due at the Annunciation of our Ladie last past the sum of £1 2s. of which sum payed to John Howe ye organe maker for a ful acquittance	xs.
1567.—Item pd ye first daye Novr. to John Tysdale for mendynge ye organs and for stuff	iiis. ivd.
1570.—Item pd. ye 6th daye of Februarye to John Tysdale for mendynge ye organes and other stuff to ye same and for ys meals and drynke as doth appear by certayne bylls	xxs. ivd.
1572.—Item payd for a locke and a bolt for ye organes	vid.

In the year 1650 the organ was 'silenced by the puritan spirit which prevailed in the parish,' and it would appear that the instrument was removed either then or shortly afterwards, with the result that the Parish Church of Sheffield remained organless for 155 years! During that long period the church song was orchestrally accompanied, according to the following record in or about the year 1770. 'There was then no solemn loud pealing organ; but before the west window, high over the gallery was a kind of immense large box hung in chains, into which, by the aid of a ladder, musicians and singers, male and female, contrived to scramble, and with the aid of bum basses, hautboys, fiddles, and various other instruments, accompanying shrill and stentorian voices, they contrived to make as loud a noise as heart would wish.' This account, worthy the pen of George Eliot or Thomas Hardy, throws an interesting light on the non-organ days of English church music. Great occasions were the funerals of singers, bass-viol players, and other occupants of the 'immense large box hung in chains,' on which solemn occasions sometimes 200 voices would take part, usually singing selections from the 'Messiah,' with perchance 'vital spark' thrown in to improve the occasion, if not the music. Some of the instrumental part-books in manuscript of those ecclesiastical orchestral days have been preserved, and may be seen in the music library of the church.

How a fair member of the choir was released from temporary imprisonment in the church is recorded in the following incident :

Under the clock, in a large glass case, yet scarcely perceptible in the gloom, was the pendulum, blazoned with an enormous gilt sun, solemnly and mysteriously moving from side to side with a loud, head-piercing tick-a-tack at every vibration.

A singer of the choir once very cleverly availed herself of the use of this pendulum as a means of escape. She had fallen asleep during the service and on awaking she found that everyone had departed and that she was a prisoner. All attempts to attract attention from outside having proved unavailing, she arrested the swing of the pendulum and thus stopped the clock. The clerk, wondering why the clock had stopped, went into the church to discover the cause, and there found the fair singer, who was at once liberated.

In the year 1805, shortly after the completion of the new nave, an organ was erected in the church by G. P. England, at a cost of £770. This amount was probably exclusive of £64 12s. 8d. thus expended :

Pd. Benjamin Ashmore nine days wages for assisting Mr. England to tune and adjust the organ	£ s. d.
18 0
Pd. to him for blowing the organ during the Musical Festival	10 0
Pd. Robt. Turner what he paid for curtain rods and curtains for the organ	33 4 8
Pd. John Smith and John Sheldon for the purchase of their old pew, No. 34 in the gallery, to make room for the organ	15 0 0
Pd. Benjn. Withers for the purchase of his old pew in the gallery, No. 35, to make room for the organ	15 0 0

Were the pews freehold or leasehold ?

As will be seen from the quaint illustration on p. 443, the instrument and the choir gallery blocked up the western tower arch, thus entirely shutting off the chancel and the Shrewsbury Chapel from the remainder of the church. The organ was first used on Sunday, October 6, 1805, an advertisement in the Sheffield Iris referring to the acquisition and event as 'a very large new organ upon an excellent construction,' that 'a number of appropriate pieces will be performed,' and that, in the afternoon, there would be 'performances of sacred music on the organ.' In the same week—October 9 to 11—a three-day musical festival, terminating with 'a grand ball,' was held, the sacred works being given in the church, and the secular concerts in the theatre. Handel formed the staple fare of the church programmes and, according to the Iris, 'Handel himself would have been delighted to have heard his sublime compositions so meritoriously performed.' The total receipts amounted to £1,139 17s. 1½d., and as the expenditure was £833 9s. 11d., the net profits, 'to be applied to the use of the Infirmary,' resulted in the odd amount of £306 7s. 2½d. On that occasion Mozart's additional accompaniments to the 'Messiah' were performed, this being one of their earliest uses in this country.

In 1857 the organ was removed to a position on the north side of the chancel, when 'the service was for the first time for many years choral, with the exception of the versicles, which were read.' In 1872, Messrs. Brindley & Foster, of Sheffield, began their various renewals, removals, and rebuildings of the instrument which culminated in the present organ erected in 1905, of which the following is the specification:

ACCESSORY MOVEMENTS.

Four double-acting composition pedals to Great organ.
Five 'Brinovus' ventral pistons to Great and Swell organs respectively, five to Pedal, reducing to various combinations.
Eight transforming knobs to Great organ, five to Swell organ, five to Choir and Solo organs, giving solo and other combinations, together with a suitable pedal accompaniment. These operate independently of drawstop action, and negative whatever registration has at the moment been in effect.
Four double-acting composition pedals to Swell organ.
Five 'Brinovus' combination touches to Choir and Solo organ.
Four double-acting composition pedals to the Pedal organ.
'Brindgradus' crescendo pedal, with two controlling pedals, by means of which the complete power of the Great, Swell and Pedal organs be built up in correct sequence, the operation of which is distinctly varied. By means of controlling pedals, the 'Brindgradus' pedal can be made to operate Swell and Pedal alone, or Great and Pedal alone, or to operate both manuals jointly with the Pedal organ. These rolling pedals have additional uses as sforzando pedals, to the Great Pedal, and the Swell and Pedal respectively.
A striking device, by means of which all accessory movements, including the mechanical composition pedals, are thrown out of action.

Before giving a list of the organists, reference should be made to an interesting printed document, copies of which were pasted in the music-books used by the choir, say about a hundred years ago. The authorship of this document is unknown, but as probably that of the Rev. Dr. Thomas Sutton, Curate of Sheffield from 1805 to 1851. It is headed 'Directions to be observed by the Organist and Singers in the Parish Church of Sheffield.'

Then follows the text from Philipians ii., 3, and another quotation, which reads:

'Religious harmony,' says Collier, 'must be altogether moving, but noble withal; grave, solemn and seraphic; fit for a Martyr to play, and an Angel to hear.'

These 'Directions' are quite as applicable to the present-day as when they were written, therefore no apology is needed for giving them in full:

THE Organist should recollect that Music is introduced into the Church Service for two reasons; the first reason is, that by a union of appropriate words and appropriate music the Congregation may have their hearts inflamed with pious affection for God; the second reason is, that the Congregation may pour out their hearts to God in grateful acknowledgement of his infinite mercies and abundant loving kindness towards them. The two reasons being premised as the cause of the introduction of Music into the Church, the Organist should observe that any thing which tends to withdraw the minds of the Congregation from them, must be improper. A sacrificing of "sense to sound" is equally improper, inasmuch as by so doing, devotion (the sole cause of our frequenting the Church) is hindered.

The Organist when playing a Voluntary may be said to have the minds of the Congregation under his hands; he should therefore be cautious lest he mislead the ignorant into vain fancies, or offend the judicious with unseasonable levity. As foppery in dress betrays itself to an ordinary eye, so too much of what is called execution in Church music betrays itself to an ordinary ear, by the superfluous ornaments wherewith it abounds. This remark will apply to singing.

What I shall call flourishes, or runnings up and down the notes, are always improper in Church singing, inasmuch as the Composer of a Psalm, or Anthem, usually writes the notes which he wishes to be sung; and it must be considered as a liberty taken by a Singer with his composition, when he adds more notes than are set down. Besides it is so seldom that flourishes are well done, that they generally destroy the effect which they are intended to produce. I would ask of any Singer, who is fond of flourishing, for what purpose he does it in a Church? Is it to excite a greater degree of devotion in his Hearers? Or is it not rather to gratify his own personal vanity? And is this a proper thing to do in the House of God? I would wish both Organist and Singers to recollect that they, as well as a Clergyman, are responsible to God for the due performance of their respective parts in the Church service.

ROBERT BENNETT.

FATHER OF SIR W. STERNDALE BENNETT, AND ORGANIST OF SHEFFIELD PARISH CHURCH FROM 1811-1819.

(From the original painting by Wageman, reproduced by kind permission of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Case.)

The grand requisite in a Singer I take to be the singing the words to the notes, and the notes to the words, in the time and manner marked by the composer of what he is singing. When a passage is marked Piano, he should not sing it so low as not to be heard by the Congregation; and when it is marked Forte, he should not sing it so loud as though he were singing it to a large concourse of people in the open air.

In speaking recitative, a distinct and firm articulation is requisite to do it properly. Recitative should not be spoken as though a person was catching at his words, nor yet should it be drawled out. It should, as before remarked, be spoken firmly, but distinctly.

All Singers should pay proper and due attention to the Organist, whose musical knowledge must of necessity be superior to theirs, from the circumstance of his studies being principally confined to music, and from his making music his profession; whereas most Singers employ their time during the week in some other occupation, whereby they procure their subsistence. And it appears to me just as reasonable that an Organist should attempt to teach a Singer who follows some trade, the nature and art of that trade, as that a Singer should attempt to teach an Organist the nature of his profession as a musician.

An Organist may be considered as placed amongst the Singers in a situation similar to that of a President at a Public Meeting, whose duty it is to preserve order and regularity, and from whose decision there neither is, or ought to be, any appeal. If therefore he appoints any particular singer to sing any particular passage of any Anthem, the other Singers have nothing to do but to rest satisfied with it. This authority it is absolutely necessary should be vested in an Organist to prevent that disorder which ever did, and ever will flow from every Singer's being allowed to act as he may think proper.

I will conclude these directions with a quotation from the Scriptures, which is not less applicable to Organists and Singers, than to every other person in every situation of life:—"Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with all thy might: for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave whither thou goest."

The first organist of the Parish Church was John Mather, one of a distinguished family of Sheffield organists, three of whom simultaneously held office at the then three churches of the town. John officiated at the musical festival in 1805, and with his brother Samuel was a prominent founder of the Yorkshire Amateur Meeting established in 1806. He soon afterwards removed to Edinburgh, where he became organist of St. John's Episcopal Chapel and of the musical festival held in 1815. John Mather was an active promoter of choral music in Glasgow as well as in Edinburgh; he died in the latter city, January 20, 1850. On resigning his Sheffield appointment in 1810, Mather was succeeded by Jonathan Blewitt, a pupil of Battishill's and a prolific composer of songs. The advertisement for the vacant post may be quoted in full:

ORGANIST.

Wanted for the Parish Church of Sheffield, in the County of York, an Organist. No Person need apply whose professional knowledge will not recommend him to the situation, and who is not a good score and thorough bass player. The Organ, built by England, is a very fine instrument, and as Sheffield is a musical town, and there are concerts during the Winter, a Performer of abilities, would be likely to meet with particular encouragement.

The present fixed salary is Forty Guineas with a further donation of Ten Guineas from the Parish. Applications must be made immediately to Mr. Robert Turner, Sheffield, who will inform the respective candidates of the day of election.

Sheffield, March 2, 1810.

Blewitt remained only twelve months at Sheffield. To him succeeded his only competitor of a year before, Robert Bennett, father of Sir William Sterndale Bennett. At that time the salary was forty guineas per annum. On the day following his election, appeared an advertisement in the local newspaper which reads:

MR. BENNETT

Organist of the Parish Church in Sheffield, most respectfully informs the Ladies and Gentlemen of Sheffield and Neighbourhood, that he gives Instruction on the Piano-forte d in the Art of Singing. Having been regularly educated under the care of Dr. Clarke, Professor of Music in the University of Cambridge, and having taught music here, he trusts that he is qualified for his Situation, and engages himself to discharge the duties of it with attention and regularity.

Terms may be known on application to Mr. Bennett, at Wilson's, Painter, Fargate.—(Iris, June 11, 1811.)

On the death of Robert Bennett, at the early age of thirty-one, in 1819, the appointment was successively held for very short periods by

Dr. John Camidge, afterwards organist of York Minster, and a Mr. Gledhill, or Gleadhill. In 1820, Joseph Bottomley was appointed. During his reign the salary was doubled, from forty to eighty guineas, and the income-tax was deducted by the Church Burgesses, as an entry in the accounts reads :

1842. Dec. 31. Pd. Joseph Bottomley a years salary as organist due deducting half a years property tax [then 7*d.* in the £] . . . £82. 15. 6.

A corresponding deduction was made from the salary of Mr. G. H. Smith in 1874, when the income-tax was only 2*d.* in the £! Bottomley was a good violinist and the author of 'A new system for teaching the pianoforte' [1847]. He held office for upwards of forty years, and was famous for his long and semi-extemporaneous voluntaries played after the Psalms had been sung. 'The style was decidedly clever and original,' a contemporary writer records, 'mostly pretty figures and phrases on solo stops, nice contrasted, but not in the least polyphonic—not great organ playing, only a very slight use of the pedals.'

An interesting sidelight on the musical services in Sheffield Parish Church in the year 1848 is furnished in the pages of the Parish Choir. The writer says: 'The chancel and body of the church are completely divided from each other, and the communication is by means of folding doors' [as a matter of fact, there was only one doorway, and that was four feet wide], 'so that the ante-Communion Service is of necessity always read from the desk. Over these doors there is placed a massive organ. In front of the organ is a row of seats, in the centre of which are stationed four singers; and on each side of them the eye of a spectator from the centre of the middle aisle, may discern three and a half charity-children; the outline of the fourth child on each side being vertically bisected by one of four massive pillars supporting the tower.' The writer subsequently refers to 'the mode of conducting the service':

The responses are read ad libitum, in any key, in any time, and without the slightest attempt at unity. In reading the Psalms the clerk tries to get the start of the congregation, and habitually begins his verse before the minister has articulated the final words of the verse preceding . . . Some of the canticles are chanted, but the Venite and Te Deum are invariably read. Those which are chanted are for the most part so to the very frothiest and most inane of chants. It is worthy of remark that the choir of four have liberty to sing any Cathedral Services, the Magnificat, etc., while all Anthems, eo nomina, are most rigidly and uncompromisingly abjured. Again, the Psalm tunes are selected without any reference to the standard of genuineness or propriety, and the playing of the organist (a musician of no ordinary ability) partakes more of the character of violin playing, than of performance on the organ.

The Wednesday evening service is performed in the chancel, where a dozen untrained charity children are stationed to lead the psalm. The organist meanwhile sits in the body of the church, which, as before mentioned, is completely separate from the chancel, and where he cannot hear one sound issuing from the voices of those engaged in worship. The consequences are indescribable, but may easily enough be imagined.

The foregoing extract speaks for itself in regard to the condition of church music in the parish church of an important town sixty years ago. The three organists in succession to Joseph Bottomley were Mr. George Henry Smith, 1860-75 (he died on May 4 last); Mr. Thomas Tallis Trimmell, 1875-86, and Mr. Edwin H. Lemare, 1886-92.

Mr. Thomas William Hanforth, the present organist, was born at Hunslet, near Leeds, March 6, 1867. He began his musical studies at the age of seven, under Mr. Edward Crosly, the organist of Hunslet Church. He soon afterwards entered the choir, and, when nine years old, played his first service. On the removal of his parents to York he became a chorister and solo boy in the Minster, of which the late Dr. E. G. Monk was then organist. Upon the breaking of his voice he was articulated first to the late Mr. W. H. Garland, and afterwards to the late Dr. John Naylor. Under the latter able musician he studied for nine years, and acted as his assistant and deputy. For the greater part of 1891, during the illness and absence of Dr. Naylor, Mr. Hanforth efficiently discharged the duties of acting-organist of York Minster, by appointment of the Dean and Chapter and to their entire satisfaction. During that period the music of several important services, including the enthronisation of two archbishops, was successfully arranged and carried out by him. Other appointments which Mr. Hanforth has held include the following:—Organist to Archbishop Thomson (1885-88); organist of St. Martin's-le-Grand Church, York, and music master of the Yorkshire School for the Blind (both 1888-92); conductor of the York Madrigal Society and of the Countess of Harewood's Ladies' Choral Society (1891-93), and bandmaster of the Sheffield Artillery Brigade (1900-09). He took the degree of Bachelor of Music at Durham University in 1892, and obtained the Fellowship of the Royal College of Organists in 1897.

Since 1892 Mr. Hanforth has held with distinction the office of organist and choirmaster of Sheffield Parish Church, to the interests and services of which sacred fane he almost entirely devotes himself. Under his direction the organ was entirely rebuilt and enlarged at a cost of £1,150, and he claims it to be 'one of the most perfectly equipped and effective church organs in the country.' Upon this fine instrument he gives, with much acceptance, frequent organ recitals, at which he has performed upwards of 250 standard organ works. During the rebuilding of the organ in 1905, the evening services were accompanied by the Artillery band, of which he was the bandmaster, and for which he specially scored the service music.

The choir of the church consists of twenty chorister boys—including at the present time three sons of Mr. Hanforth, the eldest having been solo treble for the past three years—eight probationers, four altos, six tenors, and six basses. The extensive library of church music includes most of the cathedral classics, from Gibbons, Purcell and Boyce down to composers of the present day. The type of service may be described as semi-cathedral. An anthem is sung at every service, morning and evening, and the congregational singing of the minor canticles and hymns is a notable feature.

Mr. Hanforth, who is a typical Yorkshire organist in his enthusiasm and genial personality, has two chief hobbies—photography and rifle shooting. He possesses several handsome trophies which he has won in competition on the rifle range, where for the past nine years he has been a constant and earnest 'trier.' There, as in his church work, he has tried and has succeeded.

For valued help rendered in the preparation of this article the best thanks of the writer are tendered to Mr. J. J. Wheat, Clerk to the Capital Burgesses of Sheffield, for kindly allowing access to the records of the Burgesses' account books, &c.; to Mr. J. R. Wigfull, M.I.B.A., an acknowledged authority on the history and fabric of the church; to Mr. William Walker, the well-known bookseller and lover of music in Sheffield, for his fully appreciated researches; to Mr. T. W. Hanforth, for much patient investigation; to Mr. G. Fenton Heald, organ-builder of Sheffield, for kindly allowing his picture (on p. 443) to be reproduced; and to Messrs. Pawson & Brailsford for their excellent photographs.

DOTTED CROCHET.

DR. GUIDO ADLER.

Professor Dr. Guido Adler—to whom the recent Laydn-Festival Congress at Vienna owed so much—was born at Eibenschütz, Moravia, on November 1, 1855. His father was a doctor, who died within a year of the child's birth. In 1864 he was a pupil at the Academic Gymnasium, Vienna, where, as a boy, he for a time conducted the pupils' choir. He subsequently became a student at the Vienna Conservatorium of Music, his professors being Anton Bruckner and Felix Dessoff. After a distinguished pupilage he left the Conservatorium in 1874 and attended the University of Vienna. At this time, in conjunction with Felix Mottl and Dr. Wolf, he founded the academic Wagner Society, which soon became an important body. In 1878 he obtained the degree of doctor of Jurisprudence, and in 1880 that of doctor of philosophy at his alma mater. He had qualified in 1881 at the University of Vienna as a private lecturer on the science of music, which led the way to his appointment, in 1885, as a professor in that particular branch of the art at the German University of Prague. In 1898 he succeeded Edward Hanslick as professor of musical history at the University of Vienna, a post which he continues to hold with distinction. His lectures there cover the entire range of the science of music.

Throughout the whole of his career Dr. Adler has lived the life of an earnest student of the history and science of music, a branch of the art to which he has specially devoted his learning and energies. He represented Austria at the International Liturgical Congress held at Arezzo in 1882; and as chairman of the central committee for the International Musical Exhibition, held at Vienna in 1892, the Professor found full scope for his organizing skill and scholarly musicianship.

As editor in chief of the monumental publications of the Denkmäler der Tonkunst in Oesterreich, Dr. Adler has rendered valuable service to the history of music, especially that of his native land. Some of the most important volumes of the series have been entirely edited by him. His studies in the history of harmony have demonstrated the great influence of England in the development of the part-song, especially as regards Faux-bourdon. He translated (into German) and amplified the late Alexander J. Ellis's 'History of musical pitch,' and he has edited the works of the following royal composers: Ferdinand III., Leopold I., and Joseph I. In 1884 he founded, with Chrysander and Spitta, the useful publication entitled Vierteljahrschrift für Musikwissenschaft, which he conducted for a year, and was editor, with the two writers above named, for ten years. As a distinguished writer on music, his critical book on Wagner, published in 1904 and since translated into French, can be placed to his credit. In this volume—consisting of lectures delivered in the University of Vienna—he points out the historical position of Wagner, his artistic connection with his romantic predecessors and the whole Renaissance, in addition to giving an estimate of the composer. He has contributed several articles to German scientific periodicals, also to the Neue Freie Presse. His lectures at the University cover the entire field of the science of music. One of his latest dissertations is 'Über Heterophonie,' which appeared in the 'Jahrbuch der Musikbibliothek Peters für 1908.' He founded the Musikhistorische Institut at the Vienna University, where many pupils in music, art, and science are educated. Dr. Adler is president of the General-Commission of the 'Corpus scriptorum de musica,' and he is an honorary member of the Musical Association.

A portrait of Dr. Guido Adler forms one of our extra supplements to the present issue.

Occasional Notes.

Rumour has been rife as regards the high opinion in which Herr Arthur Nikisch holds Elgar's Symphony. In order that we might obtain authentic and first-hand information, the eminent conductor kindly spared us a few minutes of his valuable time during his recent visit to London, for a little talk on the subject. Seated in a quiet corner of his hotel, Herr Nikisch began by modestly disclaiming any value which might be attached to his opinion; at the same time the earnest tones of his voice, the deliberate manner in which he spoke, furnished proof, if proof were needed, that he would yield to no one in the sincerity of his convictions. 'I consider Elgar's symphony a masterpiece of the first order, one that will soon be justly ranked on the same level with the great symphonic models—Beethoven and Brahms. The music is strong in invention, workmanship, and development from beginning to end. I find that some critics have expressed a somewhat unfavourable opinion of the first movement; but it is so logical, so well balanced, and there is so much in it that only needs to be properly expressed in order to make everything clear. Each time I conduct the work, my admiration for it—very sincere and not superficial from the beginning—increases. It was the same with my orchestra at the Gewandhaus, Leipsic. There I held four rehearsals of the symphony, and on each successive occasion the players became more and more excited, until they were almost as enthusiastic as myself. Our audiences are naturally cold towards anything new, but the work was a great success, and aroused great enthusiasm.'

'You will remember,' continued Herr Nikisch, 'that when Brahms produced his first symphony it was called "Beethoven's tenth," because it followed on the lines of the nine great masterpieces of Beethoven. I will therefore call Elgar's symphony "the fifth of Brahms." I hope to introduce it to Berlin, with my Philharmonic orchestra there, next October, and in the same week we shall play it in Hamburg; to these performances I look forward with much pleasure.' In further conversation with Herr Nikisch, it was very gratifying to hear from his own lips not only his warm appreciation of our countryman's symphony, but also the great regard he has for the London Symphony Orchestra. 'I have only to look at the players and they at once respond to my wishes,' he says. 'They are so attentive, so quick, and they carry out my ideas in a wonderful way—to conduct that orchestra is a pure artistic joy.'

The folk-song and morris-dance movement, with which the name of Mr. Cecil Sharp is so closely and successfully associated, continues to make good progress in different parts of the country and under various auspices. At Chelsea Hospital, on June 11, at the opening of the fête in aid of crippled children, the King and Queen witnessed a display of morris dancing, &c., in costume, arranged by Mrs. Gomme and Mr. Sharp. On this occasion their Majesties evinced the greatest pleasure, as well they might, in a traditional children's singing-game, into which about a score of tiny girls, all clad in white, entered with naive zest and real intelligence. On the following day (June 12) a folk-song and morris-dance competition took place at the Town Hall, Portsmouth. This event was particularly interesting, in that all the competitors were teachers in the elementary schools of West Sussex and Hampshire. To the number of about 150, they all knew and danced the morris and sang the folk-songs.

At a garden party held in connection with the seventh International Congress of Applied Chemistry, at the Royal Botanic Gardens, Regents Park, old English folk-songs, singing-games, and morris-dances formed the most attractive features of the afternoon's entertainment. Moreover, this display furnished a good opportunity of showing the many foreigners present that here in England we have traditional songs, dances, and games similar to those possessed by other European countries and no less enjoyable. The dances were given on the lawn, and judging from the many inquiries that were made by those who witnessed them it was evident that this movement—using the word in a two-fold sense—created not a little interest among the guests from other countries. All this, and more could be recorded, goes to prove how readily songs and dances of a simple, primitive type afford a means of enjoyment to those who take part therein as well as to those who participate as spectators. So rapidly, indeed, is the movement spreading to the elementary schools of the country, that it must soon receive official sanction.

Dr. W. H. Cummings has been a gratified recipient of his portrait, painted in oils by Miss Betia Schebsman. The presentation, which took place at the Guildhall School of Music on June 4, was made by Mr. George H. Heilbut, chairman of the Music Committee of the City Corporation, who, speaking on behalf of the subscribers, said that a large number of admirers and friends of Dr. Cummings wished to show him some appreciation of his more than sixty years of public life, and of his devotion to the art of music. Dr. Cummings, in acknowledging the gift, said that the most interesting part of his life had been the thirteen years he had spent as Principal of the Guildhall School of Music, the welfare and success of which were very dear to him. In concluding his remarks, he said he should like to be allowed to present the portrait to the School, a suggestion which was greeted with manifest signs of approval.

Some interesting autograph manuscripts were recently sold by auction in Berlin by the firm of Leo Liepmansohn. Four pages of the continuo part of Bach's church cantata, 'Alles nur nach Gottes Willen,' realised £20. Brahms's second Pianoforte sonata in F sharp minor (Op. 2) changed hands at £200! The manuscript is inscribed 'Seinem lieben Albrecht [Dietrich] zu Erinnerung an Joh^s Brahms.' At the end it is signed 'Kreisler jun. November, '52,' a pseudonym adopted by Brahms out of love for the Capellmeister Johannes Kreisler, hero of one of Hoffmann's tales. Although published as Op. 2, this sonata preceded that in C (Op. 1), and is one of the earliest works of Brahms, having been written while in his teens. Three Chopin manuscripts were sold, one for £40 and two others for £75 each. Two fine Schumann manuscripts were knocked down at £50 each, while it may be worth mentioning that Richard Strauss's song, 'Lob des Leidens,' realised £9.

During his recent visit to Vienna, as President of the International Musical Association Congress, Sir Alexander Mackenzie became interested in a movement for the erection of a monument in that city to Johann Strauss, 'the Waltz King.' The Principal of the Royal Academy of Music with others, including Mr. Alfred Littleton, is engaged in forming a small English committee to co-operate with the Vienna committee, in the hope that England will not be backward in rendering assistance to the object in view. Further details of the proposal will be given in our August issue.

John Wesley, in addition to being a great preacher and the founder of Methodism, was a performer on the flute. His musical interests, no less than his evangelistic fervour, were not, however, entirely self-centred. He took a broad view of things, and his interests were wide. At Edinburgh, Wesley seems to have come across a music-loving lion, which gave rise to the following incident, as recorded by the eminent divine in his Journal, under date December 31, 1764. He says: 'I thought it would be worth while to make an odd experiment. Remembering how surprisingly fond of music the lion at Edinburgh was, I determined to try whether this was the case with all animals of the same kind. I accordingly went to the Tower with one who plays on the German flute. He began playing near four or five lions; only one of these (the rest not seeming to regard it at all) rose up, came to the front of his den, and seemed to be all attention. Meantime a tiger in the same den started up, leaped over the lion's back, turned and ran under his belly, leaped over him again, and so to and fro incessantly. Can we account for this by any principle of mechanism? Can we account for it at all?' We venture to account for the phenomenon in this way: The tiger may have hailed from the Fatherland, in which case the German flute would explain the animal's animated acrobatic alacrity. If John Wesley's companion had played, say 'Rule, Britannia,' upon an English flute, the lions—assuming that they were British—would doubtless have roared with all their might and main.

The prospectus of the Newcastle-upon-Tyne musical festival, in aid of the funds of the Royal Victoria Infirmary, has now been issued. Six concerts will be given in the Palace Theatre on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, October 20, 21, and 22. The following is the outline programme in the order of performance, the novelties being indicated by an asterisk:

VOCAL: Oratorio, Elijah, Mendelssohn; Ballad of the loom of Oleg (Op. 58), Rimsky-Korsakoff (first performance in England); cantata, Triumphlied, Brahms; oratorio, The Kingdom, Elgar; *Symphonic-poem for chorus and orchestra, The invincible Armada (Op. 12), Rutland Boughton; song-cycle, Sea-pictures, Elgar; oratorio, The turn of Tobias, Haydn (first performance in England); cantata, Omar Khayyam (Part I.), Granville Bantock.

INSTRUMENTAL: Eine Faust overture, Wagner; Piano-forte concerto in E flat, Liszt; *Overture-phantasy, Prometheus, Edgar L. Bantock; Symphonic-poem, Tod und Verklärung, Strauss; Symphony in A flat, Elgar; overture, Manfred, Schumann; Serenade for strings, Eine leine-Nachtmusik, Mozart; Tone-poem, Salome, Henry Adley (first performance in England); Symphony No. 4, F minor, Tchaikovsky; Concerto for pianoforte, orchestra, and male chorus (Op. 39), Busoni (first time in England); Symphony in G minor, A. von Ahn Carse.

The conductors-in-chief of the festival are Mr. Wassili Safonoff and Dr. Henry Coward, and the following composers will conduct their own works: Mr. Edward Elgar, Mr. Granville Bantock, Signor Busoni, Mr. Rutland Boughton and Mr. A. von Ahn Carse, the last named being a native of Newcastle. In addition to the eminent vocalists who have been engaged, the festival will reap the advantage of the London Symphony Orchestra. The solo pianists will be Signor Busoni and Mr. Egon Petri; Mr. J. E. Jeffries, organist of Newcastle Cathedral, will preside at the organ; and the training of the choir (370 picked voices) will be perfectly safe under the famed chorus-mastership of Dr. Henry Coward. The business side of this Tyneside music-making could not be in better or more experienced hands than those of Mr. James B. Clark and Mr. C. Francis Lloyd. May success attend it!

The manuscript of Beethoven's Rondino in E flat, for two oboes, two clarinets, two horns and two bassoons (p. 140 of Nottebohm's Thematic Catalogue) has lately passed from the ownership of Frau Landsgerichts-rätin Homan—to whose father-in-law the work was dedicated—into the possession of the Beethoven-Haus, Bonn, where it is now exhibited as the latest acquisition of Beethoven treasures. The little work is of particular interest as it is probably a product of the master's youthful period, composed while he lived at Bonn, and therefore an early work.

A Gluck Society is now being formed in Leipsic. Its object is (1) to publish all the compositions of Gluck; (2) to organize correct performances of his works; and (3) to arouse public interest in, and love and appreciation of, the master's art creations. The subscription is fixed at 10s. per annum, in return for which the members will be entitled to receive all the publications of the Society, in addition to free admission to performances given under the auspices of the Society.

Music appears to be literally going to the dogs in Wales. We have before us the prospectus of a 'dog, poultry, pigeon, cage-bird, cat, rabbit, butter, egg, honey, horticultural, &c., &c., Show,' announced to be held at Vagnol Park, Port Dinorwic, on August 14. In addition to the above-mentioned exhibition of varieties, the proceedings are to include a slate-splitting competition, athletic sports, and a 'great choral competition.' The last named of these non-canine, non-feline attractions is divided into two classes: (1) choirs of not less than fifty voices, and (2) juvenile choirs, 'not over thirty-five voices, and not over 17 years of age.' The latter condition, on the face of it, appears to refer to the length of time the choir has been in existence; but any ambiguity on this point will doubtless be removed upon application to the Secretary of the Show, Mr. W. T. Davies, Ferndale, Port Dinorwic, Carnarvonshire, who will be glad to receive entries for the choir competitions previous to August 4.

What appears to be a technical terminological inexactitude has found its way into a London newspaper. It occurs in a report of the Haydn-Festival and International Musical Congress recently held at Vienna. We are told that 'the Opera orchestra, directed by Herr Weingartner, played Haydn's Overture in D Sharp.' (Don't forget the capital S, please, Mr. Printer.) Is not this Capital information invested with Interest? Just think of the array of sharps, to say nothing of double sharps, which are needed for the key-signature of D Sharp—D sharp, E sharp, F double-sharp, G sharp, A sharp, B sharp, and C double-sharp! How keen the air must be in so Sharp a key! But perhaps the writer of the notice was thinking of Haydn's 'Razor' quartet.

Since the days of Sir George Grove, analytical programmes have been serious enough in their technical terminology. Now and then, however, one comes upon a scintillating sentence which causes a smile upon the perplexed countenance of the reader. Here is one. It forms the conclusion of an analysis of a recently performed overture by an English composer, and reads: 'The last note is the low E of the basses, bass clarinet, harp and tamtam. This note is based on material supplied by the composer.' As the note in question appears to have been produced from base material, is it not tam-tam-tam to a forgery, if not playing very low?

MR. BALFOUR ON MUSIC.

One of the most notable features of the Welsh National Eisteddfod held in London last month, was the excellent speech of Mr. Arthur Balfour on music as the most democratic of all the arts, therefore a great and lasting heritage of the people. As president of the Eisteddfod session on the afternoon of June 15, at the Royal Albert Hall, Mr. Balfour concluded his address in these words: 'Music has ever been one of the great arts in which the Welsh have excelled. There cannot be a greater gift to any people. There cannot be a gift which carries with it higher pleasures—pleasures more easy of attainment, pleasures which have no after-sting and no after-taste of evil, but which raise and must raise the whole level of civilized pleasure among the people who practise them. Music knows no national barriers. Music is not the subject of the barriers which unhappily beset languages. It speaks to men of all races, of all tongues, of all nationalities in tones understood of all, and in language which appeals more immediately and more directly to the imagination than perhaps any other of the arts. More than this, music is, in the true sense of that much-abused word, the most democratic of all the arts. Pictures are apt to be the luxury of the rich. They cannot have any universality. Put them even in galleries open to all: they are not painted for galleries; they are not in their original setting; they lose, and they must lose, something, by the very fact that they are merely gazed upon by a stream of passers-by. They are not lived with, as pictures ought to be. Music is subject to no such limitations. Music does not pay death duties. We have not to find £80,000 to prevent music going out of the country. We have not to consider whether the foreign millionaire will not absorb all our works of art as time goes on. Music is of the people. Music at its best should be the greatest of popular arts, and the Welsh people have from time immemorial shown their appreciation of that great truth.'

This testimony of so eminent a statesman and cultured amateur of music is in the highest degree most gratifying to those who are engaged in spreading a love of music in all parts of Great and Greater Britain.

Church and Organ Music.

MR. ALFRED HOLLINS.

A valued correspondent in Edinburgh sends the following account of the farewell organ recital given by Mr. Alfred Hollins in St. George's United Free Presbyterian Church, Edinburgh, previous to starting upon his tours in South Africa and Canada:

At none of the recitals given by Mr. Hollins had there ever been such an enthusiastic and appreciative audience as that which filled St. George's Church on the night before he left for South Africa. In carrying out the programme the gifted musician not only excelled himself, but the admiration and affection in which he is held found full expression and seemed to inspire him. At the close of the recital the Rev. Dr. Alexander Whyte, the senior minister of the Church, repeated his oft-expressed tribute to what the services at St. George's owe to Mr. Hollins's genius, adding that they parted from him with a pang, but with pride in sending him to delight sister congregations and gatherings across the seas, and that St. George's would follow him in all his doings in imagination and in love. In the hall of the Church immediately afterwards, the Musical Association met to bid Mr. Hollins good-bye and to present him with a token of their affectionate regard. The Rev. Dr. Kelman, Dr. Whyte's colleague, in expressing his great enjoyment of the recital, said that Mr. Collinson (who was present) had put it into fitting language when he described the improvisation as 'classic in its perfection of proportion and harmony.'

THE BI-CENTENARY OF CROFT'S 148TH.

Last year, in the issue for June, we referred to the bi-centenary of three fine church-melodies—Hanover, St. Anne, and St. Matthew—composed by Dr. Croft. To that well-preserved trio can be added another tune, which this year celebrates the two-hundredth year of its existence, the strain known as Croft's 148th. It made its first appearance in an octavo book bearing the following title:

THE Divine Companion;

the West end of St. Paul's Church, and John Hare, the Royal Exchange. 1709. Price Bound 3s.

In the preface thereto, Henry Playford, after eulogising his father, John Playford, as 'among those whose Names are had in everlasting Remembrance,' and saying a good word for the book itself, bursts into poetry thus:

To all the Masters of Music, who have Honour'd me with their Compositions of these Divine Hymns and Anthems. Henry Playford humbly gives his Thanks in the following Lines.

Tho' 'tis enough that Church-Devotion's rais'd,
And Souls are extasy'd while God is Prais'd,
Yet since my just Endeavours share your Smiles,
And your good Wishes still reward my Toils,
Permit me, Sirs, to bring a grateful Heart,
Not to Discharge the Debt, but pay in Part;
For oh! What Pen, or what exalted Strains,
Can answer the Success of endless Pains.
Music appears again with Sacred Rays,
And David's what he was in Antient Days,
When with his Harp the Palmist could asswage
Saul's Hellish Fury with a Heav'nly Rage,
And calm the Storms of a Tempestuous Mind,
Which none but Tunes like yours could wholly bind.
Go on, and Cultivate the willing Age,
And rescue from rude Notes the Sacred Page,
Till every Church gives God what Churches owe,
And sends up Hallelujahs from below,
Whilst for his Praise my Labours I Pursue,
And if I Please, still own I Please from You.

The tune appears on page 170, in the following form:

A PSALM Set by Mr. William Crofts.

Cantus & Bassus.

Psalm CXXXVI.

A. 1. Voc.

defective key-signature, the absence of the tr, will not escape notice, nor the curious form of the tune. The words are from the Brady version of the metrical psalms. In regard to the name of the tune, Croft's 148th, which is generally known, it doubtless received signation because of being used with a more recent psalm in the same version (Tate and Brady), 136th, beginning 'Ye boundless realms of joy'—the psalm (136th) to which it was originally set. Many old hymn-tunes, whereby great confusion arisen, this splendid melody has been variously, as hereunder set forth :

OF HYMNAL.	EDITOR.	NAME OF TUNE.
Church Psalmody	} W. H. Havergal	Croft's 148th, or Bodmin.

There may be other names given to the tune than named above. Though, partly by reason of its metre, Croft's has not attained the popularity of other tunes same composer, yet it is worthy of an honoured among those dignified church melodies which pride of our old English psalmody. Playford's Divine Companion (3rd edn., 1709) can also be cited with having introduced another fine tune, gnus, by Jeremiah Clarke; of this, the history given in the Musical Times of January, 1906.

W. G. Price, formerly organist of the Ulster Hall, and now city organist of Melbourne, has met with able success at his organ recitals given in Melbourne Hall. So appreciative and musically intelligent are his audiences that works like Bach's Passacaglia and Lissohn's organ sonatas are encored! The Melbourne peers have endorsed the verdict of those who attend enjoyable and educational recitals. For instance, the Irish Argus says: 'Dr. Price has always sought to popular taste. The practical wisdom of his policy is proved by the attendances the recitals have attracted. His skilful registering was full of pleasant surprises, constantly revealed new beauties of stop combination. It is beyond question that his performances have such already to raise the standard of organ-playing in Irre.'

DR. J. C. CULWICK.

A memorial tablet to Dr. James C. Culwick, twenty-six years organist and choirmaster of the Chapel Royal, Dublin, has been placed in the south choir aisle of St. Patrick's Cathedral, Dublin. The memorial consists of a bronze portrait medallion—a striking likeness of the much-esteemed musician—with marble frame, designed by Sir Thomas Drew, P.R.H.A., and the bronze-relief is the work of Mr. Oliver Sheppard, R.H.A. The inscription reads:

JAMES COOKSEY CULWICK, Mus. Doc.,
Trinity College, Dublin.
Born 28th April, 1845. Died 5th October, 1907.
A learned musician. A true artist. A good man.
This tablet is erected in affectionate remembrance by members and supporters of the Orpheus Choral Society, of which he was the founder and conductor, 1898-1907.

His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant (The Earl of Aberdeen) performed the ceremony of unveiling the tablet after Evensong on May 19. The Dean of St. Patrick's, in accepting the charge of the memorial, said that for 'many years Dr. Culwick promoted the best interests of music in Dublin,' and spoke of him as having 'left behind him the memory of an artist who had the highest ideals, and set before his pupils and colleagues the highest aims.' At the service Dr. Culwick's favourite anthem was sung—Wesley's 'Blessed be the God and Father.'

SPECIAL SERVICES IN CATHEDRALS.
ST. PAUL'S.

The thirty-fifth annual festival service of the London Gregorian Choral Association took place on June 3. The psalms and canticles were sung to Gregorian tones, and the anthem, 'O be joyful in the Lord,' was by Dr. Warwick Jordan, who, as on several previous occasions, presided at the organ, and had a large share in the musical arrangements of the festival.

CANTERBURY.

The final oratorio service of the present season was held on May 27, when the choir and orchestra, about 200 in number, occupied a temporary platform erected at the west end of the nave. Two works were sung—Sir Hubert Parry's 'Voces Clamantium,' conducted by the composer, and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' conducted by Dr. Charlton Palmer, organist of the cathedral. The duet, 'I waited for the Lord,' in the latter work was sung by ten of the cathedral choristers, five to each part. The soloists were Miss Gladys Moger, Mr. Halward and Mr. S. Dyson; the orchestra was led by Mr. C. M. Gann.

SOUTHWARK.

On May 27, the South London Choirs' festival was held, when the following church choirs took part in an impressive service: St. George, Camberwell; Holy Trinity, Lambeth;

St. John, Waterloo Road; St. Leonard, Streatham; St. Mark, Battersea; St. Mark, Surbiton; and St. Stephen, Battersea. The cathedral choir sang an anthem, 'O show me not my Saviour dying,' composed specially for the occasion by Dr. Walford Davies, and the Bishop of Rochester gave a thoughtful address on the value of music as a source of inspiration.

CHICHESTER.

Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater,' in its English version ('At the foot of the Cross') as adapted by Mr. F. J. W. Crowe, was sung with full orchestral accompaniment by the Chichester Cathedral Oratorio Society on May 27, choir and orchestra numbering 170 performers. Mr. E. Stephenson, organist of Birmingham Cathedral, was at the organ; the band was led by Mr. W. A. Baker, of Brighton; and Mr. F. J. W. Crowe conducted an excellent rendering of a beautiful work.

ELY.

A. D. 1909 is the jubilee year of the Ely Diocesan Council of Church Music. This organization was founded fifty years ago, on the initiative of the Rev. Charles Warren, then Vicar of Over, as the Ely Diocesan Church Music Society. From an interesting preface contributed by the Ven. Archdeacon F. G. Vesey, one of the original members of the Society, to the jubilee service-book, we learn that one of the objects of the Society was 'procuring the publication of music better adapted to the wants of parish choirs. The appearance of "Hymns Ancient and Modern" in 1861 had given a new impetus to hymn-singing; but easy services for the Canticles, especially for the Te Deum, were much desired. To meet this, our Society offered a prize of £10 for the best parochial setting of the Te Deum, and this drew forth a great number of compositions. Many of these, with others, were subsequently published by Novello, as "under the patronage of the Ely Diocesan Church Music Society." No. 1, by Dr. Steggall, was included in the Festival Book for 1867.' The Archdeacon concludes his preface with these gratifying words: 'It is a matter for thankfulness that it [the Society] is still in full vigour, enabled to look back upon fifty years of honest endeavour to promote the study and practice of church music in the Diocese of Ely.'

The jubilee festival service was held in the beautiful cathedral on June 1, when the united parish choirs, twenty-one in number, furnished an effective choral force of 700 singers. The service opened with the Rev. James Baden Powell's setting of the processional hymn 'Lift high the Cross.' To this succeeded Psalm cxviii., sung to a double chant in A by T. A. Walmisley, Garrett's Nunc dimittis in D, some hymns, the National Anthem, and Stainer's Sevenfold Amen. Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' furnished the anthem, the accompaniments thereto being played by an orchestra, led by Mr. Randolph, of Ely, of fifty performers. Mr. J. F. Chubb, organist of Christ's College, Cambridge, was at the organ, Dr. A. W. Wilson, organist of Ely Cathedral, presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. Felix Morley, organist of Pembroke College, Cambridge, conducted.

SPECIAL SERVICES IN CHURCHES.

Mr. Gaul's 'Holy City,' was sung on May 26 at the Anerley Wesleyan Church by the Sydenham Choral Society, under the leadership of Mr. A. J. Heard-Norrish. The soloists were Miss Bednall, Miss Wall and Messrs. Leo and Fred Milton. Mr. Edwin Jenner presided at the organ.

Mr. Bruce Steane's 'The Ascension' was sung at the Mariners' Church, Kingstown, on Ascension Day (May 20), under the direction of Mr. Herbert G. Loveday, organist and choir-master of the church. The soloists were Miss Nettie Edwards, Mr. Ernest Coldwell and Mr. F. Moore Mease.

On Sunday afternoon, June 6, in connection with the anniversary services, Haydn's oratorio 'The Creation' was sung at Hollins Grove Congregational Church, Darwen, in the presence of a crowded congregation. The band and chorus numbered one hundred performers, and the rendering of the work was attended with great success. Mr. Joseph Almond presided at the organ, Mr. A. E. Duckworth led the orchestra, and Mr. James Eccles conducted. The special music sung at the morning and evening services included the anthems 'The radiant morn' (Woodward), 'O gladsome Light' (Sullivan), and 'How lovely is Thy dwelling-place' (Brahms). The collections for the day amounted to the goodly sum of £130, of which £55 were contributed by the Sunday School.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH MUSIC IN IRELAND.

Under the auspices of the Central Presbyterian Association, an impressive service of praise was held in the Ulster Hall, Belfast, on May 7, in which 1,000 voices, representing forty church choirs, took part. Mr. Thomas H. Crowe, organist and choir-master of Fisherwick Church, conducted, and Mr. F. H. Sawyer, organist of Elmwood Church, presided at the organ. The district conductors were Mr. W. Curran (St. Enoch's), Mr. J. G. Lauchlan (Crescent), Mr. Sam White (Fortwilliam), Mr. Jas. Woods (M^cQuiston Memorial), Mr. Sam Leighton (May Street), Mr. Miles Curran (Cooke Centenary), Mr. Chas. A. Aicken (Mountpottinger), and Mr. F. J. Moffett (Fitzroy).

The music consisted of psalms, hymns and anthems, the last-named being represented by 'Lord, for Thy tender mercies' sake' (Farrant), 'Great is the Lord' (Sydenham), and 'Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace' (Lee Williams).

A very notable and significant feature of the service was the excellent address given by the Moderator of the Irish Presbyterian Church (the Rev. Dr. Purves), who said the festival was a service of praise, and the selections being of a sacred character, 'such as they used in the churches on the Lord's Day,' it was not intended as a mere entertainment or display, and he wished everyone to endeavour to enter into the spirit and meaning of what was being sung. He hoped the effect might be to elevate their thoughts and feelings, making them heavenly and Divine, and that the service would afford an example of what the praise-service in all their churches was capable of being made—fine, elevating, and cultivating. The weakest part of their services had hitherto been the praise; but he was happy to say that there had latterly been a great improvement in that respect in very many congregations. That improvement was spreading in both town and country districts.

