

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. DOCTORS OF MUSIC,

Mus. Bac.s, L.R.A.M.s, A.R.C.M.s, F.R.C.O.s, testify in strong terms to the value of the Macdonald Smith System of Touch and Technique and use it with their pupils. Sir Frederick Bridge has made more than one public reference to it. It may therefore be adopted with every confidence. Mr. Macdonald Smith dictates each lesson personally, and no pupil is too backward or too advanced for one or other of his Three Courses. It is worth your while to find out what the System can do in your case, from "Light on Pianoforte Playing," which will be sent free on application.

THE ESSENCE OF SIGHT-PLAYING

does not consist, as is usually thought, in the ability to recognise the relations between notes and keyboard, but in the establishment of an automatic connection between the observation of the musical symbols and the muscular actions necessary for their reproduction as musical sounds.

It is the object of

to attain to complete proficiency in this respect, after only a quarter-of-an-hour's daily practice for three months. The scientific basis of the System is explained in my BOOKLET, sent POST-FREE on application. THE FEE for the Complete Three Months' Course of Six Lessons is £3 3s.

J. G. writes, after First Lesson: "I find great improvement all round; the eye is much quicker, and the fingers fall automatically on the right keys."

D. T., after First Lesson, reports "decided, very decided improvement."

"I recognise it, without the smallest hesitation, as one of the most important and valuable among recent contributions to musical literature. . . . The best informed of professional musicians may learn a great deal about the master-works of Beethoven from Sir George Grove, whose wide reading and acute perceptiveness have enabled him to marshal an astonishing array of facts, and whose intimate acquaintance with the spirit of the master has qualified him to throw light upon pages which, to many, are still obscure. . . . I must be satisfied with the remarks already made, earnestly recommending all who recognise Beethoven's greatness as shown in his immortal symphonies to obtain Sir George Grove's volume, and walk in the luminous paths through which he is ready to conduct all who trust his guidance."—Daily Telegraph.

GRANVILLE BANTOCK.

The broad outlook of music and musicians is a subject of deep importance to the progress of the art in this country. England was long chided for her limited range of vision and her insular prejudices in relation to music. Not only were the works of native composers scorned, but the British musician, whatever his attainments, was despised as being a Philistine or looked upon as a very dull dog. Were any such charge to be brought against us now, it could be refuted with a certainty that carries conviction. Those like the present writer who are afforded opportunities of coming into personal contact with musicians in their own spheres of work up and down the country, cannot fail to be impressed with the wide range of their interests, the eclecticism of their tastes, and the breadth of their sympathies. Nature, literature, pictures, even sport—do not cathedral organists take out gun licences and distinguished composers own yachts and play golf?—are some of the interests that act and react upon the temperaments of musicians, that help to raise their status, that help them to quit themselves like men and be strong, and that at the same time intensify their artistic aspirations. A musician thus equipped, mentally, socially and artistically, who by force of character no less than by his creative achievements is able worthily to uphold the cause of British music, forms the subject of this biographical sketch.

Granville Ransome Bantock, son of the eminent surgeon, Dr. George Granville Bantock, was born at 44, Cornwall Road, Westbourne Park, London, on August 7, 1868. After having been educated at private schools he studied for the Indian Civil Service, but a breakdown in health necessitated that he should abandon the prospects of an official career. He then took up chemical engineering, and became a student at the London City and Guilds Institute. At the South Kensington Museum Library the attractions of manuscript scores by Italian composers—Scarlatti, Paisiello and Porpora—caused him to forsake science and devote himself entirely to music. He took a few lessons in counterpoint from Dr. Gordon Saunders, at Trinity College, London, and then—on September 28, 1888, aged twenty—became a student at the Royal Academy of Music. His principal study was composition, under Mr. Frederick Corder, his second studies being successively clarinet (under Lazarus), violin, viola, and organ (under Dr. Steggall); he also played the drums in the students' orchestra. He immediately shot to the front, when, at the end of the first term, in January, 1889, he won the first Macfarren Scholarship. It is a curious irony of fate that he should blossom out as a composer of tone-poems which, to say the least, would have astonished the distinguished musician in whose memory the Scholarship was founded. One of these excursions into the region—in this instance, the lower region—of programme-music was an orchestral poem entitled 'Satan in Hell'! (Did not Macfarren compose 'The Devil's Opera'?) On the occasion of its being tried at a students' orchestral rehearsal, the players naturally warmed up to their work, and produced so terrible an orgy of sound as to cause the Principal, who was conducting the orchestra, to ask the composer, 'What does this mean?' 'That's Hell, sir,' replied the Macfarren Scholar.

Bantock's literary proclivities bore fruit during his studentship, for he was the principal founder of The Overture, that interesting and brightly-written periodical issued from Tenterden Street, to which he so largely and acceptably contributed. The first number—March, 1890—was edited by him, but as it contained criticisms on performances at one of the Academy concerts, the 'powers-that-be' considered that young gentlemen came to the Institution to receive instruction, not to criticise (in print) the performances of their fellow-students; whereupon the duties of editor were transferred to Mr. Corder, a professor, as being more in accordance with the fitness of things. To the issue of The Overture for May, 1900, Bantock contributed an ably-written article on 'The music-drama of the future.' In this article he contended that 'music-drama'—on Wagnerian lines, as distinct from conventional opera—was the 'highest art,' that 'the music-drama is intended to be a source of intellectual nourishment and pleasure, not an amusement for the frivolous,' and so on. To return to matters other than 'music-drama.' The pages of The Overture contain several interesting references to the Macfarren Scholar; a prelude, entitled 'Siegmar,' was tried over by the orchestra on February 11, 1890, and in the same year he obtained a silver medal for harmony. The Academy concert of December 12, 1890, opened with his dramatic overture 'The Fire-Worshippers,' the composer playing the drums on that occasion. In a notice of the concert, THE MUSICAL TIMES of January, 1891, thus testified to the gifts of, and encouraged, the young composer:

Creative art was exemplified by an Overture entitled 'The Fire Worshippers,' by Mr. Granville Bantock (Macfarren Scholar and pupil of Mr. Corder), in which the composer shows that he has studied modern music to advantage. The ideas are bold, and the orchestration picturesque, so that Mr. Bantock may be encouraged to persevere.

A year later—December 5, 1891—his 'Thorvenda's Dream,' a poem (the words by himself) with music, was recited at the Fortnightly-meeting of professors and students. In the following year he wrote and published 'Rameses II., a drama of ancient Egypt. In five acts.' At the end of the preface—dated '12, Granville Place, London, W., March 21, 1892'—is the following note:

The author trusts that this work may not be regarded in the light of a poetical composition, but as an acting drama, accompanied by incidental music.

A 'Suite de Ballet (Nos. 1 and 4)' from 'Rameses II.,' was performed at the Academy orchestral concert of December 17, 1891. In this connection THE MUSICAL TIMES may again be quoted:

GRANVILLE BANTOCK, AT THE AGE OF FOUR.

The Concert ended with two movements, cleverly written, with picturesque orchestration, from a Ballet Suite bearing the curious title of 'Rameses II.,' by Mr. Granville Bantock (Macfarren Scholar).

Practical recognition, beyond the walls of the Academy, of 'Rameses II.' was accorded by the Strolling Players' Amateur Orchestral Society, who performed selections from it at their concerts of February 20 and April 30, 1892. In February of that year, Bantock was appointed a sub-professor (harmony) of the Academy, and he left in July, after having received a certificate for harmony. He was elected an Associate in March, 1899, and a Fellow in November, 1901. Among his fellow students—1888 to 1892—were William Wallace, Arthur Hinton, Allen Gill, Stanley Hawley and Reginald Steggall. His professor, Mr. Frederick Corder, has, at our request, kindly furnished the following note on his former pupil:

'Granville Bantock was almost the first of a long line of clever students who have passed through the Royal Academy from the charge of sleepiness. He was not quite the founder of the Excelsior Club (now the R. A. M. Musical Union), but by far its most energetic member, and all the original undertakings of that body—Wagner lectures, novelty concerts, &c.—were promoted by him. He started, and for a time edited, that brilliant little journal, The Overture, besides many other enterprises too numerous to detail. But I should not omit to mention that his industry and perseverance were abnormal. I do not think I have ever had a pupil who worked so hard. He was none of your born geniuses that the halfpenny papers love to tell us about, who write symphonies at seven and are exploded gas-bags at fourteen. He dug and tilled his field like an honest labourer, and it was many years my hands during the last twenty years. He gained the Macfarren Scholarship entirely on the promise of his talent, for at that time he knew nothing at all. It was characteristic of him that he should exhibit as specimens of his powers some wild attempts to set to music large portions of "Paradise Lost"—indeed, I fear he meditated setting the entire work. My heart went out to the daring enthusiast, and remained with him ever after.

The image shows a handwritten musical score for a four-part song titled "Awake, awake!". The score is written on four staves, labeled S. (Soprano), A. (Alto), T. (Tenor), and B. (Bass). The tempo and mood are marked "Allegro giocoso". The lyrics are written below the notes: "Awake, awake! The breezes shout Good-morrow to the breathing rills;...". The score includes various musical notations such as notes, rests, and dynamic markings like "mf" and "cres". At the bottom of the page, there is a large, stylized signature "Granville Bantock" and the date "15/12/08.".

'He quickly became the leader of a small band of enterprising students, who effectually redeemed before the crop was good. But now he can look with pride upon the just results of good student-ship. Let him tell, if he cares to, of his severe and manful struggles against disappointment and hard luck when he first entered the big world: it is only for me to say that no man ever was more deserving of success than Granville Bantock. He never turned his back on a friend, therefore he will never lack helpers and well-wishers. He never deserted his high ideals, therefore his muse will be ever kinder and kinder to him. His music may be externally influenced by his Eastern tastes and proclivities, but it owes all its essentials to his tireless British pluck and determination. It fulfils my idea of what British music ought to be.'

The following extract from THE MUSICAL TIMES of August, 1892, speaks for itself :

The Invitation Concert given by Mr. Granville Bantock at the Royal Academy of Music, on the 12th ult., served to confirm the opinion held by many eminent musicians that Mr. Bantock is one of the most promising among 'coming' men in the English musical world. The programme consisted entirely of his own compositions; among which a one-act opera 'Cædmar,' three German Lieder, and a recitation with musical accompaniment may be specially named. The opera reveals gifts which, properly used, should eventually place Mr. Bantock in a very high position. It was well sung by Miss Lilian Redfern, Mr. Edwin Wareham and Mr. John Walters. Miss Hilda Wilson, Miss Clara Jecks, and Messrs. Learmont Drysdale and Reginald Steggall lent valuable aid.

Bantock's romantic opera in one act 'Cædmar,' was produced at the New Olympic Theatre, Strand, —during Signor Lago's autumn season—on October 25, 1892, the composer conducting. THE MUSICAL TIMES thus records the event :

The second piece was Mr. Granville Bantock's 'Cædmar,' in one act. The libretto, by the composer, tells how a lady loves a knight, and how the latter slays her husband. The music at every step reminds one of Wagner, but it is cleverly written, and one day, when Mr. Bantock has escaped from the influence of the Bayreuth master, he will probably distinguish himself.

The opera, dedicated 'To Frederick Corder, Esq.,' was also performed at the Crystal Palace. A 'note' in the published score states :

This work may be performed on the concert platform as a dramatic symphony, providing that the action of the poem, which the music is intended to illustrate and assist, be explicitly set forth in the programme for the audience to follow.

Like many other native composers, Granville Bantock is indebted to the late August Manns for his real introduction to the great world of music, when, at the Crystal Palace Saturday concert of November 11, 1893, his overture 'The Fire Worshipers' was performed. Sir George Grove, in his analysis of the work, said :

Though Mr. Bantock's career has been short it has been very full. He entered the Royal Academy of Music in 1888, and was awarded the Macfarren Scholarship for promise in composition in January, 1889. The award has certainly justified itself, for in the four years' interval since it took place compositions, both in music and words, have resulted, which for quantity and variety almost rival the early fertility of Schubert or Mendelssohn.

Earlier in the year—May, 1893—appeared the first number of The New Quarterly Musical Review, a periodical publication founded, owned and edited by Bantock. He started it with £9 or £13 (he forgets which of these two amounts constituted his capital), and when the last number was issued, in February, 1896, he had lost £100 by the venture. His deficit might have been greater had he not been able to invoke the aid of writers of repute to contribute articles to a publication which may be read with interest and profit.

A less serious though 'bread and butter' side of Bantock's career now claims attention. In 1893 he became conductor of a travelling company who performed burlesques in the provinces. His salary was £3 a week, while his orchestra consisted of one violin, one double-bass, one cornet, and 'the left hand of the conductor on an anæmic pianoforte'! One of the burlesques was 'Bonnie Boy Blue,' the overture to which consisted of variations on 'Ta-ra-ra-boom-de-ay.' Once, in the absence of the band (!), Bantock ventured to substitute, on the pianoforte, one of Chopin's Nocturnes, when the stage-manager poked his head through the curtain and said, 'If you don't stop that noise, I'll punch your head after the show.' (The expletives are omitted.)

In the British Museum library is an amusing, gay-covered book entitled 'Round the world with a Gaiety Girl' (1896), of which the joint authors are Granville Bantock and F. G. Aflalo. This attractive little volume records a tour, occupying 431 days, of one of Mr. George Edwardes's travelling operatic companies in America and Australia during the years 1894 and 1895. The party—which included Leedham Bantock, the composer's brother—left Southampton on September 1, 1894, and the first concert given on board the Berlin began with this item :

Overture . . . 'A Gaiety Girl'. Granville Bantock.

The tour embraced the principal cities, including San Francisco, of the United States and of Australia, and the repertoire consisted of 'In Town,' 'The Shop Girl,' 'Gentleman Joe,' &c. On his return—he reached Tilbury on December 5, 1895—Bantock composed for the musical comedy 'Monte Carlo' a song entitled 'Who'll give a penny to the monkey?' the words by his brother Leedham. He says : 'I made more money by that song than by my serious compositions. Kate Cutler sang it with a live monkey on the stage.' In the autumn of 1896 he went on a tour with another opera company as conductor of Stanford's 'Shamus O'Brien,' the itinerary including Ireland.

Although he was actively engaged on the lighter sides of music in order to earn a living, Bantock was ever yearning after the high ideals which have always characterized him throughout his career. On Tuesday, December 15, 1896, at Queen's Hall, London, he gave an orchestral concert. The preface to the programme-book, written by Mr. William Wallace, who also supplied the analyses, said :

If there is a public, be it ever so small, to encourage a native effort of this kind, the welcome will not be met in a churlish spirit ; if, on the other hand, the result of this concert is to be recorded as footnotes of musical history which have already been too often written, those who are represented here to-night will have the satisfaction of failing in most excellent company.

The programme of this daring yet interesting concert was as follows :

PART I.

Overture—'Eugene Aram' - - - Granville Bantock.

Vocal scena—'The Rhapsody of Mary Magdalene' William Wallace.

Fantasia—'The triumph of Cæsar' - - Arthur Hinton.

Recitation music—'The legend beautiful' Stanley Hawley.

boundless energy and ripe musicianship, though not at first. He began with a semi-military band which played in the open air, sometimes in the rain, while the tower was being erected, and with the constant fear of the structure falling upon the conductor and his players. 'The noise of the rivetting of the tower while we were playing,' he says, 'reminded me of the anvil music in "Das Rheingold."' One noticeable feature was the earnest attention displayed by the begrimed or plaster-smudged workmen, who at the luncheon hour congregated round the band-stand listening to characteristic examples of modern music. The 'Charfreitagszauber' from Parsifal, and the Lohengrin Prelude were the prime favourites. The invitation to 'play it again, gov'nor' was frequent and evidently sincere.

THE YARD OF 'BROAD MEADOW': MR. BANTOCK AND HIS POULTRY.

(Photograph by Mr. Roland White, Birmingham.)

This concert, artistically if not financially a success, was followed by a 'British composers' chamber concert' at Steinway Hall, on May 11, 1897, when the subject of this sketch was represented by a set of lyrics entitled 'Songs of Japan,' settings of refined poems written by his gifted wife. In the same year he conducted the music at the French plays given by Madame Jane May at the Royalty Theatre, 'L'enfant Prodigue,' 'Pauvre Pierrot,' &c., this being his last connection with the stage.

An important and far-reaching change in his life came in the autumn of 1897, with the appointment of musical director of the New Brighton Tower orchestra. Here he found full scope for his

He soon, however, succeeded in obtaining a complete orchestra whereby he was enabled to give a series of special classical concerts on Fridays and Sundays so excellent in the eclectic selection of works efficiently performed that they deserved more attention than they received. On successive Fridays in July and August (1898) he performed the first eight of Beethoven's symphonies; on another Friday Rubinstein's 'Ocean' symphony was played in its entirety. Wagner and Mackenzie concerts also entered into the scheme, which was further extended in the following year (1899) by a series of eighteen Sunday concerts of which the programmes were severally devoted to various composers or countries in the following order, beginning May 28 and finishing September 24 :

The concerts prefixed with an asterisk were conducted by their respective composers; the remainder, with the exception of those specially indicated, were conducted by Bantock.

As it was difficult to find time for the adequate rehearsal of all these works, Bantock resorted to the device of running them through during the afternoon duties of the band, although the players were supposed, and indeed engaged, to play dance music for the visitors in the ball room at that time.

AN EDUCATIONAL CORNER OF BIRMINGHAM.

The Midland Institute, which comprises the School of Music, is the rounded building, to which is joined the Central Free Library, entered under the portico at the side. The University is partly shown on the right at the back of the view, the building with the pointed roof.

Thus many an unsuspecting couple tripped 'the light fantastic toe' to the strains of the 'Tannhäuser' overture, to say nothing of Holbrooke's 'Skeleton in armour,' or Wallace's 'Passing of Beatrice.'

At the Elgar concert on July 16, 1899, the 'Variations on an original theme' received their second performance. In 1897 the energetic conductor founded the New Brighton Choral Society, and became conductor of the Runcorn Philharmonic Society, thus widening his interests and extending his rapidly-growing influence as a master-musician. On March 9, 1898, Mr. Bantock married Miss Helena von Schweitzer, who had previously been associated with him in his work in writing the lyrics for the 'Songs of the East,' and other librettos. It was during his New Brighton period that he composed his orchestral variations 'Helena,' on the theme H. F. B.

his wife's initials, a characteristic

1854, the music branch of this well-organized educational centre in Birmingham is now in a flourishing condition, the musical students numbering over seven hundred. The Principal exercises a personal influence over those who come to Paradise Street—that felicitously named thoroughfare in which the school-buildings are situated—in order to devote themselves to the serious study of music.

It is interesting to hear from Mr. Bantock's own lips something about the institution over which he so ably presides. 'The School of Music possesses an excellent and well-equipped teaching staff capable of affording instruction in every branch of the art. With such professors as Mr. Max Mossel (violin), Mr. Willy Lehmann (violoncello), Madame Marie Fromm, Dr. Rowland Winn, Mr. Arthur Cooke, and Mr. G. H. Manton (pianoforte), Mr. Perkins and Mr. Newey (organ), Mr. Breeden, Mr. Robinson, Mr. Mountford and Madame Siviter (singing), and Mr. Rutland Boughton in charge of large classes for rudiments and sight-singing, we have every reason to feel confidence in the future. Mr. Julius Harrison, whose prize cantata "Cleopatra" was performed at the recent Norwich Festival, was a very promising and highly esteemed student, among others who bid fair to win credit for themselves. Successful performances have been given by the operatic class of Gluck's "Orpheus," and "Iphigenia in Aulis," and we now have in preparation "Iphigenia in Tauris." The School possesses an excellent orchestra composed of students and members of the teaching staff, and in conjunction with the Students' Choir very creditable performances have been given from time to time of such works as the following: Brahms's Song of Destiny and Alto Rhapsody; Bach's Magnificat, Sleepers, wake, Bide with us, Praise Jehovah, and Phoebus and Pan; Beethoven's Choral fantasia; Mozart's King Thamos; César Franck's 150th Psalm, &c. The following purely orchestral items have also figured in the programmes of the students' concerts: Pianoforte concertos by Bach, Beethoven, Mozart, Schumann and Liszt; Violin concertos by Bach, Mendelssohn, Max Bruch and Wieniawski; Symphonies by Haydn, Mozart, Schubert, and Glazounow; Debussy's L'après-midi d'un faune, Two dances for pianoforte and orchestra, and Petite Suite; Overtures by Beethoven, Gluck, Cherubini, Glinka, Schubert, Mozart, Berlioz, and others. In this way we have sought to maintain an interest in both classical and modern music.'

Before referring to the latest distinction that has been conferred upon the subject of this sketch, a complete list of his compositions may be given, with dates of first performances, &c.

To enter upon so wide and important a subject as a criticism of Mr. Bantock's compositions would be beyond the scope of this life-story of a very remarkable man. Suffice it to say that he is animated by the highest ideals in whatsoever his hands find to do, whether as a creative artist or as a practical musician. As a master of orchestration he has few equals among native composers, and his wide interest in literature, his love of nature, no less than his poetic spirit, are one and all reflected in his music. Although he is very eclectic in his tastes in music, he has a strong leaning towards the works of Jean Sibelius. He introduced the 'Finlandia' suite to England when he conducted its performance at the concert of the Liverpool Orchestral Society on March 18, 1905. Under the same auspices Sibelius made his first appearance in England on December 2 of the same year, and on March 24, 1906, his 'En Saga' received its first performance in this country. At the concert given by the students of the Birmingham and Midland Institute and School of Music on April 13, 1907, the entire programme was devoted to the compositions of the Finnish composer.

In October last, Mr. Bantock was appointed Professor of Music in the University of Birmingham, in succession to Sir Edward Elgar, the first occupant of the Chair munificently founded by Mr. Richard Peyton in 1904. It is interesting to hear from the new Professor—he modestly abjures the title, preferring to be called Mr. Bantock—his scheme for making the Professorship distinctly practical. 'I propose,' he says, 'to take the students through a regular system of training during the three years of their undergraduate course. I desire to embrace all subjects—for instance, one term to madrigals, another to English church music (Byrd, Blow, Purcell, Wesley and others), one to folk-music, one to orchestration, and so on.' 'A teaching University,' we remark. 'Yes,' he replies, 'and in doing this it is intended to utilise the existing classes in technical instruction at the School of Music, so that the University and the School, though two distinct institutions, will act and react upon each other as far as music is concerned. My chief aim is thoroughly to equip students for their work, and not merely to prepare them for writing artificial "exercises" and to pass examinations for degrees.' In connection with this broad view of musical training it is interesting to hear so eminent a master of orchestration eulogise choral music. 'After all,' he says, 'the orchestra is more or less an artificial and conventional thing, and as old William Byrde wrote in the preface to his "Psalms Sonets & songs of sadnes and pietie" in 1588: "There is not any Musicke of Instruments whatsoever comparable to that which is made of the voyces of men; where the voyces are good, and the same well sorted and ordered." But look at this,' and he points to an old English madrigal. 'We have here a development in unaccompanied choral music, the far-reaching effects and ultimate aims of which we are only just beginning to realise. The future of English choral music will owe a great debt to Elgar's magnificent work in this direction. MacDowell, Delius, Holbrooke, and Boughton have also done useful pioneer work in exploiting the capabilities of the voice in harmonic and choral combinations. The results produced by the various choral competition festivals all over the country cannot be too highly estimated, and it is most desirable that every encouragement should be given to this means of educating the great mass of the population, to whom the more complex art-forms are often unattainable for financial and other reasons.'

To visit Mr. Bantock in his delightful home is a most enjoyable experience. 'Broad Meadow,' formerly a large farmhouse, stands on high ground and commands extensive views. As the visitor walks up the drive and approaches the hall door he may be met by a quintet of geese which greet him with outstretched necks and their own particular tones, whether of welcome or distrust is not quite evident. Parts of the grounds are so well wooded as to recall Purcell's setting of 'In these delightful, pleasant groves.' There are hot-houses in plenty and gardens in abundance. There is nothing contrapuntal or consecutive-fifthal in Mr. Bantock as he shows his guest round the 'place.' No wonder he loves it. In the 'yard' (as shown in the illustration on p. 13) geese and chickens run to greet their master, because they know full well that he will bring them something to eat; and even the rabbit is not forgotten. Inside the house comfort and homeliness join hands, and formality is dispelled by a warm-hearted hospitality in which Mrs. Bantock genially bears her part.

The study is a large room occupying a separate and older wing of the house, and has an outlook over green lawns and woodland shrubberies. Three fine larches and a tall pine stand sentinel opposite, while an avenue of fine old elms and beeches is the unmolested haunt of innumerable birds. The room is lined on two sides with bookcases, and though Oriental literature holds an important place, other fields of thought are well represented. An entire section is devoted to Napoleon, guarded by a chair which came from Longwood at St. Helena and decorated on each arm with the typical N. No inconsiderable space is given to travel, geology and Japanese art. Balzac, Tolstoi, Turgeniev, Fielding and Meredith are the principal contributors to fiction, while in an appropriately dark corner lurks a small collection of criminal literature! Another shelf is devoted to the Greek theatre, and the modern drama is represented by Ibsen, Bernard Shaw, Maeterlinck, Yeats, &c. The walls are hung with many examples from the celebrated series of thirty-six views of Fuji by the Japanese artist, Hokusai, while his ghosts grin a grisly welcome by the door. Several Buddhas keep guard over this unconventional apartment, while camel-bells, Oriental shepherd pipes and lutes furnish a musical element. The room is certainly a refutation of the well-known adage, 'East and West can never meet,' as they mingle here in most amicable profusion. We should not forget to mention the many editions of 'Omar Khayyám,' including one in the original Persian.

Asked for his views on the outlook of music in England, Mr. Bantock kindly responds to the request in the following words:

'The present outlook in England is distinctly encouraging, and a wider appreciation of instrumental and vocal music is more evident than was the case twenty years ago. The younger generation are afforded the means of acquiring an elementary knowledge of the art that was denied to many of their predecessors, and with a more general knowledge of the principles of music we may expect a keener and livelier interest in its future developments. Music is advancing rapidly, and must assuredly continue to advance. The progressive work of Strauss, Elgar, Delius, Debussy and other composers now prominently in the eyes of the world is not likely to meet with more than a temporary opposition on the part of pedants and musical formalists, engaged for the most part in arguing on what is "to be or not to be." The public has already shown its attitude by approving the "survival of the fittest," and refusing to be dosed with the prescribed tonics, while an enlightened body of critics is with us to guide opinion on intellectual lines. The modern orchestra has developed into an organ of incredible power and resource, though, chiefly for economic reasons, signs of a possible reaction in this direction are not wanting. There must be a limit somewhere, and in England it appears to be almost impossible to expect orchestral concerts even to pay expenses. For this reason instrumental music of the colossal proportions expected at the present day, although satisfactory enough to the artistic sense, cannot be justified on prudential grounds. Where, then, are we to turn for an expression of the national sense of music which shall afford strong hope and security for a permanent existence? Nearly every village in England and Wales may be said to possess its choral society, corresponding in some degree with the numerous local orchestras to be found on the continent. If we would but devote the energies which are yearly dissipated in attempting—and in failing—to establish orchestral societies, to the recognition and the fostering of existing choral organizations, I venture to think that the harvest would be rich and profitable. We have not yet, by a long way, exhausted all the possible effects to be obtained from a judicious combination of voices, and if the extraordinary technique that has already been acquired in the orchestra can only be applied to the treatment of the chorus, we are surely justified in making the attempt and in looking forward to the realization of great achievement in the future.

ENTRANCE HALL OF THE MIDLAND INSTITUTE, BIRMINGHAM.

THE MILTON TERCENTENARY CELEBRATIONS.

*O mighty-mouth'd inventor of harmonies,
O skill'd to sing of Time or Eternity,
God-gifted organ-voice of England,
Milton, a name to resound for ages.*

TENNYSON.

Music found an honoured and rightful place in the recent Tercentenary celebrations of Milton's birth. As we showed in our issues of July and December last, both the illustrious poet and his gifted father took a keen and practical interest in music, therefore the claims of the divine art could not be overlooked in an event of such importance and deep interest. The chief musical celebrations were the Meeting of the British Academy, at which the 'Comus' music was performed; the Special service at St. Mary-le-Bow Church, Cheapside; the Banquet at the Mansion House; and the Exhibition at the British Museum.

THE BRITISH ACADEMY.

On Tuesday evening, December 8, the eve of the Tercentenary day, a distinguished company foregathered at the Theatre, Burlington Gardens, in response to the invitation of the British Academy. In the regrettable absence of the President—Sir Edward Maunde Thompson, Director of the British Museum—the chair was taken by the Master of Peterhouse (Dr. A. W. Ward), who delivered a long and appreciative oration on the poet, scintillating with scholarship and rich in apt quotation. In his peroration Dr. Ward said:

Many years before Milton began to write 'Paradise Lost' he had in a single sentence unlocked the secret of the power, supremely attested by that work and its sequel—'Sion's songs, to all true taste excelling.' 'He who would not be frustrate of his hope to write well hereafter in laudable things ought himself to be a true poem.' That elevation of soul, which when in his prose he is least himself, no pedantry of method, no adherence to the scholastic rule of responding by move upon move to every twist and turn of the adversary, no fierceness of partisanship and no fretfulness of temper can enduringly hide—that elevation of soul which awes us in 'Comus' and seems to waft to us 'of pure now purer air' from 'Paradise Lost' and 'Paradise Regained'—what else but this is the motive force of Milton's genius and the chief formative element in the growth and consummation of his style?

Professor Dr. I. Gollancz, Secretary of the British Academy, then read an 'appreciation' written in honour of the occasion by Mr. George Meredith, which concluded thus:

We need him now,

This latest Age in repetition cries:
For Belial, the adroit, is in our midst;
Mammon, more swoln to squeeze the lavish sweat
From hopeless toil: and overshadowingly
(Aggrandized, monstrous in his grinning mask Of hypocritical Peace), inveterate Moloch
Remains the great example.

Homage to him

His debtor band, innumerable as waves
Running all golden from an eastern sun,
Joyfully render, in deep reverence
Subscribe, and as they speak their Milton's name, Rays of his glory on their foreheads bear.

THE 'COMUS' MUSIC.

Sir Frederick Bridge was then called upon to deliver his address on 'Milton and Music.' At the outset of his remarks he said: 'In accepting the kind invitation of the British Academy to speak on some aspect of Milton in connection with music, I have thought it would be well within my own powers and I hope not uninteresting to this distinguished audience, if I ventured to confine most of my remarks to a consideration of the opportunities for Music which Milton has afforded in his beautiful masque of "Comus." I have for a long time been desirous of putting the music of "Comus" before the world in a correct form, and this has never before been done, so I gladly welcome this opportunity.'

Sir Frederick then proceeded to speak of the ripe and skilled musicianship of the poet's father, stating that 'he was one of the contributors to "The Triumphs of Oriana," that splendid collection of madrigals written in honour of Queen Elizabeth and printed in 1601. There we find him in company with such honoured names as Orlando Gibbons, John Wilbye, and other "famous artists," as the editor of the collection styles them; and John Milton's madrigal is, I think, equal to most of those contained in that great collection.'

This madrigal, 'Fair Oran in the morn,' by John Milton, Senr., 'a skilful contrapuntist,' was then sung by members of the choir of Westminster Abbey, and received with evident appreciation by the audience.

'As the father was so gifted,' continued the lecturer, 'the love of Music was very natural in the son. That Milton loved Music, and thought it should have a high place in education, is shown in his tract "On Education," published in 1644. In this the poet says, evidently referring to boys, "The interim (of their more severe lessons) may both with profit and delight, be taken up in recreating and composing their travailed spirits with the solemn and divine harmonies of music . . . which, if wise men and prophets be not extremely out, have great power over dispositions and manners, to smooth and make them gentle."'

In referring to the well-known connection between Henry Lawes and 'Comus,' Sir Frederick thought that in all probability Milton was a pupil of Lawes. After having quoted from Mr. Barclay Squire's interesting preface to the new edition of the 'Comus' music (edited by Sir Frederick Bridge), he went on to say: 'You shall now hear the incidental music to "Comus" which Henry Lawes wrote for its first performance, together with other selections by William Lawes and contemporary composers, which I have suggested for the points in the Masque where music is desired.'

Before the music was performed, Sir Frederick acknowledged his indebtedness to Messrs. Novello for having expedited the publication of the music, whereby it could be performed on that occasion.

The selection was as follows:

MUSIC TO THE MÀSQUE OF COMUS.

Overture	(a) Symphony)	William Lawes (d. 1645).
	(b) Almains
Song (The Attendant Spirit)—From the Heavens now I fly	- - -	Henry Lawes (1595-1662).

Song (Sabrina)—By the rushy-fringed bank	- - -	Adapted from Henry Lawes.
Saraband	- - -	William Lawes.
Jigg	- - -	William Lawes.

March—Lord Zouche's Maske	Giles Farnaby (b. 1560).
Song (The Attendant Spirit)—Noble Lord and Lady bright	- - -	Henry Lawes.
Saraband	- - -	William Lawes.
Song (The Attendant Spirit)—Now my task is smoothly done	- - -	Henry Lawes.

As Henry Lawes does not appear to have set the lyric beginning 'By the rushy-fringed bank,' Sir Frederick Bridge has most ingeniously adapted the words to the music of another song,

'Phyllis, why should we delay?' a charming strain by the 'tuneful Harry,' Milton's friend, contained in Playford's 'Select Musical Ayres' (1652).

The vocal music was ably sung by members of the Choir of Westminster Abbey, the soloists being Master Whippy (The Lady), Master Belton (Sabrina), and Mr. Vivian Bennetts (The Attendant Spirit). The songs were efficiently accompanied by the Grimson Quartet, with the valuable addition of a double-bass (Mr. E. A. Carrodus). These excellent players upon stringed instruments also interpreted the charming instrumental numbers with their well known artistry, and the rendering of the music afforded great delight to the large and highly appreciative audience. Sir Frederick Bridge, who conducted throughout, repeated his lecture on the 'Comus' music at St. Paul's School, Milton's own school, on the following Thursday with no less success than that which attended the performance of the music before the British Academy and their distinguished guests.

SERVICE AT ST. MARY-LE-BOW, CHEAPSIDE.

This old city church, famous for its bells, stands within a stone's throw of the site of the house in which John Milton was born on December 9, 1608. Therefore what more fitting the Tercentenary of that event than the holding of a commemorative service in the church of St. Mary-le-Bow, Cheapside? This took place on the afternoon of Wednesday, December 9, and was attended by a crowded and specially invited congregation which included the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs of London, —the London of Milton's birth.

Music occupied a very prominent place in this service. In the skilful hands of Dr. Walford Davies, who conducted throughout, and with the valued co-operation of Mr. Gerald Bullivant (organist of St. Mary-le-Bow, Cheapside), excellence of execution was assured. The choir, numbering upwards of fifty voices, was drawn from the choirs of St. Mary-le-Bow Church, the Temple Church, and Emmanuel Church, West Hampstead, the soloists being Mr. William Forrington (of the Temple Church) and Mr. Stewart Gardner. An efficient orchestra of strings (eighteen players) and drums, together with the organ, furnished a most effective accompaniment.

The service was preluded and postluded by an instrumental movement specially composed by Dr. Walford Davies. After a special prayer, 'invoking God's blessing on this religious Commemoration of the Tercentenary of Milton's birth,' the choir and congregation sang four stanzas of the Poet's metrical version of Psalm 84, to the tune 'York,' as harmonized by John Milton, senr. Milton's 'Ode on Time,' specially set to appropriate music by Dr. Walford Davies, followed, to which succeeded an eloquent sermon preached by the Bishop of Ripon (Dr. Boyd Carpenter). Music again held sway in a setting by Mr. Gerald Bullivant of Wordsworth's sonnet on Milton, beginning, 'Milton! thou should'st be living at this hour,' an effective composition that deserves recognition as being something more than a pièce d'occasion. The rector (the Rev. A. W. Hutton) then read Mr. Laurence Binyon's 'Commemoration Ode,' and the Rev. Dr. R. F. Horton followed by reading, from the pulpit, two of Milton's sonnets ('On his being arrived at the age of twenty-three,' and 'On his blindness') and the opening lines of 'Samson Agonistes,' 'The reply of patience' (from Milton's sonnet 'On his blindness'), in a setting by Dr. Walford Davies for orchestra and choir, followed the reading of these poems, and then came the musical consummation of the whole service—Parry's 'Blest pair of Sirens,' without which no commemoration of the genius-author of those magnificent words, set to stately strains, could be considered complete. The final hymn was the poet's versification of Psalm 85, sung to the tune known as 'Winchester Old.' Thus, with a few prayers, was concluded a memorable service on a spot which Milton, both in boyhood and manhood, must often have passed as he made his way along the busy haunt of 'Cheape.'

THE MANSION HOUSE BANQUET.

Brilliant indeed was the scene and eminent, in various walks of life, the company which assembled as guests of the Lord Mayor, under the hospitable roof of the Mansion House, on Wednesday evening, December 9. Music was well represented by Sir Frederick Bridge, Dr. W. H. Cummings, Sir Alexander Mackenzie, Sir George Martin, Sir Hubert Parry Bart., and others. During the banquet the band of the Royal Regiment of Artillery (conducted by Mr. E. C. Stretton) played a selection of music entirely by British composers, beginning with an 'Inauguration March' from the pen of Sir Homewood Crawford, the City Solicitor, and ending with a Suite by Henry Purcell. After dinner a select choir from the Guildhall School of Music sang Parry's 'Blest pair of Sirens' (whereby the present writer was enabled to hear the work twice on that auspicious day!) and a madrigal, 'Song on May morning' ('Now the bright morning star'), words by Milton, and effectively set to music by Dr. W. H. Cummings, Principal of the Guildhall School of Music, who conducted both performances. Mention must here be made of the beautifully got-up and daintily illustrated programme-book presented to each guest as a souvenir of the great occasion. This elegant brochure contained some excellent notes on the music of the programme signed 'E. C.,' the thinly disguised name of the writer, Sir Ernest Clarke.

The toasts, in addition to the two Royal toasts, were 'The immortal memory of John Milton,' proposed in a fine oration delivered by Canon Beeching and drunk in silence; 'Poetry,' proposed by the Italian Ambassador (who spoke in French) and responded to by Mr. Alfred Austin, the Poet Laureate; 'Music and the drama,' proposed by Mr. Justice Darling and responded to by Sir Hubert Parry and Mr. A. W. Pinero; and 'The Lord Mayor,' proposed in a charming speech by the American Ambassador (Mr. Whitelaw Reid).

So important and, indeed, so eloquent was the speech of Sir Hubert Parry on this great occasion, and so inadequately were his remarks reported, that, at our urgent request, he has kindly recalled and written out his speech specially for our readers.

SIR HUBERT PARRY ON ENGLISH MUSIC.

'In an assembly which, as the Lord Mayor has said, includes distinguished representatives of politics and literature and all the arts and sciences, I feel compelled at the outset to deprecate the appearance of the prominence accorded to an art which in general public estimation has had, in recent times, perhaps the most ambiguous position of any to which men may devote themselves. But I confess I have the feeling that in the presence of so great a shade the degrees of lesser eminence in the lower plane of ordinary life are equalised; and that it may be admitted that when the memory of John Milton is honoured, Music may be fitly remembered, both on account of his connection with it through his father—one of the distinguished composers in the distinguished old choral style of the late Elizabethan times—and also on account of his own personal love of it. And in this association it is difficult to refrain from reflecting what John Milton would have thought of our present-day developments. That he would have been astonished at the wonderful elaboration to which the Art has been developed by the constant and devoted efforts of successive generations of composers since his time, can hardly be doubted; but he would possibly ask of much of our music, "Where is its dignity? Where its distinction? To what purpose is there so much tinsel about it, and so many trimmings? Where is the noble roll of great periods like those of his own verse? Where is its real depth of feeling and fineness of quality? Why such wild waste of words? Why the abandonment of those artistic ideals which were dear to men of old time?"

'But truly he lived in an age of revolution himself in Art as in other things. He would not be without sympathy with the ardour and enthusiasm which he would recognize; and his spacious liberality of mind, one that had little care for the cloistered virtue which was sheltered from all contact with things that would test its strength, would see through the bewilderment of the general aspect of things to the realities. He would segregate the eternal from the ephemeral. He would welcome the wonderful diffusion of the Art far and wide through the country; he would welcome the fact that the shifting of the centre of social gravity in the democratic direction had freed Music and Musicians from a dependence on the wealthy and the high-born, which was little better than a condition of servitude; and he would see that, with the release from such trammels, England was becoming a nest of singing birds as it was in Elizabeth's time. Many of them sang awry, perhaps, and uttered strange things; but the opportunity was the thing, and with it they were developing their powers and their mastery of artistic resources; and out of apparent confusion the result would be something stable and coherent. In truth, the spread of our Art in the last quarter of a century is amazing to witness. Where twenty-five years ago there were but two or three who could write decently for an orchestra, there are now hundreds. While twenty-five years ago there were but few orchestras which could cope with any but the simplest symphonies, now there are bands in towns all over the country which can deal effectually with the most difficult instrumental works; and even in many parts of the country, associations of amateur instrumentalists are quite able to cope with elaborate orchestral works with admirable success. The effect of such frequent opportunities has been to enhance quickness of apprehension rather than taste and appreciation of the noblest artistic expression. And no doubt people who are easily discouraged shudder in despair at the baseness and vulgarity and blatancy of some of the lower kinds of music of our time. But Milton would have known that progress means expansion, and that expansion is almost inevitably in the lower as well as the higher direction. His firm optimistic belief in the ultimate survival of what is true and sound, while that which is mean and false passes away, would make him discount the more degrading aspects of things.

‘And indeed it cannot be said that the appreciation of the higher things has not gained adherents. At the beginning of the present week we have had a significant proof of it—when the Queen’s Hall was crammed to its utmost capacity with an audience eager to hear the first performance of a work in the highest form of art and of the finest quality; full of all the subtleties of colour, rhythm, harmony and melodic phrase and the very rapture of sincere self-expression; and they received the revelation of its deeply-felt strains with an enthusiasm which was unmistakably genuine. Such things give confidence in the certainty of regeneration.

‘But Milton would not only have thought of Music as a mere pleasure and distraction, he would have thought of the service it could render to Mankind, to Society, to the Nation. In this sense it would have a wider significance. For, indeed, music in its higher phases is the greatest civilizer in the world. It supplies an alternative to baser pleasures, it brings men together in happy co-operation and fellowship, and turns their minds to things which are elevating. If its influence were only spread wide enough, there would be no need of a Licensing Bill, and the jarring discords of the denominations would be resolved into mutual amity. And when we have in our minds the nobility and dignity of Milton’s work, we may recall that we do not naturally excel in the lighter vein, but show our powers best in things which have a deeper significance. Once let the country get away from the silly idea that music is a frivolous thing, for recreation only, and the stale old story that we are an unmusical people will be disproved, and we shall show that England can be great as other nations—even let us boldly hope greater—in the art of music as in literature.’

THE BRITISH MUSEUM EXHIBITION.

The British Museum commemorated the Tercentenary by an interesting exhibition of Miltoniana, manuscripts and printed books, mostly preserved in the nation’s treasure-house. Of musical importance was a volume lent by the Rev. Dr. Cooper Smith, containing over 200 songs composed by Henry Lawes and entirely in his handwriting. This valuable and important collection includes five of the songs in Milton’s ‘Comus,’ which are headed:

The 5 Songs following were sett for A Maske presented at Ludlo Castle before ye Earle of Bridgewater, Lord president of ye Marches, October, 1634.

The first edition of ‘Comus’ (1637) was exhibited, which contains a dedicatory letter addressed to the young Lord Brackley who had acted in the Maske, in which Henry Lawes, the composer of the music, writes of the poem thus:

Although not openly acknowledg’d by the Author, yet it is a legitimate off-spring, so lovely, and so much Desir’d that the often copying of it hath tir’d my pen to give my severall friends satisfaction, and brought to me a necessitie of producing it to the publick view.

The visitor to the exhibition was enabled to see the volume entitled ‘Choice Psalmes put into Musick for three voices. Compos’d by Henry and William Lawes, 1648.’ The book was open at the famous Sonnet written by Milton in praise of his intimate friend Henry Lawes, and prefixed, with other congratulatory verses, to that volume. We give the Sonnet literatim et verbatim:

To my Friend Mr. Henry Lawes.

Harry, whole tunefull and well measur’d song
First taught our English Music how to span
Words with just note and accent, not to scan
With Midas eares, committing short and long,
Thy worth and skill exempts thee from the throng,
With praise enough for Envie to look wan:
To after age thou shalt be writ the man
That with smooth Aire couldst humour best our tongue.

Thou honour’st Verse, and Verse must lend her wing
To honour thee, the Priest of Phæbus Quire,
Thou tun’st their happiest Lines in hymne or *storie.
‘Dante shall give Fame leave to set thee higher
Then his Cajilla, whom he woo’d to sing,
Met in the milder shades of Purgatory.

J. Milton.

Another interesting printed book was the opera ‘Milton,’ composed by Spontini, of which the following is the title:

MILTON, Opera in un atto e in prose dei Signori Tony e Dieulafoy tradotta in versi Italiani da Luigi Balochi, posta in musica da GASPARE SPONTINI. Rappresentata per la prima volta 27 Novembre 1804.

The Rev. A. W. Hutton, Rector of St. Mary-le-Bow, Cheapside, lent the baptismal register of

All Hallows' Church, Bread Street—a building burnt in the Great Fire—which contains the record of the poet's baptism in these words :

The xxth daye of December 1608 was baptized John the sonne of John Mylton, scrivenor.

The exhibition included Milton's Bible and watch, several manuscripts (including the agreement for the publication of 'Paradise Lost'), the earliest editions of the poems and literary works, in addition to a large number of portraits of the poet from the Department of Prints. Among the manuscripts exhibited was the poem on Milton, in the handwriting of Tennyson, the opening lines of which are prefixed to this account of the Milton Tercentenary Celebrations.

Good composition is far less dependent upon acquaintance with its laws than on practice and natural aptitude.

Essay on the Philosophy of Style.

The University of Birmingham has issued an interesting pamphlet, compiled by Professor Granville Bantock, giving detailed particulars of the 'Courses of study for degrees in music' at that University. The Courses, which are announced to begin in October next and will cover a period of three years, 'are intended primarily for matriculated students who are preparing for the degree of Mus. B., but they will also be open to others on payment of the usual fees,' which, we may add, are very moderate. The first year's Course will comprise: A survey of the early development of counterpoint and harmony; The rise of English church music; Folk-songs and national songs; Chamber music; The early English madrigal, and Development of the song; in addition to a Course of ten lectures on Acoustics, to be delivered by Professor Poynting. For the second year's Course the scheme consists of: The modern aspect of harmony and counterpoint; Musical forms; Orchestration; The development of pianoforte music; The organ works of Bach; and the Evolution of the orchestra (illustrated by the development of the Overture and Tone-poem). The third year's Course will be devoted to Critical analysis (Bach's B minor Mass, Wagner's Tristan, and Strauss's Heldenleben); Choral music (as exemplified by various works ranging from Palestrina to Elgar); Opera (from Mozart to Debussy); and the Symphony (from Haydn to Elgar), in addition to a course of twelve lectures on the 'Principles of metre and prosody,' to be delivered by Professor Sonnenschein. This eight-page syllabus, which concludes with the Requirements for the degree of Mus. B., gives lists of the music which will form the basis of the curriculum, in addition to books on the literature of music which 'are recommended for general reading.' So comprehensive and practical a scheme in regard to music has not hitherto been issued by a British University, and Professor Bantock is to be warmly congratulated upon the issue of a document that reflects the greatest credit on his wisdom and his desire thoroughly to equip the student of music for his life-work: moreover, the syllabus is most satisfactory in its broad outlook and in its scheme, not only in furthering the cause of music in Birmingham, but for exerting an influence on the art throughout the country.

As a sequel to the article on Eton College in our last issue, it may not be without interest to record a conversation arising therefrom with a distinguished Etonian, the Hon. Spencer Lyttelton. 'In my day,' he says, 'there was no music-master at all; but Mr. John Foster, still alive and well, was fetched by us boys from London, in I think, 1863, and he became conductor of the newly-organized Musical Society. John Mitchell, one of the lay-clerks of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, though an excellent bass, was the very inefficient organist of the College Chapel. At that time the organ, a very shallow instrument, stood on the south side of the Chapel, and on the occasions when Elvey came from Windsor to play, he was unable to draw some of the stops because they had become fixed through their non-use by Mitchell! The Windsor Choir also sang at the College Chapel, and their music both there and at St. George's Chapel was greatly appreciated by the few of us who had a taste for Church music. On the other hand, some of the boys had a decided objection to any anthem which, from their point of view, unduly protracted "long church." It was customary for them to ask the choir, before the service, "How long will the anthem take?" Some of the anthem books in use were marked "10 minutes" against an anthem that would occupy that time in performance!'

In the same 'house' (Mr. Evans's) with Mr. Lyttelton were Sir Hubert Parry and the recently deceased Sir Edward Hamilton. 'Hubert Parry was the centre of everything musical in Eton during my time,' continues Mr. Lyttelton. 'I can hear him now, thundering away at choruses of Handel and teaching some of us, with difficulty, to appreciate Bach's "48 Preludes and Fugues." He played solos on the Walker organ and sang at the concerts; on one such occasion he appeared as my colleague in "The Lord is a man of war." One of his favourite songs was S. S. Wesley's "When from the great Creator's hand," from the little-known cantata written for the opening of an Exhibition at the Agricultural Hall in 1864. While at Eton he took the degree of Bachelor of Music at Oxford, and I think he also composed at Eton his well-known Te Deum in D. The change which has come over the School in regard to music is immense, and I am glad that my brother, the present Head Master, is giving it encouragement.'

While on this subject, opportunity may be taken of correcting two errors in the article on Eton College. Sir Joseph Barnby resigned the office of Precentor in 1892 in order to become Principal of the Guildhall School of Music; he did not die until the year 1896. Previous to 1868 the entire choir, boys as well as men, of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, served Eton College Chapel. In this connection, Mr. W. A. Frost writes from St. Paul's Cathedral:

Both choristers and lay-clerks belonged to the two foundations, and as I was a chorister from 1859 to 1866, I have the best means of knowing. Our duties were to attend three o'clock Evensong on Saturdays, Sundays, Holy Days and their eves, though not at all on Ash Wednesday or on the six week-days of Holy Week. Whether the Eton boys were at school or on vacation made no difference; and so when Christmas Day came on a Tuesday we had to sing at Eton on thirteen consecutive days, commencing on St. Thomas's eve, Thursday, December 20, and ending with the Circumcision on Tuesday, January 1.

In return, the Eton authorities supplied the choristers with bread, meat, and beer, the bread and beer being sent direct from the College bakery and brewery to the choristers' house in the Horse-shoe Cloisters, Windsor Castle. On leaving the choirs, each chorister received the sum of £15 from Eton, towards an apprentice fee of £25, the other £10 being paid by the Windsor authorities. For the far heavier duties at St. George's Chapel—morning and afternoon service every day throughout the year, with no holidays except a week or fortnight granted to one boy at a time—we had lodging, partial board (Eton doing the rest), and education.

Dr. John E. Borland has been appointed Musical Adviser to the Education Committee of the London County Council. He is to give four afternoons or mornings and two evenings each week during the school year to the service of the Council, and the salary is to be £300 a year. The fact that, after much discussion, the greatest and richest city in the world can see its way to engage only a moiety of the time of a professional musician to deal with the musical needs of a million children and thousands of teachers, would seem to minimise the importance of the post. But it may be hoped that Dr. Borland, as he gets to know the factors of the problem, will be able to concentrate the efforts of teachers on the vital points of musical training and lift the work into the importance it deserves. It is so easy to waste time on futile and unfructifying labour. The promising aspects of the situation are that the army of teachers in London is a highly competent one, and that the natural capacity of the children is unquestionable. Dr. Borland will have the sympathetic interest of all school music educationists in his task.

Dr. E. W. Naylor read an interesting paper before the Musical Association on December 1, when he took for his subject Jacobus Handl (Gallus), a study of some motets from his Opus Musicum, published at Prague in 1568. The main points of Dr. Naylor's discourse were that Handl was a Romantic, in the same sense as is Richard Strauss, by experimenting upon the material of the 16th century as did Schütz with the 18th, and Beethoven and others did with the 19th. All these creative artists had this in common, trying to inoculate the 'beautiful' with the 'strange' (pace Walter Pater in 'Appreciations'). The lecturer supposed that their contemporaries must have thought them more or less demented, just as those of Strauss do now, or at least some of them; but whereas some of our moderns seem to waste their abilities over the trivial, or even the wicked, Handl threw his whole romantic power into the effort—a vain effort, of course—to express the inexpressible in the highest flights of religious dogma.

The Musical Festival proposed to be held at Sydney in the course of next year is taking a practical form. Already a guarantee fund of £420 has been secured, and a large, influential and representative committee have been elected to carry out the details of an event which will be watched with sympathetic interest by music-lovers 'at home.'

A correspondent writes:

Geiger's short poem Vikingen (In Viking) is said to have been translated into English and set to music in or soon after the year 1814. I can find nothing about it at the British Museum. Perhaps some of your readers could furnish some information in regard to this song.

The performance of Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' at the Norwich Festival in October last, has awakened fresh interest in this most beautiful composition. Dvorák was a young man aged twenty-five, when, in 1876, he composed his 'Stabat Mater.' Its publication, however, was delayed until five years later, as it had in the meantime been rejected by a Vienna publisher! Once having attained the dignity of print, the work was not long in making its way to England. On March 10, 1883—not in 1884, as stated in the Norwich word-book—it received its first performance in England, the occasion being a concert of the London Musical Society, conducted by Barnby, at the old St. James's Hall. A year later—March 13, 1884, to be exact—the 'Stabat Mater' was heard at the Royal Albert Hall, under the baton of the composer, when, on this his first visit to England, he was greeted with a very cordial reception. There is no need to enlarge upon the merits of a work which ranks as a masterpiece of a nature-endowed creative artist. If proofs were wanting in support thereof, one has only to point to the poignant chorus 'Eia, Mater,' and the exquisite alto solo 'Inflammatu,' as being gems in the genius-crown of Antonin Dvorák. The forthcoming performance of the 'Stabat Mater' on the 28th of this month by the Royal Choral Society, will be anticipated with interest.

To the list of settings of Milton's poems, &c., given in our last issue (p. 776) should be added the poet's versification of Psalm 84 ('How lovely are Thy dwellings fair'), composed by Spohr as 'a festival anthem.' This work—of which the opening chorus (with solo), in THE MUSICAL TIMES series, is frequently sung—was evidently written by Spohr to the English text. It was produced at the concert of the Sacred Harmonic Society at Exeter Hall, on July 23, 1847, the composer conducting. Professor Edward Taylor may have suggested to his friend Spohr the setting of this Psalm in its Milton metrical version.

Sir Alexander Mackenzie is announced to give a course of three lectures with musical illustrations at the Royal Institution, the subjects and dates of his discourses being as follows: Mendelssohn (February 6), and Chamber Music (February 13 and 20), the latter with the co-operation of the Hans Wessely Quartet. The lectures will begin at 3 o'clock.

English translations of foreign librettos have often caused merriment. Even in these enlightened times there crops up now and then reason for the same hilarity. In the word-book of 'Faust' (Berlioz), as performed at the Queen's Hall Symphony Concert of November 14, we find the following lines sung by Faust:

Life and love rise before me,
Their spell doth overwhelm me,
My tears unbidden set;
Pity! Merciful Heaven! . . .

Upon this immediately followed:

SCENE V.

Mephistopheles

(appearing suddenly).

My sweet innocent child!

No wonder that Faust cried 'Pity!' at the 'stetting' of those 'unbidden tears'; and that Mephistopheles 'appeared' suddenly and exclaimed 'My sweet innocent child!' In order not to hurt the feelings of our excellent English composers and proof readers, it is just as well to mention that the word-book in question was printed in Germany.

The recent correspondence in The Times anent the 'Gastein' symphony of Schubert is upon a subject which greatly interested Sir George Grove, who, with Micawber-like optimism, was always expecting the manuscript to turn up. So eager was he to make known the news of its possible discovery that on January 4, 1897, he telegraphed to the present writer as follows:

Missing Schubert Gastein symphony not improbably found. Grove, Preston Park, Brighton.

This message—handed in at 10.37 a.m., almost immediately after he had heard the news—was promptly followed by a post-card, giving some details of the 'discovery.' Here it is:

I hear to-day from M. Friedländer that a Symphony in C of Schubert's has been found at Coblenz, from which Schubert arranged the String quintet (Op. 163) and which may be the lost Gastein symphony (see Dict. iii., 342b, 344a). Friedländer was going to Coblenz on Jan. 1, and no doubt I shall hear.

Isn't it a curious coincidence it being found just in time for the anniversary? [The centenary of Schubert's death.] And to me it is quite delightful to find it after all the quiet contempt of my friends, — & Co. never sparing me a sneer!! However, we shall soon hear the truth and then can make statements. The Quintet is not a full reproduction of the Symphony in some important respects, and the score seems to be a very interesting one. You will be glad to hear this, I am sure

G. GROVE.

A few days later Grove wrote, also on a post-card, as follows:

I am afraid the Symphony is a false alarm. Friedländer is not quite sure, because the score is with Brahms; but it has valve trumpets throughout and 3 drums, which couldn't be in 1825, even if Schubert was not pretty sure to be satisfied with what he had got, without having recourse to novelties! So it is probably only a scoring of the String quintet. You shall know all as soon as I know it. In haste. G.

Jan. 21, 1897.

Alas! the 'find' proved not to be the 'Gastein' symphony, the recovery of which 'G' so earnestly set his heart upon almost to the time of his death.

It is gratifying to be able to 'report progress' in regard to 'The Hallé Orchestra Pension Fund.' The last balance sheet, dated November 21, 1908, shows that the capital has been increased during the jubilee year of the Orchestra by the sum of £1,646 2s. 6d., which brings the total to nearly £6,000, or, to give the exact figures, £5,980 4s. 5d. Mr. Carl Fuchs, honorary secretary of the Fund and the distinguished chief violoncellist of the Orchestra, writes:

The appeal we made in connection with the fifty years' existence of the Hallé Orchestra has been successful; but the pensions we are able to pay at present are still very inadequate, and we are most anxious to get more donations and legacies. We do all we can ourselves, but, as you know, the incomes of orchestral players are not such as to allow very lavish contributions.

While we warmly congratulate Mr. Fuchs and his colleagues on the results already attained, we gladly again commend this Pension Fund to music-lovers, especially in Manchester and the district, whose circumstances enable them to augment its capital account. The Report does not furnish a form for legacies to the Fund, but no doubt Mr. Fuchs will readily supply all necessary information on that point. Verb. sap.

