GRANTHAM, AND ITS STATELY PARISH CHURCH.

Grantham, a pretty town . . . for pleasure I consider it comparable to most inland places of England; famous is the steeple for the exceeding height of the shaft, which is of stone.—Diary, August 20, 1654.

JOHN EVELYN.

To the through-traveller on the Great Northern railway, or to the more modern motorist, Grantham is little more than a name. Should its outstanding features come across his range of vision, he might exclaim, 'A fine church,' and, having said that, he would speed on his way. Suppose, however, he were inclined to break his journey, if only for an hour or two, would he be repaid by a visit to this old Lincolnshire town? Let us endeavour to answer that question.

Always a royal domain in ancient times, Grantham has interesting kingly and queenly associations. According to Domesday Book the manor at one time belonged to Editha, queen of Edward the Confessor. In 1209, King John honoured the town with his presence, for what purpose history recordeth not; but on February 23, 1213, he held his court at the Angel Inn, and there is a tradition that he hanged two men in the gateway of that ancient hostel. In the same room wherein King John held his court, over the said gateway, Richard III., in 1483, signed the death warrant of Buckingham. Charles I. several times passed through the town: on his royal progress to receive the Crown of Scotland at Holyrood, on his journey to York, and on various occasions during the troublous times which followed. Cromwell gave the first proof of his military genius near Grantham, when he defeated twenty-four troops of the King's Horse and dragoons at Belton. More than two hundred years had elapsed before an English monarch again passed through Grantham, when Queen Victoria received a loyal address from the town on her first railway journey to Scotland, September 6, 1855. While in this queenly region, mention must be made of a royal funeral procession, in November, 1290, when the body of the beloved Queen Eleanor paused for a night at Grantham on its way to Westminster. The memorial cross to commemorate the event was unhappily destroyed by the Parliamentary soldiers between 1642 and 1646. It stood on the west side of St. Peter's Hill, therefore the commonplace obelisk in the Market Place, bearing an inscription that it occupies the site of the Eleanor cross, furnishes false information.

GRANTHAM GRAMMAR SCHOOL, WHERE SIR ISAAC NEWTON WAS EDUCATED.

(Photograph by Mr. A. M. Emary, Grantham.)

Reference has been made to the Angel Inn which stands on the Great North Road. One of the three remaining mediæval hostels in England, the Angel dates from the reign of Edward IV. The arch of the gateway is surmounted by a fine oriel window, and on each side of the gateway, at the spring of the arch, is a sculptured head, one representing Edward III., the other his queen, Philippa of Hainault. Under the curious bequest of one Michael Solomon, made in 1760, the Angel is subject to an annual charge of 40s. for a sermon against drunkenness to be preached in the parish church. Another old inn is the George, which was not unknown to Charles Dickens. In chapter v. of 'Nicholas Nickleby'—describing the coach journey of Nicholas and his fellow-travellers to Yorkshire, 'and what befel them on the road'—we read: 'The night and the snow came on together, and dismal enough they were. . . . Twenty miles further on [from Stamford], two of the front outside passengers wisely availing themselves of their arrival at one of the best inns in England, turned in for the night at the George at Grantham.'

One other literary association with the town must be mentioned, Sir Walter Scott's novel 'The Heart of Midlothian.' Who has not been thrilled by the heroic journey, mostly on foot, of Jeanie Deans from Edinburgh to London? Its most tragic event occurred at 'Willingham,' now identified with the beautiful village of Belton, situated about two-and-a-half miles north-east of the town. How does the Wizard of the North describe it?

They were now close by the village, one of those beautiful scenes which are so often found in merry England, where the cottages, instead of being built in two direct lines on each side of a dusty high-road, stand in detached groups, interspersed not only with large oaks and elms, but with fruit-trees, so many of which were at this time in flourish, that the grove seemed enamelled with their crimson and white blossoms. In the centre of the hamlet stood the parish church, and its little Gothic tower, from which at present was heard the Sunday chime of bells.

It was one of those old-fashioned Gothic parish churches which are frequent in England, the most cleanly, decent, and reverential places of worship that are, perhaps, anywhere, to be found in the Christian world.

In spite of her strict Presbyterian upbringing, Jeanie, in her agitated frame of mind, attended the morning service. 'Not even the sound of the organ, and of one or two flutes which accompanied the psalmody, prevented her from following her guide into the chancel of the church.' As this incident belongs to the year 1737, Scott's description of the instrumental accompaniment to the service at Belton Church is doubtless a little lacking in accuracy. Do not an organ and one or two flutes form a curious combination? We may leave the reader to answer this question. But to return to Grantham.

The Grammar School is an ancient and famous foundation. According to Mr. Arthur F. Leach, in his valuable book 'English Schools at the Reformation, 1546-8,' it dates back to 1329. This date is two hundred years earlier than that usually given, viz., the foundation of the School by Richard Fox, Bishop of Winchester, in 1528. It is true that Fox built the school house and master's house at that time, but the youth of Grantham had already enjoyed for two centuries certain educational advantages. Edward VI. re-endowed the School, which is now generally known as the King's School. The photograph on p. 565 shows the old building, in the Late Perpendicular style, which stands on the north side of the church. Its most famous alumnus was Sir Isaac Newton (1642-1727). Born at Woolsthorpe, by Colsterworth, a hamlet just off the Great North Road and near the town, Isaac Newton was a scholar at Grantham Grammar School for two years (1654-56). No wonder that Grantham is proud of this distinction. A fine statue, by Theed, of the great philosopher forms a prominent feature of the town's possessions. The bronze figure is twelve feet in height, and the stone pedestal on which it stands is fourteen feet high: the monument was formally unveiled on September 21, 1858, by Lord Brougham.

Nature and Nature's laws lay hid in night:
God said, 'Let Newton be,' and all was light.

The glory of Grantham is its stately parish church. It is the only church in England dedicated to St. Wulfram, the 7th century Archbishop of Sens. Born about A.D. 650, St. Wulfram (or Wulfrann) devoted himself to missionary work among the Frisians. The great leader of the mission to the Frisians was the Northumbrian St. Willibord (Clemens), in admiration of whose work and in order to join him, St. Wulfram resigned his Archbishopric of Sens. When Northumbria conquered Mercia—where for some time missionaries had worked—Christianity was established there; its religious life became bound up with that of the northern kingdom and the Mercians joined in the task of converting their kindred the Frisians and Franks. So zealous a man as St. Wulfram would be held in high repute among the Mercians of that part of the country now called Lincolnshire, hence the dedication of Grantham Church to the Archbishop of Sens.

The following traditional story is recorded of St. Wulfram. He was on the point of baptizing Radbod, the Frisian King, when the latter, standing with one foot in the water, inquired whether his unbaptised ancestors were to be found in heaven or in hell, and being assured nave, of fine Late Norman (c. 1170), are survivals of the earlier church, as are the base moulding and string course under the east window, and other features. About the year 1280 the nave was extended with two fine bays, and the magnificent north aisle was built to the end of the first bay of the chancel. The north aisle has this peculiarity, that its bays are much wider than those of the nave; the west window is a noble one of six lights. The south aisle of the chancel is flowing Decorated (c. 1360) and probably formed a Lady Chapel. The imposing north porch also served as a chapel, as is proved by the piscina in its east wall; but as the porch was a thoroughfare, with an open archway in both walls, Sir Gilbert Scott was of opinion that services must have been carried on in the open air.

that they were in hell, he withdrew his foot and declared that he would not be separated from his royal ancestors! So the story goes.

From time immemorial a church has stood upon the site of the present one. Here were long preserved some relics of St. Wulfram, and here were buried the bodies of St. Symphorianus, the Martyr, and St. Elritha, the Virgin. There are foundations of Saxon and Norman buildings. The present edifice dates from the 13th century; it furnishes examples of all styles, but chiefly of the best periods of Early English and Decorated. It is in the form of a parallelogram, 205 feet long and 86 feet wide, with no division between the nave and the chancel. Six pillars, three on each side of the

To return to the interior. Memorial is made of the double crypt, both vaulted. The photograph on p. 570 shows the crypt with a peculiar recess in the centre, reached by a frontal. Here, in that recess, were kept the relics of St. Wulfram upon a 'a sylver and copper shryne, called the shryne, was sold, and bought the shryne by a sylver pott full gilt and an ewer of gold.' The church possesses two libraries. One, founded by Dr. Newcome, a dean of Rochester in the 17th century, is located at the west end. The much older library is of greater importance and interest. Founded by one Francis Trigg in the 15th century, the books are preserved in a room above the south porch (see the photograph on p. 568). It will be observed that some of the books, about seventy in number, are 'chained books.' The collection includes Henry More's works, presented by himself, and a mutilated portion of the rare Antwerp Biblia Polyglotta, printed at the Plantin Press, 1569-72, given by Bishop Sanderson, of Lincoln, in 1661. Other interesting features of this room are the ancient fireplace and chair, and a beautiful Perpendicular oriel window looking from a great height into the church.

Chantries, to the number of eight, formerly existed in Grantham church. The earliest of these (1360) was founded for the maintenance of a chaplain, on condition that he should celebrate divine service therein 'in surplice and choral habit' and pray for the souls of the founders and others. The 'choral habit' is more suggestive of the 'garment of praise' than the garb of prayer. The benefactions include one of Madam Sarah Ellys, who 'built the lofts in the north isle at her own charge for bachelors to sit in.' The former altar piece was painted by one Emmanuel, a Jew, who introduced the figures of Moses and Aaron, with the Ten Commandments, the Lord's Prayer, and the Apostles' Creed!

What shall be said of the graceful steeple of the church? The view on p. 567 is the best answer to that question. But this may be added: it is one of the greatest works of the 14th century. The tower itself is 140 feet high, and the wonderful spire, richly crocketed, is of the same height, making a total of 281 feet. Although it is fifth in the order of height of cathedrals and churches in this country, Sir Gilbert Scott said that it ranks second to Salisbury among English steeples. The bells, ten in number, date from 1752-75. The sum of £516.0.2 was subscribed for their erection in 1753, a large sum in those days. Three of the inscriptions are so quaint as to be worthy of quotation:

2nd.—If you have a judicious ear, you'll own my voice is sweet and clear.

9th.—Ye ringers all that prize your health and happiness, Be merry, sober, wise, and you'll the same possess.

10th.—(Before it was recast in 1818)—

In wedlock's bonds all ye who join
With hands your hearts unite,
So shall our tuneful tongues combine
To laud the nuptial rite.

The earliest known record of the music of St. Wulfram, Grantham, is the gift of an organ to the church by Dr. Farmery, chancellor of the diocese in the year 1640, a critical time in the history of England. This gift raised the ire of certain fanatics in the town, who considered the matter of sufficient importance to be laid before Parliament; thereupon the Corporation drew up a most temperate petition which, with many of its quaint archaisms rendered in modern spelling, reads as follows:

To the Right Honourable the Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of the Commons House of Parliament.

The humble Certificate of the Alderman and Burgesses of Grantham in the County of Lincoln assembled in the Alderman's Court there holden the 30th day of October 1640.

Touching the Orgaines lately erected in the parish Church of Grantham aforesaid, and the removing and placing of the Communion Table and Railing in the same as it now standeth . . . humbly sheweth that the Orgaines then intended to be erected in our Church by the said Chancellor should not in any sort be chargeable to the Parish either in respect of the orgaines, the setting them up for the . . . or for the present or for future maintenance of them, or of an Organist to play upon them, And that in case there should be at any time after any fail made in the maintenance of them according to their promise, that then the Orgaines should be taken away and removed.

The Alderman, Comburgesses and Burgesses of Grantham in that Court assembled, who be the representative body of that Borough, did with great thankfulness to the Chancellor [Mr. Doctor Farmery] give (as far as in them lay) their consent to and for the placing of the said Orgaines in the said Church. And we do also certify that to this day the parish hath not been put to any charge for the maintenance of the Orgaines or Organist.

And we do further certify that we are still very willing to have the Orgaines continued and used in our Church. As they have been, viz to accompany the singing of the Psalm after the common and plain tunes appointed to be used in the church so that for the maintenance of them and of an organist the Parish be not in any sort charged, Considering them in their own nature to be things indifferent. And finding by experience that by that use of them hitherto practiced in our Church first in the parish Clerk signifying what psalm is to be sung And the Organist then distinguishing the tune All persons that can read have time to be unto the Psalms, And the confusion which sometimes heretofore hath happened in our Church, being a very late and spacious Church, in singing the Psalms appointed, and divers tunes, is taken away. But we are and shall be willing to submit ourselves to be ordered therein by Authority.

Lastly we acknowledge that understanding that some of our Parish after this our consent in Court did intend and did frame a Petition to the Archbishop of Canterbury in name of the Parish for the removing of these Orgaines, the then Alderman and divers of the Comburgesses and Burgesses did by their letter inform the Chancellor thereof, he being then at London, to the end the Archbishop might be certified the truth by showing the said letter unto him.

The remainder of the petition referred to the position of the Communion Table which 'standeth now much better than before for the edifying of the Communicants, and for the avoiding that profane usage by boys and others in the time of sermons in

In the year 1736 John Byfield, senr., erected a three-manual organ—Great, Choir, and Echo. It had a double front and stood on a screen about the centre of the church. A panel on this old organ gave a list of the subscribers to the instrument, the various sums amounting to £672. No other record appears to exist concerning this organ or the player thereupon. On July 19, 1745, the trustees agreed to advertise 'that the place of the Organist for this town is now vacant and to invite all Masters of Musick . . . for to appear at their

...tting under the same playing and sleeping and standing about the same praying and talking to the offence and disturbance of the congregation which inconveniences will hardly be reformed in case the Communion Table should be placed again in the old place,' and so on. No wonder that such profanation disturbed the congregation. The petition was, however, returned unrepresented by the two borough members, who considered it unfit to be laid before Parliament.

...own expense as Candidates for the said place, on the first Wednesday in October next, at which time all the candidates are to shew their skill in musick, and the place will be soon after disposed of to the Best Hand and the Best Character, the salary of which is thirty pounds a year.' A little research among the old London newspapers at the British Museum has enabled us to discover the said advertisement. It appeared in the General Evening Post of Tuesday, July 30, to Thursday,

August 1, 1745, and was repeated in the next issue. Here it is, verbatim et literatim :

GRANTHAM, LINCOLNSHIRE, AUGUST THE 1ST., 1745.

The Organist's place for this Church (the annual Salary of which is thirty Pounds) being now vacant, all Persons, who intend to be Candidates, for it, are desired to be at Grantham, at their own Expence, on the first Wednesday in October next, there to shew their Skill in Musick, before such Masters of it as will be appointed to judge of their several Performances; and the Organist's Place will be soon after filled up, with him who appears to be the best Master of Musick, with the best moral Character.

On October 2, Mr. William Lee, organist of Southwell Minster, and Mr. Walter Collingwood, organist of Newark Church, came to Grantham to adjudicate upon the candidates. In their opinion 'Mr. Sweet, Mr. Wright, and Mr. Sharon were the three best Masters of Musick, and that Mr. Hutchinson and Mr. Strathes might be improved.' By ballot of the Trustees on October 19 Mr. Sweet was appointed; but he had to agree 'to pay 5s. a week to Mr. Strother during the time he continues to play,' and also to pay '1s. to the poor-box each time he omitted to take the service—Sundays, Wednesday mornings, and all Holidays.' As an act of grace the Trustees allowed Mr. Sharon 'Two guineas to bear his charges home again.'

In 1755 Mr. Sweet retired, and was succeeded by Mr. Andrew Strother. This gentleman appears to have been a somewhat interesting person. He was evidently connected with the organ for some time. In 1789, when he was sixty years old, various unecclesiastical entries concerning him begin to appear in the Trustees' accounts: e.g., 'Paid Mr. Strother for a hat, 8s., and gave him 2s. 6d.; Gave him 5s. 6d., and for making his breeches, 3s. 3d.; Great coat, 15s.' He was allowed the sum of 2s. 6d. per half-year for shaving, and there are other entries for his shoes, board, washing, hats, &c. Strother evidently became past work, for in 1808 Francis Sharp was appointed joint-organist, Strother to receive the salary during his lifetime and Sharp to receive 15 guineas 'as long as the Duke of Rutland continues his subscription to that amount, and after Mr. Strother's death to have the £30 in addition.' The following entry in the Trustees' accounts speaks for itself:

To cash paid for the funeral expenses [January 1, 1816] of Andrew Strother, the late organist, who was appointed as long ago as the year 1755, and who died in indigent circumstances having never a larger stipend than £30 per ann. as organist—£10 17s. 5d.

To return to Francis Sharp, who was buried October 6, 1832, aged seventy-six. He may have been the author of 'New Guida di Musica, being a complete book of instructions for beginners on the pianoforte' (Op. 6), and the composer of 'Six sonatas for the harpsichord.' A single-sheet ballad, 'Poor Mary,' was certainly composed by him. After Sharp's death the Trustees decided to increase the salary to £40 per annum, and to require the organist to teach a competent number of boys and girls to sing in the church, 'for which an additional remuneration may be expected.' Mr. Whale, organist of Lincoln Cathedral, was the adjudicator, and Mr. William Dixon, an early articulated pupil of Dr. Z. Buck, of Norwich, was appointed, the six unsuccessful candidates being allowed two guineas for a dinner at the hotel.

In 1809 G. P. England turned the Echo into a Swell organ, and he doubtless carried out other work on the Byfield instrument. Further improvements were made in 1833, when the re-opening of the organ was celebrated by the Grantham Musical Festival, held on January 9, 1834, under the presidency of the Duke of Rutland and the patronage of a large number of the neighbouring aristocracy and gentry. The Duke of Wellington, then a guest of the Earl and Countess Brownlow, was also present with his host and hostess. Clara Novello, at that time a girl of fifteen, was the principal lady vocalist! Henry Phillips was the chief bass, and Thirwall led the band, while the conductor was the organist, Mr. Dixon, 'who will preside at the organ and pianoforte.' Two performances, both of a miscellaneous character, were given, in the morning at the church ('Great care will be taken to have the Church well aired'), and in the evening at the theatre. The Court Journal of January 18, 1834, gave a long notice of the festival. We are told that 'in the Patrons' gallery were congregated, at the hour of twelve, the Duke of Rutland, who sat in the centre of the first row in an ornamental chair.' The vociferous reception—and in the church, too!—accorded to the Iron Duke is recorded in a further extract from the Court Journal :

The Duke of Wellington's arrival at the grand entrance was hailed by loud cheers from those who had assembled around, whilst the crowded audience on his entré into the interior of the Church, arose, as with one accord, and testified their grateful admiration of the hero of a hundred battles by repeated and enthusiastic plaudits; Mr. Dixon, the Organist, with excellent discrimination, playing, ad spirita, 'See the Conquering Hero comes.' His Grace, on ascending the Patrons' tribune slightly bowed in acknowledgment of the kindly feeling so powerfully evinced towards him.

The local newspaper report contained the following reference to the Duke at the festival :

The Duke of Wellington was there for only a very short time, he being troubled with deafness, and having a painful sensation from powerful sounds.

In 1865 Messrs. Foster & Andrews built an organ which was placed in the third arch of the north aisle. Up to that time the instrument had stood upon the screen. In the same year William Dixon resigned the office of organist; to him succeeded his brother George, afterwards Dr. Dixon, who after twenty-one years' service, resigned in 1886.

The present organ, of which a view is given on p. 569, was built by Messrs. Norman & Beard in 1906. Subjoined is the specification of the instrument; the stops marked * are prepared for only.

The choir of Grantham Church is an entirely voluntary one and numbers fifty voices; an additional choir of ladies' voices assists on special occasions of oratorio or cantata performances. Mr. Richard T. Back, the organist and choirmaster, began his musical career as a chorister of Peterborough Cathedral (1875-81). He was afterwards articled to the organist, Dr. Haydn Keeton, and acted as his assistant from 1884-6. After having been organist of St. Mark's Church, Peterborough, Mr. Back was appointed to Grantham Parish Church on April 19, 1886. Curiously enough, exactly four years later he was married to the only child of the late Dr. Jeans, J.P., of Grantham. Mr. Back has long taken a practical interest in the Volunteer movement. He was invited to take command of the cycle section attached to the 2nd V.B. Lincolnshire Regiment, eventually becoming Captain commanding 'B' company of that battalion. It was in the early days of his military hobby that he was induced to initiate and conduct a performance of Gilbert and Sullivan's opera 'The Yeomen of the Guard' for the funds of the local Volunteer companies. So much success attended the effort that it caused the formation of the Grantham Amateur Operatic Society, which he conducted for ten seasons, the proceeds being devoted to the benefit of local charities. In addition to his work in Grantham, Mr. Back is conductor of the Bourne Choral Society.

For valued help in the preparation of this article the writer is indebted to Mrs. R. T. Back for her kindness in searching the Corporation records, and, through the courtesy of Mr. Aubrey H. Malim, the Town Clerk, in making extracts therefrom, and in other ways; also to Mr. A. M. Emary, of Grantham, for his excellent photographs.

DOTTED CROTCHET.

TWO IMPORTANT BOOKS ON MUSIC.*

CATALOGUE OF THE MUSICIANS' COMPANY EXHIBITION.

England can claim the distinction of having initiated music exhibitions. The first—held at South Kensington in 1872—was restricted to ancient musical instruments made before 1880. Thirteen years later a more comprehensive scheme, at the Royal Albert Hall, formed an exceedingly interesting adjunct to the Inventions Exhibition of 1885. On the continent the valuable collection brought together at Vienna in 1892 was most noteworthy. Since then, there have been similar displays in England, though none of such importance as the Music Loan Exhibition organized by the Worshipful Company of Musicians in 1904. We have before us a complete set of the catalogues of the above-named exhibitions previous to that held five years ago. These are all hand catalogues, hastily compiled under the inevitable conditions attending the preparation of the various exhibits. As such they are useful for reference, and, as time goes on, they become valuable. But nothing so complete, so comprehensive, and—may we say it?—so interesting in the nature of a music-exhibition catalogue has appeared as the publication under notice.

Consisting of some 350 pages, this handsomely got-up quarto volume can be reviewed from two main points of view—its subject-matter and its illustrations. Taking the latter feature first, the eleven photogravure plates include portraits of Handel, Haydn, and Monteverde; an elaborate positive organ of the 16th century; the Countess of Dudley's Ruckers virginal (1642) and Mr. Arthur Hill's Liversidge's virginal (1666). Other portraits are those of Dr. Arne and Dr. John Bull. No less interesting are the facsimiles. These include specimens of the handwriting of Bach, Orlando Gibbons, Handel, Mendelssohn, Henry Purcell and Wagner. Bach is represented by a document—signed, sealed, and settled—acknowledging the receipt of five thalers; Orlando Gibbons by a memorandum at the bottom of a bill of John Burrard, organ builder to Westminster Abbey in 1625, in which Gibbons says: 'I have already cut him off ten shillings.' The neat calligraphy of Wagner is shown in the opening lines of the first draft of his 'Tristan,' and the fine 'pothooks and hangers' (pace Samuel Wesley) of Handel are displayed in a characteristic letter—three quarto pages long—written from Dublin, on December 29, 1741, to Charles Jennens, the compiler of the text of the 'Messiah.' The letter begins: 'Sr—it was with the greatest Pleasure I saw the Continuation of Your kindness by the Lines You was pleased to send me, in order to be prefix'd. to Your Oratorio

Messiah, which I set to Musick before I left England.' It concludes thus: 'I have the Honour to be Sr Your most obliged and most humble Servant, GEORGE FRIDERIC HANDEL.'

The facsimiles include the opening bars of Mendelssohn's Scherzo for full orchestra. This from his Octet, he scored for his Symphony in C minor, to replace the minuet and trio, when he conducted that work on his first appearance in England, at a Philharmonic Society's concert in 1829. No less legible are the notes of Henry Purcell, as shown in the first six bars of his 'The Yorkshire Feast Song.' Many other illustrations—pages from old and rare books, photographs of beautiful and valuable instruments, some of them quaint—are profusely scattered throughout the pages of this edition de luxe catalogue, whereby its attractiveness is greatly enhanced.

Turning to the literary features of the volume, we find that it is divided into six main sections: Music-printing; Printed music; Instruments; Portraits, &c.; Manuscripts (music and letters); Concert and theatre bills, programmes, and miscellaneous. Except the last-named section, which speaks for itself, to each division is prefixed a preface written by an expert in that particular subject, while the general prefaces include the 'Introduction to the original catalogue,' and a list of the seventeen lectures delivered in connection with the Exhibition.

There remains to be mentioned one important feature in which this Catalogue differs from others of its kind. We refer to the copious notes to many of the entries which throw light upon the most important exhibits and at the same time remove the subject-matter from the aridness of bald description into the fertilized region of readability. A cataloguer pure and simple who is deeply dyed in the technicalities of his calling, would probably object to these illuminating sidelights upon the various exhibits; if so, he can pass them by: but that they add immensely to the interest of the descriptions, the general reader will not have the slightest doubt. In order to prove this point, we venture to give a few specimens of these 'notes,' selected from each section of the catalogue.

Under the entry 'Psalterium et Hymnarium' [1470-80] we read:

No place or date. The stave lines only printed. This frequently happened in the case of early liturgical works, and possibly shows that the printer was unable to print the notes; but it is more probable that the notes were omitted in order that the authorities of individual churches might have the opportunity of inserting the music of the service which was according to their own particular 'use.'

Sebastian Virdung's 'Musica getuscht' (1511)—a book that is as interesting as it is rare—is thus referred to:

This extremely rare book (a small oblong 9 in. by 5½ in.) written in dialogue, is quite encyclopedic in its survey; moreover, it is the oldest work describing the precursors of modern musical instruments. The illustrations are by no means its least attractive feature The letterpress of this quaint old book contains some curious views held by the author—e.g., that kettledrums are instruments which cause 'much unrest (or tribulation) to pious old people, to sick folk, and to the devout in cloisters who have to read, and study, and pray'; and so little do the drums find favour with Virdung, that he goes so far as to say: 'I verily believe that the devil has invented and made them'!

In the Instrumental section the Flemish positive organ (1592) is described in the following terms:

This instrument has always been known as 'Queen Elizabeth's Organ,' but it was the opinion of its last owner, the late Mr. J. Snowden Henry, M.P., of East Deen, Bonchurch, Isle of Wight, that, 'having been in the Isle of Wight so long, if it had a royal owner it is more likely to have been the Princess Elizabeth—a daughter of Charles I.—who died at Carisbrooke.' There is, however, no evidence that it ever belonged to a member of the royal family.

The organ bears the date 1592 and a quotation from Psalm cl., of which the English translation is: 'Praise the Lord with stringed instruments and organ.' It is probably of Flemish origin, and appears to have been specially made for an Earl of Montrose, whose arms are prominent in the decoration, and whose initial 'J.' (for John Graham) is so reated in the ornamentation of the case that the monogram forms an 'M' for 'Montrose,' under a coronet. This monogram appears twice on the upper portion of the case, and alternates with a representation of a human head on the front of the keys.

The compass of the instrument is from E to C—45 notes, and the stops are 'Stopped Diapason,' 'Flute,' and 'Regal,' the last named extending from B to C—26 notes. There is also a tremolo which, used in conjunction with the 'Regal' top, gives the effect of a 'Vox humana.' The organ measures 5 ft. 9 in. high by 3 ft. 6 in. wide by 1 ft. 9 in. deep. There is no draw-stop action of the usual description, but the slides are worked direct, a carved knob being fixed to each end.

The pipes are of wood, and are most elaborately carved in such a way as to resemble, so far as was possible, the Scotch whistle. Probably the original organ had but two stops, the 'Stopped diapason' and the 'Flute,' the 'Regal' being added as an afterthought, possibly before the instrument left the workshop. In 1889, at the dispersal of the late Mr. Snowden Henry's collection at Messrs. Christie's, it realized 200 guineas. Exhibited at South Kensington, 1872.

On the portrait of Monteverde (1567-1643) is appended a note which reads:

This portrait long passed as that of Antonio Stradivari. It was presented by the late Signor Giacomo Stradivari, a descendant of the great violin-maker, to J. B. Vuillaume, and was acquired by its present owner from a member of the latter's family. Everything about the portrait not only points to a date considerably earlier than the time of Stradivari, but to an original who was a musician. A comparison of it with the undoubted portrait of the composer, together with other evidence, affords reasonably satisfactory proof that this portrait does represent Claudio Monteverde, who was also a native of Cremona.

His Majesty the King headed the list of lenders of some valuable manuscripts from the Royal Music Library at Buckingham Palace, of which the most precious was the autograph of Handel's earliest oratorio. Here is the note on that extremely interesting volume:

The first page is headed 'Messiah': on the same page Handel has written the date when he commenced the oratorio, August 22, 1741. The end of the first part is dated August 28, 1741; that of the second part, September 6, 1741; while on the last page of all is written 'S. D. G. | Fine dell Oratorio | G. F. Handel ♪ Septembr 12 | 1741 | ausgefüllt den 14 dieses.' Handel bequeathed this and all his other autograph scores to his amanuensis, Christopher Smith, who, in return for kindnesses shown to him, presented them to King George the Third.

We have already referred to the letter written by Handel to Charles Jennens, therefore two more short quotations from the 'Letters and documents' section must suffice in that particular. In 1855 Richard Wagner was in London as conductor of the Philharmonic Society's concerts. In a letter dated May 11, 1855, he 'requests Mr. Anderson [treasurer of the Philharmonic Society] to send him £50, as he is in want of that sum.' The next letter, written in French and dated 'London, June 25, 1855,' reads thus in its translated form:

My dear Mr. Anderson,

Mr. Berlioz begs for two tickets for the concert this evening. If you will have the goodness to give them to him, you can send them to me with my tickets, as I shall be seeing Mr. Berlioz again. Failing that, his address is 13, Margaret Street.

Au revoir for the last time this evening,

Yours sincerely,

RICHARD WAGNER.

Our last quotation is the note to a finely engraved ticket of admission to a concert, given on February 10, 1734, by the Castle Society of Music, and furnishes the following information concerning that 18th century organization:

The Castle Society of Musick was held in great repute in the eighteenth century. It derived its name from the Castle Tavern, in Paternoster Row, where the concerts, vocal and instrumental, were originally held. In 1768 the performances took place at Haberdashers' Hall, the business meetings being held at the Half-moon Tavern in Cheapside.

The foregoing extracts may suffice to show that the Catalogue is no mere dry bones of prosaic profundity, but that it is alive with information of a kind that is as valuable as it is interesting and sometimes amusing. From a typographical point of view the volume leaves nothing to be desired. The reproductions are faultless in their veracity, and the printing of the book is a matter upon which those immediately concerned are to be warmly congratulated. As a tribute to British workmanship, no less than from its literary and artistic points of view, it may safely be said that this Catalogue forms a valuable addition to the musical literature of our country.

THE KING'S MUSICK.

Those who are more or less familiar with the ins and outs of the Record Office know full well how vast is the mass of historical material stored in that great building, and, unless they be experts, they also know the difficulty attending the deciphering of many of the ancient and valuable documents preserved in the nation's archives in Chancery Lane. Much has been done by way of printing and publishing the contents of the Record Office, and industrious transcribers are constantly at work ferreting out the contents of these musty old manuscripts and making them available to the public. But, so far as we know, no one has taken up any special subject in transcribing these State papers, certainly not that of music. It has therefore been left to the enthusiasm and enterprise of the Rev. H. Cart de Lafontaine, a member of the Worshipful Company of Musicians, to delve among the documents of the Record Office, whereby he has been able to set forth the result of his labours in a volume of 522 pages, entitled 'The King's Musick.'

The scope of the book is indicated by the following extract from the preface :

One has only to turn a few pages of the text to discover that we have here a collection of documents, arranged in chronological order and classified under the various reigns, all coming from the Lord Chamberlain's records, as now preserved in the Record Office. Those selected treat for the most part of the maintenance and ordering of musicians attached to the English Court ; but we gather up by the way many details concerning their lives which ought to be of much interest to students of music and musical history. These records commence in 1460-1, and are carried up to Michaelmas, 1700. It was thought that such a date would be a convenient stopping-place ; had investigations been carried further it would have made too bulky a volume, and this is more than sufficient for a first instalment.

Mr. de Lafontaine pays a well deserved tribute to Miss Stainer for her learned and invaluable co-operation in the preparation of the book for the press. He says :

I can unhesitatingly say that had it not been for Miss Stainer's valuable aid, this work would never have been brought to a satisfactory conclusion. I therefore take this opportunity of expressing my obligation to her, not only for so aiding me, but also for rendering—and I think all will confess she has so done—signal service to musical literature.

A superficial glance at the pages of this book might result in characterizing it as a mass of entries wherein a certain amount of reiteration is inevitable. But a detailed examination of its contents reveals information of much interest, quaintly and not infrequently set forth in amusing terms. Moreover these State documents of long ago are invested with the charm of variety : e.g., the King at Newmarket, perfumed gloves, musicians for windy instruments, breeding a boy, Gregorians, beare and ale, and small pox—these are some of the subjects, inter alia, that are referred to. Some old-time spellings are to be found, such as shagbutts, howboies, pfiſe, mending a claricon, and so on. Early in the book—under date 1580—it is interesting to find the name of Parratt, not as a Master of the King's Musick, but as Admiral Sir John Parratt, in a 'warrant for sea liveries' for 'two trumpeters' attending upon that naval officer. 'December 26, 1634' is the date of a 'Warrant for 12 surplices for his Majesty's musicians for the wind instruments, at times of their service in the Chappell'; and on January 31, 1637⁸, Mr. John Woodington was paid £12 'for a Cremona violin, to play to the organ, upon the certificate of Mr. Nicholas Lanier.' Here is a quaint entry, dated July 6, 1668, which curiously enough contains the name of a prominent politician of the present day :

'Whereas William Watson, yeoman of ye great bakehouse, is willing to deliver unto the musitians the roome over the same; these are therefore to require you to deliver it to them accordingly, and unto Sir Winstone Churchill the roome adjoyneing to his lodgings over the great battery now in the possession of the musitians for the violins with the little cole roome at the foot of the stayres leading to ye said lodgings.'

Unauthorised teachers of music fared badly in the reign of King Charles II. On June 28, 1669, was issued a Warrant to apprehend George Smyth, Francis Pendleton, Mosse, Cæsar Duffill and Josiah Priest, for teaching, practising and executing music in companies or otherwise, without the approbation or lycence of the Marshall and Corporation of musick, in contempt of His Majesty's authority and the power granted to the Marshall and Corporation.

An entry—dated May 16, 1674—is headed 'Chappellmen for ye theatre,' and reads :

It is his Majesty's pleasure that Mr. Turner and Mr. Hart or any other men or boys belonging to his Majesty's Chappell Royall that sing in ye Tempest at His Royal Highness Theatre doe remaine in towne all the weeke (dureing his Majesty's absence from Whitehall) to performe that service, only Saturdayes to repaire to Windsor and to returne to London on Mundayes if there be occasion for them. And that [they] also performe ye like service in ye opera in ye said theatre or any other thing in ye like nature where their helpe may be desired upon notice given them thereof.

Among the payments to Nicholas Staggins, Master of the King's Musick in July, 1675, was one

For the fair writing of a chacon with several others that was played at Scaramoucha from the fowle original in score, the foure parts together and the prickers' dyes, £6. 5s.

As may be assumed, the Chapel Royal figures largely in 'The King's Musick.' There are many entries relating to the expenses attendant upon commandeering chorister-boys in various parts of the country by virtue of a royal warrant dating from the time of Queen Elizabeth. By this means we can trace two Masters of the Children, Captain Henry Cook and Dr. John Blow, on their pressing expeditions at eleven different cathedrals, also at Cambridge, Newark, and even Windsor. At Newark (July, 1661) the haul doubtless included John Blow, then the shining light of the song school there. Cook's expenses 'for fetching five boys from Newarke and Lincolnie for his Majesty's service' amounted to £23. 16s. 9d.; 'for 8 days going to Salisbury and bringing a boy from thence'

Dr. Blow was reimbursed to the extent of £6. The education given to the children may be judged from a warrant dated May 4, 1663 :

Warrant to pay Henry Cooke, master of the Children of his Majesty's Chappell, the sum of £30 expended by him for teaching the said children the latin tongue, and for learning of them to write ; also the sum of £30 for the Children's learning of the violins and the organ.

The illnesses of the Children also find a place in these records, as witness the following, under date November 8, 1676 :

Warrant to pay Mr. John Blow, master of the children of the Chappell the sum of £143 for the children learneing on the lute, violin and theorbo, and for strings and other expenses ; and for his charges and expenses in his going to Windsor, Oxford, Gloucester, Hereford and Worcester to fetch boyes from these Quires for his Majesty's Chappell Royall in 1676 ; and for a nurse, chamber rent and firing for keeping of John Cherrington, one of the children of the Chappell, being sick of spotted fever.

A similar payment to John Blow (December 5, 1677) included 'the cure of a broaken legg of one of the children.'

Even allowing for the difference in the value of money as compared with our own day, the copying of music was an expensive business in olden times. Here is a warrant—dated November 9, 1686—relating to the coronation of James II. :

These are to pray and require you to pay unto Dr. Nicholas Staggins, master of his Majesty's musick, the sum of £19. 11s. 6d. for faire writing of a composition for his Majesty's coronation day from the originall in score the 6 parts, for drawing ye said composition into forty severall parts for trumpets, hautboyes, violins, tennors, bases, pricker's dyett included, for ruled paper, penns, inke and chamber rent, and disburs in providing severall musitians for ye coronation day who were not his Majesty's servants.

In 1691 it was ordered 'That the King's Chappell shall be all the year through kept both morning and evening with solemn musick like a collegiate church.' The word 'Gregorians,' already mentioned, occurs in 'Musicians' riding charges for attending the King and Queen in their progresses at Windsor, Hampton Court, or elsewhere,' in 1687. Of the forty-one persons—including one organ-blower and one cushion-man—named in that document, eight were 'Gregorians.' The list is headed with 'One organist' (unnamed) and includes a 'Mr. Curkaw.'

The names of distinguished English church musicians constantly occur. For instance, that of Orlando Gibbons, who at the funeral of James I. in 1625, played the 'privy organ,' whatever that instrument may have been, on that mournful occasion. Henry Purcell, father and son, frequently appear. The younger of the twain was admitted in the place of keeper, maker, mender, repayer and tuner of the regalls, organs, virginalls, flutes and recorders and all other kind of wind instruments whatsoever, in ordinary, without fee, to his Majesty, and assistant to John Hingston, and upon the death or avoydance of the latter, to come in ordinary with fee.' As this warrant is dated June 10, 1673, it shows that Purcell received this important, though honorary, appointment in his boyhood and at or before the breaking of his voice, for under date December 17, 1673, is a warrant which reads :

Warrant to provide outfit of clothing for Henry Purcell, late child of his Majesty's Chappell Royall, whose voice is changed, and gon from the Chappell.

Warrant to pay to Henry Purcell, late one of the children of his Majesty's Chappell Royall, whose voyce is changed and is gon from the Chappell, the sum of £30 by the year, to commence Michaelmas, 1673, last past.

As the above appointment does not seem to have been recorded by any of Purcell's biographers, herein lies the value of 'The King's Musick.' Later on we find further references to the great musician which speak for themselves :

Bill for fine holland for Henry Purcell, child of the Chappell, going off (Jan. 8, 1673).

Bill for handkerchiefs for Pursell a boy gone off from the chapel (Feb. 2, 1673).

Account for a felt hat for Henry Purcell, a boy leaving the Chappell Royal (Accounts ending Michaelmas, 1674).

Warrant for payment for one and twenty ells, three quarters of holland, for four whole shirts, four half shirts, and for bands and cuffs for Henry Purcell, a child gone off from the Chappell (Feb. 13, 1673).

Many more extracts could be given did space permit. Mention must, however, be made of the useful appendixes contributed by the editor. These consist of Notes on musicians and other personages mentioned, Notes on references to costume, Notes on court masques, particularly the Whitehall masque of 1674, Notes on some general references in these records. To these succeed an exhaustive index of names, which greatly adds to the value of this informing volume as a book of reference. 'The King's Musick,' which is dedicated to Queen Alexandra, bears evidence of having been most carefully compiled ; indeed, nothing but praise can be awarded to a volume that is of distinct value as a contribution to the history of music in England, and it is one that does infinite credit to all concerned in its production.

GREEK MUSIC AND THE FOLK-SONGS OF HELLAS.

The study of Greek music has interested and fascinated many thinkers from Aristoxenus, B.C. 300, to the present time. One of the latest of these is Mr. Raymond Duncan, who, with his wife, believes 'that the music still sung in Hellas, both ecclesiastic and popular, is, with slight exceptions, naturally descended in a direct line from the music of the ancients, both in theory and in practice. Notwithstanding the many vicissitudes and great lapse of time, the Hellenic people have retained their music in an extraordinarily near and pure relation to those natural laws upon which classic music was founded.' Moreover, he maintains that ancient Hellenic music is a living and powerful factor in the present day. And this not only among some six millions of Greeks, but in a more or less pure form among countless Assyrians, Armenians, Russians, Turks, Roumanians, and indeed all other peoples who have come into contact with the overwhelming influence of Hellenic culture, and that it will surely win its way and modify the music of Europe in the very near future. He also believes that music was the most perfect of all the Hellenic arts, and that it is destined to outlive future generations of mankind.

Mr. Raymond Duncan epitomises his creed in three sentences—Hellenic music is (1) the survival of the greatest Art of the ancients, (2) the oldest written music in the world, (3) the most true and complete of all music. Recently, at Messrs. Novello's Rooms, Wardour Street, Mr. Duncan and his accomplished wife gave an instructive demonstration of the truth that is in them regarding the ancient music of Greece, their desire being to do all in their power to awaken an interest in Hellenic music. For they believe that a knowledge of the theory and practice of that music is absolutely necessary for any further development of either the modern practice or appreciation of music; and that, as classic architecture, sculpture, painting, and poetry are and always will be the natural foundation and starting-point for the practice or understanding of those arts, so Hellenic music is the natural foundation and starting-point for the art of music.

Mr. Duncan has lived for seven years in Greece, in the very heart of the country, taking stock, as it were, of the songs and dances of the people in districts remote from the leaven of modern influences. As part of a programme for the revival of the classic arts and industries, a school and colony have been founded by him and his wife at the foot of Mount Hymetos, near Athens. One aim of this school is to reform and simplify the methods of teaching the old music, and to complete the efforts that have been made during the last hundred years to form a comprehensive theory of that music. 'I believe,' he says, 'that I have not only gone far on the road to this end, but that I have found and can give a rational, natural explanation of many of the musical laws the reason of which has long been lost. Hellenic music is not the result of individual genius, nor is it the composition of musicians; it is a form of expression that has been evolved through ages under natural laws. Moreover, it is not only Nature music, but music of the highest culture, its theory and laws being derived from and common to the systems of Nature, while its practice has an exact physical and spiritual effect upon the performers and hearers. It is music that appeals to all forms of animals that have a fully-developed sensitive system; it is a common language not only between men, but between man and Nature. Why? Because of its absolute and exact compliance with Nature in its laws of melody, harmony, and rhythm.'

Again: 'Hellenic music is the result of the human attempt to express an appreciation of cosmic laws, design, and harmonies, and those human sentiments, aspirations, and states of mind which words are unable to express. As a medium for conveying and receiving impressions, it is far more expressive than language; to my thinking it is the father of language, and holds a much more important place in man's development. I think the time has come when the world must look back and study more deeply than ever the wondrous culture of ancient Hellas.'

To go into the technical details of Mr. Duncan's propaganda would be to encroach on the limits of our space and of his field of study and research. In his lecture on Hellenic Music—which he hopes to repeat in London during the coming season—he gives a concise and practical explanation of 'the development of the diatonic, chromatic, and enharmonic genders; the development of the four master-modes and their plagals; the systems of diaphonie, triphonie, tetraphonie, and diapason: harmonic attraction and the relation of melody, harmony, mode, and rhythm.'

The subject of folk-music has now become an important feature in the musical life of our country, therefore, with the knowledge that Mrs. Duncan herself a Greek lady, had given special attention to Hellenic folk-song, we asked her to supply us with some first-hand information on this interesting theme. This she very kindly and readily consented to do in the following words :

'There are various kinds of folk-songs in Greece,' she says. 'There are songs of the mountaineers ; songs of shepherds ; dancing songs ; songs at festivals, weddings, spring, &c. ; songs at funerals ; songs which accompany daily occupations. These songs have a natural division into three classes : rhythmic, melodic, and harmonic. That is to say, classes in which rhythm, melody or harmony predominate and govern the construction of the song.'

'The dancing songs, songs which accompany occupations, and funeral songs are rhythmic ; festival and shepherd songs are mostly melodic ; songs of the mountaineers are mainly harmonic. In Hellenic music, harmony is absolute and exact ; it applies not only to the relations of notes, but to their sequence, speed, rhythm, and expression. Although the shepherd and mountaineer songs naturally have a common meeting-point, there is a great difference between the characteristic songs of each class.

'One class of folk-song is dominated entirely by rhythm—rhythm being uppermost and forceful, while melody and harmony are practically non-existent in comparison. This class is used for telling in verse of a tale or the happening of an incident. The music of these songs may be used with any verses whose rhythm is in harmony with the rhythm of the music. These songs are invariably cast in one tetrachord or in one pentachord, and they are more generally found among the mountaineers and shepherds.

'Many songs of the mountaineers are principally harmonic. That is to say, songs in which, though the rhythm or melody can be greatly modified, yet the harmonic expression and character of the song will remain the same. Among these songs are a certain limited number of set types of harmonic songs, which become very elastic and adapt themselves to the expression and rhythm of the words used, though their harmonic character remains true to their particular type.'

In response to our request for a verbal picture of Greek life in folk-song, Mrs. Duncan says : 'In Hellas are to be found the most musical people of Europe. Music is as important a part of their life as their language. They make use of it almost entirely when wishing to express their emotions ; indeed, they rarely employ language to this end. When enjoying themselves on a holiday the people do not talk about or discuss the beauty of a mountain, grove, or field, but they dance and sing and become a part of the natural harmony of nature which surrounds them. On a working-day, the people sing at their work ; if on holiday, they sing to their dance. They sing at a wedding, they sing at a funeral, in fact, their religious services are carried out in song. The bride, bridegroom and priest dance hand in hand before the altar in the church, singing. On a holiday there is hardly a hill-top near Athens that has not its circle of young men and maidens, hand in hand, dancing their united song. In all Hellas there is not a mountain that does not echo to the sound of flute and song both by night and by day, while the rush of the waters of every clear stream is the accompaniment to the song of young girls as they fill their earthen vases with water.

'Though Hellenic music appals the modern musician by its eight distinct modes, its two chromatic and five enharmonic scales with their quarter tones, in Hellas the people, though in many cases not even knowing how to read or write, will sing these modes with absolute correctness ; moreover, they will make fine differences in intervals impossible for the most cultured of modern singers to produce, or in many cases, even to appreciate. A shepherd playing a flute having six holes will produce a wealth of tones and intervals, and overcome all technical difficulties, which the greatest of modern flautists—even with the help of his complicated machinery of keys and life-time of study—cannot in any manner approach.'

In conclusion, it should be stated that Mrs. Duncan has a natural talent for the vocal rendering of the music of her country, and for an exact intoning of the various modes and precise expression of the different rhythms. She has spent many years in gathering the songs of the people and mountaineers, and in studying with the psalmists of the different districts. She believes that she has succeeded in disentangling all local or individual mannerisms from the music, and in separating the true musical tradition from those acquired through such influences. Whatever may be said for or against the theories, as practically demonstrated, of Mr. and Mrs. Duncan on the subject of Greek music, no one can question their enthusiasm in a propaganda which is of great interest in the study of the Art in all its beautiful forms.

Occasional Notes.

The Dean of Westminster (Dr. Armitage Robinson) and the Provost of King's College, Cambridge (Dr. M. R. James)—both experts of the greatest distinction in their several spheres—have been critically examining the manuscripts still extant in the Chapter Library of Westminster Abbey. A great fire in 1694 made a holocaust of the documents then in the Library, mostly collected by John Williams, Dean of Westminster from 1620 to 1641; but Dr. James has examined in detail thirty-four manuscripts now preserved in the Library, and gives the results of his researches in a book, recently published by the Cambridge University Press, entitled 'The Manuscripts of Westminster Abbey.' No. 20 of these (Tractatus de Sphæra), which dates from the 15th century, has a musical interest. Sandwiched between a tract on arithmetic in Latin and an astronomical diagram, it contains an unknown Christmas carol in English, which reads as follows:

A babe ys borne I wys
This worlde to ioy and blis
His ioy shall never fade and misse
And Ihesus is hys name.

The question may seriously be asked, Why have the Brighton Sacred Harmonic Society been ignored in the preparations for the second Brighton Musical Festival to be held next year? They did such excellent work at this year's festival that it seems something more than a slight for the Devonshire Park Choral Society, of Eastbourne, to have been invited to sustain the choral part of the performances. Some explanation seems to be called for in thus importing an outside organization when a capable body of local and efficient chorus-singers is available.

The library of the Royal College of Music is now provided with a Catalogue of the printed music contained in that valuable collection. This volume of 368 pages, printed in double columns, is entitled:

Catalogue of printed music | in the library of the Royal College of Music, London, by | Wm. Barclay Squire, M.A. F.S.A.

Printed by order of the Council | sold at the Royal College of Music | and by Novello & Co., Ltd., London and Breitkopf & Haertel, Leipzig | 1909.

The preface states that the library has been formed by the amalgamation of several libraries, of which the most important was that of the Sacred Harmonic Society, purchased in 1883 for the sum of £3,000. To this nucleus have been added the libraries of the Concerts of Ancient Music, presented by Queen Victoria; Sir George Grove, presented in 1897-8; Mr. S. W. Waley, presented in 1900 by his executors; also the collections of Mr. J. W. Windsor (of Bath) and his family; the collection of Franz Ries, presented in 1900 by Mr. Justin; 129 volumes from the library of Mr. Edward Dannreuther; over 200 duplicates from the British Museum, presented by the Trustees; a collection of full scores published (and presented) by Messrs. Novello & Co.; together with many gifts and bequests from various individuals. As to the plan of the Catalogue, the entries are arranged in alphabetical order, with ample cross-references and notes as to former owners. It is satisfactory to learn that this volume is to be followed by a catalogue of the important collection of manuscripts and that it is already in progress; this section of the Catalogue will be especially valuable. A final volume will include books on the theory of music, on acoustics, the construction of instruments, &c., in addition to the collection of general literature. In the meantime the present instalment may be accorded a warm welcome as a useful book of reference. The fact that it has been compiled by Mr. Barclay Squire, of the British Museum, is a sufficient guarantee of the thoroughness and accuracy of the work. The volume, which is sold at 12s. 6d. net, can be obtained from Messrs. Novello.

Dr. George Robertson Sinclair—whose portrait, seated at the organ, forms our special supplement illustration—has now completed a full score years of service as organist of Hereford Cathedral. The Festival of the Three Choirs, to be held at Hereford this month, will be the seventh of these time-honoured music-makings that he has conducted, and, let us add, with success. Dr. Sinclair's personality is characteristically portrayed in No. XI. of Sir Edward Elgar's 'Variations on an original theme for Orchestra,' which is headed 'G. R. S.' His pedalistic propensities are reflected thus (bars 2 and 3, &c.):

The organ in Hereford Cathedral is by Father Willis the cost of the rebuilding of which, amounting to the sum of £2,300, Dr. Sinclair raised by his own enthusiastic exertions.

Care should naturally be taken in selecting anthems for church use in order that they may be suitable to the seasons of the year, ecclesiastical and otherwise. A summer number of a certain parish magazine, however, referred to the singing of an anthem entitled 'O chap your hands.'

'First performance.' One of the most annoying pitfalls to writers on music consists of these two words. Owing to erroneous information supplied in prospectuses of musical festivals, concert programmes and books of reference, the most wary journalist frequently falls unaware into one of the yawning chasms thus dug for him. Mr. Hamish MacCunn's clever overture 'The land of the mountain and the flood' is a case in point. The new edition of 'Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians' (art. MacCunn) gives the place and date of the first performance of the work as 'Crystal Palace, November 5, 1887.' While the place is correct, the date is open to correction. And thereby hangs a tale. In the Crystal Palace Saturday Concert programme-book of October 29, 1887, the overture is announced to be played on the following Saturday (November 5)—'First time of performance.' So far this information agrees with the statement in 'Grove.' But the programme of the 'Orchestral Band' performance given at the Crystal Palace at the odd hour of 12.30 p.m., on Monday, October 31, 1887, contains his item: which is nothing more nor less than a fancy title of the overture in question!

In the programme-book of the Saturday concert following (November 5) the overture is headed 'First time at these concerts.' Therefore, it may be assumed that Manns followed his usual custom of trying over a new work at one of his daily 'Orchestral Band' performances, in order that his permanent players might become familiar with the music previous to the full rehearsal for the Saturday concert. We have drawn the attention of Mr. MacCunn to the above curious title of his overture. In reply thereto he writes as follows: 'I have not the ghost of an idea as to "The land, &c." having been put into a programme as "Allegro Romantique"—a very odd sort of description anyhow!—but I suspect it must have been one of dear old Manns' diabolically ingenious dodges or cloaking the real name of a new piece till he had tried it on the dog," the "dog" being the characteristically mild assembly usual at the festive hour of 2.30 p.m. These performances were practically just public rehearsals.' The foregoing facts, whatever they may be worth, are not without interest in the reduction of a fine tone-poem which, we are glad to observe, finds a place in the scheme of this season's romenade Concerts.

When did the designation 'Programme Music' first appear in print in the English language? Sir James Murray, in a recently-issued instalment of 'The Oxford English Dictionary,' gives vol. iii. of 'Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians, art. Abbé Vogler, 1881.' But this is surely too late a date for the introduction of the words in their compound significance. It certainly appeared in Part II. of the 'Dictionary' (article 'The Battle of Prague'), issued in 1778, three years earlier than the reference above noted. We have however discovered a previous use of 'Programme Music.' It is to be found in the Musical World of March 23, 1867, p. 179, where it forms the heading to a translation from Schumann's esammelte Schriften. There are probably earlier instances of the use of this now familiar term, but that of 1867 is fourteen years previous to that given in 'The Oxford English Dictionary.' In the same work is given some interesting information in regard to the use of the word 'programme' in English literature.

The usual form of the word was reintroduced from France at the beginning of the 19th century. A writer in the 'New Monthly Magazine' in 1823 says: 'A regular program (that is a nice new word I have just imported from France, to supply the hacknied common-place of a bill of the play).' The old form of the word, 'Program,' was used by Scott, Carlyle, and others. In 'Sartor Resartus' (1858) Carlyle spells it with a capital P. J. L. Motley and Robert Browning ('The Ring and the Book,' 1869) also kept to the old form. On the other hand, Dickens, in 'Nicholas Nickleby' (1838), prints it in italics as a French word. Here is the extract, from the amusing description of the wedding-anniversary party given by Mr. and Mrs. Kenwigs.

Mrs. Kenwigs and Miss Petowker had arranged a small programme of the entertainments between them, of which this was the prescribed order, but they had settled to have a little pressing on both sides, because it looked more natural. (Chapter xiv.)

The Royal Manchester College of Music will this month inaugurate a new course of study to meet the needs of those students (1) who intend to become teachers of music, (2) who intend to qualify for the Teachers' Diploma of the College, and (3) who desire to pursue the study of the art of teaching apart from considerations of diploma or vocation. As nearly 90 per cent. of the College students ultimately become teachers of music, this new course has been designed to equip those students for the special business of their lives, and to fit them to exercise their calling with the maximum of benefit to their pupils. We have before us the special prospectus of the department for the training of music teachers, which we understand has been drafted by Dr. Walter Carroll, a vigorous advocate of the claims of the child-pupil, and approved by the Council of the Manchester College. Dr. Carroll will himself take charge of this new branch of instruction.

The prospectus leaves little to be desired on the ground of intelligent analysis and of thoroughness, and is made up equally of theoretical and practical work, of lecture and demonstration, embracing two lessons weekly in the art and practice of teaching. The course of study outlined covers a period of two years, beginning with the general principles of teaching as applied to the mind of the child in a stage of growth and expansion; it treats of the questions of the development of observation, imitation and attention in the youthful pupil, as well as with the training of the imagination. The appearance of this prospectus is a sign of the times. In a thorough and systematic manner it deals with a problem that is much discussed and often handled tentatively, the practical training of the teacher in the art of music. The experiment at Manchester is one that will be watched with interest.

Mr. William Henry Hadow, Fellow and Tutor of Worcester College, Oxford, has been appointed Principal of Armstrong College of Durham University at Newcastle-on-Tyne, in succession to Sir Isambard Owen, who has accepted the Vice-Chancellorship of Bristol University. Oxford therefore loses one of her most distinguished sons, but Newcastle may be congratulated upon having in its midst a cultured amateur of music and a gifted writer upon the art.

The music-publishing firm of 'Charles Avison, Limited,' has ceased to exist, with the result that its publications will in future be issued by Messrs. Novello. Founded by the members of the Society of British Composers for the publication of their compositions, the now defunct firm justified its existence in issuing works by Sir Alexander Mackenzie, Messrs. Arnold Bax, W. H. Bell, E. York Bowen, Frederick Corder, B. J. Dale, H. Balfour Gardiner, W. Y. Hurlstone, J. B. McEwen, Tobias Matthay, Norman O'Neill, Felix Swinstead, and others. The extensive catalogue of 'Charles Avison, Limited,' bears testimony alike to the good work done by them and the Society of British Composers.

'Charles Avison, Limited,' was, of course, a fanciful name suggested by the Newcastle-on-Tyne musician of the 18th century. To musicians his best known work is 'An essay on musical expression' (1752). In recent years Avison gained fresh notoriety by having been discovered by Robert Browning. In the poet's 'Parleyings with certain people,' one of the seven studies in biographical psychology forming that book is Charles Avison. It was from one of Avison's numerous concertos for full orchestra of strings that the once popular chorus 'Sound the loud timbrel' was adapted by Thomas Moore. In his 'Sacred Melodies' Moore naively states: 'I have so altered the character of this Air, which is from the beginning of one of Avison's old-fashioned Concertos, that, without this acknowledgment, it could hardly, I think, be recognised.' Seldom, indeed, are arrangers and adapters of other people's music so honest in admitting their alteration propensities.

The organization of the Naval and Military Musical Union, to which we referred last month, is proceeding apace. A central council has been formed in London with Surgeon-General G. J. Evatt, C.B., as president, and Lieut.-Colonel C. Hope Willis (late Royal Marines) as honorary secretary. The other members of the council are Dr. W. G. McNaught, Mr. Orton Bradley, and Mr. James Walter Smith. The council have approved of certain general lines upon which concerts given under the auspices of the Union should be held. John Farmer's 'Scarlet and Blue' has been adopted as the official chorus song-book, and it is hoped that a part-song book will shortly be published under the auspices of the Union. The Union will be inaugurated at a concert to be given at Chatham Town Hall on October 20. We trust that the concert will be a great success, and that the Union will spread rapidly throughout the Services. The address of the honorary secretary is 13, St. James's Square, S.W.

HEREFORD FESTIVAL NOVELTIES.

DR. WALFORD DAVIES'S 'NOBLE NUMBERS.'

The collective title which Herrick gave to his volume of sacred verse has been used by Dr. H. Walford Davies for the work which will be produced at the Hereford Festival as its principal novelty. The composer's original intention was to write a cycle for choral and solo songs drawn exclusively from the 'Noble Numbers'; but as the plan developed it was found that the sequence of ideas could be materially strengthened by the addition of some other poems of the same period, and several by George Herbert, one by Donne and one by an anonymous writer were included in the scheme. 'Noble Numbers' is different in design from that of any work which has been produced at a Three Choirs Festival within recent years, since it has nothing to do with either the oratorio or choral-symphonic forms. It is simply a cycle of eighteen songs, in which solo voices, chorus and orchestra are used in various combinations.

The essential interest of such a work is purely lyrical; it can have none of the dramatic narrative, involving continuity in the music, which takes so important a place in modern oratorio. Each poem is complete in itself and is set to music which belongs wholly to it; there are practically no leading themes representing specific ideas. A song-cycle is mainly dependent for its continuity of design upon the sequence of its words, which in the great cycles—such as Tieck's 'Magelone-lieder,' set by Brahms, or Heine's 'Dichterliebe,' set by Schumann—gradually unfolds a central idea by presenting its various aspects through a progressive series of lyrical contrasts. The religious experiences of the soul, its faith and hope, doubts and fears, and, above all, its devotion, take the same central place in Herrick's 'Noble Numbers' as do the emotions of the lover in such a cycle as the 'Dichterliebe,' or in a volume of secular poems such as Herrick's own 'Hesperides.' But the absence of any continuous design in Herrick's poems, either sacred or secular, entails the necessity for considerable selection and arrangement when they are made the libretto for a musical work lasting a full hour in performance. With the help of the few additions already mentioned, Dr. Davies has succeeded in producing a vigorous and definite scheme, which not only gives the opportunity for the employment of a great variety of musical contrasts, but embodies many of the noblest among the religious lyrics of Herrick and his contemporaries.

A short orchestral movement, called 'Entrata,' precedes the songs; the melody built on the interval of the ascending fifth expresses the yearning aspiration of the first song:

'Tis hard to find God, but to comprehend
Him, as He is, is labour without end.

The couplet is sung by soloists and choir, and followed by an orchestral ground bass on a theme of shifting tonality, which first gives the impression of a vague groping in the dark, and afterwards, as the variations become more closely knit, of a persistent struggle towards a certain goal. A powerful chorus on Herrick's words, 'Weigh me the fire,' and a contralto solo 'Whither, O, whither art Thou fled, My Lord, my Love?' (Herbert), may be grouped together with the first movement as representing the search after God. The solution of the question comes with the fourth number, a dignified choral setting of the words:

God's said to dwell there, wheresoever He Puts down some prints of His High Majesty.

After this the point of view changes, and Herrick's well-known 'Grace for a child,' 'To the Saviour, a Child,' and the lovely carol, 'What sweeter music can we bring?' are all set to delicate and simple music; the first two for soprano and contralto solo respectively, the last for soprano solo and small chorus. These, with the anonymous poem called 'A royal guest,' lead up to a more elaborate choral aria on Herrick's words:

Christ He requires still, wheresoe'er He comes
To feed or lodge, to have the best of rooms:
Give Him the choice; grant Him the nobler part which sums up the thought and completes the music of the first part.
Of all the house: the best of all's the heart.

The second part turns from childhood to the fuller experiences of manhood. It opens with a bold song of praise, in which three men's solo voices (one tenor and two basses) lead the male chorus. The rich, spontaneous melody is supported by a strongly-moving instrumental bass, and the whole is broad, vigorous and confident. But the setting for bass solo of Herrick's 'The Bell-man' gives a check to this mood and leads to the penitential 'Litany: to the Holy Spirit,' in which four solo voices and chorus are combined, and the refrain, 'Sweet Spirit, comfort me!' is sung to a phrase of haunting beauty. A tenor solo—on the purely musical point of view one of the most striking movements in the whole work—is called 'The revolt,' and is a setting of Herbert's words beginning:

I struck the board and cried, No more.
I will abroad.

This is an impulsive piece of strenuous music which sets the solemn mood of the two previous songs at defiance; but the last stanza:

At every word
Methought I heard one calling, Child,
And I replied, My Lord.

It obduces the violence and leads to a serene ending. The three little songs which follow—Herbert's 'Heaven's Echo,' Dean Donne's 'Christ and the cross,' and Herrick's 'To Heaven' (Open thy gates)—all maintain the submissive attitude of this ending and lead up to a musical climax in the massive choral setting of Herbert's words:

Come, my Way, my Truth, my Life:

These noble words set to a melody of irresistible force. An orchestral movement intervenes between this and the Finale. Its title is 'The Mastery,' and a couplet of Herrick forms a text and explains its purpose:

No man is tempted so, but may o'ercome,
If that he has a will to Masterdom.

The principal theme is a majestic melody; the rising fifth, like the fifth which was so prominent in the 'Intrata,' gives it its special character of exuberant power, and makes a triumphant ending, which leads directly to the last chorus:

Let all the world in every corner sing,
My God and King.

Herbert's wholehearted song of praise makes a fine conclusion to the whole, and both solo voices and chorus take part in the musical setting; the refrain, turning each time with increasing vigour and more elaborate figuration for the voices, gives a solidity to the movement which for the moment reminds one of Handel, though the episodes which lie between, overflowing with ecstatic joy, make the whole absolutely free and unfettered. After the last repetition of the refrain, a short Coda, in which the theme of 'The Mastery' is once uttered with the whole strength of the orchestra, makes a terse and forcible ending to 'Noble Numbers.'

'OLD ENGLISH SUITE,' FOR SMALL ORCHESTRA, BY PROFESSOR GRANVILLE BANTOCK.

Good old English tunes skilfully arranged and instrumentated come as a boon to orchestras, both professional and amateur. It was therefore a happy thought which prompted Professor Granville Bantock to select five ancient and attractive pieces and to cast them in the form of a Suite for small orchestra. With one exception, the opening number, this quintet of tunes is taken from the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book, that remarkable collection of Elizabethan music preserved in the Fitzwilliam Library, Cambridge.

The Suite begins with a Fantasia in A minor by Orlando Gibbons from 'Parthenia, or The Maidenhead of the first musicke that euer was printed for the Virginals' (1611). Scored for wood-wind, horns (2), and strings, it forms a fugal introductory number. To this succeeds a 'Lachrymæ Pavan' by John Dowland, in Thomas Morley's arrangement, scored for strings only, which are muted throughout this beautiful old-world strain. 'The King's Hunt' (No. 3), by Dr. John Bull, is a movement that is sure to prove attractive in its vivo cheerfulness. In addition to the usual wood-wind and string orchestra, four horns (the third and fourth ad lib.), trumpets and drums are employed in order to give elan to this spirited tune. No greater contrast could be afforded than the orchestration of the next number, Giles Farnaby's 'Quodling's Delight.' Professor Bantock has evidently regarded Quodling—whoever he may have been—as some simple-minded rustic. Why? Because he has scored this delightful 'Delight' for one oboe, two clarinets, and one bassoon! As to the manner in which the Birmingham professor has rusticised the music, it is sufficient to say that the village-green conversations between the four wind instruments are worthy of Schubert. The Suite is capitably rounded off with a very jolly arrangement of William Byrd's 'Sellenger's Round,' the orchestration including two horns and drums, but without trumpets. Here the horns are skittishly employed, vying with the semiquaverousness of the strings in their frolicsome pranks. 'What larks!' they seem to say as, in their allegretto giocoso lilt, the piece goes merrily on with irresistible charm from beginning to end.

Finally, Professor Bantock has been very fortunate in the selection of his melodic material for this attractive Suite. Upon so firm a foundation he has built a series of studies in effective and dainty orchestration which, while of great interest and value to the student, will assuredly meet with popular favour. Moreover, he demonstrates the potentialities of the small orchestra by way of effective contrasts and colours laid on with an artist hand. And then, how welcome such genial strains, in their fanciful instrumentation, after the noisy assertiveness of so much manufactured modern music. Need anything more be said?

The attention of conductors of choral societies and choir-masters of churches is directed to the new series of classified catalogues and the lists of recently-issued part-songs on pp. 612 and 613 of the present issue.

Church and Organ Music.

A DISTINGUISHED CANADIAN ORGANIST :
DR. ALBERT HAM.

It is always pleasant to greet British musicians from across the seas when they come 'home' to enjoy their well-earned holiday. Moreover, it is interesting to hear from their own lips of the progress of music in Greater Britain, especially in that particular sphere wherein their lot is cast. Among our colonial visitors last month was Dr. Albert Ham, organist of St. James's Cathedral, Toronto, whose church work in Canada merits special mention in the Musical Times.

Born at Bath, in the year 1858, Dr. Albert Ham has all his life long been closely associated with church music. He began his career as a chorister of St. John's Church, Bathwick, of which he subsequently became sub-organist. He studied under Mr. Joseph Hewitt, organist of St. John's, Bath, and Mr. J. K. Pyne, organist of Bath Abbey for upwards of half-a-century and an exceptionally fine extempore player. He also took some lessons from the late Dr. James Higgs and Dr. Varley Roberts. In his eighteenth year Dr. Ham became organist of All Saints', Bath, of which church the late Canon Fleming was then vicar, while the congregation included one Major Roberts, now Field-Marshal Lord Roberts. In 1880 he exchanged his native city for Ilminster, upon being appointed organist of the parish church. There he worked with success for thirteen years, until, in 1893, he became organist of the church of St. John the Evangelist, Taunton, and conductor of the Taunton Madrigal Society and Taunton Choral Society.

(Photograph by Messrs. Hills and Saunders, Oxford.)

Your sincerely,

A larger and more influential sphere of work opened for him, however, by his appointment in November, 1896, of organist and choirmaster of the cathedral church of St. James, Toronto, an office which he still holds with distinction. Upon taking up his duties the first thing he did was to cast out the operatic style of solo work and of 'performances' generally, and to substitute music of a dignified character on the lines of the great cathedrals of the Motherland. He also set himself to disprove the tradition that the Canadian climate, or some other obstacle, is against the use of boys' voices in church choirs. In this he has been completely successful. As Sir Frederick Bridge remarked, after hearing Dr. Ham's boys in Toronto last year, 'It is all nonsense to say that there are no good boys' voices in Canada'; and the same eminent authority said that the singing of the St. James's Cathedral choir 'was quite equal to that of any English cathedral.' High praise, indeed, but bestowed by one who speaks with authority.

As to the rendering of the music, Dr. Ham tells us that he devotes much time to the practice of chanting and hymn-singing, subjects which he rightly considers of great importance, as well as to the preparation of anthems. He says: 'The congregational side of our services is never lost sight of. Large numbers of our own countrymen are attracted to the cathedral on Sunday evenings. Then it is most inspiring to hear Yorkshire and Devonshire, Lancashire and Middlesex, Somerset and Warwickshire, all joining together in singing some grand old hymn to a tune like St. Anne's or Melcombe, or the voice of congregational praise in such a hymn as "The day Thou gavest, Lord, is ended," which is sung with thrilling effect, especially the lines, with their deep emotional thrill:

The sun that bids us rest is waking
Our brethren 'neath the western sky,
And hour by hour fresh lips are making
Thy wondrous doings heard on high.'

The choir of St. James's Cathedral consists of thirty-two boys and thirty men. As only two of the latter are paid, the choir is virtually a voluntary one, and, in the words of Dr. Ham, 'their devotion to their work is remarkable, and worthy of all praise.' The organ, built by Karn-Warren, is one of three manuals and stands at the east end of the church. Three years ago a celestial organ was placed at the west end of the building.

In addition to his cathedral duties, Dr. Ham is actively employed in furthering the cause of music in the city of his adoption. He is a professor at the Conservatory of Music, where he specializes in voice production, and he is an examiner for degrees in music at Trinity College, Toronto, and at Toronto University. He is the conductor of the National Chorus, a capable organization which came into existence in 1902 specially for the Toronto musical festival of 1903, conducted by Sir Alexander Mackenzie. In this connection the Principal of the Royal Academy of Music wrote in this journal (Musical Times, June 1903), under Toronto: 'The concluding concert took place with the assistance of a newly-formed choir of three hundred voices, entitled The National Chorus, trained by Dr. Albert Ham, who pleased me exceedingly in a finished performance of the "Cotter's Saturday Night." No less successful was the rendering of Dr. Ham's "Banner of St. George," under the direction of Dr. Ham, who had devoted much time and care to these works, and who must have been gratified by the appreciation bestowed by the large audience which attended this National Night.' Still flourishing, with a membership of 220 voices, the National Chorus annually gives two concerts on successive nights, at which important choral and orchestral works are performed. At the concert given in January last, Elgar's Symphony received its second performance across the Atlantic, when it was played by the New York Symphony Orchestra (conductor, Mr. Walter Damrosch), whose valuable co-operation the National Chorus has enjoyed.

Dr. Ham obtained the degree of Doctor of Music at Dublin University in 1894, and Toronto University conferred the same distinction, honoris causa, upon him in 1906; he passed the examination for the Fellowship of the Royal College of Organists in July, 1883. His compositions include a March, entitled 'Canada,' for full orchestra, and for military band, composed in honour of the tercentenary of Quebec city; a Marche Militaire, 'Imperium et Unitas,' for military band and dedicated to Lord Strathcona; anthems (including a coronation anthem, 'Hear, O ye kings,' for eight-part chorus and orchestra, and sung by the Sheffield Choir during their Canadian tour); organ pieces; services; hymn-tunes; part-songs; and songs.

The following appreciation of Dr. Ham's church work is from the pen of the Very Rev. Edward A. Welch, Rector of St. James's Cathedral, Toronto, since 1890, who has recently been appointed Dean of Wakefield. The Dean's words form a fitting conclusion to this brief biographical sketch of a warm-hearted, genial, and gifted Canadian musician.

'Dr. Ham has been organist and choir-master of St. James's Cathedral for about eleven or twelve years, and by his ability and devotion has immensely increased the reputation of the cathedral for its music. He is before all things a trainer of voices. His power in this direction shows itself pre-eminently in the results which he produces with the boys who come under his teaching. He succeeds in making average Ontario boys, whose voices are harsh and whose pronunciation is often atrocious, sing like the boys of an English college chapel or cathedral choir.

Part of his success is undoubtedly due to the fact that he never allows his choir to attempt music that is too difficult for them. And then he is most thorough and conscientious in his rehearsals, and will have nothing sung at a service until the choir sing it as well as they are capable of doing. When they have attained as nearly to perfection as they have it in them to attain, then—but not till then—is the anthem, or service, or hymn, considered ready to be sung as part of the worship of the church. Besides being a thorough musician, Dr. Ham is also a thorough churchman, and the result is that all that his choir does is done reverently and in the spirit of worship. At St. James's there have been many services which are of a certain amount of historic interest. Nearly fifty years ago the King, then Prince of Wales, worshipped at the Cathedral during his visit to Canada. His Majesty commemorated the occasion by the gift to the church of a Bible, with an autograph inscription, which is one of its most highly-valued possessions. In Dr. Ham's time there was a great service on the day of the Queen's funeral, and another on the Coronation Day, in 1902. In 1904 the Archbishop of Canterbury preached in the church on the Sunday which he spent in Toronto, and two years later the Bishop of London took part in a Sunday evening service. The last service of special note was the Consecration of the present Bishop of Toronto, on March 25 of this year. On all these occasions the choir, under the direction of Dr.

Ham, did their part in a way which reflected the greatest credit upon his painstaking training and his musical taste and ability.'

'Music is one of the most beautiful and glorious gifts of God . . . I am fully satisfied in my judgment, nor am I ashamed to own it, that, divinity excepted, there is no science that can match music.' — Martin Luther.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

Sir George Martin has been elected President of the Royal College of Organists in succession to Sir Walter Parratt. No better choice could have been made.

EXCELLENT ADVICE TO ORGANISTS.

'My last words to young students of the organ is, not to make too great use of couplers, and to be chary in the use of pedals.' Thus spake Sir Walter Parratt when resigning his Presidency of the Royal College of Organists. These wise words are capable of much wider application. Many middle-aged, not to say old, organists too often abuse the organ in respect of couplers and pedals.

MR. ALFRED HOLLINS.

Success has attended the organ recitals given by Mr. Alfred Hollins in South Africa. At his first recital in Cape Town he was favoured with a very distinguished audience, which included the Governor and Lady Hely-Hutchinson. We understand that, owing to the illness of the agent, the Canadian tour of Mr. Hollins has had to be cancelled, therefore he will be at liberty to accept engagements for recitals at home during the winter season.

The organ compositions of Mr. Hollins have become so popular that the issue of twelve of these attractive pieces in one volume causes no surprise. In the 108 pages forming 'Original compositions for the organ composed by Alfred Hollins' (Novello), are to be found the Concert overture in C minor, the Intermezzo in D flat, and the oft-played Spring Song, in addition to other favourite pieces which frequently find their way into recital programmes.

AN OLD CITY ORGAN MODERNISED.

The organ in the church of All Hallows', Barking, near the Tower, has recently been reconstructed by Messrs. Harrison & Harrison. The nucleus of the present instrument probably dates from that erected in 1675-7 by Thomas and Renatus Harris (Great and Choir organs), with a Swell organ added in the 18th century. Improved by Gerard Smith in 1720, and again in 1813, this organ was enlarged by Bunting in 1872 and 1878. It is satisfactory to learn that the restoration, while in accordance with the best modern ideas of organ construction, includes the retention of a number of old pipes, which have been carefully cleaned, repaired, and re-voiced. The organ remains in its original position in the west gallery, and it is pleasant to record that the old case of Grinling Gibbons, with its gilded front pipes, has been spared destruction.

A special interest is attached to the first-known organ in this church, erected by Anthony Duddington early in the 16th century. Forty-seven years ago, among some old papers in the church chest of All Hallows', Barking, was discovered what purports to be an indenture or contract between the churchwardens and Anthony Duddington 'for the organs,' A.D. 1519. The document, in its quaint phraseology, reads as follows:

This endenture made in the yere of oure lorde god mⁱ vo xix. and in the moneth of July xxix day. Witnesseth that Antony Duddington, Citezen of London, Organ-Maker, hath made a full bargayn, condycionally, with Maister Willm. Petenson, Doctour in Divinite, Vicar of Alhalowe Barkyng, Robt Whytched and John Churche, Wardeyns of the same Churche, and Maisters of the P'ishe of Alhalowe Barkyng, next ye Tower of London, to make an instrument, that ys to say a payer of organs for the foresed churche, of

And the seid Antony to have earnest viiⁱⁱ iiiijd. Also the foresaid Antony askyth v quarters of respyr. that ys to say, from the fest of Seynt Mighell the Arch-annelle, next following to the fest of Seynt Mighell the day twelvemonth following. And also underneth this condicion, that the foresaid Antony shall convey the belows in the loft abowf in the seid Quere of Alhalowes, wt a pype to the sond boarde. Also this p'rmysed by the said Antony, that yf the foresaid Maister, Docteur, Vicare, Churche Wardeyns, Maisters of the p'ishe, be not content nor lyte not the seid instrument that, then they shall allow him for conveying of the belows xl^s for his cost of them, and to restore the rest of the Trust [Trust] agayn to the seid Maisters. And yf the seid Antony deceese and depart his naturall lyf wt in the foresaid v quarters, that then hys wyf or hys executours or his assignes shall fully content the foresaid some of iiiij^{li} xiiij^{ij} or to the seid Vicare, and Churche Wardeyns, and Maisters of the P'ishe wt out any delay. And yf they be content wt the seid instrument, to pay to the seid Antony fyfty poundes sterlinge. In Wittnesse whereof the seid p'ties to these endentures chaungeably have set their sealls. Geven the day and yere abovesaid.

The clause in the above contract, 'as fewe stoppes as may be convenient,' would be regarded as inconvenient by most present-day organists.

THE RETIREMENT OF MR J. W. ELLIOTT.

The following extract from the Parish Magazine (July, 1909) of St. Mark's Church, Hamilton Terrace, will be read with sympathetic interest:

It is with deep regret that we announce the retirement of our gifted and respected organist, Mr. J. W. Elliott, who has held his important post for thirty-six years with signal efficiency and devotion. Mr. Elliott's talents, both as a composer and as an executant, have won for him a high place in his profession, and, little as he has sought fame and popularity, he is known far and wide as the author of some of our most beautiful and best-loved hymn-tunes. As a secular composer he will be remembered by his charming 'Nursery Rhymes,' which have long been the delight of many a home in England and the Colonies, and by 'Hybris the Cretan,' which for half-a-century has held its place in the front rank of English songs. As a performer on his instrument Mr. Elliott has had few to rival him among church organists in his best days. His brilliancy, accuracy, and finish were astonishing, while in power of improvisation he indeed could approach him. It was a rare musical treat to listen to him as he extemporized, and lavished on some simple theme the inexhaustible wealth of his graceful and ingenious fancy.

Broken in health, and well stricken in years, he has been compelled to resign the work which he loved with his whole soul. We cannot allow him to leave us without assuring him of our heartfelt gratitude for the services he has rendered in our church and parish. Much is due to the organist whose ideal of duty is high, who performs his task with consistent reverence 'As ever in the great Taskmaster's eye, and under an unflinching sense of responsibility to Him Who, even when human art has done its utmost, 'cannot worthily be praised.'

The most practical form of demonstrating our gratitude would be to assist Mr. Elliott in the sad circumstances that have overtaken him in the loss of his work. Mr. Elliott's means are now very considerably straitened in consequence. Some kind friends have already pledged themselves by donations and annual subscriptions to help him in his old age, and should any other past or present members of the congregation be willing to assist in this way, will they please communicate with the honorary treasurer of the church, Mr. F. J. Walker, 27, Upper Hamilton Terrace, N.W.

THE LAY-CLERKS OF GLOUCESTER CATHEDRAL.

Since the year 1864 the lay-clerks of Gloucester Cathedral have been in the position of assistant choirmen, and therefore not on the Foundation. Without going into the financial reasons which has caused the suspension of the statutes of Henry VIII. in this particular during the past forty-five years, it may suffice to say that the choirmen recently asked the Dean and Chapter if they could see their way to reinstate them in their old privileges as members of the Foundation. One of their chief arguments for the change was that under existing conditions they were ineligible for membership of the Choir Benevolent Fund, that valuable institution for singing men in cathedrals. After giving the matter due consideration the Dean and Chapter decided to comply with the request, with the result that Gloucester falls into line with the majority of English cathedrals.

On August 9 the six assistant choirmen were received into fellowship by Bishop Mitchinson, the sub-dean, the simple ceremony taking place after Evensong. Standing in front of their stalls, each singer, in the order of seniority, made the oath of obedience to the Dean and Chapter, and the affirmative of the acceptance of the Canons of the church. Bishop Mitchinson then gave to each lay-clerk the right hand of fellowship and admitted them in terms similar to those used in installing an honorary canon. The six lay-clerks of Gloucester thus placed on the ancient Foundation of the cathedral, with the dates of their appointments, are Messrs. F. Evans (1876), H. Finch (November, 1907), W. H. Bubb (December, 1907), H. Groves (January, 1908), C. A. V. Jones (May, 1908), and H. Sanderson, (April, 1909).

A CHORISTERS' FESTIVAL SERVICE.

A novel and interesting service is announced to be held in Holy Trinity Church, Marylebone, opposite Portland Road Station, on Thursday, September 30, at 7 p.m. On that occasion Evensong will be sung by a boy choir of 100 picked voices, under the direction of Mr. James Bates, Principal of the London College for Choristers, and Mr. Charles Long, with Dr. Hugh Blair, organist of the church, at the organ.

The service-music will include the Versicles and Responses (four parts), arranged by Dr. Brewer; special psalms to chants (three parts) by Mr. Myles B. Foster and Mr. H. A. Fricker; Stainer's 'Sevenfold Amen' (three parts); and Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C (three parts), specially composed for the occasion by Dr. Hugh Blair. The Anthems are as follows: 'Praise the Lord' (three parts), also specially composed by Mr. John E. West; Spohr's 'As pants the hart,' arranged by the late Dr. F. J. Sawyer; 'O praise the Lord' (Mendelssohn); 'Blessed are they that dwell in Thy house' (Brahms); 'Praise to the Holiest' (Elgar); 'He in tears that soweth' (Hiller); and last, but not least, Handel's 'Let the bright Seraphim,' sung by 100 boys in unison, with trumpet obbligato by Mr. Frank James.

That such an interesting selection of chorister music, rendered under such unique conditions, will attract a large congregation, including many organists and choirmasters, is a foregone conclusion.

THE DOYEN OF LADY ORGANISTS.

A pleasant little ceremony took place on July 28, when Miss Ellen Day, the doyen of lady organists, was presented by the vicar, churchwardens, choir, and members of the congregation of Christ Church, Victoria Street, Westminster, with a silver bowl, a pair of silver candlesticks, and an illuminated address as a token of affection and esteem on the completion of her twenty-seven years of faithful service as organist of the church. A biographical sketch and portrait of Miss Day appeared in our issue of March last.

Mr. William C. Carl, director of the Guilman Organ School, New York City, and organist and choirmaster of the First Presbyterian Church there, has been decorated by the French Government as Officier d'Académie, for promoting French music and methods in America.

'Free Church Musicians' is the title of a publication that should prove acceptable to organists and choirmasters of Nonconformist churches. Compiled and arranged by Mr. Charles Howes, the volume consists of 'an album and directory of present-day leaders of Nonconformist psalmody, with short biographical notices.' A large number of portraits of 'chief musicians,' and facsimiles of tunes in the handwriting of their composers, add to the attractiveness of the volume. The concluding section of the work consists of a 'Directory' of Free Church musicians, which, together with the information which precedes it, will be found very useful as a book of reference. The index of names adds to the completeness of a volume that appears to have been carefully compiled, and that is the precursor of a still more complete 'Handbook of Free Church Musicians,' which Mr. Howes announces will be published on January 1, 1910. The volume under notice has been well got up, and would form a suitable gift-book to those interested in its subject-matter. It is published by Messrs. Novello at the price of 5s. net.

DR. CHARLES HARRISS ON HIS VISIT TO CAPE TOWN.

A calm sea and a prosperous voyage favoured us both on our outward and homeward way. Indeed, the Bay of Biscay simply laughed Dibdin to scorn, the sea being like a millpond. Good music by the ship's orchestra, dancing, games, fancy-dress masquerades, cheerful and congenial company, magnificent sunsets, glorious sunrises, all contributed their quota to most pleasant and highly-interesting ocean passages.

At Cape Town, whither I went as the guest of the Municipality, I found the choral elements surprisingly good. First-rate singers with excellent voices gave me a spirited performance of 'Pan' and, under Dr. Barrow-Dowling's able direction, a most commendable performance of Pierné's 'Crusade.' For this work the festival chorus was augmented by a choir of six hundred children's voices. It was refreshing to see these young people so alert and ready.

Worthy of mention is the fact that in most South African cities, especially Cape Town and Durban, the municipal authorities take an active part in financially supporting music. The civic buildings possess large concert halls in which weekly organ recitals are given before interested audiences. Dr. Barrow-Dowling and Mr. Denham Walker are joint city-organists at Cape Town: the former conducts the Municipal Festival Chorus, the latter the Cape Town Philharmonic Society. I found in Dr. Barrow-Dowling a musician of high ideals, and a warm supporter of musical reciprocity within the Empire. He has promised to conduct a concert to be given on Empire Day next year in Cape Town, when the entire programme will consist of that given by me in the Royal Albert Hall last May. The Acting Premier and the Ministers of Cape Colony, whom I had the pleasure of meeting, assured me of their hearty support in the event of my taking a British choir to South Africa in 1911, when I purpose making, with Dr. Henry Coward and a special choir of 200 voices, the all-red route round the Empire—to include Canada, New Zealand, Australia, and South Africa.

The spirit of reciprocity will be shown in our joining forces wherever possible with the choruses to be found in the Over-Seas Dominions. I hope, before returning to London in January, to make a visit to New Zealand and Australia for the purpose of meeting, and gaining the valuable co-operation of, the leading members of the musical profession there, and thereby encircle the British Empire with a festival of music which has for its standard 'Our Over-Seas Dominions for each other and the Empire for us all.' I should not fail to add that the series of festivals in South Africa owe their initiative to my friend Mr. Albert Archdeacon, a most enthusiastic worker in the cause of Imperial music-making.

CHARLES A. E. HARRISS.

HANDEL'S ODE ON ST. CECILIA'S DAY.*

The earliest known musical celebration of St. Cecilia's Day (November 22) was held at Evereux, in France, in the year 1571. More than a century elapsed, however, before St. Cecilia was similarly honoured in England. For the 'Feast,' as it was called, in 1683—the first held in this country—three odes were written, two in English and one in Latin. All three were set to music by Henry Purcell, but only one appears to have been publicly performed.

John Dryden (1631-1700) wrote two odes in honour of the patroness of music and musicians—'A Song for St. Cecilia's Day,' in 1687, and, in 1697, 'Alexander's Feast, or the Power of Music.' Both these odes were subsequently set to music by Handel. The text of the first of these, forming that of the present publication, originally appeared printed on a broadside headed:

A Song for St. Cecilia's Day, 1687. | Written | By John Dryden, Esq.; and Compos'd by Mr. John Baptist Draghi.

The imprint reads: 'Printed by T. Dring, in Fleetstreet, 1687.' Draghi's setting has not been published, but copies of the work are preserved in the library of the Royal College of Music, and there is an imperfect copy at the British Museum.

Handel was fifty-four years old when he set the first of Dryden's St. Cecilia odes to music. The autograph score, preserved in the Royal Music Library, Buckingham Palace, bears the following dates:

Overture to the Song for St. Cecilia's Day. ~~ode~~ by Mr. Dryden 1687. Begun Sept. 15. 1739- | by G. F. Handel. | Septembr 24. 1739. | 9

This was the first work in which Handel used the old astrological signs in dating his autograph scores.

* Historical notes prefixed to a new edition of the work. (Novello.)

a custom which he afterwards continued to the end of his life. The manuscript shows some slight though interesting changes. Seven bars of soft music are omitted from the first movement of the overture ; and the time-signature of 'The trumpet's loud clangour' was originally $\frac{3}{8}$. The March is headed 'La Marche.' At the beginning of the solos Handel has written the names of the principal singers who took part in the first performance—Signora Francesina and Mr. Beard.

The production of the work was advertised in the London Daily Post and General Advertiser of November 22, 1739 (St. Cecilia's Day), as follows :

LINCOLNS INN FIELDS.
At the Theatre-Royal in Lincolns Inn Fields, this Day, November 22, (being St. Cecilia's Day) will be perform'd
AN ODE of MR. DRYDEN'S,
With two new CONCERTO'S for several Instruments.
Which will be preceded by ALEXANDER'S FEAST.
And a CONCERTO on the ORGAN.
Boxes Half a Guinea. Pit 5s. First Gallery 3s. Upper Gallery 2s.
* * Particular Care has been taken to have the House well-air'd ; and the Passage from the Fields to the House will be cover'd for better Conveniency.
Box Tickets will be sold this Day at the Stage-Door.

Pit and Gallery Doors will be open'd at Four, the Boxes at Five.
To begin at Six o'Clock.

It will be observed that Handel's name, as composer of the music, does not appear in the above announcement ; indeed, in the earliest advertisement, Dryden's name is also suppressed, 'A new ode'—not 'new' as regards the words—being the only information given as to the identity of the work. In the advertisement of November 17, the word 'warm' appears instead of 'well-air'd' in respect of the condition of the 'House.'

The Ode was performed six times during the winter of 1739-40, in spite of the fact that this was the 'hard winter.' The frost lasted nine weeks, when coaches plied upon the Thames, and festivities and diversions of all kinds were enjoyed on the ice-bound river. No wonder, therefore, that Handel caused the following information to be added to the advertisement (February 13, 1740) of his performances at Lincoln's Inn Theatre :

Particular Care has been taken to have the House survey'd and secur'd against the Cold, by having Curtains plac'd before every Door, and constant Fires will be kept in the House 'till the Time of Performance.

Although this is the first St. Cecilian ode written by Dryden, it is the second by that poet which Handel set to music. It was preceded by 'Alexander's Feast,' composed in 1736. Mozart wrote, in June, 1790, additional accompaniments to the 'Ode on St. Cecilia's Day,' as he did to the 'Messiah,' 'Acis and Galatea,' and 'Alexander's Feast.' Except the 'Messiah'—of which the location is unknown—the autographs of Mozart's orchestration of the above works by Handel are preserved in the Royal Library, Berlin.

Reviews.

The evolution of modern orchestration. By Louis Adolphe Coerne, Ph.D.

[New York : The Macmillan Company.]