On the subject of anthems, the Moderator said that such an anthem as Stainer's 'God so loved the world' is a form, and an impressive one, of preaching. 'I take it to be the function of the anthem to preach,' he said, 'and no voice is more eloquent than that of music.' 'The anthem is the opportunity for the choir to lead the meditation of the people, and that being so, the choice of anthems should be very carefully made. And this suggests a closing remark. The service of praise requires of those who lead it, organist or precentor, and choir, a devout spirit, and of the minister a perfect understanding with the organist or choir-master as to the composition and arrangement of the items of praise. In churches where they pull different ways, the value and even the use of the service of praise is largely gone. I think one may say with confidence that the tone of choirs, and the ideals of organists and choir-masters, are in the present day for the most part very high. Personally, I like to know that all the members of the choir are also communicants of the church. If things are as they should be in these respects, there will be a harmony of devotional feeling in all parts of the service—prayer, praise, reading, and meditation, making one impression from first to last, and all together lifting worshippers heavenwards, so that our service of praise on earth may foreshadow the time when we shall "sing unto the Lord a new song, and His praise in the assembly of the saints".'

As in Scotland, so in the north of Ireland is music becoming more and more recognised as the handmaid of religion.

FREE CHURCH MUSICIANS' UNION.

The inaugural meeting of the Liverpool and District centre was held on June 2 at Pembroke Baptist Church, Liverpool. On that occasion the Rev. H. Youlden gave an address on 'Music from the point of view of the people.' He decried the introduction of so much trashy choir music.

and in pleading for a simpler and more devotional style of composition, reminded his hearers that their work was spiritual and sacred. A paper was also read by Dr. R. D. Glyn Roberts on 'Music from the point of view of a choir-master,' who urged that children should be trained to sing in an expressive and artistic manner in order that they might, in due time, be able to take their place in the church choir and thus render efficient service in the worship music. He furthermore said that choirs should study the best music within their reach and ability, and that they should educate the congregation in this department of church work and yet not go beyond their powers of attainment. Mr. Francis Lloyd advocated the holding of an occasional congregational practice after the Sunday evening service, which would help to secure an improvement in the general singing of the Free Churches. A committee was subsequently elected to manage the work of the Liverpool centre, Mr. Francis Lloyd, of Sefton Park Presbyterian Church, being appointed chairman, and Mr. J. Acheson Hebson, of Pembroke Baptist Church, honorary secretary.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

The annual dinner took place at the Cafe Monico, Piccadilly Circus, on June 8. In the course of an interesting speech proposing the toast of the evening, the President, Sir Walter Parratt, advised all organists to study Mr. Rowland Prothero's valuable book 'The Psalms in human life,' as being most helpful in deepening the beauty of that 'immortal poetry,' and thus tending to promote a more intelligent and devotional rendering of the psalms as chanted in the services of the church. Sir Walter also dwelt upon the importance of a knowledge of church architecture by organists, not only as a means of broadening their interests, but as a delightful study in itself.

Sir Frederick Bridge, in proposing the toast of the President, suggested the formation of an Organist's Benevolent League, having for its object the relief of those who, through misfortune, illness, or any other adversity, needed pecuniary assistance. As a matter of fact, we pointed out in an article on the Early history of the Royal College of Organists (in the issues of October and November last), a Benevolent Fund 'for the relief of organists in distress or their widows or children' formed part of the operations of the College in the seventies of the last century. To quote from the article: 'For some years the Benevolent Fund has ceased to exist, though doubtless there are opportunities still for the exercise of some such benefaction.' Sir Frederick Bridge's proposal is therefore a resuscitation of a Fund which ought never to have been allowed to collapse. The amenities of the evening included the performance of a selection of old English madrigals, sung by the choir of St. Peter's Church, Eaton Square, under the able direction of the organist, Dr. G. F. Huntley.

Under the auspices of the Edinburgh Bach Society, an organ recital from the works of the great Cantor was given at St. Mary's Cathedral, Edinburgh, on June 21, by the organist, Mr. T. H. Collinson. The programme included a concerto in G, Prelude and Fugue in E minor, and in C, Passacaglia in C minor, Chorale with variations, 'O Gott du frommer Gott,' Toccata and Fugue in C, Fantasia in G, and Sonata and Fugue in G minor.

A series of organ recitals will be given in Westminster Abbey from July 5 to 10, daily, at 5.30 p.m. The recitalists will be Sir Frederick Bridge, Dr. Walford Davies, Dr. J. C. F. Age, Dr. Alan Gray, Dr. G. J. Bennett, and Dr. G. R. Clair. No tickets of admission will be required, but at each recital a collection will be made on behalf of the organ Renovation Fund.

BEETHOVEN THE LETTER-WRITER.*

A man's letters, especially those written to his intimates, are often an index to his personality. In the case of a genius, great expectations in this respect are raised, especially if he has penned his communications without the fear of publicity before his eyes. Beethoven was a great, yea, an extraordinary genius; therefore, assuming that he would let himself go in his letters, there is every reason for expecting him to reflect his moods, buttoned and unbuttoned, in his epistolary effusions. In his music, Beethoven swept the whole gamut of human emotion; in his letters he covers the whole of life's interests, from the servant troubles of the kitchen to the outpourings of his heart to those dearly beloveds whose affections he failed to win. Here, in the two handsome volumes before us, we have the large number of 1,220 letters written by the composer of the 'Eroica' Symphony, a sufficient number to put to the test the personality theory of 'the man' in his correspondence.

Never before have so many of Beethoven's letters appeared in print; and it is due to the industry and enthusiasm of Dr. Kalischer and his colleague, Mr. J. S. Shedlock—the English translator, and best living authority on the master in this country—that this valuable addition to musical literature has become an accomplished fact.

* Beethoven's Letters. A critical edition, with explanatory notes by Dr. A. C. Kalischer. Translated, with preface, by J. S. Shedlock, B.A. Illustrated. Two vols. London: J. M. Dent & Co. 1909.

Excepting the first letter, a dedicatory epistle prefixed to three early pianoforte sonatas, the correspondence covers a period of forty years, from the time that the writer was a youth of seventeen to within a few days of his death. Some of the letters are very short, only a sentence perhaps, as in this to his friend Anton Schindler, written in May, 1824 :

Best of friends!—You can come to mid-day meal, bring your provisions with you—be ready—we are ready.

B———N.

Not altogether a very hospitable invitation on the face of it, but thoroughly Beethovenish. The very first letter has a touch of sadness as foreshadowing those physical and mental troubles that ran through his life. He writes : ' Since I have been here [Bonn], I have enjoyed only a few pleasant hours ; during the whole time I have been troubled with asthma, and I much fear it will lead to consumption. I also suffer from melancholy, which for me is almost as great an evil as my illness itself.' Reference to the master's deafness—one of the most terrible calamities that can befall a musician—appears early in these published letters. ' My hearing has become weaker during the last three years,' he writes in 1800, adding ' the humming in my ears continues day and night without ceasing To give you an idea of this extraordinary deafness, I tell you that when at the theatre, I am obliged to lean forward close to the orchestra, in order to understand what is being said on the stage.'

Let us turn to some of the brighter moments of the master's life as recorded by himself. While it is interesting to learn what he has to say about the great giants in music, it is not surprising to find that he held J. S. Bach in the highest esteem. Writing to Hofmeister, the music-publisher, of Leipsic, he says :

That you wish to publish the works of Sebastian Bach rejoices my heart, which beats in unison with the high art of this forefather of harmony, and I desire soon to see the scheme in full swing. I hope that here [Vienna], as soon as golden peace has been proclaimed, I shall be able to be of great assistance in the matter, when you issue a subscription list.'

In a letter to Messrs. Breitkopf & Haertel, he says : ' I would like to have all the works of Karl Phillip Emanuel Bach, all of which you actually publish ; also a Mass by J. Sebastian Bach, in which there is the following Crucifixus, with a Basso ostinato, very like yourselves.' (Beethoven was not always over polite, even to his publishers.) After the music example, he adds : ' Then you must have the best copy of Bach's tempered Clavier, and this I also beg you to send me.' He asks the same publishers to send him the scores of Haydn's Masses, Mozart's Requiem, and other works. In a letter to a lady, written in 1812 : ' Do not snatch the laurel wreaths from Handel, Haydn, Mozart, they are entitled to them, as yet I am not.' Unusually interesting is another reference to Handel, in a letter dated 1826, a year before the writer's death, and addressed to an unknown correspondent, probably a publisher. It reads :

Holz assures me that you want to have the engraving representing Handel's monument in St. Peter's Church, in London, printed in larger size, and published. This gives me great joy, to say nothing of my having been the cause of it. Accept my thanks for it in anticipation.

' St. Peter's Church in London' is, of course, Westminster Abbey, and the monument is the statue by Roubiliac.

There are, naturally, many references to Beethoven's own compositions. Writing to Fräulein Eleonore von Breuning, whom he addresses as ' Honoured Eleonore, my dearest friend,' he gives her some hints as to simplifying some passages in his variations for pianoforte and violin on the well-known air from Mozart's ' Figaro,' ' Se vuol ballar.' He says, in a postscript :

The Variations will be somewhat difficult to play, especially the shakes in the Coda. But don't let that alarm you. It is so arranged that you need only play the shake ; the other notes you leave out, as they are also in the violin part. I never would have written anything of the kind, but I had frequently noticed that there was some one in Vienna who generally, when I had been improvising of an evening, noted down next day many of my peculiarities in composing, and boasted about them. Now as I foresaw that such things would soon appear [in print], I resolved to be beforehand with them. And there was another reason for perplexing the pianists here, viz., many of them are my deadly enemies, so I wished in this way to take vengeance on them, for I knew beforehand that here and there the Variations would be put before them, and that these gentlemen would come off badly.

Apropos of the ' Eroica Symphony' he writes to Messrs. Breitkopf & Haertel : ' The symphony is really entitled Bonaparte, and in addition to the usual instruments there are, specially, three obligato horns. I believe it will interest the musical public.' (How prophetic was that sentence!). ' I should like you, instead of printing it in parts, to publish it in score.' The Mass in D evoked the following letter written to Andreas Streicher, the pianoforte-maker, dated September 16, 1824 :

I willingly comply with your wish, my worthy friend, to send to several choral societies the vocal parts of my last great Mass, together with a score for organ or piano, because these societies at public, and especially at sacred festivals, can produce a powerful impression on audiences ; and in writing this great Mass it was my chief aim to awaken, and to render lasting, religious feeling as well in the singers as in the hearers.

Beethoven's correspondence with his publishers would alone furnish material for an entertaining article ; however, a few samples from the letters must suffice. At the age of thirty he wrote, to Dr. F. Wegeler, of Bonn : ' My compositions are bringing in a goodly sum, and, I may add, it is scarcely possible for me to execute the orders given. Also for every work I have six or seven publishers, and if I choose even more. They do not bargain with me ; I demand, and they pay !' The charge of obstinacy (ostinato) which, as already mentioned, he brought against one of his publishers, is mild compared with the term ' arch swindler' which he applied to Messrs. Artaria. He was furious at the number of mistakes in the E flat Pianoforte concerto and Choral Fantasia : ' There are a jolly lot of faults in the concerto,' he says. One more letter must be given by reason of its unusually unbuttoned nature. It was written to Tobias Haslinger, head of the firm of Steiner & Co. in September, 1826, the year before Beethoven died :

In conformity with my exclusive privilege, the bearer of this has to pull and shake, first your right ear, cres : — — — and then the left one, ffmo., etc. — — — After this beneficial operation, he has to explain that I desire to take back all those works which you have not yet printed and published for the same disgraceful fee which you have given for it [? them]. Question? Answer! From the position of manager intended for you some time ago, you have now again been raised to that of a maker of bills of exchange.

Farewell, former Tobias juvenis and 2 duo, at present primus caput, Tobias primus.

L. V. BEETHOVEN.

Although Beethoven never set his foot on our shores, he more than once expressed his intention to visit England. In a letter to Ferdinand Ries, he says: 'Next spring (1824) I shall be in London to embrace your wife,' and in another communication he writes: 'Kind regards to your dear wife, also to all the pretty young English ladies who will be glad to hear of me.' He refers to the rates in Vienna having been raised 'after the English fashion.' What would he say now! His English correspondents included Charles Neate, George Thomson, 'merchant in the musical line, Edinburgh, Scotland,' Ferdinand Ries, Sir George Smart, and Ignaz Moscheles. He seems to have been on intimate terms with the first named, as he begins a letter on May 18, 1816, with: 'My dear Neate.' He says:

Mr. Ries gave me notice of your intention to give a concert for my benefit. For this triumph of my art in London I would be indebted to you alone; but an influence still wholesomer on my most indigent life would be to have the profit proceeding from this enterprise. . . .

Answer me in English if you have to give me happy news (for example, the giving of a concert for my benefit), in French if the news should be bad.

Beethoven was not unlike other composers in looking after his material interests, as his letters bear full testimony, certainly not least in his correspondence with English people anent the Philharmonic Society, and other outlets for making known his compositions here.

The letters are full of personal touches, even in regard to clothes. To his nephew Carl he writes:

MY OWN DEAR SON!—The upper or lower sample for 21 fl. seems to me the best, the landlord perhaps can advise you—Trousers 88—

You receive herewith 62 fl., 30 Kreuzers, Vienna value. Give a correct account of it. It is earned with great trouble—however, for the sake of one fl. (per ell) it is wiser to have the best. . . . For the trousers also the best! However, do not put on your best clothes when at home. One needs to be fully dressed when any one calls; so as soon as you get home, take off your coat and make yourself comfortable in the clothes meant for that purpose.

Beethoven gives full play to his horseplay in addressing his most intimate friends. And this is specially marked in the many letters written to the Court Secretary, Baron Zmeskall—'My very cheap Baron,' 'Dearest scavenger of a Baron,' 'Damned, lean little ex-music Count,' and so on. To the same friend he writes:

His Highness von Zmeskall is requested to hasten somewhat with the plucking out of his (and among them probably some strange) feathers. It is to be hoped that they will not have grown too firmly on you.

And again: 'Kindly pluck some feathers out of yourself.' In this connection the German Feder (feather) is commonly used for 'pen,' or as here, 'quill-pen'; thus by a subtle process did Beethoven all his friend a goose! Puns abound!

The servant worries are constant. 'The evening before last, N. [one of his maidservants] began to vex me for ringing the bell, after the manner of all my people,' he writes. 'Yesterday the infernal tricks commenced. I made short work of it, and threw at her my heavy chair which stands by the bed; and when I was at peace the whole day.' Again: 'The new kitchen-maid made an ugly face when asked to carry up wood.' These domestic troubles, doubtless aggravated by his deafness, his loneliness, his neurotic temperament and the base ingratitude of his nephew Carl, continued throughout the best creative years of the master's stormy life. Could there be a more pathetic letter than the following? Addressed to Zmeskall, it is dated August 21, 1817, a non-productive year because of the composer's law worries, bad health, and low spirits. He writes:

DEAR BEST Z. !—I am sorry to hear that you are ill—as for me, I am often in despair and inclined to put an end to my life, for there is no end to all these worries. God have pity on me, I look upon myself as good as lost. I have also some things to speak to you about, this servant is a thief, I have no doubt about it, he must go. My state of health requires meals at home and more comfort. I should like to know your opinion on these matters; if this state of things does not end, I shall not be in London next year, but, perhaps, in my grave. God be thanked that the roble will soon be played out.

In haste, yours,

L. VAN BEETHOVEN.

The temptation to further record the result of pleasant excursions through the Beethoven country as depicted in these letters, must be resisted. Before leaving it, we may mention that, in regard to the letter written to Ferdinand Ries about the great Hammerklavier Pianoforte sonata in B flat (Op. 106), only a portion is given (vol. ii., p. 131). The complete letter, containing innumerable corrections for the English edition of the work, was printed, from the original, in the Musical Times of May, 1896.

In conclusion, these two volumes are enriched with photographs of the composer and his forbears, and other illustrations, including some interesting facsimiles. Their interest is as fascinating as it is autobiographically valuable in describing, by his own pen, the everyday life of the greatest of the great composers. For this reason these 'Letters' should find a place in the library of those who love the music of Beethoven.

Reviews.

Old Irish Folk-music and Songs. A collection of 842 Irish Airs and Songs hitherto unpublished. Edited, with annotations, for the Royal Society of Antiquaries of Ireland, by P. W. Joyce, LL.D., M.R.I.A.

[Longmans, Green & Co.]

Ever since his boyhood, Dr. Joyce has been familiar with the music traditionally current in Ireland, a period covered by a considerable number of years. In 1852 he was noting airs to be incorporated in Petrie's collection of 1855, and his interest in, and love of, the subject has never waned. In 1872, Dr. Joyce himself published a delightful book of Irish vocal melodies; the present extensive collection represents that which has been left over from his contributions to Petrie and his own previous book. This remainder has been supplemented by two manuscript collections of airs, noted from rustic singers in Ireland, sixty or seventy years ago, thus bringing the total to 842 airs and constituting most valuable material for the student of folk-music in the British Isles.

As may be expected, the tunes are of different degrees of melodic value and historic importance; but as variants of the airs collected elsewhere, a number of these are of interest for comparison, and we do not regret to find a plentiful sprinkling of such, along with many beautiful and spirited tunes that apparently appear in this collection for the first time. In turning over the leaves of this valuable book, one finds many familiar strains in more or less varied forms, and Dr. Joyce is careful to explain that the words 'hitherto unpublished,' on his title-page, imply that he has taken no tune from a printed source.

The reader may be reminded that an air noted down in a particular country or district is not necessarily native-born. Therefore, although the title 'Irish Folk-music' may truly apply to much of the contents of this book, yet many of the tunes cannot be unreservedly accepted as falling into that category. Dr. Joyce in his preface makes some inquiry regarding the similarity of certain Danish tunes to those found in Ireland, and instances the case of one air, named as a reel, in (apparently) a modern Danish collection. As a boy, Dr. Joyce knew this tune as the 'Blacksmith's hornpipe.' The fact of the matter is, this particular hornpipe has been common in England ever since the beginning of the 19th century—doubtless about the period of its composition, as 'Fisher's hornpipe,' and under this title has been printed over and over again. Dr. Joyce prints other of these hornpipes which were so popular on the English stage a century or so ago. One of these, named 'Richard's hornpipe,' is really 'Richer's hornpipe,' Richer having been a tight-rope dancer at the end of the 18th century, when the dance first appeared in print. Another tune equally well known, and no less in evidence in both early and late books of airs, is 'The fairy dance.' Dr. Joyce refers to the Donegal version in the 'Irish Folk-song Journal.' Therein printed is a traditional account of its origin fifty or sixty years ago, which would match with any of the Irish fairy legends. The mysterious or supernatural being who taught the fiddler to play the tune, did not state, nor does Dr. Joyce, that the air is the composition of Nathaniel Gow and that it was published in 'Gow's fifth Collection of Strathspey Reels' (1809) as 'Largo's fairy dance.' Since that time it has appeared in more collections than is possible here to enumerate.

'Macquire's March,' which the editor also includes, turns out to be the popular 'Vetter Michael,' or 'Turkish March,' commonly supposed to be German. It is, however, contained in a late 18th century book of airs called 'Harper's Fancy,' and before that (circa 1760) it was printed by C. & S. Thompson as 'The Yorkshire March.'

It is curious to note that 'Willie Reilly' is fitted to the tune generally used in England for 'The banks of sweet Dundee.' 'Jemmy and Nancy' is a well-known English folk-song, and 'Lord Baykim' is evidently an Irish rendering of 'Lord Bateman.' 'My name it is Munhall' is most surely a parody of 'My name it is Jack Hall,' a song noted in England by different collectors, which the personal friends of the late Dr. W. A. Barrett will remember as one of his favourite ditties. 'The sheep shearers, or Next oars' and 'Nobes Maggot' are originally from the 'Dancing master'; but they have evidently been copied from Dr. Crotch's 'Specimens,' where they occur on the same page, into the manuscript which Dr. Joyce uses. 'Joy to Great Caesar' is assuredly not by Jackson, the piper, but by Farinelli, the violinist, who was certainly not an Irishman (see D'Urfe's 'Pills to purge melancholy,' vol. ii., 1719). 'I'll go home and tell my mother' is the old air best known as 'O gin I were fairly shut of her'; while 'Hunting the hare,' whether Irish, Welsh or English, has been printed so often that it might have been omitted.

Finally, Dr. Joyce has added materially to our store of traditional melody; and without dwelling too much on what we may deem faults of editorship, we can but tender him our best thanks for this his latest contribution to an important subject.

FRANK KIDSON.

A Manual of Harmony for Schools. By Francis Edward Gladstone. No. 76, Novello's Primers and Educational Series.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

As in his treatise on five-part harmony and strict counterpoint in this series of Primers, the author of this manual, in addition to his technical knowledge and ripe musicianship, brings to his task two other qualifications, that of having been brought up in a good school—he was a pupil of Dr. S. S. Wesley—and of having had a long and successful experience as a teacher of the theory of music. Dr. Gladstone begins his manual with this statement: 'Harmony results from combining sounds of different pitch in accordance with well-regulated principles.' True; but it is not every teacher of the art of 'combining sounds' who combines with his knowledge the gift of setting it forth 'with well-regulated principles.' This gift is certainly not lacking in our author, who states his case clearly and without that terminological verbosity which is apt to confuse if, indeed, it does not repel the student.

The book is divided into thirty-two chapters, which include modulation, cadences, harmonization of simple and florid melodies (one chapter each), and so on. 'No new theory is propounded,' says Dr. Gladstone, 'but it is hoped and believed that the results of the author's observations and long experience may be helpful to others who teach, as well as to those who are taught.' This Primer may therefore be regarded both as a teachers' and a students' book on the subject of which it so ably treats. In the chapter on 'Prohibited and permissible fifths,' our author utters a timely word of caution—very necessary in these unlicensed days—as to the breaking of acknowledged rules of harmony. He says: 'The canons of art need not fetter a true musician whose natural powers have been properly trained and developed. Nevertheless, diligent search has to be made through many pages of the works of the Great Masters before an occasional departure from rule can be discovered.'

Although this is a manual of harmony for schools, its author wisely removes from the minds of young students the idea that the study of harmony exercises consists of a series of diluted hymn-tunes, or disfigured basses. For instance, in regard to the third inversion of the chord of the German sixth, he says it 'has been used with fine effect by three of the great composers. Bach employed it to give expression to the words "sepultus est" in the B minor Mass. Beethoven used it to bring about a welcome but unexpected return to the primary key towards the end of his second symphony, and Mendelssohn introduced it most appropriately into the hymn "Hear my prayer." Thus to point out to students the actual use of such and such a chord by the great masters is highly beneficial in every way, and is most commendable as broadening their harmonic outlook. It is equally satisfactory to find that Dr. Gladstone gives considerable space and attention to the important subject of the harmonization of melodies, a branch of theoretical study that formerly received little or no attention in treatises on harmony. For the use of teachers a key to the Primer has been prepared. In view of an early call for a second edition of the manual, the time-signatures on pp. 95, 109 (1st ex.) and 115 (No. 59) need a little correction.

Vincenzo Bellini. A memoir by William A. C. Lloyd.
[Sisley's Ltd.]

Although styled a memoir, this book upon the composer of 'La Sonnambula' and 'Norma' is rather more in the nature of a critical study of Bellini's operas than a detailed biography of the man himself. The author somewhat disarms criticism on this point when he says that he fears his monograph 'is quite unworthy of the memory of the genius it concerns.' After all, 'by their fruits ye shall know them' is true even of operatic composers, and considering Bellini's short life—only thirty-four years—his career was certainly a fruitful one. Mr. Lloyd pleasantly discourses upon the conception, plots and productions of his hero's stage-works. In this connection he quotes a letter from Bellini in which the composer records that the first performance of 'Norma'—on December 26, 1831—was a 'Fiasco! Fiasco! solenne Fiasco!'

One would like to have had further information regarding Bellini's sojourn in London during the year 1833. In this connection, Mr. Lloyd might have amplified the somewhat meagre account of that visit had he referred to the Musical Times of September, 1901, where special reference was made to that pleasant incident in the composer's career. It would also have been interesting if the question of Bellini's marriage, or non-marriage, had been cleared up. In the article above referred to, we quoted an extract from the Gentleman's Magazine which recorded the death (in 1841) of the 'widow Bellini,' who had re-married, the name of her second husband having been Billing. According to Mr. Lloyd, Bellini never married; if so, how can that be reconciled with the above obituary information? Mr. Lloyd is correct in saying that Bellini was buried in Père-la-chaise cemetery, Paris; but he omits to mention that the composer's remains were exhumed and re-interred at his native town, Catania (Sicily), in the year 1876. On p. 134 (note) 'W. A. Arthorp' should be 'W. F. Apthorp,' and on p. 173, 'Habernech' should be 'Haberneck.' A portrait of Bellini, who had handsome features, forms a frontispiece to the book.

Original Compositions for the Organ. By various composers.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

This comprehensive series of organ music is rapidly marching on to its 400th number. Not a few organists will remember the pleasure which No. 1 gave them on its publication, nearly thirty years ago, for did it not contain two charming little pieces by Dr. G. J. Bennett? And from this welcome beginning the series has grown to remarkable dimensions.

The first piece in the instalment now before us is a Scherzo Nuptiale, in E, by Mr. Bernard Johnson, a piece which justifies its title and will prove acceptable at marriage services. To this succeed typical specimens of an ancient composer in two choral preludes by Dietrich Buxtehude, reverently edited by Mr. John E. West. A Pastoral overture in G, inscribed to the members of the Huddersfield and District Organists' Association, is a well-developed composition in which open-air life is more particularly depicted in the opening largo section. Five numbers of the series are devoted to a selection from the late Dr. E. T. Chipp's excellent 'Twenty-four pieces for the organ.' They consist of a Canzonet in G, a Pastorale in A, an Andante con moto in F sharp minor, an Andante varied in A minor, and an Ave Maria. All that is needful in the way of editing has been conscientiously done by Mr. West, and whether as voluntaries in church or recital pieces these well-written compositions are well worthy the attention of organists.

A second set of three preludes composed by Mr. John E. West consists of a Con moto movement in E flat, suitable for an opening voluntary, an Allegretto pastorale in D, just the thing for a harvest festival service, and an Andante doloroso, really a funeral march, which bears the pathetic inscription 'In memoriam—E. M. W.' All three pieces furnish proof, if proof were needed, of the composer's inventive facility and knowledge of the potentialities of the organ. The melodic gift of Mr. Ernest Newton is evidenced in a Duetto in G, so-called, though a goodly part of the piece is in D, and is assigned to a solo stop. Towards the end, however, the two parts appear, and thus, like all the nice stories, the duettino ends happily in its wald flutend and vox humana combination with a lieblich arpeggioc-accompaniment.

CHORAL MUSIC.

Chorus of Empire. Empire of the Sea. For chorus and orchestra. By Charles A. E. Harriss.

Arethusa. A ballad for chorus and orchestra. By W. H. Ibberson. Words by Shelley.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

The two Empire choruses by Dr. Charles Harriss, performed at the recent Empire concert given at the Royal Albert Hall, deserve better fate than to be stored up for use only on such patriotic occasions. They are not likely, however, to meet with such treatment, for their elements of popularity, whether involved in their subject-matter or in their musical potentialities, are too obvious and direct in their appeal not to ensure their frequent inclusion in the programmes of choral societies. The words of both are by Alfred Campbell. The initial direction, Allegro pomposo, the 'Chorus of Empire' sufficiently indicates its character, which is consistently intensified up to the final max. The 'Empire of the sea' chorus is a lilting, tuneful litz worked up to a strenuous and strepitous finale that not fail to elicit enthusiastic applause.

Mr. W. H. Ibberson's setting, for chorus and orchestra, Shelley's 'Arethusa' is a melodious and musicianly work, clearly written by a man who keeps the requirements and limitations of real choral music in view in giving effect his modern aspirations. The tonal changes are frequent, and are brought about in such a manner that choralists will be forced to devote their entire attention to execution to detriment of expression. The work is characterized rather by 'atmosphere' nor by attempt at profundity, but is perfectly direct in its methods, and exhibits many points to testify to the composer's melodic, harmonic and rhythmic inventive power.

Dramatische Tänze. Composed by Granville Bantock. Arranged for pianoforte solo. Three volumes. [Breitkopf & Härtel.]

A darkened theatre, a concealed orchestra, a 'classical dancer,' and the odour of Eastern incense, if not essential accessories would certainly help to attune the listener's mood and thoughts to a proper appreciation of Mr. Bantock's 'Dramatic dances.' These highly-characteristic examples of the composer's instrumental music aim at accompanying and providing a commentary upon solo dances of definite dramatic significance, in which the dancer represents an Eastern character. In one, Cleopatra is toying with a snake. In another, Sappho improvises upon her lyre, musing on her unrequited love and finding solace in the immortal fame to which she is destined; the dance can be played entirely on the harp. The third is more dramatic; a discarded favourite of a prince stabs her former master dead: she is overcome by remorse, which turns to madness—here the composer remorselessly uses the whole-tone scale—and falls dead. In the pianoforte score the progress and meaning of the dancer's evolutions are fully described, and one is therefore enabled to appreciate the aptness as well as the ingenuity of the music. In dealing with a subject of this character Mr. Bantock is thoroughly in his element, and he gives us interesting and striking examples of his individual harmonies and moods.

Obituary.

The following deaths are recorded with regret.

THE REV. H. H. WOODWARD.

On May 25, in London, following upon an operation, the Rev. HERBERT HALL WOODWARD, Precentor of Worcester Cathedral, aged sixty-two. A biographical sketch of the tender and true-hearted man whose loss is naturally so deeply deplored at the cathedral he loved and served so well, together with his portrait and a facsimile of the autograph of a phrase from his widely-known and oft-sung anthem 'The radiant morn,' appeared in the Musical Times of November, 1905; therefore the need does not exist to repeat the details of Mr. Woodward's saintly and beautiful life. The funeral took place at Worcester Cathedral on May 29, when the revered remains were interred in the cloister garth amid every indication of the deepest sorrow.

In a sermon preached in the cathedral on the Sunday morning after the sad event, Canon Teignmouth Shore, in referring to the life-work of 'the dear and honoured Precentor,' said: 'What he did for this cathedral in constituting the choir, as it now exists, and adding to the regular order, the stately dignity, and the spiritual beauty of our worship, is known to all Worcester,' and, the preacher might have added, far beyond the walls of the stately fane on the banks of the Severn. The Dean, in the sermon preached by him at the evening service, said: 'Everyone recognized the Precentor's quiet, conscientious devotion to duty. Whatever happened, he was sure to be at his post, was always to be depended upon. This devotion to duty was not a mechanical performance of daily routine, but the outcome and expression of earnest faith and a love of Jesus Christ. He put his conscience into what he did, and had a high ideal of the sacred character of his office. . . . As a Christian he lived not only for himself, but for others, especially for the boys of the choir, in whose spiritual welfare he took such a deep interest—an interest which did not cease when they left the choir, but was maintained always, and was often expressed by quiet acts of helpfulness, financial and personal.' Of Herbert Hall Woodward it may be truly said: 'The memory of the just is blessed.'

MR. LEARMONT DRYSDALE.

On June 18, at 22, Braid Crescent, Edinburgh, in his forty-third year, from pneumonia, LEARMONT DRYSDALE. A native of Edinburgh, he at first studied architecture, but in 1888 he began his distinguished career as a pianist and composer at the Royal Academy of Music. As a pupil there of Mr. Frederick Corder, he won the Lucas prize, in 1890, with an Overture to a comedy. While still a student at the Academy, he composed 'The spirit of the glen,' a ballad for orchestra (1889); 'Thomas the rhymer,' an orchestral prelude (1890), and 'The Kelpie,' a scena, forming part of a cantata which was afterwards produced at the Paterson concerts, Edinburgh, December 17, 1894. For his concert-overture, 'Tam O'Shanter,' he obtained a prize, thirty guineas, offered by the Glasgow Society of Musicians in 1891, and it was performed at the Crystal Palace, under Manns, on October 24 of that year. 'Herondian,' another overture, was brought to a hearing by the Stock Exchange Orchestral Society, April 24, 1894, and his mystic play, 'The plague,' was produced at the Lyceum Theatre, Edinburgh, in October, 1896. He composed the music of the opera founded on Baring-Gould's novel, 'The red spider,' performed at Dundee in 1898. To the credit of Mr. Drysdale's creative output can be added a comic opera, 'The Oracle,' a light opera, 'The girl from London,' and an opera entitled 'Flora Macdonald.'

In 1904, Mr. Drysdale was appointed principal professor of composition at the Glasgow Athenæum School of Music. The death of so gifted a composer, in the prime of life, is a matter for deep regret.

MRS. ARTHUR O'LEARY.

On June 17, at 44, Campden Hill Square, ROSETTA O'LEARY. The daughter of W. S. Vinning, of Newton Abbot, Devonshire, this gifted lady gave remarkable evidence of her musicianship by singing and playing at concerts when she was only seven years of age. While still a child, her father sent her to the Royal Academy of Music. There she doubly distinguished herself by winning, in open competition, a King's Scholarship (£50 for two years) in December, 1851, and in being re-elected in 1853. Her professors at Tenterden Street were Balsir Chatterton and John Thomas (harp), W. H. Holmes (pianoforte), and G. A. Macfarren and Dr. Steggall (composition). As a student Miss Vinning showed great facility in reading at sight and in extemporizing. She was also an excellent harpist, and was appointed a sub-professor of the instrument at the Academy, of which institution she was subsequently elected a Fellow. A skilful voice-trainer, Mrs. O'Leary formerly conducted the South Kensington Ladies' Choir, and as a composer of songs she was particularly successful, that entitled 'I am the angel' being a general favourite. In November, 1860, she married Mr. Arthur O'Leary, for whom much sympathy will be felt in the hour of his sorrow.

SIGNOR MARTUCCI.

On June 1, GIUSEPPE MARTUCCI, the well-known pianist, orchestral conductor and composer. Born at Capua, January 6, 1856, the son of a military bandmaster, he, as a child, made a sensation in Naples by his clever pianoforte playing. At the age of eleven he became a pupil at the Royal Conservatoire, Naples, of which he afterwards became, by competition, a professor. After having given successful concerts in Rome and Milan, Martucci, as a solo pianist, took a tour, in 1875, through France, Germany, and England. As conductor of the fine orchestral concerts instituted by the Prince d'Ardore at Naples, his programmes were commendably eclectic, and included the names of Parry, Stanford, and other English composers. He conducted, at Bologna, in 1888, the first performance of Wagner's 'Tristan' in Italy. In 1902 he was appointed director of the Conservatorio, Naples. In addition to being a pianoforte virtuoso of the first rank, Martucci had good claim to recognition as a composer of marked ability. The list of his compositions given in the new edition of Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians' (iii., 69), testifies to his versatility and high aims.

MR. JAMES LANGRAN.

On June 8, at his residence, 52, Penbury Road, Tottenham, after a short illness, JAMES LANGRAN, aged seventy-three. Except for the first three years of his life, Mr. Langran had lived at Tottenham, where for fifty years he faithfully discharged the duties of organist at two of its churches—Holy Trinity for eleven years, from 1859, and for nearly forty years at the Parish Church of All Hallows. As the composer of the well-known and well-written hymn-tune 'Deerhurst,' this earnest-minded musician achieved fame far beyond the confines of the London suburb in which he quietly and modestly exercised his profession. The history of that popular tune, with a facsimile of it written in the composer's own hand, together with a portrait and biography of Mr. Langran, appeared in the Musical Times for February, 1907. The funeral took place, amid many manifestations of regret and sympathy for Mr. Langran's family, at Tottenham Cemetery on June 12, the first part of the service being held at the Parish Church, when 'Deerhurst' was sung.

SEÑOR ALBENIZ.

At Cambo, in the Pyrenees, ISAAC ALBENIZ, the distinguished Spanish musician, aged forty-eight. As a skilful pianist—he was a pupil of Marmontel, Jadassohn, Brassin, and Liszt—he appeared in England and elsewhere with great success, and in his native country he achieved fame as the composer of a comic opera, 'The Magic Opal,' produced at the Lyric Theatre, London, January 19, 1893, and two more ambitious works for the stage, 'Enrico Clifford' (1894), and 'Pepita Jimenez' (1895), both produced at Barcelona. At Queen's Hall his 'Catalonia' suite for orchestra has been performed, and recently at Bechstein Hall, Miss Sansoni introduced his 'Iberia' suite on Spanish rhythms. Señor Albeniz had completed Part 1, 'Merlin,' of his 'King Arthur' trilogy, and Part 2, 'Lancelot,' was almost finished.

JOACHIM ANDERSEN.

The musical life of Copenhagen recently suffered a severe loss by the death of CARL JOACHIM ANDERSEN, aged sixty-two. Born at Copenhagen, April 29, 1847, he was formerly one of the finest flautists of his day, and a prominent composer for the instrument. He was one of the founders of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra. On his return to Copenhagen in 1894, he started the Palace Orchestra, at the concerts of which, given at popular prices and on Sunday afternoons, he conducted performances of the best orchestral music. This excellent work in the cause of music of the highest type exercised a most beneficent influence on the public taste, and through his efforts many new works were introduced, as for instance, Elgar's Variations, performed under his direction for the first time in Denmark.

THE REV. R. H. HADDEN.

On June 11, very suddenly, while talking to his friend Canon Edgar Sheppard in Pall Mall, the Rev. ROBERT HENRY HADDEN, honorary chaplain to the King and vicar of St. Mark's Church, North Audley Street, aged fifty-five. Mr. Hadden was Junior Warden of the Musicians' Company, and therefore he would, had he lived, soon have been elected to the distinguished position of Master. His tragic and premature death has caused the sincere and very deep regret of his colleagues at the loss of an estimable man and loyal friend.

On June 19, ARTHUR UPJOHN HAYTER, aged seventy-six, formerly organist of Bow Church, and afterwards of the Parish Church, Bromley-by-Bow, Essex. Mr. Hayter was a son of the late Aaron Upjohn Hayter, at one time organist of Hereford Cathedral, and subsequently organist of Trinity Church, Boston, and organist and conductor of the Handel and Haydn Society in that city. He was born at Brooklyne, U.S.A., in 1833, and on coming to England in 1853, became a pupil of Dr. E. J. Hopkins.

Mons. M. A. MASSACRIE-DURAND, proprietor of the great music-publishing firm of Messieurs A. Durand et Fils, Paris, from whose house have been issued the works of Saint-Saëns, Debussy, and other leading French composers.

On June 19, at 33, Oakley Square, N.W., Mr. CHARLES CHALLENGER, J.P., in his eighty-sixth year.

It is a good thing to give thanks.

The musical score is arranged in three systems. Each system contains four staves: two vocal staves (Soprano and Alto/Tenors) and two piano accompaniment staves (Right and Left Hand). The key signature is three sharps (F#, C#, G#) and the time signature is 4/4.

System 1: The vocal lines begin with the lyrics "giv - ing praise, . . in giv - ing praise,". The piano accompaniment features a rhythmic pattern of eighth and sixteenth notes. Dynamics include mf.

THE HANDEL-MENDELSSOHN FESTIVAL.

'The old order changeth, yielding place to new.' These words, of enduring truth, are applicable to the great music-making held triennially at the Crystal Palace. For more than half-a-century the music on these occasions has, of course, been that of Handel; there are, however, two exceptions, the National Anthem, sung at every festival, and at the preliminary festival of 1857—when Queen Victoria and the Prince Consort were present—the proceedings concluded with the Old Hundredth Psalm, Her Majesty and the whole audience standing while it was sung.' As the meeting of 1909 happened to coincide with the centenary of the birth of Mendelssohn, it was thought desirable to allow that master to share, and share alike, with the composer of the 'Messiah' in providing the music to be performed, hence the Handel-Mendelssohn Festival held at Sydenham last month.

From a numerical point of view, no change had been made in the gigantic force employed to give majestic effect to the music of the two masters. The choir consisted of upwards of 3,000 voices. London and the suburbs contributed about 2,700 of these capable singers, and the remainder came from the chief provincial centres of choral song—Sheffield Musical Union and Leeds Choral Union (both conducted by Dr. Coward), Bradford, Bristol (trained by Mr. George Risleley), and, for the first time, South Wales (trained by Mr. T. E. Aylward). The band numbered nearly 500 players, of whom about 270 were experienced amateur performers; but the London Symphony Orchestra (led by Mr. W. H. Reed) were specially engaged to accompany the solos and to leaven, so to speak, the instrumental force. The doyen of the soloists was Sir Charles Santley, who first appeared in 1865, and has sung at every festival since. Mr. Walter W. Hedgcock, organist and musical director of the Crystal Palace, occupied his accustomed place at the keyboard for the seventh time, and Dr. Frederic Cowen, as in 1903 and 1906, conducted.

The festival was held on the following days: Grand Rehearsal, Saturday, June 19; 'Elijah' (Mendelssohn), June 22; Selection (Handel) and Hymn of Praise (Mendelssohn), Thursday, June 24; and 'Messiah,' Saturday, June 26.

The grand rehearsal was not 'grand' in the sense of a mere parade of the forces engaged, but a time of real effort towards perfection on the part of everyone concerned. Dr. Cowen did not hesitate to stop his singers and players when occasion required it, even if to correct, as it might appear to some, a trifling shortcoming, as for instance the pronunciation of the word 'scatter,' in the National Anthem. Other instances in the region of improvement could be mentioned, so careful and conscientious was the conductor in discharging his arduous duties of preparation. In addition to solos and choruses from the programmes of the three days of the festival, the following additional solos by Handel were sung:

Air	Where'er you walk (Semele).
	Mr. WALTER HYDE.
Air	Lascia Amor (Orlando).
	Mr. ROBERT RADFORD.
Air	Praise the Lord (Esther).
	Miss AGNES NICHOLLS.
Recit. .. .	I rage, I melt, I burn
Air	O ruddier than the cherry } (Acis and Galatea).
	Mr. WATKIN MILLS.
	Piccolo obbligato, Mr. J. WILCOCKE.

Magnificent! This is the least that can be said of the choral singing in 'Elijah.' From first to last the choir covered themselves with glory. It was difficult which to admire most—tone, phrasing, expression, or precision—as all these attributes reached the highest level of excellence. The mobility, alertness, and discipline of these thousands of artistic amateurs was as wonderful as it was commendable. Credit for such gratifying results is the equal and just due of both the conductor and the forces under his control. Dr. Cowen must have taken infinite pains to secure such splendid results, and his singers and players responded to his wishes with a readiness deserving of unqualified praise. With a long experience of Handel festivals we have no hesitation in saying that no finer choral singing has ever before been heard at the Crystal Palace. This in itself is a matter of congratulation; but such testimony carries something more with it—the supreme satisfaction that choral technique in England has very greatly improved during recent years, with the result that, we venture to say, no other country could produce a choir so intelligent, so artistically vocal, and so efficient in every way as that which sang at the Handel-Mendelssohn festival last month. Just to touch upon the details of the performance, mention must be made of the lovely tone of all sections of the choir, the tenors especially, and the contrasts between the tender tones of, for instance, 'He watching over Israel' and the thrilling building up of the semitonic portion of 'Thanks be to God,' leading to the wonderful climax of that masterly pæan of grateful choral-song.

The names of the principal vocalists are a sufficient guarantee of their share in making the performance a memorable one—Miss Agnes Nicholls, Madame Clara Butt, Mr. Ben Davies and Sir Charles Santley. Special mention must be made, however, of the veteran baritone, who once more sang the music assigned to the Prophet with his time-honoured and well-known artistic fervour and poetic insight into the music. The following artists rendered efficient aid in the concerted numbers: Miss Gladys Honey, Miss May Peters, Mr. Gwilym Richards and Mr. Julien Henry. The oratorio was preceded by the National Anthem (Costa's arrangement).

The programme of the second day's music was as follows:

PART I.

*Chorus	Awake the trumpet's lofty sound (Samson).
*Air	Hear me, ye winds and waves (Julius Caesar and Scipio).
	Mr. WATKIN MILLS.

PART II.

HYMN OF PRAISE (Lobgesang) Mendelssohn.

The same high standard of interpretative efficiency so abundantly manifested at the 'Elijah' performance, was fully maintained on the Selection Day. The strength and purity of the choral tone were richly displayed in the chain of choruses from 'Israel in Egypt,' of which the 'Hailstone' had to be repeated in response to the insistent applause of the audience. The diatonic grandeur of the Gloria Patri from the 'Utrecht Jubilate,' was another triumph for the choir. In the Symphony to the 'Hymn of Praise' the orchestras played with an unanimity of purpose and close attention to light and shade that were no less remarkable than praise-worthy—indeed, so good was the performance of the Symphony that it would have done credit to many an orchestra entirely professional. And to return to the choir, perhaps no more beautiful or deeply devotional rendering of 'I waited for the Lord' has ever before been given, while the tenor lead in 'All ye that cried unto the Lord' reached the high-water mark of refined solo-singing by multiplied voices. The ladies' voices in 'Praise thou the Lord' and the full choir in 'The night is departing,' with its chorale sequel, were equally impressive. The soloists—Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Edith Evans, and Mr. Walter Hyde—gave a good account of themselves. As on Tuesday, in 'Elijah,' Mr. Walter Hedgcock rendered valuable service at the organ, and the entire performance was one of the best, if not the best, associated with these festivals.

Finally, the appointment, or rather the re-appointment of Dr. Frederic Cowen as conductor was more than justified. He not only gave fresh proof of his skill and cool-headedness in directing and controlling a large body of executants, but it was abundantly evident throughout—solos, choruses, and instrumental music—that he and all those associated with him had worked hard to achieve results which have made most memorable the Handel-Mendelssohn Festival of 1909.

The performance of the 'Messiah,' announced for June 26, took place too late for notice in the present issue.

THE FRENCH HORN.

At the last sessional meeting of the Musical Association, held at Broadwood's Rooms on June 15, Sir Frederick Bridge in the chair, Mr. D. J. Blaikley read an interesting and instructive paper on 'The French horn.'

The lecturer stated that the immediate object of his paper was the experimental conditions under which 'hand-stopped' or 'muted' notes are produced on the French horn, but that, at the request of the Council, he had included a slight sketch of the general development and characteristics of the instrument.

The natural horn—whether ox-horn, conch-shell, or elephant's tusk—is easily converted into an instrument of sound, and very early in history such an instrument of signalling must have been found very valuable, both in war and in the chase. The notes proper to such a natural instrument approximate closely to the harmonic series, and the more close this approximation is, the better is the tone-quality, and the greater the carrying power. The better horns would naturally be appreciated, and men's ears would become attuned to the intervals of the common chord. The advantage possessed by a long horn over a short one, in that it easily yields many more notes, would lead to supplementing the natural length of the horn by the addition of tubing, and according to the way in which this increase is treated, a difference in tone-quality is obtained, which has resulted in the 'horn' and 'trumpet' classes, the difference being accentuated by varieties in shape of bell and mouth-piece.

The earliest use of horns in concert is to be found in some of the old German hunting calls for horns, arranged in four- and five-part harmony, and the modern orchestral horn is the outcome of the Wald-horn or Cor de Chasse. It appears to have been used in the opera at first for special incidents—hunting calls, &c.—but gradually came to be established as a recognized member of the orchestra. The records of the Royal Theatre of Dresden show that there were two horns in the orchestra in 1711; in England it was introduced as early as 1720, and in the Imperial Opera at Vienna between 1712 and 1740. It then appears to have suffered a slight eclipse, possibly because it was considered blatant, for the distinction between the horn and trumpet qualities was not then so well defined as it now is. About the year 1770, Hampl, a horn-player at the Court of Dresden, found that the insertion of his hand in the bell altered the pitch by a semitone; but the real character of such an alteration has been much disputed.

Musical illustrations were ably given by Mr. Oskar Borsdorf (horn), Miss P. Nevinson (pianoforte), and Miss F. M. Blaikley (vocalist).

THE NATIONAL EISTEDDFOD OF WALES.