The arrangements for the forthcoming Newcastle Musical Festival are making satisfactory progress. In addition to the London Symphony Orchestra, the Committee have secured the services of M. Wassili Safonoff as one of the conductors of the festival in conjunction with Dr. Henry Coward. Sir Edward Elgar will conduct one of his oratorios and an orchestral work of his own composition, and Mr. Granville Bantock's 'Omar Khayyám' will be performed under the personal direction of the composer.

Organ blower, to organist who has been practising for an important recital: 'I think you have improved in your playing, sir; you don't take anything like the wind you used to.' A fact!

ELGAR'S SYMPHONY.

ITS FIRST PERFORMANCES: MANCHESTER AND LONDON.

We take up the score of a new musical work to find out what it contains, but we have to wait for its first performance to know what the work really is. The score may raise expectation to the highest point, or it may leave us disheartened and disappointed, but performance alone can confirm or weaken these impressions, or in some cases even reverse them. For there is a certain quantity which has to be reckoned with, but which cannot be calculated or accurately defined: that which lays hold of an audience, and is the breath of life to the work. The composer must feel its heart-beat, and a great interpreter such as Dr. Hans Richter may, by long experience, join him in certainty of its presence, but that life is not written in the score, and is communicated to the hearer through the ear alone. Last month we were able to describe the outline of Sir Edward Elgar's new Symphony in A flat (Op. 55), produced at Manchester by the Hallé Orchestra on December 3, and first heard in London, played by the London Symphony Orchestra, on December 7. We gave examples of its leading themes, and pointed out some of the most striking characteristics in their combination and development. The harder task must now be undertaken of recording something of the impression which the work created at the first and second hearings.

The effect of the Nobilmente theme of the Introduction could be counted upon with certainty, and, its majestic progress completed, we were swept into the conflict of the first movement. In its course a thousand beauties were apparent that only hearing could discover. Most important to those who hoped for a great Symphony was the unity of purpose revealed. Take for example the passage extending from the fortissimo climax in which the first subject is thundered out by the full orchestra, through the gradual diminuendo to the peaceful second subject, and onward again through the Giusto theme to the next mountain-peak of tone from which the strings descend in whirling quaver-passages to take up the first subject again. Here (pages 12 to 19 of the miniature score) the composer has used an extraordinary wealth of material; nearly all the features of the movement are introduced to the audience—in fact it is the business of this part of the symphonic form to make them familiar; but so closely are they linked, and so clearly relevant is each one to the whole scheme of emotional utterance, that the hearer is led on by imperceptible degrees through subtly-changing rhythms, and each detail is realised as part of a great design, like the carving on a Norman arch which adds richness but never interferes with the beauty of the span. The power with which Elgar has bridged the distance from the first emotional climax to the next, is sustained through the elaborate movement in a way which could not be foreseen from the score alone. There was one place, however, where a distinct break was felt, and that was at the point where the arpeggio figure is first heard. It remains to be seen whether, as the Symphony becomes more familiar, the use of this motiv contributes to the whole outline or whether it stands apart. To the writer it was the one point in the movement where it seemed necessary to know the exact idea attached to it by the composer in order to understand his purpose, in fact the only feature which sank the work to the level of programme music.

Both the Allegro molto and the Adagio sounded complete, and balanced one another perfectly; and the moment at which the transfigured melody emerged, played in a wonderfully sonorous pianissimo, was a vivid experience to which it is impossible to find a parallel. Another feature had a new significance in performance; the Lento introduction to the Finale served to focus attention upon the material which is so fully expanded later. Without it the Finale would be incoherent. One lovely fragment:

first heard in the introduction is repeated again and again, and always with an exultant beauty which becomes the central emotion of the Finale and at last culminates in the triumphant assertion of the Nobilmente theme. There is an abruptness about the ending which it is hard to account for, but which is probably deliberately chosen. Perhaps it is caused by the exuberant introduction of the theme:

with a stringendo just before the end. The movement seems to take a new lease of life with the new rhythm, but it is broken again at the fourteenth bar and ended with a terse and emphatic cadence.

The effect of the music upon the two audiences was an interesting study. Both the Free Trade Hall at Manchester and the Queen's Hall in London appeared to be quite full with expectant and attentive audiences, but a difference of attitude could not be ignored. To the Londoners the fact that Elgar had written a Symphony which Richter had declared to be a masterpiece, as well as the news of the effect of its production in the North, was sufficient to make excitement run high and to ensure an immediate triumph, which was emphasised by the magnificent playing of the London Symphony Orchestra. At the end of each movement the composer was called to the platform and enthusiastically applauded. But at Manchester there was more reserve. Through a period of fifty years the Hallé concerts have been pioneers of musical taste in the North of England, and many important works, including Berlioz's 'Faust,' have there received their first English hearing. It was an open question, therefore, whether the concert of December 3 would prove specially memorable.

It was most interesting to watch the somewhat formal appreciation which followed the first movement ripen into enthusiasm as the work progressed. There could be no doubt that it was the slow movement which struck home and called forth the most sympathetic response, but lovely as this is with its pure melody and its delicate colouring, there are more robust features in the two large movements which will make a stronger appeal as the work becomes better known. Even the London performance, which was for us a second hearing, attracted interest and admiration more to the vivid and moving drama of the first movement than to the placid mood of the adagio or even the Nobilmente theme. At the end of the first performance the whole-hearted applause and the double call of the composer to the platform showed that Manchester realised that another important musical event had been added to the long list which the Hallé concerts can boast.

How much of the conspicuous success of the Symphony was due to Dr. Richter's clear insight into both the meaning of the work and the practical needs of the score it is impossible to say, but it owes much to him. He realised both its beauty and its importance in the development of modern instrumental music, studied it devotedly, and brought it to a hearing which showed that, whatever may be said of its details, it is a work of beautiful design, high purpose and, above all, strong vitality. It was this last essential quality which each performance under Dr. Richter made abundantly evident. Elgar's music depends so much upon subtle balance of tone and adjustment of dynamics that a poor performance would have more than usual power to endanger the life of the work. Dr. Richter guarded against this, and although in the first hearing there were details which the fine Manchester orchestra will improve when they play the Symphony again, its vitality was never imperilled. Sir Edward Elgar paid a worthy tribute to the great conductor in offering to him the score of this Symphony, and at the close of each of the two memorable performances the hearers could echo the words of the dedication to Hans Richter—'True artist and true friend.'

The Symphony was repeated at Queen's Hall on December 19 at a special concert given for that purpose by the London Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Richter again conducted the work which, as at the two previous performances, was enthusiastically received by a crowded audience. The Symphony is to be performed, under the composer's direction, at Queen's Hall, on the 1st, 7th, and 16th of this month.

Church and Organ Music.

AN INTERESTING BOOK ON CHURCH MUSIC.*

'Few probably there have been, upon whom, at some period, and under some circumstances, the pure and holy harmony of the choral service has not produced an impression for which they have felt grateful.' These words of Dr. Pusey's are printed upon the title-page (of vol. i.), and thus form the keynote of a valuable contribution to the subject of which it treats. Mr. John S. Bumpus, the author of this pair of volumes, has long been held in high repute as a well-informed and painstaking investigator of English Church Music. The result of his researches and wide reading on a subject so congenial to him is incorporated in these (nearly) 600 pages, which are as interesting as they are rich in information. Here we find history, biography and anecdote, and the reader is furnished with a fund of information pleasantly stated, rather than burdened with opinions that, after all, are of small value compared with facts.

The twelve chapters into which the book is divided cover almost the entire period of English Cathedral music—from the Reformation down to Ouseley, the author having acted wisely in ending his story with Ouseley and, therefore, not treading on the delicate ground of living or recently deceased composers. To mention even a tithe of the good things in the book, or to make adequate quotation therefrom, would occupy more space than we can afford at this season of the year. A few samples may, however, serve to induce our readers to obtain the volumes, which are issued at a reasonable price, and enjoy their contents.

In his opening chapter Mr. Bumpus supplies some little-known information concerning the First Prayer Book of Edward VI., as part of a sketch of church music in England, prior to its adoption in 1549. On page 10 is given the information that the Litany was first sung in England, in St. Paul's Cathedral, on September 18, 1547. How many organists are aware of that fact? One chapter is devoted to a sestet of clerical musicians—Henry Aldrich, Robert Creighton, Sampson Estwick, Valentine Nalson, William Holder, and Luke Flintoft; while another chapter (of twelve pages) tells the story of Boyce's Cathedral Music. In another place we learn that Croft omitted to set the verse 'O go your way into His gates' in his Jubilate in E flat. The autograph (which belongs to Mr. Bumpus) shows that the worthy doctor fully intended to set those words, as he left a blank space for the notes; but as he never completed the canticle, the missing music was supplied by Dr. William Hayes.

It is certainly not of common knowledge that the much-despised Te Deum 'Jackson in F' formed part of a service which included a setting of the Gloria in Excelsis, written no doubt for the full choral celebration of the Holy Communion in use at Exeter Cathedral so far back as Jackson's day. That some church musicians have cultivated a theological turn of mind is proved by Dr. Crotch, who 'was a well-read theologian, and left, in MS., a complete Commentary on the Old and New Testament and the Book of Psalms.' Crotch's Commentary on the Psalms, which is in Mr. Bumpus's possession, bears this statement on the last page: 'I finished writing these notes, Sunday, Aug. 2, 1829. Wm. Crotch.'

Of the two Wesleys, father and son, our author has much to say. When the elder of those distinguished musicians published his Morning and Evening Service in F—'respectfully dedicated to all choirs'—only one cathedral Chapter subscribed for it, and that was Exeter, due solely to the personal influence of one of the priest vicars-choral, the Rev. G. M. Slatter, who had been a pupil of the composer's. Here is a very interesting letter, belonging to Mr. Bumpus, written by Samuel Wesley nearly a century ago:

London, November 28th, 1817.

MY DEAR SIR,—Pray accept my best thanks for your extremely kind offer relative to my little boy. He is a very apprehensive child, and very fond of music; how far he may have talent and voice sufficient to do credit to your valuable instructions, experiment will best show. His temper and disposition I believe to be good, wanting only due discretion, and I know him to be susceptible of kindness, which, with you, I am confident he will meet. My good friend Glenn [music-master of Christ's Hospital] will, doubtless, confer with you fully upon points of necessary arrangement. Meanwhile I trust you will believe me to remain, with much esteem and cordial gratitude, My dear Sir, your greatly obliged

William Hawes, Esq.,
7, Adelphi Terrace, Strand.

S. WESLEY.

That 'very apprehensive child' was Master Samuel Sebastian Wesley, aged ten, and the addressee of the letter was the Master of the Children of the Chapel Royal. The little boy did not, however, become one of the Children of that famous school of English church music until a little later, in 1819. Concerning the beautiful Evening service in D minor by Thomas Attwood Walmisley, Mr. Bumpus says that Walmisley 'was one of the first to show us how effectively broad, unisonous passages may be handled with a free organ accompaniment.' While on this subject we venture to quote the following extract relating to Ouseley's great Service in C major:

This is for a double choir, of eight real parts throughout, and comprises not only a setting of the Office of the Holy Communion—Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, and Gloria in Excelsis—but of every canticle at Matins and Evensong—Venite, Te Deum, Benedicite, Benedictus, Jubilate; Magnificat, Nunc dimittis, Cantate Domino, Deus misereatur: a feat of composition undertaken by no other English composer either before or since. The Venite, it should be observed, is in seven real parts only, a Gregorian Tone in octaves forming a canto fermo in every verse. . . . The service has never been printed, and not more than four scores of the complete work are known to exist.

The many foot-notes in these pages are often of an illuminating, if not of a humorous nature. Here is an example of the latter. In the first half of the last century, when the service at Christ Church, Oxford, was the very worst in England, Dr. Gaisford, the unmusical dean at that time, was no divine, but had an eye to the 'loaves and fishes':

He preached annually on Christmas Day, and this sentence from one of his sermons reverberated into term time: Nor can I do better, in conclusion, than impress upon you the study of Greek literature, which not only elevates above the vulgar herd, but leads, not unfrequently, to positions of considerable emolument.

In regard to anecdotes, Kent seems to have been somewhat of a Handelian in his composition methods, with this difference, that he occasionally 'owned up':

He not only adopted the style of Croft, but even pillaged his ideas, and avowed it, as if it were a matter of course. From Bassani and other Italian composers he borrowed without any acknowledgment whatever, as may be seen by a small volume, lettered 'Mr. Kent's Notes,' in the Library at S. Michael's College, Tenbury.

When, a few years before his death, Kent presented some of his compositions to Trinity College, Cambridge, he not only received the thanks of that body, but the Master informed him that the College had voted him a piece of plate, value ten pounds. Upon Kent being asked in what form it should be presented, he replied, 'A tankard!'

The scope of the information given in these exhaustive pages is very wide, as for instance when and where certain anthems and services first appeared, and the whereabouts of the autographs of many unpublished compositions. In addition to an appendix, amplifying the matter that is given in the body of the book, there is a useful bibliography of the English Cathedral Service, confined to books published during the last century; and, to crown all, there is a copious index covering seven pages, with three columns to a page, thus filling twenty-one columns of references printed in small type. There are also many illustrations—portraits, views, and facsimiles, all, with two exceptions, reproduced from originals in the author's own library. The only fault we have to find with Mr. Bumpus is that he does not give the sizes of the originals of the facsimiles; and why does he use the word 'anthemic'? But these are as spots on the sun, and do not detract from the value of a compilation that is a creditable piece of work and that merits a large circulation.

CHURCH MUSIC IN SCOTLAND.

It is not so very many years ago that any suggestion of a church choir festival north of the Tweed—except in the Episcopalian churches—would have been looked upon as a sheer impossibility. The change that has taken place in this respect is little short of marvellous, yet at the same time it is most gratifying and deserving of all encouragement.

Now comes the news from Aberdeen that—as an offshoot of the Musical Competition Festival to be held there this year—a church choir festival service has been arranged to take place at the granite city, in the Music Hall, on a Sunday afternoon in June. The idea originated with Professor Charles Sanford Terry, Professor of History and Archæology in the University of Aberdeen, and an ex-chorister, under Stainer, of St. Paul's Cathedral. At a recent meeting of the Festival committee the Professor, in making his proposals, said there were three qualifications to which all would assent: (1) the service must be a religious service and not in the nature of an entertainment; (2) it must be absolutely inter-denominational; and (3) the music must, at first, be of such a standard as would make it possible for the greatest number of church choirs to participate. In regard to the second condition, the Professor stated that the proposed service had the approval of Bishop Ellis and Principal Marshall Lang: the latter, by the way, although an eminent Presbyterian divine, is father of the Archbishop-designate of York.

The proposal of Professor Terry was unanimously agreed to, and he was appointed honorary conductor for the year. In addition to psalms and hymns to be sung by the congregation—a most important essential—it was agreed that the festival music should be Smart's Te Deum in F, Barnby's anthem 'King all glorious,' and Handel's Hallelujah chorus, and, moreover, that all these should be rendered with full orchestral accompaniment!

As to the inter-denominational nature of the proposed service, the Aberdeen Free Press of December 9 states that already over twenty churches have intimated their desire to participate, and are thus distributed among the Protestant bodies: Established Church, 8; Episcopal Church, 2; United Free Church, 12; Congregational Church, 1; and Wesleyan Methodist, 1. Who, after this inter-communion of churches brought about through the divine art of music, will question the right of Aberdeen to the name Bon Accord?

GLOUCESTER CATHEDRAL AND MUSIC FOR THE PEOPLE.

The Dean and Chapter of Gloucester and Dr. A. Herbert Brewer, organist of the cathedral, are to be very warmly congratulated upon the 200th Free Recital of Sacred Music which took place on December 2, in the presence of a congregation estimated at between 3,000 and 4,000 people. Details of this interesting and gratifying celebration are given by our Gloucester correspondent on p. 42.

It should be recalled, however, that these well-arranged and highly-appreciated music-makings originated with Dean Butler (now Master of Trinity), and that the first was held, under the direction of the then cathedral organist, Mr. C. Lee Williams, on October 14, 1886. In the intervening twenty-two years these Free Recitals of Sacred Music, as they are called, have been continued twice a month during the winter months, to the great delight of the good people of Gloucester. 'Our object,' said Dean Butler in initiating the scheme, 'is not so much to advance the cultivation of this great and noble art [of music]—for which important end other means are elsewhere provided—as to bring under the notice of those who are least instructed in music the simplest, most pathetic, and most majestic passages from oratorios, anthems, chorales, and hymns.' The congregation always have their share in these recitals by joining in a hymn, the singing of which is not the least impressive feature of these informal gatherings in the grand old cathedral of Gloucester. Such an example, as an elevating influence in the cities where they are placed, should surely be followed by other English cathedrals.

THE NEW ORGANIST OF SOUTHWARK CATHEDRAL.

Mr. Edgar Tom Cook has been appointed organist and choirmaster of Southwark Cathedral, in succession to Dr. Madeley Richardson, who has resigned that office. Mr. Cook was an articulated pupil of Mr. Ivor Atkins, organist of Worcester Cathedral from 1898 to 1902, and since the latter date he has been assistant-organist of Worcester Cathedral. Since 1897 he has been organist of St. Leonard's Church, Newland, Malvern. In addition to the thorough cathedral training he received at the hands of Mr. Atkins, and his subsequent experience in cathedral work, Mr. Cook is a Bachelor of Music at Oxford University, a Fellow of the Royal College of Organists, and a Licentiate of the Royal Academy of Music. He is therefore well equipped for the duties which await him in London. In congratulating Mr. Cook on his appointment, we wish him all success in his new sphere of work.

A HULL WORTHY.

Through the instrumentality of Dr. G. H. Smith, of Hull, a brass has been placed in Holy Trinity Church, in that town, bearing the following inscription:

In memory of
GEORGE JAMES SKELTON
Born May 9th 1801,
At rest Feby. 11th 1868.
For thirty years organist of this church,
A musician of much skill
A man of the highest honour & integrity.

This tablet is erected by a few friends, in the church he loved so well & served so faithfully.

The late Dr. J. B. Dykes said it would be a lasting disgrace if Skelton's work in the town was not perpetuated by a memorial. This was nearly forty years ago, but various obstacles have prevented the realization of the memorial until now. Mr. E. O. Dykes, the only surviving brother of Dr. Dykes, has acted as treasurer, and there has been no difficulty in raising funds for perpetuating the memory of a worthy and distinguished musician.

We regret to record the death, on December 20, of Mr. Robert De Lacy, in his seventy-ninth year. For the long period of forty-one years he has been a valued member of the choir of St. Paul's Cathedral—first as a supernumerary, he having been appointed in 1867, and since 1880 as a vicar-choral. Mr. De Lacy, who was formerly an excellent trumpet player, discharged his duties at St. Paul's until within a few days of his death.

SPECIAL SERVICES.

Brahms's 'Requiem' was sung, accompanied by full orchestra, at St. Paul's Cathedral on December 1 with its wonted impressiveness. The service was preceded by the De profundis composed by Sir George Martin, who conducted throughout. Mr. Charles Macpherson was at the organ, and the presence of a large congregation again testified to the power of music in deepening the solemnity of the season of Advent.

Haydn's 'Creation' (Parts 1 and 2) was performed at the Oratorio Service at Brixton Church on Sunday afternoon, December 6. The accompaniments were played by a full professional orchestra led by Mr. F. Weist-Hill, and the choral portion of the genial work was sung by the Brixton Oratorio Choir, numbering upwards of 120 voices. Mr. Welton Hickin was at the organ, and Mr. Douglas Redman, organist of the church, conducted. On Sunday afternoon, February 7, Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' is to be sung under similar conditions.

Spohr's 'Last Judgment' was sung by an augmented choir at St. Paul's Parish Church, Deptford, on December 8. Mr. G. E. Millard, organist of the church, conducted, and Mr. A. E. Denman was at the organ.

Spohr's 'Last Judgment' was rendered by the choir of All Saints', Hatcham Park, on December 6, under the direction of Mr. C. T. Couch, who presided at the organ.

Handel's 'Jephtha' was performed in St. John's Presbyterian Church, Kensington, on December 9, by the choir of the church, assisted by the St. John's Choral Society, under the conductorship of Mr. Harold Jenner. Mr. E. Douglas-Smith presided at the organ.

Bach's 'Christmas Oratorio' (Parts 1, 2 and 3) was sung at Monkwearmouth Parish Church, Sunderland, on December 7. The soloists were Miss Gertrude Todd, Mrs. R. W. Waddle, Mr. F. Bailey and Mr. R. W. Waddle. The choir, which numbered fifty voices, consisted, with the exception of two visitors, of members of the church choir. The work was accompanied on the organ by Mr. R. F. Jarman, organist and choirmaster of the church.

Bach's 'Christmas Oratorio' was sung on December 15, for the third time, by the choir of St. George's, Perry Hill, S.E. Mr. B. Vine Westbrook, organist and choirmaster of the church, presided at the organ, and Mr. C. S. Poole, organist of Blindley Heath, conducted.

Spohr's 'Last Judgment' and Bach's 'Christmas Oratorio' (Parts 1 and 2) were sung at Preston Parish Church during Advent, when the choir was assisted by the members of St. George's and St. Thomas's choirs. Mr. J. E. Adkins, organist and choirmaster, who was at the organ, is to be congratulated upon his introduction of Bach's oratorio into Preston. One of the four services was attended by upwards of a thousand people.

Brahms's 'Requiem' was sung at Ripon Cathedral on December 18 under the direction of the organist, Mr. C. H. Moody. Mr. G. T. Pattman, organist of St. Mary's Cathedral, Glasgow, was at the organ, and the pianoforte, harp and drums were respectively played by Mr. Cecil Richards, Mr. Fred Haslam and Mr. Gordon Cleather.

On September 9, the choir of Grahamstown Cathedral, Cape Colony, gave a recital of English Cathedral Music, illustrating its evolution from 1550. The recital consisted of anthems composed by Farrant, Gibbons, Purcell, Attwood, Goss, Wesley, Stainer and Stanford, which were sung under the direction of and accompanied by Mr. W. Deane, organist of the cathedral. A very large and appreciative congregation was present.

The Rev. Bernard Everett, minor canon of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, delivered an entertaining lecture at the Royal Albert Institute, Windsor, on December 1, when he took for his subject 'Some musicians of the Chapel Royal, St. James's.' Canon Edgar Sheppard, sub-dean of the Chapels Royal, presided, and among the interesting illustrations composed by musicians formerly connected with the venerable sanctuary, were two pieces from the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book—a 'Gigg,' by Byrde, and a 'Spanish Pavane,' by Dr. John Bull—which were played on a virginal and spinet respectively, by Dr. Walter Alcock, the present organist and composer of the Chapels Royal.

'A Kalendar of Hymns Ancient and Modern for the year of grace 1909,' compiled by the Rev. R. S. Genge and published by Mr. Henry Frowde, will be found useful in several respects, as it contains a Table of Lessons, Proper Psalms, and other serviceable information.

The organ in Denstone College, Staffordshire, having been rebuilt by Messrs. Brindley & Foster, was re-opened on St. Cecilia's Day (November 22) by Mr. Rawlinson Wood, director of music at the College.

Mr. E. H. Lemare is giving a series of organ recitals in America which will last three months, after which he will return to England.

Reviews.

Fair Oriana, seeming to wink at folly. By Robert Jones.
Fair Cithærea presents her doves. By John Lisley.
Hard by a crystal fountain. By Thomas Morley.
Come, blessed bird. By Edward Johnson.

Madrigals, all for six voices, edited by Lionel Benson.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Mr. Lionel Benson is rapidly approaching the completion of his task of editing that splendid collection of Elizabethan madrigals known as the 'Triumphs of Oriana.' As soon as the remaining numbers—only four, we think—are published in this practical and inexpensive form, the entire set will doubtless be issued as a gift-book in one volume, probably with an historical preface.

The instalment under notice includes 'Hard by a crystal fountain,' by old Thomas Morley, a glorious madrigal which, in its contrapuntal ingenuity and melodic beauty, is rich in choral potentialities. And how fresh, in spite of its three hundred years, is the music! Robert Jones, the composer of 'Oriana, seeming to wink at folly,' is the author of 'The Muses Gardin for Delights, or the fift Booke of Ayres, onely for the Late, the Base-vyoll and the Voyce' (1610), the words of which Mr. Barelay Squire reprinted seven years ago. In the preface to that dainty little volume Mr. Squire says, 'Of Jones's merits as a composer it is not possible to speak decisively owing to the unfortunate loss of some of the part-books of his madrigals. He was evidently one of the little group of English composers who were educated as polyphonists, and were the first to introduce the new homophonic style which sprang up in Italy at the beginning of the 17th century.' Robert Jones, a celebrated lutenist and noted for his taste in the selection of the words he set to music, took the degree of Bachelor of Music at Oxford University in 1597, after 'he had studied music for sixteen years.' His setting of 'Fair Oriana' furnishes an excellent and genial example of his powers as a composer.

Of John Lisley, the composer of 'Fair Cithærea presents her doves,' very little is known, but Edward Johnson, to whose credit can be placed 'Come, blessed bird,' was a 16th-century musician 'expert in the Arte.' He is said to have provided some of the music for the festivities on the occasion of Queen Elizabeth's visit to Lord Hertford, at Elvetham, in September, 1591, on which occasion 'this spectacle and musick so delighted her Majesty, that shee desired to see and hear it twice over.' When, in 1594, he took the degree of Bachelor of Music at Cambridge University, Johnson asked to be examined by Dr. Bull and Dr. Dallis! But these interesting excursions into the byways of the 'Triumphs of Oriana' must be restrained by reason of space. It need only be said that Mr. Lionel Benson has discharged his editorial duties with scrupulous care and fidelity. In so doing he has made these rich and rare gems of choral music eminently practical; their study will afford endless delight to all who can appreciate the pure vocal strains of that glorious period in English music, the madrigalian era.

Studies and memories. Illustrated. By C. V. Stanford.

[Archibald Constable & Co., Ltd.]

With the exception of the first essay, 'The case for national opera,' the whole of the sixteen chapters forming this volume have previously appeared in various periodical publications or have been otherwise published. Beginning with 'The development of orchestras in England,' a paper written in 1883, the contents cover a period of a quarter of a century, but as these 'studies and memories' have been reprinted without having been revised, doubtless the author has in some respects changed his views on certain points.

'The case for national opera' is an elaboration of the argument which Sir Charles Stanford stated in a letter to The Times, written on Christmas-eve five years ago, a letter which drew forth a leading article on the subject in the same journal on December 28, 1903. In summing up his argument, the author now asks for 'a site, a building costing £100,000, and £10,000 a year for music,' the last-named amount to be provided by the State. As The Times leader-writer said: 'The cost is considerable,' and the question naturally arises, 'Where is the money to come from?'

To the general reader the most interesting portions of the book will be the 'memories' of Tennyson, Ernst Frank, Brahms, Joseph Robinson and Joachim; these are brightly-written and are of permanent value.

Song of triumph. For the organ. By John E. West.

The Office of Holy Communion. Set to music in the key of A. By John E. West.

Recital organists, technically well equipped, of which the numbers are increasing day by day, may be glad to have their attention directed to a well-composed organ piece by one who well knows the potentialities of the instrument. Mr. West has chosen the binary sonata form for the exercise of his muse, and in carrying out this design he reveals that ripe musicianship which is fruitful unto good works. The 'Song of triumph' opens, Andante maestoso, with a striking subject in the key of F, one that at once rivets the attention. A transition passage, contrapuntal and agitated in character, leads to the tranquil second subject, introduced without pedals. The development section shows the hand of a master in the effective handling of his materials and the resourcefulness of inventive ingenuity—fugue, counterpoint, augmentation and imitation, all combining to show the constructive skill of the composer. The recapitulation follows in due course, and the work is brought to a triumphant conclusion, perfectly in keeping with the title of the piece, by a brilliant cadenza passage forming an imposing coda with a somewhat unusual cadence. The 'Song of triumph,' which is dedicated to Sir Hubert Parry, needs a good pair of hands and feet and an adequate organ to do it justice, but the work is one that will well repay earnest study by reason of its technical and artistic excellence.

To his well-known settings, in the key of A, of the Morning and Evening canticles, Mr. West has added a complete Communion Service. In so doing he has set the crown upon an achievement which not only enhances his well-established reputation, but adds to the rich store of modern church music a worthy example of creative and skillful musicianship. To name the excellencies of the setting would necessitate the pointing out of nearly every bar. Suffice it to say that vocal contrast is in abundant evidence and that the accompaniment, evidently conceived orchestrally, is rich in opportunities for the display of a good organ in the hands of a thoroughly competent organist. A well-trained and fully-equipped choir, of which there are now so many in our churches, is needed to do justice to a Service which, by reason of its inherent merits, is appropriately dedicated to Sir George Martin and the choir of St. Paul's Cathedral.

Obituary.

PROFESSOR ALBERT HERMANN DIETRICH died recently at Berlin in his eightieth year. He is chiefly known to fame through the praise which Robert Schumann, who called him one of his most gifted pupils, lavished upon him. After receiving musical instruction from Julius Otto, Rietz and Moscheles, he came to Schumann at Düsseldorf in 1851 and remained with him till the catastrophe which put an end to the master's activity. From 1861 to the end of the eighties, he was Courtkapellmeister at Oldenburg, after which he moved to Berlin, where he was appointed a 'Royal Professor' and member of the Academy of Arts. His works include a Symphony in D minor, two operas and many choral works. He also published an interesting volume of 'Recollections of Johannes Brahms,' with whom he was on intimate terms till the master's death.

AUGUSTE VIANESI, the well-known conductor, died on November 11, at New York. Born at Leghorn, November 2, 1837, he became a pupil of Pacini and Döhler. In 1857 he went to Paris with a letter of introduction to Rossini; was appointed conductor at Drury Lane Theatre, London, in 1859; and held similar posts afterwards in New York, Moscow, and St. Petersburg, and again in London, Philadelphia and at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York, where he conducted a season of German Opera in 1892 and 1893.

PAUL TAFFANEL, perhaps the most renowned flute virtuoso of his time, and an artist of many sterling qualities, died at Paris on November 22. Born at Bordeaux on September 16, 1844, grandson of a violin maker, and son of a Bandmaster of the National Guard, he came of a musical stock and early in life showed exceptional gifts. After passing very successfully through the Paris Conservatoire, he became a member of the orchestra of the Opéra Comique in 1864, of the Grand Opéra, and in 1867 of the famous concerts of the Conservatoire. He founded a Wind-instrument Society which gave delightful concerts not only in France, but in England, Germany and Russia. In 1890 he was appointed third, and in 1893 first conductor at the Grand Opéra, in succession to M. Colonne.

PROFESSOR ERICH WOLF DEGNER, director of the Grand-Ducal Music School, died on November 18, at Weimar. Born near Chemnitz, on April 8, 1858, he was renowned chiefly as a theoretician and most excellent teacher. His compositions include a Symphony in E minor, a choral work, 'Martha and the Mother,' overtures, choruses, organ and pianoforte pieces. He also won fame as an organist.

SIR WALTER PARRATT'S INAUGURAL LECTURE AS PROFESSOR OF MUSIC AT OXFORD.

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

A large, influential and appreciative audience welcomed the new Professor of Music, Sir Walter Parratt, on November 11, when he gave his first professorial lecture in the Sheldonian Theatre, taking as his subject 'The appreciation of music.' The lecturer said it was a laudable custom for a new professor to begin by saying some few words upon the work and influence of his immediate predecessors. This he had the greatest pleasure in doing, as the last three professors of music had all been his personal friends; moreover, it was only during their tenure of office that the examinations in music had been taken seriously. There was great danger at the present time of the work of Sir Frederick Ouseley being undervalued, but he (Sir Walter) would emphatically say that no professor of music had done so much to place the examinations on a firm basis. Nothing worse could be imagined than the state of things when Ouseley accepted office in the year 1855, for even the exercises sent in for the degrees of Bachelor and Doctor in Music could not by any means be proved always to have been composed by the candidates themselves. Ouseley not only altered all this, but he inaugurated such an excellent scheme that his methods have needed but little alteration at the hands of his successors. A glance at his papers of the year 1862 showed how much was covered by the questions; indeed at that time no higher standard could possibly have been set, without entirely ruining the examination.

No worthier successor to Ouseley could have been found than Sir John Stainer, who was not only his (Ouseley's) friend, but to some extent also his pupil, whose vivifying personality had done much for music in general and for church music in particular. Ouseley discontinued the performance of the exercise for the Bachelor degree, and Stainer made optional the performance of that for the Doctor's degree.

What should he (Sir Walter) say about his friend and immediate predecessor, Sir Hubert Parry? He was indeed very various. There was the country gentleman managing his estates with minute care, the country magistrate with an attractive tinge of Socialism, who fined the offender five shillings and afterwards rushed round and paid the fine himself, the—at times too ambitious—motorist, the fearless yachtsman, the musical historian, and the Director of the Royal College of Music. The questions he set were the very poetry of examination papers. Parry, in his opinion, had only one fault, he made the position of his successor extremely uncomfortable.

Dealing with music in general the new professor quoted the opinions of some of the ancient philosophers on the subject of the divine art, but he warned his audience that in all probability those several philosophers had never heard a note of what we should now call real music. Still, it was only fair to say that if they had heard some of the very latest examples of the art their opinions would have been considerably strengthened.

In his (the lecturer's) opinion, music must in some ways have deteriorated since Elizabethan days, for at that time vocal music was a combination of melodies equal in import. It was a pity in these our days that official examiners in elementary schools were recommending the exclusive use of unisonous music. That, he thought, was a mistake, for rounds, glees and part-songs should certainly be included. Music, more than any other art, seldom stood alone, for it was intimately associated with poetry, painting and acting, and so it came about that the opera was the most attractive form of music for those who were unmusical.

The main difficulty in the present day of the comprehension of really fine music, was the power to grasp and to follow the labyrinth of the workings of the inside parts, and more forcibly to illustrate his remarks Sir Walter played on the pianoforte Chopin's Nocturne in B (Op. 32, No. 1), showing pure melody in only the uppermost part. Then, in order to show the inner workings of the parts, he gave Bach's noble Prelude and Fugue in C sharp minor, No. 4 of the 'Great 48.' Lastly he played, on the organ, Bach's Fantasia in G, to show the ramifications of the five-part writing in the second movement (Alla Breve). The lecture from first to last was as instructive as it was interesting, and we look forward with pleasure to hearing the new professor next term.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The students of the operatic class gave a performance on December 11, in the concert-room of the institution, of the first act of Mozart's 'Magic flute' and the second act of Bizet's 'Carmen,' under the direction of Mr. Edgardo Lévi. Words of encouragement may be extended to Miss Margaret Isnay, who personated Pamina, and to Mr. James Saker, who embodied Monostatos in Mozart's work. Mention is also due of Miss Gladys Booth and Messrs. Cecil Pearson, Henry Sanders and Harry Milner. The title-rôle of 'Carmen' was entrusted to Miss Bella Newstead, who acted with self possession, and whose rich mezzo-soprano voice found a congenial medium in the music. Mr. Thomas Gibbs did fairly well as Don José, and Mr. James Saker again distinguished himself, this time as Escamillo. The choruses in both works were rendered with freshness of tone and commendable crispness of attack, and much skill was shown by the dancers in 'Carmen.'

A pleasing feature of the orchestral concert given by the students at Queen's Hall on December 15, under the direction of Sir Alexander Mackenzie, was the production of three dances severally named 'Gigue-minuet,' 'Country Dance and Choral' and a Dance of Dervishes, composed by S. Hartley Braithwaite. These little pieces testify to the composer's ability to invent pleasing melody and to write tastefully for the orchestra. Settings of 'Four Shakespeare songs,' by Eric Coates, proved sympathetic and refined, the music to 'Orpheus with his lute' being particularly pleasing. The lyrics were neatly sung by Miss Gertrude Newsom. Miss Dorothy Craske, being unable to appear as announced, her place as soloist in Liszt's Pianoforte concerto in A, No. 2, was taken at a few hours' notice by Miss Jessie Bristol, and in a manner highly creditable to the Academy and to herself. Other promising pianists were Miss Elsie Jones, who opened the concert with Saint-Saëns's fantasia 'Africa,' and Miss Alma Goatly, who was heard in the Andante and Finale from Tchaikovsky's Concerto in G (Op. 44). Mr. Henry O. Parsons was the soloist in Glazounow's Violin concerto in A minor (Op. 35), and Miss Louie James sang the aria 'Lebt wohl,' from Tchaikovsky's 'Joan of Arc.'

The following awards have been made:—Battison Haynes prize (composition) to Ethel F. Woodland (London). Hine prize (composition) to Francis Hutchens (New Zealand). Sainton-Dolby prize (contraltos) to Mary N. Davies (Llanelli). Rutson Memorial prize (sopranos) to Eugénie Ritte (London). Bonamy Dobree prize (violoncello) to Audrey S. Whitaker (Palermo). Westmorland Scholarship (male vocalists) to James M. Blair (Uddingston, Scotland). Potter Exhibition (female pianists) to Helen M. Dodd (Newcastle-on-Tyne).

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Hermann Goetz's opera 'Francesca' was performed for the first time in England on December 3, at His Majesty's Theatre by the Royal College of Music. The selection of such a work implied much belief in the capacity of students, and the result may be said to have on the whole justified this confidence. 'Francesca' was one of the latest, if not the last work of the gifted composer whose early death is one of the tragedies of musical history. Goetz did not live to quite complete the opera. On his deathbed he requested that the score and other manuscripts should be placed in the hands of Ernst Frank, and that he should complete the scoring and prepare the work for the stage. The story of the opera is the well-known one of the loves of Francesca and Paolo. There are many striking situations, and the pathos of the fatal attachment is touchingly made evident. The music is often beautiful but sometimes laboured, and further, it fails in distinctive characterization.

The chief characters were cast as follows:

Lanciotto Malatesta	Joseph Ireland (exhibitioner).
Francesca	Viola Tree (student).
Guido da Polenta	John W. Birrell (student).
Paolo	Frank Webster (scholar).
Diana	Jean Fyans (exhibitioner).
Pietro	George Baker (scholar).

Miss Viola Tree displayed considerable histrionic gifts and musical capacity in the arduous title-rôle. Mr. Ireland was not quite so happy, and his voice was hardly under control, but there were welcome glimpses of a smooth, lyric style. Miss Fyans was conspicuously clever both in acting and singing, and Mr. Birrell, Mr. Webster and Mr. Baker showed competence. The chorus, which was furnished by the College students, prepared by Mr. S. P. Waddington, exhibited excellent training, and the dances were very effectively contrived. The band, composed mainly of students of the fair sex, played with great fluency. The opera was sung in English, to an excellent version prepared by the Rev. Marmaduke E. Browne. Sir Charles Stanford conducted with his customary ability. It is a matter for regret that so much skill and pains should have been expended upon only one performance. Mr. Richard Temple was stage director.

'The Professional Pocket-Book, or daily and hourly engagement diary for 1909,' has been published by Messrs. Keddall, Carte & Co. As for many years past, it fully merits its claim to be 'specially adapted for professional engagements,' and among the 'information' section is a calendar for 1910, which will be found useful for those who make their plans far in advance.

THE GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

The winter term orchestral concert given by the students took place in the hall of the City of London School on December 9, when Dr. W. H. Cummings secured a praiseworthy performance of Mendelssohn's 'Scotch' Symphony in A minor. Quite a memorable feature of the occasion was the excellent violoncello-playing by Mr. Norman Attwell in Saint-Saëns's Concerto (Op. 33). Tone, phrasing and expression were so greatly above the average of student achievement that we should hear much in the future of Mr. Attwell. The vocalists were Miss Muriel Clark and Miss Hilda Cornfoot, the latter gifted with a pure and flexible soprano voice which has been excellently trained.

Among the list of artists engaged by Mr. Neil Forsyth for the forthcoming Royal Opera season at Covent Garden, no fewer than four are ex-students of the Guildhall School of music, namely, Miss Marie Alexander, Miss Edith Clegg, Miss Maria Velland and Mr. D. Byndon-Ayres.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

At the concert given on November 26, Svendsen's 'Carnival in Paris' was performed. It is an effective piece with some brilliant moments, and there are many passages of delicate beauty. Zimbalist gave a refined performance of Beethoven's Violin concerto, and further exhibited his executive skill in an Introduction and Tarantelle by Sarasate. Sir Charles Santley contributed a Recitative and aria from Handel's 'Ottoe,' and had a generous reception. Mozart's 'Haffner' Symphony was another item, and the concert concluded with the Scherzo 'L'apprenti sorcier' by Dukas, which contained far more noise than music. Mr. Henry J. Wood conducted.

Mr. Delius's new orchestral work 'In a summer garden' was introduced for the first time at a concert given on December 11, the composer conducting. The work cannot be said to have made a distinct impression. A certain vague, musing dreaminess characterises most of the music, but there are sections that have undoubted beauty. The moods portrayed seem at a first hearing of the work to be too persistently melancholy. Perhaps the general effect suffered by a somewhat hesitant and flabby performance. The concert opened with Dvorák's gorgeous and exhilarating 'Carneval' overture, splendidly played under Mr. Landon Ronald, who conducted the concert, except the piece by Mr. Delius. Liszt's Pianoforte concerto in A, and a Prelude, chorale and fugue were played in fine style by Busoni. Brahms's second Symphony was also performed, and here again Mr. Ronald distinguished himself by his fine reading of the music.

PATRON'S FUND CONCERT.

The music for the eleventh Patron's Fund Concert—which took place at Bechstein Hall on December 7—was supplied by five students from the Royal College of Music, three who had studied privately, and one from the Manchester College of Music. The last-named, Mr. Edward Isaacs, contributed the most important work, a Trio in E flat for pianoforte, violin and violoncello, which was effectively rendered by the composer and two of his fellow students, Mr. N. Blinder and Mr. J. Leo Smith. It cannot be said that the Trio possesses great originality, and the pianoforte part is too prominent; but the themes are melodious, are tastefully and cleverly treated, and the music is pervaded by a manly and healthy spirit which is very acceptable. The other concerted work was a Concertstück in A for string quartet, by Mr. George Dyson, of the Royal College of Music. This well-constructed and tersely-written work would probably have made a more favourable impression than it did, had it been placed anywhere than at the end of the programme. Four pianoforte pieces by Mr. Frank Tapp were well rendered by the composer, but did not reveal that he had anything new to say, the most imaginative being a Caprice in G entitled 'Ariel.' Great fluency as a pianist was shown by Mr. Percival Garratt in his Scherzo-toccata in B flat minor (Op. 14), but constructive cleverness was more apparent than inspiration. The songs were chiefly remarkable for elaborateness of accompaniment and the unvocal character of the voice part. 'The roadside fire,' by Ernest Farrar, may be mentioned as boldly conceived and, to a certain extent, effective as sung by Mr. George Baker. Miss Rose Ducane struggled bravely with 'New life, new love,' designed by Felix H. White, a song that might be described as a brilliant pianoforte piece with a vocal obbligato. Presumably it was the inability of Miss Florence Macnaughton to find anything congenial amongst the songs sent in, that caused her to bring forward three lyrics respectively by Debussy, Weckerlin and Dalayrac, but it was in the nature of a curiosity to find the names of French composers on such an essentially British occasion. Be it added, however, Miss Macnaughton did the songs full justice.

THE 'DREAM OF GERONTIUS' AT LINCOLN.

Wednesday, December 2, proved a 'red-letter' day for the Lincoln Musical Society when they gave the first performance in Lincoln of Elgar's oratorio. It was evident from the outset that Dr. G. J. Bennett, the conductor, was not only himself imbued with the spirit of the work, but had instilled a like feeling into the members of his choir, who sang with remarkable delicacy in the softer passages, in which, moreover, the pitch was finely maintained, while the demon chorus revealed their power and vigour of attack. The accompaniments were admirably played by the excellent orchestra usually provided at these concerts and led by Mr. Edward O'Brien. Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Gervase Elwes, and Mr. Herbert Brown gave a finished interpretation of the solo parts. The second part of the programme included the 'Meistersinger' overture. Dr. Bennett is to be warmly congratulated upon a performance which reflected credit on all concerned.

THE PIRATES OF PENZANCE.

The revival on December 1, at the Savoy Theatre, of Gilbert and Sullivan's 'Pirates of Penzance' had the advantage of Mr. Rutland Barrington in his original rôle of the Police Sergeant. Mr. H. A. Lytton amusingly accentuated the melodramatic burlesque contained in the part of the Pirate King, and Mr. Workman, as the Major-General, sustained the best traditions of the Savoy. On the first night Miss Dorothy Court was too indisposed from the effects of a bad cold to do justice to the vocal requirements of the part of Mabel, but subsequently the young artist delighted her listeners by her brilliant renderings of the florid waltz song. Miss Jessie Rose and Miss Lenie René were excellent respectively as Edith and the Pirate Maid-of-all-work, and Mr. Henry Herbert made good use of a musical tenor voice as the hero, Frederick. A feature of the performance was the beauty of tone and finish of the chorus-singing, the ladies' voices in particular being of delightfully fresh and pure quality. Mr. François Cellier conducted, and secured an excellent ensemble.

The Southport Choral Society celebrates its coming of age this year. The concert held on October 27 last attracted a crowded and enthusiastic audience. Mr. J. C. Clarke has been conductor throughout the twenty-one years of the Society's existence, and the high standard of work done must be a source of gratification to him, when looking back upon his arduous labours. The main feature of the programme was Elgar's 'King Olaf,' in which the work of the chorus was throughout excellent in all respects, displaying beautiful quality and balance of tone and good enunciation and attack. The principals were Miss Emily Breare, Mr. John Bardsley and Mr. Charles Knowles. The orchestra was quite equal to all the demands made upon it, but a little more restraint in the accompaniments to the solos would have been an advantage.

The Upper Warlingham Choral Society, under the able direction of Mr. John E. West, gave an excellent performance of 'The Banner of St. George,' on December 9. The choir acquitted themselves admirably, and the soprano soloist, Miss Elaine Birch, sang with great charm.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

The excellent work of the Crystal Palace Orchestral Society and the Crystal Palace Choir was fully demonstrated at a concert given in the great glass house at Sydenham on November 28. Moreover, the programme was as interesting as it was varied. Orchestrally it consisted of MacCunn's picturesque overture 'Land of the mountain and the flood,' German's 'Welsh Rhapsody,' Saint-Saëns's 'Suite Algérienne,' and Halvorsen's 'The triumphal entry of the Boyards.' The choral pieces, with and without orchestral accompaniment, were Mendelssohn's 'Hymn to Bacchus' (male voices), Wilbye's beautiful madrigal 'Sweet honey-sucking bees,' and MacCunn's ballad (for orchestra and chorus), 'Lord Ullin's daughter.' Violoncello solos were contributed with much acceptance by Miss Edith Harrison, and Miss Gladys Honey gave pleasure in the rendering of her songs. The manner in which the orchestra and choir interpreted the various selections assigned to them reflected the greatest credit upon all concerned. It was perfectly evident that everybody had worked hard at rehearsals, and that all the members were intensely enthusiastic in their artistic endeavours. Mr. Walter W. Hedgcock is to be warmly congratulated on the results of his efforts as conductor of the joint Societies. At the next concert, on February 13, 'King Olaf' is to be performed.

London Concerts.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

The performance of Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' on December 3, under the direction of Sir Frederick Bridge, scarcely calls for criticism. Suffice it to say that the rendering was characterized by the many excellencies expected from the choir in this work, the dramatic opening, the beautiful 'Evening hymn,' and the choral epilogue being given with all their customary effect. The soloists were Miss Perceval Allan, Madame Van Duyn, and Messrs. Ben Davies, Albert Garcia and Julien Henry.

QUEEN'S HALL ORCHESTRA.

Concerning the concerts given by the Queen's Hall Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Henry J. Wood, at Langham Place on November 28 and December 12, only the latter calls for comment, as the programme for the former consisted of familiar works. On December 12 two first performances in England were given, that of an Introduction and Polonaise from Moussorgsky's historical music-drama 'Boris Godounow,' and a Concertstück in E minor for pianoforte and orchestra by Mr. Raoul Pugno. 'Boris Godounow' is generally considered the Russian composer's masterpiece, his music setting forth in an uncompromising manner his endeavour to express the temperament of his patriots. In this respect the Introduction and Polonaise is scarcely representative of the work from which it is taken, the Polonaise in particular following conventional lines, but it combines dignity with vivacity, and the Introduction, which in the music-drama illustrates a moonlit garden, is poetical and charmingly scored music. Mr. Pugno is chiefly esteemed in England as an ideal interpreter of Mozart's pianoforte music; but that he has exceptional creative gifts was made clear by his Concertstück for pianoforte and orchestra, which is a cleverly written, graceful and brilliant work. The solo part was most effectively rendered by the composer, and sympathetically accompanied by the orchestra. The Symphony at this concert was Dvorák's 'From the new world,' which received a remarkably finished interpretation.

LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The programme of the concert given on November 23 contained no novelty. Although it consisted of only four items, they were quite sufficient to provide interest. The 'Tannhäuser' overture and 'Venusberg' music were splendidly played, and a remarkably good performance was given of Strauss's 'Till Eulenspiegel.' Miss Fanny Davies gave a refined reading of Brahms's Pianoforte concerto in B flat, and the concert concluded with Berlioz's symphony 'Harold in Italy,' in which the viola obbligato was admirably played by Mr. Alfred Hobday.

The overwhelmingly interesting feature of the concert given on December 7, was the first performance in London of Sir Edward Elgar's new Symphony. This event is specially noticed on p. 24. The concert opened with Mendelssohn's overture 'Hebrides,' and the other items, besides the Elgar Symphony, were Max Bruch's 'Scottish' Fantasia for violin and orchestra, which was charmingly played by Efreim Zimbalist, and Berlioz's overture 'Carnaval Romain.' Dr. Richter conducted both concerts, which were given at Queen's Hall.

AMATEUR ORCHESTRAL SOCIETIES.

Special interest was attached to the concert given by the Stock Exchange Orchestral and Choral Society at Queen's Hall on December 4, it being the first performance directed by Mr. Allen Gill as the orchestral conductor of the Society, in succession to Mr. Arthur W. Payne. The evening opened with the overture to Humperdinck's 'Hänsel und Gretel' and was continued by Dvorák's 'From the New World' symphony. The interpretation of these works fully justified the decision of the music committee in appointing Mr. Gill, and testified in a marked manner to his great ability. Madame Donald, the solo vocalist, as usual charmed her listeners, and the part-singing of the male-voice choir, under the direction of Mr. Munro Davison, was greatly enjoyed.

The Strolling Players, under the direction of Mr. J. W. Ivimey, gave a successful concert at Queen's Hall on December 10. The programme was commendably varied, including Glazounov's 'Scènes de Ballet,' three movements from Raff's 'Leonore' symphony, and the overture to Stanford's 'Shamus O'Brien.' Miss Warwara Irmanoff skilfully played the solo part of Tchaikovsky's 'Variations sur un thème rococo' for violoncello, and the vocalists were Miss Christine D'Almayne and Mr. Lorne Wallet.

CLASSICAL CONCERT SOCIETY.

The Classical Concert Society, at their music-making on December 9, at Queen's Hall, provided an attractive programme. Its chief feature was the revival of Schubert's Symphony in C, orchestrated by Joachim from the Grand pianoforte Duo (Op. 140), and performed at the Crystal Palace Saturday Concert on March 4, 1876, and again at the Hallé Concerts, Manchester, on February 8, 1877. Brahms was represented by his 'Schicksalslied' (Song of destiny) and the Double concerto for violin and violoncello in A minor (Op. 102), played by Madame Marie Soldat and Prof. Robert Haasmann; Beethoven by his 'Weihe des Hauses' overture; and Handel by two choruses from 'Belshazzar' ('Ye tutelard gods' and 'By slow degrees'). The London Symphony Orchestra and the Bach Choir were combined in the choral pieces, and Dr. H. P. Allen ably conducted an interesting concert.

LONDON CHORAL SOCIETY.

This Society performed Saint-Saëns's 'Samson and Delilah' at Queen's Hall on December 2. Miss Edith Miller (Delilah) showed considerable capacity, Mr. Walter Hyde (Samson) infused some dramatic fervour into his part, Mr. Thorpe Bates (High Priest) maintained his record as a highly temperamental singer, and Mr. Peter Dawson (the aged Hebrew and Abimelech) did very well. The comparatively few choral sections were more smoothly than expressively sung: a higher colour would have been acceptable in such music. The London Symphony Orchestra, led by Mr. Payne, played the accompaniments and orchestral numbers with some brilliancy, and Mr. Arthur Fagge conducted with his usual zeal.

HAMBOURG SUBSCRIPTION CONCERTS.

At the fourth performance of the excellent series of chamber concerts given at Eolian Hall by the Hambourg Quartet, was played for the first time in London, on December 19, a String quartet in G (Op. 15) by Alexandre Kopylow, one of Russia's promising young composers and a member of the Imperial Chapel, St. Petersburg. The work comprises four movements, a Moderato leading into an Allegro: Scherzo in D; Andante in E minor; and Finale. The themes are melodious and expressive, and are clearly and tersely treated. The Trio of the Scherzo is a Russian folk-song, and a people's dance tune would seem to have inspired the chief subject of the Finale, while the slow movement possesses poetical charm. In its entirety the Quartet is bright and genial; it was interpreted with notable finish and was greatly applauded.

Suburban Concerts.

The South London Choral Association opened its season on November 30 at the Surrey Masonic Hall with an excellent performance of Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' and Sir Frederick Bridge's 'Forging of the Anchor.' The choir, numbering over 150, sang with confidence and spirit, and the capable orchestra was led by Mr. T. E. Gatehouse. The solo parts were sung by Miss Ethel Lister, Miss May Williams, Mr. Gwilym Richards, Mr. Alfred de Manby and Mr. Henry Bailey. The performance was a tribute to the ability of Mr. Leonard C. Venables, who conducted.

The East Finchley and Muswell Hill Musical Society gave a concert performance of Gounod's 'Faut' on December 3, in the New Lecture Hall, East Finchley. The choir showed evidence of careful training and sang in a very praiseworthy manner, and the orchestra (led by Mr. Frank Greenfield) contributed to a satisfactory performance. Mr. Charles F. Carter rendered valuable service both at the organ and pianoforte. The solo vocalists were Miss Euneta Truscott, Miss Violet Oppenshaw, Mr. Cynlais Gibbs, Mr. David Evans and Mr. Francis Harford. Mr. George R. Ceiley, to whom much credit is due, was the conductor.

The Dulwich Philharmonic Society gave a concert performance of Bizet's 'Carmen,' at the Crystal Palace, on December 5. The principal solo vocalists were Misses Edith Miller, Norah Newport, Sylvia Yarra, and Isabel Champion; Messrs. F. J. Webster, Hector Lightfoot, Thorold Waters, Reginald Good and John Prout. The choir sang admirably under the careful direction of Mr. Arthur Fagge.

The Streatham Hill Choral Society gave a successful performance of Elgar's 'Caractacus' on December 8. The choir sang extremely well, and thoroughly entered into the spirit of the work. Miss Perceval Allen, Mr. Henry Turnpenney, Mr. Charles Knowles and Mr. Herbert Tracey were the solo vocalists, and the accompaniments were well played by a professional orchestra led by Mr. R. Gray. Mr. Edwin J. Quance conducted.

The Teddington Philharmonic Society gave a performance of Coleridge-Taylor's trilogy, 'Hiawatha,' in the Parish Room, on December 8. The choir sang with good expression, receiving able support from the St. Alban's Orchestra, a body of amateurs led by Miss Thring. The solo vocalists were Madame Anna Shergold, Mr. Alfred Heather and Mr. Stewart Gardner. Much credit is due to the conductor, Mr. William Radcliffe, for the successful results obtained.

On December 9, Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's melodious 'Bon-bon Suite,' for baritone solo, chorus and orchestra, was performed for the first time at a concert given by the Orpheus Choral Society at the Hampstead Conservatoire. The choir consisted of about sixty voices, and the performance was a fair one; moreover the work lost much of its calculated effect through the absence of an orchestra, the accompaniments being supplied by the pianoforte. The baritone solos were sung effectively by Mr. Harold Dowsing. The programme included Dr. Walford Davies's 'Four songs of innocence,' for female voices, and some old English madrigals. Mr. Claud Powell conducted.

The New Philharmonic Society of Richmond gave a concert on December 9, when the programme included Parry's 'Ode on St. Cecilia's Day,' Stanford's 'Phandrig Crohoore' and Elgar's 'Wand of youth' Suite No. 1. The orchestra was heard to great advantage in the last-named work, which was enthusiastically received, and the choir sang well, especially in Parry's Ode. The solo vocalists were Miss Dorothy Gaudy and Mr. Frederic Hosking. Mr. James Brown, who conducted, may be congratulated on the success of the performance.

The Fulham and District Choral Society gave a concert performance of Gounod's 'Faust' at the Fulham Town Hall on December 10. The choir and orchestra (led by Mr. Edward Wilby) numbered over 180 performers, and the solo vocalists were Miss Euneta Truscott, Miss Mabel Todd, Mr. Gwilym Richards, Mr. Arthur Hider and Mr. Arthur Barton. Mr. George Wilby conducted a very successful performance.

The first concert this season by the Stroud Green Choral Association took place in St. Luke's Hall on December 10, under the conductorship of Mr. H. J. Timothy. The programme included the Rhapsody for solo and chorus, 'Kubla Khan,' by Coleridge-Taylor, 'Hervé Riel,' by Dr. Walford Davies, and the part-songs 'My love dwelt in a Northern land,' Elgar, and 'The blackbird's song,' P. C. Buck. The solo vocalists were Miss Ethel Dyer and Mr. Arthur Walenn. Mr. W. A. Hale contributed flute solos and Miss Iris Labrow recitations.

The Battersea Polytechnic Choral Society and Orchestra gave their first concert of the season on December 12, when Sir Frederick Bridge's 'Flag of England' and Alice Mary Smith's 'Ode to the North-east wind' were performed. The programme included Barnby's madrigal 'Sing a joyous roundelay' and Fanning's 'The miller's wooing,' and the orchestra played the overtures 'Prometheus' (Beethoven) and 'Raymond' (Ambrose Thomas). The solo vocalists were Miss Carrie Tubb, Mr. Frederic Lake and Mr. Henry Bailey. Mr. J. P. Attwater conducted.

The Ealing Choral and Orchestral Society opened its twenty-first season with Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' (Parts 1 and 2), on December 12, under the conductorship of Mr. J. Cliffe Forrester. The singing of the choir was marked with good intonation and attack. The soloists were Miss Alice Hare, Mr. Cynlais Gibbs and Mr. Redgewell Dansie. The orchestra gave an excellent performance of Tchaikovsky's fantasia overture 'Romeo and Juliet,' and the popular 'Finlandia' of Sibelius.