The long-felt want of a history of orchestration in the English language, as distinct from a technical treatise on the subject, has been supplied by an American musician in the volume under notice. After some brief introductory matter on 'the cradle of instrumental music,' 'the dawn of independent instrumentation,' and 'the evolution of musical instruments,' Dr. Coerne proceeds to set forth the evolution of orchestration from Monteverde—'justly styled the founder of the modern orchestra'—to composers of the present day. As the preface to his book is dated 'April 30, 1905,' his survey is not quite up to date, so rapidly do developments in orchestration follow one another. But this does not detract from the value of a volume which bears evidence of having been carefully thought out and lucidly written.

Dr. Coerne divides his subject into three main divisions : 1) Preliminaries (composers prior to Bach and Handel) ; 2) The Classic Era ; and (3) Romanticism. Each of these sections is provided with a summary, and there is an index of names. Eighty-five pages, nearly a third of the whole, consist of an appendix of musical illustrations, in score, from the works of Monteverde, Alessandro Scarlatti, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Weber, Berlioz, Mendelssohn, Wagner, Saint-Saëns, Tchaikovsky, Dvorák and Richard Strauss. The absence from these illustrations of an American or English composer as a contributor to the evolution of the modern orchestra is rather remarkable, the more especially as the author says : 'the American composer is to-day ready to enter the lists against the entire world.'

It is interesting to learn what Dr. Coerne has to say about English orchestrators—this being a word he uses—in the four pages devoted to our countrymen. His 'sturdy list,' as he calls it, consists of Balfé, Macfarren, Bennett, Barnby, Sullivan, Bridge, Mackenzie, Parry, Cowen, and Stanford. Elgar is referred to later, partly in two foot-notes, and Coleridge-Taylor shares the same fate as Debussy in being consigned to foot-note type. Why Balfé is mentioned is not very obvious, as we are told that 'neither the substance-matter nor the instrumentation of his works merits the distinction of having furthered the cause of indigenous English music.' And then are the works of Macfarren 'among the most important contributions to the literature of English music' ? The coupling of Barnby's name with two concert performances of 'Parsifal' has nothing whatever to do with his share, whatever that may have been, in the evolution of orchestration. Sullivan is dismissed in a paragraph of twenty-two lines. We learn that 'John Bridge

(1844) displays sound scholarship in a respectable list of sacred music, cantatas and orchestral works, and that in Stanford our author 'discovers the accomplished scholar rather than the artistic dreamer.'

From the above quotations, and the absence of any illustrations from their works, it will be inferred that Dr. Coerne has scarcely given adequate attention to English-speaking composers. If, however, there are shortcomings in this respect, his book is one in which students will find much to interest them, more especially the 103 illustrations which form the appendix to the volume. The statement (on p. 76) that in 1829 Mendelssohn conducted his C minor Symphony in London at the pianoforte, needs correction, as he used a baton on that occasion.

Andantino. By Edwin H. Lemare. Arranged by Gustav von Holst as a quintet for pianoforte and stringed instruments.

Auf Wiedersehen. By A. Herbert Brewer. Arranged by the composer as a quintet for pianoforte and stringed instruments.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Mr. Gustav von Holst, who is responsible for the new arrangement of Mr. Lemare's popular 'Andantino,' has wisely transposed the key from D flat to D. In the violin primo part appears a passage to which is attached a footnote: 'Only to be played in the absence of the viola'; but the effect of the setting will be somewhat lessened if the piece has to be reduced to a quartet. 'Tis true, alas! though 'pity 'tis 'tis true,' that the viola is not taken to as kindly as its usefulness deserves. And yet, with what open arms is a good violinist received in all stringed-instrument circles!

Dr. Brewer's charming morceau, 'Auf Wiedersehen,' originally composed for violin and pianoforte, has been artistically arranged by the composer as a quintet for pianoforte and strings. In its new form this attractive composition is sure of being much appreciated.

Grieg and his music. By Henry T. Finck.
[John Lane.]

The lamented death of Edvard Grieg has naturally caused Mr. Finck to amplify his monograph of the composer (reviewed in the Musical Times of February, 1906), and in so doing to furnish a more complete biography of the popular Norwegian composer. So much fresh material is contained in the present volume, however, as to make it practically a new book. Grieg's letters to the author are now printed for the first time, and other epistolary sources have been drawn upon whereby the 'life' has been autobiographically enriched. Mr. Finck, who writes in the spirit of a hero-worshipper, pleasantly tells the simple life-story of an interesting man and a gifted creative musician. His personal knowledge of the composer enables him to give many peeps into the charming homelife of Grieg and his devoted wife amid their Norwegian surroundings. All this and much more—the well-written critical part of the book, for instance—will prove of great interest to the large circle of Grieg's admirers in this country. A number of illustrations add to the attractiveness of this ably compiled biography, the value of which is increased by an exhaustive bibliography, a catalogue of Grieg's compositions, and an adequate index.

Nocturne, from the music to 'Romeo and Juliet,' for violin and pianoforte. By Edward German.

Gavotte in G, from Suite in four movements for violin and pianoforte. By A. von Ahn Carse.
[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Mr. Edward German's own arrangement of the Nocturne from his music to 'Romeo and Juliet' has been so skilfully accomplished that all appearance of an adaptation is lost, and the work successfully makes its appeal as a particularly effective violin solo, not unlike the sun-glow of a rare sunset. There can be little doubt that the Nocturne will be eagerly sought after by violinists.

Mr. A. von Ahn Carse's dainty Gavotte in G, from his Suite in four movements, has become popular enough to merit separate publication, and many will be glad to make its acquaintance in this form.

Puccini's Madama Butterfly. Puccini's La Bohème. Nights at the opera, Nos. xiii. and xiv. By E. Markham Lee.

[Alexander Moring, Ltd.]

The popularity of Puccini's two operas, 'Madama Butterfly' and 'La Bohème,' is sufficient justification for the issue of this pair of convenient handbooks. Not only are the stories of the operas related and illustrated with music examples, but dates are given of their productions abroad and first performances in this country; moreover, in the former of these handy little books we are told of the 'art of Puccini,' and in the latter we learn something about the composer biographically. Dr. Markham Lee appears to have discharged his task with praiseworthy skill, and the usefulness of the subject-matter is beyond dispute. Except for the music examples—which would look all the better were they printed from type—the get-up of the books leaves little to be desired.

The black monk. The men of Harlech. By Rutland Boughton.

The angelic hunter. Death, the reaper. The lover's wraith. Morning song. The merry time of maying. By Brahms.
[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

In his choral treatment, usually in variation form, of British folk-songs, Mr. Rutland Boughton has opened out a new field for composers, and his mastery of choral writing well qualifies him to take the lead. The present examples of his efforts in this direction are arrangements of the Welsh songs 'The black monk' and 'The men of Harlech,' in which his originality and contrapuntal skill are well displayed.

Brahms evidently thought highly of the native music of his country, judging from the number of folk-tunes he considered worthy of four-part choral arrangement. As contrasted with Mr. Boughton, Brahms retained the simplicity of the original form of these melodies in clothing them with equally simple but perfectly appropriate and artistic harmonies. The technical difficulty of these five examples of Brahms's method is inconsiderable. 'The lover's wraith' shows in an interesting manner the use of the sharp sixth in a minor key.

Eco dei miei verdi anni. Album di nove canzoni per varie voci. Composed by L. Zaverlati.
[Boosey & Co.]

To those whose musical tastes run in a certain groove this album of songs will afford keen pleasure, for the music embodies many of the characteristics—both in melody and in accompaniment—that form the essence of the Italian folk-song style. The composer is evidently well versed in the potentialities of this school, and makes good use of his gift for presenting old matter in a new form. At the same time, there are passages that show original invention of some merit, and there is much that will charm those whose ears are not deaf to melody. To the singer these compositions afford plentiful opportunity for effects.

Messrs. Breitkopf and Haertel send us upwards of forty specimens of their new post-cards of the monuments and memorials of celebrated musicians. Although the views are small, the prints are very clear; the least satisfactory photograph is of the only English monument in the series that of Handel in Westminster Abbey, which is hardly worthy of the great composer or the sacred fane in which his remains are interred.

MR. MACLEAN'S OPERA 'MAÎTRE SEILER.'

The Moody-Manners Company opened their seventh annual London season of grand opera in English on August 14, at the Lyric Theatre. A feature of the first week was the initial production of a short opera by Mr. Alex. Maclean, entitled 'Maître Seiler.' Mr. Maclean has already made progress in the operatic field, and short works from his pen have been produced in England and Germany. In the opera of 'Petruccio'—which won the prize of £100 offered by Mr. Charles Manners for a one-act piece by a native composer—Mr. Maclean showed marked dramatic abilities, and they were again expressed in the striking oratorio 'The Annunciation,' produced at a London Symphony Orchestra concert in February last. His latest effort indicates in no uncertain fashion that Mr. Maclean has uncommon power as a writer for the stage. The story he has taken is slight and for the most part lyrical, but he has provided it with a musical setting of much tender charm and of sincerity and depth of feeling. For the purposes of the book one of the Erckmann-Chatrian 'Fantastic tales of Rhineland,' entitled 'The Unterwald Wedding,' has been taken. It tells of a lawyer of advancing years who seeks rest from his labours in dispensing justice by indulging in rural delights, including the peaceful art of fishing, on the borders of the forest. He has as host the Forester, by whose daughter, Lotte, his wants are supplied. The lawyer's affections go out to the simple girl, who, however, has plighted her troth to a young forester, Wilhelm, at an 'Unterwald Wedding.' The lovers quarrel, as lovers will, and Wilhelm, in seeking out Lotte to 'make it up,' reveals to her elderly but silent admirer that he and she are betrothed, and are only waiting for the influence of a certain Maître Seiler to secure the appointment which shall make their union possible. Seiler grasps the situation, gives Wilhelm the post he desires, and having secured the consent of the father joins the lovers' hands and passes through the night back to his lonely existence.

To this story Mr. Maclean has composed music that is notable for the success with which it portrays the varying moods of the touching story, and for the fact that even in its lightest moments—such as the valse-duet between the lovers—it is always scholarly and always musicianlike. Several of the numbers stand out, among them the capital song sung by the Forester and the ballad assigned to Lotte. The constantly-changing phases of feeling expressed in the work are welded into an attractive whole by Mr. Maclean's strong individuality, and it is clear that on a larger canvas he will be able to paint a musical picture of considerable power. The opera was thoroughly well performed under the composer's direction by Miss Raymonde Amy as Lotte, Mr. Seth Hughes as Wilhelm, Mr. Charles Magrath as the father, and Mr. Lewys James as Maître Seiler, and its reception at the hands of a crowded audience was marked by much spontaneous enthusiasm.

The other operas so far mounted have included the Company's excellent version of Wagner's 'Mastersingers,' with a highly original Beckmesser in Mr. William Dever; Puccini's 'Madama Butterfly,' which derives so much of its appeal from the admirable efforts of Mrs. Fanny Moody; Bizet's 'Carmen,' with Mlle. Zélie de Lussan and Mr. Joseph O'Mara, who have both rejoined the company; Wagner's 'Tannhäuser' and 'Lohengrin'; Verdi's 'Aida'; and Wagner's 'Rienzi,' which was announced for revival in English and played for the first time by this company on August 27. Herr Richard Eckhold has again proved himself to be an able conductor. The attendance, we are glad to say, has constituted a record.

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The fifteenth season of Promenade Concerts given by the Queen's Hall Orchestra, with Mr. Henry J. Wood as conductor, began on August 14 and will terminate on October 23. A crowded hall warmly welcomed the conductor on the opening night, when a popular programme was provided which included a new Fantasia on British sea songs, arranged and scored by Mr. Wood. On August 19 a similar Fantasia by him on Welsh melodies was performed.

In both works the melodies are set forth in a series after the style of the operatic 'selection,' each with its distinctive scoring.

Special interest was imparted to the programme on August 19 by the first performance in England of a work by Heinrich Noren entitled 'Kaleidoscope variations and double fugue.' The theme of the variations is an original one, and is treated in a manner intended to convey certain moods suggested by various titles. Viewed in this light, as a series of pictures with a definite meaning, the work was not convincing. But it was a striking example of modern technique, in the potentialities of which the composer seems to be well versed. The construction and scoring were interesting in detail, but the invention was not powerful and lacked breadth. The conclusion was imposing.

A Tone-poem by Henry Hadley, an American composer, entitled 'Salome,' received its first hearing in England on August 24. The composer seeks herein to depict the story of 'Salome' as laid out in Oscar Wilde's tragedy. As an orchestral colourist he brings a fund of resource to his aid in picturing the surroundings of the drama, but he is less happy in his delineation of the story itself, judging by the many powerful passages of purely musical development that occur. The dramatic basis of the work seems to have shackled rather than set free Mr. Hadley's inventive power. The section representing the 'Dance of the Seven Veils' was among the most striking features of the work.

NATIONAL CO-OPERATIVE FESTIVAL.

CRYSTAL PALACE, AUGUST 21.

This Society has grown into an important musical organization that is exerting great influence in the country. It has attached to itself choirs and choralists of first-rate ability, and its great combined choir is second to none of the similarly constituted bodies that perform every year at the Palace. This success is owing partly to the discovery of the numerous advantages of musical co-operation, and in a great measure to the ability and courage of Mr. Allen Gill in forming the programmes for study. On the present occasion a choir of 4,000 adult singers sang the following selection:

Achieved is the glorious work (Creation)	Haydn
Rustic coquette	F. Champneys
The trusting tree	G. J. Bennett
Haymakers, rakers	Charles Wood
Come, sleep	Charles Wood
The primrose	John E. West
A lament	T. R. G. Jess
Winter days	A. J. Caldwell
Annie Laurie	Arr. by H. E. Button
In silent night	Arr. by Brahms
Love, fare thee well	Arr. by Brahms
We love our Island story	Eaton Fanning

Every piece had been carefully rehearsed. 'Winter days' was especially well sung, and the two simple and beautiful folk-songs harmonized by Brahms were extremely effective. Another successful item was Mr. West's part-song 'The primrose,' and Dr. Wood's two part-songs were sung by the huge choir with dainty rhythm and excellent tone. The quality of the voices was exceptionally good. Mr. Allen Gill conducted with his usual zeal and with entire success. An efficient orchestra played necessary accompaniments, and German's 'Henry VIII. Dances. Mr. Frank Idle was the organist.

A concert by a junior choir of two thousand singers was another attractive feature of the festival. In these times when only unison singing is being advocated for children's choirs, it is worthy of note that two of the most successful items of the programme were unaccompanied three-part songs, namely, 'The cuckoo sings in the poplar tree' (G. A. Macfarren) and 'Oft in the stilly night' (Irish air, arranged). Mr. Charles J. Jeapes was the conductor. He had evidently gained the confidence of his young choristers.

The choral competitions, in which no fewer than thirty-one choirs took part, are fully reported in The Competition Festival Record Supplement. It may be as well here to emphasise the fact that all these choirs came mostly from the provinces, and that the highest money-prize offered was three guineas.

CAPE TOWN MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)

The third annual choral festival held under the auspices of the Municipality of Cape Town, began on July 13 in the City Hall, in the presence of His Excellency the Governor, the Mayor and Corporation, and a large and representative gathering of the citizens. The interest of the festival centred in the performance of Dr. Charles Harriss's cantata 'Pan'—which, conducted by the composer, met with a flattering reception—and Gabriel Pierné's 'The children's usade,' which attracted the greatest audience ever assembled in the large hall.

The choirs of the combined choral societies, numbering 30 voices, were augmented by 400 children's voices, and the rendering of Pierné's work was one of which the greatest critics of the world might be proud. Taking into account the great difficulties of the music, and that half the orchestra consisted of amateurs, it is not too much to say that the whole performance was a tribute to pluck, perseverance, and hard work on the part of all concerned; but special credit is due to Dr. Barrow-Dowling and Mr. Albert Archdeacon, who were jointly responsible for the production. The singing of the children was flawless, even the unseen boys were above reproach in regard both to time and tone; indeed, the entire performance was a triumph of organization.

The orchestra, led by Mr. Edie Marx, was excellent, their interpretation of the 'storm' being especially notable. The soloists, Miss Esta D'Argo, Mr. Lloyd Chandos and Mr. Archdeacon, all sang well, and Dr. Barrow-Dowling, who engineered the scheme from the beginning with warmest enthusiasm, conducted with his well-known resourcefulness and skill.

Foreign Notes.

BERLIN.

An interesting programme was selected for a recent concert given by the Königliches Akademisches Institut für Kirchenmusik. It included the following old church cantatas, five number—F. Tunder's 'Wachet auf,' for soprano solo, organ and organ; Buxtehude's 'Wie soll ich fliehen'; Krieger's 'Die Gerechten werden weg gerädet,' both for chorus, strings and organ; F. W. Zachau's 'Herr wenn nur dich habe,' for soli, chorus, harp, strings and organ; J. S. Bach's 'Ich habe genug,' for bass solo, oboe, organ and organ. These cantatas, which created a deep impression, were conducted by Professor Dr. Hermann Kretzschmar with rare understanding of the particular style character of these old-world compositions.—Professor Hermann Kretzschmar has been appointed Principal of Königliche Hochschule für Musik, in succession to the Dr. Joachim.

BERNE.

A new one-act musical drama, entitled 'Högnis letzte Fahrt,' composed by Peter Fassbender to the somewhat dramatic text of Hermann Ling, has been produced at Municipal Theatre here.

BOSTON.

The series of concerts given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra concluded with an excellent performance of Beethoven's Choral Symphony, conducted by Herr Max Fiedler.—A short season of opera was given by Mr. Merstein's opera company. Several French works were presented in the scheme—Massenet's 'Thaïs,' and 'Jongleur Notre Dame,' Charpentier's 'Louise' (which had a great success), and Debussy's 'Pelleas et Mélisande.'

JOURIEFF (RUSSIA).

On July 4 and 5 a choral festival took place in which choirs, numbering 2,800 voices, took part. Twenty thousand people travelled by special trains in order to attend two concerts.

MUNICH.

On July 31 a series of festival performances of Mozart's operas was inaugurated at the Residenz Theatre with a performance of 'The marriage of Figaro.' Both the stage management and the musical interpretation, under Felix Mottl's baton, were thoroughly in keeping with Mozart's delightful work.

NAPLES.

At the Teatro san Carlo an orchestral concert in memory of the late Signor Giuseppe Martucci, and devoted exclusively to his works, was given under Signor Toscanini's conductorship. The Symphony in D major was the principal work performed.

OSTEND.

A festival concert devoted to music by Belgian composers was given on July 12. Among the works performed were the interesting 'Variations Symphoniques' by Gilson, several compositions by Jan Blockx, 'Le Sorbier,' for solo baritone, chorus, and orchestra, by Emile Mathieu, the baritone solo being beautifully sung by M. Henry Fontaine, and Edgar Tinel's 'Te Deum.'

ROME.

On the occasion of the sixth anniversary of the death of the late Pope Leo XIII., a new Mass by Maestro Perosi was performed by the choir of the Capella Sixtina. The leading Italian critics regard the work with great favour.

SCHEVENINGEN.

Schumann's music to 'Manfred' was recently performed at one of the Kursaal concerts by the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra and a chorus of 200 voices. Herr Ernst von Possart, intendant of the Royal Theatre at Munich, recited the part of Manfred. At the same concert Richard Strauss's 'Wanderer's Sturmlied,' for chorus and orchestra, achieved great success.

SONDERSHAUSEN.

On the occasion of the seventieth anniversary of the birth of Professor Friedrich Gernsheim, two concerts, entirely devoted to his compositions, were given in his honour. At the first of these, a chamber-music concert given in the Conservatoire, his String quartet in A minor and the Pianoforte trio in B major, in addition to some of his best songs, formed the programme. Thereafter followed, on July 18, an orchestral concert with the B major Symphony and the Violoncello concerto as the pièces de résistance.—The Scots pianist Frederic Lamond has given, with pronounced success, at the Conservatoire, a Meisterkursus for advanced pianoforte students. He also conducted a new Symphony of his own composition, which created a favourable impression.—At the Lohconcerte another new symphony, composed by Ferdinand Hummel, received a successful first performance under the direction of Professor Traugott Ochs.

WILDUNGEN.

Among the concerts lately given at this German health resort, special mention should be made of the evening devoted to the compositions of Hugo Kaun, a composer whose name, since he returned from America, where he lived for a number of years, has been considerably to the fore. The programme consisted of three pieces for string orchestra, the Phantasiestück for violin and orchestra, five songs and the symphony 'An mein Vaterland,' in addition to the Festmarsch upon the theme of 'The star-spangled banner.' The works obtained a distinct success, and the composer, who took part in the concert, was very warmly received.

The Durban (South Africa) Musical Association gave Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' on July 26 with a choir of 130 voices and an orchestra of thirty-three performers. The principals were Miss Esta D'Argo, Madame Julia Lennox, Mr. Lloyd Chandos and Mr. Albert Archdeacon. This was the last choral concert held in the old Town Hall, and local critics pronounced it the best of the kind ever held in the town. Mr. J. Frank Proudman, Borough organist, conducted.

The following awards have been made at the Royal Academy of Music: Charles Lucas silver medal (composition) to S. Hartley Braithwaite; Parepa-Rosa gold medal (tenors) to Cynlais Gibbs; Swansea Eisteddfod prize (all voices) to Lillian G. Rickard; Joseph Maas prize (tenors) to Edward E. Butcher; Julia Leney prize (harp) to Grace D. Maxted; James Tubbs & Son's prize (violin) to E. Stanelli de Groot; Hill & Son's prize (violin) to Phyllis Norman Parker; Dove prize (For general excellence) to Clive Turner; Charlotte Walters' prizes (elocution) to Sybil Tuck and Margaret M. Thom; Betjemann gold medal (operatic singing) to Margaret Ismay; Westlake memorial prize (pianoforte) to Vivian Langrish; Hannah Mayer Fitzroy prize (violin) to Evan Williams; Alexander Roller prize (pianoforte) to Vivian Langrish; Ridley Prentice memorial prize to Eugenie Ritte; Bowen gift to Bella Newstead; Lesley Alexander gift to Phyllis Mitchell.

In connection with the Royal College of Music Patron's Fund (founded by Mr. S. Ernest Palmer), compositions for performance at the next chamber concert are to be sent to the registrar of the Royal College of Music on or before October 1 next. The following new regulations for the two concerts, orchestral and chamber, to be given in 1910, have been issued. Compositions should be sent, by registered post, without the name and address of the composer, but bearing a motto, and accompanied by an envelope bearing the same motto and the name and address of the composer inside. The latest date for receiving the orchestral compositions is January 1, 1910, and for the chamber concert, July 1, 1910.

Mr. James Whewall, conductor of the North Staffordshire and District Choral Society, writes to say that Mr. Haverall Brian's 'By the waters of Babylon' was first performed by his (Mr. Whewall's) Society, at Hanley, on April 18, 1907, and therefore the announced 'first performance' at the approaching Musical League festival at Liverpool is an error. The information on this point given in our last issue was taken from the official prospectus of the Musical League Festival.

Mr. Richard Evans, of Bolton, has just been awarded the 'Curtis' gold medal for singing at the Royal Manchester College of Music, being the highest honour that the College can confer upon a singing student. Four years ago Mr. Evans was working as a miner in the pit, but a fund raised by public subscription enabled him to enter as a student at the Royal College, with the above satisfactory result.

Answers to Correspondents.

G. F. B.—(1) The national hymns of all nations, arranged for pianoforte solo by Fritz Spindler, will be found in Peters edition, No. 2755. The Russian National Anthem, arranged for four voices by Barnby, forms No. 373 of the Musical Times series of part-music. (2) Just as a leading statesman once laid it down as an axiom that Archdeacons may be said to discharge Archidiaconal functions, so 'Cathedral use' is nothing more nor less than the method of performing divine service in cathedrals. This includes intoning, antiphonal singing of the psalms, the due observance of the verse parts in services and anthems, and—may we add?—a devotional organ accompaniment free from secular suggestiveness.

A STUDENT.—(1) With all due respect to the distinguished German professor you mention, the Cotta edition of Beethoven's Pianoforte sonata in D (Op. 10, No. 3) is quite correct in regard to indicating the manner of performing the grace notes in that work. Moreover, so eminent an authority as Mr. Dannreuther confirms the directions therein given by saying 'Appoggiature, short' (see Dannreuther's primer of 'Musical Ornamentation,' Part II., p. 113). (2) The C flat in bar 37 (reckoning without repeats) in No. 15 of Schumann's 'Die Davidsbündler' is an enharmonic change of the preceding B natural, therefore the trill notes (B natural and C) remain the same in spite of the notational change.

PEPYS.—(1) The song 'Beauty retire,' by Mr. Pepys, is printed in Sir Frederick Bridge's 'Samuel Pepys: a lover of musicke,' published by Messrs. Smith, Elder, & Co. (2) The legend of St. Francis of Paula (A.D. 1508) walking upon the water, that prompted Liszt to write his pianoforte piece thereupon, is that the saint was floated from Sicily to Calabria when refused a passage by boatmen because he could not pay his fare. You will find an interesting biography of St. Francis of Paula in Baring-Gould's 'Lives of the saints,' vol. iv., p. 23. The name-day is April 2.

ALPHA.—For 'books of solfeggi containing exercises for one or three parts suitable for a singing-class of mixed voices,' Lane's 'Elementary sight-singing course' (Paris: 1881) and sixpence) in Novello's 'Elementary music manual' and Stainer's primer 'Choral Society Vocalisation,' and finally 'Fifty vocalises for two voices,' edited by Randegger.

A. R. C.—Chants, when played over, should not be curtailed; in the matter of a long hymn-tune, never play only half the tune is played over, assuming that there is a convenient cadential break and that the melody is suitable to the congregation. The playing over of a hymn-tune does not 'bore the congregation to listen to it.'

L. W.—With regard to the worth of violins reputed to be 'Strads,' we can only repeat the advice so often been given in this column: send your interest to Messrs. W. E. Hill & Sons, 140, New Bond Street, in return for a fee, will give you a reliable expert opinion as to its genuineness and value.

SEVENTY-FIVE.—You will find some charming pieces of village choirs and church bands of older date in Washington Irving's 'Sketch Book' (chapter 'Cathedral Day'), George Eliot's 'Scenes from Clerical Life' (chapters 1 and 2), and Thomas Hardy's 'Under the greenwood tree' (chapters 1 and 2).

J. K. H.—It was Charles Lamb who characterized Brahms as 'a mixture of the Jew, the gentleman, and the angel,' the last-named attribute being in reference to his fine voice and artistic singing of the eminent tenor. Lamb considered equal to Mrs. Siddons in her performance sphere.

O. A.—We are sorry not to be able to answer your question about whistlers, either soloists or concerted. Nor do we know in what country siffleurs—to use the more polite term—are 'produced,' nor their répertoires, nor even the judgment of the public and of the Press upon their work.

W. G. C.—The following metronomic rates are suggested: Minuet and Trio in E minor, by J. B. Calkin (No. 1); original compositions for the organ, crotchet = 120; Sechter's Fugue in G minor, Op. 2, No. 3 (Basil Westbrook's 'Young Organist'), crotchet = 92 to 100.

N. V. M.—For a girls' choir in the district of the highway, which a factory girl in whom you are interested could join, you had better apply to the Hon. Mandell Smith Square, Westminster, who would be sure to refer you with the desired information.

X. Y. Z.—You will find 'a few recitatives for a contralto voice suitable for the Royal Academy of Music' in Handel's songs, and in the contralto part of 'Elijah,' edited by Randegger (Novello). See also the Ballad 'Meshulleth in Parry's 'Judith.'

NUNQUAM NON PARATUS.—We can only suggest that you should study under an organist of a Presbyterian Church in your city, where there must be several who are qualified to give you lessons in organ playing and pianoforte accompaniment.

T. D.—(1) As Longfellow's 'Hyperion' was published in New York in 1839 and in England in 1840, it is a non-copyright work. (2) The address of Mr. R. Gaul is Gillott Lodge, Edgbaston, Birmingham.

C. N. (Denver, Colorado).—The operas of 'Baron d'Erlanger' and 'Angelus' (Dr. E. W. Noyes) are both published by Messrs. Ricordi & Co.

H. E. R.—Consult 'The Opera,' by R. A. S. (George Routledge & Sons), and 'The Standard Operas' by Charles Annesley (Sampson Low).

BARITONE.—'The riderless steed' is the title of a piece composed by Allen T. Hussell; it is published by Messrs. Ascherberg & Co.

ORGANIST.—Henri Frederic Hemy died, at 14, Bond Street, Hartlepool, on June 10, 1888, aged sixty-nine.

R. C. H.—Thanks for your kind offer, which we gladly bear in mind when the time comes.

G. D.—We regret that we cannot give the names of teachers.

PROGRESSIVE STUDIES

FOR THE PIANOFORTE

EDITED, ARRANGED IN GROUPS, AND THE FINGERING REVISED AND SUPPLEMENTED

BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

THIS Collection of Studies is intended to illustrate the various elements of a complete course of pianoforte technique, and to provide students with the means of attacking and overcoming the different special difficulties which have to be surmounted. With this view, the Studies have been arranged in groups, those in each group being placed in progressive order, and having reference to some one particular difficulty. The greater part of the studies themselves have been selected from the standard works of the most eminent Study-writers, and with these are included numerous others, which, though of equally great practical utility, have hitherto been less generally accessible.

FROM THE ABOVE :

SELECTED PIANOFORTE STUDIES

PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

IN TWO SETS (EIGHT BOOKS), PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH BOOK.

This present collection of studies is designed to provide teachers with a short course of Pianoforte Technique adapted to the needs of the average pupil, the intention being to spare the teacher the labour of choosing a sufficiently varied selection from the large mass of material existing, and at the same time to ensure that the different departments of technique shall be undertaken in the order which experience has proved to be the most beneficial.

The Studies are grouped in two Sets, and are so arranged that the different Books in which they are contained may be taken in consecutive order, but pupils who are already further advanced than the elementary stage represented by Set I. may commence at once with Set II., which is found to be complete in itself, and to illustrate all the essential elements of technique.

Where additional studies are desired, or studies on certain subjects which are not touched upon in this series, the larger collection, published under the title of "Progressive Studies" (from which the present examples have been selected), is of course available.

COMPLETION OF A Modern School for the Violin

BY AUGUST WILHELMJ AND JAMES BROWN

THE purpose of this Work is to provide, in one systematic and comprehensive scheme, all that is necessary for the acquirement of the Art of Modern Violin Playing.

"A Modern School for the Violin" consists of Six Books devoted to Daily Technical Practice and Six Books of Studies for Violin alone, and a large number of Pieces with Pianoforte Accompaniment, the Violin parts being specially edited for the purposes of teaching.

SECTION A.—TECHNICAL PRACTICE. IN SIX BOOKS.

The foundation of "A Modern School for the Violin" is laid by means of a series of Six Books dealing only with the important subject of DAILY TECHNICAL PRACTICE. The First Book of Technical Practice (Book 1A) is devoted to the 1st Position; the Second Book (2A) to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the Third Book (3A) to the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 4th, and 5th Positions; and so on. Bowings and other technical devices are introduced in a similarly progressive manner. Each Book of Technical Practice is divided into "Lessons" (or Chapters), and each Lesson contains a number of repeating Exercises on some definite point of Violin Technique—as Fingering, Bowing, &c., with the needful explanation. Included in each Book will be found a complete set of Scales and Arpeggi, arranged according to the particular advancement reached.

Taken as a whole, this Section is intended to facilitate, and to insist on, a thorough, steady, and continuous progress in the mastery of the Instrument, this being the only possible means of preparing the groundwork for artistic achievement with all its lasting delights.

SECTION B.—STUDIES. IN SIX BOOKS.

Section B is formed of a series of original and selected Studies, in Six Books. Each Book of Studies (Series B) is carefully co-ordinated, in respect of difficulty and range of subject, with the correspondingly numbered Book of Technical Practice (Section A). Thus the First Book of Studies (1B) is written in the 1st Position; the Second Book (2B) in the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the 3rd Book (3B) in all Positions up to and including the 5th; and so on. It should be explained that the two Sections are designed to complement one another, and that the "School" must be pursued in single Books of Technical Practice and Studies alternately, but in pairs. Thus, Books 1A and 1B are to be studied concurrently, then Books 2A and 2B, 3A and 3B, and so on, and the appropriate pairs are now issued bound together cloth (see Cloth Bindings below).

PIANOFORTE PLAYING
BY FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

In the course of my experience as a teacher of the pianoforte, an experience extending over many years, certain ideas have from time to time suggested themselves to me which have proved useful—to myself, as enabling me to express more clearly that which I desired my pupils to understand, and to my pupils, as tending to facilitate their comprehension of the various difficulties they have had to encounter, at the same time leading them to perceive the most practical means of overcoming them, and thus accelerating their general rate of progress.

These suggestions relate to both the mechanical and intellectual sides of the study of pianoforte-playing, or briefly, to Technique and Expression, the chief matters implied by the first of these terms being the production of various qualities of tone, the choice of suitable fingering, and the best methods of attacking certain difficulties; while the second, which may perhaps be more aptly designated the means of expression, includes rhythm, phrasing, variety and gradation of tone, the use of the pedals, et cætera.

SIX OCTAVE STUDIES
FOR THE PIANOFORTE
BY WILLEM COENEN.

"The musical value of some of the pieces is not inconsiderable."—The Times.

"Must needs prove most useful, and are not at all dry."—Daily Telegraph.

"The studies are quite as entertaining to the listener as they are serviceable to the performer."—Musical Opinion.

"Six clever and useful 'Octave Studies.' They are more than usually interesting."—Musical Standard.

"Excellent for practice."—Christian World.

"They afford a very complete course of study. The different numbers are tuneful and attractive, and the variety is great."—The Lady.

"Almost every branch of octave-playing is represented in these tuneful studies."—Church Bells.

"These studies are very melodious, and will make the irksome study of octaves quite interesting to the hard-working student."—Church Family Newspaper.

"Admirably adapted to formulate touch as well as style in this special branch of pianoforte technique."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

"Fitted for advanced students. For wrist work, No. 2 is excellent and No. 6 is good enough for a concert piece. In all there is pretty equal work for both hands."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"Six excellent octave studies (legato and staccato)."—Sheffield Daily Telegraph.

"Can safely be recommended to players who possess the laudable ambition of keeping up their technique."—Western Daily Press.

THE NEW CATHEDRAL PSALTER

CONTAINING

THE PSALMS OF DAVID

TOGETHER WITH

THE CANTICLES AND PROPER PSALMS FOR CERTAIN DAYS

EDITED AND POINTED FOR CHANTING

COSMO GORDON LANG, D.D.
(ARCHBISHOP OF YORK).

HENRY SCOTT HOLLAND, D.Litt.
(Canon and Precentor of St. Paul's).

CHARLES H. LLOYD, M.A., Mus.D.
(Precentor of Eton).

GEORGE C. MARTIN, Mus.D.
(Organist of St. Paul's).

No part of the Church Service has received greater attention in recent years than the Psalms, and there is no test of an organist's or choirmaster's qualifications than the manner in which the choir renders these matchless ms of Holy Writ.

The chief difficulty of Anglican chanting has always been the merging of the recitation into the strict-time section of chant. In the "Cathedral Psalter," issued a generation ago, an endeavour was made to overcome this difficulty by use of accent marks, and the striking popularity of the book has proved that the method therein adopted, if rightly d, was nearly perfect.

Experience, however, has shown that there was still room for improvement, and it may confidently be asserted that nearest approach to perfection has been attained in the entirely revised and improved form of the work entitled the ew Cathedral Psalter."

As the result of much careful study and practical knowledge, all ambiguity in regard to the merging of the recitation the strict-time section of the chant has now been removed.

The "New Cathedral Psalter" is issued in three forms: (i.) with Superimposed Notes; (ii.) with Prosody Signs; ) with Varied Type, whereby a choice can be made of the form which may be thought most effectual in securing lligent and reverent chanting. Moreover, the pointing is in every case identical, so that on such an occasion as a ice sung by combined choirs all three books could, if necessary, be used simultaneously.

Not the least important consideration in a pointed psalter is the matter of typography. In the "New Cathedral lter" bolder faced types, specially prepared, have been used, the result being greater clearness, while particular tion has been paid to the spacing between the words and lines so as to afford greater facility in reading.

he "New Cathedral Psalter," although founded on the "Cathedral Psalter," is a distinct book, and the two books cannot be used together.

No. 14.

CARMARTHEN.

August 2 (Bank Holiday).

This is an Eisteddfod of some importance. Much of popularity is no doubt due to its efficient management. The secretary, Mr. J. C. H. Portnell, brings prudence and natural capacity to bear upon the serious business arrangements. The event was held in Park in a marquee erected for the occasion. It was large enough to seat some thousands of visitors, but of use it cannot be said that the acoustic properties were ideal. The musical competitions embraced the following classes: solo-singing for all kinds of voices; junior and senior pianoforte playing; vocal duets; and choirs for female, female-voices, male-voices, and mixed-voices. The principal results were as follows:

CHIEF CHORAL COMPETITION (choirs not under 80 in number).

First prize, £40. Second prize, £10. £1 is. to each of the unsuccessful conductors.

Test: "By Babylon's wave" (Gounod).

Pantteg Choral Society (Mr. R. J. Gregory), 53.

Treboeth United Choral Society (Mr. William Jenkins), 60.

Myrddin Choir (Mr. D. N. Jones), 61.

Penygraig Philharmonic Choir (Mr. D. Rowland Jones), 65.

Aberaman United Choir (Mr. Gwilym Evans), 57.

(The maximum marks in all classes was 80.)

PANTTEG sang first. They displayed more enthusiasm in discipline. The attack was fierce, and the rhythm was too heavily accented. They sharpened a half-a-tone in the last section, the accompanist dutifully following the ascent.

TREBOTH at first exhibited good tone, and the expression was emotional. The intonation was not pure, and in the last movement the singing was badly out of tune. The attack was often excellent.

MYRDDIN began very softly, and secured a tender and pure expression. The Moderato movement was much too fast, and the ensuing Allegro was taken at the same rate. The execution was fluent, and the drill showed good training.

PENYGRAIG at first distinguished itself by its amazing sonority in starting. At the recent National Eisteddfod London a prize was given for smartness in coming on to the platform and being ready to begin. Penygraig could not have won the prize. Dr. McNaught said that his lifelong experience of Eisteddfodau he had never before seen such masterly inactivity. However, it must be said that the choir sang very well, and they gained the first prize. The tone was blendful, and there was evidence of much thoughtful study in the expression. Rubato was too much used. The basses sang excellently. At the end of the movement the tone fell off, but the dramatic intonation of this section in some degree engaged the attention and dwarfed faults.

ABERAMAN made a brave attempt, but the choir has not sufficient experience or ability for this piece. The attack was impressive and the intonation was here well maintained. Later the tone was not blendful and sweet. Moderato was too fast. Some mistakes were made.

MALE-VOICE COMPETITION (not under 60 in number).

First prize—£40 and a baton to the conductor. £1 is. to each of the unsuccessful conductors.

Tests: (a) "Lovely maiden" (D. Pughe Evans), unaccompanied;

(b) "The Reveille" (Elgar).

Mountain Ash Orpheus Male-Voice Party (Mr. H. Llewellyn).

Swansea District Male-Voice Party (Mr. D. Llew Bowen).

Carmarthen Male-Voice Party (Mr. W. Dunn Williams).

Mountain Ash sang (a) quite beautifully. The rhythm was delicate and dainty, and there was conspicuous evidence of attack and oneness of tone-colour. More vitality was needed at the end: 73. They began (b) in promising style, catching the mood and fire. Then they began to miss some of the fine points of the piece, its breadth and intensity. They were not quite in tune, but they kept the pitch astonishingly well: 62. Total 135.

SWANSEA was in fine form. The first piece (a) was charmingly sung. There was an attractive crispness in the rhythm and a piquant delicacy in the expression: 75. (b) "The Reveille" revealed the fine capacity and resource of the choir. There was due frenzy and agitation, fairly if not completely controlled. Some of the expression was thrilling and few points were missed: 71. Total 146.

CARMARTHEN displayed a bright tone in (a) and the execution was fairly neat. On the whole it seemed that not all the singers knew the music well. They ended rather sharp: 61. In (b) the tone adopted was too hard—a sort of barking quality. This resulted in a rather trivial performance of the nobler passages of the piece. Much more unity and certainty of execution were called for: 55. Total, 116.

LADIES' CHOIRS (not under 30 in number).

First prize, £7. Second Prize, £2. 10s. 6d. to each of the unsuccessful conductors.

Test: "Blodau Mai" (J. O. Jones).

Excelsior Ladies' Choir (Madame Ben Thomas), 57.

Carway and District Ladies' Choir (Miss Violet Gilbert), 60.

1st. Carmarthen Young Ladies' Choir (Miss A. M. Buckley), 70.

2nd. Tyrhos and District Ladies' Choir, 68.

EXCELSIOR.—Unsteady tone, but pleasant in quality. Rhythmic treatment lacked grace. Some voices need repression. Some effective, tender expression secured. Not certain of the notes.

CARWAY.—A hesitant start. Piquant style. The facial expression was noticeable. Some graceful rhythm. Balance needs more second sopranos. On the whole painstaking.

CARMARTHEN.—Bright tone. Good balance. Warm blend. Excellent altos. Andante section lacked grace, but the Allegro was fluent and rhythmic. Some charming gradations of force.

TYRHOS.—Voices thin, rather juvenile. Neat, pretty rhythm. In the Lento some excellent expression and skilful treatment. Altogether first-rate training exhibited.

GLEE COMPETITION (not under 40 in number).

First prize, £8. Second prize, £2. 10s. 6d. to each of the unsuccessful conductors.

Test: "Y Blodeuyn Olaf" (J. Ambrose Lloyd).

Myrddin United Choir (Mr. D. Evans), 69.

The Trimsaran Party (Mr. William Evans), 69.

2nd. Pembrey United Choir (Mr. J. H. Morgan), 70.

Burry Port Glee Society (Mr. D. John), 64.

Glanrafon Glee Society (Loughor) (Mr. David Davies), 68.

Penygraig Glee Society (Mr. D. Rowland Jones), 65.

Excelsior Glee Society (Madame Ben Thomas), 58.

1st. Young Choristers (Mr. J. Lewis), 74.

MYRDDIN (Acc.).—Impressive style, earnest and sincere. Tone thin but sweet. Alto and tenor weak. Well in tune. Attack excellent and much agreeable finish. Expressive. No full resonance.

TRIMSARAN (Unacc.).—Sweet tone. Bass not sonorous enough. Trebles and altos sang delightfully. Very expressive, always tuneful. Rhythm fair. Kept pitch.

PEMBREY (Unacc.).—Thin tone all round but a good blend. Tender expression. The Agitato excellent. Attack showed fine training. Much clean finish. Kept pitch.

BURRY (Unacc.).—Over-subdued at the opening. The restraint led to strain. Tone-quality much mixed. A careful rather than an impressive performance. Kept pitch.

GLANYRAFON (Acc.).—Good balance. Too strenuous in forte. Intonation somewhat suffered. Attack first-rate. Great warmth in the expression. Occasionally too fervent.

PENYGRAIG (Unacc.).—Elaborate preparation before starting. A fresh tone, sometimes rough. Tonal attack curved and attack straggled in cadences. A fair but not specially delicate performance.

EXCELSIOR (Unacc.).—Style and attack rather casual. Tenor tone peculiar and weak in the balance. Much fervency displayed. Trebles sang well. On the whole needed more unity. Kept pitch.

YOUNG CHORISTERS (Unacc.).—Tone sweet and the blend excellent. Great unity of attack and style. Some very delicate expression. Many evidences of skilful training.

JUVENILE CHOIR COMPETITION (S.S.A.) (not under 40 in number, and not over 16 years of age).

First prize, £6 and a silver-mounted baton to the conductor.

Second prize, £2.

Test: "In this hour of softened splendour" (Pinsud), arranged.
Myrddin Juvenile Choir (Mr. W. Thomas), 63.
Tabernacle Juvenile Choir (Mr. Willie Thomas), 67.
1st. Fabian's Bay Juvenile Choir (Mr. T. Morris), 73.
2nd. Towy Minstrels (Mr. Tom Williams), 69.
Young Volunteers (Mr. D. Evans), 67.

MYRDDIN.—Remarkable unity. Phrase-ends clipped too short. Fairly well in tune. Delicately accented rhythm. Tone needs sweetening. Some wrong notes. Expression fair.

TABERNACLE.—Some very small children. What can they know about such words! All girls. Tone thin but bright. Pretty rhythm and altogether remarkably good training. Altos a good quality.

FABIAN'S BAY.—Breathy tone at first, but highly refined and tender. Altos unusually well developed. Unity in vowel definition remarkable. Hence a capital blend. Lost pitch a little in second verse. The long slurs very well vocalised.

TOWY MINSTRELS.—A large mixed choir. Dramatic expression almost aggressive in its fervency. Much rubato displayed. Tone pleasant except in fortes. Tendency to sharpen. A very painstaking and admirably drilled performance. Needed more grace and beauty.

YOUNG VOLUNTEERS.—Beautiful tone. Got most distressingly sharp. In the process many chords were badly out of tune. The phrasing was simply excellent and the expression intensely earnest and tender. Except for the sharpening there was hardly a fault.

Dr. McNaught adjudicated. The criticisms given above are compressed from his notes. Mr. Harold Malkin, F.R.C.O., adjudicated all the preliminary competitions, and Mr. T. S. Puddicombe and Miss Annie Morgan were the official accompanists.

The attendance was large and the audience was greatly interested. The President, Mr. John Crossman, Mayor of Carmarthen, with Mrs. Crossman, helped the success of the occasion by their presence and geniality, and the proceedings were continually enlivened by the wit and tact of the Rev. Evan Davies (Gwan-cae-gurwen), who was the platform conductor.

NATIONAL CO-OPERATIVE FESTIVAL, CRYSTAL PALACE.

August 21.

Last year thirty-four choirs sang in four classes, and we then stated that this large number constituted a record in Crystal Palace festival competitions. This year thirty-two choirs entered and only one failed to appear. It is worthy of particular note that all this astonishing activity and enthusiasm were displayed practically without the stimulus of money-prizes, for all the awards for the first places were challenge shields and trophies, and the highest money-prize for second or third place was only three guineas. Fifty singers do not rise in the small hours of the morning and travel from Wales, Portsmouth, Nottingham and other distant places merely to gain a fraction of their out-of-pocket expenses. What can objectors to competitions say to this? No one who sat through the competitions could fail to notice the intensity of the desire on the part of singers and conductors to do well. There was not one bad performance, and there were several of great excellence. One junior choir touched the highest level, and that was Stratford (London, E.), under Mr. A. Sears. It was strikingly evident that many of the conductors were skilful choir trainers, who knew what to do and what not to do. One of the negative virtues of the performances generally was the absence of exaggerated "expression." Here and there the desire for high colour and emotional effect led to some distortion of the rhythm, but on the whole taste and judgment were displayed.

The scheme of the competition imposes a certain test (selected from the festival books for the combined choirs) and an "own-choice" piece. The advantages and disadvantages of this plan have often been debated. For our own part we must say that a competition cannot be regarded as ideal when competitors submit different and often very widely different pieces to the judgment of an adjudicator. On a fête day at the Palace, when thousands of people are intent on enjoying their holiday, no doubt it is pleasant for them to hear a delightful variety of favourite pieces. That is a fair reason for tolerating the arrangement, but at the same time it must be understood that while it lasts the competition is necessarily not of the highest grade. Carrots and roses, we believe, were not pitted against one another in the fascinating and appetising shows of fruits and flowers that were displayed in the naves.

Dr. McNaught adjudicated in the upper junior and both the senior classes.

Mr. W. McNaught adjudicated in the small choir junior classes. A compressed version of their notes is given below. The marking scheme was as follows:

Accuracy	Tone, Blend, Intonation	Attack, Pronunciation, Enunciation	Pace, Rhythm, Expression, Phrasing, Interpretation	General Total Effect

JUNIOR CHOIRS, 20 to 30 voices.

† Two-part. * Three-part.

TOTTENHAM.—(a) Intonation faulty at first, but improved afterwards. Rhythm rigid, slow and sluggish. Style inclined to be mechanical. Attractive soprano tone; alto tone often squeezed. Bar 44 not clear. Little graduation of tone; mp and mf not distinguished. Bar 86, some difference of opinion. The cheery atmosphere of the piece not fully realised. (b) Accompaniment not so firm as to preserve the pitch. Again too little contrast. An improvement in tone and blend but not in enunciation and attack. No charm in the rhythm. Rather mechanical. Some passages attractive.

CROYDON.—(a) Bright tone and sprightly rhythm. Careful, if not always discreet, attention to expression marks. Pleasant and firm tone in the altos. Intonation pure. "Let him sigh" slightly overdone. (b) (Unaccompanied.) Over-accentuation occasionally impaired phrasing. Low A \sharp in alto missed fire. Not much sustaining power in vocal resources. Second verse a falling-off in execution.

FULHAM.—(a) Gay rhythm, well sustained—why accelerando in second verse? Tone-production less satisfactory than in (b). Good as execution. "Avarice" and "wight" mispronounced. (b) (Sung first.) Nice smooth tone, well balanced and blended. Intonation good, except sharpened fourths in alto part. Some attempt at mood-painting. Slight loss of pitch at the end.

ERITH.—(a) Tone and style attractive. Careful attention to expression. Occasional breathiness and forced tone. At times mechanical. Good sense of climax. Intonation good. (b) Creditable attempt at a piece beyond their powers. Lower parts weakly sustained; sopranos inclined to lose pitch. Expressive. Good as interpretation, but not as execution.

WILLESDEN.—(a) Clean, unified tone. Neat execution. Inclined to be hurried; on the other hand poco meno mosso portion too slow. Weak alto entries in each verse. (b) Final consonants overdone. An accelerando in each verse. Well-knit tone and good intonation.

ENFIELD.—(a) Light and cheerful style. Meno mosso execution excellent; the contrast of mood well caught. Perhaps a too little graded in form. Tone always pleasant and well governed. (b) Efficient vocal resource gain in evidence; parts well nourished and balanced. Notes occasionally forced lower notes. Natural style; careful and tasteful. Enunciation occasionally lapsed.

FAVERSHAM.—(a) Well-trained voices; warm tone, and perfect unity in every respect. "Fa la la" section a little too serious. Otherwise a first-rate performance. Sense of mastery throughout. (b) Low A♯ in alto not successful. The sopranos always ejaculated their cuckoo too quickly. Third of the chord inaudible in the last line. Tone again admirable; perfect chording.

DOVER.—(a) Not perfect unity. Tone bright but inclined to be breathy. Rhythm heavy at times, but well sustained. "Fa la la" section mechanical. Cheerful, but not always light. (b) Lacked light atmosphere and vigour; too contemplative. "Across the bay" wrong note. Tone mixed; some good voices, but some harsh production. Careful, but not inspiring.

CHATHAM.—(a) Slow, plodding. Sung in same style (b)—even less suitable here. No gradation and contrast. (b) (Sung first.) Young, open tone. Vigorous, martial style. All the sopranos girls, all the altos boys—serious mistake. Too much sameness, a uniform ff execution splendid; but not much besides.

ROCHESTER.—(a) Bright, well-knit tone. Attractive style and cheerfulness in the style. Inclined to hurry. me crescendos overdone. (b) Expression marks again unread; excellent technically, but inartistic. The style a feature. Perfect chording; pure and well-blended etc. Not successful as a mood-picture.

HAIDENHEAD.—(a) Hurried. Tone smooth, but overstrained—not natural. No colour; the "fa la la" section being especially wanting. Some neat execution. Good intonation. (b) Again colourless. Mere execution, but that not always faultless. Little attempt at expression. Enunciation frequently at fault.

LONG EATON.—(a) Warm, attractive tone; some feels a little at fault. A little wanting in delicacy of movement, and execution not always clean, especially in "fa la la" section. Poco meno mosso portion slightly over-painted. (b) No conspicuous mood in the opening; inclined to be mechanical in style and too uniform in etc. Well unified in tone and execution. Intonation critically faultless. The ending not pp.

JUNIOR CHOIRS, 30 to 40 voices.

—The "Co-partnership Trophy," presented by the Co-partnership Tenants, Limited. Set text: (a) "Oft in the stilly night" sung for s.s.a. by W. G. McNaught. (b) An "own-choice" piece.

Order of singing.	(a)	(b)	Total.
Penge (Mrs. Benjamin), "Jack Frost" (Hatton)	64	59	123
Stratford (Mr. A. Sears), "Who is Sylvia?" (Macfarren)	78	78	156
Wealdstone (Mr. E. Aldridge), "Lift thine eyes" (Mendelssohn)	65	56	121
Cwmbach (Mr. D. R. Davies), "The stream and the flower" (T. Price)	68	70	138
Woolwich (Mr. J. Hines), "Jack Frost" (Hatton)	61	70	141
Portsmouth (Mr. G. J. Adams), "Oh, sing to me a spring song" (Ashworth)	73	72	145
Peterborough (Mr. W. J. Roberts), "Hail, star of eve" (Sporforth)	68	66	134
Luton (Mr. W. Haith), "Lift thine eyes to the mountains" (Mendelssohn)	70	64	134

All the "selected" pieces were trios, and all had to be sung unaccompanied.

PENGE.—(a) Well drilled. Intonation not perfect. Not sostenuto enough. Too many detachments of words. Attack excellent. Some pretty expression. Never touching. Lost whole tone chiefly in second verse. On the whole exhibited capacity. (b) Rather slow and heavy. Attack good. Enunciation a good feature. The "creep" passage began doubtfully, but improved. Tone agreeably musical. Intonation not perfect.

STRATFORD.—(a) Nearly all girls. A clean, beautiful blend. Very tender, charming and emotional. A tear in the tone. The sostenuto perfect, without weighting the rhythm. Every phrase had been studied, and there were no intrusive verbal accentuations to destroy the sweep of the curve. Not much body in the tone, but a supreme and diaphanous delicacy. Perfectly in tune. Practically a perfect performance from every standpoint. (b) A trio arrangement of a beautiful part-song. Again the subtle touch of rhythm. Restraint of the best sort because it was perfectly controlled. The tone flowed out freely, although never with much resonance. Enunciation very clear. A highly refined performance.

WEALDSTONE.—(a) Sweet tone, good sostenuto and a pleasant unity. Expression very careful, if not ever touching. Bar 12 confused with bar 16 each time. A refined performance on the whole. (b) Too eager and effusive. Rhythmically good as attack. Tonally, not so good—disposed to curve. Too formal, square, military. Not tender, beautiful and caressing. Still, it was tuneful.

CWMBACH.—(a) Full mature tone. Some fairly "grown-up" girls. A certain haunting quality in the tone that was very sympathetic. The vowels were not well defined: they were Welsh children, and they did not suffer in marks for this. The attack and general unity were very good indeed. A good sostenuto and the expression was fairly touching. Fine training evident. (b) Sang in English, although Welsh words were in the copy. An agreeable warmth in the tone. Altos good—a real bass to the harmony. Occasionally a bite in the attack was not quite musical. The piece was well coloured and the expression was not exaggerated. Just needed a finer tone to be altogether first-rate.

WOOLWICH.—(a) Delicate and expressive start. Balance good, altos a good bass. Some specially thought-out expression that was very creditable. Tone sweet and blendful. Intonation not quite pure. Very tenderly expressive if not supremely touching. (b) Too slow, and so in some degree laboured. The fine touch at "the seaman's grave" was well realised. Many small points that showed care and insight. The word "peeping" was a dainty point. A good climax.

PORTSMOUTH.—(a) Very slow. A fine sostenuto admirably controlled. Deeply expressive. Tone sweet and blendful. Caught the fearsomeness and sad reminiscence of the words. The intonation gave way. An achievement as expression, but not so satisfactory as regards resonance. Lost about a tone. (b) Thin tone, but sweet. A charming lightness of rhythm. Attack perfect. Not much resonance for a climax. The rhythm always a feature.

PETERBOROUGH.—(a) Well arranged choir. Orderly and attentive. Full tone, and at the same time refined. Clean finish in the attack. Not much mood, but there was a note of regretfulness in the expression. Kept very well in tune but lost pitch a little. Vowels well defined: this gave resonance. The interpretation on the whole good if not specially striking. (b) Here again the full tone but not wholly musical. Some over-eagerness. The rhythm was prettily treated and the attack was excellent. Last movement better more sostenuto. Scarcely dolce enough.

LUTON.—(a) A full, sweet blend. A suspicion of stiffness in the rhythm. Vowels well defined. Altos a full resonance. Rarely quite touching. Always musical, but not particularly expressive. Lost pitch a little. (b) Very slow. Hardly more than half the usual pace. As music always interesting, the voices were so good. Needs more grace and refinement and sincerity of expression.

ADULT CHOIRS, 30 to 40 voices.

Prize—the "Excelsior Shield," presented by the Kettering

Clothing Society, Ltd., Kettering.

FAVERSHAM.—(a) Hidden tone, certainly well subdued. Refined style. Blend agreeable. Rhythm better if a daintier spring. The pp passage (bars 24 to 26) very unsafe: some singers groped. Many evidences of good training and appreciation. (b) The sombre resonance adopted by this choir suited this piece. Altos lacked sonority. The tone generally rather "swallowed." Attack good as to initial notes, but not so good inside the phrases. Too much oo in the bass quality. The expression was good, but the interpretation, on the whole, was not very interesting.

RUGBY.—(a) Very deliberate opening. Tone fairly blendful. Attack rather of the lingering kind. Altos got distressingly sharp, bars 30 to 32. The pp section (bars 24 to 27) very well done. On the whole, the expression was too "blue." Needed more glow and sincerity. A wee bit dull. (b) Again inclined to drag. A serious mood gained. Tenors not strong enough in the balance. Resources of the choir not fully developed. This was felt in the storm passage, page 6. "Would God that once again" not sostenuto and moody enough. The attack hardly compact. Some fine climaxes. The soft parts were often beautifully done.

IDEAL CLOTHIERS.—(a) Slow. Tone rather pinched in all parts. Not open enough, and hence not blendful. Vowels not resonant. A man's voice now and then heard singing soprano or alto an octave below! Some uncertain notes. The sopranos sang very expressively. On the whole, the choir needs to cultivate a finer tone and a stricter discipline to secure general unity. (b) A brave attempt. Very spirited, but again lacking the essential of unity. It appeared that half the choir was pulling the other half along. At the minor section the key was momentarily lost. The choir is full of enthusiasm; they must add control.

PORTSMOUTH.—(a) Good tone if not conspicuously beautiful. Bass rather too sombre. Well selected pace and rhythm made very interesting. Climaxes realised and always musical. The end was particularly taking. Pitch kept. (b) Deliberate, measured, a trifle too square. Too many consecutive accents alike. Full tone, cheerful and resonant. Prompt attack, but the rhythm lacked interesting treatment. The andante missed tenderness—no wave in the rhythm. Some wavering and fitfulness on p. 6. The last page was most effectively treated.

WILLESDEN.—(a) The opening was well subdued and controlled. Then came dullness, chiefly owing to a plodding rhythm. The execution became tame and the attack was gingerly. Bars 24 to 27 not correct, or at least not in tune. Here and there some pretty expressive effects. Lost pitch. (b) Again the vague tonal and rhythmic attack. Tone pleasant. The climaxes displayed little or no vitality. On the whole the execution lacked grip and certainty.

WOOLWICH.—(a) Pretty tone, a little over-restrained. Led to attack being hesitant and tremulous in places. Some beautiful expression—quite touching. Unity not conspicuous. Rhythm often well if not finely treated. (b) The opening was not broad enough. Should be largamente. The attack inside the phrases not always unified. Climaxes well intentioned, but with indications of individual over-eagerness. Listesso tempo began loosely. Bass later rather ragged. Fugal section needed more control. Some effective tender expression. Missed being impressively imposing.

PENGE.—(a) Clean, sweet tone and fine blend. The rhythm made really interesting. Had a wavering, not a square accent. Many well-proportioned dynamic effects and some refined tapering of phrases. On the whole a fine technical and temperamental performance. Pitch very nearly kept. (b) Not so compact and happy. Tone always attractive. The tonal attack not always quite true. Some of the effective crescendos (bars 17, 38, 55) not completely realised. Execution not so highly-finished as in the other piece. Small faults cropped up.

CANNING HALL.—(a) A bright tone, some sweetness in it. Not much sonority. Tenors very good, blended very well. Attack fair, occasional looseness inside the phrases. Expression evidently well studied. Some pretty delicacy. Bars 24 to 27 (the pp section) beautifully treated. A very good performance. Kept pitch nearly exactly. (b) Brisk. Fluent. Cheerful style and pleasant tone. Some over-eagerness in the attack, and some loose releases. The slurred passages a trifle blurred. Too abrupt at the "silver sigh." Many indications of skilled training. A lively and exhilarating performance.

ADULT CHOIRS, 50 to 60 voices.

Set test: (a) "Winter days" (A. J. Caldicott). (b) "Own-choice" piece.

	(a)	(b)	Total.
Peterborough (Mr. W. J. Roberts), "Song of the silent land" (John E. West)	68	71	139
Sheerness (Mr. S. G. Quint), "Lullaby of life" (Leslie)	71	73	144
Long Eaton (Mr. W. Woolley), "The Fortune Teller's song" (Eaton Fanning)	70	71	141

PETERBOROUGH.—(a) A big sostenuto style. Sopranos at first not quite in tune. They shrank from the dissonant D, bar 2. Soon settled down, and began to sing impressively. Experienced training evident, and there were fluency and ease in the attack. Good but not sweetly resonant tone. No imposing climaxes. Words well finished. Last movement not convincing as expression. Bar 75 some sopranos wrong. Rhythm needed more buoyancy. Lost nearly half-tone. (b) Broad tone. Tenor weak in the balance. Some solemn and impressive effects. A very carefully studied interpretation, missing great excellence because the rhythm was so often ignored in favour of tonal expression and rubato.

SHEERNESS.—(a) At first some vague, creepy attack. Still, the right mood was caught. The fugal movement was excellent: there was vitality and elasticity. Bass vowels not well defined—they showed a tendency to sombreness. On p. 6 tone fell off in quality. The Adagio was better as tone than expression. Last page admirably treated. (b) Rather slow opening, the rhythmic prettiness in consequence almost missed. Pity to sacrifice the claim of rhythm to tonal effect. Lento drawn out too much. The pp well controlled. A well-drilled choir. Bass excellent—sang with such unity. Expression on the whole a little over-painted. But it was always interesting.

LONG EATON (Nottingham).—(a) A broad, imposing start. Fine, long sostenuto phrases and a full, resonant blend. Bass not of great sonority, and sopranos (in the fuge) rather hard in quality. Did not seem wholly at ease in the attack, and small details were not well finished. The Adagio was a trifle square where big curves were called for. The dim. (bar 4 from the end)—an arresting effect—ignored. Bass not quite happy in the ensuing arpeggio. (b) Tone very attractive: so blendful. Some startling dynamic changes exhibited the best drill. But some of the piano and pp effects not well observed. Some slight straggling. Much piquancy if not enough. Nothing specially subtle. On the whole the performance just missed brilliancy and virtuosity.

The concerts given by the junior and adult choirs are reported on another page of our issue.

REPORTS of other Competitions are given in THE SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW edition of the RECORD.

STECK PIANOS.

Although the STECK has won Medals, Diplomas and Prizes at Expositions, has been eulogized by Wagner and Liszt, and enjoys an unsurpassable reputation for reliability all over the Continent and America, it is not on these counts alone that it appeals to the connoisseur.

WHAT THE STECK IS TO-DAY is its greatest claim to the consideration of piano-purchasers. Every modern improvement, every detail that makes for excellence in piano construction, is embodied and brought to perfection in the STECK. It is one of the few really great Pianos of the world.

You are invited to call at Æolian Hall and play the STECK, or to write for our fully-illustrated Steck Catalogue "M.T."

OF INTEREST TO ALL PIANISTS

For any information which may lead them to attain to greater proficiency in any branch of their art.

The subject of Sight-Playing, which has so long been neglected through lack of any definite method for its acquisition, must strongly appeal to them.

To Read at Sight, it is true, may not be considered a sine-quoniam of the expert performer's equipment, but it may safely be averred that he cannot become an expert musician without its aid.

Life is too short laboriously to study every one of the pieces with which the musician of catholic tastes and wide sympathies must become acquainted.

Neither can it be forgotten that, even for the least ambitious proficient, there can be no real pleasure from Pianoforte-playing without facility in playing at sight.

These considerations it is which have induced me to make my Course more generally known. Numbers of pupils have readily testified to the excellence of the practical results which are the outcome of the scientific principles upon which my system is based. But there are many students who have not yet investigated the matter for themselves, and to such I all always be pleased to send full particulars of my system, showing how greatly it could benefit them.

I think I may say that I have attacked the problem of how to acquire proficiency in Sight-Playing in a manner both original and fundamental.

If you are really interested in this matter, you should write for my Booklet, on which is sent gratis and post-free on application, and contains full account of the principles underlying my system, showing how they are applied in practice.

ST. ALBANS CATHEDRAL.

One has to peer into the dim and distant past in order to get a glimpse of the earliest history of the Hertfordshire city. It is situated near to a Roman town called Verulamium, or Verulam, from the river Ver, or Verlam, which still pursues its tranquil course by the ruins of the old Roman walls. Here, according to tradition, was born Alban, the proto-martyr of Britain, and here 'Saint Alban was martyred,' probably about A.D. 304.

The scene of the martyrdom of St. Alban was the spot where now stands the Cathedral, for so many centuries the Abbey Church. A few years after Alban's death a small church was erected on the hill. In the year 793, Offa II., king of Mercia, in order to expiate his crime of having murdered Ethelbert, King of the East Angles, and to re-establish his character in the world, founded a monastery in honour of Alban at the place of his martyrdom. The monastery was placed under the rule of St. Benedict. Its one hundred members—although to a large extent drawn from the governing classes, being a royal foundation—led to lead lives of simplicity. Cardinal Wolsey as one of the most distinguished of the long line of mitred abbots who, in pre-Reformation days, with twenty-six other mitred abbots and three bishops, sat in the House of Lords. St. Albans was the premier abbey of England until 1396, when the pre-eminence was for a time usurped by Westminster. This appears to have been subsequently recovered, for in the Articles of Faith drawn up in 1536, the name of the abbat of St. Alban's stands first of the abbats, that of Westminster second. The monastic buildings, which stood on the south side of the church, have all been swept away except the Abbey Church itself and the fine gateway, formerly a prison, now part of the ancient Grammar School.

ST. ALBANS CATHEDRAL FROM THE SOUTH WEST.

(Photograph by Mr. W. H. Cox, St. Albans.)

Of the Saxon church which existed in Offa's day, probably only some fragments remain, as we shall presently see. The Abbey which we know to-day is practically the work of the first Norman abbat, Paul de Caen (1077). He was a nephew (or son) of Lanfranc, the first Norman Archbishop of Canterbury. Lanfranc built his church at Canterbury on the model of St. Stephen's, Caen; his more ambitious nephew (or son) Paul, followed so good an example, but made St. Albans Abbey half as large again! After the dissolution of the monasteries in the reign of Henry VIII., the Abbey was sold to the Corporation for the sum of £400 for use as the parish church of St. Albans. The nave and transepts were disused, and that portion of the Abbey under the tower, together with the choir, made available for parochial purposes. About the year 1635 the Abbey was divided, when the Lady Chapel was used for the Grammar School and a public thoroughfare through the building was formed where the retro choir now is. After three centuries of neglect the noble fane was subjected to much restoration, not altogether of the wisest and most reverential kind. In 1877 the diocese of St. Albans was founded, the town became the City, and the Abbey Church the Cathedral.

Before referring to the architecture of the Abbey Church, mention may be made of one or two non-ecclesiastical incidents in connection with the building. In 1480 a printing-press was set up in the Abbey, the earliest book issuing therefrom being 'Rhetorica Nova Fratris Laurentii Gulielmi de Saona, 1480.' The earliest treatise on hunting was printed at the monastery in 1486. It is entitled 'The bokys of hauking and huntyng, and also of cootarmuris' and is commonly attributed to Juliana Bernes or Berners, believed to have been Prioress of the nunnery of Sopwell, St. Albans, of which the ruins still exist. This 'Boke of St. Alban,' as it is called, has also the distinction of being the first book printed in colours in England; a copy is in the John Rylands Library, Manchester, and another in the University Library, Cambridge. A translation of the Latin inscription under the great window at the west end of the building reads: 'On account of the favourable position and immense size of this church, so well adapted for accommodating great multitudes, in the reign of Henry VIII. and again in the reign of Elizabeth, while the plague was raging in London, the Courts of Justice were held here.' This change of venue happened five times between 1543 and 1595. According to Ashmole, writing in 1668, 'In the church was a large room having beddes set on either side for the receipt of strangers and pilgrims, where they had lodging and dyet for 3 dayes, without question made whence they came or whither they went: but after that tyme, they staid not wth out rendring an account of both'—a sort of casual ward of the 17th century.

In considering the architecture of the Abbey Church of St. Alban, priority is naturally given to the exterior. In one respect it has a superiority over all English cathedrals, as it is the highest in elevation, the floor being 320 feet above the level of the sea; Lichfield comes next, with 286 feet. In beholding the vast pile of St. Albans, one cannot help being struck with its stern solidity. No lofty spires, no graceful pinnacles, no flying buttresses, no grotesque gargoyles greet the eye. But as if to compensate for these beautifying accessories there is the magnificent tower, 144 feet high and not quite square in plan, being 47 feet from east to west, and 45 feet from north to south. With its massive walls of enormous thickness, the tower in its simple dignity stands unrivalled in this country. Built of Roman brick, its warmth of colour is intensified when seen under the ruddy hues caused by the setting sun. Viewed from the distance of a neighbouring northern height, the noble building, crowned by its well-knit Norman tower, typifies all that is strong and enduring in the British race.

Entering the church by the west door he who has eyes to see is amazed—first at the vista before him and then at the different styles of architecture in the nave where his feet rest. The easternmost bays on the north side, built of Roman bricks and plastered over, are most valuable examples of pure Norman work. They date from 1077 and are the work of Paul de Caen, appointed abbat by William the Conqueror. The westernmost bays on the north and also the south side are Early English. They owe their existence to John de Cella, who pulled down the west end of the nave with the idea of entirely supplanting the Norman work. The south side matched the north in its Norman style, but in October, 1323, when the building was crowded with worshippers, the Norman columns fell outwards with a fearful crash upon the cloisters (now demolished) while the unsupported roof fell into the church.

Marvellous to relate, there was no loss of life, but the damage done was enormous. Abbat Hugh de Eversden commenced the work of restoration, upon which he expended large sums of money. He replaced the fallen arcade with five magnificent and most beautiful of their kind existing. Thus on the north side of the nave there are four bays Early English and six bays Norman; and on the south side five (not four) bays Early English and five Decorated. While the north side gives the s in the Decorated style, and they were appearance of incongruity, there is no lack of completed during the abbacy of his successor, harmony between the Early English and the hael de Mentmore (1335-1349). They are Decorated on the south side owing to the manner sidered to be some of the best proportioned in which the two styles blend, although there is a difference of one hundred years between them. The photograph on p. 635 will help to make the foregoing description clear. And here it may be remarked that St. Albans Abbey presents all styles of architecture from Early Norman to Late Perpendicular.

The ancient paintings of the Crucifixion on the Norman nave pillars, brought to light in 1862, will not escape observation. Mr. William Page, in his excellent guide-book to the Abbey, says that 'the painting on the W. face of the fourth pier from the W. is the oldest, and probably dates back to the early part of the thirteenth or late twelfth century.' The rood screen, of restoration, some forty years ago, a workman was employed in cleaning the coarsely-executed 17th-century paintings of the then existing panels, when he broke one of the panels. This accident disclosed older paintings underneath which, after their coatings had been carefully removed, revealed a beautiful series of sixty panels, the majority having been painted during the reign of King Edward III. Who will blame the British workman after this?

The south transept, built of Roman tiles and stones of Verulam, is specially interesting because the triforium contains the oldest relics of the Abbey, the Saxon baluster-columns from the SKETCH OF BRASS MADE IN 1643, OF ROBERT FAYRFAX, THE 16TH CENTURY ORGANIST OF ST. ALBAN'S ABBEY CHURCH, AND AGNES HIS WIFE.

(Reproduced by kind permission of Mr. Everard Green, F.S.A., Rouge Dragon, and Mr. William Page, F.S.A., from the latter's valuable monograph on 'The Brasses and Indents in St. Albans Abbey'.)

Late Decorated design, on which stands the organ, dates from c. 1350; although it has been much mutilated and considerably restored, it is a beautiful piece of work. The nave is now used as the parish church for the old parish of St. Andrew, called 'the Abbey parish,' for parochial services.

As at Westminster, the choir extends beyond the crossing, but unlike that venerable fane, the architecture is pure Norman. The stall fittings are quite modern: not so the ceiling. In this connection a curious incident has to be related. When Sir Gilbert Scott was engaged upon the church built by Offa in 793 (see the illustration on p. 634). The grand arches of the tower—55 feet high—and the height of the ceiling—101 feet—combine to give the crossing a stateliness which enchants the beholder. The bells are eight in number, the tenor (sounding E flat) weighing nearly one ton and a-half.

The Wallingford screen (see p. 631) is a splendid example, probably unsurpassed, of Early Perpendicular work. It dates from 1484, but at the Reformation practically all the figures were destroyed. The work of restoring this wonderful screen was undertaken by Mr. Henry Hucks Gibbs (now Lord Aldenham) in 1884 and completed in 1901 at a cost of £12,000. The figure of our Lord has been carved from one solid block of stone which weighed seventeen tons. The graves of several of the forty abbats of the monastery are in this part of the church; and it was here, before the high altar, that the body of Eleanor, Queen of Edward I., rested in 1291 when on its way to Westminster. At the north-east of the Presbytery is the chantry chapel of abbat Ramryge, c. 1522 or probably earlier, a vault was discovered in Queen Anne's reign when making a grave here for a Mr. John Gape. The duke's body was found in 'a leaden coffin full of pickle, in a good state of preservation.' But the chief feature of interest in this the very heart of the Abbey is the pedestal for the shrine of St. Alban. In its original state the shrine must have been a very handsome memorial. It was built six hundred years ago of Purbeck marble and in style Early Decorated. At the dissolution of the monastery the shrine was smashed into thousands of pieces and used for building purposes. For PEDESTAL OF THE SHRINE OF ST. ALBAN, AND THE WATCHING LOFT.

(Photograph by Mr. W. H. Cox, St. Albans.)

is an example of Late Perpendicular work. Its roof is of rich fan tracery similar to that of Henry the Seventh's Chapel at Westminster. Here is also the chantry chapel of Abbat Wallingford (c. 1464), known as Wheathampsted's chantry: it contains the brass of Abbat Thomas de la Mare (c. 1375), size 111 by 52 inches, one of the finest brasses in the kingdom.

Proceeding eastwards, the Saints' Chapel is reached. It contains the chantry of Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester, who died in 1447. The over three hundred years it was lost to the world. In the year 1872, however, over 2,000 pieces, discovered in various parts of the building, were carefully put together with shellac and iron clamps, and these form what is really the pedestal of the shrine. On the north side is the Watching Loft, as shown in the photograph above. It is of carved oak and the only one now existing, except a similar loft in Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford. Of the Early Perpendicular period, it probably dates from the earliest years of the 15th century. Here, by day and by night, one monk after another took it in turn to watch the sacred relics of St. Alban. The stairs at the east end of the lockers are solid blocks of oak. On the north side are carvings, mostly supposed to represent the months, e.g.:

January: a man and a woman seated at a bench feasting.

February: a man and a woman warming themselves before a fire and a third figure blowing a pair of bellows.

March: a shepherd seated blowing a double pipe and four sheep attending.

April: a sheep with a lamb sucking.

May: a woman milking.

September: a huntsman with a horn and dogs.

November: a sow with a litter of pigs.

The retro-choir, of the Transitional period from Early English to Decorated, dates from the latter part of the 13th century. As already stated, it formed a public thoroughfare from one side of the church to the other from about 1645 until 1876.

(Photograph by Mr. W. H. Cox, St. Albans.)

Lastly, the Lady Chapel. This easternmost portion of the stately church is a fine specimen of the Decorated style, and was built during the abbacy of Hugh de Eversden (1308-26). Its west end was boarded up between 1553 and 1583, and for more than three hundred years it was used as the Grammar School, founded by King Edward VI., with the result that some of its delicate carvings were almost obliterated by the penknives of three centuries of scholars. The necessary restoration has afforded opportunity for the carvings of the arcading to represent the flora and fauna of the district, a very happy idea. With the exception of Winchester, which is externally six feet larger, St. Albans Cathedral is the longest church in England, its extreme length being 551 feet; the nave is the longest in this country, as, with the porch, its exterior measurements are 310 feet 6 inches.

If the musical associations of St. Albans are not so epoch-making as in other English cathedrals, they are not without interest of a somewhat peculiar kind. The earliest known reference to the art is about A.D. 990, in the time of Abbat Ælfric. While chanter of the monastery he composed a history of the monastery and set it to music! It was in use in the choir in the year 1380. Whatever may have been the charms of that abbat's music, he is described as a man of 'singular and conspicuous merit.' Here is an instance of his conspicuity:

Being afraid of a Danish invasion, and thinking that the relics of the proto-martyr, which had already been once carried away to Denmark, would not be safe in the shrine as it stood, he hid them under the altar of St. Nicholas, and at the same time pretended to send them to Ely for safe custody, giving the authorities at Ely to understand that the true relics were being committed to their charge; this, it is said, he did, being a prudent and circumspect man, and fearing that the men at Ely would be blinded by covetousness, and refuse to return the true relics if they once got them into their possession. The Danish invasion was soon over, the King being drowned, and then Ælfric demanded from the monks of Ely the relics he had intrusted to their care. The caution he had exercised was justified by the conduct of the Ely monks; for they, thinking that the bones they had were really those of St. Alban, at first refused to return them, but at last consented to do so. The bones, however, that they sent back were not those they had received!

As we shall presently see, the Abbey church must have possessed an organ in the year 1302. An organ, costing £17 6s. 8d., was opened on August 14, 1428; this was transferred to the Lady Chapel. In 1462, John of Wheathampsted, during his second abbacy, presented to the church a 'pair of organs,' said to be the largest in England, the noble instrument which responded to the touch of Robert Fayrfax, of whom more anon. Wheathampsted's Registrum gives some very interesting information concerning this munificent gift of the worthy abbat. Here it is, in a translation kindly and specially made for this article by the Dean of St. Albans:

'That young men and maidens, and old people besides, as well as the younger, should be able to praise the Lord of Heaven and extol Him in the highest, not indeed with the drum and the dance, but with stringed instruments and the organ and its pipes, and a sound as of sweet voiced cymbals, he [the Abbat] caused to be made a pair of organs, than which there were not to be readily found, as was believed, an instrument more beautiful to look upon, or more sweet to hear, or more elaborate in workmanship, in any monastery throughout the whole kingdom. As to its cost, in the making and fixing it in position, more than fifty pounds was spent.'

£50 was an enormous sum in those days, probably equal to about £1,000 at the present time. How interesting it would be to hear that 'pair of organs' the gift of Abbat Wheathampsted.

All the organs seem to have disappeared before November, 1552, and no record of any other organ is met with until 1820. Thus for three centuries the musical associations of the old Abbey are more or less a blank. It will be recalled, that at the dissolution of the monastery part of the church was adapted for parochial use, of which the musical services were of a more or less restricted and primitive nature. An interesting sidelight upon the music during the 18th century is furnished by the Gentleman's Magazine of 1798, part 2, p. 905. Therein is to be

Peter Newcome, the 18th-century historian of the Abbey. But it is with the venerable and intelligent John Kent as a church musician that we have to do, and in this connection we cannot do better than quote from the obituary notice of the old-time parish clerk in the Gentleman's Magazine:

In his official station as parish clerk it may not be presumption to say that in psalmody he was excelled by no one, and equalled by few, particularly in the Old 100th Psalm. He had a voice strong and melodious, and was himself a compleat master of church musick, always pleased to hear the congregation join. It has often and a long obituary notice of John Kent, who died September 12, 1798, aged eighty. A plumber and tiler by trade, he held the office of parish clerk of the Abbey for nearly fifty-two years. He was a man of mark in his knowledge of the architecture and history of the church wherein he officiated with praiseworthy zeal. He was the friend of the famed Willis Browne, and his intelligence and knowledge are acknowledged in Gough's Antiquities of Great Britain and by been remarked when country choristers came from a neighbouring parish to perform in the Abbey, with instruments termed by him a box of whistles, with which the congregation could not join, he, on those occasions, gave out the Psalm or Anthem in this way: 'Sing ye to the praise and glory of God.'

Two days before his death, on the occasion of the consecration of a pair of colors to the St. Albans volunteers, he sang the 20th Psalm before one of the most respectable and largest congregations that ever assembled within those walls. He performed with all the strength and vivacity of youth.

The Abbey, like the neighbouring parish of St. Peter, rejoices in three churchwardens. One of these, Mr. Climanse, has kindly placed at our disposal the churchwardens' accounts of a later period, showing that the instrumental accompaniment to the psalmody at that time was non-organic, being orchestral. We find the following entry on December 25, 1814 :

Paid John Higdon  $\frac{1}{2}$  year's salary for playing the clarionet at the church on Sundays . . . £4. 4. 0

Many similar entries, sometimes at the interval of three months, show that Mr. Higdon was remunerated for his services at the rate of eight guineas a year. Whether he remunerated his colleagues—of the fiddle, bass-viol, or the loud bassoon—out of his emoluments, or whether they gratuitously fiddled and blew for the good of the cause, there is no evidence to decide. Two entries of payments made by the churchwardens in the year 1821 may find a place here :

Paid John Warwick for new surplices for charity children . . . £6. 14. 9
Thos. Fowler [organist] for music books . . . £2. 12. 6

The former of these payments points to a surpliced choir early in the 19th century.

One year earlier than this (1820) a change came over the music at the Abbey church, in the purchase of a second hand organ for the sum of £450, to which the Corporation contributed a donation of £20. Built by Father Smith, this instrument came from the church of St. Dunstan's-in-the-East when Sir Christopher Wren's church was pulled down because of its insecurity, and to make way for the present building. Father Smith's organ was originally of two manuals only, to which John Byfield added a swell manual. The specification is given in two different forms in the late Dr. E. J. Hopkins's MS. organ-book, now in the possession of the present writer, where it is described as 'A very fine instrument, particularly the open diapason in the great organ.' It is very satisfactory, therefore, to learn that this open diapason of Father Smith's, though only to tenor C, is retained in the present re-constructed instrument. The first known organ, that under consideration, erected after the Dissolution stood upon the screen ; it was first used on June 25 and publicly opened on November 26, 1820, and did duty for forty-one years. At the time of its erection a hymnal was specially compiled for use at the services. It was entitled :

A selection of psalms and hymns adapted for the use of the Abbey Church, St. Albans. 1820.

This little book, of 156 pages, containing a selection of metrical psalms, seventy-six hymns, and four doxologies was compiled by the organist, Mr. Thomas Fowler.

Two curious entries from the churchwardens' accounts may here find a place :

May 28. Given to the singers to pay attention to the organist . . . 1s.
July 19. Paid Mr. Nicholls  $\frac{1}{2}$  year's salary for tuning the organ £4 4. 0., and for opening and repairing the Diapason pipes . . . £3. 3. 0

In 1861 a new three-manual organ was built by Messrs. William Hill & Sons and placed in the north transept, but subsequently removed to its proper place on the screen. At the opening of this organ—on August 1, 1861—two special services were held, when the choir consisted of between eighty and ninety voices. The collections amounted to the sum of £105 14s. 2 $\frac{1}{4}$ d. ! It may not be without interest to give the complete order of both services on this occasion, as it will serve to show the great change which has taken place in the selection of music sung and played at similar dedication services in the present day.

The Hill organ was rebuilt and enlarged by Messrs. Abbott & Smith, of Leeds, in 1907, when opportunity was taken to divide the instrument in order to obtain an uninterrupted view of the noble building from west to east—formerly the vista was obstructed by the organ and a curtain! To economise space the pedal pipes are laid horizontally on the screen. The following is the specification of the organ as it now stands, which includes the Father Smith open diapason to tenor C:

NORMAN ARCHES OF THE TOWER.
(Photograph by Mr. W. H. Cox, St. Albans.)

Who is the earliest known organist at the Abbey Church of St. Alban? The answer is—Adam! As this Adam is mentioned thirty-one years earlier than organist Adam of Norwich (1333), he may be regarded as the father of English organists. We first come across the St. Albans Adam in a benevolent frame of mind, as, among the contributions made by the various servants of the Abbey, probably towards defraying the expenses of the Feast given upon the election of John de Maryns as abbat, A.D. 1302, we find:

Adam Organista . . . . . vid.

In 1423 two stipendiary organists were appointed, one being for the Lady Chapel.

The next known organist was a very important person—Robert Fayrfax (or Fairfax). He is described as 'of Bayford, Herts,' and as belonging to an ancient Yorkshire family of the name of Fayrfax. Burney, in vol. ii. of his 'History of Music,' prints a two-part song by him, 'That was my woo is nowe my gladnesse,' which he surmises was addressed by the composer to Henry VII. on following years he received payments for the board and instruction of two choristers, 'the King's scholars.' On September 10, 1514, he was appointed one of the Poor Knights at Windsor with 12*d.* a day. The State papers between 1516 and 1519 record various sums paid to Fayrfax for writing out music-books: for a book, £13 6*s.* 8*d.*; for a book of anthems, £20; for 'a prycke-songe boke,' £20; for 'a balet boke limned,' £20: the latter payment showing that he was also an illuminator of manuscripts. He died October 24, 1521, and, with his wife, his remains are interred in the Presbytery of St. Albans Abbey. (See the illustrations of both brasses on p. 632.) For further details of the life of Fayrfax, the reader is referred to biographies of him in the 'Dictionary of National Biography,' by Mr. Fuller Maitland, and in the new edition of 'Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians,' by Mr. G. E. P. Arkwright. The latter article contains a list of Fayrfax's chief his ascending the throne. If so, Fayrfax was born in the latter part of the 15th century. As organist of the Abbey he played on the splendid instrument given by Wheathampsted, of which mention has already been made. At St. Albans in 1502 he received from Queen Elizabeth of York the sum of 20*s.* 'for setting an Anthem of our lady and Saint Elizabeth.' In the same year he took the degree of Doctor of Music at Cambridge; his exercise 'for his forme in proceedinge to bee Doctor,' is a five-part mass, 'O quam glorifica,' preserved at Lambeth Palace. The work is complete, as the parts are written in cantus lateralis, and not in separate part-books. He was also incorporated at Oxford, being the first Doctor of Music at that University.

Fayrfax was one of the gentlemen of the King's Chapel in 1509, when he was granted an annuity of £9 2*s.* 6*d.* At Christmas, 1510, and the two compositions, mostly in MS. They are to be found at the British Museum; Lambeth Palace; Christ Church, and the Music School collection. Oxford; Eton College; Peterhouse and Caius Colleges, Cambridge; The Royal College of Music; St. Michael's College, Tenbury; and Ely Cathedral. Some of the titles of his secular vocal compositions are curious: 'That was my woo' (already mentioned); 'Most clere of colour and rote of stedfastnesse'; 'To complayne me alas'; 'Benedicite, what dremyd I'; and 'Alas for lak of her presens.' Anthony à Wood refers to Fayrfax as 'in great renowne, and accounted the prime Musitian of the Nation.' Could there be higher praise?

The list of organists since the year 1820 begins with Thomas Fowler, whose salary was eight guineas a year, the same amount as was paid to the deposed clarinetist, John Higdon.

Fowler resigned in 1831, but was reappointed in 1833, finally giving up the duty in 1837. For two years, 1831-32, the office of organist was held by a much-named gentleman, Edwin Theodore Alonzo Alphonzo Don Carlos Nicholls! The fact that Mr. Nicholls was the son of a Spanish lady accounts for some of his Christian names. He was twice organist of St. Peter's Church, St. Albans, and afterwards of Dunstable Priory Church and Hemel Hempstead Collegiate Church, where he died, September 5, 1863, and is buried.

was born February 20, 1874, at High Wycombe. His first appointment was at Tylers Green Parish Church, Buckinghamshire, 1888-91, followed by Hughenden Parish Church in 1894. In the meantime he studied at the Royal College of Music from 1891-94. During his studentship he was proxime accessit in the organ examination for the open free scholarship in February, 1893, and in the same year he gained the Royal College of Music Council Exhibition of £20 tenable for one year, the examiners being M. Alexandre Guilmant, Sir Walter Parratt, and Sir Frederick Bridge. In

- 1837-1846. Thomas Brooks. Died 1894.
 1846-1855. John Brooks, his brother. Died 1878.
 1855-1858. William Simmonds, from Salisbury Cathedral.
 1858-1880. John Stocks Booth, the first organist of the church after it had been raised to cathedral dignity. Died 1879.
 1880-1907. George Gaffe, a former chorister of Norwich Cathedral and one of Dr. Zechariah Buck's boys. Died 1907.

The present organist of St. Albans Cathedral, Willie Lewis Luttman, M.A., Mus. B. Cantab.,

the latter year he became organ scholar of St. Peter's College (Peterhouse), Cambridge; this he held for three years, proceeding to his Bachelor of Arts degree in 1897, and Master of Arts in 1900. He obtained the degree of Bachelor of Music in 1903. From January, 1898, to April, 1907, Mr. Luttman was organist and choirmaster of Banbury Parish Church and conductor of the Banbury Choral Society, doing excellent work in that town for the cause of good music. In April, 1907, he succeeded Mr. Gaffe in the appointment of organist and choirmaster of St. Albans Cathedral. Mr. Luttman is principal of the St. Albans School of Music and conductor of the Choral and Orchestral Society connected with that Institution. He is a Fellow of the Royal College of Organists and an Associate of the Royal College of Music.

Mr. Luttman has done good work since he has been chief musician of St. Albans Cathedral, in improving the services and in the organ recitals he gives from time to time. Daily choral service is sung in the choir, but by boys' voices only: at present, owing to lack of funds, the only full cathedral service is that sung on Saturday afternoons. At St. Albans there is a splendid opportunity for some munificent lover of English choral music to endow a daily full choral service and thus raise this ancient and magnificent building to its full rank amongst English cathedrals.

For kind help in preparing this article, the best thanks of the writer are tendered to the Dean of St. Albans (the Very Rev. W. J. Lawrance, D.D.); Mr. William Page, F.S.A., author of the excellent official guide-book to the Cathedral; Mr. John Harris, C.E., of Hemel Hempstead; and Mr. W. L. Luttman, M.A., organist and choirmaster of the Cathedral; also to Mr. W. H. Cox for his excellent photographs.

DOTTED CROTCHET.

'For my own part I cannot forbear to place music among the most valuable means in the up-bringing of the young, and in this opinion I have the support of all the best authorities of antiquity. There are so many arguments in favour of the art, it is so ancient, so honourable, so universal, so highly valued in all times and places, alike in church services and otherwise; it is such a calmer of passion, such a powerful influence on the mind, that I must stay my hand in writing about it, lest, being fairly embarked, I should be unable to stop.'—Richard Mulcaster. 1530? 1611.

JOHN LIPROT HATTON,

BORN, OCTOBER 12, 1809.

DIED, SEPTEMBER 20, 1886.

This year of grace, 1909, has brought with it the centenaries of some famous men. The greater constellation includes Darwin, Gladstone, Mendelssohn, and Tennyson, all of whom were born in 1809, and Haydn, who drew his last breath one hundred years ago. The lesser group, whose stars, though very dimly, began to shine in 1809 must not, however, be overlooked. In literature there is Oliver Wendell Holmes; in music, Adolf Friedrich Hesse, William Chappell, and the composer of 'To Anthea.' The last of this trio of musicians forms the subject of this biographical sketch.