In choosing London—or Llundain, as it is in the vernacular—as its meeting-place in the year 1909, this ancient and characteristic institution of the Principality orsook its native heath for the busy metropolis. On the morning of June 15 the opening ceremony known as the Jorsedd, with its time-honoured picturesque formalities and symbolic rites, took place on the banks of the Serpentine, Hyde Park. Thereafter the meetings were held at the Royal Albert Hall, and covered the period June 15 to 18. As of old, the proceedings included orations, speeches, competitions, musical and otherwise, and of course, that indispensable function, the Chaining of the Bard!

As the important speech of Mr. Arthur Balfour, one of the chairmen of the meetings, is specially referred to on p. 448; and as the choral and other contests find a place in the Musical Competition Record (Supplement), it may suffice to mention the three evening concerts, given at Queen's Hall on June 16, 17 and 18. At the first of these, Sgar's 'Caractacus' was excellently sung by the Eisteddfod Choir, accompanied by a capital orchestra, under the able direction of Mr. Merlin Morgan. The soloists were Miss Edith Evans, Mr. Ivor Foster, Mr. Cynlais Gibbs and

Mr. David Evans. On the following evening (June 17) was performed a new work by a Welsh composer, Mr. David Thomas. This was a setting, for tenor solo (Mr. Herbert Emlyn), double chorus and orchestra, of Dryden's 'A song for St. Cecilia's Day.' The work, though evidently well-intentioned, is not likely to enhance the reputation of Wales as a creative country. At the last concert of the Eisteddfod the music was entirely Welsh, sung by that distinguished son of the Principality, Mr. Ben Davies, and other tuneful voices from that land of song.

At the matutinal hour of nine on June 16, an important meeting was held in the West Room of the Royal Albert Hall, under the auspices of the Honourable Society of Cymmrodorion, of the Cymdeithas Alawon Gwerin Cymru (Welsh Folk-Song Society). On that interesting occasion Dr. J. Lloyd Williams, of Bangor, read a paper on 'The collection of Welsh Folk-songs.'

Dr. Lloyd Williams dispelled all doubt as to the existence and value of any uncollected Welsh folk-songs. In proof thereof he said that already over 300 such melodies had passed through the hands of the editors, most of them with Welsh words. These tunes were collected in all sorts of out-of-the-way nooks and corners in Snowdonia, and elsewhere. Moreover, the Society had long lists of persons said to possess stores of these songs. The charm of the folk-song lay in its spontaneity and naturalness, and it had been in the nature of a revelation to find what an utter inability there was among ordinary singers to sing these songs. Dr. Williams, in conclusion, made good his case as to the abundance of folk-music that was waiting to be secured in Wales—melodies that would not only enrich the store of music in a country where a love of song prevailed, but would add to the store in the world at large.

'A MASS OF LIFE.'

The status attained by Frederick Delius as a composer ensures for every new work from his pen the respectful attention of all classes of musicians, in whatever direction their sympathies may lie. In the case of a work of the character and proportions of 'A Mass of Life,' great interest was naturally excited in the first performance in England, which took place at Queen's Hall on June 7, under the direction of Mr. Thomas Beecham, the occasion being the last of his series of five 'Symphony' concerts given with the Beecham Orchestra.

The 'Mass of Life' is a setting for chorus, solo voices and orchestra of a text selected from Nietzsche's 'Also sprach Zarathustra,' by Fritz Cassierer and translated into English in a masterly manner by Mr. William Wallace. The text is cast in the form of twelve separate sections grouped in four parts. It illustrates rather than epitomises Nietzsche's philosophy, and has been selected largely with a view to the requirements of musical æsthetics. Whether so profound and intangible a subject is suited for musical treatment is, even in the light of Delius's notable setting, still open to doubt. To many, having regard to the hypochondriac tendencies of modern music, its optimism will be a strong recommendation. But musicians need not consider the question whether Delius's work throws any illumination on Nietzsche's views, any more than they now concern themselves with the relation of Wagner's music to his philosophical tenets. It is more to them that the 'Mass of Life' is a complete exposition, not of anybody's system of thought, but of the musical methods of Frederick Delius. These methods, through the medium of earlier works, are familiar. They have been compared to those of Debussy and Strauss. It is true that they partake of the impressionism of the one and the full-blooded materialism of the other, and that his genius, like theirs, finds scope in the invention of harmonies and the choice of orchestral colours with which to vivify them. But his harmonic system could not be mistaken for that of either the French or the German master. Delius does not abuse the whole-tone scale or reproduce Debussy's other mannerisms, nor does he emulate the dare-devil counterpoint of Strauss. He gains his ends not so much by recherché chords and dissonances as by striking progressions and resolutions. The possibilities of this harmonic method as at present developed are fully explored in the 'Mass of Life'—fully explored, because their limitations are revealed; their resources of variety were not so great as to avoid causing a feeling of satiety before the end of the work was reached. Delius almost courts this effect by the small reliance he makes upon the inexhaustible fund of beauty at the command of melody. His attitude to melody cannot better be described than by a quotation from Mr. Wallace's able commentary: 'He attaches to the theme the same value that a painter does to a stroke of his brush loaded with colour. Every part of the harmonic tissue is essential, and the theme is merely one of many elements that cannot be isolated without weakening the structure.'

The work contains passages that were wearisome to listen to; but the most conservative of hearers could not resist or deny the attraction of the manifold effects of great beauty and originality in which the score abounds—effects that appeal both to the intellect and the sense. Many of these effects were obtained through the medium of the choral writing; but the treatment of the chorus was almost throughout of a nature that, in spite of extraordinarily skilful execution, made apparent the effort to execute and induced a feeling of acute sympathy with the singers, rather than admiration of what they were singing. Delius is in the forefront of the movement that has of late years altered the character of choral music; but even he fails to reconcile the new ideas with the capabilities of the human voice and the range of musical intelligence of the average chorist.

The choir employed on this occasion was the famous North Staffordshire District Choral Society, whose able conductor is Mr. Whewall. Their contribution to the performance was a triumph. Tone, expression and efficiency were always admirable and often verged on the miraculous. The most exacting solo work was carried out with high vocal and expressive ability by Mr. Charles W. Clark in the ungrateful baritone part, more or less identified throughout with Zarathustra. Other solo parts were carefully and sympathetically sung by Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Grainger Kerr, Mr. Webster Millar and Mr. Stanley Adams. The orchestra played with refinement under Mr. Beecham, whose direction of the performance was a striking proof of his twofold ability as a musician and conductor.

ROYAL OPERA.

Omitting repetition performances, the following is the summary of the representations since those recorded in our last issue.

On May 26, Mlle. Destinn made her first appearance as Floria in Puccini's 'La Tosca,' but not with that complete success which has attended her impersonation of other characters. A performance of Gounod's 'Faust,' on May 28, introduced Madame Kousnietzoff, from St. Petersburg, as a new and capable exponent of the music assigned to Marguerite. It was on May 29, 1890, that Bellini's 'La Sonnambula' was last heard at Covent Garden, therefore its revival exactly nineteen years afterwards, on May 29, was at least interesting in that it furnished another outlet for the brilliant vocalisation of Madame Tétrazini. The same brilliant artist scored further success as Rosina in Rossini's 'Il Barbière,' on May 31, in which the great prima donna effectively introduced the Polonaise from 'Mignon' and the Proch variations. Verdi's 'Otello,' performed on June 2, had the combined advantage of Madame Edvina in the part of Desdemona, and the re-appearance of Signor Scotti as Iago. Signor Leo Slezak, a great tenor, both as regards voice and stature, made a distinct success as the exponent of the part of Otello. Another opera of Verdi's, 'Aida,' given on June 5, served to display the great and rarely combined vocal and acting gifts of Madame Kirkby Lunn in the part of Amneris, while the costumes worn by Mlle. Destinn (Aida) were as brilliant as her voice.

Puccini's ever-welcome 'La Bohème' filled the bill on June 10, when the popular opera lost little if anything of its attractiveness in the excellent interpretations of the respective parts of Mimi and Rodolfo by Madame Kousnietzoff and Signor Anselmi. Mlle. O'Brien was a vivacious Musetta, and Messrs. Sammarco, Marcoux, and Gilbert, as versatile Bohemians, were as good as ever. A repeat performance of the work, on June 15, served to introduce Madame Preobrajenska, prima ballerina of the Imperial Opera, St. Petersburg. After the opera, this lady appeared in a selection of dances to the music of portions of Tchaikovsky's 'Casse Noisette' and a movement from his ballet 'Le lac des Cygnes,' in addition to a mazurka by Wieniawski. In her terpsichorean achievements she was 'supported' by M. Kysht, the dancing of the pair being most successful in the mazurka, of which the solo violin part was admirably played by Mr. Morrison.

M. CHARPENTIER'S 'LOUISE.'

M. Gustave Charpentier's 'Louise' was performed for the first time in England on June 18. A brief outline of the story will suffice. Louise, a work-girl, is in love with Julien, an artist, who sues for her hand. The reply of her parents is a refusal. She leaves home, and casts in her lot with her lover. The mother persuades her to return and comfort her father who is ill. The latter implores her to abandon the Bohemian life she is leading. His kindly-meant exhortation meets with no response; on the contrary, the girl fires up and defies her parents. The father, wild with anger, bids her leave the house. She departs, and then comes the reaction. He calls her back, he cries 'Louise, Louise.' But it is too late. Louise and Julien sincerely love each other, so the new tie is stronger than the old. Louise prefers to live her own life rather than profit by the experience of her parents. Is she not a type of many?

The composer, who wrote his own libretto, has provided very clever and striking music. Sometimes, as with Debussy, it is quite subordinate to the action on the stage; at other moments, when the dramatis personæ are silent, or only uttering a few words, it assumes symphonic character. Furthermore, there are scenes in which the composer gives strong evidence of his skill and power. At the close of the first tableau of the second act, while Julien is thinking, and singing of his beloved one, the cri de Paris—the ragman, chair-mender, artichoke-vendor—are heard, not in coarse, realistic fashion, but they assimilate with the rest of the music—that is to say, they are not merely dragged in, in a patchy way. But perhaps the most wonderful scene of all, due to the blending of various elements, occurs in the dressmaker's room in which Louise works. The girls are singing and chattering, while outside a regular chanvari of street sounds is heard; in the street Julien is also singing a serenade. Here again Charpentier never descends to actual realism. This work-girls' scene, and the previous one on the Butte Montmartre, display vividly the people, the scenes, the sounds of the great city. The first act gives a peaceful picture of Louise's humble home, while the last, in which one almost forgets that music is really being sung or played, is of intense dramatic interest. The whole work is most characteristic, and it can fail to please only those who care for a cheerful story and ear-catching melody of a conventional type.

An admirable performance was given. M. Dalmoires sang and acted as Julien with fine effect, and Madame Edvina—though her voice was hardly strong enough at intense moments—deserves praise. Mlle. Bérat was good as the Mother, while M. Gilbert as the Father created a profound impression. M. Frigara conducted ably, although now and again the orchestra was too loud.

Meyerbeer's 'Les Huguenots,' sung in Italian, received a meritorious performance on June 21, thanks to the excellent cast, which included Madame Tétrazini (the Queen), Mlle. Destinn (Valentine), M. Journet (San Bris), Signor Scotti (Nevers), and Signor Zenatello. Of these excellent artists Mlle. Destinn won well-deserved honours by her fine singing and splendid acting.

The conductors have been Messrs. Campanini, Frigara, and Panizza.

The University of Dublin Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. C. G. Marchant, gave, on June 10, an interesting performance of Sir Robert Stewart's 'A winter night's wake,' with orchestral accompaniments. As the soloists are not printed in the programme it is not possible to refer by name to those members of the Society who took the solo parts; but special mention must be made of the lady who sang the principal soprano solos and of the gentleman who sang the part of the Friar.

'THE WRECKERS.'

The production of an opera by a British composer is always an interesting event, exceptionally so when the composer is a lady. Miss Ethel Smyth is the favoured lady, whose 'Der Wald,' produced at Dresden in 1901 and at Covent Garden in 1902, attracted no little attention. Her new work, 'The wreckers' (libretto by H. B. Brewster), which was performed for the first time in England at His Majesty's Theatre on June 22, is an ambitious work, if, indeed, it is not a shade too ambitious. The composer is undoubtedly talented; moreover, her treatment of the libretto shows no little skill. As yet, however, she appears too much under the influence of Wagner and his method. But there is much that is good in the opera, and already the best portions have been heard in the concert-room, and duly praised. In listening to the work on June 22, we felt that the music was unequal, that the weaker portions—weaker in that they showed less inspiration instead of setting off the stronger sections—caused interest to be intermittent. With modifications and curtailments 'The wreckers' might be considerably improved. There were shortcomings in the performance, yet great pains had evidently been taken at rehearsal. Madame de Vere Sapio impersonated Thirza, and Miss Elizabeth Amsden, Avis, Mr. John Coates, Mark the fisherman, and Messrs. Arthur Winckworth and Lewys James, Preacher Pascoe and Lawrence respectively, and all were heart and soul in their work. Great praise is due to Mr. Thomas Beecham and his orchestra for their share in the work.

'ODE TO DISCORD.'

Mr. Charles L. Graves, in his 'Ode to Discord,' originally published in the Spectator, expressed in satirical language his detestation of the new 'Sturm und Drang' style of music, while from certain expressions used it is clear that he was tilting at Richard Strauss. The poem is amusing, and was doubtless prompted by some special event, some declaration by an over-zealous laudator temporis presentis. Nothing has recently happened specially to justify the revival of that poem; furthermore, it may be doubted whether it lends itself well to music. Sir Charles Stanford evidently thought otherwise, and has so clothed it. For instance: the poet speaks of a cloak of shivering metal, and a crash is heard; and when Beethoven's works are declared dead, the theme of the 'Eroica' funeral march naturally suggested itself. The illustrations at times are strongly realistic. For the 'Brobdingnagian snore' of the poem, one of Strauss's tuba effects was used with comical result. As Sir Charles's music is chiefly objective, the poet's satire is not materially strengthened; at the same time many passages show the technical skill of the composer.

The work was produced at the fifth New Symphony concert at Queen's Hall, on June 9. The performance, under the direction of Mr. Landon Ronald, was admirable, and both poet and composer were more than once recalled. The programme included Mr. William Wallace's symphonic poem 'Villon.' This second performance of the work more than confirmed the first good impression. There were also four songs, entitled 'Four Impressions for voice and orchestra,' by Mr. Landon Ronald, of which the music is both serious and clever; they were interpreted with artistic taste by Mrs. Henry J. Wood. Miss Irene Scharrer gave a successful performance of Schumann's Pianoforte concerto.

LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

At the concert given at Queen's Hall on May 27, Herr Arthur Nikisch again conducted. The feature of the programme was Tchaikovsky's 'Manfred' Symphony, the great length of which chiefly operates against frequency of performance. Other orchestral numbers were an overture 'Le Baruffe Chiozzotte,' by Signor Leone Sinigaglia, and the overture to 'Tannhäuser.' Schubert's 'Die Allmacht' and three songs by Wagner were sung with the orchestra by Fräulein Elena Gerhardt. Throughout the concert the standard of performance was of the highest excellence.

A two-fold distinction invested the special concert given by the London Symphony Orchestra, at Queen's Hall, on June 14, and made it one of the most enjoyable of the season. 'As a testimony of his admiration of the London Symphony Orchestra,'—as the programme informed us—Herr Arthur Nikisch generously gave his services as conductor. Moreover, he conducted most masterly performances of two symphonies for which he has a strong affection—Elgar's in A flat and Tchaikovsky's in E minor (No. 5). Both these works, together with Beethoven's 'Coriolan' overture, which opened the concert, were magnificently played, indeed to perfection. New beauties seemed to be revealed in Elgar's work, so alert and enthusiastic were both conductor and players in getting all they could out of the score. At the close of the Symphony, Herr Nikisch remarked in the artists' room, 'I admire the work so much that I always conduct it with my whole soul.' The Tchaikovsky Symphony was no less an artistic triumph in every sense of the word. Needless to say that the audience manifested their delighted appreciation of the evening's music with the warmest applause.

TONIC SOL-FA ASSOCIATION.

The fifty-second festival of the Tonic Sol-fa Association was held at the Crystal Palace on June 12. A juvenile choir of five thousand singers, recruited from London schools, rendered a selection of choruses, part-songs and action-songs with much spirit under the experienced guidance of Mr. S. Filmer Rook. The programme included Mendelssohn's 'Morning Prayer,' an arrangement of 'How lovely are the messengers,' from 'St. Paul,' and the same composer's song, 'A first violet,' in honour of the centenary of his birth. These were sung with laudable attention to the conductor's beat and an evident enjoyment of the beautiful melodies. The youngsters, however, were not heard to such advantage in a three-part song entitled 'The nightingale,' by Dr. A. Madeley Richardson, conducted by the composer. Claribel's popular song, 'Come back to Erin,' was much appreciated and had to be repeated, and the old song, 'Come, lasses and lads,' with appropriate actions, brought down the house. The children sang throughout with a pleasant, sweet tone and much attention to enunciation and expression. Mr. C. H. Rowcliffe gave excellent support at the organ.

This concert was followed by a performance of Elgar's 'The Banner of St. George,' and a miscellaneous selection performed by a choir of twelve hundred adult singers conducted by Mr. L. C. Venables, supported by an orchestra of about 250 players. Mr. Venables secured a very spirited reading of Elgar's dramatic work. The choir responded with alacrity to his insistent beat, and sang with great vigour in the combat scene. The solos were given by the whole of the soprano choristers with telling effect. Preceding the main work, among other items were Mendelssohn's 'Festgesang,' and Gounod's motet 'By Babylon's wave,' the choristers displaying evidence of careful training and intelligent appreciation of the choral effects aimed at in the various compositions. Altogether this was one of the most successful of the many concerts given by the Association at the Crystal Palace. Mr. H. W. Weston was the organist.

Dr. Coward adjudicated at a choral competition during the afternoon, when, of the three choirs entering, the Mile End Select Choir, conducted by Mr. G. Day Winter, took first place for their rendering of the three chosen part-songs, and also for sight-singing, thus securing the Curwen Challenge Shield for the third time in succession, and the Cup given by the Tonic Sol-fa College for reading at sight.

THE LONDON SUNDAY SCHOOL CHOIR.

The great Orchestra of the Crystal Palace was again thronged on June 16, when the London Sunday School Choir assembled for their annual festival. Since their last gathering the Choir has suffered an irreparable loss in the death of Mr. Jonathan Barnard, a veteran who, with the late Mr. Luther Hinton, founded the London Sunday School Choir in 1871, and managed thirty-six of these festivals, including that of last year. But the Council, animated by Mr. Barnard's spirit and inspired by his memory, have carried on the work with unremitting vigour, keeping well in view the main object of their existence—that of the promotion and improvement of part-singing among Sunday school teachers and scholars.

Mr. William Whiteman, the conductor, had a choir of 3,000 singers under his control, accompanied by a full orchestra. The programme was chosen with a view to the acquisition of broad choral effects rather than of delicate nuances of expression. It opened with Maunder's anthem, based upon the well-known hymn 'O worship the King,' the audience joining in several of the verses. Following this came a group of choruses and anthems of a popular character, among them being 'O great is the depth' from Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul,' for which the conductor had to decline the demand for a repetition, and an unaccompanied anthem, 'Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace' (Lee Williams), which was rendered with excellent feeling and tone-colouring. The second part (secular) of the programme comprised a four-part song, by Dr. Roland Rogers, 'The river floweth strong, my love,' sung very pleasantly and unaccompanied, and Smart's part-song, 'The shepherd's farewell,' in which the Choir displayed clear enunciation allied to thoughtful expression. Purcell's 'Come, if you dare,' brought the performance to a spirited conclusion. The Choir is not a perfectly balanced organization, the sopranos greatly predominating; but their determination to do their best for their cause and their conductor was very gratifying. Mr. Horace G. Holmes was at the organ. The orchestra contributed several numbers, conducted by Mr. Wesley Hammet.

At a choral competition held during the day the Camberwell Choral Society, conducted by Mr. W. J. Hooper, won the Founders' Shield. There were only three entries. Mr. A. L. Cowley was the adjudicator.

The juvenile choir of 4,000 voices made an earlier appearance on the Handel Orchestra on the same occasion. Under the conductorship of Mr. J. Wellard Mathews they sang a varied selection of unison and two-part songs with animation, their chief successes being found in Smart's duet 'The Lord is my Shepherd,' where the altos were very effective, and Stainer's song with actions, 'A soldier's life,' both of which had to be repeated. The programme also included a choral march 'The Army of God' (H. E. Nichol), an arrangement for two voices of the old favourite, 'All among the barley,' and Sir A. C. Mackenzie's patriotic song 'The Empire flag,' the latter declaimed with rousing effect. Mr. P. H. Kessell gave excellent support at the organ.

OXFORD HOUSE CHORAL SOCIETY.

Of the many branches of good work carried on at Oxford House, none lends itself so readily to public demonstration as music, and of this capability advantage is taken annually at the West-end of the town. This aristocratic concert of the season took place at Queen's Hall, on May 27, under the direction of Mr. Cuthbert Kelly. The Choral Society, drawn from residents in East London, is organized by the Oxford House Musical and Dramatic Association, which was formed in 1898 to provide artistic entertainments for the poor of Bethnal Green. Since that date the choral singing has gone from strength to strength, and has arrived at a standard of efficiency equal to that of any other choral body of similar dimensions in London.

The programme contained such exacting works as Bach's 'Praise the Lord, all ye heathen,' for chorus and organ, and Dvorák's Te Deum for soprano and bass soli, chorus and orchestra. The solid training of the choir at the hands of Mr. Kelly was fully demonstrated in the Bach chorus, and the alertness required on the part of choralists by Dvorák's Te Deum was well in evidence.

The work of the Oxford House Orchestra, whether in accompaniment or in the execution of its solo pieces, e.g., Dvorák's 'Mein Heim' overture and Saint-Saëns's Suite (Op. 49), was deserving of the highest praise. Madame le Mar and Mr. Frederic Austin sang with their usual skill. The Excelsior Boys' Choir performed with commendable precision Morley's 'It was a lover,' and other songs under the direction of Mr. H. C. J. Churchill. Mr. W. H. Harris was the organist. The Bishop of London, in a short speech delivered in the interval, remarked that it has been customary to bring music from the West to enlighten the East. The East is now able to return the compliment and repay the debt. The Queen and Princess Christian honoured the concert and the excellent amateurs of Bethnal Green with their presence.

ITALIAN OPERA AT DRURY LANE.

The success attained by Cave. Castellano's Italian Opera Company, on their first visit to London, not only caused an extension of their season at the Coronet Theatre, but led to an additional series of performances at Drury Lane. Familiar and unfamiliar operas of various periods were given, the list including Don Pasquale, Ernani, Dinorah, Elisir d'Amore, Un Ballo in Maschera and La Sonnambula. In the last-mentioned opera, Signora Galvany, a Spanish soprano with a voice of great range and penetrating power, made her first appearance on June 3. Throughout the season the principal artists, Signore Alexina, Monti-Bruner, Gonzaga, and Signori Wals, Mieli, Rossi, Ciccolini, Poma and Ventura made the best use of their proficiency according to certain standards. Signor Wehils established his ability as a conductor.

London Concerts.

Two welcome and recent reappearances are gladly recorded—Miss Elena Gerhardt and Herr Kubelik. The former, with the invaluable pianoforte accompaniment of Herr Arthur Nikisch, has again charmed many hearers by her beautiful voice and poetic interpretations of various songs. The extra concert given at popular prices by these two great artists at Queen's Hall, on June 15, testified to the esteem in which they are held by those who can appreciate a good thing. At his Orchestral concert—Queen's Hall, June 12—Herr Kubelik had the valuable co-operation of the New Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Landon Ronald. The distinguished violinist again displayed his brilliant powers as an interpreter of Paganini's music par excellence: but in his beautiful phrasing of Mozart's Concerto in D (No. 4), no less than the manner in which he overcame the difficulties of Max Bruch's 'Scottish fantasia,' Herr Kubelik gave proof that his artistic hand, so to speak, has lost none of its cunning during his two years' absence from our concert rooms. The New Symphony Orchestra showed their versatility in the delicacy in which they accompanied the hero of the afternoon, and by their brilliant performance of Dvorák's 'Carnival' overture. How conductor and players revelled in the music!

CHAMBER MUSIC.

Four composers were represented at the concert given at Bechstein Hall, on June 4, by the Société des Concerts Français. Mr. Ricardo Vifès played César Franck's 'Prelude, Chorale and Fugue,' for pianoforte, and was joined by MM. Willaume, Macon and Feuillard in a Quartet in A, by Ernest Chausson. The same players were associated in a Quartet in C, by Gabriel Fauré, whose Élégie for violoncello was performed by M. Feuillard. Songs by Chausson and Duparc were contributed by Madame Hélène M. Luquiens.

The excellent series of concerts given by Miss Grace Sunderland and Mr. Frank Thistleton at Steinway Hall was brought to a close on June 11. The programme provided was one of great interest, inasmuch as it included a Concerto in E minor for two oboes, strings and pianoforte by John Hebdén, a contemporary of Handel, a work that had probably not been performed since the composer's time. Other interesting features of the programme were a Sonata for strings and pianoforte by Caldara, compositions for violin and pianoforte by Felice dall'Abaco and Corelli, and a suite for strings by Handel. The concert-givers were assisted by Messrs. Halstead and Goldie (oboes), Woodhouse (violin), Wyand (viola), Ivor James (violoncello), and Hobday (doublebass). Miss Mattie Kay contributed some songs.

A new Quartet in E minor, by Mr. Frank Bridge—a work that obtained honourable mention at the International competition at Bologna in 1906—was produced, on June 10, at Bechstein Hall by the English String Quartet, of which the composer is a member. In spite of passages that seemed somewhat to lack continuity and coherence of design, the new work was thoroughly satisfying, especially to those who appreciate modern harmonies. The playing of the English Quartet was in thorough sympathy with the style and spirit of the music. The familiar music that made up the remainder of the programme was ably interpreted.

At the concert of the Cathie Quartet at Broadwood's Rooms on June 16, the first performance was given of a new Quartet in E minor by Mr. J. B. McEwen, who is an experienced and able writer of chamber music. The new work evinced thorough musicianship and ready invention. The themes in some cases possessed a distinctly national ring and formed the material for three highly effective movements. The programme included Brahms's Quartet in C minor (Op. 51) and Smetana's Quartet 'Aus meinem Leben,' together with vocal solos executed by Miss Zélie Delsart. The quartet-playing was again distinguished by expression and technical excellence.

The association of four sisters to form a string quartet is as interesting as it is remarkable; but when the standard of their performances is as high as that attained by the four Misses Lucas, the phenomenon is quite exceptional. Trained in London, Prague and Vienna, the Lucas Quartet have so advanced their powers that they challenge comparison with many better known quartet bodies. They gave three concerts at Bechstein Hall on May 21, 24 and 26, and selected their programmes chiefly from familiar works of chamber music, playing throughout with tone and ensemble that were of the highest class. In music written for pianoforte quintet they were joined by M. Richard Epstein.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

At the Chamber Concert given at Queen's Hall on June 2, several students came forward to represent the interpretative talent nurtured in Tenterden Street. Three movements of Schubert's Octet were played with Miss Elsie Owen as leader and Mr. Hans Wessely as conductor. Three juvenile boy violinists, Stanelli de Groot, John Spink and Willy Davies, played a Concerto for three violins by Vivaldi. Other instrumentalists who took part were Misses Nellie Fulcher, Norah Cordwell and Alma Goatley (pianoforte); Edith Penville (flute); and Andrey Whitaker (violinocello). Miss Olive Turner, Mr. Harry Milner and Mr. Constantine Morris were the vocalists. A pleasing trio for female voices, entitled 'May Wind,' composed by Miss Katherine Eggar, as sung by Misses Alice Baxter, Dora Gascoigne, and Lary Davies.

The following awards have been made:—The Melbaizes (2) (sopranos), Alice Baxter (Nottingham); (contraltos) nie Blake (London). The Charles Rube prize, for anoforte quartet playing, to Harper Seed, Evan Williams, symond Jeremy, and Henry William Lodge.

The South Hampstead Orchestra gave their twenty-third nual concert at Queen's Hall on June 21, under the able ection of Mrs. Julian Marshall. The programme nprised Dvorák's Symphony in F, which had not recently n heard in London, the Overtures 'Coriolan' (Beethoven) d 'Spring' (Goldmark), and the Vorspiel and Liebestod m 'Tristan und Isolde.' Special interest attached to the pearance of Herr Kreisler as the soloist in Beethoven's olin concerto, the distinguished violinist also playing ces by Bach, Couperin and Tartini, accompanied by . Haddon Squire.

Prodigy after prodigy steps into the arena—they come, y go. Some few are destined to become great artists, more are likely to merge into the great unknown on iving at adolescence. The latest heaven-born genius is né Enéri Gorainoff, aged eleven, a pianist. At Bechstein ll, on May 26, this child played Handel's D minor riations, a Scarlatti-Tausig Capriccio in E minor, two of 'forty-eight' Preludes and Fugues of Bach, and works by ubert and Chopin. If she had played out of sight of the audience, few would have imagined they were listening to a juvenile performer. It is in the maturity of her style and the few traces of extreme youth revealed by her playing that little Miss Gorainoff gives the best promise of developing into an artist as well as a virtuoso. That she will fully earn the latter title is almost a matter of certainty, so advanced are her present technical powers. Promising talent as a composer was also displayed as further evidence of her musicianship.

The Folk-song Quartet gave a concert at Æolian Hall on May 24, including in their programme Brahms's 'Zigeuner Lieder' (Op. 103) and a number of folk-songs of various countries, arranged in many cases by Mr. Percy Godfrey. Dr. Walford Davies's ingenious cumulative quartet 'A kid, a kid,' and his second set of Nursery rhymes were also sung. The individual capacity and perfect understanding of the Folk-song Quartet again lent great value to their efforts in this form of singing—a form whose true capabilities are much neglected. The instrumental part of the programme was supplied by Miss Marian Collier as pianist and Mr. Hans Wessely as violinist.

Although a historical scheme was offered as an explanation of the choice of music made by Mr. Frederick Dawson for his recital at St. James's Hall on June 10, there was little in the nature of the programme that called for special explanation. Compositions of various styles and periods, including such familiar numbers as Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue, Beethoven's Sonata in C minor (Op. 111), Schumann's 'Carnaval' and Etudes by Chopin were performed. Less familiar was a harpsichord work by Daquin (1694-1772). The playing of Mr. Dawson again showed the brilliance and versatility that place him in the front rank of English pianists.

At the vocal recital given by Mr. Julien Henry at Bechstein Hall on June 9, a new cycle of five songs by Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor supplied the chief interest. They brought into strong light the composer's gift of melodic invention and the artistic distinction with which he is able to clothe his work. Their effect was enhanced by the excellence of Mr. Julien Henry's interpretations. His temperamental style and skilful vocal methods gave character to his singing throughout the recital. Mr. Henry was assisted by Miss Edith Evans (soprano), Mr. Charles Barré (violinist) and Mr. F. W. Holloway (accompanist).

Mr. Theodore Byard gave his third subscription concert at Bechstein Hall on June 10. His own contributions to the programme consisted mainly of French songs, old and new, of which the compositions of M. Ropartz, a member of the modern school, were the most interesting. Mr. Byard again made full use of his vocal gifts and expressive powers, to the great satisfaction of the audience. He was assisted by the admirable Sevcik Quartet, who were heard in a melodious and straightforward Quartet in E minor by Mr. John Powell.

On June 2 the combined forces of the Novello Choir and the Ealing Philharmonic Society, augmented by members of the Croydon Choral Society, gave a concert at the Royal Horticultural Hall, Westminster. The first complete performance in London of Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Bon-bon' Suite was given under the composer's direction. The volume of tone produced by the combined choirs, who numbered about 200 voices, was full and refined, and by virtue of close acquaintance with the work and attention to details of expression, they gave a perfectly adequate reading that took full account of and gave full effect to the many changes of mood and style that occur in the Suite. The baritone solo part was sung with convincing fervour by Mr. Julien Henry. Under the direction of Dr. McNaught the choir also performed Elgar's 'The banner of St. George,' in which their capabilities for dramatic expression and climax were displayed; the small soprano solo part was entrusted to Miss Clara Butterworth. The vividness of the orchestration of both works was realised in the playing of the Ealing Philharmonic Society's body of instrumentalists, strengthened by professional support. The orchestra were also heard separately in Edward German's 'Richard III.' overture, and the overture to 'Figaro,' under their own conductor, Mr. E. Victor Williams. Both soloists contributed short songs; those of Mr. Henry were Edward German's 'Rolling down to Rio,' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Eliánore,' and those of Miss Butterworth included Sir Edward Elgar's 'Pleading,' and Ernest Newton's 'Love's echo.' The enjoyment of the audience was evident throughout the concert.

At the City of London College, on June 3, the choir, conducted by Mr. W. G. Rothery, gave a careful rendering of Sterndale Bennett's cantata 'The May Queen,' followed by a miscellaneous selection which included Bishop's glee 'The chough and crow' and 'The song of the Vikings' (Faning). The soloists were Miss Emily Shepherd, Miss Dorothy Hayward, Mr. Henry Plevy and Mr. George Stubbs. Miss Gertrude Smith and Mr. Russell Bonner accompanied at the pianoforte. A small but efficient band, led by Miss Maude Swepstone, contributed to the success of the evening's music.

MUSIC IN OXFORD.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The first concert of the summer term took place on May-day in the Assembly Room of the Town Hall, when Dr. Brodsky and his colleagues gave a capital chamber concert—Tchaikovsky's String quartet in D (Op. 11), Beethoven's A minor (Op. 132), and other works.

On May 20, in the Town Hall, and under the auspices of the Musical Club, an excellent concert, chiefly orchestral, was given under Dr. Allen's direction. The concert appropriately opened with Mendelssohn's Notturmo and Scherzo from 'A Midsummer Night's Dream,' followed by Mr. Donald Tovey's Pianoforte concerto in A (Op. 15), the composer brilliantly playing the solo part. Mozart's G minor Symphony was also well rendered. The only choral number was Dr. Walker's new work, 'Ode to a nightingale,' sung by a small chorus selected from the Bach Choir, with Mr. Campbell McInnes as baritone soloist. This is not by any means an easy work, and more rehearsal was evidently necessary; however, for a first performance, it went fairly well, and at the conclusion of the 'Ode' Dr. Walker was called upon to bow his acknowledgments. The most important of the 'Eights-week' concerts began with Balliol, on May 23, with the Hans Wessely Quartet and Mr. Draper (clarinet). The two items were two clarinet quintets—Mozart in A, and Brahms in B minor. On May 25, Exeter gave a very pleasant concert, consisting mainly of songs and part-songs. Amongst the former I may mention 'Amarilli,' by Caccini (1546-1614), beautifully sung by Signorina Trentini, and amongst the latter an excellent rendering by the choir of Stanford's 'Diaphenia.' The next evening Keble gave the best concert of the 'Eights.' Here a full orchestra, happy under the baton of Mr. H. G. Ley—the indefatigable organ-scholar, and newly appointed organist of Christ Church—played Schubert's B minor Symphony, Beethoven's 'Leonora' Overture No. 3, and Mendelssohn's Violin concerto with Signor Simonetti as the soloist. The part-songs—chiefly by Mendelssohn—contributed by the Vocal Society, were tastefully rendered. On May 28, Queen's gave the last concert of the 'Eights.' Here, as at Exeter, there was unfortunately no orchestra. The chief choral pieces were Mendelssohn's 'Sons of Art,' and Garrett's 'Hope' vocal waltzes. Amongst the songs we may specially mention Brahms's 'Acht Zigeunerlieder' (Op. 103), which were given in charming style by Mr. Campbell McInnes.

On the following day, May 29, in the Assembly Room of the Town Hall, Miss N. Chaplin and her artistic company gave afternoon and evening performances of ancient music and dances. The programme included such delightfully rare specimens for the harpsichord as 'Pavan and Galiardo' (The Earle of Salisbury), by Byrde; 'The Queen's command' from the 'Parthenia,' and 'Le Coucou,' by Claude Daquin, also a lovely Violoncello sonata by Henry Eccles. Amongst the songs that were in the programme mention must be made of 'Time stands still,' by John Dowland, and 'Cuckoo, our joyful rover,' by an unknown composer. Following this feast of good things came a number of old-world dances—'Dargason,' 'Bourée,' 'Lilt,' 'Tarantelle' and 'Trenchmore'—all given with infinite grace and charm.

On June 17, before an appreciative audience in the Sheldonian Theatre, the Professor of Music, Sir Walter Parratt, gave his terminal lecture, the subject being 'Three centuries of song,' from about 1603 to the present time. Sir Walter discoursed pleasantly upon the chief characteristics of a number of English composers of various dates, among whom were John Dowland, Henry Lawes (Milton's friend), Henry Purcell, Sterndale Bennett, Sullivan, and Parry, laying especial stress upon the good influence exercised by Sterndale Bennett upon song writing in this country, after he returned from his studies in Germany. A number of songs illustrating the lecture were excellently sung by Miss Gladys Honey, the accompaniments on the pianoforte being played by Dr. Allen, the oldest song being 'Say, love, if ever thou didst find,' by John Dowland, and the most modern 'When the sun was going down,' by Sir Hubert Parry, which, by the bye, was performed from the proof-sheets.

Foreign Notes.

AIX-LA-CHAPELLE.

The Lower Rhine Festival, under the conductorship of Professor Schwickerath, took place on May 30 and June 1. Amongst the works performed were Haydn's 'Seasons' and Bach's motet 'Fürchte dich nicht.' The most important modern compositions were Max Schillings's opera 'Moloch' (conducted by the composer), the 'Symphonia domestica,' and other works by Richard Strauss, who, besides conducting his own music, directed the performance of Liszt's symphonic poem 'Tasso,' 'Lamento e Trionfo.' The vocalists were Fräulein Engell, Messrs. Heinemann and Ludwig Hess. Franz von Vecsey, the solo violinist, played Beethoven's Violin concerto.

BERLIN.

Goldmark's opera 'The Winter's tale' was given, on May 17, for the first time in Berlin, at the Royal Opera House, but without much success. For the opening of the summer season at Kroll's New Opera Theatre (under the direction of Hermann Gura), Wagner's 'Flying Dutchman' had been chosen, and a most successful performance was secured, Anton van Rooy taking the title-part and Ernst Kraus the part of Erik. — Under the auspices of the Berliner Tonkünstlerverein, a chamber-music concert, consisting of works by Professor Henri Marteau, was given at the Königliche Hochschule für Musik, when a new quintet for clarinet and strings was played for the first time in Berlin by the composer and Messrs. Birkigt, von Laar, Piening, and Schubert, the last-named playing the clarinet part.

BONN.

The ninth Beethoven-Haus chamber-music festival took place on May 16-20. It was mainly a Beethoven festival, as two days were devoted solely to works by the great master. Particular interest attached to the first performance of two movements (adagio and allegro) of an unpublished quintet for oboe, three horns and bassoon, probably written by Beethoven during his youthful period at Bonn. In addition to compositions by Beethoven, works by Schubert, Schumann, Mendelssohn and Brahms were heard. The artists taking part in the performances were the Halir, Ros Klingler, and Petri quartets; the pianist, M. Edward Kislis, who gave a superb rendering of Beethoven's great Hammerklavier Sonata (Op. 106), and Professor Kluge (violoncello). The singers were Herr Ludwig Hess and Madame Noordewier-Reddingius.

DARMSTADT.

June 7, 8, 9, an interesting and successful Chamber Festival was held under the patronage of the Grand Duke of Hesse. On the first day, various classical works were performed. The second evening concert was devoted to compositions by Saint-Saëns, while the third day brought us a Rhapsody for pianoforte, violin and violoncello, by Juon, a String quintet by Hans Herrmann, Max Reger's trio for clarinet and pianoforte, and Passacaglia and Scherzo for two pianofortes, also Pianoforte pieces and songs by the English composer Cyril Scott. The composers directed the pianoforte parts of their respective works.

DORTMUND.

The ninth Westphalian musical festival, which was held on 23 and 24, took the form of an imposing homage to Beethoven. The master's two greatest works, the Missa Solenne and the ninth Symphony, were among the works performed, under the conductorship of Professor Janssen. Among the solo performers was Mr. Frederick Lamond, the pianist, who played the G major Concerto.

DRESDEN.

At the Royal Opera House a new comic opera, entitled 'Die Klapperzehen,' by Herrmann W. von Waltershausen, was produced. Mainly due to the excellent performance by the leading artists of the institution, it achieved a very lively success. The last concert of the Künstlerverein was devoted to lesser-known works by Beethoven, and proved to be specially interesting by reason of its first performance, by Herr Rudolf Bärtig, of the first of two newly discovered Violin concertos by the master. The second movement (adagio) is particularly beautiful.—On May 6, Mozart's opera, 'Così fan tutte,' was performed at the Royal Opera, in a new version. Instead of the usual weak text by da Ponte, Calderon's comedy, 'Die Schöne Widwe,' had been adapted as a new libretto by Herr Carl demantel, the well-known baritone of the Opera. This libretto has not, however, been altogether happy, owing to the adapter's lack of reverence for Mozart's intentions. In some places, the secco recitatives were replaced by spoken dialogue, the order of several numbers was altered, a quartet was turned into a duet, and so on. Notwithstanding these changes the opera was very well received, owing to the great beauty of the music itself and the fine performance under the direction of Hofrath von Schuch.

FRANKFORT.

The German Male Choir competition for the Emperor's Jubilee took place on May 19-22, in the presence of the Emperor and his family, and inaugurated the newly-finished Jubilee Hall, which accommodates 18,000 people. Thirty-four choirs from different parts of Germany competed. The choirs chosen for competition were 'Rheinsänge,' by the Verein in Othegraven—for the study of which six weeks were allowed—'Jung Volker,' by Julius Röntgen—termed the 'Imperial' choir, as one hour was allowed for its study at the competition itself—and a piece chosen by the competing choir. The Emperor's prize was awarded to the Kölner Gesangverein.

MAYENCE.

The musical festival organized by the Kaiserinrich-Stiftung, on May 17 and 18, Handel's oratorio 'Israel in Egypt' was performed on the first day. Berlioz's seldom heard dramatic Symphony 'Romeo and Juliet' was performed on the following day, and the festival concluded with the performance of Bach's 'Magnificat.'

MIDDLEBURGH.

In connection with the seventy-fifth anniversary of the formation of the choir 'Tot Oefening en Uitspanning,' several festivals were held on May 26 and 27. Verdi's Requiem and Mendelssohn's 114th Psalm for eight-part choir were among the works performed.

MILAN.

At the last concert given by the society 'Le Decem,' a composition by Theodore Dubois was played for the first time. It is a double string quintet, a most unusual combination which is said to have proved very successful.

NAPLES.

In the San Carlo Theatre the recently finished oratorio 'The Institution of the Holy Communion,' by Dr. P. Hartmann an der Lahn Hochbrunn, was performed for the first time, and with so much success that the work was repeated four times within a very short period.

NEW YORK.

On May 5 was given the first performance in America of the oratorio 'The seven words' (Die sieben Worte), by Dr. P. Hartmann an der Lahn Hochbrunn. The work, which was enthusiastically received, was sung by a choir from Chicago, consisting exclusively of boys and men; the effect produced by the particular timbre of the soprano voices of the boys was well in keeping with the religious atmosphere of the composition.

PARIS.

Mozart's opera 'The Magic flute' has been very successfully revived at the Opéra Comique after a rest of ten years.—The Imperial Russian Opera and Ballet Company have been giving most interesting representations of their national repertoire at the Théâtre de la Ville. Among the operas performed were Rimsky-Korsakoff's 'Ivan the Terrible,' and Moussorgsky's 'Boris Godounoff.' There was also given the ballet 'Le Festin,' with music by Glinka, Rimsky-Korsakoff, Tchaikovsky, and Glazounoff. Several interesting new works have also been heard at the concerts, such as Busoni's Pianoforte concerto (with chorus), and Mahler's first Symphony.—At the interesting chamber music concerts given by the Lejeune Quartet, Max Reger's Trio for strings, and Hugo Wolf's Quartet were successfully introduced to the Parisian public.—At her last song recital, Madame Jeanne Raunay sang for the first time some new songs by Paderewski and Gabriel Fauré, accompanied by the composers.

ROME.

The last two Symphony concerts given by the Academia Cecilia were conducted by Herr Willem Mengelberg, from Amsterdam, who secured very impressive performances of Brahms's C minor and Beethoven's ninth symphonies, in addition to the 'Good Friday' music from 'Parsifal,' and other works by Wagner.

STUTTGART.

The forty-fifth musical festival (Tonkünstlerfest) organized by the Allgemeiner Deutscher Musikverein, took place on June 2-6. Two of the concerts were devoted to chamber music and one to orchestral music; three operas were also performed. The most important new works were a Quintet for pianoforte and strings, by Hans Pfitzner, a Sonata eroica by Waldemar von Baussem, Paul Scheinplug's overture to a Shakespeare comedy, Ernst Boehe's Symphonic epilogue to a tragedy, and a Symphony in B minor by Fritz Volbach. The operas performed were Vogl's 'Maja,' Pierre Maurice's 'Misé Brun,' and 'Prinzessin Bambolla,' by Walter Braunfels.

The Sydney Symphony Orchestra has just issued the prospectus of its second season, which indicates that there is an increasing appreciation of orchestral music in that great Colonial city. During last season five concerts were given, under the conductorship of Mr. W. Arundel Orchard, and in order to inaugurate the work successfully, the instrumentalists gave their services gratuitously. This season four concerts are announced, the first of which was to take place on June 24, under the same conductor, and the remaining concerts are to be conducted by Mr. G. W. Marshall-Hall, Herr Gustave Slapoffski and Mr. Joseph Bradley. The programmes will include Beethoven's Symphonies (No. 4 in B flat and No. 5 in C minor), Schubert's 'Unfinished' and Elgar's Symphony, to be given here for the first time. Other works to be given for the first time are Strauss's 'Till Eulenspiegel,' Humperdinck's 'Moorish Rhapsodie,' and Landon Ronald's 'Lament of Shah Jehan.' The Society is fortunate in possessing an honorary secretary (Mr. W. J. Curtis) who is full of enthusiasm and energy, and it is hoped that the season will meet with the success it deserves.

According to the Bath Chronicle, the past season at the old-established Pump Room concerts at Bath has been noteworthy from more than one point of view. Mr. Heymann, the able conductor of the Orchestra, has added two new symphonies, Brahms in C and Kalinnikoff in G minor, to the extensive repertoire of the Pump Room Orchestra; Mr. Edward German has conducted a concert entirely devoted to his compositions; and many singers and players of distinction have appeared. When Mr. Heymann was appointed musical director seventeen years ago, the Corporation only spent about £13 or £14 on vocalists during the entire season; the present expenditure in that direction is £300. The orchestra in those days cost £900 a year; the present annual charge is £2,160. Moreover, the artistic standard of the concerts has been continually raised during Mr. Heymann's tenure of office, and he hopes to place the concerts on a still higher level. Next season he proposes once more to play the whole of Beethoven's and Tchaikovsky's symphonies in chronological order; also the four symphonies of Brahms, the last two of which will be heard in Bath for the first time.

'The York Pageant Music' (York: Banks & Son) is a volume containing the complete music to be sung at the York Pageant to be held from July 26 to 31. The words have been chiefly written by Mr. James Rhoades and, with one exception, Purcell's 'In these delightful pleasant groves,' the music is from the pen of Mr. T. Tertius Noble, Master of the Music and Organist of York Minster. Of the sixteen numbers contained in the book, seven are narrative choruses; the other vocal pieces are respectively entitled 'Ballad of St. Hilda,' 'Lyke-Wake dirge,' 'Song of defiance,' and 'Triumph song of York.' The instrumental numbers are a Roman dance, a Morris dance, a Children's dance, and a March, all of which will doubtless prove effective in musically illustrating what promises to be one of the most effective pageants of the year.