Special interest attached to the violin and pianoforte recital given by Mr. Emile Sauret and Mr. Carl Weber at the Hampstead Conservatoire on December 12, in the introduction of the little-known Sonata No. 2, in E, by Busoni, which received an admirable and sympathetic interpretation by the two artists named. It may be mentioned that the melodious operetta 'Rival Queens,' by Mr. Carl Weber, was successfully performed at the above-named institution, on December 18, by the students of the London Academy of Music, under the able conductorship of Mr. Henry Beauchamp.

The Chiswick and Gunnersbury Philharmonic Society gave the first concert of its second season on December 14 at the Chiswick Town Hall. The works produced were Gounod's 'Faust' (Novello's concert selection) and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast.' The choir sang with intelligence and artistic perception, and the orchestra showed its capabilities in the March and Saltarello from Mendelssohn's 'Italian' symphony. The solo vocalists were Miss Alice Hare, Mr. Ben Calvert and Mr. Jackson-Potter. Mr. David M. Davis conducted.

The Streatham Choral Society, under the able conductorship of Dr. Cuthbert Harris, gave a very successful performance of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' on December 14. The concert was specially interesting as being the fiftieth given by this old-established and very successful Society, now in its twenty-third season. The baritone soloist, Mr. George Uttley, gave a very fine interpretation of the music assigned to the Prophet. Miss Amy Evans, Miss Evelyn Wynne and Mr. Harold Wilde also achieved considerable success in their respective parts. The choir responded well to the conductor's baton, and gave impressive renderings of the Baal and other dramatic choruses. An excellent orchestra, drawn from the London Symphony and Queen's Hall Orchestras, was responsible for the accompaniments.

The East Ham Choral and Orchestral Society gave a performance of the 'Golden Legend' and the 'Banner of St. George' at the Town Hall on December 17. The choir sang well under the conductorship of Mr. F. W. Long, and the solo parts were interpreted by Madame Alice Motterway, Miss Edith Nutter, Mr. Gwilym Richards, Mr. Frank Starke and Mr. Arthur Barlow.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Vienna, December 15, 1908.

As may be imagined, the celebration of the sixtieth anniversary of the accession of the Austrian Emperor exercised a powerful influence upon the art-life of Vienna. In the Court Opera House a 'Théâtre paré' took place, at which the Monarch himself was present, surrounded by all the members of the Imperial House and the great dignitaries of State. The evening was partly devoted to a performance of a festival play with music, 'The Emperor's dream,' written by the Countess Thun-Salm and mounted in most brilliant style. The gorgeous ballet 'Aus der Heimat' (From the Homeland) formed the second part of the entertainment. The most important musical institutions—the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde, the Philharmonic Society, the Concertverein, and the Tonkünstler Orchestra—arranged special entertainments, at which homage was done to the Emperor, the excellent Singverein performing Liszt's 'Hungarian Coronation Mass.'

Among the novelties produced deserving of mention was a symphonic poem for orchestra, voices and organ, entitled 'Griseldis,' composed by Richard Mandl, which created a strong impression. A new Pianoforte concerto by Rachmaninoff was excellently played by the St. Petersburg pianist Leonid Kreutzer, and excited special interest. It represents the style of the modern Russian school to great advantage. Of the numerous pianoforte virtuosi who have visited us, the English artist, Mr. Herbert Fryer, secured a place in the front rank. He gave a very successful Chopin recital, and at his second concert he played pieces by the British composers Balfour Gardiner and Cyril Scott.

RICHARD VON PERGER.

The Christmas number of the Bookseller (12, Warwick Lane) is, as usual, a most interesting number of an acceptable publication. The profuseness of the illustrations alone make the issue a valuable one, and even the advertisements are attractive.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The second of the Queen's College Chamber Concerts on December 5 brought the Brodsky Quartet from Manchester, and with them was associated Madame Gertrude Drinkwater as vocalist. The visit of this celebrated Quartet is always hailed with pleasure by lovers of good music finely performed. A novelty in their programme was a Quartet in D by Ferruccio Bonavia, resident in Manchester but born in Trieste. The work is very modern and clever, but although full of ideas seems to lack continuity and to be more a collection of themes than an organized whole. Beethoven's Quartet in G major (Op. 18, No. 2) was splendidly rendered, and Madame Drinkwater was successful in songs by Goetz, Cherubini and Korby.

Madame Blauvelt and Mr. Frederic Lamond appeared at Phillips's Subscription Concerts on December 11, and it is needless to say delighted their audience with a varied selection.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Birmingham Concerts Society's performance in the Town Hall on December 1, under Mr. Allen Gill's conductorship, included Glazounov's sixth Symphony, Saint-Saëns's symphonic poem 'Phaëton,' and Sibelius's 'King Christian II.' and 'Finlandia.' The renderings of these works demand an orchestral conductor of more than ordinary ability. The vocalist was Miss Edith Evans. The fourth concert took place in the Town Hall on December 15, under Mr. Halford's direction, the guest of the evening being the violinist, Hegedüs. Special interest was attached to the first concert given in the Town Hall on December 10 by the New Choral Society organized, trained and conducted by Mr. Rutland Boughton. The principal aim of the new organization is the study of unaccompanied choral music, especially madrigals, and concerted vocal music of the old and modern schools. At present the Society numbers from 130 to 140 voices, sopranos and contraltos being in a considerable majority and of an exceptionally resonant timbre, and it only needs a better array of tenors (the weakest section of the choir) to secure a more satisfactory ensemble. For a first attempt every praise is due to the executive and the conductor for the admirable way in which at least a section of a lengthy programme was interpreted. Among the finest achievements were Elgar's part-songs 'Owls' and 'O wild west wind,' Schubert's 'The Lord is my Shepherd,' and Irish, Scotch and English folk-songs. The solo vocalists were Miss Phyllis Lett and Mr. Frederic Austin, the latter contributing three songs from his own pen; Purcell's scena 'Let the dreadful engines'; and two English folk-songs, 'Ward the pirate' and 'The twelve days of Christmas.' Miss Phyllis Lett gave two songs from Granville Bantock's 'Sappho,' accompanied by the composer. The solo pianist was Miss Beatrice Hewitt, a student of the Midland Institute School of Music.

The Birmingham Choral Union gave a performance of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' trilogy in the Town Hall on December 12, under Mr. Thomas Facer's direction, and in the presence of a crowded audience. The chorus and orchestra did well on the whole, and the principal artists were Madame Sadler-Fogg, Mr. James Davis and Mr. Alfred Askey. Mr. C. W. Perkins presided at the organ.

An artistic violin and vocal recital was given in the Masonic Hall on November 24 by Misses Muriel Warwood and Elma Baker, and a German song recital in the same hall the following afternoon by Herr Reinhold von Warlich, assisted at the pianoforte by Herr Erich Hammacher. Of much interest was Mr. Max Mossel's second drawing room concert, held at the Grosvenor Room, Grand Hotel, on December 3, when the Max Mossel String Quartet played in a masterly manner César Franck's String quartet in D, heard for the first time in this city. With Mr. G. H. Manton, Mr. Max Mossel introduced a Sonata in E minor for violin and pianoforte, by Dr. Esposito. The vocalist was Miss Esta D'Argo. Miss Kathleen Arnold, a favourite pupil of Miss Fanny Davies, gave a pianoforte recital in the New Temperance Hall on December 7, assisted by the Viennese violinist Madame Marie Soldat, who made her début here on that occasion.

The Festival Choral Society gave for the first time in Birmingham, Dr. Philipp Wolfrum's 'A Christmas mystery,' in the Town Hall, on November 26, but the work failed to interest the audience and was coldly received. The choir distinguished itself by an excellent rendering of Leonardo Leo's 'Dixit Dominus.' The principals included Miss Agnes Nicholls, Madame Emily Squire, Miss Jessie King, Mr. Gervase Elwes, Mr. James Coleman and Mr. Herbert Brown, the organist being Mr. C. W. Perkins. Dr. Sinclair conducted with his customary watchfulness and care.

The Sutton-Coldfield Choral Society, which is making great advance in choral singing, gave a splendid rendering of Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' at the Sutton-Coldfield Town Hall, on December 3, in the presence of a crowded and most enthusiastic audience. Mr. Joseph H. Adams conducted, and the principals were Miss Alice Hare, Miss Eunice Fowles, Mr. James Davis and Mr. Dan Price, an excellent quartet of soloists.

The Wolverhampton Choral Society gave a meritorious performance of Berlioz's 'Romeo and Juliet' symphony, followed by Bach's cantata 'O Light everlasting,' at the Wolverhampton Agricultural Hall on November 30, under Mr. H. Lyell Taylor's able conductorship. The choir sang with care and artistic phrasing, and the principals were Miss Edith Clegg, Mr. James Davis and Mr. Fowles Burton.

On December 5, took place the Royal Society of Artists' Musical Matinée, the occasion being the 340th concert given under the direction of Mr. Oscar Pollack, covering a period of seventeen consecutive years. As on previous occasions, many young vocalists and instrumentalists secured a first hearing, most of whom met with a flattering reception.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL, BATH, AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Bristol Symphony Orchestra gave their first concert of the season on December 2 at the Victoria Rooms, under the direction of Mr. F. S. Gardner, with Mr. Maurice Alexander as leader. Excellent interpretations were afforded of the vorspiel to Humperdinck's 'Hansel und Gretel,' Dvorák's 'From the New World' Symphony, Mendelssohn's Violin concerto (Mr. Alexander playing the solo instrument), Saint-Saëns's 'Le Rouet d'Omphale,' and Mendelssohn's 'A midsummer night's dream' overture. The vocalist was Miss Emily Breare.

At the Bristol Harmonic Male-voice Choir's concert at Colston Hall on December 2, several part-songs were well rendered, Mr. J. Jenkins conducting. Songs were contributed by Miss Gertrude Tavener, Miss Marian Neale, Mr. Frank Sergeant, Mr. W. Morgan and Mr. Harold Cleeve, in addition to violin solos by a clever child, Master Willie Davies, the son of a Welsh miner.

On December 5 a large audience foregathered at the Victoria Rooms, where the Bristol North Choral Society gave a concert. The first part consisted of German's 'Merrie England,' which was given in a highly creditable manner under the direction of Mr. C. W. Stear. The principal characters were sustained by Miss Ethel Lister (Bessie), Miss Ada Bennett (Jill-all-alone), Miss Sybil Fox (Queen Elizabeth), Mr. Gwilym Richards (Sir Walter Raleigh), and Mr. Frank H. Baker (the Earl of Essex). Mr. F. S. Gardner was leader of the orchestra.

The Bristol New Philharmonic Society, on December 9, gave a concert at the Victoria Rooms, the programme containing Haydn's 'Spring,' from 'The Seasons,' and Cowen's 'Sleeping Beauty,' which received adequate interpretation under the baton of Mr. Arnold Barter. The soloists were Miss Edith Evans, Miss Gertrude Winchester, Mr. H. Lewis Wensley and Mr. Arthur Wills. There was a competent orchestra, led by Mr. Harold Bernard.

Sine Nomine Choral Society, at the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association, on December 9, presented Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast,' under the direction of Mr. Robert Simmons, when an excellent rendering was given of the cantata.

The second concert of the season by the Clifton Quintet was held at the Victoria Rooms on December 10, on which occasion a numerous company expressed much gratification at the admirable performance. The players were Messrs. Maurice Alexander and Hubert Hunt (violins), Ernest Lane (viola), Percy Lewis (violoncello) and Herbert Parsons (pianoforte). César Franck's Quintet in F minor and Tchaikovsky's Quartet in F major (Op. 22) were interpreted, and solos were contributed by Mr. Hunt (Max Bruch's Romanze in A minor, Op. 42) and Mr. Parsons (Chopin's Ballade in G minor, Op. 23). Miss Eleanor Felix was the vocalist.

The fifteenth annual festival of the Bath Nonconformist Choirs was held at Argyle Congregational Church on December 3. There were about 120 vocalists. Mr. T. C. Bush conducted, and Dr. C. W. Perkins was at the organ. Mendelssohn's 'As the hart pants' and 'Hymn of praise' were sung, with Miss Gertrude Taylor and Mr. Alexander Webster as soloists.

Gounod's 'Faust' was presented, with Miss Emily Breare (Margarita), Miss Marie Stiven (Siebel), Mr. Gwilym Richards (Faust), Mr. Montague Worlock (Valentine), and Mr. Charles Tree (Mephistopheles). MUSIC AT CAMBRIDGE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

During the past term the ventures of the local organizations have been on the lines adopted in previous years. To begin with the University Musical Society, there have been three 'Wednesday concerts.' On October 20, the Norah Clench Quartet played quartets by Debussy and Schubert, and Miss Hilda de Angelis gave a varied selection of songs in charming style. On November 4, Miss Deneke, Frau Soldat Roeger, and Mr. Percy Such gave the great B flat Trio of Beethoven and Schumann's D minor Trio, while in addition the first two players were responsible for Brahms's Violin sonata in A. At the concert on December 9, Signor Certani, an excellent Italian violinist, played Mozart's Concerto in G, and for the first time in England (so it is said) a charming Pastorale by Tartini. The programme also included a new 'Coronach' by Mr. C. B. Rootham, for bass solo and male-voice chorus. This pleased so much that a repetition was demanded. Miss Florence Atkin, a very promising local singer, gave the fine scena 'Where shall I fly?' from Handel's 'Hercules.' The Symphony concert on October 31 was well attended. The programme included Sterndale Bennett's charming 'Naiads' overture and Schubert's 'Rosamunde' music. Mr. Plunket Greene was the vocalist. The University Musical Society gave an extra concert on November 17, when Herr von Währlich gave a recital of Schubert's cycle 'Die Schöne Müllerin.'

The Ladies' Musical Club gave an invitation concert on November 26. As the institution is a private one, the event is only recorded here that testimony may be borne to the excellent work which may be done by such organizations. The well-selected programme was extraordinarily interesting, and the evening was altogether a most delightful one.

The name of Mr. William Peacock, a bass singer in the choir of Durham Cathedral, was, we regret to state, inadvertently omitted from the list of soloists who took part in the concerts given by the Sheffield choir in Canada. In a letter which Mr. Peacock received from Dr. Coward, congratulating him on his 'uniform success,' the master chorus-master says: 'The reception you received at every concert, your many encores, and the fine notices you got in the Press, must have made the trip a very enjoyable one to you.'

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Philharmonic Society gave a good performance of Dvorák's 'The Spectre's Bride,' on December 3, in the Royal University Hall. Mr. Charles Marchant conducted his admirable choir, and a small but efficient orchestra was led by Mr. Arthur Darley. The soloists included Miss Agnes Treacy, a well-known local artist, Mr. Albert Maltby, of Chester Cathedral, and Mr. Montague Borwell.

Miss Nora O'Hea gave a violin recital on December 8 in the Aberdeen Hall, when she was assisted by Miss Annie Lord (pianoforte), Miss Burke-Sheridan and Mr. Percy Whitehead (vocalists), and Mr. C. W. Wilson (accompanist). Miss O'Hea's solos included a Handel Sonata and Debussy's 'En bateau.'

On December 9 the Dublin Orchestral Society, conducted by Dr. Esposito, gave a Wagner concert. The audience, one of the largest yet attracted by the Society's concerts, included Their Excellencies the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland and The Countess of Aberdeen. His Excellency made a short speech in support of an appeal (made by the secretary during the interval) for additional funds, and it is hoped that the debt on the last two seasons may be wiped out and that the Society may be able to arrange for the usual series of five concerts during 1909.

At the Royal Dublin Society's chamber music recitals on November 30 and December 7, the programmes were provided by Miss Annie Lord, our most distinguished pianist, and the Brodsky Quartet, who were assisted by M. Octave Grisard (viola), in Mendelssohn's String quintet.

The Sunday Orchestral concerts continue to attract large audiences, who take much interest in the good music provided by Dr. Esposito. During the month the programmes have included three symphonies: Beethoven's in C minor, Schubert's 'Unfinished,' and Mendelssohn's 'Italian'; Wagner's 'Siegfried' Idyll, 'Meistersinger' overture and prelude to Act III., 'Tristan,' in addition to some smaller works, which included an Elegy for strings by a local composer, Mr. W. Harvey Pellissier. The soloists have been Miss Nettie Edwards, Mr. Albert Crawley, and Mr. W. H. Jones (vocalists); Dr. Esposito (pianoforte), M. Octave Grisard (violin), and Mr. G. Ellard (English horn).

On December 15 'The College Choral' gave a very good performance of 'Elijah.' Considering that the chorus is entirely and the orchestra largely composed of amateurs, Mr. Charles Marchant, the conductor, is greatly to be complimented on the excellent rendering of the work. The part of Elijah was taken by Mr. Montague Borwell, and the other solo parts were in the hands of various members of the Society.

The Leinster School of Music gave an orchestral concert at the Antient Concert Rooms on December 17. The conductors were Mr. S. Myerscough, the principal of the school, and Mr. J. F. Watson. The programme included Mendelssohn's 'Italian' symphony, Weber's 'Preciosa' overture, and Max Bruch's Violin concerto in G minor, soloist, Miss R. Dowdall, and vocal and instrumental solos by students of the School.

Mr. Herbert F. Ellingford, of Belfast, gave a successful organ recital at the Royal Dublin Society on December 14, when he played a well-selected programme of music.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At the second of Messrs. Paterson's orchestral concerts, held in the McEwan Hall on November 23, Mr. Henri Verbrugghen conducting, Mr. Mischa Elman was the great attraction, and his splendid performance of the Beethoven Concerto won numerous recalls. The chief orchestral item was Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony, finely played. For the third concert, on November 30, Dr. Cowen conducting, a Wagner programme was provided, and the vocalists were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Mr. Walter Hyde and Mr. Francis Harford. At the fourth concert, on December 7, Mr. Georg Henschel conducted. The outstanding feature of the evening was a beautiful rendering of Brahms's C minor Symphony. Miss Jean Waterson, an Edinburgh lady, was the vocalist, and was highly successful in two lyrics by Schubert and the grand aria from Boito's 'Mefistofele.' At the fifth concert, on December 14, Mr. Philip Halstead, a Glasgow musician, and Dr. Cowen, played Mozart's Concerto in E flat for two pianofortes. The orchestral numbers included Richard Strauss's 'Till Eulenspiegel's lustige Streiche' and Cowen's 'Indian Rhapsody.' Miss Eve Simony was the vocalist, and charmed the audience with her singing of 'O zittre Nicht,' from the 'Magic flute,' and the 'Air du rossignol' of Massé.

The Edinburgh Amateur Orchestral Society (Mr. T. H. Collinson, conductor) gave its first concert of the season in the Music Hall on November 25. The programme included Dvorák's 'From the New World' symphony and Schumann's Pianoforte concerto. The solo part in the latter work was admirably played by Mr. Robert B. King, a young amateur of much promise. Miss Rose Dunbar sang several songs in excellent style.

The first of Herr Ernst Denhof's chamber concerts was given in Freemasons' Hall on November 21. On this occasion Mr. Denhof was assisted by the Hambourg String Quartet, Madame Pauline Donalds (vocalist) and Mr. Edgar Barratt (accompanist). For the Extra concert given in the Queen's Hall on December 12, the performers were 'La Société de Concerts D'Instruments Anciens' and Miss Mary Münchov (vocalist). The programme included works by Destouches, P. E. Bach, Lorenziti and Borjou, and songs by early composers.

Mr. Robert Burnett gave his annual recital in Freemasons' Hall on November 20, and in a programme embracing thirty songs showed himself a cultured exponent of vocal art. Miss Beatrice Laidlaw contributed a number of violin solos, and Mr. George Short accompanied.

At the second Harrison concert, held in the McEwan Hall on November 21, the performers were the New Symphony Orchestra, with Mr. Jan Kubelik as solo violinist. Mr. Landon Ronald conducted.

On November 27, in Freemasons' Hall, Mrs. Kennedy-Fraser, assisted by Miss Margaret Kennedy and Mr. John Burnett, gave an interesting recital of Hebridean folk-songs, collected and arranged by herself.

The vocal recital given by Mr. E. C. Hedmond, assisted by Miss Lilian Coomber, with Mr. N. J. Affleck at the pianoforte, drew a crowded audience to Freemasons' Hall on December 9. Mr. Hedmond's excerpts from Wagner's operas gave special delight to the listeners, and Miss Coomber's efforts were also highly appreciated.

Mr. Albert B. Bach, assisted by his daughter, Miss Eugénie Bach, gave his annual vocal recital in the Freemasons' Hall on December 15 with an excellent programme. Miss Bach made a very successful début, and Mr. Bach was perhaps heard to greatest advantage in the group of Loewe songs. Mrs. Bach accompanied.

The second of the University Historical Concerts, held in the Music Class Room on December 16, was devoted to a recital of Variations for the pianoforte. The performer was Mr. John Petrie Dunn, who displayed great executive powers in a programme which, in addition to Beethoven's famous 'Diabelli' variations, comprised examples by Byrd, Haydn, Mozart, Schumann, and Brahms. At the third Classical Concert, given in the Music Hall on December 19, the audience had the somewhat rare pleasure of listening to performances of Schubert's Octet and Beethoven's Septet by a party of instrumentalists organized by Mr. Henry J. Wood, and led by Mr. Maurice Sons. Mrs. Henry Wood, accompanied by her husband, contributed songs by Grieg, Brahms, Massenet, and others.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At the second classical concert on November 24, Mischa Elman gave a powerful reading of Beethoven's Violin concerto, and Mr. Henri Verbruggen, who was conductor in Dr. Cowen's absence, secured a fine performance of Schubert's 'Unfinished' symphony. The programme of the third concert, on December 1, was composed wholly of Wagner excerpts, and Miss Agnes Nicholls, Messrs. Walter Hyde and Francis Harford made an excellent trio of solo vocalists.

Public interest in Dr. Henry Coward's first appearance as conductor of the Choral Union was shown by the crowded audience assembled to hear 'Elijah' on December 8, and who accorded the new conductor a very warm welcome. From the outset of the performance it was evident that the choir intended to rise to the occasion, and in this they were entirely successful. Dr. Coward's reading of the oratorio differs from that to which we have been accustomed, mainly in the matter of tempi and in attention to details of enunciation and expression, with the result that in many respects we heard a revived 'Elijah.' The tone of the choir seems to be much improved, especially in the alto and tenor sections. I do not remember having heard the choral recitative in No. 2 more expressively rendered, and in 'He that shall endure' the theme was always in evidence although not obtrusively so. The 'Baal' choruses were considerably slower than usual, and the climaxes were worked up with impressive effect in such numbers as 'Thanks be to God' and 'Be not afraid.' The solo music was sung by Misses Ella Russell and Phyllis Lett, and Messrs. James Davis and Herbert Brown; of these excellent artists special mention must be made of Mr. Brown's rendering of the part of the Prophet, which was remarkable for its declamatory and emotional power. Mr. J. E. Hodgson rendered valuable service at the organ, and in the accompaniments the Scottish Orchestra left nothing to be desired.

The first concert of the season given by the Glasgow Amateur Orchestral Society took place on December 10, when Mr. Hoeck and his forces gave a capital account of themselves in Sterndale-Bennett's overture 'The Naiads,' Haydn's Symphony (No. 2) in D, Wagner's 'Siegfried Idyll' and Rossini's overture to 'Italiana in Algeria.' Miss Bessie Spence played the solo part in Mendelssohn's Violin concerto with good effect, and vocal solos were contributed by Miss Milly Kerr Smith.

At the fifth Classical Concert on December 15, Strauss's symphonic poem 'Also sprach Zarathustra' was brought to a first hearing in Glasgow. The Scottish Orchestra, augmented for the occasion, played the work most brilliantly and to the evidently keen appreciation of the audience. Another novelty was the March from the symphony 'Funeral and Triumph,' by Berlioz, and the programme included Beethoven's 'Coriolan' overture and Cowen's 'Indian Rhapsody.' Miss Eve Simony was the solo vocalist and Mr. J. E. Hodgson organist.

On December 17 the Greenock Choral Union, under Mr. W. T. Hoeck, gave a good performance of Handel's 'Samson.' The solo vocalists were Misses Edith Evans and Gertrude Haworth, Messrs. James Davis and Robin Overleigh. The organ accompaniments were skilfully played by Dr. A. L. Peace.

MUSIC IN GLOUCESTER AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Gloucester Cathedral was quite filled on December 3, when the 200th Free Musical Recital was given. The event was celebrated by the performance of the 'Hymn of Praise' by a choir of about 300 voices, Cheltenham, Stroud, Tewkesbury and the surrounding towns all rendering help. The band numbered sixty performers, of whom fifty were members of the Gloucestershire Orchestral Society. Dr. A. Herbert Brewer, the cathedral organist, conducted, and the solo parts were taken by Miss MacNaughton, of the Royal College of Music, London, and Mr. A. Watson, of the Chapel Royal, Windsor.

At the Gloucester Choral Society's concert on December 7, Stanford's 'The voyage of Maeldune' and Gounod's 'Faust' (concert edition) were performed. Between these came a small orchestral work of Dr. A. Herbert Brewer's, called 'Auf Wiedersehen.' This piece, performed for the first time on this occasion, is written for strings, wood-wind and horns. The soloists were Madame Clementine de Vere-Sapio, Miss Edith Clegg, Mr. John Bardsley and Mr. William Higley. The band was led by Mr. J. W. Austin, and the president of the Society, Mr. Joseph Bennett, was present.

The Painswick Choral Society performed on December 10 Spohr's 'Last Judgment,' in St. Mary's Church.

Mr. A. W. Bruton conducted, and was ably supported by Mr. S. W. Underwood at the organ.

The Cheltenham Philharmonic Society held its first concert of the season on December 2, when a varied programme was given. Gluck's 'Orpheus,' Dvorák's 'New World' symphony, and Elgar's 'Black Knight,' were works well chosen to exhibit the powers of both choir and orchestra. The solos were rendered by Miss Betty Booker, Miss Ada Forrest and Miss Edna Thornton. Mr. C. J. Phillips ably conducted.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The new Symphony by Sibelius (No. 3, in C major), inscribed to Mr. Granville Bantock, was heard for the first time in England at the Orchestral Society's concert on November 21. It is cast in three movements, there being no definitely-named Scherzo. Except in the second movement the interest is more constructional than inspirational. A clever performance was given of Max Bruch's G minor Violin concerto by Mr. Vivian Burrows, a youthful player who displayed admirable skill and taste. The vocalist was Miss Lillie Wormald. At the second Gentlemen's Concert of the Orchestral Society on December 5, Mr. Bantock conducted Tchaikovsky's Suite for strings, and Mr. J. E. Matthews, a member of the orchestra, gave a masterly performance of Tchaikovsky's Violin concerto. The vocalist was Mr. Frank Mullings.

The Hallé Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Richter, was heard on November 28 in a fine programme, which opened with Mozart's 'Jupiter' symphony, and included Wagner's 'Flying Dutchman' overture, 'Prelude and Liebestod' from 'Tristan,' and Elgar's Introduction and Allegro for strings.

At the Philharmonic Society's concert on November 24, the Prelude entitled 'On the cliffs of Cornwall,' from the second act of Miss E. M. Smyth's opera 'The Wreckers' was played, and created a favourable impression, the composer, who was present, being called to the platform. Dr. Cowen also conducted Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony, and the vocalist, Madame Donald, sang with brilliant success. At the concert of December 8, the vocalist was Miss Eve Simony, and M. Busoni played Liszt's E flat Concerto and Weber's Concertstück. Hermann Goetz's beautiful Symphony in F was revived at this concert, at which also was heard Debussy's 'Petite Suite' and Cornelius's overture to the 'Barber of Bagdad.'

At the first Schiever Chamber Concert on December 4, Mr. Richard Buhlig played in Brahms's Pianoforte Quartet in A (Op. 26), and in Schumann's Pianoforte quintet. Mr. Schiever and his able associates were also heard in Haydn's Quartet in G (Op. 17).

The eighth festival of the Liverpool Church Choir Association took place in St. George's Hall on December 3. The choir, which numbered upwards of 500, was made up of contingents from eighteen churches, and in tone and attack the singing was on the whole very satisfactory. The choral items included the following anthems and choruses: 'It came even to pass' (Onseley); 'As I live, saith the Lord' (Chipp); 'Awake up my glory' (Peace); 'Saviour, Thy children keep,' sung unaccompanied (Sullivan); 'Be not afraid' (Mendelssohn), in addition to Barnby's Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in E, and Sir George Martin's fine anthem, 'Hail! gladdening light.' This latter work was conducted by its composer, who received a flattering reception from a crowded and appreciative audience. The vocal principals were Master Brian Williams (London College for Choristers), with Messrs. Ernest Marriott, George Brierley and Joseph Farrington, from the St. Paul's Cathedral Choir. Dr. Peace was in his accustomed place as organist of the festival, and Mr. Branscombe conducted.

Mr. Walter Bridson, a well-known Liverpool pianist, gave a concert in the Yamen Rooms on December 3, when he was vocally assisted by Miss Lillie Wormald and Mr. Horatio Connell. His cousin, Miss Dorothy Bridson, a clever violinist, was favourably heard in a Handel Violin sonata, and the concert-giver displayed great executive skill in pieces by Chopin, Beethoven, Leschetitzky and Liszt. Mr. Eric Chapman accompanied.

Mr. Arthur Hammond, a young local baritone, who is giving up commerce for music, made his professional début on December 2, when he sang the song-cycle 'Eliand' (Von Fielitz) and other items with considerable acceptance. Mr. F. Peachey was an able accompanist.

The Post Office Choral Society—which, with the orchestra, numbered about 250 performers—under the direction of Mr. P. Ingram, sang Cowen's 'St. John's Eve' on December 10. The vocal principals were Miss Carrie Lanceley, Miss Lucy Nuttall, Mr. Noel Fleming and Mr. Albert Garcia. The band was led by Mr. John Lawson, and there was a large audience.

The Liscard Orchestral Society, conducted by Mr. Philip Smart, gave a successful concert on December 12, at which the Liverpool Cymric Vocal Union, a fine body of male voices conducted by Mr. J. T. Jones, sang with great effect in Prothero's descriptive chorus 'The Britons' and Gounod's 'Soldiers' chorus.'

Of Chamber Concerts deserving special notice, that of the Rawdon Briggs Quartet in the Yamen Rooms on December 15 must be mentioned, by reason of a new Fantasia for string quartet, composed by Dr. Ernest Walker, which pleased greatly. It is a melodious and ingenious piece which sustains interest throughout.

A crowded audience heard the Welsh Choral Union's performance of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' on December 19. The vocal principals were Miss Esta D'Argo, Miss Rosina Beynon, Mr. John Bardsley and Mr. Herbert Brown. Under Mr. Harry Evans's commanding direction the chorus-singing was marked by the well-known features which peculiarly attest the excellence of the training and singing of this fine choral body, and the performance was again in all respects a notable success.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The great audience which attended the Hallé concert of November 26 heard some excellent choral singing at the performance of Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius.' The soloists were Mr. John Coates, Miss Sarah Andrew and Mr. Frederic Austin. Dr. Richter conducted. At the concert of December 10, Mr. Egon Petri, professor of the pianoforte at the Royal Manchester College of Music, again displayed his splendid technique in Saint-Saëns's Concerto No. 5, in F, no less than in Liszt's paraphrase of the 'Midsummer Night's Dream' music and in the 'Rigoletto' fantasia. Mr. Horatio Connell sang two of Brahms's 'Serious Songs,' and Mr. Franz Beidler conducted.

At the second Brodsky Quartet concert, on November 25, were played a String quartet by Ferruccio Bonavia, Brahms's Pianoforte quintet in F minor (Op. 34), and Beethoven's Quartet in G (Op. 18, No. 2). Mr. Bonavia is one of the first violinists in the Hallé Orchestra. His interesting work, played for the first time, is, if a little tentative, extremely promising as a musical effort, indicating the ability to use the quartet medium for the utterance of undoubted musical thought and feeling. Mr. R. J. Forbes at the pianoforte played admirably in the Quintet.

At the concert of December 16, the special interest in the programme consisted of two movements of an unfinished String quartet by Grieg, Dr. Brodsky's closely intimate friend. Apparently written some years before the composer's death, the second movement, which is entitled an Allegro scherzando, made the more favourable impression.

The chief place in the programme of the Vocal Society's concert on December 16 was occupied by Sir Villiers Stanford's 'Phaudrig Crohoore,' sung with rare spirit under the direction, at the pianoforte, of Dr. Henry Watson.

At the Promenade Concerts, on December 12, we were favoured with a Wagner programme. Mr. Max Mayer, always avoiding threadbare themes, played Schumann's 'Concertstück,' and the first three movements of Hugo Reinhold's Suite (Op. 7) for pianoforte and orchestra. Madame Annie Walker was the vocalist. Our strongest amateur orchestral society—the Beethoven Society—conducted by Mr. E. Gordon Cockrell, played well at the concert of December 8. The programme included Haydn's Symphony in C minor (No. 5 of the Salomon set). Mr. Joseph Percival, a clever pianoforte student of our Royal Manchester College of Music, distinguished himself in a performance of Chopin's Concerto in E minor.

The director of the Paris Conservatoire, M. Gabriel Fauré, received a warm welcome at the second of the French concerts, given on November 30. He took the pianoforte in a performance of his Quartet in C minor. Mrs. George Swinton sang three of his songs, M. Louis Fleury played his Flute fantasia, and Miss Stroobants his Harp impromptu. M. Fauré was joined by Lady Speyer in a delightful performance of his Sonata in A major for pianoforte and violin. His playing here and in the accompaniments was admirable in its finish and easy grace. Mrs. Swinton sang some songs by Miss Ethel Smyth, who conducted the orchestral accompaniments. The London New Symphony Orchestra paid us a visit on December 4. Aided by the North Staffordshire Choral Society, with Mr. Frederic Austin as soloist, Mr. Thomas Beecham gave an excellent rendering of Delius's 'Sea Drift.' The composer was present at the concert and was on familiar ground, as he formerly resided here in a business capacity. Mr. Beecham brought forward three other novelties, Vincent D'Indy's symphonic poem, 'La Forêt enchantée,' the first movement of Max Reger's 'Serenade,' and the orchestral Finale of Joseph Holbrooke's 'Apollo and the Seaman.' The production of Sir Edward Elgar's Symphony at the Hallé Concert of December 3 is separately noticed on page 24.

MUSIC IN NEWCASTLE AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

An interesting chamber concert took place on November 24 in connection with the Classical Concert Society, when a grand-niece of Schubert, Miss Geisler-Schubert, and Rheinhold von Währlich gave a Schubert evening.

The Newcastle Vocal Society gave a satisfactory performance of Barnett's 'The Ancient Mariner' on November 26. There was a full orchestra, and Mr. J. E. Jeffries conducted. An exceptionally fine programme of unaccompanied music, ranging from 16th-century madrigals to Cornelius's difficult 'O death,' and examples by young British composers, was given by the Postal Telegraph Choral Society on December 2. The choir, of which Mr. Edgar L. Bainton is the talented and earnest conductor, showed considerable advance upon former achievements. The programme was varied by songs from Mr. Harold Wilde, and violoncello solos by Madame Ess.

On December 2, under the capable direction of Mr. N. Kilburn, Elgar's 'King Olaf' received a fine interpretation by the Middlesbrough Musical Union. Miss Esta D'Argo, Mr. A. Heather and Mr. Humphrey Bishop were the soloists. Brahms's four part-songs for female voices with obligato for two horns and harp were sung at the concert of the Ladies' Glee and Madrigal Society, held on December 3 in Corbridge Town Hall. Mr. John Walton was the able conductor.

On December 8 the Durham Musical Society, under the direction of the cathedral sub-organist, Mr. W. Ellis, performed Stanford's 'The Revenge' and Somervell's 'The forsaken Merman,' with orchestral accompaniment. On the same evening the Choral Society at Ryton sang Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen.' Vigorous renderings of Stanford's 'The Revenge' and Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' were given by the South Shields Choral Society, under the baton of Mr. M. Fairs, on December 9. The same evening the Willington Choral Society, conducted by the Rev. G. W. Anson Firth, performed Spohr's 'Last Judgment' and a miscellaneous selection. Mr. Alfred Wall's quartet party played quartets by Borodin (in D) and Cherubini (in E flat), a strange contrast, at the first of this season's concerts of the Newcastle Musical Society, on December 10. The first concert of a new society at Great Ayton was held the next evening, and included several excellent part-songs. Mr. Amers, a local bandmaster, is holding a series of Saturday night concerts in Newcastle Town Hall.

Three concerts took place on December 16. The Newcastle Catholic Choral Society (conductor, Mr. E. J. Rogers) performed, with orchestra, Hummel's Mass in D. The Auckland Musical Society, under the baton of Mr. Kilburn, performed Mendelssohn's 'Christus' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Minnehaha,' and Brahms's Violin concerto was played by Mr. Louis Pecksai. The Greenbank Primitive Methodist Choir, Darlington, gave a performance of 'Judas Maccabæus,' with organ accompaniment. Mr. W. Heslop conducted. The following evening, Brewer's 'Sir Patrick Spens' and Speer's 'Jackdaw of Rheims' were sung by the Tyneworth Amateur Vocal Society, to pianoforte accompaniment. Mr. M. Fairs conducted.

MUSIC IN NORTH STAFFORDSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The North Staffordshire Orchestra gave its first concert of the present season on November 19 in the Town Hall, Hanley. This Orchestra came into existence through the Morecambe Musical Festival at which, some three or four seasons ago, the local amateurs under Mr. John Cope (conductor) competed for a prize. Since then it has done useful work in providing the district with good orchestral concerts, in addition to giving several English composers an opportunity of hearing their works produced. At the recent concert the Orchestra took a secondary part, in that it was mainly responsible for the well-played accompaniments to two concertos, Mendelssohn in G minor for pianoforte and that by Beethoven for the violin, both ably interpreted by Mr. Clarence Haydn and Miss Margaret Holloway respectively. The orchestral items included movements from a Suite by Saint-Saëns, and the overtures 'Leonore' (No. 3), (Beethoven) and 'Fra Diavolo' (Auber). Mr. John Cope conducted.

Much interest was excited at the first concert given by the North Staffordshire District Choral Society on December 3, in the Town Hall, Hanley. Not many festival committees would dare the experiment of bringing forward so many novelties in one evening. On this occasion the New Symphony (London) Orchestra of ninety players (conductor, Mr. Thomas Beecham) made their first appearance in the district. Mr. Granville Bantock conducted a fine performance of his 'Omar Khayyám' (Part II.), in which Miss Phyllis Lett, Messrs. Frank Mullings and Frederic Austin were the soloists. Mr. Bantock also conducted the prelude to his 'Sappho' song-cycle, and Miss Phyllis Lett sang 'In a dream I spake' and the 'Bridal song' from the same set, with rare artistic insight. Mr. Thomas Beecham showed his enthusiasm for the music of Frederic Delius by conducting from memory a performance of 'Sea Drift.' There was some delicate and poignant choral singing, with Mr. Frederic Austin as soloist, and the composer, who was present, remarked that it was a perfect performance. Mr. Beecham brought forward an orchestral novelty by Mr. Havergal Brian, entitled 'Hero and Leander.' Mr. James Whewell, conductor of the Society, secured a vigorous rendering of Cornelius's unaccompanied part-song 'The Tempest,' and a brilliant rendering of Berlioz's overture 'Carnaval Romain' brought a memorable concert to a close.

The Amateur Musical Society of the old moorland town of Leek gave its one hundred and ninth concert in the Town Hall on December 14, when a good performance of Haydn's 'Creation' was given. Something in the nature of a revival has recently taken place in this old Society, and on this occasion we noticed much piquancy and freshness in the chorus-singing. The principals were Madame Sadler-Fogg, Mr. Fred Fallas and Mr. Fowler Burton. The North Staffordshire Orchestra ably assisted, and Mr. John Cope conducted.

MUSIC IN NORWICH AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Since the conclusion of the musical festival there is little to record in the way of musical doings, but an interesting concert was given in connection with the Railway Guards' Universal Friendly Society at St. Andrew's Hall on November 26, the vocalists engaged being Miss Lillie Wormald, Miss Mabel Braine, Mr. Webster Millar and Mr. Charles Tree. Miss Sybil Keymer appeared as solo violinist.

The Norwich Philharmonic Society, under the direction of Dr. Bates, gave its 123rd concert at St. Andrew's Hall on December 10, Miss Grainger-Kerr being the vocalist and M. Ferencz Hegedus the solo violinist. Miss Grainger-Kerr contributed Landon Ronald's 'Four songs of the hill,' a lullaby by Cyril Scott, and an 'Old folk-song.'

Mr. Hegedus played Mozart's Concerto No. 3, in G, the Adagio from Concerto in D (Richard Strauss), and 'Perpetuum Mobile' (Novacek), and the Philharmonic Society contributed to the programme two movements from Brahms's Symphony in D (No. 2); Gounod's Overture 'Mirella'; Bach's Gavotte in E and 'Marche Slave,' by Tchaikovsky.

The Saturday Popular Concerts, under the conductorship of Dr. Bunnnett, have been resumed for the season, and several well-known artists have already appeared, including Miss Gertrude Maxsted, Miss Kate Rooney and Mr. John Bardsley. At the first concert of the season the crowded audience included the Mayor, Sheriff and Corporation.

St. Andrew's Church, Norwich, possesses a fine organ, erected some three years ago by Messrs. Norman & Beard, and recently a carved oak case of elegant design has been added. It was dedicated by the Dean of Norwich on November 19, at a special service at which an organ recital, interspersed with vocal solos, was given. Mr. Harding, the church organist, presided at the organ, and Miss d'Auvergne Upcher was the vocalist. The choir, which is the largest church choir in Norwich, also took part in the service, under the able direction of the choirmaster, Mr. Dobson.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Retford Choral Society, under Mr. H. C. Andrews, gave German's 'Merrie England' on November 26, when a band and chorus of 120 performers gave a very good account of themselves. The solos were ably rendered by Miss Cook-Smith, Miss May Peters, Mr. Ben Calvert, Mr. Julien Henry and Mr. Mackie.

Mr. Arthur Richards conducted the Nottingham Evening Schools Choral Society in a successful performance of selections from Gounod's 'Faust,' on November 28. The soloists were Miss Lily Clark (Marguerite) and Mr. Carver (Faust), both of whom sang very creditably. Mr. Frank Taylor presided at the pianoforte, and the chorus, if somewhat lacking in attack, gave a careful and artistic performance of their portion of the work.

At the Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society's orchestral concert on December 3, the programme contained Beethoven's eighth Symphony, Tchaikovsky's Caisse-Noise Suite, and Elgar's overture 'In the South' as principal items. Miss Susan Strong proved an attractive vocalist, and Mr. Allen Gill safely guided his forces through a difficult programme.

Mr. Charles E. Riley conducted a fine performance of Stanford's 'Phaudrig Crohoore' on December 10, when the members of the Nottingham Glee and Madrigal Society gave their first concert of the current season. The choral forces were ably assisted by an orchestra led by Mr. Pickerill, who gave a fine rendering of Mozart's G minor Symphony and Weber's 'Oberon' overture. The chorus also sang a number of glees and part-songs, including Sullivan's 'The long day closes,' which deserves special mention for its artistic rendering.

On December 14 the Stapleford Choral Society gave a performance of 'Judas Maccabæus.' The solos were ably rendered by Miss Minnie Wall, Madame Racklyept, Mr. Harry Hartley and Mr. A. E. Marks. Mr. Fred Wyatt presided at the organ, and Mr. George Spencer conducted a very efficient rendering of Handel's work.

MUSIC IN OXFORD.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The first concert of the present term took place on October 22 in the Town Hall, when an excellent performance of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' was given by the Oxford Vocal Society. The soloists were Miss Ethel Lister, Mr. Charles Child and Mr. Greeves Johnson (of St. Paul's Cathedral), and Mr. H. B. Wilsdon ably conducted.

On November 4 in the same hall and under the auspices of the Musical Club, an orchestral concert was given, the programme including Mendelssohn's 'Hebrides' overture, Schubert's Symphony in C, and Brahms's Violin concerto, Professor Karl Klinger playing the solo part.

On November 18, in the Examination Schools and in connection with the Musical Union, Herr Ludwig and his confrères gave an excellent concert of chamber music, the principal items being the Quartets of Beethoven (Op. 127) and Mendelssohn (Op. 44), No. 3, both in the key of E flat, and beautifully played. Mr. F. S. Austin pleasantly contributed songs by Schumann and Grieg.

In the Town Hall and under the auspices of the Musical Club, a very enjoyable orchestral concert was given on November 26. The programme consisted of Mozart's Pianoforte concerto in G (K. 453), of which the solo part was delightfully played by Mr. Leonard Borwick, Wagner's 'Siegfried' idyll, Bach's 'Brandenburg' concerto for strings only, and Beethoven's Symphony in B flat. Dr. H. P. Allen conducted with great care and judgment.

'The event' of the term was no less than a Parry Concert, on December 3, in the Town Hall. This was indeed a graceful tribute to our late Professor of Music, and the Choral and Philharmonic Societies are to be most heartily congratulated not only upon an excellent idea, but also upon the successful manner in which it was carried out. The concert opened with the virile 'English' Symphony in C, followed by the Ode 'The glories of our blood and state.' Lastly came the oratorio 'Job,' the solos being quite safe in the hands of Mr. Plunket Greene, Misses Child and Gibson. The composer, who conducted, was again and again recalled, his reception being most cordial.

Mr. Herbert C. Warrilow, organist of St. Barnabas Church, of this city, has organized a series of organ recitals at the Town Hall by blind organists. The first was given by Mr. Victor Spanner, on November 3, and the second by Miss Emily Lucas on December 4. The two remaining recitals are to be given next term by Mr. H. C. Warrilow and Mr. W. Wolstenholme respectively.

Sir Walter Parratt's inaugural lecture as Professor of Music, is referred to on p. 30.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Mr. Henry J. Wood has entered upon his fifth season as conductor-in-chief of the Sheffield Amateur Musical Society, whose eightieth concert took place in the Albert Hall on December 15. This, the senior musical society of the city, is enjoying unexampled prosperity, not the least of its recent successes being a deeply reverential performance of Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater,' under the inspiring direction of Mr. Wood. The characteristic merits of the Society's choralism—refinement, and beauty of tone and expression—served to make the singing of the choir intensely enjoyable. In Brahms's 'Song of Destiny,' equally high choral attainments were revealed, to the great pleasure of the conductor, who at the close announced his desire to invite the Society to a concert at Queen's Hall, in order that London may have an opportunity of hearing his Sheffield choir. A fine local orchestra, strengthened by some players from Queen's Hall and Manchester, performed Elgar's 'Wand of youth' suite (No. 2) and, with Mr. J. W. Phillips, the organist of the Society, Boellmann's 'Fantaisie dialoguée' for organ and orchestra. The soloists were Miss Ethel Lister, Miss Jessie Goldsack, Mr. Alfred Heather and Mr. Thorpe Bates.

The Sheffield Choral Union is reviving itself very bravely, after some vicissitudes of fortune. A concert in the Montgomery Hall, on December 9, proved that the enlarged choir of the Union is being well-trained, under Mr. H. Reynolds, the newly appointed conductor. Cowen's 'John Gilpin' was very merrily sung, and in Stanford's 'The Revenge' the sterner demands on the resources of the singers were competently met. In the absence of an orchestra, pianoforte accompaniments were played by Madame E. Whewell.

The Hillsborough Choral Society is a flourishing suburban organization. An access of membership and funds enabled the directorate to give an adequate and, chorally, highly efficient performance of 'Elijah,' on December 10, under the conductorship of Mr. F. Shimeld. On the same night a gallant little body of enthusiasts, the Heeley Wesley Choral Society, performed very capably Cowen's 'Rose maiden,' under Mr. E. G. Laycock. Another prosperous musical organization, the Sheffield Male Glee and Madrigal Society, gave a concert in the Montgomery Hall on the following evening, conducted by Mr. W. H. Robinson, when the members sang a number of glees and part-songs with charming refinement. Sullivan's 'The beleaguered' and Hiles's 'Hushed in death' were especially well sung.

The choral activities of the month—they have been numerous—have also included an admirable performance of 'The Creation' by the Rotherham Choral Society, under Mr. Thomas Brameld; a concert by the Barnsley St. Cecilia Society, under the new conductor, Dr. Bairstow, at which Brahms's 'German' Requiem was most impressively sung; a performance of 'Elijah' by the Heeley Musical Union, directed by Mr. M. Tomlinson; and an intelligent interpretation of Barnett's 'Ancient Mariner' by the Norton Lees Choral Society, Mr. I. White conductor.

The amateur orchestral societies of the city have also been busy reporting progress on the half-season's study. The Philharmonic Orchestra played Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony and the 'Finlandia' suite of Sibelius, at their successful winter concert, and the probationary band of the same body gave a concert with encouraging results, both events being directed by Mr. J. H. Parkes. The Amateur Instrumental Society migrated to the new Victoria Hall for the first subscription concert, at which Beethoven's seventh Symphony was the chief work performed. Mr. J. Duffell conducted. At several of the churches Spohr's 'Last Judgment' has furnished special Advent music.

LEEDS.

Though there is nothing of great moment to record, this has been a busy month at Leeds, and on the whole an interesting one. The subscription concert on December 3 included a strong and sane performance, under Dr. Richter's direction, of Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony, and a brilliant one of Elgar's fine Variations. The Philharmonic Choir sang Brahms's 'Nänie,' and, under the conductorship of their chorus-master, Mr. Fricker, Bach's motet 'Be not afraid,' with a precision, purity and brightness of tone and refinement worthy of the highest praise. As a pendant to the Philharmonic Society's performance of 'St. Paul,' chronicled a month ago, the Choral Union gave 'Elijah' on December 16, when Dr. Coward gave his strikingly individual reading of the work. The singing of the choir was uniformly powerful and brilliant, and the principals were Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Webster Millar and Mr. Herbert Brown.

On December 4, Brahms's 'German Requiem' was given at a special service in Leeds Parish Church. By this time the great work has become fairly acclimatised to Leeds, and a finished and sympathetic performance was given under the alert and artistic conductorship of Dr. Bairstow. The organ was most ably handled by Mr. Tertius Noble, of York Cathedral, and the baritone solos were well sung by Mr. Browning, the soprano solo being undertaken, not ineffectively, by two of the choir-boys.

The Municipal Concerts have been particularly interesting, and large audiences have shown that it is possible to make the programmes educational without too great a sacrifice to popularity. Both on November 28 and December 12, Bach—who even now cannot be styled a 'popular' composer—was represented. On the former occasion we had not only some solos from the church cantatas, sung by Mr. Francis Harford, but the third Suite in D, and on the latter the beautiful Suite in B minor, with a solo flute part, was heard. Nor have native composers been neglected. Mr. Rutland Boughton's 'Tintagel,' a vivid and picturesque piece of landscape-painting, akin in its subject to Mendelssohn's 'Hebrides,' was well played under the composer's direction, and an early work by Mr. William Wallace, 'The passing of Beatrice,' showing the strong influence Wagner exerted over him sixteen years ago, proved interesting. New to Leeds was Vincent d'Indy's 'Wallenstein's camp,' a clever and effective piece, vigorous and full of bustle and animation. Mr. Baynton-Power's clever, easy performance of the solo part in Saint-Saëns's C minor Pianoforte concerto, and Miss Lily Simms's artistic playing of the same composer's Rondo capriccioso, deserve mention, and a most finished performance of a Haydn Symphony in D (the 'London' symphony) showed the excellent quality of the orchestra, on whose efficiency their conductor, Mr. H. A. Fricker, deserves warm congratulation.

One of the most interesting events of the month was a lecture recital on December 8, to expound Debussy's 'Pelléas et Mélisande,' a paper read by Mr. Gueritte being illustrated by two admirable artists, Madame Bathori-Engel and M. Emile Engel, the former playing the pianoforte so as to give a charming outline effect of Debussy's subtle scoring. At the Bohemian Concert on November 25, string quintets by Brahms and Mozart were associated with a well-written, fanciful 'divertimento' by a Leeds musician, Mr. Arthur Grimshaw, based on three old folk-tunes. The Rasch Quartet, on December 9, also paid attention to contemporary native art by playing Mr. Holbrooke's 'Fantasie,' whose three movements are entitled respectively 'Departure,' 'Absence,' and 'Return,' a work of distinct power, more complete in effect from a technical point of view than some of his compositions. In Brahms's concise and beautiful Trio in C minor (Op. 101), Mr. Noel Bell was a most artistic pianist, and a Mozart quartet ended the concert.

On November 24, Mr. Fred Dawson gave a recital, at which he not only played compositions of the type usual on these occasions, but gave especial interest to the second part by making it a review of harpsichord and pianoforte music, from Scarlatti to Debussy, in a series of twenty-two pieces which he played with inexhaustible brilliancy. A vocal recital was given by Mr. H. Brearley, one of the foremost of Yorkshire tenors, on November 26, when the violin solos of Miss Nora McKay and the pianoforte playing of Mr. Baynton-Power were enjoyable features of an excellent programme. A violin recital by Miss Lily Simms, assisted by Mr. Herbert Johnson as pianist, on December 11, and Mr. Backhaus's pianoforte recital at one of Messrs. Haddock's Musical Evenings on December 15, must not pass without mention.

BRADFORD.

At the subscription concert on December 18, the Hallé Orchestra, under Dr. Richter, played the 'Jupiter' and 'New World' Symphonies, together with suites by Bach, Tchaikovsky, and Bizet. On December 4 the Festival Choral Society gave a programme of madrigals and part-songs, conducted by the chorus-master, Mr. Branscombe, the singing being marked by intelligence and finish. On December 5, the Permanent Orchestra, under Mr. Allen Gill, gave a concert whose feature was a representative series of pieces by Russian composers; Tchaikovsky and Rubinstein being the chief, while with them were associated, not inappropriately, Sibelius and Moszkowski. Miss Lummert, a contralto well-known in the West Riding as artist and teacher, gave her farewell recital on December 12, when her artistic discernment was shown in a selection of songs by some of the greatest modern composers, and a group of living English composers. She was aided by Miss Pattie Hornsby, a brilliant and most intelligent soprano, and by the artistic accompaniments of Mrs. Henrich, while Mr. Herbert Johnson's pianoforte solos were very enjoyable.

OTHER TOWNS.

The Hull Vocal Society, of which Dr. G. H. Smith is the artistic head, gave a selection from 'Israel in Egypt,' together with Bach's cantata, 'God's time is the best,' at their first concert on November 24, the principals being Miss Alice Lakin, Messrs. J. Roberts, Dan Price and G. H. Ditchburn. The singing of the choir was marked by freshness and energy. The programme of the Hull Philharmonic Society on December 4, included some familiar classics by Haydn and Beethoven, but was brought well up to date by the 'Finlandia' of Sibelius and the 'L'Après-midi d'un Faune' of Debussy, which were more than creditably played under Mr. J. W. Hudson's direction. The Hull Symphony Orchestra has resumed its concerts, encouraged by the patronage of many local lovers of music who see the advantage of the establishment of a permanent professional orchestra in the town. On December 2, Haydn's 'Surprise' symphony pleased though it has ceased to 'surprise' even the most unsophisticated concert-goers. Beethoven's 'Egmont' and 'Fidelio' overtures were played with force, and Bizet's charming 'Toy' suite was highly enjoyable. On December 16 the programme included Mozart's 'Prague' symphony and Sullivan's 'Masque' music to the 'Merchant of Venice.' Mr. Wallerstein's energy inspires his orchestra, whose attack is excellent.

The York Musical Society, on December 15, gave under Mr. Tertius Noble's energetic direction Brahms's 'Song of destiny' and Sullivan's 'Golden legend.' The second of two happily devised concerts, intended primarily for children but enjoyed by not a few adults, was given on December 5 by Miss Bigge, an amateur whose services to music in York will be acutely realised now that she is leaving the city. With the aid of the Hon. Miss Norah Dawnay a most delightful programme of songs, English, Scotch and Irish, and of pianoforte pieces, such as a Haydn sonata, Beethoven's 'Groschen' rondo, and Holbrooke's humorous version of 'Three blind mice' as a waltz, was given, and the idea was so obviously appreciated that one trusts it may find copyists.

At Scarborough the Philharmonic Society gave a very creditable performance of Berlioz's 'Faust' on November 30, under Dr. Ely's direction, the singing being on the whole finished and expressive. The principals were Miss Emily Breare, Mr. Alfred Heather and Mr. Charles Tree—the last a very incisive Mephistopheles—a local singer, Mr. E. C. Foster, taking the part of Brander. On November 24 the Keighley Musical Union, under Mr. J. B. Summerscales, sang Elgar's 'King Olaf' and Cowen's 'John Gilpin.' Miss Ethel Lister, Mr. Turnpenney, and Mr. Ranalow were the principals in a generally satisfactory performance. At Ossett, on the same day, Goring Thomas's charming cantata 'The sun worshippers' was given by the Choral Society, of which Mr. Whitworth is conductor. Miss Manson and Mr. W. Green were the vocalists, and Mr. Joseph Booth, a promising pianist, was the soloist in Saint-Saëns's 'L'Afrique' fantasia. Dr. Bairstow, the Leeds parish church organist, has just undertaken the conductorship of the Barnsley St. Cecilia Society, and at his first concert on December 10 conducted a good performance of the 'German Requiem,' in which Miss Booker and Mr. F. Harford were the soloists. At the Wakefield chamber concert on December 10, the London Instrumental Sextet gave an interesting and uncommon programme of concerted music for wind instruments and pianoforte; quintets by Mozart and Klughardt, and a fine sextet by Thuille. Miss Henzel, the pianist, played Schumann's 'Etudes Symphoniques' with much fire and brilliance. At one of the special memorial services which Mr. C. H. Moody has made a feature in Ripon Cathedral, Brahms's 'German Requiem' was given on December 18, the organ accompaniment, ably played by Mr. Pattman, of Glasgow, being eked out by harp and drums with very good effect. Other choral concerts which must be passed over with brief mention are the Pudsey Choral Union's 'Seasons' on November 30, under Mr. H. H. Pickard; the Morley Choral Society's performance, on December 7, of Gluck's 'Orpheus,' under Mr. Fricker; the Ilkley Vocal Society's of Elgar's 'Black Knight' on December 14, under Mr. Akeroyd; and the Batley Choral Society's of 'St. Paul' on December 15.

The letter of our Devonshire and Cornwall correspondent is unavoidably deferred till the February issue.