John Liprot Hatton was born at Liverpool, in Concert Street—a most appropriate thoroughfare for his entry into the world—on October 12, 1809. His second name, probably a family one, is very uncommon. The British Museum catalogue contains only two such names, both ending with double t—John Liprott and Bexworth Liprott. Both were clergymen, the former being responsible for a sermon on 'Calvinistic truths (but not Calvinistic errors) the doctrine of the Church of England' (1741), while the latter discoursed on 'Pharisaism revived in Popery' (1745); both these homilies attained the dignity of print. Whether John Liprot Hatton could claim any affinity with these two more or less eminent divines of the 18th century is unknown, probably not; but it would be interesting to be able to trace among his forbears John Hatton, of Warrington and St. Helens (died 1793), the composer of the well-known hymn-tune 'Duke Street.'

Hatton came into the world amid musical surroundings, as both his father and grandfather were professional violinists. Like other English composers—Elgar, to wit—the boy was practically self-taught in music. During his boyhood and early manhood he was organist of churches in and near his native city, including the Roman Catholic Church, for the services of which he composed a Mass, and the Old Church (St. Nicholas), Liverpool. The statement that he was organist of Childwall Church is erroneous, as that church was not built until 1837, at which time Hatton had settled in London. It is said that when competing for one of these appointments he played as a test-piece the melody of 'All round my hat,' then a popular song, carefully disguised of course in an ecclesiastical presentment. If this be true, it characteristically foreshadowed those irrepressible animal spirits which in after years made Jack Hatton a boon companion. Sir Charles Santley, also a native of Liverpool, records that Hatton probably played in the orchestra of the Little Liver Theatre, Church Street, where he successfully played the part of Blueskin in 'Jack Sheppard,' singing the ditty 'Jolly Nose' to the great delight of those Liverpoolians who frequented the 'Little Liver.'

In 1832 we find Hatton, aged twenty-three, in London as a member of an opera company at Drury Lane Theatre. 'The strongest operatic company that ever congregated in an English theatre,' so the Harmonicon records. 'Mrs. Wood, Mad. de Merie, Mr. Braham, Mr. H. Phillips, Mr. Wood, &c., will enable the manager to perform almost any opera of any country or school, that he may wish to get up.' A little research among the Drury Lane playbills at the British Museum shows that, on October 6, 1832, the part of the '3rd Forester' in Bishop's 'adaptation to the English stage' of Weber's 'Der Freischütz' was taken by 'Mr. Hatton.' He was also the 'Host' in 'Rob Roy Macgregor.' Concerning this piece the Harmonicon says: 'At the end of the play a Pageant was produced, in honour of this great and universally popular writer, [Sir Walter Scott], consisting of a procession of nearly eighty characters from his various novels, in proper costume, which, with attendants, passed in procession over the stage.' One of these four score of supers 'in proper costume' was 'Mr. Hatton,' who doubtless did full justice to Rhoderick Dhu in the 'Lady of the Lake,' the character assigned to him in this Pageant. But far greater histrionic fame awaited him. On November 26 (1832) Kean and Macready made their first appearance together on any stage, the former as Othello, the latter as Iago, when the cast included Mr. Hatton as Marco!—so the playbills record.

HATTON IN A CHARACTERISTIC ATTITUDE.

(From a photograph kindly lent by Dr. W. H. Cummings.)

Music, however, was Hatton's first love, and we next find him as the composer of 'Six Impromptus' for the pianoforte, published, probably in 1833, by Collard & Co. Some of these compositions were dedicated to various members of the Collard family. No. 3, inscribed to William Bartholomew, has a note which reads: 'This Impromptu was composed on hearing of the death of a beloved friend and is descriptive of the feelings of grief and anguish which were first excited, gradually subsiding and giving place to calm resignation.' This piece shows that, amid his merry-mindedness, Hatton had a serious and sympathetic side to his nature.

His composition gifts soon attracted some of the leaders of the profession—Thomas Attwood, to wit, who mentions the young man in a letter he wrote to Mendelssohn on February 9, 1835. He says:

We have recently had a new establishment here, which is called the 'Society of British Musicians,' in the hope of bringing forward native talent. I hardly need add that [Sterndale] Bennett stands pre-eminent. I, however, wish you would look at your cloak, or great-coat, lest you should have had a bit cut out of it; for there is a young man of the name of Hatton, who seems to have got a little bit of it, indeed he seems more to assimilate to your style without plagiary, than any one I have met with. I conclude you know the history of 'Elijah's mantle' in the Bible.

From this it may be inferred that one or more of Hatton's compositions had come under the notice of the Society of British Musicians, and had met with the approval of so experienced a musician as 'dear old Attwood.'

That Hatton was instrumentally inclined at this productive period of his career is evidenced by a collection of old programmes that formerly belonged to the late Mr. H. J. B. Dando, and are now in the possession of the present writer. One of these programmes, printed on a pink card, is of a concert, presumably a private one, given on 'Thursday evening, 18th April.' Unfortunately neither year nor place is given; but as the selection—which included Beethoven's second symphony and a string quartet by him, and the 'Zauberflöte' overture—contained a ballad from John Barnett's opera 'Farinelli,' produced early in 1839, that year was probably the one in which the concert was given. At all events this programme contains a Quintett for pianoforte, violin, tenor, violoncello, and double bass, by Hatton, which is not mentioned by any of his biographers. Efforts to trace the place and giver of this concert have so far failed.

We next find our composer again at Drury Lane Theatre. In July, 1842, he was engaged by Macready as chorus-master at a salary of three guineas a week. The season opened on October 1. On February 23, 1843, a new operetta in one act was produced entitled 'Queen of the Thames, or, the Anglers.' The name of the composer was withheld until the third representation (March 6), when the chorus-master (i.e., Hatton) received his just due of publicity. So successful was the piece that it ran, at intervals, for six nights, and it would probably have had a longer career but for an incident presently to be mentioned. Among the songs were 'Alas! unwed at forty-two' and 'Blind man's buff,' while a madrigal, 'The merry bridal bells,' has been described as 'a good deal better than most modern attempts to reproduce the ancient form.'

The overture—which had the distinction of being performed by Queen Victoria's private band at Buckingham Palace—was evidently a favourite with its composer, for, writing to a friend thirty-four years later, he refers to it as 'light and brisk, and by no means a bad one.' In addition to being a composer and the chorus-master of Macready's company, Hatton appears to have been a sort of handy-man on the Drury Lane establishment. He appeared temporarily as Heate, in 'Macbeth,' and as Cuno in 'Der Freischütz.' It is recorded that 'on the occasion of Mr. Hatton being dressed for Cuno, Mr. Mellon was also dressed for the same character. One gentleman was to do the speaking part and Mr. Hatton the singing part in the character.' For these appearances Hatton claimed three guineas each; he also wrote to the acting-manager saying that unless his salary was raised to six guineas a week (i.e., doubled) he should resign. This communication immediately brought a curt letter from Macready himself to this effect: 'As you have thought fit to make a breach of your engagement, your services will be dispensed with forthwith.' The result was an action, Hatton v. Macready, in the Sheriff's Court for £19 : 8 : 6, which resulted in a verdict for the defendant!

The company at Drury Lane included Joseph Staudigl, who seems to have been impressed with Hatton's music, as he (Staudigl) sang at his benefit—Drury Lane Theatre, June 3, 1843—Hatton's song 'The Revenge.' That the music was of a higher order than the poetry may be assumed from the first stanza:

The frozen serpent in my breast
Wakes from its slumber cold,
Around my head I feel it prest
With fiercely burning fold.
Its forked tongue with anguish flows,
Its fangs envenom'd tear,
As if with liquid fire to rouse
Thro' misery and despair.
Revenge! Revenge! I cry!

As this song was from 'Pascal Bruno' it would appear that the opera was composed at that time. At all events Staudigl invited Hatton to visit Vienna for the production of the work, a gracious tribute to the English composer on the part of the German singer. Staudigl was not only Hatton's host during the latter's sojourn in Vienna, but he translated into German the English libretto (by W. Fitzball) of the opera. 'Pascal Bruno' was produced at Vienna on March 2, 1844, Staudigl singing the name-part. An interesting account of its production is recorded in the columns of the Musical Examiner of March 16, 1844, a journal edited by J. W. Davison. It is in the form of a letter written by Leopoldine Mayer to Parish Alvars, the harpist, in London:

Vienna, March 4, 1844.

MY DEAR MR. ALVARS. — According to my promise I must write to you, in order to inform you of the success of Mr. Hatton's opera, which has been given, the day before yesterday for Mr. Staudigl's benefit. We were at the theatre, so all I say is the truth.

first act pleased very much and several pieces were ed; so, for example, the first song of Staudigl (Miss Lutzer's song with the castanets. Mr. Hatton ry much applauded; he was obliged to get up from t three times and bow to the public. After the first re was unbounded applause, and Mr. Hatton appeared : scene, first with Staudigl and Lutzer, and then, nd time, alone. The second and third act did ease, and I assure you we suffered for poor Hatton, e his opera was miserably performed, Miss Lutzer and gl excepted. Miss Dichl (the Vicekönigin) sang so that once she left off in the midst of a duet. I cannot ve how Mr. Hatton could allow Miss Dichl to n this part; because the finest opera, sung by ujets, must make fiasco. It was not given yesterday sequence of Miss Dichl declaring she would not sing ore in that opera. She would have been right to say ore the first representation.

earlier issue of the Musical Examiner (January 17, 1844) states: 'Mr. Hatton has been received by the musical profession [at Vienna], is studying counterpoint under a celebrated r.' Simon Sechter, 'one of the most rantant of modern contrapuntists,' was the brated master.' Thus, although he was thirty-years of age, Hatton did not consider himself old to profit by such sound theoretical ledge as the teacher of Franz Schubert could rt. Staudigl showed the English composer i kindness during his sojourn in the Austrian al; he introduced him to the Concordia ty, where his pianoforte-playing, especially of 's fugues from memory, attracted much tion. To quote further from the Musical niner:

J. L. Hatton returned to London on Saturday last 6, 1844] from Vienna, where he has been supering the representation of an opera, of his own sition, which was highly successful; Mdlle. Lutzer ierr Staudigl sustained the principal characters, and tter took the warmest interest in the production of our yman.

the Philharmonic concert of May 27, 1844, uet, 'Stung by horror,' from 'Pascal Bruno,' sung by Miss Rainforth and Herr Staudigl. concert was conducted by Mendelssohn, his ding march was performed for the first time in ountry, and Joachim, aged fourteen, astonished body with his wonderful interpretation of oven's Violin concerto. The words of the were no less doggerel than those of 'The nge.' They began:

cal. Stung by horror, shame, and anguish,
Driven from her once loved home;
Mid yon mountains, wild, and lonely,
There she sought an early tomb.
Holy hand her grave ne'er hallowed;
Tears, none but his, her only child,
Who swore thereon an oath of vengeance—
Vengeance! as terrible as wild.

at the end the Countess sings:

Noble blood flows in my veins,
Wrath and scorn my bosom fill,
Shall an outlaw's threats ferocious Awe me to obey his will!
Ruffian! ruffian! quit my presence—
Go, despairing,—hence, depart:
Weep, my scorn denies thee back
The lov'd one of thy heart.

It appears that Charles Lockey, the original tenor in Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' used to sing an excerpt from the opera, as, in a letter written in 1877, Hatton says: 'The song that Lockey used to sing from 'Pascal Bruno' was never published, and I know nothing about it now. He (Lockey) never was a good correspondent, and he writes with a skewer, but he is a very good fellow.' As a matter of fact, the only portion of the opera that was ever published is the song 'The Revenge.'

Soon after his return from Vienna, Hatton again became busy with his pen. He then for a time adopted the pseudonym of P. B. Czapek, Czapek being the Hungarian for 'hat on.' Although this was a punning translation of his patronymic, JACK HATTON.

CARICATURE SKETCH BY MR. CHARLES LYALL, AND REPRODUCED BY HIS KIND PERMISSION.

Czapek is not a fancy name, as, apart from Hatton, the compositions of three real Czapeks have found a place in the British Museum music catalogue. Whether the composer or his publisher suggested the adoption of a Hungarianised Hatton as a pseudonym is not known. One of the earliest publications in that form is entitled:

Six songs | with | German and English words. | The music composed by | P. B. CZAPEK, | The English version by | Thos. Oliphant Esq.

N.B.—These songs were composed expressly by order of Mr. Oliphant, | and are his exclusive property.

London | Addison & Hodson, 210, Regent Street.
(British Museum date of receipt, 1845.)

To the first song, 'The mysterious serenade,' Hatton appended a note which reads :

The accompaniment to this song must be played with the utmost freedom and lightness of touch, otherwise the effect intended by the composer will be entirely destroyed.

Two other sets, of six each and making eighteen songs in all, followed 'by order' of Mr. Oliphant and became his 'exclusive property,' as did 'Simon the cellarer,' for which, it is said, he remunerated the composer with a £10 note!

As an excellent pianist, Hatton made successful appearances at the Melodists' Club in London, of which he was a member, and at the Hereford Musical Festival of 1846. On the latter occasion, at the first of the miscellaneous concerts in the Shire Hall, he played the pianoforte part in Beethoven's early Quintet in E flat for pianoforte and wind instruments, and favoured the audience with 'Le Savoyard,' described as 'a humorous chansonnette of his own composition sung and accompanied by himself.' At the second concert he played the solo part of Mozart's Pianoforte concerto in D minor. 'These works of the immortal master' (said The Times), 'who has enriched the repertory of the piano to a greater extent than any other composer, except the universal Beethoven, are too much neglected by our performers, and Mr. J. L. Hatton deserves credit for endeavouring to bring them into notice.' Two of Hatton's 'Czapek' songs—'The Chapel' and 'The shepherd's winter song'—were sung at this festival. Concerning these serious compositions, The Times critic—from internal evidence, Mr. J. W. Davison—said :

These songs are the compositions of Mr. J. L. Hatton, an English artist of distinguished talent, who should know better how to regard his art and respect the public, than to adopt the questionable proceeding of publishing them under an uncouth hyperborean signature 'Czapek.' They are exceedingly clever and musician-like, and will win favour on the score of their own merits, without the subterfuge of pseudonymous parentage.

Soon after the Hereford Festival we can trace our composer at Peckham, where, at Christmastide, he provided a mirth-provoking entertainment à la John Parry or Corney Grain. The Musical World, of December 26, 1846, furnishes the needful particulars :

Mr. J. L. Hatton gave a musical entertainment at the Assembly Room, Rosemary Branch, Peckham, on Wednesday evening. Mr. J. L. Hatton was the Atlas of the entertainment, and bore the entire weight of the concert on his own shoulders. He lectured, sang, and performed on the pianoforte. Like Malaprop's Cerberus, he was three gentlemen at once. The entertainment was novel and interesting. Mr. Hatton gave some capital specimens of pianoforte music by various masters, including Corelli, Bach, Handel, Mozart, Beethoven, &c. He sang songs comic, sentimental, and serious. He levied contributions upon many nations for their compositions, and kept his audience alternately moved with delight and excited with laughter. Mr. Hatton was modest enough not to obtrude too many of his own works upon his visitors. 'The Adventures of Robinson Crusoe,' a song intended, no doubt, to be very comic, was the only composition of Mr. Hatton's performed during the evening. We were glad to see the room so well and so respectably attended. Mr. J. L. Hatton is an excellent pianist, and a capital musician, and is deserving the best support of the public.

In 1847, if not a little earlier, Hatton began those provincial tours with operatic and other singers of which he was the life and soul of the company. Nicknamed 'The Sultan,' he whiled away the tedium of many a long railway journey with his inimitable humour and never-failing bonhomie; he also served his colleagues well in the matter of cuisine at the various hotels patronised by them. All this and more is told by 'Walter Maynard' (Willert Beale) in his entertaining book, 'The Enterprising Impresario.'

A great event in Hatton's life was the first of his three visits to America. This took place in 1848. A most interesting account—graphic and amusing—from his own letters of his experiences in the United States appeared in the Musical Times of September, 1899, to which the reader is referred. According to the 'History of the Handel and Haydn Society, of Boston, Massachusetts,' Hatton appeared at Boston as the tenor soloist in two performances of the 'Messiah,' also in 'Elijah.' Although he sang tenor solos in Handel's masterpiece, he took the part of the Prophet in Mendelssohn's oratorio. In his 'Recollections of an old musician' (1899), Mr. Thomas Ryan, of the Mendelssohn Quintette Club, thus records the incident :

Mr. Hatton's versatility was great. I remember an instance of it. One Saturday night in a Musical Fund Concert, he played Mendelssohn's D minor piano concerto, that being its first performance in Boston. Later, in the same concert, he sang some comic songs. The next evening, in the same hall, in a Handel and Haydn concert, he conducted a performance of Elijah. The singer of the title rôle was suddenly indisposed and unable to sing. Mr. Hatton, through the entire performance, sang the part of 'Elijah'—turning round to face the audience when singing, yet continuing to conduct the forces. He sang the music in artistic style and with a good full voice.

On his return to England, Hatton published the song which will long preserve his memory, his setting of Herrick's 'To Anthea.' He probably composed it in America, for he wrote from Hastings, U.S.A., on June 14, 1849: 'I have a pianoforte and can amuse myself with writing songs from old Herrick's poetry. I shall have a goodly stock of them when I return.' 'To Anthea' first appeared in and | Sedley. | Set to music | by | J. L. HATTON.

The interesting preface, dated 'London, August 1850,' to this publication, reads as follows :

The songs forming the contents of this volume were written at different times and under various circumstances. Some few of them were composed previous to my departure to America in the autumn of the year 1848, and presented as little souvenirs to several of my friends on my leaving

e remaining incidents in the life-story of Liptrot Hatton must be briefly told. For al years, beginning in 1853, he conducted and ged the music of the celebrated Shakespearean representations by Charles Kean at the Princess's Theatre—Henry VIII., Richard II., Sardanapalus, Winter's Tale, &c. In some of these he deftly used old English airs. The music of Henry VIII.

he dedicated to Mrs. Charles Kean; the overture has been arranged for the organ by Dr. A. L.
Peace, and is contained in his repertoire. For the Bradford Musical Festival of 1856, Hatton composed the cantata 'Robin Hood'; his last opera, 'Rose, or love's ransom,' was produced at Covent Garden on November 26, 1864; and his only oratorio, 'Hezekiah,' obtained its only hearing at the Crystal Palace Saturday concert of December 15, 1877. From that time he lived chiefly at Margate, where he died, September 20, 1886, within a few days of completing his seventy-seventh year. His remains were interred in Kensal Green Cemetery.

A prolific composer, Hatton wrote to please, and in this he was distinctly successful. At the same time he never entirely forsook artistic paths. To him, as to Samuel Wesley, Bach was a god in music. Writing to Dr. Gauntlett, he said of 'old Sebastian,' as he calls him, 'That old fellow is my comforter. If I am dull I nerve myself up with

Should my spirits be too exuberant, then I tone myself down with

(By the way, I have seen this fugue attributed to Krebs.)

At the concerts of the English Glee and Madrigal Union, of which he was the accompanist, he would play a Bach fugue amid the part-songs and ballads. These Bach incursions into the domain of less serious music were not, however, always appreciated. On one occasion when travelling with a concert party, Hatton and his colleagues, after their evening's work, supped at the house of a local magnate. In the course of conversation the hostess eulogistically referred to a lady whose voice at the concert she greatly admired. When Hatton asked to whom she referred, she said, 'The lady who sang first in the second part of the programme.' 'Pardon me, madam,' replied Hatton,
'but it was the second, as the opening piece was instrumental.' 'No, no,' said she, 'it was the first;
if you remember, a man came on and tuned the piano during the interval, and then she sang.' The man was Hatton himself, who had 'tuned the piano' by playing a Bach fugue! His versatility was remarkable. Refined even in the singing of a comic song, his rendering would provoke irresistible hilarity. His most notable achievement in this direction was Jonathan Blewitt's 'Merry little fat grey man,' which always provoked roars of laughter.

As an accompanist at Messrs. Boosey's Ballad Concerts—from their inception in 1867 and onwards—and elsewhere he did excellent work. The present writer recalls one such occasion when Hatton became so excited in accompanying Sir Charles Santley in 'Simon the cellarer' that he joined in when the eminent baritone approached the end of the song!

Although his compositions were mostly vocal—solo and concerted—and of a secular and more or less ephemeral nature, he, later in life, wrote some church music—several anthems and two Services in E and C. The former setting was, with the exception of the Gloria in excelsis, complete, including the Venite, and is the only one of its kind except that by Ouseley (in C, eight-part), which includes the Gloria. For Messrs. Boosey he edited the 'Songs of England' and a set of organ pieces. The autograph sketches of the latter are contained in the volume above referred to. Against the first number he has written 'Book for the organ of moderate difficulty, pedals used now and then, not in every piece.' He also composed a Pianoforte trio in G minor, which has been published.

Had J. L. Hatton ever sought to obtain a degree in music he probably would have failed to satisfy his examiners, as he had very broad views on the subject of theoretical exactitude—views which would shock any lynx-eyed 'fifth-hunter.' The following extracts from two letters written by him in 1870 to the late Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew, are interesting in this respect. In the first he says:

Weber has given us this and it is not unpleasant:

So has Beethoven. I like the sound of 5ths—look at this:

beautiful!

The grand old masters hid these charmingly—Bach, Handel—but there they are, like truffles in a pie, smothered up in a delicious compound—you get the flavour now and then.

In the second letter he says:

The fact is, 5ths are delightful if properly covered up. The composer of all others delights me frequently with this kind of thing:

You see altho' the C is held on, the 5ths sound bold on the ear and the effect is truly beautiful—he's always at it. I am aware that in vocal part-writing you must be more particular; but I don't stand on ceremony, so long as I manage to make the part more singable.

At one time Hatton approached Mr. Joseph Bennett on the subject of an oratorio libretto, a project which came to nothing. Then he became 'rather inclined' to comic opera, as the following letter shows:

Margate,
9th February, 1879.

MY DEAR BENNETT,

I am about, I fear, to astonish you, perhaps to cause you some annoyance. The fact is, so many friends have been to me with their objections to attempting in these days so serious a work as an oratorio, and begging me to attack something of a lighter character, that I begin to feel half-afraid of the larger work. They one and all say, 'Nothing to be got for an oratorio; few chances of such things being played,' and so on.

Friend X [mentioning a still-living singer] is particularly against my doing so—'that I ought not to be bothering my brains with oratorio.' All this is very uncomfortable, and if it has not quite knocked me off my perch, has made me feel very shaky. Now for it! You know I am rather inclined to comic opera; can you—will you, help me to one? There's now the murder's out! Will you drive those old Ambsteads out of your head, and lend me a helping hand to pull me out of the mud I feel myself sticking in?

I have no courage left to say anything more, feeling I have been bravely impertinent in saying so much, which please pardon, and believe me,—Yours faithfully,

J. L. HATTON.

(From 'Forty years of music, 1865-1905.' By Joseph Bennett London: Methuen. 1908.)

The comic opera scheme shared the same fate as the oratorio project.

In appearance, especially in his later years, Hatton was like some old sailor. His Jack Tar-like characteristics have been happily caught in the excellent caricature of him by Mr. Charles Lyall, who has kindly allowed us to reproduce it. Hatton's nautical proclivities are musically reflected in his 'Songs for sailors.' He was a Freemason, a member of the Royal Thames Yacht Club, and of the Goldsmiths' Company. In connection with the last named the following letter, kindly lent by Dr. W. H. Cummings, is typical of the writer's humour:

Aldborough, Suffolk,
13th October, 1862.

MY DEAR CUMMINGS,

Can you dine at Goldsmiths' Hall on Wednesday the 26th of November?

Hear and answer,

Yours truly,

J. L. HATTON.

W. H. CUMMINGS, ESQ.

As a creative musician, Hatton's fame rests on his part-songs, and 'To Anthea.' A genuine British production, 'To Anthea' takes high rank among the first six of all the songs composed by our countrymen, and in spite of its sixty years it remains as fresh as ever in its irresistible vigour and perfect expression.

As a further contribution to the Mendelssohn centenary, the following letter, written by the late well known violinist, Mr. Dando, to a friend, may not be without interest.

Upper Vernon Street,
July 15, 1878.

DEAR SIR,—On my return home I find your interesting sketch of the career of my dear lost friend Mendelssohn. I thank you much for sending it to me, as everything connected with him and his name brings delightful recollections back to my mind; and many of the facts you relate in your sketch revive in me pleasant memories. I was present at all his triumphs in Birmingham (by-the-bye, it was on Wednesday, the 26th of August, 1846, he conducted his 'Elijah,' not the 25th), and it was after the last performance on the Friday (the 28th), and a long chat with him on the subject of 3 quartetts he spoke of writing for me, that we parted for the last time, alas! I used to spend whole days and evenings with him whenever he came to England. On one of his visits I had the delight and advantage of leading all his chamber music under his guidance at Mr. Alsager's house in Queen Square, Bloomsbury, where on several other occasions he and I, side by side, played the two tenor parts in his chamber works. When I played anything that did not quite please him, he would stop me and say, 'No, I want you to do it so; now, don't laugh at me, I can't play the notes as you do, but I think I can just show you what I want,' and I need hardly tell you that I never had better music lessons in my life. It was in consequence of these tenor playings together that he always afterwards called me his 'colleague.'

We had made several attempts to arrange a night for him at my Quartett concerts [Crosby Hall], but without success. When he arrived in 1844 he fixed for the last concert. When the glad tidings were announced to the subscribers I was verily besieged for tickets, and having no more space in the concert-room, the landing on the staircase was crowded with listeners. He gave a magnificent impromptu performance that has never been forgotten by those who were fortunate enough to hear it.—Yours very truly,

J. H. B. DANDO.

In the above connection it will be recalled that from 1842 to 1859, Mr. Dando gave an annual series of artistic chamber concerts at Crosby Hall. Mendelssohn appeared at the concert of June 3, 1844. He played some of his 'Lieder ohne Worte,' including No. 30, the so-called 'Spring-song,' in A. For an encore he extemporised upon two earlier numbers of the programme—Mozart's G minor Quintet and Schubert's 'Ave Maria.' He took the opening theme of the Quintet, with its chromatic descent, and cleverly interwove it with the Schubert melody: as one of the audience remarked fifty years after, a masterly performance, not easily forgotten.

Dukes and their colleagues in the House of Lords are the objects of much public attention in connection with the thorny subject of the Budget. Far be it from us to enter the discordant region of politics, but we may not be without interest as a topical subject to trace some connection between music and the peers of the realm past and present. From the creative point of view we find a century ago George, the fourth Duke of Marlborough (1738-1817), composing vocal and instrumental music, first as the Marquis of Landford and afterwards in his ducal capacity. A large folio volume at the British Museum contains three sets of sonatas thus entitled:

Sei Sonatine per il Cembalo composte dal Signore archese di Blandford.

On the fly-leaf is written 'Printed at the Marquis's expense,' and as no publisher's name appears on the three artistic title-pages, it may be assumed that the sonatas, which are for violin and pianoforte, were intended for private circulation. His Lordship's contributions to vocal music include a volume, with a pretty coloured title-page, entitled 'Arie con accompagnamento,' some detached songs, and a dozen glees. This ancestor of Mr. Winston Churchill was connected with many of the musical enterprises during the end of the 18th and the beginning of the 19th centuries.

The Royal Academy of Music owes its foundation to an eminent member of the Gilded Chamber—John Fane, eleventh Earl of Westmorland (1784-1859). 'As a musician he was not less distinguished than he had been as a soldier and a diplomat,' so the 'Dictionary of National Biography' states. Before he succeeded to the title, he, as Lord Burghersh, proposed in 1822 the formation of the Royal Academy of Music, in which he took an active interest throughout the remainder of his life. So highly was he esteemed at Berlin—where he was resident minister from 1841 to 1851—that when the news of his death reached that capital, the principal military bands assembled in the presence of the Prince Regent and a distinguished company, and performed Beethoven's Funeral march, a favourite piece of the Earl's. A voluminous composer, his output included seven Italian operas, three cantatas, masses, cathedral services, anthems, hymns, madrigals, and much other vocal music, printed and in manuscript. And it must not be forgotten that Richard Fitzwilliam, the seventh Viscount (1745-1816), founded the Fitzwilliam Museum. The Musical Times for March and April, 1903, contained an illustrated article on that important treasure-house.

The next peer in our survey obtained world-wide fame as the father of the great Duke of Wellington. In music, Garrett Colley Wellesley (or Wesley), first Earl of Mornington (1735-1781), is widely and favourably known as the composer of 'Here in cool grot and mossy cell' (a prize glee), and two excellent double chants. The musical sensibilities of his Lordship were displayed in a remarkable manner whilst in his nurse's arms, and long before he could speak. He was elected the first professor of music at the University of Dublin (1764), which conferred upon him the degree of doctor of music.

The Antient Concerts—'founded by the nobility' in 1776—were largely run and supported by members of the peerage. At the last concert, held in 1848, the director of the evening was the Iron Duke, of whose musicianship the Musical World said, 'His Grace Field Marshal the Duke of Wellington is by no means so good a tactician in the concert-room as he is on the battle field.' Unless memory fails, it was of this organization that a noble lord was asked why he did not subscribe to the concerts. 'Your brother, the Bishop of —, does, Why don't you?' At once came the reply, 'If I were as deaf as my brother, I would subscribe.' In the present day more than one peer takes an active interest in music. The Marquis of Ripon, better known as Earl de Grey, is a member of the Royal Opera Syndicate, and the Earl Howe is a director of the Queen's Hall Orchestra. The Lord Chief Justice (Lord Alverstone) is a member of the Madrigal Society, taking part in its meetings, and he is President of the Abbey Glee Club. And has not the Earl of Shaftesbury proved acceptable as a solo vocalist on the concert platform?

The bi-centenary of the birth of Dr. Johnson, celebrated last month in his native city of Lichfield, prompts some 'Occasional notes' on the great lexicographer. Like many other literary men, Dr. Johnson could not be considered 'musical,' nevertheless his sayings in connection with the art are not without interest. In his 'Life' of Johnson, Sir John Hawkins records that he (Johnson) said of music, 'It excites in my mind no ideas, and hinders me from contemplating my own.' Hawkins adds: 'I have sometimes thought that music was positive pain to him. Upon his hearing a celebrated performer go through a hard composition, and hearing it remarked that it was very difficult, he said, "I would that it had been impossible."' Johnson was a great friend of the other historian of music. 'I love Burney,' he said, 'my heart goes out to meet him. I much question if there is in the world such another man as Dr. Burney.' As a frequent visitor at Burney's house in St. Martin's-street, Leicester Square, he would meet, under that hospitable roof, the 'quality' in the best sense of the word—literary, artistic, and musical. On one such occasion Mrs. Thrale asked Burney to tell her the title of a song which she had heard the previous evening at a concert given by John Christian Bach, the 'English Bach.' The genial host, anxious to draw his most distinguished guest into conversation, turned to Johnson and passed on the question to him. The worthy Doctor, comprehending Burney's drift, good-naturedly put aside his book, and, see-sawing on his chair, drolly said, with a very humorous smile: 'Bach, Sir? Bach's concert? And pray, Sir, who is Bach? Is he a piper?'

On another occasion, at Mrs. Thrale's house at Streatham, Johnson, after having talked slightly of music, was observed to listen very attentively while Miss Thrale played on the harpsichord. With great eagerness he said to her, 'Why don't you dash away like Burney?' Dr. Burney thereupon said to him, 'I believe, Sir, we shall make a musician of you at last.' The Doctor, with candid complacency, replied, 'Sir, I shall be glad to have a new sense given me.' (According to Madame D'Arblay, Johnson said, 'Sir, I shall be very glad to have a new sense put into me.) The first symptom that the Doctor showed of any appreciation of sweet sounds was upon hearing an extract read aloud to him from the preface to Burney's 'History of Music,' then in manuscript. Here it is:

The love of lengthened tones and modulated sounds, different from those of speech, and regulated by a stated measure, seems a passion implanted in human nature throughout the globe; for we hear of no people, however wild and savage in other particulars, who have not music of some kind or other with which we may suppose them to be greatly delighted.

Sir,' said Johnson, after a pause, 'this assertion I believe may be right.' And then, see-sawing a minute or two on his chair, he forcibly added: 'All animated nature loves music—except myself!'

During his tour through Scotland and the Hebrides with his travelling companion and fidus Achates, Boswell records (October 15, 1773): 'We had the musick of the bagpipe every day, at Armidale, Dunvegan, and Col. Dr. Johnson appeared fond of it, and used often to stand for some time with his ear close to the great drone.' Subsequent Boswellian information regarding the Doctor's attitude towards music is recorded in the following dialogue of the year 1778, when Johnson was in his seventieth year:

Boswell. Pray, Sir, did you ever play on any musical instrument?

Johnson. No, Sir, I once bought me a flagelet; but I never made out a tune.

Boswell. A flagelet, Sir!—so small an instrument? I should have liked to hear you play on the violoncello. That should have been your instrument.

Johnson. Sir, I might as well have played on the violoncello as another; but I should have done nothing else.

A year later, at Rochester, Johnson and a friend witnessed the funeral procession of a Freemason at which some solemn music was played on French horns. On hearing the mournful strains the Doctor said, 'This is the first time that I have ever been affected by musical sounds,' adding that the impression made upon him was of a melancholy kind. Upon his companion remarking that the effect was a fine one, Johnson replied: 'Yes, if it softens the mind, so as to preface it for the reception of salutary feelings, it may be good; but inasmuch as it is melancholy per se, it is bad.' There is much wisdom in that remark, one which not a few young composers of the present day might ponder with advantage. To return to the worthy Doctor. Towards the close of his life, amidst a complication of bodily and mental distress, he was ever animated with a desire for intellectual improvement. Burney tells us that six months before death his friend said to him: 'Dr. Burney, teach me at least the scale of your alphabet.' By this simple request did this great Englishman become musically penitent before his soul took its flight. Peace to the memory of Samuel Johnson!

Mr. Barclay Squire contributed to the recently-issued 'Riemann-Festschrift' an interesting paper on 'Handel in 1745.' In this he shows that Handel had a share in the stirring events of the time by composing two patriotic songs. The first, which appeared in November, 1745, is entitled 'A song made for the Gentlemen Volunteers of the City of London. Set to Musick by Mr. Handel.' We quote the first verse:

Stand round, my brave boys,
With heart and with voice,
And all in full chorus agree;
We'll fight for our King
And as loyally sing,
And let the world know we'll be free.

Chorus.

The rebels shall fly
As with shouts we draw nigh,
And echo shall victory ring:
Then safe from alarms
We'll rest on our arms,
And chorus it, 'Long live the King.'

The second of these pièces d'occasion is entitled 'A song on the victory over the rebels by His Royal Highness the Duke of Cumberland. The words by Mr. Lockman. Set by Mr. Handel.' In this the music rises superior to the words—indeed, both strains are as melodious as they are stirring; moreover, as Mr. Squire says, 'they are curious as not only marking his (Handel's) recovery from a time of illness and depression, but also as being two of the very few compositions which he wrote in his later years unconnected with any opera or oratorio.' Both songs appeared in the London Magazine, and as single sheet songs, but they have never been reprinted, not even by Dr. Chrysander in his 'Handel-Gesellschaft's Edition'! Thanks are due to Mr. Squire for unearthing these interesting and rousing songs of 1745, composed by Handel.

According to our annual custom we give a digest of the British Museum Blue-Book of the year 1908 so far as it refers to music. In the Department of Printed Books the following information is given under 'Accessions':

Music.—10,445 musical publications have been added to the collection in the course of the year. Of these, 8,135 books and pieces, and 1644 parts were received by Copyright; 13 pieces by Colonial Copyright; and 63 books and 90 parts acquired by purchase.

The most interesting accessions have been:

Bendinelli, A.: 'Sacrae Modulationes.' Book I., complete in 8-pt. Verona, 1585. The only other copy known, in the Royal Library of Berlin, consists of 2-pt.

Diruta, A.: 'Salmi a quattro voci,' 5 pt. Rome, 1630. No other copy known.

'Canzoni madrigalesche di Benedetto Marcello.' Bologna, 1717.

Mr. Barclay Squire is to be congratulated upon having acquired these rare books in amplification of the musical library.

Turning to the Department of Manuscripts, it is satisfactory to learn that in regard to the Catalogue of Music 'the revision of descriptions for vol. iii. (Instrumental Music) has been completed, and the text has been printed off.' An early issue of this book of reference may therefore be expected. Foremost among the acquisitions is the bequest of Miss Harriet Plowden of Beethoven's Sonata for violin and pianoforte in G (Op. 30, No. 3), and of nine String Quartets by Mozart which were described in the Musical Times of September, 1907. Owing to the question of doubts of ownership these treasures were not delivered to the Museum until November last. Other acquisitions are thus described:

Messe Solennelle (Ste. Cécile), in full score, by Charles Caudry; after 1852. Autograph.
Overtures, etc., in score to operas by Pietro Generali and Carl Gottlieb Reissiger; 19th cent.

The Royal collection of old musical instruments in Berlin has lately been enriched with many new and interesting additions. The heirs of the late Dr. Schlimm have presented one of his violins and a bow, and several batons, among them one that was presented to him by the Cambridge University Musical Society in 1877. Through the generosity of Mrs. Grottrian the collection has also received the late Madame Clara Schumann's grand pianoforte. An early flute, formerly in the possession of King Frederic the Great, and considered one of his favourite instruments, which he took with him on several of his campaigns, is also exhibited, having been lent by Mrs. Dohme.

A school of Morris dancing, in connection with the Physical Training College, has been established at the South-Western Polytechnic Institute, Manresa Road, Chelsea. The objects of the School—which is under the able direction of Mr. Cecil J. Sharp—are (1) to form classes in Morris dancing; (2) to train, examine, and grant certificates to teachers of Morris dancing; and (3) to keep a register of certified teachers, lecturers, &c., and to give advice and disseminate information respecting folk-dances, folk-songs, children's singing games, &c. Now that Morris dancing has received a great stimulus by the official recognition given to it in the revised syllabus of physical exercises issued by the Board of Education, the usefulness of this newly formed 'School' is obvious.

The Scotch Education Department has issued a Memorandum on the teaching of music in Scottish primary schools that has attracted considerable attention in the quarters concerned. The Memorandum is evidently the work of a musician of experience who is able to take broad views of the situation and to examine the trend of its possible development. It is possible to detect some pedagogic flaws in the practical recommendations made, but these shortcomings, if they may be so described, do not much detract from the interest of the general survey. The topics dealt with include the pitch and compass of voices, voice-production (upon which some excellent things are said), ear-training, the choice of music, utility of folk-songs, unison- and part-writing, and there is a remarkable chapter on the uses of music—practical, hygienic, recreative, æsthetic and ethical. The Memorandum closes by quoting opinions on the value of music that have been pronounced by Plato, Aristotle, Cicero, Luther, Mulcaster, Froebel, Herbert Spencer, Gluck, Wagner and Saint-Saëns. The Memorandum is quoted nearly verbatim in the September issue of the School Music Review.

The Southport Musical Festival, to be held on October 13-16, will consist of four evening concerts, beginning with Elgar's 'The Kingdom,' conducted by the composer, and ending with Handel's 'Messiah,' under the direction of Dr. Henry Coward. The two intervening concerts, of a miscellaneous nature, will include performances of the following choral works: Havergal Brian's dramatic cantata 'The vision of Cleopatra,' Walford Davies's 'Ode on Time,' Parry's 'L'Allegro ed il Penseroso' (conducted by the composer), Rutland Boughton's 'Choral variations on two folk-songs,' and Hathaway's twelve-part unaccompanied chorus 'Rest.' The orchestral works will include the overtures Oberon (Weber), A birthday (Landon Ronald) and Carneval (Dvorák); Rhapsody No. 2 (Liszt), and Symphony No. 4 (Tchaikovsky). Distinguished soloists have been engaged, as have the Hallé Orchestra from Manchester. In addition to the composers above named, Mr. Landon Ronald and Mr. Arthur W. Speed (chorus-master) will conduct this interesting festival on the Lancashire coast.

Mixed musical metaphors make much merriment. A recent example of this mixing-up is contained in a journal devoted to matters ecclesiastical. We are told that 'the effect of the American organ and harmonium in the village chapel, where the congregation is small, is ineffective and thin, and that the grip of the violoncello and double-bass is needed to give accent and a bed-rock on which the voices can float.' We live in a wonderful age—aviation, North Pole discoveries, and what not—but scientists have yet to tell us how our voices can float on a bed-rock.

British music on the Continent is a congenial theme for comment. Any instance of such attention to our countrymen's creativeness deserves to be recorded. We have before us the programme of a concert recently given at a French watering-place, which, with one exception (a violoncello solo), consists entirely of British music. The compiler of the programme took care, however, that the selection should not be a dry one, as the concert began with Pump and Circumstance - - - Edw. Elgar.

Is not this rather suggestive of the cold-water cure?

A writer in one of the London daily newspapers says that the organ in St. Paul's Cathedral has 'a weight of three tons on its bellows.'

Church and Organ Music.

DARWALL'S 148TH.

Clerical composers can claim credit in the vast field of hymn-tune creativeness. It would not be difficult to compile a list, and that a long one, of clergymen, ancient and modern, who have enriched our hymnals with many melodious and devotional strains which have stimulated and uplifted congregational song. One such parson—using the word in no derogatory sense—of old times was the Rev. John Darwall.

The son of the Rev. Randle Darwall, rector of Haughton, Staffordshire, John Darwall was born there in the year 1731. He entered Manchester Grammar School in 1745, whence, in 1752, he went to Brasenose College, Oxford, where he took his B.A. degree in 1756. (He never proceeded to M.A.) Mr. Darwall was appointed curate of St. Matthew's Parish Church, Walsall, in 1761, and vicar in 1769, a cure which he held till his death, December 18, 1789. He left behind him two volumes of pianoforte sonatas, which are of no great value, and three MS. volumes containing tunes to all the 150 Psalms, New Version; he published 'A Christmas hymn and tune', 'A charity hymn and tune,' and 'A hymn to which is prefixed a biographical notice.'

All these tunes are written in two parts. Although some have been printed, only one has survived, and with such wonderful vitality that it has found its way into almost every modern hymnal, irrespective of denomination—the tune known as 'Darwall's 148th.' Through the kindness of the Rev. Leicester J. T. Darwall, great-grandson of the composer, we are enabled to give a facsimile of the tune as written by his ancestor.

The image shows a facsimile of a handwritten musical score for 'Darwall's 148th'. It consists of four systems of two staves each. The top staff is in treble clef and the bottom staff is in bass clef. The key signature has one sharp (F#) and the time signature is common time (C). The lyrics are written in cursive between the staves. The score ends with a double bar line.

FACSIMILE (SLIGHTLY REDUCED) OF 'DARWALL'S 148TH' IN THE AUTOGRAPH OF THE COMPOSER
 (Reproduced by kind permission of his great-grandson, the Rev. Leicester J. T. Darwall, B.D.)

So far as can be ascertained the tune appeared in print in the following collection :

WILLIAMS'S NEW UNIVERSAL PSALMODIST.
 . . . The whole composed in a new and easy taste, for two, three, or four voices, and the most familiar keys and cliffs now used and recommended by the most eminent masters: the whole calculated to promote and improve this most excellent part of social worship, and thereby render it both useful and delightful in country choirs; likewise, all congregations and other religious Societies in Great Britain, Ireland, and America.

 London, printed and sold by the author, No. 11 Great Kirby-street, Hatton Garden. [1770].

DARWALL'S.

PSALM CXLVIII. N.V.

Ye bound-less Realms of Joy, Ex - alt your Ma - ker's Fame, His Praise your Songs em - ploy, A - bove the star - ry Frame, Your voi - ces raise, Ye Che - ru - bim, And Ser - a - phim to Sing his Praise.

he reader can draw his own conclusions as to whether the Rev. John Darwall or Mr. Williams, the editor of this book, is responsible for the harmony of the tune. An interesting reference to what may be inferred is the tune in question is contained in the following extract from the Gentleman's Magazine of January, 1700. The writer refers to the opening of a new organ in Walsall Parish Church, built by Samuel Green in 1737 at a cost of nearly £400. He says :

In Whitsun week, 1773, some anthems, &c., were performed by the Walsall singers in that church, admittance that day was paid for, and the organ was opened by Dr. Alcock, of Lichfield, who declared it was a good instrument. And on the next Sunday, in the afternoon, it was first played on in full congregation by Mr. Balam, our then organist (who was blind, and had been a pupil of the celebrated Stanley). The first psalm was part of the 30th, New Version, Uxbridge tune; and Mr. Darwall, our vicar (who was himself a musical man) preached a sermon from Psalm CL., 'Praise Him with stringed instruments and organs.' In this discourse the preacher, among other things, recommended Psalm tunes 'a quicker time than common; as he said 'that six verses might be sung in the same space of time that four generally are.' After sermon the entire 150th Psalm, New Version, was sung, to a tune of the vicar's composing, and the whole concluded with an appropriate prayer and the blessing.

as is probable, the author of the above account made a slip of the pen in writing 150th, by confusing with the text of the sermon, instead of the 148th Psalm, then Darwall's fine old tune was first sung on at Trinity Sunday, 1773, and in connection with organ-opening.

The only entry in the British Museum Catalogue against the name of the Rev. John Darwall is the following pamphlet: 'Political Lamentations and a Political sermon preached in the Parish Church, Walsall, December 13, 1776, being the day appointed by His Majesty for a general fast.' Unfortunately no portrait of the composer of 'Darwall's 148th' is known to exist, or we should have had pleasure in endeavouring to reproduce it for the benefit of our readers.

TWO RECITALS BY SIR WALTER PARRATT.

During his holiday sojourn at Margate, the Master of the King's Musick gave a much appreciated organ recital on August 31 at All Saints' Church, in aid of the Tower Building Fund. As Sir Walter Parratt had taken no music with him, he played the following pieces entirely from memory :

|                                              |              |

On September 16, Sir Walter Parratt re-opened the organ in St. Helen's Parish Church, Lancashire, which has been rebuilt by Messrs. Peter Conacher & Co., of Huddersfield. On that occasion a congregation of over two thousand people listened with evident enjoyment to the following selection of music played with Sir Walter's accustomed masterfulness :

REUNION OF ELY CATHEDRAL CHOIR BOYS.

A strong wish has recently been expressed that a reunion of old choristers of the cathedral should be held in Ely, on a date to be hereafter fixed, in the autumn of 1910. Annual gatherings of this kind have been inaugurated in York, Lincoln and some other cathedrals with great success. The main features of these reunions have been partly social and partly spiritual, including the attendance at Evensong in the cathedral. There is every reason to think that the enthusiasm of old Ely choir boys will enable the proposal to be carried into effect. Meanwhile we are asked to make it known that the Rev. J. H. Crosby, Precentor of Ely Cathedral, will be glad to receive names and addresses of Old Boys, so that this proposal may be communicated to them and opportunity afforded of their being consulted as to the nature of the proceedings and the selection of a suitable date.

The Oratorio Services at Brixton Church, which have proved so successful and attractive during the past nine winters, will be resumed on Sunday afternoon, November 7, at 3.30, when 'St. Paul' will be sung. Mendelssohn's oratorio will be followed, at various intervals, by the following works: Elgar's 'Light of life' (December 5), Gounod's 'Mors et Vita' (February 6), Gounod's 'By Babylon's wave' and Stainer's 'Daughter of Jairus' (Ash Wednesday, at 8 p.m.), 'Messiah' (Good Friday, at 7.30 p.m.), Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' (April 3), and Haydn's 'Creation' (May 1). Orchestral services will be held on Sundays, October 3, January 2, and March 6. As heretofore, Mr. Douglas Redman, organist of the church, will conduct, and a full professional orchestra will support the Brixton Oratorio Choir.

Mr. H. R. Couldrey has just completed thirty-five years' efficient service as organist of Holy Trinity Parish Church, Windsor. At the time of his appointment the Psalms and Responses were read, but the singing of an anthem on Sunday evenings has been continued since the days of Sir Frederick Bridge, a former chief-musician of the church. Heartily congratulations to Mr. Couldrey on the length of his tenure of office, which has included many important services held in the church during that period.

A festival evensong in connection with the Durban Church Choirs Association was held in St. Thomas Church, Durban, on August 24, when the music sung included T. A. Walmisley's Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D minor and S. S. Wesley's 'Blessed be the God and Father.' The Rev. M. O. Hodson, late precentor of Leeds Parish Church, conducted, and Mr. J. F. Proudman (Borough organist) presided at the organ.

As in former years the Rev. R. S. Genge, vicar of Christ Church, Wolverhampton, has compiled, for use next year, a 'Kalendar of Hymns Ancient and Modern' (Henry Frowde). In addition to a selection of hymns throughout the year, this useful booklet gives a table of Lessons, Proper Psalms, &c.

FESTIVAL NOVELTIES.

MR. RUTLAND BOUGHTON'S

'MIDNIGHT' AND 'THE INVINCIBLE ARMADA'

The text of Mr. Rutland Boughton's choral work 'Midnight' (Op. 26)—to be produced at the Birmingham Festival—is chosen from Edward Carpenter's poem 'Towards democracy,' a source from which the composer has previously drawn the material of a set of vocal solos. As in these smaller compositions, so in 'Midnight,' Mr. Boughton has adopted the contemplative manner and sombre hues that eminently accord with the nature of the poem, which in its diction recalls the manner of Walt Whitman. The mental picture of a large town at midnight, with its innumerable cross-currents and contrasts of emotion—as conjured up in the poet's mind by the booming chime of bells—is described in non-metrical lines and stanzas, with a great piling-up of descriptive detail. The following lines are typical:

The spangled stream has gone.

The long procession of carriages through fashionable quarters, the stream of faces past gay shop-windows, and high above them the dreary face of the needlewoman straining the last hour of daylight—

All are gone.

Into the hidden chamber of the dark the stream of life has poured itself,

For the conception of a new day.

The musical setting begins with a dreamy introduction which, to the credit of Mr. Boughton's powers of restraint, is very short. Two of the most important themes are announced at the outset. The one embodies a striking progression:

The other is the familiar Westminster chime, which occurs frequently in the later portions, cleverly interwoven in the harmonic structure.

The chorus enters pp with the words 'High in my chamber I hear the deep bells chime,' which occurs with a similar musical setting at the beginning.

each of the three sections of the work. The mood of reverie is maintained over a considerable period, with constantly varying figures of accompaniment and occasional flashes of climax. A theme to which frequent reference is made throughout the work is here introduced and discussed :

On the words 'But the hour swings onward' another important theme :

is introduced in the bass, and then developed with some persistence by both choir and orchestra. A section, directed to be sung 'pressing on gradually,' leads up to a striking outburst on the words :

High in heaven, over the supine city—over the wilderness of roofs beneath the stars—
The hour swings surely onward.

The great bell sounds the second stroke of midnight :

And now as if awoken by that note of warning, over the vast city clash a thousand brazen chattering tongues,
Ding, ding, clack, clack,

But the great bell goes booming slowly on,

Thoughtful, deep-voiced, alone—till it has finished.

is passage, which to many will recall the multitudinous chimes of a certain University town, is set to scriptive music which rises to a fff climax that could be exciting and impressive, and then dies away. The reflective mood is resumed as deeper thoughts copy the dreamer's mind :

The strokes of the changing hours of Man,
The slow spacious thoughts of the changing generations—
Through the night rising I hear.
The thoughts of them who gather the generations into the great fold.

Some melodic themes with almost the note of anguish are set at the words :

The thoughts of them through whose hearts the weary exiles, the prisoners of time, pass, liberating their souls in prayer till the air is charged with lightning.

A vivid stroke occurs on the last word of this section. Broad writing distinguishes the remainder of the work, which is mainly founded upon material already made familiar.

The music is serious and significant. The choral writing is remarkably vocal, the style being mostly homophonic—a weaving of singable melody. Monothematic music is employed mainly for climaxes. The moderation of its demands upon singers in Boughton's 'Midnight' is in great contrast with that of his earlier music, and will be a strong recommendation of the work to choral conductors.

The chiller's remarkable pean of joy for the overblowing of the 'Invincible Armada'—as rendered by Lord Lytton into rugged and impressive English verse that recalls some Old Testament hymn of thanksgiving—forms an admirable text for musical setting, and moreover one that invites a serious mode of treatment and repels all trivial means of expression. The poem is the more inspiring for being a spontaneous utterance of a dispassionate critic of England's greatness, although it loses much of its appeal to patriotic sentiment by giving the whole credit for averting the disaster to the winds and waves, and none to the English seamen :

One look below the Almighty gave,
Where streamed the lion-flags of thy proud foe :
And near and wider yawned the horrent grave,
'And who' saith He, 'shall lay mine England low,—
The stem that blooms with hero-deeds,
The rock when man from wrong a refuge needs—'

God the Almighty blew,
And the Armada went to every wind !

Mr. Rutland Boughton's setting for chorus and orchestra reproduces the vigour and solemnity of the poem. The coming of the Armada is described in a sombre, portentous passage that depicts the horror rather than the majesty of its progress. A larger and more confident style is evoked by a recital of Britain's former glories :

To tyrant kings thou wert thyself the slave,
Till Freedom dug from Law its deep foundations,
The mighty CHART thy citizens made kings,
And kings to citizens sublimely bowed !

and so on. Many forcible outbursts of enthusiasm and many changes of key occur, and the imposing final climax is built up with a profusion of sonorities and strengthened with many rolling triplets in the bass. The music is entirely epic in character, and well typifies the stern realities of the event celebrated. The vocal part-writing is masterly, and the whole is ennobled by the sincerity and earnestness of the composer's endeavours. The 'Invincible Armada' will be produced at the Newcastle Festival.

OLD NEWCASTLE FESTIVALS.

The feast of music soon to be spread in the great city on the Tyne is a resuscitated music-making, not a new Newcastle festival. In proof thereof the following notes on old Newcastle festivals are submitted as not being without interest. The information thereupon is derived from two volumes of programmes, newspaper-cuttings, and other documentary evidence kindly placed at our disposal by Mr. James B. Clark, one of the honorary secretaries of the festival of 1909.

The earliest recorded festival at Newcastle is that of October, 1778. It lasted four days, was held in the Assembly Rooms, and conducted by a Mr. Hawdon. This feast of 131 years ago included 'Alexander's Feast,' 'Judas Maccabæus,' 'Acis and Galatea,' and the 'Messiah,' also composed by Mr. Handel. Instrumental music was represented by an organ concerto played 'between the acts' by Signor Rush, probably George Rush, who Signorised his name in order to make an impression upon the Novocastrians. Thirteen years later, in August, 1791, a second festival was held on the banks of the Tyne. Although Handel was largely in evidence, the programme of 'a grand miscellaneous concert' included an overture (symphony) by Haydn—the composer was then in England—a concerto for orchestra by Avison, Newcastle's famous musician and one of Browning's 'certain people' with whom the poet parleyed, concertos for the violin and violoncello played respectively by the brothers Ashley; an oboe concerto performed by Signor (sic) Patria; 'a sonata on the harp, by Mr. Meyer,' played 'between the acts'; the whole concluding with a 'full piece,' the composer of which is not stated. The soloists were distinguished artists—Madame Mara, Mrs. Crouch, Michael Kelly, and Harrison. Michael Kelly, in his entertaining 'Reminiscences,' says : 'The Newcastle festival was very productive, and the oratorios in the church in the morning (three), and three concerts, were attended by all the people of Newcastle and its vicinity. We went to see all that was curious, and were received with much hospitality.' The Newcastle Chronicle also stated that 'the conductors of the spirited undertaking had, by the general support they had experienced in the event, been liberally rewarded.' So may it be in 1909.

In 1796, under the patronage of Prince William Duke of Gloucester, and the management of Messrs. Meredith and Thompson, a four-day festival was held during the Assize week. The 'Messiah,' 'Judas Maccabæus,' and the 'Redemption' (a concoction by Dr. Arnold from Handel's miscellaneous works) were performed in St. Nicholas' Church (now the Cathedral), and two secular evening concerts were given in the Assembly Rooms. Cramer, from London, led the band and a 'complete set of chorus-singers from Lancashire' lent their choral aid. Unfortunately the festival was a financial failure, as 'the conductors lost 120 guineas, besides all the trouble and fatigue.' The first of the trio of festivals held during the last century took place in September, 1814, and lasted four days. It began with 'a grand miscellaneous concert' in the Theatre, to which succeeded performances of sacred music in St. Nicholas' Church and the usual evening concerts. The programmes, of the hotch-potch type then in vogue, do not call for remark. Chief among the principal singers were Catalani and Braham. A lady solo violinist appeared in the person of Madame Gerbini, of whom a Newcastle critic wrote, 'it is unseemly, as well as uncommon, to behold a female playing the violin, and prejudice will operate, along with her other defects, to prevent her retaining the good opinion of the public.' The band, led by 'General' Ashley, included Mr. Jenkinson, who 'beat the double drums in his usual correct manner, in addition to which he every evening played the devil among the candles.' On that occasion the receipts exceeded £2,300, of which a clear fifth was given to the Infirmary.

'It is now certain that a balloon will not ascend from this town during the Festival.' Thus records the Tyne Mercury of September 28, 1824, a proof that aviation was in the air at Newcastle eighty-five years ago. 'The Northumberland, Durham & Newcastle-upon-Tyne Grand Musical Festival, for the benefit of several of the Charitable Institutions established for the Indigent Sick in the above Counties'—to give its full designation—was held October 5, 6, 7 and 8, 1824. It was 'run' financially by Madame Catalani, 'who engaged to take and pay all, allowing the charitable institutions of the counties one-fifth of the receipts.' In this she was ably assisted by her very sharp, businesslike husband, the Chevalier de Valebregue. In expressing himself highly pleased with the attention he (the Chevalier) had received from Captain Innes, one of the committee, when in Newcastle to make arrangements previous to Catalani's arrival, he said to the Captain: 'Ah! sare, you have been so good to me, dat ven I come again, I vill offer you my wife,' which was his quaint way of proffering the professional services of Madame Catalani for a future occasion. When the committee expressed to the Chevalier their doubts as to the ability of Madame Catalani to pronounce the words of 'Home, sweet home' properly, the great singer's husband replied: 'En verité, my wife do sing all de vords of dat song, all as von girl of de town,' meaning, of course, Newcastle. In order to accommodate 'the distinguished patrons who are expected to honour the performances with their presence,' a platform was erected at the east end of St. Nicholas' Church, 'facing the organ gallery'; the pulpit was removed, 'leaving the view of the orchestra clear the whole length of the place, and increasing the accommodation.' Sir George Smart, who conducted, received from the Chevalier a fee of £157 10s. Miss Stephens ('Kitty' Stephens) and John Braham were paid £189 each, and Mr. Henshaw, organist of Durham Cathedral, received £12 for assisting Mr. Thompson, organist of the church and of the festival; but the latter gentleman gave his fee of £10 to the charities.

With regard to the music performed at the festival of 1824, a marked improvement is shown in the programmes of the three evening concerts. Symphonies by Haydn, Mozart (Jupiter), Beethoven (key not stated) were played, as were the following overtures: 'Die Zauberflöte,' 'Der Freischütz,' and 'Anacreon.' The lighter fare of the programmes included 'Charlie is my darling'—which 'gave great offence to several,' being substituted by the Chevalier for another song without consulting the committee—'Scots wha hae' (sung by Braham) and a 'Fantasia for the Mandolin' composed and performed by Signor Vimercati, which was 'really most curious and astonishing.' The only complete oratorio given in the church was the 'Messiah'; selections were made from 'Israel in Egypt,' 'Judas Maccabæus,' 'Creation,' 'Seasons,' 'Requiem Mass' (Mozart), &c. A 'Grand chorus and fugue' by Mozart was 'arranged for a full orchestra, by Sir George Smart,' to the words 'O heavenly Lord! Almighty amidst the mightiest.' Although Madame Catalani, on this occasion, condescended to allow Mr. Braham to sing the opening solos in the 'Messiah,' she retained 'He was despised,' transposed into the key of G! Furthermore, 'to accommodate Madame Catalani,' 'The Lord shall reign' ('Israel in Egypt' was transposed into B flat.

The last festival held in Newcastle was in September, 1842. As on previous occasions it occupied four days, and Sir George Smart again conducted. The sacred performances, given in the church, were largely of the inevitable (in those days) 'selection' nature—'Israel in Egypt,' 'Mount of Olives,' 'Creation,' &c. The 'Messiah' was performed entire, as was Rossini's 'Stabat Mater,' then comparatively new to England. 'The Stabat went very well with its new English words, which have been well selected and adapted principally from the church liturgy': thus records the Musical World in a long notice of the festival. The programmes of three evening concerts had much to commend them. The symphonies performed were Haydn in E flat, Mozart in E flat, and Beethoven in C minor. Five overtures were played—Die Zauberflöte, Fidelio, Euryanthe, Der Berggeist, and Mosses' summer Night's Dream, and in addition to a violin and a violoncello concerto, two septets found place in the scheme, by Neukomm and Beethoven. A 'grand fancy dress ball' set its seal upon the festival of 1842.

Sir George Smart, as punctilious as he was punctuated in his annotated copies of the word-books, gives some amusing sidelights on this festival. He records that 'Merry-faced Lindley [the violoncellist] took his accustomed pinch of snuff amid the cheers of his audience.' Concerning the Duke of Cambridge, who attended the 'Messiah' performance, Sir George Smart says: 'H.R.H. remained for the whole performance. He went out of the Church at the end of the second part to — for Refreshments and returned in 20 m.' The whereabouts of that royal refreshment room 'round the corner' is not recorded.

The foregoing notes, while making no pretence at completeness, may be of some interest as furnishing material for a comparison between the programmes of former musical festivals at Newcastle and those to be held towards the end of the present month, to which we wish all success, both musical and financial.

composer is more assiduous than Mr. Granville Bantock in exploring the fields of musical expression opened up by modern choral technique. In his search for new material to be obtained from unaccompanied human voices he has achieved some remarkable results, which are exemplified in a group of part-songs enumerated above. The words of 'Spirit of night' are Shelley's lines commencing 'Swiftly ver the western wave, Spirit of night.' The opening of 'My delight and delight' presents a series of harmonies, starting in A minor and culminating in a modulation to the chord of F sharp major, upon which the voices are divided into ten separate parts. The piece is coloured by rich harmonic progressions and stately by full chords, while the many antiphonal passages between the male-voice and female-voice sections are well treated. In 'Out of the darkness,' a setting of a poem by John Keats, the note of repining is sounded in the opening line, 'How sorrowful, o'er yonder shuddering meres, untains bow their heads,' and in the similar description of the low, the poignant phrases glide gently from voice to voice in a stream of subtle harmonies. The words 'So the dark brows of Fate o'erhang our troubled darkness' give a new mood, itself to be interrupted by a sudden change to C major and a change to a broad style at rust, above all doubt, all anguish, yea, the supreme . . . ; then comes a sudden hush, and '—the death itself' is sung pp on an awe-inspiring chord in the whole-tone scale. The broad style is then dropped, and remains to the end.

'In the silent West' is also a setting of a poem by Alfred Tennyson and reproduces in its emotional and harmonic character many of the characteristics of the part-songs enumerated above. 'The Leprehaun' is very different. The words by Dr. P. W. Joyce, relate how a little fairy 'with cap and coat of green' was caught unawares and died by a mortal, and how he escaped by a subterfuge. The music is founded on a sprightly Irish tune and abounds with cal squibs of the kind that Mr. Bantock—our leading choral-humorist—knows well how to fire off with the accompaniment of smoke. 'The Leprehaun' is not a whit less than any of the solemn and serious works here included with it. In these four examples of Mr. Bantock's originality and imaginative power, the more advanced societies throughout the country will find abundant material for their technique and powers of expression.

Edward Elgar's 'Angelus'—the sub-title of which, 'Ave,' indicates that it was conceived during one of the composer's Italian journeys—is probably the simplest and most charming piece of music that has come from his pen in recent years. Yet it is thoroughly charming and interesting. The words are a short prayer to the Virgin Mary adapted from the dialect, and the music happily follows the unsophisticated religious faith of a rural country. Simple as it is, it is not without points of beauty; in the first half of each of the two verses the soprano and basses sing the melody in octaves, the tenors and divided altos fill in the middle spaces with soft chords on the words 'Ave, Mary,' which is not a single accidental in the whole piece! Herbert Wever wrote:

In a harbour grene aslepe whereas I lay
 The birds sang swete in the middes of the day,
 I dreamed fast of mirth and play . . .

Hubert Parry has reflected in music the quaint diction of an old poet. Directed to be sung 'trippingly,' this part-song reminds one of some country minuet. In 'Sweet day, so cool' and in 'My delight and thy delight' the composer has exercised great restraint in his demands upon choralists, but at the same time he has invested the songs with the distinction of his own style. Perfectly simple in design, these three part-songs should gain wide acceptance.

Dr. Hathaway's 'Rest' is written for twelve parts, and seems to call for a large body of singers to do justice to the many broad effects it contains. Massive progressions divide the interest with passages of finer workmanship, in which the composer utilises the resources at his command for the purpose of exhibiting some light part-writing. It is not, however, an extended work, occupying only fifty-four bars of slow triple time, and it presents no formidable difficulty as regards execution.

Dr. Arne's setting of 'Come away, death' makes a suitable subject for four-part arrangement for mixed voices, and Mr. Geoffrey Shaw has made skilful use of his opportunities in extracting flowing voice-parts from the original accompaniment. Easy and effective is the best description that can be applied to this arrangement of the fine old song.

In 'Chloe, that dear bewitching prude' and 'Had I a cave'—the words of which are by Robert Lloyd and Robert Burns respectively—Mr. Healey Willan shows a knowledge of the means by which artistic effect can be secured. The rhythm has an attractive lilt, and the design of the part-writing is pleasantly varied. 'Chloe' is almost entirely diatonic; but 'Had I a cave' contains some chromatic devices that are out of the common without being bizarre, and testify to original thought.

Part-songs for two sopranos, in canon form. Words by Mrs. Sale Barker (from Kate Greenaway's Birthday Book for Children). Vier Duette für Sopran und Bariton. Vier Lieder für Bariton oder Mezzo-Sopran. Composed by Alexander Friedrich von Hessen.

[Martin Cohen, Nürnberg.]

Each of the thirty-five little canons for two sopranos, written by Herr von Hessen, has a date for its title and a short stanza on a seasonable subject for words. For instance, the libretto of 'March 25th' is

Ah! sweet primrose, you are come
 To tell us of the Spring;
 The hedgerows bloom, the woods are green,
 And now the birdies sing.

As all the poems are written in a strain similar to the verse quoted, the literary matter naturally appeals to the juvenile intellect. No attempt has been made, however, to bring the music within the compass of a child's ability. The vocal writing is by no means simple, while the accompaniment usually contains independent material, in some cases elaborate and difficult. Considerable invention is displayed in the pianoforte parts, and some ingenuity—if not always a knowledge of effect—in the construction of the canons.

A vein of melancholy runs through Herr von Hessen's four duets for soprano and baritone and his four songs for middle voice. To a certain extent this is called for by the character of the poems that are set. The sombreness is accentuated by habitual recourse to the lower notes of the pianoforte in the accompaniment. Ripe and sound musicianship rather than marked expressive qualities distinguish these examples, which everywhere give evidence of the composer's earnestness of purpose. The songs are written to German words; the four duets to poems in German, English, French, and Italian.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

Humoresque. Impressions du Soir. By Theodore Holland.
 [A. Rouart et Cie., Paris.]

In addition to being graceful and artistic, these two pieces have the merit of being well within the bounds of average executive ability. Although an unconventional turn of phrase asserts itself here and there, they contain no affectation of modernism. The 'Humoresque' has some characteristics of the Minuet, among which may be included a sprightly melody. 'Impressions du Soir,' freer in form, is an unassuming and delicate little tone-picture.

[The Vincent Music Company, Ltd.]

The author needlessly apologises in his preface for the issue of this little book. It is one that can be warmly welcomed by reason of its subject-matter and for the industry displayed in its compilation. Its nearly 250 pages are packed with information as varied as it is interesting and valuable. Dr. Pearce concisely treats of the history, architecture and music of the old City churches, past and present, and in so doing brings to light facts hitherto unknown except to experts. The mere gathering together of details here set forth must have occupied much time, necessitating considerable research, and the author is to be congratulated upon the result of his labours in a field so rich in interest to church musicians.

The peeps into the past which these 'Notes'—modestly so called—afford are often curious and surprising. For instance, two hundred years ago a sermon was daily preached at St. Antholin's, Budge Row, at six o'clock in the morning! Among the churches destroyed in the Great Fire was St. Benet Sherehog. When the Rev. Richard Wood, vicar of Christ Church, Lancaster Gate, was appointed by the Bishop of London rector of St. Alphege, London Wall, the present Bishop of Ripon (Dr. Boyd Carpenter), then vicar of St. James's, Holloway, succeeded Mr. Wood. This parochial translation evoked the following quatrain:

A gap! the Bishop cried, in London Wall!
Quick! for some Wood from Paddington I'll call;
And then, to mend the Gate of Lancaster,
From Holloway I'll bring a Carpenter.

At St. Vedast, Foster Lane, an organ, erected in 1774, was paid for by a terminable annuity. A Mr. Duncombe proposed that he should, at his own cost, erect an organ, of the full value of £240, and either play himself or find an able performer in his place; in consideration of which the churchwardens granted him a clear yearly annuity of £37 16s. for his life and the life of his wife if she should be his survivor—he to pay all expenses of keeping the organ in repair and find a person to blow the bellows, as long as either of them shall live.' This annuity continued for nearly thirty-two years! Many extracts could be given as showing the readableness of Dr. Pearce's pages. Mention must be made of the useful lists of past organists of these old City churches, which include many well-known and honoured names.

In view of a future edition of this informing volume, we venture to suggest the following corrections and additions for the author's consideration. The statement (on p. 70) that the organ in St. Peter's, Cornhill (1840), was 'the first CC organ erected in England' is not correct, as the organ specially erected in Westminster Abbey for the coronation of Queen Victoria was of CC compass. Under St. Giles, Cripplegate, Dr. Pearce makes no mention of Thomas Morley. As was first pointed out in the illustrated article on that church in the Musical Times of September, 1903, there is good reason for assuming that Thomas Morley was organist of St. Giles, Cripplegate. In the bibliography contained in the preface to the book, the date, 1883, for Mackeson's 'Guide to the churches of London' is a little misleading, as that useful but now defunct periodical publication was first issued in 1866.

While nothing but praise is the just due of Dr. Pearce in regard to the subject-matter of his book, we cannot help protesting against his typographical eccentricities. The varieties of type used throughout these pages are very irritating. It is impossible to read a few sentences without meeting with some word, or words, printed in heavy black type, which has the effect of a blow in the eye, as, for instance, 'sugar-refining'—a typographical absurdity which is meaningless and uncalled for.

SONGS.

Lament. Chant funèbre. Words by Shelley. By Theodore Holland.

[A. Rouart et Cie., Paris.]

In Mr. Theodore Holland's 'Lament,' Shelley's well-known lines beginning 'O world! O life! O time!' are treated in a manner that adds to their deep significance.

The expressive quality of the song is largely secured by the constant recurrence of an appealing figure in the accompaniment as the music glides from key to key. The 'Chant funèbre' represents a serious attempt to do justice to Shelley's 'Dirge' beginning 'Rough wind that moans loud,' and contains some telling harmonies. In both songs, which are written for a low voice, French and German translations by D. Calvoceressi are supplied.

THE DIFFICULTIES OF MODERN CHORAL MUSIC.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

DEAR SIR,—I venture to address you on a subject which, though not new, becomes more and more pressing. The complaint which is so constantly put forward by modern composers that choral societies of moderate size will not take up their new works is susceptible of an explanation which, perhaps, they do not appreciate. The tonic sol-fa method of teaching vocal music is now well established. Year by year we are turning out from our primary schools thousands of young people who possess some knowledge of sight-reading from the sol-fa notation, coupled with an elementary knowledge of staff notation, but on sol-fa principles. When their voices have become settled a great number of these children will be, or should be, available for membership of choral societies. Comparatively few, however, do join, and of these only a small proportion retain their membership. Moreover, the conductor knows that there is no surer way of decreasing his forces than by devoting a good deal of attention to modern works. Why is this? As the result of many enquiries I am constantly receiving this answer: 'I can't read the music at all—it is not like the music we used to have at school.'

Now many of these difficulties are perfectly gratuitous. They are due to fictitious key- and time-signatures, chiefly the former. To a vocalist who is also an instrumentalist of experience, such difficulties do not become insurmountable; but then many of the young people to whom I refer are not expert instrumentalists. The notational result of using fictitious key-signatures is a bewildering forest of accidentals which to one trained on the sol-fa system portends a lapse from the diatonic nature of the music, whereas the passage may be quite diatonic in reality. The only safe way of conquering such difficulties is to learn the passages by heart with the help of the pianoforte, a laborious process which is likely to be shirked. It is no answer in this indictment to say that tonic sol-fa editions are generally procurable: the singer who is moderately well acquainted with both notations generally prefers the staff, and moreover the simplification suggested would make the reading of the music easier for those who do not know the sol-fa notation.

ould, if necessary, give hundreds of examples from or even standard classical works of this want of con- to the choralist. Composers seem to imagine that ody is possessed of the sense of absolute pitch, or y rate reads 'instrumentally.' The great majority young folk now being educated in our elementary and lary schools, and whom we should like ultimately to in our choral societies, will be unavailable if composers persist in presenting their music in the exasperating r now in vogue.

rily believe that were it possible to issue a new edition staff notation vocal parts re-translated from the sol-fa of some modern works 'on the shelf,' these works be readily taken up, because their comparatively character would then become obvious instead of disguised. Space does not permit me to indicate directions in which composers needlessly hamper the ry choralist, but they are numerous enough.

Yours truly,

ROBERT T. WHITE.

SINGING IN THE SERVICES.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

—The question of the improvement of the quality and f canteen concerts in the Army has recently been by General Officers Commanding-in-Chief—notably rd Methuen and Sir Horace Smith-Dorrien—and attempts have been made in both Navy and Army alarise some of the fine old soldier- and sailor-songs h our musical literature is so rich. These attempts, n song-books issued under official authority, or at all with official approval, have failed hitherto to exercise ious influence in the direction desired.

ably the most hopeful method of raising the standard c in the Services would be by the formation of singing e clubs. The advantages of these over the ordinary ized concert are :

hey tend to grow up spontaneously, and with a little encouragement might be made more or less permanent. hey interest the musical man, who soon tires of unison singing.

hey exercise a useful social influence by bringing together in the practices those interested in music.

hey form a nucleus of musical men in a regiment or ship who can thus assist in putting ordinary canteen concerts and sing-songs on a better footing.

hey possess a principle of vitality which makes them independent of outside support.

these ideas in their minds, a few naval and military recently decided to form a Musical Union in the two ; the object being the encouragement of these clubs : raising of the status of singing throughout the generally. Every garrison, fleet and port in the will be invited to constitute a branch for the formation g and glee clubs within its borders and their affiliation n another.

Naval and Military Musical Union has now been nized, with Surgeon-General G. J. Evatt, C.B., as lent. One branch is already complete, at Chatham, n inaugural concert will be given in the Town Hall ber 20.

entral council has made certain recommendations as ines on which concerts given under the auspices of on should be held. These are, briefly, that at each there should be at least two chorus-songs from the k 'Scarlet and blue,' the audience being invited to be chorus, and one part-song from a book of part- ortly to be published for the Union by Messrs.

The two books named have been adopted by the or use among its members.—Your obedient servant,

C. HOPE WILLIS,

Lieut.-Colonel (late Royal Marines),

Obituary.

The following deaths are recorded with regret :

On August 30, at Hayward's Heath, under tragic circumstances, Dr. CHARLES WARWICK JORDAN, aged sixty-eight. A native of Bristol, he began his musical career as a chorister, first at Bristol Cathedral and afterwards at St. Paul's Cathedral. He held organist appointments at St. Paul's, Bunhill Row (1857), and St. Luke's, Holloway (1860). From 1866 to the time of his death he held the office of organist and choirmaster of St. Stephen's Church, Lewisham. He graduated Bachelor of Music at Oxford in 1869, and in 1886 the Lambeth degree of Doctor of Music was conferred upon him. An enthusiastic champion of plain-song, Dr. Jordan was honorary organist of the London Gregorian Association, in which capacity he took a prominent and active part in the annual festivals held in St. Paul's Cathedral. He was a professor of the organ and of harmony at the Guildhall School of Music. Dr. Jordan composed festival settings of the Te Deum (1895) and Jubilate (1897), for voices and orchestra, a cantata 'Blow ye the trumpet,' an overture 'Pray and praise,' for organ, trumpet and three trombones (1882), and some church music other than that already referred to. Dr. Jordan was an honorary fellow and an examiner of the Royal College of Organists, of which he was also treasurer. At an inquest held upon his death the jury returned a verdict of 'suicide during temporary insanity, brought on by illness.' The remains of the deceased musician were cremated at Golders Green amid many manifestations of regret.

At Paris, on September 7, JEAN LASSALLE, the famous baritone singer and one of the finest artists heard in England during the last quarter of the 19th century. Born at Lyons in 1847, he made his operatic début at Liège. For twenty-three years he sang at the Paris Opéra, where he became the principal baritone on the retirement of Faure. On June 14, 1879, M. Lassalle made his first appearance in England at Covent Garden Theatre, where his artistic singing always met with warm appreciation. Since 1901 he devoted himself to teaching, and in 1903 was appointed a professor at the Conservatoire.

On September 10, Mr. GEORGE HERBERT ROBINSON, aged sixty-nine. A pupil of Klindworth, he was from 1872 to 1901 organist and choirmaster of Charterhouse School, first in London and afterwards at Godalming. Mr. Robinson, who took the degree of Bachelor of Music at Cambridge University in 1885, was formerly a director of the Philharmonic Society.

On September 8, Mrs ALFRED MELLON (née Sarah Jane Woolgar, a celebrated actress), widow of Alfred Mellon, an excellent conductor. Mrs. Mellon, who died at the age of eighty-five, had survived her husband thirty-two years.

HEREFORD MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Hereford, one of the fine examples of cathedrals of the Old Foundation, was the site of this year's meeting of the Three Choirs, which took place on September 5, 7, 8, 9 and 10. It is not necessary at this date to go into the history of this undertaking or to trace in any detail the gradual development of the present-day festival of importance from the simple music-making of the members of the musical clubs of Gloucester, Worcester and Hereford, with no other object than their mutual pleasure. A festival that can announce that it is being held for the one hundred and eighty-sixth time needs no introduction. In addition to its antiquity, it has a distinct character of its own, for it may be said with perfect truth that The Three Choirs is the only one among the festivals of more than local interest that is carried out in a cathedral. Nowadays there are many festivals—this year alone there are five of importance in different parts of the country—and for this reason it is all the more essential that the meeting of the Three Choirs should retain its special character as a church festival. One is prompted to make this plea for the retention of individuality by the fact that the record of attendances and of subsequent donations by which the widows and orphans of the distressed clergy of the dioceses benefit shows a diminution. The festival of the Three Choirs is not an occasion for the exploiting of new works to the disregard of the sale of tickets. It is eminently desirable that new works should be heard at these meetings, but their length should be of such an extent as would enable them to take their place with more familiar compositions in the same day's programme. With the increase of what may be termed secular festivals, although many of them are held in the sacred cause of charity, it becomes a somewhat urgent question also as to whether or not the miscellaneous concerts—at Hereford, as at Gloucester, increased to two in number—are altogether in accordance with the real character of the scheme. The attendance in each case, it is true, has been excellent, but the Shire Hall in Hereford has accommodation for but one-fourth of the number the Cathedral will hold. By force of circumstances the orchestral miscellaneous concert is inartistic, for the simple reason that the orchestra is much too large for the building, which is not suitable for anything but chamber music. Public opinion has long since secured the abolition of the ball which, like the Gloucester race meetings, used to be held in connection with the festival. The miscellaneous concert is, however, more firmly established, but a thought rises at the present moment whether it is not in reality as much outside the real scheme as the ball and the races. As for the appropriateness of the music heard in the cathedral there can be no question. It was admirably chosen and admirably performed.

Considered in its general effect the meeting at Hereford this year was, in point of musical value, a great advance on any of its predecessors. When, now some years past, comparatively young men were appointed to the positions of organists of the three cathedrals the meetings of the Three Choirs took a fresh lease of life, and, directed by earnestness and energy, the festivals have been gradually working up to a high pitch of excellence. The efforts of three organists may be said to have reached a definite stage on this occasion, for no better choral singing has ever been heard before at this festival. It reflects the condition of the day which finds choral singing in England in a higher state of efficiency than it has been for centuries. The possibility of securing notable results with the choir has been grasped, and to Dr. Sinclair belongs the credit of being the first conductor to have charge of the best choir heard at these meetings. The credit is no doubt due to him alone, for the chief work of preparation has fallen upon his shoulders; but there is no reason to suppose that he has not received the fullest support in the task from his equally earnest and energetic colleagues, Dr. Brewer of Gloucester and Mr. Ivor Atkins of Worcester. Their efforts, jointly and singly, have won for the meeting of the Three Choirs the reputation of great efficiency, and from this efficiency will spring the means of turning the meeting on its own merits into a valuable asset in the noble work of aiding the poor and the distressed.

The festival began in accordance with custom, which to many seems new but is in reality old, with the special opening Service on the Sunday afternoon. As usual it attracted a very large congregation. The actual figures were 3,479, as against 3,023 in 1906 and 3,094 in 1903. The special psalms were sung to chants by Dr. Sinclair, the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis to Lee Williams in C, and the anthem was Brahms's 'How lovely is Thy dwelling-place.' During the offertory the tone-poem 'Finlandia,' by Sibelius, was played by the orchestra, and Sir Edward Elgar's fine festival setting of the Te Deum [in F] was sung. The sermon was preached by the Bishop of Peterborough, who pointed out the stimulating effect the festival should have on English sacred music heard in behalf of a cause for which £70,000 had been collected in a century and a-half. Mr. Percy C. Hull, Dr. Sinclair's able assistant, efficiently presided at the organ and played as an outgoing voluntary Bach's Prelude and Fugue in C minor.

Monday was given up to the work of preparation, and on Tuesday the celebrations commenced with Mendelssohn's

'Elijah.' The congregation that came together to listen to the familiar but always welcome work was larger than usual. They heard a notable performance. There was a distinct dramatic vein penetrating throughout the whole of Dr. Sinclair's reading of the oratorio, and he was fully supported by the principal singers in his intention of making clear the temperamental qualities of this inspired illustration to the story of the overthrow of paganism always obvious to those acquainted with every detail of Mendelssohn's score. The choir of 257 voices proved itself to be one of the most perfectly-balanced bodies of singers got together for the festivals. The tone of the basses fell on the ear as particularly rich and full, and the sopranos, though not of great range, were of good quality and the tenors were of legitimate character. The sopranos were supplemented by boys' voices: an excellent plan, as it gave point to the tone, although the reason for the importation of boys from outside the cathedral was not clear. From this vocal force Dr. Sinclair secured great responsiveness, with the result that he was able to give full effect to a decidedly temperamental view of the masterpiece. The gradations of light and shade in 'Blessed are the men' and 'He watching over Israel' were excellent, and the Baal choruses were sufficiently appealing. The soloists were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Madame Clara Butt, Mr. Gervase Elwes and Mr. Herbert Brown. Madame Siviter, Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. C. Banks and Mr. A. Proctor assisted in the double quartet. The part of the Youth was sung by Master W. J. G. B. Tidmarsh.

Tuesday evening was devoted to a performance of Sir Edward Elgar's 'The Apostles.' The choir, although on less familiar ground than in the morning, acquitted itself well. There was in fact much to commend in the attack of the work which, with the aid of Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. John Coates, Mr. William Higley, Mr. Dalton Baker and Mr. Frederic Austin as the soloists, produced the powerful impression it will always create.

On Wednesday morning the first novelty of the festival was heard in Dr. Walford Davies's 'Noble Numbers.' This work, specially written for this festival, has already been fully described in the Musical Times. Its performance produced no diminution of the interest created by the perusal of the score. It is one of the most striking works from the pen of a British composer that has been heard for some time. The plan of cycle-form adopted with much originality by the composer proves in actual working particularly effective. It provides contrast, and has inspired Dr. Davies to write some of his best music. There is great variety of treatment in the eighteen numbers, and that contrast is a testimony to the versatility of the composer. There is no repetition; each number is to all intents and purposes complete in itself, and each stands out as distinctive and individual. It would be both possible and a pleasure to deal at length with each separate portion of this remarkable work, did space permit; it must suffice, however, to call attention to the tender beauty of the contralto solo 'To the Saviour,' and quaint simplicity of the 'Grace for a child'; the breadth and dignity of the bass solo 'A royal Guest,' and the freedom and vigour of the tenor number 'The revolt.' The writing for the solo quartet is immensely effective, and Dr. Davies's plan of employing it in conjunction with the chorus is new and invariably effective. The orchestral writing shows great skill in the use of material, and the instrumental interlude descriptive of 'The Mastery' contains much in a small space. The new work was splendidly directed and with the help of Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Gervase Elwes and Mr. Dalton Baker for the solo parts and of a band and chorus that worked with the utmost loyalty under the conductorship of the composer, it was a degree of appreciation which is likely to be repeated on the many subsequent occasions on which without doubt it will be performed. The revived Schubert overture-fragment 'Lazarus' was heard in the afternoon for the first time in England, and proved a useful addition to the list of short sacred works available for performance. Miss Gleeson-White, Madame Siviter, Mr. John Coates and Mr. Herbert Brown were the soloists, and the two last named took part in the excerpt from Wagner's 'Parsifal,' which concluded the programme.

In the evening the first miscellaneous concert was held in the Shire Hall. The following was the programme.

The new Suite by Mr. Granville Bantock proved to be a most delightful work. In arranging the 16th-century airs upon which the work is based, Mr. Bantock has fully identified himself with the spirit of the age to which they belong. He has lengthened lines and deepened shadows, but all in the colours of the original, with the result that his adornment of musical gems of the past completely won the approval of the audience.

The success of the suite, which had the advantage of a personal introduction, gives rise to a suggestion that its example might be followed. Other suites as distinct from rhapsodies formed of old English airs, and particularly of folk-songs, which have yet to be treated in this fashion, might be devised by British composers in search of new fields.

The second novelty, Mr. Delius's 'Dance rhapsody,' is as much in the style of the present day as Mr. Bantock's suite is in that of three hundred years ago. Its grace and charm expressed in modern idiom is great. Much effect is secured from the fresh colour derived from the use of the heckelphone, a bass oboe, and the harmonic theme is new and striking. Features of the concert were Mr. John Coates's singing of the Two Pastorals by Dr. Brewer, which the audience would have liked repeated, and the scene from Wagner's 'Die Walküre,' given by Miss Agnes Nicholls and Mr. John Coates.

The Mass in D of Beethoven, a work not frequently heard, formed the programme in the cathedral on Thursday morning. The trying choral writing strained the powers of the choir somewhat, and though the singers are to be commended for their courage, the result was not always successful in securing the effect Beethoven desired of causing the work to awaken religious feelings in the singers as well in the hearers. Dr. Sinclair's interpretation of the tempi is too liberal, and dragged. The solo quartet, consisting of Miss Perceval Allen, Madame Ada Crossley, Mr. Gervase Wes, and Mr. Robert Radford, was not well chosen and the performance was one of the weak spots in the festival. The artistic atmosphere was restored in the second part by a magnificent interpretation of Sir Edward Elgar's symphony under the baton of the composer. It was one of the best performances that has been given, and the work, heard in a cathedral for the first time, exercised a new appeal. The setting of Bach, 'Be not afraid,' for double choir, was well backed, but it served to reveal the deficiency of the choir in an important quality of incisiveness.

The first part of the evening programme consisted of Hubert Parry's oratorio 'Job,' first heard at this evening seventeen years ago. The work is well entitled to consideration in the present day. Its choral writing is among the best Sir Hubert Parry has done, and there is much originality as well as modernity in the long monologue of Job, delivered with some but not all as set by Mr. Frederic Austin. Mr. Walter Hyde made a good impression in the music of Satan, and Master Marsh gave the music of the Shepherd, though in neither was the articulation of the words clear. The choir sang magnificently under Sir Hubert Parry's direction. Sir Edward Elgar's new chorus 'Go, song of mine,' which followed, proved with Dr. Davies's new work to be the most prominent feature of the festival. The chorus is brief, but it has an unfathomable expressiveness and an unapproachable beauty, and moved the audience deeply. Sir Edward conducted, and the singing of the choir was perfect. The work created an impression it is difficult to forget. Part I. of Haydn's 'Creation,' with Madame Le Mar, Mr. Walter Hyde and Mr. Herbert Brown, followed.

Handel's 'Messiah,' on Friday morning, was the last of the performances in the cathedral. Both conductor and chorus gave signs of fatigue; the performance lacked animation, and was at times conventional to a degree in spite of the admirable singing of Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Ada Crossley and Mr. William Higley.

A chamber concert in the Shire Hall brought the festival to an end. It was provided by the Grimson Quartet, Madame Le Mar, whose singing of some Debussy songs created the utmost enthusiasm, Miss Phyllis Archibald and Madame Siviter.

Mr. Ivor Atkins (Worcester) and Dr. A. Herbert Brewer (Gloucester) presided in turn at the temporary organ erected in the cathedral for the occasion, and Dr. G. R. Sinclair was the conductor-in-chief.

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The interest in the novelties performed at Queen's Hall has been well sustained. Perhaps the most important events of the whole season were the first performances in England of Max Reger's 'Variations and fugue on a merry theme,' on August 26, and of his 'Symphonic prologue to a tragedy,' on September 14. In both works the characteristic technical cleverness of Reger's music was the outstanding feature, although there was lyrical charm in some of the 'Variations' and convincing, if gloomy, emotion in the 'Prologue.' The 'Fugue' on a merry theme would have been hard to recognise as such by a listener who arrived too late to hear the 'voices' make their entries.

Cleverness of another sort was shown in the compositions of Moussorgsky that received their first hearing in England. His setting of Goethe's 'Song of the flea'—excellently sung in English by Mr. Herbert Brown, on August 25—was a piece of taking humour. 'The peep-show' ('Le Guignol'), sung by Mr. Thorpe Bates on August 31, was a similarly biting and good-humoured satire on some of the composer's contemporaries. The scena 'King Saul,' performed on September 15, completed the list of Moussorgsky's works to be heard during the present season.

A Fantasia in C for pianoforte and orchestra by Rubinstein (Op. 84) that was performed for the first time in London on August 25, did not prove interesting. A 'Concert piece,' No. 1, in A minor, written by Mr. Tobias Matthay for the same combination, was more serious and far more attractive. The distinguished pianoforte-teacher found a natural outlet for his ideas as a composer in exuberant bravura passages of great technical difficulty, but the ornamental structure was imposed upon a solid foundation of form in which Mr. Matthay's musicianship was displayed. His work had the advantage of being performed with one of the composer's most capable pupils, Mr. York Bowen, as soloist. On the same night, August 28, a Fantasia on Scotch melodies, arranged and orchestrated by Mr. Henry J. Wood, was played.

An 'Adagietto' for strings and harp, by Gustav Mahler, performed on August 31, was not striking, and a Concerto No. 2, in G, for violin and orchestra, by Haydn, which received its first hearing in England on September 1, roused but a mild interest. Whether Paderewski's Pianoforte concerto in A minor had or had not been played in London before September 2, it certainly proved a work of great beauty, in which the lyrical and virtuosic elements were happily blended. The soloist on this occasion was Miss Elsie Horne. Liapounoff's Rhapsody for pianoforte and orchestra, introduced to England on September 7, proved to be a piece of brilliant writing founded upon folk-song. On September 8 a quasi-novelty—of which the audience were justified in demanding a repetition—was Dr. Walford Davies's 'Solemn melody' for organ and strings.