Intending visitors to Munich during the month of August and the first week in September may be glad to have their attention drawn to an interesting series of symphony performances to be given under the direction of Herr Ferdinand Löwe. On the days when there will be no representations of the Wagner or Mozart operas there will be played all the Symphonies (except the ninth) of Beethoven; the four Symphonies of Brahms; and the third, fourth, seventh and eighth Symphonies of Bruckner. These symphonic performances will be further enriched by performances of other orchestral works by Brahms.

A complimentary orchestral concert to Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor was given on May 22 at the Public Hall, Croydon, by the String Players' Club (Croydon), of which organization he is the much-esteemed conductor. This excellent body of string performers was augmented by a full complement of players, selected mainly from the New Symphony Orchestra, on wind and percussion instruments. The programme comprised works by Smetana, Dvorák, Glinka, Sibelius, and Coleridge-Taylor. The last-named was represented by a brilliant excerpt from the incidental music to 'Faust,' and by his 'Variations on an African Theme.' The soloists were Miss Meggie (pianoforte) and Mr. Julian Thomas (vocalist).

Miss Lilian Goldsack gave a concert at St. Luke's Hall, Wandsworth Common, on May 25, when she was assisted by Miss Gladys Goldsack, Miss Clara Robson, Mr. Charles Saunders, and Mr. E. A. Stroud, vocalists, and Master Greville Cooke, pianist. The St. Luke's Ladies' Choir displayed signs of careful training in Smart's 'Queen of the night' and an Empire song, 'Red, white, and blue,' by the concert-giver, and the amateur orchestra gave a capable rendering of a movement from Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony, the overture to 'William Tell,' and Elgar's March in G.

Mr. Hermann Klein has arrived in England from New York, and we understand that he intends permanently to reside in London and resume his professional engagements as a teacher of singing.

The governing body of the Battersea Polytechnic have appointed Dr. A. Madeley Richardson head of the music department, in succession to the late Mr. I. P. Attwater.

King's College Chapel, Cambridge, was again the scene of an impressive musical celebration on June 15, when Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius' was performed under the direction of Dr. A. H. Mann. Throughout the entire performance it was evident that the organist of King's had thrown his whole-hearted interest, enthusiasm, and care into the preparation of the work, and the result was a very devotional and sympathetic rendering of Elgar's music. The London Symphony Orchestra played the accompaniments beautifully, and the solos were no less beautifully sung by Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Webster Millar, and Mr. Francis Haiford.

A Brahms festival is announced to take place at Munich from September 10 to 14. The choral works to be performed include the Requiem, Song of Destiny (Schicksalslied), Triumphlied, Rhapsodie, Fest und Gedenksprüche, Gesang der Parzen, &c., while the instrumental portion of the programmes will consist of the four Symphonies, the Haydn Variations, the Violin concerto, and some chamber music—truly a feast of good things for those whose holiday leads them to the Bavarian capital.

Miss Nellie Chaplin gave her interesting and unique performance of ancient dances and music at the Theatre in the Royal Albert Hall on June 22. The programme included a Pavane of the 16th Century, an Allemande by Robert Johnson, and some old English dances, all of which were performed in a refined and artistic manner. Miss Chaplin played, as usual, some interesting and quaint solos on the harpsichord.

The festival performances at Bayreuth this year will be given from July 22 to August 20. There will be five representations of 'Lohengrin' (July 22, and August 1, 5, 12 and 19), two of the 'Ring' (July 25 and 28, August 14 and 17), and seven of 'Parsifal' (July 23 and 31, August 4, 7, 8, 11 and 20). The conductors will be Dr. Hans Richter, Dr. Karl Muck, Herr Michael Balling and Herr Siegfried Wagner.

The old-established music business of Messrs. Dale, Forty & Co., of Cheltenham, Birmingham, Cardiff, and other towns, has been turned into a private limited liability company, with a capital of £100,000. The board of directors will consist of the present partners in the firm—Mr. H. J. Dale, Mr. F. Forty, Mr. A. Arthur Dale, and Mr. G. C. Forty—who will hold all the shares.

The performances of Italian Opera at Terry's Theatre by a company of young people under sixteen years of age, entitled the City of Rome Children's Opera Company, was certainly a novel experiment, and may be recorded as distinctly successful, the juvenile artists entering into their respective parts with spirit and ability, both vocally and historically. The series was commenced on June 22, with 'Lucia di Lammermoor.'

Dr. Charles Harris, who attended the Haydn Celebration at Vienna as the officially appointed delegate from the Dominion of Canada, sailed for Cape Town on June 19 in order to take part in the Municipal Musical Festival, at which he will conduct his Choric Idyl 'Pan' during his stay in Cape Town, Dr. Harris will be the guest of the city.

Country and Colonial News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed in this summary, as the notices are either prepared from local newspapers or furnished by correspondents. Correspondents are particularly requested to enclose a programme when forwarding reports of concerts.

AMBLESIDE. — The Ambleside Festival Choir gave a concert in the Assembly Rooms on June 1, when the chief features of the programme were Mendelssohn's 'Athalie' and Bridge's cantata 'The frogs and the ox,' the latter sung by the juvenile choir. The music throughout was most carefully rendered, under the direction of Mr. W. Rawlings, the solos in 'Athalie' being taken by Mrs. Elles, Miss Todd, Miss Dawes and Mrs. Yates. The children in 'The frogs and the ox' delighted the audience. The orchestra acquitted themselves satisfactorily. Mrs. Kemble assisted at the pianoforte and Mr. W. Holmes at the harmonium.

DURBAN (Natal, S.A.).—The Musical Association opened its 1909 season on April 24 with an orchestral concert. The first part of the programme consisted of selections from the compositions of Mendelssohn, and included the 'Hebrides' overture, and the Violin concerto, with Mr. L. Mancini as soloist. The chief numbers in the second part were Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony (first movement), Moszkowski's 'Krakowiak,' and Rubinstein's 'Hochzeitzug.' Mr. J. Frank Proudman, Musical Director to the Corporation and Borough Organist, conducted.

FAREHAM (Hants).—An interesting programme of English folk-songs and morris dances (in costume) was given by the Fareham Folk-Music Society, on June 10, in the grounds of Blackbrook House, by kind permission of Lady Parker, under the direction of Mr. E. Stanley-Jones.

FLECKNEY.—The Fleckney and District Choral Society gave a performance of Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' in the National Schools on May 22. Considering the recent formation of the Society, the singing of the choir was spirited and distinctly promising, and reflected much credit on their training by the conductor, Mr. R. Iliffe. The orchestra, led by Mr. A. J. Freeland, also rendered capable service.

THEYDON BOIS.—The Choral Society gave a performance of Bridge's 'The Inchnage Rock' and Macfarren's 'May-day' on May 26, under the conductorship of Mr. Stacey B. King. In these works the choir sang with spirit, and were well supported by a string orchestra, led by Mr. W. H. Broxup. The solo vocalists were Madame Windsor Locke, who sang with much charm, and Mr. Frederick Addison. Mr. Herbert Welton and Mr. King were the accompanists.

WINDSOR (Ontario).—The Windsor and Walkerville Choral Society gave an excellent performance of Mendelssohn's oratorio 'Elijah' on May 6. The choir of 150 voices displayed remarkable dramatic power, notably in the 'Baal' choruses, and had the assistance of a very efficient professional orchestra, led by Professor W. Yunck. The principal solo vocalists, Miss Alice Calder Leonard, Mrs. Charles A. Parker, Mr. Clyde A. Nichols, and Mr. Charles I. Clohecy, were also excellent. Much credit is due to the conductor, Mr. H. Whorlow Bull, for the success which attended the performance.

Answers to Correspondents.

F.—(1) The Mozart Rondo for pianoforte, violin, and cello, mentioned in our last issue (p. 389), is probably the Trio in D (Köchel, Anhang, 52a), and the same composer's Sonatina for pianoforte, two violins, and bass referred to on p. 403 is Köchel 336. The latter can be obtained from Messrs. Novello. Notice the similarity of the opening phrase with that of 'God save the King.' There is no Minuet in the autograph score of Handel's fessiah.' The statement that he did compose a Minuet a third movement of the overture was made thirty-eight years ago, when the late Mr. T. E. Jones, organist of Northbury Cathedral, claimed to have a copy of the music. He said that Christopher Smith, Handel's amanuensis, gave him a transcript of the Minuet to his friend, Richard Langdon, organist of Exeter Cathedral; that his (Jones's) master, Thomas Skeats, was an articulated pupil of Langdon's, and that Jones (in or about the year 1821) made his copy from Langdon's book. So the story goes; but in the absence of conclusive evidence, little reliance can be placed upon this traditional evidence. Rockstro states that a MS. of the minuet, said to be autograph, was for many years in the possession of the Rev. William Gostling, minor canon of Northbury, and son of the Rev. John Gostling, sub-dean of St. Paul's, the celebrated bass singer.

J. W.—The authoress of the novel 'Charles Auchester' is Miss Elizabeth Sara Sheppard, the daughter of a physician. She was born at Blackheath, and died, unmarried, at Brixton, March 13, 1862, aged thirty-two years. A friend of Miss Sheppard's records that she studied French and Greek; and she was a Latin scholar. She taught Latin, together with the theory and practice of music, and she used to extemporize for hours together on the organ. She wrote 'Charles Auchester' at the age of sixteen. It was published in 1853 and dedicated to Disraeli, who, in return for the compliment, went so far as to say: 'No greater book will ever be written upon music, and it will one day be recognized as the imaginative classic of that divine art!' The characters include Seraphael (Mendelssohn), Charles Auchester (Joachim), Starwood Burney (Sterndale Bennett), and Clara Bennette (Jenny Lind). The statement sometimes made that Lady Eastlake was the authoress of the novel is erroneous.

SYLVIA.—(1) For operettas or cantatas of a similar difficulty to 'Round the fair world' (Roedel), which could be performed by a choir of school-girls, numbering from thirty to forty, try Roedel, 'The hours'; Jacoby, 'Cinderella'; Somervell, 'Princess Zara'; Hathaway, 'Jack Horner's ride,' and Rathbone, 'Vogelweid.' (2) For some attractive pianoforte pieces of about the same difficulty as Rachmaninoff's Prelude in C sharp minor, and Raff's 'La Fileuse,' see Arensky, Prelude in F minor (Op. 42, No. 1), Romance in A flat (Op. 42, No. 2), and Etude in F (Op. 42, No. 3); Coleridge-Taylor, Four characteristic waltzes; Cowen, 'Trois Morceaux'; Elgar, 'Serenade Mauresque' and 'Mazurka'; Hofmann, 'From golden days' (Op. 34); Mendelssohn, 'Perpetuum mobile' (Op. 119); Rubinstein, 'Souvenir de Dresden,' and Six Morceaux (Op. 118); Esipoff, Six pieces, (Op. 8), and Strelezki, Eight pieces (Op. 8).

P. J. C.—The following are some names and addresses of 'bandmasters of really high-class Paris bands': M. Pointel, Agence Symphonique et Artistique, 9, Rue Faubourg-Montmartre; M. Alex. Fiocre, Directeur de Le Pétrouze, 9, Rue de la Pépinière; MM. Bordelay, Office Central des Concerts, 51, Rue Faubourg Saint-Martin; M. Jean Buffières, Directeur de l'Union Artistique, 10, Rue Cadet; M. Felix de Kémel et Cie., 2, Rue Albouy.

J. L. S.—For humorous or sentimental part-songs, suitable for a small village choral society 'of limited capacity,' we suggest the following: Hamilton Clarke, 'To the audience'; Romer, 'Where are you going to, my pretty maid?'; 'Early one morning,' arranged by Dunhill; Trübner, 'The three chafers'; Abt, 'Thuringian folksied'; Werner, 'The two roses'; 'Allan Water,' 'Annie Laurie,' both arranged by Elliot Button.

S. S.—We regret that we cannot say if there is any other organ in existence similar to that in St. James's Church, Bermondsey, with a keyboard at the side of the instrument whereby a second performer—not the player at the keyboards—can play the pedal part with his hands. We should indeed be sorry if, in any proposed renovation of the instrument, so interesting a relic of the past should suffer destruction.

DEVA.—The choristers of St. Paul's Cathedral will take their holidays this year between July 19 and August 22; at Westminster Abbey, about August 16 to September 18. The weekly service lists of the above churches are not published in any newspaper, only the music sung on Sundays, but the complete lists are always exhibited in the buildings throughout the week.

OBOE.—Yes, most assuredly you can obtain a diploma for proficiency in playing the oboe by passing the examination for the Licentiatehip of the Royal Academy of Music, or that of the Associateship of the Royal College of Music; moreover, you need not necessarily be a student at either institution in order to enter for those respective examinations.

ALPHA.—For cantatas similar to Cowen's 'Rose maiden,' try the same composer's 'St. John's eve,' Sterndale Bennett's 'May queen,' Gade's 'Erl king's daughter,' and Van Bree's 'St. Cecilia's day.' See also Messrs. Novello's classified list of 100 popular cantatas, which may be obtained gratis and post-free, upon application.

BEETHOVEN.—In all probability your difficulty is the result of extreme nervousness. Practice and determination should, in course of time, work wonders in obtaining that facility in your playing which at present you lack and lament. Are you under a good teacher? So much depends upon the help you would or ought to get in that direction.

ALTO.—The following are some 'anthems with good solos, suitable for a male alto': Elvey, 'Unto Thee have I cried'; Walmisley, 'Hear, O Thou Shepherd'; Longhurst, 'O come, and behold the works of the Lord'; Chadwick, 'Saviour, again to Thy dear name'; Mendelssohn, 'Lord, how long?'; and Greene, 'Acquaint thyself with God.'

PURE GEN.—We regret that it is quite beyond our province and capability to value violins. The best advice we can give you is to send your instrument to Messrs. W. E. Hill & Sons, 140, New Bond Street, W., who, in return for a fee, will give you trustworthy advice as to its pecuniary worth.

H. P.—The London Academy of Music, Princes Street, Oxford Street, has two rooms that are available for organ practice. One contains a Bevington instrument, and in the other is a Casson Positive organ, but with two consoles, one of which is suitable for practice as on an ordinary organ.

W. M.—We have not the pleasure of knowing a voice-trainer—not even a voice-strainer—in London who adopts the 'clicking' method. Such an one would naturally be a clicker, a term usually applied to one who cuts up leather for the uppers and soles of boots and shoes.

HADLOW.—The following duets for the organ are suggested: Merkel, Sonata (Op. 30); Löffler, Fantasia, Prayer, Fugue; Renner, Postludium; Volkmar, Festintrade; Wolfrum, Choral and Fugue; Mendelssohn, Happy and blest are they (St. Paul), arranged by Stone.

ARCO.—(1) Yes, Dvorák's 'New World' Symphony is published in a pianoforte arrangement, price, complete, 8s. net., the Largo only, 2s. net. (2) The Andante movement to which you refer is in Haydn's 'L'Imperiale' Symphony (in D).

PEDAL.—Have you tried Franklin Taylor's collection of pianoforte studies? They are issued in two forms: 'Progressive Studies' (53 books), and 'Selected Studies' (2 sets of 4 books each). The price is one shilling each book.

CHORD.—Any good teacher would finger the accompaniment to a song for you; the fee would probably depend upon the length of the song and the status of the lady or gentleman who did the work.

N. K. W.—The pianist you name certainly appeared in London during the month of May, 1908; but we are unable to say if that was his last appearance in this country.

H. H.—The Angelus piece, for violoncello, bass, and pianoforte, by Molbe, mentioned on p. 403 of our last issue, can be obtained from Messrs. Novello.

COB-PRESTON.—We are afraid your song-books are not of any intrinsic value. Are the title-pages among those that are missing?

V. S.—See 'Songs from Shakespeare: the earliest known settings,' edited by Sir Frederick Bridge (Novello).

PLAYING FOR PLEASURE.

However good your technique and power of execution, you cannot derive pleasure from your pianoforte playing unless you can read music as readily and easily as reading a book. Playing pieces which you have had to study and learn can give only a very limited enjoyment. It is not difficult to acquire the ability to play even the most advanced music at first sight, but you can only do so by the aid of my System of Pianoforte Sight-Playing. By any other means you will have to give years of practising for many hours daily; while my system involves little more than 15 minutes' daily practising for three months. The results are certain. Provided that you have the necessary finger dexterity, no piece, however advanced, will be too difficult to play at first sight. With students less advanced the results are proportionately great.

Fee for Complete Correspondence Course, £3 3s.

My Booklet describes the principles and methods of the System. Sent post-free to any pianist on application.

L. M. EHREMYER,

27, Chancery Lane, W.C.

VOICE CULTURE FOR CHILDREN

A PRACTICAL PRIMER

ON THE CULTIVATION AND PRESERVATION OF YOUNG VOICES

WITH EXERCISES FOR THE USE OF SCHOOLS CHOIRS, SOLO-BOYS, ETC.

BY JAMES BATES.

EXTRACT FROM THE PREFACE.

It is almost impossible to exaggerate the extreme delicacy of the child's voice, yet how often have these frail instruments been irreparably ruined for want of a little knowledge or a little care! Let the teacher sternly discourage anything like "shouty" singing, especially in class or choir, or misguided attempts to sing notes which are too high or too low. It may safely be said that so/si singing (of course within the compass of the voice) will never do harm, no matter how continuous, but loud singing will inevitably lead to disaster. The teacher who successfully instils the principles of correct singing, and thereby renders possible the life-long use and enjoyment of a pleasing voice, is conferring on his young charges a boon of inestimable value. This thought should be his constant encouragement in times of difficulty and lack of immediate success.

THE NEW CATHEDRAL PSALTER

CONTAINING

THE PSALMS OF DAVID

TOGETHER WITH

THE CANTICLES AND PROPER PSALMS FOR CERTAIN DAYS

EDITED AND POINTED FOR CHANTING

BY

COSMO GORDON LANG, D.D.
(ARCHBISHOP OF YORK).

HENRY SCOTT HOLLAND, D.Litt.
(Canon and Precentor of St. Paul's).

CHARLES H. LLOYD, M.A., Mus.D.
(Precentor of Eton).

GEORGE C. MARTIN, Mus.D.
(Organist of St. Paul's).

No part of the Church Service has received greater attention in recent years than the Psalms, and there is no better test of an organist's or choirmaster's qualifications than the manner in which the choir renders these matchless poems of Holy Writ.

The chief difficulty of Anglican chanting has always been the merging of the recitation into the strict-time section of the chant. In the "Cathedral Psalter," issued a generation ago, an endeavour was made to overcome this difficulty by the use of accent marks, and the striking popularity of the book has proved that the method therein adopted, if rightly used, was nearly perfect.

Experience, however, has shown that there was still room for improvement, and it may confidently be asserted that the nearest approach to perfection has been attained in the entirely revised and improved form of the work entitled the "New Cathedral Psalter."

As the result of much careful study and practical knowledge, all ambiguity in regard to the merging of the recitation into the strict-time section of the chant has now been removed.

The "New Cathedral Psalter" is issued in three forms: (i.) with Superimposed Notes; (ii.) with Prosody Signs; (iii.) with Varied Type, whereby a choice can be made of the form which may be thought most effectual in securing intelligent and reverent chanting. Moreover, the pointing is in every case identical, so that on such an occasion as a service sung by combined choirs all three books could, if necessary, be used simultaneously.

Not the least important consideration in a pointed psalter is the matter of typography. In the "New Cathedral Psalter" bolder faced types, specially prepared, have been used, the result being greater clearness, while particular attention has been paid to the spacing between the words and lines so as to afford greater facility in reading.

The "New Cathedral Psalter," although founded on the "Cathedral Psalter," is a distinct book, and the two books cannot be used together.

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE
OF THE
MUSIC LOAN EXHIBITION

Held UNDER THE PATRONAGE OF
HIS MAJESTY THE KING
HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN

AND

THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES

BY THE

AT

FISHMONGERS' HALL

JUNE AND JULY, 1904.

The Illustrations consist of 11 Photogravure Plates, 9 full-page Illustrations, and many Facsimiles, &c., incorporated in the Text.

The Music Loan Exhibition of the Worshipful Company of Musicians was a great event in the history of that ancient corporation. At the same time it had a deeper import and wider significance by reason of its inherent interest. His Majesty the King graciously gave it his patronage and, moreover, headed the list of lenders. Notable collectors and others generously contributed to its completeness by the loan of beautiful instruments, rare books, unique manuscripts, fine pictures, &c., many of which had never before been exhibited, nor are they likely again to be gathered together.

Such Exhibitions, however, come and go, and leave not much more than a memory behind. Therefore it is all the more desirable that some permanent record should exist and be made available of so important and unique a display as that of the Musicians' Company. That desideratum has been supplied by this catalogue.

This handsome Volume is divided into six main sections:—

MUSIC-PRINTING	INSTRUMENTS	MANUSCRIPTS (Music and Letters)
PRINTED MUSIC	PORTRAITS, &c.	MISCELLANEOUS.

Every exhibit is not only fully and carefully described, but the copious notes freely scattered throughout the volume add to the interest of its subject-matter and increase the value of the book both as a treasured library possession and as a useful book of reference.

Illustrations—title-pages, instruments, portraits, &c.—and facsimiles form a most important and attractive feature of this édition de luxe Catalogue. The portraits include a photogravure reproduction of Hudson's full-length oil-painting of Handel, preserved at Gopsall and belonging to The Earl Howe; and among the well-executed facsimiles are autographs of Bach, Handel (a characteristic letter, of three quarto pages, written to Charles Jennens), Mendelssohn, Orlando Gibbons (the only known autograph of the composer), Henry Purcell, and others.

TECHNIQUE AND EXPRESSION IN PIANOFORTE PLAYING BY FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

In the course of my experience as a teacher of the pianoforte, an experience extending over many years, certain ideas have from time to time suggested themselves to me which have proved useful—to myself, as enabling me to express more clearly that which I desired my pupils to understand, and to my pupils, as tending to facilitate their apprehension of the various difficulties they have had to encounter, at the same time leading them to perceive the most practical means of overcoming them, and thus accelerating their general rate of progress.

These suggestions relate to both the mechanical and intellectual aspects of the study of pianoforte-playing, or, briefly, to Technique and Expression, the chief matters implied by the first of these terms being the production of various qualities of tone, the choice of suitable fingering, and the best methods of attacking certain difficulties; while the second, which may perhaps be more aptly designated the means of Expression, includes rhythm, phrasing, variety and gradation of tone, and the use of the pedals, et cetera.

COMPLETION OF A Modern School for the Violin

BY AUGUST WILHELMJ AND JAMES BROWN.

THE purpose of this Work is to provide, in one systematic and comprehensive scheme, all that is necessary for the acquirement of the Art of Modern Violin Playing.

"A Modern School for the Violin" consists of Six Books devoted to Daily Technical Practice. Six Books of Studies for Violin alone, and a large number of Pieces with Pianoforte Accompaniment, the Violin parts being specially edited for the purposes of teaching.

SECTION A.—TECHNICAL PRACTICE. IN SIX BOOKS.

The foundation of "A Modern School for the Violin" is laid by means of a series of Six Books dealing exclusively with the important subject of DAILY TECHNICAL PRACTICE. The First Book of Technical Practice (Book 1A) is limited to the 1st Position; the Second Book (2A) to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the Third Book (3A) to the first five Positions; and so on. Bowings and other technical devices are introduced in a similarly progressive manner throughout. Each Book of Technical Practice is divided into "Lessons" (or Chapters), and each Lesson contains a number of short repeating Exercises on some definite point of Violin Technique—as Fingering, Bowing, &c., with the needful explanations. Included in each Book will be found a complete set of Scales and Arpeggi, arranged according to the particular stage of advancement reached.

Taken as a whole, this Section is intended to facilitate, and to insist on, a thorough, steady, and continuous progress in the mastery of the Instrument, this being the only possible means of preparing the groundwork for artistic achievement with all its lasting delights.

SECTION B.—STUDIES. IN SIX BOOKS.

Section B is formed of a series of original and selected Studies, in Six Books. Each Book of Studies (Section B) is carefully co-ordinated, in respect of difficulty and range of subject, with the correspondingly numbered Book of Technical Practice (Section A). Thus the First Book of Studies (1B) is written in the 1st Position; the Second Book (2B) in the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the 3rd Book (3B) in all Positions up to and including the 5th; and so on. It should further be explained that the two Sections are designed to complement one another, and that the "School" must be practised, not in single Books of Technical Practice and Studies alternately, but in pairs. Thus, Books 1A and 1B are to be taken concurrently, then Books 2A and 2B, 3A and 3B, and so on, and the appropriate pairs are now issued bound together in cloth (see Cloth Bindings below).

THE NATIONAL EISTEDDFOD.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL, LONDON. JUNE 15 TO 18.

It was a bold enterprise to hold the great Welsh National Eisteddfod away from a population out of whose instincts and yearnings it has developed. In Wales the "National" draws the working-classes literally by tens of thousands. They seem to revel in its rough-and-tumble, its equality and familiarity, its astonishing variety, its occasional thrills of emotion, and they cheerfully give up a day's pay and incur expense in order to indulge their gregarious passion. But in London there is practically no such class sufficiently interested, and the event has to look to the support of the "respectable" classes. This being so, the London committee may be congratulated on doing so well as to cover their great expenses. The audiences were never so large as "National" audiences usually are, but they sometimes numbered about 5,000 persons.

The Royal Albert Hall is not an ideal venue for musical display, but at least it is as good as the average Eisteddfod pavilion. Only the choral performances were fully effective. The musical tests selected for this occasion were probably the most searching that have ever been required at an Eisteddfod. In the chief choral class most of the choirs that appeared demonstrated their inability to sing adequately the Bach chorus set down. One choir, the winner (Carnarvon), certainly lived up to its necessities. It was evident that most of the Welsh choirs needed a closer study of choral technique. This necessity was again obvious in the male-voice class. Here the supreme test was Elgar's setting of Bret Harte's "The Reveille," in which the expression is intense, thrilling, and deeply moving, and the tonal difficulties exceptionally great. As will be seen from the criticism given below, it was satisfying that one or two choirs came so near to realization of its import. Perhaps the most perfect choral-singing heard throughout the week was that of the Southport Choir in the second choral, and that of the Gitana Birkenhead Choir, Mrs. Bourne's Barrow Choir, and Mrs. Mary Layton's London Choir in the female-voice class.

The solo-singing produced some remarkable results. There were a great number of competitors. These were brought down by careful preliminary sittings to two or three in each class. In choosing the best for the final trial, the judges had to face the fact that the singers who impressed them most were not necessarily the best fitted to sing in the vast area of the Albert Hall. Yet it would not have done to have allowed this consideration to govern the choice. Hence, no doubt, some of the chosen disappointed the audience. But, on the other hand, we gave them great pleasure because they sang so well and displayed such excellent voices.

The adjudicators were Sir Charles Stanford, Dr. W. G. McNaught, Mr. Emlyn Evans, Mr. Dan Price and Mr. Harry Evans. All the judges heard all the choral classes except that for madrigals. They worked with singular unanimity. The position of each choir was settled by marks during, or immediately after, the performance of each test. As Sir Charles Stanford remarked, when five musicians agree, their unanimity is wonderful, especially when they are all Celts!

In all classes the maximum for each piece was 100.

CHIEF CHORAL COMPETITION (160 to 200 voices).

Tests: (a) "Rest, soldier, rest" (J. H. Roberts); (b) "Come, ye daughters" (St. Matthew Passion Music) (Bach); and (c) "The Tempest" (Cornelius).

First prize, £150. Second prize, £50.

Seven choirs entered; six sang, in the following order:—

	(a)	(b)	(c)	Ttl.
Pembroke Dock Choral Society (Mr. T. G. Hancock)	75	67	71	213
Rhymney United Choir (Mr. John Price)	80	50	70	200
Rhymney Gwent Choral Society (Mr. Daniel Owen)	88	52	80	220
Carnarvon Choral Society (Mr. John Williams)	93	95	85	273
Cardiff Harmonic Society (Mr. Roderick Williams)	76	85	75	236
Llanelli Choral Society (Mr. John Thomas)	80	85	78	243

PEMBROKE.—(a) Sopranos lacked sweet resonance. Basses good, but not much sonority. A fair balance. Not always quite in tune or on the centre of the pitch. Considerable unity and compactness. Well disciplined. Attack excellent. A pretty treatment of the rhythm. Some wrong notes. Lost nearly a whole tone. (b) A gay pace! Attack straggled. The ejaculation of second chorus trivial—should have more mood. Accent greatly exaggerated. On the whole not in the right style for Bach. More rhythmic than interpretative. (c) Good features in the rhythmic attack. Rests prolonged unduly. Not vivid or expressive, and there were no big, imposing climaxes. The last page inadequately treated.

RHYMNEY UNITED.—(a) Nice blend. Some curved attack of initial notes. Much sympathetic expression, but too many "points" made; better if the piece had flowed more naturally. Not correct, bar 27, and again bar 53. Often small errors made. A good climax near the end. (b) Vocalisation loose. Execution laboured and casual. Many notes incorrect, and the tonal attack often indefinite. On the whole casual. The trebles sang high notes rather harshly. The diminuendo at the end uncalled for. The style and execution did not interpret Bach. (c) Too slow. The two-four time bars wrongly related to the three-four, and again to the two-two section. Very unsteady on p. 11. A good conception of the last page, and a stirring climax achieved. But it was not musical.

RHYMNEY GWENT.—(a) Very good tone. Blending grace in the treatment, and agreeable warmth. A creepy tonal attack sometimes. Intonation therefore not always pure. Attack excellent, and the rhythm delicately treated. Climax good. Bars 27 and 53, B natural for B flat. Bar 29 not properly related tonally to previous section. (b) No conviction in the style. Doubtful execution, and not well in tune. No part happy. The texture loose. Not appreciative of Bach. High notes indicated rather than actually sung. Climax attempted last page, but the end bars were not good. Many wrong notes. (c) Began with due vehemence. Tempi properly related. Tonality, p. 7, very doubtful. There was vigour, stir, excitement and some breadth. Key lost on pp. 8 and 9. On the whole good as interpretation but not as correct execution.

CARNARVON.—(a) A good balance. Conspicuous unity. Sweet blend and unified vowels. Not always dead in tune. Tendency to sharpen. A dainty rhythm. Expressive legato style. Small gradations tastefully treated. Staccato exaggerated. Ends of phrases too crisp. Ended a little sharp. (b) Somewhat fast, but not jaunty. A serious mood realized. The ejaculation of second chorus full and not an intrusive and abrupt sforzando. The texture of the counterpoint revealed. A leisurely, deliberate, measured-out style. No fuss or hurry in the runs. High A trebles screaming. Altos seemed weakest part. Evidences of musicianly taste constant. The end bars properly treated, full and almost triumphant. (c) Seemed pale. Lacked conspicuous vehemence and vitality. More dainty than tempestuous. Very correct, the parts and modulations could be clearly traced. Some fine chordal effects. P. 10 was not satisfactory. Climax, p. 7, missed. On the whole musicianly and fairly interpretative.

CARDIFF.—(a) Tone pleasant. Refined, but not well in tune. A murky blend because few chords were exactly right. Trebles chiefly responsible for the flattening, the other parts seemed to be resisting, hence the poor chording. Bar 21, B natural for B flat. Other small errors. Some good rhythmic feeling. Expression not much inspired, not much conviction in the style. Pace too fast. Lost a whole tone. (b) A good pace, but the style of delivery too ponderous. Rhythm ill-defined. Became laborious. Intonation nearly first-rate. Some slight failures near the end. Creditably correct. Caught some devotional feeling, p. 12. The glow here was effective. (c) Not fast and furious enough. Tempi correctly related. Some insecure moments, p. 11. In imminent danger here. On the whole fair, but not picturesque enough.

LLANELLY.—(a) Sopranos too much tone for the balance. One fine voice stood out. Not well in tune. A gentle, tender stroke of the rhythm. Bar 29 not properly related tonally to bar 28. B natural, bar 21. Some charm in the controlled restraint. Not much colour in the expression. (b) A fair pace. A musical tone and fair general unity. Some rhythmic life, and the contrapuntal texture clear. A musical tone and fair unity. Not in tune, p. 14. Dragged on p. 15 and became dull. A serious mood invoked. Last page sung with apparent exhaustion. (c) A vehement start in the right mood. Tempi well related. A dull, ominous colour, pp. 6 and 7. Fine grip of attack on p. 8. Agitated execution on p. 9. At p. 11 trouble was experienced. The last page missed the feeling of climax.

SECOND CHORAL COMPETITION (75 to 100 voices).

Tests: (a) "O snatch me swift" (unaccompanied) (Dr. Callcott); and (b) "The Lord is my Shepherd" (Harry Evans).

First prize, £50. Second prize, £10.

Twelve choirs entered; eleven sang, in the following order:—

	(a)	(b)	Td.
Nantlle Vale United Choir (Mr. T. T. Powell) ..	70	80	150
Willesden District Choir (Mr. J. S. Waddell) ..	85	90	175
Fishguard Bay Choral Union (Mr. Evan Anthony) ..	60	70	130
Portsmouth Excelsior Temperance Choral Society (Mr. Charles Weedon) ..	75	65	140
Coleford Philharmonic Society (Mr. J. H. Evans) ..	85	65	150
Skewen Music Lovers (Mr. William Davies) ..	60	65	125
Pentre and Treorchy United Choral Society (Mr. James Davies) ..	86	60	146
The Southport Choir (Mr. William Tattersall) ..	95	96	191
Grangetown United Choral Society (Mr. James Williams) ..	55	70	125
Briton Ferry Choral Society (Mr. Evan Morris) ..	88	70	158
Cefn Mawr Choral Society (Mr. G. W. Hughes) ..	78	82	160

NANTLLE VALE.—(a) Fair tone and balance. Bass scarcely strong enough for division. The second bass should be stronger. Sopranos rather often squeezed the tone, especially on aa and ai vowels. The f tone more strenuous than rich. The changes of force too violently contrasted. Pianos made pianissimos, &c. Some vitality in the rhythm. The Largo at the end not sufficiently broadened out. Lost a semitone. (b) Some finish in the style, and agreeable fluency. Sopranos too much in evidence relatively to the general balance. Tenor weak. Attack showed good training. The Stringendo not effective. There was fair warmth in the expression. On the whole good, but not specially striking.

WILLESDEN.—(a) Fine tone. Not deeply resonant. Conspicuous unity of attack and vowel colour. The contrasts sanely related. Crescendos well regulated—not too steep. Intonation not impeccable. Lost pitch a little. The Allegro Moderato would bear more spring or resiliency. Tenors sang with fine quality throughout. The fugal passage, "I bow submissive," was beautifully sung. The f climax was finely worked up, and the final Largo was perfectly treated. Lost a semitone. (b) A warm, satisfactory blend. Attack highly finished. Intonation not exact. Had the skill to pick up the pitch. An imposing crescendo, pp. 15-16 (staff edition), led up to something. The final climax was well proportioned.

FISHGUARD BAY.—(a) Opening too weak. Attack languid. The vowel in "snatch" made very broad. Soon began to lose pitch. Even the "ocean rage" was mild. Occasional snatches of effective singing. But, on the whole, there was lack of cohesion and vitality. The "roar" on the last page was not resonant. The notes were simply sung. Generally too pale. Lost a whole tone. (b) Vowel quality not well defined. Did not blend. Some creeping tonal attack, especially of initial notes of phrases. Lost pitch badly at the unaccompanied passage, "My cup runneth over." Restored by the decision and skill of accompanist, and disaster cleverly averted. The Allegretto had some stir, the attack becoming confident. Lost pitch again, but not so badly as before.

PORTSMOUTH EXCELSIOR.—(a) Pleasant tone, sometimes very good. Balance seemed deficient in trebles and altos. Tenors a thin quality. Opening movement not impressive. Words very well enunciated. The Larghetto well treated. The Allegro displayed effective life. The tone of the choir improved greatly towards the end. The final Largo was very expressive. (b) A hesitant start. Attack sluggish and tone not striking. The Grasioso was deficient in rhythmic interest, stiff rather than graceful. The Stringendo did not lead to the suggested climax. In the Musstoso the tone was thin and the attack was weak.

COLEFORD.—(a) Started very effectively. Clean tone and unified attack. Enunciation excellent. Fell off slightly in intonation at the first repeat. Slurs well defined. Dynamic contrasts sensibly proportioned. Larghetto a rich climax. The end of first Allegro (bars 64 to 67), "Till my days shall end," very beautifully sung. Mood there as well as the mere notes. The depressing feature was the loss of pitch. The process clouded some passages. The entries in the fugal passage were excellent. The second bass was rather weak as a fundamental bass to the harmony, the flat pitch increasing the want of balance of tone. Lost nearly a tone. (b) Soon began to lose pitch. Probably the consciousness impaired confidence. Entries flagged. Some fine points occasionally. The climax on p. 15 (staff copy) redeemed some faults. There was some uncertainty in the execution at the Stringendo (p. 17). On the whole an unequal performance by a fine choir.

SKEWEN.—(a) Military style of rhythm. Marked accents. Too staccato and chippy for the piece. Tone fair, but sopranos sometimes displayed a penetrating, hard quality. Not dead in tune with one another even in fall major chords. A well-drilled choir on the rhythmic side. Needed much more sostenuto style and finer tuning. The last Largo was excellently done. A welcome surprise! (b) Opened in promising style. Then the intonation gave way hopelessly. The attack was good as rhythm, but it had a rather unpleasant "bite" as music. There were evidences of careful study. The climaxes were well wrought up and there was nearly always rhythmic interest. With a more beautiful tone and perfect intonation the choir would do well.

PENTRE AND TREORCHY.—(a) A fine blend. Trebles a sweet and well-unified quality. Mood and purpose in the style. Soon began to lose pitch a little. Attack unequal. Got somewhat loose, bars 21 to 31. Larghetto a splendid effect. Allegro andante. Attack here excellent. Compact and clean. The slurred runs on the last page were finely vocalized, and the final Largo made its proper effect, reverent and devotional. (b) Evidently well studied as expression. In fact, it was too fervent and dramatic for such a piece. Unfortunately the intonation was sadly out. This marred fatally many well-designed points. Chords became hazy, and the tone not musical.

SOUTHPORT.—(a) Absolute unity of rhythmic attack and vowel colour. Hence a gorgeous blend. The execution was deliberate and yet rhythmic—a finely-balanced spring in the accent. Accurate judgment and insight into the possibilities of the piece were continually displayed. The alto a beautiful tone. All the dynamic contrasts were well related. No exaggerations in order to make special showy effects. A momentary unsteadiness at bars 71 to 74. A well-nigh perfect performance as tone, rhythm, and expression of the finest sort. (b) Soothing and sleek opening. A delicate beautiful blend. Slightly off the pitch on p. 10 (Staff copy). Basses splendid. The grace of rhythm realised at the Grasioso. A splendid climax of pure musical tone on p. 17. The final Masoso had all the called-for breadth.

GRANGETOWN.—(a) The tone quality not a good blend. Constitution of the choir evidently mixed. Needs straining off. So many struck notes below the pitch and curved to the neighbourhood of the necessary pitch. Hence much bad chording. The vocalization of the runs was rarely very clean, and there were many small mistakes made. Pitch fell a whole tone about half-way through the glee. There was occasional animation in the singing, but more musicianship and vocal training called for. (b) Began poorly and then rapidly improved. Better as tone and intonation. The Allegretto was nicely sung, the rhythm being well treated. A very creditable performance by a not very well-equipped choir.

BRITON FERRY.—(a) Attractive tone. Clean and blendful. Attack neat and dainty as rhythm. Never a deep resonance. Admirably drilled choir. Such finish in the technique. Not a great resource for climax. Many proofs of fine insight. The end of the Allegro bars 60 to 67) was most impressive. The tenor entry bar 79) was especially good. All this section was finely sung. The slurs on the last page were well defined, and the Largo created its due effect. Altogether a good exhibition of choral technique. (b) Began very promisingly. Then the intonation failed and the execution became distressed. The tone did not make much effect; resonance even in the climaxes. Some good rhythmic facts, and the expression designed was correct. The slure of the intonation probably oppressed the singers.

CEFN MAWR.—(a) The execution of "snatch" was realistic. Accents generally were too much pointed. Notes a rather thin, squeezed tone. Good choral technique by way of attack and finish. The design to vibrate strong emphasis led to more than usually responsive individuals standing out. The "ocean rage" is too literally rough. The last f climax was well signed. Caught some breadth and fine resonance. First pitch a little. (b) Began most promisingly. Obviously a well-trained choir, chiefly excelling in technique rather than in tone quality. The Grasioso did not realize grace and smooth flow. Tone occasionally stertorous. Sopranos particularly gave way badly in the dissonant passages. Notwithstanding faults it was as if that the conductor knows the business of choir singing.

FEMALE CHOIRS (40 to 60 Voices).

Contests: (a) "Sound sleep" (R. Vaughan Williams); (b) "The nish gipsy girl" (Lassen); and (c) "The skylark" (J. C. McLean). In the first two were sung.

First prize, £25. Second prize, £10.

Seventeen entered; eight sang, in the following order:—

	(a)	(b)	Til.
Pontypridd Ladies' Choir (Mr. Wm. Morgan)	70	75	145
Mary Layton's Ladies' Choir (Mrs. Mary Layton)	95	80	175
Iwyn Ladies' Choir (Mr. Tudor Owen)	68	85	153
Idyrlhiw Ladies' Choir (Miss Kate Jones)	65	87	152
Row St. James' Ladies' Choir (Mrs. Mary Bourne)	96	95	191
Llanbadrach Ladies' Choir (Mrs. T. Moses)	75	88	163
Llanbadra Ladies' Choir, Birkenhead (Madame Maggie Evans)	98	98	196
Pontypridd Ladies' Choir (Mr. Thos. Thomas)	85	88	173

PONTYPRIDD.—Too slow. Pulled out too much. Tone good, if not first-rate. Intonation gave way in bars 22 to 26, and again in bars 52 to 56. The episode (bars 76 to 80), "Church bells ringing," not a good reading, not dreamy and tender enough. The slow pace tended to kill the rhythm. Piano too soft, mf too loud. Gradations of force exaggerated. A sf on "rest" (bar 113) and on "shriven" (bar 115) was not a good effect. Occasional snatches of good blend and tasteful expression. (b) Tone fair. Some taint of vibrato. Vivid colouring in the expression. Bar 28, made molto rit. instead of poco rit. Bars 33 to 37, attack confused. The important long slur (bars 45 to 48) not clearly vocalized. Alto tone hardly sufficient resonance to make a good vocal bass. As a rule the attack was good and the expression effective.

Mrs. LAYTON'S CHOIR.—(a) Beautiful tone and striking unity. Always well in tune. Balance good and blend sweet. Vowels defined and enunciation clear. Charming treatment of piu lento (p. 8, bars 74 to 80). Climax to high A flat (bar 97) well wrought up, but not wholly musical. The unaccompanied passage (bars 101 to 108) very expressive and perfectly in tune. The last page was treated with subtlety. (b) Not warm and picturesque enough. A higher and more vivid colouring demanded. Good music, and vocalization always first-rate. The long slur excellent. On the whole, only a fair interpretation.

MOELWYN.—(a) Small choir. Why a chord before starting accompaniment? Good pace. Tone at opening good, but fell a good deal in fortes. Alto tone lacked fullness. Tonal attack defective, curved, not quite on the pitch. Poco piu mosso (bar 31) taken molto. Ends of phrases clipped too crisply. Pace much increased, bars 94 to 98, "Till her grave bands be riven." Crescendo treated as though it involved accelerando. Some delicate effects. The end was effectively managed. (b) Brisk. Tone much better than in (a). The first Lento too slow. D sharp for D, first alto, bar 41. Some attractive rhythm and good attack. On the whole an effective and well-thought-out performance.

TROEDYRHIW.—(a) Began very sweetly and blendfully. Then intonation wavered. Poco made molto, commencing bar 31. Quite spoiled the due effect. Not much by way of moving expression. Some pure, limpid singing. On the whole the performance left a mixed impression, it was so unequal in merit. (b) Brisk and attractive rhythm. Tone nearly always good and blendful. Words were clearly enunciated, and the attack showed skilful training. D sharp for D natural, bar 41. The long slur near the end was not very well done.

BARROW.—(a) A particularly beautiful tone. The altos a splendid vocal bass to the harmony. Vowels fully defined; consonants not interfering although distinct. A slight failure of intonation, bars 53 to 56. Altos not quite on the pitch, bars 67 to 69. The "Church bells ringing" episode (bars 76 to 80) most charmingly treated. The luscious alto tone a great effect at the unaccompanied passage, bars 102 to 108. On the whole a fine example of high-grade training. (b) Tempi well chosen. Attack wonderfully well unified. A sort of controlled wildness. There was a sob, an impatient gesture, and it was always music. The great slurred run was a virtuoso feat of vocalisation.

LLANBRADACH.—(a) Sweet tone in the opening piano. Later, pressed too hard on the forte: beyond the blending point. Some good rhythmic effects. The piu mosso, bar 31, was not cantabile enough. Tone fell off here rather conspicuously. The mood missed, and the attack loose, bars 74 to 80. Too fast, and tenuto marks not properly observed. The tempo primo, sections 82 to 90, very effective. Later, the tone in the climax not well produced. The end was fairly good. (b) Good tone and excellent attack. Bar 28, molto for poco. D sharp for D natural, bar 41. Some very effective expression, mood and poetry. Bars 30 to 37 skilfully treated. The great slur well vocalized. There was some exaggeration of the small nuances.

GITANA, BIRKENHEAD.—(a) An extremely beautiful blend and complete unity of attack. Highly refined execution. Always so satisfying as tone, rhythmic treatment, and interpretation. To single out one passage, the charming treatment of "Far-off chimes," bars 74 to 80, may be mentioned. But there were numerous similarly fine points. The intonation was practically perfect throughout. A performance to remember. (b) Again fascinating. Bubbling with vitality and glowing with emotion, yet always fine as music. The D natural, bar 15, quite right! Difficult, even for an adjudicator, to find any fault. One had simply to listen and enjoy.

BANGOR.—(a) A small choir. At once began to exhibit good taste. Tone fair. The intonation gave way somewhat. The più mosso (bar 31 onwards) was well treated. The rhythm shaky (bars 61 to 66). The "Church bells" passage was good as conception if not beautiful as tone. The climax to the ff (bar 97) was skilfully worked up. On the whole, an impressive performance by a choir not very well equipped, but very well led. (b) Attack excellent. Some really brilliant bits. Not much as tone, but displaying vitality and good training. D sharp (bar 15)! The difficulty of the great slur was effectively surmounted. Very creditable.

COMPETITION FOR MALE-VOICE CHOIRS (75 to 100 Voices).

Tests: (a) "Fair Semele's high-born son" (Mendelssohn); (b) "O peaceful night" (Edward German); and (c) "The Revellie" (Elgar). (b) and (c) unaccompanied.

First prize, £75. Second prize, £25.

Nine choirs entered; eight sang, in the following order:—

	(a)	(b)	(c)	Ttl.
Llanely Male-Voice Society (Mr. Dan S. Evans) ..	65	70	60	195
Mid-Rhondda Orpheus Glee Society (Mr. Emrys Richards)	67	75	80	222

Newcastle Glee and Madrigal Society (Mr. I. R. Liddell)	85	80	80	245

LLANELLY.—(a) Too quick. Took away much of the due effect of the chorus. Good attack (at first) and the tone musical. Pale as to contrasts. Weak climaxes. Not enough variety. In the last movement the attack became ragged. (b) Again too fast. No definite mood caught. Tone agreeable. Good drill exhibited. Intonation shaky. The Allergo was taken at a sane pace. On the whole, only a fair impression created. Lost a whole tone. (c) The right spirit, but execution very uncertain. The high tension of the piece not fully realized. Many of the composer's directions not followed. Allargando (bar 21), espress. (bars 32-33), the second bass "come" (bar 59), nobilmente (bar 73), all without mood. The splendid climax at nobilmente (bar 99) also practically ignored. On the whole the execution was weighted by the difficulties of the piece.