We gladly call attention to the 'Home Music Study Union.' The honorary secretary is Mr. J. E. Lawrence, 63, Grange Avenue, Leeds, who writes: 'The chief object of the Union is to further the intelligent appreciation of music. It seeks to effect this by methodical and organized study of the Art, and of its history and form, suited to the requirements of those who have, and those who have not, a technical knowledge of it.' The Music Student, the magazine of the Union, made its first appearance in November. It is an educational publication which is welcomed as a serious contribution to musical literature, the 'courses' therein set forth being a particularly useful feature of its readable pages.

Madame Melba has presented the Melbourne Philharmonic Society with a complete set of costly orchestral instruments, at the flat pitch, manufactured by Messrs. Rudall, Carte & Co.

Foreign Notes.

BAYREUTH.

Next year's festival performances will for the first time see Professor Arthur Nikisch at the conductor's desk in the famous Cavern where hides the invisible orchestra. He will conduct the second 'Ring' cycle. It is announced that all the tickets for the two 'Ring' cycles are already sold.

BERLIN.

The latest sensation in musical circles has been a series of concerts given by Mr. W. W. Andreeff, of St. Petersburg, with his Great-Russia Balalaika orchestra. The 'Balalaika' is a Russian people's instrument of a distinctly primitive kind, consisting merely of a three-cornered sounding-board, over which three strings are stretched, the strings being plucked as in a guitar. There are balalaikas of all sizes, from what would correspond to the violins of an ordinary orchestra to enormous instruments suggesting huge double-basses. The band of some twenty-five players was heard chiefly in Russian folk-songs and dances. But classical pieces by Schubert and Schumann (specially arranged for this strangest of orchestras) were also played, and the wonderful variety of tone-colour and tone-gradation produced, together with a very inspiring crispness in the matter of rhythm, were greatly admired. The band was reinforced by the old Russian 'domra,' a three-stringed instrument not unlike a mandoline, and, like the Italian instrument, played with a plectrum. There are six sizes of domras. Then there were two 'gussli,' suggesting horizontal harps. With their brilliant glissando effects, these 'gussli' added greatly to the strange charm of the performances.—In the presence of the composer, Signor R. Leoncavallo's opera 'Zaza' was performed for the first time in Berlin at the Comic Opera on November 27, and received with great favour.—On December 2, Herr Leo Blech's new opera 'Versiegelt' and M. Raoul Laparra's 'La Habanera' were played at the Royal Opera for the first time in Berlin. Herr Blech's merry work pleased the audience greatly, but M. Laparra's sinister bill-poster tragedy—in which the ghost of a man murdered by his brother plays a leading part, and supernatural voices in a gruesome scene by the murdered man's grave admonish the culprit—was so little to the taste of Berliners that laughter, hissing and whistling greeted it, and the management decided the same evening to withdraw the work.—On December 9 the Russian composer Sergei Ivanovitch Tanéïev, of Moscow, gave a concert of his own compositions, with the assistance of the famous Bohemian Quartet, and scored a triumphant success. The programme included the Trio, Op. 22, the String quartet (Op. 19), and the Pianoforte quartet (Op. 20).—The young English pianist, Miss Evelyn Suart, gave a concert with orchestra on December 11, and produced a most favourable impression. 'A decisive victory,' to quote a well-known musical journal.

BOSTON.

Mr. Ignaz Paderewski has composed a Symphony which will be first produced by the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra.

COLOGNE.

Generalmusikdirektor Fritz Steinbach has just produced Herr Waldemar von Bausnern's symphony 'Youth.' The work was very favourably received.—A new 'Easter cantata' for soprano solo, chorus and orchestra, by Max Bruch, was produced at the last Gürzenich concert under the same renowned conductor, and received with great favour.

DRESDEN.

The production of Richard Strauss's 'Elektra' will take place towards the end of January. Generalmusikdirektor von Schuch will conduct. Frau Krull will represent the delectable heroine, while Frau Schumann-Heink has been chosen for the part of Klytemnestra. The event will no doubt attract critics, managers and music-lovers from all parts of the musical world.

DUISBURG.

A new work, described as 'Pandora, songs and lyric scenes after Goethe's poem, for male chorus, soli, orchestra and declamation,' composed by Herr Arnold Mendelssohn, was produced here on November 29 and enthusiastically received. Dr. Walter Josephson conducted, and the chorus was the Duisburg Teachers' Choral Society.

DÜSSELDORF.

It is officially announced that Professor Karl Panzner, now Musikdirektor at Bremen and one of the most renowned of German conductors, will on May 1 vacate his present post in order to settle at Düsseldorf as successor to Professor Julius Buths.

FLORENCE.

On November 28 a new three-act opera entitled 'Cadore,' composed by Signor Montico, and dealing with the Italian anti-Austrian rising of 1848, was produced here, but neither the music nor the performance were calculated to impress the audience favourably.

GENOA.

At the Politeama Theatre a new opera and prologue in three acts entitled 'Aixa,' and composed by Signor Edoardo Bellini, was produced on November 28, without however meeting with success.

GÜTERSLOH.

A symphonic poem, 'Don Carlos,' doubtless based on Schiller's drama, was produced at the last symphony concert and very favourably received. Herr G. Christiansen is the composer.

HAMBURG.

'Job,' a dramatic poem for soli, chorus and orchestra, by an American composer, Mr. F. S. Converse, was performed here by the Cecilia Society for the first time in Germany on November 23, and made a deep impression, the composer, who was present, being greeted with much enthusiasm. Mr. Converse, who was born in New England thirty-seven years ago, after studying at Yale University became a pupil of Rheinberger at Munich. His music is, however, essentially modern in style and shows a considerable degree of originality. Professor Spengel conducted, and Frau Schumann Heink sang the contralto part in which her glorious voice touched every heart.—Professor Georg Schumann's new oratorio 'Ruth' was produced here on December 7, at the fifth Philharmonic concert, by the Singakademie, under the direction of Professor Richard Barths, and very favourably received. The composer, who has compiled his own libretto, has made full use of passages from the Psalms and other sources, including a chorus of 'Spirits of the night,' the words of which are by Herr K. E. Knatz. In his music Professor Schumann has incorporated some Hebrew melodies, as well as a German folksong of the 15th century.

INNSBRUCK.

The local Musikverein celebrated on December 4 the ninetieth anniversary of its foundation, by a festival concert at which Bruckner's D minor Mass and Liszt's 13th Psalm were performed, under the direction of Professor Pembaur.

MAGDEBURG.

Peter Cornelius's rarely-heard second opera 'Der Cid' has just been performed for the first time here at the Municipal Theatre, and very favourably received. The work was given in its original form, as 'edited' by Herr Max Halbe.

MILAN.

The never-failing supply of new Italian operas has received a fresh addition in 'Fasma,' a lyric drama in three acts, composed by Signor Pasquale La Rostella. The plot is based upon an episode in the Polish Insurrection of 1830-32, and the music shows many qualities likely to please an average audience. The work was produced on December 1 at the Teatro Dal Verme.

MUNICH.

For next year's Mozart-Wagner festival performances, the former master's 'Don Giovanni,' 'Figaro,' 'Così fan tutte' and 'Die Entführung aus dem Serail' have been chosen; while Wagner will be represented by 'Tannhäuser,' 'Tristan,' 'Die Meistersinger' and the 'Ring.' As usual, the Mozart operas will be performed in the Residenztheater, and Wagner's at the Prinzregententheater. The festival will be held between July 31 and September 13.—The first concert of the Society for Choral Singing, under Herr Ludwig Hess, was devoted to no less than five rarely-heard cantatas by J. S. Bach, viz., 'Du wahrer Gott,' 'Sehet, wir gehen hinauf,' 'Wie schön leuchtet der Morgenstern,' 'Komm, du süsse Todesstunde,' and the cantata celebrating the election of councillors, 'Preise, Jerusalem, den Herrn.' The audience waxed mightily enthusiastic over these 'novelties.'

NEW YORK.

Eugen d'Albert's opera 'Tiefand' was performed for the first time at the Metropolitan Opera House on November 23. It was well received, without however achieving a great success. On November 26 (Thanksgiving Day) the same institution performed 'Parsifal' for the first time this season.—By cabling over to the composer the sum of 5 000 dollars, Mr. Oskar Hammerstein, of the Manhattan Opera House, has secured the exclusive right of performing Richard Strauss's new opera 'Elektra' in the United States.

OBERLEUTENS DORF.

In this little Bohemian town there flourishes a 'Mozart orchestra,' which on December 6 gave a concert with a Mozart programme containing in chronological order a number of rarely-heard pieces, e.g.: The sinfonia to the master's first sacred cantata, 'Die Schuldigkeit des ersten Gebotes,' composed at the age of ten; the overture to 'Bastien und Bastienne,' dating from his twelfth year; and many other works. The last piece on the programme was the overture to 'Die Zauberflöte.'

PARIS.

At the Colonne concert of November 29 a new Fantasia for pianoforte and orchestra by a new composer, M. Henri Welsch, was produced, but coldly received. The work is in three movements, all of which are built upon an original theme only two bars in length.—A splendid performance of Bach's Mass in B minor was given on December 6 at the Conservatoire, under the direction of M. A. Messager, while the Bach Society, on December 2, presented a programme devoted to the triple Concerto for pianoforte, flute and violin, the second Brandenburg concerto, a Sonata for two flutes, and some sacred songs. It is evident that in the French capital appreciation of the great master's genius grows apace.—M. Isidore de Lara's opera 'Sanga,' originally produced at Nice in 1906, was added to the repertoire of the Opéra-Comique, in a new and greatly altered version, on December 9. The alterations affect both libretto and music.—At its last sitting the Académie des Beaux-Arts elected Herr Engelbert Humperdinck, composer of 'Hänsel and Gretel,' a corresponding member in the place of the late N. Rimsky-Korsakoff.

PHILADELPHIA.

Mr. Oskar Hammerstein opened his new opera house—the 'biggest and beautifullest in the world'—on November 17. Constructed throughout of steel and stone, the house was erected in the amazingly short time of five months and eighteen days. The first performance, 'Carmen,' drew an enormous audience of over 4,000 people, while many more thousands had to be disappointed. A most brilliant performance of Saint-Saëns's 'Samson and Delilah' was given before an audience which included, 'by invitation,' five hundred ministers of religion of all denominations, whom Mr. Hammerstein was anxious to convince of the harmlessness of presenting Bible stories on the stage. He is said to have succeeded in his endeavour.

ROME.

An 'International Society for Chamber Music' has recently been founded here, which gave its first concert on November 25. The programme was devoted exclusively to Bach, a master all but unknown in the Italian capital. The fifth Brandenburg concerto, the Concerto in C for two clavers, the C major Suite for violoncello, and the Adagio in G minor for violin, string orchestra and cembalo constituted the splendid programme. Herr Friedrich Spiro—one of the most ardent Bach enthusiasts anywhere to be found, and well known as the bright and entertaining Rome correspondent of the Berlin Signale—was the conductor, though his name did not appear on the programmes. The audience, as well as the leading musical critics, displayed extraordinary enthusiasm.

STUTT GART.

'Misé Brun,' a lyric drama in four acts, written and composed by M. Pierre Maurice, was produced at the Royal Court Theatre on November 15 and greeted with enthusiasm. Professor Max Schillings, to whom the score is dedicated, conducted a splendid performance.

TURIN.

'Il Grillo del focolare,' a musical comedy in three acts, was produced here at the Politeama Theatre and well received. The composer, Signor Riccardo Zandonai, is a young man twenty-three years of age, and his work promises well for his future career.—A new four-act opera entitled 'Serafina d' Albania,' by Signor Angelo Francesco Cunes, was produced at the Victor Emmanuel Theatre, but failed to please.

WEIMAR.

On December 15, the fiftieth anniversary of the production, under Franz Liszt, of Peter Cornelius's delightful 'Barber of Bagdad,' a festival performance of the opera was given in the Court Theatre. A prologue, written by a son of the composer, Professor Dr. Carl Cornelius, of Basle, was recited on the occasion.

The Oxford House Musical and Dramatic Association gave an interesting concert at Excelsior Hall, Bethnal Green, on December 5, the performance being honoured with the presence of Princess Christian and Princess Henry of Battenberg. The chief feature of the programme was Stanford's 'Revenge,' and the excellent work done by the choir of 200 singers, gathered from the locality, and by the orchestra, again testified to the care and skill of Mr. Cuthbert Kelly, the conductor. The solo vocalists were Miss Nora Meredith and Mr. Hugh Peyton. The good work done by the Association in the neighbourhood of Bethnal Green was shown by the interest of the numerous and appreciative audience, and it may be mentioned that equally crowded and appreciative audiences are present throughout the season, at the Shakespearean plays given by Mr. Charles Fry, the music at these performances being also under the direction of Mr. Kelly.

Mr. Frederic Beard, formerly well-known in connection with choral music in Birmingham, has organized a choral society in Melbourne, where he now resides, to be called the Victorian (or Melbourne) Festival Choral Society. It is proposed to give a series of four concerts (the first of which, 'Elijah,' was given on November 1) at which the following works are to be performed: Samson and Delilah, Choral Symphony, In exitu Israel (Wesley), Song of Destiny, and the Dream of Gerontius. May all success attend Mr. Beard and his co-helpers in carrying out this ambitious programme.

The London Sunday School Choir will hold their annual choral festival at the Royal Albert Hall on Saturday evening, February 20, when the band and choir will number 1,200 performers, and the programme will consist of part-songs and choruses conducted by Mr. William Whiteman, accompanied by the Society's orchestra (conductor, Mr. Wesley Hammet). The soloists are Miss Ada Bednall, Madame Edna Thornton and Mr. Ben Davies, and Mrs. Mary Layton and Mr. Horace G. Holmes will respectively preside at the piano/orte and organ.

The mechanical piano-player, or pianola, is an instrument that has come to stay. Although it excites wonder by its triumphs over mechanical difficulties, one has always the feeling that its performances are lacking in those soul touches which are the high prerogative of the human being. Anyone, however, who has heard the Welte-Mignon instrument cannot help feeling amazed at the photographic perfection, so to speak, with which it is able to reproduce not only the nuances and the pedal-use of eminent players, but all their idiosyncrasies! We recently had the opportunity of hearing on one of these instruments a Chopin Etude exactly as played by Pachmann, and a Staccato Caprice as interpreted by Jolanda Méro, in both instances with astonishing fidelity to the masterly interpretations of those artists. Among the many eminent musicians who have testified to the merits of this truly wonderful invention is Professor Arthur Nikisch, who says: 'I consider the invention of this Art Piano to mark an epoch in the history of music. The reproduction of any composition played for this device by an artist, is in all respects so amazingly true to the original, both as to merely technical perfection and in regard to the musically poetical element, that it really creates the delusion of having the artist personally before us and of listening to his own execution.' The instrument baffles description; it should be heard and seen in order that its extraordinary potentialities may be put to the test. It is no wonder to learn from Messrs. Steinway & Co., the London agents, that the manufacturers, the well-known and long established firm of Welte, of Freiburg, are scarcely able to keep pace with the demand for these instruments. Need anything more be said?

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed in this summary, as the notices are either prepared from local newspapers or furnished by correspondents. Correspondents are particularly requested to enclose a programme when forwarding reports of concerts.

AYR.—The Choral Union, assisted by the orchestra of the Ayr Philharmonic Society, gave a concert in the Town Hall on December 10. The works performed were Gade's 'Erl King's daughter,' Brewer's 'Sir Patrick Spens,' and Pearsall's 'Allen-a-Dale.' The choir and orchestra performed in a highly creditable manner, and the solo vocalists were Miss Lily Jeffrey, Miss Elizabeth Mackay, and Mr. George Campbell. Special mention should be made of 'Sir Patrick Spens,' which was performed in Scotland for the first time and was much appreciated. Mr. Hugh McNabb ably conducted, and Dr. Gairdner officiated at the piano/orte.—The Maybole Choral Society gave a performance of Bennett's 'May Queen' in the Town Hall on December 15. Both choir and orchestra did satisfactory service under the conductorship of Mr. Henry Graves, and the solo vocalists were Miss Rana Taggart, Miss Brannen, Mr. James Dunn and Mr. Walter Harvey.

BERKHAMSTED.—A creditable rendering of Elgar's 'King Olaf' was given by the Church Choral Society in the Town Hall, on December 9, under the conductorship of Mr. W. H. London, who was responsible for the training of the choir. The orchestra was led by Mr. E. E. Halfpenny, and the solo parts were sung by Miss Beatrice Spencer, Mr. William Fell, and Mr. Herbert Tracey. Elgar's marching song, 'Follow the colours,' was sung after the cantata.

BOLTON.—The Parish Church Choral Society gave a concert on December 2, at which the principal feature was Stanford's 'The Revenge,' and this work, together with some operatic choruses, were creditably rendered by the choir and orchestra under the direction of Mr. W. J. Lancaster.

BRIDGNORTH.—The choral section of the Amateur Dramatic and Musical Society gave a performance of 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast' at the Agricultural Hall on December 3, under the conductorship of Mr. W. Sewell. The choir acquitted themselves with credit and received adequate support from the orchestra. Mr. Jesse Hackett sang the tenor solo. Selections from Wagner and from Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' completed the programme.

CHICHESTER.—The Musical Society, under the conductorship of Dr. F. J. Read, gave a fine performance of Brahms's 'German Requiem' at the Corn Exchange on December 7. Both the orchestra (led by Mr. A. Burnett) and the choir were excellent, the choir especially singing with admirable restraint and intelligence. The solo vocalists were Mr. Paul Edmunds and Miss Betty Booker, the latter giving an excellent rendering of the solo part of 'The song of Hannah,' a charmingly melodious cantata by the conductor of the Society. A delicate and accurate performance of Mozart's G minor Symphony was a credit to conductor and orchestra alike. The concert concluded with Handel's overture to 'Athaliah.'

CHORLEY.—The Madrigal Society gave a performance of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast' in the Town Hall, on December 2, with band and chorus of 120 performers. The tenor solo was sung by Mr. Samuel Masters. In the second part of the concert the overture, choruses, and ballet music from Weber's 'Preciosa' music were performed, Miss Margaret Hadfield singing the song 'Lonely am I now no longer.' Master Alfie Barker (a young Hungarian pupil of Dr. Brodsky) was the solo violinist. Mr. H. C. Wilcocks conducted.

CHRISTCHURCH (N. Z.).—The fourth subscription concert of the Musical Union took place at His Majesty's Theatre on October 27. The programme comprised Mendelssohn's 'Scotch' symphony, the 'Tannhäuser' overture, Elgar's 'Pomp and Circumstance' march, and an Entr'acte from Schubert's 'Rosamunde' music. Mrs. Ernest Barber was the vocalist, and Mr. Vere Buchanan and Miss D. Russell contributed violin and violoncello solos. Dr. J. C. Bradshaw conducted.

CINDERFORD.—The annual concert of the Choral Society was given in the Town Hall on December 10. The programme consisted of Stanford's 'The Revenge,' and miscellaneous items. The choir, assisted by a capable orchestra, acquitted themselves very creditably, and the conductor, Mr. George Kear, deserves credit for the careful work of preparation. The principal vocalists were Mr. H. Stanley Hinton and Miss Madeleine Applegate. Miss Grace Jarrett contributed violin solos.

CONNAH'S QUAY.—The Excelsior Male-Voice Choir gave its first annual concert in the Drill Hall on December 18. The programme included Rossini's 'Carnovale,' the Pilgrims' chorus in 'Tannhäuser,' Mendelssohn's 'Hunter's farewell,' and the 'Martyrs of the arena' (De Killé). The solo vocalists were Miss Frances Greatorex, Miss Florence Smith, Mr. James Morgan and Mr. Charles James. Mr. Lewis Jones, the capable conductor, also contributed some pianoforte and violin solos.

COVENTRY.—In St. Michael's Church on December 10 the St. Michael's Festival Choral Society gave a performance of Spohr's 'Last Judgment' and Parry's 'Blest pair of Sirens,' under the conductorship of Mr. Walter Hoyle. There was a band and chorus of 200, and Mr. C. W. Perkins, the Birmingham Town Hall organist, presided at the organ. The solo parts in the 'Last Judgment' were adequately sustained by Miss Vivian Hogwood, Miss Annie Kemp, Mr. Thorold Waters and Mr. Sydney Stoddard.

CREWE.—The Philharmonic Society gave the first and second parts of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' on December 16. The principal vocalists were Miss Emily Breare, Mr. Alfred Heather and Mr. William Waite. The second part of the programme was miscellaneous, and included Schubert's Symphony in B minor. Mr. W. Dunning, organist of Christ Church, Crewe, conducted.

DARTFORD.—The Dartford and District Choral and Orchestral Society gave a concert in the Conservative Hall on December 8, under the direction of Mr. David Mackenzie. Cowen's 'John Gilpin' was well rendered, and the programme included the 'Soldiers' chorus' from Gounod's 'Faust,' Fanning's part-song 'Moonlight,' and the conductor's part-song 'The Newquay fisherman's song.' The orchestra played the instrumental accompaniments to the vocal works effectively, and also performed Mozart's overture to 'Figaro' and Haydn's Symphony No. 2 (in D) very creditably.

GAINSBOROUGH.—The choir of the Primitive Methodist Church sang Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul,' with orchestral accompaniment, on December 9, under the conductorship of Mr. W. E. Rowbottom. The principal vocalists were Miss Mary Swales, Mr. G. W. Riley and Mr. Dan Billington. Mr. C. Storr presided at the organ.—On December 16 the Gainsborough Choral Society gave a very creditable performance of Elgar's 'King Olaf' at the Parish Church Institute. The principal vocalists were Madame Marie Goodall, Mr. William Burrows and Mr. Charles Knowles. The chorus and orchestra, numbering 130 performers, were conducted by Mr. W. A. Montgomery.

GREAT YARMOUTH.—The Musical Society opened its season on December 15 at the Town Hall, when Stanford's 'The Revenge' and Eaton Fanning's 'Song of the Vikings,' the chief choral works performed, received an adequate rendering, under the conductorship of Mr. Haydon Hare. The orchestra, in addition to accompanying the works named, played the overtures to the 'Merry wives of Windsor,' and the march 'Hongroise' of Berlioz. Miss Jenny Taggart, Mr. James Davis and Mr. Arthur Barlow were the solo vocalists.

GUILDFORD.—The Choral and Orchestral Society began its seventh season with a successful concert at the County and Borough Hall on December 10. The programme included Parry's 'Ode to Music,' Stanford's 'Phauidrig Crohoore' and 'Songs of the Sea,' Beethoven's overture to 'Egmont,' Tchaikovsky's 'Casse-Noisette' suite, and Massenet's ballet music from 'Le Cid.' The soloists were Miss Eugénie Ritte, Mr. C. Stuart Edwards, Mrs. Miller, Miss Osborne, Mr. Glennie and Mr. P. E. Coulart, the four last mentioned being members of the Society. The choir and orchestra (led by Miss E. Midgley) numbered 150 performers, and Mr. Archibald Hollier conducted.

GUISBOROUGH.—Wilfred Bendall's cantata, 'The Lady of Shalott,' was performed on December 10 at Gisboro Hall, Yorkshire, the seat of Colonel and Mrs. Chaloner. The concert was given as a compliment to Mrs. Hunt, the conductor, for her services in directing the music of some Water Tableaux, recently arranged by Mrs. Chaloner at Gisboro Abbey. The cantata was excellently performed by the choir and orchestra under the conductorship of Mrs. Hunt, the solo parts being well sung by Miss Elsie McDermid. Other items in the programme were two of Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Characteristic Waltzes' by the orchestra, violoncello solos by Mrs. Erskine, and songs by Mrs. Boyle-Smith, Miss Dora Christian, and Mr. D. T. Jones. In the evening the cantata was repeated at a popular concert in the Town Hall.

HARROW.—The Harrow Mission Musical Society gave a successful performance of Gade's 'Erl King's daughter' and Walthew's 'Pied Piper,' on December 14. The solo vocalists were Miss Agnes Christa, Miss Phyllis Davies, Mr. Gwilym Wigley and Mr. Selon Willoughby. Mr. Evan W. Pole was leader of the orchestra, and Mr. Orton Bradley conducted.

HOLMFIRTH.—The District Choral Society opened its season on December 10 at the Drill Hall, when a varied programme was presented, consisting of a setting of the 'Veni Creator' by the conductor, Mr. Arthur Pearson, Horatio Parker's 'Wanderer's Psalm,' and Beethoven's 'Mount of Olives.' The choir sang with intelligence and spirit, and there was an excellent orchestra. The solo vocalists were Miss Eva Rich, Madame Marguerite Gell, Mr. Charles Lunn, and Mr. Herbert Parker.

JARROW.—Sir Hubert Parry's oratorio 'Judith' was performed by the Philharmonic Society in the Mechanics' Hall on December 16. Much care had been bestowed by the conductor, Mr. George Dodds, in training the choir, who fully entered into the spirit of the work, and the orchestra also did excellent service. The solo parts were interpreted by Miss Maggie Inglis, Miss Margaret Hoggarth, Mr. Edwin Kellett and Mr. Llewellyn Roberts. The parts of the children were sung by Masters George and Percy Gibson.

LANCASTER.—Mr. Aldous's Choir, whose recent successes in the chief Northern competitions have made its name a familiar one, gave a concert at Lancaster on November 26. The programme included Elgar's 'O wild west wind,' Walford Davies's 'England's pleasant land,' and two madrigals by Wilbye. Mr. Aldous's choir now holds the Challenge Shield in the chief choral class at Morecambe.

LEAMINGTON.—Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' trilogy was successfully performed by the Madrigal Society in the Winter Hall, on December 2. The choir sang very creditably throughout and received excellent support from the orchestra. The solo vocalists were Miss Evangeline Florence, Mr. Sidney Miles and Mr. James Coleman, the whole performance reflecting much credit on Mr. E. Roberts West, who conducted.

MELBOURNE (Australia).—A successful performance of 'Elijah' was given on November 1 by the Festival Choir, newly organized by Mr. Frederic Beard. The choir, though somewhat lacking in balance, displayed good tone and attack, making altogether a very promising appearance. The principal solo vocalists were Miss Lilian Read, Madame Ada Crossley, Mr. John Harrison and Mr. Hamilton Earle. The orchestra was led by M. Leon Sametini and Mr. Frederic Beard conducted.

NANTWICH.—The Choral and Orchestral Society gave a successful concert in the Town Hall on December 9. The programme consisted of a chronological presentation of operatic music comprising solos, choruses, &c., selected from the best known works of the most prominent composers of Opera from the end of the 16th to the 19th centuries, including such names as Monteverde, Purcell, Gluck, Mozart, Auber, Weber, Rossini, Donizetti, Berlioz, Flotow, Wagner, and Gounod. The choruses were well rendered by the choir, and the accompaniments excellently played by the orchestra. The soloists were Miss Doris Simpson, Miss Bronwen Charlton and Mr. Richard Jack. Mr. Frank Battams was leader of the orchestra, and Mr. Cecil Engelhardt conducted.

NORTHAMPTON.—The Musical Society gave a performance of Dr. Walford Davies's 'Everyman' in the Corn Exchange on December 11. The performance was remarkably good, especially under very trying circumstances, both the contralto, Miss Alice Lakin, and the tenor, Mr. James Horncastle, being indisposed and unable to sing. The Society was fortunate, however, in having the services of Miss Gleeson-White as soprano, and she courageously sang the solo music of the two artists named, as well as her own, Mrs. Brentnall singing in the concerted music. Mr. W. J. Forington took the part of 'Everyman.' The choir sang admirably and with excellent tone, and received adequate support from the orchestra. The performance reflected much credit on Mr. Charles J. King, the conductor.

PENRITH.—The musical festival inaugurated last year with a performance of 'Elijah' was this year extended to two days, December 9 and 10. On the first evening Berlioz's march 'Hongroise' and Beethoven's Symphony in C minor were played by the orchestra (led by Mr. Bertram Lewis), chiefly consisting of members of the Queen's Hall, Liverpool Philharmonic, and Leeds Symphony orchestras. The second part was devoted to Sullivan's 'Golden Legend.' The principal soloists were Miss Margaret Layton, Mr. Webster Millar and Mr. Herbert Brown. Miss Graham and Mr. J. B. Milburn, both of Penrith, gave efficient help in the parts of Ursula and the Forester. The choir, numbering upwards of 200 voices, gave a good account of themselves, the quality of tone and balance being most commendable. On the second night the first part consisted of selections from 'Israel in Egypt.' For this work the band and chorus, strengthened by about a hundred singers from Appleby and Kirkby Stephen, numbered over 300 performers. Miss Layton and Mr. Webster Millar, together with Mrs. Westmorland (Penrith), were the soloists. The honours of the evening were carried off by the choir, who sang with the greatest enthusiasm throughout. In the miscellaneous second part the orchestra was heard in the well-known 'Ruy Blas' overture, and Wagner's 'Hail, bright abode,' for chorus and orchestra, brought a memorable and thoroughly successful festival to a close. Mr. E. Godfrey Brown conducted on both nights.

SAFFRON WALDEN.—The Musical Society gave a concert on December 2 at the Town Hall, when Somervell's cantata 'The forsaken merman' was performed by an orchestra and choir of eighty performers. The Society has made great progress since its revival three years ago under the conductorship of Mr. H. Mahon, and on this occasion both choir and orchestra, by their improved tone and precision, testified to the painstaking care of the conductor. Mr. Stanley Newman was the solo vocalist.

SEVENOAKS.—The Choral and Orchestral Society gave an excellent interpretation of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' trilogy on December 9. The choir and orchestra (led by Mr. A. G. Whitehead) numbered 120 performers. The solo vocalists were Miss Euneta Truscott, Mr. Anderson Nicol and Mr. Robert Carr. The performance of this popular work created much interest, and it was very warmly received. Mr. W. A. Taylor conducted.

SLOUGH.—The Choral Society gave a performance of Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' in the Slough Parish Church on December 10. The accompaniment was provided by an efficient orchestra led by Mr. John Williamson, Mr. Herbert Blanchett presiding at the organ; Masters Wolseley Cooper and Miles Leat sang the soprano solos, and Mr. Albert Watson, of St. George's Chapel, was the tenor. The choruses were attacked with decision and power, and the whole performance was indicative of careful training on the part of the conductor, Mr. George Bower.

SWADLINCOTE.—Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' was performed by the Harmonic Society on December 2. The choir sang with commendable precision and dramatic feeling. The principal vocalists were Miss Euneta Truscott, Miss Ellen Wilby, Miss Mabel Braine, Mr. Walter Lawley and Mr. Charles Tree. Herr Kienlie was the leader of the orchestra, and Mr. Walter Jones conducted.

TORQUAY.—The second concert this season by the Musical Association took place at the Bath Saloons on November 26, when Stanford's 'Revenge' and 'Schumann's E flat Symphony' were the principal features of a programme which also included Schubert's 'Rosamunde' ballet music and Cherubini's 'Anacreon' overture. These works were interpreted with much spirit and effect by the orchestra, while the choir was heard to great advantage both in the 'Revenge' and in Sullivan's 'O gladsome Light.' Miss Verena Fancourt was the solo vocalist, and Mr. T. Henry Webb conducted.

WELLINGTON (N.Z.).—The Musical Union, conducted by Mr. Robert Parker, gave an interesting concert in the Town Hall on October 27, when the chief features of the programme were Stanford's 'Revenge,' Grieg's Pianoforte concerto in A minor (soloist, Mr. Thomas F. Dunhill), Sullivan's song-cycle 'The window,' and Mr. Dunhill's choral ballad 'Tubal Cain.' The last-named work, conducted by the composer, was given for the first time in New Zealand. The solo vocalists were Miss Phœbe Parsons and Mr. Charles H. Stephens. It is interesting to note that Miss Parsons, Mr. Dunhill, and Mr. Leslie Peck, who conducted the Concerto, are all former students of the Royal College of Music.

WESTCLIFF.—Coleridge-Taylor's new choral work 'The Bon-Bon Suite' was performed on December 14 at the King's Hall by the Philharmonic Society, and received creditable interpretation under the direction of Mr. W. J. Barton, the choruses being sung with much effect. Mr. Julian Henry sang the solos.

WINCHESTER.—The Choral Society gave a performance of Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen' on December 2, under the conductorship of Mr. C. H. Gamblin. The choir sang with much spirit and freshness, and the solo vocalists were Miss Stevens, Mrs. Pullen, Mr. Frederick Lake and Mr. J. E. Whitwain. The miscellaneous second part included the overture to the 'Nozze di Figaro,' well played by the orchestra, and two part-songs by the choir, 'When hands meet' (Pinsuti) and 'Tis sweet to hear' (John Pointer).

WOKING.—The programme of the Musical Society's concert given at the Public Hall on December 8 comprised the recently-published selection from Gounod's 'Faust,' which was performed with much success. The choir displayed excellent attack and expression, and was well supported by the orchestra, led by Mr. T. E. Gatehouse. The second part was miscellaneous, and included two unaccompanied part-songs, 'Softly the moonlight' (Iliffe), and 'When the rosy morn' (Sydenham), sung by the choir, and the 'Merry wives of Windsor' overture, Mendelssohn's 'Pilgrims' March,' and two of Massenet's 'Scènes Pittoresques' played by the orchestra. The solo vocalists were Miss Elsa Headon, Miss Edith Judge, Mr. Gwilym Richards and Mr. Montague Borwell. Mr. Patrick White conducted.

Answers to Correspondents.

While we are most anxious to answer questions to the best of our ability, we cannot undertake to send replies by post, nor can we give the names of teachers or concert-agents.

F. K. S.—We do not know of any book on platform etiquette as applied to concerts. It is doubtless a matter of mutual arrangement whether you, as the accompanist, should 'assist the lady singer on to the platform, and then walk behind her to the piano,' or whether you should 'go first straight to the piano, and the President or some other gentleman assist her.' If the President were to accompany her to the pianoforte, this act of gallantry need not create a precedent, or create any ill-feeling, so long as you accompany her at the pianoforte. In so doing you could doubtless materially assist the lady singer when she has arrived on the platform, whether she be hoisted up or walks along the boards of that elevated structure.

H. V.—The Flute sonata by Handel to which you refer is in the key of G and is contained in the first of two books of 'Six sonatas for flute and pianoforte' (Peters' edition). They form part of 'XV. solos for a German flute, Hoboy, or Violin, with a Thoroughbass for the Harpsichord, or Bass Violin, Opera prima,' to give the original title of Handel's work. There are no similar compositions by Beethoven or Mendelssohn.

ORGANIST.—The following metronomic speeds are suggested. Beethoven's Pianoforte Sonata in C minor (Op. 10, No. 1), Allegro molto e con brio, dotted minim = 69, Adagio molto, quaver = 69, Prestissimo, minim = 100; Bach's Prelude and Fugue in G (No. 39), Prelude, crotchet = 132, Fugue, dotted crotchet = 76; Chopin's Prelude No. 17, in A flat, dotted crotchet = 80.

W. E. H.—The chorus of priests 'O Isis and Osiris,' in Mozart's 'Die Zauberflöte,' may be sung about minim = 58. For the choral portion it is advisable to adopt the same marks of expression as in the accompaniment. Any staccato rendering of the chords in bars 5 and 6 should not be overdone, if, indeed, attempted. The last note of the vocal phrase should be cut clean away.

W. E. G.—If a proper method of blowing is adopted—'ay, there's the rub'—there is no reason why a clarinet player should not be able to sing well, providing he has a voice. The two things are not necessarily antagonistic.

A. W. C.—We are afraid the catalogue you mention is out of print and could only be purchased through a second-hand bookseller. You might, however, obtain the loan of a copy, or failing that, you could see it at the British Museum.

C. H. R.—Bach's air 'My heart ever faithful' is from the church cantata 'Also hat Gott die Welt geliebt' ('God so loved the world'), and has been arranged for the organ by J. Hiles (Novello, 1s. 6d. net.)

J. W.—Handel's so-called 'Largo,' for violin, harp, and organ, is an arrangement, by Hellmesberger, of the air 'Ombra mai fu' from the opera 'Xerxes,' and can be obtained through any music-seller.

H. JAMES.—Claudio Casciolini, who lived at the beginning of the 18th century, was chapel-master of the church of S. Lorenzo in Damaso, Rome. You will find a list of his works in Eitner's Quellen-Lexikon.

V. M. S.—The most effective way of finding out the dates and places of concerts given in London—their name is legion—is to study the advertisement columns of the London newspapers.

J. J. B.—Liszt's Hungarian Storm March is published in both solo and duet form for pianoforte, but not for organ. Either version can be obtained from Messrs. Novello.

INQUIRER—Stick to your guns. Never mind what the old lady says; she is evidently not competent to pronounce an opinion upon pronunciation.

A. E. A.—For some 'pianoforte pieces after the style of Edward MacDowell and Grieg,' see the compositions of Sjögren and Sinding.

H. T.—No; but we hope to include that beautiful building in our series of illustrated articles on cathedrals and churches.

C. J. C.—The concerts of the Bach Society are usually given at Queen's Hall. The secretary of the Society is Mr. F. J. Belton, 25, Wontner Road, Upper Tooting, S.W.

F. W. S.—Most probably the city you name does 'possess good musical society' by reason of its cathedral influence.

A. G. L.—The best edition of Haydn's Quartets is that published by the firm of Peters.

TECHNIQUE

PIANOFORTE PLAYING

BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

In the course of my experience as a teacher of the pianoforte, an experience extending over many years, certain ideas have from time to time suggested themselves to me which have proved useful—to myself, as enabling me to express more clearly that which I desired my pupils to understand, and to my pupils, as tending to facilitate their comprehension of the various difficulties they have had to encounter, at the same time leading them to perceive the most practical means of overcoming them, and thus accelerating their general rate of progress.

These suggestions relate to both the mechanical and intellectual sides of the study of pianoforte-playing, or, briefly, to Technique and Expression, the chief matters implied by the first of these terms being the production of various qualities of tone, the choice of suitable fingering, and the best methods of attacking certain difficulties; while the second, which may perhaps be more aptly designated the means of expression, includes rhythm, phrasing, variety and gradation of tone, the use of the pedals, et cetera.

WITH NUMEROUS MUSICAL EXAMPLES FROM THE WORKS OF THE GREAT MASTERS.

PRICE, CLOTH, GILT, FIVE SHILLINGS.

SIX OCTAVE STUDIES

FOR THE PIANOFORTE

BY

WILLEM COENEN.

"The musical value of some of the pieces is not inconsiderable."—The Times.

"Must needs prove most useful, and are not at all dry."—Daily Telegraph.

"The studies are quite as entertaining to the listener as they are serviceable to the performer."—Musical Opinion.

"Six clever and useful 'Octave Studies.' They are more than usually interesting."—Musical Standard.

"Excellent for practice."—Christian World.

"They afford a very complete course of study. The different numbers are tuneful and attractive, and the variety is great."—The Lady.

"Almost every branch of octave-playing is represented in these tuneful studies."—Church Bells.

"These studies are very melodious, and will make the irksome study of octaves quite interesting to the hard-working student."—Church Family Newspaper.

"Admirably adapted to formulate touch as well as style in this special branch of pianoforte technique."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

"Fitted for advanced students. For wrist work, No. 2 is excellent, and No. 6 is good enough for a concert piece. In all there is pretty equal work for both hands."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"Six excellent octave studies (legato and staccato)."—Sheffield Daily Telegraph.

"Can safely be recommended to players who possess the laudable ambition of keeping up their technique."—Western Daily Press.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS.

EDITED AND POINTED FOR CHANTING

COSMO GORDON LANG, D.D.

BISHOP OF STEPNEY
(ARCHBISHOP-DESIGNATE OF YORK).

CHARLES H. LLOYD, M.A., Mus.D.

HENRY SCOTT HOLLAND, D.Litt.

GEORGE C. MARTIN, Mus.D.

(Organist of St. Paul's).

No part of the Church Service has received greater attention in recent years than the Psalms, and there is no better test of an organist's or choirmaster's qualifications than the manner in which the choir renders these matchless poems of Holy Writ.

The chief difficulty of Anglican chanting has always been the merging of the recitation into the strict-time section of the chant. In the "Cathedral Psalter," issued a generation ago, an endeavour was made to overcome this difficulty by the use of accent marks, and the striking popularity of the book has proved that the method therein adopted, if rightly used, was nearly perfect.

Experience, however, has shown that there was still room for improvement, and it may confidently be asserted that the nearest approach to perfection has been attained in the entirely revised and improved form of the work entitled the "New Cathedral Psalter."

As the result of much careful study and practical knowledge, all ambiguity in regard to the merging of the recitation into the strict-time section of the chant has now been removed.

The "New Cathedral Psalter" is issued in three forms: (i.) with Superimposed Notes; (ii.) with Prosody Signs; (iii.) with Varied Type, whereby a choice can be made of the form which may be thought most effectual in securing intelligent and reverent chanting. Moreover, the pointing is in every case identical, so that on such an occasion as a service sung by combined choirs all three books could, if necessary, be used simultaneously.

Not the least important consideration in a pointed psalter is the matter of typography. In the "New Cathedral Psalter" bolder faced types, specially prepared, have been used, the result being greater clearness, while particular attention has been paid to the spacing between the words and lines so as to afford greater facility in reading.

The "New Cathedral Psalter," although founded on the "Cathedral Psalter," is a distinct book, and the two books cannot be used together.

OPINIONS OF THE LONDON AND PROVINCIAL PRESS

ON

A. R. GAUL'S CANTATA

“JOAN OF ARC”

PRODUCED WITH GREAT SUCCESS BY THE BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ATHENÆUM.

“An advance on the earlier work, ‘The Holy City.’ . . . The choruses are written with much knowledge of effect, and an ‘Ave Maria’ and the final chorus of the ‘Spirit Voices’ may be named as really charming.”

LONDON FIGARO.

“Bound to be widely taken up, doubtless to attain which end the composer has employed but three soloists, and has given a more than usually large degree of importance to the choral work. . . . The ‘Ave Maria’ is singularly beautiful.”

DAILY NEWS.

“Obviously written with a special view to the requirements of choral societies, and likely to become highly popular.”

REFEREE.

“Calculated to delight performers and listeners, being full of melody and taking effects.”

WESTERN TIMES.

“The Exeter Oratorio Society last night achieved a brilliant success, and it may safely be said, without fear of exaggeration, that never before have they performed a work more satisfactory to themselves or more interesting to the audience than ‘Joan of Arc.’”

THE SHIELDS DAILY NEWS.

“One of the most delightful concerts ever given by the South Shields Choral Society was that of last evening, when the principal piece was ‘Joan of Arc.’ We cannot speak too highly of Mr. Gaul’s work, which is of the most interesting description, and will doubtless soon be a favourite with choral societies.”

LEAMINGTON SPA COURIER.

“St. Paul’s Choral Society brought their season to a close with a performance in the Town Hall of ‘Joan of Arc.’ The cantata, both in verse and music, is essentially fascinating and contains all the elements necessary to make it one of the standard works for performance by musical societies, the choral writing and orchestration being simply charming.”

TWESKESBURY REGISTER.

“The Conductor of the Philharmonic Society is to be congratulated on his selection of a Cantata possessing such attractive music as that which goes to make ‘Joan of Arc’ what it undoubtedly is—viz., the best work I remember having heard in Tweskesbury.”

NORWICH DAILY PRESS.

“By the invitation of the Head Mistress of the High School, a large company assembled to hear a performance of ‘Joan of Arc.’ There is probably no living English composer who has obtained more popularity with provincial choral societies than Mr. A. R. Gaul. His sacred cantata, ‘The Holy City,’ is more extensively known than any other modern English composition of a similar character, and ‘Joan of Arc’ has already been successfully performed in London and many of the largest provincial towns. Mr. Gaul’s writing is characterised by the most perfectly neat workmanship and spontaneity, combined with a never-failing resource of melodic invention.”

CRYSTAL PALACE REPORTER.

“The music throughout is of a very high order, and full of beauty and interest, so much so that it is hardly possible to single out any numbers for special praise. The various movements are widely contrasted in style, in some considerable dramatic power being manifest, but all overflow with melody, and there is a happy absence of the restlessness of tonality which disfigures so many modern works. The vocal parts, whether for soli or chorus, are written within the range of average vocalists, and are therefore grateful alike to the singers and hearers. The cantata is a credit to English art, . . . one of the most interesting works yet given by the Anerley Society.”

SHEFFIELD INDEPENDENT.

“Will further enhance the reputation of the composer of ‘The Holy City,’ as a writer of bright, melodious, attractive, and musicianly Cantatas.”

STRATFORD-UPON-AVON HERALD.

“In ‘Joan of Arc,’ particularly in the latter part, there are some exquisite passages—some charming descriptive pieces. The lovely ‘Hark! thy spirit voices call,’ carried one away in the spirit into veritable realms of dreamland, and the chorus, ‘Fret not thyself to-day,’ is picturesquely beautiful, graceful, and effective.”

THE WESTERN NEWS.

“Few cantatas are as rich in chaste melodies, charming choruses, and exquisite orchestration as Alfred R. Gaul’s ‘Joan of Arc,’ performed for the first time in Plymouth by the Vocal Association in the Guildhall last evening.”

THE WESTERN DAILY MERCURY.

“Proved an unqualified success. . . . the bulk of the Cantata is allotted to the chorus. In fact, the choir of this Association has seldom had such a good opportunity for giving their sterling worth a good display.”

LEEDS MERCURY.

“Drew forth enthusiastic plaudits. . . . Of the Cantata, as interpreted last evening (in the Town Hall, Leeds, with a band and chorus of 250 performers), it is impossible to speak in terms of anything but praise. Solos and choruses alike are full of melody, while the orchestration is descriptive to a degree. For each of the principal vocalists there is one song that singles itself out, and each received an encore.”

HERTS AND CAMBRIDGE REPORTER.

“The theme is one of the most romantic in the pages of history. In the earlier and poetic passages there is something of the charm of Sir Sterndale Bennett’s ‘May Queen.’ The last chorus is set to music which would be not unworthy of the great masters.”

LIVERPOOL COURIER.

“Must enhance the high reputation of its composer.”

HUDDERSFIELD EXAMINER.

“The inspiration of a highly-refined musician. . . . The Cantata is even a more masterly and beautiful work than ‘The Holy City.’”

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE DAILY CHRONICLE.

“No more charming Cantata than ‘Joan of Arc’ could have been chosen. It abounds in delicious music. There is not a tedious note in it.”

BRADFORD OBSERVER.

“Gives the listener a vivid and realistic impression, its attractiveness being continuous instead of spasmodic.”

BIRMINGHAM DAILY TIMES.

“It would not be surprising if it attained to even the almost phenomenal popularity of ‘The Holy City’; contains a similar wealth of melody and effective part-writing.”

BIRMINGHAM DAILY GAZETTE.

“Reading the score convinces us that it is our townsman’s greatest production. . . . Could have been originated by none but a born melodist.”

BIRMINGHAM DAILY POST.

“A distinct advance upon Mr. Gaul’s previous work in cantata form. . . . A constant flow of exquisite melodies and effective choral writing.”

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

“A thoroughly melodious work, and should find favour with choral societies. It is not difficult to sing, and contains sufficient variety to keep up the interest to the end.”

 THE MILTON TERCENTENARY.

 COMUS

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE.

 WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY W. BARCLAY SQUIRE.

THE SELECTION INCLUDES THE ORIGINAL SONGS COMPOSED BY HENRY LAWES, TOGETHER WITH INCIDENTAL MUSIC, DANCES, ETC., CHOSEN FROM THE WORKS OF WILLIAM LAWES AND OTHER CONTEMPORARY COMPOSERS.

PRICE, PAPER COVERS, OCTAVO, TWO SHILLINGS.

An Orchestral arrangement, strings only, of the whole of the music may be had.

The present edition of Comus not only contains all the five songs composed by Henry Lawes, but Incidental Music—an Overture, Dances, &c.—selected from the works of William Lawes (brother of Henry) and other contemporary composers, John Jenkins, Dr. John Bull, Giles Farnaby, together with a setting of the song “By the rushy-fringed bank,” adapted by Sir Frederick Bridge from another song by Henry Lawes; also the complete text of the poem. Three of the songs have been respectively arranged for chorus of four, and of three voices (S.S.A.).

The work can be very effectively performed on a stage without much difficulty. When this is not practicable, the music would form a most interesting portion of a concert programme; in which case the poem, or a part of it, could be recited, or the music given by itself.

An interesting historical introduction has been contributed by Mr. Barclay Squire, and Sir Frederick Bridge furnishes detailed suggestions for the performance of the musical numbers. A portrait of Henry Lawes, from the fine painting in the Music School collection at Oxford, forms a frontispiece to this publication, which makes an appropriate appearance on the eve of the Tercentenary of the great poet's birth, John Milton having entered the world—he was born in a house in Bread Street, Cheapside—on December 9, 1608.

Comus was written by John Milton in the spring of 1634, when he was twenty-five years of age. The poem owed its inception to his intimate friend Henry Lawes, the “tuneful Harry” of the poet's charming sonnet to the distinguished composer. Written to celebrate the appointment of the Earl of Bridgewater as Lord Lieutenant of the counties on the Welsh border and of North and South Wales—a viceregal post similar to the Lord Lieutenancy of Ireland—the “Maske,” as it was called, received its first performance at Ludlow Castle on Michaelmas night, 1634.

A Selection for Concert Performance

EDITED AND ARRANGED BY JOHN POINTER.

In this Selection most of the best-known passages of Gounod's masterpiece are comprised. The Soldiers Chorus, a large part of the Garden Scene, and most of the Kermesse Act have been arranged, together with other excerpts, in such a sequence as to afford the best effect of variety and contrast; and by reason of this treatment the absence of scenery and action is not detrimental, as it is in a concert performance of the whole opera.

For a century or more the vast majority of English children have been brought up in total ignorance of the racial and traditional folk-music of their own country. It is significant that, during that period, the musical taste of the educated classes has become more and more cosmopolitan, while that of the lower classes, at any rate in the towns, has been degraded to the level of the unlovely song of the street. Obviously the remedy is to restore the English folk-song to those to whom it belongs by right of inheritance.

Fortunately it still is possible to recover the songs themselves; indeed, many collectors have been and are engaged upon this necessary and useful work. The next step is to select the best of these, to arrange and publish them in a suitable and inexpensive form, and so place them within the reach of the teachers of primary and secondary schools throughout the country. That is the purpose of this Series, of which these songs collected in Somerset are the first instalment.

PROGRESSIVE STUDIES

FOR THE PIANOFORTE

EDITED, ARRANGED IN GROUPS, AND THE FINGERING REVISED AND SUPPLEMENTED

BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

THIS Collection of Studies is intended to illustrate the various elements of a complete course of pianoforte technique, and to provide students with the means of attacking and overcoming the different special difficulties which have to be encountered. With this view, the Studies have been arranged in groups, those in each group being placed in progressive order, and having reference to some one particular difficulty. The greater part of the studies themselves have been selected from the standard works of the most eminent Study-writers, and with these are included numerous others, which, though of equally great practical utility, have hitherto been less generally accessible.

SELECTED PIANOFORTE STUDIES

PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

IN TWO SETS (EIGHT BOOKS), PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH BOOK.

THE present collection of studies is designed to provide teachers with a short course of Pianoforte Technique adapted to the needs of the average pupil, the intention being to spare the teacher the labour of choosing a sufficiently varied selection from the large mass of material existing, and at the same time to ensure that the different departments of technique shall be undertaken in the order which experience has proved to be the most beneficial.

The Studies are grouped in two Sets, and are so arranged that the different Books in which they are contained may be taken in consecutive order, but pupils who are already further advanced than the elementary stage represented by Set I. may commence at once with Set II., which will be found to be complete in itself, and to illustrate all the essential elements of technique.

Where additional studies are desired, or studies on certain subjects which are not touched upon in this series, the larger collection, published under the title of "Progressive Studies" (from which the present examples have been selected), is of course available.

EXAMINATION QUESTIONS

AND

HOW TO WORK THEM

BY

CUTHBERT HARRIS,

Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O.

PREFACE.

This Primer is intended more especially for those who purpose presenting themselves for examination in the theory of music. While the subjects dealt with may be found in all examination schemes for musical degrees and diplomas, it is hoped that the following chapters may prove useful more especially to candidates for the diplomas of the Royal College of Organists.

The object of this book is to stimulate and cultivate method in answering examination questions. Considerable experience as an examination "coach" has proved the success of the method, herein followed, of dissecting the questions, and—by dividing the points for consideration under several heads—thus directing the student's attention to one point at a time.

SEVENTH AND REVISED EDITION.

A HANDBOOK OF EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC

CONTAINING

600 QUESTIONS WITH ANSWERS

BY

ERNEST A. DICKS,

Fellow of the Royal College of Organists.

The scope of this book covers the whole ground of theoretical examinations in music. It supplies an invaluable equipment to candidates entering for the various Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge held periodically throughout the country, and it will be found extremely useful to those who are preparing for the higher grades of Diploma and Degree Examinations.

The book is therefore very comprehensive. Its range includes questions and answers in Theory, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Fugue, Acoustics, Musical History, Organ Construction, and Choir Training.

By no means the least valuable part of the volume is that section, consisting of upwards of one hundred pages, which contains reprints of past examination papers set by the Associated Board, Trinity College, and the Incorporated Society of Musicians; the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, London, Dublin, Durham, and Edinburgh, and the Victoria University; The Royal Academy of Music, The Royal College of Music, and The Royal College of Organists. The advantage of having so many specimens of these actual examination papers within one cover is too obvious to need further comment or commendation.

PREFACE TO THE SEVENTH EDITION.

Through the kindness of Dr. E. H. Turpin the seventh edition of the Handbook of Examinations in Music includes the latest type of Papers set by Trinity College of Music, London, in their scheme of Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge.

The work will also be found to have been considerably enlarged by the addition of fifty specimen questions, with answers. They have been designed for the most part after the manner of those set in the Theory Paper for the L.R.A.M. Diploma, and also that required by candidates for the Higher Practical Examinations held by Trinity College of Music, London. The author earnestly hopes that these additions will considerably enhance the value of the Handbook, and render it increasingly helpful to students.

SCORE-READING EXERCISES

BY

EMILY R. DAYMOND,

D. Mus., Oxon.

THIS book is the outcome of a request made some time ago to the author to write some examples of Exercises in Score-Reading similar to those imposed as tests in the examination for F.R.C.O.

These Exercises (forty-eight in number) comprise two sets of twenty-four examples, each set containing one example in every key, major and minor. The first and easier set is intended to prepare the way for the second, which is of greater complexity.

The author has endeavoured to provide a certain amount of variety both in style and in difficulty, and it is hoped that the Exercises will be of use to candidates for the F.R.C.O. Examination and also to other students who wish to become proficient in Score-Reading.

THE CHOIRBOY'S GUIDE TO THE CATHEDRAL PSALTER

EDITED AND ARRANGED BY

ERNEST NEWTON.

This little book has been compiled mainly for the use of choirboys, and, therefore, nothing has been inserted but what is absolutely necessary for understanding the pointing of the Psalms as arranged in the Cathedral Psalter.

A certain amount of information has been given for the guidance of the Choirmaster, but the principal part of the book consists in the sets of exercises which have been arranged to lead the choirboys, step by step, through the various divisions of syllables that occur in the chanting of the Psalms.

After careful examination of the Cathedral Psalter, it has been found that there are exactly fifteen ways of dividing these syllables.

As the Recitation Notes are well within the compass of Alto, Tenor, and Bass voices, the book can be used with equal advantage by all members of a choir.

These Pianoforte Studies have been highly praised by M. VLADIMIR DE PACHMANN, who has expressed his intention of playing some of them during his Recital Tour in the United States. His testimonial is published with the Work, which consists of Twelve Numbers, specially designed to develop power and skill in the fourth and fifth fingers. The importance of trying to equalize these weaker fingers with the stronger ones is unquestionable, as defective execution is more often traceable to this inequality of the fingers than to any other cause.

COMPLETION OF A Modern School for the Violin

BY AUGUST WILHELMJ AND JAMES BROWN.

THE purpose of this Work is to provide, in one systematic and comprehensive scheme, all that is necessary for the acquirement of the Art of Modern Violin Playing.

"A Modern School for the Violin" consists of Six Books devoted to Daily Technical Practice, Six Books of Studies for Violin alone, and a large number of Pieces with Pianoforte Accompaniment, the Violin parts being specially edited for the purposes of teaching.

SECTION A.—TECHNICAL PRACTICE. IN SIX BOOKS.

The foundation of "A Modern School for the Violin" is laid by means of a series of Six Books dealing exclusively with the important subject of DAILY TECHNICAL PRACTICE. The First Book of Technical Practice (Book 1A) is limited to the 1st Position; the Second Book (2A) to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the Third Book (3A) to the first five Positions; and so on. Bowings and other technical devices are introduced in a similarly progressive manner throughout. Each Book of Technical Practice is divided into "Lessons" (or Chapters), and each Lesson contains a number of short repeating Exercises on some definite point of Violin Technique—as Fingering, Bowing, &c., with the needful explanations. Included in each Book will be found a complete set of Scales and Arpeggi, arranged according to the particular stage of advancement reached.

Taken as a whole, this Section is intended to facilitate, and to insist on, a thorough, steady, and continuous progress in the mastery of the Instrument, this being the only possible means of preparing the groundwork for artistic achievement with all its lasting delights.

SECTION B.—STUDIES. IN SIX BOOKS.

Section B is formed of a series of original and selected Studies, in Six Books. Each Book of Studies (Section B) is carefully co-ordinated, in respect of difficulty and range of subject, with the correspondingly numbered Book of Technical Practice (Section A). Thus the First Book of Studies (1B) is written in the 1st Position; the Second Book (2B) in the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the 3rd Book (3B) in all Positions up to and including the 5th; and so on. It should further be explained that the two Sections are designed to complement one another, and that the "School" must be practised, not in single Books of Technical Practice and Studies alternately, but in pairs. Thus, Books 1A and 1B are to be taken concurrently, then Books 2A and 2B, 3A and 3B, and so on, and the appropriate pairs are now issued bound together in cloth (see Cloth Bindings below).

ELGAR'S SYMPHONY IN MANCHESTER.

THE TIMES.