Carl Reinecke's Concerto for flute, played by Mr. Fransella on September 9, was excellent as flute concertos go. A Violoncello concerto by Victor Herbert, given on September 11, was excellent without any qualification of the term. It displayed a wealth and fluency of melodic invention very refreshing in these days. A picturesque symphonic piece 'From valleys and heights,' by Paul Graener, was given on September 15, and a bright 'Overture to a comedy of Shakespeare,' by Paul Scheinplug, on September 16. On the latter evening four new settings, with orchestra, by Mr. Eric Coates, of 'Orpheus with his lute,' 'Under the greenwood tree,' 'Who is Sylvia' and 'It was a lover and his lass,' were sung by Mrs. Henry J. Wood. They served to increase the well-deserved reputation of a clever young English composer whose ambition does not exceed his powers.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

In forecasting the season's events, the place of honour must be assigned to the Birmingham Festival Choral Society (conductor, Dr. Sinclair), who intend to give four subscription concerts in addition to the Christmas performance of the 'Messiah.' The works to be given include the 'Creation,' 'Samson and Delilah,' and the 'Hiawatha' cycle.

The Midland Musical Society, conducted by Mr. A. J. Cotton, announce Cowen's 'Sleeping beauty,' 'Messiah,' 'Hiawatha' cycle, Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater,' and Beethoven's Mass in C.

The scheme of the Sutton Coldfield Choral Society (conductor, Mr. Joseph H. Adams) includes a concert-performance of German's 'Merrie England.'

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The approach of the musical season was again heralded by Mr. Herbert Walton's autumn series of organ recitals at the cathedral. In addition to the cathedral organist, the performers were Dr. Basil Harwood and Mr. C. H. Moody. As the following forecast shows, the coming season promises to be one of much interest. The Choral and Chrestal Union's scheme includes twenty-nine concerts. Mr. Cowen will again be conductor-in-chief of the Scottish chrestal, the other conductors being Dr. Richter and Messrs. Wassili Safonoff and Henri Verbrugghen. The vocal works to be performed are 'The Messiah,' 'Acis and Daphne,' 'St. Paul' (Part I.), Cliffe's 'Ode to the East Wind,' Bach's Mass in B minor and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. All these, except the last-named, will be under the direction of Dr. Henry Coward. Pollokshields Philharmonic Society, conducted by Mr. John Cullen, have taken up Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'The Death of Minnehaha.'

A hopeful sign of the times is the increasing interest taken in what might be termed the propagandist work of the Glasgow Bach Choir (Mr. J. M. Diack, conductor). The programme for the season includes a lecture-recital on 'Bach as a song-writer' (with special reference to his use of instrumental obbligati), a chamber concert, the cantata 'The Stronghold sure' and 'God so loved the world,' in addition to a first performance in the West of Scotland of the 'St. John' Passion. The Glasgow Amateur Chrestal Society, under the able direction of Mr. W. T. Mackay, announce two concerts, the first being choral and chrestal in conjunction with the Bach Choir, and the second purely orchestral. The Society have taken the important step of adopting the French pitch, thus coming in line with modern developments.

The work of the Orpheus Choir (Mr. Hugh S. Robertson, conductor), which lies chiefly in the direction of unaccompanied choral singing, will be 'All-British.' Under the able and skilful leadership, a new Society—the Western Choral Union—has been formed, the chief subject of study being the 'Messiah.' The Choral Institute in connection with the Young Men's Christian Association (Mr. R. L. Reid, conductor) have in hand 'The Messiah' and 'The Creation.'

The Teachers' Choral Society (Mr. Alec Steven, conductor) take up MacCunn's 'Lord Ullin's Daughter,' Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer,' and miscellaneous pieces. The Athenæum School of Music Operatic and Choral Societies, now joined under Mr. Henri Verbrugghen's direction, announce quite a formidable programme, viz., 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' 'Lohengrin,' and 'Les noces de Jeanette,' Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' and Beethoven's 'Ruins of Athens.'

The University Choral Society, conducted by Mr. A. M. Henderson, will perform Dunhill's 'Tubal Cain,' Somervell's 'Earl Haldan's daughter,' Grieg's 'Recognition of land,' and a selection of madrigals and part-songs. For their first concert the Greenock Choral Union (Mr. W. T. Hoeck, conductor) will prepare parts 1 and 2 of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha,' and Dumbarton Choral Union (Mr. E. C. Owston, conductor) will give a concert-performance of 'Maritana' and 'The Bohemian girl.'

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

There are signs of an approaching winter season of considerable musical interest in Liverpool. At the twelve concerts to be given by the Philharmonic Society (conductor, Dr. F. H. Cowen), a comprehensive selection of orchestral music, old and new, is announced. As regards the choral works these will include Saint-Saëns's 'Samson and Delilah,' Bach's Christmas Oratorio (Parts I. and II.), Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' Wagner's 'Die Walküre' (Act I.) while an especially interesting revival is that of Mackenzie's 'Dream of Jubal,' written for the Philharmonic Society's Jubilee in 1889.

In an interesting illustrated prospectus, particulars are given of the four concerts to be given by the Liverpool Welsh Choral Union. The selection includes Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' trilogy for the first time here in its complete form. The 'Messiah' will also be sung, and on March 19 Mr. Harry Evans will conduct for the first time in Liverpool Bach's great B minor Mass, a choice upon which both himself, his committee, and the community are to be warmly congratulated.

At the fourth concert, in aid of the Building Fund of the University College of North Wales, Mr. Harry Evans's Eisteddfod cantata 'Dafydd ap Gwilym' is to be heard in Liverpool for the first time.

The programmes of the three concerts to be given by the Societá Armonica maintain the high standard set in recent years, and that these estimable amateurs regard their art seriously is illustrated by the eclecticism of their choice of the orchestral music to be performed.

Mr. Vasco Akeroyd has formed a new orchestra of sixty players, with himself as conductor, to give a series of eight orchestral concerts on popular lines in the Philharmonic Hall.

The Liverpool Church Choir Association, which has for its chief objects the improvement of church choir singing, the cultivation and practice of the highest type of church music, and the encouragement of choirs in the promotion of a feeling of esprit de corps, will hold its ninth annual festival on November 18 in St. George's Hall. On that occasion Sir Frederick Bridge will conduct his anthem 'It is a good thing,' and Easter carol 'On the Cross,' sung by a choir of 500 voices mainly recruited from choirs which have not previously taken part in these festivals.

The Methodist Choral Union, conductor Mr. Percival H. Ingram, announces three concerts: Handel's 'Samson' will be performed at Bootle, and the 'Messiah' and 'Creation' at the Philharmonic Hall.

Chamber music will be well represented by the Schiever classical chamber concerts and Mr. Rawdon Briggs's string quartet, while Mr. Egon Petri will play at his Beethoven recitals twenty pianoforte sonatas by the master.

Mr. Donald Francis Tovey will initiate the discourses in connection with the Music Lectures Association at the University, on October 8.

Lectures on musical subjects are again included in the Corporation free lectures to be given in the city and repeated in the outlying districts. Two lecturers, Mr. F. Bowden and Mr. J. B. Fortay, have chosen 'J. L. Hatton, the Liverpool composer' for their subject, while Mr. Alfred Percival Graves lectures on 'Norse influences on our national music,' and Rev. H. H. McCullagh on 'Mozart and his music.' 'Songs and their kindred,' 'Welsh music and song,' 'Glimpses of grand opera,' and 'How to listen to music,' are among the other subjects included in the syllabus.

The prospectus of the Liscard Orchestral Society (conductor, Mr. Philip R. Smart) is an unusually interesting one, and the Warrington Musical Society have decided to begin their season's work with 'Elijah.'

Handel's 'Acis and Galatea' has been chosen by the Post Office Choral Society, and the New Brighton Amateur Operatic Society announce five performances of Edward German's 'Tom Jones,' to be given in the Tower Theatre.

The Liverpool Sunday Society announce a series of twenty-one afternoon and evening concerts and lectures in St. George's Hall. Under the baton of Mr. John Lawson the Sunday Society Orchestra maintains a high standard of efficiency.

The Festival of the Musical League took place too late for notice in the present issue.

MUSIC IN NEWCASTLE AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

All musical events are at present overshadowed by the close proximity of the festival. The chorus already shows signs of being equal to the best of those of similar important functions, and consequently high hopes are entertained by the successful prospects of the first festival here for many years.

The Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union announce Berlioz's 'Faust' and a Wagner concert, with the usual performance of the 'Messiah.'

The Postal Telegraph Society will give Elgar's 'King Olaf' for the second time, and later on will devote a programme to unaccompanied works, including madrigals by English and Italian writers, a motet of Bach's and a chorus by Reger.

The first concert of the Chamber Music Society will be a Rosenthal pianoforte recital, followed by string quartet parties—the St. Petersburg, the Sevcik, and the Brussels—and the Brodsky Quintet.

The Classical Concert Society announce some interesting concerts, which will include a programme of ancient and modern British music—H. and D. Purcell, Charles Avison (a Newcastle worthy) and Charles Wesley, and Messrs. Donald Francis Tovey, Frank Bridge and W. Y. Hurlstone; also a performance of Bach's two comic cantatas, the 'Coffee' and the 'Peasant.'

The Whitley Bay and District Choral Society are rehearsing Elgar's 'Light of life,' Bach's 'Praise the Lord, O ye heathen' and Franck's '150th Psalm.'

The Darlington Choral and Orchestral Society promise Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast' and Elgar's 'King Olaf.'

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The prospect for the coming season is encouraging. The Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society have arranged to give performances of 'Elijah,' 'Faust' (Gounod), and the 'Golden Legend' (Sullivan). Symphonies by Schubert and Schumann are included in their prospective orchestral programmes. Among the miscellaneous concerts that are announced none will attract greater attention than the visit of the London Symphony Orchestra, when Sir Edward Elgar will conduct a performance of his Symphony on October 29. Messrs. Wilson Peck will continue their subscription concerts, and have issued a very inviting programme.

At Leicester the Philharmonic Society's programme includes 'Caractacus' (Elgar), and 'Samson and Delilah' (Saint-Saëns); the New Musical Society, Handel's 'Judas' and Gounod's 'Messe Solennelle,' and 'Faust' selections; the Nonconformist Choral Union will give Sullivan's 'Golden Legend'; and the Symphony Orchestra are rehearsing Dvorák's fourth Symphony.

At Loughboro' the Choral Society announce the 'Banner of St. George' (Elgar), and selections from 'Lohengrin,' with Schubert's Unfinished Symphony as a purely orchestral item. The Boston Choral Society are beginning their practices with Spohr's 'Calvary.'

Bennett's 'May Queen' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast' are to be given by the Coalville Philharmonic Society.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Arrangements for the forthcoming season have been completed by most of the local musical societies, and we are now able to forecast an interesting series of concerts. Chorally, chief interest will centre in the first performance in Sheffield of Mr. Granville Bantock's 'Omar Khayyam' (Part I.), promised by the Musical Union. Other works to be given by the same Society include 'The Golden Legend' (Sullivan), 'Ode to the North-east wind' (Cliffe), and 'Blest Pair of Sirens' (Parry), all being conducted by Dr. Coward. The Amateur Musical Society will perform 'Hiawatha' (Coleridge-Taylor) under Mr. Henry J. Wood. The work for the Spring concert has yet to be chosen. The Choral Union (Mr. Horace Reynolds, conductor) are rehearsing 'Samson' (Handel) and 'Faust' (Gounod); the Grand Opera Society (Mr. J. Duffell) are also preparing Gounod's familiar opera, and the Heeley Musical Union will perform 'Meg Blane' (Coleridge-Taylor) and 'The Dream of Jubal' (Mackenzie), with Mr. Maunce Tomlinson as conductor. At Rotherham—where Mr. T. Brameld directs the excellent Choral Society—will be heard Haydn's 'Seasons,' while in the neighbouring town of Doncaster the same conductor will direct the old-established Musical Society in Brahms's 'Requiem.'

Such are the principal choral events. In the region of instrumental music especial interest attaches to the effort which is being made to establish orchestral promenade concerts in Sheffield. The enterprise aims at filling a gap in the musical life of a city which, save for small bands in the theatres, does not possess a permanent professional orchestra. Two trial concerts are to be given before Christmas by an orchestra of sixty players, with Mr. J. A. Rodgers as conductor. The two leading amateur orchestras of the city, the Amateur Instrumental Society (Mr. J. Duffell) and the Philharmonic Orchestra (Mr. J. H. Parkes) have resumed rehearsals, but their complete programmes have not yet been issued.

The Sheffield Chamber Music Society submits an attractive prospectus for six subscription concerts. The Klingler, Brodsky, and Ackroyd Quartet parties are included, as well as the New Trio, Mr. Holbrooke's Quintet, and a local quartet organized by Mr. Ellenberger.

The enterprise displayed by the Municipal Council of Shanghai in the furtherance of good music in the Far East deserves full recognition and encouragement. The series of Sunday concerts inaugurated by the Council last year is now in its second season, and the programmes give evidence of a spirited eclecticism in the choice of works. In appreciation of the works performed, the audiences receive valuable assistance from the excellent analytical programmes prepared by Mr. A. Corbett-Smith. In addition to the masterpieces of music—e.g., Beethoven and Mozart symphonies—the works of British composers receive due attention, the names of Elgar, Sterndale Bennett, Sullivan, Stanford and Edward German being included in past programmes. The prospectus of the forthcoming season comprises Elgar's Variations, Bantock's 'Helena' variations, German's 'Seasons' and Parry's Symphonic variations. Special programmes are also provided from time to time illustrating some particular composer or period in musical history. We cordially wish every success to the enterprise, and trust that this excellent example may induce other municipal authorities to do likewise.

Foreign Notes.

BAYREUTH.

Of the twenty festival performances of Wagner's works given at the Festspielhaus during July and August, eight were devoted to 'Parsifal,' five to 'Lohengrin,' and eight to the 'Ring.' The house was sold out for every performance. Dr. Karl Muck, Herr Michael Balling, and Siegfried Wagner respectively conducted 'Parsifal,' the 'Ring,' and 'Lohengrin.' Although the orchestral and particularly the choral ensembles were of the usual excellence, the solo singing generally seems not to have been on quite so high a level, though Dr. von Bary (Siegfried and Lohengrin), Herr Breuer (Mime), Mesdames Leffler-Burchard (Kundry in 'Parsifal') and Gulbransen (Brünnhilde) gave very good accounts of their respective parts. The absence of Dr. Hans Richter and Herr Felix Mottl at the conductor's desk was generally regretted.

BERLIN.

Mrs. Amelie Nikisch has completed the text and music of an operetta entitled 'Meine Tante, deine Tante.' The work will be produced during the coming season at the Neues Operetten Theater, and conducted by Professor Arthur Nikisch.—The Philharmonic Orchestra, conducted by Herr Nikisch, will in their coming series of symphony concerts perform for the first time in Berlin a new Symphony in E minor by Rachmaninoff; also Elgar's Symphony in A flat.—The 'Gura Oper' having just closed its doors, a new operatic venture has started under the name of 'Volksoper,' in the Belle Alliance Theater. On the opening night Verdi's Ernani was given.

BIELEFELD.

Herr Gerard Bunk recently gave six very interesting organ recitals at the Neustädter Kirche. The first of these was devoted to Bach; the second to Schumann, Mendelssohn, Rheinberger and Merkel; the third to Liszt; the fourth to French organ music by Guilmant, Widor and Boëllmann; the fifth to Max Reger; and the sixth to compositions of Enrico Bossi, Saint-Saëns, Gernsheim and Elgar.

CASSEL.

In the presence of the German Emperor and the Royal Family, the new Court Theatre was inaugurated on August 26 with a performance of Lortzing's opera 'Undine.'

COPENHAGEN.

The operatic season at the Royal National Theatre was begun on September 10 with a revival, after a few years' rest, of Heise's Danish opera, 'Drot og Marsk.' At the Casino Theatre a new operetta, 'Prince Incognito,' was successfully produced. The music is by Herr Preben Odermann, organist of the cathedral, Lund, Sweden.

LEIPSIK.

On August 1 the Leipziger Gausingerbund, numbering some 2,000 singers, gave a highly successful concert in the billäums-Festhalle, which was built for the occasion of the five-hundredth anniversary of the foundation of the university. Amongst the items of the programme Gustav Ohlgemuth's 'Reiterlied' proved very effective.

MUNICH.

The festival performances of Mozart's operas given in the Residenztheater included 'Le nozze di Figaro,' 'Die Entführung aus dem Serail,' 'Don Giovanni,' and 'Così fan tutte,' all of which were most skilfully conducted by Herr Felix Mottl. The Mozart performances were followed by the 'Wagnerfestspiele' in the Prinzregententheater, when the following operas were given: 'Tannhäuser,' 'Die Meistersinger,' 'Tristan und Isolde,' and the 'Ring des Nibelungen,' under the respective batons of Messrs. Mottl, Röhr, and Franz Fischer. The Konzertverein, under the conductorship of Ferdinand Löwe, gave a series of symphony concerts which were devoted to works of Beethoven, Anton Bruckner, and Brahms. The programmes comprised Beethoven's nine symphonies, performed in chronological order, and the great 'Leonore' overture No. 3; Bruckner's third, fourth, seventh and eighth symphonies; all the four symphonies of Brahms, in addition to the double concerto for violin, violoncello and orchestra; the second Pianoforte concerto in B flat; the Haydn orchestral Variations; and the 'Academic' and 'Tragic' overtures by the same master. The soloists were Messrs. Frederic Lamond, Marteau, and Hugo Becker.

OSTEND.

At the classical concerts conducted by M. Rinskop, many interesting works have been performed, as for instance, Dukas's symphonic poem 'L'apprenti Sorcier,' César Franck's 'Psyche' and Variations Symphoniques for pianoforte and orchestra, Saint-Saëns's Symphony in C minor with organ and pianoforte, and two orchestral compositions—'Nuremberg en Fête' and 'Les Cloches à Coblenz'—by the young English composer, J. H. Foulds.

A Musical Society is now being formed in Paris, under the name of 'British Concerts Society,' for the purpose of spreading a knowledge of British music among French audiences by means of concerts entirely devoted to the works of British composers. Works by the masters of past centuries will naturally be given, the greater part of the programmes being, however, devoted to the works of modern composers. Information regarding the Society may be obtained from one of the hon. secretaries, Mr. T. J. Guéritte, 38, Victoria Street, S.W., or Mr. R. Vaufrey, 43, rue Jaques Dulud, Neuilly, Paris.

The Home Music Study Union has issued a useful pamphlet (thirty-two pages) of 'Graded Lists' to the works, vocal and instrumental, of the great masters, including Wagner and Brahms. It is intended to be a companion to the Union's special edition of Sir Hubert Parry's 'Studies of great composers,' and as a guide to teachers and students of music. A useful bibliography of musical literature has also been included. The pamphlet can be obtained at the office of the National Home Reading Union, 12, York Buildings, Adelphi, price one shilling.

The prospectus of the London Symphony Orchestra announces a series of twelve symphony concerts, to be given at Queen's Hall between October and May. While the programmes are as eclectic as they are interesting, the only novelty, or quasi-novelty, is Paderewski's new Symphony, to be performed for the first time in England on November 8. The conductors of the concerts will be Dr. Hans Richter, Herr Arthur Nikisch, M. Wassili Safonoff and Mr. Sergius Kuszewitsky.

The Queen's Hall Orchestra (conductor Mr. Henry J. Wood) announce eight symphony concerts during the coming season. The following are the novelties or quasi-novelties promised in the prospectus: 'Suite for orchestra and organ' (MS.), Max Bruch; 'Old English Suite,' Bantock (first time in London); Symphony in C, Dukas; the 'Philosopher' symphony, in E flat, Haydn; and Romance in C, for strings, Sibelius.

General Lord Methuen, G.C.B., K.C.V.O., C.M.G., Commander-in-Chief of the Forces in South Africa, has joined the Council of the Naval and Military Musical Union. The first concert of the Union is to be held at Chatham Town Hall on October 20, at which part-songs will be sung by the glee clubs of H.M.S. 'Tenedos,' the Naval Barracks, and the Royal Engineers. May all success attend this inaugural music-making in connection with the Services.

Mr. Percy C. Hull, assistant-organist of Hereford Cathedral, has been presented by the tenor and bass members of the Hereford section of the festival choir with a 'Swan' fountain gold pen, in recognition of his services at the separate rehearsals held for the festival this year.

The Aberdeen Choral Union (conductor, Mr. Arthur Collingwood) announce performances of the following works during the coming season: Golden Legend (Sullivan), Toward the unknown region (Vaughan Williams), and Requiem (Mozart).

Mr. Hermann Klein will deliver a lecture at Bechstein Hall on the afternoon of October 25, the subject of his discourse being 'The truth about music in America.'

Answers to Correspondents.

J. P. H.—(1) You had better apply to the Secretary of the Royal Society, Burlington House, Piccadilly, for the information. (2) The following choral works for a choir of thirty voices will probably meet your requirements: 'Tubal Cain,' Dunhill; 'Spring's Message,' Gade; 'Lauda Sion,' Mendelssohn; 'May Queen,' Sterndale Bennett; 'Hero and Leander,' C. H. Lloyd; 'Emmaus,' Brewer; 'Rebekah,' Barnby. You might certainly consider Gluck's 'Orpheus' (Act II.), and Elgar's, 'A Christmas Greeting.'

AYDA.—For descriptions and plots of operas see the following books: 'The Opera,' by R. A. Streatfeild (George Routledge & Sons); and 'The Standard Operaglass,' by Charles Annesley (Sampson Low). The first twelve booklets in 'Nights at the opera' series (Alexander Moring, Ltd.) are: Lohengrin, Tannhauser, Tristan and Isolde, Die Meistersinger, Rheingold and Walküre, Siegfried and Götterdämmerung, Carmen, Faust, Don Giovanni, Il Trovatore, Rigoletto, and Flying Dutchman.

GAMBA.—Biographical articles in English on Merkel and Rheinberger are contained in 'Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians.' There is also a monograph on Rheinberger in Mr. J. A. Fuller Maitland's 'Masters of German Music' (Osgood, McIlvaine & Co., 1894), but we think the book is out of print. To grade the forty-five organ sonatas and symphonies in your list is rather beyond the limits of the 'Answers to correspondents' column.

P. G.—The following humorous pieces may serve your purpose: Humoristische Variationen (Suppé); Leben und Sterben vom lustigen Schulmeisterlein Wuz, Op. 72 (Thieriot); Danses pseudo-classes en forme de quadrille d'après des thèmes de J. S. Bach (Delaborde); Gaudeamus igitur (Liszt); O du lieber Augustin (Max Reger); S' kommt a Vogel (Ochs and E. Scherz).

C. H. R.—(1) For manuals on orchestration, see those by Professor Prout, in the two volumes published by Messrs. Augener, and his Primer in Messrs. Novello's series. (2) Tennyson's 'Maud' was published in 1855, therefore it is non-copyright as issued in its original form.

F. E.—The examinations for the Licentiatehip of the Royal Academy of Music and the Associateship of the Royal College of Music are open to all candidates irrespective of age. The standard at each Institution is very high, but the diplomas are worth working for.

ORGANIST.—We do not know of any musical journal published in Scotland. You should watch the advertisement columns of newspapers like the Scotsman, Glasgow Herald, and Aberdeen Journal for vacant organ appointments.

J. P. L.—A portrait of Sir George Martin seated at the organ of St. Paul's Cathedral, and of Sir Frederick Bridge at the organ of Westminster Abbey, appeared in the Musical Times of March, 1907 and June, 1907, respectively.

T. P. W.—Take breath at the natural phrases of the music, and not necessarily at every comma. To advise anyone to 'take breath where there is a comma whenever possible, whether you need to do so or not,' is absurd.

W. H. G.—Stainer and other English authors of organ tutors may be safely followed in regard to fingering. There can be nothing better as a preparatory equipment for learning the organ than good pianoforte technique.

H. A.—According to the 'Musical Directory' there is (or was) a West London Choral Union, but the titles West London Choral Society and Western London Choral Society do not appear to have been appropriated.

B.—You cannot do better than use Stainer's Organ Primer for commencing to learn the instrument. As to mechanical exercises for improving your pianoforte technique, you had better consult your teacher.

W. T.—You will probably find the addresses you require in the 'Musical Directory' published by Messrs. Rudall, Carte & Co.

H. E. T.—Your question is too enigmatical for us to answer; much to our regret we fail to 'apprehend' your meaning.

F. C. G.—Send your violin to Messrs. W. E. Hill & Sons, 140, New Bond Street, who will report to you upon its value.

J. S.—We regret that we cannot refer you to a biography of Herr Wilhelm Backhaus.

E. J. K.—(1) No. (2) Yes, by all means.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed in this summary, as the notices are either prepared from local newspapers or furnished by correspondents. Correspondents are particularly requested to enclose a programme when forwarding reports of concerts.

BLOEMFONTEIN.—The Bloemfontein Musical Society gave two concerts on August 7 and 10 respectively, in connection with the tour of the Archdeacon concert party, consisting of Miss Esta D'Argo, Mr. Lloyd Chandos and Mr. Albert Archdeacon. The programme for August 7 was of a miscellaneous character, to which the choir contributed a number of excellently-rendered unaccompanied part-songs. On August 10, Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' was given in the presence of His Excellency The Governor, who gave a 'command' for the performance. Mrs. Todd-Arthur sang the contralto solos. Both the choir and orchestra did excellent work under the conductorship of Mr. George H. Deale, who deserves commendation for the successful result of his labours.

CAPE TOWN.—The Philharmonic Society gave their second concert of the season in the City Hall on August 18. The programme comprised Beethoven's 'Egmont' overture, Mendelssohn's 'Scotch' symphony, Handel's 'Largo' and Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer.' The last-named was by the Society's well-balanced choir, with Madame Doza Lloyd as the soloist. The concert terminated with Wagner's 'Kaisermarsch.' The above-named works were very ably rendered, and Mr. Luyt, the conductor, may be congratulated upon the success of the performance.

CLAREMONT (CAPE TOWN).—The Suburban Choral Society gave a concert in the Town Hall on August 14, when the programme included the following part-music: Danby's 'Awake, Æolian lyre,' Barnby's 'Sweet and low,' Swabian folksied, 'Come, Dorothy, come,' Morley's 'Now is the month of Maying,' Novello's 'Just like love,' Sullivan's 'The long day closes,' Eaton Fanning's 'The miller's wooing,' and Handel's 'Galatea, dry thy tears.' These were well sung by the choir of forty voices, under the direction of Mr. Tom Wood. The solo vocalists were Miss Pearl Ward and Mr. J. W. Bell.

KIMBERLEY.—Two concerts were given by the Kimberley Musical Association on August 5 and 6, a selection from Gounod's 'Faust' occupying the first part on the former date and Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' on the latter. The miscellaneous portions of the programmes included Leslie's madrigal 'Charm me asleep,' a selection from the 'Hymn of Praise,' and Eaton Fanning's 'Miller's wooing.' The solo vocalists were Miss Esta D'Argo, Miss Kate Hennessy, Mr. Lloyd Chandos and Mr. Albert Archdeacon, the band and chorus comprising 140 performers. Herr Carl Rybaitz and Mr. A. H. Ashworth were the conductors.

PRETORIA.—A choral and orchestral concert was given on August 14 in St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, under the conductorship of Mr. J. S. Yates, and with the valuable co-operation of Miss Ada Forrest. Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer' and 'Judge me, O God,' Gounod's 'Gallia' and Elgar's 'Pomp and circumstance' March No. 1, were the chief features of the programme. Mr. Gwilym Evans was the other solo vocalist. Miss Beatrice Smart contributed two violin solos, and Mr. F. Stanley Ricketts played two movements of Handel's Organ concerto No. 4, in F, with the orchestra. It is hoped to establish an annual choral festival in the town.

THE TEN VIRGINS

A SACRED CANTATA

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

BY ALFRED R. GAUL.

"Will be heartily welcomed by all who love the art of music."—Newcastle Journal.

"The work will certainly go through Saxondom in the wake of its predecessors from the same pen."—London Daily Telegraph.

"Must attain popularity wherever heard, and will assuredly be placed among the foremost compositions of this kind by present-day writers... treated in a thoroughly artistic manner... a perfect wealth of melody and striking individuality of style."—Liverpool Daily Courier.

"Works which have placed him in the front rank of English composers—the 'Holy City,' 'Joan of Arc,' and 'The Ten Virgins.'"—Newcastle Daily Journal.

"The choral writing in 'The Ten Virgins' is alone something to be thankful for, and, as we have intimated, it is only one of the many musical virtues of the Cantata."—Leamington Chronicle.

"BOW AND BROMLEY INSTITUTE CHOIR.—The hall was overcrowded by an audience that was disposed to encore every other number of the work. That Mr. Gaul should have secured this undoubted popular success with a work far more contrapuntal than any of his former works, is a remarkable tribute to his power of welding science and beauty into one whole."—The Musical Times.

"The subject is an excellent one for a Cantata... a stronger story than 'Joan of Arc.' Melodious, vocal, and of moderate difficulty, and, like Mr. Gaul's earlier Cantatas, will be eagerly welcomed by societies in search of new works having these characteristics."—Newcastle Daily Leader.

"That 'The Ten Virgins' is a much finer work than the everywhere favourite 'Holy City' we have no doubt whatever. Mr. Gaul has aimed at fine outline and telling colouring, and all that he has aimed at he has achieved."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

Price, paper cover, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s.; cloth, gilt, 4s. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Vocal parts, each 1s. Words only, 5s. per 100.

JOAN OF ARC

AN HISTORICAL CANTATA

FOR THREE SOLO VOICES, CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"Few cantatas are as rich in chaste melodies, charming choruses, and exquisite orchestration as Alfred R. Gaul's 'Joan of Arc,' performed for the first time in Plymouth by the Vocal Association at the Guildhall."—The Western News.

"Must enhance the high reputation of its composer."—Liverpool Courier.

"The inspiration of a highly-refined musician... The Cantata is even a more masterly and beautiful work than 'The Holy City.'"—Huddersfield Examiner.

"No more charming Cantata than 'Joan of Arc' could have been chosen. It abounds in delicious music. There is not a tedious note in it."—Newcastle-on-Tyne Daily Chronicle.

"Gives the listener a vivid and realistic impression, its attractiveness being continuous instead of spasmodic."—Bradford Observer.

"The Exeter Oratorio Society last night achieved a brilliant success and it may safely be said, without fear of exaggeration, that never before have they performed a work more satisfactory to themselves and more interesting to the audience than 'Joan of Arc.'"—Western Times.

"One of the most delightful concerts ever given by the St. Paul's Choral Society was that of last evening, when the principal piece was 'Joan of Arc.' We cannot speak too highly of Mr. Gaul's work, which is of the most interesting description."—The Salisbury Daily News.

Price, paper cover, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s.; scarlet cloth, 4s. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Vocal parts, each 1s.; Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100. (Ent. Stationers' Hall.)

The loan of instrumental parts may be had on application to the Composer, and full liberty is given to perform these Cantatas and insert the words in any programme without further permission.

SELECTED AND SET TO MUSIC

FOR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, VIOLONCELLO AND ORCHESTRA

BY

H. WALFORD DAVIES.

(Op. 28.)

Price Three Shillings.

THE TIMES.

The work as a whole is full of vivid interest and imaginative power. It has not, of course, the strong human interest of "Everyman"—its scheme does not allow that—but it is equal to it in beauty of melody and design, and stronger in its grasp of various resources, especially those of the orchestra.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

To judge by his previous work, the present book, if so it may be described, is precisely one to appeal to Dr. Davies. It affords him ample scope for the exhibition of his command of orchestral scoring and of his power as a writer of chorus. . . . If the highest has not invariably been attained, it is yet likely that such numbers as the carol for soprano and semi-chorus, which Miss Gleeson-White sang prettily, the pastoral choral aria with quartet, and the melodious and fairly easy litany may enjoy a wide popularity, for it is a feature of this work that most of its component parts may be sung in a detached form, and the numbers mentioned are of the kind beloved by the people.

MORNING POST.

Dr. Davies's Cycle is a proof of the ability and of the intention of the rising school to shake off the restrictions of the past and to write in a style that is not only wholly distinctive, but is also very much more temperamental than anything that has been heard before in the domain of serious music. . . . A wide range of feeling is covered, but there is not one section that does not carry conviction, and the whole work is a magnificent example of British music, to be pointed to with pride and looked upon as a precious possession.

YORKSHIRE POST.

"Noble Numbers" can be best described by reference to its prototype, "Everyman," of which it is the worthy successor. There is the same love of extreme elaboration of detail, together with the greater breadth of effect which an enhanced experience has put within its composer's command. . . . "Noble Numbers" can only be described as a work lofty in purpose, earnest in character, and crammed with ideas, a few of them seeming, perhaps, to be the fruit of reflection, but other creations which possess the charm of genuine spontaneity. It is, in short, a very beautiful work indeed, following with remarkable fidelity and insight the varying moods suggested in the poems. . . . The choral portion of the prelude is quite a noble exordium and, notwithstanding what I have said concerning the complexity of the orchestral texture, there is in many places a simplicity which is in perfect accord with the sincerity and noble diction of the poetry. The music is throughout wholesome in tone, and has a delightful English ring about it.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

In the music there is much deserving the highest praise. . . . Dr. Davies is always particularly dexterous in raising his structure according to a plan of which every part leads up to some culminating point carefully conceived. He is consequently very effective, but there is a great difference between that and mere striving after effect. So far is Dr. Davies from striving after sensationalism that when the chance comes which nine out of ten composers would have seized eagerly, he contents himself with the very simplest of means.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY GAZETTE AND EXPRESS.

To whatever he puts his hand this composer is sincere. Moreover, he is himself, not based on Handel or Mendelssohn, or Wagner. . . . He is well-equipped in choral and orchestral technique, has a riotous imagination, strong originality, and lets himself go audaciously. . . . Then, his music is strong and masculine; there is no great tenderness, but then he never sinks to the morbid religious-sentimental. He has fine and dignified ideas; musical thoughts which go well with the title of "Noble Numbers."

GO, SONG OF MINE

CHORUS (UNACCOMPANIED) IN SIX PARTS

THE WORDS BY

GUIDO CAVALCANTI (1250-1301)

TRANSLATED BY D. G. ROSSETTI

THE MUSIC BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

(Op. 57.)

Price Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, 3d.

THE TIMES.

Sir Edward Elgar's new part-song, "Go, Song of Mine," a delightfully fresh piece of writing for unaccompanied voices.

TELEGRAPH.

We were introduced, for the first time, to a little trifle, so to say, that yet was one of the very gems of the festival, in Elgar's choral setting for six voices of Rossetti's "Go, Song of Mine." I use the word "trifle" merely to give an indication of the dimensions of the piece, which was found on all sides to be much too short. Musically, it is of great value, and is proof positive, to those who hold that Elgar is essentially an orchestral composer, that at the present time—the score is dated 1909—his choral technique is no less brilliant and effective than his orchestral skill. A trifle of downright loveliness this is, a veritable masterpiece of emotional and musical expression after its kind, which, because of its sheer beauty of sound and charm, may be described with perfect security as noble music. It produced a very deep effect and will, indeed, be gladly heard again, especially when as exquisitely rendered as under the composer's direction at this, its first, performance.

STANDARD.

It is poetically conceived, and its harmonic scheme is of beautiful texture. The music, with the lights and shadows that play delicately over it, sympathetically expresses the sentiment of the words.

MORNING POST.

It is a short composition for six parts and chorus, naturally of sombre character, as befitting the nature of the theme, but with its sombreness there is immense depth of feeling. The beauty of the construction is ever present, and the composition is worthy of the highest traditions of English choral writing. . . . The impression on the hearers was immediate and deep.

MORNING LEADER.

It is a setting of a few lines of Rossetti's taken from a thirteenth century Italian poet, and the writing for the voices has all that skill and resource that Elgar has shown in his later part-songs.

YORKSHIRE POST.

A really noble composition, following the trend which has been given to such music by Cornelius and other modern composers in the direction of a greater subtlety and complexity of expression. The sustained beauty and the remarkable colour of the music give it great charm, and its practicability, in spite of some obvious difficulties, was shown by an exceedingly fine performance.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

The fitness of the music to the words is a matter beyond praise or criticism. Once heard together the two can no longer be considered apart. We should have to seek long amongst the great works of choral music hitherto produced before finding a fitting parallel to this jewel. Even Elgar himself has never before made the choir utter things of such sweetness and loveliness. . . . First there is the incomparable simplicity of this song, which is in itself a kind of hall-mark of greatness. Its harmonies are uncommon, but when once these are fixed into their place they become their station so well that nothing else appears equally fitting and simple. It was altogether an unforgettable experience.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY POST.

It is a deeply-felt piece of work, and marked by all Elgar's usual mastery of the art of modern choral effects, the total mass of tone being like that of a rich organ. The choir, under the composer's direction, sang it with true feeling for its solemn beauty.

THE ATHENÆUM.

The simple music is strongly emotional, and full of genuine Elgarian touches.

OLD ENGLISH SUITE

ARRANGED FOR SMALL ORCHESTRA

BY

GRANVILLE BANTOCK.

1. Fantasia ... .. Orlando Gibbons
2. Lachrymæ Pavan ... .. John Dowland
3. The King's Hunt ... .. John Bull
4. Quodling's Delight ... .. Giles Farnaby
5. Sellenger's Round (In the Press) ... .. William Byrd

FULL SCORE, 10s. 6d.; STRING PARTS, 4s. 6d.; WIND PARTS, 7s. 6d.
ARRANGEMENT FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO ... 3s. 6d.

THE TIMES.

It consists of five pieces by English composers of the sixteenth century, which Mr. Bantock has selected and scored in a delightful way for small orchestra. Four of them come from the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book, and only the first, one of Gibbons's Fantasias in four parts, was originally written for strings. It would have been no disadvantage to have this one in its original colouring; but the additional use of woodwind and horns is so tastefully done that one cannot regret them; and since only antiquaries will ever have the chance of enjoying the Virginal pieces played as their composers wrote them, the gain of producing them in their new orchestral costumes is clear.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Mr. Bantock's Suite is a thing of pure delight from beginning to end. For a composer of tendencies which are called advanced, this Suite is a model of restraint. . . . Nos. 1, 3, and 5 are scored for a more or less complete small orchestra, though no use is made in the opening piece of trumpets or drums. The Pavane, a quietly dignified and graceful thing for strings only, is a notable example of string writing, as "Quodling's Delight," which was mightily and deservedly applauded, is to be played by an oboe, two clarinets, and a bassoon, in imitation of the ancient shawms.

MORNING POST.

The Suite is based on circa sixteenth century airs, originally extracted from the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book for the purposes of a revival of "The Knight of the Burning Pestle" at Manchester last year. Their reproduction in the present form is most valuable, for the airs themselves are precious heirlooms, and with the setting provided by Mr. Granville Bantock, which is so thoroughly in keeping, the worth of these, some of the most precious gems among our heritage, is increased. . . . The Suite is a masterly reproduction of atmosphere, and many must have been surprised to find such wealth of melody in old music. The Suite was cordially received.

STANDARD.

Mr. Bantock has collected a quintet of tunes by composers of the seventeenth century, taken from the Elizabethan Virginal Book preserved in the Fitzwilliam Library, Cambridge, and has cleverly knit them together in a fascinating suite. While preserving their ancient character, he has embellished the old tunes with charming and effective orchestration.

DAILY NEWS.

Mr. Granville Bantock's suite of five Elizabethan pieces should be certain of popularity. The melodies are all charming, and Mr. Bantock has managed to score them in an attractive way, without once doing violence to their naive character.

MORNING LEADER.

Mr. Granville Bantock's suite is compiled from old English music. There are five numbers, but the music has been added to and scored by Mr. Bantock. The result is a very charming work that should be heard often in future. Particularly delightful are the third number, "The King's Hunt" and the last "Sellenger's Round."

THE WORLD.

Mr. Bantock has done more than edit, since he has added to the music in some cases, and scored the whole of it for small orchestra. The result is quite a delightful little suite of five numbers, of which the third (a little hunting piece by John Bull) and the finale, a dance, are particularly fascinating. The scoring has been done with Mr. Bantock's usual command of orchestral effect, which he has used in this instance to secure an old-world flavouring appropriate to the music.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

The Suite consists of five charming pieces, of which the first is a fantasia by Orlando Gibbons, the second a pavan by John Dowland, the third an air with some dainty variations by John Bull; the last is also an air with variations, and the last a country dance, known as "Sellenger's Round," by William Byrd. These make up a delightful Suite, which has been scored by Mr. Bantock with his usual felicity and resource. It met with a very cordial reception.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY POST.

The old English Suite is composed of five Elizabethan baroque pieces, arranged by Mr. Bantock for small orchestra. It proved themselves delightful. The curious thing was that in spite of the clever orchestration we were never taken out of the original epoch of the music.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY GAZETTE AND EXPRESS.
The Bantock Suite, exquisitely played, evoked a regular shower of applause, which was thoroughly deserved, the instrumentalists playing various pieces being skilful and effective in the extreme.

THE TIMES.

agement of "Lazarus" given was interesting, because it contains f music here and there which are thoroughly characteristic of Ikönig," must have sounded singularly daring at the time they

MORNING POST.

; no want of feeling in the music, which is distinctly charac-

This work is a set of voluntaries for Divine service (many being of sufficient importance for recital pieces), and is published by subscription.

It is clearly printed upon three staves on 320 full-sized music pages, in one edition only, viz. : in 16 separate parts, price THREE SHILLINGS net each.

Each part contains three or four voluntaries, and covers twenty pages of music.

The subscription is ONE SHILLING AND NINEPENCE net, post-free, for each part; or TWENTY-FOUR SHILLINGS net, post-free, for all the 16 parts. Copies at the subscription rate are only obtainable direct from Dr. Frost.

The work will be found a useful one for presentation purposes. The majority of the pieces are of only moderate difficulty and length, intricate complications of the manual and pedal parts being studiously avoided; indeed, the latter has purposely been kept particularly simple throughout; and in order to facilitate playing, and make the work of the utmost service to young students, fingering and pedal marks are very freely given. This is exceedingly useful for teaching purposes, as the master will be spared considerable trouble in making guiding marks for a pupil, and the latter will be less likely to go astray when practising alone.

These voluntaries do not make unreasonable demands upon the player, and yet at the same time are solid and effective.

The whole work is planned for organs of two manuals, for while music written for two manuals can always be played upon organs with three or more, that written for three, cannot so easily be played upon two manuals.

The music is very clearly printed, ample space being allowed upon the plates.

Specimen page, and fifteen quotations, together with detailed circular, will be sent upon application.

THE NEW CATHEDRAL PSALTER

CONTAINING

THE PSALMS OF DAVID

TOGETHER WITH

THE CANTICLES AND PROPER PSALMS FOR CERTAIN DAYS

EDITED AND POINTED FOR CHANTING

COSMO GORDON LANG, D.D.
(ARCHBISHOP OF YORK).

HENRY SCOTT HOLLAND, D.Litt.
(Canon and Precentor of St. Paul's).

CHARLES H. LLOYD, M.A., Mus.D.
(Precentor of Eton).

GEORGE C. MARTIN, Mus.D.
(Organist of St. Paul's).

No part of the Church Service has received greater attention in recent years than the Psalms, and there is no better test of an organist's or choirmaster's qualifications than the manner in which the choir renders these matchless poems of Holy Writ.

The chief difficulty of Anglican chanting has always been the merging of the recitation into the strict-time section of the chant. In the "Cathedral Psalter," issued a generation ago, an endeavour was made to overcome this difficulty by the use of accent marks, and the striking popularity of the book has proved that the method therein adopted, if rightly used, was nearly perfect.

Experience, however, has shown that there was still room for improvement, and it may confidently be asserted that the nearest approach to perfection has been attained in the entirely revised and improved form of the work entitled the "New Cathedral Psalter."

As the result of much careful study and practical knowledge, all ambiguity in regard to the merging of the recitation into the strict-time section of the chant has now been removed.

The "New Cathedral Psalter" is issued in three forms: (i.) with Superimposed Notes; (ii.) with Prosody Signs; (iii.) with Varied Type, whereby a choice can be made of the form which may be thought most effectual in securing intelligent and reverent chanting. Moreover, the pointing is in every case identical, so that on such an occasion as a service sung by combined choirs all three books could, if necessary, be used simultaneously.

Not the least important consideration in a pointed psalter is the matter of typography. In the "New Cathedral Psalter" bolder faced types, specially prepared, have been used, the result being greater clearness, while particular attention has been paid to the spacing between the words and lines so as to afford greater facility in reading.

The "New Cathedral Psalter," although founded on the "Cathedral Psalter," is a distinct book, and the two books cannot be used together.

THE GLORY OF THE MAY SONG

THE WORDS BY W. J. GREENHAM

THE MUSIC BY
M. C. COMBERMERE GIBBINGS.

I wander slowly through the meads,
And all my heart is glad;
Nature hath doff'd her widow weeds,
And, like a Bride, comes clad.

But yesternight I dreamt the snow
Upon the fields fell fast;
Lo! 'twas the hawthorn and the sloe,
On soft white feet that passed.

The Hand of God lies on the hills,
And, through the purple haze,
His voice comes down the winding rills,
And gentle woodland ways.

The Breath of Life moves on thro' all,
Each flower, and leaf, and sod;
The loveliest, lowliest, feels the Call
And Finger-sweep of God.

So may I, by my Soul's dim sight,
Toil tireless, seeking Thee,
Until Thy Light—The Infinite—
Wakes Faith's full Spring in me.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC offers to students of both sexes (whether amateur or professional) a thorough training in all branches of music under the most able and distinguished Professors. In addition to receiving individual lessons in the various branches of the Curriculum, students have the advantage of attending the Orchestral, Choral, Chamber Music Classes, and the weekly Lectures on music and musicians. Evidence of their progress is given at the Fortnightly and Public Concerts and by periodical Operatic and Dramatic Performances.

There are three Terms in the Academic year—viz., the Michaelmas Term, from Michaelmas to Christmas; the Lent Term, from early in January to Easter; and the Midsummer Term, from early in May until the end of July.

The Fee for the ordinary curriculum is 11 Guineas per Term.

A large number of Scholarships and Prizes are founded and are competed for periodically.

Students who show special merit and ability receive the distinction of being elected by the Directors Associates of the Institution, and are thereby entitled to the use after their names the initials A.R.A.M. Students who distinguish themselves in the musical profession after leaving the Institution may be elected by the Directors Fellows of the Royal Academy of Music, and are thereupon entitled to the use after their names of the initials F.R.A.M.

Subscribers have the privilege of attending the Lectures and Public Concerts and of introducing friends in proportion to the amount of their subscriptions.

An examination of persons trained independently of the Academy is held twice a year—once during the Summer and Christmas vacations—successful candidates at which are elected Associates of the Academy, and are thereupon entitled to the use after their names of the initials L.R.A.M. The syllabus is issued annually at Easter. Last day for entry for the Summer Examination, June 30; for the Christmas Examination, October 30.

An examination of persons engaged in the Training of Children's Voices is held in September and during the Christmas Vacation, and a certificate will be granted to successful candidates.

PIANISTS AND PRACTICE.

"PRACTICE MAKES PERFECT," WHEN

PRACTICE IS PERFECT.

It is not perfect unless laws of Nature are understood and obeyed. When a saw is blunt you sharpen it, but not by sawing. Neither can the ordinary pianist perfect his hands and arms by keyboard work. The only sound way to do so is by the special method discovered by Mr. Macdonald Smith. This is true physiological "practice" which "makes perfect," and soon leads to the disappearance of every technical difficulty. The splendid results of the well-known System "From Brain to Keyboard" are described by pupils in "Light on Pianoforte Playing," which may be had free by post on application.

ANTONIO STRADIVARI HIS LIFE AND WORK (1644-1737)

BY

W. Henry Hill, Arthur F. Hill, F.S.A.,
and Alfred E. Hill.

A NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

This Book contains the whole of the original text and most of the illustrations, with the difference that the coloured plates have been replaced by photographic reproductions. On the other hand, however, it includes an additional illustration in colours, by way of frontispiece, of the celebrated Stradivari Violin, known as "The Messic."

In reviewing the earlier edition, The Times said: "That the authors were well qualified for the task is plain. They belong to a family in which violin making has been traditional for generations, they have been aided by the family lore and guided by wide and varied experience. Thus equipped, they have devoted themselves to a careful examination and comparison of the great maker's instruments, and the list cited justifies the conclusion that there can be few which have escaped their notice." The same journal refers to the book as "the most important contribution yet made to the history of the great fiddle-maker and his work."

5. ## EMPIRE CHORUS COMPETITION,

c/o NOVELLO & Co., Ltd.,

160, Wardour Street, London, W.

The names of the judges will be announced shortly.

PIANISTS WHO THINK

that proficiency in Sight-Playing can be acquired only by continual endeavours to "read pieces" (of graduated difficulty, or otherwise), should realise that if they succeed at all after such unsystematic drudgery, it is only because they have instinctively followed the psychological laws without which there could be no such thing as sight-playing.

Surely, therefore, it is better to start at the very beginning with a conscious knowledge of those laws, thus saving much time and labour.

THE EHREMAYER SYSTEM OF

teaches you how to practise reading on these lines, and pupils' reports testify to its efficiency.

The Booklet descriptive of the system is sent post-free and gratis on application to—

L. M. EHREMAYER, 27, Chancery Lane, W.C.

ST. GEORGE'S CHAPEL, WINDSOR.

The interest of the stately sanctuary within the walls of Windsor Castle is fourfold—regal, historical, architectural, and musical. In this respect St. George's Chapel is almost unique among ecclesiastical foundations in this country, its only rival being the venerable fane of Westminster. Glorified by the halo of antiquity and as the chapel of the Knights of the Garter, the beautiful building is rich also in its musical associations, covering a period of nearly four centuries, from John Marbeck, the first of its great chief musicians, to the present day :

Where through the long-drawn aisle and fretted vault
The pealing anthem swells the note of praise.

One of the finest edifices in the world, Windsor Castle has been a residence of English monarchs from before the time of William the Conqueror. King Henry I. built within the royal domain a free chapel of some importance, in which he established a college of eight secular priests. Henry III. built between 1240 and 1243 the chapel of St. Edward the Confessor, of which the western entrance, with its great door of hammered iron work, and the northern wall, with its arcading on the south side of the Dean's cloister are still extant, as is also a portion of the front which erst stood within that chapel wherein his great grandson Edward III. was baptized, November 16, 1312.

In the year 1313 Edward II. granted payments to eight chaplains 'celebrating daily for the King's soul and the souls of his ancestors and heirs in the chapel and to the four clerks serving those chaplains,' amounting to the sum of £156 13s. 4d. The chapel was rebuilt by Edward III. in or about 1347, and St. George, the patron saint of England (1287), and of the most Noble Order of the Garter, founded by the King in 1349, was associated with Our Lady and St. Edward in the title of its dedication. On August 6, 1348, Edward III., who was born at Windsor, signed a charter of foundation whereby he established and definitely endowed the chapel. In 1351 it consisted of a warden (now Dean), 2 canons, 13 priest-vicars, 4 clerks, 6 choristers, and 26 poor knights. Edward IV. increased the number of choristers to 13, and designed a corresponding enlargement of the whole foundation, but died prematurely in 1483 before this was effected. He had already planned and begun a new church on a much more magnificent scale, in 1474, which was to rise at the western end of the old chapel of St. George and occupy nearly the whole of the lower quadrangle. The fabric itself was completed in five years, but it was not until 1481 that the stalls and tabernacle work in the choir were set up. In his will, dated 1475, Edward IV. desired to be buried 'in the church of the Collage of Saint George within owre Castall of Wyndesour, by us begoune of newe to bee buylded,' a request that was naturally complied with, and his body and that of his queen lie on the north side of the High Altar in the chantry chapel he had there built for that purpose. It was not until later reigns that the chapel assumed its present form. Henry VII. added the stone roof of the nave, formerly of wood, and Henry VIII. set his seal on the building with the beautiful roof of the central crossing. The earlier chapel of Henry III. was marvellously equipped with rich ornaments, jewels, vestments, books, and relics, many of which found their way to the new building of Edward IV. The relics included bones said to be those of St. Bartholomew, St. Thomas the Apostle, St. George, St. Thomas of Canterbury, St. Thomas of Hereford, St. David, and St. William of York, in addition to part of the jawbone of St. Mark containing fourteen teeth!

Upon entering St. George's Chapel the visitor cannot fail to be impressed with its strong contrasts, the undimmed brightness of the nave, and the gorgeous colouring of the choir, heightened by the rich-hued banners of the Knights of the Garter. It causes no surprise to learn that no more perfect specimen of Perpendicular work exists than is to be found in this beautiful building. In length 232 feet by 66 feet in breadth (104 feet including the transepts), its splendour is in inverse ratio to its size. Profuse in its ornamentation—the rich tracery of the roof is a dream—the chapel is one that should be seen rather than described. Viewed from the organ loft the whiteness of the nave is relieved by the fine west window, restored by Dean Lockman in 1774. Its eighty compartments—each 6 feet high by 1 foot 5 inches wide—contain ancient glass collected from different parts of the building, supplemented by modern work. The subjects are kings, bishops, patriarchs, and other eminent characters. There are seven chapels: the Chapel of the Salutation of the B. V. M. (or Beaufort), Urswick, that of the Annunciation, Rutland, Lincoln, Oliver King's, Braye, and the Hastings and Oxenbridge chantries. These do not call for detailed comment in an article which is justified by its musical import. But reference must be made to three magnificent altar tombs: one, in the Lincoln chapel, to the Earl of Lincoln (died 1584), an eminent statesman in the reigns of Henry VIII., Edward VI. and Elizabeth. He is represented with his countess, lying upon a mat. Another, in the Rutland Chapel, to Sir George Manners, Lord Roos, K.G., and his wife Anne, daughter of Anne Duchess of Exeter, eldest sister of Edward IV.; and third, to Sir Charles Somerset, K.G., Lord Herbert of Gower, with his wife Elizabeth, daughter of William Earl of Huntingdon, in the Beaufort chapel. The Braye chapel was founded by Sir Richard Braye (died 1502), who built the beautiful roof of the nave and is buried here without a tomb. The chapel is painted with braves for flax (his badge), in allusion to his name.

The angel choir—so called from the carved representations of angels singing, which are found at the base of every window in the clerestory and thronging up the sides and over the crest of the east window—baffles description. The richness of the architecture and splendour of the dark oak carving are enhanced by the effect of the swords, helmets, banners, and mantles of the Knights of the Garter that are suspended over the stalls. The Sovereign's stall is on the immediate right on entering the choir, and that of the Prince of Wales on the left. Brass plates on the back of each stall record, in Norman French, the names, arms, and dates of former knights, the whole forming a unique collection of English brasses and enamel. The oldest plates are those of the knights of Edward III., transferred here from the older chapel stalls. Other plates are those of Charles the Bold, Duke of Burgundy, brother-in-law of the builder of the chapel, James V. of Scotland, and Prince Rupert, and, to come to modern times, Napoleon III. of France and William I. of Germany. As has been happily expressed, 'All that is noble and illustrious in the history of the country is here commemorated in unparalleled splendour, continued from the 14th century to the present day.'

Above the altar on the north side of the choir and flush with the easternmost wall is the Royal Closet, built by Henry VIII. It was from this excellent coign of vantage that Queen Victoria witnessed the marriage of King Edward VII., as Prince of Wales, to Princess Alexandra of Denmark, on March 10, 1863. Immediately below this closet are the gothic iron screen gates of the tomb of King Edward IV., their elaborate iron tracery being among the finest existing products of the hammer. The east window, filled with stained glass by the Dean and Chapter as a memorial of the Prince Consort, happily replaced a semi-opaque picture, by West, of the Resurrection.

In the choir rest the remains of Henry VIII. buried, by his own desire, 'by his true and loving wife, Queen Jane.' The funeral procession from London was four miles long, and the hearse was nine storeys high, which at Windsor was increased to thirteen storeys! Here, too, rests all that is mortal of Charles I. 'In silence and sorrow' that ill-fated monarch was buried on a wintry day (February 8, 1649) without any service, as the Governor of the Castle would not allow Bishop Juxon to bury the king after the service of the Church of England; but although nothing was read at the grave, the bishop's lips were seen to move. Anthony à Wood records that 'as the King's Body was brought out from St. George's Hall, the sky was serene and clear; but presently it began to snow, and the snow fell so fast, that by the time the corpse came to the west end of the Royal chapel, the black velvet pall was all white (the colour of innocence), being thickly covered with snow.' Other kings of England who have found a last resting-place in the chapel are Edward IV. (1483), the 'White Rose,' on the north side of the high altar, and Henry VI. (1471), the 'Red Rose,' on the south side. In the royal vault beneath the adjoining Albert Memorial Chapel, formerly known as the Wolsey Tombe House, and built by Henry VII.—are buried George III., George IV., and William IV.; and in the chapel itself are the tombs of Prince Leopold, Duke of Albany, and of the late Prince Albert Victor, Duke of Clarence.

Let us for a moment or two leave the chapel and make the acquaintance of the Library of the Dean and Chapter. This occupies an ancient, spacious and timber-roofed room, which is really the old dining hall of the minor canons and lay clerks. Here, carefully arranged in show-cases, are to be seen some of the treasures of the collection, including a Caxton. The following are some of the 15th and 16th century printed books:

The Mirror of the World. Folio. Printed by Caxton, at Westminster, in 1481. This work—the first book printed with wood-cuts in England—is a kind of 15th century Encyclopædia, giving information upon all the sciences at that time known.

De Consolatione Philosophiæ. Boëtius. Louvain. 1487.

Legenda Aurea. Strasburg. 1496.

Decretals of Gregory IX. Kerver. Paris. 1505.

Decretals and Constitutions of Boniface VIII. and Clement V. Kerver. Paris. 1513.

New Testament. Tyndale and Matthew. I. Deye and W. Seres. London. 1548.

De Confessione Amanitiss. By John Gower. T. Berthele. London. 1554. His only English poem.

Portiforium seu Breviarium ad usum Ecclesie Sarisburiensis. Pars Estivalis. London. 1555.

There is a tradition that the 'Merry Wives of Windsor' was acted in this identical room in the presence of Queen Elizabeth by the men and children of her majesty's choir. The choir library contains a good collection of old church music, including many MS. services and anthems, and an interesting old organ book in which is the Benedicite (in score) to Child's Service in G. A copy of Tomkins's 'Musica Deo Sacra' (1668) also finds a place.

To return to the Chapel. The earliest known organ was built at, or soon after, the Restoration by Ralph Dallam, a younger member of the well-known artificers of that name. It was a other left on the Principal and Diapasons. Thus even at that early period, means were taken to introduce variety of effect into the restricted range of a limited number of registers governed by a single set of keys. Moreover the compound and the trumpet stops (then novelties) were both made to draw in halves at middle C, whereby the treble portion could be used independently of the bass, so that a solo could be played prominently with the right hand and a soft accompaniment thereto with the left, while the solo stop could suddenly be shut off with the foot.

Compass: GG, short octaves, to d, 5 = 52 notes.

This one-manual organ had two shifting movements: one took off all but the Diapasons; the erection of this Dallam organ and now made public for the first time, will be read with interest:

22 Oct., 1660. Mr. Dallame to make an organ for the Church and to have 600*l*. for it: one hundred whereof he must have at London when Dr. Browne comes to Towne.

[Dr. Browne came to Towne (i.e. Windsor) and was present at the next chapter, held 31 Oct.]

29 Nov., 1661. Mr. Doggerell is to guild the organ and the organ case. He is first to begin with the Choir organ, and if his workmanship in that be approved, then he is to proceed on the Great organ. If not, he is to lose all his labour and charges. But if he finish the whole (upon approbation of his guilding the Choir organ) he is to have for all 120*l.*, if men judicious in that art shall judge he deserves it.

- 27 April, 1663. Ordered that 20*l.* be given to Mr. Dalham for his faithful discharge of the trust committed to him in making the Organ, he promising to keep it in order for a full twelve months at his own charge. Ratts, dust, raine and playing without wind destroyths organs.
- 19 March, 1672. Ordered that the organ be mended.

The extensive restoration and transformation of the building, at the instigation of King George III. in 1789, included the removal of the old organ, which was sold to Windsor Parish Church. In its place an entirely new three-manual instrument was supplied by the most eminent builder of the day, Samuel Green, to the following specification :

| GREAT ORGAN (11 stops).    |    |                                |     |

This instrument was long celebrated as one of the most effective of the older cathedral or collegiate chapel organs. In its original state it was interesting as being in all probability the best specimen of Green's handiwork. We are told that 'the material of its metal pipes was of unusual excellence, and they contained nearly throughout fifty per cent. of pure tin. The wood pipes were nearly all of red deal, while the voicing of the whole possessed that peculiar grace and suavity for which Green's style of tone was celebrated.' The Great organ was enclosed in a large general swell, which was removed in 1836.

The opening of the organ — on Sunday, October 17, 1790, in the presence of King George III. and his Consort—is thus recorded in the St. James's Chronicle of October 16 to 19, 1790 :

Yesterday, at the opening of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, a great number of amateurs in the musical world were admitted. Mr. Aylward opened the organ ; after which the Doctors Dupuis and Arnold exhibited their great abilities, much to the satisfaction of their Majesties, and a very noble and polite audience.

The sermon, by Dr. Langford, was well adapted to the circumstances of the day, tending to prove and establish, from the practice and ordinances of all ages, the respect and veneration which is due to the house of God.

After treating his subject with great perspicuity and elegance, he very modestly and respectfully complimented his Majesty on his liberality and taste ; in reference to the building, emphatically observing—' If magnificence can add to devotion, in the words of the Scripture, the Collegiate Church may now be considered as THE BEAUTY OF HOLINESS.'

Further information in respect of the opening service is furnished by the Public Advertiser of Tuesday, October 19, 1790 :

A Symphony, previous to the Anthem, was executed in a masterly style by Mr. Aylward, the Organist ; and an excellent anthem was sung by Messrs. Samman, Sale, senior and junior, choristers of the chapel, and Mr. Page as a voluntary assistant, whose exertions and great taste demand every encomium.

The organ, of Gothic exterior construction, built by Green, is allowed to be a noble production of genius.

There was a great concourse of people to attend the opening of the chapel, and many of the musical cognoscenti were of the number to be witnesses of the putting up of the new organ.

The Green organ was entirely reconstructed by Messrs. Gray & Davison in 1855, during the régime of the late Sir George Elvey. Three new stops were added to the pedal organ, its compass being one octave and-a-half from FFFF. Elvey not only favoured F organs, but he retained at this time the tuning by unequal temperament !

In 1882, upon the appointment of Sir Walter Parratt, the instrument was modernised and brought into line with all English and Continental organs by the adoption of the C compass. At the same time the keyboards were placed on the north side of the handsome and dignified old case, so that the player could command a view of both choir organ, or chayne organe, as it was called in olden times. The following is the specification of the organ, of four manuals, as it stands at present :

ST. GEORGE'S CHAPEL, WINDSOR, FROM THE SOUTH-WEST.
(Photograph by Messrs. J. Russell & Sons, Windsor.)

Among the lay-clerks of Windsor who have made their mark, it may suffice to give the names of three: Michael Wise and Thomas Tudway, (1664), and Charles Lockey, the original tenor in Mendelssohn's 'Elijah.' The houses of the lay-clerks are situated in the Horseshoe Cloisters (see the photograph on p. 709) at the west end of the chapel. This quaint half-circle in the lower ward of the Castle, with its fine brickwork of pre-Tudor times, was built by Edward IV. and is, more correctly speaking, like a fetterlock, one of the royal badges.

One of the most important attributes to the choral service in cathedral or collegiate foundations is the choristers' school: so it is at Windsor. As a full account of the St. George's School was given in the Musical Times of March, 1903, there is no need to recapitulate what was then written. Suffice it to say that this excellent educational establishment, situated amid delightful surroundings under the shadow of the Castle, is in a flourishing condition under the able headmastership of Mr. G. S. Fowler, M.A. As at Worcester, the musical training which the boys are privileged to enjoy is of great value to them in their ordinary studies, and in after life. It often happens that a Windsor chorister obtains a double move at the end of the first or second term at the public school to which he goes after his voice is broken.

Within recent years scholarships have been gained by St. George's boys at Marlborough, Repton, Derby, Holt, Uppingham, Malvern, and by old boys at Oxford and Cambridge. Last term one boy obtained a scholarship at Eton and another secured an Exhibition at Felsted. The following roll of honour, all recent distinctions, speaks for itself:

- H. S. Ross, Indian Civil Service.
- C. E. Fishbourne, Member of London Traffic Board and surveying expedition in Uganda.
- N. E. Ponsoy, Organ scholar, Trinity College, Oxford.
- J. B. Johnson, Organ scholar, Selwyn College, Cambridge.
- H. G. Ley, Organist of Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford.

A great recreative feature of the St. George's Choir School is the annual play, which is entirely home-made. Everything is done on the spot without any extraneous aid whatever—libretto, music, scenery, and dresses. To repeat what was said in our previous article nearly seven years ago, 'the lines have fallen in pleasant places' to the boys of St. George's School, Windsor Castle.

The names of nine of former choristers must be given, if only as a stimulus to those boys who now lift up their voices in the beautiful building to which they are attached:

- John Marbeck, } both organists of St. George's Chapel.
- William Sexton, }
- Dr. Ben. Rogers, organist of Magdalen College, Oxford, and one of the predecessors there of Sir Walter Parratt.
- John Travers, organist of the Chapel Royal.
- G. Townshend Smith, organist of Hereford Cathedral.
- Dr. Haydn Keeton, organist of Peterborough Cathedral.
- Dr. Walford Davies, organist of the Temple Church.
- Mr. Hubert Hunt, organist of Bristol Cathedral.
- Dr. G. F. Huntley, organist of St. Peter's Church, Eaton Square.

Before leaving the subject of the choristers we must quote a warrant of Queen Elizabeth, in which, while bearing testimony to the excellence of the choral service at Windsor, her majesty authorized the commandeering of boys from other chapels in order to maintain that reputation:

Elizabeth by the grace of god Quene of England France and Ireland Defender . . . Where as or Colledge Royall of or blessed ladye & Saynt George wth in or Castell of Wyndesore hathe in the dayes of or father... bene as well... furnysbed of well Singine men & Children... Another curious sidelight on the choristers of olden times is furnished by the following extract (in translation) of a bill of complaint in 1527, the original being in Norman French, preserved in the Record Office. Unfortunately the present, here printed for the first time, is undoubtedly that of the 15th century:

To the very reverend Father in God our most gracious Lord, the Bishop of Winchester, Chancellor of England.

Complaint of the King's 'poor chaplains, vicars, and College of the free chapel of our Lord the King in the castle of Wyndesore, which is of the foundation of the progenitors of the said Lord the King, and of his grace.' They set forth that the visitation and correction of the said college and of all such colleges 'belongs to the most gracious Lord, as Chancellor of England,' and that one William Ponger, formerly one of the vicars of the said college, had the administration and receipt of the sums of money of the goods of the said college, in the name of the said Dean and College, in order to purchase lands for the choristers ['querestours'] living in the said college, according to the statutes and ordinances of the same. But now, so it is, 'most gracious Lord,' the said Ponger has made one John Ponger, his brother, executor of his will, and died in debt to the said choristers to the amount of £20 5s. 3d. as appears in detail by a schedule annexed,* his account not being† [made up?] to the said Dean and College. The complainants therefore pray the Chancellor to consider the premises, and that £20 5s. 3d. be added to the amount due from the said William to the said choristers, as in the said schedule is contained, and further to cause the said John Ponger to come before him that he may be examined as to the debt abovesaid, and, upon his examination, so to direct that the said Dean and College may have the said amount in order to pay the said choristers for their maintenance, and this 'for God's sake and as a work of charity.'

* Not now attached to the bill of complaint. † A word illegible.

The roll of the known organists of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, is headed by a very famous musician and theologian—John Marbeck (or Merbeck). At the age of eight, he was a chorister and afterwards a lay-clerk of the Chapel. He is said to have become organist in 1541. A strong Calvinist and a militant opponent of the Roman faith, Marbeck, on March 16, 1543, for endeavouring to supersede the Latin tongue in religious worship by this means. He was sent in custody to London and kept in irons at the Marshalsea Prison. On July 26, 1544, Marbeck and three other Windsor men—Robert Testwood, a lay-clerk, 'well liked for his voice and cunning,' Henry Filmer and Anthony Peerson—were condemned to suffer death on the following day.

is brought before a tribunal of Commissioners and answer for his writings against the Six Articles on account of his Concordance to the Bible English, a work upon which he had been gaged for six years. For the preparation of this work Bishop Gardiner sharply reprimanded him

But Bishop Gardiner, in regard for Marbeck's musical gifts (so it is said), obtained a royal pardon for him and he was set at liberty. Under the shadow of the Castle the three other men suffered martyrdom at the stake for conscience' sake.

Six years after this black deed in the history of Windsor appeared the great work of Marbeck's life, the first complete Concordance to the Bible in the English language, thus entitled :

A CONCORDĀCE, | that is to saie, a worke where- | in by the ordre of the letters of the |

as it | is | there expressed | or menci- | oned.

Essay x ii ij [Isaiah xiv, 27.]

who is able to resist.

Anno. M. D. L.

The dedication of the work—900 folio pages, each page divided into three columns—reads as follows :

To the moste high and mightie Prince, Edward the vi. by the grace of God, Kyng of Englande, Fraunce and Irelande, defender of the faith, and of the Church of Englāde and also of Irelande in yearth the supreme hed: your most humble lovyng and obedient subject Jhon Marbek, wisheth al health and honor, with moste prosperous and victorious reijne.

Marbeck goes on to describe himself as being 'destitute bothe of learning and eloquēce, yea, and suche a one as in maner never tasted the swetnes of learned Letters, but altogether brought up in your highnes College at Wyndsore, in the study of Musike and playng on Organs, wherein I consumed vainly the greatest part of my life.' Marbeck's 'A Booke of Notes and Commonplaces gathered out of divers writers' contains some curious headings, e.g., 'How dauncing is a cursed mirth'; 'Of the beast the woman sat on'; 'What a cherub is'; 'Of the beast called Booz,' &c.

Marbeck occupies a very important place in English Church Music as the author of 'The Booke of Common Praier noted,' published in 1550, which is an adaptation of the plain chant of the earlier rituals to the first Prayer Book of Edward VI. (1549). A hymn, for three voices, composed by him is given by Hawkins in his 'History of Music' (p. 451, Novello edition); there are some MSS. in the library of Peterhouse, Cambridge, and a portion of a five-part Mass is in the British Museum (Add. MS. 11586). The date of Marbeck's death and place of burial are unknown.

There is reason to assume that George Thexton was joint organist with Marbeck, judging from the following extract in a document headed 'Iniunctions newly given by the Kinges Ma<sup>ties</sup> Commissioners the xxvjth of Octob. anno regni Regis Edwardi Sexti, &c., for Reformatiōn of certeyn abuses':

And whereas we understand that John Merbeck and George Thexton, hath of your graunt, fees appointed them severally for playing upon organs. WE take ordre that the sayd John and George shall enjoy their severall offices during their Lyves, if they continue in that Colledge, in as large and ample a maner as if organ plaing had still continued in the Church.

Richard Farrant became Master of the Children of St. George's Chapel in 1564, after he had been a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal in London. He is also said to have been a lay-vicar and organist at Windsor, where he occupied 'a dwelling house within the Castle, called the Old Commons.' On November 5, 1569, he was re-appointed a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal, and held that office till his death, November 30, 1580. To his creative credit can be placed the anthems 'Call to remembrance' and 'Hide not Thou Thy face,' but the beautiful setting of 'Lord, for Thy tender mercies' sake,' long assigned to him, is attributed by earlier writers to John Hilton.

John Mundy—a pupil of his father, William Mundy, a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal—began his reign of forty-four years at Windsor in 1586. In the same year he took the degree of Bachelor of Music at Cambridge. He had previously been organist of Eton College. In 1594 Mundy published 'Songs and Psalmes, composed into 3, 4, and 5 parts, for the delight of such as either love or learne Musicke.' He contributed a madrigal, 'Lightly she tripped o'er the dales' to 'The Triumphs of Oriana' (1601). A programmatic piece by him is contained in the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book—a Fantasia in which he attempts to describe successively: Fair weather, Lightning, Thunder, Calm weather, Lightning, Thunder, Fair weather, Lightning, Thunder, Fair weather, Lightning, Thunder, A clear day.

Of this meteorological medley, Professor Niecks in his valuable book on 'Programme Music' says:

The tone-painting here is by no means striking, indeed is of a very primitive and childlike nature. Without the labels no one could possibly recognize the lightning and thunder, and hardly the fair weather and the clear day. There is, however, a contrast between the character of the figures—the rolling bass figure expressive of thunder, the brisk figures of disjunct notes expressive of lightning, and the quieter gait of the rest.

Mundy died at Windsor in 1630, and was buried in the cloisters of St. George's Chapel.

'Nathaniel Giles, Dr. of mewsicke died y<sup>e</sup> 24th day of Janewary & was ewryed the 29th of the same month, 1633.' Thus is the death of the next organist phonetically recorded in the Registers of the Chapel. Born about 1550, and a son of Thomas Giles, organist of St. Paul's Cathedral, Nathaniel Giles (or Gyles) was in succession chorister and clerk of Magdalen College, Oxford. He was appointed Master of the Children of the Chapel Royal in 1597, and died, as recorded above, in 1633. The terms of his Windsor appointment are thus recorded in the Ashmolean MS. 1125:

The Dean and Canons of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, Deed dated 1st October, 1595, nominate Nathaniel Giles, B.M., to be Clerk in the Free Chapel and one of the players on the Organs there, and also to be Master Instructor, Director, Creonsor, or Governor of the ten Choristers, and to have the boarding, clothing, and finding of the same, agreeing to give him an annuity of £81 6s. 8d. and a dwelling-house within the castle called The Old Commons, wherein John Mundie did lately inhabit, with all pertunances, as one Richard Farrante enjoyed the same. In consideration whereof the said Nathaniel shall yearly pay the said Dean and Canons twenty-six shillings and eightpence at the Feast of St. Michael only for the rent of said house. The stipend to be paid monthly by the Treasurer over and beside all other gifts, rewards, or benevolence that may be given to the Choristers for singing of Ballads, Plays, and the like, and the said Dean and Canons agree to do all necessary repairs to said house. And also that the said Nathaniel shall have the placing and displacing of the ten choristers: also such reasonable leave of absence as the statutes allow. And in consideration of this yearly stipend, he shall discharge the said room of Clerk and Organist, and also that he shall instruct and teach the said ten choristers in the knowledge of music, that is to say in singing of Pricksong and Descant, and bring up such as be apt to the Instrument; and that he shall find them sufficient meat and drink, apparel, bedding and lodging at his own costs within the New Commons lately appointed for them; and that he shall find a sufficient deputy during the times of sickness and absence.

Giles was buried in the north aisle of St. George's Chapel, but the statements on his gravestone regarding the length of his appointments are erroneous!

Except during the Commonwealth period—1644 to 1660, when the choral service and organ were suppressed—Dr. William Child held office for sixty-five years, 1632 to 1697. Born at Bristol in 1606, he held, in addition to his Windsor appointment, the organistship of the Chapel Royal, was private musician to Charles II., and chanter of the King's Chapel. He re-paved the choir of St. George's Chapel at his own expense. The origin of this apparent act of benevolence is thus given in the Chapter Records :

Dr. Child having been organist for some years to the king's chapel in K. Ch. 2nds time had great arrears of his salary due to him, to the value of about £500, which he and some of our canons discoursing of, Dr. C. slited (sic), and said he would be glad if anybody would give him £5 and some bottles of wine for ; which the canons accepted of, and

One of the earliest, dated November 20, 1666, quaintly records his habiliments :

Warrant to deliver to William Child, who is appointed musician in place of Alphonso Ferabosco, deceased, the following materials for his livery :

Fourteen yards of chamblett for a gowne, 3 yards of black velvet to gare the same gown, one furre of Bodge for the same price £4, 8 yards of damask for a jaquet and three yards of velvet for a doublet.

The above to be delivered to him yearly at every Feast of St. Andrew during his life ; the making also to be paid for out of the Great Wardrobe.

The burial of Dr. Child is thus entered in the Registers of St. George's Chapel :

Wm. Child, buried in woollen, March 26th, 1697.

accordingly had articles made with hand and seal. After this King James 2 coming to the crown, paid off his Brs. arrears ; wch. much affecting Dr. Child, and he repining at, the canons generously released his bargain, on condition of his paving the body of the choir wth. marble, wch. was accordingly done, as is commemorated on his gravestone.

Mr. John E. West, in his 'Cathedral Organists,' says that Child's Service in D was a favourite of Charles I. It is more than usually intricate for music of that period, and was supposed to have been written as a 'teaser' for his choir, who had previously ridiculed the simplicity of his music.

There are several references to Dr. Child in the Rev. H. C. de Lafontaine's 'The King's Musick.'

His epitaph reads :

Hearc lyes y bodey of Will. Childe, Doctor of Musick, one of y organists of y Chapple Royale at Whitehall, & of His Majestie's Free Chapel at Windsor 65 years. He was born in Bristol, and dyed heare y 23rd of March, 1697, in y 91st year of his age. He paved the body of the Quire.

* These lines were set as a glee by Robert Hudson, Mus. B. Almoner of St. Paul's, 1773-1793.

Two interesting extracts may here find a place. They show that Dr. Ben. Rogers was either an assistant to or a colleague of Dr. William Child:

1 Sept., 1662. Ordered that inquiry be made for a fitt man to be organist with Mr. Child, and the salary of two clerks pay now paid to Mr. Child to be divided between them, unless Mr. Child shall give assurance of better attendance at his office.

21 Oct., 1662. Mr. Benjamin Rogers is elected a clarke of this chappell, and in consideration of his being able to play upon the organ and cornett, it is agreed by chapter that he receive yearly the pay of a clerk and a half, and also shall receive 20 shillings a month for every month he plays upon the organs in Mr. Child's absence, to be deducted out of Mr. Child's pay. To which Mr. Child freely consented in the said chapter.

Mention of the names of the next five organists may suffice*: John Goldwin (or Golding), Francis Pigott, junr., Edward Webb, Dr. Theodore Aylward (Gresham Professor of Music), and William Sexton, whose combined régimes cover a period of 127 years, from 1697 to 1824. The epitaph on the tomb of Dr. Aylward, in the Rutland Chapel, may, however, be quoted:

Aylward, adieu! my pleasing, gentle friend,
 Regret and honour on thy grave attend:
 Thy rapid hand harmonious skill possess,
 And moral harmony enriched thy breast;
 For heaven most freely to thy life assign'd
 Benevolence, the music of the mind;
 Mild as thy nature all thy mortal scene,
 Thy death was easy, and thy life serene.

Special mention must be made of Karl Friedrich Horn, page to the Marquis of Stafford! and organist of the chapel from 1824 to 1830, by reason of his association with Samuel Wesley in the latter's enthusiastic propaganda of the music of John Sebastian Bach in this country. The details of this are contained in a series of articles on 'Bach's Music in England,' which appeared in the Musical Times from September to December, 1896. As an additional item of information on that interesting subject, Sir Walter Parratt has in his possession a transcript, in Horn's handwriting, of the whole of Book II. of Bach's '48,' written in 'pothooks and hangers' that doubtless called forth the approval of 'Old Sam,' his vigorous colleague in the cause of 'THE MAN,' as Wesley called his great idol. The size of the volume is large folio. That it should have come into the possession of so true a Bach lover as Sir Walter Parratt, one of Horn's successors at Windsor, is a most fortuitous circumstance.

In 1835—in succession to Highmore Skeats, junior, who had held office during the previous five years—Sir George Job Elvey began his long reign of forty-seven years. Born at Canterbury, March 27, 1816, and a chorister in the cathedral here, Elvey was only nineteen years of age when he was appointed to the important post of organist of St. George's Chapel, Windsor. In 1837 he was appointed private organist to Queen Victoria on her accession to the throne, and from her majesty he received the honour of knighthood in 1871. He conducted the Windsor Glee and Madrigal Society, and he is widely known by his anthems and hymn-tunes, especially his 'St. George's, Windsor,' associated with the harvest hymn, 'Come, ye thankful people, come.'

The 'Life and reminiscences of George J. Elvey,' written by Lady Elvey (Sampson Low, 1894), contains much interesting information concerning the musical life of Windsor during the greater part of the Victorian era. Sir George Elvey died December 9, 1893, and was buried in the catacombs, near the west end of the Chapel at which he had so long served as organist and master of the choristers.

Sir Walter Parratt succeeded Sir George Elvey on the latter's retirement in 1882. As a biographical sketch of the Master of the King's Musick was given in the issue of this journal for July, 1902, it is not necessary to recapitulate the incidents of Sir Walter's distinguished career. It must, however, be recorded that in 1908 he was elected Professor of Music in the University of Oxford in succession to Sir Hubert Parry, who resigned that important office. Suffice it to say that Sir Walter Parratt, in his duties of organist and successor of St. George's Chapel, worthily maintains all the best traditions of English Church Music, and that in his accompaniments and voluntaries he exercises an artistic restraint that promotes reverence and is worthy of all emulation.

For kind help in the preparation of this article the best thanks of the writer are due to Sir Walter Parratt, M.V.O.; to Mr. Geoffrey Parratt and Mr. G. S. Fowler, M.A., for the photographs they have kindly and specially taken; and to Messrs. Russell & Sons for their photographs.

BEETHOVEN SKETCHES HITHERTO UNPUBLISHED.

Much has been written about Beethoven's sketch-books, and about his peculiar method of composing. The former offer as it were photographs of his thoughts. Owing to his succinct and at times mysterious method of recording those thoughts, also in large measure to the unfortunate dismemberment of many of those sketch-books, it is scarcely possible to trace the full development of any of his works from its earliest to its latest stage. We can, however, see—and this in itself is a lesson to composers—that Beethoven was continually trying to transcribe as faithfully as possible the musical ideas within him. For the moment, however, I am offering a striking illustration of a peculiarity in his method of working.

In a letter to his friend Wegeler—dated June 29, 1800 or 1801—Beethoven speaks of his composing three or four works at the same time, and this statement is confirmed by the sketch-books. For instance, among sketches for the second act of 'Leonore' are found others relating to the Pianoforte sonata in F minor (Op. 57), known as the 'Appassionata,' and to the song 'An die Hoffnung.' Again, among other sketches for his opera, we come across some for the Pianoforte sonata in F (Op. 54), also for the triple concerto (Op. 56). Several sheets filled with sketches, in the possession of Miss A. E. Willmott, offer still further illustration; and these, by her kind permission, I am about to describe. They show the composer engaged on no fewer than four works at the same time; moreover, they contain important and hitherto unpublished sketches for one of the composer's greatest works, namely, the Pianoforte concerto in E flat (Op. 73). The sketches for the first movement of the concerto begin:

This refers to the passage in the development section, beginning on page 25 of the full score of the Breitkopf & Härtel critical edition. From there, down to page 32, all the music is clearly sketched out. Here are two short extracts:

and

* In these autograph sketches no clefs are indicated. The work however, being very familiar, readers will easily recognise the passages to which the illustrations refer.

For the Finale we first find:

followed by a sketch of the principal theme. The tutti (score, page 62) is given:

but soon after comes:

which figure the composer, however, discarded. The brief sketches for this Finale end with some for the arpeggio chords (score, page 74).

On the next page we first see:

and soon after:

The first refers, of course, to the chords before the cadenza-like passage leading to the Allegro con brio of the Pianoforte phantasia (Op. 77), and the second to the chords before the Adagio a little later on. Close to the above comes:

showing that the Allegro con brio section just mentioned was in his mind, and the 'etc. somewhat developed,' that it was to be based on the figure given; and this, as the printed version proves, was actually carried out.

Then the four bars of the Adagio are sketched and even the descending scale of bar 5; there is also an indication that these bars are to be repeated a tone higher. After a sketch of the B major section we find a specimen, and not a solitary one, of Beethoven suddenly thinking of the coda of his composition. We have first:

* The / and p are written in pencil.

ed 'zum Ende,' followed by:

parison with the printed version will enable readers to see the points of resemblance and difference between the two.

ethoven now goes, or rather carries his mind, to the section which follows the repeated rit. bars, for we have:

1 will be at once recognized. Soon after rit.:

14 indicates a sudden change. That group of semiquavers belongs to the closing section of Adagio of the 'Phantasie' for pianoforte, and orchestra (Op. 80), of which there is a sketch. It is followed by:

15 a little further on the same line:

the latter being the upper part of the pianoforte in the Finale.

we now find him sketching out at length, and clearly, the first section of Op. 77, and following Allegro down to the double bars. 16, marking it 'le dernier,' he begins to evolve the next section after the bars (Ex. 9) marked as ausgeführt.' But previously we come across reference to still another work:

These bars will be found in the exposition section of the Pianoforte sonata in G (Op. 79). Thus we have sketches for four works: the E flat Concerto, the two Phantasies mentioned, and the Pianoforte sonata, all of which were, as shown, more or less in his thoughts at the same time.

Though these sheets further confirm Beethoven's statement, it is not their sole point of interest. In Nottebohm's 'Zweite Beethoveniana,' sketches are also given of the same four works to which reference has just been made. This fact naturally suggests the question, Can any connection between Miss Willmott's and Herr Nottebohm's sketches be traced? In 'Zweite Beethoveniana' (Art. 47, p. 495), Nottebohm mentions a sketch-book containing many sketches for the first movement of the E flat Concerto (Op. 73). These he regards as the earliest; moreover he considers that Beethoven used this book from the middle of 1808 to the beginning of 1809. The Phantasie (Op. 80), of which there are also sketches, was produced at the concert given by Beethoven in the Theater an der Wien on December 22, 1808. The sketches for that work were certainly made in 1808, for we have Beethoven's own testimony that the music was composed shortly before the date of the concert, and so quickly that he had not time to write out a score.*

From the brief description I have given of the Concerto sketches on Miss Willmott's MSS., it will be evident that they are of later date than those given by Nottebohm. No positive statement can be made about the sketches for the Phantasie, though there is every reason to believe that those belonging to Miss Willmott are also later than Nottebohm's.

In Art. 29, 'Sketches of the year 1809' ('Zweite Beethoveniana,' p. 255ff), two sets of sketches are described. Most of those in the first set belong, says the writer, 'to the first movement of the E flat Concerto (Op. 73), some closely related to, others agreeing exactly with, the printed version.' The same can be said of the sketches I have described. Of his other set, Nottebohm remarks (p. 260) that they contain sketches of all three movements of the Concerto, principally of the last movement: and moreover, that all the sketches show that the work was well advanced. He also notes written sentences between 'sketches for the Concerto,' as follows:

Was können sie noch mehr verlangen—sie haben mir den Bedienten für den Herrn erhalten—sind sie noch nicht schadlos Welcher Ersatz ! ! ! ! ! Welch herrlicher Tausch ! ! ! ! !

[Pray what more can you desire. You have received my servant in place of the master. Are you not yet indemnified? What a return ! ! ! ! ! What a noble exchange ! ! ! ! !] with the words 'sind sie noch nicht schadlos' scratched out.

And the second:

Beethoven ist kein Bedienter—sie wollten einen Bedienten den haben sie nun.

[Beethoven is no servant—you wanted a servant, and now you have one.]

* Letter to Breitkopf & Härtel, 'Baden, on 21st of summer month, 1810.'

The first appears among the concerto sketches belonging to Miss Willmott, so the sheet on which it occurs had at any rate been seen by Nottebohm. Of the second, however, there is no trace. Again, Nottebohm quotes a sketch of the opening of the slow movement, but there is no reference to that movement among Miss Willmott's MSS.

In describing his second set, Nottebohm gives sketches relating to the other three works—the Phantasie (Op. 77), the Sonata (Op. 79), and the Phantasie (Op. 80)—and these, if compared with Miss Willmott's sketches for the same works, point very strongly to the fact that her MSS. are later than the Nottebohm, for in the latter

1. The two sketches for Op. 79 refer to the first eight bars of the first movement ;

2. The sketches from Op. 77 undoubtedly show a less advanced stage ; and

3. Nottebohm has a sketch of the opening of the introductory movement for pianoforte of Op. 80, whereas, as shown above, the Willmott sketches concern the latter part of that movement.

In the third Beethoven-Heft, Year 3, 1903/1904, 2 March Heft of Die Musik, Julius Levin described some interesting sketches of the first and second movements of the E flat Concerto on sheets in the possession of M. Malherbe. If then the Nottebohm, Levin, and Miss Willmott's sketches could be collated, a fuller and more consistent account could be given of Beethoven's preparatory work before his great concerto was ready for publication.

Occasional Notes.

From the Musical Times of sixty years ago :

DEATH OF CHOPIN, THE PIANIST.—The French papers announce this event as having happened on the 17th instant. M. Frederic Chopin died of a disease of the chest, at the comparatively early age of thirty-nine. The Athenaeum informs us that 'His funeral obsequies were to be celebrated in the church of La Madeleine in Paris, where the Requiem of Mozart was to be performed, in accordance with his own earnest desire.'

Two instances of public offices of distinction being filled by musicians, professional and amateur, are recorded with congratulations to those who have been thus honoured. Mr. George Riseley has been made High Sheriff of his native city of Bristol, and Mr. Ernest E. Cooper, chairman of the Committee of Management of the Royal Academy of Music, and a member of the Musicians' Company, has been elected Alderman of the Ward of Cornhill in the City of London.

The popularity of Elgar's Symphony continues unabated. No fewer than twenty-seven performances in England were announced to be given during the past month, in addition to performances at Berlin, under Nikisch, and at Budapest, under Stephen Kerner.

Miss Margueritta Hatton, daughter of the composer of 'To Anthea,' writes :

I am delighted with the article on my late father in this month's Musical Times, which I could not have improved by any contribution to it. I am glad to learn about the name Liptrott in the British Museum catalogue, for my father's second name is spelt with two 's'. I send you a copy of his certificate of baptism. I have heard my mother say that Liptrott was the name of a godfather. My father was christened at St. Peter's Parish Church, Liverpool. A relative told me that on the same page of the baptism register was the name of Mr. Gladstone, which the parish clerk wrote me was correct. As to Liptrott, I know it had two 's's ; but I find that parish clerks are very careless as to names, as on writing (for a relative) for another copy of the certificate, I found it had only one 's'. I was very surprised to see Whitechapel instead of Concert Street, as I always told the latter was the name of the street in which my father was born.

Subjoined is the copy of the baptismal record which Miss Hatton refers.

Newcastle-on-Tyne is a city and county of 300,000 inhabitants, apart from the great town of Gateshead on the other side of the river and the various adjacent and populous riverside towns, yet this vast centre of population has no building suitable for the holding of its Musical Festival, not even a concert-hall worthy of the name ! The Town Hall, in which the excellent concerts of the Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union have hitherto been given, has practically and very rightly been condemned by reason of its dangerous conditions of egress. That the recent Festival committee should have had to incur an initial expense of £800 to £1,000 in order to adapt the Palace Theatre to anything approaching the requirements of a great music-making is anything but creditable to so wealthy a community as that of Tyneside. In respect of an adequate building for public meetings and concerts many a small provincial town, in proportion to its size and importance, can put to shame the great city and county of Newcastle-on-Tyne.

The first number of the Musical Antiquary, a new publication published by Mr. Henry Frowde, contains six articles of varied interest, of which 'Early Elizabethan stage music' may be specially instanced. The contributors include Mr. R. A. Streatfeild, Mr. Robert Bridges, and Mr. G. E. P. Arkwright. We wish our antiquarian contemporary all success in its future career.

Dr. Charles Harriss, with that relentless energy and enterprising zeal which characterise all his operations, has gone to Australia and New Zealand in order to work up enthusiasm in Imperial concerts.