MID-RHONDDA.—(a) Spirited. Somewhat too fast. But there was some warmth that interested. Second tenors sang E natural for E flat (bar 15) and again when the passage recurs. Intonation unsafe. "Hear us" poor and not correct. The tone generally good. No conspicuous merit in the execution. Too fast at the end. Accompaniment by a band would be almost impossible. A performance, but not an interpretation. (b) Good conception. Some delicacy. Occasional wrong notes—not very important ones. Smooth vocalisation and interpretation. Good attack and some poetry. Nothing striking. Lost a semitone. (c) Some nervous energy displayed: better if much more. Good body of tone. Good staccato, which should not have been applied to "Let me of my heart take counsel" (bars 26-27). Vivid at "What if conquest" (bars 47-49). Fine mood caught at "What if, 'mid the cannon's thunder." "Exciting climax at the feroce ad accel. (bars 69-72). At bar 98 first tenors went up a tone instead of a semitone, the other parts also sharpening. Third bar from the end second basses sang B natural for B flat. On the whole an interpretation but with some imperfections.

MAESTEG.—(a) Started well and then tone became hard and unblendful. Second tenors E natural for E flat, bar 15. Error repeated later. The Antistrophe I. taken soli. Very well sung except for vibrato in the tenor. Allergo vivace. Some stir and bustle. Too fervent because the quality of tone of the choir did not improve in loud passages. A fair conception of the piece. (b) Rough tone. Did not blend. Rhythm effective and climaxes worked up effectively. Inner parts not safe as to tonal attack. Not much poetry in the expression. On the whole, middling. (c) Too much like talking. It seemed impossible to follow the notes and chords of some passages, the execution was so vague. The tone was sadly squeezed out and the rhythmic attack wavered. A brave effort, but apparently they were overcome by the technical difficulties.

BARGOED-TEIFY.—(a) Rich tone. Grip in the attack. Somewhat too fast. E natural for E flat, bar 15. Bass a fine tone and execution firm. Occasionally a lack of breadth and sostenuto noticeable. The effects were governed by good judgment. Some dignity revealed. (b) Fair pace. Musical blend. Then doubtful intonation ensued. Unity of vowels a good point. Allergo taken Presto, and the tone shimmered away. The rhythm too weighty for the piece. The intonation near the end unsatisfactory. Lost a semitone. (c) An ominous mood at the start. Very promising. Intensity in the expression. Began to lose pitch alarmingly. Very soon down a whole tone. At bar 60 all voices began a fourth instead of a third above bar 59. Much guesswork going on. Evident trouble. The moods seldom realized.

SWANSEA.—(a) Fine resonant tone. Too pointed as accent. Piece needs sostenuto. Effective as exhibition of drill. Soli quartet good, tenor excellent. E natural for E flat, bar 15. Much vigour in the attack, and the tone always well controlled. Pace too fast and not dignified. This was an error of interpretation. The accompanist not considered. (b) Very good tone. Pace well chosen. Small sforzandos and other expression marks exaggerated—sometimes seriously. Well in tune. Good discipline. A refined performance. (c) At once impressive. Moody and with rhythmic life. Fine broadening at the allargandos. "Even greater ills," bars 48 and 49, deeply expressive. "You must do the sum," bar 56, excellent treatment. Many other similar thoughtful points. The dynamic changes generally proportioned with judgment and the attack firm and confident. A fine exhibition of choral training which, if it did not reveal all the potentialities of the piece, went a good way towards doing so.

DOWLAIS.—(a) The right tempo for the first movement. Broad, deliberate, dignified. The E flat, bar 15, doubtful. Conspicuous unity and finish in the attack. The soli quartet had a good sostenuto. Excellent climax at the full chorus entry. The Vivace movement too fast, but very well done. (b) Excellent chording. Sweet and resonant. Rhythmic treatment very skilful. Delicate pianissimo, with rhythm still in evidence. Crescendos well proportioned, not too steep. An interpretation that had poetry in it. (c) Some mastery exhibited at once. Tone very fine. Inner parts well served by good musicians. No doubtful notes. The excitement and throb of the piece finely revealed. "Let me of my heart take counsel," as an aside, was startlingly expressive. "Even greater ills" was thrilling. The first tenor entry, bar 69, "When my brothers fall," was almost poignant. The fine point, bar 106, for second bass, molto cres. on the word was brought out as by no other choir so far. There was an absence of exaggeration of small points. The piece unmistakably told its exciting and deeply-moving story. It is possible to imagine finer tone, but not much finer expression.

EBENEZER.—(a) Bright tone. Attack praiseworthy. Intonation sometimes wavered. A good idea of the proper pace. Considerable finish in the execution. Balance satisfactory. Allergo vivace, fairly well measured and broad. More dignity than excitement, which was right. Tenors seemed fatigued near the end, and became rather rough. The climax was not imposing. General effect good. Musicianship displayed. (b) Unfortunately too slow, and became rather dreary. The restraint on excessive ff led to intonation suffering rather badly. The intention to be expressive was commendable, but no special distinction was achieved. Lost a whole tone. (c) Began very promisingly. Attack excellent and a mood caught. Then intonation began to fail. Tenor tone very good. "You must do the sum" was much over-emphasised. At bar 60 a semitone up was stolen! Helped the pitch for performers but queered it for adjudicators. Choir not sufficiently well-equipped in all parts for this piece. All the same, there was some insight displayed. The end went very wrong. It was not music.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—(a) The right pace and style. Dignified and broad. The E flat, bar 15 and elsewhere, always correct. Tenors seemed to fail a little from want of vitality and robustness. A splendid sostenuto at the chorus after the quartet (taken full). The Vivace was somewhat too fast. On the whole, the performance was a fine one, exhibiting good judgment and capacity. (b) Smooth and flowing. Never intrusively over-pointed. The phrase-ends delicate, and the whole performance had an atmosphere of refinement. The Allegro was taken very fast, practically presto. Not very impressive as a poetical interpretation. Lost pitch a little. (c) An ominous, agitated mood caught at once. Emotion in the tone where called for. The choir obviously well equipped as musicians, but not able to command the resonance displayed by at least two choirs heard. Bass especially deficient (relatively). The pitch began to fall. Down a semitone at bar 42. Blend began to cloud. Fine expression of the subtle kind continual. Not so impressive in big climaxes. Thrilling at "Thus they answered" (bar 79), and a splendid, warm expansiveness at "My chosen people come" (bars 99 to 101). The last page had some fascination. The voices were hardly equal to the merciless demands of the piece. The second basses apparently inconvenienced by the flat pitch.

BUXTON.

May 20, 21, 22.

If pleasant surroundings and fresh air are elements that make for the popularity of a competition festival centre, then Buxton is indeed fortunate. It is satisfactory to record that these and other advantages were fully appreciated by the musical organizations in the large area appealed to in connection with this year's festival. The scheme is a wide one, as it includes solo-singing and playing (both junior and adult) school choirs, and adult choirs of all kinds. Some sections are confined to the district, but most of the competitions are open, and it is a tribute to the management that many first-rate organizations are attracted. It was calculated that nearly 2,000 individuals took part in the three days' proceedings.

The first day was for the children. There were not many entries in the school classes. Some had to be withdrawn on account of illness. The schools were divided into six sets—namely: Children in standards IV, and under—(a) boys; (b) girls; (c) mixed; and the same subdivisions for children in standards V, and upwards. This classification was perhaps too minute in view of the fact that the district is not thickly populated. The entries and results were as follows:

Standard IV, and under. Girls.—Tests: "The quiet mind" (Smart) and "My own country" (Forrester).

St. Anne's Roman Catholic School, Buxton (Miss Clare McKeivitt), came out first with 142 marks; the Girls' Council School, Buxton (Miss A. Harrison), second with 137 marks; and Endowed School, Fairfield (Miss S. H. Walton), third with 133 marks.

Boys.—Tests: "The sailor's song" (Haydn) and "Dear England."

Macclesfield Industrial School (Mr. H. S. Rees) were well first with 153 marks; and Endowed School, Fairfield (Mr. H. S. Lowe), second.

Mixed.—Tests: "Dear England," and "Westward Ho!" (Barri).

The Bamford Council School children (Mr. G. C. Oldham) gave a fine rendering of both the test-pieces, and they were placed first with 153 marks; the Endowed School from Fairfield (Miss Horrox) was placed second; and the Church School, Hope (Mr. D. W. Chadwick), third.

Standard V, and over.—The only girls' choir was from the Council School, Buxton (Miss Gould), and the only boys' from Macclesfield Industrial School (Mr. H. S. Rees). In "Whispering wind" (Labbett) there was the mark of industry and carefulness, some beautiful blending, and just sufficient tone-colour. The boys sang especially well, and were awarded nearly full marks.

Mixed.—Tests: "When daisies pied" and "Playtime's golden hours" (Ketèlbej).

The Church School, Hope (Mr. D. W. Chadwick), was given premier position; Fairfield Endowed School made a good impression; and the Bamford Council School Choir was also commended.

A speciality was made of action-songs. They were admirably prepared and greatly interested the large audience. St. Anne's Roman Catholic School, Buxton (Miss Clare McKeivitt), sent two sets of competitors. The girls gave "Caller herrin'," and the boys "We lads in blue." Dressed in Scots fisher costume, the girls sang well, acted charmingly, and danced daintily. The lads were real sailor boys in their white and blue, and their hornpipe at the close brought hearty applause. A dozen tiny, little children from Fairfield Endowed School presented "The swallows' return." They looked pretty in their white dresses, the "swallows" being picked out with black sleeves and caps. The best work of the afternoon was done by the girls from Buxton Council School, who, in "The maids of Seville," were excellent. Out of 80 marks they secured 75; the girls from St. Anne's came second with 73; and the boys from St. Anne's, third with 72.

In another class any selected chorus from "The luck of Edenhall" (S. H. Nicholson) was the test. It was evident that the work had been admirably prepared. The Bamford C. S. (Mr. G. C. Oldham) gained the first place. The singing of Church School, Hope (Mr. Chadwick), was almost as good.

Sight- and writing by ear-tests were taken only by the Girls' Council School. The ear-tests showed good results and the sight-singing was fair. Maggie Elliott (Chesterfield) was first in the girls' solo class, and Brian Smith (Buxton) first in the boys' solo class. A concert was given by prize-winners, and the combined choirs sang "The luck of Edenhall," under the baton of Mr. Harry Evans.

On the second day local choirs and soloists competed. In the Church and Chapel choir sections, Buxton Parish Church (Mr. W. N. Busby) and St. John the Baptist Church (Mr. Carl Ashover) did admirably in their respective sections. Bradwell (Mr. G. Norman) was first in the male-voice choir section. In the chief choral class the tests were "The river floweth" (Rogers), and any chorus from the "Bon-Bon Choral Suite" (S. Coleridge-Taylor):

	Part-song.	Selection.	Total.
1st. Tideswell Choral Society	(Carl Ashover)	65	136
Buxton Philharmonic Society	(Mr. G. H. Lockett)	62	135
Bradwell Choral Society	(Mr. G. Norman)	71	125
Bamford Choral Society	(Mr. W. T. Wingfield)	56	103

Beside the above there were numerous competitions for quartet, solo, trio, &c.

The Duchess of Norfolk (President of the Association of Competition Festivals) happened to be present in the audience, and she very kindly consented to hand the shield to Mr. Ashover.

At the evening concert the chief event was an excellent performance of the "Bon-Bon Suite," under the baton of the winning conductor.

On the third day the competitions were open. Twenty-three sopranos sang "My heart ever faithful" (Bach); twenty contraltos, "De Profundis" (Capel); twenty-six tenors, "Onaway, awake, beloved" (Coleridge-Taylor); and twenty-seven basses, "Sir Nigel's song" (Monk Gould). The results were as follows:

Soprano—1, Miss E. F. Gledhill (Golear); 2, Miss M. A. Ward (Barnsley).

Contralto—1, Miss Olive Law (Leigh); 2, Miss A. Hampson (Atherton).

Tenor—1, Mr. E. E. Neale (Eastwood); 2, Mr. Gaukroger (Manchester).

Bass—1, Mr. S. A. Moore (Bury); 2, Mr. A. P. Eccles (Halifax).

Miss Nettie Thompson (Waterloo) gained the pianoforte prize.

The Chief Choral Class brought forward six choirs.

Tests: (a) "The fair of Almachara" (S. Coleridge-Taylor); and (b) "The soul's longing" (F. James).

Sale and District Musical Society (Mr. Alfred Higson).
William Woolley Choral Society, Nottingham (Mr. W. Woolley).
Stockport Philharmonic Society (Mr. G. H. Broome).
Matlock Primitive Methodist Choir (Mr. L. G. Wildgoose).

Mr. Woolley's choir came first, the Sale choir second, and the Buxton Philharmonic third. The singing was of a high standard.

The judges throughout were Dr. McNaught and Mr. Harry Evans, and on the last day they were joined by Mr. Dan Price and Mr. H. Lyell-Taylor. The committee of the festival is a strong one, and the hon. secretary is Mr. F. Gummer. The time-table was admirably arranged and clearly shown to all concerned. The handsome programme-book contained the words of the test-pieces, but not the words of the two cantatas sung. It was therefore difficult for the audience to follow the concert-performance of the two works.

NORTH-EAST OF SCOTLAND CHORAL AND ORCHESTRAL FESTIVAL.

Aberdeen, June 4, 5, 6.

The Aberdeen folk never before had such a feast of musical music presented to them on three consecutive days they enjoyed on this auspicious occasion. The plan of the festival, which was the first of its kind held in the North-East of Scotland, was unusually comprehensive. It included competitions for schools and adult choral societies, a performance of "Elijah" on a large scale by the combined choral societies, and a church choir festival which focussed the resources of no fewer than twenty-eight choirs. Never before in Aberdeen has there been such unity for a common musical end. Although many others were concerned in the scheme, and gave it loyal service, it will be generally admitted that the nexus that bound all these resources together was Professor Terry, who holds the History Chair in the Aberdeen University. And it was all such an unmistakable success. If in some quarters there was querulousness, this was outbalanced by sympathy and support received from unexpected quarters. The Earl of Aberdeen gave his whole time to the festival, interesting himself in the smaller details, and invigorating all around him by his encouraging and sympathetic speeches.

The original idea was to hold simply a competition festival, but the development into a combined choir festival was a happy afterthought. It enabled the Aberdeen festival to arrive at once at a consummation desired, but rarely reached, by many older festivals.

In the competition schedule fourteen classes were announced, four for schools, three for church choirs, one for male-voice choir, another for female-voice choir, three for choral societies, one for string orchestra, and one for sight-singing (adult choral). In two classes there were no entries, and in the twelve classes represented there were twenty-five entries.

The schools did not come in very largely, but there is every reason to believe that now that the working of the scheme and its motives are better understood than they were, this section will be better supported. The schools that came generally showed excellent training. In fact it would have been an advantage educationally if less efficient school choirs had been present in order to gain a lesson. There were no money prizes. The rewards consisted chiefly of challenge shields and cups, which were very liberally given by various donors. The following is a full list of entries and results:

JUVENILE CHOIR.

Tests: "The swallow's flight" (B. Haynes); and "O lovely peace" (Handel).

1st. Keith Grammar School (Mr. Alex. Emslie, M.A.).
Mr. Watts' Juvenile Choir.
Choir Boys, St. Columba's, Elgin (Mr. F. Boothroyd).

LARGER SCHOOLS.

Tests: "A bird song" (Roland Rogers); and "The Lord is my Shepherd" (Smart).

1st. Central School (Mr. Charles Soutar).
Robert Gordon's College (Mr. Alex. Hendry).

SMALLER SCHOOLS.

Tests: "Clouds o'er the summer sky" (G. von Holst); and "Come, ever-smiling liberty" (Handel).
1st. Westfield School (Mr. G. Crookshanks).
Mortlach Higher Grade (Mr. Fred. Whiteley).

All schools had, in addition to the above tests, to sing at sight. Only unison tests were submitted. These were first sol-faed and then sung to laa from either notation. All chose the tonic sol-fa.

The singing was generally well trained. The tone was not conspicuously sweet, and sometimes the rhythm lacked grace of accent. But it was evident that there was good natural capacity on the part of the children and teaching skill on the part of the trainers.

CHURCH CHOIRS (Open).

Tests: "Hollest, breathe an evening blessing" (Martin) and "Who is like unto Thee?" (Sullivan). One entry. Queen's Cross U. F. (Mr. Warren T. Clemens) gained 136 out of 160 marks.

MIXED CHOIRS (from forty to seventy voices. Open).

Tests: "Sweet love, for me" (Stanford); "Weary wind of the West" (Elgar); and "All creatures now" (No. 5, Oriana Series) (Benet).

1st. Peterhead (Mr. Warren T. Clemens).
Duftown (Mr. F. Whiteley).

Dr. McNaught adjudicated throughout the competitions. The public attended very satisfactorily. The competitions were held partly in the commodious Music Hall and partly in the beautiful Mitchell Hall of the Marischal College.

On Saturday, June 5, a festival performance of Mendelssohn's oratorio "Elijah" was given under Dr. Henry Coward. The soloists were Miss Eva Rich (soprano), Miss Elsie Bradley (contralto), Mr. Henry Brearley (tenor), Mr. Herbert Brown (baritone), and Mr. Arthur Collingwood, F.R.C.O., was at the organ. The chorus of 450 voices represented the following choral societies in the North-East of Scotland: Aberdeen Choral Union, Aberdeen Musical Institute, Aberdeen Male-voice Choir, Duftown Choral Union, Elgin Choral Society, Fraserburgh Choral Society, and Peterhead Choral Union. The orchestra of seventy performers was formed almost exclusively from players within the area embraced by the Festival organization (leader, Herr Pokorny). Dr. Coward gave the combined choirs and band only one rehearsal, but as this occupied about four hours he was able, with his special skill, to weld the mass into an admirable whole. The choruses went remarkably well, and the band also played creditably. There was an overwhelming audience, and many hundreds were turned away. During the interval Dr. McNaught delivered a general criticism on the singing he had heard during the competitions, and the Earl of Aberdeen spoke of the great value of the Festival to the district.

On Sunday afternoon, June 6, a church choir festival service was very successfully held in the Music Hall. As already stated, twenty-eight church choirs took part. The soloists were Mr. Edgar Gauld and Mr. Andrew C. Kidd; organist, Mr. J. M. Nisbet; leader of the orchestra, Herr Pokorny; and conductor, Professor Terry.

The Lord Provost, magistrates, and council of the City of Aberdeen attended.

On the night of June 4 and including the early morning of June 5, the local branch of the Incorporated Society of Musicians entertained Dr. Coward and Dr. McNaught at a banquet. Mr. Arthur Collingwood was in the chair. The Earl of Aberdeen was among the guests.

LYTHAM.

June 9, 10, 11, 12.

This pleasant seaside event again passed off with complete success, and again emphasised the want of adequate accommodation provided by the town for such a gathering. The greater part of the popularity of the festival is undoubtedly due to the considerate way in which it is managed by the officials in the interests of competitors. The chief awards were as follows:

The children's competition, which occupied the whole of the third day, proved a great attraction to both competitors and audience. The action-songs again showed the touch of genius which places Lancashire ahead of all other districts in this particular department. The results were the following:

STECK PIANOS.

Although the STECK has won Medals, Diplomas and Prizes at Expositions, has been eulogized by Wagner and Liszt, and enjoys an unsurpassable reputation for reliability all over the Continent and America, it is not on these counts alone that it appeals to the connoisseur.

WHAT THE STECK IS TO-DAY is its greatest claim to the consideration of piano-purchasers. Every modern improvement, every detail that makes for excellence in piano construction, is embodied and brought to perfection in the STECK. It is one of the few really great Pianos of the world.

You are invited to call at Æolian Hall and play the STECK, or to write for our fully-illustrated Steck Catalogue "M.T."

"An undertaking of much artistically profitable character is represented by Mr. Ernest Austin's 'Songs from the Highway,' the first book of which is now issued. The words are mostly by the composer, and some of them consist of prose founded upon folk-incidents. Mr. Austin has cleverly retained in his music the simple but feeling style of the English folk-song, treated, however, with considerable skill and sincerity. The songs form a valuable contribution to national music, and the subsequent issues will be awaited with interest."—Morning Post, July 8, 1909.

SOUTHWELL MINSTER.

Eight hundred years have sped their flight along the pathway of time since Thomas II. was consecrated Archbishop of York in St. Paul's Cathedral. To him we owe the conception of Southwell Minster, one of those poems in stone which are the glory of our fair land of England. The actual foundation of this mother-church of the modern diocese of Southwell is lost in antiquity. That before the Conquest a church, perhaps a wooden building, stood on the site of the present edifice is our other churches. And this ye ought to do the more willingly, that we release you from the need of visiting each year, the church [minster] of York, as all our other parishioners do, but (instead you shall visit) the church of Southwell, and there have the same pardon that you have at York.*

This letter, written in the earliest years of the 12th century, gives the raison d'être for the erection of the present minster, with which the name of Thomas II., Archbishop of York, is so worthily and inseparably associated.

At the Reformation, the 'perfect bodie corporate' of Southwell—a community of secular canons—surrendered to the commissioners of Henry VIII. This was in the year 1540; but the building, one of the largest and richest of the collegiate churches in England, was happily saved from destruction and not allowed to decay. Under the great seal of Queen Elizabeth new statutes were made in 1585 more than probable. Certain it is that a collegiate church has existed there from the time of King Edgar, in the 10th century, to that of Queen Victoria. In the Liber Albus, or White Book, the oldest existing record of the Minster, is a copy of a letter addressed by Archbishop Thomas II. to the people (parishioners) of the Nottinghamshire portion of his diocese which, in its translated form, reads :

Thomas, by the grace of God, to all his parishioners of Nottinghamshire, greeting, in the blessing of the Lord, we pray you as most beloved sons, that in remission of your sins, we will help by the blessing of your alms, towards the building of the church of St. Mary of Southwell. And whosoever in the least degree shall give the smallest assistance, shall be to the end of time, a participator in all our prayers and blessings which shall be done in that and all and remained in force for nearly 300 years. One of these statutes required the appointment of a magister choristarum or rector chori, one of whose duties was to act as organist, an office which continues to this day. The old chapter, which had lasted from before the days of the Conquest, was abolished in 1841, when all the revenues went to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners; and it was not until forty-three years later that the old collegiate church attained cathedral rank in 1884, upon the creation of the new diocese of Southwell, Dr. George Ridding, formerly head-master of Winchester College, being the first bishop.

* From an interesting and instructive brochure entitled : The Life of Thomas II., Archbishop of York, and his connection with Southwell Minster. By the Rev. W. E. Hodgson, assistant-curate of Southwell Minster. With four illustrations. Nottingham : Henry B. Saxton. 1909. One shilling net.

Although called the cathedral of the diocese, Southwell has no dean in the ordinary acceptance of the term, nor a college of canons, as in other cathedrals. The Rector of Southwell exercises in his own person the full authority which at other cathedrals belongs to the corporate body of Dean and Chapter. But although the Minster has for centuries been the parish church of Southwell—now ably ministered unto by the rector (the Ven Archdeacon J. G. Richardson) and two curates—full cathedral services have always been maintained twice daily. And it is well to remember that these choral services were not constituted when Southwell became a cathedral, but are the continuation of the choral services of the old collegiate church which must have been started well nigh 1000 years ago. Thus, regardless of wars and rumours of wars, and despite the political and social changes which have swept across these islands for 800 years, here, in this quiet, out-of-the-way little town of

THE SOUTH DOOR.

Nottinghamshire, the strain of praise has been uplifted day by day from generation to generation.

What shall be said of the beautiful building? Can mere words adequately describe its form and comeliness? One has only to behold the Norman nave and transepts in order to realise their majestic strength and solidity; or to lift up one's eyes in the Early English choir to gaze upon a thing of pure beauty:

They dreamt not of a perishable home
Who thus could build.

Viewed from the exterior, opinions may differ as to the effect of the spires restored to the western towers in 1880; but no one will question the beauty of the three ancient doorways—the noble north porch, 19 feet wide, and the elaborate zig-zag ornamentation of the west and south doors. Most picturesque are the half-restored ruins, on the south side of the church, of the palace of former Archbishops of York. In plan a quadrangle with battlemented walls and round turrets at intervals for defence, the noble building was described in the 16th century as 'a goodelie Mansion House of the Bishoppe builded of timber and stone, and the roof of stone, adjoynenge to the Collegiat Church there wiche House is well and sufficientlie repayed.' Here, after his fall, Cardinal Wolsey stayed when he passed the summer of 1530 at Southwell. He sang high mass on Corpus Christi Day of that year, and a few months afterwards, on November 30, the once powerful prelate drew his last breath at Leicester Abbey. At the east end of the church is the Vicars' Court, so suggestive of old world peace, a group of red-brick 18th century houses, one of which is the official residence of the organist.

Upon entering the nave the visitor cannot fail to be impressed with the grandeur of the Norman architecture. The massive pillars, the stately arches of the first and second (triforium) stages, and the magnificent four great arches of the central tower, not only perfectly harmonize, but in their combined solidity create upon the beholder a feeling of reverence mingled with awe. The nave, consisting of eight bays, is in length 185 feet, in width 72 feet; the pillars are 9 feet in height and 4½ feet in thickness. In 1711 the fifteenth century roof was destroyed by fire, and was replaced by a flat ceiling which, in 1875, was superseded by the present barrel-shaped roof. For the remaining features of this Norman nave and transepts the reader is referred to the accompanying photographs. Mention must, however, be made of a curious piece of sculpture over the door in the north transept leading to the belfry. Three feet in length and about half as much in width, it forms a tympanum. In the centre is an angel subduing a figure on the right resembling an impossible bird; on the left is a headless man subduing what appears to be a lion or a leopard with a smaller animal represented above, its forefeet resting on the larger one's head. What do these anciently cut figures symbolize? Three answers to this question have been given: (1) 'Under the protection of the lamb, Daniel was able to overcome the lion, and Michael the devil'; (2) David rescuing the lamb from the lion; and (3) 'Thou shalt tread upon the lion and adder; the young lion and the dragon shalt thou trample under feet.' This block of stone is perhaps the oldest part of the minster. It must have served as a tympanum in the earlier building of the time of the Confessor; when the present transept doorway was built an ingenious workman found that the stone would, with a little alteration, just fit into the space required, so he just cut off the man's head and the thing was done!

The choir-screen is the most beautiful in England. Erected c. 1345, it is the last of the work in the minster, and thus fitly sets its seal upon all that preceded so lovely a conception.

Both sides of the screen are enriched with a profuse elaboration of ornament. On the nave side are three canopied arches, and the side walls are richly canopied with flowing tracery. The eastern (choir) side is remarkable for the large number of carved heads—angels, ecclesiastics, and others with military head-dresses, all bearing life-like expressions. There are three stalls on each side, that on the immediate right entering the choir was occupied by Cardinal Wolsey in 1530 on the occasion already referred to. Over the screen is the organ. Does the instrument add to the beauty of the sub-structure on which it rests? Any other answer than a negative one would be wide of the truth. Although the old Renaissance case was entirely worm-eaten when the present organ was erected in 1892, it is a thousand pities that the group of dwarf cases—having the effect of revolving bookcases—should have been admitted, instead of a case designed something like the old one shown in the photograph on p. 508. It will be the bounden duty of some future benefactor of Southwell Minster to remedy this blot on so fair a building.

The choir is the work of Archbishop Walter de Grey (1216-1256). It replaced the original Norman choir, and is a perfect specimen of Early English architecture. As de Grey considered the Norman choir too small, he issued (in 1233) an indulgence for thirty days for the completion of the choir which stands to this day, internally at least, almost exactly as he left it, and as a fitting commemoration of his archiepiscopal reign. While the building of the new choir, starting from the east end, was in progress, the Norman choir remained. On removing the latter, and building eastwards from the crossing, it was found that the two sections of the new part did not exactly join on the north side, with the result that there is a curious break in the string course. Another curiosity, at present unexplained, is that one of the arches on the south side is lower than the rest, in that its apex does not reach the string course. In order to fill up the gap thus created, a piece of sculpture has been inserted consisting of beautiful foliage, which a former historian of the minster declared to be the Prince of Wales's feathers!

An interesting feature of the choir is that the triforium and clerestory are combined in one stage, a combination unique in an English cathedral.

The dimensions of the choir are as follows: length, 128 feet; breadth, with aisles, 73 feet; breadth, with both transeptal chapels, 108 feet; the total length of the building, both nave and choir, is 318 feet. The glass in the eastern window is both ancient and modern. The four lower windows are filled with Cinque cento glass paintings of the French school, c. 1600. It found its way to Southwell in a curious manner. A Mr. Henry Gally Knight, M.P. for South Notts, was visiting Paris after the peace of 1814 when he found this glass in a neglected heap in a corner of a shop. The shopkeeper told him that it came from the chapel of the Temple prison. Be that as it may, Mr. Knight bought the glass and presented it to Southwell Minster in 1818. The subjects are (1) the Baptism of Christ, (2) the Raising of Lazarus, (3) the Triumphal Entry, and (4) the Mocking in the Pretorium.

The four upper lights are by Messrs. Clayton & Bell. A supremely beautiful feature of the chancel is the sedilia, added in the fourteenth century. Richly carved, the arches with double foliations, crockets and finials, and with figures in the spandrels, this sedilia has five seats—the usual number being three—for the celebrant, deacon, and sub-deacon. Here again Southwell is unique, so far as regards English cathedrals.

The lectern is a finely-worked brazen eagle, its expanded wings measuring two feet nine inches across, and bearing the inscription

Orate pro ana Radulphi Savage, et pro anabus
Omni Fidelium Defunctorum.

CARVING ABOVE STALL, NOW CALLED 'ALTO PECCO,' IN THE CHAPTER HOUSE.

(Photograph by Mr. A. J. Loughton, Southwell.)

This lectern has an interesting and curious history. Formerly the property of the neighbouring abbey of Newstead, at the dissolution of that community the monks hid some documents inside the body of the eagle, and then threw it into the lake to hide it from the commissioners of Henry VIII. ! The drowned eagle was fished up towards the end of the 18th century, and passed into the hands of Lord Byron, whose seat was at Newstead Abbey. This Lord Byron, the poet's predecessor in the title, got into great trouble through a duel in which he killed his opponent. From him the lectern was purchased by Sir Richard Kaye, subsequently dean of Lincoln, who presented it to Southwell Minster.

By the kind and special permission of the Duke of Portland we are enabled for the first time to publish the following letter written by Sir Richard Kaye to the third Duke of Portland concerning the once submerged lectern. The letter reads thus :

Kirkby

Dec 12 1775

MY DEAR LORD

The Extent of my woods does not equal that of my water, however I have sent Your Grace the firstfruits, a Brace of Cocks ; & it is no Robbery of myself, for I have many days dined upon a Snipe alone, but hope now to reach Town on Thursday sennight & feed more largely.

I have bought Lord Byron's strong Beer for my Parish, & his brass eagle for Southwell, as very good Bargains. He is dismantling the whole. I have also got his Orange & Lemon Trees, and an Élève of Speechleys I shall send for today to be my Gardener, as he recommends him strongly. The Messages are very civil between the Buyer & the Seller, tho we never met in our Lives.

Y^r Graces ever

RD KAYE.

For some reason or other the lectern did not reach Southwell Minster until thirty years later, as, in the Chapter Decree Book, under date April, 1805, the thanks of the Chapter are accorded to Sir Richard for his gift, with a note that they will send for the eagle 'as soon as possible.'

The glory of Southwell is its chapter-house—a dream of perfect loveliness. Words cannot describe this unique and chaste specimen of Decorated work. The late Mr. G. E. Street, R.A., said of it: 'What either Cologne Cathedral or Ratisbon or Weisen Kirche is to Germany, Amiens Cathedral or the Sainte Chapelle to France, the Scalerere in Verona to Italy, are the choir of Westminster and the chapter-house at Southwell to England.' And Mr. A. F. Leach, the indefatigable historian of the minster, says: 'In design and execution alike, in its general proportions and its minutest detail, it is impossible to conceive anything more beautiful. It is the most perfect work of the most perfect style of Gothic architecture.'*

The doorway, of five orders, to the chapter-house (see the photograph on p. 509), is of exquisite design and delicacy. No less fairylike is the graceful building itself. Octagonal in shape, it shares with York the distinction of lacking the central pillar which supports the vaulting of the roof. The carving of the doorway, the canopies of the stalls, and the capitals of the pillars are of the finest and most delicate workmanship and of unsurpassed wealth and luxuriance. Right up to the roof can the fancy of the artist—and there were artists in those days—be traced. And then to think of the variety of subjects so deftly cut out of the solid blocks of stone! In foliage and flowers alone we find bryony and ivy, the vine leaf, the fig leaf, and the hop, the white thorn and the rose, the oak and the maple. Human heads are also carved there (see the photograph on p. 503), and animals and birds of various kinds, including lizards and boars. It has been well said †: 'No two capitals or bosses or spandrels can be found alike, no wearisome repetition of beautiful parts tires the eye, but everywhere we meet, in ever-changing and ever-charming variety, with some fresh object of interest and admiration. A man reclines beneath a tree, puffing lustily away at a horn, or a goat is gnawing the leaves, or a bird pecking the berries, or a pair of pigs are grunting up the acorns, or a brace of hounds just grabbing a hare. It is not too much to say that it is the work of no mere chiseller of stone, but of a consummate artist, than whom it may be doubted whether any sculptor, of any age or country, ever produced anything more life-like and exquisitely graceful.' High praise indeed, but fully merited.

No article on Southwell Minster would be complete without reference to the Grammar School. As part of the ancient foundation of the collegiate church of Southwell, it probably was founded by an Archbishop of York before the Norman Conquest; thus it claims to be one of the oldest schools in the kingdom. In pre-Reformation times the master of Southwell grammar school was always a vicar-choral or chantry priest at a stipend of £2 a year, as was presumably the master of the song school, whose pay from the Chapter was only £1 a year. That music, as at Newark, formed an important part of the curriculum of the school, is proved by a document, dated 1546, which refers to 'the relyvinge of porre scolers thither resortinge for their erudycion, either in grammer, or songe.' When the collegiate foundation was surrendered to the Crown in 1540, the inhabitants of Southwell, recognising the importance of a boarding school in the town, petitioned King Henry VIII. that it might continue, a request which was granted. A similar surrender and re-founding took place in the reign of King Edward VI., who assigned an annual sum for the maintenance of the school, which from that time was managed by the Chapter of the Collegiate Church until that body was dissolved in 1841. In 1902 the school was re-constituted under a scheme of the Board of Education, and the present governing body, of which the Bishop of Southwell is elected chairman, was appointed. For twenty years, 1877-97, the headmaster of the school was Mr. John Wright, to whom succeeded his son, the

After having been partially destroyed by fire, the organ was repaired and completed by Snetzler in January, 1766. The following extracts from the Chapter Decree Books, relating to the organ, have kindly been made by the Rev. W. E. Hodgson specially for this article:

The known musical history of the minster covers a period of nearly 700 years. In the 'Acts of Convocation of all the brethren and canons of Southwell,' A.D. 1248, the clerks were 'to look over their parts beforehand,' and to 'sing without notes.' In the statutes of Archbishop Thomas de Corbridge, A.D. 1302, the precentor is specially mentioned in these words: 'Let all books, at least those with the music, be well examined by the precentor or his deputy that they may not be contradictory with one another, or discordant.' An old paper, preserved in the minster library, gives the answers of Richard Williams, one of the Prebendaries, to the questions of the Archbishop of York in his ordinary and diocesan visitation on September 8, 1635. Here are two of the answers :

To the sixth I answer we have all things for singing and saying divine service and sacraments saving a paire of good organs which I wish your Grace would be pleased to contribute something towards and divers other gentlemen would be ready to follow in so good a worke.

To the tenth article I answer that ye number of Vicars Chorall are but 3, and of clerkes who are laymen one [is] Mr of the Choristers, one organist, and 6 Choristers who for the most parte are very diligent : the Mr of the Choristers excepted, who is very negligent in the Quire and also of his boys and never corrects them, but in the Quire and in other

At the Reformation the staff consisted of forty-seven persons including 'xvj Vicars Choriall' and 'vj Choristars, daielye there to mayntayn Gods service, withe other godlye causes and considerations.' As to the manner in which the 'Vicars Choriall,' all of them fully ordained priests, discharged their duties in those 'good old times,' the pages of Mr. Leach's book bear ample

The following entries from the Chapter Decree Books throw an interesting light on the choral service at Southwell nearly two hundred years ago :

January 24th, 1716.

Because this appears to be the meaning of our statutes and many of our Orders and decrees, the practice of the Church of York and of other churches Collegiate as well as Cathedral (as it is well known to have been the practice of this church some years ago) and because this tends (in its own nature) to ye glory of God and the honour and bettr Governmt of this church : We also decree that Our present Vicars Choral (as thr voices and skill in Musick will severally admit) do from henceforth, for the perfection of ye Choir, in two months time, sing thr Parts in Verse—as well as full—Anthems, just as the singing-men doe, upon pain of ye diminution of thr salary, in proportion to their neglects.

testimony. Here is a specimen entry, under date A.D. 1506-7 : 'Dominus Thomas sings the prick-song very unwillingly, and sometimes sits reading in his stall instead of singing : promises amendment.' The 'vj Choristars' had their common lands, of the value of £2 7s. 6d. ; and at the Reformation they were said to receive 13s. 4d. out of the common fund, and 'no more wages to find them meat and drink, than is before sett upon their heds.' The difference in the value of money then as compared with that of our own time, no less than the vagaries of spelling, must be taken into account in reading these old-world extracts.

And we further Decree that whosoever shall henceforth appear as Candidate for any Vicar-Choral's place, or any other place void in ye Choir, he shall be tried (as to his skill in Musick) in singing from part (at least) of 2 or 3 of our Services and Anthems before the Chapter in ye Chapter house and not be admitted till he give sufficient satisfaction as to his skill in Church Musick. In wh^{ch} trial (at the Discretion of ye Chapter) the Rector Chori and also one or two of ye Vicars Choral together with one singing-man (the best skilled in musick) may advise and assist. We prefer this method of trial before that of August 20, 1691 because we may [better] judge of the voice [when] single and without ye Organ, as we but this day experienced in the Probation of a Chorister.

On October 23, 1783, the Chapter decreed that 'the Doggwhipper have a new coat as usual'; but a more serious matter occupied their attention on the following day when they decreed 'that the chanting of the service be performed in a Monotony, and that Mr. Spofforth copy the Responses from Dr. Boyce's collection in the Book of Services.' From this we may infer that up to that time the service was read, not intoned, or 'in a monotony.' It was decreed on April 21, 1785, 'that the Choristers appear in surplices instead of gowns on the week days as well as Sundays.'

Coming to later times, a Southwell chorister, Samuel Spofforth, became organist of Peterbrough Cathedral at the age of nineteen, and he afterwards held a similar post at Lichfield Cathedral for the long period of fifty-seven years, 1807 to 1864. Dr. John Spray, the celebrated tenor of the Dublin Cathedrals, was also a chorister, as well as a native of Southwell. 'Not only for volume and beauty of voice, but for the exquisitely beautiful utterance of the words, Dr. Spray was unrivalled,' recorded the late Sir Robert Stewart; and the Rev. Sinclair Brooke, in his 'Recollections of the Irish Church,' referring to Spray's voice, said: 'How he would send it forth with its rich swells, and every note clear and distinct, till it seemed to ripple along the walls [of the cathedrals] like the summer waves of a river.'

Reference must be made to the inspiring services of united parochial choirs that have been held in the minster during the past fifty years. In this connection the following extracts from this journal of fifty-one years ago speak for themselves:

SOUTHWELL.—A meeting of Parochial Church Choirs will be held at the Collegiate Church, Southwell, for morning and evening services, on Wednesday, April 28; when a sermon will be preached, in the morning, by the Bishop of Lincoln. Clergy and members of choirs willing to promote or take part in these services are invited to communicate with the Rev. J. Murray Wilkins, the rector.—Musical Times, March, 1858.

SOUTHWELL.—The meeting of the parochial choirs of the diocese took place at the Collegiate Church of Southwell, on Wednesday, the 28th of April. The Rev. Mr. Wilkins, the promoter of this movement, may fairly congratulate himself on having originated a new epoch in the cultivation of church music, and is entitled to great praise for the pains he has bestowed, and the practical ability he has brought to bear, upon this important subject. On this occasion, the aggregate number of the chorus assembled was 300. The attendance of clergy was very large, there having been above 70 present in surplices, who all met at the Chapter-House, and proceeded, with a portion of the choir, to the door of the church, to meet the Bishop. The service was intoned by the Rev. J. M. Wilkins. The chants were principally Gregorian, and sung in unison; and the effect was remarkably fine. The collection amounted to about £75. The gathering was altogether successful.—Musical Times, June, 1858.

Before referring to some of the organists of Southwell, a few words may be said about the bells of the minster. Probably nothing remains of the first pair, the gift of Archbishop Cynesige before the Conquest, if indeed they were ever hung. An inscription on the interior of the central tower reads: 'Thomas Wymondesold, of Lambeth, in the county of Surry, Esquire, gave unto this church a set of chimes and 20 shillings per annum ever toward the keeping of them. 1693.' Wymondesold's gift perished in the fire of 1711. Ten years later, Ruddall, of Gloucester, cast a new peal bearing the following inscriptions:

- 1st. Abraham Ruddall of Gloucester cast us all in 1721.
- 2nd. Peace and good neighbourhood.
- 3rd. Prosperity to this Town.
- 4th. Prosperity to our Benefactors.
- 5th. From Lightning and Tempest, Good Lord deliver us.
- 6th. Prosperity to this Chapter.
- 7th. Prosperity to the Church of England.
- 8th. I to the Church the Living call, and to the Grave do summon all.

The 2nd, 4th and 5th bells have since been re-cast and the inscriptions altered.

The first recorded organist of Southwell Minster was the Rev. George Vincent, a vicar-choral, whose name frequently appears in the 'Visitations' during the opening years of the 16th century. 'Irregular at duty'; 'Sleeps when he ought to be at matins, and when he does come, frequents the nave more than the choir; Often absent, so that the organ is not played'—these are some of the charges, not by any means the worst, brought against the Rev. Mr. Vincent, in answer to which he always 'promises amendment.'

Passing on to the 18th century we find William Popely (died 1718) holding the office of organist. To his credit can be placed three anthems (MS.) in the collection of Mr. John S. Bumpus. To Popely succeeded William Lee, the composer of a single chant (in G) which has found s way into almost all collections. Both William Lee, organist from 1718 to 1754, and his predecessor re buried in the south transept of the minster. The next chief-musician was Samuel Wise, who so held the office of auditor. To Wise, who apparently was organist for a very short time, succeeded Edmund Ayrton. His appointment thus recorded, with another matter, in the Chapter Decree Books under date October 23, 1755:

On April 22, 1756, Ayrton had leave to go to London 'for three months' further instruction by Mr. Nares the organist.' After having been organist for ten years—1754-1764—he became a gentleman of the Chapel Royal, a vicar-choral of St. Paul's Cathedral, a lay-vicar of Westminster Abbey, and Master of the children of the Chapel Royal. On July 29, 1784, at the Thanksgiving Service held at St. Paul's Cathedral for the close of the American Revolution, Ayrton's doctor's degree exercise, 'Begin unto my God with timbrels,' was sung as the anthem.

The bearer of a well-known name in music, Thomas Spofforth, succeeded Ayrton as organist at Southwell and reigned there for fifty-four years, 1764 to 1818. He was the uncle and teacher of Samuel and Reginald Spofforth. Reginald, who was born at Southwell, is well known to fame as the composer of the 'cheerful glee,' 'Hail! smiling morn,' which, it is said, was written on Constitution Hill, which overlooks Southwell Minster from the south. On July 23, 1818, Samuel Spofforth was granted a pension of £25 per annum 'for his long services,' when Edward Heathcote was appointed to succeed him and 'to receive the ancient salary as organist, as rector chori, and as one of the singing-men, making together the annual sum of £30.'

With just the mention, for completeness, of Frederick Gunton (afterwards organist of Chester Cathedral) and Chappell Batchelor—both of whom covered the period between 1835 and 1857—we pass on to Herbert Stephen Irons, who held office from 1857 to 1872. As composer of the excellent tunes 'St. Columba' (to 'The sun is sinking fast') and 'Southwell' (to 'Jerusalem, my happy home') the name of Mr. Irons is likely to be long kept in remembrance, for have not both these well-written strains worthily found a place in all hymnals? To Mr. Irons succeeded Mr. Cedric Bucknall, Mr. W. W. Ringrose and Mr. Arthur Marriott.

The present organist and rector chori of Southwell Minster is Mr. Robert William Liddle.

Born at Durham, March 14, 1864, he began his musical career as a chorister in the cathedral there, and was afterwards articled to the organist, Dr. Armes. In 1886 Mr. Liddle became organist of North Berwick Parish Church, and in 1888 he received his present appointment. Like Mr. Hubert Hunt, at Bristol, Mr. Liddle has the distinction of being an excellent violinist as well as a cathedral organist. He is a great believer in the Sevcik method of teaching the violin, and is the proud possessor of a very fine Strad.

Mr. Liddle was responsible for the successful musical arrangements at the special service held on June 29 to commemorate the octocentenary of the consecration of Thomas II., Archbishop of York. On that eventful occasion, the Archbishop of York (Dr. Cosmo Lang) being the preacher, the service music included Sir Charles Stanford's setting (in A) of the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis and Boyce's anthem 'I have surely built Thee an house.' In addition to the organ—at which Mr. William Whitehead, organist of Lewisham Parish Church, rendered able assistance—the accompaniments were played by brass instruments and drums, this excellent combination being specially effective in the hymns sung during the long and imposing procession. An interesting feature of the service, as showing how music breaks down the doctrinal walls which divide the various sections of the Church, was the juxtaposition of the two offertory hymns—'O God, our help in ages past,' by Dr. Isaac Watts, a Nonconformist divine, and 'Praise to the Holiest in the height,' by Cardinal Newman.

DOTTED CROCHET

JOHANN STRAUSS: THE WALTZ KING.

From a musical point of view, Vienna is the true home of the waltz—'those irresistible waltzes that first catch the ear, and then curl round the heart, till on a sudden they invade and will have the legs.' 'A single Strauss waltz,' said Richard Wagner, 'surpasses in grace, refinement, and real musical substance most of the products of foreign manufacture which we often import at such great cost.' And was it not Hans von Bülow who publicly advocated the inclusion from time to time of a Strauss waltz in the programmes of symphony concerts? Why not? Such genial strains would provide a welcome antidote to much modern music that is without form and is void of melody. A few biographical particulars of one of the greatest of all masters of classical dance-music will doubtless be interesting.

that he knew very little of what was going on in his own house. 'He allowed Pepi (Eduard) and me,' recorded Johann, 'to have music lessons, but he thought that we simply strummed like most other children; but we really worked very hard and played well, though he had no idea of it. The rehearsals of his concerts were held in the house. We boys listened to every note, and afterwards played the various pieces as pianoforte duets, trying to reproduce them exactly as our father liked them to be performed, for he was our ideal. We were often invited out to different people's houses, and played his compositions by heart. One day an acquaintance—it was Carl Haslinger, the music-publisher—congratulated my father upon our playing (my brother and me). He was greatly surprised. "Send the boys to me," he said. Not knowing what to expect, we slunk into the room. After he had told us what he had

THE PROPOSED MONUMENT IN VIENNA TO JOHANN STRAUSS, THE WALTZ KING.