So numerous are the themes that only a great designer could develop them fully and show the essential relevance of each to the central idea. That central idea is made clear by a noble melody which is stated simply at the outset and which returns to sum up the whole in the final. . . . So rapidly do the themes follow one another in the earlier parts of the two big movements that at first one is inclined to wonder whether each can be made essential, but all are found to contribute something to the full development which follows. The two middle movements stand apart from the rest, and are linked together by a striking metamorphosis of the fiery theme of the scherzo into a broad and gracious melody which forms the chief subject of the slow movement. The direct beauty of this adagio made an instant appeal to the hearers at the first performance. . . . The hearers were made to feel that they had witnessed the production of a great work of art, which is lofty in conception and sincere in expression, and which must stand as a landmark in the development of the younger school of English music.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The form employed is, roughly speaking, the conventional symphonic form, with a difference, of course, for the old classical style pure and simple has little enough in common with the moods and the feeling of to-day. There is here a central theme, as the analyst says, which in a sense pervades the whole structure, but it expresses merely a mood and its variations, and has nothing in common with Berlioz's idée fixe. But thematic beauty is abundant. It is exquisite in the adagio, and in the first and second allegros, the latter a kind of scherzo; when the rhythmic impulse, the power and the passion are at their extreme height, when the music becomes almost frenzied in its superb energy, the sense of sheer beauty is still strong. That the mood of beauty never changes it would be absurd to say, but the feeling is ever present that, whatever the poetic basis, whatever the mental foundation of the symphony, the composer has maintained from the first setting-down of the central theme to its final exposition in the last pages of his score the way of beauty.

MORNING POST.

Of programme to this Symphony there is none, and as far as any indication is concerned its subject is as great a mystery as the theme on which his famous Enigma Variations are based; nevertheless, the music—as music always will, programme or no programme—tells its own tale; and though its interpretation may vary in detail, the reading of it in its broad issue is that of a life story of struggle, passion, and triumph. If this be so, or even if it is intended to portray something entirely different, the seriousness of the view taken, like the extraordinary power with which it is expressed through the medium of orchestral colour, is clear at every point. . . . Though that spirit is always one of either sadness or strife, his phases are conveyed to the ear through a wonderful display of orchestral resource, by a command of tone-colour which, in the clearness of its shades, the purity of its tints, and the harmony of its hues has seldom been surpassed. . . . These purely melodic portions, which may be taken as all the sunshine that the composer allows to enter his life's story, are remarkable for the fact that they are in a wholly new melodic form which has greatness and charm. As it proceeds the movement becomes more reflective and more beautiful, and since beauty and sincerity of feeling go hand-in-hand this section made a great impression. . . . The end is clearly attained, and that the end is one of triumph and mastery the music well expresses. . . . This is a work for the future, and will stand as a legacy for coming generations; in it are the loftiness and nobility that indicate a masterpiece, though its full appreciation will only be from the most serious-minded; to-day we recognise it as a possession of which to be proud.

STANDARD.

Two bars allotted to a drum roll usher in the principal melody, which is constructed upon a descending figure. Its arresting, noble character gives the impression that the composer has not spoken without fully weighing his words. This impression is further increased by its immediate statement with even greater authority. . . . The second subject, with its independent theme, exercises a soothing influence. . . . The chief technical interest of the superlatively beautiful adagio, which is reached without a break, lies in the fact that it is a metamorphosed version of the preceding movement. Here we have the true Elgar—strong, tender, simple, with a simplicity bred of inevitable expression. . . . The composer has written a work of rare beauty, sensibility, and humanity, a work understandable of all.

DAILY NEWS.

The chief theme, which is heard over and over again in the course of the symphony, and is worked up with great effect in the finale, is little short of an inspiration. By dint of many clever devices the composer has kept the movement going. These devices are original and effective, and no symphony by a British composer has a title of the musical resources which Elgar has here employed with such ease. . . . The slow movement is quite an inspiration, and is individual and original in its mood. From here to the end of the symphony, which is by far the most powerful work the composer has done, we are carried along with irresistible force.

DAILY MAIL.

Elgar himself has given no indication of a "programme," and I, for my part, prefer to drink in the beauties of the music without troubling about a problematical explanation. The exquisite adagio, for instance (surely the most lovely movement Sir Edward has ever penned), would lose much if yoked to any sort of "story." It is a woven texture of splendid sound, across the warp and woof of which are shot magical gleams of tone-colour, worked, some imagined, by a master mind. Such a work is not to be coldly analysed and criticised after a first hearing.

MORNING LEADER.

The finest part of it is the slow movement, and that means that the composer has done best that which is most difficult; for in a slow movement brilliancy and ingenuity alone do not suffice without ideas which are of real value and beauty in themselves and of concentrated and consistent elevation of thought.

ATHENÆUM.

Sir Edward has practically followed classical lines, but the contents are thoroughly modern. . . . After the first noble theme there is storm and stress alternating with quiet passages. A second allegro, a kind of scherzo, is instinct with life and colour. The adagio is based on a broad, heavenly theme, and the treatment of it is full of beauty and tenderness, while the finale brings the work to a triumphant close.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY POST.

From the purely formal point of view the new Symphony is unified by one great theme. It is heard in quiet tones at the commencement of the work, comes out in a triumphant summing up at the finish of it, and is suggested in all kinds of forms, vague or definite, in scores of passages in the four movements. It is a singularly noble theme, and special use is made of an expressive fragment of it, consisting of four or five descending notes that are very like a theme in the funeral march in Elgar's "Grania and Diarmid." . . . The first movement, which is full of elevated beauty and the deepest experience of life, and the adagio, with its highly poetic and moving spirit of meditation, will probably prove the most popular part of the work. The finale is also strong with that tempered philosophical strength that makes the first movement so truly remarkable. . . . The spiritual nobility of the work is indeed what chiefly remains in the mind after hearing. It will bear hearing many times again.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

There is, to begin with, a rhythmical unity about the Symphony, a march rhythm which undergoes all sorts of poetic mutations without losing its identity for an instant. Nothing akin to this feature is to be found, we think, in any other symphony. Then there is the ruling theme which permeates every movement. This, too, undergoes a thousand changes, suggesting in its varying forms a wealth of poetic ideas and appealing to the emotions in all manner of ways, and yet never losing for a moment its distinctive identity. . . . There can be no doubt whatever that it is just this unclassical rhapsodic element which makes the greatness of the new Symphony. . . . It was a sublime thing, and when the music ceased we felt that we had listened to one of the works which help music onward.

YORKSHIRE POST.

There is a strong, noble, diatonic melody introduced in the opening bars, which pervades the whole work. It is not repeated in full until we come to the close of the symphony, but its characteristic features under many metamorphoses, reappear in all the movements, and of course help to give them coherence. Similarly, the opening theme of the second movement—virtually a scherzo, though not so designated—supplies, note for note, the main subject of the third movement, into which it leads without a pause, though disguised by changes in phrasing as well as in speed. . . . The main thing to be considered after all is the spirit of the work, and it may at once be said that it is conceived in a noble vein of sustained nobility and distinction. Even the scherzo, piquant and delicate as it is, is never merely flippant, but has a certain quiet force, the secret of which may perhaps, be found to lie in its reticence. The way in which it gradually ebbs away to melt into the adagio is remarkable and most effective and it gives by force of contrast all the more impressiveness to the movement, which is, perhaps, the finest portion of the work, and has wonderful wealth of the most beautiful and moving ideas, while the fanciful and charming touches and orchestration are delightful.

ELGAR'S SYMPHONY IN LONDON.

TIMES.

The opening, and its recurrence as a final apotheosis, is of noble dignity and breadth, and the main subject of the allegro is in good contrast with it, though the theme which is supposed to represent some sinister influence seems a little out of place in its connexion. . . . The wild gaiety of the scherzo, which has a lovely trio, leads without a break into the adagio, the theme of which, as every one has been informed, is the same as that of the scherzo with transformations in the matter of rhythm.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

One has not to withdraw one iota from the position taken up on the occasion of the first performance in Manchester last week. The intensely personal nature of the Symphony, the inherent beauty of much of the thematic material and of the means used to express it, the continuity of the whole which gives the work the semblance of a thing conceived in one overwhelming rush—all this is at least as striking as before. . . . He would be a churl indeed who would not find it possible to acknowledge a triumph at once so great and so singular as that scored by Sir Edward Elgar. London received his work as rapturously as Manchester accepted it a few days ago, and did their sense of the fitness of things credit by so doing. . . . As one who has heard both the performances that have taken place, the present writer is fain to confess that none of the lacunae were observable which it had been thought possible might be discovered on further acquaintance with the work. The points noticed then were as clear now; the deeply-felt nature of the music was as impressive, and the emotional note as intense. There is nothing more to add, for the success of the master work was complete.

STANDARD.

With the broader aspects of the composer's scheme fixed definitely in the mind, and more than one previous impression confirmed or dissipated by the cold light of afterthought, it was possible to pay greater attention to the less objective qualities of the music. Further familiarity with the score serves but to deepen admiration and respect for its lofty aim and high endeavour. . . . Once more the pregnant introductory melody set all speculating upon its infinite possibilities, possibilities which, for the most part, are worked out to an inevitable climax. . . . Sir Edward Elgar has undoubtedly written a great work—a work over which musicians of all shades of opinion may shake hands. He has placated the "modern" even as he has filled the heart of the "classicist" with joy. Indeed, not for two hundred years has British creative genius been so strikingly manifested.

MORNING POST.

No better expression of thought could be wished for than the beautiful adagio movement, which last night made the deepest of impressions upon its hearers. The final movement, with its succession of powerful climaxes, its rugged force, and its wonderful tone-colour, is not only a fitting crown to the work, but it is an achievement in which inspiration and skill are matched, and matched equally. . . . Music of such power as this must be considered for the message it delivers; and there is no doubt that its message is one of the highest and noblest aims. . . . In itself the adagio is one of the most beautiful movements in the whole of musical literature. Its qualities will endure, for there is not one note that is insincere, not one note that does not convey a meaning. Further, it is characteristic to a degree, and shows the fine power the composer possesses of being able to make an orchestra sing—a gift he has shown before, but never with so touching an effect. The final movement is a wonderful series of climaxes. . . . The last two movements constitute a masterpiece such as no other British hand has yet produced.

DAILY NEWS.

It is certainly the finest Symphony a British composer has written, and, more than that, no foreigner since Tchaikovsky has composed a work of such vitality and freshness.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

Although this symphony has no programme it has a poetic basis, the composer suggesting the seriousness of life, its pleasures, joys and sorrows, and when this idea is borne in mind the beautiful passages in the four movements become additionally interesting. . . . The charm pervading the whole composition is fascinating in the extreme. In a word, this symphony will appeal to all classes of musicians.

MORNING LEADER.

A second hearing of the Symphony increases admiration for the serene beauty of the slow movement and the wonderfully clever and poetic way in which it is evolved from the scherzo. There was a barbaric vigour in the playing of the scherzo last night which made the contrast between the two movements more striking. The finale improves on better acquaintance, and one notices many more ingenuities of detail, of course; but also the unity and noble proportion of the whole become more clear. . . . It is a work destined to live and to enhance the composer's fame. It is British in essence, but not insular, and should find an audience in all parts of the world.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

The applause was no mere idle compliment to a popular composer. It was a full-voiced welcome to a noble and beautiful work of art, which, if we are not gravely mistaken, will form an important landmark in the history of British music. . . . The call of the ideal, represented by a noble melody which opens the work in a manner suggestive of Schubert's symphony in C, is answered by all the wiles of the world, the flesh, and the devil. . . . Bewildering siren-calls summon the hero to destruction, and through all sounds the dark and sinister theme of sin. . . . The scherzo seems to carry us into the world of sheer hard work. . . . By a marvelously contrived transition the scherzo fades, as it were, into the adagio, in which the deepest and tenderest aspirations of the human soul are clothed in sound. . . . The last movement is in some ways the most masterly of all. . . . It is a work that everyone who cares for music must hear again and again.

DAILY MAIL.

The work itself grows in interest (if this is possible) upon second hearing. . . . London musical audiences are supposed to be fastidious in their tastes, but on the present occasion there was no dissentient note, and the new English Symphony made a triumphant entry into the capital. . . . The general opinion expressed was that here at last we had a work worthy to rank with all that is highest and most noble in the realms of lovely sound.

DAILY EXPRESS.

It is music that speaks, appeals, and moves—music which needs nothing for its appreciation beyond ears that hear and hearts that beat. . . . All the power, brilliance, and effect of the other movements pale before the superlative beauties of the adagio which, by a stroke of genius, is made to creep softly out of the scherzo. The effect is entrancing.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

It is undoubtedly a masterpiece. The high aim and lofty purpose which Elgar has always set before himself are reflected in the character of the symphony, which, as a whole, is serious and severe, to the point of grimness at times. Not here is to be found the Elgar of the "Cockaigne" overture, the "Sea Pieces," and other works of lighter genre with which he has tickled the ears of the multitude. Rather is it the composer of the more strenuous and austere pages of the "In the South" overture who is most in evidence throughout this symphony. . . . Nobility of thought, grandeur of expression, depth of feeling—these are the qualities by which great art is pre-eminently distinguished. And in these respects Elgar's music is rich. . . . The fine theme which opens the first movement appears in each of the succeeding sections as a sort of motto or idée fixe, and is worked up in the finale as the splendid climax of the whole work, while by a clever example of thematic metamorphosis the opening theme of the slow movement is derived, note for note, but in altered rhythm, from the leading subject of the scherzo.

EVENING STANDARD AND ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.

That the symphony would be a work of orchestral strength and individuality was to be expected from the composer of the "Enigma Variations," "In the South" overture, and the "Allegro for strings." That it would also be one of beauty of texture and design was also a foregone conclusion from the composer of the "Dream of Gerontios." Elgar's strength has always lain in his orchestral rather than in his vocal writing, chiefly because his structure is that of a master builder. His latest work proves this in a significant manner.

GLOBE.

Sir Edward Elgar is emphatically a composer with a style of his own, and this Symphony could not possibly have come from any other pen than his. . . . The ideas are entirely his own, and they could have been conceived by no other composer; he treats them in a manner that is peculiar to himself; and he speaks to us in his own idiom. Here, then, we have the fundamental essentials of a great work—character and individuality; without them all the cleverness in the world counts for nothing. Moreover, the ideas embodied in this Symphony are all of them big ideas; they are ideas that ring true. In every mood that the composer strives to depict in his music he is sincere, and the music that he has given us comes from the heart and not from the brain alone.

SUNDAY TIMES.

It is a thoroughly individual work, much more so than any other composition in the same form which is of English origin. There is hardly a page in the score that is not recognisably Elgar's in its independence of thought and style and its peculiar wealth of colour. . . . The allegro molto theme, a broad diatonic melody, which is stated at the beginning of the work with impressive effect, does not fully reappear till the close of the symphony, but in some form or other it is present in all the movements, and gives them continuity and homogeneity. Another instance of the modern feeling for unity is found in the metamorphosis of the principal theme of the allegro molto for the chief subject of the succeeding adagio. The mutation is, of course, not without precedent, but it has never before been employed with such remarkable emotional force. The scoring throughout is magnificent in its technical grip and in its accurate calculation of effect.

LONDON COMPETITION FESTIVALS.

SOUTH LONDON, TOWN HALL, WANDSWORTH.

March, 13, 15, 17, 19, 20.

THIS festival is promoted with much spirit, mainly by the secretary, Mr. T. Lester Jones. It enjoys at least the nominal support of a number of distinguished personages, and the President is the Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein. The Princess Victoria has promised to distribute the prizes this year if she is in England.

There are forty-nine classes in the schedule. Eight are for choral societies of various kinds. The choral tests are:

MIXED.

"Come, pretty wag"	Parry.
"Love and summer"	West.
"O Lord of Hosts"	Tye.
"O love the Lord"	Sullivan.
"The Lord is risen"	Garrett.

MALE-VOICE.

"It's oh! to be a wild wind"	Elgar.
"O my love 's like a red rose"	Brewer.

FEMALE-VOICE.

"Waken, waken"	Mackenzie.
"O swallow"	Gustav von Holst.
"Under the greenwood tree"	A. Madeley Richardson.
"Hail, star of eve"	Spofforth.

In the school classes the test is "Over hill" (two-part), by Dr. C. Harford Lloyd, and in the action-song class "Swing song," by Myles B. Foster. In four of the classes "own-choice" pieces are invited as second tests. In the nine solo singing sections the tests selected are representative of the ballad song of to-day, the contra-falto songs, "The wild rose" (Schubert) and "The Asra" (Rubinstein) standing out as exceptions. There are thirteen classes for pianoforte playing, one for organ, three for violin, and five for other instruments and combinations. Theory, composition and biography are also catered for. There are money prizes in all except two classes, namely, the chief choral, in which a challenge shield is offered, and in a miscellaneous mixed-voice class, in which a Bell American organ is offered. A Trinity College Scholarship is another award offered. There are non-returnable entrance fees in every class, varying from 10s. to 2s. 6d. Ten well-known musicians are announced to adjudicate.

A concert is to be given by the prize-winners to wind up the proceedings.

Such a carefully elaborated scheme should attract a large number of competitors. The secretary's address is 49, Terrace Road, Upton Manor, London, E.

PEOPLE'S PALACE,
MILE END ROAD, E.
May 10 to May 15.

This festival appeals to eastern districts. The Stratford Festival being held in the far east is out of touch with the east-central city, Bethnal Green, South Hackney, Poplar, Shoreditch, and Stepney, the districts especially catered for by this young institution now entering upon its second year. It is stated that the object of the festival is to encourage the study and appreciation of good music in the east of London, and to offer facilities to all existing social institutions in that district to include music in their work.

The organization, which is due mainly to Miss Edith Barran, the secretary, includes the formation of eleven local sub-committees, each with its organizing secretary. This method of stimulating local influence and fixing local responsibility has been found here and elsewhere of great service. The patrons and general committee make a strong list of names. There are no "open" sections in the competitions and are offered. There are no solo singing or solo instrumental classes. An entrance fee of 1d. per member is demanded from adult choirs, but school choirs are exempt.

Fifteen challenge prizes are offered. They include a trophy from Sir Henry Harben, a banner from Mrs. T. E. Schunck, shields from the Marquis of Ripon and Mr. A. J. Balfour, and eleven cups presented by various donors, the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's sending one, the Worshipful Company of Musicians another, and the Magpie Madrigal Society another. Pictures, music copies and certificates are given in many classes.

There are eleven classes for adult choirs, one for boys' clubs, eight for junior choirs, and besides there are classes for collective sight-singing, male-voice and mixed-voice quartets, vocal trios, instrumental trios and quartets and string orchestras.

The tests are all prescribed, no "own-choice" pieces being invited. In the chief choral class for over sixty voices, the pieces named are:

Madrigal (a), "Sweete flowers"	Walmisley.
Part-song (b), "Love"	Elgar.
Chorus (c), "Achieved is the glorious work"	Haydn.

(a) and (b) are to be sung unaccompanied. (c) is made a test in six adult choir classes, with a view to united performance at the final concert.

Commercial house choirs are catered for. The tests are:

Madrigal, "Take heed"	de Pearsall.
Part-song, "Sleep, gentle lady"	Bishop.

and the Haydn chorus mentioned above.

In the chief school choir classes the tests are:

Two-part song, "Winds are blowing"	B. Haynes.
Unison, "Nymphs and shepherds"	Purcell.
Unison, "Hope, the hermit"	Old Song.
Three-part, "Come, shepherds"	Benet.

and "Welcome thou" (Handel) in two-parts is down for all classes, with a view to a collective performance. The present holder of the challenge banner in the school class is the Portman Place (Mile End) School.

The string orchestras are asked to play Grieg's two elegiac melodies. The adult choirs are requested to learn "Be not afraid" (Mendelssohn) for collective performance at the concert. Four adjudicators are announced.

The "Queen's Hall" of the People's Palace, in which the chief competitions and the concert will be held, is a commodious arena containing a large organ. The concert will be given on the evening of May 15, and promises to be an attractive event.

It will be seen that one of the aims of the promoters is to combine the choirs for performance. Much may come later on from this unity. Miss Edith Barran's address is 20, Queensberry Place, S.W.

Two open meetings have been held recently in connection with the above festival. The first was held in Toynbee Hall on October 31. Mr. Bates gave an address on "Child voice culture," illustrated by the singing of his pupils, and Dr. McNaught gave a lecture on "Choir training," the illustrations to which were supplied by the Toynbee Hall Choir. Miss Wakefield presided. All the school teachers, committee members, and conductors were invited, and responded in such numbers that it was found necessary to cancel many of the invitations. The second meeting was arranged in order to give those who were shut out another opportunity. It was held at the Whitechapel Foundation Schools on December 12. Dr. McNaught recapitulated his former lecture and dealt with some other topics. The choir of the Church Training College for lay workers (conducted by the Rev. C. J. Beresford) illustrated. There was a large audience. Miss Barran was present, she having just returned from America.

WORCESTERSHIRE.

As announced recently in THE RECORD, the competition hitherto known as the "Madresfield," and held at Malvern or Worcester, has now changed its headquarters and greatly expanded its area of appeal.

The well-known musical critic of The Birmingham Daily Post, Mr. Ernest Newman, who has strong faith in the value of the movement, writes as follows in his journal:—

According to a circular just issued, what was once the Madresfield Musical Festival has undergone a re-birth, and is henceforth to be known as the Worcestershire Musical Competition Festival. The original Festival was founded by Lady Mary Lygon about thirteen years ago, and at first the entries were restricted to the neighbourhood of Madresfield. In 1904 the country within a radius of twenty miles round Madresfield, which embraced portions of Gloucestershire and Herefordshire, was admitted. The bucolic mind of those counties has apparently been unable to rise to the level of what was expected of it, for although the country covered by it constituted two-thirds of the whole area included in the competition, it gave discouragingly little support to the movement. According to our folk-song enthusiasts, the country districts should be the richest of all in the pure love of music, for they have not been contaminated by the manners of the large city and vulgarised by its facile and sophisticated art. The country mind, however, is slow to move, and soon comes to a standstill again unless some person of restless activity keeps perpetually prodding at it. The men of Gloucestershire and Herefordshire have disappointed the Festival Committee. They have not risen to the heights of the destiny that might have been theirs, and now they receive their castigation in full sight of a scandalised musical world. The committee have withdrawn their privileges, and ruthlessly cast them into outer darkness. The boundaries of the Festival have been made coterminous with those of the county of Worcester, and the name of it has been changed to the Worcestershire Musical Competition. It is hoped that a keener spirit and a more vital love of music will be found in the manufacturing towns in the North of Worcestershire than among the happy, careless swains of Gloucestershire and Herefordshire. The uglier the life of the modern city becomes the more does music flourish there. This is a phenomenon that can easily be demonstrated. Manchester owes its musical pre-eminence mainly to its climate; as Dr. Richter pointed out some years ago, the town and the neighbourhood are so grievous to sight and smell that the inhabitants are necessarily driven inward upon themselves for consolation, and so they take to music much as other people take to drink to drown their cares. Sheffield, Leeds, and Glasgow are being made into highly musical cities by the same process. In the manufacturing districts of North Worcestershire there ought to be sufficient external ugliness to make the whole population musical from its cradle. To encourage these towns to enter the competition, next year's Festival will be held at Kidderminster.

The committee have come, we think, to a wise decision. The Festivals in Malvern were most delightful affairs in many ways; but life is too pleasantly epicurean in that favoured spot for anyone to be able to take music as seriously as he ought to do. There was an atmosphere of aristocratic languor about the Madresfield Festival that was delicious to bask in on a beautiful, warm May morning; but one came away from the place with a sense that, though one had been sinfully happy and comfortable, music had occupied a merely secondary place in one's thoughts. Kidderminster will not wrap us in the same "soft Lydian airs," but it will make us think more seriously of music. The committee have done their duty manfully. All that remains now is for the choirs of North Worcestershire to fill up entry forms for the Festival. It is to be hoped that the response to the committee's appeal will be generous. Every one who knows anything of these competitions in the North knows that they represent the most vital movement in the musical life of England to-day. They have done incalculable good in interesting the average man and woman, not merely in the hearing, but in the performance of good music. They have familiarized scores of thousands of people with choral music of the very highest class, and given them a standard of beauty that makes them sharply critical of anything in the nature of cheap or soulless art. They have developed a new choral technique. They have revealed unexpected gifts for choral training and conducting in men in the humblest walks of life. They have made working men and women so keen for beauty that factory hands and miners have been known to begin a rehearsal of a Brahms or Elgar part-song immediately after the cessation of their daily toil, before they thought of rest or of a change from working clothes. They have encouraged solo-singing in the home, taught young singers many a useful lesson, and set before them the purest type of song. They have led in some places to the cultivation of a very high standard of amateur orchestral playing. The Competition Festival movement is to-day the most active and the healthiest force in English musical life. It is purely democratic; it is worked solely by and for the people. It is run for no one's profit; it is free from the curse of pot-hunting, for the prizes offered are in a pecuniary sense not great enough to be an attraction in themselves to anyone whose heart is not otherwise in the work. We hope that the new departure of the Committee will be an immediate success, and that the Worcestershire Musical Competition will in time draw as large and enthusiastic a yearly gathering as that at Blackpool, or Morecambe, or Southport. There are some excellent unaccompanied choirs and amateur orchestras in Birmingham itself. Perhaps they will set the example by giving their adherence to a movement which, if it receives from music-lovers the support it deserves, will incalculably enrich the artistic life of Worcestershire.

THE NATIONAL EISTEDDFOD OF AUSTRALIA.

BALLARAT.

(From the Adelaide Register.)

Mr. F. Bevan, who was one of the judges at the recent Ballarat competitions, was interviewed by a representative of the Register. Mr. Bevan said: "On Saturday afternoon I listened to sixteen would-be champions making their efforts to gain the coveted prize and distinction of champion in the vocal solo for tenors and basses. Each competitor had to sing an operatic or oratorio selection and a ballad. The selections covered a very wide field—from 'Infelice' and 'Salve dimora' to 'It is enough' and 'The sorrows of death' in the first division; and 'I fear no foe' to 'Adelaide' in the second. The winner gave a very excellent performance of the prologue to 'I Pagliacci,' and the second a very creditable rendering of 'Comfort ye' and 'Every valley,' and 'Adelaide.' Earlier in the week I adjudicated in the corresponding competition for sopranos and contraltos, and here the selections ranged from 'Ah, fors e lui' and 'Softly sighs,' and 'He was despised,' to 'Sing, sweet bird' and 'Thy heart's rest.' The winner did extremely well with 'Ah, fors e lui' and the second with 'Rendimio.'

CHORAL CHAMPIONSHIP.

"The climax of a great week was reached on Friday night, when some 9,000 people assembled in the gigantic Coliseum to hear the contest for the choral championship. As each competing choir took its place on the stage it was greeted with rounds of cheers and storms of applause, and the scene of excitement when the performances were over and the notice-board was displayed giving the judges' decision was well-nigh indescribable. Yells of surprise greeted the disclosure of the place occupied by the formerly triumphant Ballarat Choral Society, and shouts of triumph came from the Queenslanders when it was shown that Ipswich was first and Toowoomba second. The conductor of the winning choir was carried shoulder high through the vast hall with a crowd of yelling choristers waving the choir colours over him. The people scrambled cheering on to the stage, and cheered and danced and shouted themselves hoarse. It was indeed a wonderful sight. The performance by the winners may be described as an excellent display of concerted work, a splendid balance of tone, and a very enjoyable interpretation of three fine and very diversified works. Incidentally the conductor of the successful choir—who, by-the-by, is an old Exeter Cathedral chorister—told the company assembled at the supper given to the judges and Parliamentarians after the performances, that the watchword or war-cry of his choir during the months they had been preparing their work was the 'refrain of my song, "Peg away."'

A HEAVY TASK.

"Similar scenes were enacted all through the week, starting on Monday, when seven choirs from warehouses and factories competed before an audience which was perhaps greater than that at the championship on Friday, and it is a very safe estimate to say that at least 30,000 people have listened to the competitions. The new Coliseum has been erected during the last few months especially for the work, and when I remember that this time last year such a building was not even thought of, it speaks volumes for the enterprise and energy of the executive. Speaking as a judge, I may say that the visit to Ballarat is by no means a holiday, but really a week of strenuous work, and one feels that each individual in the thousands assembled is judging the judges. In the vocal solos I adjudicated alone, and the task of listening to some twenty or thirty tenors, all singing the same song, and the same number of ladies singing a sacred song; then about thirty champions (male and female) competing in a national song is, to say the least, a physical effort, and I shall be quite glad to get to the quietude and sanctity of my room in the Conservatorium to-morrow. By-the-by, the little Mischel Cherniavski—the wonderful boy violoncellist recently in Adelaide—came and sat with me while I was judging the champions on Saturday. He was highly interested and amused. In the choral contests Mr. William Short, from London, and Mr. George Peake, of Melbourne, were with me, and we had a system of independent individual marking by which points were given for each item and afterwards aggregated and averaged.

THE IDEAL OF THE VISIT.

"In thinking over the events of the week one can only express the greatest admiration at the enthusiasm and earnestness displayed by the competing choirs. The winners had come some 1,500 miles at very considerable expense—about £600, I believe—and the prize money was not more than £180. As the conductor said afterwards, 'He was proud of his success; his men were chiefly colliers, and many of his girls were from work-rooms; but the money earned had no relation to the cost of coming, or to the ideal of the visit.'"

The syllabus, which enumerates about 100 classes, names the following test-pieces in the choral sections:

CANADA.

SASKATCHEWAN.

Mr. F. Laubach (festival conductor), formerly of Edinburgh, writes as follows: "There has been recently formed in this province of Saskatchewan, in the Dominion of Canada, a Choral Festival Association which purposes holding a festival here, in the capital of the province, early next May. The work will consist of ensemble singing and competitive numbers for choral societies, choirs, &c. Already fifteen to twenty cities, towns and villages have signified their intention to enter the Association, and practice will commence at the New Year for the choral works to be performed en masse. We expect from 500 to 600 singers, which, considering the immense distances to be travelled in this vast tract, is not at all a bad representation for a first year.

"May I ask your kind assistance by sending me any information as to formation, rules of competition, classes, &c., as such meetings are held in various parts of Great Britain (Wales particularly). In this connection I feel that THE COMPETITION FESTIVAL RECORD will help us greatly.

"I am sure I need say no more. You see plainly that we desire help in the carrying out of the scheme, a scheme that I am pleased to see is being promulgated in all parts of our vast Empire. We in this new land feel no inclination to take second place in the encouragement of the art of music."

ALBERTA, CANADA, MAY 4, 5.

We have received a copy of the elegantly printed syllabus for this competition festival (the second one), to be held at Edmonton, Alberta. It is stated that there were over a hundred solo and choral entries last year, and that at the final concert 180 singers and an orchestra of forty performers combined to perform. The present syllabus gives particulars of twelve classes. The prizes are shields, gold medals, and small sums of money, except in the case of bands, which are offered fifty dollars as a prize.

CO-OPERATIVE CHORAL ASSOCIATION.

DERBY, November 21.

THE sixth annual contest proved highly successful. Seventeen choirs entered in the two sections, and only one failed to appear. The tests in the children's section were "Tell me, what shall we do?" (P. La Villa) and "Where the river gently gliding" (Adam Giebel). The entries were:

Derby (Mr. Joseph Lowe).
3rd. Lincoln (Mr. E. Pullein) ..	117	marks
Langley Mill (Mr. Enos Marson).
1st. Long Eaton (Mr. W. Woolley)	126	"
2nd. Ilkeston (Mr. H. Fletcher) ..	125	"

In the adult section "The soul's longing" (F. James) and "The sands of Dee" (Macfarren) were the test-pieces. Eleven choirs were heard, the prize-winners being:

1st. Derby (Mr. T. H. Bennett) ..	127	marks
2nd. Long Eaton (Mr. W. Woolley)	125	"
3rd. Rugby (Mr. G. Hadden) ..	121	"

The proceedings terminated with a concert, at which the competing adult choirs combined to sing the first of the test-pieces, conducted by Mr. Granville Humphreys, the adjudicator.

COLNE, DECEMBER 5.

Mr. W. S. Nesbitt (the well-known conductor of the Manchester Orpheus Choir) had a busy day on this occasion. Eighteen tenors, two children's choirs, four action-song parties, ten contraltos and seven mixed-voice choirs came before him in competition during the afternoon and evening. Mr. Sidney Travis (Colne) gained the tenor prize, and Miss Alice Wilkinson (Padiham) that for the contralto class. The children's choirs sang 'To primroses' (Hiles) and 'The gentle bird' (D. Emlyn Evans). The result was extraordinarily close, British School, Skipton (Mr. Townsend), gaining 108 marks, and Skipton Road, Trawden (Mr. Thos. Little) 107 marks. The juniors (choir A) of the last-named School, under Miss Shaw, were also successful in the action-song class. In the mixed-voice choir class the entries and results were as follows:

	Marks.
1st. Colne Road Wesleyan, Burnley (T. Robinson)	170
2nd Accrington and Church Co-operative Choir (E. Whittaker)	168
Colne West Street Inghamite Choir (F. Pilling)
Hill Lane Baptist (Ezra Berry)	157
3rd Colne U.M.F. Church, Exchange Street (L. Greenwood)	163
Colne Albert Road Wesleyan (J. L. Wildman).
Colne Langroyd Road Wesleyan (J. W. Tubb).

The tests were "Lullaby of life" (Leslie), "Three fishers" (Rogers), and "Hail, bounteous May" (Garroll).

OTLEY, DECEMBER 5.

The sixth annual contest was in all respects an advance on previous years. The vocal solo competitions attracted a large entry, involving a preliminary selection in which prescribed tests were used. In the final hearing competitors were allowed to sing pieces of their own choice. The winners were Miss Jennie Hook (soprano) and Mr. Wallis Edwards (baritone). The winning mixed-voice quartet was the Otley XL party. The Duncan challenge shield for mixed-voice choirs was won by Otley Wesleyan (Mr. J. B. Ritchie). Mr. Albert Jowett adjudicated.

MANCHESTER.

The Manchester and District Nonconformist Choir Union has for the past few years endeavoured to raise the status of singing in chapel choirs by an annual choral and solo-singing competition. This year the choral element was deleted, but some forty-five soloists entered for the various voice classes. Each vocalist selected his own song, and had to undergo a preliminary public ordeal by facing a quartet of capable musical judges, who selected four of each voice to compete again in the evening, when the audience for the time became judges, deciding the fate of the various artists by ballot, the result being that the chief honours fell to Miss Maud A. Ward, of Barnsley, in the soprano class; Miss Kitty Dovey, of Patricroft, in the contralto; Mr. D. S. Jones in the tenors; whilst Mr. John Matthewman carried off first prize amongst the basses, with Airlie Dix's "The trumpeter."

KEIGHLEY.

The Summerscales (Keighley) competition will be held on October 23 and 30. The children's choir class will be resuscitated after a lapse of four years. In this class a challenge banner and two money prizes have been offered. There will also be a solo class for girls under fourteen, a ladies' choir class, and one for choirs that have not before won a first-prize in a competition, in addition to the customary adult solo-singing, violin, and male-voice and mixed-voice sections. There was a loss of £16 12s. 4d. incurred in the recent competitions. This has been made good by an anonymous donor. Dr. Coward and Mr. Ackroyd (violin) will adjudicate.

WEST LONDON FESTIVAL.

We gave a resumé of the syllabus of this festival in our last issue. We are now glad to learn that a certificate for this competition has been specially designed by Mr. Byam Shaw. It represents the Genius of Music rising to the sky, and bearing with it a man, woman and child, typical London figures. Beneath their feet is depicted a London street, with chimneys and telegraph poles, and a church tower in the distance. The objects of such competitions in elevating the people by means of music are thus clearly shown. We give a reproduction of the design in the S.M.R., p. 163.

In our review (December, p. 1 of THE RECORD) of the Stratford and East London Festival, we stated that money prizes were offered in every class except two. The money value of prizes is stated under each class, but at the end of the syllabus it is stated that in certain classes the money must be spent in books, music, or instruments. This proviso affects fifty-four classes.

DATES OF COMPETITIONS WITH NAMES OF SECRETARIES.

(These are in addition to the forty-six competitions noted in our December issue.)

STECK PIANOS.

Although the STECK has won Medals, Diplomas and Prizes at Expositions, has been eulogized by Wagner and Liszt, and enjoys an unsurpassable reputation for reliability all over the Continent and America, it is not on these counts alone that it appeals to the connoisseur.

WHAT THE STECK IS TO-DAY is its greatest claim to the consideration of piano-purchasers. Every modern improvement, every detail that makes for excellence in piano construction, is embodied and brought to perfection in the STECK. It is one of the few really great Pianos of the world.

SIGHT-PLAYING BECOMES EASY

ONCE ITS UNDERLYING PRINCIPLE IS MASTERED—AND APPLIED SYSTEMATICALLY.

This principle is that between the notes on the sheet of music and the muscular action of depressing the keys there can and should be a permanent association of such strength that the fingers fall automatically on the right keys at sight of the notes. This automatic association can easily be acquired by anyone after only three months of a quarter-of-an-hour's daily practice, and will enable a musician to play at sight any piece within his or her technical abilities. For a full explanation of this, write for BOOKLET (sent POST-FREE on application) on

THE EHREMYER SYSTEM OF PIANOFORTE SIGHT-PLAYING.

J. G. writes, after First Lesson: "I find great improvement all round; the eye is much quicker, and the fingers fall automatically on the right keys."

D. T., after First Lesson, reports "decided, very decided, improvement."

THE FEE FOR THE COMPLETE THREE MONTHS'
COURSE OF SIX LESSONS IS . . . £3 3s.

Address:—

L. M. EHREMYER,
27, Chancery Lane, W.C.

MENDELSSOHN IN ENGLAND: A CENTENARY TRIBUTE.

FELIX MENDELSSOHN BARTHOLDY:

BORN, AT HAMBURG, FEBRUARY 3, 1809;

DIED, AT LEIPZIG, NOVEMBER 4, 1847.

Mendelssohn had a deep-rooted affection for England and the English people. London and Birmingham were the scenes of his earliest, latest, and greatest triumphs. He visited these shores on ten different occasions during his brief but eventful life of thirty-eight years. 'I was never received anywhere with such universal kindness,' he writes in reference to one of these visits, 'and I made more music in those two months than I do elsewhere in two years.' Amid the glories of a Naples spring his thoughts turned to London; 'that smoky nest,' he calls it, 'is fated to be now and ever my favourite residence; my heart swells when I think of it.' In another letter, also written during his sojourn in the sunny south—from Rome, to his friend Attwood—he says, 'I feel the strongest desire to hear again of the friends to whom I owe that delightful term of my residence in that country.' What more fitting, therefore, than that the 'Centenary tribute' of this journal should take the form of 'a little talk' on the revered composer's visits to the land he loved so dearly? The story has before been told, but it will bear re-telling; and if the manner of setting it forth be in any way inadequate, the matter thereof is full of truth and beauty.

Bright-natured, highly-gifted, handsome, and a perfect gentleman, Felix Mendelssohn was received with open arms by musicians, both professional and amateur, when he first visited England in the year 1829. He was then in his twenty-first year, and he brought with him a disposition which, like his christian name, was felicitous in the highest degree. If an omen counts for anything that is good, the steamer which brought him across the North Sea supplied it, for was not the vessel named the 'Attwood'? And did not the genial organist of St. Paul's Cathedral—'dear old Attwood,' as Mendelssohn affectionately calls him—become one of the voyager's most attached friends? Ignaz Moscheles found for his young friend and former pupil lodgings over the shop of one Heinke, an ironmonger in Great Portland Street. The house (No. 79, formerly 103, and demolished in 1904) stood at the north corner of Riding-house Street, and nearly opposite the orchestra entrance of Queen's Hall. Both Great Portland Street and Heinke have an additional interest, because Weber died in Sir George Smart's house (also no longer existing) in that thoroughfare, and Mendelssohn's landlord was hurriedly fetched on that eventful June morning in 1826 to force open the door of Weber's bedroom, only to find that during the night it had become the chamber of death.

Although absorbed in his music-makings, with two grand pianofortes in his sitting room, and a dumb keyboard on which, while sitting up in bed, he used to practise, Felix found satisfaction in the culinary art. Mrs. Heinke was a capital cook who concocted tasty dishes for her easily-pleased young lodger. Bread-and-butter pudding was one of her specialities, and Mendelssohn requested that a supply of that toothsome dish (cold) should be kept in his cupboard, so that on his return from some late concert or function he could help himself to the appetising delicacy. On one occasion, after he and two friends had fared sumptuously at 'a highly diplomatic dinner-party' given by the Prussian Ambassador, at which they had their 'fill of fashionable dishes, sayings and doings,' the jovial trio came upon 'a very enticing sausage-shop in which "German Sausages, Twopence each," were laid out for show' (we quote Mendelssohn's own words). 'We then turned into a quieter street—Great Portland Street—and there consumed our purchases, Rosen and I being hardly able, for laughing, to join in the three-part songs, of which Mühlensfelds would sing the bass.'

The house at Denmark Hill, London, where Mendelssohn stayed in 1842 and composed his 'Spring Song' (so called), No. 30 of the 'Songs without Words,' and where he wrote the 'Barentanz' reproduced as one of our special supplements.

Monday, May 25, 1829, was a red-letter day in the history of the Philharmonic Society, and in the career of Mendelssohn, as on that date he made his first public appearance before an English audience. The Philharmonic concerts were then held at the Argyll Rooms (destroyed by fire in 1830), which stood at the corner of Little Argyll Street—not Argyll Place, as stated in a well-known book of reference—on the site now occupied by No. 246, Regent Street. Mendelssohn's statement that 'old John Cramer led me to the piano as if I were a young lady' has been misconstrued into that he (Mendelssohn) conducted (so called), according to the custom of the time, 'at the pianoforte,' and that he did not use a baton. Such, however, was not the case. To quote from his letter dated 'London, May 26, 1829': 'I mounted the orchestra and pulled out my white stick, which I have had made on purpose (the maker mistook me for an Alderman, and would insist upon decorating it with a crown).' From this it is obvious that batons could not be purchased in London at that time, or Mendelssohn would not have needed a 'white stick' to be specially manufactured for him. What must the band have thought of the crown at the tip of the stick! He conducted his C minor Symphony, in which he had discreetly replaced the Minuet and Trio by an orchestral version of the Scherzo from his Octett. The autographs of the full-score of the symphony (Op. 11)—dated 'March 31, 1824,' and inscribed 'Sinfonia xiii. in C'—and the Scherzo (still unpublished) are among the treasures of the Philharmonic Society's library. The Scherzo was encored, much against his wish. He dedicated the Symphony to the Philharmonic Society, and they on their part elected him an honorary member; as Sir George Grove says: 'It was thus an English body which gave him his first recognition as a composer.'

In a charming letter, overflowing with gaiety and good-humour, he records his wonderful get-up when he appeared at a morning concert on May 30, also at the Argyll Rooms, on which occasion he played Weber's Concertstück. His habiliments, worthy of a fashion-book, were 'Very long white trousers, brown silk waistcoat, black necktie, and blue dress coat'! But the letter supplying the above information is so characteristic of his light-heartedness during this, his first visit to London, that a further extract must be made. After describing his concert costume, he goes on to say:

When I mounted the orchestra and found it quite filled with ladies who had not been able to find a place in the room, and when I saw the room fuller than it had ever been, so many gay ladies' bonnets, and the fearful heat, and the unknown instrument, a panic came over me, and up to the moment when I went on I felt exceedingly nervous, I think even feverish. But as the gay bonnets gave me a nice reception, and applauded when I came in, as they were very attentive and quiet (which with this talkative public is a rare thing), and as I found the instrument very excellent and of a light touch, I lost all my timidity and became quite comfortable.

I was highly amused to see the bonnets agitated at every little cadenza, which to me and many critics brought to mind the simile of the wind and the tulip-bed. I also noticed that some ladies seated in the orchestra were very handsome, and that Sir George Smart, on whom I cast a feeling glance, took a pinch of snuff. It went pretty well, and they applauded greatly when it was over. The Times, which I read over my tea in the morning, has also bestowed much praise on me.

I was immensely pleased to find that the public here are good to me, and like me, and that I owe a great many more acquaintances to my music than to my letters of introduction, which really were powerful and numerous enough.

At a concert given by Drouet, the flautist, on Midsummer Night, Mendelssohn conducted his 'Midsummer Night's Dream' overture, probably the second public performance of this fairylike work, one that owed its conception to our own Shakespeare.

The three months—April to July—which Mendelssohn spent in this 'smoky nest' passed all too quickly in a round of music-makings and social engagements. He visited the House of Commons and the picture galleries, and made the acquaintance of the Duke of Wellington and Sir Robert Peel. 'The charm of his manner and his entire simplicity took people captive,' says Grove. No wonder that Society claimed him as a 'lion' of the season. He attended balls at Devonshire House and Lansdowne House, and went to so many parties that the good folks at home thought he would give up music for Society and thereby become a drawing-room ornament.

At the end of the London season he, with his friend Karl Klingemann as travelling companion, started on a tour in England, Scotland and Wales. Proceeding along the Great North Road—there were no railways then—they halted at York and Durham, as Mendelssohn's sketch-book shows. (See the facsimile of his sketch of Durham Cathedral opposite.) Arriving at Edinburgh on a Sunday, they found much to interest them in that beautiful city—the Castle, 'like a bird's nest on a cliff,' as Mendelssohn describes it, Arthur's Seat, the mountains in 'the blue distance,' the 'great blue sea,' and so on. 'Why need I describe it?' he says, 'When God Himself takes to panorama-painting, it turns out strangely beautiful.'

* This numbering is explained by the fact that, in his youth, Mendelssohn had previously composed twelve other symphonies, still in manuscript; that in C minor, played at the Philharmonic concert in question, is now however known as No. 1.

DURHAM CATHEDRAL.
FACSIMILE OF A PENCIL SKETCH MADE BY MENDELSSOHN DURING HIS FIRST VISIT TO ENGLAND. ORIGINAL SIZE 11 X 8 INCHES.
Reproduced by kind permission of his granddaughter, Miss Margaret Brücke.

In a highly descriptive letter he refers to the 'many Highlanders in costume [the kilt, of course], victoriously leading their sweethearts in their Sunday attire, and casting magnificent and important glances over the world. They have long red beards, tartan plaids, bonnets and feathers, and naked knees, and, carrying their bagpipes in their hands, they passed quietly along by the half-ruined grey castle [Holyrood] in the meadow.' Of more importance, however, is the fact that, amid the ruins of the chapel of Holyrood, Mendelssohn received the first inspiration of the Scotch Symphony. 'I believe I found to-day, in that old chapel, the beginning of my Scotch Symphony,' and he wrote down the first sixteen bars with the date 'Edinburgh, 30th July, 1829. Abends.'*

Further creative results of the Scotch tour were the Hebrides overture and the Fantasia in F sharp minor, 'Sonate Ecossaïse,' for pianoforte (Op. 28). The travellers took Liverpool on their way south, where they boarded a new American liner, and finding a Broadwood pianoforte in the saloon, Felix played the first movement of his sister Fanny's Easter-Sonata, whatever that may have been. A projected crossing to Ireland had to be abandoned at Holyhead by reason of the dreadful weather. 'Yesterday was a good day,' he records, 'for I was only wet through three times.' From Chester he made his way to the house of Mr. John Taylor, a relative of the Gresham Professor, at Coed-du, near Holywell. There he composed the three little pianoforte pieces published as Op. 16 and respectively dedicated to the three young ladies of the house. These three pieces were suggested by the pleasant experiences of that Welsh visit—No. 1, 'Andante and Allegro,' by a bunch of carnations and roses (the arpeggios being a reminder of the sweet scent of the flowers rising up); No. 2, the Capriccio in E minor, by the pretty creeping plant (Ecremocarpus) growing outside the house; and No. 3, the Rivulet, by the stream which to this day lazily runs its course close to Coed-du.

On his return to London he met with a carriage accident which laid him up for two months at 35, Bury Street, St. James's, nearly opposite to where Haydn once lodged. The kindness and devotion of his London friends during this tedious illness greatly touched him. 'You cannot think how kind the people are to me,' he wrote to his family. Mrs. Heinke, his former landlady, sent him a cake, the first-fruits of her new oven, and a hamper came from Attwood, in which were splendid flowers, 'smelling deliciously round my fireside,' he says. 'Under the flowers lay a large pheasant, under the pheasant a quantity of apples for pies, &c.' No wonder that he was in danger of being over-fed! As soon as he could be moved he took a drive, and even found London 'indescribably beautiful' on a November day. It is impossible to convey an idea of the delightful time he spent under the hospitable roof of 'dear old Mr. Attwood'

(as he calls him) at Norwood, where the St. Paul's organist then lived in a small house on Beulah Hill. Attwood's milk-white donkey—'one of the most distinguished donkeys that ever ate thistles (but he lives entirely on corn)'—his three dogs, the genial company of the host and his family, all contributed to a speedy convalescence. That Mendelssohn dedicated his three Preludes and fugues for the organ to Attwood 'with reverence and gratitude' (mit Verehrung und Dankbarkeit) is not to be wondered at, for the old organist typified the kindness which was showered upon the gifted musician during the seven months of his first visit to this country.

The eventful Swiss and Italian journey separated Mendelssohn's first and second visits to England. He came again in 1832, dividing his time between Attwood's Norwood villa and the old lodgings at Great Portland Street. He conducted his Hebrides overture (then in MS.) at the Philharmonic Concert of May 14, and at the two following concerts he played his Pianoforte concerto in G minor (also in MS.), a repetition performance until then unheard of in the annals of that Society. He played the organ in St. Paul's Cathedral, and published (with Novello) the first book of his 'Songs without words.' He presented the score of his Hebrides overture to the Philharmonic Society (which, however, does not appear to be in the Society's library), 'as a sign of my deep and heartfelt gratitude for the indulgence and kindness they have shown me during my second visit to this country.'

Twice during the following year (1833) did Mendelssohn visit England. On the second occasion he brought his father with him, but the old gentleman failed to look upon London through the same rose-coloured spectacles as did his impressionable son. They both stayed at the Great Portland Street lodgings. One of their excursions was a journey to Portsmouth in order to see Nelson's ship the 'Victory.' While getting into the coach Mendelssohn père grazed his leg, with the result that he had to lay up—indeed, his condition was serious. But largely through the attention of Felix—who nursed his father with the tenderness of a woman and the devotion of a son—he recovered his wonted health. On May 13, Felix conducted his Italian symphony for the first time at the Philharmonic concerts, and played Mozart's D minor Pianoforte concerto, and at the concert of June 10 the Trumpet overture was performed. As on a former visit, he played the organ at St. Paul's, the cathedral being empty and Klingemann and others blowing the bellows. An extempore Introduction and Fugue; Attwood's Coronation Anthem, four hands, played with the composer; and three pieces of Bach's, formed this interesting recital programme.

During these two visits in 1833, as indeed on other similar occasions, he saw much of his devoted friends Mr. and Mrs. Moscheles. And this year the tie was strengthened by the birth of a son to Moscheles, to whom Mendelssohn stood godfather. Mr. Felix Moscheles, the godchild referred to, has very kindly allowed some of his interesting mementoes of Mendelssohn to be reproduced in facsimile specially for this Centenary article. One (on p. 88) is a printed invitation-card which Mendelssohn ingeniously filled in otherwise than in the orthodox manner. Accompanying a copy of a Bach fugue, transcribed for Moscheles, Mendelssohn sent a note in which he is supposed to hold the pen for some inmates of the Zoological Gardens, which the two friends had visited in the afternoon (see the facsimile opposite). No less humorous, with its reference to House of Commons procedure, is the following invitation sent to Mrs. Moscheles :

as performed with unbounded applause

It will be remembered that in 1832 Novello published Mendelssohn's first book of 'Songs without words.' The pieces were originally named 'Six songs for the pianoforte alone,' but were issued as 'Original Melodies for the Pianoforte' and as 'Author's property.' The sale was very slow—only 114 copies during the first four years! That Mendelssohn himself had some fears as to the commercial value of his half-dozen pieces is shown by the following punning letter which he wrote to Moscheles at this time :

London, in my Club, May 16, 1833.

This morning I forgot to mention, my dear Moscheles, what I have often intended asking and have as often forgotten—how matters stand in reference to that publication of mine, and whether there has been any practical result. I have an appointment with V. Novello to-morrow morning; and if he has only sixpence to give me as my share, I would rather not broach the subject. So please leave word at my house whether you think I should mention the matter, or whether it had better rest in eternal oblivion. I return home to-morrow at eleven o'clock to know which way you decide. The saying is: 'Merit has its crown,' so I scarcely expect I shall get as much as half-a-crown. Yours,

F. MENDELSSOHN.

A little-known incident of this visit is thus recorded in the Morning Post, of May 16, 1833.

PAGANINI. It has been frequently said that this extraordinary performer could not take part in a quartet with any effect. This is far from being correct. At a soirée given by Dr. Billing the other evening, Paganini, Mendelssohn, and Lindley performed a trio for viola, guitar, and violoncello (composed by Paganini), Mendelssohn playing the guitar part on the pianoforte, adding a bass, in a most ingenious manner.

Dr. Billing was a distinguished medical man well known in musical circles.

The fifth visit, in 1837, was the fulfilment of his engagement to conduct 'St. Paul' at the Birmingham festival (first performed in England at the Liverpool festival, see p. 95). At his instigation the duet and chorus 'My Saviour Jesus now is taken,' from Bach's 'St. Matthew Passion,' was performed on that occasion. This was probably the first time any portion of that great work was heard in England. And here it may be stated that the chorus parts of the Passion used by Mendelssohn at the revival of the oratorio in 1829 (at Berlin), were sent here for the first complete performance—by the Bach Society in 1854—and are now in the possession of Messrs. Novello. These parts—in manuscript, of course—are specially interesting, as they contain certain annotations in Mendelssohn's own hand.

To return to the fifth English visit. Before leaving London for Birmingham, Mendelssohn played the organ at St. Paul's and at Christ Church, Newgate Street. The first-named performance was recorded in the Standard of September 11, 1837, in the following words :

M. MENDELSSOHN.—Yesterday this celebrated composer took the organ at St. Paul's after the evening service. The fact had been freely circulated, and the presence of many of the profession too well and plainly showed how much his organ performance had become a matter of interest. He played one movement after the other in the finest style imaginable, and Bach and his splendid genius never shone to greater advantage. The audience remained, and the attendants of the Cathedral became astonished and vexed at so "untoward an event." It was plain Mendelssohn could not "play the folks out." At length the verger and bellows-blower mutually agreed to run away, and whilst Mendelssohn was executing Bach's fine fugue in A minor the further performance was closed by the blower locking up his bellows and walking off. The composer bore the accident (sic) with great good humour, saying "Never mind, it can't be helped." He has undertaken to perform on the large organ in Christ Church, Newgate-street, on Tuesday, at one o'clock. As this instrument is the largest in the metropolis, and possesses a swell superior to the York or Birmingham organ, his performance is looked forward to with great delight.

At Christ Church, Newgate Street, Mendelssohn played Bach's great A minor Fugue and the Toccata in D minor. Not the least interested listener on that occasion was that arch-disciple of Bach, the septuagenarian Samuel Wesley. Wesley supplied Mendelssohn with a fugue subject, to which the player added another, inverting it and working it out 'with a power and ease that astonished all the auditors.' Then old Wesley was prevailed upon to play. It was literally his Nunc dimittis. He never left his house again, and died on October 11, a month later.

The visit of 1840—to conduct the 'Hymn of Praise' at the Birmingham festival—was of brief duration. He played the organ at St. Peter's, Cornhill, on his return to town, his pieces including Bach's noble Prelude and Fugue in E minor, his own in C minor, and Bach's 'Passacaglia.' The keyboards on which he played are still preserved in the vestry of the church, together with a few bars of the Passacaglia which he wrote as a memento

One of the pleasantest visits was the seventh, in the spring of 1842, when he brought his wife, who made her first acquaintance with this country. They stayed for six weeks with Frau Mendelssohn's relatives, the Beneckes, at Denmark Hill, Camberwell. The house has since been demolished, but its site and charming grounds of his visit. On his return to Germany he was accompanied by Chorley, of the Athenæum, and Moscheles. This journey suggested the humorous sketch, by Mendelssohn, which, by the kindness of Mr. Felix Moscheles, we are enabled to reproduce on p. 89, with a description of its ingenious and amusing conception.

have happily been absorbed in Ruskin Park. From a series of excellent photographs of the house and its sylvan surroundings, taken by Miss Hilda Benecke, we are enabled through her kind permission to reproduce one of her pictures, showing the place where Mendelssohn passed some of the happiest days of his life.

Devoted to children, nothing gave him greater pleasure than to romp with the Benecke boys and girls, who, in the years of their maturity, still retain the most delightful recollections of that happy period of their childhood. At Denmark Hill, Mendelssohn composed the well-known 'Spring song,' No. 30 of the 'Songs without words,' the autograph being dated 'June 1, 1842.' The peculiar form of the piece—the staccato notes in the bass and treble—is due to the Benecke children, who, while their composer-friend was playing the piece, persistently withdrew his hands from the pianoforte, because the elder members of the house party had gone to Windsor for the day, and they regarded him as their particular property. Consequently the children wanted him to play, not the pianoforte, but games with them in the garden. It was for the ordinary applause and enthusiasm,' on June 13, played his D minor Pianoforte concerto on the 27th, and conducted his Hebrides overture; and the directors wound up their season by giving him a fish dinner at Greenwich, 'with whitebait and speeches.' Not the least interesting and memorable event during the sojourn at Denmark Hill were his two visits to Queen Victoria and the Prince Consort at Buckingham Palace. The first of these he graphically and charmingly described in a long letter to his mother. With beauty of voice and musicianly feeling the Queen sang some of his own songs to his own pianoforte accompaniment. He and the Prince played on the organ, now preserved in Sir Walter Parratt's room at the Palace. 'I begged that the Prince would play me something,' he says, 'and he played a chorale by heart, with the pedals, so charmingly and clearly and correctly

Benecke children that he composed the 'Kinderstücke' (Op. 72). Although they are known as 'Christmas pieces' in England, they were written, in the children's albums, during the summer days of 1842 and at Denmark Hill. As an instance of his irrepressible spirits and love of the children, we reproduce, as one of our special supplements, a facsimile of a 'Barentanz' which he wrote in the album of Miss Benecke, by whose very kind permission we are enabled to give our readers this extremely humorous and hitherto unknown composition of Mendelssohn's. 'Peter Meffert' was a nickname he gave himself, and he, like the children, was also a 'gooseberry-eater' in the Beneckes' garden.

At the Philharmonic Society's concerts he conducted his Scotch Symphony, 'amid extra-that it would have done credit to any professional, and the Queen sat by him and listened and looked pleased.' The Queen accepted the dedication of his 'Scotch Symphony,' and after she had left the room the Prince said, 'She begs you will accept this little present as a remembrance,' and handed him 'a little case containing a beautiful ring,' on which was engraved 'V.R. 1842.'

As on a former visit, he delighted not a few English organists by his organ performance at St. Peter's, Cornhill, and Christ Church, Newgate Street. At a concert consisting mainly of English anthems, given by the Sacred Harmonic Society, he played on the organ the 'St. Anne's' fugue (with the prelude) and an extemporaneous introduction and variations on the 'Harmonious Blacksmith,' ending with a fugue on the theme.