Is there not a natural affinity between orchestral conductors and policemen? They discharge their duties in connection with the beat, and, with the exception of Mr. Safonoff, the baton is part of the equipment of an orchestral chief as it is of every constable. In his organist days, at St. Michael's Church, Chester Square, Sir Arthur Sullivan had charge of a choir of policemen, whose forceful voices led the praises of that fashionable sanctuary. With that exception—and it was a perfectly harmonious and friendly one—the connection between musicians and representatives of law and order have invariably been of a protective and, let us add, most courteous nature. So it was at Birmingham the other day, when quality of the resources employed. In this connection it is gratifying to note that the choice of Mr. Harry Evans as general conductor was an undoubted success. Indeed it may be said that the League festival in a sense 'discovered' Mr. Evans, although his ability was very well known in some circles. Sir Edward Elgar told the 250 members of the Welsh Choral Union who sang so finely at the festival, that Mr. Evans was 'a great conductor,' and he publicly repeated the eulogium at the Lord Mayor's luncheon. May the League bring forward many other men of talent! But if it is to fulfil its mission it must have the ungrudging support of many patriotic music-lovers.

textet, including a serjeant, of the city police formed impromptu guard of honour to Dr. Hans Richter as he was leaving the Town Hall. Mr. Sydney J. Loeb happened to be on the spot with his camera, and the result is shown in the accompanying photograph which we are enabled to reproduce. In giving Mr. Loeb permission for the publication of this excellent and unique photograph, the genial conductor wrote: 'Not arrested, but protected!'

On another page we report the first festival given under the auspices of the Musical League, at Liverpool, on September 24 and 25. The League, as our readers no doubt are aware, is an organization that designs to focus the strong undercurrent of feeling shared by all liberal-minded musicians—amateur and professional—that English composers, and especially those not widely known, should have every possible use of their works being publicly performed. It need not be denied that the Liverpool festival boldly and successfully carried out the policy of the Society. Whether the works performed are destined to be heard frequently, only the future can decide, but one important consideration suggested by the festival is that its success depended very greatly upon the

The prospectus of the ninety-eighth season of the Philharmonic Society has been issued. The only work announced as 'first performance' is a Romantic Overture by Signor Mancinelli. At the first concert (on November 11) the programme (with the exception of Tchaikovsky's Pianoforte concerto and some pianoforte solos) will consist entirely of the works of Sir Edward Elgar—his Cockaigne overture, Sea pictures, Orchestral variations, and Wand of Youth suite, No. 2—all conducted by the composer. The following works by British composers are also promised in the following order: Overture 'The wreckers,' Ethel Smyth; New dramatic scena, 'Shah Jehan,' Landon Ronald; Symphony in E minor, No. 4, Parry; Symphonic poem, 'Villon,' William Wallace; Phantasy overture, W. H. Bell; Orchestral poem, 'Paris,' Delius; Romance, from suite for viola and orchestra, B. J. Dale; and Scherzo, 'Queen Mab,' Holbrooke. In addition to Sir Edward Elgar, the conductors of the concerts during the season will be Messrs. Bruno Walter, Landon Ronald, Mancinelli, Thomas Beecham, and Arthur Nikisch.

The recently organised Naval and Military Union gave its first concert at Chatham on October 20. A number of unison songs were sung with great verve by the men, who thus afforded evidence of vocal capacity from which much may be expected. The most notable performances were Sullivan's 'The long day closes' and two other glees sung by the Glee Club of the Royal Naval Barracks at Chatham. We hear that in view of the concert the members of the Club displayed so much enthusiasm that they practised no less than four evenings a week. From all this it is obvious that the Union has made an excellent and auspicious start, and we are justified in cherishing a hope that its operations will now soon spread over both Services. The new book of part-songs selected by the Council of the Union was in circulation at the concert. It is a collection of twenty men's-voice pieces mostly of a popular character, which, as stated in a preface, the Council hopes may prove useful to conductors of clubs as a guide. Lieut.-Colonel C. Hope Willis, the honorary secretary of the Union, has reason to be gratified that his labours have so far borne such fruit.

The Alexandra Palace Choral and Orchestral Society announce a performance, on November 6, of Mendelssohn's 'Hiawatha.' May we be there to hear. Next season this excellent Society, so ably conducted by Mr. Allen Gill, may be expected to produce Coleridge-Taylor's 'Elijah.'

An ably-written article on recent developments of choral technique appeared in The Times of October 16. Much of the article is quoted in our Competition Festival Record supplement. The writer traces the advance that has been made mainly to the educative efforts of properly-promoted competition festivals, and in arriving at this conclusion we believe he is perfectly justified. No one familiar with the inner workings of the majority of these schemes can fail to observe that the aim before everything is the attainment of technical perfection and, we would add, the search for true as distinct from superficial interpretations. The criticisms of adjudicators at the leading events of this kind have made it clear that the interpretation of the composer's idea is the ideal to be striven for, and that all personal display of virtuosity must be subordinated to this end. This is a thorny path to traverse, and there are the allurements of indiscriminating public applause to tempt a weak conductor to turn in other directions. But, as The Times critic shows, much is being accomplished. The really gratifying fact is the proof afforded that there are ample executive potentialities in our race merely awaiting wise and enthusiastic stimulus.

Mr. Coleridge-Taylor will again visit America in May next, when he has been invited to conduct at the Norfolk Festival, Connecticut, and to compose a new orchestral Rhapsody on negro melodies which will then be performed for the first time. The occasion is the tenth year of the existence of this festival, and by a majority of votes the works selected are Verdi's 'Requiem' and Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha.' The New York Philharmonic Orchestra, of which Gustav Mahler is conductor, has been engaged, and the choir will number 400 voices.

SOUTHPORT AND ITS MUSICAL ASSOCIATIONS.

A little more than a century ago Southport did not exist. The ground on which the town now stands was nothing more than a wilderness of sand dunes, and the prospect of even a small village being built upon such a foundation must at that time have seemed very remote, if not incredible. In 1792, one William Sutton, of the neighbouring hamlet of Churchtown, put up a sort of shanty, chiefly constructed out of some wreckage cast upon the shore. 'The Old Duke,' as Sutton was called, was looked upon as more or less a lunatic for his enterprise in providing this refreshment-house for those who came to bathe from the shore. Now, in this year of grace, 1909, Southport, with the adjoining suburbs, has a residential population of some 70,000 souls. Many business men of Liverpool, Manchester, and the great manufacturing districts round about, and their families have made their homes at this salubrious watering-place, while not a few of its inhabitants are retired folk who, amid healthy surroundings, pass the eventide of their lives after having borne the burden and heat of the day.

Should the festival visitor be fortunate enough to meet with a stiff sea breeze as he takes his 'constitutional' along the wide expanse of Southport's safe sandy shore, he will feel invigorated and his jaded nerves refreshed by the ozone tonic which is as the elixir of life; moreover, the nature-music of the wind will prove an antidote to the strange sounds he may have heard in the concert room. Setting his footsteps inland, he cannot fail to be struck by the arrangement and cleanliness of the streets and the pleasant appearance of the town. The main thoroughfare is Lord Street—thus named by the lords of the manor 'in delicate compliment to themselves'! With its fine shops and 'covered shopping way' it is often described as 'the finest street in England'; in length 1,407 yards, in width 88 yards, Lord Street has all the characteristics of an attractive boulevard, as the accompanying photograph will show.

How does Southport stand musically? The answer to this question is a very satisfactory one. In this artistic connection and in proportion to its size, Southport can hold its own with any other place in the country. The leading musical organization is the Southport Philharmonic Society, now nearly thirty years old. From its foundation and until five years ago, the Society was conducted by Mr. Henry Hudson, organist of Holy Trinity Church and the premier musician in the town. Mr. Arthur W. Speed, chorus-master of the musical festival, is now the conductor, and in March last, under his auspices, Elgar's Symphony received its first performance in Lancashire, outside Manchester; thus in this achievement did the artistic enterprise of Southport forestall Liverpool! The choir of the Philharmonic Society numbers 130 voices; the nucleus of the orchestra is formed of local players, professional and amateur, the wood-wind, brass, and percussion being supplied by the Halk Orchestra from Manchester. During the coming season the society propose to perform Elgar's 'The Dream of Gerontius' at their March concert.

The Southport Choral Society, founded about twenty years ago, is under the able direction of Mr. J. C. Clarke, organist of St. Luke's Church and conductor of the celebrated Southport Vocal Union, a male-voice choir which has won many first-prizes at various competition festivals. Mr. William Tattersall, organist of Emanuel Church, conducts the Southport Prize Choir (mixed voices), an organization that also has gained many premier competitive awards. Then there is the St. Paul's Choral Society, conducted by Mr. Hugh Wood, organist of St. Paul's Church. The Southport Orchestral Society, three-fourths of the strings being local players, was formed and conducted by Mr. Richard Aldridge, who, three years ago, was succeeded by Mr. William Rimmer, famous as a conductor in brass-band contests.

The Musical Competition movement began at Southport in 1906, Mr. William Ashton, an enthusiastic amateur, being the founder. One of its chief forces is Mr. W. C. Lord, the chairman of the committee, also an able amateur. Mr. Fred W. Jackson, the honorary secretary, is remarkable for his dauntless energy.

Indeed, he is a phenomenon in his way. Mention must also be made of the excellent open-air band performances conducted by Mr. A. E. Bartle and Mr. Rimmer, given under the auspices of the Corporation and at the expense of the town. These take place during the season in the Municipal Gardens opposite the Town Hall, sometimes to an audience of 20,000 people, amid the fairy-like surroundings of trees electrically illuminated with many-coloured lamps.

Last, but not least, the interesting story of the origin of the Southport Musical Festival must be told. This, one of the youngest of provincial music-making festivals, owes its inception to an enthusiastic musician of the town, Mr. Arthur William Speed, organist of Chapel Street Congregational Church. Mr. Speed, who has lived at Southport for nineteen years, attended the Sheffield Musical Festival of 1902, held in his native city, the Mecca of choral-singing in his country. Then and there he was fired with ambition to do something, even at a respectful distance, of the same kind in Southport, the town of his adoption. He began by augmenting his church choir to sixty-seven voices, and with a band of twenty-five players he gave a concert, the programme of which mainly consisted of Elgar's 'Coronation Ode' and Stanford's 'Revenge.' A year later he organized an Elgar night—'King Olaf,' &c.—with a choral and orchestral force of 150 performers. This led on to a natural sequence to consideration of the possibilities of a performance of 'The Dream of Gerontius,' which had so impressed him at Sheffield in 1902. Without any hesitation he determined that Elgar's first oratorio should be heard in Southport. He at once engaged Miss Muriel Foster, Mr. John Coates and

Mr. Joseph Lycett for the principal parts, with fifty members of the Hallé Orchestra, afterwards increased to sixty-seven. At this point he received a sharp pull up when he found the expenses of the concert getting past £300. So, in Mr. Speed's own words, 'to make the thing financially secure, I decided to enlist help by calling together about fifty of the leading men, socially and musically (professional and amateur) of the town to ask them to back me up in my proposed venture by guaranteeing the sum of £500. I decided to ask my old friend Dr. Henry Coward to conduct, knowing well how he would enthuse the choir. I then called the fifty gentlemen together, detailed my scheme, which was that they should take over the obligations I had entered into, and form a Musical Festival Association, to give "Gerontius" as a test concert, and if successful go forward with festival performances held triennially. In twenty minutes the Association was formed and I was appointed chorus-master. Of 247 applicants for admission to the chorus, all of whom were tested, 156 were selected. This concert is now musical history, for Dr. Coward told the choir afterwards that "it was, up till then, the first absolutely flawless performance of the work which had been given," a statement which was confirmed by Mr. John Coates. We took £359 in receipts and spent £357 on the concert, so that we actually made a profit! Following upon this success, the Association decided that they would go on, and that the festival concerts should take place triennially.'

Mr. Speed goes on to say: 'In 1906 we scored another big success—the Press being unanimous in their praise of the choir—when Dr. Coward conducted "Elijah," Sir Hubert Parry his "Pied Piper of Hamelin," Sir Edward Elgar his "Dream of Gerontius,"

Mr. Coleridge-Taylor his "African suite," and I took charge of Mr. Frederick Cliffe's "North-east wind." We engaged the very best principal vocalists and the London Symphony Orchestra. The concerts extended over three days.' Mr. Speed adds, 'The present festival you know all about.'

HONORARY SECRETARY OF THE SOUTHPORT MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(Photograph by Mr. Theo. Giddens, Southport.)

In response to our request for some account of his musical career, Mr. Speed tells the following story in his genial and typically Yorkshire fashion :

'I am a Yorkshireman,' says Mr. Speed, 'for I was born in Sheffield on May 25, 1858. I received my earliest musical training under Mr. William Arthur Blakeley, then organist of St. Stephen's Church, who made me play my first service before I was ten years of age. From that time, until the time of my first official appointment at the age of nineteen, I was 'handy man' to all the organists in the town who wanted to take 'a Sunday off.' The experience thus gained of the different styles of service and variety in organs has proved to be of inestimable benefit to me. I learned my church choir training from Mr. T. Tallis Trimnell, organist of the Parish Church, Sheffield, for whom, and for his successor Mr. Edwin H. Lemare, I acted as deputy for a number of years.

'The point of greatest importance in my musical life has been my association with Dr. Henry Coward, for whom as a man I have the greatest admiration and affection. As a choir-trainer, I place him on the highest pinnacle. And here I should like to say that I firmly believe the astonishing development in choral technique, with the accompanying application of 'brains,' which we have witnessed in the last twelve years all over the country, is directly attributable to the choral 'shake up' Dr. Coward gave us at that memorable Sheffield festival of 1899. Nowadays everyone tries to copy him in his methods, with more or less success. My long association with him—both in the rehearsal room and as organist at many of his concerts in our early days together—has had its due and widespread effect. With him I preach the doctrine of words first and words last, and at rehearsals I insist that if, as a choir, we cannot beat the principals in clean-cut articulation, there is something radically wrong in our work of preparation.

MR. ARTHUR W. SPEED,

CHORUS-MASTER OF THE SOUTHPORT MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(Photograph by Mr. Julius Kay, Southport.)

'I still "earn Sunday money," as the late W. T. Best used to put it, and am conductor of the Southport Philharmonic Society.'

Mr. Speed speaks in the highest terms of the executive committee, and of the co-operation of his valued colleague in the management of the festival, Mr. W. H. Potts, a respected townsman who, amid the many claims of his business, ungrudgingly devotes much time to perfecting the important clerical machinery necessary to the success of a musical festival. 'We work together like brothers,' adds Mr. Speed, 'never a jarring note between us—perfect two-part harmony.' May these true lovers of music long continue their labour of love together for the promotion of the divine art in Southport.

A notice of the recent Festival will be found on page 734 of the present issue.

A Schumann Centenary Concert will be given at Queen's Hall on the one-hundredth anniversary of Schumann's birth, June 8, 1910. For this concert the services of the Queen's Hall Symphony Orchestra and Mr. Henry J. Wood have been reserved. Miss Fanny Davies will play the Piano concerto and the Concertstück (for pianoforte and orchestra). The programme will also include the Variations for two pianofortes, played by Miss Fanny Davies and Miss Alice Dessauer-Grun, and a Symphony.

Church and Organ Music.

PROGRAMMATIC ORGAN MUSIC.

Of all musical instruments, the organ most readily lends itself, or, to express it better, can be more readily made to lend itself to the performance of descriptive music. Sydney Smith regarded the organ as a zoological and meteorological instrument. In response to the request of the organist of St. Paul's Cathedral for an enlargement of the organ, the witty cleric replied: 'Mr. Goss, you have a bull stop, and a tom-tit stop, what more do you want?' On another occasion the Psalms for the day were particularly tempestuous, with the result that the countenance of 'the choristers' friend' beamed again and again at the organist's depiction of the atmospheric disturbance. After the service the eminent divine remarked: 'Mr. Goss, I noticed a peculiar phenomenon this afternoon during the service: whenever your organ thundered, Miss Hackett's face lightened.'

This characteristic observation of Canon Sydney Smith naturally leads us to refer to a favourite source of programmatic organ music—the Storm. The most popular example is the Chevalier Lemmens's 'Grande Fantasia, the Storm.' This is the title adopted by the composer in the recital he gave on the great organ at the residence of Mr. N. J. Holmes, Primrose Hill Road, on June 9, 1877. The present writer was present, and well does he remember that the thunder on that occasion became an earthquake in its vibrational intensity. Here is the passage, one which caused the building to shake as though it and the organ would crash down upon the unfortunate listeners:

MANUAL.
(Great.)

PEDAL.

32 and 16 feet.

The following is the late Mr. Best's recipe for thunder, as exemplified in his edition of Léfèbure-Wély's Fantasia Pastorale:

Great. 16 feet only.

Pédale du Tonnerre.

Place the left foot on the lowest C and C sharp with 2 and 16 feet drawn.

On the other hand, in Neukomm's the 'Storm,' the thunder is more agile in its semiquaverous activity in the pedals, with 32 and 16 feet stops, like a number of elephants dancing.

To pass to an astronomical feature of our subject, M. Théodor Dubois has composed a charming piece suitable for Christmastide performance entitled Marche des rois mages. It is in the key of E, and mysteriously begins with successive tonic and dominant pedal notes. At bar 5 on an upper staff of the music, appears  a manual note with footnote, which reads:

Il se fera au Clavier de Récit avec un 4 pieds et un 2 pieds. Le temps en temps on mettra le Tremblant. Nous écrivons cette note qu'ici et à la dernière ligne. Elle peut se faire soit par une 3<sup>e</sup> main, soit par un petit poids qui maintiendra la note constamment baissée.

It will be observed that by a judicious use of the tremulant the composer evidently wishes the star to twinkle now and then. By the way, unless the above foot-note, or a translation thereof, is printed in the programme when this piece is played, the audience might well imagine that the good star was a naughty child.

A celebrated descriptive performer on the organ was the Abbé Vogler (1749-1814), who came to London in 1790 and delighted large audiences with his tricks. In his interesting book on 'Programme music,' Professor Niecks gives some specimens of the Abbé Vogler's imaginative flights on the organ. Here they are:

Naval Battle.

1. Beating of the drums.
2. Martial music and marches.
3. Movement of the ships.
4. Crossing of the waves.
5. Cannon shots.
6. Cries of the wounded.
7. Shouts of victory of the triumphant fleet.

Musical imitation of Rubens's Last Judgment.

1. Magnificent introduction.
2. The trumpet resounds through the graves; they open.
3. The wrathful Judge pronounces the terrible judgment on the reprobates; their fall into the abyss; wailing and gnashing of teeth.
4. The Just are received by God into eternal blessedness; their bliss.
5. The voices of the blessed unite with the choirs of angels.

Death of Prince Leopold of Brunswick.

1. The quiet course of the river; the winds that chase it into greater rapidity; the gradual rise of the water; the complete inundation.
2. The general terror and lamentation of the unfortunate who foresee their misery; their shuddering, complaints, tears, and sobs.
3. The arrival of the Prince, who resolves to help them; the representations and prayers of his officers, who wish to keep him back; his voice in opposition to them, which at last stifles all lamentation.
4. The boat sets out; its reeling through the waves; the howling of the wind; the boat capsizes; the Prince sinks.
5. A touching piece with the feeling that suits the occasion.

Among modern composers the subject of descriptive organ music has been seriously treated by Otto Malling, the distinguished musician. His pieces are, however, by their titles, suggestive, rather than realistic in their treatment. 'The birth of Christ' (Op. 48) consists of three pieces: 'The shepherds in the fields,' 'The three wise men from the east,' and 'Bethlehem.' His Op. 54 is a sequel to the foregoing in 'The death and resurrection of Christ,' which is also in three sections: 'Gethsemane,' 'Golgotha,' and 'Easter morn.' A further group of pieces (Op. 63) were suggested by six incidents in the life of Christ, and in Op. 78 a similar number depict occurrences in the life of St. Paul. Some of the latter pieces were played by Sir Walter Parratt at his recital at the re-opening of the organ in Westminster Abbey a few months ago.

A very different type of composition, if such it can be called, furnishes our last example of programmatic organ music. It is entitled

With the additional information

This composition was written immediately after the sorrowful death of Sir George Macfarren, October 24th, 1887.

Let us attempt to describe this 'Descriptive Fantasia.' It opens, Andante maestoso, key D minor, with a 'Trumpet call to Duty' (Duty with a capital D), which, with oboe echoes, continues for eight bars. Then begins an Allegro agitato signifying 'Restless activity, interrupted by a plaintive chorale.' Nothing in the way of description occurs until, after another trumpet call, we come to a most serious phase of the music: 'Sudden illness and demise':

Suo. Vox Humana, or Voix Celeste with tremblant.

Ped. 16 ft. Wood, uncoupled.

Following the demise is an Andante espressivo labelled 'Angel Voices calling to Paradise,' a Batestian section that pursues its arpeggio way with semiquaver felicity. Then, after six bars of trumpeting and full organ, there bursts forth a 'Triumphal March and welcome to the Heavenly regions,' of which two bars may suffice to furnish an example of this quick step and heavenly welcome:

Alla Marcia. Full Gt.

Ped.

This strides along for sixty-one bars (including six bars of Maestoso trumpetings, &c.) until the chord of D flat is reached, which forms the beginning of a passage so original that it must form our last quotation:

Ped. (Manual only.)

Nineteen bars of Piu animato, with an accel. twice in its precipitant course and a rit. in the last bar but two, and this touching In Memoriam is finished on a unison D. The composer?—Doctor William Spark!

The Free Church Musicians' Union has recently held several important meetings. In the London Centre, at the Binney Institute, Grosvenor Square, a paper was read by Mr. W. C. Webb on 'Music, its place and purpose in public worship.' Dr. Abernethy presided. At Swansea an address on 'Choirs and choir training' has been given by Mr. E. T. Davies, of Merthyr. The members of the Newcastle Centre received a visit from Mr. Harry Evans, of Liverpool, who read a paper on 'Choir competitions'; and a preliminary meeting relative to forming a Centre in Birmingham, presided over by Mr. Thomas Facer, was held in that city.

A CHORISTERS' FESTIVAL.

At Holy Trinity Church, St. Marylebone, the first annual festival of the London College for Choristers was held on the evening of September 30 with complete success. The following was the order of service:

- Hymn, 'Ten thousand times ten thousand' - Dykes.
- Versicles and responses, in 4 parts - A. H. Brewer.
- Psalms cxlviii. and clix., chants in 3 parts (MS.)
- H. A. Fricker and Myles B. Foster.
- Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C - Hugh Blair.
- (Composed for this service.)
- First anthem, 'Praise the Lord, O my soul' - John E. West.
- (Composed for this service.)
- Second anthem, 'As pants the hart' - Spahr.
- arranged by F. J. Sawyer.

Sermon: The Rev. E. Grose Hodge, M.A., Rector and Rural Dean of St. Marylebone.

Hymn during offertory, 'O Lord of heaven, and earth and sea' - Dykes.

(Sung by the congregation alone.)

Benediction.

- The Sevenfold Amen - Stainer.
- arranged by Hugh Blair.
- Vesper hymn, 'Lord, keep us safe this night,' - (Rocdean Choir arrangement)

Sung at the conclusion of the service.

- 'The Lord is my Shepherd' - Schubert.
- 'Let the bright seraphim.' In unison. - Handel.
- Trumpet obligato: Mr. Frank James.
- 'O praise the Lord' - Mendelssohn.
- 'He in tears that soweth' ('Song of Victory') - Hiller.
- 'Blessed are they that dwell in Thy house' - Brahms.

It is not our custom, nor is it desirable, to criticise the rendering of music sung at a Service; but this may be said, as an uplift of church-song the festival was most impressive from beginning to end. One commendable and important feature was the clear enunciation of the words as sung by the hundred well-trained boys who formed this fine choir of choristers.

The Magnificat and Nunc dimittis by Dr. Hugh Blair, and Mr. West's anthem, both specially composed for the occasion, were most effective. Dr. Blair is one of those thoughtful composers who is both scholarly and poetic in his creative gifts; his service is as devotional in spirit as it is ripe in musicianship. In his anthem 'Praise the Lord, O my soul' Mr. West has not only caught the spirit of the words, but he shows what an experienced church composer can do with three-part harmony allied to an effective organ accompaniment.

Mr. James Bates, founder and director of the London College for Choristers, and Mr. Charles Long conducted, except that Dr. Blair took charge of his own service, which was accompanied by Mr. H. Arnold Smith. With the above exception Dr. Hugh Blair, organist of the church, accompanied throughout, and as opening and concluding voluntaries he played the first two movements of Elgar's Sonata in G (Op. 28) and Bach's Toccata and Fugue in D minor. As showing the great interest the festival had aroused no fewer than 9,000 applications for tickets were received. It was so successful in every way that its annual recurrence may be accepted as a foregone conclusion.

Mr. F. S. Graves, in celebration of his semi-jubilee as organist and choirmaster of Kinnoull Parish Church, Perth, has been the recipient of a handsome silver rose-bowl and silver vases from the choir, minister and congregation of the church.

BIRMINGHAM CATHEDRAL.

Following the excellent example of the Festivals of the Three Choirs, a special selection of music was sung at Birmingham Cathedral during the recent festival held in that city. At Gloucester, Hereford and Worcester the choice of music is eclectic and thoroughly representative of English church music: not so at Birmingham. On Sunday, October 3, 'Matins will be sung at 10.15 to chants,' so the service-paper reads. Therefore, no settings of the morning canticles; but at 11 the service of Holy Communion was Palestrina's 'Missa Papæ Marcelli.' On that and five succeeding days of the week (Evensong only), four of the six settings of the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis were in the minor key, the composers being Orlando Gibbons, Purcell, Noble, Palestrina, Walford Davies and Patrick. The six anthems were:

|                                               |               |
|-----------------------------------------------|---------------|
| 'Blessing, glory' . . . . .                   | J. S. Bach.   |
| 'O Lord, my God' . . . . .                    | S. S. Wesley. |
| 'Bow Thine ear' . . . . .                     | Byrd.         |
| 'Lord have mercy' . . . . .                   | Palestrina.   |
| 'Now my tongue the mystery telling' . . . . . | Royle Shore.  |
| 'How doth the city sit solitary' . . . . .    | Tallis.       |

No objection could be taken to the second and third of these anthems, though in passing it may be noted that Byrd's 'Bow Thine ear' was originally a setting of a Latin motet. Bach and Palestrina are not English church composers, however devotional their music is. Mr. Royle Shore is 'an amateur musician associated with the work of the Cathedral,' so the service-book informs us. His anthem 'was written in 1902 as an experiment in composition in the old modality, and is for the most part written in the 3rd, or Phrygian Mode . . . . With the Latin words to which it was originally written, it has been in regular use at the Roman Catholic Cathedral, Westminster, since June, 1903.' The last anthem, 'How doth the city sit solitary, that was full of people,' is, according to the same information, 'adapted from the original Latin for use in the Cathedral by Mr. Royle Shore.' The question may be asked, Can it be said that English Church Music—that glorious heritage of which we as a nation ought to be proud—and Cathedral usage, were adequately represented at Birmingham Cathedral during the festival week?

HARVEST FESTIVALS.

Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' was sung at St. Bartholomew's Church, Dalston, October 11, by an augmented choir consisting of members of the Choral Society and the choir of the church. Miss Muriel Gaze was at the pianoforte and Mr. Meacham Haley at the organ. Mr. F. A. Bridge conducted.

The choir of St. Mary's Church, West Kensington (augmented), sang Gaul's 'Holy City' as part of the harvest festival services on October 8 and 10, under the conductorship of Mr. Alfred C. Toone, organist and choir-master.

At the Harvest festival held at Wesley's Chapel, City Road, on September 26, special anthems were sung at each service, and after the evening benediction Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' was rendered by an enlarged choir of fifty voices. The soloists were Miss Jessie Player, Miss Ethel Roberts, and Mr. Henry Turnpenney. Mr. Harold Huggins conducted, and Mr. Charles F. Warner, organist and choir-master of the chapel, presided at the organ.

Haydn's 'Creation' was performed by the choir of St. Silas's, Nunhead, on September 30, under the conductorship of Mr. J. Arnold Dunn, organist and choir-master of the church. Mr. Arthur Lidington presided at the organ.

Owing to the unfortunate miscarriage of a postal packet much regret that some notices of Harvest Festival services, held in various parts of the country, cannot be inserted, as no duplicate copies are available.

RE-OPENING OF SELBY ABBEY.

Special dedication and thanksgiving services were held at Selby Abbey Church on October 19, on the occasion of the re-opening of the Nave after restoration from the damage incurred at the fire on October 20, 1906. The dedication service was an imposing ceremony, and Mr. F. W. Sykes, the organist of the Abbey, presided at the new organ built by Messrs. Hill & Son. The instrument is a very fine four-manual organ of over seventy stops. It is divided and placed in the two westernmost bays of the choir, the Pedal organ of thirteen stops being situated in the eastern chapel of the north transept. Mr. C. H. Moody, organist of Ripon Cathedral, gave an organ recital in the afternoon. On October 21 a choral thanksgiving service took place, when Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' Stanford's Te Deum in B flat, and Handel's Hallelujah Chorus were performed with orchestral accompaniment by a choir of 150 voices, under the direction of Mr. H. Eggleshaw, with Mr. F. W. Sykes at the organ.

The Annual Festival was held in Tewkesbury Abbey on September 23, when Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' was performed with full band and chorus, under the direction of Mr. Alfred W. V. Vine, organist and choir-master. The choir, numbering 200 voices and consisting of singers from the festival chorus of Gloucester, Worcester, and Tewkesbury, sang with spirit and steadiness throughout. The orchestra was led by Mr. W. H. Reed and Dr. A. Herbert Brewer and Mr. Ivor Atkins presided at the two organs. The principal vocalists were Madame le Mar, Miss Jessie King, Mr. A. Watson, and Mr. Graham Smart, the subordinate solo parts being sung by Miss A. Crawley, Miss Fluck, Mr. H. Sanderson and Mr. P. Gray.

The cathedral choirs of Winchester, Chichester, and Salisbury held their annual joint service at Salisbury Cathedral on September 30, when the following music was sung at Evensong: Magnificat and Nunc dimittis, Hopkins in F; anthems, 'Blessed be the Lord' (Orlando Gibbons), 'Bow thine ear' (Byrd), 'Sing to the Lord' (Smart), and 'The Lord is my strength' (Goss). Precentor Carpenter (of Salisbury) conducted, and accompaniments were played by the three cathedral organists, Mr. C. F. South (Salisbury), Mr. F. J. W. Crowe (Chichester), and Dr. Prendergast (Winchester).

Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' was sung at the choir festival held at Albion Congregational Church, Ashton-under-Lyne, on Sunday, September 26, under the direction of the organist and choir-master, Dr. T. Keighley. Part I. of the oratorio was given at the afternoon service and Part II. in the evening. The soloists were Mrs. Grierson, Mrs. Pashley, Mr. T. Owen, Mr. Fowler Burton, and Master John Holroyd. The minister of the church, the Rev. J. Nicholas Knight, preached an excellent sermon on 'Elijah' and Mendelssohn's setting of the oratorio, to which he added a brief sketch of the composer's life.

Reviews.

Home-thoughts from abroad. It was a lover and his lass.
 By Frederic Austin.

The twelve days of Christmas. Traditional song. Arranged
 by Frederic Austin.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

As a writer of songs Mr. Frederic Austin displays varied sympathies. In 'Home-thoughts from abroad' he appears as a disciple of modern impressionism. Robert Browning, in his poem, whose opening lines are 'Oh, to be in England now that April's there,' drew a picture of an English spring which, if based on experience, must awake envy in a twentieth-century breast. To the genial landscape painted by the poet, Mr. Austin has attached a musical setting that reflects its peaceful happiness and its suggestion of lazy contemplation, and almost recalls the languid heat and haze of a summer's day rather than a day in spring. Both the vocal part, which is written for high voice, and the accompaniment, are rhapsodical in form, some connection being obtained by the repetition of a characteristic figure. The harmonies belong essentially to the modern scheme, although they are comparatively simple for this class of music. The composer's 'It was a lover and his lass' takes us into a totally different world. It has a simple, gay tune with the old English ring proper to a setting of Shakespearean words. To this is added a well-chosen and varied accompaniment. The song is issued in three keys.

'The twelve days of Christmas' is a clever arrangement of a traditional song of the cumulative or 'House that Jack built' type. 'What my love sent to me' on the first, second, third day of Christmas, and so on down to the twelfth, reveals a constantly increasing store of affection and generosity. The first day's gift is 'a partridge in a pear-tree'; that of the twelfth comprises 'Twelve drummers drumming, eleven pipers playing, ten lords a-leaping, nine ladies dancing, eight maids a-milking, seven swans a-swimming, six geese a-laying, five gold rings, four calling birds, three French hens, two turtle-doves and a partridge in a pear-tree.' No explanation is given of any subtle significance that may underlie the lover's wayward choice of tokens of his regard. To the captivating, if elusive, tune of this song Mr. Austin has added an accompaniment that is always ingenious, especially where it suggests the air that is being played by the eleven pipers, always varied and interesting, and never out of place. The song is suitable for a medium voice.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

- Masurka.* Op. 67, No. 1. Serenata. Op. 67, No. 2.
 By Cyril Scott.
English Pastorals. By Ernest Halsey.
 [Elkin & Co.]

In these compositions Mr. Scott exemplifies two sides, both already familiar, of his harmonic inventive power. The 'Masurka' reveals in many places to what an extent he can be daring and original without ever departing from the diatonic scale, while the 'Serenata' displays more particularly some of his individual tastes in the employment of chromatics. Knowing Mr. Scott's propensities in the latter direction, one cannot be certain whether a strange B sharp that occurs on pages 2 and 6 of the 'Serenata' is or is not a misprint. Both pieces are bright and gracefully rhythmic, and should give the composer's admirers further cause for admiring.

Mr. Ernest Halsey's 'English Pastorals' contain little but what is deserving of praise, more particularly with regard to the aims and ideals that inspire his conceptions than with regard to the skill with which he carries them out. Perhaps the most interesting and musically piece in the volume is the first, 'Through a country lane,' which contains some charming points. The second, 'Two lovers pass,' is so passionate and chromatic that it does not fully bear out the title 'pastoral.' 'To a little grave' conveys a suggestion of pathos. The remaining pieces are 'To a village maiden'—by no means a demure one—'Gipsy Song,' and 'Even-song.'

English lyrics (ninth set). Words by Mary E. Coleridge.
 Music by C. Hubert H. Parry.

Six songs for soprano. By G. F. Boyle.

Rolling down to Rio. Words by Rudyard Kipling. Music by Edward German.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

To say that Sir Hubert Parry's ninth set of 'English lyrics' are worthy of their composer is to say that they are strong music, effective, constructed with a firm and masterly hand, and always appropriate and adequate to the subject. A philosophical vein runs through the seven poems that supply the text, and in accordance with this characteristic, a quiet dignity of style has been adopted in the musical settings, giving way here and there, as the words demand, to a more fanciful form of expression. The accompaniment claims equal importance with the vocal part, which is always grateful and singable without sacrifice of striking effect. The titles of the songs are 'Three aspects,' 'A fairy town' (St. Andrews), 'The witches' wood,' 'Whether I live,' 'Armida's garden,' 'The maiden,' 'There.' The first and sixth alone exceed the medium compass. Recent years have produced few volumes of English song that can vie with the present collection in diversity of interest and constant musicianship.

The material for Mr. George F. Boyle's six soprano songs is found in translations by various writers of lines from Heine's 'New Spring.' They exemplify the modern art-song in which the modernism is kept under control and subordinate to true inspiration. Here again the accompaniment embodies some of the principal features. On the emotional side, the songs are charged with romanticism; as the technical side, each is an organic whole, being a skillful development of one or more individual themes or figures. The sixth and last, entitled 'The Elves' ride,' should be assured of popularity.

The little poem 'Rolling down to Rio,' which everybody will remember who has read Kipling's 'Just so Stories,' is an ideal subject for a musical setting by Edward German, and the popular composer has made good use of the opportunity it afforded him. Needless to say, the song has a lilting tune and is full of 'go.' Its range is that of a low voice.

THE SOCIETY OF BRITISH COMPOSERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE 'MUSICAL TIMES.'

—The following statistics have been compiled at the request of the Society of British Composers in order to show the proportion that performances of British musical compositions bear to other works on the programmes of the Hall Promenade Concerts, seasons 1907-09.

Figures were arrived at after a large number of calculations, and, as a result of these, each programme was given a fixed number of points, in this instance 500, in proportion to which each work had a ratio allotted to it.

Thus, a song without orchestral accompaniment was given 10 points; a song or aria with orchestra 15; dance movements 25 per number; overtures, rhapsodies, from 50 to 75; dramatic poems 75 to 100; concertos 100 to 150; symphonies 100 to 300, the latter figure being given to the Symphony. A programme of one composer's works, or a single work occupying an entire programme, was given 500 points.

The ratios obtained were the following:—

|                                                             | 1907. | 1908. | 1909. |
|-------------------------------------------------------------|-------|-------|-------|
| Total rate per cent. for British works of every description | 8.5   | 7.4   | 10.3  |
| Rate per cent. for first performances of British works      | 3.01  | 1.4   | 0.75  |

The same system and two other series of concerts have been worked out.

In Mr. Beecham's season, 1909, the rate for British works was 10 per cent., while Mr. Ronald is not far behind him with 8 per cent. The objection may be raised in this, as in the case that is based on statistics, that the figures from the rates are calculated in an entirely arbitrary and unscientific manner. On the other hand the averages have been worked upon a system that has been tested and accepted by the members of the German Society of Composers, and by means of which the fees for performing rights are distributed to its members, who recognise the equity of its results without demur.

There is a fallacy in reckoning the rates, it must apply to Mr. Beecham's and Mr. Ronald's results, and if it is claimed that those for the Promenade Concerts are estimated, and if any other system of calculation is used, nothing can explain away the anomalous state of affairs which is exposed by these averages.

We now take some figures from the Year-Books of the Society of British Composers. On the printed list (not including men who have joined since the last issue, or including four non-members who have written and published a large number of compositions) there are 138 members, of whom, with one exception, are living. The works in the table below are for orchestra alone, and no account has been taken of choral works, songs, chamber music or instrumental pieces:

|                                    | 1906-7. | 1907-8. | 1908-9. |
|------------------------------------|---------|---------|---------|
| Number of Composers in the Society | 51      | 116     | 138     |
| Symphonies ... ..                  | 13      | 44      | 50      |
| Suites ... ..                      | 20      | 65      | 78      |
| Overtures and Preludes             | 37      | 115     | 123     |
| Symphonic Poems ... ..             | 24      | 55      | 63      |
| Variations ... ..                  | 6       | 15      | 19      |
| Miscellaneous ... ..               | 38      | 140     | 152     |

| Total number of orchestral works   | 157     | 470     | 525     |

It would be absurd to claim that each of these 525 orchestral works is of the first rank, but from them it would be possible to draw up sixty-one programmes for a Promenade Concert without going out of the country for a work, and still giving one twice over.

Yours faithfully,

F. CORDER,

President of the Society of British Composers.

HATTON'S 'TO ANTHEA.'

TO THE EDITOR OF THE 'MUSICAL TIMES.'

SIR,—As 'To Anthea' quite rightly received such special notice in your admirable 'John Liptrot Hatton' in your October issue, it may be interesting to know that some years ago, in conversation with that fine singer the late Wm. Winn, I was informed that the song was first sung by him at Buckingham Palace under the title of 'The Protestant,' and I believe it was sung from MS. If the matter could be cleared up now, no one living would be more likely to throw additional light upon the matter than Dr. W. H. Cummings, as he enjoyed Mr. Winn's close friendship and would no doubt readily do what he could in the matter.—Yours truly,

JAMES PALMER.

THE CRYSTAL PALACE COMPANY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE 'MUSICAL TIMES.'

SIR,—I have read paragraphs and letters in many newspapers regarding the winding-up Order made by Mr. Justice Swinfen Eady, and I should be grateful if you would allow me to inform the public by means of this letter, that the Order only refers to the Crystal Palace Company, and does not affect the Crystal Palace itself, or me, its Receiver. I should like further to state that it is intended that the business of the Palace will go on as before; in fact, I am at this moment in negotiation with influential people, with the object of holding at the Palace next year a function of world-wide interest.—Yours faithfully,

ERNEST I. HUSEY,

Receiver and Manager.

Obituary.

We regret to record the following deaths:

On October 6, at Brooklyn, Mr. DUDLEY BUCK, the distinguished American composer and organist. Born March 10, 1839, at Hartford, Connecticut, he was deputy-organist at St. John's Church there until, in 1858, he set out for Europe, where he remained for the next five years. He entered the Conservatorium of Leipsic, studying under Hauptmann, Richter, Rietz, Plaidy, and Moscheles, and among his fellow students were Arthur Sullivan, J. F. Barnett, Walter Bache, and Carl Rosa. At Dresden he took lessons from Schneider. He then held various organist appointments in his native land—North Congregational Church, Hartford; St. James's Church, Chicago; St. Paul's Church and the Music Hall, Boston; and Holy Trinity Church, New York. In the last-named city Theodore Thomas invited him to become assistant-conductor of his orchestral concerts at Central Park Gardens. He was also conductor of the Apollo Club, New York.

As a composer Mr. Dudley Buck gained distinction in various fields of creative ability. An oratorio 'The Light of Asia' (based on the late Sir Edwin Arnold's poem), was performed at the Novello Oratorio Concerts, St. James's Hall, on March 19, 1889. Nine years earlier he gained the prize offered by the Musical Festival Association of Cincinnati with his setting of 'The Golden Legend.' His other important choral works were 'The Centennial Meditation' of Columbia International Exhibition, Philadelphia, 1876; 'The voyage of Columbus'; 'The Legend of Don Munio,' and the 46th Psalm. He also wrote both the words and music of a grand opera 'Serapis'; a comic opera, on a Mormon theme, entitled 'Deseret'; a Symphony in E flat; a Symphonic overture on Scott's 'Marmion'; a Concertino for four horns and orchestra, in addition to two string quartets. Of the large number of his smaller works—short sacred cantatas with organ accompaniment, anthems, services, and organ pieces—Mr. Dudley Buck is best known in England by his 'Hymn to Music' (for voices only) and the organ piece entitled 'To Evening.' During the great fire at Chicago in 1871 several of his important compositions were burned. A gifted composer, Mr. Buck had the merit of writing vocal music that really was vocal.

On October 11, at 18, Compton Terrace, Islington, Mr. JOSIAH FOUNTAIN MEEN. A self-taught and much-respected musician, Mr. Meen was born at Hackney, September 14, 1846. He held organ appointments successively and successfully at Clapton Wesleyan Chapel, St. Mary's Church, Stoke Newington, and since 1880 he has discharged similar duties with faithfulness and distinction at Union Chapel, Islington, a fine building long associated with the ministry of the Rev. Dr. Henry Allon. For the last seven years of its existence he was organist to the Sacred Harmonic Society, and in 1886 he became a professor of the organ at the Guildhall School of Music. A man of genial and kindly disposition, Mr. Fountain Meen was not only an excellent organist, but he excelled as a pianoforte accompanist. His remains were cremated at Golders Green, the ashes being subsequently interred at Highgate Cemetery.

On October 6, at Berlin, aged sixty-five, Dr. ALFRED CHRISTIAN KALISCHER, the distinguished Beethoven scholar. He is best known by his editorship of Beethoven's letters, a most valuable contribution to the life of the master, which have recently become available to English readers in the translation by Mr. J. S. Shedlock. His last book, 'Beethoven's Frauenkreis,' was by a pathetic coincidence published on the day of his death.

On October 9, at Dresden, Herr HEINRICH GUDEHUS, an eminent German tenor singer. He made his debut at the Berlin Royal Opera House in 1871 in Spohr's 'Jessonda.' Wagner heard him in 1881, and thereupon engaged him for Bayreuth, where he sang at the production of 'Parsifal' in 1883, and in 'Tristan' three years later.

MUSICAL LEAGUE FESTIVAL AT LIVERPOOL.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

The Musical League, of which Sir Edward Elgar is president, was founded last year with the special and worthy object of fostering the cause of British music. Part of the scheme was the holding of an annual festival at which new works, both native and foreign, in addition to those which cannot be heard with the frequency they deserve, were to be performed.

The first of such festivals took place at Liverpool, September 24, 25; but although the programmes were in various ways interesting, the original scheme was not fully carried out. Foreign works were performed, yet they were not new. It is, however, only fair to remember that the committee may have tried, but unsuccessfully, to interest foreign composers in the scheme. For the present we have to consider what has been accomplished.

On Friday, September 24, a chamber concert was given at the Yamen Rooms, the programme of which included Mr. H. Balfour Gardiner's String quartet in one movement, Mr. Joseph Holbrooke's 'In Memoriam' sextet in F minor, (Op. 46), and Mr. J. B. McEwen's String quartet in E minor, all interesting works by composers of high merit. Although the selection must be commended, a place might have been found for one novelty. The same comment applies to the vocal music. Of three songs by Mr. Edward Agate, the simple, tender 'Cradle-song of the Virgin' made the strongest appeal. Mr. W. H. Bell has talent and ambition, yet in his Song-cycle 'Bhanavar the Beautiful' there was more art than nature. Three songs by Mr. Frederick Nicholls proved attractive. Mr. Percy Grainger played, and with marked success, a 'Handelian Rhapsody' composed by Mr. Cyril Scott, and two delightful Irish Dances by Sir Charles Stanford, transcribed by the pianist. The Cathie Quartet took part in the concerted music, and were assisted in the Sextet by Mr. E. Stansfield (double-bass) and Mr. Arnold Bax (pianist).

The two concerts given on September 25 were held in the Philharmonic Hall. In the afternoon were heard three orchestral novelties conducted by their respective composers. Mr. Frank Bridge's 'Rhapsody' is clever, and of light character, the most taking of the five sections being the 'Tempo di Valse.' In a symphonic poem, entitled 'Isabella,' by Mr. Frederic Austin and founded on Keats's 'Isabella, or the Pot of Basil,' the section describing the ecstasy of the lovers shows the composer at his best; but, as one would expect, he was not equally successful in depicting in tones Lorenzo's murder. Mr. J. C. Hathaway's contribution to the programme was a scena, 'The dying swan,' the vocal part of which, effectively sung by Mr. John Coates, greatly pleased the audience, especially the Meistersinger-coloured last stanza. Four songs—artistic settings of translations of Danish songs, words and music by Mr. Frederick Delius—were well interpreted by Miss Edith Evans. The concert concluded with Rimsky-Korsakoff's symphony 'Anatol.' Russian music is doubtless deserving of notice, but surely on this particular occasion a symphony by a British composer might have been selected. Several such could be named which have been unjustly neglected in past years.

The choral and orchestral concert in the evening must be briefly noticed. Mr. Arnold Bax's 'Fatherland,' for tenor solo, chorus and orchestra, based on a broad, rhythmic melody, is attractive, though somewhat too conventional. Then Mr. Havergal Brain's setting of verses from Psalm 137, for solo, chorus and orchestra proved a thoughtful but unequal composition: some of the writing was very effective, while other portions were, in comparison, dull. The best work was Dr. R. Vaughan Williams's cantata 'Willow Wood,' a setting for baritone solo, chorus and orchestra of Sonnets 49-52 of Rossetti's 'The House of Life.' The composer has written strong, emotional music befitting the moods of the stanzas, and in the last one has taken full advantage of the opportunity given him by the words for strains less sombre than those which had hitherto prevailed. Miss Ethel Smyth conducted her clever songs 'The Dance,' and 'Anacreontic Ode,' the solo parts of which were well delivered by Mr. Frederic Austin, and the composer was received with much enthusiasm. In Bach's cantata 'Praise Jehovah,' the brilliant singing of the Welsh Choral Union deserves full recognition and commendation, also the admirable rendering of the 'Siren' strains by the lady members of the choir in Debussy's third Nocturne, sung at the afternoon concert.

Finally we must add a word of unstinted praise of Mr. Harry Evans, who, as honorary conductor of the festival and conductor of the Liverpool Welsh Choral Union, highly distinguished himself both as a choral and orchestral conductor of unusual skill.

THE MOUNTAINEERS.

Mr. C. H. Workman will have many well-wishers in his plan of reviving Savoyard traditions in the home of their birth with a season of legitimate light opera. The two works first announced were 'The Mountaineers,' by Guy Eden and Reginald Somerville, and an opera by Sir W. S. Gilbert and Edward German. Of these the former was produced on September 29. The plot is easily condensed. A village maiden, unable to choose between two lovers, sends them on a competitive search for Edelweiss among the snows of a high mountain peak. The weaker climber falls exhausted by the way. The stronger chivalrously saves his life, and, presumably having found his Edelweiss, wins the maiden's hand. He is, however, suddenly summoned from the altar to serve his country, and his former rival matters smooth by enlisting in his stead. This story is the basis of a refined and pleasant 'book,' and serves for the introduction of the conventional comic character in a Custom-house officer of unconventional habits. As played by Mr. Workman this part was responsible for most of the fun of the play. Mr. Somerville's music is graceful, melodious and, like the libretto, always refined. There occur many solos, duets, quartets and choruses of the type that experience has shown to be acceptable, and here and there—as in the 'Legend of the Edelweiss'—a more individual number. The musical honours went to Miss Elsie Spain as the heroine, Mr. Claude Flemming and Mr. Laurence Legge as the rival lovers, and Miss Jessie Rose as a village coquette. A special word of commendation is due to the chorus for their vivid singing. 'The Mountaineers' strikes no new note in comic opera, but the precedents that it follows, if somewhat obvious, are the best that could have been chosen. Some of the original production, new musical numbers and a duelling-scene have been added.

NEWCASTLE MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

It seems strange that so long a period as sixty-seven years should have come and gone since the great city on the Tyne held a musical festival. In the article on 'Old Newcastle Festivals' which appeared in the Musical Times of last month, some particulars were given of the music performed at the last meeting held in 1842. How different the performances and the music performed then from now! Whatever may have been the causes which led to the entire cessation of musical festivals at Newcastle, it is pleasant to record the revival of this music-making under conditions calling for encouragement and congratulation. At the outset it may be stated without fear of contradiction that the recent festival, held October 20-22, primarily originated in the minds of two cultured and enthusiastic amateur musicians of the city, Mr. James B. Clark and Mr. C. Francis Lloyd, Mus. B., who, as honorary secretaries (Mr. Lloyd was also honorary treasurer), have wholeheartedly engineered the scheme from the very beginning. Their efforts were supported by a strong committee, with so able and deeply interested a chairman as Mr. W. J. Sanderson, J.P., ex-Lord Mayor of Newcastle.

An initial and serious difficulty was the lack of a suitable building in which to hold the festival, further reference to which will be found on p. 714 of this issue. In this connection it is interesting to learn that the cathedral authorities offered the use of their fine old 14th-century church of St. Nicholas, musically associated with Avison, for festival use, thus showing that at Newcastle there is no clerical objection to the rendering of the masterpieces of sacred music within consecrated walls. There were various reasons why this kind and thoughtful offer could not be accepted, and as the Town Hall was too unsafe to be used, the executive had to fall back upon the Palace Theatre, a building naturally unsuited to festival conditions and requirements. If, as may be assumed, the next festival will be held three years hence, it is to be hoped that by the year 1912, Newcastle will have been provided with a building worthy of the city and the art of music.

In briefly recording the events of the recent feast of music on Tyneside, the place of honour must be given to the choir, and for two reasons: the excellence of their voices and, especially, because of local importance. No fewer than 600 singers applied for admission into the festival choir, and although the conditions of rehearsal attendance were very severe, of the 362 elected members one only—a lady—failed to fulfil those conditions, and for a very good reason, she went to Canada in order to be married! The choir was thus constituted: sopranos, 100; contraltos, 93; tenors, 81; basses, 87; total, 361 voices. That the training of the choir was in the best possible hands, is proved by the fact that the chorus-master was Dr. Henry Coward. The engagement of the London Symphony Orchestra, ably led by Mr. Arthur Payne, was a guarantee of excellence in that important department. Mr. J. E. Jeffries, organist of Newcastle Cathedral, efficiently presided at an organ temporarily erected by Messrs. H. S. Vincent & Co., of Sunderland. The onerous duties of chorus accompanist had been efficiently discharged by Mr. Thomas Wilkinson.

The festival began on Wednesday morning, October 20, with the National Anthem as arranged by Mr. Granville Bantock. To this succeeded Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' conducted by Dr. Henry Coward, whose dramatic reading of the work is well known. This opening performance gave a good foretaste of the capabilities of the choir. Whether in the strenuous strains or tender tones which the ratorio chorally furnishes, it was evident that the choir was good one. Well balanced and full-voiced, they sang with intelligence and with a clear enunciation of the words, some of their best moments being perhaps in the quieter passages which were rendered with true delicacy. The principal soloists were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Madame Clara Butt, Mr. Walter Hyde, and Mr. Kennerley Rumford. The double-quartet and quartets were sung by Miss Marie Fairs, Miss Dorothy Forster, Miss K. M. Lloyd, Miss Lily Fortune, Mr. Robert Peel, Mr. William Aitchinson, Mr. Ernest J. Potts, and Mr. Arthur Lambert, all picked members of the festival choir.

The evening concert brought with it Mr. Wassili Safonoff as the distinguished conductor of a miscellaneous programme. This contained two novelties. The first was an Overture Phantasy, having Prometheus as its subject, composed by Mr. Edgar L. Bainton, a musician of repute resident in Newcastle. The work, if somewhat unduly extended, has some happy thoughts in its melodic phrases. New to England was a cantata, for tenor and bass soli, male chorus and orchestra, entitled the 'Ballad of the Doom of Oleg' (Op. 58) composed by Rimsky-Korsakov. This unpretentious and straightforward little work made no great demands upon the powers of the executants—of whom Messrs. Henry Brearley and Kennerley Rumford were the soloists—or the receptiveness of the audience. By reason of its familiarity the remainder of the programme does not call for extended observation. It opened with Strauss's 'Tod und Verklärung,' and included Mozart's serenade for strings. 'Eine kleine Nachtmusik,' Liszt's Pianoforte concerto in E flat—brilliantly played by Signor Busoni—and closed with Brahms's 'Triumphlied,' triumphantly sung by the choir. A word of unqualified praise must be given to the superb 'strings' of the London Symphony Orchestra for their faultless rendering, under Safonoff's care, of the Mozart piece, an exquisite gem of tender grace and perfect loveliness.

Thursday's music began with an Elgar morning—'The Kingdom' and the Symphony. Without fear of contradiction it may be asserted that no finer performance has been given of 'The Kingdom' than that which I heard at Newcastle. Not only was there an artistic homogeneity in the interpretation, but places in the work that formerly seemed obscure became perfectly clear. It is impossible to speak too highly of the choir, who reached the high-water mark of choral singing—purity of tone, refinement of utterance, and deep feeling. The orchestra were no less sympathetic, and the soloists—Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. John Coates, and Mr. Herbert Brown—were all that could be desired. Sir Edward Elgar conducted with evident pleasure a performance that was in every way memorable. Of the rendering of the Symphony, also conducted by the composer, it is only necessary to say that the work made its customary deep impression.

The evening concert began with Schumann's 'Manfred' overture and concluded with a remarkably fine and virile performance of Tchaikovsky's fourth Symphony under Mr. Safonoff. Between these two familiar works came a Symphonic Poem for chorus and orchestra, a setting of 'The Invincible Armada' (Op. 12), by Mr. Rutland Boughton. Composed eight years ago it obtained on this occasion its first hearing, with the advantage of being conducted by Mr. Boughton, who, as may be assumed, has not failed powerfully to reflect, in tones the patriotism of Schiller's poem as translated by Bulwer Lytton. The choir did full justice to Mr. Boughton's music by doing their best to follow such plain English directions in the score as 'Big and threatening,' 'Dark, and rather slower,' and so on. This symphonic poem affords opportunity for the display of dramatic choral singing; moreover, it has the merit of being a concise composition, occupying only fifteen minutes in performance. Elgar's charming 'Sea-pictures,' sung with her usual winsomeness by Madame Clara Butt, and Mr. Hadley's tone-poem 'Salome' completed the programme. Mr. Safonoff again showed that a baton is not necessary in order to obtain the best results from both choir and orchestra.

Friday morning's music began disappointingly. Haydn's oratorio 'The return of Tobias' was more or less performed for the first time in England. It was an open secret that no full rehearsal of this quasi-novelty had been held by reason of the innumerable mistakes in the band parts. No wonder that the performance was not up to a festival standard. Therefore, perhaps the less said about it the better, except to record that the soloists were Miss Esta D'Argo, Miss Maria Yelland, Miss Edith Evans, Mr. Walter Hyde, and Mr. Herbert Brown, and that Dr. Coward conducted.

In the second part of the programme Signor Busoni was afforded the great advantage of launching a new work of his own composition at an English festival. This novelty was called a 'Concerto for pianoforte, orchestra, and male chorus' (Op. 39), though the title 'Rhapsody' would more correctly describe the work, one that occupied over an hour in performance. So complicated a composition demands more than one hearing in order to fathom its potentialities, but no one could fail to be impressed with the sincerity and cleverness of the music. Therefore no apology is needed for merely recording that Mr. Egon Petri played the pianoforte part with remarkable skill and that Signor Busoni conducted his own poetically conceived work.

The festival was brought to a close on Friday evening by a concert which commenced with the performance of a Symphony in G minor (No. 2), composed by Mr. A. von Ahn Carse, a native of Newcastle and a former student of the Royal Academy of Music. So accustomed have we become to the pessimistic gloom of young British composers' in their lugubrious outpourings, that it was a positive relief to find that Mr. von Ahn Carse is not afflicted with the repellent malady of metaphysical dullness. He has written a symphony which gives something more than promise of better things to come. The Scherzo is as bright as a sunny day in June, and the slow movement is a series of clarified variations on a melody of which many an experienced composer would be glad to claim the parentage. Excellent is the last movement, both in regard to matter and manner. The symphony deserved all the care bestowed upon it by the orchestra. It obtained an enthusiastic reception, the audience deservedly cheering the young Novocastrian composer right heartily.

Mr. Granville Bantock's 'Omar Khayyám' (Part II.), which terminated the festival, afforded the choir ample opportunity for the exercise of their dramatic qualities, and they availed themselves of it to the full. The soloists were Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. John Coates, and Mr. Frederic Austin. The composer, who conducted, was very warmly received and applauded.

Finally, I need not again dwell upon the one great drawback of this festival, the holding of the performances in a theatre instead of a municipal building worthy of Newcastle and its wealthy constituency. The fact that the festival will realise a profit of nearly £200 is indeed gratifying; but the Royal Victoria Infirmary would have benefited to the extent of some £800 or £1,000 had not that enormous sum been of necessity expended in hiring and fitting up the Palace Theatre. In the future selection of music to be performed, a place might be found for the inclusion of one or more of those old English madrigals which are the pride of our country: sung by such an excellent choir as that of the festival just ended, these beautiful unaccompanied masterpieces would receive their perfect interpretation. Meantime, unqualified praise and hearty congratulations are justly due to those who have worked so hard towards making this Tyneside meeting the success it undoubtedly was. In this connection I must again specially mention Mr. James B. Clark and Mr. C. Francis Lloyd, the honorary secretaries, in acknowledgment of their unflinching courtesy and devoted labours in connection with the Newcastle Musical Festival of 1909.

SOUTHPORT MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

The second triennial music-making in this pleasant Lancashire watering-place was held on October 13-16; moreover it was attended with an artistic success which must have been very gratifying to all concerned in its organization. So well was British music represented that no fewer than seven native composers, headed by Sir Hubert Parry and Sir Edward Elgar were present, either as conductors of, or as listeners to, their own productions. The four concerts were given on successive evenings, an arrangement which, while it avoided those gargantuan feasts of music which characterize other festivals, furnished periods of relaxation from the tension of listening to a superabundance of music, and gave time for the digestion of any strange dish set before the listener at a previous course in the banquet of sound. The performances were given in Cambridge Hall, Lord Street, a building that was really too small for proper effect to be given to the excellent vocal and instrumental forces engaged. The band was that of the Hallé Orchestra, under the experienced leadership of Mr. Rawdon Briggs; Mr. Thomas Halsall presided at a small organ specially erected for the occasion by Mr. George Benson, of Manchester; and the notes to the programme-books were supplied by Mr. Herbert McCullagh.

It is unnecessary to dwell upon the influence which provincial musical festivals exercise upon the progress of the art in this country; but it is impossible to overestimate the value of the co-operation of the local choral effort which brings about this important result. The band and soloists may be imported, as they usually are, but the choral department consists of those enthusiastic amateurs who love music for its own sake, and who are ever willing to devote their vocal gifts to the good cause. So it is at Southport. A well-equipped body of singers had been enrolled under the inspiring leadership of the chorus-master, Mr. Arthur W. Speed, who had spared no pains in training material that was in every respect good. The choir was thus constituted: sopranos, 61; contraltos, 50; tenors, 41; and basses, 46; making a total of 198 voices. On a future occasion a few more basses might with advantage be enlisted in order to strengthen that department and obtain a better balance, though this suggestion is not in the nature of any reflection upon the foundation tone of the present choir.

The festival opened on Wednesday, October 13, with the National Anthem, sung to Elgar's effective arrangement; and conducted by Mr. Speed. When Sir Edward Elgar came on to the platform to conduct his oratorio 'The Kingdom,' he was very warmly received. Sir Edward is no stranger to Southport, and it is no wonder that the choir greeted him so heartily, as he is a favourite with those who interpret his music. The rendering of the work reached a very high level of excellence. The choir sang as if their hearts as well as their voices were in the strains committed to their charge. A special feature which merits commendation was the clear enunciation of the words, and praise must be given for tone, phrasing, and expression. These Southport singers model their style on Sheffield, to which city and to Dr. Coward can be traced not a little of the wonderful improvement in choral technique which has spread all over the country during the last few years. The soloists—Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Grainger Kerr, Mr. Gervase Elwes and Mr. Herbert Brown—fully maintained their reputations, and a special word of praise is due to Mr. Brown for his artistic rendering of the music assigned to St. Peter.

The following evening (Thursday) brought forward the first novelty of the festival, a dramatic cantata entitled 'The vision of Cleopatra,' by Mr. Havergal Brain. The libretto of this very modern work gained the prize offered by the Norwich musical festival last year, and no one can deny that the composer has constructed a very clever superstructure upon a foundation that demands dramatic treatment. In listening to the music, one has the feeling that Mr. Brian has yet to come to his own; and if 'his own' should prove to be a better seeking after melody, a greater regard to form, and a less strenuous use of the orchestra, he should in due time arrive at that goal which has immortalized the great masters. The soloists were Miss Phyllis Lett (Cleopatra), Mr. John Coates (Anthony), Miss Maud Phillips (Iris), and Miss Lillie Whiteside (Charmian), all of whom, with the choir, orchestra and conductor (Mr. Landon Ronald) did their best to grapple with the difficulties and intricacies of the score. At the close of the performance the composer was called forward to receive the hearty applause of the audience. The second novelty—or, to be strictly accurate, quasi-novelty—was Dr. Walford Davies's setting of Milton's 'Ode on Time,' for baritone solo (Mr. William Walton), chorus and orchestra. This thoughtful work was written for the Milton Tercentenary last year, and performed with accompaniment of strings and organ at Bow Church, Chesapeake, on December 9, 1908. Now scored for full orchestra, the cantata was produced in its complete form at this festival, under the composer's direction. Such noble words as those that came from Milton's pen would naturally appeal to a composer of lofty ideals such as Dr. Davies. Evidence of this intimacy with the deeper things of life and the soul's aspirations is not wanting in the music, as for instance the subdued strains which deepen the significance of the lines

Then long Eternity shall greet our bliss
With an individual kiss.

The remainder of the programme does not call for detailed notice. Sung in faultless and genial manner by Mr. John Coates and conducted by the composer, Dr. Herbert Greuter's tuneful and delicately orchestrated 'Pastoral Songs,' with male-voice chorus, elicited hearty and well-deserved applause, so much so that the cheerful strain 'Welcome, sweet pleasure,' received such a warm welcome, that its 'sweet pleasure' obtained for it an encore. Miss Phyllis Lett gave a dramatic rendering of Saint-Saëns's charming ballade 'La Fiancée du Timbalier.' Weber's 'Oberon' overture, Liszt's Rhapsody No. 2, and Wagner's 'Prelude und Liebestod' (Tristan und Isolde), all ably conducted by Mr. Landon Ronald, completed the programme.

No less enthusiastic than the greeting that had been accorded to Sir Edward Elgar was the welcome which greeted Sir Hubert Parry when, on the third evening, he appeared to conduct the second Miltonic poem at this festival, 'L'Allegro ed il Penseroso,' for soprano and bass, soli, chorus and orchestra, produced at the Norwich musical festival of 1890. Melodious, grateful to sing, perfect in form and as clear as the day in its idiom, this typically English work, and one that should be more frequently heard, is most favourably received and richly enjoyed by the audience. To listen to it was a perfect pleasure from beginning to end. In regard to the share of the choir in producing a result so gratifying, it was evident that the brains as well as the throats of the singers were put to their best use, for one did all sang with heart, and soul, and voice.

The third novelty of the festival, also a British product, consisted of 'Choral variations on two folk-songs,' by Mr. Landon Ronald. This is not the composer's first excursion in a similar field, and it will probably not be his last. Modern composers are apt to forget that audiences—singers—do like a tune. In this instance the tunes were 'William and Margaret' and 'Widdecombe Fair,' two ditties that well lend themselves to variety of choral treatment. Here, as in his previous experiment, Mr. Ronald gave proof of his contrapuntal facility and his rhythmic and melodic ingenuity in the treatment of this pair of folk-songs. The first seemed to be somewhat over-elaborated; but the second, 'Widdecombe Fair,' was delightful in its countryside and rustic humour. Here is a specimen stanza (the first):

Tom Pearce, he went up to the top o' the hill,
All along, down along, out on the lea;
And he saw his ole mare makin' her will Wi' Bill Brewer, John Stewer, Peter Gurney, Peter Davy,
Dan'l Whiddon, Harry Hawk, and Uncle Tom
Cobley and all.

The last stanza begins, 'When the cold wind howls on the shore at night,' an atmospheric condition which afforded the composer full opportunity for a little bit of realism no less artistic than clever in result. The gentlemen of the choir had full opportunity for the display of their sonorous tones in Stanford's 'Songs of the Sea' (solo, Mr. Joseph Lycett), the ladies in their refined rendering—pure intonation and perfect blending—of Vogt's 'An Indian lullaby.' Sir Hubert Parry's work, all the vocal music at the concert was conducted by Mr. Arthur W. Speed, the able chorus-master. A special feature of the programme was a most impressive and powerful performance of Tchaikovsky's 5th Symphony by the Hallé Orchestra, inspiringly conducted by Mr. Landon Ronald, whose cheery overture 'Birthday,' concluded an enjoyable evening's music.

Unfortunately I could not remain for the last concert on Friday evening, when 'The Messiah,' conducted by Mr. Henry Coward, set its seal on the festival. But I am indebted to a reliable correspondent for the following remarks on the performance of Handel's masterpiece. 'The Messiah' appeared to me to be imbued with increased vitality. The more vigorous portions were more intensified, while the more devotional passages seemed to gain by the evident thoughtfulness and devotion of expression which characterized all the festival performances. The members of the choir, encouraged by the successes of the previous evening, sang with remarkable purity and enthusiasm.' It is sufficient to give the names of the soloists, Miss Leonora Sparks, Miss Edna Thornton, Miss Webster Millar, and Mr. Robert Radford, all artists of high repute.

To return to the choir. So well did the Southport amateurs acquit themselves in choral song that at the next festival opportunity should be afforded them of singing one or two old English madrigals, in which their own intelligence and well-trained voices would find full scope for expression.

In conclusion, this interesting music-making, though one of the youngest of its kind, is in a vigorous condition, especially from the musical point of view, a state of affairs which is largely due to the joint labours of the energetic chorus-master, Mr. Arthur W. Speed, and the courteous honorary secretary, Mr. W. H. Potts. These enthusiastic workers in a good cause, supported financially and musically by their fellow townsfolk, should ensure a glorious future for the Southport Musical Festival.

In connection with the foregoing notice of the festival, attention may be called to the illustrated article on 'Southport and its musical associations' on page 716 of the present issue.

BIRMINGHAM MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

All the qualities that should distinguish so typical an English musical festival as that of Birmingham were found in connection with the meeting held on October 5, 6, 7 and 8. The singing of the choir alone made the occasion remarkable, and the splendid quality of the orchestra appealed to everyone. Dr. Richter was the most alert and sympathetic of conductors, and the soloists were the best available and did their work in accordance with the highest traditions of the British singer. Little in fact was wanting to make the festival one of the best that has been held. Artistically it was so; but one cannot ignore the noble cause of charity on whose behalf the meeting exists, and it is an unpleasant truth to have to record that the attendances and donations were far below the totals reached three years ago. To assign the cause to 'trade depression,' 'the Budget,' or any other of the complaints of the hour that rise to the tongue is not really going to the heart of the matter. One would accept them as being sufficiently satisfactory had not one the experience of Norwich Festival to conflict with such comforting assurances. The East Anglian gathering had for some time shown a tendency to similar attrition to that from which Birmingham is suffering, but it gave way to vigorous treatment prescribed for it by its new adviser, Mr. Henry J. Wood, and for the first time for eighty years a substantial profit was realised. Briefly, the treatment consisted of a more popular programme, and the popularity of the programme was secured by giving the public what they wanted to hear. It reflected thoroughly the musical spirit of the day, and when the Birmingham programme will do the same we shall hear no more of a reduction in the attendance and a lessening of the amount of the donations. Birmingham is accounted a musical place, although the precise nature of its tastes would seem to be difficult to determine, and there is every likelihood that the majority of the well-known works are heard pretty frequently under the auspices of the various musical societies in the locality. This at once eliminates or should eliminate the familiar from the scheme, and as the result such works as Handel's 'Judas Maccabæus' will go out and make room for a number of smaller examples which the public will like to hear under festival conditions. The performance of the 'Damnation of Faust' of Berlioz, although it came on the very last evening of the festival, attracted the largest audience. Yet the total number of the public present at the concerts worked out at about 2,000 less than in 1906. The support given to the performance of 'Faust' emphatically disposes of the contention that the festival habit is dying out, or that it is being crushed by the number of choral societies to be found on every side. The real question as to whether a festival attracts or not depends upon its programme, and it is clear that the scheme of this year's meeting at Birmingham did not possess features that appealed to the majority. Invest the programme with the right character, with the added attraction of a magnificent choir and superb orchestra, and the festival will achieve its object to the full. A section of the country that can produce so fine a chorus as that heard at Birmingham this year cannot but be musical to the core, and with this musical disposition to appeal to, the committee should have no difficulty in launching out into a rather wider direction of musical representation than has hitherto been indicated. In making the record of the work done, it is necessary first to deal with the material employed. The choir numbered 350 singers, consisting of 103 soprani, 80 contralti, 79 tenori, and 88 bassi. This disposition of the parts produced an excellent balance, upon which Mr. W. H. Wilson, of Manchester, the chorus-master, is to be congratulated. The orchestra was drawn from the forces with which Dr. Richter is most closely associated—the London Symphony Orchestra and the Hallé Band—and the plan worked admirably. The scheme of the festival contained only two entirely new works, but it is to be noted with satisfaction they were both by British composers. Thus in one direction at least the committee showed the liveliest appreciation of the spirit of the day. It was also indicated in the preponderance of native music more or less familiar—music, moreover, among the best executed in the programme—and the degree of appreciation it won was eminently gratifying.

The festival opened with the work which may be described as Birmingham's own special possession, the religious masterpiece of Mendelssohn, the ever-precious oratorio 'Elijah.' Over sixty years have passed since Mendelssohn was induced to finish the work that had so long been germinating in his mind, and to conduct its production and first hearing at the Birmingham festival of 1846. This was due to the enterprise of Mr. Joseph Moore—a worthy citizen whose name is ever to be mentioned with enthusiasm in connection with the Birmingham meeting. Since then the oratorio has never been absent from the programmes, and it is likely to be a good many years before that undesirable change of opinion will come about which will banish this work. It is finding a rival in the affections of the Birmingham public, but that rival is another of the sons of the Birmingham festival. It is one who speaks with as much force and as much truth as did Mendelssohn in his day, though he does so through the medium of a musical idiom derived from half-a-century's development of musical language. To the name of Edward Elgar, Birmingham can always point with pride, for it was under her care that his first great work—still in the opinion of many his greatest work—the 'Dream of Gerontius,' was accorded its initial hearing. It proved a worthy sequence to 'Elijah' when, after nine years, it was heard again on the second morning of the festival. The performance of 'Elijah' well prepared the mind for the superlative excellence of the performance of the next morning. The choir very soon made its fine qualities clear. They did not do themselves justice at once. The delivery of 'Help, Lord' was marked by hesitation and raggedness which apparently caused some people to form opinions concerning its merits which nothing subsequently eradicated; but in 'Yet doth the Lord' it displayed those qualities which delight the lover of choral singing, for its delivery was distinguished by the rising and falling of tone which bespeaks the individual intelligence and collective confidence. From this point onwards the singing became better and better; each department showed itself to be of legitimate quality, including the tenors, whose only weakness was a tendency to hang back. One does not associate shyness with the lucky possessor of that priceless gift, a tenor voice, but for once at least, as heard collectively, the Birmingham singers seemed to possess that defect. The basses were notably solid and resonant; the sopranos bright and free, though a little limited in compass; and the contraltos of the proper mezzo timbre. The compass of the sopranos was limited by the use of the high pitch, to which unfortunately the organ is still tuned. This unhappy defect will always exist until an Act of Parliament is passed regulating the pitch throughout the country. Such a provision should also make contribution towards the cost of lowering the vibrations of the organs, beginning, it is to be hoped, with that of the Royal Albert Hall, and taking next the instrument in Birmingham Town Hall. All the soloists were affected by the pitch more or less, for a time; but beyond this their work calls for high praise. The soprano numbers in the first part were sung by Madame Gleeson-White with marked point and roundness of tone, and in the second, Miss Agnes Nicholls shared in the work and took charge of 'Hear ye, Israel.' The music of the Youth was sung by Madame Gleeson-White who, though she adopted an appropriate tone, did not disguise the fact that a practice of employing a female singer for the part is not to be commended, more especially in a city which has a cathedral choir. The tenor music was entrusted to Mr. John Harrison, who sang most expressively; Madame Agnes Crossley achieved her usual success with the contralto numbers, singing 'O rest in the Lord' in particular with a commendable absence of the false sentiment sometimes introduced, and Mr. Dalton Baker was again a devout and musical representative of the Prophet. In the concert numbers Misses L. Taylor and C. Walker, and Messrs. L. Brown, W. Evans and W. Bennett lent efficient aid. The organ was judiciously manipulated on this occasion by Mr. C. W. Perkins.

In the evening the first novelty was heard in Mr. Ralph Boughton's clever setting of the excerpt from Edward Carpenter's 'Towards democracy,' entitled 'Midnight.' Its remarkable character is derived from the success with which the composer has caught the peculiar atmosphere of the 'witching hour.' The poem deals with its various aspects, and by his music Mr. Boughton creates a wonderful impression of the eeriness of the hour betwixt night and day. His works to a climax in masterly fashion, and shows equal skill in leaving it to take up another. Through it all he retains the impression of the hour that comes with different meaning to so many different people. George Augustus Sala showed us years ago the variety of things happening when the hands of the clock are together, but it has been left to Mr. Boughton to illustrate it musically in such a way as to form a picture that defines the pathos as well as the charm. Special facility is shown in the choral writing. The greater part of the work is borne by the chorus, and what the soloists have to say is expressed in admirably devised phrases whose matter as well as manner is alike individual and excellent; the weakness exists on the orchestral side. The choir, directed by the composer, sang exceedingly well, and the work made a deep impression. A feature of this programme was the Symphony of Sir Edward Elgar, which was introduced to a Birmingham festival audience through the medium of Dr. Richter. The fine orchestra, which must have been the largest that has ever performed the work, played superbly, and at the close the composer was called to the platform by an audience clearly entranced by his wonderful creative effort. The closing scene from Wagner's 'Die Götterdämmerung,' sung with intense dramatic fervour by Miss Perceval Allen, the trial songs from his 'Mastersingers,' admirably given by Mr. Walter Hyde, who appeared at the festival for the first time, and a magnificent interpretation of the overture of the same work, were the other outstanding features of the concert.

Wednesday morning was given up to Sir Edward Elgar's 'The Dream of Gerontius.' Here it was that the choir made its name. Nothing could have been better than this performance. It was a full realisation of the extraordinary spirituality that permeates the whole work. At every point the choir sang as one mind, and the soloists, Mr. John Coates, Madame Kirkby Lunn and Mr. Frederic Austin threw themselves into their task with complete abandonment. The entire performance was distinguished by the exact amount of etherealism the music demands, and it remains a memory it will be difficult to efface. In the second part the choir sang Bach's motet for double-chorus 'The Spirit also helpeth us' with all the points of a first-class permanent body of singers. It was a splendid effort and an intelligent response to exceedingly well-directed training. Solo numbers were contributed by Madame Kirkby Lunn, who sang Richard Strauss's 'Hymnus' with great beauty of voice and feeling, and by Mr. George Henschel, who chose the effective monologue of King Saul from Parry's oratorio of the same name. A Richter, reading of the 'Jupiter' Symphony of Mozart completed the day's delight. On Wednesday evening the 'Stabat Mater' of Dvorák, a work of undeniable earnestness, received an excellent interpretation, with Miss Perceval Allen, Madame Kirkby Lunn, Mr. John Harrison and Mr. Robert Radford as soloists. The programme was further supplemented by Tchaikovsky's 'Francesca di Rimini,' Parry's scholarly and well-imagined 'Symphonic variations,' Pognier's Address, successfully delivered by Mr. Robert Radford, and a reading under of Richter of the 'Leonora No. 3' of Beethoven, which passed anything of the kind heard in recent years.

Handel's 'Judas Maccabæus' formed the programme of Thursday morning. The performance was a triumph for the choir, and with good characterization in the efforts of the soloists—Madame Gleeson-White, Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss La Crossley, Mr. John Coates and Mr. Radford—the inter-estation justified the inclusion in the scheme of Handel's like oratorio. The second novelty was heard on Thursday evening. It consisted of the third part of Mr. Granville Bantock's minutely descriptive setting of Fitzgerald's apt translation of the 'Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyám.' The first part was preceded by the second part. The Birmingham Professor's fresh addition to this monumental composition is for the best. The glitter of the East so cleverly introduced in the first and second parts by such wholly original methods, becomes a warm glow in the third part. The eye is less dazzled and can appreciate more. The homogeneity of the whole of the third part is very grateful and, moreover, shows us the composer in a less strained manner. It is an infinitely superior manner, for though the previous compositions are undeniably clever, their expression is apt to be a little wanting in the suavity one expects in an Eastern subject; in the third part there is all the suavity with a wonderful humanity added that carries with it an inevitable appeal. The composer has done nothing so good as this. The utterances of the Six Pots, and in turn the phases of the Beloved, the Poet, and the Philosopher are all marked with a new feeling, and in the final for all three with the chorus background, the highest plane of musical-dramatic expression is reached, which in turn dies away into a deeply lyrical description of the end—'Turn down the empty is.' This third part of 'Omar' introduces us to Mr. Bantock in an altogether new light, and we may take it that it represents the real method of expressing the genius of this exceptionally endowed composer. The performance was excellent. The composer conducted, and the solo parts were given with all effect by Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. John Coates, and Mr. Frederic Austin. A Bach Suite, Strauss's 'Die Eulenspiegel,' and solos from Madame Donalda, who created an excellent impression on her first appearance before a Birmingham audience, comprised the remainder of the concert.

On the last day a morning programme was arranged which included Cherubini's Mass in C (No. 4), Brahms's 'Song of Destiny,' and Beethoven's 'Eroica' Symphony. Brahms and the Beethoven were the gems of the occasion; the choir sang with increasing warmth of tone and expressiveness, and Dr. Richter surpassed himself in his reading of the Beethoven. At the last concert, Berlioz's 'Le Carnaval' was set down and proved exceedingly popular.

The performance maintained the excellence of the festival. Madame Donalda, who sang from memory, distinguished herself by the charm of her vocalization; Mr. Walter Hyde sang the tenor music with all ardour; Mr. Henschel was no sardonic than in former years; and Mr. Robert Radford, as was the case throughout the festival, sang admirably. The choir fully maintained its position, the orchestra was equally good, and the general effect of the performance was to bring a memorable festival to a memorable end. The music sung during the week at the Cathedral is referred to on p. 721.

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The novelties heard during the last five weeks of the season which terminated on October 23, represented many of the best schools, ranging from Bach to the most modern composer. A Suite in G for strings by Bach, a Violin Concerto No. 1, in C, by Haydn, a Concertstück for four strings and orchestra by Schumann, and a soprano aria, 'The Danish huntsman,' by Berlioz, received their first performance in London. Foreign composers were responsible for most of the novelties of more recent composition that were included in the programmes. On two occasions works of Debussy were introduced; on September 29 an aria from the 'enfant prodige' was sung by Mr. George Bowden; on the following night the Danse Sacrée and Danse Arabe, previously produced by the Société des Concerts Symphoniques at Bechstein Hall, with the pianoforte, were performed with orchestra. A symphonic poem, 'Das Lied von der Glocke,' by Georges Dorlay, a suite, 'Swanehvit,' by Sibelius, and a 'Prélude Symphonique' No. 1, by R. Caetani, were performed for the first time. Two 'Piedmontese Dances' by Leone Sinigaglia and a 'Rhapsodie Espagnole' by Maurice Ravel were introduced to England, and a 'Praeludium' by Järnefelt was given for the first time in London.

The novelties by English composers (in which category we can include American) included four 'Symphonic sketches' by G. W. Chadwick; two 'Sea-pictures,' by Hubert Bath; a Concert overture by Oskar Borsdorf, that received a highly favourable reception; two new songs, with orchestra, composed by Sir Charles Stanford; and last, but not least, 'Songs of Nature,' by Dr. Walford Davies, produced on October 12. This charming collection of little pieces, seven in number, was described as an arrangement, with some entirely new material, made by the composer from a longer work containing fourteen numbers, first performed at a Broadwood concert in April, 1908. A short English poem forms the text of each number, except the opening 'Preamble and morning tune,' and is set as a tenor solo, soprano and alto chorus, or a combination of both. In two cases, however, the words, instead of being sung, are employed as the poetic basis of an orchestral piece. The suite is accompanied instrumentally by pianoforte, flute, horn, and strings. The composer presided at the pianoforte, and witnessed the fully-deserved success of his clever and highly characteristic work.

Matter for interest, apart from novelties, was provided on October 20 in Sir Hubert Parry's Symphonic variations in E minor, and on September 29 and October 21 by the second and third performances during the season of Elgar's Symphony.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

The inaugural lecture of the new term course for teachers was delivered on September 29 by Dr. J. Warriner, the subject being the 'Financial outlook for musical students.' He estimated, basing his figures on the 'Musical Directory,' that there were about 4,200 teachers of music in London alone, which would give not less than 13,000 or 14,000 students, excluding pupils in schools: there were also about 5,000 students in the great music schools of the metropolis. The names of about 3,000 orchestral players and solo vocalists were given in addition in the book already quoted. Through this over-production in one area, and its undue subsequent localisation, the outlook for the student who remained in London was not favourable, unless the talent reached was much above the general level. On the other hand, some provincial towns and cities presented much scope to real ability.

CARL ROSA OPERA COMPANY.

The season now in progress bids fair to be highly successful. The list of operas is as usual mainly familiar, but 'Fidelio' and 'Tristan' form part of the scheme. The players include many well-known favourites and some newcomers. Among the latter Madame Gertrude Vania achieved a signal success on the opening night, October 18, as Elsa in 'Lohengrin,' in company with Mr. John Coates as the Knight. The performance was surprisingly good in every respect, and a gratifying tribute to English art. On October 20, Miss Doris Woodall again vindicated her claim to be considered the most interesting of English exponents of 'Carmen.' The conductors are M. Eugene Goossens and M. van Noorden.

The Broughton Packer Bath Scholarships (2)—for violin and violoncello playing respectively—will shortly be competed for. The former is open to male and female British subjects, the latter to male candidates only. The scholarships entitle the holders to free musical education at the Royal Academy of Music and are tenable for three years. Full particulars can be obtained from the Secretary.

London and Suburban Concerts.

NEW SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The series of concerts to be given by this Orchestra under Mr. Landon Ronald's direction opened on October 7. The novelty of the occasion was an 'Overture to a drama,' Op. 45, by Georg Schumann, a work which testified to the composer's powers of assimilation and to his desire to present only music of the kind that experience has shown to be palatable. The overture is also to be commended for its 'healthiness.' Other works performed on this occasion were Brahms's second Symphony, Mr. Ronald's Scena Adonais, sung by Madame Ella Russell, and Sir Alexander Mackenzie's 'Scottish' Pianoforte concerto, the solo portion of which was interpreted by Miss Irene Scharrer. The orchestra played in a manner that promised a continuance of last season's feats of brilliance.

THREE INTERESTING PIANOFORTE RECITALS.

M. Vladimir de Pachmann gave his first recital this season at Queen's Hall on September 25. His well-known artistic and pianistic qualities were in evidence throughout. In addition to familiar pieces by Chopin, Weber, Mendelssohn and Liszt, he played Schumann's Sonata in G minor (Op. 22). A most interesting feature of the recital was M. Pachmann's imitatively graceful and charming rendering of four of Henselt's rarely heard Concert Etudes, of which he has made an excellent edition.

Herr Moriz Rosenthal gave his only recital of the season at the same hall on October 12, when he excited great enthusiasm by his intellectual and technical gifts. His interpretation of Brahms's difficult 'Variations on a theme of Paganini' was an astonishing example of legitimate virtuosity.

The programme of Signor Busoni's recital at Bechstein Hall on October 16 consisted entirely of the artist's own transcriptions and arrangements of works by Bach, Beethoven, Mozart and Liszt. Of these, Bach's Toccata and Fugue in D minor and some 'Choralvorspiele' were perhaps the most perfectly transcribed by reason of Signor Busoni's intimate acquaintance with Bach's style, combined with his wonderful knowledge of the resources of the modern pianoforte, qualities which render his works in this direction examples of what transcriptions of organ music for the pianoforte should be. His playing throughout the afternoon was distinguished by the greatest technical perfection and an inexhaustible wealth of tone-colour.

Master Eddy Brown, a violinist, is yet another of those precocious executants who are ready to derive full advantage from the attraction that their extreme youth lends to their performances. In the majority of such cases, when youth disappears no compensating artistic qualities take its place as an allurements to the public. At the present stage it would be rash to prophesy as to Master Brown's future, but his playing at Queen's Hall on October 19 showed no lack of promise on the interpretative side, while technically he was able to make a good account of Beethoven's Concerto and Tartini's 'Trillo del Diavolo' sonata. Needless to say the audience were delighted.

At the concert given by M. Ysaye at Queen's Hall on October 16, the inclusion in the programme of Brahms's Violin concerto was a circumstance of particular interest, as the work had never before been played by M. Ysaye before a London audience. The violinist abated none of his romantic methods in concession to the austerity of the music, and gave a highly individual reading that threw new light on the beauties of the work. The accompaniment was played by the Queen's Hall Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Henry J. Wood.

The Société des Concerts Français, whose object is to present unfamiliar works by French composers to London audiences, opened their second season on October 22 at Bechstein Hall. The interesting programme was chosen from the writings of M. Vincent d'Indy and his pupil M. Albénis Magnard. The former was represented by songs and a pianoforte work, 'Tableaux de voyage'; the latter by a violin and pianoforte sonata and a group of songs marked Opus 1. The artists were Mlle. Selva (pianist), Madame Jeanne Lacoste (vocalist), and M. Firmin Touche (violinist).

Miss Eva Digby O'Neill and Miss Maude Dixon gave a very enjoyable recital at Steinway Hall on October 15. Miss O'Neill has a pleasing style and gave point to her various recitations, especially in Jean Ingelow's 'High tide.' Miss Dixon again displayed excellent technique and expression in a well-chosen selection of pieces by Beethoven, Brahms, Schumann, Chopin and Liszt. Special proof of her qualifications as a sympathetic accompanist was displayed in Stanley Hawley's music to 'The Bells,' which was once more recited by Mr. Charles Fry with much effect and warmly encored, the reciter giving 'Riding through the broom,' with Mr. Hawley's music.

Considerable success attended the vocal recitals given in London during the past month by Miss Maggie Teyte, an English singer who has hitherto been forced to look chiefly abroad for recognition. Judging from her singing of operatic excerpts the reputation she has gained on the boards of the Opéra Comique at Paris has been well earned. She gave also many highly emotional interpretations of lyrical songs of various countries. She is undoubtedly an accomplished singer.

Old music occupied a prominent place in the programme of Herr Fritz Kreisler's recital at Queen's Hall on October 12. The distinguished violinist introduced, however, an important contribution to British art in a Suite for violin and pianoforte in D minor by Mr. York Bowen, which proved well worthy of the honour it received. The pianoforte part was played by the composer.

Both as pianist and composer Mr. Felix Swinstead is a musician of considerable talents. His attainments in these capacities were exhibited at Eolian Hall on October 19. As an executant he contributed interpretations of works by Beethoven and Chopin; as both performer and composer he submitted some 'Preludes' and a 'Fantasie.'

Madame Ada Crossley seldom appears on English concert platforms otherwise than in oratorio, and consequently much interest attached to her recital at Bechstein Hall on October 19. She sang Handel's 'Dove sei?' and a number of German, French and English songs. The large audience showed abundant pleasure.

The tenth National Brass Band Festival, which took place in the Crystal Palace on September 25, attracted over 150 bands and 50,000 visitors. The chief of the nine sectional competitions was that for the Championship of Great Britain and the Colonies, the prize being the National Crystal Palace Challenge Trophy. This was gained by St. Albans, conducted by Mr. W. Rimmer. Lieut. Charles Godfrey, Mr. James Ord Hume and Mr. James Brier were the adjudicators. The proceedings terminated with a concert by massed bands.

The Alexandra Palace Choral and Orchestral Society opened its season on October 9 with a very powerful performance of 'Elijah,' under the direction of its distinguished conductor, Mr. Allen Gill. The principal vocalists were Madame Mary Conly, Miss Gwladys Roberts, Mr. Henry Gurney, and Sir Charles Santley, the veteran representative of the title-part being in particularly fine voice. Mr. G. D. Cunningham was in the organ.

A vocal recital was given by Mr. Robert Overleigh at Bechstein Hall on October 20. He submitted readings of a number of songs covering a wide range of period and style, the most important and exacting being Schumann's 'Dichterliebe' cycle.

The chief attraction at the inaugural concert of the forty-second season of the South London Choral Association was Coleridge-Taylor's 'Bon-Bon Suite,' the dainty music of which was greatly appreciated by an overflowing audience. Mr. Greeves Johnson sang the baritone solos with much taste and beauty of voice, and the choir revelled in the responsible work that fell to their share. One of the most effective numbers was 'The Watchman,' the title-part being well sung 'behind the scenes' by Mr. John Lacey. The remainder of the programme was contributed to by the 'Chandos Part Singers' (Messrs. Reid, Brierley, Johnson and Lacey), who were deservedly encored for their very delicate rendering of glees and part-songs; by the Choir of the Association, who gave spirited versions of several of Hatton's part-songs and choruses; and by a string band under the leadership of Mr. E. T. Cryer, who performed two of Brahms's Hungarian Dances with much vivacity. Mr. Leonard C. Venables, who conducted with his usual resourcefulness, gave a short address upon the advantages of cultivating musical skill as an antidote to roller-skating and other profitless forms of recreation.

BANQUET TO PROFESSOR TERRY.

On October 22 a banquet was given at the Palace Hotel, Aberdeen, to Professor Terry, in recognition of his services to the cause of musical progress in the North-eastern part of Scotland. It was due to his energy and ability that the musical festival held in the granite city last June was so eminently successful. Lord Aberdeen presided, and the musical profession, the University, and other educational authorities were well represented, in addition to various sections of the church. Professor Terry spoke very ably on the improved cultivation of musical taste, and Sir Edward Elgar and Dr. McNaught were among the speakers who had specially travelled to Aberdeen for the occasion. The banquet was a great success, due mainly to the exertions of Mr. A. Cruickshank.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Vienna, October 15.