Johann Strauss, the waltz king, was born at Vienna, October 25, 1825. He was the eldest son of Johann Strauss (1804-1849), himself a prolific composer of dance-music which obtained world-wide celebrity. As a child the elder Strauss showed great talent for music and a love for the violin, but his father, a small innkeeper, apprenticed him to a bookbinder, from whom he soon ran away. Notwithstanding his own personal experience of how vain it was to try to subdue parental talent, Strauss senior persistently opposed in all his might the professional musical education of his two eldest and gifted sons, Johann and Eduard, especially the former. The home-life of the Strauss family does not seem to have been a very happy one. The father kept to his own rooms, and became so completely absorbed in his work heard, he commanded us to play to him. As was customary at that time, he had an upright piano, and Pepi declared he could not play upon it. "What?" said he, "you cannot play upon it; then fetch the grand." The grand having been brought, we played our very best, introducing all the various features of the orchestration. Our father, who had listened with a beaming face, said: "Boys, nobody can play it like that," and as a reward he gave us each a lovely "Burnus."

In spite of this, however, Strauss senior would not allow his boys to take up music as a profession, and it was only in later years that their mother gave way to them in this respect. Johann learned the violin secretly and at his own expense. In order to pay for these lessons he used to give pianoforte lessons to the son of a tailor and to a little girl, aged thirteen or fourteen, who lived in the same house. For each lesson he received 60 kreutzer (about 1s.). His violin master was Amon, the leader of his father's orchestra, who risked the loss of his own situation in order to teach the boy. 'He advised me,' says Johann, 'always to play before a looking-glass, as then I could watch my position as well as my bowing; it being essential that a public performer should stand and play gracefully. One day, as I was thus practising, the door opened and my father entered the room. "What!" he exclaimed, "You play the violin!" He had no idea of it! Then ensued a stormy scene, and he would not listen to me. Later on, however, he became reconciled to my music, and that was my greatest joy.'*

At Salmansdorf, near Vienna, in a house belonging to his grandmother but used by his parents as a summer residence, Master Johann composed his first waltz at the age of six. His mother wrote down the notes for him. It was afterwards published as 'Der erste Gedanke' (The first thought), and played on his fiftieth birthday. Another composition of his boyhood was of a totally different nature, a graduale, 'Tu qui regis totum orbem' (maestoso, in G), for four voices with accompaniment of brass instruments. This was doubtless done at the request of his theory teacher, Josef Drechsler, Capellmeister of St. Stephen's Cathedral, Vienna, with whom the boy studied in secret, unknown to his father.

At school the one subject which held Johann spellbound was singing, though he was not a lazy boy. One day a musical happening set him free from his scholastic studies. During a lecture a schoolfellow asked him to hum a tune. He began to do so, but suddenly burst forth in a loud voice which caused the whole class to stop and look at him. 'Who is that impertinent boy?' asked the professor. 'Strauss,' was the answer. To his great joy he was expelled from the class, but greatly to his father's disgust, who forthwith engaged a tutor to prepare his musical son for a clerkship in a savings bank. His father wished him to follow a business career, and he would often tell his musical sons how hard he had to work at his profession and how dependent he was upon the mood of the public. If two or three works turned out to be unsuccessful, they would at once say 'Strauss is no longer any good,' a true remark and one that Johann himself proved the truth of in after life.

From his earliest years Johann had been scolded by his father because of his love of music. But his mother comforted and supported him in the stormy scenes which so often disturbed the peace of the home-life. It was owing to the energy and self-sacrifice of Frau Strauss that the boy was able to study at all. The farther she got from her husband, the nearer she got to her son; with her small savings she paid for his earliest lessons and she gave him one of his father's. Although for many long years the elder Strauss tried his best to subdue his son's talent, and was deaf to the praises of the boy he heard on all sides, he could not fail to have been struck with the natural aptitude for music. One day, as he (the father) was seated at the pianoforte trying to overcome the difficulty of a modulation in the Andante waltz he had just composed, he was surprised to see a child's hand over his shoulder and to see the hand play the modulation without any effort. 'How would it do like that, papa?' he respectfully asked.

At the age of nineteen—or, to be more exact, ten days before his nineteenth birthday—he threw off all parental restraint and made his first appearance as a conductor at the beer garden of Dommayer, at Hietzing, near Vienna. He played one or two forgotten compositions of his own, and his father's 'Loreley Waltz.' His success on this occasion decided his future career. In 1840 his father, aged forty-five, died, whereupon Johann amalgamated his own orchestra with that of his father's, and made a tour in Austria, Warsaw, and the more important towns of Germany. For several years he conducted the summer concerts at Petropaulowski Park, St. Petersburg. On August 28, 1862, he married, as his first wife, the popular singer Henriette (Jetty) Treffz. She had previously and successfully appeared in England, at the Liverpool (opening of the Philharmonic Hall) and Birmingham Festivals of 1849, and at several concerts in London during that year.

After having created a sensation at the Crystal Palace Exhibition of 1867, the waltz king came to England in the autumn of the same year. He made his first appearance in this country at the Promenade Concerts given under the auspices of Mr. George Russell, at Covent Garden Theatre, from August 10 to October, 1867, and was announced on the concert bills thus:

Mr. Russell has also the pleasure to announce that in order to give éclat to these Concerts, he has engaged solely for the DANCE MUSIC the services of the renowned

JOHANN STRAUSS
(From Vienna).

The Times thus chronicled the debut in England of the waltz king:

Each of the three pieces played by the orchestra in the direction of Herr Johann Strauss, was received with great enthusiasm. This gentleman, who strongly resembles his father in manner, seems also to possess a large share of the qualities which led to his father's renown. He conducts his orchestra, like his father, fiddle in hand, and joins in the passages of most importance. This he does with vigour and animation, accompanied by a certain amount of characteristic gesticulation which has also something to do with the impression created. The pieces by Herr Strauss which were the occasion under notice were a waltz entitled Morgenblätter ('Morning Leaves'), a polka called 'Annen,' and a piece to which the romantic nomenclature of Lebensbilder ('Artist's Life') is attached. All are extremely popular, the polka especially, which has long been popular in the houses of entertainment to which London pleasure-seekers are accustomed to resort. The first and second being unanimously called for again, the polka was repeated; but a lively galop was substituted for the waltz. That Herr Strauss is a man of mark can hardly be doubted, and that the future success of the Covent-garden Concerts depends materially upon him is, we think, unquestionable. (The Times, August 16, 1867).

The Prince of Wales (King Edward) honoured the second concert of the series with his presence, and in so doing honoured the waltz king.

The Musical World of August 24 contained the following information under 'Covent Garden Concerts':

The bills announce as in active preparation a new orchestral and choral valse, by Johann Strauss, entitled An der schönen blauen Donau ('On the beautiful Danube'), composed expressly for, and performed with immense success in Vienna, by the Wiener Männer Gesangsverein, for full orchestra and chorus of 150 male voices.

This 'Blue Danube,' the most famous of all the Strauss Waltzes, took its title from a poem by Carl Beck which begins:

An der schönen blauen Donau
Liegt mein Dörfchen, still und fein,
Reich an welt berühmtem Wein.

As the first of the choral waltzes, it was something of a novelty. Dedicated 'with much regard' to the 'Wiener-Männer-Gesang-Vereine,' it was first performed in the Dianasaal, Vienna, February 13, 1867. According to the fine collection of play-bills and concert-bills which Mrs. Enthoven has kindly placed at our disposal for the purposes of this article, the 'Blue Danube' was first performed in England at Covent Garden Theatre on September 15, 1867, apparently without chorus. The concert-bill of Saturday, September 18, however, announces it as the 'first time' apparently referring to the waltz with chorus:

PART II.

NEW WALTZ, 'AN DER SCHÖNEN BLAUEN DONAU'
(On the Beautiful Danube) - - - Johann Strauss.
Composed expressly for, and Performed with immense success in Vienna by the Wiener Männer Gesangsverein.—For Full orchestra & chorus of male voices.
(First time in England.)

During his engagement at Covent Garden in 1867—his wife (Jetty Treffz), by the way, also appeared at the concerts—Strauss composed a waltz entitled 'Erinnerung an Covent-Garden Souvenir of Covent Garden'] Walzer nach böhmischer Volksmelodien' (Op. 329). The title-page, whereon the composer is styled 'k. k. Hof-Musik-director,' his Court appointment, contains an illustration of the theatre, with the band on the stage arranged in rows, Strauss, with violin, being in the centre, and the audience, nearly all the men in top-hats, promenading about. What is meant by English folk-melodies?' the reader may ask. Nothing else than the vulgar music-hall songs of the day—'Champagne Charlie,' 'the flying trapeze,' 'The mousetrap man,' 'Beautiful Nell,' and 'Sweet Isabella'! These are all named in the printed copy of the music; but in the coda, Strauss introduces 'Home, sweet home,' un-named and in this terpsichorean form:

This English waltz, first played at Covent Garden Theatre, September 27, 1867, was announced in the concert-bill in these terms:

NEW FESTIVAL VALSE, COMIQUE,
Arranged on Popular Melodies (expressly for these Concerts) by - - - - - Johann Strauss.
(First time of Performance.)—Introducing 'Champagne Charlie,' 'The Flying Trapeze,' 'The Mousetrap Man,' 'Beautiful Nell,' 'Sweet Isabella,' &c.

In 1872 Strauss paid his first and only visit to America. He appeared at the 'World's Peace Jubilee,' held at Boston, when the famous 'Blue Danube' waltz was performed under the composer's direction, and, as a matter of course, encored. On that 'monster' occasion the choir numbered 20,000 vocalists, and the band consisted of 1,000 performers; in addition thereto were an organ, artillery fired by electricity, 100 anvils, &c., &c.! About this time the waltz king began the composition of those operas and operettas which increased his fame in Vienna and elsewhere. The titles of these operas and operettas are as follows:

Indigo und die vierzig Räuber (1871); Der Carneval in Rom (1873); Die Fledermaus (1874); Cagliostro in Wien (1875); Prinz Methusalem (1877); Blindekuh (1878); Das Spitzentuch der Königin (1880); Der lustige Krieg (1881); Eine Nacht in Venedig (1883); Der Zigeunerbaron (1885); Simplicius (1887); Ritter Pázmán (1892); Fürstin Ninetta (1893); Jabuka (1894); Waldmeister (1895); Die Göttin der Vernunft (1897.)

Of these the most popular is 'Die Fledermaus,' but as the late Carl Ferdinand Pohl said (article Johann Strauss, in Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians'), they 'were soon known all over the world, and were sung everywhere.' Posthumously published were a ballet, 'Aschenbrödel,' and an orchestral piece, 'Traumbilder,' the latter said to have been his last composition.

Johann Strauss died at Vienna on June 3, 1899, aged seventy-four years. His mortal remains are interred in the Central Cemetery, where they have found a fitting resting-place next to the grave of Brahms and opposite to that of Schubert. The death of such an idol of the Viennese public caused the deepest regret in the city where he lived and moved and had his being, and where his genius received its fullest appreciation and steadfast encouragement. The news of his death reached the Volksgarten during the progress of a concert given in memory of his father. The conductor at once stopped the music, and after he had signed to the audience to stand, he broke to them the sad news. Amid the great silence the 'Blue Danube' waltz was at last heard coming from the orchestra in pianissimo tones; the effect was deeply touching. As Brahms and Strauss were such great friends, nothing could have been more appropriate than that a special performance should have been given by the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde of Brahms's 'Deutsches Requiem,' in memory of the waltz king.

The fame of Johann Strauss rests on his delightful dance music, of which the published compositions reached the high opus number of 477. Of these fascinating strains the 'Blue Danube' waltz is not only the best known, but it typifies the melodic charm, absolute refinement, and tender grace of all that came from the prolific pen of its gifted composer. That this waltz has been called the 'national anthem of Vienna' is not to be wondered at. It is said that an Austrian lady begged on her death-bed that Strauss might play one of his waltzes at her funeral. Her wish, so the story goes, was complied with, and the 'Blue Danube' accompanied the lowering of the coffin into the grave. When Brahms was asked to contribute something to the fan of Frau Strauss, he wrote a few bars of the 'Blue Danube,' adding the charming compliment—'Unfortunately, not by me. Johannes Brahms.' To a friend, Brahms once said: 'You must go to the Volksgarten on Friday evening, when Johann Strauss will conduct his waltzes. There is a master; such a master of the orchestra that one never loses a single tone of whatever instrument!'

Apart from the memorial over his grave in the Central Cemetery, no public monument of the waltz king exists in his native city of Vienna, the scene of his earliest and latest triumphs. This defect is about to be remedied by the erection of a monument in the Stadtpark of the Austrian capital, in which there are similar memorials to Schubert and Bruckner. The distinguished sculptor Edmund Hellmer has been commissioned to execute the work. A photograph of his design is given on p. 511. The monument is to be 10 metres in length and 7 metres in height, and it will cost £6,000. An influential committee has been formed in Vienna to carry out this important and interesting project. Princess Rosa Croy-Sternberg is the president, and Herr Rudolf Ritter von Lewicki, the secretary of the committee, the Vienna members of which include Dr. Hugo Botstiber, Messrs. Max Kalbeck, Siegfried Löwy, Richard von Perger, and Felix Weingartner. An English committee has also been formed to aid the fund; its members are: Sir Alexander Mackenzie (president), Professor Granville Bantock, Dr. Frederic Cowen, Sir Edward Elgar, Mr. W. H. Hadow, Mr. Alfred H. Littleton (treasurer), Dr. Charles Maclean (secretary), and Sir Hubert Parry. Subscriptions towards the Johann Strauss monument in Vienna will be gratefully received by Mr. Alfred H. Littleton, 160, Wardour Street, London, W.

The portrait of Johann Strauss, which forms one of the supplements to the present issue, is a reproduction from a photograph of the original painting by the celebrated portrait-painter, Franz von Lenbach, and has been kindly lent by Sir Alexander Mackenzie.

Occasional Notes.

The recent Court dinner of the Worshipful Company of Musicians — held at the Mansion House on July 13—was rendered memorable by the performance of a Dirge for strings alone in memory of the late Junior Warden, the Rev. R. H. Hadden, M.A., honorary chaplain to the King, composed expressly for the occasion by Sir Edward Elgar. After Sir Homewood Crawford, in the unavoidable absence of the Master of the Company, the Lord Mayor, had spoken in the highest terms of appreciation of the late Junior Warden, the Dirge was played, the company meanwhile standing, and in its tender tones it proved to be a most effective strain of elegiac music. After dinner a selection of vocal and instrumental music was performed in the saloon, the programme including two Phantasies, for pianoforte, violin and violoncello, composed respectively by Madame Alice Bredt-Verne and Miss Susan Spain-Dunk, both these works having gained prizes given by the Company in competitions instituted by Mr. W. W. Cobbett. At the meeting of the Court, Mr. Alfred H. Littleton was elected to the office of Junior Warden in succession to the Rev. R. H. Hadden.

£10,000 for founding scholarships and £5,000 for prizes, all musical, have become available by the death of Mr. Alfred Morten, of Upper Norwood. By his will, which has recently been admitted to probate, the testator bequeathed to the Royal Academy of Music £5,000 in East London Railway Fourth Charge Debentures, to be retained for six years (unless they can be sold to advantage meanwhile), in order to found two scholarships—one in honour of the immortal John Sebastian Bach, and the other in honour of the immortal Ludwig van Beethoven—for the study of the works of those composers; for similar purposes to the Guildhall School of Music, £5,000 Cambrian Railway Preference Stock, also to be held for six years, unless sold in the meantime to advantage; and to the Royal Normal College for the Blind, Upper Norwood, £5,000 Fourth Preference Railway Stock for prizes for industry and proficiency in the study of classical music. Mr. Morten bequeathed certain of his musical autographs to the Victoria and Albert Museum. Thus they will bear the MS. of Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer' company, which has long been preserved and exhibited at South Kensington.

The honours bestowed by the King in connection with his Majesty's birthday celebrations include that of Knighthood upon Dr. F. J. Campbell, Principal of the Royal Normal College and Academy of Music for the Blind. Hearty congratulations to Sir Francis Campbell upon an honour so worthily bestowed and fully deserved.

THE WAITAKI (NEW ZEALAND) HIGH SCHOOL ORCHESTRA, AT THE END OF TERM 1, 1909.

It is always very pleasant to chronicle well-directed efforts in the cause of music in Greater Britain. From the far-away south-east coast of New Zealand comes news of the Orchestra of the Waitaki High School, Timaru, with a photograph of the youthful players, taken by the secretary of the Camera Club. We learn that the Orchestra consists of about twenty performers, membership of which is restricted to the boarders who number 150 in the School. The organization, which started in an unpretentious manner with a trio, the result of two years' work, subsequent to the arrival of the new rector, Mr. Frank Milner. As a school institution the band is unique among the secondary schools of Australasia, being the only one of its kind. Moreover, it is the main factor in the social life of the institution. Mainly owing to its efficiency, fortnightly entertainments are given for the purpose of fostering musical talent, cultivating musical taste, and generally intensifying school camaraderie. Practices of the Orchestra—which is the pride of the school—are conducted three times a week by a resident master, Mr. Chisholm, who plays the cornet, while on Saturday evenings a general rehearsal is held under the baton of the conductor, Mr. Fred C. Burry. We not only gladly record the existence of Waitaki High School Orchestra, and commend their artistic endeavours, but heartily wish them, conductors and players, every success and much enjoyment in their future work.

An interesting and instructive brochure has been issued containing the complete programmes of the series of carillon recitals to be given during the summer months by M. Jos Denyn, the famous carillonneur, at Malines. The information is printed in English, Flemish, French and German, and in addition to the programmes, it contains the most important items of interest in the delightful old town of Malines, some thirteen miles from Brussels and Antwerp. The tower of the Cathedral of S. Rombaut, in which the forty-five bells of the carillon are hung, is one of the finest in the world. Although unfinished, it is 324 feet in height, and near the top is the clock face, 43 feet in diameter, the largest in existence. The compass of the carillon is four octaves, three and a-half of which are chromatic. The largest bell weighs eight tons, and the smallest but a few pounds. No fewer than thirty-two of the bells were cast by that famous bellfounder Peter Hemony in 1674.

The carillon clavier consists of two rows of keys, the upper corresponding to the black, and the lower to the white notes of the ordinary keyboard. There are also pedals connected with the largest bells. The mechanism connecting the clavier with the clappers of the bells is constructed entirely on the principle of the organ tracker-action, but the keys are struck with the closed hand. M. Jos Denyn, who is undoubtedly the greatest living carillonneur, gives his recitals every Monday evening during August and September. These splendid performances must be heard rather than described. His execution of rapid scale-passages, chromatic runs, and quick arpeggios is nothing short of marvellous, and at once proclaims the master hand; and although M. Denyn hears nothing of the effect of his playing, yet he knows so well the capabilities of his instrument that he is able to produce every shade of tone from pianissimo to fortissimo. Nothing could be finer than his artistic and expressive rendering of such pieces as Schubert's 'Ave Maria,' Chopin's 'Funeral March,' Rossini's 'Cavatina,' &c. The members of the Algemeen Nederlandsch Verbond will be pleased to render every assistance to intending visitors, and Mr. W. W. Starmer, of 20, Warwick Park, Tunbridge Wells, has kindly consented to give any further information respecting these interesting and enjoyable recitals.

The prospectus of the approaching Hereford Musical Festival—the 186th meeting of the Three Choirs of Hereford, Gloucester and Worcester—has been issued. The festival will begin with a special service, with full orchestral accompaniment, on Sunday afternoon, September 5, at which will be sung and played the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C (Lee Williams); Te Deum in F (Elgar); 'How lovely is Thy dwelling place' (Brahms); the slow movement from the Third Symphony (Schumann); and Finlandia (Sibelius); together with Bach's Prelude and Fugue in C minor, played upon the organ by Mr. P. C. Hull. The festival performances will take place from Tuesday to Friday, September 7-10 inclusive, when the following works will mainly constitute the programmes:

CHORAL.—Elijah (Mendelssohn); Apostles (Elgar); Noble Numbers, for solo voices, chorus, and orchestra, composed expressly for this festival (Walford Davies); selection from Lazarus, an unfinished oratorio, first performance in England (Schubert); selection from Parsifal (Wagner); Mass in D (Beethoven); Be not afraid, motet for double choir (Bach); Job (Parry); 'Go, song of mine,' chorus for six voices, first time of performance (Elgar); Creation, Part I. (Haydn); and Messiah (Handel).

INSTRUMENTAL.—Symphony in A flat (Elgar); Symphony in E flat (Mozart); Old English Suite, first time of performance (arranged by Granville Bantock); and Dance Rhapsody, first time of performance (Frederick Delius).

A chamber concert will be given on the last evening of the festival.

A distinguished company of vocalists have been engaged; the orchestra will be led by Mr. W. Frye Parker, Mr. Ivor Atkins and Dr. Brewer will preside at the organ, and Dr. G. R. Sinclair, organist of the cathedral, will conduct a festival for which an attractive programme has been prepared.

The important question of the improvement of the quality and tone of the canteen concerts in the Services was considered at an influential meeting recently held at Brompton Barracks, Chatham. In a report then presented by Lieut.-Colonel B. R. Ward, who has greatly interested himself in this subject, it was pointed out that it has long been considered desirable to form some central body for the encouragement of music in the Services. Probably the most hopeful method of reaching this end would be by the formation of glee clubs. The advantages of the performances given by these clubs over the ordinary unorganized concert are that they interest the musical man, who soon tires of unison-singing; and that they exercise a pleasant and useful social influence by bringing together in practices those interested in music. Moreover, they further form a nucleus of musical men in a regiment or ship, who can thus assist in the bettering of ordinary canteen concerts and sing-songs. The meeting having considered the valuable suggestions contained in the report, passed the following resolutions:

(1.) Proposed by Lieut.-Colonel B. R. Ward, R.E.; seconded by Commodore E. C. T. Troubridge, C.M.G., M.V.O., R.N.:—That it is desirable that a union be formed in the Services, under the title of the Naval and Military Musical Union, for the encouragement of music, and that a branch of the Naval and Military Musical Union be started and formed at Chatham.

(2.) That local Naval and Military Glee Clubs be invited to affiliate themselves with the Chatham branch of the Naval and Military Musical Union.

(3.) That glee clubs affiliated to the Naval and Military Musical Union be invited to conduct their concerts on certain lines, to be laid down by the Committee.

A representative committee was thereupon elected to act as the provisional committee of the Chatham branch of the Naval and Military Musical Union, with Lieut.-Colonel B. R. Ward, R.E., as the honorary secretary. Regarded from all points of view, so excellent a movement as that indicated above calls for hearty approval and warm encouragement. We shall be glad, from time to time, to report the operations of the newly-formed Union, to which we wish all success.

The first festival of the Musical League (founded in 1908) is announced to be held at Liverpool on September 24 and 25, with Mr. Harry Evans as honorary conductor. Three performances will be given—one devoted to chamber music (on the first day), one orchestral, and one choral and orchestral concert (on the second day). The scheme includes the following works:

CHAMBER CONCERT.—String quartets, H. Balfour Gardiner and J. B. McEwen; Sextet for strings and pianoforte, 'In Memoriam,' Joseph Holbrooke; Handelian Rhapsody for pianoforte, Cyril Scott; and songs, Edward Agate, F. Nicholls and W. H. Bell.

ORCHESTRAL CONCERT.—* † Rhapsody for full orchestra, Frank Bridge; * † Symphonic poem, 'Isabella,' Frederic Austin; Symphony, 'Antar,' Rimsky-Korsakoff; songs (with orchestral accompaniment), Frederick Delius; * † Scena for tenor solo, with orchestral accompaniment, 'The dying swan,' Joseph C. Hathaway; and Nocturnes for orchestra and women's voices, Debussy.

CHORAL AND ORCHESTRAL CONCERT.—* 'Fatherland,' for tenor solo, chorus, and orchestra, Arnold Bax; * 'Willow wood,' cantata for baritone solo and orchestra, with chorus of sopranos and contraltos, R. Vaughan Williams; Two movements from Suite for small orchestra, Ernest Bryson; * 'By the waters of Babylon,' Psalm for baritone solo, chorus, and orchestra, Havergal Brian; 'Praise Jehovah,' cantata for soli, chorus, and orchestra, Bach; and songs, Ethel Smyth and Percy Grainger.

* First performance.

† Conducted by the composer.

Full particulars of the festival may be obtained upon application to the honorary secretary of the Musical League, Mr. Norman O'Neill, 4, Pembroke Villas, Kensington, W.

The preliminary notice of the first festival of the Musical League stated that Gustav Mahler, Max Schillings, Debussy and Vincent D'Indy had promised to endeavour to attend and conduct some of their own works. We understand that demands for rehearsal that could not be met, and other unforeseen hindrances have prevented these eminent foreign musicians from attending the festival, although they are still in warm sympathy with the operations of the League. It is by no means a disadvantage of the situation that the committee have found themselves able to arrange for the performance of the works of no fewer than seventeen British composers. It may be hoped that the League will now receive the hearty support of musicians, both amateur and professional. Membership is open to anyone who will send a guinea to the treasurer, Mr. J. D. Johnston, 14, Chapel Street, Liverpool. Members have free tickets for the concerts, and other privileges.

The London County Council have fixed a memorial tablet, of blue encaustic ware, on No. 1, Moreton Gardens, South Kensington, the London residence of Jenny Lind and her husband, Mr. Otto Goldschmidt.

Dr. Charles Harriss is offering three prizes—£50, £30, and £20—for the same number of 'Empire Choruses,' to be performed at his next Empire Day concert. The music must be suitable for performance by a large choir, and each work must not occupy more than ten minutes in performance; moreover all who compete must be British born. Full particulars of the competition will be found in our advertisement columns.

A committee has been formed for the purpose of erecting a monument to the late Dr. Joseph Joachim. Professor Adolf von Hildebrand has promised to execute the work, which will be placed in the great hall of the Königliche Hochschule für Musik, Berlin. Subscriptions towards this object should be sent to Messrs. Mendelssohn & Co., Jägerstrasse 50, Berlin.

A London newspaper, in a notice of a Crystal Palace concert, states that 'Mr. — was eminently successful in Sound an Alarum.' No doubt. On the face of it—that is, of the report—the strident air was sung in clockwork time and with minute attention to details, at least that is our opinion. May his second success be as striking as his first; and may he be equally successful in everything his hands find to do.

Among the attractions of a certain watering-place on the coast of North Wales is a band which discourses sweet music. The proximity of the place to the county of Lancashire, and the business which Lancashire folk would naturally bring to the place, probably induced the band to play on a recent evening Balfe's overture the 'Siege of Rochdale.' So the printed programme prevaricates.

Church and Organ Music.

A PEDAL-MANUAL KEYBOARD.

No less curious than contradictory in terms is an organ with a pedal-manual keyboard. Does such a curiosity exist? Yes; it will be found in the church of St. James, Bermondsey. Consecrated eighty years ago, this fine building, of which more anon, amply repays a visit. Its organ has the distinction of being specially mentioned in Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians.' There the writer of the article 'Organ,' the late Dr. E. J. Hopkins, says: 'The most complete GG Pedal Organ that was ever made, both as to compass and stops, was the one erected by J. C. Bishop in St. James's Church, Bermondsey, in 1829. It had three stops of a range of two octaves each.' He then gives the specification, which is as follows:

		Choir to Pedals.

Pedal for coupling Swell to Great.

Dr. Hopkins adds: 'There was a keyboard on the left-hand side of the manuals, acting on the pedal organ.' Fortunately this interesting and novel feature has not been swept away by modern improvements, as is so often the case. Although the ordinary manuals and pedal have been changed to the C compass, the little pedal-manual keyboard—of two octaves, GG to G—has been allowed to remain unaltered for eighty years; the only change is that the trackers have been detached from the keys. The builders of the instrument, Messrs. Bishop & Son, have kindly had a photograph, taken specially for this article, of the keyboards as they stand at present. It should be noticed that the pedal stops and couplers are duplicated above this extra little manual, therefore the extra 'hand,' the manual-pedaller, could work his stops independently of the chief performer or performers at any kind seems to exist of the building of this organ. Messrs. Bishop & Son write: 'We are unable to find out who originated the little keyboard, but we believe it was an idea of our late Mr. J. C. Bishop.' The organ stands in its original position, high up in a recess in the west gallery of the spacious church.

The organ was opened on Thursday, April 23, 1829, with an elaborate performance of sacred music given 'under the direction of Mr. J. Blackbourn, organist of Clapham Church, with a view of raising a fund for re-building the girls' Charity School. The new and superb organ (by Bishop) will be opened on this occasion.' Thus ran the advertisements of the day.

The performance began at the noontide hour, and the tickets of admission were 7s. and 5s. respectively. In addition to Mr. Blackburn—who, Sir George Grove told the present writer, always pronounced Bach's name 'Bawk'—Mr. G. C. Sale, organist of St. George's Church, Hanover Square, and Mr. J. M'Murdie, organist of the Philanthropic Chapel, officiated at the keyboards. The soloists were five lady vocalists, and four gentlemen, including Mr. J. W. Hobbs (the father-in-law of Dr. W. H. Cummings) and Mr. Henry Phillips, while the chorus consisted of singers from the Concerts of Antient Music, some of the children of the Chapel Royal, the choristers of St. Paul's Cathedral, and others. Thomas Harper was the solo trumpeter—Luther's hymn, 'Great God, what do I see and hear?' being as a matter of course in the programme—and the 'double drums' were rolled by the master-hand of Thomas Paul Chipp.

A long and elaborate account—perhaps from the pen of Gauntlett—appeared in the Examiner of April 26, 1829. From this we learn that the programme was of enormous dimensions—vocal solos, choruses, organ duets, and organ trios, forming the menu of this gargantuan feast of music in Bermondsey. Two extracts from this super-adequate report must suffice. The first, which refers to Bach's St. Anne's fugue, played as a trio by Messrs. Blackburn, Sale and M'Murdie—speaks for itself:

Sebastian Bach's glorious fugue in E flat upon the subject of St. Ann's tune—which is perhaps one of the most elaborate and magnificent fugues ever written even by Sebastian himself—was very well arranged for three performers on the organ, and skillfully played by the three professional gentlemen above mentioned. The last of the three movements into which this masterly piece of counterpoint is divided, would, we think, have had a more energetic effect, if it had been taken a little faster. But even with this drawback to its proper effect, this piece was one of the greatest treats of the whole selection.

The second extract likewise needs no comment:

The performances concluded with the Coronation anthem ('Zadok the priest'), after Avison's waltz-like chorus, 'Sound the loud timbrel' (probably at the request of the same sapient churchwarden who asked for 'God save the King'), but we own we did not stay to hear this puerile affair after the noble composition of Sebastian.

One of the pieces played was an arrangement, for three performers, of the chorus 'He rebuked the Red Sea,' specially made for this occasion by Blackburn and duly published. The arrangement included 'But the waters overwhelmed them,' the rolling bass triplets being played by one of the trio of organists at the pedal-manual keyboard.

The first organist of St. James's Church, Bermondsey, was James Turle; he was appointed in the spring of 1829 and held the post until 1831, when he became organist of Westminster Abbey. That the appointment must have been considered a desirable one is obvious in that the fourteen competitors included one Adams—probably Thomas Adams, 'the Thalberg of the organ'—H. J. Gauntlett, and James Turle. Thomas Attwood was the adjudicator. The organist of St. Paul's Cathedral was accompanied on that competitive occasion by his clever godson and pupil, Thomas Attwood Walmisley, then a boy aged sixteen. Master Walmisley made some very frank if not caustic comments on the performances of the several candidates. These he wrote down, and showed to Miss Gibson, sister of the then rector of Bermondsey. This lady asked the boy to send her a copy of his notes, a request which he complied with in the following letter to her:

18, Cowley Street,
Westminster.

DEAR MADAM,—I have sent you according to your request, these few remarks of mine on the several candidates who played at Bermondsea New Church, which are copied exactly from the first that you saw.

With best regards to Mr. Gibson,

I remain, Dear Madam,

Yours sincerely,

THOS. ATTWOOD WALMISLEY.

Friday mornng.

May 1st, 1829.

N.B.—Those names to which a cross is affixed were returned.

Space will only permit of a selection from Master Walmisley's caustic comments on the fourteen candidates. Here they are:

1st Psalm Tune. Played very smoothly, but not in good style. Interlude bad, full of turns and shakes. 'Worthy is the Lamb' and the 'Amen' chorus, very fairly played. Bach's Pedal Fugue in E? Ditto. Ditto.
3rd Psalm Tune. Indifferent. 'Coronation Anthem.' Very bad. Fugue 31 in E?. Seb. Bach. Worse.
5th Prelude and Fugue in F# minor. Seb. Bach. No. 38. Psalm Tune. Chorus, 'Worthy is the Lamb' or 'Amen.' All very beautifully played.

Mr. Turle. x

No. 7. Introduction. Extempore. Psalm tune with new and very good harmony. A trio of Seb. Bach's Pedals throughout very cleverly played. A Pedal Fugue—I of a set of six. Seb. Bach. Beautifully played, but not pleasing music. Overture to 'Esther.' Handel. 2 first movements very well played. The last movement played too fast and not distinct.

H. J. Gauntlett. x

No. 8. Fugue. Psalm tune. Both nicely played. 'The heavens are telling.' Very well played.

Vinnicombe. x

No. 12. White. Ran away!

No. 14. Psalm Tune. Introduction and Fugue in E? Russell. All very badly played. Not a pedal touched.
Adams.

The original of Walmisley's letter and notes is in the possession of Mr. John S. Bumpus. He has very kindly placed it and the amusing notes at our disposal for the purpose of this article, which are here printed for the first time. It may be added that Bach was played—though not exclusively the pedal fugues—by five candidates; the chorus 'The heavens are telling' (Haydn) was also selected by five candidates; and 'Worthy is the Lamb' by three, including James Turle. From another source we learn that the 'not pleasing music' (pace Master Walmisley) performed by Gauntlett was Bach's great B minor fugue!

In conclusion, a few words about the church itself. St. James's, Spa Road, Bermondsey, is the last of the Waterloo churches; that is to say, it was built by a grant from the million pounds raised by the nation as a thanksgiving for the overthrow of Napoleon. Built from the designs of James Savage, at a cost of £21,412 19s. 5d., it was consecrated May 7, 1829. The upper portion of the tower is modelled on that of St. Stephen's, Walbrook. But the exterior, dignified as it is, gives no index to the fine interior. Some idea of the spaciousness and loftiness of the church can be obtained from the photograph opposite, though the noble building must be seen to be fully appreciated. Viewed from the organ gallery, its splendid proportions, and especially its imposing clerestory, are revealed at their best and cause a sense of wonderment to the beholder.

The large altar piece, which dates from 1844, is a prize picture. A Mr. Harcourt, a parishioner, bequeathed the sum of £500 for this purpose and the adjudicators, Eastlake and Haydon, awarded the prize to John Wood. To quote from Mr. T. F. Bumpus's 'London Churches, ancient and modern' (vol. ii., p. 112): 'The subject is the Ascension. The figures are considerably above the natural size. On a canvas of 275 square feet (25 feet by 11) in the upper part, a full-length of the Saviour occupies nearly one half of the picture, a nimbus around the head illuminating the upper sky. The eleven disciples are in various positions, standing, kneeling, prostrated, with uplifted hands and faces, and bodies bent with

Port of London. 'In no district,' writes Sir Charles Booth in his 'Life and labour of the people of London,' 'can the prevailing industries be so readily detected by their smells as here. In one street strawberry jam is borne upon you in whiffs, hot and strong; in another raw hides and tanning; in another, glue; while in some streets the nose encounters an unhappy combination of all three.'

Yet in spite of these odoriferous conditions, the hard-working vicar of the parish, the Rev. G. R. Balleine, and his no less true-hearted band of workers, reverential awe and devotion; and their personal dignity, costume and colouring are very successful.'

Formerly a well-to-do suburb of London, by reason of the leather merchants residing there, St. James's, Bermondsey, is now one of the largest and poorest parishes in South London. At the present time and for the most part the inhabitants are casual labourers in the tanneries and jam factories, and riverside workers—class who suffer terribly through the decay of the rise superior to their surroundings. And after all, Bermondsey is not so bad as some people might imagine. To walk through St. James's churchyard on a bright summer's morning amid the lovely flowers, worthy of Hyde Park, which brighten by their hues and sweeten by their fragrance this 'God's acre,' is a most pleasant experience. Here old men and women rest their weary bodies and children play their simple and self-made games—the whole presenting a scene that cannot fail to touch the heart even of the most casual observer. And then as to the work of the church in this busy corner of London, much might be said. The Church seats no fewer than 1,600 people, and on Sunday evening it looks fairly full. The Vicar is his own choir-master. A surpliced choir of men and boys sits in the chancel, and in the west gallery, below the organ, is another choir of between forty and forty-five young women. The latter are very keen on the music of the church, and attend the choir practice with great regularity. By this means the congregation, sandwiched between two choirs, are encouraged themselves to sing heartily and

Here, in this poor riverside parish in Bermondsey, no less than in the stateliest and most favourably placed cathedral, music is the handmaid of religion—that religion which is not a formula of cold creeds, but one which seeks to brighten and cleanse the lives of those who come under its influence; a religion which tries to make the people happier in their surroundings, not exclusively by set services, but by the manifold philanthropic organizations that are in active operation in this populous parish in South London. To mention the agencies that are thus, as it were, 'going about doing good' would be to enumerate a long list of benevolent activities that merit hearty approval and with confidence. The Psalms are chanted from the 'Cathedral Psalter'; but the hymn-tunes come from very varied sources. Over forty tune-books, so we were told—Anglican, Nonconformist, Roman Catholic and American—have been drawn upon in the effort to secure the best melodies for vigorous congregational singing.

generous support. Such good work as is here carried on under great financial difficulties calls forth genuine sympathy, and any outside help—money, flowers, or personal service—would be as warmly welcomed as it would be beneficially applied by the vicar and those associated with him in their self-denying labours among the poor of Bermondsey.

A CATHEDRAL PRECENTOR'S BEQUESTS.

The Rev. H. H. Woodward, precentor of Worcester Cathedral, who died on May 25, left estate valued at £25,737 gross, with net personality £25,378. Among other public bequests is the following: £2,000 Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway 3 per cent. Consolidated Stock (or a sum sufficient to produce an annual income of £60 in the purchase of a similar stock) upon trust, from the income thereof to assist deserving boys, being foundation choristers of Worcester Cathedral, when their voices fail by helping them to continue their education; but no boy is to take more than £30 per annum, nor this for more than three years; and candidates must have borne a good character and have attained the highest division in school work. Mr. Woodward bequeathed the copyright of his musical compositions, and any sums due on account of sales of his works, to the Choir Benevolent Fund; his cottage pianoforte to the Worcester Cathedral Choir School; and the sum of £160 to be equally divided among the eight lay-clerks of Worcester Cathedral.

SHEFFIELD PARISH CHURCH.

Mr. G. Fenton Heald, the well-known organ-builder of Sheffield, has kindly furnished the following information relating to Sheffield Parish Church, which forms an interesting sequel to the illustrated article on that building in our July issue.

1560. Itm. payde the xxviii th daie of October, for powling downe the awters	iiij ^s . iij ^d .

1566. Itm. pd to Robert Swifte the xii daie of April for makynge communion-table ..	vs. od.

The England organ of 1805 had no pedal-keys in the ordinary sense of the term, but bits of wood projected from the case, which, when pressed down by the player's toe, acted upon the bass notes of the Great organ. The wind was supplied by three feeders placed at the bottom of the organ, the bellows-weights being on the top of them. There were three bellows-handles through the organ-case back; these the blower raised alternately, and so long as one handle was up, there was wind in the organ.

Pedal keys, and twenty powerful pedal pipes, modern bellows, and venetian shutters to the swell were added by Mr. Francis Jones in 1841. In the same year the brick walls were taken out of the arches separating the chancel from the church. A stone screen, with an oak door in it, singing gallery above, with a handsome back organ-case, were placed in the centre chancel arch, and the side arches were filled with stone tracery and plate-glass. This work was of such a high-class nature that there was much opposition to its early destruction in 1856-7, when the building was opened from end to end.

With the exception of the reopening services in 1857, the Psalms were not chanted in Sheffield Parish Church until 1860. They were first chanted on the occasional afternoon church parades of the volunteer corps; anthems were also sung then, the professional vocalists being augmented by a few probationer boys. These services were rendered with true artistic finish. From time immemorial it had been the custom for the clergyman to recite one verse of the Psalms and the clerk and the people the next, alternately. The Glorias were sung to a flowery double-chant, sometimes elaborate Glorias taken from cathedral settings of the Canticles were used.

A collection of metrical Psalms and Hymns, which included the magnificent paraphrases of Joseph Addison and other great writers, sufficed for the entire locality at this time. Before the sermon the parish clerk would solemnly deliver announcements in the following manner:

To-morrow, the third day, the third of May, there will be a dole at the vestry at 11 o'clock in the morning. At 11 o'clock.

On Tuesday, in the Burgesses room, over the vestry, there will be a meeting at 12 o'clock. At 12 o'clock, to elect wardens for the ensuing year. You are requested to bring your bills for all moneys owing, let us sing to the praise and glory of God the 23d psalm. The 23d psalm. The Lord my pasture shall prepare. The Lord my pasture shall prepare.

The tune was then played over. After the singing of the first verse of the hymn, an interlude was played on the organ, and a similar one before the last verse. The latter was always a Grand forte by both organ and congregation utterly regardless of the sense of the words. The trickery used in the organ interludes was popularly considered to be the acme of professional ability. Wherever an organ existed in these parts, interludes were in use, and in playing them organists often wandered far away from the key of the tune, and, lacking technical knowledge, failed to struggle back again!

The Parish Church at the time alluded to was specially clean, smart, well heated and ventilated, and always kept in repair. The clergy were scholarly gentlemen. The attendance of a large congregation of all classes of the community was regular and devotional. In addition to the vicar, three chaplains with appointments for life were paid by the capital Burgesses, and were entirely independent of the vicar. The communion was celebrated monthly, when the communicants, mostly old ladies, adjourned to the chancel after the rest of the congregation had retired. There were four collections a year for the wardens' expenses, and one or two extra for other objects.

A VETERAN LAY-CLERK.

Fifty years a lay-clerk of Carlisle Cathedral and forty-six years conductor of the Carlisle Choral Society! Such is the record of long and faithful service for the cause of music in the Border City of William Metcalfe, who, we regret to say, died on June 25, aged seventy-nine. A native of Norwich, and a chorister in the cathedral there under the famous Dr. Zechariah Buck, Mr. Metcalfe laid the foundation of that true cathedral style which characterised his work throughout his long and useful life. He was an articulated pupil of Dr. W. R. Bexfield, but he forsook the prospects of an organist's career upon being appointed a lay-clerk (bass) at Carlisle Cathedral in 1851, the duties of which he efficiently discharged until 1901—exactly half a century—when, owing to failing health, he retired on a pension granted by the Dean and Chapter. In 1855, the year after its formation, Mr. Metcalfe was appointed conductor of the Carlisle Choral Society, a post he held, with only a short interregnum, until 1901. At different times he was organist of Carlisle churches—Holy Trinity and Christ Church—though the morning duties were undertaken by deputies.

Mr. Metcalfe was widely known by his arrangement of the old Cumberland hunting song, 'D'ye ken John Peel.' He composed several Cumberland songs and ballads, and published a book of 'Hymns, carols, and moral songs for children,' '300 single and double chants,' in addition to part-songs, pieces for the pianoforte and organ, and some sacred music; he also set to music an ode, written by another Carlisle worthy, Mr. James Walter Brown, for the opening of Tullie House in 1893. A man of genial temperament, well read in the best English literature, and an excellent singer endowed with a poetic temperament and a cultured mind, William Metcalfe was a fine type of cathedral lay-clerk and the true-hearted English gentleman.

THE REV. E. VINE HALL.

Last month we recorded with regret the death of the Precentor of Worcester Cathedral (Minor Canon Herbert H. Woodward). Now a similar sad duty has to be discharged in regard to his predecessor in that office, the Rev. Edward Vine Hall, who died at 1, Keble Road, Oxford, on July 7, aged seventy-three. A native of Maidstone and the eldest son of Mr. Edward Pickard Hall, formerly Printer to the University of Oxford, the deceased clergyman began his musical career as a chorister of Magdalen College, Oxford. Upon matriculating at that College in 1855, he remained a clerk in the choir until he graduated in 1859. After holding various clerical appointments, Mr. Hall became Precentor of Worcester Cathedral in 1877, an office which he held until the year 1890, when he was appointed by the Dean and Chapter vicar of Bromsgrove, near Worcester. Owing to failing health, he retired fifteen years ago to Oxford, where he peacefully passed the remainder of his days. As a composer of simple anthems suitable for village choirs the name of Edward Vine Hall is widely known.

Mr. Bernard Johnson, organist of Bridlington Priory Church, has been appointed organist of the Albert Hall, Nottingham. The duties are, to give a recital every Saturday afternoon, to assist in organizing the Saturday evening concerts and to train a choir of 100 voices, and to play at certain services on Sundays in connection with the Wesleyan 'forward movement.' The Albert Hall is the largest building of its kind in Nottingham, and holds 3,000 persons. The organ, the gift of Mr. Jesse Boot, and built by Mr. Binns, of Leeds, is to cost £4,000.

FREE CHURCH MUSICIANS' UNION.

In connection with the Cardiff and Newport Centres, a summer conference was held on June 23 in Roath Park Presbyterian Church, Cardiff, at which Mr. W. A. Richards presided. A paper entitled 'A talk about hymn-tunes' was read by Mr. D. W. Evans, and illustrations were given by a vocal quartet.

On July 8 a meeting was held of the Liverpool Centre in Sefton Park Presbyterian Church. Mr. R. Francis Lloyd presided, and gave an excellent address on the aims and objects of the Union. The Rev. Alexander Connell welcomed the members on behalf of the church they were met in, and expressed his appreciation of the work and purpose of the Union with its lofty ideals which were most praiseworthy. He strongly advocated the obtaining of good organs in all the churches; and as the sense of music was so contributory to its place in public worship, it claimed the most cultured and harmonious work the organist and choir could render. Mr. Harry Evans gave an instructive and practical address on 'The influence of musical competitions upon Free Church choirs and singing.'

SPECIAL SERVICES.

At Lichfield Cathedral, on July 1, was held the twenty-first festival of the Lichfield Diocesan Choral Association, established in the year 1856. The united choirs, numbering 800 voices, were accompanied by the organ, brass instruments and drums. The music sung at Matins included Wesley's Te Deum in F (easy setting) and Crotch's anthem 'Holy, Holy, Holy'; at Evensong the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis was Stanford's setting in B flat, and the anthem Martin's 'Rejoice in the Lord.' Mr. H. Rose, organist of Tamworth Parish Church and assistant-organist of Lichfield Cathedral, presided at the organ, Mr. J. Gladman led the brass, and Mr. J. B. Lott, cathedral organist, conducted. As on previous occasions the success of the services was in the highest degree most gratifying to all who took part therein as well as to the great congregations.

General and sincere regret has been felt at the retirement, owing to pressure of other work, of Mr. J. B. Lott from the honorary conductorship of the Association, an office he has held with distinction for twenty-eight years, and the duties of which he has discharged with unwonted zeal and unflinching devotion to the cause of church music in the diocese of Lichfield.

The twenty-third annual festival service of the Exeter Diocesan Choral Association was held in Exeter Cathedral on July 6 with its customary impressiveness. The service-music included Mr. J. T. Field's settings of the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in the key of D, and the anthem was 'I will magnify Thee, O God,' by Goss. Dr. D. J. Wood, organist of the cathedral, presided at the organ and Mr. T. Roylands-Smith, honorary diocesan choirmaster, conducted.