On the left is the Stork Hotel, where Mendelssohn and his friends Chorley and Moscheles stayed at Birmingham. A pair of scissors, which Mendelssohn bought as a present for Mrs. Moscheles, is seen stalking along to the Town Hall, of festival memories. Then a bread-and-butter pudding, his favourite dish, the recipe for which he is taking home. Under the steamer which is to convey him across the Channel is his necktie, which he never could manage to adjust, till Mrs. Moscheles said 'Pin it up' (the pin is duly shown). The mail-coach, with 'Dover' on the side, and luggage speak for themselves, and Moscheles's umbrella, which Mendelssohn had unfortunately lost, is a conspicuous feature in the foreground.

The remaining three visits must be briefly noticed. In 1844 he conducted the last six concerts of the Philharmonic Society, and his 'St. Paul,' at the Sacred Harmonic Society. He brought with him Schubert's great Symphony in C, but the Philharmonic band treated that glorious work with such coldness—'not to say insultingly'—that it was withdrawn from performance, much to Mendelssohn's annoyance. He introduced Bach's Suite in D, Beethoven's 'Leonora' overture No. 1, and 'Ruins of Athens' music, Schubert's 'Fierrabras' overture, and his own music to the 'Midsummer Night's Dream' (complete), including the Wedding March.

The 'Elijah' year, 1846, saw him again in England for the production of his great oratorio at the Birmingham musical festival. The story of that great event in his life is too well-known to need re-telling. In the following spring he paid his tenth and last visit to England. He conducted four performances of the revised version of 'Elijah' at the Sacred Harmonic Society, in addition to performances at Birmingham and Manchester. He also conducted at the Philharmonic and played, with wonderful fire and poetic insight, Beethoven's G major Pianoforte concerto—his old cheval de bataille, as he called it—Queen Victoria and Jenny Lind being among the enthusiastic audience.

One of his latest calls—perhaps the last—was to take leave of the Queen and Prince Consort, when the Queen and Mendelssohn discussed, in the nursery of the Palace, their respective children—our present King, then aged five, being one of those who doubtless attracted the attention of the distinguished composer. He left London on May 8, worn out with mental and physical fatigue. Within six months the music-loving soul of Felix Mendelssohn was calmed in death.

In this 'Centenary tribute' an endeavour has been made to present the personality of the man rather than set forth the claims of the musician. Mention must, however, be made of Mendelssohn's versatility as a composer—a versatility unapproached by any other creative musician of the first rank. Except opera—and he had made an attempt at that—there flowed from his pen oratorios, psalms, anthems, cantatas, incidental music to plays, part-songs, and songs; symphonies, overtures, concertos (pianoforte and violin), and chamber music. It need scarcely be said that the affection which he had for our country has been reciprocated by the British people during all the long years, now eighty, since he first visited these shores. In the concert-room, the church, and especially the home, his music has given untold delight to those who have listened to, or have taken part in its performance.

To this our favoured land he owed his Scotch symphony, Hebrides overture, organ sonatas (suggested to him by the leading English organists of the day). Had it not been for the Birmingham Festival of 1846, and considering Mendelssohn's early death, it is probable that the oratorio of 'Elijah' would never have been written.

What is the conclusion of the whole matter? The question shall be answered in the words of Holy Writ: 'He being dead yet speaketh'; and 'Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things.'

Occasional Notes.

Sir Frederick Bridge, as chairman of the Board of Trinity College (London), gave the students some wise counsel when addressing them, on January 19, at the opening of the new session. 'Personal effort, a real devotion to study, is the main thing. You must remember the words of Solomon, "Seest thou a man diligent in his business, he shall stand before kings; he shall not stand before mean men." 'I read that text as a young man,' added Sir Frederick, 'and it has stuck to me ever since.' After advising his hearers what to study, the speaker said: 'If you are to succeed in your profession you must devote all your energies to it, like a man. I say "like a man," because do not let it make you become an æsthetic, long-haired prig. Do not let your hair grow too long. Shakespeare knew of this failing in connection with musicians and artists for when in "Twelfth Night" Sir Andrew Aguecheek exclaims: "Oh, had I but followed the arts!" Sir Toby Belch replies, "Then hadst thou had an excellent head of hair." Let me advise you not to blossom out into some abnormal kind of German dress. I do not like to see neckties with true-lovers' knots and long ends. People who fall into these vulgar errors are looked upon as common fiddlers. Dress like reasonable human beings, and not as if you were qualifying for the madhouse.'

The apathy of municipal authorities, both in their individual and corporate capacities, in regard to musical matters, is often a cause of regret, and complaint is more than justified. In many Town Councils, any proposal to vote a sum of money towards the musical education of the people would come with almost an earthquake shock to the Corporation Fathers, who would immediately decree that the proposal should 'lie on the table.' But that it is possible for the Mayor of a town to do something on his own initiative in the way of spreading a love of good music among the people was proved at St. Alban's on January 14, when, at the invitation of the Mayor (Councillor Faulkner, J.P.), and at his entire expense, an audience of 2,500 working people assembled in the Drill Hall to listen to a performance of Handel's 'Messiah,' given by the St. Alban's Philharmonic Society assisted by other local musicians. The soloists were Miss Marion Perrott, Miss Maud Wright (a St. Alban's lady), Mr. Samuel Masters and Mr. Samuel Heath, and the chorus and orchestra, conducted by Mr. William Burt, numbered 250 members. The concert gave great satisfaction to the audience, on whose behalf the Mayor was cordially thanked during the interval. So highly was the generosity of the Mayor appreciated, that hundreds of would-be listeners had to be turned from the doors through want of room.

A 'Grand Mass in G' by Mendelssohn! Who has heard, or heard of, this composition? One may look for it in vain in the thematic catalogue of the master's works, and it is certainly not in the MS. thematic catalogue of the unpublished compositions. What then can this 'Grand Mass' be? Simply a concoction for two sopranos, tenor, bass and chorus, selected from the works of Felix Mendelssohn Bartholdy, and adapted for the use of the Catholic Church by M. H. Cross, organist of the cathedral of Sts Peter & Paul, Philad<sup>a</sup> as the title-page informs us. The 'Grand Mass' begins thus:

This 'Grand Mass' is a most abominable piece of 'tinkering.' How cross Mendelssohn would have been with Mr. Cross.

After more than a hundred years of oblivion, the old concert-room forming part of No. 41, Brewer Street, Regent Street, is once more to be used for entertainments. Formerly known as Hickford's Great Room, and from 1739 till 1790 or rather later one of the fashionable resorts of London, the room was prominent in the musical history of the 18th century from the numerous concerts of importance that took place within its walls, for did not little Mozart and his sister give a concert there in 1765, just before leaving England? The room has now been taken by the English Drama Society, who intend using it for theatrical performances. They opened their season on January 14 with the 'Nativity Plays' from the old Chester Mysteries. The room has been re-named the 'Fortune Playhouse,' an Elizabethan title which, however interesting in itself, is not very appropriate to a concert-room of a so much later date, and it is a pity the old name should not have been retained. Though capable of seating only two hundred people, the room is an ideal place for chamber-music concerts, and it is to be hoped that, having again become a place of entertainment, it may ultimately be restored to its original use. An article on Hickford's Room appeared in our issues of September and October, 1906.

The recently published Register zum deutschen Bühnenspielfplan, giving a list of all performances that took place on German stages between September 1, 1907, and August 31, 1908, is an interesting publication. From its pages we learn that Bizet's 'Carmen' was performed more frequently than any other opera or music-drama, German or foreign, viz., 479 times. It causes real surprise to read that Eugene d'Albert's 'Tiefland' comes next with 463 performances, of which no fewer than 114 stand to the credit of the Komische Oper of Berlin. Wagner's works fared better than ever—395 performances of 'Lohengrin' as compared with 333 in the previous twelvemonth. 'Rienzi' was heard 46 times, 'The Flying Dutchman' 241, 'Tannhäuser' 332, 'Tristan' 112, 'Meistersinger' 183, 'Rheingold' 127, 'Walküre' 209, 'Siegfried' 157, and 'Götterdämmerung' 134 times. Among more recent works Richard Strauss's 'Salome' obtained 217 performances, Humperdinck's 'Hänsel and Gretel' 136, W. Kienzl's 'Evangelimann' 110, Goldmark's 'Queen of Sheba' 35, Heinrich Zöllner's 'Sunken Bell' 34, and Götzl's 'Zierpuppen' 22. Of Italian composers, Mascagni is still first with 246 performances of his 'Cavalleria Rusticana'; and of French masters Ambroise Thomas's 'Mignon'—which delighted German-speaking audiences—was given 296 times, and Gounod's 'Faust' 221 times, that is to say, more than either 'Tristan' or 'Meistersinger.' As usual, Eugene d'Albert is counted in the Register as a 'German composer,' otherwise Britishers might feel some pride in the fact that one of their fellow-countrymen has done so well with a work which his native land has so far ignored!

Messrs. G. Ricordi & Co., of Milan, have issued an interesting booklet in commemoration of the foundation of their famous business one hundred years ago. Bearing the title 'Ars et labor: 1808-1908,' this attractive publication, beautifully illustrated on each of its 196 pages, tells the story of the Ricordi house and the important influence it has exercised on the art of music, especially in Italy. Congratulations to Messrs. Ricordi upon their long and honourable career of artistic enterprise and business success.

An exceedingly amusing anecdote is contained in the recently-published biography of Brahms, by our esteemed Vienna correspondent, Herr Richard von Perger. The incident, new to English readers, gives a delightful impression of Brahms's good nature. 'One stormy winter's night,' says Herr von Perger, 'Brahms and the charming and kindhearted pianist, Epstein, are hurrying home after a musical evening at Professor Billroth's, the famous surgeon and intimate friend of the master. Their way takes them through the narrow streets of the Vienna Altstadt. But stop! There, near the wall, lies the figure of a respectably dressed man. Sleet and rain are beating into his pale face; what more natural for the two friends than to offer help! "Where do you live?" inquires Master Johannes. From between the bloodless lips comes, after sundry attempts, the name of a distant street. To work then! The stout composer and the slim pianist take the man under their arms, and with many a stumble and struggle onward they march through storm and wet towards the suburb. At last the goal is reached. The friends learn that their charge lives on the fourth floor! "For heaven's sake, come along then," commands Brahms, who by this time is panting with exhaustion.

Laboriously, step by step, they climb the stairs. Suddenly, before they reach the landing, there appears a creature, fury-like in its long, dishevelled hair and disorderly night-attire. Her left hand holds a candle, her right a broom. "Aha! so you are the charming fellows who lead my husband to drink and spend the nights in the saloons with him! Are you not ashamed of yourselves?" she thunders at the astonished Samaritans. "Just wait a moment, I'll give it to you." Threateningly the broom is uplifted, and a perfect hail of injuries beats down upon the friends. To this fearful cantus firmus even a Brahms finds no counterpoint. He takes to flight in a wild prestissimo; the pianist does likewise, and develops in his legs an agility little inferior to that of his fingers. Breathless, but shaking with laughter, the two friends reach the street. A church clock near by thunders out a mighty "one." Master Johannes puts his hand leisurely into his breast-pocket for a cigar, and says with a good-natured smile: "Well, my dear Epstein, now we will go and see where we can drink a cup of coffee in peace."

A clergyman, in announcing the compilation of a hymnal that shall 'wipe out the stigma on ecclesiastical music,' says that his 'book will contain no hymns whatever but tunes alone—in various metres, and by different composers.' It is satisfactory to learn that the monotony of all the tunes being in the same metre will be avoided.

In days gone by the Editor of the Musical World adopted a somewhat hilarious method in dealing with 'Answers to correspondents.' For example, he replied to one 'J. H. Gimblett' in the words 'Ha! ha! ha!' Perhaps the Editor regarded Mr. Gimblett as a bore.

According to a provincial newspaper, the music to be sung at a certain church on the first Sunday after Epiphany included the following:

Heathcote in B Dimmittis (Barnby in E); anthem, 'Behold a flat'; Magnificat (Macfarren in A); Nunc Virgin; O thou that tellest good tidings to Zion (G. F. Handel).

As tenor soloist in the first performance of Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' in England (to which reference is made on p. 95), John Braham was engaged. There seemed to be some doubt, however, whether that eminent artist would be able to sing 'Be thou faithful unto death' and the other solos assigned to him. Why? Because he was ill. Furthermore, according to a note made by Sir George Smart, the festival conductor, in his 'private' word-book, 'Dr. Brandreth took 60 oz. of his blood.' Poor poorly Mr. Braham!

The treatment of Mr. Braham's indisposition was not the only curious incident at the Liverpool festival of 1836. It appears that the behaviour of two of the leading lady vocalists was not above reproach, as we read in the Liverpool Journal that :

Madame Caradori had little to do, and that little she did carelessly. She was the nominal, and Mrs. Wood the actual Prima Donna of the festival. Her inattention was remarkable: one-half the time she was forcing Mrs. Knyvett to chat with her, and they diversified this by the pleasing amusement of comparing the size of their respective hands, and examining the texture of their cambric handkerchiefs! This, during the performance of a sacred oratorio, was 'too bad.'

No one can deny that this criticism is outspoken. As a final political-critical word on the festival arrangements in regard to the Press, the writer says :

We cannot conclude our critique upon the performances of the week, without animadverting, in terms of strong disapprobation, not merely upon the refusal of the Committee to supply the free admissions to the Press, to which they are entitled as matter of custom and right, but for their discourtesy in not allowing suitable accommodation even when the tickets were purchased!! To make the matter worse, this discourtesy was only partial, as one Liverpool and two London reporters had the accommodation for which the others of the Press vainly applied. It may be a key to this to state, that the three papers thus accommodated were Tory.

Excepting the few free admissions to the Sunday concerts given in London, where in the world besides Bremen is it possible to hear a first-rate symphony concert under one of the most renowned German conductors, Professor Panzner, for 30 Pfennigs—say threepence-halfpenny? This is what the local Goethe Society offers to workmen and the poorer class of government officials and civil servants, the 30 Pfennigs including free use of the cloakroom and a programme with explanatory notes! Six concerts are given annually with the Philharmonic orchestra and the best soloists, and an audience of some 2,000 people listens with rapt attention to the classic and modern masterpieces that form the excellent programmes. Beethoven's choral Symphony (including the Finale!) is to be performed at the last concert. Lucky Bremen workmen.

By order of the town council of Breslau, free concerts with full orchestra are given on four Wednesday afternoons in the winter for the benefit of the pupils, male and female, of the upper classes of the Volksschulen, equivalent to the English Council Schools. It is a strange and moving sight to see the great Concert House crowded with children listening quietly and earnestly to, or lustily applauding, the classical and modern works chosen so as to suit the age of the exceptional audience, and performed by a first-rate band under Musikdirektor Hermann Behr.

Something new in 'Conservatoires' will shortly be opened by a Monsieur Yafil at Algiers. A room in one of the municipal schools in the Arab quarter is to be devoted on two evenings per week to teaching young natives the Arab and Moorish songs, in addition to native instruments such as the koutira, the snitra and kamendja, which are in danger of completely disappearing with the advance of European civilization. The teaching will be gratuitous.

The Belgian Academy of Fine Arts has elected Richard Strauss a member in place of the late N. Rimsky-Korsakoff.

The musical critic of a newspaper in South Africa is of opinion that the opening movement of Beethoven's Pianoforte sonata in C sharp minor 'is certain to become unpopular because of its length.' He must try again, until he finds it less trying.

MENDELSSOHN'S ORATORIO 'ST. PAUL.'

BY SIR GEORGE GROVE, C.B.

The earliest published mention of the oratorio 'St. Paul' is in a letter addressed by Mendelssohn to his friend Devrient, from Paris, on March 10, 1832, during Mendelssohn's stay there en route from Switzerland to London. The oratorio was bespoken by the Cécilien-Verein of Frankfurt; the plan was arranged—by himself or by his friend Fürst—substantially the same as at present; much of the music was in his head; and, as there would be a 'glorious three months' between the date of writing and definite engagements in July, there appeared to be no difficulty in completing at least a portion of the work. It was not, however, destined to be accomplished nearly so soon. A year and a-half passes, and on September 6, 1833, Mendelssohn writes from Coblenz to another and older friend, Schubring, a clergyman at Dessau, a letter which is evidently one of a lengthened correspondence on the same subject, asking opinions and advice on many points, and speaking of the music as to be completed and performed in the coming winter at Düsseldorf. In the following January the oratorio is still postponed—his E flat Rondo for pianoforte and orchestra (Op. 29)—and his scena 'Infelice' have to be finished; his three concert overtures have to be corrected for press; another trio or symphony has to be composed; and then comes St. Paul.' No wonder that six months later he is still corresponding about the book of words. But the music has made much progress; it has 'entirely absorbed and monopolised him since the spring,' and he finds it singular and good that passages which he had found some reason for transposing or altering from their original connection, he is obliged in the course of composition to replace in the Bible order—"it is the best of all."

By August 6, 1834, he has nearly completed the first part, including 'a great chorus on words from Isaiah, "Arise, shine, for thy light is come,"' which he 'thinks the best number of the first part.' The overture, however, is still to be done, and a 'tough bit of work it will be.' On August 23 of the same year comes a further glimpse in a letter (written in English) to William Horsley*: 'My oratorio is not yet so advanced as you think it, for I have not quite finished the first part, which is to be shorter than the second; but if I proceed slowly it is at least without trombones. And I flatter myself to have been as moderate in the use of brass as any enemy of the Birmingham industry or a friend to invalid trumpeters could have wished; for out of twelve choruses in the first part, there are but two with the brass band, and the beginning chorus is even without trumpets!'

An interval of a few weeks brings us to November 4. He is then music director at Düsseldorf, grumbling sadly at the worries of his post—in fact, they had just driven him to resign. But notwithstanding worries, the first part of 'St. Paul' is practically completed, and he 'would be so glad' to play it over to some person of better judgment than his enthusiastic friends at Düsseldorf—to his sister Fanny, for instance, 'with her thick eyebrows and her many criticisms.' The second part, too, was conceived, up to the sacrifice at Lystra, for which he 'has at present no ideas.' Ten days later he has sketched the overture. On December 23 he has finished and written out an entire chorus for the oratorio, and is discussing with his father various questions in reference to the book of words, one of them a favourite point of attack by the critics—the non-appearance of Saul at the stoning of Stephen: this, while regretting, he defends on grounds which every one who has tried to make an oratorio book will sympathise with. In March he tells Spohr of the intense delight he has had while writing the oratorio. On April 3 he speaks of the possibility of its being performed at Frankfort in the winter, prior to the Düsseldorf Festival in 1836. But there was still much to do; for early in December, three weeks after his father's death, he is still pressing Schubring for 'fresh passages' for the book of words, and devoting himself to the task of completion, 'because his father had urged him to it in the very last letter he wrote.' One passage suggested by Schubring—"Der Du der rechte Vater bist"—though he found it excellent, and though a chorus for it had come into his head directly, does not appear in the published oratorio.

The first performance of 'St. Paul' took place at the Lower Rhine Festival at Düsseldorf, in the old long, low concert-room, on Whit Sunday, May 22, 1836. Mendelssohn himself conducted, and the work excited the greatest enthusiasm. A graphic account of the performance will be found in the late Sir Julius Benedict's 'Sketch of the life and works of Mendelssohn' (Murray, 1853). Another, from the pen of Carl Klingemann, will be found in the Musical World of June 17, 1836. Mendelssohn's own letter, describing the performance, and his feelings as the music recalled his father to mind, is both characteristic and charming. The concluding words, 'I learnt a lesson from it all, and hope to do better the next time I write an oratorio,' are quite in keeping with his constant practice after the first performance of any of his works of importance. The numerous alterations made by him in 'Elijah' and the 'Lobgesang' after he had heard them performed have often been referred to. Towards 'St. Paul' he seems to have been even more ruthless. During the whole of June he confesses that he had been working at it, and was 'quite convinced that the beginning of the first and the end of the second part were nearly three times as good as they were before.' He goes on to give us an interesting glimpse into his habit of composing. 'In many things, especially in the subordinate parts of so large a work, I only succeed by degrees in realising my thoughts and expressing them clearly: in the solos and principal pieces I certainly can make no alteration, because they occur to me at once as they are; but I am not yet enough advanced to say this of all.' The real meaning of the above, so far as 'St. Paul' is concerned, is that he rejected no fewer than fourteen pieces. The particulars of nine of these pieces I am enabled to give.

I. Marked in the MS. as 'No. 2,' is a chorale, in C, for voices and a florid accompaniment of full orchestra, 'O rest in Thy great mercy,' occupying the place of the present opening chorus, 'Lord, Thou alone art God.'

II. 'No. 3.' A recitative to the same words as the present No. 3, 'And the many that believed,' but given to a bass voice.

III. 'No. 13.' A bass solo in C minor, 12-8, Allegro molto, 'O Lord, whose vengeance hath appeared!' a dialogue between bass solo and chorus of men's voices, fourteen pages long.

IV. A chorus in A, interspersed with solos, Allegro con fuoco, 'Praise Him with the pipe,' twenty-eight pages long. Did these stand in the place of the present No. 12, 'Consume them all,' or of the present No. 13, 'But the Lord is mindful of His own'?

V. Begins with a short bass solo in D, Adagio—'Praise be to God, the Lord of all the gods!'—with accompaniment for horns, trumpets and trombones, eight bars in length and leading to a short chorus in G, 3-8, con moto, 'Praise be to God, the merciful God,' with pizzicato accompaniment, imitating harps.

VI. 'No. 32.' This evidently belongs to the scene at Lystra. It is a heathen chorus in D, for voices and full orchestra (with three trombones and drums), twelve pages long. The beginning may be quoted:

TENORS AND BASSES.

Dan-ket den Göt-tern, dan-ket den muth-i-gen Göt-tern.

Sing-et ihr Lob.

Mendelssohn used often to complain in joke that his heathen choruses were more effective than his Christian or Jewish ones. Whether we admit this or not, we may certainly wish that this one could be given to the world. At the close of the chorus is the word 'Attacca,' but a blank leaf follows, forming the end of the quire.

VII. Two numbers from a scene in the prison at Philippi entirely omitted from the oratorio as published: First, a duet (Silas and Paul) for tenor and bass in E flat, Andante, 'Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ,' with accompaniment for violas and bassoons, followed by a recitative for soprano, 'And suddenly there was a great earthquake,' and a solo for St. Paul, 'Do thyself no harm, for we are all here.' Then a chorale in E flat, 'O treuer Heiland, Jesu Christ!' with wood-wind in unison. Then a recitative for soprano to the same words as the present No. 41, 'And Paul sent and called,' &c., after which St. Paul resumes, 'Ye know how that at all seasons.'

VIII. 'No. 28.' Another recitative for St. Paul, for which no representative is to be found in the present oratorio. It begins, 'Whosoever among you feareth God,' is of considerable length—four pages—and ends with Luther's chorale, 'Ein feste Burg,' to words from the second verse, 'Es streit für uns der rechte Mann,' with elaborate accompaniment containing much work for two flutes in triplets.

IX. A song for soprano in F minor, 3-4, 'Thou who hast doomed man to die,'* which originally stood in the place of 'I will sing of Thy great mercies, O Lord,' No. 27.

So far the list (imperfect at best) of the pieces sacrificed by Mendelssohn after hearing his oratorio performed. Doubtless the autograph score would reveal more changes, and would certainly show many an addition to balance these erasures.

'St. Paul' will always be deeply interesting, not only for its merits but as a landmark in Mendelssohn's artistic life. It is full of earnestness, divination of character, deep religious feeling, spirit, nobility, and diverse musical treatment; but it has not got the style which its composer had acquired by the time that he wrote the 'Lobgesang.' In this respect, if the parallel may be pardoned, the work may be compared somewhat with the 'Mount of Olives' in Beethoven's career.

And now a word or two as to the music.

1. The overture. The germ or kernel of the whole oratorio is the famous chorale, 'Sleepers, wake!' Mendelssohn has marked his intention with regard to this by making it the central feature of the work and the foundation of the overture, and also by engraving the words of the chorale on the title-page of the original edition of the full score. The overture is in two movements. The introduction Andante (in A major and in common time) is constructed entirely upon the tune just mentioned, or rather the first three lines of it, and the contrapuntal figures which they generate. This portion of the overture is very sonorous and effective, the score containing three trombones and a 'serpent'—an instrument not now used in the orchestra. The Con moto is a fugue in A minor, in 3-4 time, on a subject which has no relation to that of the introduction; but the tune of the chorale is soon brought in by the wind instruments, the speed is accelerated to Allegro, the key changes back to A major, and the overture concludes most triumphantly and effectively.

2. The chorales, or hymn-tunes, employed in the oratorio are five in number:

1. No. 3, 'Allein Gott in der Höh sei Ehr.' (1540.)

2. No. 9, 'Wer nur den lieben Gott lässt walten.' (1657.)

3. No. 16, 'Wachet auf! ruft uns die Stimme.' (1599.)

4. No. 29, 'O Jesu Christe wahres Licht.'

5. No. 36, 'Wir glauben all an einen Gott'—Luther's version of the Creed; employed as a Canto fermo, and sung by the second sopranos in the chorus, 'But our God abideth in heaven.' In the early performances in England the chorale was sung to its own words, 'We all believe in God on high,' &c., instead of being sung, as now, to the same words with the other parts of the chorus. This was surely better.

Mendelssohn's original intention (as will be seen from the omitted pieces) was to employ two more choral-tunes—'O treuer Heiland' and 'Ein feste Burg.' The use of chorales was sometimes misunderstood on this side the water, and where one would least have expected it. Sir Michael Costa looked on the chorales in 'St. Paul' as mere plagiarisms, and complained of them to the writer from that point of view. He thought it unworthy of a composer thus to save himself trouble. 'When I wrote a hymn-tune in "Eli," I composed it myself,' he said!

3. A feature in the work which excited much controversy in the early days of the oratorio was the employment of a chorus of trebles and altos, accompanied by wind instruments only, for the embodiment of the voice of the Saviour (No. 14), 'Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou Me?' It exercised the contemporary critics considerably. No one now doubts its propriety or its effectiveness, but it may not be out of place to quote the remarks of two great musicians of the time who showed their kindred with Mendelssohn by recognising the fitness of his treatment of so difficult a point. Robert Schumann says,† 'To my mind nothing can be more appropriate than to represent God as speaking with many voices, and revealing His Will through a choir of angels: just as in painting ‡ His presence is represented more poetically by cherubs filling the upper part of the picture than by the figure of an old man or the sign of the Trinity. Where the reality is unattainable it is lawful to use the most beautiful symbol within reach.'

Hauptmann (successor of Sebastian Bach at Leipzig), in one of his interesting letters, says: 'The voice which arrests St. Paul cannot be altered from what it is by a single note: it takes so powerful a hold on the hearer, that it is impossible not to agree to it. Had the words been given to a solo bass or tenor, the effect would have been that of a mere historical tradition.' And again, 'many objections have been made to the employment of a chorus in this place; I however find it truly splendid both in conception and execution. By not using a solo voice Mendelssohn has suppressed all individuality.'

4. Apropos of the chorus in No. 36, 'But our God'—one of the few instances in the oratorio of a regular scientifically-constructed fugue—Hauptmann quotes a saying of Mendelssohn to the effect that he had put in that chorus because people always looked for a regular formal fugue in an oratorio, and, if they did not find it, went away with the belief that the composer could not write one. I remember exactly this being said to me by an old (and good) musician, an admirable organ player, on the subject of 'Elijah'—'No fugues! no fugues! Suppose he don't know how to write 'em.'

5. I have already mentioned a letter of Mendelssohn's to Spohr. Before I close I cannot resist quoting a capital trait of the 'great realist' which is recorded with absolute nüchternheit in his autobiography. He is in Düsseldorf in 1835, on one of his numerous tours: 'One morning I called on Mendelssohn and found his sister with him. He played me the early numbers of his "St. Paul," but they did not quite please me, as I found them too much in the style of Handel.' All the more (destomehr) did my Concertino in E appear to please them both, on account of a long and original staccato passage which he had never heard any other player attempt. He accompanied me very cleverly, but could never hear the staccato often enough, and as often as he asked me to repeat it, he said to his sister 'that's the famous Spohr staccato, which no other player can do.'

† Gesammelte Schriften, translated by M. E. von Glehn.

‡ The allusion is obviously to the Madonna di San Sisto of the Dresden Gallery.

EARLY PERFORMANCES OF 'ST. PAUL' IN ENGLAND.

BY F. G. EDWARDS.

Liverpool had the honour of introducing Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' into England. The first performance of the work in this country, and the second anywhere, took place within five months of its production at Düsseldorf, the occasion being the last concert of the Liverpool musical festival, given on Friday morning, October 7, 1836, in St. Peter's Church (now the Pro-Cathedral). Sir George Smart conducted, but not with a baton, as the festival word-book states 'Conductor, Sir George Smart, who will preside at the organ, to which a Long Movement has been added by Mr. Gray, of London.' The principal vocalists were Madame Caradori-Allen, Mrs. Alfred Shaw, John Braham, and Henry Phillips. The following sang some of the recitatives or took part in the concerted numbers: Miss Birch, Mrs. Knayvet, and Mrs. Wood; Messrs. Bennett, Alfred Novello, and Edward Taylor. The soprano solos were to have been sung by Malibran, but she met with her untimely death, at Manchester, only a fortnight before the Liverpool performance. In his 'private' copy of the word-book, preserved in the British Museum, Sir George Smart has recorded that the chorus 'O be gracious' was 'encored.' The oratorio was preceded by Handel's 'Occasional Overture' and six numbers from 'Judas Maccabæus.' A Liverpool journal, in a preliminary announcement of the festival, referred to the oratorio as 'St. Paul at Düsseldorf'! It is worthy of note that the gross receipts of this festival exceeded £8,000, and that, after paying all expenses, the sum of about £2,500 was available for local charities.

Exactly five months elapsed after the Liverpool performance before the new oratorio obtained its first hearing in London. This took place at Exeter Hall on March 7, 1837, under the auspices of the Sacred Harmonic Society (conductor, Joseph Surman). The work was repeated by the Society on September 12 following. Mendelssohn had consented to conduct his performance, and public announcements to this effect were made accordingly. But the executive of the Sacred Harmonic Society had reckoned without the managers of the Birmingham festival, who had engaged the composer to conduct the oratorio there in the same month (September, 1837). Accordingly the Birmingham committee met and passed the following resolution:

That the chairman be requested to write to Mr. F. M. Bartholdy, that the intention of performing St. Paul, in Exeter Hall, in September next, be abandoned, being contrary to the spirit of the engagement made with the managers of the Birmingham festival; and that the chairman do make a similar communication to Mr. Surman, the conductor of the Exeter Hall Festival (sic).

Upon the receipt of this resolution, Mendelssohn wrote to Robert Bowley, honorary librarian of the Sacred Harmonic Society, as follows. (The letter, written in English, was received in London on September 7, 1837):

SIR,—I am very sorry to be obliged to inform you, that in consequence of a letter from Birmingham, which I received this morning, I must give up the pleasure of conducting my Oratorio at your Society.

The feeling of the Committee of Birmingham appears to be still the same on the subject, although they admitted that they had no right in preventing me from conducting it elsewhere; and as I do not like to hurt their feelings, I prefer to be alone the loser, and make for them a sacrifice which, I assure you, is extremely painful to me.

Should it be possible that your performance could be postponed till the Saturday after the Birmingham festival

(the 23rd of September), I should be able to conduct, and it would be a true pleasure for me if this could be the case. But if it cannot be postponed to that day, and must stand for the Tuesday before the festival, I beg you will receive my regrets for not being able to do as I should have wished, and present to the Committee of your Society my sincere thanks for the honour they did me, and my most heartfelt regrets for the loss of pleasure I feel in declining their kind and honouring offers.

I have the honour to be, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

FELIX MENDELSSOHN BARTHOLDY.

R. Bowley, Esq.

Although Mendelssohn felt that under the circumstances he could not conduct the Sacred Harmonic Society's performance, he conducted three rehearsals, and he was present at Exeter Hall as a listener to his first oratorio, which he found to be 'very interesting.' In this connection an extract from a London journal, the True Sun, issued on the day following the concert (September 13), may be quoted:

Last night's performance in Exeter Hall was a glorious triumph for the author of the oratorio of St. Paul. Those fidgetty, assuming people of the Birmingham committee outwitted themselves in venturing first to dictate to this Choral Society that they should not perform Mendelssohn's oratorio; and then, unjustly preventing his conducting it. However, as might have been anticipated, an additional interest was raised in favour of the author, as he was called upon to receive ten times the honour which would have awaited him had he presided at the conductor's desk. At the conclusion of the first part it became buzzed about that the illustrious composer was in the gallery, when that great mass of people rose as with one consent, orchestra and all, and cheered him with a heartiness of manner that sent one's blood tingling to the fingers' ends. It was delightful to see those enthusiastic chorus singers waving his music over their heads, and manifesting, by every demonstration, their pleasure and gratitude. Who would vacillate for one moment between such a triumph as that of last evening and fifty battles of Marengo!

So gratified was Mendelssohn with the performance of his oratorio that he wrote to the Committee of the Society a letter in which he paid a just tribute to the excellencies of English choralists. Here is the master's appreciation:

I can hardly express the gratification I felt in hearing my work performed in so beautiful a manner,—indeed, I shall never wish to hear some parts of it better executed than they were on that night. The power of the choruses,—this large body of good and musical voices,—and the style in which they sang the whole of my music, gave me the highest and most heartfelt treat; while I thought on the immense improvement which such a number of real amateurs must necessarily produce in the country which may boast of it. It is for these gratifying feelings I wish to express my thanks to the Committee of this Society, and I shall never forget the manner in which they performed my oratorio, and the kind and most honouring reception I met with by the Sacred Harmonic Society.

As an acknowledgment of 'the kind and courteous attention which the Committee of the Society had experienced in their several communications with M. Mendelssohn,' they decided to present him with a silver snuff-box, on the lid of which was inscribed:

Presented to
by the SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY, LONDON, on the occasion of his attendance at their performance of his oratorio
"St. Paul,"
at Exeter Hall, on the 12th day of September, 1837.

The snuff-box, which cost nine guineas, was handed to Mendelssohn by the Committee of the Society, who intercepted him at the coach-office in London at midnight, when he was en route from Birmingham to Dover. 'At half-past twelve I was again in the mail,' he wrote to his mother, 'and reached Dover at nine the next morning.'

Mendelssohn conducted 'St. Paul' at the Birmingham musical festival on September 20, 1837. Eight days later a selection from the oratorio, 'consisting of eleven of its most beautiful movements,' was given at the Hereford musical festival (conductor, John Hunt), while at Gloucester on September 2 in the following year the entire work was performed (conducted by John Amott), and followed by a miscellaneous selection.

The English translation of 'St. Paul' was made by William Ball, but some verbal changes in the original text have since been made. The oratorio was published here in the autumn of 1836 by J. Alfred Novello, folio size, and entitled :

ST. PAUL, | an oratorio, | The words selected from | the Holy Scriptures, | (The English version adapted by Wm Ball.) | The music composed by | FELIX MENDELSSOHN BARTHOLDY, | the piano forte accompaniment arranged | by | the COMPOSER. | London, | J. Alfred Novello, | Music Seller (by special appointment) to Her Majesty, | 69, Dean Street, Soho, | and Bonn, chez N. Simrock.

Following the title-page is this dedication :

The English version | of the oratorio of | St. Paul, | is gratefully dedicated to SIR GEORGE SMART, | in acknowledgment | of the kind interest he manifested, | and the ability he displayed in conducting it upon its First Performance in this country, | at the Liverpool Festival, | by his much obliged, | and obedient servant, | THE PUBLISHER.

The price of the English edition of the oratorio was originally announced as 25s.; but either shortly before or upon publication it was raised to 32s., or in two parts, 16s. each; and the chorus parts cost 5s. each. This (folio) edition contained an outline engraving, by William Humphreys, of Raphael's cartoon of St. Paul. Nearly twelve years passed before a cheaper edition was published here. This, octavo size, was begun in February, 1848, when the work was issued in twelve sixpenny monthly parts; in this edition the overture was arranged for pianoforte solo, the original arrangement, by the composer, having been for pianoforte duet.

In conclusion, the original announcement of the English publication of the work may be given as it appeared on the advertisement cover of the Musical World of August 5, 1836 :

Church and Organ Music.

MENDELSSOHN AND CHURCH MUSIC.

English church music greatly interested Mendelssohn during his earliest visits to these shores. While staying with his venerable friend 'dear old Attwood,' at the latter's villa at Norwood, in 1829, during his first sojourn in this country, Mendelssohn wrote home: 'In my bedroom luckily stands old Attwood's music-cupboard, with the key in it; so I rummage among the music-books . . . no end of Te Deums by Croft, and twenty anthems of Boyce's, and Purcell's Psalms.' (Considering the limited accommodation of Attwood's villa at Norwood, it is more than probable that Mrs. Attwood made up a bed for her distinguished guest in her husband's study, then the back part of the sitting-room with folding-doors.) At St. Paul's Cathedral Mendelssohn must have heard music by Croft, Boyce, or Purcell, and was therefore glad to study it from the scores. During his second visit to Norwood (in 1832) his host wrote as follows to Vincent Novello, then living at 67, Frith Street, Soho.

Sunday, May
27th 8 oc.

DEAR NOVELLO

Mendelssohn has just rec<sup>d</sup> some Manuscripts of Sebastian Bach which he purposes trying this morn<sup>g</sup> hope you will meet him—M<sup>o</sup> 11 oc.—
Yours truly,

J. W. ATTWOOD.

It is quite probable that Mendelssohn attended a service at Westminster Abbey, if not at York Minster and Durham Cathedral, as he visited both the two latter places during his eventful tour in England, Scotland and Wales in 1829. (See his pencil sketch of Durham Cathedral, reproduced on p. 83.)

Knowing Mendelssohn's interest in our cathedral music, Vincent Novello requested him to compose a morning and evening service, with a view to its publication. To this request Mendelssohn replied in a letter to Novello, dated 'Berlin, August 22<sup>d</sup>, 1832':

I want to-day to ask you whether you still remember you writing to me once that you wished me to compose an Evening and Morning-service for publication in your country? I could not then fix the time when I was to do it as it was the first thing in that style I was to compose, but as soon as I got quiet here I tried to begin the Te Deum in the style of your cathedral music and it is now finished. Although it is not entirely as I wish it to be, and though I hope the following pieces will be better, I do not think unworth being published, and I accordingly want to ask you whether you are still of the opinion, which you expressed then to me in your kind note, and whether I am to go on with the composition of the services and to send it to you when it is finished. You asked me also for my terms; but I am really at a loss to fix them, as I never published any composition of the kind in your country; you would oblige me particularly if you would tell me your opinion on the subject, or if you do not like this let me know how you would pay other composers in that style that I may fix my terms accordingly.

Nothing came of the proposal until nearly fourteen years later, when Mendelssohn wrote to his other English publisher, Edward Buxton (proprietor Ewer & Co.), a letter, dated 'Leipzig, 13 February 1846,' which began thus:

I send you herewith the English Te Deum of which I told you. As you wished to have something in my hand writing, I copied it out for you, and beg you will send it by some opportunity a printed copy in return when you have published it. By a curious coincidence I had a letter from Novello yesterday while I was in the middle of my copy, asking me when he should get the English Te Deum of which we had spoken so many years ago. I beg you will send him my answer which I enclose. There must not be a German translation made of this piece, for I do not wish to have it published in this country, as it is written for yours and for your Service; if they want to do it here on their own account of course I cannot help it; but I will not authorize a publication of it and make it a condition that you will not send it for publication to Bote & Bock or any other German publisher, but keep it for yourself and England. If there are faults in the English words and their musical accent, I wish to correct them, but you must tell me first! I wish to fix the price for this and the Trio [in C minor] at £30. Can I say 'English Service' on the title? Or must it be 'Service of the English Church'?

The Te Deum was published, doubtless in 1846, with the following title:

WE PRAISE THEE | O GOD | (Te deum laudamus) | for | soli and chorus, | with | Organ accompaniment, | by | F. MENDELSSOHN BARTHOLDY.

London | Published by Ewer & Co., Newgate Strt.
Price 5s. Voice parts 2s. 6d. [Folio: without opus number.]

The first performance of the Te Deum took place at Crosby Hall, Bishopsgate-Street-Within, on November 30, 1846, the occasion being the first of the fifth series of concerts given in that historic building by Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew, who presided at the organ. We have before us a copy of the actual word-book of that concert, together with some Press cuttings recording the event. Then, as now, critical opinion was divided as to the merits of the work. The Daily News, then in the first year of its existence, said that the concert was interesting as introducing a new Te Deum by Mendelssohn, in which the composer has happily caught the style of the old cathedral writers, and has shown that genius can impart individuality and interest to an apparently exhausted form of writing; the conventionalities of which, although easy enough merely to imitate, render it difficult to rise above commonplace. This, however, Mendelssohn has done, and his Te Deum, despite its fragmentary and discursive character (marking features of the school in which it is written), is a striking and, although written to a pattern, an original work.

On the other hand the Morning Post said that the composer 'seems to have put his genius into trammels which it can neither support nor quit.' Is there any 'support' in a 'trammel'?

As the autograph of the companion to the Te Deum, the Jubilate Deo, is dated 'Leipzig, April 5, 1847,' Mendelssohn must have composed it just before he started on his last visit to England. It was published separately—price 3s., vocal parts, 1s. 6d.—although the title-page, evidently altered from that of the Te Deum publication, stated 'Te Deum et Jubilate for the Morning Service, for soli and chorus, &c.'

For a reason at present unknown, Mendelssohn did not compose the Evening canticles in the key of A, as companions to the Morning Service, but set them in the key of B flat. The autographs of both the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis are dated, 'Baden-Baden, June 12, 1847.' As this was within five months of his death, these pieces for the English Church are among his latest compositions. On July 7, 1847, he wrote to Buxton, from Thun:

I send here the piece which I brought already to England for you, and was prevented from looking over and finishing during that hurried but very pleasant stay in your country. It completes the morning service of which you published the first piece.

I also send two new pieces forming the whole of an Evening Service, which are perhaps a little longer and more developed than usual in your Cathedral style: yet I hoped they might be used, and I found much pleasure in occupying myself with them. You told me you wanted to have something of my manuscripts, and so I send this as I wrote it: but as there are several passages which might not be quite clear to the engraver it is quite necessary that you should send me the proofs of all the three pieces before they are published.

This is also necessary because I beg you will submit the wording of them to Mr. Bartholomew (to whom I beg to be most kindly remembered). If he finds passages where the English accent is wrong, I beg he will alter them, but before these alterations are published I should like to know them and therefore again I must look over the proofs. I should name as the price the same which I received for the two pieces forming the Morning Service, viz.: 22 guineas.

Shortly afterwards he wrote from Interlaken, on August 15, 1847, in one of his last letters to England:

According to your wish I send you here enclosed two more 'Gloria Patri.' Of the three modes of alteration for the wrong 'imagination' I prefer the 1st because it is the only one that does not alter the rhythm of the whole movement, and will as well apply to the second passage when the 'imagination' again comes into play. This is not the case with alteration no. 2 and 3, and as I could not find another I beg you will insert no. 1.

The Evening Service—like the Jubilate, a posthumous publication—was issued in England with the following title:

MAGNIFICAT & NUNC DIMITTIS | for the | Evening Service | with | Organ accompaniment, | by | FELIX MENDELSSOHN BARTHOLDY. | Op. 69.

London | Published by Ewer & Co., Newgate Strt. | Leipzig, Breitkopf & Haertel. Price 7s. Voice parts, 4s.

In Germany the 'Opus 69' is called 'Drei Motetten' and arranged in the following curious order: Nunc dimittis, Jubilate, and Magnificat.

A little-known English Church composition of Mendelssohn's is entitled 'Responses to the Commandments.' According to Sir George Grove, the autograph—dated 'Berlin, März 24, 1833'—is headed 'For evening service. For Mr. Attwood.' This curious Kyrie was published by Ewer & Co. in 1843 as a separate work, and it also found a place in Book xii. of their Orpheus series, issued in the same year. The piece, in the key of A minor and contrapuntal in character, is forty-four bars long and, moreover, continuous, no break being made between the response to Commandments 1-9, and that 'after the 10th.' Therefore, as the text now stands, the music is quite unpractical. It would seem as if Mendelssohn had quite mistaken the nature of the English Kyrie, and the heading to the autograph, 'For the evening service,' needs some explanation.

It should not be forgotten that Mendelssohn held a cathedral appointment. For about two years—1842-45—he had charge of the Domchor (Cathedral), Berlin, a post he undertook at the 'command' of Frederick William IV., King of Prussia. During the winter of 1843-44, his compositions were chiefly for the Cathedral. They included four of his settings of the Psalms—the 98th Psalm ('Sing to the Lord a new-made song'), for eight-part chorus and orchestra, composed for the celebration of New Year's Day, 1844; the 2nd Psalm, ('Thy rage fiercely the heathen?'), for Christmas; the 43rd Psalm ('Judge me, O God'); and the 22nd Psalm ('My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me?'), for Good Friday. The last three were posthumously published as Op. 78. In addition to the foregoing there are the 'Six Anthems for eight-part chorus' (Op. 79), the 100th Psalm (unknown in England), and seven Chorales, with accompaniment of trombones (unpublished).

* As Mendelssohn used the soprano clef, these notes should be read a third lower. The key is B flat.

To English psalmody Mendelssohn contributed one original hymn-tune, and that not a very successful attempt as regards popularity. This appeared in the 'National Psalmist' (1840), edited by Charles Danvers Hackett, thus :

C.M.

LEIPZIG.

FELIX MENDELSSOHN BARTHOLDY.

De-fend us, Lord, from shame, For still I trust in Thee,
As just and righteous is Thy name, From danger set me free.

Mr. Henry Edward Dibdin, of Edinburgh, asked Mendelssohn to contribute a long-metre tune to the 'Standard Psalm Tune Book' which he (Dibdin) was editing. To this request the composer replied as follows :

Leipzig, 9th July, 1841.

DEAR SIR,—I thank you very much for your kind and flattering letter of the 19th of last month, and enclose the page of your album, on which I have written a little prelude for the organ, which I composed this morning on purpose. I was sorry I could not write exactly what you desired me to do, but I do not know what a 'long-measure psalm tune' means, and there is nobody in this place at present to whom I could apply for an explanation. Excuse me therefore if you receive something else than what you wished, and believe me, very truly yours,

FELIX MENDELSSOHN BARTHOLDY.

HENRY E. DIBDIN, Esq.

For the anthem-music used in English churches of all denominations, Mendelssohn has been much in request. It is only necessary to mention his 'Hear my prayer'—composed, to English words, specially for Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew's concerts at Crosby Hall and first performed there, January 8, 1845*—and the excerpts from the oratorios, 'Hymn of Praise,' &c. Reference must also be made to Psalm settings other than those already mentioned : Psalm 13 ('Lord, how long wilt Thou forget me?'); Psalm 42 ('As the hart pants'); Psalm 95 ('O come, let us worship'); Psalm 114 ('When Israel out of Egypt came'), one of his finest choral works; Psalm 115 ('Not unto us, O Lord'). And then there are the three beautiful motets for female (or boys' voices), to which Thomas Attwood Walmisley adapted English words from the Psalms.

As regards 'adaptations,' one of the best known is the Kyrie from 'Elijah'—the chorus 'Open the heavens and send us relief'—originally made by Judge Meymott, a Bencher of the Temple Church and first sung there. No less popular is the successful arrangement, by Dr. W. H. Cummings, of a movement from the 'Festgesang' to Charles Wesley's Christmas Hymn, 'Hark! the herald angels sing,'†

Whatever may be the ultimate fate of Mendelssohn's music, it is far too deep-rooted in the services of the church to suffer neglect. It is music that the people can understand, that touches their hearts, and that, by the warmth of its expression, kindles the sacred fire of true devotion.

MR. WOLSTENHOLME IN AMERICA.

Mr. William Wolstenholme has just returned from his first visit to the United States of America, where he gave with much success a short series of organ recitals. His reception everywhere was most cordial, its general spirit being indicated by the words of Mr. Ralph Kinder, organist of the Church of the Holy Trinity, Philadelphia, who greeted him with, 'Let me tell you, Mr. Wolstenholme, that you have not come amongst strangers; we all feel that we know and look upon you as a friend.'

An immense audience attended Mr. Wolstenholme's recital at the Brooklyn Institute, New York, on November 1, many New York organists being present. Previous to his performance at the Drexel Institute, Philadelphia, a large number of the City organists gave 'Wolstenholme' recitals after Sunday evening service, and in all kinds of hospitable and courteous ways these musicians made their brother from across the Atlantic feel and appreciate the truth of Mr. Kinder's words of welcome. The general interest shown in organs and organ music 'across the Atlantic' was striking. It was quite the exception to find an organist of any standing who had not studied either at one of the great European music-schools, or with Guilman or some other notable organist; and the audiences showed the influence of these educated musicians in their discriminating appreciation of genuine organ music.

Owing to time limitations Mr. Wolstenholme was unable to go 'West,' though he had pressing invitations to do so. New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Rochester and Buffalo were among the cities visited, and recitals were also given at Yale University (for Dr. Horatio Parker), and at Vassar, Mount Holyoke, Wilson and Chambersburg Colleges. Altogether twenty-two recitals were given in six weeks, the series including two free recitals which afforded him great pleasure to give to the students at the Pennsylvania State School for the Blind at Philadelphia, and the New York State School for the Blind at Batavia. It is scarcely necessary to say that Mr. Wolstenholme's programmes were as judiciously and artistically selected as they were interesting. We gladly record his success.

On New Year's eve a considerable portion of Bach's 'Christmas Oratorio' was sung at Canterbury Cathedral. The chorus, numbering about 100 voices, comprised the cathedral choir and members of the Oratorio Society. The soloists were Mr. J. Pearson (tenor) and Mr. S. Dyson (bass), and the air 'Slumber, beloved,' was sung with remarkable precision and expression by ten senior choristers. The accompaniments were given by a string orchestra, in addition to three trumpets and two horns, the wood-wind parts being carefully filled in on the organ by Mr. W. T. Harvey, assistant-organist. Dr. Charlton Palmer, who last autumn succeeded Dr. Perrin in the organistship, conducted.

SIR WALTER PARRATT ON COMPOSERS WHO HAVE NOTHING TO SAY.

As President of the Royal College of Organists, Sir Walter Parratt presented to the successful candidates the Fellowship diplomas, on January 17, at the institution at Kensington Gore. In the course of his address the President said that when he had time to look down the list of anthems and services sung in various churches, he was saddened to find how little we enjoyed of that heritage of magnificent Church music which was ours. The fact is that in these days, the organist is too often a bit of a composer himself. He can write dramatic music not the least offensive, but music that sometimes does not mean a great deal. George Eliot once said, 'Blessed is he who, having nothing to say, avoids to give us wordy evidence of the fact.' To this Sir Walter added, 'Blessed is the musical person who, having nothing to say, avoids to say it in many crotchets and quavers.'

At the evening service at Manchester Cathedral on Sunday, December 27, Dr. Kendrick Pyne played for the last time in the office of organist, which he has held for thirty-three years. Bishop Welldon (Dean of Manchester), the preacher on that occasion, made an apt and moving reference to the distinguished organist's retirement. Dr. Pyne retains his professional connection with the University and with the Royal Manchester College of Music, and he will continue his Saturday evening recitals as organist to the Corporation of Manchester.

'A Guide to the use of Hymns Ancient and Modern, 1904, with a Concordance,' is the title of a welcome little book compiled by the Committee of that popular hymnal and published by Messrs. Clowes. The preface to this useful volume rightly states that 'the choice of appropriate hymns for the Sundays and Holy Days of the Church's year is a matter which demands careful thought, and also a full knowledge of the hymns from which the choice is to be made.' The book has therefore been prepared 'for the use of those who have the responsibility of selecting the hymns for use in the services.' The concordance is sure to be useful to preachers who wish to illustrate in their sermons a particular idea from a hymn, and, moreover, as a help to those who wish to find in the collection any hymn of which they cannot recall the first line. The 'Guide' is issued separately, and from the same publishers we have received 'A selection from Hymns Ancient and Modern (1904)' for use in mission-rooms, classes, meetings, &c. The 'selection,' which contains 198 hymns, is published at the price of twopence.

At Gilmorton Church, near Lutterworth, on Sunday evening, January 10, Schumann's Advent Hymn ('In lowly guise'), parts 5 and 6 (the Epiphany portions), was sung under the baton of Mr. H. Matthews, Mr. F. Vallance, organist of the church, being at the organ. An orchestra of twelve performers, from Leicester, under the leadership of Mr. George Barker and Mr. J. H. Cooke, lent efficient aid, and the choir, numbering forty voices, are deserving of all praise for the manner in which they overcame the difficulties of the two works performed on this occasion.

The following candidates passed the recent Fellowship examination of the Royal College of Organists:

Mr. Joseph Chalk died, we regret to record, on January 11, aged seventy-three. Eight days previous to his death this much esteemed musician had completed fifty years' faithful and efficient service as organist of Waltham Abbey Church. A portrait of Mr. Chalk formed one of the illustrations of the article on Waltham Abbey Church, which appeared in The Musical Times of September, 1906.

The reopening of the organ, after having been rebuilt by Messrs. Henry Willis & Sons, in St. Thomas's Cathedral, Bombay, took place on St. Thomas's Day, December 21, when a selection of music was performed according to the programme subjoined, Mr. Edgar Faulkner, cathedral organist, presiding at the organ:

BRIGHTON AND ITS MUSIC.

He would be a bold man who could quote, without fear of contradiction, the first reference to music in the history of Brighton, or, as it was called in ancient times, Brighthelmstone. For our present purpose the middle of the 18th century may suffice for a starting point. About the year 1758 or 1759, there were encampments on Brighton Downs, while Admirals Hawke and Rodney were keeping an eagle eye upon the French fleet in Brest harbour. 'What has that to do with music?' the reader may perchance inquire. The answer to that is the second stanza of one of our good old English ditties, not unknown in the Army and Navy. Here is the second verse, which will at once recall the tune :

Oh, ne'er shall I forget the night,
The stars were bright above me,
And gently lent their sil'ry light,
When first she vow'd to love me !
But now I'm bound to Brighton camp,
Kind heaven then pray guide me !
And send me safely back again
To the girl I left behind me.

MR. ROBERT TAYLOR.

CONDUCTOR OF THE BRIGHTON SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.

(Photograph by Mr. A. H. Fry, Brighton.)

From this vocal strain let us turn to an instrumental achievement at the 'Queen of watering-places' which took place in the month of August, 1768, when 'a Mr. Noel, assisted by Mrs. March, gave a concert at Shergold's. He performed on the violin and on the pantaleone and salterione, an instrument 11 feet long, fitted with 276 strings.' Invented by Hebenstreitt, at Merseberg, about the year 1700, the pantaleone was an improved and enlarged dulcimer, having two sets of strings, one of catgut and the other of wire. The salterione may have been an elongated form of the salterio which, resembling the dulcimer, was placed on the lap of the performer and played with the fingers instead of with hammers.

To leave behind us the region of speculation and to return to matters of fact, there can be no doubt that when the First Gentleman in Europe gave practical proof of his affection for Brighton, music began to enter largely into the attractions of the town, though doubtless it was not of a very exalted type. The Prince Regent established a Chapel Royal as a part of his Pavilion establishment, and in the year 1800 a selection of sacred music (Handel, of course), was given for the benefit of Mr. Prince, the organist of that prince-supported sanctuary. Thunder's Harmonic Rotunda was the locale of twelve subscription concerts given in 1808, under the patronage of the Prince of Wales, by a Mr. Kemp, Mus.B., when, between the vocal pieces—songs, duets, trios, glees, &c., ancient and modern—the band of the Gloucester Militia performed 'some of their most favourite airs,' evidently to brighten up the programme.

In the same year concerts were given by Mr. L. Malsch—a name not unknown in the best orchestras of to-day—who was 'the Music Master of his Royal Highness's Military Band.' At one of his concerts, given at the Old Ship inn, the programme comprised :

The overture to Mozart's 'Zauber flute,' a Beethoven Symphony, grand chorus in the 'Creation,' a Violin concerto by Spohr, concerted and other pieces for bassoon, horns and clarinets, glees by vocalists from Chichester Cathedral, Handel's 'Hush, ye pretty warbling choir,' by one of the boys, a Pianoforte concerto, and between the parts, petite pieces on the Pandean pipes.

A Beethoven symphony at Brighton in 1808! We are told that

The concert was very elegantly attended. The first act of the concert commenced about nine o'clock, and the last was not finished before midnight. The concert over, the violins struck up a lively air, and the merry dance gave animation and pleasure to its votaries, till nearly two o'clock in the morning.

We may pass on to the year 1823, when Attwood and a small contingent of singers from the Chapel Royal, St. James's, were 'commanded' to do duty at the Chapel Royal, at Brighton. Under 'Court News,' the Morning Post records :

Master Wesley, from His Majesty's Choir at the Royal Chapel, St. James's, took the soprano and leading parts in the anthem, &c., with sweet and divine effect.

Master Wesley was included in the new choir.

Later in the year—December, 1823—the same fashionable journal further records that :

The soprano of Master Wesley was remarkably clear ; his shake was open, his every intonation distinct and correct. The King's Band, with Mr. Attwood at the organ, were on duty.

The Master Wesley above referred to was then twelve years of age ; ten years later he composed 'The Wilderness.'

Another juvenile, though of the instrumental, not the vocal order of achievement, has now to be mentioned in the person of George Aspull. As a prodigy pianist, aged eleven, at one of the concerts he gave at Brighton in December, 1824, and January, 1825, he is said to have introduced Weber's 'Concertstück' to an English audience. Brighton should surely be proud of that distinction.

The year 1828 was an important one in the musical history of Brighton, for two musical festivals were held there in that year! They both took place in St. Peter's Church. The first, on January 24, one day before the consecration of the sacred edifice, was under the direction of William Hawes, with Attwood at the organ. Selections from the 'Messiah' and Luther's Hymn formed the bulk of the programme. Later in the year (October) a much more important music-making was held, lasting three days. The principal vocalists were Miss Paton, Mrs. Knyvett, and Madame Caradori-Allan; and Messrs. Braham, Knyvett, Hawes and Phillips. The band numbered fifty performers, and Attwood conducted 'at the organ.' The performances, which commenced at 11.30 a.m., included the following works: 'Dettingen Te Deum' (Handel) and 'Coronation Anthem' (Attwood), the first day; Parts 1 and 2 of the 'Creation' and a miscellaneous programme, the second day; and the 'Messiah,' the third day. Mr. Gutteridge, organist of the church, a post he held for forty-four years, does not seem to have taken part in this early festival.