In accordance with a long-established custom, the Imperial Opera celebrated the Emperor's name-day with the performance of a novelty which inaugurated the opera season proper, although some performances had already been given during the latter half of August. On this occasion the work produced was a one-act comic opera, 'Versiegelt' (Sealed), the libretto being a clever adaptation by Messrs. Richard Batka and Perdes-Milo of an old comedy by Raupach. Herr Leo Blech, the young conductor of the Berlin Royal Opera House, and a gifted composer, is responsible for the music. His writing is modern in style without, however, going to extremes, the easy-flowing vocal portion being supported by descriptive orchestration. He has a real melodic vein and the capacity for writing effective ensembles. Herr Blech does not so far display any particularly original invention, but gives promise of really excellent work in the future. The new work was well received, and seems likely to retain its place in the repertoire. In addition to 'Versiegelt,' Herr Felix von Weingartner, who conducted, gave Peter Cornelius's opera 'Der Barbier von Bagdad,' re-staged, and with a fresh cast. Herr Mayr was very suitably placed in the title-part, and it is hoped that the opera, which is so full of musical beauties, may now be able to retain its hold on the public, despite the weakness of its libretto. The Volksoper has recently made a hit with its revival of Lortzing's delightful 'Wildschütz.' The concert season commences in the latter part of October, and, judging from the prospectuses already issued, we may look forward to a musical deluge.

RICHARD VON PERGER.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The first concert of the Philharmonic Society was given on October 7 before a crowded and sympathetic audience. The managing committee had secured the services of some of the leading artists of the day, and, according to the usual practice of the Society, the concert was of a miscellaneous character. The work of the Society's chorus—which, it is gratifying to state, is now full to repletion—consisted of Bach's Sanctus from the Mass in B minor and some part-songs by MacDowell, Warner and Seymour, all of which were admirably sung. The soloists were Mlle. Alice Verlet, Mr. John McCormack, Mr. Mark Hambourg and Mons. Brinkmann, with Mr. Cyril Towsey as accompanist.

The City Choral Society, which had for some years formed a useful organization, has ceased to exist, and become merged in the Philharmonic, which is now more than ever the leading musical Society. A brilliant concert was given on September 15, when Signor Caruso paid his first visit to Belfast. He was accompanied by Madame Anita Rio, Signor Armando Lecomte, and Miss Hilda Saxe (pianist).

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Bristol Royal Orpheus Glee Society began their regular practice meetings earlier than usual, owing to the necessity of their annual ladies' night taking place so early next year as February 3. The novelties agreed upon are the following: 'Sadly the moon,' for two separate choirs (Louis A. Coerne), 'Walpurga' (F. Hegar), 'The call of Spring' (Max Reger), 'The Reveille' (Elgar), and 'The Haven' (C. Lee Williams).

West Bristol Choral Society have commenced rehearsals with Handel's 'Samson.' At the second concert 'The song of Miriam' (Schubert), Max Bruch's 'Fair Ellen,' and Elgar's 'The Black Knight' will be given.

There was a successful chamber concert at the Victoria Rooms on October 9, the players being Miss Mary Lock (pianoforte), Miss Averil Woodward (violin), and Mr. Herbert Walenn (violoncello). Excellent performances were given of the Sonata in F (Op. 6), by Richard Strauss; the Sonata in G (Op. 30), by Beethoven; and Popper's suite 'Im Walde.' The vocalist was Miss Marion Gaskell, whose songs were admirably rendered and effectively accompanied by Mr. Hubert Hunt.

The annual meeting of the Bristol Choral Society was held at the Museum Lecture Hall on October 12, under the presidency of the Sheriff of the city (Mr. Stanley Badock), who warmly congratulated Mr. Riseley (the conductor) that he had been nominated to succeed him in his office as Sheriff for the ensuing year. The Society applauded Mr. Riseley, who briefly acknowledged the demonstration. Similar congratulations were offered by the Bristol Orpheus Glee Society.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Edinburgh musical season seems likely to be a busy one. Messrs. Paterson & Sons, who have again secured the services of the Scottish Orchestra, announce a series of twelve orchestral concerts. As in recent years, Dr. Cowen will be conductor-in-chief, and on the occasions of his absence Mr. Peter Raabe, Dr. Hans Richter, Mr. Landon Ronald, Mr. Wassili Safonoff and Mr. Henri Verbrugghen will wield the baton.

The various choral societies are settling down to their winter's work. The Choral Union (conductor, Mr. T. H. Collinson) are studying Berlioz's 'Faust' and Mackenzie's 'Rose of Sharon'; Mr. Kirkhope's choir have taken in hand Parry's 'Judith'; and Mr. Moonie's choir announce Bach's Magnificat, Debussy's 'The Blessed Damozel,' Cowen's 'Ode to the Passions,' and smaller works by Elgar, Tinel and Rimsky-Korsakov. The Southern Choral Association (conductor, Mr. Winning) will rehearse Haydn's 'Spring' and Handel's 'Acis and Galatea.' The Western Choral Society (conductor, Mr. Baird) will perform

Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast.' Mr. Gavin Duffrey's choir—a new organization—are putting into rehearsal Somervell's 'Charge of the Light Brigade,' Gounod's 'Faust' and 'The Messiah.'

The Broughton Place Choral Society's programme (conductor Dr. W. B. Ross) will include 'The Messiah,' Elgar's 'The Black Knight,' and 'Ode to the Passions' by the conductor. The Philharmonic Society, also conducted by Dr. Ross, will perform Elgar's 'King Olaf.'

Mr. James Simpson will continue his Classical Concerts, and among the artists engaged for the concerted music are the St. Petersburg Quartet and the Queen's Hall Sextet. Mr. Ernst Denhof, in conjunction with the Carl Rosa Opera Company, proposes giving two complete cycles of Wagner's 'Ring,' the first performances in their entirety on any British stage beyond the walls of Covent Garden. Mr. Michael Balling, conductor of the 'Ring' performances at Bayreuth last summer, will conduct. Mr. Denhof also announces two subscription concerts, at which he will be assisted by the Brussels and Sevcik String Quartets.

The musical portion of the community here in Edinburgh will join in wishing Mr. J. C. Grieve, of 'Kinderspiel' fame, many happy years in which to enjoy his retirement from active life. For a lengthened period he has held an honoured position as a teacher in the Heriot Watt College and Edinburgh Board Schools.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

There has been the customary lull before the beginning of the regular concert season, and very little falls to be recorded this month. The Moody-Manners Opera Company gave a fortnight's performances, and there were a few concerts given by local musicians. Among the latter were a vocal recital by Mr. G. H. Martin, with Mr. James Friskin as solo pianist, and a similar recital by Miss R. Julia Brown, assisted by Miss Edith Brown as pianist. On October 19 the Misses Florence and Bertha Salter gave a highly successful vocal concert, a feature of which was the concert-givers' charming rendering of some duets. The excellent violin playing of Herr Bauerkeller afforded the necessary variety in the programme, and Mr. A. M. Henderson was, as usual, a most efficient accompanist. Under the auspices of the Glasgow Bach Choir, Mr. R. F. McEwen lectured on 'Bach as a song-writer' (with special reference to his use of instrumental obbligati). Mr. McEwen, who is an undoubted Bach enthusiast, treated his subject very skillfully, drawing his illustrations from the Mass in B minor, the Christmas Oratorio, and from some of the smaller cantatas. Messrs. Dickson (violin), Picton (flute), Sinclair (oboe), McEwen (pianoforte) were the instrumentalists, and Misses Richardson and McDiarmid and Messrs. Adams and Campbell gave the vocal numbers.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Mr. Donald Francis Tovey lectured at the University on October 8, on 'The Symphonic aspects of Music,' when the interest of his thoughtful and scholarly address was greatly enhanced by his pianoforte playing in illustration of Beethoven's plan and method, in the construction of the 'Waldstein' Sonata, the G major Sonata, Op. 31, and the eighth Symphony. He took especial pains to explain what is meant by the term 'Classical music.' In brief, the lecturer described it as 'work which has stood the test of time.'

An interesting lecture was given by Dr. A. H. Mann, of King's College, Cambridge, on October 9, before the local section of the I.S.M. His subject was 'Handel's method of preparing his great compositions.' Illustrated by a series of forty-two lantern slides, Dr. Mann by this method reproduced photographs made from Handel's sketch-books, and from the 'Messiah' score in the composer's handwriting.

The seventy-first season of the Philharmonic Society was brilliantly inaugurated by the opening concert on October 12, when Mlle. Alice Verlet was the vocalist and M. Ysaye played Brahms's Violin concerto, D major, Op. 77, and 'Fantasia Appassionata,' by Vieuxtemps. Under Dr. Cowen's direction the orchestra played Beethoven's second Symphony, and, as novelties, Wagner's 'Rule, Britannia' overture and Tchaikovsky's 'Battle of Poltava,' from the third act of the opera 'Mazeppa.' The expressive singing of the chorus in Mendelssohn's 'The hunter's farewell' was a grateful item of the diversified programme. During the interregnum extensive repairs have been made to the roof of the hall, which has been reconstructed from the outside at a cost of about £6,000. Especial care has been taken in not altering the interior ceiling, so that the perfect acoustic conditions of the beautiful concert-room have not been jeopardized.

Three local musical Societies, conducted by Mr. J. W. Appleyard, have resumed rehearsals; Handel's 'Jephtha,' being selected by the Rock Ferry Choral Society, 'Elijah' by the Cloughton St. Cecilia, and 'Messiah' by the Waterloo Choral Society.

The St. Helens Musical Society are rehearsing 'The pilgrimage to Kevlaar' (Humperdinck), 'The piper of Hamelin' (Parry), and 'Songs of the sea' (Stanford), for their first concert on November 29, and have chosen Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' for subsequent performance.

The Walton Philharmonic Society, a new organization in the northern suburbs, which is to comprise orchestral as well as choral members, is rehearsing Gade's 'Zion' and Jensen's 'Feast of Adonis,' under Mr. Albert Orton's direction.

The Symphony Orchestra concerts, conducted by Mr. Vasco Akeroyd, have transferred their locale from Sun Hall to the Philharmonic Hall, where the first of the new series of eight concerts was held on October 19. Mr. Plunket Greene sang Stanford's 'Sea Songs,' assisted by the Birkenhead Glee and Madrigal Society, and the fine orchestra was heard in Beethoven's eighth Symphony, Chabrier's Espana Rhapsody, and other items of a programme 'popular' in the best sense.

Under the auspices of the Liverpool Manx Society the Douglas (Isle of Man) Choral Society gave a concert in the Central Hall on October 20, when the choir, conducted by Mr. T. P. Fargher, were heard to advantage in Brahms's 'Song of Destiny,' 'The Storm' (R. Rogers), and 'Song of the Pedlar' (C. Lee Williams).

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Arrangements are now practically completed for the coming season, and it is possible briefly to outline the schemes of the leading musical societies.

The Gentlemen's Concerts, in addition to the four afternoon recitals, announce three orchestral concerts and one joint choral and orchestral, to be conducted by Mr. Henry J. Wood. Of the twenty-two orchestral items named in the prospectus, nine have never yet been heard in Manchester: Valse Badinage (Liadoff); Rhapsodie Espana (Chabrier); Dream Children (Elgar); Baba-Yaga (Liadoff); Serenade Impressions d'Italie (Charpentier); Love scene from 'Feuersnot' (Strauss); Adagietto for strings and harp (Gustav Mahler); Introduction to Act II. from 'Konigskinder' (Humperdinck); and Scherzo 'L'Apprenti Sorcier' (Dukas). At the choral concert on January 17, Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' and Haydn's 'Spring' will be performed.

The Hallé season opened on October 21, when the chief orchestral works were Elgar's Symphony, Strauss's symphonic poem 'Till Eulenspiegel,' and Beethoven's 'Leonora,' No. 3, which, appropriately, was placed first in the programme. Sir Charles Santley was the only soloist. At the second concert, Dr. Richter conducted for the first time in Manchester Bantock's comedy overture 'The pierrot of the minute.' The other orchestral items were Berlioz's 'Franc Juges' overture, Liszt's No. 3 Hungarian Rhapsody, and Beethoven's No. 4 Symphony. Miss Agnes Nicholls was the soloist.

Among the more important features of the coming season we note that the following works will be given for the first time in Manchester: Strauss's 'Don Quixote' tone-poem.

Varsang, Max Reger's Serenade in G, Bossi's 20 Goldoni, and Alexander Ritter's Symphonic Interim Corda. The choral works include Elgar's Stabat Mater, Berlioz's 'Faust,' 'Messiah,' 'Elijah,' Liszt's sabbath' (last heard in Manchester sixteen or 17 years ago under Sir Charles Hallé), and at the last Cherubini's Mass in C minor, No. 4, and the Choral Symphony of Beethoven. Two evenings will be devoted to programmes.

A series of twelve Saturday evening Promenade Concerts, conducted by Mr. Simon Spielman, ended on October 9, when Miss Lillian Risque was the soloist and Mr. Charles Tree the vocalist. Orchestral works by Bach, Wagner and Mendelssohn were heard.

On October 20 a concert of unusual interest was given by a distinguished Manchester Orpheus Male-Voice Choir. Mr. Walter Nesbit conducted a performance of an early Biblical scene, 'The love feast of the Jews,' in addition to unaccompanied works by Elgar, MacDowell, Schubert, Max Reger, &c. A gifted Manchester singer, Miss Clara Butterworth, who sang herself at the Blackpool Musical Competitive four years ago, appropriately made her first appearance in her native city in company with this choir as she had gained such an honourable record in the same arena.

At the Schiller Anstalt three concerts will be given, at which Mr. Rudolph Bauerkeller will play a new solo violin by Max Reger, and at a later concert the String Quartet propose playing the new string quartet by Dohnányi. Mr. Max Reger will also give two concerts on October 4. Mr. James Richardson, in conjunction with Mr. Cohn, played for the first time in Manchester Reger's early Sonata in G minor for pianoforte and violin, Popper's Suite in A (Op. 69), and an unpublished No. 1 in F by James Friskin, Miss Millicent Holbrook playing the songs.

An interesting development in the Royal city of Salford is the formation of a new Musical and Orchestral Society. Recently there was established a Municipal Musical and Orchestral Society. During the past year or two several familiar choral works have been performed with such success that they felt able to turn their attention to the type of 'King Olaf,' which was given on October 6 in thoroughly creditable fashion, when one takes into account the great difficulties attendant on the production of such a work.

The Salford Recreation Committee, in conjunction with the Salford Municipal Institution, have arranged a series of University Extension Lectures, by Mr. T. W. Higginson of Concord, Mass., U.S.A., who started on October 4 a course of six lectures on song composers, with musical illustrations. The series deals with Schubert, Mendelssohn, Robert Franz, Tchaikovsky, Grieg and Brahms. It was also arranged with Mr. Egon Petri to give a series of pianoforte recitals, illustrative of musical form in the composition after the time of Beethoven.

Mr. Gerald Cumberland has also arranged on Thursday evening before the Hallé concert, to give a short lecture on choral works to be performed that evening under the direction of Mr. Cohn. One gladly welcomes these endeavours to help a earnest musical student to extract the maximum of enjoyment and pleasure out of the music which is the course of the winter season.

At the great Lancashire towns, other than Manchester and Salford, in which activity exists, and of which the outer parts are little, Bolton may easily be taken as a typical musical life. Its Amateur Orchestral Society has several concerts under Mr. Andrew Morris, engaging instrumental soloists, with whom the orchestra plays chamber music. Mr. Charles Risegari conducts the choir of the Philharmonic Society, and not infrequently varies the programme by the inclusion of purely orchestral work. Mr. Whittaker (of Blackpool) conducts the Bolton Philharmonic, and naturally introduces to the public some of the best pieces of unaccompanied choral music by Bach, Handel, Cornelius, Tchaikovsky, Elgar, Stanford, and The Amateur Operatic Society is at present engaged in the production of German's 'Tom Jones,' and in addition to these several society of more or less private nature gives a series of private concerts.

MUSIC IN NEWCASTLE AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Tynemouth Amateur Vocal Society is rehearsing Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' under Mr. M. Fairs. The South Shields Choral Society will perform selections from well-known oratorios at its first concert. The Armstrong College Choral Society is practising Parry's 'Ode on St. Cecilia's Day' and some Northumbrian folk-songs arranged for unaccompanied singing.

Rosenthal appeared at the Chamber Music Society on October 7, and gave a purely intellectual rendering of his programme.

On September 30 the Moody-Manners Opera Company gave an excellent performance of 'The Mastersingers,' only the second presentation of that opera in Newcastle, the first having taken place several years ago.

A special report of the Festival will be found on p. 733.

MUSIC IN NORTH STAFFORDSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Mr. John Cope gave a Haydn Centenary Festival concert in the Victoria Hall, Hanley, on October 7. The several societies of which he is conductor—Leek Musical Society, Newcastle-under-Lyme Philharmonic Society, and the North Staffordshire Symphony Orchestra—took part, the total number of the forces employed numbering some 300 performers. Most of the choral items were drawn from the 'Creation,' and these were interpreted with consummate finish and ease. The orchestra contributed an overture and the Salomon Symphony in D, the rendering of which had the true Haydnian ring of lightheartedness. The soloists, Madame Sadler-Fogg, Mr. John Bloom and Mr. Herbert Parker, sang items from the 'Creation' in manner proving that they were familiar with the idiom of the old 'Papa.' Mr. John Cope conducted, and his work in handling a large body of performers showed an improvement upon his former efforts in that direction. Mr. Cope had previously proved himself to be an orchestral conductor of distinction, and, given sufficient opportunity, he will be equally successful in handling large choral bodies.

MUSIC IN NORWICH AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The winter musical season may be said to have commenced at St. Andrew's Hall, Norwich, on October 16, when the Saturday Popular Concerts, under the direction of Dr. Bunnnett, were resumed. There was a full audience including the Deputy Mayor, the Sheriff and members of the Corporate body. The vocalists were Miss Mary Gywn, late of Norfolk, and Mr. Knyvett Wilson, and Miss Margaret Leathes Prior, the Norfolk Scholar of the Royal College of Music, contributed three solos on the violin. Dr. Bunnnett introduced a Fantasia of his own expressly composed for the occasion.

On the same day an interesting recital was given at the Assembly Rooms, Theatre Street, by Mr. Albert Garcia with the assistance of Miss Alice Spelman (vocalist), Miss Margaret Leathes Prior (violinist) and Miss Ethel White (pianoforte).

The Norwich Philharmonic Society, conducted by Dr. Frank Bates, announces three concerts, the programmes of which will include Sullivan's 'Golden Legend,' Gounod's 'Redemption,' Elgar's Symphony and Stanford's 'Ode to Discord.' Lectures with musical illustrations will be given by Dr. Bates on the music to be performed at each of these concerts.

Mr. Dan Godfrey's prospectus for the fifteenth season of Symphony and Classical Concerts at the Winter Gardens, Bournemouth, promises, as usual, a feast of good things. The Municipal Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Godfrey, is now augmented to fifty performers, and excellent performances may be anticipated.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Though the full rush of winter choral concerts is not yet upon us, there have been a few forerunners, all excellent in intention and most of them highly creditable in performance. Among these may be numbered performances of the 'Hymn of Praise' by the newly-formed Victoria Hall Choral Society, conducted by Mr. H. C. Jackson; of Mendelssohn's 13th Psalm by the choir of Walkley Wesleyan Church; of Smieton's 'King Arthur' by a young choral body, St. Cuthbert's (Firvale) Choral Society, directed by Mr. W. Simpson, and some capital choral singing by the choir of Oak Street Church, Heeley (conducted by Mr. J. Armitage), in Coward's 'Story of Bethany' and Nichol's 'The Holy Grail.'

At the first of the Sheffield chamber concerts given on October 12, Mr. Joseph Holbrooke and the Saunders Quartet were the performers. Mr. Holbrooke's 'In Memoriam' quintet No. 4—performed at the Musical League Festival at Liverpool as a sextet, with double-bass—was very impressively played. Mr. Richard Walthew's Pianoforte trio in G major and Brahms's Pianoforte quintet in F minor (Op. 34) were also performed.

The first performance in Sheffield of Elgar's Symphony, was given on October 19 by the Hallé Orchestra under Dr. Richter, an event which gave distinction to the first of the Sheffield Subscription Concerts. In selections from 'Lohengrin,' and 'The Mastersingers,' the Sheffield Grand Opera Society were associated with the Manchester instrumentalists. The choir, numbering about sixty voices and trained by Mr. J. Duffell, sang with abundant spirit and the excerpts were much enjoyed.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At the present moment the interest of the musical season lies in a forecast rather than a retrospect. As to what has already happened, it is possible to be very brief. Mr. Holbrooke, with the aid of the Saunders String Quartet, has made a little tour of Yorkshire towns, visiting in turn York, Sheffield, Leeds and Bradford, and introducing several of his chamber compositions, including the Pianoforte quintet in F minor, and a light and tuneful Sonatina for violin and pianoforte, together with numerous songs by himself and other contemporary native composers. Another chamber concert was that given in York on October 1 by Mr. John Groves, at which Schubert's 'Trout' quintet was played by a 'family party,' consisting of himself, his brother, and three sisters. The York Pageant music was repeated in concert form by the York Musical Society on October 13, under the conductorship of the composer, Mr. T. Tertius Noble. I now pass on to consider what is offered by some of the leading Yorkshire societies during the coming season.

At Leeds the old Subscription Concerts have been completely amalgamated with those of the still older Philharmonic Society, which, without altering the nature of the programmes, will at least do away with a cumbersome title. Two wholly choral concerts are arranged for, at one of which Stanford's 'Eden' will be given; at two other concerts the Hallé Orchestra, under Dr. Richter, will appear, and, among other things, Elgar's Symphony, the 'Triumphal' of Brahms, and some important extracts from Wagner will be included in the programmes. The Leeds Symphony Orchestra, under Mr. Fricker, is engaged for a concert at which Dvořák's 'Stabat Mater' and Mendelssohn's 'Midsummer Night's Dream' music will be heard, and the remaining concert will be of chamber music for wind and strings, including Schubert's Octet (Op. 166). The above-mentioned performance of Elgar's Symphony will be the first to take place at Leeds, but it will be followed on the very next day by a second one, to be given by the Leeds Choral Union, under the composer's direction, and with the Queen's Hall Orchestra, who will on the following day be heard in 'The Apostles,' while later in the season we are promised 'Elijah' and a Wagner programme, both under the conductorship of Dr. Coward. The Leeds Municipal Orchestral Concerts, though deprived of the support of the Corporation, who decided that a subsidy of £200 a year was more than a manufacturing town of 500,000 inhabitants could afford to spend on music, are to be continued as a 'self-supporting concern,' a condition on which its Art Gallery and libraries would find it difficult to exist. The prices have necessarily to be raised, but as a serial ticket for the ten concerts can be purchased for half-a-crown and upwards, they can hardly be styled exorbitant. Under Mr. Fricker's direction a long list of popular classics, including symphonies by Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert, Schumann and Tchaikovsky, is promised, and the centenaries of Haydn, Chopin and Schumann will be suitably recognized.

The Bradford Subscription Concerts put forward a series of seven excellent programmes, at four of which Dr. Richter and the Hallé Orchestra will appear. Beethoven's Choral Symphony, a Bach motet, Beethoven's E flat Pianoforte concerto (soloist, Signor Busoni), the 'Tod und Verklärung' of Strauss, and a Wagner concert are among the chief things promised. The Bradford Permanent Orchestra intend giving five concerts, at which the music of Beethoven and Wagner, a Russian and a 'centenary' programme will be special features. Mr. Allen Gill is the Society's conductor, but on one occasion Mr. Landon Ronald will appear in that capacity. The Bradford Old Choral Society promises performances of Elgar's 'King Olaf,' Bach's 'Christmas Oratorio,' and Handel's 'Samson,' while the Bradford Festival Choral Society is to give Parker's 'Hora Novissima,' Goring Thomas's 'Swan and Skylark,' and 'The Messiah.' The works chosen by the powerful Huddersfield Choral Society, which Dr. Coward conducts, include Purty's 'St. Cecilia's Day,' Walford Davies's 'Everyman,' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha.' The venerable but still active Halifax Society gives Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul,' the first and second portions of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha,' and Handel's 'Acis and Galatea.' Mr. English is the conductor.

The Middlebrough Musical Union, which, situated at a sort of 'no man's land,' so close to the borders of Durham that Yorkshire people are apt to forget it belongs to their county, have, as usual, prepared a thoroughly artistic programme for this, their twenty-eighth season. It is curious how, by the purest coincidence, a particular work seems to enjoy a special popularity during a particular season, and so it is perhaps not surprising to find a third important Yorkshire Society turning to Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha,' the third portion of which is to be given at Middlebrough, together with the 'Winter' section of Haydn's 'Seasons,' Berlioz's 'Faust,' and a concert at which the Parisian String Quartet will play chamber music by César Franck and Debussy, complete the programmes of the concerts, of which that enthusiastic musician, Mr. Kilburn, will again act as conductor.

The Hull Harmonic Society, under Mr. Walter Porter, promises Elgar's 'Caractacus' and a Mendelssohn programme, while the Hull Vocal Society intends to give Brahms's 'German Requiem'—which, strange as it may seem, has not yet been heard at Hull—and two miscellaneous concerts. Dr. E. H. Smith is the conductor. The Hull Philharmonic Society, an amateur orchestra which Mr. Hudson conducts, will give two concerts, at which Schubert's 'Tragic' symphony and Raff's 'Leonore,' with some well-known overtures, &c., are to be heard. It is satisfactory to find that the Hull Symphony Orchestra, a professional body, will continue its concerts, under Mr. Wallerstein, during the coming season.

The York Musical Society, which Mr. Noble conducts, will give 'The Dream of Gerontius' during the coming season, and a miscellaneous programme, with the help of the York Symphony Orchestra, which, under the same energetic direction, will continue its excellent concerts.

The Greenwich Choral Society opened its season October 5 at Halstow Road School, when a very creditable performance of Elgar's 'Banner of St. George,' Goss's 'By Babylon's Wave,' and selections from Bennett's 'The Queen' was given by the choir and orchestra under the direction of Mr. Charles Nixon.

At the general meeting of the Bexley Heath Choral Society the honorary conductor, Mr. Fred Winter, was presented by the members with a gold Albert watch-chain as a token of appreciation for his services.

In addition to this novelty the programme also contained works by Max Reger, Joseph Haas, Carl Thielh, Albert Kahn and Otto Reber.

COPENHAGEN.

In the presence of Queen Alexandra, the Dowager Empress of Russia, and the Danish Royal Family, Mr. Sveinn Sveinhjörnsen, the Icelandic composer who lives in Edinburgh, gave an orchestral and choral concert consisting of his own compositions. An overture and a cantata were amongst the principal works performed, and the composer-conductor was well received.

GENEVA.

An unusually rich and interesting selection of new or rarely-heard compositions is to be performed here for the first time at the ten orchestral subscription concerts to be conducted by Herr Bernhard Stavenhagen. It includes Rimsky-Korsakov's Pianoforte concerto (C sharp minor), Mahler's third Symphony, Jaques-Dalcroze's Poem for violin and orchestra, Symphony by Bloch, 'Die Trommel des Ziska' by Joseph Lauber, Leken's Adagio for string orchestra, 'L'amour et la mer' by Ernest Chausson, Symphony in G minor by Kalinnikoff, Overture 'The pierrot of the minute' by Granville Bantock, 'Pyrame et Thisbe' by Trémisot, and the third act from Wagner's 'Parsifal.'

HAMBURG.

The Opera has already, since its reopening on August 31, developed great activity, and performances have been given of Puccini's 'Madama Butterfly,' Richard Strauss's 'Elektra,' Eugen d'Albert's 'Tiefeland,' and other operas. A series of performances conducted by Professor Arthur Nikisch proved particularly popular, and the rendering under his auspices of Mozart's 'Don Giovanni' was highly appreciated.

KARLSRUHE.

Siegfried Wagner's new opera 'Banadietrich' is announced to be produced at the Court Theatre before Christmas. The season at the Court Theatre was inaugurated with a performance of Eugen d'Albert's opera 'Tiefeland.'

MOSCOW.

Under the direction of Mr. S. F. Simin, the Opera House has inaugurated its season with the first performance in Russia of Richard Wagner's 'Die Meistersinger'! The text has been translated into the Russian language by M. Kolomizew, the musical critic, of St. Petersburg. The performance, which is said to have been an excellent one, was conducted by M. Emil Kuper.

MUNICH.

The first German Brahms Festival took place with crowded audiences on September 11-15. Three orchestral and choral concerts were given, the German Requiem and the first Symphony constituting the programme of the first evening, while at the second were heard the Symphonies in D and F, the orchestral variations on a Theme of Haydn (Choral St. Antoni), in addition to the 'Song of Destiny' and the Rhapsody for contralto solo, chorus of male voices and orchestra, a truly gargantuan feast. The works presented at the third concert were 'Gesang der Parzen,' 'Triumphlied' (eight-part chorus and orchestra), the Violin concerto (played by Professor Bram Eldering), and the fourth Symphony in E minor. Two concerts were also given which were devoted to some of the master's most important chamber music, e.g. Pianoforte quartet in G minor (Op. 25), and the Clarinet trio (Op. 114); also the vocal Quartets (Opera 31, 64, 92, and 112), and the 'Liebesliederwalzer.' Dr. Wüllner contributed a selection of Brahms songs. The conductor of the festival was Herr Fritz Steinbach, who brought with him the excellent Gürzenich choir from Cologne, and besides those already mentioned, the soloists included Professor Messchaert, Herr Prening, and the excellent clarinetist Herr Wiebel.—The Münchener Konzertverein (conductor Ferdinand Loewe) announces the following works at its twelve orchestral concerts: Elgar's Symphony, and Bantock's Overture, 'The pierrot of the minute'; 'Gnomenzug,' by Karl Bleyle; 'Tragische Ouverture,' by Ernst Boehe; Braunsfels's 'Variationen über ein französisches Kinderlied'; Symphonic Variations by Hans Koesler; Symphonic Prologue to a tragedy by Max Reger; Heroic tone-poem by Rudolf Siegel, and Mahler's fifth Symphony.

Société des Concerts Français.—This is a sister Society to the British Concerts Society, Paris, having been formed for the purpose of bringing systematically before British audiences the most representative works of the French School. Four concerts will be given at the Bechstein Hall, and among the composers represented are Vincent d'Indy, Almeric Magnard, Reynaldo Hahn, André Caplet, D. E. Inghelbrecht, Maurice Ravel, Paul Dukas, and Henri Février.

London Chamber Concert Association.—The six concerts of this Society, which gave some very successful performances last season, will take place in the galleries of the Royal Society of British Artists, Suffolk Street, Pall Mall. The programmes include chamber music of a varied and highly interesting character. The first concert was announced to take place on October 27 and the next will be given on November 24.

M. Tivadar Nachez has been playing with much appreciation Sir Alexander Mackenzie's Benedictus, for violin, during the provincial concert tour of Madame Clara Butt and Mr. Kennerley Rumford.

Mr. Albert Archdeacon will create the title-rôle in Joseph Holbrooke's new opera 'Pierrot and Pierrette' at His Majesty's (Afternoon Theatre), on November 11.

Answers to Correspondents.

E. C. P.—It is not at present known where Handel composed his 'Messiah'; it might have been in London, or at Gopsall, Leicestershire, the seat of Charles Jennens who compiled the book of the oratorio. Although the composition of the music occupied twenty-four days, it should be remembered that, according to his usual custom, Handel made use of existing material. With regard to the organ matter you mention, we printed in our issue of August, 1904, p. 506, a letter of Handel's, written to Charles Jennens, in which he gives the specification of an organ, but unfortunately the letter furnishes no clue as to the place for which the organ was intended, though as Handel indicates 'church work' in the specification, it may be assumed that the proposed organ was for a church.

CORNO DI BASSETTO.—(1) For books on English cathedral and parochial church music see 'A history of English Cathedral music,' by John S. Bumpus (T. Werner Laurie) and 'Choralia,' by the Rev. J. Baden Powell (Longmans). (2) Mr. J. W. Elliott has done a book of twenty 'Hymn-tunes with varied harmonies' (Reid Brothers), which are admirable. We do not know of any books of varied harmonies to standard Anglican chants other than the two publications you mention.

R. B.—The following settings of Rudyard Kipling's poems may serve your purpose: 'The Just so Song Book,' by Edward German; 'Barrack Room Ballads,' by Gerard F. Cobb; 'Hymn before Action,' by H. Walford Davies; 'Indian love song,' by C. F. Walsby; and 'The Centurion's song,' by Florence Bruce. The above are all for medium voice, but they could be transposed to suit a tenor voice.

R. R.—(1) The novel 'Charles Auchester' is out of print, but it might be procured second-hand. We gave some particulars about the book in our issue of July last, in the 'Answers to Correspondents' column. (2) The journal entitled Melody has been discontinued. (3) The principal pianoforte compositions of John Field—the Nocturnes and the Concerto—are contained in the Peters edition.

STUDENT.—We cannot give the names or addresses of teachers, nor can we express an opinion upon their qualifications; but as you are going to spend some time in Paris and have a slight acquaintance with the French language, it would be an undoubted advantage to you to study singing under an artist such as you name.

YOUNG COMPOSER.—(1) The only way in which a young composer—or, for the matter of that, an old composer—can dispose of his compositions, is to find a publisher who is disposed to buy them. (2) For books on composition see Stainer's primer 'Composition' (Novello) and Corder's 'Modern musical composition' (Curwen).

L. C. S.—The 'usual terms agreed upon by librettist and composer' vary, and are a matter of mutual arrangement. In many cases the composer, or the publisher of the composer's music, buys all rights of the librettist. In and case your property is protected by common law until it is published, and it then comes under the Copyright Act.

BASSO.—At your age it should be possible under skilled training for you to gain command of at least a major third over your present top note. But the upward training must be undertaken gradually and gently by beginning with exercises on high notes rather than by leading up through scales started low.

J. P. H.—We do not know of a catechism on vocal physiology such as you seem to require. You had better apply to the examining bodies you name for copies of questions asked at previous examinations. The subject is a wide one, and various opinions are held by authorities.

CHORISTER.—You must elect either to sacrifice sonority in middle notes if you continue to sing alto, or to abandon the so-called falsetto if you want to become an ordinary tenor. But why not stick to your alto vociferations? An alto voice is very useful.

DECANI.—For books on the training of boys' voices see Martin's 'The art of training choir boys,' Bates's 'Voice culture for children' (both in Novello's Primer series), and Curwen's 'The boy's voice' (Curwen).

T. D.—Except the Introduction to Act II. of 'The Wreckers,' we cannot trace any other published compositions or arrangements by Miss Ethel Smyth for the pianoforte or organ.

E. C. AND J. P. P.—Submit your violins to Messrs. W. E. Hill & Sons, 140, New Bond Street, who will give you an expert and reliable opinion upon their genuineness and value.

E. W.—The College of Organists has no 'official' or authoritative pattern for a pedal-board.

A few questions are held over.

Country and Colonial News.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed in his summary, as the notices are either prepared from local newspapers or furnished by correspondents.

Correspondents are particularly requested to enclose a programme when forwarding reports of concerts.

BARROW.—The Millom Vocal Union gave a performance of 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast,' in the Co-operative Hall on October 13, under the conductorship of Mr. R. R. Johnson. A highly creditable performance of the popular cantata was given by the choir and orchestra, led by Mr. W. B. Armer, the tenor solo being sung by Mr. F. S. Gilbert.

BRISBANE.—The second concert of the season given by the Musical Union was held in the Exhibition Concert Hall on August 3, when Gounod's 'Faust' was performed. The solo vocalists were Mrs. Sydney Cowell, Miss Lottie Richter, Mr. E. W. Muller, Mr. J. P. Clark, Mr. F. S. Taylor, the part of Mephistopheles being undertaken by the distinguished baritone Mr. Andrew Black. The full orchestra numbered over 300 performers, and Mr. George Sampson conducted.

CHRISTCHURCH (N.Z.).—The Musical Union gave a performance of Elgar's 'King Olaf' on August 31. The oratorios were rendered in a highly effective manner, especially deserving of praise being 'The challenge of Thor,' 'The wrath of Odin,' and 'The death of Olaf.' Very valuable assistance was given by the orchestra, the whole performance reflecting much credit on Dr. Bradshaw, who conducted. The solo vocalists were Madame Josephine Lee, Mr. Foster and Mr. C. Ryan.

JOHANNESBURG.—The Musical Society gave a concert in the Transvaal University College Hall on September 8, when the programme included Gounod's Overture 'Mirella,' Brahms's Rhapsodie (Op. 53), Grieg's Pianoforte concerto (Op. 16), the King's Prayer and Introduction to Act III. of 'Lohengrin,' and Elgar's Grand Military March No. 4. These were well performed by the Amateur Orchestral Society numbering forty-five members, assisted by the Johannesburg Male-Voice Choir of forty voices in the Rhapsodie, the contralto solo being undertaken by Madame Watkins Allen. The solo pianist in Grieg's Concerto was Miss Florence Weinbey, and Mr. F. W. Peters conducted a successful performance.

PORTSMOUTH.—The Temperance Choral Union gave a performance of Elgar's 'King Olaf' with considerable success at the Town Hall on October 13. The choir sang throughout with much spirit and expression, reflecting credit on the training received from the conductor, Mr. W. E. Green; and the orchestra, led by Mr. Matthew Lewis, gave very able support. The solo vocalists were Miss Carrie Lanceley, Mr. Cynlais Gibbs and Mr. Charles Knowles.

WELLINGTON (N.Z.).—The Mendelssohn centenary was worthily commemorated by the Musical Union, which gave two concerts in honour of the composer. An impressive performance of 'Elijah' was given on August 10, with a band and chorus of 250, under the direction of Mr. Robert Parker, who, thirty years ago, conducted the first performance of the work in this district. The soloists were Miss Phoebe Parsons, Miss May Driscoll, Mr. C. H. Stephens and Mr. John Prouse, all of whom were thoroughly successful. On August 12 the 'Son and Stranger' and 'Midsummer Night's Dream' overtures were played by an orchestra of forty-five performers, who also joined Mrs. E. D. Cachemaille in a fine rendering of the Pianoforte concerto in G minor. Several four-part songs, sung by the choir of the Union, and some songs contributed by Miss Phoebe Parsons, completed a very successful programme. The audiences were large and enthusiastic.

VOICE CULTURE FOR CHILDREN

A PRACTICAL PRIMER

CULTIVATION AND PRESERVATION OF YOUNG VOICES

WITH EXERCISES FOR THE USE OF SCHOOLS CHOIRS SOLO-BOYS, ETC.

BY JAMES BATES.

EXTRACT FROM THE PREFACE.

It is almost impossible to exaggerate the extreme delicacy of the child's voice, yet how often have these frail instruments been irreparably ruined for want of a little knowledge or a little care! Let the teacher sternly discourage anything like "shouty" singing, especially in class or choir, or misguided attempts to sing notes which are too high or too low. It may safely be said that soft singing (of course within the compass of the voice) will never do harm, no matter how continuous, but loud singing will inevitably lead to disaster. The teacher who successfully instils the principles of correct singing, and thereby renders possible the life-long use and enjoyment of a pleasing voice, is conferring on his young charges a boon of inestimable value. This thought should be his constant encouragement in times of difficulty and lack of immediate success.

THE TEN VIRGINS

A SACRED CANTATA

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"Will be heartily welcomed by all who love the art of music." Newcastle Journal.

"The work will certainly go through Saxondom in the wake of its predecessors from the same pen."—London Daily Telegraph.

"Must attain popularity wherever heard, and will assuredly be placed among the foremost compositions of this kind by present-day writers . . . treated in a thoroughly artistic manner . . . a perfect wealth of melody and striking individuality of style."—Liverpool Daily Courier.

"Works which have placed him in the front rank of English composers—the 'Holy City,' 'Joan of Arc,' and 'The Ten Virgins.'"—Newcastle Daily Journal.

"The choral writing in 'The Ten Virgins' is alone something to be thankful for, and, as we have intimated, it is only one of the many musical virtues of the Cantata."—Leamington Chronicle.

"BOW AND BROMLEY INSTITUTE CHOIR.—The hall was overcrowded by an audience that was disposed to encore every other number of the work. That Mr. Gaul should have secured this undoubted popular success with a work far more contrapuntal than any of his former works, is a remarkable tribute to his power of welding science and beauty into one whole."—The Musical Times.

"The subject is an excellent one for a Cantata . . . a stronger work than "Joan of Arc." Melodious, vocal, and of moderate difficulty, and, like Mr. Gaul's earlier Cantatas, will be eagerly welcomed by societies in search of new works having these characteristics."—Newcastle Daily Leader.

"That 'The Ten Virgins' is a much finer work than the everywhere favourite "Holy City" we have no doubt whatever. Mr. Gaul has aimed at fine outline and telling colouring, and all that he has aimed at he has achieved."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

Price, paper cover, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s.; cloth, gilt, 4s.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Vocal parts, each 1s. Words only, 5s. per 100.

PRINCE OF PEACE

A SACRED CANTATA

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE WORDS SELECTED FROM HOLY SCRIPTURE
AND THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"No man knows better than Mr. Gaul how to write for voices. . . 'Thou art the King of Glory,' a singularly fine chorus, worthy of any composer, living or dead. . . Throughout the work we have spontaneity, elegance, attractiveness, in short, a never-ending charm."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

"In every way worthy the great reputation and experience of its composer. . . Is indeed a work of a very unusual character, and not probably destined to become more popular than any of his other compositions. . . Worthy the study of choral societies of every grade."—North Staffordshire Sentinel.

"'The Prince of Peace' is a work of an exceptionally high order. There are passages of surpassing beauty and brilliance. The work is varied and interesting, and, like all of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, supplies a need which no other composer of music so satisfactorily meets, viz. a moderately difficult work written on classical lines. . . The cantata occupied about ninety minutes and from the opening bars to the final there was not a dull moment."—Pontypool Free Press.

"Admirably written for the voice, enhanced by charm of rhythm and picturesque accompaniments."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

Price, paper cover, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s.; cloth, gilt, 4s.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Vocal parts, each, 1s. Words only, 5s. per 100.

COMPOSED BY

"Mr. John Coates, with the male chorus, made a popular success with three of Dr. Herbert Brewer's 'Pastoral Songs.'"—The Times.

"Three Pastoral Songs were sung by Mr. John Coates. They proved very popular, and 'Welcome, sweet pleasure' was encored."—Daily Telegraph.

"Dr. Herbert Brewer's delightfully characteristic Pastoral Songs for tenor solo and chorus proved an excellent addition to the programme."—Morning Post.

"Mr. John Coates won an enthusiastic encore in Dr. Brewer's fresh and wholesome Pastorals."—Yorkshire Post.

"Probably the most loudly-applauded feature of the evening was Mr. John Coates's artistic rendition of Dr. Herbert Brewer's three Pastoral Songs, 'A Shepherds' Dance,' 'An Idyll,' and 'Welcome, sweet pleasure.' Grace and picquancy distinguish these compositions, in the latter of which the chorus capably co-operated."—Liverpool Daily Post.

Three of Dr. A. H. Brewer's extremely charming Elizabethan Pastorals also figured on the programme. Their melodious happiness, and the fresh wholesomeness of the music, together with Mr. John Coates's unsparing enthusiasm, completely won over the audience, and the last of that set, 'Welcome, sweet pleasure,' was encored."—Sheffield Daily Telegraph.

"The Pastoral Songs by the clever Gloucester organist and composer, Dr. A. H. Brewer, were, from a popular standpoint, the main success of the evening."—Liverpool Courier.

A SET OF FOUR

OLD FRENCH CAROLS.

AT MIDNIGHT A SUMMONS CAME (A minuit fut fait un reveil), BRING A TORCH, JEANNETTE, ISABELLA.

(Un flambeau, Jeannette, Isabelle).

SLEEP, LITTLE DOVE (Dors, ma colombe).

WHEN AT CHRISTMAS CHRIST WAS BORN

(Quand Dieu naquit à Noël).

The melodies harmonized and the words imitated by

E. CUTHBERT NUNN, A.R.A.M., F.R.C.O.

(Organist and Choirmaster, Parish Church, Leytonstone).

Price Threepence ; Tonic Sol-fa, 2d.

We strongly recommend these Carols to the notice of Church Choirs. It is unnecessary to apply such adjectives as "quaint," "characteristic," "carol-like," etc., to these charming melodies. They are the REAL thing, as sung by our forefathers centuries ago, and we feel sure they will be welcomed by many who have tired of the colourless modern imitations which are so often used.

MIDNIGHT SYMPHONIC POEM FOR CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

THE WORDS FROM "TOWARDS DEMOCRACY

BY

EDWARD CARPENTER

THE MUSIC BY

RUTLAND BOUGHTON

(Op. 26)

Price Two Shillings.

THE TIMES.

Mr. Rutland Boughton's choral setting of some words by Edward Carpenter from his "Towards Democracy" is a very curious and interesting piece of work, which gives excellent promise for the future of its composer. . . . the clever accentuation of words that would have presented problems even to a Henry Lawes, the sonorous effect that is got from the orchestra, the poetic feeling of the whole, and, above all, the strong instinct for climax—these are qualities that must eventually win Mr. Boughton a high place even among the many accomplished composers of the day.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

That Mr. Boughton is independent in his views none will be disposed to deny after hearing this work. . . . Let no man hold up to obloquy a young and clearly an intensely earnest musician, who seeks his inspiration at the fountain-head, and would reflect the spirit of his own day. Only by the composer so doing can he hope to obtain immortality. . . . The poem was favourably received, indeed, with acclamation, by the chorus.

MORNING POST.

The work is a notable musical portrayal of atmosphere. . . . The ability with which atmosphere is suggested by choral rather than by orchestral means is of a high order. . . . "Midnight" remains a remarkable and largely successful endeavour to attain a definite object.

STANDARD.

It should find favour with members of choral societies with a more or less advanced sense of harmony.

DAILY MAIL.

This is music of the extreme modern type, but withal strong, strenuous music with a real artistic inspiration behind it.

MORNING LEADER.

Mr. Rutland Boughton has made full use of the picturesque possibilities of the text, while at the same time clinging closely to his thematic material. . . . He obtains ample variety by means of ingenious and imaginative orchestral colouring and shades of harmony. A powerful climax is marked in the work when the text speaks of all the bells in the city "cheering the thoughtful night," with one great bell "booming slowly on." This shows not only genuine constructive strength, but an original fancy. Equally good is the final weaving together of all the threads. The dramatic outcry, which speaks of the "prisoners of time liberating their souls in prayer till the air is charged with lightning," is another noticeable point. . . . There is no doubt that "Midnight" means a very considerable upward step in a promising career.

SUNDAY TIMES.

Great success, too, was achieved by Mr. Rutland Boughton with his choral work, "Midnight," which makes a great step onward and upward for him. . . . Mr. Boughton shows an unusual sense of climax and musical architecture, and the mass of sound illustrating the "chattering" of many small bells while the great ones "boom slowly on" and the final outburst illustrating "The Great Undertone"—that is to say, the voice of Love of Humanity—are genuinely impressive. He gets striking effects of colour from the chorus, though his choral music is difficult, but there is a great difference between such music and thankless music in which the overcoming of difficulties has no reward.

YORKSHIRE POST.

Mr. Boughton's music has one very decided merit. It realises the atmosphere of the poem, and it has bigness of scale. . . . There are one or two really fine climaxes in the work—a superbly brilliant one near the middle—and altogether the impression one has after hearing Mr. Boughton's music is that he has a "fit" big enough for a large canvas, even though it may even yet be not under complete control.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

This is an admirable subject for a symphonic poem, for that is the description Mr. Boughton gives to his work. The title is well borne out by his manner of treating his thematic material. . . . Mr. Boughton has a real insight into choral effect. . . . There are singularly striking passages, which show Mr. Boughton to have a very considerable power of building up climaxes of sound, besides an original imagination controlled by what may be called artistic logic.

BIRMINGHAM GAZETTE AND EXPRESS.

Mr. Boughton is a modernist, and the verve of the music proves that he approached his task with the deep conviction that kindles the fires of inspiration. Skilled in the technique of composition, he handles both chorus and orchestra like a master of the secrets of colour and dramatic effect. Not only orchestral colour, but also harmony colour is admirably exemplified in this moving work, which owes much of its undeniable impressiveness to its absolute veracity.

OLD ENGLISH SUITE ARRANGED FOR SMALL ORCHESTRA

BY

GRANVILLE BANTOCK.

1. Fantasia ... .. Orlando Gibbons
2. Lachrymæ Pavan ... .. John Dowland
3. The King's Hunt ... .. John Bull
4. Quodling's Delight ... .. Giles Farnaby
5. Sellenger's Round ... .. William Byrd

FULL SCORE, 10s. 6d.; STRING PARTS, 4s. 6d.; WIND PARTS, 7s. 6d.
ARRANGEMENT FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO (In the Press), 3s. 6d.

THE TIMES.

It consists of five pieces by English composers of the sixteenth century, which Mr. Bantock has selected and scored in a delightful way for small orchestra. Four of them come from the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book, and only the first, one of Gibbons's Fantasias in four parts, was originally written for strings. It would have been no disadvantage to have this one in its original colouring; but the additional use of woodwind and horns is so tastefully done that one cannot regret them; and since only antiquaries will ever have the chance of enjoying the Virginal pieces, played as their composers wrote them, the gain of producing them in their new orchestral costumes is clear.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Mr. Bantock's Suite is a thing of pure delight from beginning to end. For a composer of tendencies which are called advanced, this Suite is a model of restraint. . . . Nos. 1, 3, and 5 are scored for a more or less complete small orchestra, though no use is made in the opening piece of trumpets or drums. The Pavane, a quietly dignified and graceful thing for strings only, is a notable example of string writing, and "Quodling's Delight," which was mightily and deservedly applauded, is to be played by an oboe, two clarinets, and a bassoon, in imitation of the ancient shawms.

MORNING POST.

The Suite is based on circa sixteenth century airs, originally extracted from the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book for the purposes of a revival of "The Knight of the Burning Pestle" at Manchester last year. Their reproduction in the present form is most valuable, for the airs themselves are precious heirlooms, and with the setting provided by Mr. Granville Bantock, which is so thoroughly in keeping, the worth of these, some of the most precious gems among our heritage, is increased. . . . The Suite is a masterly reproduction of atmosphere, and many must have been surprised to find such wealth of melody in old music. The Suite was cordially received.

STANDARD.

Mr. Bantock has collected a quintet of tunes by composers of the seventeenth century, taken from the Elizabethan Virginal Book preserved in the Fitzwilliam Library, Cambridge, and has cleverly knit them together in a fascinating suite. While preserving their ancient character, he has embellished the old tunes with charming and effective orchestration.

DAILY NEWS.

Mr. Granville Bantock's suite of five Elizabethan pieces should be certain of popularity. The melodies are all charming, and Mr. Bantock has managed to score them in an attractive way, without once doing violence to their naive character.

MORNING LEADER.

Mr. Granville Bantock's suite is compiled from old English music. There are five numbers, but the music has been added to and scored by Mr. Bantock. The result is a very charming work that should be heard often in future. Particularly delightful are the third number "The King's Hunt" and the last "Sellenger's Round."

THE WORLD.

Mr. Bantock has done more than edit, since he has added to the music in some cases, and scored the whole of it for small orchestra. The result is quite a delightful little suite of five numbers, of which the third (a little hunting piece by John Bull) and the finale, a dance, are particularly fascinating. The scoring has been done with Mr. Bantock's usual command of orchestral effect, which he has used in this instance to secure an old-world flavouring appropriate to the music.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

The Suite consists of five charming pieces, of which the first is a fantasia by Orlando Gibbons, the second a pavan by John Dowland, the third an air with some dainty variations by John Bull; the fourth is also an air with variations, and the last a country dance, known as "Sellenger's Round," by William Byrd. These make up a delightful Suite, which has been scored by Mr. Bantock with his usual felicity and resource. It met with a very cordial reception.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY POST.

The old English Suite is composed of five Elizabethan pieces, arranged by Mr. Bantock for small orchestra. It proved thoroughly delightful. The curious thing was that in spite of the clever orchestration we were never taken out of the original epoch of the music.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY GAZETTE AND EXPRESS.

The Bantock Suite, exquisitely played, evoked a regular shower of applause, which was thoroughly deserved, the instrumentation of the various pieces being skilful and effective in the extreme.

THE ORCHESTRAL INSTRUMENTS AND WHAT THEY DO

A PRIMER FOR CONCERT-GOERS

BY DANIEL GREGORY MASON.

WITH 27 ILLUSTRATIONS AND ORCHESTRAL CHART,
Cloth, Five Shillings.

A popular elementary primer on orchestration has long been needed. This capital little book, written in a clear and interesting style, lightens up a subject generally considered rather forbidding in its difficulty. It will appeal to those who wish to increase their grasp and appreciation of orchestral music; while for the student no better book could be wished as an introduction to this branch of study. It will find a place as a text-book in school and conservatory.

ELEMENTARY SCORE-READING EXERCISES

SELECTED AND EDITED BY

ARTHUR H. PEPPIN.

PREFATORY NOTE.

The power of reading at sight from four-part score with the proper clefs for alto and tenor may seem to the student to be hardly valuable enough to warrant the expenditure of time and trouble which it involves. We may concede that it is seldom called into requisition nowadays as a part of practical musicianship; nevertheless its indirect value must not be overlooked. Firstly, reading from four staves is useful as a training of the eye in the direction of quickness and accuracy in reading from three staves, or two; secondly, complete familiarity with the C clefs is an indispensable preliminary to the understanding of orchestral scores; thirdly, the habit of following four parts, written at their correct pitch, is of great assistance in acquiring the habit of thinking contrapuntally, and helps materially towards that clearness of brain without which no ear can unravel the complexities of polyphonic writing.

The following exercises are intended for beginners. They lead on gradually to the degree of proficiency which should enable the student to grapple successfully with Dr. Emily Daymond's more difficult exercises in the same subject.

THE BLACKPOOL MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

OCTOBER 13, 14, 15, 16.

This festival again achieved an extraordinary success in at least every vocal department. There were over 800 entries and nearly 5,000 competitors. There were here 468 vocal soloists, 191 instrumental soloists, and choirs as follows: thirty-four junior, fourteen female-voice, eighteen male-voice, sixteen mixed-voice, and thirteen from churches or chapels. In addition there were twenty-three vocal quartets: trios, two full orchestras, and one string orchestra. But it is not merely the number of entries that on the occasion its importance. It was the superlative quality of much of the music and the excellence of a large number of the performances that gave the festival its memorable distinction.

At such a colossal event the competition festival movement can be studied in all its phases. There can be heard action-songs done to perfection by young children, child soloists whose performances bring tears to eyes of old stagers; mature soloists meeting the technical and interpretative demands of this modern and difficult music; exemplifications of the perfection to which school children's voices can be trained and their expressive powers wonderfully developed by some of the best of our school teachers; and many of the best equipped small choirs—female-voice, male-voice, and mixed-voice—to be found in the whole country, employing their powers on the most difficult choral music that has ever been written. Wonder that musical critics, more or less sated by their usual everyday experiences, declare that competitive performances of this stamp provide them with new and exciting sensations. Objections to competitions are still to be heard, and will be heard again. The best argument in their favour is the competition itself. A visit to Blackpool is only to convert any open-minded objector who cannot see the almost ludicrous disproportion between the moral damage done to a few illtempered sons, and the widespread educational results that lift thousands of executants and listeners out of the dull ruts of their lives and afford them the best and most innocent pleasure. Is it likely, away from the inspiring encouragement provided by this great festival, soloists and choralists would study the same music with anything approaching the same zeal and success? But this is the place to argue on the ethical and musical value of the competition festival movement. He who obtains the maximum marks for every piece in all classes gets 80.

THE CHILDREN'S DAY, October 15.

The sight-singing (individual) brought forward some very clever children. Nothing that Dr. McNaught could place before Leslie H. Heward (Wyke), Harold Makinson (Lancaster), and Bert Shawcross (Hyde), seemed to find out a weak point, so they were declared equal "firsts." All three lads possessed the pitch-sense, and were therefore able to sing with ease what most people would consider difficult passages for children. These remarks refer to the staff notation section. In the tonic sol-fa section not so much ability was displayed. Jennie Whiteside and Mona Singleton divided the first-prize. In the collective sight-singing class there were three school choir entries, viz.—Talbot Street, Southport (Mr. W. T. Barnett), Devonshire Street C. S., Blackpool (Mr. J. J. Barlow), and St. John's, Blackpool (Mr. J. N. Nutt). The tests were in two parts and included some stiff passages. We print the second and more rhythmic on p. 126. Each test was sung to sol-fa syllables and then to laa. Notations were optional, and all chose the tonic sol-fa. Devonshire Street gave almost perfect performances and were awarded the first-prize.

ACTION-SONGS.

Blackpool has justly earned a high reputation for the refinement, beauty, and skill of the action-songs produced at its festivals. But it is questionable whether at any previous festival the grace, charm, and comedy with which the Revue School, under the Misses Garner, performed the Somerset folk-song "O no, John," have been excelled. Twelve children took part—six as the wooers, and six as wooed. Their singing alone was excellent, but when to this were added constant movement and expressive gesture and acting, the effect was extraordinary, and the audience of several thousand persons was enraptured. Victoria School presented a beautiful spectacle. The whole entertainment was one to be long remembered by all concerned.

- Miss Ashworth's Ancoats Choir also entered, but owing to the lateness of the hour fixed for the competition the choir had to withdraw. This was disappointing to many who know how finely Miss Ashworth trains her resources. Revue was again triumphant.

- VILLAGE SCHOOL CHOIRS.
 Local schools having fewer than 150 names on the register: 10 to 20 voices.
 Test: Two-part song, "Come o'er the woodland" (Kestelber).

 2nd. Singleton (Mr. T. Dawson): 73.
 1st. Wrea Green (Mr. T. H. Myles): 75.
 Westby (Mrs. Alston).

The singing in this class aptly exemplified what skilled teaching can accomplish with village children. All the singing was good, but Singleton and Wrea displayed very high qualities. The tone was pure, the execution dainty and fluent, the enunciation excellent, and the expression very effective.

- PUBLIC ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS.
 Open to non-prize winners in the challenge banner class during the years 1906-7-8; 25 to 30 voices.

a winning choir displayed a pure, sweet tone, perfectly in tune. A unity of vowel usage was a noticeable feature. In the second piece there were some awkward rhythmic delays at the ends of phrases, and the third piece, although beautiful as tone, was not so interesting rhythm.

PUBLIC ELEMENTARY SCHOOL CHOIRS.

Cantata Class (25 to 30 voices).

Test: Cantata, "The frogs and the ox" (Bridge).

CHILDREN'S CHOIRS "D."

Open to children under 16 years of age who are not competing in other classes (16 to 25 voices).

Tests: (a) Two-part song, "The Lord is my Shepherd" (Smart), (b) two-part song, "The first of May" (Botting).
 Revoc Choir, Blackpool (Mr. J. R. Rigby).
 Ancoats Girls' Institute, Junior Advanced (Miss Ashworth).
 St. Paul's Choir Boys, Blackpool (Mr. Robert Hall).
 St. Paul's, Bolton (Mr. T. Davies).

THE JUNIOR SOLOS.

The expediency of encouraging children to sing solos in competitions has been seriously questioned, chiefly on the ground that their vocal organs may be injured by excessive strain. But it may be answered that injury only results from bad usage, and that it is the prime function of the competitions to inculcate proper ways and means. In the vocal experts Madame Hands, Mr. J. Bates, and Dr. McNaught to criticise and suggest, it may be added that scores of youthful singers have been suddenly rescued from bad singing by competitions staged on these lines.

All bad production, all forcing, all commonplace singing are discouraged, and only the children who learn lessons given can hope to succeed. The ideal is therefore prominently placed before the children. Then, apart from physical results, the value of solo-singing as a means for inner feeling for expression cannot be overestimated. The intense expressiveness of some children's singing is a phenomenon difficult to understand. Not a few of the girls sang Schubert's "Du bist die Ruh" ("Thou art repose") so as to induce the lump in the throat and the tear in the eye. We have heard many great artists interpret this most touchingly beautiful of Schubert's songs, but never with this extraordinary effect. Forty-four young girls had their perception of musical beauty and sensitiveness to emotion stirred by this masterpiece. Who will say that any harm could result? The following is a list of test-pieces and prize-winners:

GIRLS (Local).

Test: "A bird is softly calling" (Mendelssohn).
 2 entries. 1st. Ethel Beswick (Blackpool).

Boys (Local).

Test: "The harp that once through Tara's halls" (Irish Air).
 2 entries. 1st. W. L. Roberts (Thornton-le-Fylde).

Boys (Open).

Test: "O sunny beam" (Schumann).
 5 entries. 1st. Stanley Chilton (Dodworth).

CHOIR BOYS (Open)

Test: "Jerusalem, thou that killest" (Mendelssohn).
 2 entries. John Stock (Crumpsall, Manchester).
 1st. had an extremely beautiful voice and a highly-refined style.)

GIRLS (Open).

Test: "Thou art repose" ("Du bist die Ruh" (Schubert).
 4 entries. 1st. Florence Skinner (Manchester).
 2nd. Violet M. Turner (Brierfield).

At the evening concert, with which the children's day terminated, the cantata "The frogs and the ox" (Bridge) was very successfully performed by the combined children's choirs under the direction of Dr. McNaught.

ADULT CHORAL COMPETITIONS.

MALE-VOICE CHOIRS.

Local (16 to 24 voices).

Test: Part-song, "Feasting, I watch," Op. 45, No. 5 (Elgar).

|                                                                  | Mks. |
|------------------------------------------------------------------|------|
| South Shore Male-voice Choir, Blackpool (Mr. J. T. Schofield) 56 |      |
| Preston Lyric Choir (Mr. Jos. Smith) ..                          | 69   |
| Fleetwood Glee and Madrigal Society (Mr. E. B. Meadows) 52       |      |

Preston, under Mr. Jos. Smith, has made great progress. The tone was resonant and blendful, but the best feature was the poetry and perspective of the interpretation.

FEMALE-VOICE CHOIRS (Local).

Tests: (a) Trio "Flowers of the forest" (arr. by Bantock), and (b) three-part song, "Fly, singing bird" (Elgar).

All the choirs, except Revoc, the winner, sang "The flowers of the forest" too quickly. Revoc Choir is composed mainly of children formerly members of the well-known school choir, and, as might be expected, they have retained the tradition of fine vocal production and expressive interpretation.

FEMALE-VOICE CHOIRS (Open).

(20 to 40 voices.)

Tests: (a) Part-song (S.S.A.A.), "The forest Fay" (Op. 69, No. 2) (Schumann), and (b) part-song (S.S.A.A.), "Summer wind" (MacDowell).

|                                                                    | (a) | (b) | Tl. |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|-----|-----|
| Carlisle Madrigal Society (Mr. J. R. Cockburn) ..                  | 70  | 71  | 141 |
| Morecambe Madrigal Ladies' Choir(Mr. P. W. de Courcy Smale) 69 | 64  | 133 |     |
| Mr. Aldous' Choir, Lancaster (Mr. J. W. Aldous) 75                 | 73  | 150 |     |
| Barrow St. James' Ladies' Choir (Mrs. Bourne) ..                   | 74  | 73  | 147 |
| Blackpool Glee and Madrigal Society(Mr. H. Whittaker) 70       | 76  | 146 |     |

This was the chief competition in this class. The tests were severe and were both sung unaccompanied. The Schumann piece was generally sung too quickly, but in three cases at least with astonishing virtuosity.

Mr. Aldous's choir is well equipped with mature (not too mature) singers, and his skill, refined and concentrated by the severe schooling of competition, enables him to accomplish beautiful results. But he was run very close by Mrs. Bourne and Mr. Whittaker.

MIXED-VOICE CHOIRS "B."

(Open to Choirs that have not won a prize in the Challenge Shield Class during the years 1906-7-8.)

(30 to 50 voices.)

Tests: (a) Madrigal for four voices, "My heart it seemed was dying" (Palestrina), and (b) part-song for six voices, "Dead in the Sierras" (Op. 67, No. 2) (S. Coleridge-Taylor).

This was a very successful class. Mr. Warburton's choir kept up the traditions of Blackpool for good singing, but it was beaten by the tasteful performances of the Blackburn Chapel Street Choir.

MALE-VOICE CHOIRS, Alto Lead (Open).

This was a well contested competition. The fact that eight choirs entered in this class shows that the adult male alto voice is still cultivated. Heysham very well deserves its victory. Morley, too, gave fine performances.

MALE-VOICE CHOIRS, Tenor lead (Open).

Grundy Challenge Trophy Class.

Tests: (a) Chorus for four voices, "Far beyond all mortal ken" (Op. 26, No. 2) (Schubert), Chorus of Spirits, from "Rosamunde"; (b) part-song for four voices, "Bright through the window" (Op. 38, No. 7) (Max Reger); and (c) ballad for four voices, "Pibroch of Douuil Dhu" (Bantock).

| Mr. Thornborough's Male-voice Choir, Blackburn (Mr. Thornborough) .. | 70  | 62  | —   | 122 |

This was one of the most important events of the day. The three tests all had their moods, but only the third presented any great difficulty. No doubt Professor Bantock was thinking of northern choirs when he penned his setting of "Pibroch," and he paid them all a very high and not undeserved compliment in taking it as granted that there were no musical difficulties they could not overcome. Habersham sang with a little less than its customary assurance, Manchester gave a suave, correct, and well-ordered performance, but it was reserved for Douglas to electrify the adjudicators and the audience. Mr. Moore deserves all the praise we can bestow on him. His choir is splendidly equipped.

This was the most severely-contested event of the day. The tests, diverse in character, were most searching, and the chief choirs on the list were amongst the best in the whole country. We give some brief notes on the performances. All eight choirs sang the first two pieces, and five were selected to sing the other two.

Salford in (a) was not impressive. The execution was smart but deficient in sonority and breadth. In (b) there were some picturesque effects, but the execution was uncertain.

Blackpool in (a) displayed fine tone and rich sonority and much vitality, yet there was too much accented pulsation for the piece. In (b) the mood was excellent, and some vivid and well controlled effects were contrived. In (c) there was glow and climax, and much of the joy and ecstasy were realised. In (d) the execution was laboured, and there was some groping for notes. A fine climax was reached.

Lancaster was alert and dexterous in (a), but with all its sparkling brilliancy the interpretation was not madrigalian. In (b) they were still less successful, and never attained impressiveness. In (c) there was fine tone, and the tempo was well chosen. A keen delivery by the sopranos tended to sharpness, and the choir finished a semitone sharp. In (d) there was some fine treatment, the chords at "Peace" were thrillingly sung, and the end pages glowed with richness. But there was inequality in the performance.

Southport took (a) too quickly, but the execution was firm and fluent. Occasionally the tone was shrill. In (b) there was high colour and some fine brooding relieved by powerful climaxes. There was controlled excitement. In (c) there was again the charm of a fine picture. The "Peace" chords were remarkable, and the colouring of the last page was gorgeous.

Barnoldswick sang (a) far too strenuously. The attack was over-eager and forcible. Too much bang and snarl for a madrigal. In (b) the qualities that spoil the madrigal were appropriate. There was tremendous dramatic emphasis, and the whole interpretation was terrible in its realism. Such vehemence was extraordinarily rousing. In (c) there was again at its climax the over-emphasis and exaggeration of dynamic expression. Sometimes the sounds produced were as music. They were as boisterous as a Blackpool gallop. In (d) the choir was still less successful. The expression was lachrymose, the chords at "Peace" not correct, and the dignity of the music was missed.

Halifax showed inexperience in (a), the time being too freely treated. In (b) they were more successful, although as it were, they wept too bitterly. The expression was picturesque and dramatic, in fact almost tragic.

Barrow sang (a) simply perfectly and the adjudicators unanimously awarded full marks. The tone was a rich stream of sound, and the execution exhibited taste under complete control. In (b) the opening was apologetic, but later the excitement was great and there were some beautiful effects of light and shade. In (c) again the choir was superb. They sang as though inspired and always with rich sonority, and in (d) they were equally successful in combining fine art with apparent naturalness. The "Peace" chords were not quite perfect, but this was almost the only fault.

The announcement of the result was received with great approbation. Mr. Whittaker, of Blackpool Choir fame, was one of the first to call enthusiastically for cheers for Mrs. Bourne. This incident illustrates very happily the spirit of the competition.

The following are the chords in "The moon has raised" that gave all the choirs more or less trouble. The fact is that even if any one part attempts the intervals or principles of perfect intonation, the result must be impure chords. There must somewhere be compromise, and the question is, Where?

The image shows two staves of musical notation. The top staff is for the first voice and the bottom staff is for the second voice. The music is in G major and 4/4 time. The lyrics "Peace, peace, peace, peace." are written below the notes. The dynamics are marked as pp, dim., and ppp. The chords are indicated by the notes on the staves.

MIXED-VOICE CHORAL SIGHT-TEST.

No fewer than eleven choirs entered in this class. The test chosen was Mr. R. H. Walthew's "Sleep." Each choir was allowed to sing it through twice, the words being obligatory at the second trial. Mr. Aldous' Lancaster Choir won the first-prize, Halifax Madrigal Society (Mr. Shepley), second-prize, and Sale and District Musical Society (Mr. A. Higson), third-prize.

On the evening the above prize-winners repeated their songs in competition with each other for the rose bowl. Miss Hunt proved successful.

THE FESTIVAL CONCERT.

The choral numbers in the programme of the concert given on October 13 by the festival chorus of 130 selected singers was as follows:

- Motet, "Come, Jesu, come" . . . . . Bach.
Hymn for double chorus (unacc.) "Stabat Mater" . . . . . Palestrina.
Motet, "Throne of Mercy, Star of Goodness" (Op. 18, No. 3) . . . . . Cornelius.
Motet, "The surrender of the soul to the everlasting love" . . . . .
(Op. 18, No. 1), Cornelius.
Madrigal, "As Vesta was" . . . . . Weelkes.

The choir was conducted by Mr. Herbert Whittaker, who once again proved his ability as a musician of insight. The "Stabat Mater" was particularly well done. There were no attempts at effects, the music moving austere and solemnly as it should do. Cornelius's motet "The surrender of the soul" was so admirably sung. Mr. Frederic Austin sang thirteen songs in his best style, the Manchester Wind quintet (clarinet, flute, oboe, bassoon, and French horn) played six pieces quite charmingly, and Mr. Carl Fuchs played some violoncello solos with great acceptance.

The following is a complete list of adjudicators and special accompanists:

Adjudicators: Sir Charles Villiers Stanford, Dr. W. G. McNaught, Mr. Harry Evans, Mr. Allen H. Gill, Mr. Paul le Vallon, Madame Edith Hands, Mr. Frederic Austin, Mr. Carl Fuchs, Mr. C. H. Fogg, Mr. James Bates, Mr. H. S. Greenwood.
Accompanists: Mr. C. H. Fogg, Mr. C. W. Fisher, Mr. A. Vivian Jackson, Mr. Clifford Higgin.

Councillor Collins was, as usual, the director of the competitions, and Mr. L. H. Franceys the Honorary Secretary.

TWO LANCASHIRE FESTIVALS.

Under the above head The Times, in large type, discusses some of the executive results of the festival at Blackpool and Southport:

A new development in the technique of choral singing has taken place during the last few years, with the result that a composer has no longer to consider whether his singers can perform any music which he may choose to write for them. He need only consider whether they will perform it, and if it is interesting enough no choral society of any consequence is held back by difficulties. It has been brought about partly by the persistent refusal of composers to be bound by the limitations of what was conventionally called, "vocal writing." The latest of all choral composers—J. S. Bach—seems never to have given the question a thought, and it will always be a mystery how the choristers of the masses have succeeded in giving even the roughest rendering of some passages which he wrote for them. The development of which we speak probably owes more to Bach than to any other single composer, in spite of all that has been achieved since his day, though modern composers have added types of choral effect which are not the singers in other ways. Next to the fact that composers have insisted upon writing things for the expression of which the old style of choral singing was inadequate, the most compelling influence which has led to technical advance, in England at any rate, has been what may be called the record-breaking instinct. By this we do not mean solely the movement which has brought about a continuous round of competitive musical festivals in England, but more generally the desire to do a thing better than it has been done before either by oneself or by anyone else. It may not be in itself an artistic impulse, but it is a very human one, and allied with other artistic impulses it possesses a tremendous force in the musical activities of to-day, and especially in the department of choral singing. Without such an alliance it degenerates into the worthless process vulgarly called "pot-hunting," and that is the special danger of competitive festivals which is felt by none so keenly as by the enthusiastic musicians and others who organize them.

During the last few days we have had two admirable opportunities of appreciating the progress of choral technique in the singing which has been heard at Blackpool and at Southport. The former is a competitive festival, but the concert given on Wednesday night, which was discussed in these columns on Thursday, was free from the competitive element, for the festival choir takes no part in the contest, although its individual members may do so in other choirs. A competitive festival is held annually at Southport, but the triennial one now being held is independent of it. . . . We do not know how far the singers whom Mr. H. Whittaker and Mr. Arthur Speed have trained to such good purpose are directly concerned in competitive festivals, but since they are heard in these surroundings the indirect influence must be strong; they could not afford to be below competition standards in any particular. Both proved themselves to be excellent examples of the development in choral technique to which we have alluded. If that development can be summed up in one word, it is independence. To be independent of instruments is an obvious necessity; the complete independence of each voice means more than appears at first, for it means the power of co-ordinate action of individuals in an infinite variety of relationships to one another. When we hear a choir singing a piece of polyphonic music in such a way that the parts all seem to stand apart from one another, the singers have not reached independence; it is only a symptom that they are struggling to attain it and are aware of their failure. When the singers are really independent of one another they have at command not only the qualities which go to make up rhythmic singing, attack, energy, and articulation, but a series of effects of colour as endless and much more subtle than those of the orchestra. Now colour is the one factor in music which is not, and never can be, expressed in terms of notation. It includes things which are stated more or less roughly in the composer's score, such as degrees of force, loudness and softness, the tone attained by the combination of voices in various harmonic relationships, and even by broad differences of tempi; but the exact qualities of tone and the small nuances of tempi which contribute to the expression of individual phrases in relation to the whole cannot be written down, and those composers who try to do so are the most likely to be misunderstood. Colour has to be left to the interpretative faculties of the performers, and those faculties can only be fully exercised when the performers have acquired the independent technique which has been described. The two choirs which we take as our examples have both shown that they have the power of using choral colour in a remarkable way; in other words, they have finished their preliminary training. No music is too difficult for them. The Blackpool Choir sang Bach's intricate polyphony with complete confidence, and were untroubled by the ancient tonality of Palestrina or the chromatic modulations of Cornelius. The Southport Choir sang modern music of the most trying description in a way which proved their power beyond a doubt. . . . But where both show that they have still work before them is in the use that they make of their capacity—that is, in the interpretative side of their work. Here we come to a question which can only be solved by the intuitive artistic perceptions of conductors and singers themselves. We said that we missed variety in the treatment of Bach, Palestrina, and Cornelius at Blackpool. It seemed that the differences of style had not been grasped as the features which dictate the character of the performance, though they had been realised as difficulties to be met and mastered. As such they had been fully dealt with, and specific points of effect—fortes, pianos, crasendos, and diminuendos—were there in plenty. The possibilities of choral colour, of differences of quality apart from differences of force, have been very fully taken into account. One had only to hear the choir sing the lines,

For when as each thing had thou hast entombed,
And last of all thy greedy self consumed,

and

Then long eternity shall greet our bliss
With an individual kiss;

to realize how sensitive they have become in this direction. Both passages are marked pianissimo and were sung so, yet they were as strongly contrasted as if the composer's indications had been the exact opposite of each other. This is an instance of the perfect application of technical acquirements to the purposes of interpretation, and others might be named from the performance of either choir, though they were more conspicuous at Southport. . . . The important thing to realise is that this acquirement of choral technique which is so general now in the North of England, and of which these two Lancashire festivals are fine examples, is a force which does not end in itself. It has to be used for musical ends. Chorus-trainers, and under them the singers, need to cultivate large views of the music which they undertake, to study the appropriate disposition of their effects, and to make the details subordinate themselves to the whole. In that case the present enthusiasm for choral singing will continue as a potent factor in English musical life, and will do even more than it has done already to quicken the artistic perceptions of amateur performers and listeners.

COMPETITIONS IN CAPE COLONY.

The Education Gazette issued by the Cape Colony Education Department, continually gives full accounts of numerous school choir competitions held in many centres in the Colony. We quote the following from recent issues of the Gazette :

GEORGE, MOSSEL BAY, AND OUDTSHOORN MISSION SCHOOL CHOIR COMPETITION.

The competitors were the choirs of the Independent Mission Schools in Pacaltsdorp, Oudtshoorn, and Welbedacht. It is to be regretted that neither the Dutch nor the English Church Schools were represented. Callcott's "Ye Mariners of England" were prepared by each choir, the individual selections being "Cradle song" by Mendelssohn (Pacaltsdorp), Proudman's "Outspan" (Oudtshoorn), and Mendelssohn's "The Heavenly Council hath decreed" (Welbedacht). There was a large gathering of parents in Oudtshoorn. Mr. Arthur Lee adjudicated.

Prescribed song.—The choirs were well balanced. There was an improvement in tone all round, but especially on the part of the boys. That hollow and melancholy quality, so often heard in the under-parts of Mission school singing, had been overcome. Welbedacht choir had the best voices, the alto section being unusually good. This choir, however, made two syllables of "our," and scarcely touched the vowels of "tempest." Each rendering was good.

Selected songs.—The "Cradle song" was given with very fair feeling. More might have been made of the crasendo and diminuendo passages, and the altos faltered with the opening E flat of the last line. There was no fall. The "Outspan" was sung with fine effect, but with the drop of a tone. The rendering of "The Heavenly Council hath decreed" was true and tender. The tone was round and full and there was no fall.

Sight-singing.—The unison test was read with comparative ease by the three choirs. The dual test was sung with great precision in Oudtshoorn. The Pacaltsdorp sopranos also read very ably in this item, but the same cannot be said for the altos. The second voices of the Welbedacht choir lost heart altogether and, as a result, failed to gain the shield.

The shield was awarded to the Oudtshoorn Independent Mission School.

In the ear-testing none of the eight first children made more than three mistakes.

PRUDHOE-ON-TYNE.

Open class. Tests : Male voices, alto lead—(a) "Queen of the valley" (Callcott) and (b), tenor lead—"Martyrs of the arena" (L. de Rillé); mixed voices, "The river floweth strong, my love" (Rogers). The first and second prizes were divided between the Newcastle Glee and Madrigal Society and the Consett and District Contest Choir; third prize, Bentinck Male-voice Choir, Newcastle-on-Tyne. Mr. Newton Laycock adjudicated.

ASHINGTON, MORPETH.

September 4.

The second and third prizes were divided between Ashington Wesleyan Choir, "Break, break, break" (Macfarren) and "The true cupids" (Batson), and the Broomhill Wesleyan Choir, "As torrents in summer" (Elgar) and "The sea hath its pearls" (Pinsuti).

Open class.—The first prize was awarded to the Newcastle Glee and Madrigal Society for the singing of "O thou whose beams" (Goss) and "O peaceful night" (German). Second prize, Consett and District Choir—"The river floweth strong, my love" (Rogers) and "Hymn to music" (Dudley Buck). Third prize, The Norman Gleemen, Newcastle-on-Tyne—"The sands of Dee" (Goldbeck) and "Wanton gales" (Webb). Mr. Newton Laycock adjudicated.

HULL.

THE CO-OPERATIVE UNION, NORTH-WEST SECTION.

September 25.

The competitions arranged by this Union are held in turn in various towns in the North of England. They are always well attended and the choirs often exhibit first-grade skill. On this occasion there were only two classes, namely, one for mixed-voice choirs and one for male-voice choirs. The competitions took place in the commodious hall of the Assembly Rooms. The following mixed-voice choirs entered :

We have only space for some of the adjudicator's marks on the first four choirs.

BOLTON (First prize).—(a) Conspicuous unity. Tone sweet. Sopranos sometimes pressed too hard. Some light training exhibited in the unity of the attack. The expression was beautiful, and infused with sincerity. Kept pitch. (b) Great fluency. High colour and well controlled. Enunciation excellent. Piano singing very delicate. The training showed experience and perception.

ACCRINGTON (Second prize).—(a) At once a mood. Tone fine blend. Too slow. Much tenderness and emotion. Kept pitch a little. Alto not quite strong enough to make balance. (b) Attack excellent. Some delicate rhythmic touches and rubato. Good taste constant. A first-rate choir.

BRADFORD (Third prize).—(a) Warmth and sweetness in the blend. Altos especially good. Moving sincerity in the expression. Enunciation good. Last page nearly first-rate. (b) Alert and smart in attack and general clean finish. Great freedom and vitality. The right sort of expression for the piece. Kept pitch nearly. Tone very good.

BINGLEY (Fourth prize).—(a) Agreeable tone and refined style. The expression was very touching. The rit. marks were properly treated. A beautiful performance displaying much insight. Ended a trifle sharp. (b) Not so successfully treated. Tended to be slow and airy. Sopranos sharpened. On the whole a resonant performance, but without distinctive refinement. Sharpened half-a-tone.

MALE-VOICE CHOIRS.

Tests: (a) "Lovely night" (Chwatal), and (b) "Rataplan" (Lurent de Rillé). Maximum marks, each piece, 80.

YORK.—(a) Smooth and pleasantly blendful. Well in tune. Good pace and clear enunciation. An attractive performance. (b) Nearly first-rate as rhythm. Fluent. Drums well imitated. Some want of unity in one or two places.

The order of singing was decided by ballot. The names of choirs were withheld from the adjudicator. As each choir appeared the entry number was exhibited on the platform, so that the audience should identify the choir by the programme. It was open therefore for the adjudicator to give the results in the order in which the choir sang or in the order in which their names were on the printed programme. The latter system was chosen because the audience could only in this way identify the choirs criticised (it was hardly likely that they would record the order in which choirs sang), but the secretary having misunderstood the announced intention of the adjudicator that he would give the results in the programme order, named the choirs in the singing order, with the result that Bolton was declared first and Kingston second. This decision astonished the audience, as well it might. Mr. Knight, the blameless conductor of the Bolton Choir, was therefore unduly credited with a double-first, his mixed-voice choir having undoubtedly won the first place at the afternoon competition. It was fortunate that before he had departed with the handsome challenge shield and a cheque for twelve guineas the error was discovered, and the first position registered in favour of Burnley. We have described the incident fully in order that such mistakes may in future be guarded against. The judge should have the names of the choirs, or else the choirs should not be identified by two similarly designated numerical orders. Dr. McNaught was the adjudicator. The attendance was large and the interest very keen. The arrangements made by the secretary, Mr. T. Horrocks, were excellent.

MANCHESTER.

BELLE VUE, October 2.

The generous prizes offered at the eighth annual Belle Vue choral contest met with an equally generous response on the part of the competitors, the judges being occupied for ten hours in hearing the 123 soloists, fourteen mixed-voice choirs, four Church male choirs, and the eighteen mixed-voice Church or Chapel choirs entered for the occasion. As in last year's competition, the soloists were wisely restricted in their choice of songs to four classical pieces for each voice. The first soprano prize was carried off by Miss Alice G. Shawcross, of Hyde, with "Roberto tu che adoro" (Meyerbeer); the first contralto by Miss Edith Alice Keighley, of Keighley, with "O my heart is weary" (A. G. Thomas); the first tenor by John E. Rhodes, of Mossley, with Handel's recit. "Let but that Spirit," and aria "Thus when the sun," from "Samson"; whilst F. Sugden, of Farnhill, carried off premier honours in the bass with Mendelssohn's "O God, have mercy." The male-voice Church choirs sang Ouseley's "O praise the Lord with me," and Henry Smart's "The Lord hath done great things" (the solo in B flat being taken by all the trebles), the first-prize falling to St. Ann's, Manchester, which, conducted by Mr. T. Barlow Maude, adopted the Cathedral style, whilst St. Thomas's, Barrowford, Nelson (Mr. H. W. Howarth), carried off the second.

The eighteen mixed-voice Church or Chapel choirs, like the soloists, had to undergo a weeding-out process, the result of which was that the four following were selected to appear in the final: Wellhouse U. M. C., Golcar (Mr. F. Gledhill), Crosland Moor Wesleyan (Mr. Robert H. Dyson), St. John the Baptist, Hey, Oldham (Mr. Harry Brooks), and Colne Road Wesleyan, Burnley (Mr. Tom Robinson). The test-pieces were Sullivan's anthem "O love the Lord" (unaccompanied), and G. A. Macfarren's "God said, behold I have given you every herb." Crosland Moor eventually carried off the first-prize, St. John's, Hey, the second, and Colne Road Wesleyan the third. The following mixed-voice choirs competed for the fifty guinea challenge trophy:

- Bradford Vocal Union (Mr. Hiram Ball).
- Colne Valley Vocal Union (Dr. T. E. Pearson).
- Bootham and District Vocal Society (Mr. Ernest C. Redfern).
- 1st. Armley and District Choral Society (Mr. H. H. Pickard).
- Crosland Moor Choir (Mr. R. H. Dyson).
- Keighley Vocal Union (Mr. W. S. Wilkinson).
- Mossley Vocal Society (Mr. John Shaw).
- Stockport Philharmonic Choir (Mr. G. H. Broome).
- Ashton Choral Society (late Ashton Select Choir) (Mr. R. W. Walker).
- 2nd. Thornton Vocal Union (Mr. Lloyd Ashton).
- Matlock Vocal Society (Mr. Lubin G. Wildgoose).
- 3rd. Salford Vocal Society (Mr. Fred W. Blacow).
- Stretford Glee and Madrigal Society (Mr. Thomas Corlett).
- Ikley St. Cecilia Society (Mr. Arthur T. Akroyd).

Each sang Frank Davidson's "Sweet summer night," and Morley's madrigal "Fire, fire my heart," and after a keen contest Armley was placed first, Thornton second, and Salford third. The choirs in this section elected to be heard in camera by the judges: Dr. H. Watson, Mr. R. W. Wilson, Mus. Bac., Dr. A. W. Pollitt (Liverpool), and Mr. C. H. Fogg.

The Manchester Guardian says: "The choral contest held at Belle Vue on October 2 attracted a more than usually large number of competitors. There were in all thirty-six choirs and well over a hundred solo singers contesting for the various prizes offered for the best singers amongst sopranos, contraltos, tenors, basses, or for the best choir of mixed voices or of voices of men and boys. The singing was on the whole so good that, both as regards the quality as well as the quantity of the material, the competition must be pronounced successful. But the contest might yet become more important for the singers and more interesting for the public by the selection of test-pieces which can better stand the many inevitable repetitions. The beauty of the best music is only apparent after it has been repeatedly heard, but music which is not of the best becomes soon unattractive under the strain of constant repetition. In the first case we can only suppose that all who take part in the contest, whether they are successful or unsuccessful, will in the end benefit by the experience. To make the competition attractive is, of course, an important point; but this is not the only important point. The need to foster an interest in vocal competitions is no longer pressing; such an interest has already taken root so firmly that it no longer needs artificial care. What has yet to be done, and what can only be done by the most discriminating care in the selection of the music, is to turn the interest aroused by the competition to its best account, to use it for educating and improving the musical taste of the public. Some of the pieces selected for last Saturday's competition seemed chosen with a view to secure this result. Others however, we thought of a nature to encourage a very common tendency to sentimentality—a fault not perhaps very serious from a purely technical standpoint, but in which soon becomes exceedingly tiresome and unpleasant to the listener. Few indeed of the singers we heard were altogether free from it; in many cases it spoiled what might otherwise have been a very acceptable performance, in a few extreme cases it stamped every phrase. The one notable exception was the winner of the contralto competition, who well deserved her prize for the unaffected simplicity and naturalness of her style. The basses also were on the whole less prone to give way to this weakness. The performance given by the winners of the first and second prizes in this class were both very enjoyable. The soprano competition showed also some very promising singers."

STECK PIANOS.

WHAT THE STECK IS TO-DAY is its greatest claim to the consideration of piano-purchasers. Every modern improvement, every detail that makes for excellence in piano construction, is embodied and brought to perfection in the STECK. It is one of the few really great Pianos of the world.

ANTONIO STRADIVARI HIS LIFE AND WORK (1644-1737)

BY
W. Henry Hill, Arthur F. Hill, F.S.A.,
and Alfred E. Hill.

A NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.
This Book contains the whole of the original text and most of the illustrations, with the difference that the coloured plates have been replaced by photographic reproductions.
On the other hand, however, it includes an additional illustration in colours, by way of frontispiece, of the celebrated Stradivari Violin, known as "The Messie."

In reviewing the earlier edition, The Times said: "That the authors were well qualified for the task is plain. They belong to a family in which violin making has been traditional for generations, they have been aided by the family lore and guided by wide and varied experience.
Thus equipped, they have devoted themselves to a careful examination and comparison of the great maker's instruments, and the list cited justifies the conclusion that there can be few which have escaped their notice." The same journal refers to the book as "the most important contribution yet made to the history of the great fiddle-maker and his work."

Price 7s. 6d. net. Post-free, 7s. 10d.

She very delightfully sang the lovely solo, "They softly sleep," and at once won the hearts of her hearers, who cheered and recalled her. Still better was her work, with Mr. Lloyd Chandos, in the fine scene which constitutes the eighth number; and again encomiums, more emphatic, were showered upon her. . . . "I have much pleasure in testifying to Mr. Albert E. Edwards' abilities as an Alto. He is the possessor of a rare voice of beautiful quality and very extended compass, and I consider he would be an acquisition in any Cathedral or Church Choir where there is a Musical Service.

"I have heard Mr. Edwards sing at my Church, and have been much struck by the ease with which he reads the most difficult passages, and the beautiful round, rich tone he produces.

HAYDN'S SECOND VISIT TO ENGLAND.

A little more than a year and a-half intervened between Haydn's first and second visits to these shores. The warm welcome he received and the great attention shown to him in 1791-2, doubtless led him to desire a repetition of his English experiences of hospitality and appreciation. Haydn arrived in London on February 4, 1794, two months before his sixty-second birthday. He found lodgings at No. 1, Bury Street, St. James's, in a house, now rebuilt, situate on the east side of the street, one door north from King Street. As on his previous visit, he came here at the invitation of Salomon to compose six new symphonies and to appear at his (Salomon's) concerts. 'Dr. Haydn will direct his compositions at the Piano Forte' ran the advertisements, which also gave the following additional information in regard to the concerts: 'The Ladies' tickets are blue, and transferable to Ladies; and the Gentlemen's are red, and transferable to Gentlemen only.' It was at one of these concerts that Haydn gave young George Smart a lesson in laying the drums. The incident can best be told in the worthy knight's own words:

At a rehearsal for one of these concerts the kettle drummer was not in attendance. Haydn asked, 'Can no one in the orchestra play the drums?' I replied immediately, 'I can.' 'Do so,' said he. I, foolishly, thought it was only necessary to beat in strict time, and that I could do so. Haydn came to me at the top of the orchestra, praised my beating in time, but observed upon my bringing the drumstick straight down, instead of giving an oblique stroke, and keeping it too long upon the drum, consequently stopping its vibration. 'The drummers in Germany,' he said, 'have a way of using the drumsticks so as not to stop the vibration'—at the same time showing me how this was done. 'Oh, very well,' I replied, 'we can do so in England, you prefer it.' It was Haydn, therefore, who first taught me to play the drums, a thing I had never attempted before that day, and have not done often since.

Smart also records that at these concerts he played the violin or viola at half a guinea per concert. He adds: 'Many foreigners were employed by Salomon at very low salaries. At the rehearsals most of the professors [performers] wore their great wigs only, I suppose in order to save their other wigs for the performances.'

The first Salomon concert of 1795 was noticed in The Oracle in terms which may serve as a model of conciseness in musical criticism.

SALOMON'S CONCERT.

OPENING NIGHT.

We must of necessity be brief. And after all it may be best, when the chef d'œuvre of the great HAYDN is the subject.

"Come then, expressive SILENCE, muse his praise."

VIOTTI gave a concerto, simple and affecting, like his opus. MARA sang c'est assez dire. (The Oracle, February 11, 1794.)