The Patronal festival of Brighton Parish Church was held on July 1, when the Parish Church Festival Chorus gave a service of praise. The choir, consisting of 120 voices, were accompanied by an orchestra, including some members of the Municipal Orchestra, numbering forty-five players. The service began with an Orchestral prelude, 'Sursum Corda,' by Elgar, which was followed by Schubert's 'Song of Miriam.' The same composer's Unfinished symphony was then played by the orchestra, and the service concluded with the festival anthem 'O praise the Lord,' by Dr. A. Herbert Brewer, for orchestra and chorus. Excepting the Symphony, which was conducted by Mr. Joseph Sinton, musical director to the Brighton Corporation, the service was conducted by Mr. Chastey Hector, organist of the church, and Mr. T. Saxby, assistant organist, played organ voluntaries. The choir, now in its third year, has already performed Bach's Christmas oratorio, Beethoven's 'Mount of Olives,' Cowen's 'Song of thanksgiving,' and other works.

The choir (augmented) of the Kensal Rise Wesleyan Church gave a special musical service on Sunday afternoon, July 4, when Spohr's cantata 'God, Thou art great,' was sung to the accompaniment of strings, pianoforte and organ, King Hall's effective arrangement of the accompaniment being used by the players on the keyboard instruments. Sullivan's setting of 'Lead, kindly Light' (unaccompanied) and Mozart's 'Glorious is Thy Name' were also sung. The orchestra, led by Mr. Tinniswood, played Haydn's second Symphony and Mendelssohn's 'War march of the Priests,' and Mr. Arthur W. Daley, the organist of the church, played Hollins's 'Spring song' on the organ. Miss F. Kemp presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. Charles E. Ransom conducted.

The ninth festival of the Howden Rural Deanery Choral Association was held in Howden Parish Church, East Yorkshire, on July 14. The selected music included Tours's setting of the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in F, and two anthems, 'Great is the Lord' (Sydenham), and 'Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace' (C. Lee Williams). Sir Hubert Parry's fine setting of the hymn 'Through the night of doubt and sorrow' was sung as a processional. The choir numbered nearly 300 voices. Mr. Philip Chignell, organist of Hesse Church, conducted, and Mr. S. W. Pilling, organist of Welton Church, presided at the organ. An impressive sermon was preached by the Archbishop of York.

At Trinity Church, Bloemfontein, Orange River Colony, on Sunday evenings, May 16 and 23, selections from the 'Messiah' were sung by the Church Choir of seventy voices, accompanied by a small orchestra, under the direction of Mr. George H. Deale, organist and choirmaster of the church. Mr. W. Pike presided at the organ.

TWO FESTIVAL NOVELTIES.

SCHUBERT'S 'LAZARUS.'

In spite of the enthusiasm here in England for Schubert's music in the sixties and seventies of the last century, it seems strange that no performance of his unfinished oratorio 'Lazarus' has, so far as can be discovered, ever been given here. To Dr. Sinclair, therefore, will be due the credit of bringing to a hearing a very beautiful and practically unknown work of the once long-neglected master. 'Lazarus, or the Feast of the Resurrection,' really an Easter cantata, is a setting of a poem by August Hermann Niemeyer, professor of theology at Halle. Niemeyer's poem is divided into three parts, of which Schubert set the whole of the first and a great portion of the second, but it is not known whether he wrote music to the third part, that which deals with the Resurrection.

The work, dated February, 1820, was written during a year of great activity, one that included the lovely setting of the 23rd Psalm. Schubert was then aged twenty-three. The manuscript of Part II. remained undiscovered until it was unearthed through the instrumentality of the indefatigable Thayer in 1861. The first performance of the cantata took place at Vienna, March 27, 1863, thirty-five years after the composer's death, and in 1866 the score was published by Spina, of Vienna. An English version, by Mr. W. G. Rothery, the music edited by Mr. Ivor A. Atkins, has been specially prepared for the approaching Hereford festival, whereby the work will be available for performance in this country.

Part I. of the cantata deals with the death of Lazarus, Part II. with his sepulture and a funeral elegy by his friends. The characters are Lazarus (tenor); Mary, Martha, and the daughter of Jairus (sopranos); Nathaniel, a disciple (tenor); and the Sadducee Simon (bass). The music, like all that poured forth from the genius-endowed brain of Schubert, speaks for itself in its tenderness and delicate orchestration. Prominent features are the ritoso and recitative, lovely melodies full of character and rich in their devotional expression. What title the chorus have to do is very interesting—with, the impressive treatment of men's and women's voices, separately and combined, in the final number:

The mortal strife did sorely maim thee,
Thy burden filled the narrow way,
Eternal rest from toil doth claim thee,
Calmly sleeping, after life's short day.

Special mention must be made of the beautiful dirge for the orchestra which opens Part II. Here the music in this unfinished cantata is typically Schubertian and worthy of the composer of the Unfinished Symphony. Although the work is naturally cast in a sombre mould, it is wonderful to what a degree Schubert has succeeded in introducing life into death.

ELGAR'S 'GO, SONG OF MINE.'

Dated 'Careggi, 1909,' this unaccompanied chorus is a setting of a little poem, only seven lines in length, by Guido Cavalcanti (1250-1301), and translated into English by D. G. Rossetti:

Dishevelled and in tears, go, song of mine,
To break the hardness of the heart of man:
Say how his life began
From dust, and in that dust doth sink supine:
Yet, say, the unerring spirit of grief shall guide
His soul, being purified,
To seek its Maker at the heavenly shrine.

That these words of the 13th century Italian poet should strongly appeal to the composer is a foregone conclusion. The music, laid out for seven voices (soprano, two altos, two tenors, and two basses), breathes that mystical spirit which has found its fullest expression in Sir Edward's larger works. To analyse such strains would be to detract from their poetic significance and reflective beauty. Suffice it to say that a splendid climax attends the words 'To seek its Maker at the heavenly shrine,' and mention must be made of a beautiful effect at the words 'His soul, being purified,' where the sopranos and first basses sing a sustained and diminuendo passage, above and between the other voices. The ending, too, with its final quaver chord, sung pianissimo, to the word 'go,' is fully characteristic of the composer. The chorus, which will be heard for the first time at Hereford next month, is dedicated to 'Alfred H. Littleton.'

Reviews.

While the earth remaineth. By Herbert W. Wareing.

Give ear, O ye heavens. By Walter G. Alcock.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Dr. Herbert Wareing has been so successful in his compositions for the Church, that any fresh product from his fertile pen at once commands respect and attention. The harvest anthem before us is laid out on broad lines. First a chorus set to the opening words, then a solo, for soprano or tenor ('For My thoughts are not your thoughts'), to which succeeds another chorus section leading to a canon in the octave, between soprano and tenor, either solo or all the voices in each part. At the words 'The mountains and the hills shall break before you into singing,' the full chorus is employed and the work is brought to an imposing conclusion. For a modern composition this anthem is remarkably free from extraneous modulation, but it is none the worse on that account, and difficulties are practically non-existent.

As the anthem by Dr. Alcock forms the special musical supplement in the present number, our readers can form their own judgment as to its merits. Suffice it to say that the organist of the Chapel Royal has combined variety with skilled musicianship in setting the verses he has chosen. A good point is the modulation at the words 'Thou crownest the year with Thy goodness,' a brief section assigned to tenors and basses. The pastoral atmosphere is well portrayed in the drowsy accompaniment to 'The pastures are clothed with flocks,' and the concluding chorus is quite Elvey-like in its vigorous simplicity and healthy part-writing. Need anything more be said?

Richard to Minna Wagner: letters to his first wife.
Translated, prepared, &c., by William Ashton Ellis.

[H. Grevel & Co.]

Boundless enthusiasm continues to characterize Mr. Ashton Ellis in tilling the vast Wagnerian field of literature. His latest achievement consists of the letters written by Wagner to his first wife, Minna. The correspondence covers a period of twenty-one years, 1842 to 1863, and fills nearly 800 pages. Considering their private and domestic nature, not a few of these letters might have been curtailed with advantage, but Mr. Ellis is nothing if not thorough, and what to some may seem errors of judgment may be overlooked on account of his untiring industry.

To English readers the chief interest of these two volumes centres in the 100 pages devoted to the letters written by Wagner during his visit to London—March to June, 1855—in fulfilling his engagement to conduct the Philharmonic Society's concerts of that season. He found lodgings, for which he paid £2 per week, at 22, Portland Terrace, Regents Park, a house which then stood not far from the Zoological Gardens. He writes: 'I am living on the skirt of one of the most beautiful parts of Regents Park, not at all far from the Animal-garden: in front of the house a little garden down to the street, and across the road the fine trees of the park.' There he wrote much of 'Die Walküre.' His position was very different from that on his former visit, with Minna, to London in 1838. 'Only think,' he writes to his wife, 'of the memories thronging to my mind as I re-tread this London where we roamed in such distress and fearing sixteen years ago!' Very amusing are the frequent references to the cost of living in London. He says: 'I have hit on the expedient of laying wine in (at 3 sch. the bottle), and mostly getting my dinner also cooked at home; which comes fairly cheap, since they only charge me with the actual outlay. My dinner then consists of soup (the most expensive item), a roast beef, and Chester cheese. For my lunch (at one) I generally send out for a dozen oysters. I fancy I shall manage cheapest that way.'

Wagner's comments upon the concerts which he attended, other than those he conducted, are not without interest. He writes: 'I was at a performance of the Sacred Harmonic Society where they give religious music, oratorios, &c., twenty-five to thirty times a year. Really that is the best music one has in England: the Requiem, indeed, was quite respectably rendered under Costa. I paid him a call on the strength of it yesterday, which appeared to please him very much.' On the other hand, at a performance of the 'Messiah' he 'nearly died of ennui,' and he declined to go to a concert of the New Philharmonic Society, 'where that donkey Dr. Wyld also meant to do the "Ninth Symphony" after me.' He fell foul of the critics, especially Dawson, as he calls him, 'reporter to The Times.' He writes: 'Quite funny tales are told me of this Dawson,' and in reference to 'his enormous tirade in The Times,' he adds: 'his editor may have given him a hint; so he has confined the venting of his gall on me in his own rag, the Musical World.' He speaks of 'Sterling English compositions as unimpeachably correct as an example in arithmetic, but without one trace of fancy or invention: the joy it gave me to let conduct these tone-poems, you may readily conceive!'

The letters cover a variety of subjects—e.g., a visit to Brighton, the pills that Praeger gave him, and so on. He concludes one letter with 'Adieu, I'm very tired, and have just ordered a small bottle of stout (porter). God save the Queen!'; and another, 'Greet all our dear friends heartily from Thy Knight of the Order of the Garter.'

It so happened that Berlioz was here in London, conducting concerts, at the same time as Wagner. The latter writes concerning him under date June 15, 1855:

Yesterday I had a call from Berlioz, who is tramping for his daily bread, and really is hard pushed; he cannot earn a sou in France, so he has to eke out a scanty subsistence by concerts in England and Germany (which, as I happen to know, bring him mighty little in). Here he is invited by the New Philharmonic Society. He has made his peace already with the local press, after being likewise torn to tatters by it to begin with. Besides his 'Romeo and Juliet' symphony, he also conducted a symphony by Mozart, which he let them murder so horribly that I turned tail. But that's quite English; they like it that way, and Berlioz, who only looks to money now, knows how he has to do things. For that matter he lacks all depth.

For the many references to the Philharmonic Society—its policy, directors, concerts, &c.—the reader is referred to the book itself. The extracts we have given should whet his appetite for a detailed perusal of its interesting and often amusing pages. To praise Mr. Ellis's work as translator would be an act of supererogation. Even his index is a marvel of industry and completeness. Here are some of the headings under Wagner, Richard—Childless; Diet, food, &c.; Dreams; Insomnia; Money matters . . . almost every other page (the italics are Mr. Ellis's); Sea-sickness; Smoking, and so on; while under Wagner, Minna, we find Horse-back, on; and Ran away. Two excellent portraits, of Richard and Minna Wagner add to the attractiveness of a well-printed, well-edited, and very readable contribution to the large and ever-increasing library of Wagnerian literature.

SHORT ANTHEMS.

Rejoice ye with Jerusalem. By Oliver King.

Lord God Almighty. By Verdonck.

Let the wicked forsake his way. By John Goss.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

The first of the above selection is described as a short solo anthem, but the chorus part is of equal importance, opening the work and throughout supplementing the soprano solo. Considerable independence characterizes the part-writing, especially at the close, where scale-passages in contrary motion, sung pianissimo, have a beautiful effect. Verdonck lived from 1564 to 1625, and his motet 'Lord God Almighty,' as edited by Mr. R. T. White, is an interesting example of 17th century church music well calculated to interest singers and impress listeners. The inclusion of Goss's full anthem 'Let the wicked forsake his way,' increases the value of this useful series. It is an admirable specimen of dignified, terse and effective sacred music—indeed, it is thoroughly Goss-like. Need anything more be said?

Six Songs from 'A child's garland of verses.' Words by Robert Louis Stevenson. Music by R. Sterndale Bennett.

[Paterson & Sons.]

'My bed is a boat,' 'Windy nights,' 'My shadow,' 'The swing,' 'Foreign children,' and 'Marching song' are the titles of the six charming little children's poems by Stevenson chosen for musical setting by Mr. Sterndale Bennett. If he intended the songs to be sung by children the composer evidently had in his mind young vocalists of considerable experience, for some of his ideas take the form of harmonic effects that are a little beyond the scope of the ordinary child of tender years. But the ideas, whether harmonic or melodic, are always ingenious and artistic. The accompaniment is often cleverly descriptive, especially in the case of 'Windy nights'; moreover, it is full of interest, and contains those qualities that display the musicianship of the composer.

VIOLIN MUSIC.

Six pièces du XVIII. Siècle, pour violon avec accompagnement de piano. Par Alfred Moffat.

Präludium und Fuge (H. Moll), für die Violine allein Max Reger.

[Bote & G. Bock.]

Mr. Alfred Moffat's untiring industry in searching through ancient violin music for buried treasures is most laudable. Thereby he often brings to light forgotten and neglected treasures which, though antique as regards the date of their composition, are yet full of that freshness and breath of the true spirit of music of the days when music and melody were synonymous terms. Mr. Moffat's latest researches have unearthed works by composers of the 18th century, and the result is a new issue of Six pièces du XVIII. Siècle. The set contains a Rondeau by Jean Oliver Astorga, who, although he lived in London, is a comparatively unknown composer; a Bourée et la Coquette, by August Gottlieb Muffat, a pupil of J. J. Fux; a Menuet by the celebrated Giovanni Battista Pergolesi; an Intermedio by Jean Joseph Mondonville, a well-known French violinist and composer; a his day; a Fantasia by Francesco Antonio Bonporti, an Imperial Counsellor of Austria and (according to Grove) one of the earliest instrumental composers of importance; and an Allegro vivamente by the justly-esteemed violinist Pietro Nardini. Each piece is, in its way, of interest; but the Allegro of Nardini is likely to be the one most in request.

Violinists in search of an effective concert solo, without accompaniment, may be advised to turn their attention to Max Reger's Präludium und Fuge in B minor. It is well worthy of consideration, and is difficult without being by any means inordinately so.

Valse Etude, by D. Alard. Arranged and with pianoforte accompaniment composed by Spencer Dyke.

Rezinka, for violin and pianoforte. By Franz Drdla.

[Bosworth & Co.]

Mr. Spencer Dyke has composed an admirable pianoforte accompaniment to a Valse Etude by Alard, with the result that the piece is transformed into a fine violin solo with accompaniment, one that is well fitted for a concert performance.

Few violin composers of the present day have advanced more rapidly than Franz Drdla (pronounced, by the way, as Derdla), born on November 28, 1865, at Saar, in Moravia, on the borders of Bohemia. One of his latest works, 'Rezinka,' is in the form of a Mazurka, and gives a fairly characteristic example of the style of many of Drdla's compositions. Brilliance in the violin part, originality of themes, many tenderly persuasive passages, and attractive pianoforte accompaniments, all these combine to make the composer a favourite among violinists.

SONGS.

Odelette. The Dance. Chryssilla. Anacreontic Ode.

Composed by E. M. Smyth.

Eight Songs (Op. 14). Composed by Brahms. English words by W. G. Rothery.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

All the originality of Miss Ethel Smyth's style and methods is employed in the composition of her songs. The four latest examples from her pen are designed for and conceived with a view to orchestral accompaniment, and their full merit is not revealed by a glance through the pianoforte score. The orchestral colours not only show the harmonic scheme in a more vivid light, but help to intensify the mood. However, all the virtues that depend least upon the instrumental setting—the ingenious harmonies, the beautiful melodic ideas, the deep expression and pathos, and general strength of conception—all these will meet with their full appreciation through the medium of the pianoforte arrangement skillfully devised by the composer.

The songs are of elaborate design and considerable length. Modern—but not ultra-modern—in style, they belong to some extent to the impressionist school; of 'The Dance' this is especially true. There is, however, little trace of the influence of any other composer. The 'Odelette' and the 'Anacreontic Ode' are particularly strong and individualistic. 'Chryssilla' may be had arranged for a violin obbligato, with which many charming effects could be obtained. French and English words are provided in all the songs. In three cases the French text is by H. de Régnier and the English version by Alma Strettell. In the 'Anacreontic Ode' the French version is by Leconte de Lisle and the English by Miss Smyth. In all cases the English text is worthy of the original. The range of the vocal parts is that of a mezzo-soprano or baritone voice.

Mr. Rothery's translations continue to provide an element which is bound to exert its influence in popularizing and spreading a knowledge and an appreciation of Brahms's songs. The examples comprised in Op. 14 are mostly Volkslieder. The first book contains 'At the window' ('Vor dem Fenster'), 'The wounded youth' ('Vom verwundeten Knaben'), 'Murray's lament' ('Murray's Ermordung') and 'A sonnet' ('Ein Sonett'); the second election contains 'Parting' ('Trennung'), 'So secretly' ('Gang zur Liebsten'), 'Serenade' ('Ständchen') and 'Longing' ('Sehnsucht'). 'Murray's lament' is a song of mourning for 'the bonnie Earl,' assassinated in 1592, and described as coming from Herder's 'Stimmen der Völker.' 'A sonnet' is described as 'Aus dem 13ten Jahrhundert.' The 'Serenade' is well-known for its simplicity and beauty.

PART-SONGS.

Day-dreams. The throstle sings. Composed by Max Meyer-Olbersleben.

By woodland and wayside. When the world is gay. Composed by Ewald Franz.

The nightingale in moonlit glade. The birds are singing. Composed by Hans Sitt.

English words by W. G. Rothery.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Only pleasant dreams are recorded in Mr. Meyer Olbersleben's 'Day-dreams.' The music reflects the glow and not the languor of the noon-day sun and, preserving a swinging rhythm and a graceful melodic style, it provides a pleasant and singable part-song. The same composer's 'The throstle sings' displays similar characteristics. Melody and gratefulness in the vocal parts are the first consideration. In both part-songs the effect is heightened by the simplicity of the means employed.

The feature of Mr. Ewald Franz's 'By woodland and wayside' is the variety of its rhythm. The beat is continuous, but its divisions constantly vary between triple and duple or quadruple. The interest is also upheld by the assigning of a small section to solo voices alone. Abundant expression marks supply a guide to the proper method of interpretation, and if not exaggerated in performance, make for lightness and delicacy. Mr. Franz's 'When the world is gay' is a species of vocal dance. The tenor and bass parts supply a guitar-like accompaniment in the opening sections of each of the four verses, while the soprano and alto voices sing a dainty tune. The tripping rhythm so established is continued when the four voices blend into closer harmony. Accidentals are very few and elementary, and there is an entire absence of anything approaching difficulty.

In 'The nightingale in moonlit glade,' Hans Sitt has devoted his attention and his skill to imparting smoothness and interest to the vocal writing. There is no squareness of construction, the flow of the music being at once varied and carried along by the treatment of the lower parts, which are more than an accompaniment to the melody. Choralists will find many attractive qualities in this part-song. 'The birds are singing' is simpler in the design of its part-writing but is more varied in tonality. Its harmonies are, however, by no means difficult in execution. These two examples of Hans Sitt's writing would go well together in a choral society's programme.

PART-SONGS FOR MALE VOICES.

Walpurga (Op. 30.) By F. Hegar. English words by Rev. Canon Gorton.

Nine Part-songs for men's voices (with tenor lead). By Robert Schumann. English words by W. G. Rothery.

The piper o' Dundee. The Laird o' Cockpen. Pibroch of Donuil Dhu. By Granville Bantock.

Bushes and Briars. The jolly ploughboy. Folk-songs, arranged for male-voice quartet (tenor lead). By R. Vaughan Williams.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

The vigorous English versions provided by Canon Gorton have been the means of familiarising Friedrich Hegar's male-voice choral ballads in England, especially in the North, where they are frequently used as test-pieces at competition festivals. Their intense dramatic force—of which a well-known example is found in 'The phantom host'—is again typified in 'Walpurga.' The original German words, which Canon Gorton has translated with conspicuous ability and art, are a Ballade by Carl Spitteler. They describe the ill-starred attempt of a headstrong young knight (Roland) to tame the fiery spirit of Walpurga, a virulent wood-pixy, and to win her affections. Plentiful opportunity is therefore provided for vivid musical treatment, of which the composer has fully availed himself, for his setting abounds in light and shade and quick changes of mood. All parts contain something to interest the singers and to display their ability. The highest part is for tenor voice.

The care which Schumann expended upon the composition and perfection of his smaller works of every description is evidenced in this collection of nine part-songs, belonging to Op. 33, Op. 62, and Op. 65. The songs differ in character and in happiness of invention; the most elaborate are 'Life's crown is love,' 'The bells of Spring,' and 'The night watch,' in all of which charming ideas are embodied. Other extremely effective examples are 'The lotos-flower,' and 'Blossom or snow.' The latter is written for three tenor solo voices in addition to the chorus part. All are unaccompanied and written for tenor lead, and are published separately.

No composer excels Mr. Granville Bantock in humour, and the latest examples of his exploits in that field, 'The piper o' Dundee' and 'The laird o' Cockpen,' will not fail to be appreciated. Both are suitable for solo quartet singing, and in the hands of clever artists will display considerable laughter-provoking qualities. Considered as music, however, they are in no way inartistic, while the way in which the tunes are banded about from pillar to post—or, to speak more technically, from part to part—is in the highest degree ingenious. The 'Pibroch of Donuil Dhu' has many similar characteristics, but is in more serious vein, being a warlike exhortation to the Clan-Conuil in which the martial spirit and Scots idiom are blended with elaborate and conspicuous success.

The modal characteristics of the Essex folk-song 'Bushes and briars,' are well preserved in Dr. Vaughan Williams's quartet arrangement. Here, and in the Sussex folk-song 'The jolly ploughboy,' the proper restraint has been observed in the choice of harmonic and other devices, with the result that both quartets are perfectly simple and appropriate.

ROYAL MILITARY SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Al fresco surroundings, sunshine tempered by a gentle breeze, good company, and beautiful music, all combined to provide a most enjoyable afternoon on July 8, in the pleasant grounds of Kneller Hall. The occasion was an 'At Home,' upon the invitation of the Commandant (Colonel A. G. Balfour) and Officers of the Royal Military School of Music, to meet the Master (The Lord Mayor of London), Wardens, and the Court of Assistants of the Worshipful Company of Musicians, and a most successful garden party it proved to be.

On all hands it was admitted that the chief attraction was the magnificent playing of the band of the Royal Military School of Music, which charmed all those whose good fortune it was to be present, with the following selection of music:

1. Grand March .. Coronation .. Percy Godfrey.
2. Overture The land of the mountain and the flood Hamish MacCunn.
3. Gipsy Suite Edward German.
4. Prelude to Colomba Mackenzie.
5. Song The better land Cowen.
6. Selection from the works of Sir Edward Elgar Specially selected and arranged by Captain A. J. Stretton.
7. Glees
(a) Image of the rose .. Reichardt.
(b) Hail, smiling morn .. Spofforth.
Played by 30 trombones.
8. Marching song .. Follow the colours Elgar.
9. Symphony in B minor, The Unfinished.. .. Schubert.
10. Two characteristic dances (Op. 22) .. Coleridge-Taylor.
11. Selection Ivanhoe Sullivan.

GOD SAVE THE KING.

It will be observed that, with two exceptions, the programme consisted of British music. The players, placed on an orchestra erected under a group of fine old elms, looked very picturesque, their bright uniforms providing a pleasant contrast to the foliage of the trees. They numbered 180 performers, including 50 clarinets, 10 oboes, 16 flutes, 20 cornets, 10 trombones, 12 euphoniums, 8 double-basses, &c.

The following regiments were represented in the pupils under training and who played in the band—Royal Artillery, Guards, Royal Engineers, Dragoon Guards, Hussars, in addition to a large number of infantry regiments. British regiments were also similarly represented by the students—the future bandmasters of the Army—who are under training at Kneller Hall. Eight of these students showed their conducting skill on this occasion—Messrs C. E. Caulfield, R. Cahill, S. J. Freeman, K. S. Glover, A. D. Hancock, C. Hartmann, E. J. Macdonald, and R. P. O'Donnell. In this connection it should be stated that Mr. H. L. C. Finucane, the recipient of the medal given last year by the Musicians' Company to a Kneller Hall student, is now in India with his regiment, the 2nd East Lancashire; also that Schubert's Unfinished Symphony was played in honour of Colonel T. B. Shaw-Hellier, a former Commandant of Kneller Hall, who was present on this occasion.

To give detailed criticism of the manner in which the several pieces were performed would be to write down a succession of eulogies. Suffice it to say that the entire renderings reflected the greatest credit upon Captain A. J. Stretton, the director of music, who conducted two of the pieces. Even the most critical listener could not fail to appreciate and admire the beautiful non-blatant tone of these 180 excellent performers, no less than the wonderful precision, the depth of expression, and especially the delicate phrasing which characterized the entire performance. Special mention must, however, be made of the playing of 'Hail, smiling morn' by thirty trombones, a combination only possible at Kneller Hall. This was a veritable triumph of artistic interpretation from the first note to the last—blending, precision and shading being perfect.

Among the company present were the Lord Mayor, Master of the Musicians' Company, and many of the members of the Company; also Sir Edward Elgar, Sir Alexander Mackenzie, and Sir George Martin. After the performance of No. 6 on the programme—a remarkably successful and popular-sounding selection from the composer's works—Sir Edward Elgar advanced, bareheaded, to the orchestra and addressed the players as follows:

I am greatly indebted to Colonel Balfour for giving me an opportunity to thank you for your playing, and to tell you how much I have enjoyed listening.

The occasion is to me exceptional in more ways than one. First, I have never before heard so large a body of military instrumentalists, and I am delighted with the great sonority of the tone you produced; secondly, although the band is so large the delicacy and refinement of phrasing was wonderful. I thank you, gentlemen, most sincerely for the artistic way in which you performed my music, and it was specially interesting to observe that students of the School stepped down from their places in the band and took the baton with such success.

You are evidently in the best possible hands. What I have heard foretells very excellent things for the future. I congratulate Captain Stretton very warmly on his work, and I congratulate you as warmly upon having such an admirable musical guide.

In like manner, after No. 4 had been played—or rather repeated in order that the composer might hear his music, he having arrived later in the afternoon—Sir Alexander Mackenzie, after complimenting Captain Stretton and thanking the band for their fine performance, said: 'I did not know that I had written such a nice piece until I heard you play it.'

The afternoon's music furnished full proof, if proof were wanting, that the Royal Military School of Music is one of those institutions of which the country has reason to be proud. In regard to the practical working of the School and the services in the Chapel, it may be mentioned that an illustrated article on Kneller Hall appeared in the Musical Times of August, 1900.

PATRON'S FUND CONCERT.

The Royal College of Music Patron's Fund, instituted in 1903, continues to extend its benefits without favour to young British composers and executants from all quarters. At the annual orchestral concert, given with the co-operation of the London Symphony Orchestra at Queen's Hall on July 14, the following works were performed:

Three Scottish pictures for orchestra ..	J. St. A. Johnson.
1. Coronach. 2. Highland gathering. 3. Halloween.
Concerto for pianoforte and orchestra ..	Haydn Wood.
MISS ELLEN EDWARDS.
Two songs for baritone and orchestra ..	Frank Bridge.
MR. ROBERT CHIGNELL.
Violin solo, Concerto in D minor ..	Wieniawski.
MISS MARY LAW.
Symphonic poem, 'Boadicea' ..	Montague Phillips.

All the new works given were fully worthy of inclusion; and the executants as well as the composers justified their choice as the objects of the administrators' benevolence. The pieces by Mr. Johnson were cleverly designed and always interesting and pleasant to listen to: elaborately wrought, without sacrifice of beauty. Mr. Haydn Wood's Pianoforte concerto was a brilliant piece of work and was brilliantly executed by Miss Edwards. The songs 'I praise the tender flower' and 'Thou didst delight my eyes,' the words by Robert Bridges, composed by Mr. Frank Bridge, were excellent examples of the best modern ideals, and owed a good deal to their well-balanced and controlled orchestral scoring. The most ambitious and striking of the English works was the symphonic poem 'Boadicea,' by Mr. Montague Phillips. It puts forward no strong claim to be considered solely as programme music, as there is little characterization in the themes, and the form is governed by abstract considerations. The music is strongly conceived throughout, and is constructed with a musicianly hand. The noisy orchestration of the final section is an unfortunate defect, as it is no mere cloak for emptiness, but on the contrary, marred the effect of an imposing conclusion.

A neat performance of Wieniawski's Violin concerto was given by Miss Mary Law, under the direction of Sir Charles Stanford. The remaining numbers, except the 'Scottish pictures,' in the programme were conducted by their composers.

At a recent meeting of the Committee, the following grants were made: Twenty-five pounds each for study abroad to Mr. Ioan Lloyd-Powell, Royal College of Music; Mr. Montague Phillips, Royal Academy of Music; Miss Ellen Edwards, Royal College of Music; and Miss Hilda Lett (2nd grant), Guildhall School of Music. Twenty-five pounds (3rd grant) towards Mr. T. F. Dunhill's concerts of chamber music by British composers, and fifty pounds towards Mr. Edward Mason's concerts of choral works by British composers. The Committee also decided to defray the cost of publishing the Quintett for pianoforte and strings, composed by Mr. James Friskin, Royal College of Music.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

At the concert given at Queen's Hall on June 30, a long programme was provided in which both the creative and executive talent of students was again strongly exemplified. The most important new composition was an Operatic Prologue for soli, chorus and orchestra by Miss Eleanor C. Rudall entitled 'The rock of Aesjöen.' The two solo parts represented Ragna, a maiden, and a lake-spirit inhabiting a rock-bound pool in Norway; and the voices of the chorus represented attendant water-spirits. A dramatic scene between these characters has been set by Miss Rudall to dramatic music of modern texture, the merits of which are somewhat marred by a tendency to over-orchestration. On this account the efforts of Miss Dora Gascoigne, Miss Dorothea Webb and the Students' Female-Voice Choir could not be properly appreciated. A setting of Longfellow's 'Onaway! awake, beloved!' by Mr. Ralph Letts, sung by Mr. Wilson Thornton, revealed a fluent and, at times, melodious style. The most interesting item in the remainder of the programme was a Recitative and Air, 'Olga, the glory of our race,' by Goring Thomas, originally intended for his opera 'Nadeshda,' but supplanted—many will say for good reason—by 'O, my heart is weary.' Other students who took part were Mr. Barry Coney (baritone), Mr. Evan Williams (violin), Miss Lilian Hawkins (harpist), Miss Elsie Jones and Mrs. A. M. Heasman (pianists). The orchestral playing, under Sir Alexander Mackenzie, was entirely satisfactory.

The annual distribution of prizes took place at the Queen's Hall on July 23, when the presentations to the successful students were made by the Duke of Connaught. In his customary address Sir Alexander Mackenzie made special allusion to the astonishing advance of technical dexterity among the pianoforte students, and stated that the examiners in that section had found it necessary to award an unusual number of silver medals. He also mentioned that Messrs. Chappell and Messrs. Challen had offered gold medals for pianoforte-playing.

No fewer than six scholarships and one exhibition will shortly be available for competition at the Royal Academy of Music. They are: for composition, 2 (one for male candidates); singing, 2 (female vocalist and tenor); pianoforte, 1; violin, 1; violin or violoncello, 1. Unless otherwise stated, the competitions are open to candidates of both sexes. Full particulars can be obtained from the Secretary of the Royal Academy of Music.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

The final concert of the term was given on July 23, when the programme opened with Mr. William Wallace's Symphonic poem 'Villon,' which, it will be remembered, was originally performed early this season by the New Symphony Orchestra. A feature of special interest was Mozart's Bauern-Symphonie in four movements, the humorous character of which was excellently revealed by the orchestra. Mr. William Murdoch was the soloist in Beethoven's fifth Pianoforte concerto. The concert concluded with a waltz by Johann Strauss, the vivacious strains of which were played with special verve by the students, doubtless inspired by gleeful anticipation of the coming vacation. Miss Gladys Honey, Miss Doris Simpson and Miss Dilys Jones were the vocalists, and Sir Charles Stanford conducted.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

The orchestral concert given by the students at Queen's Hall on July 7 was interesting from two points of view—the programme and the performers. It is not often nowadays that a concert selection includes so many compositions of the old and great masters as formed the scheme on this occasion. Handel, Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert, Mendelssohn and Schumann were all represented. Such substantial fare is not only exceedingly wholesome wherewith to satisfy the artistic appetite, but it nourishes a desire for all that is good and true in music. Students become acquainted fast enough with modern, not to say ultra-modern, music; therefore it is most desirable that they should know the great classics and profit thereby—in other words, that they should learn to walk before they learn to run, otherwise they may suffer some nasty falls.

One now seldom hears Schumann's beautiful E flat Symphony (the Rhenish). It used to be a great favourite at the Crystal Palace in the hey-day of those enjoyable Saturday concerts; therefore it was pleasant on this occasion again to listen to Schumann's charming strains. It was a pity, however, to divide the Symphony, and even to omit a portion, whereby the continuity and completeness of the work was lost. The playing of the orchestra in this, and indeed throughout the concert, had much to commend it: in forte passages the strings seemed rather weak in comparison with the wood-wind, brass and percussion, but any want of balance in this respect was atoned for in the delicate manner wherewith the soloists, both vocal and instrumental, were accompanied, a true test of orchestral artistry, for such restraint is rare.

The work of the soloists testified to the careful teaching the students are receiving at the institution. Of the various instrumentalists special mention must be made of Mr. Walter Britton for his admirable playing of two movements from Goltermann's Violoncello concerto (Op. 14), in which this excellent young artist showed both taste and skill combined with true intonation. It is nearly thirty-seven years ago that Professor Prout's Organ concerto in E minor (Op. 5) was produced at a Crystal Palace concert—the actual date is October 19, 1872—with Stainer as the soloist. Its revival—or rather the Allegro moderato movement—on the occasion under notice served to display the technical skill of Mr. Harry Gray. The remaining instrumentalists were Miss Bertha Tomlin, Mr. Richard Johnson and Mr. Edward S. Mitchell (pianoforte), and Miss Alice Lees (violin); while the vocalists were Miss Edith M. Davies, Miss Eveline Matthews (who gave a tasteful rendering of Mozart's 'Non so più,' from 'Le Nozze di Figaro'), Miss Hilda Felstead, and Mr. Horace Witty, all of whom gave evidence of earnestness of purpose and a desire to do credit to their teachers.

Mr. Allen Gill conducted with his customary enthusiasm, alertness and discretion, and by well-merited applause a very large audience showed their appreciation of and encouragement to the young people who had provided so pleasant an afternoon's music.

'The musical culture of the young'—a most important matter—was the subject of a lecture delivered at Messrs. Broadwood's Rooms on July 17 by Dr. J. Warriner. Illustrations were given by children who are now receiving tuition at Trinity College of Music, in connection with the classes for the training of teachers of music in that institution, representing in three grades the work of their first, second and third terms respectively.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

The work of this flourishing institution was exhibited at the City of London School on June 30 at an orchestral concert. A Concert Overture, by Mr. Frederick J. Massey, was an exceedingly creditable effort, as was also a Pianoforte concerto composed and played by Miss Ethel Scarborough. The capabilities of the orchestra were chiefly exercised in Spohr's much-neglected Symphony in C minor, and proved fully equal to its demands. Mr. Anissim Tchaikoff played Weber's Concerto in F minor for clarinet, and Miss Maude Willby and Mr. Reginald Crawford took part as vocalists. The Principal, Dr. W. H. Cummings, conducted.

ROYAL OPERA.

BARON D'ERLANGER'S 'TESS.'

The season now rapidly drawing to a close has in comparison with past years been generous in the matter of novelties. We have already noticed three 'first performances,' as operas per se, in England—'Samson et Dalila,' 'Pelléas et Mélisande,' and 'Louise,' all, it should be observed, by French composers! A fourth opera—performed for the first time in this country on July 14—is entitled 'Tess,' the libretto of which is founded on Mr. Thomas Hardy's well-known romance 'Tess of the D'Urbervilles.' Baron d'Erlanger, who has set it to music, has already composed two operas. The first, 'Jehan de Saintré' has not yet been heard in London, but the second, 'Inez Mendo,' was brought forward at Covent Garden in 1897. Of instrumental music Baron d'Erlanger has written a Pianoforte quintet and a Violin concerto—performed by Herr Kreisler at a Philharmonic Concert in 1903—and the excellent merits of both works have been recognised.

Libretti are not, as in the palmy days of Italian Opera, little more than pegs on which to hang the music; an interesting story is indispensable to the vitality of a work, and that of poor Tess, who through the credulity of her father was ruined by the arch-libertine Alec, is sad, and the rest of her brief life sadder still. There is no need to describe the story as told in the libretto. Much that is in the romance had to be omitted, and the scenes used are presented in condensed form. Signor Illica, the compiler of the libretto, has cleverly accomplished his task, yet if it be compared with the romance it will be seen that the tramatis personæ are practically only sketches of the originals. Many, however, will be able mentally to supply what is lacking in the opera-book. The music of Baron d'Erlanger has good points. It is full of melody, and of kind which makes an immediate appeal. Italian influence strongly felt, though the employment of representative themes gives a certain Wagnerian flavour to the work. The Old Style Dance in Act 1 is bright and quaint. Then in Act 2, when Tess expresses her longing to return home, also in the following scene with her brother Aby, there are passages of true feeling and of plaintive charm. The long Prelude to Act 3 is one of the best things in the opera, and may possibly be heard in the concert room. The composer is not always convincing in the way he employs his themes. In this Prelude, however, there are two which point to the peaceful life of Tess in her father's cottage when Angel Clare showed his admiration of her. These themes are developed not only with skill, but with a certain poetry. In the love duet of Act 3 there are passages of strong emotional character. The opera is certainly interesting, and yet it does not altogether make a very strong appeal. The work may require more than one hearing to render justice to it; not because it is elaborate, but rather because of its outward simplicity which possibly prevents one duly appreciating the thought and ability which went to the making of it. The performance was excellent. Mlle. Destinn impersonated Tess, Mlle. de Lys Aby, Signor Zenatello Angel Clare, Signor Sammarco Alec, while Mr. Gilibert and Madame Lejeune represented Tess's father and mother, and all deserve highest praise. Signor Panizza conducted. The mounting of the opera was most effective. There was a crowded house, and recalls were frequent.

MR. JOSEPH HOLBROOKE.

The choral and orchestral concert of his own compositions, given by Mr. Joseph Holbrooke at Queen's Hall on June 25, with the co-operation of the Beecham Orchestra and the Alexandra Palace Choir, materially advanced his position as a British composer of serious aims. To judge from his preliminary announcements and messages to Press and public, this was the last result that Mr. Holbrooke anticipated. As on previous occasions, he indulged in subtle humour, but on this occasion his music was more convincing. This was chiefly brought about by the first performance of an orchestral Prelude to 'Dylan' (Op. 53). The subject-matter illustrated by this tone-poem is a poem by Mr. T. E. Ellis, in which winds, waves and wildfowl are personified. Mr. Holbrooke is well qualified by his command of orchestral colour to paint a musical picture on such a background. The scoring is vivid and masterful; but it is not so much in this as in the purely musical aspect that the work is superior to the majority of Mr. Holbrooke's orchestral compositions. The themes are strong and their treatment logical. Sections are built up with continuity of musical thought and connection of idea, and not with rhapsodical indulgence in eccentricity. Altogether, the Prelude to 'Dylan' is perhaps the most satisfying of Mr. Holbrooke's orchestral pieces.

The other works performed on this occasion were an excerpt from the 'illuminated' Symphony 'Apollo and the seaman'; 'Annabel Lee,' for voice and orchestra, sung by Mr. Reginald Davidson; two new songs, 'Killary' and 'The stars,' sung by Miss Edith Evans and accompanied by the composer at the pianoforte; and the dramatic choral symphony 'Homage to E. A. Poe.' The last-mentioned work was given its first London performance, having been produced at Leeds last year. The execution of the choral portions by the Alexandra Palace Choir added yet another to the laurels won by them under Mr. Allen Gill.

Mr. Victor Benham played Beethoven's Pianoforte concerto in E flat, also conducted by Mr. Allen Gill. 'Dylan' was performed under Mr. Beecham's direction, and the remainder of the performance was conducted by Mr. Holbrooke. We are glad to say that the concert-giver's expectations of increased resonance due to the absence of audience were disappointed.

A fine performance of Haydn's 'Creation' was given in the City Hall, Cape Town, on June 2, by the Philharmonic Society. The choir and orchestra numbered over 250. The solo vocalists were Miss Ada Forrest, Mr. Henry Clements, and Mr. Shoult. Mr. Jan Luyt conducted. Miss Ada Forrest gave a Ballad Concert on June 7, her singing being enthusiastically received.

London Concerts.

At Bechstein Hall, on June 24, Miss Laura Evans-Williams and Mr. Edward Iles jointly gave an interesting vocal recital. The chief feature of the programme was a cycle of Spring songs, by Sir Alexander Mackenzie, severally entitled 'The first rose,' 'Hope,' 'Spring's secrets,' 'Spring is not dead,' 'April weather,' 'A May song,' and 'Summer at last.' These pleasant songs, interpreted by Mr. Iles in a most artistic manner, were very favourably received. His pupil, Miss Evans-Williams, was hardly less successful in her selections, the aria 'Oh patria mia,' from Verdi's 'Aida,' being specially noticeable for the dramatic fervour which she threw into the song. Mr. Iles, no less gifted as a pianist than as a vocalist, accompanied himself and sang the whole of his difficult songs by heart in a very remarkable manner.

A recital was given at Queen's (Small) Hall on July 1 by Mr. Albert Fransella, the well-known flute-player. In a Sonata by Reinecke, a Concert-Etude of his own composition, and a Hungarian Fantasia for two flutes, in which he was joined by his son Mr. Henry Fransella, the concert-giver employed those musicianly as well as executive abilities that place him in the front rank of flautists. Mr. Charlesworth Fawcett joined Mr. Fransella in a duet for flute and clarinet composed by Mr. James Wilcocke. Songs, several of which were new, were contributed by Miss Evangeline Florence.

After their success at the recent National Eisteddfod, by which they gained third-prize in one of the best female-voice choir competitions of recent years, Mrs. Mary Layton's Ladies' Choir gave a successful concert at the Chelsea Town Hall on July 1. They sang Mendelssohn's motet 'Sursum Corda,' Wolstenholme's 'The voyage of Sir Humphrey Gilbert,' Lassen's 'The Spanish gipsy girl,' Vaughan Williams's 'Sound sleep,' and McLean's 'The skylark.' The three last mentioned were imposed as test-pieces at the Eisteddfod.

The last of Mr. Theodore Byard's series of subscription concerts, which took place at Bechstein Hall on July 1, provided a first hearing in England for the 'Société Moderne d'Instruments à Vent.' This is a gathering of wind-instrument players of the front rank for the purpose of performing modern works written for various combinations of flute, oboe, clarinet, trumpet, horn and bassoon. The chief works performed on this occasion were a Suite Persane, by M. André Caplet, and a work entitled 'Le Bal de Béatrice d'Este,' by M. Reynaldo Hahn, written for wind instruments, harps, drums, and pianoforte. There was a marked individuality in both compositions, which took the form of a blend of modernity with Eastern colour in the first-mentioned and with antique design in the last-mentioned work. Mr. Byard contributed songs by Sibelius and M. Hahn in his usual distinguished style.

Dr. Serge Barjansky, a violoncellist who made his first appearance in England at St. James's Hall on June 28, proved to be a player of unusual ability. His tone was full and sweet, and he was able to execute with fluency and neatness passages of the greatest technical difficulty. He played Lalo's Concerto in D, but it was chiefly in Klengel's 'Caprice' that his virtuosity was revealed. Mr. Charlton Keith accompanied.

The prospectus of the fifteenth season of Promenade Concerts at Queen's Hall has been issued. Every night, except Sundays, from August 14 to October 23, the concerts will be given under the management of Mr. Robert Newman, with Mr. Henry J. Wood in his accustomed place as conductor. No fewer than forty-two novelties are announced for performance, and twenty-nine additions will be made to the repertoire of the Queen's Hall Orchestra. When to this can be added 102 soloists, vocal and instrumental, and a very large number of well-known compositions, the habitués of these concerts have a rich store of delights wherewith to satisfy their musical aspirations.

Foreign Notes.

AMSTERDAM.

The Concertgebouw concluded the season's operations with their annual performance of Bach's 'St. Matthew Passion,' which, under Mengelberg's inspiring conductorship, made a deep impression.

BERLIN.

The special summer season of grand opera at Kroll's Neues Königliche Operntheater, given under the auspices of Herr Hermann Gura, has so far proved very successful, both artistically and materially. Among the operas recently given have been 'Don Giovanni,' 'Figaro,' 'Fidelio,' 'Flying Dutchman,' 'Lohengrin,' 'Meistersinger,' and 'Tristan and Isolde.' The last named was conducted by Felix Mottl, from Munich, who strangely enough made his début as an opera conductor in Berlin on this occasion, of course with very pronounced success. Richard Strauss's operas 'Salome' and 'Elektra' were also performed, in addition to the late Hermann Zumppe's posthumous opera 'Sawitri.'

BORDEAUX.

The most important musical event of the past season has been the series of eight orchestral concerts given by the Société St. Cécile. Besides well-known classical and modern works, the following interesting novelties, or rarely-heard works, were heard at these concerts: Vincent d'Indy's 'Symphonie sur un chant montagnard,' Albéric Magnard's third Symphony, Paul Dukas's prelude to act 3 of 'Ariane et Barbe-Bleue,' César Franck's 'Les Djinns,' Debussy's Petite suite, Borodin's Dance, for choir and orchestra, from the opera 'Prince Igor,' Rimsky-Korsakoff's symphonic poem 'Scheherazade,' Leon Moreau's Suite for orchestra, Gabriel Pierné's 'Les enfants à Bethléem,' and Guy Ropartz's Suite de concert 'Les pêcheurs d'Islande,' after Pierre Loti's novel.

COLOGNE.

The annual festival opera performances took place between June 10—29, and were attended with very considerable success. The works given were 'Die Meistersinger,' under the conductorship of Arthur Nikisch, 'Marriage of Figaro,' and Hermann Goetz's 'Taming of the shrew,' both conducted by Felix Mottl, in addition to 'Fidelio,' conducted by Herr Fritz Steinbach, and Richard Strauss's latest opera 'Elektra,' under Herr Otto Lohse, the last-named performed for the first time in Cologne on this occasion.

GREIFSWALD (PRUSSIA).

A new opera, entitled 'Persepolis,' composed by Herr Zingel, musical director of the University, has been successfully produced at the Municipal theatre.

GRONINGEN.

In celebration of the fifty-ninth anniversary of the foundation of the Groningsche Hoogeschool, a special symphony concert was given on July 1. Brahms's Academic festival overture and Richard Strauss's symphonic poem 'Don Juan' were the orchestral works chosen for performance, the last-named being given for the first time in Groningen.