Forty-one years passed before anything on a festival scale was again attempted at Brighton. In the month of February, 1869, Mr. William Kuhe—now an octogenarian, who had settled in the town in 1847—gave a series of 'Fifteen grand subscription orchestral concerts, on a scale never yet attempted in Brighton.' The concerts, given on successive days, were held in the Grand Concert Hall, Middle Street. In the following year, 1870, Mr. Kuhe repeated the experiment, the performances taking place in the Dome, formerly the riding-school portion of the Royal stables attached to the Pavilion. The artists who appeared at these two series of concerts were Madame Schumann, Madame Norman Neruda (Lady Hallé), Joachim and Piatti. These gargantuan feasts of music, due to the enterprise of Mr. Kuhe, became in 1871 the important series of musical festivals associated with the name of that veteran musician. Space will not permit of a detailed account of these festivals, which took place annually from 1871 to 1882. Suffice it to say that among the composers who personally conducted their own works were Gounod, Costa, and Sterndale Bennett. On February 13, 1877, Frederick Clay's 'Lalla Rookh' was produced under the direction of the composer, a cantata which includes that charming song 'I'll sing thee songs of Araby,' sung by Mr. Edward Lloyd and received with genuine enthusiasm. In his genially written book 'My musical recollections,' Mr. Kuhe states that the financial loss on his last festival (1882) was £1,000, and that the average deficiency was £500, but it would be difficult to estimate the artistic gain to Brighton due to these important music-makings.

The Brighton Sacred Harmonic Society can point to a history, somewhat broken perhaps, of more than eighty years. Started in 1827, the Society originated by the union of the choirs of the Parish Church, the Countess of Huntingdon's Chapel, and Bond Street Chapel. These church choirs were brought together by the two festivals in 1828 already mentioned. The practices took place, with organ accompaniment only, under Mr. Edward Petett, at Faithful's Chapel, now Trinity Presbyterian Church, in Church Street. Thus the Brighton Sacred Harmonic Society, like its distinguished namesake in London, began its career in a modest way and amid ecclesiastical surroundings. Beginning in November, 1831, a small body of instrumentalists met weekly at Walker's Marine Library, and afterwards at the Telemachus Rooms, Old Ship Hotel. These instrumentalists and the choralists above-mentioned united their forces under the name of the Amateur Choral Society, Miss Lucombe, afterwards Mrs. Sims Reeves, being the soloist. Eighty strong, these singers and players subsequently named their organization the Brighton Sacred Harmonic Society, and for a long period of years gave their concerts at the Town Hall.

Passing over the ups and downs of the Society, we come to an important period in its operations and usefulness, the appointment to the conductorship, in 1870, of Mr. Robert Taylor, who still worthily holds that office. Mr. Taylor brought into the ranks his Brighton Musical Union, founded by him in 1868, an amalgamation which was of the greatest value in furthering the cause of choral music in the town. The full title of this excellent organization is the Brighton Sacred Harmonic Society and Musical Union. For six years, 1871-77, the members were exclusively engaged to sing the choral works at Mr. Kuhe's festivals. In 1878 the Society resumed its independent existence. Until 1884 the concerts were private, but in 1885 they became public, and the oratorios, &c., were accompanied by a full orchestra. To give the list of works performed under Mr. Taylor's efficient direction would be to enumerate some eighty choral works by ancient and modern composers. Of the latter no fewer than eighty works have been introduced to Brighton audiences by the Society, these including Parry's 'King Saul,' a year after its production; and at the recent festival the choir had the distinction of singing in the first performance given in the town of Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius.'

The Society has its own orchestra, numbering forty-five performers, and the choral membership stands at 200 voices. The organist is Mr. Percy Taylor, a son of the conductor; Mr. W. A. Baker is the leader of the band, and Mr. W. T. Ashby enthusiastically discharges the duties of honorary secretary. A memorable achievement of the Society deserves special mention for more than one reason—the performance on December 7, 1881, of the vocal portion of Beethoven's Choral Symphony. This took place at the Aquarium, and formed one of the excellent concerts conducted by Mr. Frederick Corder during the time (1880-82) he so ably and with true artistic success held the office of director of music at the Brighton Aquarium. One noteworthy achievement of Mr. Corder's was the performance of all Beethoven's symphonies, including No. 9, as mentioned above.

Mr. Robert Taylor, conductor of the Brighton Sacred Harmonic Society, is a native of Evesham, a town of twofold interest as being the scene of a celebrated battle, and the place where Clementi died. In the parish church of St. Lawrence, Mr. Taylor played, at the age of eight, the first choral service held in that church since the Reformation. He afterwards became a chorister of Worcester Cathedral, of which, as an articled pupil of Dr. Done, the organist, he was assistant-organist. In 1866 he settled at Brighton, upon being appointed organist of St. Patrick's, Hove, a church famed for its musical services. Upon commencing his duties, Mr. Taylor changed the Gregorian into the Anglican type of service, and among his successors who carried on the good work were Mr. E. H. Thorne, Dr. F. E. Gladstone, and the late Dr. F. J. Sawyer. From 1870 to 1889 Mr. Taylor was organist of Brighton College, and for twenty years, in addition to his other church work, he held the office of choirmaster at St. Michael's Church. At the inspiring services held in the Dome on Easter Sundays in connection with the Volunteer reviews formerly held at Brighton, he had charge of the entire musical arrangements, and presided at the organ; on those occasions his fine tune St. Patrick's, to 'O worship the King,' was sung with thrilling effect to the accompaniment of massed Volunteer bands and organ. In conjunction with Dr. Alfred King—a much respected musician who came to the town in 1865—Mr. Taylor started in 1883 the Brighton School of Music. The students, in number about 250, receive instruction in various branches of music under qualified professors.

A good all-round musician, with exceptional gifts as a conductor, Mr. Taylor has made the teaching of singing a speciality, and in many ways he has done splendid work for the cause of music in his adopted town.

An interesting institution in the town is the Brighton Musical Fraternity, which has existed for more than twenty years and includes the leading professional and amateur musicians. In addition to an annual dinner, the Fraternity gives concerts monthly during the winter at the Old Ship Assembly Room for almost a nominal subscription, and the entire proceeds are devoted to charitable purposes. Chamber music has been a great feature of the programmes. Part-singing by the members is always introduced, and the present Mayor (Mr. Slingsby Roberts), an excellent amateur, regularly takes his part in the choruses.

In regard to past organizations, honourable mention is due of an amateur symphony society, for many years conducted by Mr. Stern, the senior musician of Brighton, who was prominent in the town for sixty years. Nor must it be forgotten that the late Dr. F. J. Sawyer conducted, for thirteen years, the Brighton and Hove Choral and Orchestral Society, which he founded in 1883. The Brighton Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Shaw, organist of St. Patrick's Church, Hove, give four orchestral concerts during the winter.

Present-day activities include a choral society, established and conducted by Mr. Chastey Hector, organist of St. Peter's Church, for the performance of oratorios. On December 21 last, an extensive selection from Bach's 'Christmas Oratorio' was successfully given in St. Peter's Church. Among Nonconformist choirs, that of Florence Road Baptist Chapel, under Miss Bessie Woode, has become distinguished by gaining the first-prize at a competition held at the Crystal Palace.

Among well-known living musicians the following are natives of Brighton: Dr. Botting, Mr. Henry Davey (to whom we are much indebted for help kindly rendered in the preparation of this article), and Dr. Davan Wetton; and the names of those no longer in the flesh include A. H. Jackson, F. J. Sawyer, and Leo Stern, the violoncellist.

The recent Brighton musical festival is noticed on p. 113. Next month we hope to give an account of the Brighton Municipal Orchestra and its constitution, together with some biographical notes on and a portrait of the conductor, Mr. Joseph Sainton.

The gold and silver medals offered by the Associated Board of the Royal Academy of Music and the Royal College of Music for the highest and second highest honours marks, respectively, in the Advanced and Intermediate Grades of the Local Centre Examinations in music—the competition being open to candidates in the British Isles—have been awarded as follows:—Advanced Grade silver medal, Miss Grace Blakemore, Cardiff centre, pianoforte; Intermediate Grade gold medal, Miss Kathleen M. Dark, London centre, pianoforte; Intermediate Grade silver medal, Miss Phyllis E. Kidner, Brighton centre, violoncello.

A musical play, 'Nymphidia,' libretto by H. de Koningh, music by Frederic Leeds, was presented at St. Peter's Hall, Brockley, on January 2 and 4. The work contains some twenty-five numbers, comprising solos, duets, a quintet and choruses, besides some effective dances, the music for which was selected from various sources. Mr. Leeds was at the pianoforte, and directed a small orchestra.

'The Roll of Graduates in Music (Incorporated) and Kalendar, 1909' (Musical News Office), is welcomed as a useful book of reference.

ELGAR'S SYMPHONY.

To state that Elgar's Symphony has achieved immediate and phenomenal success is the bare truth. If proof were wanting, it can be furnished by the subjoined list of past and future performances of the work. Within five weeks of its production at Manchester (on December 1), it was twice performed at New York, and the first performance on the Continent took place at Vienna on January 20. The following telegram, sent to the publishers, briefly records the latter event:

Reviews.

Ode to a nightingale. For baritone solo, chorus and orchestra. Words by Keats. Music by Dr. Ernest Walker.
Milton, thou should'st be living. For baritone solo, chorus and orchestra. Words by Wordsworth. Music by Gerald Bullivant. [Novello & Co., Ltd.]

In Keats's beautiful Ode, Dr. Walker has found a congenial medium for intimate expression, and his setting contains much that is delicate, picturesque and highly characteristic of the composer's thoughtful style. The contemplative mood of the poem is reproduced in the music, which is continuous, repetitions of the words being avoided with almost Wagnerian rigour. The interest is varied by alternation and combination of solo and chorus. Some very effective passages occur in the choral writing, which is smooth and flowing, while it is modern in texture. The work will well serve to interest and display the skill of experienced choirs. The ending, where the choir sings the words 'Fled is that music:—Do I wake or sleep?' unaccompanied, is novel and striking. Only a singer of responsive temperament will do justice to the baritone solo portions, which comprise nearly half the work. The choral parts are well within the scope of any choir with sufficient resources to give effect to the grandiose style of the work. In the orchestral score the composer employs muted strings, four horns and the usual wood-wind, with the notable exception of oboes. The time of performance is a little under twenty minutes. The solo portion is not exacting.

Memories of half a century: a record of friendships.
Compiled and edited by R. C. Lehmann, M.P. With a frontispiece.

[Smith, Elder & Co.]

An interesting volume, without a dull page from cover to cover. This can rarely be said of books of the reminiscent type. Portions of these 'Memories' have already appeared in magazines, but their publication in a more permanent form is heartily welcomed. 'No small part of this volume,' says the compiler, 'consists of letters from those who, at one time or another, corresponded with my parents.' Indeed, the epistolary extracts which are scattered throughout its twenty-two chapters, are by no means the least fascinating part of the book. The musical interest of this delightful volume covers nearly thirty pages. In these are recorded many anecdotes and letters from such well-known persons as Hallé, Chorley ('transparent, with rosy skin, and yellow hair'), Grove ('friendliness shone from his eyes and from every line of his face'), and Sullivan ('the brilliant young man'). Some of the most amusing parts of the book are associated with Chorley, the musical critic of the Athenæum. Here is an instance of his absent-mindedness:

'I told you in my last letter about the dinner we had arranged for Chorley. When we sat down, his delusion of being at his own table came on again. We were all known to him except Mr. Bockett. I saw him now and then puzzling over Bockett, unable to account for Bockett, but in his old-fashioned, chivalrous way with the greatest stranger, sending all the dishes round to Bockett, pressing things on him. "Take the champagne to Mr. Bockett, please," etc., etc. After dinner, when Wilkie [Collins] was proceeding to light his cigar, Chorley at once interfered, declaring that he never allowed smoking in his dining-room. There was, I believe, a little scene, but matters were amicably arranged. Afterwards, in the music-room, Chorley asked me how his dinner had gone off, was it good? Then he said, "I shall certainly ask Mr. Bockett again, he's ver-r-y nice." "But," said Kitty, "have you ever seen him before?" "Well," said Chorley, meditating, "no—but then" (with an important little snigger) "this little dinner of mine has been a complete —," perhaps he meant a complete surprise to himself, but he waived off the end of the sentence. Every now and then he quite recovered himself, and told us how confused he had been. During one of these intervals he went up to Wilkie and most touchingly apologised to him, but in a short time again he would ring the bell and think himself at home.'

One more extract must be given. It consists of a letter written by Sullivan to Mr. Lehmann when the latter was about to complete his seventh year. Dated January 2, 1863, it begins 'My dear Rudie,' and continues:

'I write to wish you many happy returns of the day—in other words, to tell you how I hope you may live to be a fine old man, honest, upright, and good, always doing what is right, and especially being kind and affectionate to your parents, for think what they do for you.'

'Now the Sermon is over, we will proceed to lighter matters. In the first place, I shall be delighted to avail myself of your kind invitation for to-morrow which you did me the honour to send. The prospect of Tea and Buns which you hold out is far too tempting to resist, particularly as Buns are the one great comfort of my life—in fact, the sole object, almost, for which I live. If you could throw in a few biscuits and a pickled onion in red currant jelly my happiness would, indeed, be more than I could well bear. No more of this, however, until we meet.'

'Good-bye, my dear boy.—Ever your affectionate friend,

Arthur S. Sullivan.
His + mark.'

Need anything more be said in appreciation of a volume that can be read and re-read with unalloyed pleasure?

PART-SONGS FOR FEMALE VOICES.

The flaming sun is dying; Fair Elma; Vigil; Merry Spring returning; Day, in twilight grace, is dying; Zephyr through the woodland straying; Ah, tender flowers; Were I a bird. By Ferdinand Hiller. English words by W. G. Rothery.

It is not always May. Words by Longfellow. Music by Ciro Pinsuti.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

The simplicity of Hiller's trios will recommend them, especially as it is achieved without recourse to the commonplace. They are tuneful, and the composer has for the most part been content to let the under parts move with and accompany the first soprano. 'Zephyr, through the woodland straying,' however, is distinguished by its flowing, independent part-writing. A simple melody of short range is sung by the first soprano; it is then taken up by the second soprano, while the first adds a counterpoint above it; these parts are then transferred to the second soprano and alto, while the first soprano adds a further counterpoint. An effective coda follows. Of the other trios, 'Fair Elma' and 'Merry Spring returning' deserve special mention; but all will repay the attention of ladies' choral societies in search of artistically-written music.

Pinsuti's most dainty style is exemplified in 'It is not always May,' the pianoforte accompaniment being an interesting feature. Each 'voice' in the trio has a solo, which can be sung as chorus.

Handel and his orbit. By P. Robinson.

[Sherratt & Hughes.]

The object of the author in writing this interesting volume was to discuss some points of biography and history. Discussion seldom leads to conversion on either side, but Mr. Robinson's arguments, at times subtle, are at any rate well worthy of consideration. The main discussion concerns the three works: the Stradella 'Serenata,' the Urio 'Te Deum,' and the Erba 'Magnificat.' The author would have us believe that all three were early compositions of Handel himself, so that he had a perfect right to borrow from them. With regard to the 'Magnificat,' Sir George Macfarren held the same opinion. Mr. Robinson naturally points to the vague knowledge we possess authorizing us to regard those three works as having been written by the composers mentioned. But he has compared the music with works of Handel written at Hamburg, or in Italy, showing certain passages similar to others in Stradella, Urio and Erba. They are extremely interesting, and some very curious but unequal in importance. To give one or two illustrations would not be fair to the author; only in the cumulative evidence which he brings forward lies the strength of his argument.

Mr. Robinson, in trying to remove Handel from the charge of borrowing, or as some say stealing, from the three Italian composers, reminds his hearers that similar charges concerning Kerl, Graun, and other composers have been proved up to the hilt. It is only fair to the author to note that in studying his views with regard to the 'Serenata,' &c., we must not be prejudiced and say, 'if Handel borrowed in certain directions very likely he did the same in these special cases.'

Another discussion in this book concerns the question of borrowing. Did Handel act openly or secretly? he asks, and comes to the reasonable conclusion that the borrowing was done openly. Then he has a chapter on 'Contemporary usage,' but here the proofs of what other composers did are rather forced. Nevertheless, Mr. Robinson starts an interesting question, especially as regards Bach, and one on which anyone well versed with the music of the period, or anterior thereto, could perhaps point to robberies hitherto unsuspected.

It may be recorded that Mr. Robinson has contributed articles to this journal on 'Handel's influence on Bach' (July, 1906) and 'Bach's indebtedness to Handel's Almira' (May, 1907).

PART-SONGS.

To daffodils. Words by Herrick. Music by Henry John King.

By a gentle river laid. Words by Sir Edward Sherburne (1618-1702). Music by John E. West.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Herrick's dainty and modest little lyric has probably been set to music more frequently than any other English poem, but it cannot be said that the latest addition to the list is superfluous. Mr. King's setting is elegant and musicianly, and well in keeping with the words.

Mr. West's part-song avoids the square construction by means of overlapping phrases and other devices that keep the rhythmic interest alive. It presents no technical or interpretative difficulty, but nevertheless demands highly finished singing, and is worthy the attention of the most experienced choirs.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

Age and Youth. By A. Herbert Brewer.

Allegretto. By W. Wolstenholme.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

The pianoforte transcriptions of Dr. Brewer's two orchestral pieces make effective drawing-room solos, especially 'Age,' which is considerably the easier, and within the range of skill of a moderate executant. 'Youth' is built mainly on one theme of rhythmic character, which is worked up into a series of climaxes. It culminates in an octave passage of some difficulty, but of brilliant effect if well played.

Mr. Wolstenholme's 'Allegretto' is also a pianoforte arrangement, the original composition being written for viola and pianoforte. It is melodious, well harmonized and of no great difficulty.

Obituary.

French and Belgian music suffered an irreparable loss in the death, at Brussels, on December 24, of FRANÇOIS AUGUSTE GEVAERT, director of the Brussels Conservatoire. Full of years and honours, he died of the effects of pneumonia contracted on leaving a rehearsal held at the said institution. He was buried with great pomp on December 29, the funeral service, in the parish church of Notre-Dame-du-Sablon, having been celebrated in strict accordance with very detailed and curious instructions given in his will, plain-song only being used. Born at the little Flemish village of Huyasse, near Oudenarde, on July 31, 1828, the son of a baker and destined by his father for that trade, he was allowed to join the local church choir, where he displayed such gifts in learning plain-song that his parents consented to his being sent to the Ghent Conservatoire. There he soon made his mark. In a few years he became organist at a local church, and produced compositions such as cantatas, psalms and operas. At the age of nineteen he won the first government prize for composition, the result being a long journey through Spain, Italy and Germany. Returning to Ghent in 1852, he wrote opera after opera with almost invariable success. His few failures did not cool his ardour, and when his works were admitted to the Paris Opéra Comique, his success in France was assured. Hence, in 1867, he was appointed Director of the music' at the Grand Opéra, a post which was specially re-created for him after having been left unfilled for a number of years. The Franco-German war having caused him to return to Belgium in 1871, he was appointed successor to Fétis as director of the Brussels Conservatoire, in which capacity he greatly distinguished himself as teacher and organizer. Strangely enough, he thenceforth devoted himself almost exclusively to didactic works and to the editing of old Italian, German and French music. He composed no more operas, but a few soli, choral and orchestral works from his pen proved that his creative gifts were not failing him. Amongst his best-known writings are his elaborate 'Treatise on Orchestration,' a 'History and theory of ancient music,' in addition to books on Gregorian music, &c. In fact, he was one of the rare musicians who combine with exceptional talents for composition the gifts of the deep thinker and powerful writer on the origin, development and scientific aspect of their art.

The distinguished French composer, ERNEST REYER, died on January 15 at his country-seat at Lavandon, near Toulon. Born at Marseilles on December 1, 1823, he received his first systematic musical training, at the age of twenty-five, from his aunt, Madame Farrenc. Theophil Gautier wrote for him the libretto of an ode-symphonic, entitled 'Le Selam,' which was successfully produced in 1850. A number of operas and ballets followed, amongst the former being 'Maître Wolfram,' and 'La Statue,' one of his best works. In 1866 he became musical critic of the Journal des Débats, a post he held for about thirty years. He had before then declared himself an ardent champion of Wagner's music, and his articles, not unworthy of his predecessor Berlioz as regards style and esprit, provided highly interesting reading. His best work is no doubt 'Sigurd,' at which he worked for about twenty years. Produced at Brussels with great success on January 7, 1884, it was performed at Covent Garden on July 15 following. The Brussels Théâtre de la Monnaie was also the first to produce his 'Salammbô,' in 1890. Reyer was a member of the Institute of France and Grand-croix of the Legion of Honour, the most exalted form of the Order, a distinction conferred upon only a very few civilians.

On the last day of 1908 died, we regret to record, a true friend of Sunday School music—JONATHAN BARNARD, in his seventy-eighth year. In 1871, with the late Luther Hinton, he founded that flourishing organization, the London Sunday School Choir. The successful management of thirty-six annual festivals at the Crystal Palace, thirty-three concerts at the Royal Albert Hall, and other large gatherings at the Alexandra Palace, must be placed to his credit and organizing zeal. A true lover of music, he threw himself whole-heartedly into the work which was the joy of his life: and his Christian spirit and genial personality endeared him to all with whom he came into contact.

The death of Mr. JOSEPH CHALK is referred to on p. 99.

A PARISIAN NOVELTY.

An important novelty, as far as Paris is concerned, was performed at the Colonne concert of December 27, viz., M. Gabriel Pierné's 'Les enfants à Bethléem,' a mystery in two parts, for soli—one of them spoken—chorus of children and orchestra. It deals with a beautiful legend of the children who 'watched their flocks by night' being hailed by the voice of the star telling them that 'Jesus, the son of Mary, is born in a stable.' The affrighted little shepherds and shepherdesses follow the star to Bethlehem, meeting three Holy Kings on the way, and looking with wonder and awe at the camels, the monkeys and elephants in their train. In the stable the Virgin lulls her Babe to sleep, the ox and ass indulge in 'sweet dialoguing,' and the children adore the Christ-Child. This naive and charming legend has been set to melodious and touching music that could not fail to please. The composer conducted, and the performance was perfect.

CHAMBER MUSIC IN THE THEATRE.

A praiseworthy effort to raise the standard of instrumental music in theatres should be recorded. Mr. Stanley Hawley, having secured the assistance of Messrs. Cathie, Fellowes, Tertis, and Renard, began last month the performance of movements from the best quartets and pianoforte quintets at the Kingsway Theatre in place of the usual overture and entr'actes. The experiment has been most successful, the audience proving attentive and appreciative, added to which the Kingsway Quartet, as the party styles itself, from playing the best music together nightly has acquired a perfection of ensemble that should make it very acceptable in the concert room. Madame Lena Ashwell, the lessee of the theatre, who studied at the Royal Academy of Music, warmly supports Mr. Hawley's efforts.

MUSIC IN RHYTHM,
AS EXEMPLIFIED BY THE TIMPANI.

Mr. Gordon Cleather read an interesting paper on 'Music in rhythm, as exemplified by the timpani,' at the meeting of the Musical Association on January 19. The President, Dr. W. H. Cummings, was in the chair.

It was scarcely necessary, said the lecturer, to explain that rhythm was the basis of all music, as it was the earliest to manifest itself, hence the importance of the subject. To the general public the part of the player on the drums was looked on mainly as calling for little more than vigorous energy, whereas the musician recognizes that it calls for susceptibilities of the highest order, and that consequently the ideal performer is but seldom met with, and when found is valued in proportion by the conductor. In proof of this, Dr. Richter, when he first visited this country, brought his own drummer with him, while Sir August Manns used to maintain that Mr. J. A. Smith, who filled that post at the Crystal Palace, was the finest musician in the orchestra. It must be remembered that an accurate sense of pitch is one of the first requirements, for frequently an alteration in the tuning has to be made with great rapidity during the course of a movement.

Explaining the construction of the kettle-drum, Mr. Cleather demonstrated the function which the body of the drum exercises in reinforcing the tone. On beating the head when removed, a dead and unmusical sound resulted; but when replaced, a musical tone was at once produced, capable of the softest murmur or of the most vigorous concussion. It was formerly the practice to beat the drums at the centre of the head, but a much finer tone was obtained by applying the blow at a point nearer the circumference. A pair of drums was the invariable complement, which were tuned to the tonic and the fourth below. Now, however, composers treated the instrument with greater freedom, both in number and in variety of tuning, so that three or even four drums were by no means unusual, thus increasing the melodic power of the instrument. Mr. Cleather proceeded to speak of the composers who had shown the greatest skill in availing themselves of these resources, illustrating his remarks by interesting examples, in which he was ably assisted on the pianoforte by Mrs. Stanfield Prior. An extract from Brahms's 'Requiem' was specially noticeable.

A short discussion followed, in which the chairman and Dr. Prout joined, the latter bringing forward several interesting cases of early attempts at greater freedom of practice. It was generally supposed that Beethoven was the first to use two drums simultaneously, but he had found such a passage in one of Martini's operas, i.e., at the end of the 18th century; while three drums had been used by Rossini, notably in his 'Stabat Mater,' where, however, the part for the third drum was in modern scores given to the contrabasso!

BRIGHTON MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

It was a happy idea on the part of the Brighton Corporation to persuade the newly-constituted Municipal Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Joseph Sainton, and the old-established Brighton Sacred Harmonic Society, conducted by Mr. Robert Taylor, to join hands in a grand musical festival. The project attained its realisation on January 13, 14, 15 and 16, in the Dome. Three choral and two orchestral concerts were given, in the course of which works by five English composers were presented. All the latter took part as conductors of their own music, the other portions of the programme being carried out under the guidance of Mr. Joseph Sainton and Mr. Robert Taylor.

The artistic and financial success of the festival was in every respect foreshadowed in the opening performance, on January 13, of 'The Dream of Gerontius.' A high standard was shown in the choral singing and orchestral playing, while a crowded hall showed that the public support was greater than the most sanguine had anticipated. As a matter of fact, hundreds of would-be listeners were turned away. This eagerness doubtless arose largely out of curiosity to hear a great work that was new to Brighton. If the seaside metropolis has hitherto shown a lack of interest in Sir Edward Elgar and his works, it has now made ample amends in the course of the festival. The composer conducted 'The Dream of Gerontius' in person, and secured an intimate interpretation, in which he received sympathetic aid from the soloists, Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. John Coates and Mr. William Higley. Considering that chorus, orchestra and conductor had never before been associated together, the performance on the whole showed surprising unanimity.

Although the second performance, on Thursday evening, was styled a Wagner concert, by far the most important feature was the production with full orchestra of Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Bon-bon Suite' for baritone solo, chorus and orchestra, given under the direction of the composer. It was clear that all concerned had worked con amore to do justice to the music and to make the occasion a memorable one. The bright, melodious strains had evidently caught the fancy of the Brighton choralists, and there is no doubt that they suited the palate of the audience, who showed a lively appreciation of each number. It was fortunate that the music was easy to grasp and capable of standing on its absolute merits, for there was no printed text of the words in the programme, the disadvantage of this regrettable omission being only partly mitigated by analytical notes.

The Suite consists of settings of six unconnected poems of imaginative character by Thomas Moore. Both in form and in style these six pieces, each of which is suitable for separate performance, supply a want constantly felt by choral societies in search of artistic music that is both light in character and worthy of their abilities. In the orchestral accompaniment that was used at Brighton, Mr. Coleridge-Taylor has made plentiful use of the vivid tonal effects of modern scoring, probably having a festival performance in view. No doubt he will now see the necessity of so lightening the score as to bring it within the scope of a small orchestra, and therefore facilitate the performance of the work by small choral societies, with whom it is likely to attain popularity. As it is, in two of the numbers only the instruments of a small orchestra are employed. The first of these, 'To Rosa,' contains some of the most beautiful music in the Suite; it is built up mainly on a suave, flowing melody given out by the soloist and echoed, with skilful harmonic treatment, by the choir. The second, 'Love and Hymen,' is a fanciful semi-humorous duet between soprano and contralto. One number, 'The watchman,' is sung unaccompanied, the only instrument used being a bell to represent the striking of the hours. The Suite is distinguished throughout by its masterly choral writing, constant harmonic interest, and, above all, melodiousness. The baritone solo portions require a singer who can be by turns dramatic, lyrical and humorous. On the present occasion Mr. Julien Henry ably fulfilled these conditions.

The Wagner programme consisted of two separate songs, the third act of 'Lohengrin' and the whole gamut of popular excerpts from 'Tannhäuser.' There was no clear reason why the later works should have been thus neglected; it seems a special pity that, with Mr. John Coates ready at hand, 'Die Meistersinger' was not drawn upon. It can hardly be that the festival authorities judge it prudent to educate their audience by gradual stages to a proper appreciation of Wagner, seeing that they offer Elgar's Symphony and other advanced modern works for the Brighton public to digest. However, no one could complain that the performance of Act III. of 'Lohengrin' lacked interest; the chief honours were carried off by Miss Agnes Nicholls (Elsa), and Mr. Coates (Lohengrin), who were unsparing in the use of their superb vocal and dramatic powers. Mr. William Higley sang finely as King Henry, and Miss Gertrude Lonsdale coped ably with the high-pitched interjections of Ortrud. The choral portions found the choir in one of their few weak moments. The orchestra, ably directed by Mr. Joseph Sainton, gave efficient support to the vocalists, and were afterwards heard in an interpretation of the overture to 'Tannhäuser' that lacked nothing in spirit. Elizabeth's Greeting and Prayer were sung by Miss Agnes Nicholls, 'O star of eve' by Mr. Higley, and the chorus 'Hail, bright abode,' made an imposing conclusion.

On the third night the mettle of the choir was put to a true test in Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' and while it cannot be said that their performance was a magnificent one, it is fair to add that they came through the ordeal in a manner deserving of the highest praise. The distinguishing merits of their singing—precision, solidity, good balance and sweet musical tone—were prominent. If they could add to these rich resonance and dramatic force, the effect of many passages calling for a declamatory style—such, for instance, as that in which the choir echoes the Queen's denunciations of Elijah—could be made more telling. But in their ability to sing in broad outline and to build up an impressive climax, the Brighton choir showed undoubted proficiency in a high accomplishment. The chorus 'Be not afraid' was sung in a style worthy of the music, and the lyrical feeling in 'He, watching over Israel' and the diminuendo at the end of 'Blessed are the men,' are among the many points of this performance that reflect the greatest credit on the singers and Mr. Robert Taylor, the able conductor of the Brighton Sacred Harmonic Society. The thorough sympathy between choir and conductor largely contributed to their success. The principal soloists were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Gertrude Lonsdale, Mr. Webster Millar and Mr. Watkin Mills. They were joined in the double quartet by Miss Florence Kirkham, Mrs. Warne, Mr. Robinson and Mr. W. T. Ashby.

On the concluding day (Saturday, January 16) two instrumental concerts were given. The afternoon programme included:

And in the evening the following were played:

|                                      |              |
|--------------------------------------|--------------|
| Symphony No. 6 . . . . .             | Tchaikovsky. |
| Welsh Rhapsody . . . . .             | German.      |
| Violin Concerto in D minor . . . . . | Paganini.    |

MR. PERCY FROSTICK.

|                                       |              |
|---------------------------------------|--------------|
| Overture solennelle, '1812' . . . . . | Tchaikovsky. |

It was courageous on the part of the committee to include in the programme Elgar's Symphony, a work which taxes the ability of our finest orchestras, and it is gratifying to be able to commend their enterprise on its results. Considering the size and constitution of the Brighton Municipal Orchestra, their performance was remarkably efficient, although of course it could hardly be described as masterly. But for a tendency to adopt occasionally a faster tempo than seemed quite practicable in the first two movements, Mr. Sinton showed a thorough acquaintance with the score and the composer's aims; and in his interpretation of the last two movements the nobility and grandeur of the work found full expression. The occasion was worthy of note as demonstrating conclusively that the Symphony is not entirely dependent for adequate performance upon our best-equipped orchestras. The audience were somewhat cold to the first movement, but showed after the third and last movements that the message had reached them.

Both Sir Alexander Mackenzie and Sir Charles Stanford were present to conduct their works in the afternoon, and secured orchestral playing of the highest class. The freshness, musicianship and rhythmic and melodic interest of their works appealed to players and listeners alike. The suite 'Attila' is drawn from incidental music written by Sir Charles Stanford for the play produced at the Adelphi Theatre.

Liapounow's Pianoforte concerto was heard on this occasion for the first time in England. It suffered to some extent from the necessity of placing the pianoforte in the midst of the orchestra, which caused many delicate solo passages to be lost in the heavy sea of accompaniment. The work, which is cast in one movement, is modern in character, and although it received unexceptionable treatment in Mr. Newstead's hands, it did not entirely justify its inclusion on an important occasion. The vocalists at the afternoon concert were Miss Alys Bateman and Mr. W. A. Peterkin. In the evening the singers were Madame Ella Russell and Mr. Watkin Mills. Mr. Edward German conducted his Welsh Rhapsody, and Mr. Sinton and his orchestra brought a week of strenuous labour to a close with creditable performances of Tchaikovsky's Symphony and Overture.

It is necessary to say a word about the high pitch of the organ. The Corporation will do well to consider an immediate alteration, which will bring Brighton into line with other musical centres. The inconvenience to singers and players of the present pitch is difficult to assess, but it must be considerable.

It remains to congratulate the festival committee on the success of their first venture with regard both to the standard of performance and to the ready support of the public. The suggestion that musical competitions should be organized as an additional means of stimulating local resources to a high standard of execution is worthy the attention of the authorities. It has been shown in other parts of the country how competitions not only improve musical performance to a marvellous degree, but also educate the public taste to a proper standard of appreciation.

INCORPORATED SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS.

London was the meeting-place of the twenty-fourth annual Conference, held December 29, 1908, to January 1, 1909, the headquarters being the Hotel Great Central.

After attending, on Tuesday morning, December 29, a special service at St. Stephen's Church, Walbrook, the members received a cordial welcome from the Lord Mayor, Master of the Musicians' Company, at the Mansion House. To this succeeded the presentation of two reports—of the Society itself, read by Professor Prout, and of the Orphanage, read by Dr. Cummings. Sir Frederick Bridge then addressed the audience on 'The musical outlook.' In the evening the annual banquet was held at the Great Central Hotel, Sir Frederick Bridge in the chair, the Lord Mayor and Lord Faber being among the chief guests.

On the following morning (Wednesday), Professor Niecks read a paper on 'Musical terminology, considered historically, theoretically, practically, and remedially.' Needless to say, the learned professor discoursed upon the subject with his well-known erudite thoroughness. Mr. Swift-Paine Johnston (Assistant-Commissioner of the Intermediate Education Board in Ireland) concluded the session with a paper on 'Teachers and the study of psychology.' On Thursday, Dr. H. H. Hulbert, lecturer on voice and health to the University of London, contributed a paper on 'The scientific basis of vocal culture,' a subject upon which he is a recognized authority. Previous to this the chairman, Mr. S. Midgley, of Bradford, set forth 'a few thoughts' on providing free concerts for the people in the largest cities. He had two schemes in his mind, (1) chamber concerts that would cost £6,000 per annum, and (2) to endow twenty orchestras with the sum of £1,000,000, whereby a full score of cities could have a series of ten or twelve free orchestral concerts each season. To bring these two schemes into practical operation, Mr. Midgley said that £1,200,000 was needed—'less than the cost of a single ironclad.'

The concluding session of the Conference (on New Year's day) was devoted entirely to business matters connected with the Society. Next year's meeting will be held at Folkestone.

The orchestral concert at Queen's Hall, on December 31, is specially noticed below. At other concerts, held at the Hotel Great Central, the following compositions were included in the programmes: String quartet in C minor (Op. 60), by Dr. Esposito, which gained the prize of the Reale Accademia Filarmonica, Bologna, 1908; Pianoforte quintet in D, by Mr. William Wolstenholme; String quartet in B minor (Op. 24), by Mr. J. C. Ames; and Boyce's 'Ode to Charity,' for chorus and orchestra, performed under the direction of Dr. W. H. Cummings.

With the exception of tickets for the orchestral concert and an invitation to the banquet (received on the morning of the day), we were not favoured, as in former years, with any programme of the proceedings, nor any invitation to attend the various meetings of the Conference.

CONCERT OF ENGLISH MUSIC.

One of the best features of the Conference was the orchestral concert, the programme for which is selected from the compositions of young or comparatively little-known English composers. The encouragement thus extended where it is sorely needed, entitles the Society to praise and gratitude. The fact that the meetings this year were held in London enabled the committee to enjoy the great advantages of the services of seventy members of the London Symphony Orchestra, and in Mr. Allen Gill they secured a conductor who brought experience, skill and enthusiasm to his task. The programme was as follows :

|                                                |                    |
|------------------------------------------------|--------------------|
| Comedy Overture                                | H. E. Geehl.       |
| Orchestral Suite—'The miracle of the roses'    | Dr. James Lyon.    |
| Tone-picture—'In English seas'                 | J. Weston Nicholl. |
| Scena, for tenor solo and orchestra—'To music' | Dr. G. P. Allen.   |
| Symphonic poem—'Sir Galahad'                   | J. C. Ames.        |
| Coronach                                       | J. B. McEwen.      |

If it cannot be said that any of the foregoing pieces were of such striking power as to make the occasion memorable, it can be claimed that all of the composers had something to say, and that they displayed the necessary knowledge of orchestral technique to say it more or less clearly.

In these times when we are besought to turn our attention to folk-songs and their spirit in order to found a national art, it was significant that none of the works performed on this occasion betrayed any such influence.

Mr. Geehl's 'Comedy Overture' appropriately opened the concert. It is a bright, festive work, lucidly orchestrated and with melodious if not distinguished themes. The composer has a decided gift which should enable him to make his way in light opera—if that field of labour is worth cultivation.

Dr. Lyon's Suite is cast in a serious mould. It was suggested by Southey's poem bearing the title adopted for the Suite. The composer immediately secures a romantic atmosphere by a perhaps rather too extended employment of the violas. The effort to secure colour is constant, and the result is interesting even though the themes are not always distinctive. But the work shows mastery, and it will add to the reputation of the composer.

Mr. J. Weston Nicholl's Tone-picture is a vividly painted work. It would seem that English seas are at times a pandemonium of boisterousness. Some of Mr. Nicholl's orchestral effects suggest a battle and big guns. But with all its occasional overloading of percussion and brass, power and imagination are displayed. The tranquil parts were, to us at least, most acceptable as music.

Dr. G. P. Allen's Scena was well sung by Mr. Walter Hyde, although he was somewhat indisposed. The music is pleasing, but it is scarcely strong and significant enough for the words.

The most important item was the Symphonic Poem composed by Mr. J. C. Ames. The powerful lines of Tennyson are the poetic basis. There is much in Mr. Ames's music that is picturesque and appropriate to the various moods of the poem. The opening sections did not impress, but as the music progressed it created a feeling of breadth and considerable power. Mr. Ames undoubtedly has invention and skill to paint on a large canvas.

The last piece played was to us one of the most interesting and beautiful of the whole set. It was evident that Mr. McEwen had brought an elegant and delicate fancy to bear upon his subject. There was always something tender or poignant or forceful to attract the attention, and the work as a whole seemed to be organic. We should very much like to hear the piece again, and we trust it will soon find a place in some London concert scheme.

The audience was large and, as might be expected, very sympathetic. It is not often that such an audience of trained listeners is gathered in a concert room.

LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL: CONFERENCE ON VOCAL CULTURE.

The Education Committee of the London County Council show laudable zeal for the improvement of their thousands of school teachers. Amongst the various schemes organized for this purpose, the arrangement for a set of Conferences during the Christmas vacation must be counted as of great importance. At these Conferences many topics of vital interest to teachers were discussed, and it is gratifying to record that the meeting devoted to the consideration of voice-culture and school singing was one of the most largely attended, there being present between five and six hundred teachers. Evidence of the interest awakened in school music matters was afforded by the fact that Sir Walter Parratt presided, and that three well-known experts—Dr. Hulbert, Dr. McNaught, and Dr. Walford Davies—were willing to place freely before the teachers their ideas and suggestions.

Sir Walter Parratt, in opening the Conference, said that the effect of music was incalculable. Few understood it, but many misunderstood it. Music was not always beneficial: it could be harmful. Some of the hymn-tunes we heard were not calculated to serve anybody. It was an advantage that English people had been brought up on Handel, because his music was good for the voice. The modern composer was less considerate, and required the voice to do exceedingly ragged things. The worst thing a teacher could do was to attempt to make people acquainted with the mechanism of the voice. Choral societies should sing voice exercises, although some masters might not like them. He once introduced some at the practices of a provincial society, and a great many nice, middle-aged members immediately left. Children should not be asked to sing below B or B flat. As a rule, their voices were not taken up high enough. Some people advocated only unison singing in schools. He was in violent disagreement with that idea. He thought it a disgrace. Rounds ought to be the foundation of part-singing. For that, nobody could find a better book than Stainer's, although some of his rounds went too low.

Dr. H. H. Hulbert addressed his remarks chiefly to the treatment of the adult voice for the purpose of health, good tone and articulation. By tone he meant the musical result of the perfect working of the vocal mechanism, independent of coloration and modulation used to express sentiment. In order to acquire a musical voice the student must undergo a treatment that would produce a perfect condition of health. Tone in health meant perfect balance in the action of the mental, physical and vital organs. Deep breathing, with lateral-costal expansion, was recommended. A well-trained teacher was an object-lesson in self-control. It was this acquisition of self-control that prevented wear-and-tear that sooner or later broke down the health of the hard-working public speaker.

Dr. W. G. McNaught dealt with the class-singing problems of the school teaching. From the point of view of the class, vocal culture for fine tone had to be considered in relation to other musical subjects. It was possible to hope for too much from such culture. After all, free natural expression was a primary aim, and it must be confessed that sometimes high vocal culture did not necessarily lead to expression. In the case of boys in particular, they must beware of substituting characterless flaccidity for sincere and natural soul-outpouring. They were told that school-music teaching had not borne fruit, and was not traceable in the adult life of the nation. That was because so many millions of children left school at the age of twelve. But all the same, the admitted and almost phenomenal progress in music, witnessed in the country during the last twenty or thirty years, coincided with the period during which millions of children left the schools. It could hardly be that the progress made was in spite of the alleged failure of school-singing. The critics expected too much by way of individual attainment from collective class-singing. A school-teacher was expected to train voices, secure clear enunciation, teach sight-singing so as to secure individual attainment, get up national and folk-songs and part-songs, all in less than an hour a week. Class-singing must make the individual the objective. Rhythm was a subject much neglected. It was supposed to take care of itself if time-notation were taught. Flat singing was a difficulty. Even voice-culture did not always get rid of the tendency. It was a brain failure or brain indolence. As to unison singing, he recognised the value of the song that could be carried away and reproduced at will, but there were other depths of the soul that could be plumbed by the three-part chord. It would be a disaster if part-singing were driven from the schools.

Dr. H. Walford Davies dealt with the general advantages of musical training and its influence on character. As to flat singing, he thought that if the command 'ears right' went forth as peremptorily and often as the command 'eyes right' was given, there would be more successful endeavour to avoid the sin of flat singing. Music had no face-value compared with many other subjects, as, say, arithmetic. But even arithmetic had its higher aspects that led to thoughts of infinity, and this higher value was inherent in music. There were in music four elements: skill, enjoyment, design, and emotion.

If we looked at these qualities carefully, could anyone say that it was not necessary to teach our children an art which combined and called out a well-regulated and well-ordered appreciation of four such fundamental points? Then music had a fifth and supreme qualification in its appeal to that divinest gift of a child, its imagination.

In the discussion that followed, Sir Walter Parratt gave some interesting personal experiences of Mr. Gladstone's speaking voice. As to flatness, the Church of England was the worst sinner, because churches would insist on congregations intoning the Confession and the Creed. Choristers had to work very hard, whereas school children sang for pleasure. When he heard a blackbird or thrush singing, he thought 'You would not sing like that if you had been trained.'

Mr. R. A. White, of the Goldsmiths' Training College, Mr. Maskell Hardy, and Mr. Haslett spoke. Mr. George Alexander, the well-known actor, who is a member of the L.C.C., moved the vote of thanks. In the course of an interesting speech he related that when he once asked Sir Arthur Sullivan to write some music for a play, he replied, 'My dear Alexander, the theatre is not the place for the musician. When the curtain is up the music interrupts the actor, and when it is down the music interrupts the audience.'

The full text of the addresses and a report of the discussion appear in the February issue of The School Music Review.

ROYAL OPERA.

An important series of opera in English was commenced at Covent Garden on January 16. The prospectus comprised three cycles of the 'Ring,' three performances of 'The Mastersingers,' under Dr. Richter, Puccini's 'Madame Butterfly,' Gounod's 'Faust,' and the production of the new English opera, 'The Angelus,' by E. W. Naylor, which gained the prize offered last year by Messrs. Ricordi. An English chorus of 100 voices was engaged, and the orchestra was the same as in the summer season.

Particular interest attached to the performances of the 'Ring,' owing to the appearance of several newcomers in principal parts. The most important of these was Mrs. Saltzmann-Stevens, a native of Bloomington, Illinois, U.S.A., who, after obtaining celebrity in Chicago as a singer in a church choir, studied in Paris and Munich. She made her first appearance on the operatic stage at Covent Garden on January 18 as Brünnhilde in 'The Valkyrie,' and in this and the remaining sections of the 'Ring,' not only sang with beauty of voice but acted with such grace and sincerity as proved her to be a gifted artist. On the same evening another American lady, Mrs. Frease Green, made her début on the operatic stage as Sieglinde, and by her sympathetic voice and style created a most favourable impression. Concerning the remainder of the cast of the 'Ring,' Mr. Walter Hyde gave an excellent reading of Loge, the fire-god, and of Siegmund; Madame Gleeson-White appeared as Fricka, Madame Edna Thornton as Erda, Mr. Clarence Whitehill as Wotan, Mr. Hans Bechstein as Mime, Mr. Robert Radford as Fasolt and Hunding, and Messrs. Thomas Meux, Francis Harford, Charles Knowles and Maurice D'Oisly, respectively as Alberich, Fafner, Donner and Froh. The ladies appearing as Valkyries were Madames Caroline Hatchard, Edith Evans, Alexander, Maria Yelland, Alice Prowse, Edith Clegg, Galdys Roberts and Dilys Jones. The impersonations of all the principal artists were marked by beauty of vocal tone and dramatic intelligence, combined with a breaking away from stereotyped tradition that imparted considerable freshness to the performances. The orchestral playing was a constant source of enjoyment.

The performance of 'Madame Butterfly,' on January 21, was remarkable for the number of new appearances. Madame Florence Easton made her début at Covent Garden in the name-part, and proved herself to be an artist of great attainments, possessing a powerful and brilliant soprano voice and dramatic intuition. A native of Middlesbrough, she studied at the Royal Academy of Music and in Paris, is an excellent pianist, and has an extraordinary musical memory. Mr. Francis MacLennan gave a convincing personation of Pinkerton, and Miss Edith Clegg sang and acted most sympathetically as Suzuki. Mr. Byndon-Ayres was duly energetic as the marriage-broker Goro, Mr. Frederic Austin appeared as Sharpless, Miss Hatchard as Kate Pinkerton, and the cast also included Messrs. Albert Garcia, Charles Knowles and Francis Harford. Mr. Percy Pitt conducted.

The production of Dr. E. W. Naylor's opera 'The Angelus,' first announced for January 23, was postponed to a date too late for notice in the present issue.

London Concerts.

THE 'MESSIAH' ON NEW YEAR'S DAY.

Two noteworthy interpretations of Handel's 'Messiah,' on New Year's Day, were given respectively at the Albert Hall and Queen's Hall. The performance in the former building has become well nigh a religious observance in connection with the opening of the year, and it attracted an enormous audience on this occasion. The choruses were finely sung under the direction of Sir Frederick Bridge, the renderings indicating intimate knowledge of the music, combined with an affectionate interest in the work. The efforts of the soprano soloist, Madame Mary Conly, were somewhat overshadowed by those of the contralto, Madame Clara Butt; both ladies, however, sang with devotional earnestness. Mr. Charles Saunders and Mr. Watkin Mills efficiently completed the quartet.

Special interest attached to the rendering of the oratorio at Queen's Hall, owing to the choral portion being sung by the Sheffield Musical Union, who recently toured in Canada with such remarkable success. The tone of the choir was beautifully rich and finely balanced, and the phrasing and articulation delightfully clear. The soloists were Miss Perceval Allen, Miss Maude Wright, and Messrs. Gervase Elwes and Frederic Austin. The orchestral portion was effectively played by the Queen's Hall Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Henry J. Wood, and Mr. Frederick B. Kiddle presided at the great organ.

QUEEN'S HALL ORCHESTRA.

The great interest felt in Sir Edward Elgar's Symphony was shown by the overwhelming attendance at the special concert given on New Year's Day by Mr. Wood's orchestra. The fact that the work was to be conducted by the composer was an additional attraction. The Symphony, it may be said, made its now customary effect. The first movement excites interest rather than pronounced enthusiasm, the Allegro molto, which was taken at a great pace, dazzles with its brilliancy and wealth of ideas, and the Adagio, into which it melts, soothes and solaces by its beauty of melody and charm of treatment. The last movement was exceedingly well played and made a deep impression. The other items of the concert were Tchaikovsky's 'Casse Noisette' and '1812 Overture,' and the same composer's Violin concerto was charmingly played by Miss Marie Hall.

At the concert given by this Orchestra on January 7, the whole programme was selected from Sir Edward Elgar's compositions, and the composer again conducted his Symphony. A fine performance of 'Cockaigne' was given under Mr. Wood's direction. Madame Clara Butt sang the 'Sea Pictures,' and the other items were three 'Bavarian Dances' and the 'Pomp and Circumstance' march No. 4, in G.

Another huge audience was attracted to Queen's Hall on January 16, doubtless by reason of the Elgar Symphony, conducted by the composer, being in the programme. Next to this, the most important feature of the concert was the beautiful playing of Miss Kathleen Parlow, the Canadian violinist, in Mendelssohn's concerto. This clever young artist's interpretation was both refined and vigorous, her phrasing being an attribute worthy of special mention. With the exception of the Symphony, the concert was conducted by Mr. Wood.

Mr. Munro Davison's Choral Society gave a free recital of Parts 1 and 2 and the rarely-heard Part 4 of Bach's 'Christmas Oratorio,' at the Northern Polytechnic, on Sunday evening, January 10, when an audience of eight hundred persons listened in impressive silence to the beautiful strains of the great Cantor. Misses Maud Hardy, Cissy Weiss and Edith Nutter, Messrs. Louis Godfrey and William Forington were the soloists, and Mr. Herbert Hodge was at the organ. The first concert of the Society took place at the same Hall on January 21, with Miss Mackenzie's cantata 'The Bride' was given, with Miss Margaret Layton and Mr. Gwilym Richards as soloists. The Cathie String Quartet contributed works by Glazounoff and Dvorák, and Mr. Philip Cathie performed Goldmark's Violin concerto in A minor. Mr. Munro Davison conducted on both these occasions.

The Willesden Green and Cricklewood Choral Society, conducted by Mr. F. W. Belchamber, gave a concert at the Hampstead Conservatoire on January 21, when they performed Handel's 'Acis and Galatea' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Bon-Bon Suite.' The choir and string orchestra (led by Mr. H. R. Storr), with Dr. Davan Wetton at the organ, numbered one hundred and twenty performers, and the solo vocalists were Miss Kate Cherry, Mr. Herbert Emlyn, Mr. Percy Watson and Mr. Bantock Pierpoint, the last-named artist singing the solo music in Coleridge-Taylor's Suite.

The Central London Choral and Orchestral Society performed 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast' and a choral fantasia on Gounod's 'Faust' at St. James's Hall, on January 21, under the direction of Mr. David J. Thomas. The orchestra played Mendelssohn's 'Hebrides' overture and Wedding March, and Suppé's 'Morning, noon, and night.'

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

Vienna, January 15.

We had first performances of two operas within one week. On January 12, Umberto Giordano's music-drama 'André Chénier' was given at the Volksoper, and met with considerable success, which however does not seem likely to continue. It is true that the cleverly compiled libretto deals with an interesting subject of the time of the French Revolution, and it manages to hold the attention of the audience throughout; but the music is conceived in what has already become a stereotyped manner, in which all psychological nuances are illustrated by the loquacious orchestra, and the voice is allowed to accompany in dry recitative. This method is employed in an even more thoroughgoing fashion in the other novelty, 'Le chemineau' (The Vagabond), by Xavier Leroux, which was heard yesterday at the Court Opera, and had to suffer a reception that could not possibly be mistaken. Neither the talent of our leading baritone, Herr Demuth, who put his whole heart and soul into his interpretation of the title-rôle, nor the splendid mounting of the work, were able to dispel the bad humour of the audience for any length of time. The truth is, that the public are getting heartily sick of these ultra-modern music-dramas, with their nerve-tickling stage effects and cunning tone-colour. We are longing for an opera in which the human voice is not degraded to the position of a prattling or shouting idiom, but enters into its kingdom as the most beautiful and soulful of all sounding instruments, such as it always has been and will be.

Better luck attended sundry novelties performed in our concert-rooms. Amongst them special mention must be made of a Symphony in B flat by the Russian composer, Glazounoff, played by the Philharmonic Orchestra for the first time in Vienna. The symphony is a sound and serious work of art, containing much that is new without destroying the form or forsaking the foundation of intelligible harmony. Altogether these blows through the products of the modern Russian composers a breath of health and unspent strength; though they have learned much from the best German masters, they yet retain their national idiosyncrasies.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Midland Institute School of Music gave their terminal concert in the large Lecture Theatre on December 13, under the direction of the principal, Mr. Granville Bantock. The executive were the Midland Institute Orchestra, augmented by teachers of the various instrumental departments, and led by Mr. Max Mossel. Fine performances were realised of Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony and Mr. Bantock's orchestral variations on Bach's cantata 'Wachet auf,' scored for strings and horns, the latter representing the choral portion. Mr. Max Mossel gave a fine reading of Beethoven's Violin concerto, which evoked great enthusiasm.

A popular Saturday night concert was given at the Town Hall on December 19 by the Birmingham Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Arthur W. Payne, of the Llandudno Pavilion Concerts. Sullivan's overture 'Di Ballo,' originally written for our musical festival of 1870, proved a pleasing feature, and the programme also included Delibes's Suite de ballet 'Sylvia' and Lalo's 'Norwegian Rhapsody.' The vocalist was the young Manchester contralto, Miss Lucy Nuttall, the possessor of a remarkably sonorous voice for one so young. Miss Lucy Rosenberg, a promising local soprano, gave a successful vocal recital in the Masonic Hall on December 17, assisted by Mr. Willy Lehmann, violoncellist.

The Birmingham Amateur Opera Society once more supplied the musical entertainment in connection with the annual conversation of the Midland Institute, and gave in the large lecture theatre a performance of Gilbert and Sullivan's 'Patience,' on January 11 and consecutive nights, under their new conductor, Mr. Franklyn Mountford, who has succeeded the late Mr. E. W. Priestley in that capacity. The chief feature of the representation was the charming acting and singing of Mrs. C. O. Whitfield as 'Patience.' Miss Clara Walker, Mr. R. P. Taunton and Mr. H. H. Monckton were also in the cast.

The third Harrison concert of the current series took place in the Town Hall on January 18. The programme was of a miscellaneous character, the artists being Miss Amy Castles, Madame Kirkby Lunn, Mr. John McCormack, Mr. Dalton Baker, the Misses Ethel and Mary Williams (vocalists), Miss Vivien Chartres (violin), Miss Edie Marr (pianoforte) and Mr. F. A. Sewell (accompanist).

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The ladies' night of the Bristol Madrigal Society on January 14 was as enjoyable as any of its predecessors in respect of the compositions in the programme, and there was a large audience in the Victoria Room. The first portion of the scheme consisted of the pieces which a section of the choir gave before the King and Queen on board the 'Victoria and Albert' yacht in July last, when His Majesty came to Avonmouth to open the Royal Edward Dock. Among these pieces was 'A shepherd in a glade,' by Mr. Cyril B. Rootham, which carried off the prize offered by The Musical Times in 1904. Naturally the members of the Society are proud of the fact that Pearsall was once one of themselves, and on this occasion no fewer than five of his compositions were given, viz., 'Great God of love,' 'Who shall have my lady fair?' 'Allen-a-dale,' 'I saw lovely Phillis,' and 'In dulci jubilo.' The old madrigals were well represented by Wilbye's 'Ladye, when I behold,' 'Sweet honeysucking bees' and 'Flora gave me,' Richard Edwards's 'In going to my lonely bed,' and Thomas Morley's 'Sing we and chaunt it.' A part-song which possesses a special interest for the Society was 'Fairest daughter of the day,' written by Samuel Reay for the jubilee of the Society in 1887, and dedicated to Mr. Edward A. Harvey, then the hon. secretary, but now the president. Sir Charles Stanford's 'The fairies,' a dainty composition which had only been given by the Windsor Madrigal Society, was so enthusiastically received that it had to be repeated. The strength of the choir was a hundred and eleven voices, and, under the direction of Mr. D. W. Rootham, a well-arranged programme was adequately interpreted. Regret was expressed at the absence of the president through ill-health. His place was taken by Mr. John Barrett, one of the vice-presidents.

On January 16, the West Bristol Choral Society gave their annual concert at the Victoria Rooms under the direction of Mr. Charles Read, organist of St. Alban's Church, Redland. Romberg's 'Lay of the Bell' and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' were creditably performed, the choir and band numbering one hundred performers. The soloists were Miss Gertrude Taylor, Mrs. C. Read, Madame Rosa Mayo, Mr. A. Lloyd Williams, Mr. G. A. Noble, and Mr. H. S. Pilgrim. Mr. J. W. Duys (Bath) was leader of the band.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At the sixth of Messrs. Paterson's Orchestral Concerts, given in the McEwan Hall on December 21, Mr. Fritz Steinbach conducted fine performances of Beethoven's fifth (C minor) Symphony, Mendelssohn's 'Hebrides' overture, and Mr. Steinbach's own arrangement of six dances by Mozart. Mr. John Petrie Dunn, a native of Edinburgh and Bucher Scholar of the University, won cordial applause by his playing of Schumann's Pianoforte concerto and a group of Chopin pieces.