In addition to Viotti there was a galaxy of distinguished violinists in London during the season of 1794—Jarnowick, Janiewicz, Cramer and Giardini. Though nearly eighty years of age, Giardini produced an oratorio entitled 'Ruth,' at Ranelagh Gardens, and even played a concerto. A musician of irascible temper, not sweetened by old age, he showed particular spite against Haydn, even remarking within the latter's hearing, when urged to call upon him, 'I don't want to see the German dog.' Haydn retorted by writing in his diary, 'Giardini played like a pig.'

At the close of the London season, Haydn visited Bath, to which reference was made in the Musical Times of November, 1908, p. 697. He also went to Taplow with Shield, and with Lord Abingdon visited Lord Aston at Preston—not the great town in Lancashire, as might be inferred from the article 'Haydn,' in 'Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians,' but Preston near Hitchin, in Hertfordshire. Somewhere about this time Haydn gave further proof of his humour in music. He composed an apparently easy sonata for the violin, and sent it anonymously to an amateur who had a strong partiality for the extreme upper notes of the violin. Charmed with the opening of the sonata, the recipient of Haydn's attention said, 'Here is a composer who thoroughly understands how to write for the instrument.' But as he found himself compelled to go higher and higher without any prospect of coming down again, the perspiration burst out upon his forehead, and he exclaimed, 'What sort of a composition is this? The man knows nothing whatever of the violin.' Haydn called the sonata 'Jacob's ladder.'

In the year 1795 Haydn was a persona grata at Court. On one occasion the King said to him, 'You have written a great deal.' 'Yes, sir, more than is good,' answered the master. 'Certainly not,' replied His Majesty, 'the world contradicts that.' The King presented Haydn to the Queen and begged him to sing some German songs, saying 'He is quite a good singer.' 'My voice, your Majesty, is not so very great,' said Haydn, pointing to his little finger. The King laughed heartily, whereupon Haydn sat down at the pianoforte and sang his 'Ich bin der Verliebte.' As a particular mark of her esteem the Queen (Charlotte) presented him with the autograph score of Handel's 'Passion' (Brockes's words) from the royal music library at Buckingham Palace.

Haydn was a great favourite with the Prince of Wales, afterwards King George IV., who had a concert room at Carlton House. The Prince, a pupil of Crosdil, played the violoncello, and often took his part in the orchestra with the Dukes of Cumberland (viola) and Gloucester (violin). Pohl tells us that the Prince gave many musical parties. 'At one of these, soon after his marriage (April 8, 1795), the Princess of Wales played the pianoforte and sang with Haydn, who not only conducted but sang some of his songs. He attended at Carlton House twenty-six times in all, but, like other musicians, found much difficulty in getting paid.'

After waiting long in vain he sent in a bill for 100 guineas from Vienna, which was immediately discharged by Parliament.

Haydn appears to have brought away with him from Carlton House a royal recipe for the manufacture of punch, which he thus wrote in his note-book :

Prince of Wales's punch—One bottle champagne, one bottle Burgundy, one bottle rum, ten lemons, two oranges, pound and a half of sugar.

What he calls an 'Anecdote' is also recorded in the aforesaid note-book :

At a grand concert, as the director was about to begin the first number, the kettle-drummer called loudly to him, asking him to wait a moment, because his two drums were not in tune. The leader could not and would not wait any longer, and told the drummer to transpose for the present.

Although he was only a visitor to London, it is not without interest to find Haydn's name in the now scarce 'Musical Directory for the year 1794'. It appears as follows, litteratim et verbatim :

Haydn, Dr. Joseph, Composer, Pia Forte, Prof Con, Oper, Sol Con.—No. 18, Gt Pultney-Street, Golden Square.

This address, by the way, was that of Haydn's lodgings during his previous visit to London, in 1791-2. The abbreviations in the above extract can be explained thus :

Prof Con = Professional Concert.
Oper = Opera.
Sol Con = Solomon's (sic) Concert.

Among the compositions of Haydn, written by him during his second visit to England, are six hymn-tunes which he contributed to a collection compiled by the Rev. William Dechair Tattersall (1752-1829) entitled 'Improved Psalmody,' published in 1794. This substantial oblong folio volume, of 329 pages and dedicated to the King, contains six tunes specially composed by Haydn. (In the old edition of 'Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians,' article 'Haydn,' the number of tunes is wrongly given as four: in the new edition this and other information concerning Haydn's visit to England has been eliminated.) Of the six tunes contributed by Haydn to Tattersall's book, two are very long and elaborate—complete settings of the two Psalms. We give below a specimen of the simpler settings. (All the tunes, set to Merrick's metrical version of the Psalms, in this book are in three parts only.)

PSALM 61.—THE KING PRAISES GOD FOR THE SAFETY OF HIMSELF AND HIS DESCENDANTS.

Ver: 6. 7. 8. DR. HAYDN.
Long life shall Is - rael's King be - hold, And

In the preface to his 'Improved Psalmody' Tattersall says :

Dr. Haydn (who may be looked upon as naturalized in this country, from having taken his degree at one of our Universities, and who may be justly esteemed the most celebrated composer of the present day); Dr. Arnold, Mr. John Stafford Smith, and Mr. Atterbury, having allowed me the honour of reckoning them in the number of my respectable coadjutors, they will, I trust, excuse my mentioning thus publicly the offer they have now made me of their services, and permit me to assure them, that I am happy to obtain their consent to add their names to my list, and I am convinced that you will not esteem it the least disparagement to yourselves to find me acknowledging this as a particular favour.

Haydn's name is given in the list of subscribers to the volume as 'Haydn, Giuseppe, Muf. D. O.'. Tattersall presented Haydn with a silver cup, on which was inscribed :

Dr. Haydn, Dr. Arnold, Mr. John Stafford Smith, and Mr. Atterbury declared their readiness to co-operate with Dr. Cooke, Dr. Hayes, Dr. Dupuis, Dr. Parsons, Mr. Callcott, the Rev. Osborne Wright, Mr. Webbe, Mr. Shield and Mr. Stevens in their exertions towards perfecting 'Work for the improvement of Parochial Psalmody,' as a small token of esteem, for his abilities and of gratitude for his services, this piece of plate is presented to Dr. Haydn by W. D. Tattersall.

Among other presents which Haydn took with him from London to Vienna was a talking parrot, which realised 1,400 florins after his death. In 1804 a curious gift was sent to him by William Gardiner, of Leicester. It consisted of half a dozen pairs of cotton stockings, musically embellished, as the following letter which accompanied the hostess will show :

To JOSEPH HAYDN, Esq. Vienna.

SIR,—For the many hours of delight which your musical compositions have afforded me, I am embolden (although a stranger) to beg your acceptance of the enclosed small present, wrought in my manufactory at Leicester. It is as

: than six pairs of cotton stockings, in which is worked immortal air 'God preserve the Emperor Francis,' a few other quotations from your great and original actions.

: not the sense I have of your genius be measured by significance of the gift; but please to consider it as a : of great esteem I bear to him who has imparted so a pleasure and delight to the musical world.

am, dear Sir, with profound respect, your most humble

WILLIAM GARDINER.

Leicester, Aug. 10, 1804.

le adds: 'The subjects quoted, and wrought he fabric of the stockings, were the following: y mother bids me bind my hair'; the bass of "The Leviathan"; the Andante of the rise sinfonia; his sonata "Consummatum est," 'God preserve the Emperor.' Gardiner came ne conclusion that Haydn never received the el, owing to the war raging at that time, as her he (Gardiner) nor Salomon, through m the gift was sent, received any acknowledg- it of that half-dozen pairs of Leicester-made on stockings.

inancially, no less than socially and artistically, ydn's second visit to England was a great cess. Pohl says: 'He returned from it with eased powers, unlimited fame, and a competence life. By concerts, lessons, and symphonies— counting his other compositions—he had in, as before, made £1,200, enough to relieve from all anxiety in the future. He often said rwards that it was not till he had been in gland that he became famous in Germany, by ch he meant that though his reputation was 1 at home, the English were the first to give public homage and liberal remuneration.' not Mendelssohn express himself in similarly eful terms?

he portrait of Joseph Haydn which appears as special supplement, is taken from the original ting by George Dance, 1794, now in the session of Mr. W. Barclay Squire, by whose d permission it is reproduced.

ny peep at Handel in his public appearances is come as contributing to our somewhat scanty wledge of his 'daily round.' Mr. R. A. Streatfeild, latest biographer of Handel, has kindly supplied us 1 the following information, discovered since the earance of his attractive volume on the master. iting from London on April 15, 1750, Madame du cage, a once famous but almost forgotten French tess, says: 'The Oratorio, or pious concert, pleases highly. English words are sung by Italian formers and accompanied by a variety of instrumts. Handel is the soul of it. When he makes appearance two wax candles are carried before 1, which are laid upon his organ. Amidst a loud oping of hands he seats himself, and the whole id of music strikes up exactly at the same moment. the interludes he plays concertos of his own position, either alone or accompanied by the hestra. These are equally admirable for the mony and the execution.' Here, then, is a side- it upon Handel that is as interesting as it is literal. o would not embrace the opportunity of being one the candlestick bearers who preceded the great nposer as he made his way to 'his organ'?

OUNDLE SCHOOL.

Oundle, a pleasant town with an air of antiquity, in Northamptonshire, narrowly escaped being made a cathedral city. According to tradition Penda, King of Mercia, intended to found his abbey of St. Peter at Oundle [Undele], but being warned in a dream he built instead at Medeshamstede, now Peterborough. The earliest written record of the town occurs in Bede's Ecclesiastical History, from which we learn that St. Wilfrid, the famous Archbishop of York and the builder of the Abbeys of Ripon and Hexham, died at Undele [Oundle] in the year 709, his death taking place in the monastery of St. Andrew, founded by Wilfrid himself a few years previously. On his death the monastery passed with the lordship of Oundle to the Abbot of Peterborough. Domesday Book thus refers to Oundle sub voce the Abbey of Peterborough :

The same church holds 6 hides [about 250 acres] in Undele. There is land for 9 ploughs. In demesne there are 3 ploughs and 9 serfs; and 23 villeins and 10 bordars with 9 ploughs. There is a mill [Baker's Mill] rendering xxs. and 250 eels; and there are 50 acres of meadow. Wood 3 leagues in length, 2 in breadth. When stocked it is worth xxs. From the market come xxv. It was worth vs; now it is worth xii.

The site of the monastery is now occupied by the parish church of St. Peter, of Norman origin but built of local oolite, very full of shells. The

But a new era in the school's history dawned in the year 1556, owing to the munificence of Sir William Laxton, a native of Oundle. According to old Thomas Fuller, Laxton was 'bred a grocer in London, where he so prospered by his painefull endeavours, that he was chosen Lord Mayor. Anno Domini, 1544.' Fuller adds (writing before 1661) that the school 'is well maintained at this day by the Worshipful Company of Grocers, and hath been to my knowledge the nursery of many scholars most eminent in the University.' Sir William Laxton was buried in St. Mary Aldermary Church in the City of London, of which, as already photograph on p. 775 furnishes some idea of its stately Late Decorated (or Transitional to Perpendicular) tower, 208 feet in height. Its fine south porch, with a parvise (c. 1440), is worthy of notice, especially its original door and richly groined roof. The nave and aisles, with their many Decorated windows, including clerestory, are Early English (c. 1220). The Perpendicular pulpit (late 14th century) contains richly-decorated panels, coloured in black and red, and gold stars of metal are fixed on the black ground. No less interesting is the fine brass eagle lectern (c. 1443).

There is little doubt that a school existed in the little Northamptonshire town in connection with St. Wilfrid's monastery. Later on, commissions of Edward VI. record 'William Jerland of the age of

His monument in St. Mary Aldermary bears the following epitaph :

That by good life had happy death,
The end for which he sought.
Of poor and rich he was belov'd,

He dyed the 29. day of July, 1556

As a member of the Worshipful Company of Grocers, Sir William Laxton left most of his property to the Company conditionally on their supporting a school and almshouses in his native place, 'to be kept in the messuage or house of late called the Guylde or Fraternitie house of Owndell.' It is interesting to learn that Laxton was encouraged to found what is now a great educational establishment, by one of the Wardens of the Grocers' Company (1555-6), Richard Grafton, the celebrated printer of the 16th century, a specimen of whose typographical handiwork is seen in John Marbecke's 'The booke of Common praier noted' (1550).

The subjoined quaint tablet to the memory of the munificent founder, Sir William Laxton, is inserted in the wall of the house built on the site of the original school.

THE SCHOOL HOUSE, OUNDLE.

(Photograph by Mr. A. Wright, Oundle.)

On June 3, 1573, possession of the Guylde or Fraternitie house was taken by the Wardens of the Grocers' Company, when forty-eight scholars each received a penny 'to the intent that they should better remember Mr. Wardens' being at Oundle.' The original Table of Orders drawn up for the government of the school has been lost, but a copy made in 1604 furnishes some interesting information. Boarders were contemplated, but the master 'was not allowed more than six and the usher not above three, but by the license of the Wardens.' The school hours were :

- 7 a.m. Prayers, in such form as the Master shall think fit.
- . 7.30-11. Teaching, reading, and interpreting.
- 11-1. Dinner.
- 1-5 or 6 p.m. School, ending with prayers.

The master was not to give leave to play above one afternoon in a week 'unless some honourable or worshipful person present in the School require it.' In 1575 a newly appointed master asked the Grocers' Company for 'two great Dictionaries in Latin and Greeke to be ledgers in the school for the furtherance of the Scholars, which was granted, and the Wardens willed to buy the said books and send them down with the Table of Orders by the next Carryer.'

It is not necessary to trace the school in detail, but a few sidelights upon the past may prove to be of interest. In 1613 the 'near one hundred' boys were 'all from highest to lowest very raw, weak and ignorant scholars.' Five years later most of the eighty boys were 'absent at harvest,' but the Wardens were so pleased with the verses of one scholar that they gave him '12*d.* for his better encouragement.' In 1621 the Wardens allowed Edward Spencer 40*s.* for an exhibition at Cambridge, which shows that at so early a period boys passed from Oundle to the Universities, as in 1638 no fewer than eleven Old Oundleians had gone either to Oxford or Cambridge in the preceding three years. In 1626 a School register was started; therefore, with the exception of Winchester and Merchant Taylors', Oundle is the oldest school register in existence. The Great Fire of London in 1666 destroyed almost all the house property of the Grocers' Company in London, whereby both the Company and the school were in abject poverty for many years.

We must now pass on to the 19th century when, in 1801, the headmaster induced the Grocers' Company to grant two leaving exhibitions, tenable at either Oxford or Cambridge for three years, by boys who had been five years in the school. In 1876 the Company brought out an entirely new scheme for the school, dividing it into two parts: the Laxton Grammar School, mainly for the inhabitants of the town, and Oundle School, or to be strictly accurate, 'The Grocers' Company's School, Oundle.'

It is now time to turn to the musical side of the curriculum at Oundle. And at the outset it is most gratifying to record that nearly one-third of the boys—95 out of 326—are taking individual

...ssons in music, the highest proportion in any public school. Of these, 91 are instrumentalists—pianoforte, 64; violin, 15; flute, 5; violoncello, 3; clarinet, 2; and organ, 2; while 4 boys are studying theory and solo-singing. These pupils are all taught by Mr. C. M. Spurling, the music-master of the school, or his able assistants, Mr. F. A. Ogilvy (pianoforte), Mr. S. Champ (violin), both resident masters, and Bandmaster Clayson (wind instruments). The Orchestral Society (instructor, Mr. Champ) numbers 28 performers, and the Choral Society 101 voices. Both these flourishing organizations are conducted by Mr. Spurling, who as a valuable coadjutor, as choral accompanist, Mr. G. W. Brewster, M.A., the second mathematical master and a gifted amateur of music. In addition to providing the music of Mendelssohn to the performance of Shakespeare's 'Midsummer Night's Dream' by the junior members of the school in July last, the Orchestral and Choral Societies combined their forces in giving a concert of which the following is the programme, one that testifies to the good work that is being carried on for the cause of music at Oundle School:

- GOD SAVE THE KING.

The Choral Society meets on Saturday evenings, and the boys are intensely keen on their work. While music is not forced upon them, they are encouraged to be sympathetic towards and to show an interest in the art. The advantage of this is incalculable, especially in after life when, in occupying positions of influence and responsibility, they may be able to promote the interests of music, stimulated thereunto by the recollections of their school days and their musical environment at Oundle.

It is exceedingly gratifying to learn from Mr. Spurling that the first four forms in the school—i.e. all the junior boys—are taught sight-singing for three-quarters of an hour twice a week. As this is a compulsory subject, it forms a part of the regular school curriculum.

In response to our request, Mr. Spurling has given an unobtrusive account of how music is flourishing at Oundle School. He says: 'We have one or two musical evenings during term, at which the masters perform some standard work such as a movement of a Beethoven trio or symphony, violin sonata, concerto, &c. But previous to playing these works the boys have had the construction of the movement explained to them, and the leading themes are individually rendered again and again; also, if it happens to be a familiar theme, we make the audience laa the tune. In this way I have heard the tune of the Waltz in slow movement hummed and whistled in the houses and, indeed, on the playing fields.'

The Chapel Choir is an important institution at Oundle, and rightly so. At the present time it numbers 130 voices, more than one-third of the school. But the weekly choir practice has to be attended by all the scholars. One thing Oundle lacks, and that is a chapel worthy of the school. At present the services are held in a temporary building which is taxed to its utmost capacity. A two-manual organ, by Binns, occupies a recess in the centre of the building. Every boy in the school is provided with a copy of the music that is sung, including the Services, which are bound up in one volume.

The organ recitals on Sunday afternoon are a great feature at Oundle, with violin and occasional songs. Here are two special programmes of music given in the chapel on July 1, in July, at 7 p.m., at the end of term:

- Overture, 'Athaliah' ... ..
  - Violin sonata (Op. 57) ... ..
  - Fugue in D minor ... ..
  - Violin sonata (Op. 8), Two movements ...
  - Toccata from the fifth Organ symphony ...
- Violin concerto in E minor (Op. 64) ... Mendelssohn
  - Toccata and Fugue in C ... .. Bach
  - Second movement from Viola sonata (Op. 14) Meyer-Olbersleben
  - Coronation March ... .. Tchaikovsky

During the present term the orchestra is studying, week by week, "Slavische Tänze" (Dvořák) No. 4, "Serenade" (W. H. Squire), and "Kaiser Walzen" (Strauss). This year a complete performance was ven, with action and scenery, of Mendelssohn's Midsummer Night's Dream (omitting the herzo), also a representation of Milton's "Comus," with Sir Frederick Bridge's arrangement of the music. The orchestra numbers twenty-six boys and two masters, the boys receiving two half-hour lessons every week. The music-staff send up to the headmaster, through me, once a fortnight, a report as to the progress each pupil is making in his musical work, and the same obtains with regard to the singing class.'

Mr. Clement Michael Spurling, music-master of Oundle School, studied at the Royal College of Music from 1886 to 1890, his professors being Sir Charles Stanford, Sir Frederick Bridge, Dr. F. E. Gladstone, and Mr. Frederic Cliffe. In 1890 he passed the examination of Associate of the College. His first organ appointment, at the age of sixteen, was at St. John's Church, East Dulwich. To this succeeded St. Giles's, Camberwell, and, on the recommendation of Sir George Grove, All Saints', Wellingborough. In 1891 he obtained his present appointment at Oundle. At that time the number of boys learning music was under twenty; now, as already stated, it has increased to ninety-five. The need of simple pianoforte pieces, with sensible titles, suitable for teaching induced Mr. Spurling to compose two sets of pieces entitled 'Miniatures' and 'A village fair.' No. 12 from the former, 'A Pageant,' is included in Syllabus B of the Associated Board Examinations for the year ending 1910.

For kind help in the preparation of this article the thanks of the writer are due to Mr. F. W. Sanderson, M.A., headmaster, and Mr. C. M. Spurling, music-master of Oundle School; also to Mr. H. H. Markham and Mr. A. Wright, of Oundle, and Messrs. Elliott & Fry and the London Stereoscopic Company, for their photographs.

DR. JOHN BLOW.

The romantic career of Dr. John Blow is now fully revealed to the world. He was born in 1649, the commencement of the Commonwealth period, at Newark-on-Trent, probably the only English town which at that time could boast of a music-school in full operation. He was brought to London in 1660 to serve as a chorister in the Chapel Royal, by Captain Cooke, a musician who had fought as a Royalist in the Civil War. Blow rapidly advanced in favour with the authorities, and in December, 1677, was created a Doctor in Music. A facsimile of the Faculty granting the degree was printed in the Musical Times in May last. The writing of that deed is very crabbed, and the Latin text full of contractions, making it difficult to decipher. Assisted by my son, I have transcribed the Latin and translated it into English. It will be seen how interesting and important a document it is; not only does it cite Blow's birth-place, but it also gives the text of the solemn oath he took on the occasion of his investiture.

HOW CAN I BE UGLY?

By F. CORDER.

It must, I think, be admitted that the education of composers in the 19th century was woefully deficient. We were taught that chords of major seventh and a few other combinations were harsh and ugly, and told that nobody would love us if we used them—in fact, they were the swear-words of musical speech. I need hardly say that thereupon we yearned for them with a passionate yearning. The true artist, when he finds himself in danger of becoming popular, always rebuffs his admirers with freshly invented uglinesses. Now I should dearly love to do this, and thereby prove myself a genius. Like the Fat Boy in Pickwick 'I wants to make your flesh creep'—but, alas! how can I do so? I was taught that consecutive fifths were hideous, but The Times only the other day, praising a performance of a new String quartet, said that one movement was 'adorned with a number of pretty little tricks, such as the repetition of the tune in fifths.' As a matter of fact most things in that quartet were either in fifths, fourths or sevenths. Grieg has written a much-admired pianoforte piece, called 'The Bell,' entirely in bare fifths.

Next I bethought me of how the late Cornet Grain used to describe a young lady at a party who played a waltz, and explained that the melody was all in octaves, but her hand was so small that she could not reach them; accordingly she played sevenths instead. This used to make us squint; but time has reconciled the human ear to such trifling dissonances, and I find numerous admired compositions by Debussy and his imitators, where not only is the melody in sevenths, but the music in complete chords of seventh straight up and down the scale. It is nothing when you are used to it. But I would not have you think it was new. I have loved it all my life (as Agnes in David Copperfield says), but lacked the courage to use it, and now I am too late—it is considered beautiful. Is there nothing I can do? Stay: in my concert days there was an old joke we used to perpetrate in the artists' room. Mesdames Sherrington and Trebelli used to try and sing a Bellini duet in seconds instead of in thirds. We used to think that excruciating, but Bossi, in his clever 'Musical Satires,' has written a piece all in ninths, which many people consider adorable, besides a little march where one hand plays in A and the other in A flat. I can myself almost admire this, but when he brings both hands into the same key and bids you observe that it sounds wrong, I confess I fail to follow him. Then there is the tonal scale, which we also used to try to sing, as a joke, in my young days. The modern French composers have discovered that it is quite beautiful, because that lovely chord the augmented triad is the only harmony that will fit it. And there are those enchanting pieces by Rébikoff (including the 'Dance of the Demon's daughter' built entirely upon tonal scales and augmented iads. Most of them end on a chord of French xth—a ravishing effect.

Is there nothing I can do to revolt and scandalise people? I have written a piece where the key changed at least once in every bar, and the Daily Telegraph pronounced it 'commendably free from eccentricity and exaggeration.' I have lately heard a long choral work where the voices did things of this sort all the way through :

1st CHOIR.

2nd CHOIR.

ings that nearly gave me convulsions, but the Daily Mail declared this was 'the finest work of the century.' I am told there is an Anti-Beethoven society in bold, bad Birmingham, where they have scotched all common chords except in the second version. I believe that the committee of this society, in order to show their independence, have determined never to adopt resolutions of any kind. In my search for horrors I have naturally thought of using chords two and three together, but Strauss has been before me, and his genial 'Sancho Panza' motive in 'Don Quixote' is accompanied by a chord of A flat, a chord of G, and a chord of F together—most droll, I assure you. But these things are disappointing in the orchestra; they don't sound as though you had the pedal down. I am rather alarmed to tell you the truth, to find out all recent attempts to satirise or exaggerate modern harmonic methods—such as Stanford's 'Ode to Discord,' or Bossi's 'Musical Satires'—have failed so entirely. Taking the favourite modern chord :

tried the experiment of harmonising 'Home, sweet home' with it, after the following style :

but all to whom I played it were ravished with delight. It is of no avail: nothing we can do sounds ugly any more.

But it will be noticed that all these lovely modern effects depend essentially upon going straight up and down the scale in discords, and I think that I have discovered the reason of this. It is not, as some have conjectured, a reversion to the primitive methods of Hucbald in the 9th century; rather is it a reversion to childish—and therefore God-sent—instincts. It goes straight to the heart of the hearer because it reminds him of how, when a tiny toddler, strictly forbidden to touch the drawing-room pianoforte, he used to steal in when mother was away and produce music just like that. But if our ears take pleasure in these naïvetés it makes the task of an earnest musician like myself a very serious one. I appeal to my readers then. What shall we do to be ugly?

Occasional Notes.

The North Staffordshire District Choral Society (conductor, Mr. James Whewall) had the honour of singing before their Majesties The King and Queen and their illustrious guest, King Manuel of Portugal, at Windsor Castle on Monday evening, November 15. The selection of music on that auspicious occasion was as follows :

|                        |        |                      |

| Sweet and low          | ... .. | Joseph Barnby.       |
| The Lady Oriana        | ... .. | John Wilbye.         |

God save The King.

It was fitting that Wilbye's splendid madrigal 'The Lady Oriana,' written in praise of one of England's greatest queens, should have concluded the concert given before one of England's greatest kings—a perfect ending to a perfect performance. After the conclusion of the concert, Mr. T. W. Twyford, D.L., J.P., the President of the Society, and Dr. W. G. McNaught had the honour of being presented to their Majesties, who expressed their warm appreciation of the pleasure the singing of the choir had afforded them. The choir sang at the Windsor Railway Station shortly after midnight, the Mayor, many of the townsfolk and many Castle attendants being present; they then departed for their homes at Stoke, where they arrived about 6 o'clock, in time to begin their day's work in the Potteries.

The third of the present month will complete the first anniversary of the production on December 3, 1908, of Elgar's Symphony at Manchester, under Dr. Richter, to whom the work is dedicated. During its first year's existence, no fewer than eighty-two performances of the Symphony have been given. Of these seventeen were in London and suburbs, ten in America, seven on the Continent—Vienna, Berlin, Leipsic, Bonn, St. Petersburg and Budapest—and two in the Colonies—Toronto and Sydney. Such a record is in the region of the unprecedented. Among the most memorable recent performances was that given at the Royal Albert Hall, when, despite the vastness of the building, all the details of the score were clearly brought out by Mr. Landon Ronald, who conducted the work from memory.

The mutilation of Elgar's Symphony, as recorded by Mr. Havergal Brian in another column, calls for severe censure. Such a proceeding is happily rare in performances of the works of living composers. We understand that the sanction of the composer was not obtained for such drastic treatment of the work as that accorded to it by Mr. Thomas Beecham. How is English music to be held in respect if it is so badly treated by a native conductor?

|                                 |                      |            |
|---------------------------------|----------------------|------------|
| Overture                        | 'Die Meistersinger'  | Wagner.    |
| Symphonic Poem                  | 'Till Eulenspiegel'  | Strauss.   |
| Brandenburg Concerto            | for String Orchestra | Bach.      |
| Variations on an Original Theme |                      | Elgar.     |
| Symphony No. 5, in C minor      |                      | Beethoven. |

The above programme was played at a recent concert of the London Symphony Orchestra at Covent Garden Theatre. Dr. Richter, who conducted, can doubtless be credited with the selection of pieces—a selection as eclectic as it was interesting and enjoyable. Bach and Richard Strauss are separated by a wide gulf; between them is Wagner, represented by one of the finest creations of his genius. English orchestral music was worthily represented by Elgar's Variations, and Beethoven, in one of his magnificent masterpieces, set the seal upon a programme which reflected credit upon all who took part in its superb interpretation.

The volume containing the Proceedings of the thirty-fifth session of the Musical Association (1908-1909) has now been issued. The following is a list of the papers read, together with the names of the lecturers:

The value and usefulness of the volume are enhanced by a complete Index to all the papers read before the Association from 1874 to 1909, arranged in two sections—subjects and names of authors. The thirty-sixth session was opened on November 2, at the King's Room, Messrs. Broadwood's, Conduit Street, when Mr. Louis Nicole read a paper on 'Rhythmical Gymnastics.' On the same evening the annual dinner was held at the Criterion Restaurant, the President, Dr. W. H. Cummings, in the chair.

At the Court dinner of the Worshipful Company of Musicians, held in the Egyptian Hall, Mansion House, on October 26, the Lord Mayor, Sir George Wyke Truscott, relinquished the office of Master in favor of Dr. T. L. Southgate. On the same occasion Mr. Alfred H. Littleton was sworn in as Senior Warden and Mr. Arthur F. Hill as Junior Warden for the coming year. The silver medals of the Company were awarded to Miss Ellen C. Edwards, of the Royal College of Music, and to Student Rudolph O'Donnell, of the Royal Military School of Music, Kneller Hall, they being respectively the most distinguished students of the two institutions during the current year. The dinner was followed by an interesting selection of vocal and instrumental music given in the saloon by the students of the Royal College of Music.

In response to the invitation of the Musicians Company to send in for competition new compositions written for military band, no fewer than 119 works have been received. After having been examined by a committee of experts, and studied and rehearsed by the band of the Grenadier Guards, under Lieut. Dr. Albert Williams, the selected pieces were played before the judges, who awarded the prizes as follows: Fifty guineas given by Mr. S. Ernest Palmer, an Honorary Freeman of the Company, to Percy E. Fletcher, for a Suite of three movements; twenty guineas given by Captain A. S. Beaumont, a member of the Company, to Mr. Walter Wesché, for an Overture; fifteen guineas contributed by the committee, to Mr. Percy E. Fletcher, for a Grand March; ten guineas given by Mr. C. T. D. Cross, a Past-Master of the Company, to Mr. F. Cunningham Woods for a Suite consisting of three movements; and ten pounds given by Mr. Henry J. Iles, a member of the Company, to Mr. A. von Ahn Carse for a March. The prize works are announced to be performed at an early concert to be given under the auspices of the Court.

As in previous years, we have pleasure in calling attention to the Hallé Orchestra Pension Fund. This beneficent scheme was instituted by Dr. Richter in 1892 'to provide for the superannuation of aged members of the Hallé Orchestra who find themselves compelled to retire from active service.' During the year ending September 30 last the capital account of the Fund has been increased by £465 15s. 6d., and now stands at £6,445 19s. 11d. This capital sum has been made up of annual contributions from members of the Orchestra, the proceeds of the annual benefit concert, and donations and annual subscriptions received from friends. The Pension Fund came into operation on October 1, 1908, when the first payments, averaging £16 8s. per annum, were made. It is obvious that this amount is altogether inadequate, therefore the capital of the Fund should be substantially increased. To this desirable end donations, legacies, and annual subscriptions are earnestly solicited. Full particulars of the Fund can be obtained from Mr. Carl Fuchs, 56, High Street, C.-on-M., Manchester.

Dr. Henry Watson desires us to correct an unintentional error in the biographical sketch of him which appeared in our issue of June last. The medallion of Madame Malibran (p. 369) was not purchased from Mr. John Towers, of St. Louis, U.S.A., but was generously presented by that gentleman. In justice to Mr. Towers we gladly rectify the error.

A concert of great interest will be given on the evening of January 24, at Queen's Hall, in memory of the late Mr. A. J. Jaeger—Nimrod, of Elgar's variations—the enthusiastic musical critic so long associated with this paper. Mr. Jaeger was fortunate in enjoying the friendship of a number of the most distinguished musicians of the day, and some of these end to express their appreciation of his memory by giving their services on the occasion referred to. Hans Richter will conduct the London Symphony Orchestra, Miss Muriel Foster and Mr. Plunkett Greene have consented to sing, and Sir Hubert Parry, Walford Davies and Mr. Coleridge-Taylor will appear to conduct their own works. Sir Edward Elgar's absence from England will unfortunately prevent his taking part in the concert.

The following interesting letter comes from Australia:

I received to-day the September number of the Musical Times. The illustrations of Grantham Church remind me of a somewhat amusing incident that occurred when, as an architectural student, I visited the church many years ago. On certain characteristics of style, I thought that the building had been restored by a well-known architect of that time, but in order to make sure I inquired of the architect the name of the restoration architect. She replied: 'Well, sir, I am not quite sure, but I think it was Walter Scott!' This confirmed my suspicion that the architect was Sir George Gilbert Scott, the old lady probably having only heard of the great novelist.

I have taken the Musical Times for many years past, and I specially look forward to the interesting descriptions and illustrations of the various English cathedrals and churches appearing in its pages. Another feature I always eagerly look for is the record of the musical doings in Bath, Bristol, Worcester and Gloucester, all those cities being connected with events in my younger days. I was a member of the Royal Choral Society, under Sir Joseph Barnby, with John Stainer as organist.

Your paper therefore brings back to me many old and dear memories, and I hope I may long be spared to continue writing it. At the same time I must congratulate you on many improved features of recent years.

Rugby School is to be congratulated upon its new headmaster, the Rev. A. A. David, headmaster of Iffleyton College. Mr. David is a viola player and a member of chamber music. We find that between November, 1885, and May, 1886, he made five appearances at the concerts of the Oxford University Musical Union—in a Concerto for strings by Miniani, two quartets by Haydn, the Christmas Concerto by Corelli, and a Concerto for pianoforte and strings by Handel. It may be assumed, therefore, that the cause of music at Rugby will receive due recognition and all encouragement from so practical a musician as the new headmaster.

The humours of provincial musical criticism show signs of decay. One of the latest specimens is a notice of two concerts given in aid of a police charity in a seaport town. The first of these music-makings began with the performance by the police band of an overture entitled, 'Hans Such'—such it was—a composition which made no demands on the rhythmic tact of the players. Thereupon followed a euphonium solo, in which 'the obbligato had snappily the beat was exhilarating.' No wonder, for the former was a policeman.

The November issue of the Revue Musicale S.I.M., organ of the International Musical Society (Section Française), gives the following name among the members of the Comité of the English section: Mrs. Naught.

Church and Organ Music.

AN ADVENT HYMN AND A CHRISTMAS HYMN.

I.—VENI, EMMANUEL.

Antiquity, in regard to both words and music, is one of the great attributes of the church-song of the people. Sung through countless ages and in various languages, the psalms and hymns and spiritual songs of olden times have endeared themselves to myriads of worshippers in churches of all denominations. One of the best known of ancient Advent hymns is that beginning 'O come, O come, Emmanuel.' It is a versification of five of the great Antiphons for use during Advent. Of the various translations of the hymn that have been made, that in general use is by the Rev. Dr. John Mason Neale, though in a modified form. It originally began (1851) 'Draw nigh, draw nigh, Emmanuel,' but was altered to 'O come, O come, Emmanuel' for a trial copy of 'Hymns Ancient and Modern' (1859), and then found its way into the first edition of 1861.

The tune with which the words are invariably associated appeared in Part II. of the 'Hymnal Noted' (1856), with Dr. Neale's translation, in the following form:

DRAW nigh, draw nigh, Em-man-u-el, And ransom captive
Is-ra-el, That mourns in lone-ly ex-ile here,
Un-til the Son of God ap-pear. Re-joyce! Re-joyce!
Em-man-u-el Shall be born for thee, O Is-ra-el!

The source of its melody is there given as 'From a French Missal in the National Library, Lisbon.' But Mr. William Cowan, in 'The Music of the Church Hymnary,' says 'these missals have all been examined by the Rev. W. Hilton of the English College, Lisbon, but this melody is not to be found in them. In all probability it is not a genuine mediæval melody, but has been made up of a number of plain-song phrases, most of them being found in settings of the Kyrie.' Mr. Cowan adds: 'The tune in its present form cannot be traced to an earlier source than the "Hymnal Noted," and the likelihood is therefore that the adaptation was made for that book to suit Dr. Neale's translation.' In the early editions of 'Hymns Ancient and Modern' (1861) the final chord (exclusive of the Amen) contained the major third, which in the current editions has rightly been replaced by a minor third. The tune is invariably named 'Veni, Emmanuel,' but in the 'Methodist Hymn Book' it is called 'Ephratah.' To raise the penultimate (leading) note as printed in some hymnals (e.g., the old Wesleyan book), is to destroy the modal character of the tune and spoil its pristine beauty. In the 'Church Hymnal' (Ireland) the tune is associated with the hymn 'O Love divine, how sweet thou art.' 'Veni, Emmanuel' should, as a matter of course, be sung throughout in unison.

II.—CORDE NATUS, OR DIVINUM MYSTERIUM.

The antiquity of the words of this beautiful Christmas hymn admits of no disputation. Its author, Aurelius Clemens Prudentius, was a Spaniard, evidently of good family, who was born A.D. 348 and died circa 413. The hymn 'Corde natus ex Parentis, ante mundi exordium' is taken from the 'Hymnus omnis horæ' beginning 'Da puer plectrum, choreis ut canam fidelibus,' written at the beginning of the 5th century by Prudentius. A 5th-century manuscript of the poem is in the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris, and one of the 11th century is in the British Museum (Harl. MS. 2961, f. 228). It is interesting to know that parts of the hymn were contained in the York and Hereford Breviaries.

An English translation of the 'Corde natus' by the Rev. Dr. J. M. Neale, appeared in Part II. of the 'Hymnal Noted' (1854) in the following form :

As in the case of 'Veni, Emmanuel,' it will be observed that Dr. Neale's translation of 'Corde natus' has been modified in 'Hymns Ancient and Modern.' For the trial edition of that hymnal (1859) the first line reads 'Of the Father's will begotten,' which was afterwards replaced by 'Of the Father's love begotten,' a version of the hymn—jointly translated by Dr. Neale and Sir H. W. Baker—which has become the most popular form in common use.

With regard to the tune associated with Dr. Neale's translation, the musical editor of the 'Hymnal Noted,' the Rev. Thomas Helmore gave its origin as a 'Melody from a manuscript at Wolfenbüttel of the xiiith century.' The Rev. W. H. Frere, editor of the forthcoming historical edition of 'Hymns Ancient and Modern,' says that the tune 'was originally a Trope to the Sanctus. It appears in Tropers of the xiith—xvth century in Italy and Germany with the words "Divinum mysterium," sometimes ascribed to St. Thomas Aquinas, and with a varying musical text.' The melody appears in a very scarce book entitled :

PIÆ CANTIO-NES ECCLESIA-
STICÆ ET SCHOLA-
STICÆ VETERVM EPISCOPOrum, in Inclito Regno Sueciæ passim usurpatæ, ctæ, & nunc typis com-

THEODORICI PETRI Nylandensis.

His adiecti sunt aliquot ex Psalmis recentioribus.

The colophon reads :

GRYPHISVALDIÆ
Typis Augustini Ferberi Anno 1582.

This rare little tome, which formerly belonged to the Rev. Thomas Helmore, is now the property of the Plainsong and Mediæval Music Society, under whose auspices it will shortly be issued in a reprinted form under the careful and erudite editorship of the Rev. G. R. Woodward. In Petri's 'Piæ Cantiones' the tune appears thus :

DE EVCHARISTIA.

Mr. Frere says : 'Throughout the book the words are not very accurately spaced to correspond with the music; consequently in adapting the tune to this hymn the division between the fifth and sixth lines was made at * instead of at †.'

A comparison of the above facsimile with the versions printed in various modern hymnals will show that editors have different ideas as to the rhythmic form of the tune. In the latest edition of 'Hymns Ancient and Modern' it is noted in triple rhythm throughout; in other collections it is given as quadruple rhythm with excursions into triple rhythm.

While these notes on two hymns sung at Advent and Christmas in many churches of all denominations make no claim to be exhaustive, they will suffice to show how greatly church-song of the present day is indebted to old-time writers and composers. For kindly lending us the proof sheets relating to the foregoing tunes in the forthcoming Historical edition of 'Hymns Ancient and Modern,' we are indebted to the courtesy of the editor, the Rev. W. H. Frere, and also to Messrs. Clowes & Co., Ltd., the publishers, for the loan of the facsimile block above.

THE DOYEN OF ENGLISH CATHEDRAL ORGANISTS.

On November 3, in his eighty-ninth year, the venerable organist of Carlisle Cathedral, Dr. Henry Edmund Ford, responded to the call of the great reaper whose name is Death. Appointed to be chief musician in the cathedral church of the border city in 1842, he had held that office for the long period of nearly sixty-eight years, although since 1902 he had not actively discharged the duties of organist.

In our issue of April, 1909, we gave a biographical sketch of Dr. Ford's career, together with his portrait. Previous to the interment of the remains of Dr. Ford in the Westbourne Park Cemetery, amid many manifestations of respect to memory, an impressive funeral service was held in the cathedral he had served so long and so faithfully, at which Sydney H. Nicholson, organist of Manchester Cathedral, late acting-organist of Carlisle Cathedral, and Mr. T. H. Irons, the present acting-organist, jointly presided at the an.

The following appreciation of Dr. Ford is by Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson, organist of Manchester Cathedral:

The death of Dr. Henry Edmund Ford has removed from the musical profession the last of what may be called the old school of cathedral organists. Born in the early part of the last century, he was six years old when Beethoven died, and he was contemporary with as well as the close personal friend of such men as Samuel Sebastian Wesley, A. Walmisley, and Henry Smart—men whose names we reverence as classics in the domain of church music. Mendelssohn, Schumann, Chopin and Wagner were in the height of their powers when he commenced his work in the cathedral city. When Dr. Ford came to the north from Manchester, where he had been a chorister and assistant to Albert Banks, Carlisle was a very different place from what it is to-day. There was then no railway communication with the south, and many and amusing were his anecdotes of his journey to the border city, by stage-coach over Shap and Lancaster, and of the condition in which he found the cathedral and its services: he was fond of telling how, when he was appointed, the répertoire of the choir consisted of twelve services and twenty anthems, which they sang after day in rotation: needless to say, there were no rehearsals. There were no lights in the cathedral, and he could tell how his predecessor, on the dark winter afternoons, would frequently look down from the organ loft when the hymn was announced, and call out "Can't see to play!"

His life was quite a record of continuous industry and severance in the cause of music: at the cathedral which he loved so dearly, he was largely instrumental in securing the erection of the fine Willis organ, to which he was himself a generous contributor. He raised the music to a high state of efficiency, introducing a large and varied repertoire, especially rich in the ancient masterpieces but ignoring modern compositions, in which he showed a keen interest. As a player, especially of the older cathedral music, he was a thorough expert, soaked as he was from childhood in the traditions of the past, and having heard the works of many of the greatest of the more modern writers formed under their own direction. He did much to revive the musical taste of the city, often at serious personal loss to himself, and, at a time when Carlisle was comparatively isolated, he secured the services of the most eminent recitalists of the day, vocal and instrumental, and of organizations as the Hallé Orchestra, in order to bring music to the doors of his fellow-townsmen.

When he retired from active duties at the cathedral, he continued to take a keen interest in the choir and the music, and became a regular attendant at the services. Ever ready to give kindly advice and help to his successors, he was the first to appreciate the work of others, under circumstances that at the best must have been trying to a man who had such a whole-hearted devotion to the work of his lifetime. A charming host, a genial personality, a capital story-teller, his brisk and familiar figure will be sadly missed in the streets of Carlisle, the city which he made his home for so many years, and to which he gave the best of his energies for nearly three-quarters of a century.

Mr. J. W. Brown, an ex-chorister of Carlisle Cathedral, recently read an interesting paper before the Carlisle Literary and Scientific Society, of which he is honorary secretary, on the subject of 'Organist life in the early sixties.' In his closing remarks Mr. Brown stated that observation led him to the conclusion that choristers of the present day had probably better opportunities for education than any other boys of their own age in the city. The knowledge of music which they gained passing through the choir, by drinking in from tender childhood onward the noblest inspirations of the great masters, was invaluable.

A JUBILEE ORGAN.

In commemoration of the jubilee of the Rev. Dr. John Clifford's pastorate of Westbourne Park Chapel, a new organ has been erected in that building. The instrument is the work of Messrs. Lewis & Co., built to the subjoined specification prepared by Mr. J. R. Griffiths, who 'opened' the organ on October 25; the Vox humana was inserted 'by request':

Mr. W. A. Frost writes from St. Paul's Cathedral: 'The list given in your November issue of nine choristers of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, who became organists of noted churches, includes Dr. G. F. Huntley. I can safely say, however, that though he was an organ pupil of Sir George Elvey and played at many services, he was not a chorister of the Chapel. The withdrawal of Dr. Huntley's name reduces the number to eight, but there are three other ex-choristers who might also have been mentioned, who, with Dr. Keeton, were contemporaries with me in the choir. They were: Arthur Marriott, at one time organist of Southwell Minster; the late Hugh Brooksbank, a former organist of Llandaff Cathedral; and my late brother, Henry Frederick Frost, for twenty-six years organist of the Chapel Royal, Savoy.'

The ninth annual Festival of the Liverpool Church Choir Association took place in St. George's Hall on November 18. Sir Frederick Bridge conducted his anthem 'It is a good thing' and his Easter carol 'On the Cross,' both of which were sung with fine effect by the choir of some 500 voices, representing nineteen churches which had not previously taken part in these festivals. Notable also was the inclusion of a work by a local composer, Mr. Edward Watson, whose anthem 'Sing we merrily' proved very successful. In addition to examples of Elvey, Gadsby, and Harford Lloyd, the English school was further represented by 'verse' anthems (notably Travers's 'Ascribe') sung by Messrs. Packer, Norcup and Mills, of the Westminster Abbey Choir, and Master Leslie Battensby, of Mr. Bates' London School of Choristers. Dr. Peace presided at the organ, which was supplemented by brass instruments and drums.

Mr. Richard Tattersall, organist and choirmaster of St. Thomas's Church, Toronto, has been giving an interesting series of organ recitals at the Toronto Conservatory of Music.

The free recitals of sacred music which have been given in Gloucester Cathedral for many years at fortnightly intervals during the winter months, were resumed on November 18. The programme included : Basso ostinato (Arensky), Prière et Berceuse (Guilmant), chorus 'He that shall endure' (Mendelssohn), some vocal and violoncello solos, one hymn, and concluding voluntary. These recitals are attended by between two and three thousand persons of all classes, and a collection is made at the doors towards expenses, which are not heavy, as all services are given gratuitously. Dr. A. Herbert Brewer is conductor, and plays one at least of the organ solos.

The London Church Choir Association held their thirty-sixth annual festival at St. Paul's Cathedral on Thursday evening, November 18. Over fifty choirs took part in this impressive event. The service consisted almost entirely of unfamiliar music, and included hymns by Mr. J. Carter Jenner, Mr. W. H. Harris, psalms by Mr. Montague Phillips, Magnificat and Nunc dimittis, by Dr. F. G. Huntley, in G, an anthem by Boyce, and Dr. Walford Davies's 'Sursum Corda.' The Bishop of Oxford was the preacher.

Mr. G. S. L. Lohr, organist and choirmaster of St. Jude's Church, Southsea, has been the gratified recipient of a testimonial on retiring from the above church after having served it faithfully and well for nearly thirty-five years. On behalf of the subscribers to the testimonial, Miss Brenda Blake, daughter of Canon Blake, handed Mr. Lohr a massive silver tea-tray of fine workmanship, as a token of the esteem, regard, and affection in which he is held by all connected with the church. The tray bears the following inscription : 'Presented to Mr. G. S. L. Lohr by his friends in the congregation and choir of St. Jude's Church, Southsea, with grateful remembrances of his services as organist, 1875-1909.' In expressing his thanks for the gift Mr. Lohr referred to the excellent relationship which existed between all the church officials and himself, and he had considerable difficulty in adequately expressing his gratitude to the members of the choir.

Mr. W. Silkstone Dobson, organist and choirmaster of Christ Church, Southport, has been presented with the 'Oxford History of Music' (six volumes), together with a cheque for fifty guineas, in recognition of the efficient manner in which he has discharged the duties appertaining to his office during the past twenty-one years. Canon Honeyburne, in making the presentation on behalf of the subscribers, bore eloquent testimony to the manner in which Mr. Dobson had inspired the praise of the congregation.

Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' was sung at Christ Church, Cloughton, Birkenhead, on October 23, by the combined choirs of St. Saviour's Church and Christ Church. Dr. C. T. Reynolds was at the organ. Mr. R. E. Parker conducted, and a string orchestra was led by Mr. J. A. Matthews.

At the invitation of the chaplain, the Rev. Roger Dalison, and of Dr. Steen, the principal of the institution, the choir of Stone Parish Church sang Gaul's cantata 'Ruth' in the church of the City of London Mental Hospital, Stone, Dartford, on Sunday, October 24. Mr. J. Greenfield, organist of St. Mary's, Stone, conducted, and Mr. Jarrett was at the organ.

On Sunday afternoon, November 14, at St. Matthew's Church, Northampton, a selection of 16th-century music, vocal and instrumental, was performed. The composers represented were Merbecke, Tye, Richard Farrant, Arcadelt, Byrd, Croce, Richard Alwood, Tallis, Palestrina, and John Redford. Mr. C. J. King conducted, and Mr. A. C. Tysoe, organist of St. Giles's Church, presided at the organ.

Spohr's 'Last Judgment' will be sung with full orchestral accompaniment at St. Paul's Cathedral, on the evening of December 7.

The Princess of Wales visited St. Margaret's Church, Lynn, on November 13, when Mr. Arthur Shirley, its organist of the church, had the honour of playing a service before Her Royal Highness, who expressed her gratification at the fine tone of the organ, and with the judicious selection of music performed.

CHUMANN'S SYMPHONY IN E FLAT
THE RHENISH, OP. 97.
BY SIR GEORGE GROVE, C.B.

1. Lebhaft.
2. Sehr mässig.
3. Nicht schnell.
4. Feierlich.

his splendid Symphony, though numbered third, ally the last of Schumann's four. It was composed between November 2 and December 9, 1850, and before very shortly after its author had entered its office as Director of the Music at Düsseldorf, of which he first discharged the public functions on the 1st of the preceding October. The Symphony is known in Germany as 'the Rhenish' (die Rheinische), not only because Schumann was in the habit of saying that the first impulse towards its composition had been given to his mind by the sight of the Cathedral of Cologne, and strengthened by the grand ceremonial installation there of the Archbishop as Cardinal Elector which he witnessed while engaged on the Symphony, but also because he was born in Bockum, in Northern Bohemia—no one could be a more fervent worshipper of the great river of Germany than Schumann, as his two songs, 'Sonntags am Rhein,' 'Im Rhein, im heiligen Strome,' testify without need of evidence from this Symphony to back them. The impression which the ceremony referred to made on his mind finds a place in the fourth movement, or introduction to the Finale, which in the MS. score is headed 'Im Character der Begleitung einer feierlichen Cerimonie'—as if to accompany a religious ceremonial. Other portions of his work Schumann used to be intended to have a popular or national character, and is most perceptible in the last movements, and is probably also implied in fact that the headings of the movements are given in German instead of in Italian as with Beethoven.

The first movement (Lebhaft), in E flat, starts at once with its vigorous principal subject, scored for full orchestra, accompanied by the second violins and as in chords of quavers, and by the rest of the band in notes corresponding with those of the theme. One listens to this striking opening, it is impossible to feel that the composer has something original and that he means to say it in his own fashion. A strong rhythm in sections of two bars is a marked feature:

1. f Lebhaft.

Musical notation showing the first few bars of the first movement, featuring a strong rhythmic pattern of eighth notes.

is continued in a similar strain for twenty bars, and is then attacked fortissimo by horns, bassoons, and basses; but hardly has its repetition begun, before the following energetic subordinate theme is introduced at the fifth bar:

2. sf

Musical notation showing the subordinate theme, marked sf (sforzando), with a more melodic and rhythmic character.

and again—after a few bars diminuendo on the phrase in the fifth and sixth bars of our quotation from the principal subject (No. 1)—a second subordinate subject of importance is introduced:

No. 3.

Musical notation for the second subordinate subject, marked p (piano) and sf (sforzando).

An interlude of twelve bars leads back to the tonic, and starts the principal subject again fortissimo; the two subordinates follow, though transferred to keys which modulate gradually towards G minor, in which key the 'second subject' proper is then introduced, melodious in character, and in instrumentation and rhythm a complete and charming contrast to what has preceded it:

No. 4. Wind.

Musical notation for the third subordinate subject, marked p (piano), involving Fag. (Fagot) and Strings.

After this the rhythm of the first subject is returned to, and the first part of the movement is speedily brought to a close in B flat, chiefly by transposed material from the different motives.

At this point in the movement a repetition of the entire first part generally takes place; but Schumann breaks through the rule and proceeds at once to the middle portion or development of his movement in the following surprising manner, leaping at one bound from the key of B flat to that of G major:

No. 5. f

Musical notation for the fourth subordinate subject, marked f (forte) and Tutti, involving Str. wuis. (Violins) and Bass col. Bves. (Bassoon).

From this point the different subjects and phrases above quoted are worked thematically with great ingenuity and effect for nearly 200 bars. The fiery principal theme and its more graceful and feminine relative, the second subject (No. 4), change places over and over again, but never reappear without being transferred to another key and adorned with some fresh blossom or ornament.

The short interlude by means of which the modulatory changes and connections of the two chief themes are managed, is constructed first on the first subordinate (No. 2), and then—doubtless with a view to avoid monotony—on new branch-themes, which seem gradually to grow as it were out of the roots of the first and second subjects. The keys of F, E flat, B flat minor, are used for the second, and those of A flat minor, B major, E flat minor, and F sharp major, for the first subject.

The climax of this wonderful piece of development is reached on the re-entrance of the principal subject in E flat—that is to say, at the beginning of the third part of the movement, or the recapitulation. The entrance is prepared for by a passage of forty-four bars in length, beginning as follows :

No. 6.

Horns.

The return to the key of E flat after so long an absence and so much persistent and almost over-rich modulation, the mysterious pianissimo tremolo in the strings, accompanying the melodic strain constructed on the principal subject and played forte above the B flat pedal note in the bass, combine to produce something not alone new, but also—too much lost sight of in the music of the last half of the nineteenth century—extremely charming. There are few finer passages in Schumann, or indeed in any orchestral music, than this return of the first subject.

After this the third part of the movement begins fortissimo. It consists of the usual repetitions from the first part of all the leading subjects, with the matter of the second subject transferred to its relative keys (viz., from G minor and B flat to C minor and E flat), and materially abridged. A vigorous Coda in keeping with what has preceded it and closing in the tonic key, completes this noble Vivace.

It is indeed not too much to say that in this movement we have Schumann at his best. While retaining all his individuality and giving utterance to uncommon ideas, he is never even vague. The music never flags, the art with which the various subjects are alternated and contrasted sustains the interest throughout, and from the first bar to the last we feel that the composer is working within his means. Without doubt, whenever this Vivace is heard the claims of Schumann to be a master of music in its highest form will want no other advocacy.

II. The second movement of the work—Sehr mässig (or, to use the more customary Italian phrase, Molto moderato)—stands in the place of the Scherzo; but instead of the quick and lively time usual in modern Scherzos, we have a piece in the mould of the more antiquated and dignified Menuet galant. Its principal melodies are the following :

No. 7. Sehr mässig.

mf Bassoons, Violas, & Cellos.

Vn. 1st.

each being repeated so as to form a melody of two parts of sixteen bars each. A free variation of the same follows :

No. 8.

Vn. 1st. & Ob. stacc.

This is worked out with great ingenuity in all sorts of imitations—for instance the occurrence of the first theme (No. 7) in the violoncellos, with the semiquaver figure of No. 8 above it. The figure is then used as an accompaniment to the plaintive and very individual Trio in A minor—a 'Trio' to all intents and purposes though not designated as such :

No. 9.

Wind.

This has likewise its two parts of eight bars each. The pedal C in the bass, which prevails through a great part of this Trio, is an 'organ-point' on the third of the key, and as such is an innovation on the regular rules for 'organ-points'; but, as in most cases of innovations by men of genius, it becomes perfectly logical and legitimate when properly considered—and besides it is delightful to hear, which, after all, is the main point. The rest of this pleasant movement is framed chiefly on the material already quoted. Its dignified humour is preserved throughout.

III. The third movement—'Nicht schnell,' in A flat—is in fact a short Andante, and has the unpretending form and spirit of a 'Song without words.' Its subjects are of a calm and conversational character. The orchestra is reduced by the omission of the drums and of all noisy brass, and the whole has the dreamy air of some mediæval Rhine legend. It opens with the following melody :

No. 10. Nicht schnell.

Clarinets.

ond theme follows :

then a third in the bassoons and violas, with etty moving figure in the violoncellos (not d) :

whole forms a charming little picture of repose sweet sadness, with a close of especial beauty. The fourth movement, 'Feierlich' (or religioso), flat minor, embodies, as already stated, the essions received by the composer when witnessing nthronement of the Cardinal in the Cathedral of gne. The orchestra is again enlarged to its st extent ; indeed, it will be noticed that the bones—'Tuba mirum spargens sonum'—which delssohn used to say were 'too sacred to be often' and which Schumann in his first Symphony ved that he knew well how to handle with ious effect, are here introduced for the first time ne work. The opening subject, in E flat minor in true antique ecclesiastical cast, is as follows :

Horns, Bassoons, Trombones.
13. Feierlich.

h the closing E flat of this theme the following rlude, founded on a previous subject, is ciated :

The original subject is then continued, mostly ted 'in imitation' in the fourth and fifth. The rlude-phrase is likewise added and treated in ation, so that by degrees the movement takes for ne time the form of a miniature double fugue. e first variation is marked by a conversion of the thm from quadruple to triple time ; the second iation by a return from triple to quadruple time, h a new tremolo accompaniment in the violoncellos, las, and second violins. Lastly, its flow is expectedly and most effectively arrested by the lowing solemn Fanfare in B major :

answered pianissimo with magical effect by the strings, flutes, and oboes :

The strain in B major (No. 15) is then repeated fortissimo, and a short modulatory interlude leads back to a closing cadence in E flat minor. This movement bears witness that harmony and counterpoint, even when employed in the 'Stilo ecclesiastica,' can be made powerful dramatic agents, for the whole section contains but one melodic theme of eight bars, and yet the picture which it aims to represent is complete, and the impressions made upon the mind of a great poet by thousands of people accompanying a solemn ecclesiastical ceremony in the magnificent Cathedral of Cologne are faithfully preserved within these wonderful sixty-eight bars of instrumental music. To some it will recall the feelings aroused by the grand climax of the slow movement in Beethoven's 'Eroica' symphony, which has also the effect of a religious ceremonial in a vast building. And higher praise can hardly be given it.

V. Of the fifth movement, 'Lebhaft' (or Vivace), we learn from Schumann's biographer that the composer aimed to embody in it the bustle and flow of Rhenish holiday life on coming out into the town, it is lawful to suppose after the conclusion of the ceremony in the Cathedral. It returns to the popular or national character of the earlier movements, and is written in the usual form of a symphony Finale.

Its first part contains three thoroughly developed melodies. The first is of course in E flat, given out by the strings and soft wind and repeated by the whole orchestra.

The second, if it be not rather the continuation of the first, is also in E flat and is a most lively strain :

The third, properly the counter-theme of the movement, begins in the key of B flat in very light style, but is quickly abandoned by an unusual turn into the key of A flat on a new melody :

These themes all partake of the character of dance tunes. In the transition of them from the first two to the third, the theme of the preceding movement (No. 11) is introduced; and at the thematic treatment in the middle part, the interlude phrase of the same movement is introduced and worked in imitation in connection with the different subjects of the Finale. Towards the end of the movement in the Coda, the ecclesiastical subject of the fourth movement is introduced in close imitation, accompanied by a figure in the violoncellos, in 6-4 time. A short and festive Stretto concludes the work brilliantly.

[The symphony was first performed at Düsseldorf on February 6, 1851. It was introduced into England by Signor Luigi Arditi, who conducted it at a Promenade Concert, Covent Garden Theatre, on December 4, 1865. The Crystal Palace followed on February 10, 1866; the Hallé Concerts, Manchester, on February 4, 1869; and the Philharmonic Society (London), on April 25, 1870.—ED. M.T.]

Reviews.

The snow. Fly, singing bird. By Edward Elgar.
Arranged for mixed voices by John Pointer.
Wrong not, sweet Empress. Part-song for mixed voices.
By C. Hubert H. Parry.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

A fresh lease of popularity is opened out for Sir Edward Elgar's favourite part-songs 'The snow' and 'Fly, singing bird,' originally designed for female voices, by their arrangement for mixed voices by Mr. John Pointer. An artistic sense of judgment has been exercised in the apportioning of the original voice parts to the new combination and in the introduction of a bass part. No alterations have been made in either key or pianoforte and string accompaniment.

Sir Hubert Parry's 'Wrong not, sweet Empress,' a setting of words by Sir Walter Raleigh, is an elegant little piece which reveals the composer's individuality and distinctive artistic qualities in every detail.

An Eastern lament. Daffodils. Osme's song. Composed by Cyril Scott.

There is a garden in her face. Words by Thomas Campion.
Music by George Lowe.

[Elkin & Co.]

Though widely differing in character, the three songs by Mr. Cyril Scott, whose titles are given above, are strongly coloured by the composer's individual methods. In these short pieces he has rightly preserved a definite tonality, varied here and there by sudden momentary excursions into more or less distant keys. For instance, in 'Daffodils'—which is written almost entirely in the key of C major—the composer introduces, for one bar only, a chord that belongs as much as anything to the key of C sharp minor. The most important feature of 'Daffodils' is, however, the fact that the vocal part is melody, pure and simple, from beginning to end. In 'An Eastern lament' the appropriate mood and colouring are found, but their effect is somewhat impaired by a certain rhythmic monotony in the voice part. 'Osme's song,' a setting of words by George Darley, that invite lads and lasses to 'trip it neatly and foot it fealty o'er the grassy turf to me,' is carried along in bright style by a dancing accompaniment.

Mr. George Lowe's 'There is a garden in her face' represents an attempt to reproduce the musical style of an early period as being appropriate to a setting of words written three centuries ago. The simple, dignified tune of the first verse is repeated in the second and third, while the accompaniment is varied in a manner that might have been adopted by some composer of the contrapuntal school.

Symphony in A flat. By Edward Elgar. Arranged in pianoforte duet by Sigfrid Karg-Elert.

On the cliffs of Cornwall. By Ethel M. Smyth. Arranged for pianoforte by the composer.

Gavotte in G. By A. von Ahn Carse.

Cantilène Romanesque. By Henry J. Edwards.

Autumn. By James Lyon.

Suite, 'Nero.' By S. Coleridge-Taylor.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

In transcribing Elgar's Symphony as a pianoforte duet, Herr Karg-Elert has worked under favourable conditions in realising all the effect that the work can produce without the aid of orchestral colour. In some passages the exquisite detail, in others the massive harmonies, can be effectually laid out for four hands, while the executive demands can be kept within bounds. The same care and skill have been exercised in this as in the arrangement for pianoforte solo.

It cannot be said that the well-known Prelude 'On the cliffs of Cornwall' that introduces Act II. of Miss Ethel Smyth's opera 'The Wreckers,' makes an ideal pianoforte piece. But no one who has heard an orchestral performance of the Prelude can fail to be interested in examining and analysing the marvellous, vaguely-shifting harmonic tissue, as laid forth in the cold, colourless pianoforte score. They will find that the orchestral colouring was by no means the chief factor in producing the ingenious and novel effects for which the piece is notable.

The pieces by Messrs. von Ahn Carse, Edwards and Lyon, whose titles are given above, respond well to the demand for new and easy 'drawing room' pianoforte music. All are melodious and capable of effect, and while they impose no difficulty upon the average executant, present many details that will command his or her attention. The 'Gavotte' is transcribed from a Suite for violin. 'Autumn' is to be obtained arranged for organ or accompanied violin solo.

The fluency and individuality of Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's style are well illustrated in the Suite 'Nero,' which the composer has transcribed for pianoforte from his incidental music to Mr. Stephen Phillips's play. The four movements, 'Prelude,' 'Intermezzo,' 'Eastern Dance' and 'Finale,' provide an interesting study and are characterized by constant interest and variety in the melodies, harmonies and figures of accompaniment.

Fifth sonata, in E. By Carlo Albanesi.

Humoresque. By York Bowen.

Transmutations of an original theme in the form of its characteristic pieces. By Paul Corder.

[G. Ricordi & Co.]

Like his earlier works Mr. Carlo Albanesi's Sonata is well written both from a musical and technical point of view. Even if the composer has nothing particularly new and original to say, he expresses himself with taste and in well-chosen phrases. Of the three movements of which the Sonata consists, the first, an Allegro moderato, is perhaps the most satisfactory, the composer having employed the rhythms of the Bolero and the Polonaise with considerable success. The second part is a theme—Andante, in C sharp minor—with nine variations. The last movement is a lively and brilliant Allegro alla marcia, which in the hands of a capable performer would doubtless sound very effective.

Mr. York Bowen, in his Humoresque, has composed a very clever and delightfully attractive piece, in which he frequently employs the scale of succeeding whole-tones (à la Debussy) with strikingly comical effects. The title 'Humoresque' has seldom, if ever, been used with greater justification.

On a short theme of eight bars (Andante semplice) Mr. Paul Corder has constructed five really 'Characteristic pieces,' in which the skill displayed in manipulating the rhythm is perhaps the most prominent feature. As may be imagined, in a work of this kind the whole makes the impression of being more reflective than inspired, but within these limits the composer shows real musicianship, and his technical powers are quite remarkable.

Friar's Mere. Ballad for baritone solo, male chorus orchestra. English words by Elizabeth M. Lockwood. Max Laistner (Op. 11).

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

The 'Friar's Mere,' translated from Ludwig Laistner's 'Friedrich,' tells a grim story, the true inwardness of which is not revealed at a glance. A shepherd whose mind is filled with superstitious fears, coming to a lake supposed to be haunted by a ghostly friar, mockingly challenges the latter to appear forth by daylight. To his horror the summons is obeyed; a host of evil powers are let loose, amid which the ghost appears before him. Christian prayers are in vain, the shepherd's soul flies from his body, presumably into the power of the friar. The musical setting is vividly pictorial and dramatic. Its texture is modern, and many of its harmonies are in keeping with the subject. The setting does not, however, extend to the choral parts, for the greater part moves together. The baritone voice has good opportunities for declamatory singing.

Fancies, Impromptu. By B. J. Dale.

(Op. 59). By M. Esposito.

Sketches. By John B. McEwen.

Preludes. By Felix Swinestead.

[G. Ricordi & Co.]

B. J. Dale's impromptu, 'Night Fancies,' is a highly and interesting piece, musically and technically rather simple, but fascinating and rich in harmonic beauty. Things may be expected of this gifted young composer who has attained greater artistic maturity.

Three ballades by Dr. Esposito are very suggestive of Chopin in style, but they contain throughout good, genuine, times really beautiful music. The pianoforte writing is clear and sonorous, and the composer avoids superficial effects.

McEwen's sketches are the work of a serious artist, not going his own somewhat gloomy way, avoids the commonplace. The Prelude and Elegy contain several musically interesting progressions, while the Quasi Adagio, in 5-8 time, seems rather laboured. The last of his pieces, though very strange, is a clever Humoresque. Only by reason of their many original touches, both musical and technical, the seven Preludes by Mr. Felix Swinestead will doubtless prove a welcome addition to those already published in the Avison edition. The seventh in particular, with its passionate melody and stinging arpeggio accompaniment, is very charming.

North land. Part-song for mixed voices. By Clifford Forrester.

Three ships. For mixed-voice chorus and orchestra. Colin Taylor.

Andalían Chorus. For men's voices. By J. W. Elliott. In Gray. Gather ye rosebuds. Part-songs for male voices. By A. Madeley Richardson.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Forrester's 'In the North land' runs a smooth and easy course from beginning to end. The parenthetical phrases that lengthen a line now and then are effective, and not squariness of form. As there is repetition and not merely elaboration, the part-song is one that can be learned quickly. The words are by Mrs. Forrester.

In the case of Mr. Taylor's 'The three ships,' the composition 'composed for the Eton College Musical Society, London, 1909,' is an indication of the character as well as of the scope of the work. Mr. Taylor has invented a tune which exactly fits the situation, and he applies it to every verse of the poem with the substitution of major for minor mode at the last. In the vocal scoring unison is the rule and the exception. There is, however, no lack of variety in the ingenious accompaniment.

Mr. Elliott's setting of the Bacchanalian Chorus from Wagner's 'Duenna' is full of spirit, and there is moreover a suggestive rolling movement in the voice parts. There are passages in which the subject-matter is passed from hand to hand in the most convivial manner. The vocal support is supplied by a firmly moving accompaniment, the whole is worked up into a hilarious climax.

'Duncan Gray' is a bright, accompanied trio for two tenors and a bass, with a 'refrain' for male chorus that might equally well be sung by the soloists, as the number of parts never exceeds three. The music thoroughly matches the words, which are by Burns, and describe in five verses a little drama of Highland wooing. To a southern ear some mystery seems attached to the lines:

Duncan sigh'd baith out and in,
Grat his een baith bleer't and blin',
Spak o' lowpin ower a linn;

and

Now they're crouse and canty baith.

It is not always poems of Continental origin that need an English translation.

'Gather ye rosebuds' is a straightforward, simple setting of Herrick's lines, in which neither time nor tune will offer any difficulty. The highest part is written for alto voice.

Correspondence.

MR. THOMAS BEECHAM AND ELGAR'S SYMPHONY.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

SIR,—At a concert given on October 28 in the Victoria Hall, Hanley, the Beecham Orchestra appeared for the first time in this neighbourhood. For some months prior to the concert—which was under the auspices of the North Staffordshire District Choral Society—Sir Edward Elgar's Symphony had been largely advertised. Perhaps nowhere else in the British Isles is the name of Elgar regarded with such affection as in North Staffordshire, for it was in Hanley, at a North Staffordshire triennial festival, that his cantata 'King Olaf' was first produced. The same Society responsible for the performance of the Symphony, produced 'Gerontius,' 'The Apostles,' 'The Kingdom,' almost immediately after their first performances, and by so doing kept alive an intense interest in the development of Elgar's career. This interest was quickened by the announcement of a performance of the new Symphony by an Orchestra which in a short time had made a great reputation. To the dismay of those who knew the work, Mr. Beecham, in conducting, chose to give his version of the Symphony in preference to the composer's.

The first movement was cut down one half: part of the 'exposition' and the whole of the 'development' were cut out, and some minutes were sacrificed in the succeeding movements. Those who know the Symphony will be astonished to hear that the actual time occupied in its performance was only thirty-eight minutes! It was an insult to the composer and also those responsible for the concert. This is surely not the use to which so exceedingly fine an orchestra should be put, to say nothing of the misuse of the genius with which nature has endowed Mr. Thomas Beecham.

Obituary.

We have to record, with sincere regret, the death of Mr. JOHN CLOWES BAYLEY, of Highgate, which took place on October 10 at the age of seventy-five. Mr. Bayley was largely associated during the whole of his lifetime with the New Church, in which he filled various important offices, among others having been a member of the board of management of the New Church Orphanage, of which, with his father and brother, he was a founder. Mr. Bayley was well-known in musical circles and contributed several anthems and part-songs to the Musical Times, among the most popular being 'Glory to God in the highest,' 'When evening casts her shadows round,' and 'Spring's welcome.'

The death took place in Berlin on November 10, of the composer Herr LUDVIG SCHYTTE at the age of sixty-one. Born in Copenhagen on April 28, 1848, he began the study of music at the comparatively late age of twenty-four years. He soon settled abroad (in Vienna), where he found a wider field for his artistic activity than in Denmark, and there made himself known particularly as a proficient and facile composer for the pianoforte. His greatest works in this direction are his Concerto in C sharp minor, and the Sonata in B flat. He also wrote for the operatic stage, and his dramatic work 'Hero' was performed with success at the Royal Opera House in Copenhagen.

On November 16, FRANÇOIS LUCIEN JOSEPH THOMÉ died in Paris. M. Thomé was born in 1850 at Port Louis (Mauritius). He became a pupil of Duprato and Marmontel at the Paris Conservatoire. M. Thomé was the composer of many brilliant and popular pianoforte pieces and songs, and among other works was known by his 'Hymne à la Nuit' and 'L'Enfant Jésus.' His operatic compositions included 'Martin et Frontin,' 'Le Caprice de la Reine' and 'Barbe-Blenette.'

At Rome, the death took place recently of NICOLÒ SPINELLI at the early age of forty-four. Born at Terni, he studied at the Naples Conservatoire, and his name came to the front when the Sonzogno prize was offered, though Signor Mascagni won it with his 'Cavalleria Rusticana.' Spinelli, who wrote a number of operas, scored his greatest success with 'A basso porto,' which was performed on nearly every operatic stage in Europe and America.

We have to record with much regret the death of LA CONTESSA EDITH M. GIGLIUCCI, wife of Count Mario Gigliucci, which occurred at her house, Piazza Savonarola, Florence, after a sudden and severe illness.

We regret to record the death, on November 21, of Mrs. JESSIE ADELA GADSBY, aged sixty-three, widow of the late Mr. Henry Gadsby.

M. PADEREWSKI'S NEW SYMPHONY.

FIRST PERFORMANCE IN ENGLAND.

M. Paderewski's Symphony, which was produced in America by the Boston Orchestra at the beginning of the year, was heard for the first time in England at the London Symphony Orchestra concert of November 8, under the direction of Dr. Richter. Considerable interest was aroused in the production, owing to the success the work had met with in America. Whether or not like approval will be extended to it in England remains to be seen. The demand for seats was so great that, as in the case of the Elgar Symphony, the directors of the concert arranged to give an extra performance at a special concert to be held on December 18. The Symphony is admittedly written to a programme. That programme is the trials and sufferings of the composer's own nation, that of Poland, in the Revolution of 1863, and his endeavour is to depict in musical colours various events, general and particular, in the long record of the Polish struggle for liberty. There are three movements; the fourth, in the form of a Scherzo, is yet to be written. The first is concerned with the past, and there is much expressive though formless treatment of this theme; the second deals with the people themselves, and the third, which the composer has supplied a long programme, a further exemplification in musical terms of the troubles and ultimate defeat of the nation. Such a plan calls for rather more extensive command of material than the composer appears to possess. It also calls for a name that only a writer of wider practical experience than M. Paderewski can have. The music is clearly sincerely felt, but there is a lack of resource in the treatment of its themes, the command of device is limited, and the subject, though appreciative, is not sufficiently firm to convey. There are moments of charm and even beauty, and feelings ever present, but the canvas chosen is too large for the colourist's style, and the points of focus are difficult to arrive at. The introduction of the sarrusophone and a special instrument, the tonitruone, 'to imitate the sound of distant thunder,' does not provide the necessary high lights. The work was finely played, and the composer, who also took part in the concert in that capacity in which he best excels—that of pianist—was called to the platform to acknowledge the applause.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The first concert of the ninety-eighth season was given at the Queen's Hall on November 11. The programme was devoted chiefly to the works of Sir Edward Elgar, and conducted. It was as follows:

|                                     |                                    |    |    |    |          |

The Variations were admirably played, and Madame Kirby Lunn made a great effect with the 'Sea-Pictures,' a very impressive and temperamental reading of 'The Hans' securing an encore. M. Sapellnikoff gave a brilliant performance of the Concerto, and played his other solos with great mastery.

The audience was a large one. It may be hoped that the success of the concert is a good augury for the season's operations.

LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

A 'Fantastic Suite' for pianoforte and orchestra, by Mr. Ernest Schelling, received its first performance in England at the concert given on November 22. The composer, who comes from America, played the pianoforte part. It is a bright work, whose brightness is owing chiefly to the employment of tunes of popular origin and invented tunes of a similar nature. A clever point is secured near the end by the combination of 'Dixie Land' with 'Way down upon the Swanee river.' The remainder of the programme consisted of Mozart's 'Die Zauberflöte' Overture, Bach's fourth 'Brandenburg' Concerto, and Beethoven's 'Pastoral' Symphony, works familiar enough, but whose interpretations at the hands of the London Symphony Orchestra, with Dr. Richter as conductor, are such as one hears all too seldom. The performance of M. Paderewski's new Symphony is recorded in the opposite column.

QUEEN'S HALL SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

A new Suite for organ and orchestra, by Max Bruch, was introduced at the concert given on October 30, Mr. F. R. Kiddle being the organist. The combination of resources employed did not always lead to satisfactory results as regards tone-colour, but the invention and design shown in the work were such as to justify fully the bearing given to it. The remainder of the programme was chiefly classical.

Busoni played, with his own cadenzas, Mozart's or Pianoforte concerto, and the orchestra were heard in Bach's third 'Brandenburg' concerto and Beethoven's Symphony.

The concert on November 13 Mr. Granville Bantock's English Suite, recently produced at the Hereford, received its first performance in London. As at the concert, the work completely captivated the audience with its melody and its delightful treatment. Dr. Walford's 'Solemn Melody' for organ and strings, one of the finest 'Promenade' novelties, was repeated. The only novelty of the occasion was the C minor. The soloist was Jacques Thibaud, who played Mozart's Concerto in D and Lalo's in F minor. Mr. Bantock's Suite was conducted by the composer; the rest of the programme was conducted, as usual, under Mr. Henry J. Wood's direction.

NEW SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The novelties distinguished the second concert of the given by this successful orchestra. The one was a new one in F minor, No. 1, by Georg Schumann, a work of high ability and high ideals were more conspicuous than in the previous. The treatment and orchestration were more than the subject-matter. The other novelty was H. Clutsam's orchestral tone-poem 'The Lady of the Lake,' written eight years ago. The composer sets out to tell the story of Tennyson's poem in pleasant musical and in the process displays commendable invention and strong feeling for orchestral tone-colour. The soloists were Miss Marie Brema, who sang three Schubert songs, the orchestral accompaniment, and Master Eddy Brown, who played Mendelssohn's Violin concerto. Mr. Landon was, as usual, the alert and decisive conductor.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

On November 4 this Society opened its thirty-ninth season at Albert Hall and, as usual, the work performed was of a high order. No new light was thrown upon the choral portion of the work, but all the fine effects made possible by the vocal strength were reproduced. The solo music was in the capable hands of Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Florence Nightingale, Madame Ada Crossley, Miss Florence Taylor, Walter Hyde and Mr. Herbert Brown. Miss Taylor, as a new-comer, won a decisive success. Mr. H. L. Wood was at the organ, and Sir Frederick Bridge conducted.

LONDON CHORAL SOCIETY.

The first concert of the seventh season was given at Queen's Hall on November 3, under the direction of Mr. Arthur Fagge. His 'Dream of Gerontius,' of which the reading given by the choir has become familiar by repetition, was again performed. The soloists were Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Elwes and Mr. Thomas Meux, and the London Symphony Orchestra played the instrumental portion. The interest of the concert, however, centred in the first performance in London of Mrs. Margaret Meredith's 'The Corda' for chorus, soli and orchestra. Of the details brought to bear upon this work there can be no question. Experience will no doubt bring greater mastery of expression and certainty of effect to Mrs. Meredith's future endeavour in the field of composition.

THE QUEEN'S HALL CHORAL SOCIETY.

This is one of the youngest of London's new choral societies. In its operations last year, and on November 2 gave its first concert of its second season at Queen's Hall. Mr. Franco Leoni is the conductor. If he has not yet succeeded in welding his 200 chorists into a unity, at least he has contrived to make them presentable before an audience. The programme included incidental music written for the drama 'Bonduca,' by Henry Wood. This play was an anonymous adaptation of one of Beaumont and Fletcher's tragedies. The music minus the play hardly provides sufficient interest to justify separate performance. Bonduca's beautiful song, 'O lead me to some peaceful glen,' and the choral number, 'Britons, strike true,' were, as might be expected, successful items. Miss Nellie Chaplin played the harpsichord part, and the solos were sung by Miss Maggie Teyte, Miss Alice Akerman, Mr. Walter Hyde and Mr. Thorpe Bates.

An important item in the programme was the romantic cantata for solo voices, chorus, and orchestra, 'The quest of Rapunzel,' words by Mr. J. H. MacNair, music by Mr. G. H. Clutsam. Rapunzel is a young lady with remarkably long hair, which stands the unusual strain of allowing an amorous prince to climb up to her window by its means. The performance was not a very good one, but it was possible to feel that the work displayed considerable freshness of thought on the part of the composer. Now and then it seemed that the idiom adopted was not natural. A 'Sleep-Spirit' song, sung by Miss Edith Clegg, was a successful number. Miss Teyte and Mr. Hyde were the other soloists. A part-song, 'Les Frileuses,' by Leo Delibes, admirably sung by the ladies of the choir, and a not particularly interesting folk-song 'Der Leiermann,' by A. von Othegraven, for men's voices, were other items of the programme. A repetition of Mr. Hubert's Bath's cantata, or rhapsody, 'The Wedding of Shon Maclean,' formed a very satisfactory conclusion of the concert.

MR. JOSEPH HOLBROOKE'S OPERA.

An opera composed by Mr. Joseph Holbrooke to a libretto by Mr. W. E. Grogan and entitled 'Pierrot and Pierrette,' was produced at the Afternoon Theatre at His Majesty's Theatre on November 11. Opera is altogether a new field for Mr. Holbrooke so far as the public is concerned, for although he has essayed many musical forms, no effort of an operatic description has yet been put forward. Mr. Holbrooke's music in opera is just as good as it is in anything else. There is the same individuality, the same inventiveness and the same seriousness. This last quality is in this case a defect, for it is rather contrary to the spirit of the little story of Pierrot, who does not find in the attractive world the same loyal affection that is given him at home by Pierrette. The points of the incident are accentuated by a Nurse who utters gloomy forebodings, and a Stranger who first allures Pierrot to city joys and then returns to offer love, which is rejected, to the deserted Pierrette. The delicacy of the theme of the story is somewhat crushed out of it by the music, for Mr. Holbrooke has for the most part written in a style more suited to a heavy tragedy. The whole score is too heavy-handed, but it shows that with a suitable subject Mr. Holbrooke could provide suitable music for grand opera on modern lines. In his treatment of this somewhat filmy story he only secures the right grasp in the final scene, but then it is so faithful and appropriate as to make up for many shortcomings elsewhere.

The four parts were played by Miss Esta D'Argo as Pierrette, Mr. Albert Archdeacon as Pierrot, Miss Katharine Jones as the Nurse, and Mr. Leon de Sousa as the Stranger. Mr. Holbrooke's score is always interesting, and his employment of the concertina as an orchestral instrument is effective, though too frequent. Six performances were given, all of them under the direction of the composer.

THE MUSICIANS' COMPANY.

The Worshipful Company of Musicians attended the annual service held in commemoration of St. Cecilia in St. Paul's Cathedral on the afternoon of November 22. The musical portions of the service, including Sir Frederick Bridge's setting in G of the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis and Sir Hubert Parry's 'Blest pair of Sirens,' were magnificently rendered by the Cathedral choir. In the absence of Sir George Martin, Mr. Charles Macpherson presided at the organ.

In the evening of the same day the usual banquet of the Livery Club of the Musicians' Company took place in Stationers' Hall, the new President, the Rev. H. C. de Lafontaine, being in the chair. A most interesting selection of music was performed by a small band of stringed instruments under the conductorship of Mr. Lennox Clayton. The programme, selected and arranged with his usual discrimination and care by Mr. Arthur F. Hill, the Junior Warden of the Company, included selections from Dr. J. C. Pepusch and some extraordinarily interesting compositions by an almost unknown English musician, William Walond.

GREEK MUSIC.

Mr. Raymond Duncan, whose mission is to give an exposition of the beauties of Hellenic music, delivered his farewell lecture in London in the Hall of Messrs. Novello's establishment, Wardour Street, on November 5. It will be remembered that a leading article in our September number of this year recorded the lecturer's views on Greek music, and on the occasion under notice Mr. Duncan fully enlisted the attention of his audience in this interesting subject. Mrs. Duncan again gave valuable assistance to her husband in the various illustrations, in which she displayed a remarkable purity of voice and a complete knowledge of the music. It is interesting to note that Mr. Duncan was invited to lecture on the subject at Trinity College, Cambridge, on November 9, and before the Oxford University Musical Union on November 12.

BAND FESTIVAL AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.

The annual festival established by the London and Home Counties Amateur Band Association, took place at the Crystal Palace on November 20. The majority of the bands to be heard in our parks are made up of amateur players. These bands are allied to the Association, which is controlled by its members and exists solely for the purpose of providing bands in processions. So keen are the players to be absolutely proficient in the performance of the music, that they not only find time to fulfil these engagements, but also to practise once or twice a week, and even enter musical festivals where the competitive spirit is encouraged. At the competition under notice there were seven contests, that for the South of England championship being the most important. The winner of the shield was again the Luton Red Cross Band (conductor, Mr. A. Holden). The winners of the cash prizes were the Great Western Railway and Paddington Borough Band, the Walthamstow Town Silver, and the Upper Norwood Temperance Bands. In the first section contest the Dartford Silver (conductor, Mr. H. Gilder) won the shield, second and third prize-winners being the Dunstable Excelsior and the Enfield Town Bands. To the Camborough Military Band (conductor, Mr. A. J. Williams) was awarded the shield in the reed band contest, while the West Ham Gas Works and the Ashford Railway Works secured second and third prizes. The cup in the second section contest was won by the Barnet Town Band (conductor, Mr. T. A. Cheek). In the third section contest the cup was awarded to the Sevenoaks Temperance Band (conductor, Mr. G. Dimmock). In the first and second of the mission band sections, the shields were won by the Rotherhithe Men's Own and the Battersea Tent Mission Bands. The adjudicators were Mr. William Halliwell, Mr. Herbert H. Godfrey, Mr. C. H. Baker, and Mr. S. Howcroft. A concert by the massed bands of the champion section was given in the concert-room in the evening, under the conductorship of Messrs. S. Cope, W. J. Douglas Sheriff, Angus Holden, and Walther Reynolds.

'DREAM OF GERONTIUS' IN ADELAIDE.

From time to time the enterprise manifested by musical societies in the Colonies calls for hearty recognition, and in this connection it is gratifying to record the spirit and enthusiasm displayed by the Bach Society of Adelaide in the production of Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius' on October 6. The interest taken in the work and its performance was so great that the Town Hall was packed to overflowing, and hundreds were refused admission. Immense pains had been taken with the production, the choir having been specially selected and no less than 150 rehearsals in all of the various departments having been held. The result was that the choir was admitted to be the finest ever heard in Adelaide, while the services of an exceptionally good orchestra were secured. The choral portions revealed excellent attack, volume of tone, and enunciation, and warm praise may also be accorded to the orchestral work. The solo parts were ably interpreted by Miss Grace Sparke, Mr. Wanborough Fisher and Mr. Fred Hyett. The performance, as a whole, may be said to have been worth of the work, and hearty congratulations should be offered to the conductor, Dr. E. Harold Davies, for the high artistic interpretation by the forces under his control. The announcement that the oratorio was to be repeated on the following Saturday afternoon indicated the faith in the promoters had in the attractive power of the work, and the important advantage of a second hearing was thus afforded to many of the audience.

London and Suburban Concerts.

AMATEUR ORCHESTRAL SOCIETIES.

On November 10, the Royal Amateur Orchestral Society opened their season with a concert of familiar music given at Queen's Hall under the direction of Mr. Arthur W. Payne. Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony and Liszt's 'Hungarian Rhapsody in F' were the principal orchestral numbers in both of which admirable effect was secured. The programme also included Mr. Hamish McCunn's overture 'The land of the mountain and the flood,' of which a spirited reading was given. Master Eddy Brown played Mendelssohn's Violin concerto, and Miss Maggie Terry and Mr. Webster Millar contributed vocal numbers.

The Strolling Players' Amateur Orchestral Society gave a 'Ladies' night' concert at Queen's Hall on November 4 under the direction of Mr. Joseph Ivimey. Mr. Arthur Hervey's overture 'Youth,' Haydn's 'Surprise' Symphony, Beethoven's 'King Stephen' Overture, and Droni's Violoncello concerto were the principal works performed. The soloist in the concerto was Miss May Mukle. The vocalists were Miss Margaret Huston and Mr. James Dodds.

CHAMBER CONCERTS.

The various trio and quartet combinations that appear in the Metropolis have been active in bringing forward new music, much of which has been of British origin. On October 29, the Walenn Quartet introduced at their concert at Eolian Hall a String quartet (MS.) by Mr. Paul Graener. At Steinway Hall on November 4 a new Phantasie trio, by Mr. Thomas Dunhill, was played by Miss Dorothea Walenn, Miss Gwendoline Griffiths and Miss Louise Aumonier, who constitute the Albion Trio. A new association, the Bruce Quartet, gave their first concert on November 8 at Bechstein Hall, with a programme of familiar music. The claims of the British composer were strongly asserted in the programme brought forward by the Nora Clench Quartet at Bechstein Hall on November 6. This deserving body played a String quartet by Mr. G. W. L. Marshall-Hall and, in conjunction with Mr. A. Borsdorf, a Quintet for strings and horn by Mr. James Friskin.

No new work was presented by the Wessely Quartet at the Classical Concert Society at their concerts given at Bechstein Hall on November 10. The surpassing qualities of the St. Petersburg Quartet were displayed in the same hall on November 13 in a programme, the most unfamiliar portion of which was a quartet by Glazounow. On the same day a concert was given in Steinway Hall by Madame Henkel, with the aid of Miss Hilda de Angelis and Miss Grosz: as vocalists, and Madame Beatrice Langley, Miss Cecilia Gates and Miss May Mukle as instrumentalists. A Pianoforte trio by Mr. Ernest Austin was given in its first hearing, and a Quartet in E minor (Op. 43), by Hurlstone, was performed. At a concert given by Mr. Gervase Elwes and Dr. R. Vaughan Williams at the Eolian Hall on November 15, a new String quartet by Dr. Vaughan Williams was performed by the Schwiller Quartet. A Trio in E minor or by Eduard Behm was performed at Steinway Hall, on November 17, by the Chaplin Trio.

SOCIETY OF BRITISH COMPOSERS.

meeting of this Society was held at Messrs. Novello's on November 8. String quartets by Dr. Vaughan Williams and Dr. James Lyon were performed by the Miller Quartet. There were passages in Dr. Vaughan Williams's work which, on the assumption that the composer's aims were fully carried out by the executants, indicated the extreme development of modernism, so that not even the advanced tastes of an audience of British composers could find everything in them acceptable. Soloists who took part in the concert were Miss Gleeson, Mr. Plunket Greene and Mr. York Bowen. Accompaniments were played by Mr. Arnold Bax.

SOCIÉTÉ DES CONCERTS FRANÇAIS.

The chief attractions at the concert given under the auspices of this Society at Bechstein Hall, on November 15, were the presence of M. Reynaldo Hahn and the large programme devoted to his compositions. The programme included a Prelude, Valse et Rigaudon for chromatic and strings, Variations for flute on a theme by Liszt, and a group of songs. The latter were recited by two artists who have continually done good service at these and other concerts of French music—Madame Jane Bathori and M. Engel. Other composers entered on this occasion were M. André Caplet, Engelbrecht and M. Florent Schmitt. The harpist, who played an important part in the proceedings, was Madame Ursmer-Delcourt.

LONDON CHAMBER CONCERT ASSOCIATION.