KARLSRUHE.

On the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of the Badischer Frauenverein, a special gala performance was given at the Court Theatre in the presence of the Grand Duke and Duchess of Baden. The opera chosen was Mozart's 'Magic Flute,' which received an excellent performance under the baton of Herr Alfred Lorentz.

KASSEL.

For the last performance given in the old Court Theatre, Spohr's opera 'Jessonda' was selected, a very suitable choice, as Spohr was for many years conductor at this theatre. The new Court Theatre will be opened next autumn.

LISBON.

The sixth concert of the Society for Chamber Music was devoted to the works of Haydn, to commemorate the centenary of the old Papa's death.

MANNHEIM.

A new comic opera, 'Robins Ende,' composed by a very young Berlin musician, Eduard Künneke, was produced with great success at the Court Theatre. The music reveals undoubted talent and great technical powers, is melodious, harmonically and contrapuntally interesting, and moreover it is very well scored. The work has already been secured by about half-a-dozen other leading theatres in Germany.

NAPLES.

The funeral of Signor Giuseppe Martucci was made the occasion of a national and popular demonstration to his memory. The mournful procession was of extraordinary dimensions, being about a mile long; moreover, it represented all walks of life, from the highest social and intellectual circles to the man-in-the-street.

PARIS.

On July 14, the anniversary of the establishment of the Republic in France, Dr. Camille Saint-Saëns was presented with the grand cross of the order of the Legion of Honour, in succession to the late Victorien Sardou.—At the Théâtre lyrique municipal de la gaité was produced a new one-act opera, 'Magelone,' composed by Edmond Misa. The music, in which many Provençal folk-songs are artistically introduced, is somewhat after the style of Massenet, and contains very effective dramatic soprano and baritone parts.—Fine performances of Bach's 'Actus tragicus' and 'Magnificat,' given by the Société de Bach, deserve special mention, as does the beautiful artistic singing of Madame Julia Calp in her two interesting song recitals.—The new paper Comœdia arranged a festival soirée in the Salle of the Trocadéro in memory of the centenary of Chopin's birth, which, by-the-way, really falls due next year. M. Alfred Bruneau gave a lecture on the Polish master, after which a poem, entitled 'La musique,' written by Dr. Saint-Saëns in memory of Chopin, was recited. The musical part of the programme was in the hands of Madame Felia Litvinne, who sang songs of Chopin in the Polish language, and Messrs. Raoul Pugno, Lucien Wurmser and Hekking. At the end of the proceedings Mlle. Paulowa and M. Koslef, from the Imperial Russian Ballet, danced to the strains of Chopin's Mazurkas.

ROSTOCK.

At the Municipal Theatre a new opera, 'Die Verheissung,' composed by Camillo Hildebrand to the text of J. Löwenstein, was produced for the first time. The music shows considerable talent and technical accomplishment, and the work obtained a friendly success.

SCHEVENINGEN.

The musical summer season at this Dutch seaside place is particularly distinguished by the yearly recurring engagement of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Kunwald. Amongst the works given this season have been one of the newly-found Violin concertos by Haydn, played by the well-known leader of the orchestra, Herr Anton Witek, and Handel's Concerto grosso in G minor, in addition to many other highly interesting classical and modern compositions.

VIENNA.

The members of the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra have elected Herr Felix von Weingartner to the post of conductor of the concerts next season. The decision was practically unanimous, 98 out of 104 votes being in his favour.

WIESBADEN.

At one of the organ performances given by Signor Enrico Bossi, from Bologna, he introduced his interesting and beautiful Concerto in A minor (Op. 100) for organ, string orchestra, four horns, and drums. The work, excellently performed by the composer, achieved great success.—The season was concluded with two excellent choral performances—Beethoven's 'Missa solemnis,' by the Cäcilienverein, and Bach's 'Passion' according to St. Matthew, by the Achverein. The latter work was given without cuts and with the original arrangement of the orchestra; moreover, was given in two sections on the same day at four and eight o'clock, so as not to overtire the performers and the listeners.

WINTERTHUR.

The tenth musical festival organized by the Verein Schweizerischer Tonkünstler took place on June 26 and 27, and consisted of two chamber music concerts and one choral and orchestral concert. Among the new works heard at the chamber music concert were Sonatas for pianoforte and violin, by Emanuel Moor and Othmar Schoeck, String quartets by K. Heinrich David and Hermann Suter, and part-songs for female voices by Peter Fassbender, as well as solo songs and duets by Rudolph Ganz. At the orchestral concert the most prominent works were Joseph Lauber's ballad for baritone and orchestra, 'Die Trommel von Ziska,' a serenade (Op. 4) for orchestra by Hans Kötscher, and excerpts from the lyrical suite 'Der Winter Abend,' for full chorus, solo voices and orchestra, by Emile Jaques-Dalcroze, the latter composition proving very successful.

YSTAD (SWEDEN).

In this little town, whose population is hardly 10,000 inhabitants, a chamber music festival was given on June 17, 18 and 19, at which both the programmes and performances were of the highest standard. It was due to the efforts and enthusiasm of a local amateur, Herr Salomon Smith, a chemist and an excellent singer, that the festival took place. It was inaugurated with a specially written prologue by August Strindberg, the great Swedish poet, and thereafter followed a Beethoven programme, consisting of the String quartet in E flat (Op. 74), five 'geistliche Lieder,' the great Trio in B flat (Op. 97), and the String quintet (Op. 29). The programme on the second day was devoted exclusively to Swedish compositions, and brought forward Franz Berwald's String quartet in E flat and his Pianoforte quintet in A, as well as Ludwig Norman's Pianoforte quartet and Ballad 'Kong Hakes Död,' for baritone, male chorus and pianoforte. The third day's programme was made up exclusively of works by Brahms—the Pianoforte quintet (Op. 34), the Trio in E flat (Op. 40), the String sextet in G (Op. 36), as well as some of his most beautiful songs. The artists taking part in the festival were Messrs. Wilhelm Stenhammar, Aulin and his Quartet, Professor Franz Neruda, brother of Lady Hallé, and Salomon Smith.

'Designed on educational lines and for refining influences, and, further, to enable the best classical and modern music to be heard in Sheffield on a scale of Continental cheapness,' are the commendable considerations set forth in a circular announcing two promenade concerts to be given in that music-loving city on November 18 and December 2. The orchestra, consisting of about fifty-five players, is to be complete and to consist only of instrumentalists of tried ability and experience. The concerts, which are not promoted for the purpose of profit, except in an artistic sense, will be under the management and conductorship of Mr. J. A. Rodgers. The circular is signed by Messrs. E. Willoughby Firth, T. Walter Hall and C. D. Leng. The prices of admission range from half-a-crown to one shilling, in order that 'all classes may have the opportunity of attending.' The experiment will be watched with interest.

The Kimberley Musical Association gave two concerts in the Town Hall, Kimberley, on June 10 and 11. On the first occasion Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' was performed, the other chief features of the programme being Beethoven's 'Prometheus' Overture and Haydn's Symphony in D (No. 4). At the second concert 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast' was the main attraction, and the programme included the Spinning Chorus from the 'Flying Dutchman,' Fanning's part-song 'Moonlight,' and Meyerbeer's 'Coronation March,' Haydn's Symphony being repeated by request. The solo vocalists were Miss Ada Forrest and Mr. L. Mirwish. The orchestra was led by Herr Rybinkar, and Mr. A. H. Ashworth conducted excellent performances of the chief works named.

The publishers of 'Arethusa,' by Mr. W. H. Ibberson, reviewed in our last issue (p. 455), are Messrs. J. Wood, of Huddersfield; and the Pastoral Overture in G, for the organ, reviewed on the same page, is by Mr. William Faulkes.

Southport is to hold its triennial musical festival from October 13 to 16, the conductors being Sir Edward Elgar and Sir Hubert Parry, both of whom will conduct their own works, Mr. Landon Ronald and Dr. Henry Coward. The Hallé Orchestra has been engaged, and the duties of chorus-master will be safe in the hands of Mr. Arthur W. Speed. As at present arranged the programme will include the following works: Messiah (Handel), L'Allegro ed il Pensieroso (Parry), and the Kingdom (Elgar); and, for the first time, Ode on Time (Walford Davies), The Vision of Cleopatra (Havergal Brian), and Choral Variations (Rutland Boughton). Mr. W. H. Potts is the honorary secretary of the festival.

Miss Florence Attenborough held an interesting Musical Reception at the Holborn Restaurant on June 29, when the programme included a number of songs the words of which were in all cases written by 'Chrystabel' (Miss Attenborough). The vocalists were Miss Oswyn Jones, Mrs. G. F. Huntley, Miss Aimée Shergold, Miss Pitt-Soper, Messrs. George M. Reid and W. A. Peterkin. Part-songs were rendered by the choir of Gray's Inn Chapel, and Mr. Charles Fry recited several poems also by 'Chrystabel'—one, a piquant little Irish piece, 'Barney,' being repeated by request.

The string orchestra of the Croydon Conservatoire of Music gave a concert in the Public Hall, Croydon, on July 15. The programme included Hofmann's Serenade and a Suite by Christopher Wilson, both for string orchestra; also two movements from Grieg's 'Peer Gynt' suite and Glazounow's 'Suite Slave' (Op. 26). Miss Lettie Dibdin and Miss Hilda Down were responsible for vocal and violin solos respectively, and Mr. William H. Reed conducted.

Stanford's 'The Revenge' was performed at Askew Road Wesleyan Church, Chiswick, on June 24, under the conductorship of Mr. Eustace Pett. The programme included Sullivan's 'O gladsome Light,' Barnby's 'Sweet and low,' and Elgar's 'Pomp and Circumstance' March No. 1. The solo vocalists were Miss Blodwen Thomas and Mr. Frederick Pitman. Mr. Louis Mantell assisted at the pianoforte, and Mr. Alfred C. Toone presided at the organ.

The death of Mr. P. Goodman, School Music Inspector for Ireland, on June 19, is recorded with regret. Mr. Goodman was organist of St. Francis Xavier, Dublin. He was widely known and much esteemed as Professor of Music at the Marlborough Street Training College and St. Patrick's Training College, Dublin.

All the symphonies of Beethoven, including the 'Choral,' will be performed at Munich during August and the first week in September in connection with the series of concerts referred to on p. 472 of our July issue.

Herr Hugo Becker has been appointed professor of the violoncello at the Königliche Hochschule für Musik, Berlin, in succession to the late Professor Hausmann.

Answers to Correspondents.

CASE LIBRARY.—In England there are few bass singers who can go below the low C: but in Russia there are basses of extraordinary depth who are capable of taking this note:

QUERY.—(1) Play the grace notes as indicated in the Cotta edition (Beethoven's Pianoforte sonata in D, Op. 10, No. 3, p. 3, foot-note). You may rely upon the Cotta edition in regard to the phrasing of this Sonata. (2) The phrasing of Charles Mayer's Studies, Op. 305, is purely a matter of taste, as the original edition is not marked in that particular.

YOUNG ORGANIST.—For treatises on the construction of the organ, consult the following books: A practical treatise on organ building, by F. E. Robertson (Sampson Low); Organs and tuning, by T. Elliston (Weekes); Organ construction, by J. W. Hinton (Weekes); The art of organ building, by G. A. Audsley (Vincent); see also the article 'Organ,' in the new edition of Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians.'

T.C.M.—The song 'A life on the ocean wave' was composed by Henry Russell and sung by him at least seventy years ago. In 1889 the Admiralty authorized the use of the melody as the regimental march of the Royal Marines.

M. A. T.—The tune, to 'For thee, O dear, dear country,' you are anxious to trace is most probably No. 321 in the 'St. Alban's Tune Book' (Novello). It is there set in the key of D, and in six-eight rhythm.

G. R. B.—Guilmant's Grand Chœur in D (for organ) is arranged for pianoforte solo, and can be obtained from Messrs. Novello; but Mr. Wolstenholme's Lied in G (Vincent) is not so arranged.

L. S.—You may be able to obtain the address of the poet you mention by applying to the publisher of his 'Idle Hours,' (issued in 1896), Mr. J. S. Toothill, of Bradford. That is the nearest clue we can give.

E. A. D. G.—The small notes in Dudley Buck's 'Hymn to Music,' at the words 'Now rushing and roaring,' are obviously intended to strengthen the bass, tenor, and alto parts respectively.

We are indebted to the kindness of three readers for the information that the weekly service list of St. Paul's Cathedral is published in the City Press.

A few questions are held over.

(BOOK 2)

BY

EMILY R. DAYMOND.

PREFACE.

This second book of Score-Reading Exercises is intended for the use of candidates for the A.R.C.O. Examination, and for other Examinations which include among their tests reading from three treble clefs and a bass clef. The examples in which the notes are detached or grouped in an unusual way are specially intended to give practice in reading Choruses from ordinary Vocal Score, a process which the arrangement of the notes according to the syllables renders somewhat difficult. The Exercises are arranged in order of difficulty. E. R. D.

SEVENTH AND REVISED EDITION.

A HANDBOOK

OF

EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC

CONTAINING

600 QUESTIONS WITH ANSWERS

BY

ERNEST A. DICKS,

Fellow of the Royal College of Organists.

The scope of this book covers the whole ground of theoretical examinations in music. It supplies an invaluable equipment to candidates entering for the various Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge held periodically throughout the country, and it will be found extremely useful to those who are preparing for the higher grades of Diploma and Degree Examinations.

The book is therefore very comprehensive. Its range includes questions and answers in Theory, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Fugue, Acoustics, Musical History, Organ Construction, and Choir Training.

By no means the least valuable part of the volume is that section, consisting of upwards of one hundred pages, which contains reprints of past examination papers set by the Associated Board, Trinity College, and the Incorporated Society of Musicians; the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, London, Dublin, Durham, and Edinburgh, and the Victoria University; The Royal Academy of Music, The Royal College of Music, and The Royal College of Organists. The advantage of having so many specimens of these actual examination papers within one cover is too obvious to need further comment or commendation.

PREFACE TO THE SEVENTH EDITION.

Through the kindness of Dr. E. H. Turpin the seventh edition of the Handbook of Examinations in Music includes the latest type of Papers set by Trinity College of Music, London, in their scheme of Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge.

The work will also be found to have been considerably enlarged by the addition of fifty specimen questions, with answers. They have been designed for the most part after the manner of those set in the Theory Paper for the L.R.A.M. Diploma, and also that required by candidates for the Higher Practical Examinations held by Trinity College of Music, London. The author earnestly hopes that these additions will considerably enhance the value of the Handbook, and render it increasingly helpful to students.

PROGRESSIVE STUDIES

FOR THE PIANOFORTE

EDITED, ARRANGED IN GROUPS, AND THE FINGERING REVISED AND SUPPLEMENTED

BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

THIS Collection of Studies is intended to illustrate the various elements of a complete course of pianoforte technique, and to provide students with the means of attacking and overcoming the different special difficulties which have to be encountered. With this view, the Studies have been arranged in groups, those in each group being placed in progressive order, and having reference to some one particular difficulty. The greater part of the studies themselves have been selected from the standard works of the most eminent Study-writers, and with these are included numerous others, which, though of equally great practical utility, have hitherto been less generally accessible.

FROM THE ABOVE:

SELECTED PIANOFORTE STUDIES

PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

IN TWO SETS (EIGHT BOOKS), PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH BOOK.

The present collection of studies is designed to provide teachers with a short course of Pianoforte Technique adapted to the needs of the average pupil, the intention being to spare the teacher the labour of choosing a sufficiently varied selection from the large mass of material existing, and at the same time to ensure that the different departments of technique shall be undertaken in the order which experience has proved to be the most beneficial.

The Studies are grouped in two Sets, and are so arranged that the different Books in which they are contained may be taken in consecutive order, but pupils who are already further advanced than the elementary stage represented by Set I. may commence at once with Set II. which will be found to be complete in itself, and to illustrate all the essential elements of technique.

Where additional studies are desired, or studies on certain subjects which are not touched upon in this series, the larger collection, published under the title of "Progressive Studies" (from which the present examples have been selected), is of course available.

THE TEN VIRGINS

A SACRED CANTATA

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"Will be heartily welcomed by all who love the art of music."— Newcastle Journal.

"The work will certainly go through Saxondom in the wake of its predecessors from the same pen."—London Daily Telegraph.

"Must attain popularity wherever heard, and will assuredly be placed among the foremost compositions of this kind by present-day writers
. . . treated in a thoroughly artistic manner. . . a perfect wealth of melody and striking individuality of style."—Liverpool Daily Courier.

"Works which have placed him in the front rank of English composers —the 'Holy City,' 'Joan of Arc,' and 'The Ten Virgins.'"—Newcastle Daily Journal.

"The choral writing in 'The Ten Virgins' is alone something to be thankful for, and, as we have intimated, it is only one of the many musical virtues of the Cantata."—Leamington Chronicle.

"BOW AND BROMLEY INSTITUTE CHOIR.—The hall was overcrowded by an audience that was disposed to encore every other number of the work. That Mr. Gaul should have secured this undoubted popular success with a work far more contrapuntal than any of his former works, is a remarkable tribute to his power of welding science and beauty into one whole."—The Musical Times.

"The subject is an excellent one for a Cantata. . . a stronger work than 'Joan of Arc.' Melodious, vocal, and of moderate difficulty, and, like Mr. Gaul's earlier Cantatas, will be eagerly welcomed by societies in search of new works having these characteristics."— Newcastle Daily Leader.

"That 'The Ten Virgins' is a much finer work than the everywhere favourite 'Holy City' we have no doubt whatever. Mr. Gaul has aimed at fine outline and telling colouring, and all that he has aimed at he has achieved."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

JOAN OF ARC

AN HISTORICAL CANTATA

FOR THREE SOLO VOICES, CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"Few cantatas are as rich in chaste melodies, charming choruses, and exquisite orchestration as Alfred R. Gaul's 'Joan of Arc,' performed for the first time in Plymouth by the Vocal Association in the Guildhall."—The Western News.

"Must enhance the high reputation of its composer."—Liverpool Courier.

"The inspiration of a highly-refined musician. . . . The Cantata is even a more masterly and beautiful work than 'The Holy City.'"— Huddersfield Examiner.

"No more charming Cantata than 'Joan of Arc' could have been chosen. It abounds in delicious music. There is not a tedious note in it."—Newcastle-on-Tyne Daily Chronicle.

"Gives the listener a vivid and realistic impression, its attractiveness being continuous instead of spasmodic."—Bradford Observer.

"The Exeter Oratorio Society last night achieved a brilliant success, and it may safely be said, without fear of exaggeration, that never before have they performed a work more satisfactory to themselves or more interesting to the audience than 'Joan of Arc.'"—Western Times.

"One of the most delightful concerts ever given by the South Shields Choral Society was that of last evening, when the principal piece was 'Joan of Arc.' We cannot speak too highly of Mr. Gaul's work, which is of the most interesting description."—The Shields Daily News.

Price, paper cover, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s.; scarlet cloth, 4s.;

THE NEW CATHEDRAL PSALTER

CONTAINING

THE PSALMS OF DAVID

TOGETHER WITH

THE CANTICLES AND PROPER PSALMS FOR CERTAIN DAYS

EDITED AND POINTED FOR CHANTING

BY

COSMO GORDON LANG, D.D.
(ARCHBISHOP OF YORK).

HENRY SCOTT HOLLAND, D.Litt.
(Canon and Precentor of St. Paul's).

CHARLES H. LLOYD, M.A., Mus.D.
(Precentor of Eton).

GEORGE C. MARTIN, Mus.D.
(Organist of St. Paul's).

No part of the Church Service has received greater attention in recent years than the Psalms, and there is no better test of an organist's or choirmaster's qualifications than the manner in which the choir renders these matchless poems of Holy Writ.

The chief difficulty of Anglican chanting has always been the merging of the recitation into the strict-time section of the chant. In the "Cathedral Psalter," issued a generation ago, an endeavour was made to overcome this difficulty by the use of accent marks, and the striking popularity of the book has proved that the method therein adopted, if rightly used, was nearly perfect.

Experience, however, has shown that there was still room for improvement, and it may confidently be asserted that the nearest approach to perfection has been attained in the entirely revised and improved form of the work entitled the "New Cathedral Psalter."

As the result of much careful study and practical knowledge, all ambiguity in regard to the merging of the recitation into the strict-time section of the chant has now been removed.

The "New Cathedral Psalter" is issued in three forms: (i.) with Superimposed Notes; (ii.) with Prosody Signs; (iii.) with Varied Type, whereby a choice can be made of the form which may be thought most effectual in securing intelligent and reverent chanting. Moreover, the pointing is in every case identical, so that on such an occasion as a service sung by combined choirs all three books could, if necessary, be used simultaneously.

Not the least important consideration in a pointed psalter is the matter of typography. In the "New Cathedral Psalter" bolder faced types, specially prepared, have been used, the result being greater clearness, while particular attention has been paid to the spacing between the words and lines so as to afford greater facility in reading.

The "New Cathedral Psalter," although founded on the "Cathedral Psalter," is a distinct book, and the two books cannot be used together.

A VALUABLE BOOK FOR TEACHERS AND STUDENTS.

TECHNIQUE AND EXPRESSION IN PIANOFORTE PLAYING BY FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

In the course of my experience as a teacher of the pianoforte, an experience extending over many years, certain ideas have from time to time suggested themselves to me which have proved useful—to myself, as enabling me to express more clearly that which I desired my pupils to understand, and to my pupils, as tending to facilitate their comprehension of the various difficulties they have had to encounter, at the same time leading them to perceive the most practical means of overcoming them, and thus accelerating their general rate of progress.

These suggestions relate to both the mechanical and intellectual sides of the study of pianoforte-playing, or, briefly, to Technique and Expression, the chief matters implied by the first of these terms being the production of various qualities of tone, the choice of suitable fingering, and the best methods of attacking certain difficulties; while the second, which may perhaps be more aptly designated the means of expression, includes rhythm, phrasing, variety and gradation of tone, the use of the pedals, et cetera.

SIX OCTAVE STUDIES FOR THE PIANOFORTE BY WILLEM COENEN.

"The musical value of some of the pieces is not inconsiderable"—The Times.

"Must needs prove most useful, and are not at all dry."—Daily Telegraph.

"The studies are quite as entertaining to the listener as they are serviceable to the performer."—Musical Opinion.

"Six clever and useful 'Octave Studies.' They are more than usually interesting."—Musical Standard.

"Excellent for practice."—Christian World.

"They afford a very complete course of study. The different numbers are tuneful and attractive, and the variety is great."—The Lady.

"Almost every branch of octave-playing is represented in these tuneful studies."—Church Bells.

"These studies are very melodious, and will make the irksome study of octaves quite interesting to the hard-working student."—Church Family Newspaper.

"Admirably adapted to formulate touch as well as style in this special branch of pianoforte technique."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

"Fitted for advanced students. For wrist work, No. 2 is excellent, and No. 6 is good enough for a concert piece. In all there is pretty equal work for both hands."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"Six excellent octave studies (legato and staccato)."—Sheffield Daily Telegraph.

"Can safely be recommended to players who possess the laudable ambition of keeping up their technique."—Western Daily Press.

COMPLETION OF A Modern School for the Violin

BY AUGUST WILHELMJ AND JAMES BROWN.

THE purpose of this Work is to provide, in one systematic and comprehensive scheme, all that is necessary for the acquirement of the Art of Modern Violin Playing.

"A Modern School for the Violin" consists of Six Books devoted to Daily Technical Practice. Six Books of Studies for Violin alone, and a large number of Pieces with Pianoforte Accompaniment, the Violin parts being specially edited for the purposes of teaching.

SECTION A.—TECHNICAL PRACTICE. IN SIX BOOKS.

The foundation of "A Modern School for the Violin" is laid by means of a series of Six Books dealing exclusively with the important subject of DAILY TECHNICAL PRACTICE. The First Book of Technical Practice (Book 1A) is limited to the 1st Position; the Second Book (2A) to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the Third Book (3A) to the first five Positions; and so on. Bowings and other technical devices are introduced in a similarly progressive manner throughout. Each Book of Technical Practice is divided into "Lessons" (or Chapters), and each Lesson contains a number of short repeating Exercises on some definite point of Violin Technique—as Fingering, Bowing, &c., with the needful explanations. Included in each Book will be found a complete set of Scales and Arpeggi, arranged according to the particular stage of advancement reached.

Taken as a whole, this Section is intended to facilitate, and to insist on, a thorough, steady, and continuous progress in the mastery of the Instrument, this being the only possible means of preparing the groundwork for artistic achievement with all its lasting delights.

SECTION B.—STUDIES. IN SIX BOOKS.

Section B is formed of a series of original and selected Studies, in Six Books. Each Book of Studies (Section B) is carefully co-ordinated, in respect of difficulty and range of subject, with the correspondingly numbered Book of Technical Practice (Section A). Thus the First Book of Studies (1B) is written in the 1st Position; the Second Book (2B) in the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the 3rd Book (3B) in all Positions up to and including the 5th; and so on. It should further be explained that the two Sections are designed to complement one another, and that the "School" must be practised, not in single Books of Technical Practice and Studies alternately, but in pairs. Thus, Books 1A and 1B are to be taken concurrently, then Books 2A and 2B, 3A and 3B, and so on, and the appropriate pairs are now issued bound together in cloth (see Cloth Bindings below).

The Competition Festival Record

(COMMENCED AUGUST, 1908.)

No. 13.

THE ASSOCIATION OF MUSICAL COMPETITION FESTIVALS.

THE fifth annual conference was held at Messrs. Broadwood's, Conduit Street, W., on July 15. Lady Mary Trefusis presided. The following officers and committee were re-elected: President, Her Grace the Duchess of Norfolk; Committee, Lady Mary Trefusis (Chairman), Mr. W. H. Leslie (Hon. Treasurer), Miss Mary Egerton, Mr. J. A. Fuller Maitland, and Mrs. Comeline; and Miss Wakefield and Dr. W. G. McNaught (hon. secs.).

The report of the committee on the suggestions of the Council and the reports of various sub-committees were adopted. A proposed new constitution was discussed and also adopted. The attendance of members, although of great in numbers, was widely representative of the festivals.

The report of the committee stated that there were at present 303 individual members and twenty federated festivals. They were glad to be able to say that the movement continued to make satisfactory progress. A few festivals on a large scale had been successfully inaugurated at Aberdeen in June of this year, and a new one was being organized (by the chairman, Lady Mary Trefusis) at Truro. The movement, therefore, might be said to extend its influence from John o' Groat's house to Land's End. Other festivals had also been started at Coleraine (Ireland), Dorchester, Hastings and Central London. The report went on to say that it was now generally recognized that the competition festival movement was a considerable factor in the musical development of the country. The committee felt that the Association had been influential in promoting this beneficial result, and had therefore fully justified its existence. They desired to remind members that the spirit in which it had been formed was a missionary one, and that while individuals might not personally benefit by its operations, they might derive satisfaction from the fact that they were units in a body that was conferring benefits on others and helping a great national work.

The following papers were read:

THE SPIRIT AND THE LETTER IN COMPETITION FESTIVALS.

By DR. H. WALFORD DAVIES.

Dr. Walford Davies said he had noticed that, at one of the greatest festivals in the Kingdom, five or six splendid choirs came up, and that they absolutely fulfilled the letter of the law down to the very last demisemiquaver of every single mark of expression, but the spirit was ten deplorably absent or misunderstood. He did not wish to suggest that perfection of detail was to be less an object of their festival than it happily was at present, but only that it should be made subservient to the spirit of the music in hand. We must have both. Fulfilment of the letter must be coupled with genuine and sincere expression of the enthusiasms and emotions of their own hearts, for which music was a perfect equipment.

There was a quality in music too often overlooked, and that was its balance, its sanity. Let them put aside the national and cultivate with all their power balance, restraint, and reticence. Let them eschew all mere sensationalism, while maintaining that fire, and life, and enthusiasm which, coupled with restraint, gave expression to the grandest feelings and gave music its fullest scope. He deprecated the crowding out of combined work in festivals, and suggested that it might be a good plan if all the solo work were taken in camera, the solo work being often the weakest part of a festival. Pleading for fuller attention to church music at competitive festivals, he said that this music was still in rather a perilous condition. It was not generally known, perhaps, what a quick movement of improvement had taken place in the last year or two, but for himself he felt that the situation was still one that amounted to a national scandal. It was sad to see church choirs lagging behind village choral societies, and he was afraid they would have to face the question and in many cases resort to mixed choirs in churches. Why not? Sentiment might be against it, but he could see no logical objection. He believed that good church music, rendered with perfect attention to every detail, might have the most helpful and beneficent effect upon the lives and the general morale and the happiness of the British people? If they could but secure adequate church music through competitive festivals it would prove an asset of more national importance than hundreds of Dreadnoughts.

In the course of a short discussion on Dr. Walford Davies's address, the question of the expediency of using worship music in competitions was brought up. Mr. Harry Evans declared that competitions had brought congregational singing to a high standard in Wales, and Dr. Walford Davies gave instances of the great educational advantages of competitions amongst church choirs.

THE EISTEDDFOD AND THE COMPETITION FESTIVAL MOVEMENT: COMPARISON OF AIMS, METHODS AND RESULTS.

By MR. HARRY EVANS (Liverpool).

Mr. Evans said although the Eisteddfod had in the course of its existence undergone many changes, and had been subjected to much criticism, it had to-day a firmer hold than ever before upon the Welsh people. When the foundations were laid the aims of the Eisteddfod were stated to be to cultivate and foster poetry and literature; to investigate, arrange, and preserve the historical records and the literary treasures of the nation; to assist in publishing original works in the Welsh language; and to adopt, from time to time, any and every means to raise the status of the Welsh people socially, morally, and intellectually.

These aims commanded the respect and admiration of all, and that was some excuse for the outcry of the bards that Music—which was not even mentioned at first, and which, they said, had usurped the position of poetry and literature—should have so much attention in the present-day Eisteddfod. But, whatever the bards might say, music was now the most potent factor in the existence of the Eisteddfod—national and otherwise.

Until recent years the Eisteddfod was the only means of discovering talent and of trying to develop it. There were no schools of music—there were none now, for that matter. There were no capable teachers, and most of the singing, including that of the choirs, was by ear. Taking into consideration the many disadvantages, it should be conceded that the Eisteddfod in the past had done splendid work for music in Wales, and if it had shown signs of failure as an educative faculty during recent years, it was because of the lack of a controlling hand, and the advent of commercialism into its constitution. Though they had the great annual National Eisteddfod in North and South Wales alternately, there was no real controlling body, and the work of compiling the syllabus was in the hands of a local committee formed in the town appointed for the holding of the Eisteddfod. The experience gained by the promoters of one year's gathering was not available the following year. The weakness of this system was clearly seen in the musical department. They had, perhaps, good music one year, and at the next a selection that was unworthy, and that made little demand on the skill of the competitors. The Archdruid—who was the chief Bard and had some authority—said recently: "The Eisteddfod Association should have more authority than it now possesses over local committees. Local interests must not be allowed to absorb or overshadow national interests. If the authorities of a particular town sought the National Eisteddfod mainly for the purpose of enhancing the commercial prosperity of the town, that was an object that was wholly unworthy of the Festival, and of the nation, for it was an object which was distinctly at variance with the special aims of the Festival. The local authorities of a town were not entitled to devote even a farthing out of the proceeds of a National Eisteddfod to the erection of a town clock, unless, of course, it be such a clock as could be seen by the whole nation, and could be heard, striking the hours, in every corner of the Principality." The English competition festival movement knew no such gathering as the National Eisteddfod, and each festival was worked in its own locality and was guided by experienced hands in that locality, and so went on from strength to strength annually.

There were scores of smaller meetings held during the year in various parts of Wales, and it was not an uncommon experience to find half-a-dozen competitive meetings held in the various chapels of one town on the same day—Christmas day for choice. These local Eisteddfodau should be the feeders of the National, but each was independent of the others, they went and came promiscuously, and the main object in most cases was pecuniary profit for the promoters. It was true that there were a few annual fixtures that had gone on for years, but they were in a distinct minority. The "gate-money" being of paramount importance, Eisteddfod committees selected their test-pieces with that end in view. What piece would attract the greatest number of choirs, which meant increased "gate-money"? was the main question. The probability was that a piece that was already well known and had done duty many times before, was selected, and this proving a successful bait in attracting numerous choirs, was immediately selected by other committees, and so things went on with disastrous results to the competing choirs. It was pathetic to hear the wail of the committees who had endeavoured to improve the state of things by the selection of new and unknown test-pieces, and who had been rewarded by having no entries, and, worse than all, had been compelled by the choirs to select a well-known piece approved by them.

The English festival as a rule did much better. The music was selected by capable people, it increased in difficulty, both executive and interpretative, from year to year, with the result that choirs and conductors were systematically developed and improved; the spirit of commercialism did not interfere with the aim of the festival, and so the main object, the cultivation of music in the district, was successfully achieved.

But the English festival, in the course of the development of its choirs, should guard against selecting music mainly because it was difficult! Such music might be ugly, and as such certainly was no inducement to choirs and conductors to spend their evenings in its preparation. One sometimes came across instances of village choirs having to struggle with the most unattractive and uninspired but difficult music. This tended to break their spirits, to damp their ardour, and to create a distaste for music. There was an abundance of beautiful music that was quite difficult enough for competitive purposes.

This all-important matter of the selection of music, which in the English festival was relegated to experts, was settled by the whole committee, as a rule, in a Welsh Eisteddfod. Interests other than musical and artistic were considered, with the result that very often the most unworthy music was selected, whilst the music publisher who gave prizes on condition that trumpery publications were included in the schedule was unfortunately all too welcome. The great increase in the money-prizes in recent years was responsible for much unhealthy excitement, the money-prize being often the first consideration, with little or no thought of artistic development. The larger English festivals would no doubt take warning. In Wales it was not customary to require an entrance fee, and the result often was that competitors sent in their entries indiscriminately, and when the event came around an entry of forty soloists was diminished to half-a-dozen. This had even happened at a National Eisteddfod. But it was evident that committees would not tolerate this state of things much longer, and the recent London Eisteddfod showed a great advance in that direction, mainly owing to the entrance-fee clause. It was obvious that it was impossible to keep a time-table under those unsatisfactory conditions. Too often the meetings were carried on in a "go-as-you-please" sort of fashion, classes being taken in the order which suited the convenience of the competitors. No English festival would tolerate that kind of thing.

Another serious weakness in the Welsh system was that only the few who were fortunate enough to survive the preliminary test got any criticism of their performances. Of fifty entries, three might be selected for the final, and forty-seven had to go away without the helpful criticism and advice of the judge. This individual criticism, which was so helpful, was a feature of the English festival. Another serious drawback in Wales was that competitors did not hear each other sing. Choirs—especially if they were previous winners—marched on to the platform, sang the test-piece, and marched off, satisfied that they could not be beaten. Alas! the poor judges suffered on this account. But it should not be thought that they were stoned or mobbed, or guarded by police. There was nothing worse than wagging tongues and scribbling pens. But when there was the addition of a Press critic—musical, of course—who did not sign his articles, but who was bold enough to give his remarks and marks, and to place choirs according to his view as opposed to the combined judgment and award of experienced judges, the trouble and dissatisfaction became greatly increased and did a great deal of harm. Some of the larger English festivals were not entirely free from that trouble. If only choirs would remember that judges had nothing at all to do with competitors' reputations, or past successes; that each choir, like an individual artist, had to be constantly making a reputation at each public appearance and must not rely on any past performances; and that no judge would be so rash and foolish as to risk the whole of his reputation for the sake of favouring any choir, conductor or committee, that trouble would be considerably lessened. The gradation of test-pieces from year to year had produced excellent educational results in England, and the inclusion of sight-reading was another feature that distinguished English festivals from the Welsh. A point that added considerably to the pleasure and interest of audiences and gave them a better opportunity of forming their own judgment, was the printing of the words of pieces in the programme. This was not done at the Eisteddfod. A distinctive feature of the Eisteddfod was its master of ceremonies, the "conductor." He arranged the competitions, kept order, and treated the audience to samples of his jocularities between the various items. If he had not a pretty wit and an attractive manner of serving up jokes, ancient and modern, his career was short and inglorious. There was a certain free-and-easy style about an Eisteddfod that was very delightful, except perchance to the hungry over-worked judge. A strong feature of the English plan was the businesslike management, the well-thought-out time-table—not forgetting the needed intervals during the day—and the quiet way in which all the arrangements were carried out.

The singing of the test-pieces by the combined choirs was a successful feature of English festivals, but the Eisteddfod knew it not, and the audience would not care for it. "Who's won?" was the point that had to be immediately made known. The Eisteddfod, and more particularly Welsh choirs, some years ago had suffered from the flattery of some English judges. They were told their singing was grand, magnificent, and perfect. Welsh conductors became self-satisfied, and it was not until repeated shocks of defeat by English choirs came that they realized the true state of affairs.

During its comparatively short existence, the English movement had flourished to a surprising degree. Not only did one hear remarkable singing of remarkable music at some of the bigger festivals, but one heard good singing in the South, East, and West, as well as the famous North. That the competition movement was at present a potent factor in the musical life of England could not be denied. Was it going to endure? The Eisteddfod was dear to the Welshman; it was a part of the nation's life—it was of the people. There was surrounding it an atmosphere which appealed strongly to a Welshman. At these gatherings they often cemented friendships and made new friends. They met not as a gathering of the clans, but as a huge family party. The Eisteddfod had brought to light some of the best Welshmen.

Mr. Balfour's recent splendid tribute to the Eisteddfod and the Welshman's love of music was justly deserved. Some of them believed that Wales would become one day a great musical country, if only her great musical gifts were turned into the right channel and carefully developed. The Eisteddfod had something to learn from the younger institution. That it was prepared to do so had been amply demonstrated at the recent London National Eisteddfod, where an admirable list of subjects had been drawn up, and the performances in some cases had been such as to prove that Welsh singers and choirs in particular were capable of tackling the most difficult music with excellent results. The most wonderful thing about the Eisteddfod was its extraordinary vitality. If the English competition festival movement could become possessed of the quality that made for endurance, and if both institutions could have as their common aim the spreading of the love of music and its development, then there would be no doubts or fears as to the future of music in this country.

COMBINED PERFORMANCES AT COMPETITION FESTIVALS.

By MR. IVOR ATKINS (Worcester Cathedral).

Mr. Ivor Atkins said that he regarded the combination of choirs as the most inspiring and helpful part of a competition festival. The whole work of a festival gathering should lead to this end. There might be difficulties in certain cases, but with "close" village choir centres such combination was nearly always feasible. The bringing forward of only winning choirs to perform was to be deprecated. Probably other choirs shut out had lost by only a mark or two, and yet they were not heard. It rarely happened that first-prize winners embodied in their performance all the merits of other choirs. Perfection generally laid with the whole.

Each singer in a choral competition should be made to feel that he or she was part of a festival, and that the work only reached its due climax in the joint performance of some masterpiece. The final rehearsal and the performance were the things to live for.

As to the means to be adopted to secure adequate and impressive combined performance, it was important that the music to be studied should be announced early in the autumn, before choirs had formulated their plans for the coming season. A competent conductor was indispensable. He had to be an inspiring force. If possible all the choirs, or at least their conductors, should be assembled in the autumn, and the general conductor should explain his views as to the work chosen, and draw attention to its special features and difficulties. On the festival day it was imperative that a proper amount of time should be allocated for rehearsal. Conductors sometimes had to work under very trying conditions. The official time-table, even if adhered to, often left ridiculously inadequate time for rehearsal, but when the day arrived it was sometimes found that the judge—"the great critic, profoundly skilled and analytic, distinguishing and dividing hairs twixt south and south-west side"—had been so conscientious that it was lucky if the proceedings were only an hour late. All was chaos. Audience and choirs were mixed up: choirs eventually found their way to their places with martyrdom on their faces, and a thousand mute voices proclaimed the fact that they had had no tea! A glance at the clock warned them that an hour or so later they must be fed, dressed, and back again on the platform. This was not the way in which months of careful preparation should be treated.

All this unsatisfactory condition was due in a large measure to a fundamentally wrong conception of the aims of a festival. It was not enough to teach village choir part-songs and glees. They must be brought into touch with great music. In Worcestershire (Kidderminster) this year they had encouraged combined performances from the first. They had arranged for the combined rehearsal to begin at 3.30 p.m., and found that everything worked satisfactorily. Two combined performances were given on separate days. Bach's cantata, "The Lord is a sun and shield" was given by the town choirs, and Mendelssohn's "42nd Psalm" and César Franck's "150th Psalm" by the village choirs. There were faults, but on the whole there was brightness and vitality, and, above all, sheer joy in the massed singing. He did not desire to imply that no good work was done at festivals, where, owing to local difficulties, combined performances had not yet been found possible, but he trusted that these difficulties would be overcome and that the time was not far distant when combined performances of works would be universal.

THE TRAINING OF FEMALE-VOICE CHOIRS.

By MRS. MARY LAYTON.

Mrs. Layton began by remarking that she could not hope to say anything new to such an audience. Her experience had been with young girls from the age of 12 to 14 years, and of groups of women of various ages and generally of only average ability. In dealing with this raw material her underlying thought had ever been that it was not for her to create, but rather, as it were, to restore natural power. The early suppleness of childhood had to be re-discovered by simple exercises that promoted deep breathing, released stiffness, and increased lung capacity. Then followed gentle throat exercises that included "kooing," on the plan advocated by the late Emil Behnke, to whose teaching she owed much of her success. After many excursions in other directions she was always drawn back to the use of Behnke's simple exercises. In passing, she remarked that these exercises were often terribly misused. She endeavoured to impart a feeling of buoyancy, never allowing the upper bony structure to weigh down the delicate and elastic reservoir of air. Her singing birds were told to fly. The wearing of loose garments was preached. Scales and arpeggios over two octaves were practised for about ten minutes at every rehearsal. All classes of voice could manage this range by employing a little nasal resonance. The chromatic scale was also practised. The extended compass used enabled the whole class to blend all in register. Nearly all her pupils could sing from the low F to high A. Experience deepened her faith in the superiority of the tonic sol-fa system. Members of her classes who had learned this system in childhood responded to all the work of the choir most delightfully, and thus saved much time when difficult passages had to be attacked. Her regret was that so many other grown-ups would not go through a steady course of tonic sol-fa training, but preferred to rely on ear, instinct theory, or piano-playing. The time-names as used by tonic sol-faists were also extremely useful. She used them in connection with scales and exercises for flexibility, the names being employed with the tune. The Swiss way of singing tra la la on arpeggios was a cheerful way of practising rapid passages. The vowels oo, o, aa, ai, ee were used in turn. Then the vowels of a new piece were studied, and sometimes the whole piece was sung to the vowels only. Difficult passages were sung staccato and legato. Her mixed-voice choir had on the previous evening so practised Leslie's "Charm me asleep." Latin and Italian words were learned by pattern. The words were intoned on a monotone. For German a language teacher came and gave a pattern. With all pieces sung to foreign languages a literal translation was provided. Then, when all this mechanical work was well forward, the spirituality of the music was studied. Every singer had to forget self and identify her personality with the high, the noble, the aspiring, and other expressions demanded by the piece. When the class had got to this point she had found at times an exaltation of spirit beyond the description of words. They could not always realize the high ideals that led them on, but at least they could, to some extent, idealize the real everyday work.

In addition to the foregoing the following papers are reported in THE SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW edition of THE RECORD:—"The elementary schools and the competitive festival movement," by Mrs. Commeline; "The competitive festival movement from a school-master's point of view," by Mr. Stubbings; "The duties and functions of a competition festival judge," by Dr. W. G. McNaught.

ALBERTA, CANADA.

May 4, 5.

The second Annual Musical Festival of the province of Alberta, Canada, was held at Edmonton. The competitive entries were very large, and the interest shown was most pronounced. The standard of performance in the various items on the programme was in most cases a decided improvement on that previously attained. At the concluding concert held in the Skating Rink, under the patronage of His Honour Lieut.-Gov. Bulyea and party from Government House, nearly 2,000 people were present, and an excellent programme was rendered by the prize-winners. A massed chorus of 250 voices, accompanied by an efficient orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Vernon Barford, performed various choral numbers, including Cowen's Bridal Chorus and Bishop's "Now tramp o'er moss and fell." Miss Webster was the soloist, Mr. Rhys Thomas and Mr. James W. Matthews were the adjudicators.

Features of competition week included a luncheon to the judges by Mr. John Wanamaker and the reception on Musicians' Assembly Day, June 29, when 2,000 music teachers were entertained. The meeting was addressed by Mr. Wanamaker, whose speech will never be forgotten.

In addition to the awards of first merit granted to successful organizations, each individual participant in the competition was promised a singer's medal.

PORTSMOUTH.

BAND OF HOPE, June 30.

At the forty-first annual meeting of the Portsmouth Band of Hope Union a large audience assembled to hear twelve children's choirs compete.

In the senior competition for three-part choirs of forty voices the test-pieces were: "Sweet day so cool" (Macfarren) and Mendelssohn's "Lift thine eyes." Lake Road sang beautifully, and won the first place with 139 marks. London Road obtained second place.

In the junior section, limited to two-part choirs of twenty voices, there were nine entries. The test-pieces were "I would that my love" (Mendelssohn) and "Rest, my baby, rest" (Taubert). The first-prize was won by Victoria Street, and Lake Road was a close second.

Mr. Maskell Hardy adjudicated. He remarked that the outstanding features of the competition were the clear enunciation of the children and the rather painful conscientiousness of nearly all the conductors. He congratulated the conductor of Lake Road Choir, who was a positive genius in the art of training children's choirs.

SOUTHPORT.—In the report of this festival given in our last issue, the Birkdale Choir (Miss Edith Griffiths), not Ancoats, should have been placed first.

DOVER.—The conductor of the winning choir in the chief choral section was Mr. F. Wilson Parish.

THE
ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

TENTERDEN STREET, HANOVER SQUARE.

INSTITUTED, 1822.

INCORPORATED BY ROYAL CHARTER, 1830.

Patron: HIS MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND STRATHEARN, K.G.

PRINCIPAL—SIR ALEXANDER CAMPBELL MACKENZIE, Mus.D., LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.A.M.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC offers to students of both sexes (whether amateur or professional) a thorough training in all branches of music under the most able and distinguished Professors. In addition to receiving individual lessons in the various branches of the Curriculum, students have the advantage of attending the Orchestral, Choral, Chamber Music Classes, and the weekly Lectures on music and musicians. Evidence of their progress is given at the Fortnightly and Public Concerts and by periodical Operatic and Dramatic Performances.

There are three Terms in the Academic year—viz., the Michaelmas Term, from Michaelmas to Christmas; the Lent Term, from early in January to Easter; and the Midsummer Term, from early in May until the end of July.

The Fee for the ordinary curriculum is 11 Guineas per Term.

A large number of Scholarships and Prizes are founded and are competed for periodically.

Students who show special merit and ability receive the distinction of being elected by Directors Associates of the Institution, and are thereby entitled to the use after their names of the initials A.R.A.M. Students who distinguish themselves in the musical profession after leaving the Institution may be elected by the Directors Fellows of the Royal Academy of Music, and are thereupon entitled to the use after their names of the initials F.R.A.M.

Subscribers have the privilege of attending the Lectures and Public Concerts and of inducing friends in proportion to the amount of their subscriptions.

An examination of persons trained independently of the Academy is held twice a year—during the Summer and Christmas vacations—successful candidates at which are elected Associates of the Academy, and are thereupon entitled to the use after their names of the initials L.R.A.M. The syllabus is issued annually at Easter. Last day for entry for the Summer Examination, June 30; for the Christmas Examination, October 30.

An examination of persons engaged in the Training of Children's Voices is held in Summer and during the Christmas Vacation, and a certificate will be granted to successful candidates.

Prospectus, entry form, and all further information may be obtained on application.