The programme of the usual interesting character was carried out at the concert given at 6a, Suffolk Street, Pall Mall, on November 27. The composers whose works were performed were J. A. Hasse, W. Boyce, Michael Haydn, Daniel Bach, J. Christian Bach, and Handel. Boyce was represented by a Sonata in E flat for two violins and basso continuo, and the 'English Bach' by a Sextet for the strange combination of oboe, violin, violoncello, two horns and double bass. The last-named work, sounding extraordinarily well, was perhaps the most effective number in the programme. Similar programmes are promised for three of the five remaining concerts, all of which are to take place at the address given above and should prove of great interest to musical amateurs.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The students' chamber concert was given at Queen's Hall on November 17, before a large audience. The programme was of a character very serious and exacting. The most important item, for instance, consisted of movements from Mendelssohn's Quintet (Op. 115) for clarinet and strings. Two of the composers were honoured on this occasion: Frank St. Leger submitted two songs, 'Over the sea' and 'Woodland thoughts,' with the advantage of Olive Turner as vocalist; and Miss Adela Hamaton as her own interpreter in three 'Sketches' for pianoforte. The vocalists heard were Miss Mildred Avis, Miss Dorothea Hill, Mr. W. J. Samuell and Mr. Cynlais Gibbs. Hogg and Mr. Alexander (pianoforte), Miss Mitchell and Miss Terry (recitation), contributed solo work. Miss J. Angarde (clarinet), Miss Le Brun and Mr. Quairel, Mr. Pitt (violoncello) and the ensemble class, conducted by Mr. Hans Wessely, took part in concerted

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

The increasing ability of the operatic class at this school was made apparent in three performances of Verdi's 'Irene' at the School Theatre on November 11, 12, and 13. The plan was adopted—an excellent one where the objects are educative—of presenting a different cast on each of the three occasions. The high level maintained under these circumstances speaks more for the efficiency of the operatic work in the school than would a series of brilliant performances carried on the shoulders of two or three 'stars,' and supported by gorgeous costumes and scenery, and supported by a proficient students' orchestra, the singers gave an interesting and vocally admirable reading of the melodious score, under the direction of Mr. R. H. Walthew. The opera has had a strange history. Originally written as 'La Reine de Saba,' with Biblical scenes and characters, it was prohibited in England, where it was not given a stage setting until, in the story, Constantinople had been substituted for Jerusalem, Suliman for Solomon, the Great Mosque for Solomon's Temple, Irene for the Queen of Sheba, and so on. It was performed with these changes in 1880 at Manchester, and was then neglected until taken up by the Guildhall School. That it did not pass into utter oblivion was due to several popular tuneful excerpts that are frequently heard in concert halls. It was interesting to hear these in their original surroundings.

RECITALS.

Farewell concerts were given at Queen's Hall on October 28 and November 3 respectively, by M. Pachmann, who gave unqualified delight to his hearers, especially those who were situated near his instrument; and by M. Ysaye, who made no less an impression although appealing solely to the sense of sound. Mr. Mark Hambourg displayed his distinctive qualities at the same hall on November 4. Mr. Louis Edger, a pianist who brings a reputation from Paris, justified it in three concerts at Æolian Hall on October 30, November 6 and 13; the programme of the first was chosen from Bach, that of the second from Beethoven, and that of the third from Chopin. M. Paderewski, as was to be expected, attracted an enormous audience to Queen's Hall on November 16. Other successful appearances were those of Master Eddy Brown on November 10, and M. Mischa Elman on November 18, both at Queen's Hall; Miss Agnes Nicholls on November 16, and Fräulein Elena Gerhardt on November 20, both at Bechstein Hall. On the latter occasion Mr. Landon Ronald took the place usually occupied by Herr Nikisch as accompanist.

THE ST. GEORGE'S GLEE UNION.

A performance of Edwin Aspa's pastoral cantata 'Endymion' was given at Caxton Hall on November 5. The choral numbers were sung with spirit, precision and intelligence. The soloists were Miss Kate Cherry, Miss Lorna Stamm, Mr. Stanley Clay and Mr. Arthur Halvorsen, the verses being ably recited by Miss Margaret Wiley. Madame P. Adami was at the pianoforte and Mr. Joseph Monday conducted.

The Dulwich Philharmonic Society began its fourteenth season at the Crystal Palace on October 30, with a performance of a concert version of Edward German's 'Merrie England,' preceded by the same composer's overture 'Richard the Third.' The principal solo vocalists were Miss Dorothy Cook-Smith, Miss Palgrave-Turner, Miss Mildred Evans, Mr. Alfred Heather and Mr. Julien Henry. An excellent rendering was given by both choir and orchestra, under the careful direction of Mr. E. Victor Williams.

The Acton Choral and Orchestral Society opened its season on November 3, at Central Hall. The programme included Sir F. Bridge's 'Inchape Rock' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast.' The choir and orchestra gave an excellent rendering of both works, under the direction of Mr. F. E. Williams. The soloists were Miss Lucy France, Miss Helen Hill, Mr. Leon de Sousa, and Mr. Herbert Carter. Miss Phyllis Norman Parker and Miss Oriana Parker contributed violin and violoncello solos, and the accompanists were Mr. H. W. Dawson and Miss Nora Drake.

The St. Peter's Choral Society, Brockley, opened its season on Tuesday, November 9, with Sir Frederick Bridge's 'Flag of England,' which was excellently performed. Miss Emily Shepherd was the soloist. The accompaniments were played by a small orchestra under the leadership of Mr. George Wilby, and Mr. John Curran was at the pianoforte. Dr. C. J. Frost conducted.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Vienna, November 15, 1909.

A few weeks ago the Director of the Imperial Opera, Herr von Weingartner, had the misfortune, while supervising rehearsal, to have a limb broken by a falling piece of stage decoration. Though he is now well on the way to recovery, he may not be able to take up his duties again before the end of the month. As a result, the promised performance of the 'Meistersinger' with new scenery had to be postponed, well as some novelties already in rehearsal.

Recently new singers have appeared at the Opera almost daily. Of these Herr Miller (tenor), from Düsseldorf, and Herr Lankow (bass), from Frankfurt, were the most successful, and their permanent engagement is regarded as practically certain. Herr von Weingartner's place as conductor of the Philharmonic concerts has, during his absence, been taken by Herr Schalk (one of the conductors of the opera), and under his guidance the first concert of the season was given very successfully on November 14.

In the Raimund Theatre, where, in addition to melodrama, operettas and, occasionally, serious operas are given, a popular but artistically written opera 'Der Müttler und sein Kind' achieved a considerable success. The music is by the young blind composer Belia von Uj, while the text is based upon an old melodrama of the same title.

The former director of the Opera, Herr Gustav Mahler, is left behind him a large body of admirers who are enthusiastically working to make his compositions more widely known. The third Symphony was lately played at concert conducted by Herr Walter, one of his most keen followers. The Concertverein has also performed his latest Symphony (No. 7). On this occasion the work had a clés destimé, and the performance showed the composer's length of purpose and his intimate knowledge of the modern orchestra, but at the same time no genuine invention was revealed. The violinists Kubelik and Huberman have been the most conspicuous among the numerous virtuosi who have visited us. The latter in particular showed his rendering of Beethoven's Concerto and the Concerto in B minor by Saint-Saëns great advance as an artist and executant.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The first concert of the present season took place on October 16 with a performance of Cowen's cantata 'Sleeping Beauty,' given in the Town Hall by the Midland Musical Society. The principals were Madame Aston, Miss Ada Stephens, Mr. F. Mullings and Mr. Stoddard. The Birmingham Victoria Male-voice Choir, numbering over seventy voices, gave a popular and interesting concert at the Town Hall on October 18. The gradual growth of male-voice choirs in the Midlands is an important factor, and there is so much beautiful music written for this vocal combination which never obtains a hearing in public. On the present occasion the selection comprised Mendelssohn's 'The Word went forth,' Thompson's 'Lead, kindly Light,' Algar's 'The Reveille' and 'Torrents in summer,' German's 'A peaceful night,' Maunder's 'Song of the Northmen,' and Thomas's 'The Tyrol.' These were all sung with well-balanced tone, precision and artistic gradation of light and shade. The principals, Madame Aston, Miss Grace Ivell and Mr. Lewys James, contributed vocal items which were greatly appreciated by the large audience. Mr. W. E. Robinson conducted, and Miss Brunt accompanied.

The first Harrison concert of the season, given in the Town Hall on October 25, was principally noteworthy on account of the second appearance here of Madame Strazzini. The artists associated with her were the Mitchell Ladies' Quartette, Miss Ruby Heyl, Mr. Haigh Jackson, Mr. Paul Edmonds (vocalists), Miss Myrta Stubbs (pianoforte) and Mr. F. A. Sewell (accompanist). A violin recital was given in the Town Hall on October 21 by Miss Vivien Chartres, who had as coadjutors Miss Zuckerman, a pianist from Berlin) and Mr. Clay Thomas (baritone). The talented young artist was in excellent form and played a number of solos with remarkable executive skill and beauty of tone. On the night following (October 22), the Schiever Quartet, who have not been heard here for the last seven years, gave a chamber concert in the Masonic Hall, the programme including Beethoven's String quartet in B flat (Op. 130) and Schubert's Quartet in D minor, containing the variations on the song 'Der Tod und das Mädchen.' A new pianist, Miss Rafael Moss, displayed in her solos artistic conception and refinement. The vocalist was Mr. Frederic Erle, a baritone of high musical culture and a true artist. His selection comprised songs by Strauss, Hugo Wolf, Somervell, Paul Puget, Schubert and Bruneau. Mr. Clifford A. Wilson was a sympathetic accompanist. A chamber concert was also given at the Queen's College, on November 2, by the Clifton Quintet, whose rendering of Beethoven's Pianoforte trio in B flat (Op. 97) and Tchaikovsky's String quartet in D major (Op. 11) was characterized by a perfect ensemble-unanimity. Mr. Herbert Parsons, the pianist of the Quintet, gave a fine and brilliant reading of Glazounow's 'Theme and Variations' (Op. 72). Mr. Percy Lewis contributed a Violoncello sonata by E. Wilhelm de Fesca, a composer of the 17th century. The first Max Mossel Drawing Room Concert of the present season was given in the Grosvenor Room, Grand Hotel, on November 4, and proved most enjoyable. The artists were Miss Fanny Davies (pianoforte), Mons. Zacharewitsch (violin) and Herr Gerard Zalsman (vocalist). In connection with the Royal Society of Artists' musical matinée, the Spanish violinist Señor Gomez gave a recital in the large Exhibition Room on November 6, when his playing aroused a great deal of enthusiasm.

The New Birmingham Choral Society gave their first concert of the season in the Town Hall, under Mr. Rutland Boughton's conductorship, on November 4, the programme principally containing unaccompanied choral music, including part-songs, double-choruses, and choral arrangements of national folk-songs. That the Society is making excellent progress under its energetic and painstaking conductor was abundantly proved by the fine rendering of Macfarren's 'The Sands of Dee,' Brahms's cycle, 'Songs of Mary,' Cornelius's 'The storm wind,' and in Mr. Rutland Boughton's own arrangements of the folk-songs 'King Arthur,' 'The Black Monk,' and the 'Men of Harlech.' The voices blend well and are of an excellent timbre. Mr. Francis Harford was the solo vocalist.

The Birmingham Choral Union gave for their first concert of the season a performance of 'Elijah' at the Town Hall, on October 30, which attracted an overflowing audience, hundreds being turned away from the doors. Certainly, since their foundation, the Choral Union never gave a finer performance of this favourite oratorio. The chorus sang with animation and purity of tone, realising excellent effects. The principal parts were ably sustained by Miss Nellie Finch, Miss Gwladys Ashton, Madame Marguerite Gell, Mr. William Blackburn, and Mr. Charles Knowles. Mr. Thomas Facer, who conducted, is to be congratulated on the artistic success he achieved. Mr. C. W. Perkins was at the organ.

The Birmingham Festival Choral Society inaugurated their season's concerts at the Town Hall on November 11, by an excellent performance of Haydn's 'Creation' (Parts I. and II.), and Bach's unaccompanied motet for double chorus 'Be not afraid,' given under Dr. Sinclair's watchful conductorship. The chorus sang superbly throughout, realising a glorious and pure tone, and in the way of accent and phrasing the singing was particularly excellent. The principals were Madame Agnes Nicholls, Mr. Webster Millar and Mr. Robert Radford, whose magnificent singing raised the whole performance to the artistic level of a festival celebration. In the second part of the programme the orchestra introduced to Birmingham Granville Bantock's 'Old English Suite,' an orchestral arrangement of five English airs of the 16th century, recently produced at the Hereford festival.

The Birmingham Choral and Orchestral Association's first concert of the season took place at the Town Hall on November 6, Mr. Joseph H. Adams conducting. The work chosen was a concert arrangement of Edward German's comic opera 'Merrie England,' which, by a strange coincidence, was revived as a stage representation at the Theatre Royal the week following. The performance was on the whole praiseworthy, the singing of the chorus again proving a distinctive feature. The principals included Mesdames Estella Linden, Margaret Milward, Marguerite Gell, Gwladys Morris, and Messrs. Edward Arthur, Harry Bannister, Arthur Brittain, George Elton, Frederick Preston and Albert Knight.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL, BATH, AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The fourth annual concert of the Weston-super-Mare Orpheus Society was held on October 28 in Knightstone Pavilion, and attracted a large audience. Under the direction of Mr. Edward Cook (of Bristol), the choir, numbering forty-three voices, rendered admirably a pleasing programme. Mr. Charles Roff was the vocal soloist and Mr. G. H. Blanchard accompanied. A new part-song 'A lay of ancient Greece,' composed by Mr. D. Churchill (of Bristol), a member of the Society, had a first hearing and obtained a cordial reception.

On November 1 the first of a series of subscription concerts of chamber music was held at the Victoria Rooms. The executants were Professor Ivan Mossel (violin) and Mr. Herbert Parsons (pianoforte). Each artist played several solos, and they were associated in Brahms's Sonata for violin and pianoforte in E minor (Op. 38). Mr. Hamilton Harris, the vocalist, manifested a well-cultured voice and admirable style in German and English songs, and he was carefully accompanied by Mr. W. E. Fowler.

The Klingler Quartet, who made their only appearance for the season in the provinces at the Victoria Rooms on November 2, attracted a large audience. The performers were: first violin, Karl Klingler; second violin, Joseph Rywkind; viola, Fridolin Klingler; violoncello Arthur Williams. Fine performances were afforded of Schumann's Quartet in F (Op. 41), Beethoven's Quartet in A minor (Op. 132), and Haydn's Quartet in G (Op. 17), No. 5. After the concert the players were entertained to supper at the Bristol Musical Club.

There was a change in the players at the opening concert of the eighth season of the Clifton Quintet, consequent upon the retirement of Mr. Hubert Hunt, who had rendered efficient aid as violinist. His other duties proved so pressing that he relinquished his association with the quintet. The concert was held in the Victoria Rooms on November 4, the players being Messrs. Herbert Parsons (pianoforte), Maurice Alexander (first violin), Ernest Lane (second violin), Alfred Best (viola), and Percy Lewis (violin). The scheme included Beethoven's Trio in B flat (Op. 97); Tchaikovsky's Quartet in D (Op. 11), with a violoncello solo, Sonata in F by Wilhelm de Fesch, contributed by Mr. Lewis, and Chopin's Prelude in C sharp minor (Op. 45) and Ballade in F major and A minor (Op. 38), performed by Mr. Parsons. A numerous audience liberally applauded the meritorious efforts of the players. Some songs were well rendered by Mr. Campbell McInnes.

On November 10 the Bristol Harmonic Choir attracted a large number of persons to the Victoria Rooms, where, under the direction of Mr. J. Jenkins, they rendered effectively several part-pieces. The soloists were Miss Daisy Wyndham, Miss Gertrude Pettitt, Mr. M. J. Edwards, Mr. Herbert Tinney, Mr. W. Morgan, and Mr. Orlando Lydford. Mr. Percival Hodgson contributed some violin solos.

The Bristol East Male-Voice Choir, on November 15, gave their first annual concert at the Drill Hall, St. George. The choir numbers sixty voices, and the conductor is Mr. Handel G. Lovell. There was a creditable rendering of glees and choruses, and songs were given by Miss Gertrude Tavener, Miss Pettitt, Mr. Victor Lovell, and Mr. Herbert Spiller.

The Bath Quartet Society held their first concert of the season at the Assembly Rooms, on November 16. A change had been made in the players, and instead of Mr. Josef Ludwig's party there was the Walenn Quartet, viz., Messrs. Gerald Walenn (first violin), Herbert Kinze (second violin), James Lockyer (viola), and Herbert Walenn (violin). Mr. F. H. Tapp, a resident of Bath, was at the pianoforte. Excellent interpretations were given of Dvorák's Quartet in E flat (Op. 51), Brahms's Trio for pianoforte, violin and violoncello in C (Op. 87), and the Quartet in E flat by Dittersdorf.

On November 20, the Bristol Choral Society, under the able direction of Mr. George Riseley, gave a concert at Colston Hall, the works performed being Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' and Barnett's 'Ancient mariner.' The soloists were Madame Mary Conly, Madame Cecile Viret, Mr. Henry Turnpenney and Mr. Charles Knowles. The chorus numbered 450 voices and the orchestra seven players, with Mr. A. W. Payne as leader. Both choirs were admirably performed.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Dublin Oratorio Society, conductor Mr. Vincent O'Brien, gave the first concert for the present season on October 20 in the Antient Concert Rooms. The programme included Sullivan's 'Brother, thou art gone before us' (In memoriam Sir Francis Brady), Wagner's 'Spanish Chorus' from 'The Flying Dutchman,' and Beethoven's 'Choral Fantasia.' Mrs. Eleanor Miley played the pianoforte solo in the latter work and also the solo in Liszt's Concerto in E flat. Mrs. Stella Bowman and Mr. J. P. Ryan were the solo vocalists, Mr. Arthur Darley the solo violinist and Mr. Clyde Twelvetrees the solo violoncello.

Mr. Clyde Twelvetrees, our distinguished violoncellist, gave a concert at the Antient Concert Rooms on November 1, assisted by Miss Dilys Jones, vocalist, and Dr. Esposito. Mr. Twelvetrees played Popper's Suite 'Im Walde,' and D'Albert's Violoncello concerto, in addition to a melodious 'Consolation' of his own composition and a 'Serenade' by Victor Herbert. Dr. Esposito rendered valuable help with the pianoforte parts of these works, and added much to the effectiveness of the Suite and Concerto. Miss Dilys Jones, who made her first appearance in Dublin on this occasion, gave great pleasure by her finished and refined singing of several songs, the most successful of which were 'Lungi dal caro bene' and a couple of expressive Welsh melodies 'Suo Gan' and 'Dafydd y Garreg Wen.' Miss Nora Geoghegan was the accompanist.

The Sunday Orchestral Concerts at the Antient Concert Rooms re-commenced for the winter on October 24. Dr. Esposito's enterprise seems as if it had at last taken root in the affections of our somewhat fickle townsfolk, as there have been so far crowded audiences. The works played by the orchestra included the following symphonies: Mozart in G minor, Beethoven in D, the 'Unfinished' of Schubert, and Mendelssohn's 'Italian,' in addition to Wagner's 'Meistersinger' overture, and 'Waldweben.' On November 7, Dr. Esposito played Beethoven's Pianoforte sonata in C sharp minor (Op. 27, No. 2) to one of the largest audiences yet attracted to these concerts.

At the Royal Dublin Society, recitals—which began for the season on November 1—have been given by the Wessely Quartet, whose programme included Dvorák's quartet in A flat (Op. 101); by Dr. A. L. Peace on the organ; and the Bohemian Quartet, whose first appearance was made at these recitals on November 15.

The Beecham Orchestra paid us a visit on October 20 and gave a concert in the Theatre Royal. Elgar's Symphony, performed for the first time in Dublin on this occasion, was the pièce de résistance and was a welcome relief after a somewhat dull programme. An interesting item was Vincent O'Brien's symphonic poem 'Samhain,' conducted by the composer. Miss Kathleen Parlow played Tchaikovsky's Violin concerto beautifully, and Mr. Francis Sullivan sang two solos. In the same building, on November 2, Paderewski attracted a large audience.

The death of Sir Francis Brady, County Court Judge for Co. Tyrone, is recorded with regret. He was well-known in Ireland as an amateur musician and was one of the founders of the Royal Irish Academy of Music. He was the composer of several songs and the author of the words of the song, 'In my wild mountain valley' in Benedict's 'Lily of Killarney.' His genial personality will be much missed in Dublin; and though his sympathies were not much in accord with the modern development of music, he ever showed the greatest interest in young musicians and especially in young vocalists, many of whom owe much to his kindness of feeling.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Messrs. Paterson's first orchestral concert was given in the Ewan Hall on November 15, Dr. Cowen conducting. Orchestral numbers were Beethoven's second Symphony, Berlioz's 'Rule, Britannia' overture, and Tchaikovsky's mezzo 'The battle of Poltava.' The orchestra, which was to be in finer fettle than ever, gave a truly grand performance of the symphony. The soloist was M. Ysäye, who played superbly Brahms's Violin concerto and Liszt's Fantasia Appassionata.

The first of Herr Ernst Denhof's two chamber concerts given in the Freemasons' Hall on October 19. The first-giver was assisted by the Brussels String Quartet under Mr. Horatio Connell, vocalist. The programme included Schubert's 'Trout' quintet, most beautifully played, Mendelssohn's Quartet in G minor, Beethoven's Quartet in D minor, and songs by Schubert, Loewe and Bertram. Mr. Scott Jupp accompanied.

The opening concert of Mr. James Simpson's series of chamber concerts was given in the Music Hall on October 19 and took the form of a violin and pianoforte recital by M. Ysäye and Pugno. The concerted items were the latter's Sonata and César Franck's Sonata in A major. As M. Ysäye played four unaccompanied pieces by Bach, including the Rondino by Vieuxtemps. M. Pugno gave Chopin's No. 20 in B flat minor and a Rondo by Weber. The second concert, a vocal recital by Madame Jane Bathori and Engel, with violoncello solos by Mr. Georges Pitsch, was given on November 13. The first part of the programme consisted of works by old French composers, Lully, Couperin, and others, and the second part of songs by Franz Schubert, Arnold Hahn, who accompanied their performance.

The first of the University Historical Concerts, given under the direction of Professor Niecks in the Music Class on November 3, was devoted to a recital of six string quartets, and their performance by the Edinburgh Quartet gave unbounded pleasure to the audience.

The Freemasons' Hall on November 11, Mr. Philip Birch, violinist, assisted by Miss Elaine Birch, vocalist, with Harold Brooke at the pianoforte, gave a most enjoyable recital. Mr. Cathie's contributions included compositions by Max Bruch, Mackenzie, Richard Strauss and others, and in the performance of these he showed himself to be the possessor of a rare technical equipment, but of relative powers of the highest order. Miss Birch was to advantage in songs by Scarlatti, Handel, &c., and Harold Brooke's artistic work at the pianoforte added much to the success and enjoyment of the concert.

Among other concerts given during the month have been pianoforte recitals by M. Pachmann, M. Paderewski, John Petrie Dunn and Miss Ethel Leginska; vocal recitals by Miss Rose Goldie, Miss Louisa Moir, Kennedy-Fraser, Mr. Alfred Young and Mr. Robert Atty.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The first of Mr. A. M. Henderson's subscription chamber concerts took place on November 11, when a highly interesting Brahms programme was submitted. In addition to playing some solos, Mr. Henderson (pianoforte) and Bessie Spence (violin) gave an excellent performance of Beethoven's Sonatas for violin and pianoforte, in G (Op. 78) and in D (Op. 100). Miss Grainger Kerr's charming rendering of Mendelssohn's songs completed a most enjoyable evening's music.

Parting from usual custom, the Choral and Orchestral Societies opened their season with a Saturday Popular Concert on November 13, when Dr. Cowen and the Scottish Orchestral Society were cordially welcomed by an audience of goodly proportions. In addition to two novelties, viz., Wagner's 'Rule, Britannia' overture, and the Allegretto from Mozart's 'Le Nozze di Figaro' No. 2, in D, the programme included Beethoven's first Symphony (the nine are to be given during the season), Tchaikovsky's 'Capriccio Italien,' numbers by Liszt and Glazunow, and songs artistically sung by Mr. Horatio Connell.

At the first Classical Concert on November 16, the chief attraction was the appearance of M. Ysäye, who gave a highly emotional reading of Brahms's Violin concerto and Liszt's 'Fantasia Appassionata.' Among the purely orchestral numbers were Beethoven's second Symphony and a novelty, 'The Battle of Poltava,' from Tchaikovsky's 'Mazeppa.'

The Greenock Choral Union, ably conducted by Mr. W. T. Hoeck, gave their first concert for the season on November 18. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast' and 'The death of Minnehaha' formed the first part of the programme, and in these numbers the choir, a well-balanced body, sang the choral portions with fine effect. The soloists were Miss Betty Booker and Messrs. Joseph Cheetham and Walter Harvey. The Scottish Orchestral Society supplied the accompaniments, and in the second part of the programme gave a fine performance of Dvorák's 'New World' symphony.

The main feature of the programme of the Popular Concert on November 20 was the 'Eroica' symphony, and Mr. Norman O'Neill's overture 'In Springtime' was brought to a first hearing in Glasgow.

The Glasgow Glee and Catch Club, under Mr. George Taggart, gave a very interesting concert on November 18. To mark the Mendelssohn Centenary the programme appropriately included 'To the Sons of Art'; also several of the composer's songs and part-songs for men's voices.

MUSIC IN GLOUCESTER AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Rev. H. E. Hodson's pleasing cantata 'The Golden Legend' was given before a large and appreciative audience at the Shire Hall, Gloucester, on October 7, by an excellent band and chorus drawn from the area of which Gloucester is the centre, under the conductorship of Mr. Tom Woodward, organist of Ledbury, where it was performed in 1903. Longfellow's great poem has been for so long connected with the name of Sullivan that it came as a surprise to a good many to find that the Rev. H. E. Hodson—a distinguished amateur composer who now lives at Churchdown, near Gloucester—published his work so far back as 1880, or six years before it was overshadowed by the greater production of Sullivan. Mr. Hodson attended the rehearsals himself, and the soloists were Madame Le Mar, Miss Jessie King, Mr. Charles Mordaunt, and Mr. Herbert Tracey, while Mr. Vincent Jones, Mrs. Sly, Miss Phyllis Maddy, and Mr. P. H. Gray, of Gloucester, lent valuable aid. A scene of great enthusiasm marked the close of the performance, and the venerable composer bowed his thanks.

The Cheltenham Philharmonic Society opened their season at the Town Hall on November 18 with a mixed programme, the chief work for performance being Handel's choral ode, 'Alexander's Feast.' The orchestra and chorus, under the baton of Mr. C. J. Phillips, acquitted themselves with great credit, and the soloists were Madame Stella Lynniker, Miss Adeline Threlfall, Mr. Alfred Heather, and Mr. Francis Harford. The concert concluded with a very good performance of Mozart's 'Jupiter' symphony.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

During the month of November, chamber music has been represented by the Rawdon Briggs String Quartet, at whose concert on November 1 an interesting and well-played programme included Schumann's Pianoforte quartet, Mozart's String quartet in E flat, and Brahms's String quintet. In the Schumann quartet Miss Ella Leyland sustained the pianoforte part with taste and skill. The Schiever Chamber Concerts, resumed on November 13, are this season to be devoted to Beethoven's sixteen String quartets. Of these the first programme contained the F major (Op. 18), E flat major (Op. 127) and E minor (Op. 59). As in previous seasons Mr. Ernest Schiever has able colleagues in Messrs. Alfred Ross, T. Rimmer, and W. Hatton.

Puccini's opera 'La Tosca' was performed for the first time in English at the Royal Court Theatre, on October 29, by the Moody-Manners company. Recognition of the interesting event is due to this excellent organization, to the principal artists, Madame Fanny Moody (La Tosca), Mr. Joseph O'Mara (Cavaradossi), Mr. Rhys James (Scarpia), and to Mr. Eckhold, who conducted.

The chief feature of the second Symphony Orchestra concert, conducted by Mr. V. Akeroyd, on November 2, was the superb playing of M. Sapellnikoff in Tchaikovsky's B flat minor Pianoforte concerto. Mozart's E flat Symphony and Dr. Walford Davies's 'Solemn Melody' for strings and organ (Dr. Stanley Dale) were also much appreciated. At the third concert on November 16, Tchaikovsky's F minor Symphony, No. 4, and several familiar Wagner items were played by the excellent orchestra, and Mr. Arnold Trowell was heard in De Swert's Violoncello concerto. The vocalist was Miss Alice Mandeville.

Mr. Egon Petri's Beethoven recitals on October 28 and November 11 added to his high reputation as a pianist. Five sonatas were presented at each recital, ranging from Op. 13 to Op. 54, and Mr. Petri's playing, both in its technical accuracy and musicianly insight, possessed great educational value.

The concert given by the Hallé Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Richter, on November 6, drew an overflowing and enthusiastic audience to the Philharmonic Hall. Wagner alone was represented in the programme, which included Act III. of 'Die Walküre,' the vocalists being Miss Perceval Allen (Brunnhilde) and Mr. Frederic Austin (Wotan).

At the second Philharmonic Society's Concert, on October 26, Señor Pablo Casal played Gernsheim's Violoncello concerto in E minor (Op. 78) for the first time in England. The vocalist was Signor Sammarco. Schumann's Symphony in B flat and Norman O'Neill's overture 'In Springtime' were played under Dr. Cowen's direction, and not least appreciated was the single choral item 'The Haven' (C. Lee Williams). Saint-Saëns's 'Samson and Delilah' was performed by the Society on November 9, the vocal principals being Madame Kirkby Lunn, Mr. Walter Hyde, Mr. Frederic Austin and Mr. Harry Dearth. The choral features of a fine performance under Dr. Cowen's direction are especially deserving of record.

At the 148th concert of the Societa Armonica on October 30, Kalinnikov's Symphony in G minor was played, and Mr. Akeroyd also conducted adequate performances of Dvorák's 'Carnaval' overture and Liszt's 'Les Préludes.' In Lalo's 'Symphonie Espagnole,' the solo violin part was skilfully played by Mr. E. A. Garrod.

Mr. Donald Tovey at his University lecture on November 5 dealt with the dramatic treatment in 'Die Walküre.' He illustrated on the pianoforte the difference between the intensity and duration of the movement in symphonic or sonata form and that of dramatic music for stage representation.

Under Dr. James Lyon's able direction five performances of Audran's opera 'La Cigale' were given in the Tower Theatre, New Brighton, by the Wallace Amateur Opera Society, a powerful combination. Other events of the month deserving notice were the students' concerts given by the Liverpool College of Music on November 4, at which Mr. H. Ernest Hunt presided, and Mr. John Lawson's annual concert on November 13 in St. George's Hall. These functions afforded an object lesson in the extending study of stringed instruments and in the thoroughness of the teaching.

For a first hearing of the third part of Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha,' viz., 'Hiawatha's Departure,' thanks are due to the Welsh Choral Union and their able conductor, Mr. Harry Evans. A very fine performance of the fascinating work in its entirety was given in the Philharmonic Hall on November 20, the vocal principals being Miss Laura Evans, Mr. Alfred Heather, and Mr. Ivor Foster, with Mr. Akeroyd as leader of the excellent orchestra.

Mr. Edward Mason's choir will perform the following works during the season: 'The Lay of St. Cuthbert,' W. H. Speer (first time of performance); Coleridge-Taylor's 'Bon-Hon Suite'; 'Sir Patrick Spens,' A. H. Brewer; and an Ode on Time, 'Fly, envious time,' Nicholas Gatty, the last two works to be given for the first time in London.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

In last month's article a typographical error made me two chamber concerts would be given by Mr. Max Reppe. This should have read Mr. Max Mayer, whose first concert was devoted to performances of his own song compositions by Madame Marie Brema, Miss Gertrude Lonsdale, and Mr. Horatio Connell. Mr. Mayer is known to us rather as a pianist than as a composer; his accompaniments are of almost paramount importance, but Miss Brema's singing was of so overpowering a character as to dwarf even the composer's notable pianoforte writing. Miss Lonsdale's beautiful tone-quality, and Mr. Horatio Connell's intellectual gifts were conspicuously displayed during the evening. From time to time compositions by Manchester musicians are heard in our concert halls, the art of Mr. Edward Lano in pianoforte pieces, of Mr. James Richardson in writings for the violoncello, of Mr. Maurice Speelman and Mr. J. H. Foulds in orchestral work, always meeting with a warm welcome.

Undoubtedly the feature of the month's music has been the beginning of Mr. Henry J. Wood's connection with a permanent Manchester musical institution—the Gentlemen's Concerts. The aim of these concerts would appear to be the provision of what may be called 'chamber' orchestral music of a not too solid quality, so that we are not likely to have an opportunity this season of appraising Mr. Wood's conducting of the greater orchestral master-works. At the second concert, on November 15, Mr. Wood played for the first time in Lancashire Sinigaglia's Comedy Overture 'Le Baruffe Chiozzotte' (an additional novelty to the list given in the November issue), and performed Mozart's Symphony ('Haffner') without a break, securing a complete unity of style. Mr. Thorpe Bates and Miss Gleason were the vocalists.

Some fine pianoforte playing, both in chamber works and in concerted music has been heard from Mr. Busoni and Mr. Frederick Dawson, the former playing with the Brodsky Quartet and with the Hallé Orchestra on successive evenings, taking part in Beethoven's Trio in B flat (Op. 9), and playing under Dr. Richter the Beethoven 'Erasmo' concerto, adding much greater warmth and delicacy of tone to all his other pre-eminent qualities. Mr. Frederick Dawson played at the first afternoon recital of the Gentlemen's Concerts. By the way, Mr. Dawson is also the conductor of a distinctly good amateur orchestral society in Oldham, whose members are assisted at their three winter concerts by the most eminent soloists of the day.

The lesser Mozart Symphony in B flat (No. 33), played at the Hallé concert on November 4, could hardly stand Richter's massive treatment. Bantock's 'Pierrot of the Minute' overture and Sibelius's 'Värsäng' are the only two novelties heard so far this season, and it is worthy of record that both were most warmly received by the audiences, as much so that the Bantock overture was repeated by demand at the concert on November 18, when also Beethoven's No. 7 Symphony and 'Strauss's 'Don Juan' were superbly played. Mr. Anton Maaskoff, a pupil of Dr. Brodsky, played Max Bruch's G minor Concerto on his first appearance before a Manchester audience. The first choral night of the Hallé season was devoted to Elgar's 'Gerontius.' Miss Phyllis Lett proved the most satisfactory singer of the 'Angel' music that we have had in Manchester since Miss Muriel Foster's farewell performance. Unhappily the continuity of the work was seriously marred by the absence of Mr. Robert Radford, who had been expected in Manchester but through some strange blunder was singing in Birmingham the same evening. Mr. John Coates came to the rescue in the 'Profiscere' music, but the 'Angel of the Agony' section had to be omitted.

At the first Schiller-Anstalt concert Miss Johanne Stockmarr, in Chopin's B minor Sonata, displayed sympathetic temperament and imaginative qualities both vigorous and tender. Mr. Horatio Connell's singing was notable for its intellectual as distinct from its emotional qualities, performing Lieder by Brahms with keen insight. Mr. Rudolph Bauerkeller played Max Reppe's Violin sonata (Op. 42).

On November 13, the Schiller-Anstalt celebrated its jubilee, and was honoured by the presence of Count Otternich, the German Ambassador, who warmly congratulated the members of the Manchester Orpheus Glee Society and their conductor on the conspicuous ability they displayed in singing Othegraven's 'Rheinsage' and a 'Niederländisches Dankgebet' in German, as well as two members from Elgar's Greek anthology part-songs.

The Promenade concerts under Mr. Simon Speelman are setting with astonishing success, the second concert being devoted to orchestral works by British composers. At the first concert Miss Helena Kontorovitch, a pupil of Dr. Brodsky, made a most encouraging first public appearance in Manchester in Saint-Saëns's Violin concerto. Interesting vocal recitals have been given by Miss Elizabeth Meacham and Miss Bertha Guthrie, not a little of their success being due to Mr. R. J. Forbes's accompaniments; this gentleman is one of the few clever pianists with genius for playing beautiful accompaniments to any song any singer. At Miss Meacham's recital two movements from a Sonata for pianoforte and violoncello by the late Dr. H. Dayas, a former professor at the Royal Manchester College of Music, were played by Mr. Forbes and Mr. Leonith.

On November 8, at the Grand Theatre, Oldham, a new light opera 'The Isle of Indolence' was produced, the libretto being written by Mr. J. Herbert Heywood, and the music composed by Mr. Richard Knight, both natives of Oldham. The majority of the performers, principals and chorus, were also of local origin, and so we had the spectacle of a genuine home-made product. The music has not too much originality or variety, but the composer writes in easy, flowing style, and might do better work with a stronger 'book.' Messrs. Fowler Burton, John Slett, Orlando Kenworthy, and George Ditchburn, along with Miss Edith Jeffries and Miss Ethel Perceval, all sang well, and some of them betrayed unsuspected aptitude for stage work.

Mr. Thomas Beecham's orchestra visited Bolton, Preston, Lancaster, and Kendal during the month. At Preston, he was announced to play the Elgar Symphony, but it was given in a much abbreviated form. There can be no justification for such 'cuts' as were made in the first three movements; the Elgar Symphony should either be performed in its entirety, or not at all.

The first and second concerts of the Classical Concert Society—October 25 and November 12—were given by such artists. The first took the form of a pianoforte recital by Mlle. Blanch Selva, who gave a severe programme containing only four names: Bach, Beethoven, Liszt, and D'Indy. The second was given by Monsieur Reynaldo Hahn, Monsieur and Madame Engel, and Monsieur George Pitsch. The first part was devoted to French works, and the second to compositions by Monsieur Hahn, whose talent, however, is not strong enough to bear the weight of such a test.

On November 2, M. Paderewski appeared in Newcastle, and was in his superlatively best mood the whole evening.

MUSIC IN NORTH STAFFORDSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The North Staffordshire District Choral Society, in conjunction with the Beecham Orchestra, gave a concert on October 28 in the Victoria Hall, Hanley. Much interest was aroused by the announcement of a performance of Elgar's Symphony. Its rendering proved a total disappointment to those familiar with the Symphony, owing to the ruthless manner in which the conductor, Mr. Thomas Beecham, 'cut' the work. Each movement had a limb torn from it, leaving at the close a blurred and incoherent impression upon the minds of the listeners.

The feeling engendered by Mr. Beecham's unsympathetic conduct towards the Symphony gave way to one of admiration for Berlioz's 'Te Deum,' which followed in performance. In this work he gave us many surprises of virtuosity, proving that he held the choir and orchestra in the hollow of his hand, and the score in his head. It is almost impossible to think that the great Finale 'Judex Crederis' has ever been performed with finer mastery and greater dramatic intensity than on this occasion. Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' conducted by Mr. James Whewall, commenced the concert.

The soloists were Madame Goodall and Mr. Wilfrid Hudson, and Mr. William Sherratt rendered valuable assistance at the organ.

We learn with much regret that Mr. James Whewall, the conductor of the North Staffordshire Choral Society, has, since his visit with his choir to Windsor Castle, been suffering from very severe illness, from which all will wish him a speedy recovery.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

This city was favoured by a visit of the London Symphony Orchestra on October 29, when an opportunity was afforded of hearing Sir Edward Elgar's Symphony under the direction of the composer. There was never any doubt about the heartiness of the reception, both of this master work and its composer, and the advantage of hearing the work under his guidance was an undeniable good fortune. Nothing finer has been heard in Nottingham than the playing of this orchestra. Included in the programme was Schumann's A minor Concerto, which, with Miss Cantelo as pianist, was magnificently performed. Mr. Campbell Innes was the vocalist, and immediately established himself on a firm footing with his audience.

The Long Eaton Choral Society gave a performance of 'Elijah' on November 9, which deserves more than mere notice on account of the steady progress the Society has made. The solos were undertaken by Miss Alice Baxter, Miss Emily Hart, Mr. Henry Turnpenney and Mr. Charles Keywood, and Mr. J. S. Derbyshire conducted a performance which was considerably in advance of previous work.

The Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society's first concert of the season took place on November 18 in the new Albert Hall, when, in celebration of the centenary of Mendelssohn's birth, 'Elijah' was performed. The solos were undertaken by Miss Perceval Allen, Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Harold Wild and Mr. Thorpe Bates. The new hall does not seem to suit the chorus, which at times sounded weak and very distant. Exceptions must be made, however, in the choruses 'He watching over Israel,' 'Woe to Him,' and 'Holy, holy.' The orchestra deserves a special word of praise, and Mr. Allen Gill also for his share in the work.

MUSIC IN WORCESTER.

The Festival Choral Society gave a notable concert in the Public Hall on November 17, under the direction of Mr. Ivor Atkins. The choir of 126 voices was heard in conjunction with the orchestra in Mr. John Pointer's concert selection from 'Faust,' of which a crisp and spirited interpretation was given. The solo vocalists were Madame de Vere Sapio, Miss Bell Thynne, Mr. Albert Watson and Mr. Stewart Gardner. The other choral number was Elgar's six-part unaccompanied part-song 'Go, song of mine,' which made a deep impression upon the occasion of its first performance at the Hereford Festival. Its solemn beauty was well brought out in the performance given by the Worcester singers. The purely orchestral part of the programme consisted of Mozart's 'Jupiter' Symphony, of which an effective interpretation was given.

Herr Georg Schumann will make a special journey from Berlin to Chicago in order to hear the first performance in America of his new work 'Ruth.' This is to be given by the Apollo Musical Club, of Chicago (conductor, Harrison M. Wild), in Orchestra Hall, on February 7 and 8, 1910. During his sojourn in Chicago, Herr Schumann will be the guest of the Apollo Club.

LEEDS.

We have had plenty of music at Leeds this last month—from distinguished pianists like Mlle. Selva, who played a long series of modern French pieces on October 23; Busoni, who treated his audience to his clever transcriptions on October 26; and Mark Hambourg, who played in his usual forcible style a more general programme on November 16; all these may be passed over with a brief mention. In the first week of November, three different orchestras were heard in Leeds, and suggested some interesting comparisons. Elgar's Symphony, after waiting nearly a year, was introduced to Leeds on November 2, at the concert of the Leeds Philharmonic Society, and was included in the programme of the Leeds Choral Union on the following evening. On the former occasion the work was played by the Hallé Orchestra, under Richter, its first exponent; on the latter by the Queen's Hall Orchestra, under the composer's direction. Each reading had its qualities: one was characterised by great breadth and force, the other rather by perfection of detail, and in particular I have never heard a more finished and beautiful interpretation of the slow movement than Elgar secured on this occasion. The Philharmonic programme included Brahms's 'Triumphlied,' which was taken at an unusual speed, and sung with much force; many, indeed, found its stupendous energy—practically unrelieved by any restful episode—almost overwhelming. Mr. Granville Bantock's fantasy-overture, 'The Pierrot of the Minute,' was another interesting feature of an excellent programme, and was finely played. The Choral Union's two concerts, on November 3 and 4, were devoted exclusively to Elgar's music. On the former date there were heard the Symphony, already referred to, the first 'Wand of Youth' suite, four pieces from the 'Bavarian Highlands,' and the recent six-part chorus, 'Go, song of mine.' The second concert consisted of 'The Apostles,' of which an adequate, and in many respects fine, performance was given. Of the principals, Miss Gleeson-White, who sang the part of Mary with real distinction, and Mr. John Coates were the most successful. Mr. Ivor Foster sang the Saviour's part with sympathetic and reverent feeling. Mr. William Higley gave due effect to Judas, while Miss Gertrude Lonsdale and Mr. Herbert Parker completed the cast. Sir Edward Elgar conducted.

On November 6 the Leeds Municipal Concerts began their seventh season, but under new conditions. As the corporation has not only declined to be responsible for the annual deficit, which has amounted to about £200, but has decided to charge a rent for the use of the hall, it was necessary to organise the concerts on the 'self-supporting' system which so commends itself to the business instincts of the West Riding, and the result will be watched with interest. The thorough efficiency of the orchestra was demonstrated to satisfaction in a typical Wagner programme, which is always found to be a certain attraction at Leeds, and in finished style of playing the band has never been quite so satisfactory in all departments as it proved to be on this occasion, while Mr. Fricker's conducting was expressive and artistic in feeling. Madame Mary Poole sang some Wagner scenes with marked ability. At the second concert, on November 20, the programme included Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony and the 'Casse Noisette' suite.

Other Leeds concerts must be dealt with very succinctly. On November 9, Mr. Plunket Greene, with Sir Charles Stanford at the pianoforte, gave a very enjoyable recital in aid of a local charity, a series of Irish songs proving particularly enjoyable. The Rasch String Quartet resumed its chamber concerts on November 10, introducing Sinding's Pianoforte quintet in E flat, of which, with Mr. Noel Bell as pianist, a most brilliant performance was given. On November 13 another series, the Leeds Bohemian Chamber Concerts, began a fresh season, and played quartets by Mozart, Beethoven, and Dvorák, and on November 18 Messrs. Rasch and Lloyd Hartley gave a sonata recital of works for pianoforte and violin.

BRADFORD.

Two of the flourishing and excellent subscription concerts have already taken place. On both occasions the Hallé Orchestra, under Dr. Richter, appeared, and on October 22

Beethoven's fifth Symphony and the 'Tod und Verklärung' of Richard Strauss were the principal features of the programme, Mlle. Verlet being the vocalist; while on November 5 Busoni's fine reading of Beethoven's E flat Concerto and an early Mozart Symphony (in B flat: K. No. 319), slight and gay in character, distinguished by occasion. On October 26, the Bradford Old Choral Society, under Mr. Pickles, essayed Elgar's 'King Olaf' with good results, the chorus-singing reaching a high standard. The principals were Miss Emily Breare, Messrs. S. Masters and Robert Barnett. On October 30, the Bradford Permanent Orchestra gave their first concert of the season with a programme of Beethoven and Wagner pieces, efficiently played under Mr. Allen Gill's direction. Three movements only of Beethoven's first Symphony were given, and the experiment of playing the variations from the Septet as an orchestral piece was one which, whether in principle or in practice, was not so successful as to recommend Miss Phyllis Lett and Mr. Horner were the vocalists.

OTHER TOWNS.

The Huddersfield Choral Society, on October 29, introduced to that town Parry's 'Ode on St. Cecilia's Day' and Walford Davies's 'Everyman,' the former under Dr. Coward, the latter under the composer. The chorus, one of the finest in the country, sang with its customary power and brilliancy, and the principals were Miss Edith Evans, Miss Belgrave Turner, Mr. James Davis and Mr. Thorpe Bates. On October 26 the Huddersfield Glee and Madrigal Society, under Mr. J. W. Armitage, sang madrigals by J. Farmer and Festa, together with some modern part-songs, of which Elgar's 'Reveille' was one, and on November 4 Dr. Coward introduced his 'Canada choir' (strengthened by some other Sheffield singers) at one of the subscription concerts. The Halifax Orchestral Society gave an interesting programme on November 4, under the conductorship of Mr. H. van Dyk, and on November 11 the Halifax Choral Society, under Mr. F. de G. English, gave 'St. Paul,' with Miss Dorothy Cook-Smith, Miss Elsie Davis, Mr. Turpin and Mr. Herbert Brown. It was a good all-round performance.

The London Symphony Orchestra has, with the assistance of the composer, been introducing Elgar's Symphony in several northern towns: they visited Hull on October 26, Middlesbrough on October 27, and Doncaster on October 28, and it need hardly be added, presented the work as favourably as it was possible to imagine. On November 10 the Hull Symphony Orchestra, which is still struggling to make its position an assured one, began a fourth season, when Mr. Wallerstein secured a good, if hardly sufficiently polished, reading of Mozart's G minor Symphony, a higher degree of efficiency being attained in the popular 'Casse Noisette' suite. On November 12 the Hull Harmonic Society celebrated Mendelssohn's centenary by giving his 'Hymn of Praise,' under the conductorship of Mr. Walter Porter. At the Wakefield Chamber Concerts, on October 29, Miss Agnes Nicholls gave a most enjoyable vocal recital, with the assistance of Mr. Hamilton Harty at the pianoforte, the long series of songs including many things that were of exceptional interest. Miss Mabel Dalby, a young singer with a fine soprano voice, still under the process of cultivation, gave a concert in York on October 26 with the help of Mr. Pabel and Mr. Noble as pianists, and Miss Leila Willoughby as violinist.

We hear that the North British Academy of Arts, a newly-formed organization which has chiefly been associated with the art exhibitions it has held in Newcastle-upon-Tyne, will make a new and important development in the introduction of a musical department, of which Miss Julia Cook Watson has been appointed musical director. A musical committee is in process of formation, already including three well-known musicians in Mr. J. E. Jeffries, Mr. Norman Ridley, and Mr. Arthur Lambert. The music section has been inaugurated by an offer made to the students of Newcastle-upon-Tyne of six open scholarships which will be available annually, and will, it is hoped, be augmented if progress permits. Similar movements are contemplated in other towns in course of time.

MOSCOW.

At M. Simins' Operatheatre Rimsky-Korsakoff's last open 'Solotoi Pjetuschok,' the text of which is an adaptation of Puschkin's 'The gilded cock,' has been produced. The composer, who died last year, never saw his work performed. It was to have been produced at St. Petersburg in 1907, but was prohibited by the Censor for political reasons. The opera proved to be a great artistic success, the music being full of originality and, it need scarcely be stated, wonderfully scored.

MUNICH.

On October 30 the first performance was given of Schilling-Ziemssen's opera, or dramatic ballad, 'Szenwendglut,' but the work failed to secure a decided success.

PARIS.

Several orchestral novelties were lately heard at the Concerts Lamoureux, Balakirew's 'Thamar' and Rimsky-Korsakoff's suite 'Le Tsar Saltan' being among the most interesting.

WEIMAR.

Cornelis Dopfer's Musikdrama 'William Ratcliff' was produced under Herr Peter Raabe's conductorship on October 19, and created a good impression as a serious work of art.

ZURICH.

An organ recital of new works was given by Herr Edgar Istel, comprising a Sonata by Thuille and Passacaglia by Siegfried Karg-Elert.

The Streatham Hill Choral Society, conducted by Mr. E. J. Quance, will open its season on the 7th inst., when a specially interesting production will be that of Mr. Granville Bantock's cantata 'The fire worshippers' which is to be given on that occasion for the first time. This work, which has hitherto been strangely neglected, contains some remarkably effective and dramatic music. The production of an unknown cantata by the distinguished and popular composer of 'Omar Khayyam' should have a special interest, and the performance by the excellent choral and orchestral forces controlled by Mr. Quance which introduced Elgar's 'Black Knight' to London, will therefore be very welcome.

A lecture was given by Sir Frederick Bridge at the Church House, Westminster, on November 16, in aid of the Westminster Female Refuge and the Westminster Hospital Ladies' Association. The subject was Milton's 'Comus' and the incidental music written thereto. The lecturer referred to his own discovery in a volume of songs by Henry Lawes of that composer's 'Comus' music, which had remained hidden until then. Musical illustrations were given by the members of the Westminster Abbey Choir.

Mr. C. F. Dyson, the new Mayor of Windsor, was formerly one of the children of the Chapel Royal, and is now proprietor of a pianoforte and music warehouse in the royal borough. His father, who was one of the lay-clerks of St. George's Chapel, had previously held the same high office of chief magistrate. Among the numerous guests at the mayoral banquet were the Dean of Windsor, Canon Edgar Sheppard (Sub-dean of the Chapel Royal), Sir Walter Parratt, and Dr. C. H. Lloyd.

Twenty free open scholarships will shortly be available for competition at the Royal College of Music. The subjects are as follows: Composition, 2; pianoforte, 3; singing, 4 (2 male, 2 female); organ, 2; violin, 3; violoncello, 1; viola, double-bass or harp, 2; flute, 1; hautboy, 1; trumpet or trombone, 1. Full particulars and official forms of application to enter for these scholarships may be obtained upon application to the Registrar at the College.

Mr. Stock, the conductor of the Musical Art Society, Chicago, has selected Bach's motet 'Sing ye to the Lord,' as the opening number of the first concert of the Society in Orchestra Hall, on December 14.

Answers to Correspondents.

W.—A great number of Schubert's songs are suitable for the soprano voice. Among the best are: 'The Wanderer,' 'Erl-King,' 'Litany,' 'Der Doppelgänger' (The Doppelgänger), 'Death and the Maiden.' Nearly all Schubert's are published in low keys in Peters' edition (20b, 790b, containing about 200 songs) with German words. Messrs. Angener & Co. publish about eighty songs for the soprano voice, in one volume, with English words.

I. B.—'Puss in Boots,' by Dr. G. F. Huntley, and 'Pipe Harry,' by Hamilton Clarke, both with dialogue, answer your requirements. 'The Yarn of the Bell,' 'Captain Reece,' and 'The Martinet,' by T. A. B., would also be suitable but are without dialogue. Operettas are all published by Messrs. Novello.

L. O.—The supply of new words for music exceeds the demand. Composers have free choice of the works of the poets, but yours may be exceptionally suitable. Regarding the character of your work you had better send composers who have set similar words. Address the publishers of the music.

NORMAN KEMP.—A biographical sketch of Mr. Kemp appeared in our issue of October, 1901. A copy of the sketch for August, 1905, containing a portrait of Father Kemp, can be obtained, price, with postage, 6d. The Index to Musical Times is published annually in January, and can be procured on application.

L. S. G.—You appear to have everything on the subject of music practically available. You might look at Parcell's of five pieces published in Novello's Albums for Piano and Stringed Instruments. A visit to the British Museum would probably furnish further information.

M. J.—The composers you name have not qualified for notice. Hence the difficulty of finding out particulars of their lives and doings. Why not write direct to the composers? They would refer you to magazines and the anecdotes you desire.

C. H.—Mozart's Pianoforte sonatas are certainly not so often used for concert use as are those of Beethoven. The sonata in F (K. 533) and that with Variations in A are probably the most popular.

M. K.—The Bach little E minor Prelude and Fugue used in our March number is not one of the '48,' but the well-known Prelude and Fugue for organ.

R. VITTORE.—We do not know of an edition with English words of Pergolesi's 'La Serva Padrona.' It is published with Italian, German and French words.

M. L. JEANS.—Your question surprises us. We thought you known to every elementary student of singing that the soprano sings an octave lower than the soprano.

M. J. K.—A pianoforte arrangement of Tchaikovsky's Symphony can be obtained through Messrs. Novello & Co.

M. J. K.—The book would probably not fetch so much as an advertisement would cost.

INSTANT READER.—Better consult Grove's Dictionary, 4th edition, if available.

M. B.—It is, of course, illegal to make copies of copyright music.

A few answers are unavoidably held over.

OLTON.—The Philharmonic Society gave a concert at the Victoria Hall on November 17, when a varied and interesting programme included Beethoven's Symphony No. 5, in C minor, Cherubini's Overture 'Medea' and Bridge-Taylor's 'Bon-Bon' Suite. The last-named was to be given for the first time in Lancashire, and the successful spirit and delicate orchestration of the work at once won the appreciation of the audience. The choir gave on the whole a satisfactory rendering of their share of the work, and were also heard in Cornelius's motet 'The surrender of soul' and Elgar's part-song 'Go, song of mine.' The principal vocalists were Miss Phyllis Lett and Mr. Richard Mansfield, and Mr. Risegari conducted.

Country and Colonial News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed in this summary, as the notices are either prepared from local newspapers or furnished by correspondents. Correspondents are particularly requested to enclose a programme when forwarding reports of concerts.

BRIGHTON.—The Sacred Harmonic Society opened its season in the Dome on November 4 with a concert, of which 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast' and the 'Death of Minnehaha' formed the main features. These cantatas were excellently rendered by the choir and orchestra so ably directed by Mr. Robert Taylor, and the solo parts were sung by Miss Evelyn Vernham, Mr. Samuel Masters and Mr. Julien Henry.

CHRISTCHURCH (N.Z.).—The Musical Union gave a concert on September 28, when the principal feature of the programme was Mendelssohn's 'Loreley' music, which was admirably rendered by both choir and orchestra, the solos having an able exponent in Mrs. C. Orr-Loring. Some choruses from Elgar's 'King Olaf' were also sung, and a very successful item of the programme was Arensky's Trio in D minor for violin, violoncello and pianoforte, played by Misses Doris McIntyre, Doris Russell and Rima Young. Mr. Walter Ingle, vocalist, and Miss Packer, violinist, also assisted, and the conductor was Dr. Bradshaw.

HINDLEY.—The Hindley Industrial Co-operative Society's Male-Voice Choir, gave two performances in the afternoon and evening of October 31 of Prout's 'Damon and Phintias.' The choir, which was assisted by an orchestra, chiefly professional, numbered sixty performers, and the cantata was very creditably performed, the solos being satisfactorily sung by individual members of the choir. Mr. Joseph Layland conducted; and a grand march, 'Triumph,' for orchestra, composed by the conductor for the occasion, was successfully played.

LEICESTER.—The Philharmonic Society gave a performance of Elgar's 'Caractacus' for the first time here in the Temperance Hall on November 11. The choir sang with precision and good expression, and able assistance was rendered by the orchestra, the whole performance reflecting much credit on the conductor, Mr. H. B. Ellis. The solo parts were sung by Madame Ella Russell, Mr. Alfred Heather, Mr. Julien Henry and Mr. Dalton Baker, the last-named being particularly successful. Mr. Ellis on his return to his post as conductor after a severe illness met with an enthusiastic and sympathetic reception.

LINCOLN.—A Mendelssohn Centenary Concert was given by the Lincoln Orchestral Society on November 10, under the experienced direction of Dr. G. J. Bennett. The band, augmented to the number of sixty by a few professionals from London and elsewhere, was led by Mr. Edward O'Brien. Excellent performances were given of the 'Ruy Blas' overture, the 'Scotch' symphony, the Notturmo and Scherzo from the 'Midsummer Night's Dream' music, in addition to Bizet's 'Carmen' suite. Miss Phyllis Lett sang Goring Thomas's 'My heart is weary,' Mendelssohn's 'O rest in the Lord,' and 'My dear soul' (Sanderson).

MARSDEN.—Barnett's 'Ancient Mariner' was the chief feature of the concert given by the Glee and Madrigal Society at the Mechanics' Hall on November 6. This was satisfactorily performed by the choir and orchestra, and the male voices of the choir were also heard in 'The Lord is a man of war.' Mr. J. H. Sykes conducted.

SPILSBY.—A highly creditable performance of 'Elijah' was given in the Drill Hall, on November 16, by a choir of 150 voices and Dr. Burgess's orchestra, augmented from London and Lincoln, under the direction of Miss Lushington. The principal vocalists were Mrs. A. A. Montgomery, Miss Jean Fyans, Mr. Campbell McInnes, and Mr. G. Beaumont Walker, who replaced with much credit Mr. Gervase Elwes, absent through indisposition.

TENBURY.—The Musical Society gave an excellent performance of Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' on November 17. The soloists were Mrs. Percy Hill, Mrs. Goodwin, Mr. A. Perry Cox and Mr. W. R. Batey. The orchestra was led by Mr. H. H. Salt, and Mr. M. Gordon Burgess, organist of St. Michael's College, conducted.

LIFE OF JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH

THE STORY OF THE DEVELOPMENT OF A GREAT PERSONALITY

BY

R C. HUBERT H. PARRY, BART.,
M.A., MUS. DOC., D.C.L.

DIRECTOR OF THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC

WITH PORTRAIT AND OTHER ILLUSTRATIONS.

8vo, Cloth extra, Gilt top, 12s. 6d. net.

Mr Hubert Parry's "Johann Sebastian Bach" is at once a biography and a critical and historical study of the achievements of the great eighteenth-century composer, and performer upon the organ and piano. The sense of Sir Hubert Parry himself as a composer, as a teacher, and as a student of music needs no comment here. Considering the importance of the man who is the subject of the life, and the authority of Sir Hubert Parry as a critic and writer, no student of music can afford to be a stranger to his thorough and comprehensive work.

ITS VALUE TO THE TEACHER.

In the "Musical Educator" every section is dealt with by an expert. Its value to the teacher of music is obvious, because it shows the way—at once simple and lucid—in which some of the greatest of musical professors would set about the instruction of a pupil anxious to perfect himself in his particular department, whether it be that of the piano, the violin, the harp, or any other instrument, or of any department of singing.

Add to this its all-round value as a standard work of reference on every point concerning the wide domain of music and musicians, and it will be granted that the "Musical Educator" is unique as well as complete.

TWO OPINIONS.

Sir J. FREDERICK BRIDGE

"The 'Musical Educator' is full of useful information plainly set forth. The musical illustrations are excellent."

Dr. CRESER, Mus.D. Oxon, F.R.C.O., F.T.C.L.

(Examiner in Music at Trinity College), writes:—

"We have here an illuminative work of great value, not only to the student, but also to the general reader. . . . It contains excellent instructions."

PIANOFORTE SIGHT-PLAYING.

- "Nothing but praise for your method."
- "Am more than surprised at the result."
- "Delighted with progress made."
- "Nothing played has given trouble."
- "Can now tackle difficult works."
- "I think the System splendid."

These are just a few extracts taken at random from pupils' reports. Hundreds of students have taken my Course of Correspondence Lessons with remarkable success. My System enables any pianist to play AT FIRST SIGHT any piece within his or her powers of execution. The results are certain and permanent. Only three months of about a quarter of an hour's daily practice are necessary to attain to a proficiency unattainable by ordinary methods of tuition, without years of practising for many hours daily.

Pianists are invited to make the closest possible examination of my methods and of the results attained by my pupils.

A full explanation of the methods employed is given in my Booklet, sent free on application to

THE CHOIRBOYS' GUIDE TO THE CATHEDRAL PSALTER

EDITED AND ARRANGED BY ERNEST NEWTON.

This little book has been compiled mainly for the use of choir-boys, and, therefore, nothing has been inserted but what is absolutely necessary for understanding the pointing of the Psalms as arranged in the Cathedral Psalter.

A certain amount of information has been given for the guidance of the Choirmaster, but the principal part of the book consists in the sets of exercises which have been arranged to lead the choirboys, step by step, through the various divisions of syllables that occur in the chanting of the Psalms.

After careful examination of the Cathedral Psalter, it has been found that there are exactly fifteen ways of dividing these syllables.

As the Recitation Notes are well within the compass of Alto, Tenor, and Bass voices, the book can be used with equal advantage by all members of a choir.

Price Ninepence.

NOBLE NUMBERS

BY

ROBERT HERRICK

TOGETHER WITH CONTEMPORARY NUMBERS BY GEORGE HERBERT, DONNE, AND AN ANONYMOUS WRITER

SELECTED AND SET TO MUSIC

FOR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, VIOLONCELLO AND ORCHESTRA

BY

H. WALFORD DAVIES.

(Op. 28.)

Price Three Shillings.

THE TIMES.

The work as a whole is full of vivid interest and imaginative power. It has not, of course, the strong human interest of "Everyman"—its scheme does not allow that—but it is equal to it in beauty of melody and design, and stronger in its grasp of various resources, especially those of the orchestra.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

To judge by his previous work, the present book, if so it may be described, is precisely one to appeal to Dr. Davies. It affords him ample scope for the exhibition of his command of orchestral scoring and of his power as a writer of chorus. . . . If the highest has not invariably been attained, it is yet likely that such numbers as the carol for soprano and semi-chorus, which Miss Gleeson-White sang prettily, the pastoral choral aria with quartet, and the melodious and fairly easy litany may enjoy a wide popularity, for it is a feature of this work that most of its component parts may be sung in a detached form, and the numbers mentioned are of the kind beloved by the people.

MORNING POST.

Dr. Davies's Cycle is a proof of the ability and of the intention of the rising school to shake off the restrictions of the past and to write in a style that is not only wholly distinctive, but is also very much more temperamental than anything that has been heard before in the domain of serious music. . . . A wide range of feeling is covered, but there is not one section that does not carry conviction, and the whole work is a magnificent example of British music, to be pointed to with pride and looked upon as a precious possession.

YORKSHIRE POST.

"Noble Numbers" can be best described by reference to its prototype, "Everyman," of which it is the worthy successor. There is the same love of extreme elaboration of detail, together with the greater breadth of effect which an enhanced experience has put within its composer's command. . . . "Noble Numbers" can only be described as a work lofty in purpose, earnest in character, and crammed with ideas, a few of them seeming, perhaps, to be the fruit of reflection, but other creations which possess the charm of genuine spontaneity. It is, in short, a very beautiful work indeed, following with remarkable fidelity and insight the varying moods suggested in the poems. . . . The choral portion of the prelude is quite a noble exordium and, notwithstanding what I have said concerning the complexity of the orchestral texture, there is in many places a simplicity which is in perfect accord with the sincerity and noble diction of the poetry. The music is throughout wholesome in tone, and has a delightful English ring about it.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

In the music there is much deserving the highest praise. . . . Dr. Davies is always particularly dexterous in raising his structure according to a plan of which every part leads up to some culminating point carefully conceived. He is consequently very effective, but there is a great difference between that and mere striving after effect. So far as Dr. Davies from striving after sensationalism that when the chance comes which nine out of ten composers would have seized eagerly, he contents himself with the very simplest of means.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY GAZETTE AND EXPRESS.

To whatever he puts his hand this composer is sincere. Moreover, he is himself, not based on Handel or Mendelssohn, or Wagner. . . . He is well-equipped in choral and orchestral technique, has a riotous imagination, strong originality, and lets himself go audaciously. . . . Then, his music is strong and masculine; there is no great tenderness, but then he never sinks to the morbid religious-sentimental. He has fine and dignified ideas; musical thoughts which go well with the title of "Noble Numbers."

GO, SONG OF MINE

CHORUS (UNACCOMPANIED) IN SIX PARTS

THE WORDS BY

GUIDO CAVALCANTI (1250-1301)

TRANSLATED BY D. G. ROSSETTI

THE MUSIC BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

(Op. 37.)

Price Sixpence.

Tonic Sol-fa, 3d.

THE TIMES.

Sir Edward Elgar's new part-song, "Go, Song of Mine," a delightfully fresh piece of writing for unaccompanied voices.

TELEGRAPH.

We were introduced, for the first time, to a little trifle, so to speak, that yet was one of the very gems of the festival, in Elgar's setting for six voices of Rossetti's "Go, Song of Mine." I use the word "trifle" merely to give an indication of the dimensions of the piece, which was found on all sides to be much too short. Musically it is of great value, and is proof positive, to those who hold that Elgar is essentially an orchestral composer, that at the present time—the score is dated 1909—his choral technique is no less brilliant and effective than his orchestral skill. A trifle of downright loveliness this is, a veritable masterpiece of emotional and musical expression after its kind, which because of its sheer beauty of sound and charm, may be described with perfect security as noble music. It produced a very deep effect and will, indeed, be gladly heard again, especially when as exquisitely rendered as under the composer's direction at this, its first, performance.

STANDARD.

It is poetically conceived, and its harmonic scheme is of beautiful texture. The music, with the lights and shadows that play delicately over it, sympathetically expresses the sentiment of the words.

MORNING POST.

It is a short composition for six parts and chorus, naturally of serious character, as befitting the nature of the theme, but with its simplicity there is immense depth of feeling. The beauty of the construction is ever present, and the composition is worthy of the highest tradition of English choral writing. . . . The impression on the hearers is immediate and deep.

MORNING LEADER.

It is a setting of a few lines of Rossetti's taken from a thirteenth-century Italian poet, and the writing for the voices has all that skill and resource that Elgar has shown in his later part-songs.

YORKSHIRE POST.

A really noble composition, following the trend which has been given to such music by Cornelius and other modern composers in the direction of a greater subtlety and complexity of expression. The sustained beauty and the remarkable colour of the music give it great charm, and its practicability, in spite of some obvious difficulties, was shown by an exceedingly fine performance.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

The fitness of the music to the words is a matter beyond praise and criticism. Once heard together the two can no longer be considered apart. We should have to seek long amongst the great works of choral music hitherto produced before finding a fitting parallel to this jewel. Even Elgar himself has never before made the choir utter things of so great sweetness and loveliness. . . . First there is the incomparable simplicity of this song, which is in itself a kind of hall-mark of greatness. Its harmonies are uncommon, but when once these are fixed into their place they become their station so well that nothing else appears equally fitting and simple. It was altogether an unforgettable experience.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY POST.

It is a deeply-felt piece of work, and marked by all Elgar's mastery of the art of modern choral effects, the total mass of tone being like that of a rich organ. The choir, under the composer's direction, sang it with true feeling for its solemn beauty.

THE ATHENÆUM.

The simple music is strongly emotional, and full of genuine Elgarian touches.

As its name implies, this book is designed for use with, and not in place of, other Church Hymnals.

For this reason the Hymns are numbered from 801, so that the numbers may not interfere with the use of any other hymn book, no other Church hymn book having as many as even seven hundred hymns. Each hymn has its own distinctive tune, and no hymn or tune in this work is found in Hymns Ancient and Modern (Old Edition), so that with the two books no duplication occurs.

A SET OF FOUR
OLD FRENCH CAROLS.

1. AT MIDNIGHT A SUMMONS CAME (A minuit fut fait un reveil).
2. BRING A TORCH, JEANNETTE, ISABELLA.
(Un flambeau, Jeannette, Isabelle).
3. SLEEP, LITTLE DOVE (Dors, ma colombe).
4. WHEN AT CHRISTMAS CHRIST WAS BORN
(Quand Dieu naquit à Noël).

The melodies harmonized and the words imitated by

E. CUTHBERT NUNN, A.R.A.M., F.R.C.O.
(Organist and Choirmaster, Parish Church, Leytonstone).

Price Threepence ; Tonic Sol-fa, 2d.

We strongly recommend these Carols to the notice of Church Choirs. It is unnecessary to apply such adjectives as "quaint," "characteristic," "carol-like," etc., to these charming melodies. They are the REAL THING, as sung by our forefathers centuries ago, and we feel sure they will be welcomed by many who have tired of the colourless modern imitations which are so often used.

THE TEN VIRGINS

A SACRED CANTATA

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"Will be heartily welcomed by all who love the art of music."—Newcastle Journal."The work will certainly go through Saxondom in the wake of its predecessors from the same pen."—London Daily Telegraph."Must attain popularity wherever heard, and will assuredly be placed among the foremost compositions of this kind by present-day writers . . . treated in a thoroughly artistic manner . . . a perfect walk of melody and striking individuality of style."—Liverpool Daily Courier."Works which have placed him in the front rank of English composers—the 'Holy City,' 'Joan of Arc,' and 'The Ten Virgins.'"—Newcastle Daily Journal."The choral writing in 'The Ten Virgins' is alone something to be thankful for, and, as we have intimated, it is only one of the many musical virtues of the Cantata."—Leamington Chronicle."BOW AND BROMLEY INSTITUTE CHOIR.—The hall was overcrowded by an audience that was disposed to endorse every other number of the work. That Mr. Gaul should have secured this undoubted popular success with a work far more contrapuntal than any of his former works, is a remarkable tribute to his power of welding science and beauty into one whole."—The Musical Times."The subject is an excellent one for a Cantata . . . a stronger work than 'Joan of Arc.' Melodious, vocal, and of moderate difficulty; and, like Mr. Gaul's earlier Cantatas, will be eagerly welcomed by societies in search of new works having these characteristics."—Newcastle Daily Leader."That 'The Ten Virgins' is a much finer work than the everywhere favourite 'Holy City' we have no doubt whatever. Mr. Gaul has aimed at fine outline and telling colouring, and all that he has aimed at he has achieved."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.Price, paper cover, 2s. 6d. ; paper boards, 3s. ; cloth, gilt, 4s.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. ; Vocal parts, each 1s. Words only, 5s. per 100.

PRINCE OF PEACE

A SACRED CANTATA

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRATHE WORDS SELECTED FROM HOLY SCRIPTURE
AND THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"No man knows better than Mr. Gaul how to write for voices. . . 'Thou art the King of Glory,' a singularly fine chorus, worthy of any composer, living or dead. . . Throughout the work we have spontaneity, elegance, attractiveness, in short, a never-ending charm."—Birmingham Daily Gazette."In every way worthy the great reputation and experience of its composer. . . Is indeed a work of a very unusual character, and may probably be destined to become more popular than any of his other compositions. . . Worthy the study of choral societies of every grade."—North Staffordshire Sentinel."The Prince of Peace' is a work of an exceptionally high order. There are passages of surpassing beauty and brilliance. The work is varied and interesting, and, like all of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, supplies a need which no other composer of music so satisfactorily meets, viz., a moderately difficult work written on classical lines. . . The cantata occupied about ninety minutes and from the opening bars to the finish there was not a dull moment."—Pontypool Free Press."Admirably written for the voice, enhanced by charm of rhythm and picturesque accompaniments."—Birmingham Daily Mail.Price, paper cover, 2s. 6d. ; paper boards, 3s. ; cloth, gilt, 4s.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. ; Vocal parts, each, 1s. Words only, 5s. per 100.Band Parts (the loan of) on application to the COMPOSER.

THE ORCHESTRAL INSTRUMENTS AND WHAT THEY DO

A PRIMER FOR CONCERT-GOERS

BY DANIEL GREGORY MASON.

WITH 27 ILLUSTRATIONS AND ORCHESTRAL CHART,
Cloth, Five Shillings.

A popular elementary primer on orchestration has long been needed. This capital little book, written in a clear and interesting style, lightens up a subject generally considered rather forbidding in its difficulty. It will appeal to those who wish to increase their grasp and appreciation of orchestral music; while for the student no better book could be wished as an introduction to this branch of study. It will find a place as a text-book in school and conservatory.

ELEMENTARY SCORE-READING EXERCISES

SELECTED AND EDITED BY ARTHUR H. PEPPIN.

PREFATORY NOTE.

The power of reading at sight from four-part score with the proper clefs for alto and tenor may seem to the student to be hardly valuable enough to warrant the expenditure of time and trouble which it involves. We may concede that it is seldom called into requisition nowadays as a part of practical musicianship; nevertheless its indirect value must not be overlooked. Firstly, reading from four staves is useful as a training of the eye in the direction of quickness and accuracy in reading from many staves, or two; secondly, complete familiarity with the C clefs is an indispensable preliminary to the understanding of orchestral scores; thirdly, the habit of following four parts, written at their correct pitch, helps materially towards that clearness of brain without which no one can unravel the complexities of polyphonic writing.

The following exercises are intended for beginners. They lead gradually to the degree of proficiency which should enable the student to grapple successfully with Dr. Emily Daymond's more difficult exercises in the same subject.

SYMPHONIC POEM FOR CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

THE WORDS FROM "TOWARDS DEMOCRACY

BY

EDWARD CARPENTER

THE MUSIC BY

RUTLAND BOUGHTON

(Op. 26).

Price Two Shillings.

THE TIMES.

Rutland Boughton's choral setting of some words by Edward Carter from his "Towards Democracy" is a very curious and interesting piece of work, which gives excellent promise for the future composer . . . the clever accentuation of words that would have needed problems even to a Henry Lawes, the sonorous effect that is from the orchestra, the poetic feeling of the whole, and, above all, strong instinct for climax—these are qualities that must eventually Mr. Boughton a high place even among the many accomplished composers of the day.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

at Mr. Boughton is independent in his views none will be disposed to after hearing this work. . . . Let no man hold up to obloquy a young and clearly an intensely earnest musician, who seeks his inspiration at the fountain-head, and would reflect the spirit of his own day, by the composer so doing can be hope to obtain immortality. . . . The poem was favourably received, indeed, with acclamation, by the public.

MORNING POST.

The work is a notable musical portrayal of atmosphere. . . . The style with which atmosphere is suggested by choral rather than by instrumental means is of a high order. . . . "Midnight" remains a remarkable and largely successful endeavour to attain a definite object.

STANDARD.

should find favour with members of choral societies with a more advanced sense of harmony.

DAILY MAIL.

is this music of the extreme modern type, but withal strong, strenuous and with a real artistic inspiration behind it.

MORNING LEADER.

Rutland Boughton has made full use of the picturesque possibilities of the text, while at the same time clinging closely to his poetic material. . . . He obtains ample variety by means of ingenious imaginative orchestral colouring and shades of harmony. A wonderful climax is marked in the work when the text speaks of all the in the city "cheering the thoughtful night," with one great bell ringing slowly on." This shows not only genuine constructive strength, but an original fancy. Equally good is the final weaving together of all the threads. The dramatic outcry, which speaks of the powers of time liberating their souls in prayer till the air is charged with lightning," is another noticeable point. . . . There is no doubt "Midnight" means a very considerable upward step in a promising career.

SUNDAY TIMES.

that success, too, was achieved by Mr. Rutland Boughton with his work, "Midnight," which makes a great step onward and forward for him. . . . Mr. Boughton shows an unusual sense of climax musical architecture, and the mass of sound illustrating the stirring" of many small bells while the great ones "boom slowly on" his final outburst illustrating "The Great Undertone"—that is to the voice of Love of Humanity—are genuinely impressive. He striking effects of colour from the chorus, though his choral music is difficult, but there is a great difference between such music and less music in which the overcoming of difficulties has no reward.

YORKSHIRE POST.

Boughton's music has one very decided merit. It realises the sphere of the poem, and it has bigness of scale. . . . There are one or two really fine climaxes in the work—a superbly brilliant one near middle—and altogether the impression one has after hearing Boughton's music is that he has a "fist" big enough for a large, even though it may even yet be not under complete control.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

is this an admirable subject for a symphonic poem, for that is the opinion Mr. Boughton gives to his work. The title is well borne out in manner of treating his thematic material. . . . Mr. Boughton real insight into choral effect. . . . There are singularly striking passages, which show Mr. Boughton to have a very considerable power in building up climaxes of sound, besides an original imagination aided by what may be called artistic logic.

BIRMINGHAM GAZETTE AND EXPRESS.

Boughton is a modernist, and the verve of the music proves that he approached his task with the deep conviction that kindles the fires of inspiration. Skilled in the technique of composition, he handles both chorus and orchestra like a master of the secrets of colour and dramatic effect. Not only orchestral colour, but also harmony colour is admirably blended in this moving work, which owes much of its undeniable attractiveness to its absolute veracity.

OLD ENGLISH SUITE

ARRANGED FOR SMALL ORCHESTRA

BY

GRANVILLE BANTOCK.

1. Fantasia . . . . . Orlando Gibbons.
2. Lachrymæ Pavan . . . . . John Dowland.
3. The King's Hunt . . . . . John Bull.
4. Quodling's Delight . . . . . Giles Farnaby.
5. Sellenger's Round . . . . . William Byrd.

FULL SCORE, 10s. 6d.; STRING PARTS, 4s. 6d.; WIND PARTS, 7s. 6d.
ARRANGEMENT FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO, 3s. 0d.

THE TIMES.

It consists of five pieces by English composers of the sixteenth century, which Mr. Bantock has selected and scored in a delightful way for small orchestra. Four of them come from the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book, and only the first, one of Gibbons's Fantasias in four parts, was originally written for strings. It would have been no disadvantage to have this one in its original colouring; but the additional use of woodwind and horns is so tastefully done that one cannot regret them; and since only antiquaries will ever have the chance of enjoying the Virginal pieces played as their composers wrote them, the gain of producing them in their new orchestral costumes is clear.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Mr. Bantock's Suite is a thing of pure delight from beginning to end. For a composer of tendencies which are called advanced, this Suite is a model of restraint. . . . Nos. 1, 3, and 5 are scored for a more or less complete small orchestra, though no use is made in the opening piece of trumpets or drums. The Pavane, a quietly dignified and graceful thing for strings only, is a notable example of string writing, and "Quodling's Delight," which was mightily and deservedly applauded, is to be played by an oboe, two clarinets, and a bassoon, in imitation of the ancient shawms.

MORNING POST.

The Suite is based on circa sixteenth century airs, originally extracted from the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book for the purposes of a revival of "The Knight of the Burning Pestle" at Manchester last year. Their reproduction in the present form is most valuable, for the airs themselves are precious heirlooms, and with the setting provided by Mr. Granville Bantock, which is so thoroughly in keeping, the worth of these, some of the most precious gems among our heritage, is increased. . . . The Suite is a masterly reproduction of atmosphere, and many must have been surprised to find such wealth of melody in old music. The Suite was cordially received.

STANDARD.

Mr. Bantock has collected a quintet of tunes by composers of the seventeenth century, taken from the Elizabethan Virginal Book preserved in the Fitzwilliam Library, Cambridge, and has cleverly knit them together in a fascinating suite. While preserving their ancient character, he has embellished the old tunes with charming and effective orchestration.

DAILY NEWS.

Mr. Granville Bantock's suite of five Elizabethan pieces should be certain of popularity. The melodies are all charming, and Mr. Bantock has managed to score them in an attractive way, without once doing violence to their naive character.

MORNING LEADER.

Mr. Granville Bantock's suite is compiled from old English music. There are five numbers, but the music has been added to and scored by Mr. Bantock. The result is a very charming work that should be heard often in future. Particularly delightful are the third number, "The King's Hunt" and the last "Sellenger's Round."

THE WORLD.

Mr. Bantock has done more than edit, since he has added to the music in some cases, and scored the whole of it for small orchestra. The result is quite a delightful little suite of five numbers, of which the third (a little hunting piece by John Bull) and the finale, a dance, are particularly fascinating. The scoring has been done with Mr. Bantock's usual command of orchestral effect, which he has used in this instance to secure an old-world flavouring appropriate to the music.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

The Suite consists of five charming pieces, of which the first is a fantasia by Orlando Gibbons, the second a pavan by John Dowland, the third an air with some dainty variations by John Bull; the fourth is also an air with variations, and the last a country dance, known as "Sellenger's Round," by William Byrd. These make up the delightful Suite, which has been scored by Mr. Bantock with his usual felicity and resource. It met with a very cordial reception.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY POST.

The old English Suite is composed of five Elizabethan harpsichord pieces, arranged by Mr. Bantock for small orchestra. It proved thoroughly delightful. The curious thing was that in spite of the clever orchestration we were never taken out of the original epoch of the music.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY GAZETTE AND EXPRESS.

The Bantock Suite, exquisitely played, evoked a regular furor of applause, which was thoroughly deserved, the instrumentation of the various pieces being skilful and effective in the extreme.

COMPETITIONS IN 1910.

Most of the competition centres have now issued their syllabuses.

There is not only no evidence of diminution of interest in the movement, but on the contrary an vigorous increase. All the London schemes look hopeful. The time seems ripe for a great metropolitan competition, in which all London districts may compete.

LONDON.

KENSINGTON, WEST LONDON.

February 21, 23, 24, 25, 28, 1910.

This competition makes its appeal to large districts the West and North-west of London. It embraces Hammersmith, Harrow, St. Pancras and Chelsea, besides the immediate neighbourhood of its centre.

On October 26 a public meeting was held at the Town Hall, Kensington, to promote the aims of the festival. Walter Parratt presided, and Miss Wakefield, McNaught and Dr. W. H. Hickox gave addresses. A short concert followed. There was a good audience. The syllabus can be obtained from Miss C. E. Denison, Michael's Vicarage, North Kensington.

THE SOUTH LONDON FESTIVAL.

February 26 and 28; March 2, 3 and 5, 1910.

The new syllabus for 1910 is now issued. Fifty-one tests are enumerated. The tests are a great improvement on some that found their way into the 1909 programme, and called forth some not very friendly comment. We congratulate the promoters upon their courage in delivering themselves from a partial thralldom. We trust they will have no reason to repent. All the tests in the vocal classes and all the choral competitions will be held in the evening, thus accommodating those who are not free to attend in the day-time. The syllabus gives an extraordinary number of patrons, members of committees and agents, and the list of the local council includes about ninety names. If all the individuals enumerated take a real interest in the task of Mr. T. Lester Jones, the indefatigable secretary, will be materially lightened. His address is 49, Terrace Road, Upton Manor. We should add H.R.H. The Princess Victoria of Schleswig-Holstein is President, and that the competitions will be held at Battersea Polytechnic.

The following are some of the tests:

STRATFORD.

March 5, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12.

The syllabus for 1910 is, as usual, an elaborate one. The preface says:

"The number of competitions is the largest in any festival in the whole country. Eighty competitions are announced, compared with seventy-six last year, and sixty-seven previously. The number of performers (3,300 last year) was a large increase, and, in order to cope with an even larger number next year, some of the classes have been divided.

"Attractiveness has been borne in mind throughout the arrangements, as well as educational value. Every evening a varied programme is presented, with choral, instrumental, and vocal items interspersed. The day-time sessions are devoted largely to solo candidates. The best of these are heard in the evenings. The audiences learn much by comparing the styles of execution of the performers and by listening to the critical remarks of the adjudicators. No other form of musical performance is so interesting or stimulating as this. No speeches are listened to with such keenness as the brief and pointed words which form the climax and give the result of an exciting competition.

"To the competitors the preparation of the music is of great help in cultivating taste, skill, and diligence. These are valuable benefits whether a prize be won or not, but the prize is a pleasurable token of talent, the discovery of which is often a means of deciding a career. To lose may be a greater blessing than to win, if it prove that a change of life's plans is needed, or if it indicate a weakness in training that can be remedied."

Copies of the syllabus can be obtained from the General Secretary, Mr. J. Graham, 110, Station Road, Chingford, E.

PEOPLE'S PALACE, LONDON, E.

April 25-30, 1910.

Owing to a difficulty, now happily settled, as to the name of the festival, the issue of the full syllabus has been unavoidably delayed. It is now ready, and can be obtained from Miss Edith Barran, 44, Westminster Palace Gardens, S.W. New features of the 1910 scheme are: Three divisions instead of one in male-voice choirs; a division for boys' secondary schools; a division for schools with Jewish holidays; a division for "violin bands"; a division for very small mixed-voice choirs.

REPORTS OF COMPETITIONS.

HUCKNALL TORKARD.

October 23.

At the third competition for junior Co-operative choirs in the Midland section there was a falling off in the number of competitors, but not in their efficiency. The tests were "A lullaby" (Roedel) and "The fishermen's song" (Facer), and the following choirs entered:—

- 1st. Long Eaton (Mr. W. Woolley).
- Derby (Mr. T. H. Bennett).
- Langley Mill (Mr. Enos Marson).
- Ilkeston (Mr. H. Fletcher).

The prize-winners in the solo-singing classes were as follows:

- Girls under 16—Kate Clay.
Girls under 13—Frances Townsend.
Boys under 16—Tom Ledger.
Duet—Tom Ledger and Walter Fletcher.

Mr. S. Filmer Rook was the adjudicator. With reference to the constitution of the choirs, he remarked that he did not think that the blend of voices was so good in the case of choirs composed of boys and girls as when there was only one sex.

KEIGHLEY.

THE "SUMMERSCALES" COMPETITION.

October 23 and 30.

This was the eighteenth annual event held under the auspices of the administrators of the Summerscales Memorial Fund. There were 190 entries and nearly 800 competitors, but it is not a little curious that the town itself contributed comparatively few entries. The Keighley News says: The Summerscales Musical Competition was commenced for the eighteenth year in the Keighley Municipal Institute on Saturday. It is not necessary here to refer at any length to the objects responsible for the inauguration of the festival. Suffice it to say that the trustees of the Summerscales Memorial Fund could hardly have conceived a more fitting way of perpetuating the memory of the late Mr. W. H. Summerscales than by encouraging and cultivating the art of music. Nor could they have been more earnest and enthusiastic in carrying out this commendable work. The festival is probably one of the most attractive and best organised of its kind in the North of England. The arrangements work with a smoothness that is in itself testimony to the admirable manner in which Mr. Allan Bradley discharges the multifarious duties which fall to his lot as honorary secretary.

It is doubtful whether in the history of the festival there has ever been an opening day so interesting and enjoyable as that of Saturday; certainly the educational value of the competitions has seldom been demonstrated in a more practical manner. The full programme for the two days comprised nineteen classes, with 190 entries and almost 1,800 competitors. Five of these classes were not included in last year's programme—those for children's choirs from elementary schools, ladies' choirs, mixed and male voice choirs which had not previously won a prize valued six guineas, and girl soloists. The first four of these classes all figured in the programme some years ago and were temporarily abandoned on account of the paucity of support, but the class for girl soloists was an entirely new venture. The committee of management are to be congratulated upon their revival of the class for children's choirs. There is ample scope in this direction for the carrying on of a very valuable educational work.

The number of entries, however, was very disappointing, only three schools sending choirs to compete for the handsome banner, held by the winners for one year, and substantial money prizes. The fact that the borough of Keighley sent only one choir gave rise to a good deal of comment, and not a little misgiving as to the musical future of the town. The opinion was freely expressed that a little co-operation between teachers and parents might result in at least half a dozen choirs drawn from the schools in the borough figuring in the competition. Dr. Coward, who adjudicated in the vocal section, strongly emphasised the importance of cultivating the musical faculty in the young, and, after conducting the combined choirs in the test-pieces, subjected them to a severe examination in the interpretation of hand signs. The audience, though by no means so large as might have been expected, was unstinted in its appreciation of the cleverness displayed by these highly-trained children.

BARROW.

This competition was held with great success. The entries were unprecedented. Mr. Harry Evans and Mr. W. Griffith were the adjudicators. The chief results were:—

NOTTINGHAM.
November 13 and 20.

The first day was devoted to the juniors, male-voice quartets, tenor and bass solos and the challenge shield male-voice choir competition, which drew ten very good choirs. The junior choirs combined to give a spirited performance of the cantata "The spider and the fly" (Bridge), under the direction of Dr. McNaught, who adjudicated. Mr. Arthur Barlow assisted in judging the vocal solos. A performance of their test-pieces by the massed male-voice choirs, under Mr. C. E. Riley, was one of the best achievements of the festival. The following were the chief results:

On the second day the adults and more advanced classes competed. The pianoforte solo class, in which the tests were the Scherzo and Trio from Beethoven's Sonata in C major and sight-playing, brought forward some good performers. But the girl, Lily Smith (Nottingham), who played the prepared piece best did not read well, and consequently the prize fell to Mabel Tyman (Melton Mowbray). Miss A. Tingle (Rotherham) gained the soprano solo prize, and Miss E. Allen (Mexborough) that for contralto singing. The tests respectively were "Solvejg's song" (Grieg) and "The Asra" (Rubinstein). The chief choral results were as follows:

The result, as is evident from the above figures, was remarkably close. The different styles of the three pieces formed a severe test of the all-round capacity of the choirs. All three pieces were sung by the combined choirs in magnificent style, under the sure and skilful leadership of Mr. C. E. Riley.

THE
ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

TENTERDEN STREET, HANOVER SQUARE.

INSTITUTED, 1822.

INCORPORATED BY ROYAL CHARTER, 1830.

Patron: HIS MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND STRATHEARN, K.G.

Principal: SIR ALEXANDER CAMPBELL MACKENZIE, Mus.D., LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.A.M.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC offers to students of both sexes (whether amateur or professional) a thorough training in all branches of music under the most able and distinguished Professors. In addition to receiving individual lessons in the various parts of the Curriculum, students have the advantage of attending the Orchestral, Choral, Chamber Music Classes, and the weekly Lectures on music and musicians. Evidence of progress is given at the Fortnightly and Public Concerts and by periodical Operatic and Chamber Music Performances.

There are three Terms in the Academic year—viz., the Michaelmas Term, from Michaelmas to Christmas; the Lent Term, from early in January to Easter; and the Midsummer Term, from early in May until the end of July.

The Fee for the ordinary curriculum is 11 Guineas per Term.

A large number of Scholarships and Prizes are founded and are competed for periodically.

Students who show special merit and ability receive the distinction of being elected by the Directors Associates of the Institution, and are thereby entitled to the use after their names of the initials A.R.A.M. Students who distinguish themselves in the musical profession after leaving the Institution may be elected by the Directors Fellows of the Royal Academy of Music, and are thereupon entitled to the use after their names of the initials F.R.A.M.

Subscribers have the privilege of attending the Lectures and Public Concerts and of inviting friends in proportion to the amount of their subscriptions.

An examination of persons trained independently of the Academy is held twice a year—during the Summer and Christmas vacations—successful candidates at which are elected Associates of the Academy, and are thereupon entitled to the use after their names of the initials A.R.A.M. The syllabus is issued annually at Easter. Last day for entry for the Summer Examination, June 30; for the Christmas Examination, October 30.

An examination of persons engaged in the Training of Children's Voices is held in November and during the Christmas Vacation, and a certificate will be granted to successful candidates.

Prospectus, entry form, and all further information may be obtained on application.