At the seventh concert, on December 28, conducted by Dr. Cowen, the programme contained Mozart's 'Don Giovanni' overture, V. d'Indy's symphonic legend, 'La forêt enchantée,' Beethoven's fourth Symphony, and Edward German's tarantella, 'Winter,' from suite 'The Seasons.' The soloist was Mr. Fritz Kreisler, who created great enthusiasm by his splendid performance of Lalo's 'Symphonie Espagnole' and an 'Introduction and Scherzo' of his own composition, for violin alone.

The conductor of the eighth concert, on January 11, was Mr. Emil Mlynarski. The principal item in the programme was Kalinnikoff's Symphony, and the other works performed were Beethoven's 'Egmont' overture, the prelude to 'Parsifal,' the scherzo from the Symphony in D minor by Stojowski, and the overture to Goldmark's 'Sakuntala.'

Miss Muriel Kerr-Brown gave her annual pianoforte recital in the Freemasons' Hall on January 15, and in a programme comprising compositions by Bach, Schumann, Chopin, Paganini-Liszt, and Moszkowski, she showed herself a pianist of more than ordinary attainments.

Performances of the 'Messiah' were given in the McEwan Hall on December 26 by Mr. Moonie's Choir, and in the Music Hall on New Year's Day by the Choral Union (conductor, Mr. T. H. Collinson).

At the ninth concert on January 18, conducted by Dr. Cowen, M. Paderewski gave a magnificent rendering of Beethoven's Pianoforte concerto in E flat, and played a group of Chopin pieces and a Liszt Rhapsody, which he interpreted in his own inimitable style. The purely orchestral pieces were MacCunn's 'Land of the mountain and the flood' overture, a 'Petite suite' by Debussy, and a symphonic suite, 'Scheherazade,' by Rimsky-Korsakov.

At his second Chamber Concert at the Freemasons' Hall, on January 16, Mr. Denhof was assisted by Professor Carl Halir (violin), Professor Julius Klengel (violinello), and Mr. Horatio Connell (vocalist). The trios performed were Schubert's in B flat major and Mendelssohn's in D minor. Professor Halir and Professor Klengel each contributed solos, and Mr. Connell sang songs by Beethoven, Handel, Brahms and others.

Miss Agnes Copeland, an Edinburgh lady, assisted by Miss Margurite Bruel at the pianoforte, gave a violin recital in the Freemasons' Hall on January 20. The programme was of an ambitious nature, and comprised Beethoven's Sonata in G (Op. 30), Wieniawski's Concerto in D minor, and pieces by Mozart, Guiraud, Debussy, Vieuxtemps and Paganini. Miss Copeland's technical equipment is excellent. She plays with great verve and brilliancy, and with greater experience she should make good headway in her art.

Messrs. Challen, the old-established and well-known pianoforte manufacturers, have removed their show-rooms from those occupied by them for nearly half a century, at 46, Oxford Street, to Hanover Street, Regent Street, next door to Hanover Court.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Under Mr. J. M. Diack the Glasgow Bach Choir gave a highly successful concert in the Cathedral on December 22, the programme being Parts 1 and 2 of Bach's 'Christmas Oratorio' and the cantata 'Sing to the Lord a new song.' The choral numbers were sung with fine effect, and the soloists were Miss Phyllis Lett and Messrs. Alfred Heather and Hamilton Harris. The excellent judgment and good taste shown by Mr. Herbert Walton in the organ accompaniments contributed greatly to the success of the performance. The forty-second annual performance of the 'Messiah' was given on New Year's Day by the Choral Union, under Dr. Coward. The same distinctive features which characterised the 'Elijah' performance last month were again exhibited in the singing of the choir, giving to the familiar strains quite a new interest. The soloists were Mesdames A. Dolores and Kirkby Lunn, and Messrs. Radford and McCormack, and the accompaniments were played by the Scottish Orchestra, with Mr. J. E. Hodgson as organist.

On January 4 the choral classes connected with the Young Men's Christian Association gave a most creditable rendering of the 'Messiah,' under the energetic direction of Mr. R. L. Reid, whose valuable educational work in interesting a large number of young chorists in the standard masterpieces is worthy of all praise. The choir, a very well-balanced body, sang with great spirit and certainty of attack, and a small orchestra led by Mr. W. H. Cole, with Mr. J. K. Findlay at the organ, supplied the accompaniments. Of the soloists, Miss Boyd Steven, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Saunders and Mr. Robert Burnett, the work of the last-named calls for especial mention.

Associated with the Scottish Orchestra, the Pollokshields Philharmonic Society gave a concert performance of Verdi's 'Ernani' on January 7. Although occasionally overweighted by the accompaniment, the choral portions of the work were sung with great vim and crispness, and the solo music was entrusted to such experienced exponents as Miss Lizzie Burgess, Messrs. John McCormack, Charles Victor and Lewys James. Mr. John Cullen directed the performance with conspicuous ability. At the ninth Classical Concert, on January 5, the programme included a remarkably fine rendering of Max Bruch's 'Scottish fantasia' for violin and orchestra, with Mr. Henri Verbrugghen as soloist, Mozart's 'Jupiter' symphony, and Nos. 2, 4, 5 and 7 of Elgar's suite 'The Wand of Youth,' the last-named being given for the first time here. On January 12, Mr. Emil Mlynarski replaced Dr. Cowen, and proved himself to be an orchestral conductor of the greatest distinction. Two compositions by the conductor's fellow-countrymen — Kalinnikoff's first Symphony (in G minor) and the Scherzo from Stojowski's Symphony in D minor — were brought to a first hearing here, and in these, as well as in Beethoven's familiar 'Egmont' overture, the playing of the Scottish Orchestra reached the highest level. The Choral Union gave a 'popular' performance of the 'Messiah' in the City Hall on January 14, and again, under Dr. Coward's inspiring direction, achieved a distinct success.

One of the outstanding events of the present concert season was the appearance of Paderewski at the eleventh Classical Concert, on January 19. It is sufficient to say that the famous pianist was in his best form, and gave a strikingly powerful reading of Beethoven's fifth Concerto. The purely orchestral programme included a first performance here of a Petite suite by Debussy, Rimsky-Korsakov's symphonic suite 'Scheherazade,' and, by way of contrast, Bach's familiar Bourrée for strings, in B minor.

The Saturday Popular Orchestral Concerts have drawn together large and very appreciative audiences, and several novelties have appeared on the programmes, among these being a second performance of Strauss's tone-poem 'Also sprach Zarathustra.'

The death, on January 2, of Mr. James Robson, is recorded with regret. Mr. Robson, who has been fittingly described as 'the grand old man of Scottish music,' had reached the ripe age of ninety-eight, and was, until two years ago, actively engaged in the duties of his profession as singing-master at Hutchesons' Boys' Grammar School. He was one of the pioneers of tonic sol-fa, and as such did good work in teaching the system in the city and neighbourhood. For forty-six years he held the position of choirmaster at Greyfriars' Church, from the choir of which grew the Greyfriars Philharmonic Association, a Society which rivalled the Glasgow Musical Association, the precursor of the Glasgow Choral Union. Mr. Robson will be best remembered for his majestic presence, his fine voice, and his inspiring renderings of our national songs.

MUSIC IN GLOUCESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The only musical event of recent importance has been the eleventh annual concert of the Orpheus Society, on January 19. Under the careful direction of Dr. A. Herbert Brewer, the Society has gained a high reputation for tasteful and beautiful unaccompanied male-voice singing. The admirably chosen pieces sung on this occasion included 'Shades of the heroes' (Thomas Cooke); 'Fill the bowl with rosy wine' (John E. West); 'O peaceful night' (Edward German); 'There comes a new moon' (Charles Wood); and 'Music all powerful' (T. F. Walmisley)—all of which made their first appearance in the Orpheus programmes. Also the following older selections from the repertoire of the Society: 'Go, speed thy flight' (Otto); Hegar's choral ballad 'The phantom host'; 'Orpheus,' the humorous part-song the words and music of which were composed specially for the Society by its President, Sir Hubert Parry; Mr. Lee Williams's 'Song of the pedlar'; and 'O, my love's like a red, red rose,' and the humorous part-song 'Only a pin,' both composed for the Society by Dr. Brewer. The choir responded nobly to the heavy demands made upon them, and their performances were most enjoyable. The soloists of the evening were Miss Jean Fyans, a mezzo-soprano vocalist, and Miss M. Gordon, violinist. They gave great satisfaction by their rendering of their various pieces, and were skilfully accompanied by Mr. A. P. Porter. Dr. Brewer conducted.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Closely following the successful performance of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' by the Welsh Choral Union on December 19, the Philharmonic Hall was filled again on December 22, on the occasion of the performance of the same work by the Philharmonic Society. Mr. Herbert Brown again sang the Prophet's music with excellent effect, and the other principals were Miss Perceval Allen, Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. Lloyd Chandos and Master J. Baines, of the Pro-Cathedral Choir. Under Dr. Cowen's guidance, choir and band rendered the familiar music with fine effect. At the Seventh Philharmonic concert on January 12, César Franck's symphonic poem, 'Le Chasseur Maudit' was performed for the first time here. Descriptive of a ballad by Burger, it is a skilful and vivid musical illustration which reaches the highest plane of music of this description. Miss Evelyn Stuart played Tchaikovsky's Pianoforte concerto with great skill, and Dr. Cowen conducted the fine band in an expressive performance of Mozart's G minor Symphony.

In his lecture on 'Mendelssohn, a centenary celebration,' which the Rev. H. H. McCullagh gave as one of the Corporation free lectures on January 12, stress was laid upon the strong influence which a devoted study of Bach had had on Mendelssohn's creative genius.

At his pianoforte recital on January 11, Mr. Harold Bauer was heard with appreciation in the 'Appassionata' sonata, and to even greater advantage in Schumann's 'Fantasie-stücke.' His delicate and expressive playing was also shown in Chopin's Impromptu in A flat, and Berceuse. Miss Mary Adele Case, an American contralto, who was accompanied by Mr. Haddon Squire, sang with earnestness and artistic intention in songs by Schubert, Strauss and Lalo.

The concert of the Oxtou Harmonic Society, on December 16, conducted by Mr. H. E. Hunt, was distinguished by a well-chosen programme which contained Elgar's 'Banner of St. George,' Walford Davies's 'Nursery rhymes,' Somervell's 'In honour of music,' and Rutland Boughton's chorus 'Young Herchard.'

The programme of the Orchestral Society's concert on January 16 was unusually interesting, for it contained Mr. Granville Bantock's Preludium and Song-cycle 'Sappho,' and a new Symphony by Mr. Ernest Bryson, of Liverpool. Mr. Bantock's Prelude is a short symphonic poem founded on themes taken from the Song-cycle. It is a beautiful work, and the accompaniments to the songs are remarkable in their picturesque and powerful descriptiveness. Set for a contralto voice, Miss Phyllis Lett made a deep impression by her artistic and impassioned singing, and, together with the composer, she was several times recalled. Mr. Bryson's Symphony is in four movements. Although non-programmatic, effective use is made of a central 'Motto' theme. The music is remarkable for the skill displayed in the development of the thematic material, and also for its orchestral colouring. A successful performance was directed by Mr. Bantock, and the composer was called to the platform on the conclusion of his clever and musicianly work.

In connection with the Art Studies Association, Mr. Cecil Sharp gave a lecture on English folk-song with musical illustrations, more especially for the benefit of teachers in the Royal Institution, on January 19. In Miss Mattie Kay, the lecturer was especially fortunate in his vocal exponent.

The recent nightly appearances of Madame Albani at the Royal Hippodrome are certainly unique, so far as local music halls are concerned. Accompanied by Mr. Victor Marmont at the pianoforte, Madame Albani was heard with attention and appreciation, especially in the simpler examples of her extensive repertoire.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The holiday silence was pleasantly broken on January 7, when the twelfth of the Hallé concerts was given, Mr. Franz Beidler conducting. Lady Hallé played Spohr's Concerto, No. 8, and Beethoven's Romanza in F. The orchestral pieces were Bach's Overture (suite) in B minor, for flutes and strings; Goldmark's Overture 'Im Frühling' (Op. 36), and the 'Eroica' Symphony, of which the Funeral March movement was taken at a very slow pace. At the following concert, on January 14, both conductor and orchestra greatly distinguished themselves in the rendering of the 'Leonora' No. 2 Overture, the 'Siegfried' Trauermarsch, and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4, in F minor. Master Ernst Lengyel played Beethoven's pianoforte Concerto No. 4, in G, and Schumann's 'Etudes Symphoniques.'

A further sign that choral music is again coming to its rightful place in musical appreciation was given at the Gentlemen's Concerts on January 11, when Haydn's 'Creation' was performed, Mr. Beidler conducting. The principals were Madame Esta D'Argo, Mr. Webster Millar, and Mr. Charles Clark. It must be several years since an oratorio was in the programme of one of these concerts. The choir had a large share in the success of the performance. The situation as well as the music was admirably expressed in connection with the Trio, 'The heavens are telling,' and in the Duo commencing 'By Thee with bliss.' In the latter instance the refined singing of the choir made a distinct impression.

Choral singing asserted itself, prominently and with great success, at the Promenade concert on January 9, and at Mr. Brand Lane's Subscription concert on January 16. At the former the Blackpool Glee and Madrigal Society (conductor, Mr. Herbert Whittaker) rendered with fine effect some of the worthiest selections from its repertory, supplementing the work of the orchestra, under Mr. Speelman, who conducted performances of the 'Ruy Blas' and 'Meistersinger' overtures, Godard's 'Scènes Poétiques,' the pretty little entr'acte from Gounod's 'La Colombe,' the same composer's 'Funeral march of a Marionette,' and Dvorák's Slav dance No. 6, in A flat. In a performance of Mozart's Serenade for oboe and strings, the soloist, Mr. Charles Reynolds, delighted everyone with his beautiful tone and finished phrasing. At Mr. Brand Lane's concert the programme was amplified and enriched by the vocal efforts of Mrs. Henry J. Wood and Mr. Plunket Greene, and by the contributions of Miss Irene Penso (violin) and Mr. Edward Isaacs (pianoforte).

Herr Julius Klengel, the Leipzig violoncellist, gave us another opportunity of hearing him at the concert at the Schiller-Anstalt on January 9. He was associated with Mr. Egon Petri in a performance of Busoni's earlier work 'Kultaselle,' ten variations on a Finnish air for pianoforte and violoncello, and of Beethoven's Sonata in D (Op. 102, No. 2), for the same instruments. Mr. Horatio Connell admirably sang a number of songs, including six of Schumann's 'Dichterliebe.'

The programme of the concert on December 22, of the students at Mr. Albert J. Cross's School of Music, contained two movements of Edward MacDowell's 'Indian Suite' (Op. 48), the 'Love Song' and 'War Time,' both very creditably played.

Music just now is specially pronounced here as the handmaid of the drama and the stage. At the Queen's Theatre 'Antony and Cleopatra' is being performed with Dr. Henry Watson's entr'acte and incidental music. At the Gaiety Theatre the afternoons are occupied with 'Alice in Wonderland,' with Walter Slaughter's music and old English dances, while the evenings are filled with Beaumont and Fletcher's 'Knight of the Burning Pestle,' with Mr. Granville Bantock's incidental music, and with vocal selections by Dr. Watson and instrumental pieces from works of Gibbons, Byrd, Bull and Giles Farnaby. At the Princes Theatre, Leo Fall's music to 'The Dollar Princess' was heard for the first time in England on December 24.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The committee of the Classical Concert Society made a departure from their usual custom by engaging a local artist for their concert on January 13, when Mr. Edgar L. Bainton, who is winning recognition as a composer of merit and of high aims, played César Franck's fine prelude, chorale and fugue, and unhackneyed numbers by Schumann, Chopin, Brahms, Max Reger, Strauss and York Bowen. Throughout his playing was characterized by thoughtful musicianship, while his technique was excellent. Mrs. George Swinton sang a varied selection of songs excellently.

Mr. Cecil Sharp gave two delightful lectures on folk-song before the Sunday Lecture Society and the Literary and Philosophical Society on January 17 and 18.

The Carl Rosa Opera Company gave a fortnight of opera, beginning on January 11.

MUSIC IN NORTH STAFFORDSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The North Staffordshire Orchestra gave a successful concert on Boxing night in the Burslem Town Hall. The programme consisted of the overtures 'Iphigenia in Aulis' (Gluck), 'La dame Blanche' (Boieldieu), 'Merry wives of Windsor' (Nicolai), 'Bartered bride' (Smetana), tone-poem 'Finlandia' (Sibelius), and Schubert's Unfinished symphony. Mr. Fred C. Morris played several violin solos by Svendsen, Saint-Saëns and Böhm with fine expression and finished technique. Mrs. Frank Shufflebotham contributed some songs by Wagner and others. Mr. F. H. Morris accompanied, and Mr. John Cope conducted.

The Duchess of Sutherland gave a concert in the Victoria Hall, Hanley, on January 11, with the assistance of Mr. Herbert E. Sherwin's Orchestral and Choral Society. For some years this organization has given its services on behalf of various charities promoted by the Duchess. Concerts of this description are apt to generate into perfunctory social affairs rather than those of artistic merit, and it would be a pleasure for us to see Mr. Sherwin throwing himself into the real musical life of the district rather than that his forces should always appear under the ægis of charity. On this occasion the choral works consisted of MacCunn's 'The wreck of the Hesperus,' Schumann's 'Gipsy life,' and Elgar's 'Spanish serenade.' There was not much 'snap' or 'go' in the renderings, the errors being chiefly those of sleepiness. The same criticism must not be applied to the orchestral renderings of several works of Liszt, Tchaikovsky and Mendelssohn. Miss Ada Forrest gave an intelligent rendering of Holbrooke's song, 'Come, let us make love deathless,' and contributed further songs. A Maori chief, Rangiaia, sang a number of native 'laments,' &c., and Mrs. Herbert E. Sherwin was the solo violinist. Messrs. E. Hammond and J. C. Sherwin were the accompanists, and Mr. Herbert E. Sherwin conducted.

Mr. John James, conductor of the Hanley Glee and Madrigal Society, has been appointed to the additional conductorship of the Nantwich Choral Society.

At the University College two well-attended and important concert-lectures have taken place. The first, on January 14, embraced the 17th century, when music examples by Lully, Blow, D. and H. Purcell, Bach, Arne and Corelli were given. Mr. Allen Gill was the prolocutor. The illustrations were performed by Miss Alice M. Hogg (pianist), Miss Sybil Speed (violinist), and Miss Alice Baxter (vocalist). The second concert-lecture, on January 21, was exceptionally interesting in so far as the music to Milton's 'Comus' was sung, in addition to the incidental music to 'The Faerie Queen,' by Henry Purcell. On this occasion the instrumental music (strings) was played by Miss Kate Chaplin, Miss Florence Moss, Mr. Eric Coates, Mr. John Mundy, Mr. C. Voce, with Mr. Bernard Johnson (pianoforte) and Miss Dorothy Ray (vocalist). Mr. Gill not only again acted as lecturer, but took the part of the Attendant Spirit, as Harry Lawes the composer had done at the original performance. The success of these concert-lectures was assured, and as they afford students an opportunity of hearing music which is seldom performed, the educational value of such music-making is of great importance.

DEVONSHIRE.

Two symphony concerts were given by Mr. Frank Winterbottom at Stonehouse, on November 10 and December 11 respectively. On the former occasion the first and second suites 'd'Arlésienne' of Bizet were given consecutively, and on the second occasion Spohr's 'Power of sound' symphony and Smetana's 'Vysehrad' overture were played.

Dr. Weekes's Orchestral Society, at their fifth symphony concert on November 25, performed the 'Eroica,' also Grieg's 'Norwegian dances' and the overture to 'Die Meistersinger.' Dr. Weekes and Mr. Walter Weekes conducted.

Opera is advancing both in standard and importance in Plymouth. The Western Amateur Operatic Society, for their performances of 'The yeomen of the guard' at the Prince's Hall during the week beginning November 9, had such crowded houses that another year they will probably think seriously of giving the representations in a theatre. Mr. Edward Pengelly conducted. At the Theatre Royal the Plymouth Operatic Society played 'Falka' during the week beginning December 7, before large houses nightly. The performance was creditable to all concerned, the choral work being much above the average. Mr. Reginald Ball conducted.

The Dean and Chapter of Exeter have granted the use of the cathedral for performances of 'The Messiah' and 'The Hymn of Praise,' to be given in the spring by the amalgamated Exeter Oratorio Society and Western Counties Musical Association. Certain conditions have, however, been imposed by the cathedral authorities, one of which is that the expenses, estimated at £500, shall be covered by a guarantee fund. The Societies have been diligently rehearsing the above works under the chorus-master, Mr. F. J. Shapcott, with periodic visits from the conductors, Dr. H. J. Edwards and Dr. D. Wood. At her first pianoforte recital given in her native county, Miss Beatrice Trefusis, on September 18, proved herself a conscientious young artist of great promise, her Chopin playing being especially good. Mr. A. Tait Knight assisted vocally. The Isca Glee Singers gave a concert at Exeter on December 11. Exeter Orchestral Society, conducted by Dr. Wood, performed, on December 15, an ambitious programme with good results. Several numbers from the 'Pélleas and Mélisande' suite of Sibelius and two Egyptian dances by Dr. H. A. Harding were novelties. Miss May Bartlett was the vocalist.

Torquay Musical Association, on November 26, gave a programme which was more evenly divided than usual between its instrumental and choral sections. Schumann's 'Rhenish' symphony was played for the first time in the West. In Stanford's 'The Revenge' and in some part-songs the choir showed balance and tone-quality above the average. Mr. T. H. Webb conducted, and Mr. H. Crocker led the band. The Haydn String Quartet (Messrs. H. E. Crocker, J. Stevens, F. Crocker and C. T. Heavside), on November 5, played quartets by Brahms (Op. 51, No. 1) and Beethoven (Op. 18, No. 2). Congratulations should be given to these players for their successful efforts in promoting chamber music in Torquay. The Barnstaple Musical Festival Society gave a miscellaneous concert on November 23, at which Dr. H. J. Edwards appeared as conductor and pianist. Suggestions are being made, and approaching practicability, for the revival of the North Devon Festival which has been in abeyance for several years.

On December 30, Exmouth Choral Society gave a fine rendering of 'King Olaf,' with Miss Mary Wilmot, Mr. Charles Saunders and Mr. Leslie Wilmot as principals, and Mr. Raymond Wilmot conducting.

The Teignmouth Orchestral Society, at its concert on December 10, conducted by Mr. A. J. James, was assisted by Miss Marie Belton, vocalist. On the same date the Axe Vale Musical Society at Seaton performed 'H.M.S. Pinafore,' on three nights, directed by Mr. W. C. Walton, assistance being given by Madame Walton Masland, Miss Adelaide Bailey and Mr. W. F. Crabb. The only chamber concert to be noticed is one given at Tavistock on December 9 by Mr. Frank W. Greenfield and Mr. de Blois Rowe, violin and pianoforte respectively, assisted by Mr. R. Glendinning and Madame Lilian Langdon.

On November 30, Madame Marguerite King, a pianist who has gained fame in other continents and also in London, gave a successful recital at Plymouth, where she has recently come to reside. Her programme was representative historically, without emphasising the ultra-modern school.

CORNWALL.

A concert performance of Gounod's 'Faust' was given by the Camborne Choral Society on December 8, Mr. H. V. Pearce conducting. The choir showed great improvement, both in tone and accuracy. The principals were the Misses Nellie Ellis, D. Bell and M. Sellam; Messrs. Will Foster, David Evans and Albert Garcia. Miss Carling led the band.

The Falmouth and Truro Philharmonic Society performed 'Judas Maccabæus' at the former town on December 7 and at Truro on the following day. Canon Corfe conducted and Miss Edith Blight was at the organ. The principals were the Misses Mary Lund and Mary Blamey; Messrs. Herbert Thompson and Dan Price. Redruth Choral Society, conducted by Mr. Matthew Clemens, performed 'The Messiah' on December 9, assisted by Madame Carrie Siviter and Mr. S. J. Bishop. The Penzance Amateur Orchestral Society, an enterprising and important band of workers conducted by Mr. Walter Barnes, performed a selection from the works of Grieg at their concert on December 11.

The following scholarships have been awarded at the Royal Academy of Music: the Sinton Scholarship (violin) to William Hubert Davies (of Abersychan) and the George Mence Smith scholarship (male vocalists) to Gordon Albert Yates (of London).

Mr. C. Bechstein has received the appointment of pianoforte manufacturer to the Queen of Sweden and also to the Queen of Norway.

Messrs. J. B. Cramer & Co., Ltd., have purchased the old-established business of Justin Browne, the well-known manufacturers of pianofortes.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Since the customary outbreak of 'Messiah' performances just before Christmas, there has been little doing in music of a more serious character than that which is associated with pantomimes and dances. On January 5, at the Huddersfield Subscription Concert, Miss Mathilde Verne's refined reading of the so-called 'Moonlight' sonata, and Mr. Hegedus's fine execution in an interesting Chaconne by Vitali, were incidents worthy of record, and on the following day the Bradford Subscription Concert was signalized by the farewell of an old favourite in Lady Hallé, who has often played at Bradford since her first visit in 1869, and the appearance of a very young candidate for favour in the gifted little pianist Lengyel von Bagota. At the succeeding Subscription Concert, on January 15, Paderewski gave a recital, a programme of typical character being varied by the appearance of the name of Debussy, whose 'Reflets dans l'eau' was played with exceptional refinement and delicacy.

At Leeds, in the Bohemian Chamber Concert on January 6, the name of Max Reger made its first appearance in a Leeds programme. His String quartet in D minor (Op. 74) was no less difficult of digestion than of execution, but possibly greater familiarity on the part of both executants and audience may make the music seem more spontaneous than it appears on a first hearing. On January 20 the Rasch Quartet gave one of their series of concerts at Leeds, and played César Franck's nobly-conceived Quartet in D, the great distinction and sincere expression of which become more obvious as one acquires a greater familiarity with it. At the Leeds Municipal Concert on January 16, Mr. Fricker gave us readings of familiar masterpieces like the Leonora overture (No. 3), and the 'Unfinished' Symphony, which would have been a credit to any orchestra, the details being well considered and artistically carried out. The novelty was a Suite by Mr. Edgar Bainton, which he conducted, entitled 'King of the golden river.' The work is evidently intended to be descriptive, but as no key save the somewhat cryptic titles of the several movements was afforded in the programme, its exact significance could not be wholly appreciated, but power in handling the orchestra was strongly manifested, and the colour and energy of the music were thoroughly enjoyed. The first movement of Brahms's Violin Concerto was another feature of the concert, the solo part being played with much refinement by Mr. Montagu Nathan.

The programme of the Hull Symphony Orchestra's concert on January 6 included Haydn's 'Bear' Symphony, together with Grieg's first 'Peer Gynt' Suite; that of the following concert, on January 20, introduced Beethoven's C minor Symphony, of which, under Mr. Wallerstein's direction, a performance was given which, if not perfect in the letter, was generally true to the spirit of the work. The recently instituted Huddersfield String Quartet gave their fourth concert on January 19, when Jadassohn's Pianoforte quintet in C minor, and Quartets by Haydn and Franz Ries (in B flat, Op. 22) formed the programme.

Foreign Notes.

ANTWERP.

A new Dutch opera, 'Renard the fox,' by Auguste De Boeck, was recently produced at the Flemish Opera and warmly received. The work gained the first-prize at a competition held last year at Ostend.

AUGSBURG.

'Hermann the liberator,' a choral work for male voices, by Karl Zuschneid, has been produced here with great success.

BASLE.

A fairy-play, 'The fight for Little Snow-white,' by Justizrath Dr. Richard Wolff, of Berlin, and composed by Clemens Schmalstich, was produced here on January 5 and received with remarkable enthusiasm.

BAYREUTH.

Richard Wagner's youngest daughter, Eva, was on Christmas Day married to Mr. Houston Stewart Chamberlain, the well-known author of a monumental biography of Wagner and the writer of other important works. The mayor of Bayreuth himself tied the nuptial knot in Villa Wahnfried.

BERLIN.

A new comic opera by Karl Weis, entitled 'Die Zwillinge' (The Twins) was produced at the Komische Oper on December 22, without however meeting with much favour. The libretto has been arranged by the composer from Shakespeare's 'Twelfth Night.'—The Fifth Symphony evening of the Royal Orchestra, under Richard Strauss, was devoted to some of Beethoven's rarely played works, such as the fourth Symphony, the overture to 'King Stephen,' and the overture and the Turkish and Solemn Marches from the 'Ruins of Athens.'—The programme of the Philharmonic concert of January 4, under Prof. Arthur Nikisch, was also exclusively Beethoven, whose first and last (choral) symphonies were placed in highly interesting juxtaposition and splendidly performed.—Herr Peter Schenk, who styled himself 'Russian composer,' gave, with the Philharmonic orchestra, a concert on December 28, devoted exclusively to his own compositions, such as a Symphony in E minor, a symphonic fairy-tale 'Der Tränensee,' a fantasy 'Visions' (after Turgeneff), a symphonic poem 'Hero and Leander,' and a suite 'Lebensepisoden' (Episodes of Life). None of the works made a powerful impression, and their characteristics gave no evidence of Russian origin.—Another Russian conductor, Dimitry Achsharumoff, gave a concert with the Philharmonic Orchestra on January 9, his programme including Tchaikovsky's rarely heard first Symphony, 'Savonarola,' by Ivanoff, two excerpts from the opera 'Chovantchina,' by Moussorgsky, a delightful 'Wedding procession of the Emperor Dodon,' from Rimsky-Korsakoff's posthumous opera 'The golden cockerel,' and Kalinnikoff's second Symphony.—Herr Oscar Fried, the gifted conductor of the Blüthner Orchestra, has resigned his office. He will be succeeded by Musikdirektor Joseph Frischen, of Hanover.—After having been twice refused entrance into the hallowed precincts of the Academy of Fine Arts, Richard Strauss is at last to be admitted as a member, in place of the late Joseph Joachim.

BERNE.

A one-act music-drama, 'Högnis letzte Heerfahrt,' by Herr Peter Fassbänder, of Lucerne, was produced at the municipal theatre here and favourably received.

BONN.

The Beethoven-House Society has decided upon holding another great chamber music festival in May next, and has voted 5000 marks towards the preliminary expenses.

BREMEN.

At the sixth Philharmonic Concert, under Prof. Karl Panzner, a new 'Overture to a Shakespearean Comedy,' by Paul Scheinpflug, was produced. It proved a most merry and even boisterously humorous work, in which what is described as a 16th century English bagpipe melody is introduced and most effectively treated.

BRUSSELS.

M. Edgar Tinel has been appointed director of the Brussels Royal Conservatoire of Music in succession to the late François A. Gevaert.—At the Théâtre Royal de la Monnaie, M. Paul Dukas's three-act conte lyrique, entitled 'Ariane et Barbe-Bleu,' words by M. Maurice Maeterlinck, was performed for the first time on January 2. The performance—conducted by M. Sylvain Dupuis, and with Madame Friché and M. Arfus in the chief rôles—was of rare excellence, and the strange work was well received.

CHEMNITZ.

'The first day' is the title of a new symphonic-poem by Adolf Paul Böhm, recently produced at one of the concerts of the municipal orchestra. The composer himself conducted.

COLOGNE.

After having been shelved for ten years, Wagner's 'Rienzi' has just been revived at the Municipal Opera House, and, mirabile dictu, a crowded audience greeted the old 'novelty' with whole-hearted enthusiasm.

DARMSTADT.

The great success of last year's Chamber Music Festival having warranted a repetition of the experiment, another similar three-day festival will be held here in May. The first day will be devoted to the German classics; the second to the compositions of Dr. Saint-Saëns, who will participate in their performance; and the third to the production of new works.

DESSAU.

An exceptionally interesting resurrection of a long-lost composition was the 'first performance' of a Symphony in D by Otto Nicolai, composer of the 'Merry wives of Windsor,' at a recent concert of the Court Orchestra, under Hofkapellmeister Franz Mikorey. The 'find' stands to the credit of Herr G. R. Kruse, who discovered the orchestral parts of the work some months ago. The symphony is distinguished for a welcome, breezy freshness, and seems not unworthy of being published, even at this late date, and added to the repertoire of orchestras.

DRESDEN.

In connection with the eagerly expected production of Richard Strauss's new opera 'Elektra,' on January 25, the directors of the Royal Opera arranged for a 'Strauss week' with a programme including performances of the master's operas 'Feuersnot' and 'Salome,' and of the 'Domestic Symphony.' The composer himself and General-Musikdirektor von Schuch were the conductors.—Prof. Leopold Auer, of St. Petersburg, has removed to Dresden, in order to be more accessible to the numerous young violinists from all parts of the world who are eager to receive the benefit of his teaching, an eagerness easily explained by the phenomenal success of Prof. Auer's gifted pupils, Mischa Elman and Kathleen Parlow.—At a recent symphony concert of the Royal Orchestra a prologue to an opera, 'Antony and Cleopatra,' by a hitherto unknown Russian composer, de Youferoff, of Odessa, was produced, but though splendidly played under von Schuch, and not without picturesque qualities well suited to the theatre, the brilliantly-scored work was only fairly successful.

DÜSSELDORF.

M. Xavier Leroux's opera 'The Vagabond' (Le chemineau) was recently performed at the Municipal Theatre for the first time in Germany, and favourably received.

GOTHA.

In connection with the fortieth anniversary of its foundation, the local Musikverein gave a festival performance of Bach's B minor Mass. It seems strange that this was the first time the gigantic work had been heard here. Needless to say, it made a profound impression.

LEIPZIG.

Dr. A. Schering, of this city, recently made a highly interesting discovery in the library of the University of Upsala, Sweden. It is nothing less than the parts of a hitherto unknown 'Christmas Oratorio' by Heinrich Schütz, dating from 1664. The work is to be published by Messrs. Breitkopf & Härtel.—Prof. Max Reger, on December 1, ceased to be professor of music in the University of Leipzig. He resigned so as 'to gain more time for composition,' and yet Max Reger is one of the most prolific composers the world has ever seen. His successor in the chair is Prof. Friedrich Brandes, conductor of the Dresden Teachers' Choral Society, musical critic of the Dresdener Anzeiger and Berlin Signale, and generally appreciated as a gifted and learned writer on musical subjects.—Prof. Reger was asked by the Academic Senate of the University to compose a Festival Hymnus on a large scale, in celebration of the forthcoming five hundredth anniversary of the foundation of the famous seat of learning. The busy young professor has, however, declined the honour; he has evidently as little taste for writing to order as had Johannes Brahms.—At the eleventh Gewandhaus concert, Prof. Arthur Nikisch produced Signor Leone Sinigaglia's overture to Goldoni's comedy 'Le Baruffe Chiozotte.' It proved a charming work—bright, vivacious, beautifully constructed and orchestrated, and thoroughly pleasing. It was received with genuine warmth.—At the seventh Philharmonic Concert an orchestral prologue 'Riccio,' by Adolf Sandberger, was produced and well received.

MILAN.

The Milan Conservatoire recently celebrated the centenary of its foundation by Napoleon I. The occasion was conspicuously 'improved' by the opening of a new concert room in the institution, which seats an audience of 2,400 people. Milan was greatly in need of such a room, and will not be slow to appreciate the boon.

MUNICH.

An interesting revival of a little-known work was the performance, in the theatre-room of the Hotel Union, of Lortzing's 'Hans Sachs,' which will always be sure of a place in musical history as the opera which gave Wagner the idea for his 'Meistersinger.' The performance, arranged by the South Bavarian people's Educational Society (Volksbildungsverein) and conducted by Kapellmeister Cassimir, was excellent, and the comic portions of the score at any rate proved still effective in spite of their age.

NEW YORK.

The directors of the Metropolitan Opera House offer a prize of 10,000 dollars for the best opera by an American composer. September 15, 1910, is the latest date for submitting scores. The successful work will be produced at the Metropolitan Opera House, and the performing rights for the United States, Cuba, Canada and Mexico are to remain the property of the directors for five years.—At the Metropolitan Opera House, Signor Puccini's first opera 'Le Villi,' composed about twenty-five years ago, was dragged from the obscurity of long neglect, only to meet with dire misfortune. According to various critical reports, the audience were so little interested in the work that the theatre was almost empty before the end was reached. 'Bored stiff' is the expressive Yankee slang used by one scribe to indicate the sufferings of the audience.

PARIS.

A belated production of a 'Prix de Rome' effort dating as far back as 1903, was given at the Conservatoire on December 30, viz., the first act, with prologue, from 'Amphitryon,' an opera by M. Raoul Laparra, who has since become known as the composer of the much-discussed opera 'Habanera.' The words of the earlier work are excellently arranged by the composer himself from Molière's comedy, and the music displays invention and humour.—A new Concertstück for organ and orchestra, composed by M. G. Sarreau, was produced at the Lamoureux concert of January 10, but though splendidly played by M. J. Bonnet, the work was coldly received.—After receiving a valuable gratuitous advertisement in the storm in a tea-cup raised by M. Maurice Maeterlinck's unsuccessful attempt to prohibit its production at the Grand Opéra, M. Henry Février's opera 'Monna Vanna' was produced on January 13 and very favourably received. The young composer is a pupil of MM. Massenet, Gabriel Fauré and Messager, and a short opera of his, 'Le Roi aveugle,' was produced at the Opéra Comique in 1906. In the new work M. Février displays considerable originality and charm, though he is somewhat lacking in the power of passionate expression. For this musical setting M. Maeterlinck has thought well to alter the vague but poetic ending of his drama, besides which he has added two new scenes, thereby giving much greater importance to Guido, who, in fact, becomes the leading character both dramatically and musically. 'Monna Vanna' is unfortunately another of the growing list of stage works which are impossible in English theatres.—On January 24 the soloists, chorus-ballet, and orchestra of the Milan Scala Theatre gave a performance of Spontini's

'La Vestale' at the Opéra for the benefit of the sufferers of Messina and Calabria. Signor Tito Ricordi, of the famous Milan firm of music publishers, was the originator of this 'happy thought,' and he explained that the choice of this particular work was intentional.—A memorial tablet has been recently affixed to the house, No. 22, Rue du Mont-Cenis, in which Hector Berlioz lived from 1834 to 1837. There he composed the symphony 'Harold in Italy' and the opera 'Beatrice et Bénédict.'

PRAGUE.

After only three performances, Debussy's lyric drama 'Pelléas and Mélisande' has been withdrawn, and, it is said, for good.—At the second Philharmonic concert a new Symphony in C minor by Karl Weis was produced. It is a programmatic work, each movement bearing a title. The music shows considerable spontaneity, and, excellently played under the composer's direction, it was awarded an enthusiastic reception.—A work of a very different type—one, in fact, which both in words and music displayed a laudable desire to leave the beaten track—was produced at a concert given by the combined forces of the German Singverein and German Male-voice choir. It is entitled 'Von der Hohen Stadt' (Of the Exalted city) and was written and composed by Dr. Gerhard von Keussler, conductor of the aforesaid societies. Though the work would no doubt be classed amongst oratorios by the average amateur, the composer does not call it so; nor is his style suggestive of classical models. Dr. von Keussler has displayed in this and other important respects an individuality which augurs well for his future, especially as he has the gift of powerful expression.

REGENSBURG (RATISBON).

The famous Proskesche Musikbibliothek is to be made accessible to the public. This most valuable library contains some 20,000 volumes, which include 16,000 manuscripts and printed works dating from the 15th, 16th, and 17th centuries.

ROME.

The first of the Cæcilia concerts in the Corea Hall was conducted—as will also be the next four—by Prof. Karl Panzner, of Bremen, and exclusively devoted to Italian music: Scarlatti, Corelli, Leonardo Leo, Cimarosa, Spontini (overture to 'Cortez'), Martucci, Mancinelli and Sgambati (first Symphony). Of these composers' works the overture to Cimarosa's 'Matrimonio segreto' was the most appreciated, and had to be repeated. On Christmas Day Prof. Panzner conducted Beethoven's Choral Symphony before an audience of 3,000 people, and with such success that the performance had to be repeated on December 27.

WIESBADEN.

A posthumous orchestral work by the recently deceased Berlin composer Heinrich van Eyken, entitled 'Eine Nachtmusik,' was recently produced here with much success.

ORGANUM.—(1) The fine of the chorus 'Rest here in peace' (Bach's 'St. John Passion'), is at the pause on p. 139 of Novello's edition. The chorus may be sung at about crotchet = 66, and the concluding chorale at crotchet = 56. The suggested speed rate for Brahms's part-song 'In autumn' is crotchet = 126, or dotted minim = 42; and the same composer's 'The trysting place,' crotchet = 116 to 120. The speed of the part-song 'Full fathom five,' by Dr. Charles Wood, has been metronomed by the composer at crotchet = 100; the time word is Allegro moderato.

H. W.—Wedgwood's 'Dictionary of organ stops' is published by the Vincent Music Company, price 5s. net. There is a chapter on 'conducting' in Berlioz's treatise on Instrumentation. This book partly answers your concluding requirement—a manual on orchestration, with which you may also study Professor Prout's books on that subject, published by Messrs. Augener and by Messrs. Novello.

ORPHEUS.—Books containing the national anthems of various countries (pianoforte solo) are published by Messrs. Enoch and by Messrs. Boosey. Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians' would furnish you with historical information relative to the principal national airs. Dr. W. H. Cummings has written a book on 'God save the King,' published by Messrs. Novello.

A. B.—In the absence of a book entirely devoted to 'the subject of old English part-songs, madrigals, &c.,' you cannot do better than consult the chapter 'Madrigals,' in Dr. Ernest Walker's 'A History of Music in England.' Read also the article 'Madrigal' in Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians.' The Madrigal Society does not issue a periodical.

KENT.—Perhaps the Rules of the Musical Association (Secretary, Mr. J. Percy Baker, 12, Longley Road, Tooting Graveney, S.W.), will serve as a guide whereupon to base those of the Society you are endeavouring to form in your town 'for the promotion of music and musical interests.' May all success attend an endeavour so commendable and so full of potentialities.

H. C. L.—For the purposes of your lecture you could not do better than procure or obtain access to 'English Minstrelsie' (8 vols.), published by Messrs. T. C. & E. C. Jack, Edinburgh. Articles on 'St. Anne's' tune and 'Rule, Britannia' appeared in the issues of this journal for June, 1908, and April, 1900, respectively.

J. F.—For 'choral works, without solos (or very little), similar to Dunhill's Tubal Cain,' see Incheape Rock (Bridge), John Gilpin (Cowen), Spring's message (Gade), King Arthur (Sullivan), The Erl King (Higgs), and Young Lochinvar (Arnott). The above works are entirely without solos.

W. G. G.—The information you require as to 'the approximate number of manufacturers there are in England, Ireland, and Scotland of pianos,' can be self-acquired by consulting the trade section of the 'Musical Directory,' published annually by Messrs. Rudall, Carte & Co.

M. R. M.—The following speed rates are suggested: Bach's Fugue in E flat, No. 7, Book 1, crotchet = 108; Schubert's Sonata in A, Op. 120 (first movement), crotchet = 108; Beethoven's Sonata in D, Op. 10, No. 3 (first movement), minim = 108.

H. L.—In order to obtain reliable information as to the value of your Straduaris violin, you should submit the instrument to Messrs. W. E. Hill & Sons, who, in return for a fee, will assess its worth and do all that is necessary in the way of careful repairs.

DEGREE.—Analyses of Brahms's Symphony No. 2 (in D) are to be found in the programme-books of the Crystal Palace Saturday concerts, and in those of the Philharmonic Society. We hope in due course to reprint the former, by Sir George Grove.

E. H.—We cannot give the names of voice-trainers. Unless your daughter has an exceptionally good voice and has temperament that is both poetical and musical, you should carefully consider her entrance into the ranks of professional singers, as they are already overcrowded.

D.—The following are the death-dates you require: Madame Trebelli-Bettini, August 18, 1892; Brahms, April 3, 1897; Thomas Wingham, March 24, 1893; and Rev. Henry Parr, May 4, 1905. The other lady whose name you give is happily still in the flesh.

A. M.—Merkel's Organ sonata No. 5 (Op. 118) may be played at about the following rates of speed: Allegro risoluto, crotchet = 108, the second subject slower; Andante, quaver = 80; Fuga, quaver = 126, with modifications at the concluding bars.

J. G.—(1) So far as we know, Alphonse Maily is still living. (2) You may begin the study of Max Reger's organ compositions with the 'Sechs Vorspiele' and the 'Sieben Vorspiele' (Op. 79), and the 'Sechs Trios' (Op. 47).

N. C. U.—Have you seen Wilhelmj and Brown's 'Modern School for the violin'? This might serve your purpose—'studies in each of the positions separately.'

C. E. B.—Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Negro airs' are only published in America, by Messrs. Ditson & Co., of New York.

F. W. B.—The harmonization of the tune 'York,' by John Milton, Senr., is given in the 'English Hymnal,' No. 472.

A. M.—We regret that we are unable to entertain the proposal of publishing your verses.

J. C. D.—The chant which you send is one that unfortunately we cannot trace.

A. F.—By all means endeavour to obtain the choir-training diploma of the Royal College of Organists.

A few questions are held over until next month.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed in this summary, as the notices are either prepared from local newspapers or furnished by correspondents. Correspondents are particularly requested to enclose a programme when forwarding reports of concerts.

ABERYSTWYTH.—Stainer's 'Daughter of Jairus' and a miscellaneous programme were given at the Tabernacle on January 1 by the choir of the chapel, under the direction of Mr. J. Charles McLean. The solo vocalists were Miss Rosie Jones, Mr. Harry Lewis and Mr. Lewis J. Morgan. The choir sang well, the rendering of 'The wailing' chorus by the female voices being particularly effective.

ADELAIDE.—The Orpheus Society gave a concert in the Town Hall on November 11, under the conductorship of Mr. Charles J. Stevens, when the programme included the following part-music: 'Strike the lyre' (Cooke), 'The phantom host' (F. Hegar), 'A message to Phyllis' (Gerard F. Cobb), 'The sands of Dee' (R. Goldbeck), and three double choruses from Mendelssohn's '(Edipus at Colonus.' The soloists were Miss Nora Kyffin Thomas (violinist) and Master Lyall Rutter (vocalist).

ANDOVER.—Two concerts were given in the Town Hall on January 13 by the Choral Society, under the conductorship of the Vicar, Dr. Joy. The programme contained a well-selected variety of vocal and instrumental music. Dr. Bridge's cantata 'The Incheape Rock' was well performed, and went with the swing which the subject demands. This, with Elgar's three-part song 'The snow' and other part-music, gave evidence of careful training. Two movements of Mendelssohn's D minor Trio were well played by Miss D. Gradidge (violin), Miss Evelyn Seth-Smith (violoncello), and Mr. Jackson, organist of the Parish Church (pianoforte). Solos were also given by the above-mentioned ladies on their respective instruments. Arrangements are being made for a performance of Gounod's 'De profundis' in the Parish Church during Lent.

BARKING.—The Choral Society gave a performance of 'Hiawatha' (Parts 1 and 2), and Bridge's 'Ballad of the Clamperdown,' at the Baths on January 21. The choir and orchestra numbered 130, and showed results of good training by the conductor, Mr. Stanley C. Attwood. The solo vocalists were Miss Maggie Inglis, Mr. Claude Dyer and Mr. Hubert Eisdell.

BEMBRIDGE (I.W.).—The Choral Society gave an excellent performance of Haydn's 'Creation,' on January 12. The solo vocalists were Madame Anna Shergold, the Rev. N. M. Morgan-Browne, of St. Paul's Cathedral, and Mr. Charles Riddick. The chorus and orchestra, numbering seventy, acquitted themselves well under the conductorship of the Rev. H. A. Tapsfield, late succentor of St. Paul's and now Vicar of Bembridge. Messrs. Freeman and W. Riddick assisted at the pianoforte.

CHIGWELL.—Stanford's 'The Revenge' was given at the Christmas concert of the Grammar School on December 18, under the direction of the music-master, Mr. Henry Riding.

CROYDON.—The Central Croydon Choral Society's first concert of the present season took place at the Public Hall on January 16. The occasion was of more than usual interest, owing to the fact that Parts 1 and 2 of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' music and his 'Bon-bon Suite' were performed under the conductorship of the composer. The solo vocalists were Miss Barwell Hollbrook, Mr. James Horncastle and Mr. Julien Henry, special mention being due to Mr. Henry for his fine singing and keen artistic perception. The band and chorus, numbering about 160 performers, gave an intelligent and praiseworthy rendering of their parts, that of the chorus being particularly good in the 'Bon-bon Suite.' The part of the Watchman in No. 5 of the Suite was taken, at short notice, by Mr. Maynard Carter, a member of the chorus. The composer-conductor, who is very popular in Croydon, was enthusiastically received, and at the close of the concert a well-deserved call was made for Mr. Roland Richards, the indefatigable conductor of the Society.

DORCHESTER.—The Madrigal and Orchestral Society gave a performance of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast' on January 21, in the Corn Exchange. The choir sang with marked effect, especially in the unaccompanied portions, and the orchestra admittedly acquitted themselves well both in 'Hiawatha,' Beethoven's 'Prometheus' overture, and in German's 'Nell Gwyn' dances. Mr. Henry Turnpenney and Miss Whittle were the solo vocalists.

EASTBOURNE.—The Eastbourne (St. Anne's) Choral and Orchestral Society gave, at its opening concert at the Town Hall on January 21, an admirable performance of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast.' Mr. W. Maxwell was the soloist, and band and chorus numbered one hundred. Included in the programme were Elgar's 'Sea pictures,' sung, with orchestra, by Miss Mabel Braine; 'Kol Nidrei' (Bruch), played by Mr. Ivor James; and German's popular dances from 'Nell Gwyn.' Dr. L. A. Hamand conducted.

ENNISCORTHY.—The winter concert of the Choral Union took place at the Institute on January 19, when the recently-published selection from Gounod's 'Faust' was well performed by the choir and orchestra, under the conductorship of Mr. E. Challans. The solo parts were interpreted by Miss Lena Monroe, Miss Leeds, Mr. Jones and Mr. M. Kelly.

FARNHAM.—At the concert of the Musical Society on January 19 the programme included Bridge's 'The Flag of England,' and a miscellaneous selection, concluding with Eaton Fanning's 'The Vikings.' The soloists were Miss Doris Simpson, Miss Alice Aylwin, and The Rev. Father Turner. Mr. Percy R. Rowe conducted the small but capable choir and orchestra. A word of praise is due to Miss Dorothy Crow for her sympathetic accompaniments.

HOYLAKE.—A concert was given by the Choral Society, conducted by Mr. G. A. Jones, on December 30, at the Hoylake Institute. Romberg's 'Lay of the bell' occupied the first half of the programme, and the second part included a selection from 'Tannhäuser,' arranged by Percy E. Fletcher. The principal vocalists were Misses Flossie Lee, Cecilia May, Madame Lilian Rushton, Messrs. Tom Barlow, E. Parry and Fred Owens. Miss Plummer was the accompanist, and Mr. A. H. Dudley officiated at the organ.

IPSWICH.—Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast' and 'Death of Minnehaha' were admirably performed in the Public Hall on January 23. The choir and orchestra numbered 350, the latter being augmented by leading London instrumentalists. The solo vocalists were Miss Estella Linden, Mr. Webster Millar (who gave a very fine rendering of 'Onaway, awake, beloved') and Mr. Robin Overleigh. The second part consisted of selections from Handel's 'Samson' and 'Israel in Egypt.' Mr. Charles Holland was the organist, and Mr. William Hockey conducted.

LLANELLY.—The Bethel Choral Society gave a very creditable performance of Dr. Coward's 'The Story of Bethany,' on January 19, assisted by a select orchestra, led by Mr. D. Thomas. The solo parts were efficiently rendered by Miss Gertrude Hughes, Miss Winnie Stephens, and Mr. J. Amos Jones. Mr. J. Ancurin Thomas conducted.

MARKET DRAYTON.—The Musical Society's annual concert was given in the Town Hall on January 21, under the conductorship of Mr. Fred Evans, when Schubert's 'Song of Miriam,' Hamish MacCunn's 'Lord Ullin's daughter,' and Dr. J. F. Bridge's 'Inchcape Rock' were performed by a capital band and excellent chorus, numbering together nearly 100. Miss Majorie Eaton and Mr. Harry Downing were the solo vocalists, and instrumental solos were given by Miss Grace Thynne, Miss Anne Thynne and Mr. T. Balfour.

RHYL.—A concert was given in the Promenade Pavilion on January 21, in connection with the English Presbyterian Chapel, when Barnby's cantata 'Rebekah' was the chief feature of the programme. The choir was well balanced, and sang with spirit, being ably supported by a small orchestra led by Mr. H. Haselden. The solo parts were sung by Miss Louie James, Miss Ida Stanley, Mr. Thomas Gordon, and Mr. Vernon Harris. Mr. R. Bromley conducted.

SOUTH CROYDON.—The South Croydon and Sanderstead Choral Society gave a concert at St. Augustine's Hall on January 12, under the conductorship of Mr. John E. West. The principal features of the programme were Stanford's 'The Revenge' and Jensen's 'Feast of Adonis,' in both of which works the choir displayed intelligence and good expression. Further evidence of the careful training they had received from their able conductor was given in the part-songs 'Diaphenia' by Stanford and Pearsall's 'When Allen-a-Dale' (encored). The solo vocalists were Madame Windsor Locke (who sang the solo part in Jensen's cantata), Miss Lettie Dibdin, Mr. E. J. Cason and Mr. W. Tibble, pianoforte and violin solos being contributed respectively by Miss Margaret Cooper and Mr. Stanton Rees.

STOURBRIDGE.—The Concert Society gave a performance of Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' and Cowen's 'Sleeping beauty' in the Town Hall on January 18. The principal vocalists were Miss Elsie Edwards, Miss Annie Watson, Mr. Frank Mullings and Mr. T. Howell. The chorus throughout gave evidence of good training, the ladies especially singing with delicacy in the music of the Fays. The rendering of the choral interlude, 'Sleep in bower and hall,' was excellent. Mr. Halford is to be congratulated on the successful result of his labours as conductor.

SUNNINGDALE.—The first concert of the season by the Choral and Orchestral Society took place on January 20, when Bennett's 'May Queen' and Elgar's 'The Banner of St. George' were given under the direction of Mr. R. Barrett-Watson. The vocalists were Miss Lilian Dillingham, Miss Hichens, Mr. R. Richardson Jones, and Dr. Spencer Pearson.

SYDNEY (N.S.W.).—The Philharmonic Society gave the first performance in this city of Elgar's 'Caractacus' on December 3, under the able conductorship of Mr. Joseph Bradley. The solo parts were sung by Miss Zara Wolinski, Mr. James Crabtree, Mr. Charles Larsen and Mr. Andrew Black, the last-named artist distinguishing himself specially by a fine rendering of the 'Sword song' and the 'Lament.' Admirable work was done both by choir and orchestra, the former displaying excellent light and shade in their singing. A morning performance of the 'Messiah' was given by the Society on Christmas Day, and a special festival has been arranged to celebrate the Mendelssohn centenary during the present month. The programmes will include 'Elijah' and the 'Hymn of Praise.'

TORPOINT.—At the concert given by the Choral Association on January 13 the principal work performed was 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast,' which was well rendered by choir and orchestra, the solo being sung by Mr. John Gill. The choir also sang Gounod's 'Cradle song' and Eaton Fanning's 'Vikings,' giving evidence of careful training by the conductor, Mr. F. W. Moreton. Mozart's 'Don Giovanni' Overture, Mackenzie's 'Benedictus' and German's 'Nell Gwyn' dances were well played by the orchestra, led by Miss Ethel Allen, who also appeared as solo violinist. The other vocalists were Miss Edith Vaughan and Mr. G. Le Bailly.

TREORKY.—The Noddfa Choral Society gave admirable performances of Gounod's 'Redemption' on Christmas Day and of Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' on Boxing Day. In both these works the choir sang with refinement and power, displaying also in the former work the devotional feeling required by the theme, and the orchestra was specially effective in the accompaniment of the recitatives, the whole performance reflecting much credit on the conductor, Mr. Gomer Jones. The solo vocalists were Miss Ada Forrest, Miss Lucy Nuttall, Mr. Cynlais Gibbs and Mr. Robert Radford.

WEYBRIDGE.—The Choral Society gave a successful performance of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' trilogy in Holstein Hall on January 20. The solo vocalists were Miss Helen Stranger, Mr. Samuel Masters and Mr. F. Aubrey Millward. The choir sang with care and precision, and were ably supported by a professional orchestra led by Mr. Edward O'Brien. The whole performance was indicative of good training on the part of the conductor, Mr. A. Burnell.

NEW SACRED SONG FOR LENT.

THE NAZARENE

WORDS AND MUSIC BY

JOSEPH H. ADAMS.

I stood on the hill of Calvary
As the sun was sinking low,
And thought of all the wondrous things,
That happened long ago.
And as in contemplation
I gazed upon the scene,
I saw the Saviour of the world,
The gentle Nazarene;
I thought of His compassion,
His love for sinful men;
I thought of dark Gethsemane,
And all He suffered then;
I saw Him in the judgment hall
In robes of shame arrayed,
And love and grief welled in my heart,
And kneeling there I prayed—
"O loving Saviour, by Thy bitter anguish,
By all Thy love for our sinful race,
Grant Life Eternal, O Lord Supernal,
Hear us in Heaven Thy dwelling-place."

I saw Him hanging on the cross,
I heard Him as He cried
For pardon for His enemies
Who mocked Him as He died.
And on the Resurrection morn
I saw the Saviour rise
Victorious over Death and Hell,
Triumphant in the skies:
And then, enthroned over all
(How changed was the scene),
As King of kings, and Lord of lords,
I saw the Nazarene
Surrounded by a glorious host,
Who praise Him and adore;
And in Eternal Majesty
He reigns for evermore.

"O loving Saviour, by Thy bitter anguish,
By all Thy love for our sinful race,
Grant Life Eternal, O Lord Supernal,
Hear us in Heaven Thy dwelling-place."

ALFRED R. GAUL'S PASSION SERVICE

FOR THE SEASON OF
LENT AND GOOD FRIDAY.

"Scholarly writing, combined with unmistakable talent, and eminently adapted to the purpose for which it was written and composed. The work will probably be largely used, and Mr. Gaul has to be congratulated upon another success."—Sheffield Independent.

"The course of sacred events connected with the Passion is laid out by the writer so as to form a series of six distinct 'scenes.' The subjects of these divisions, each occupied with a particular stage of the Mystery, are respectively: 'The Traitor at the Table,' 'The Denial,' 'The Condemnation before Pilate,' 'The Mockery on Calvary,' 'The Shadow of Death,' and 'The Holy Sepulchre.' The style of the composition resembles generally that of Mr. Gaul's previous writings—the same effective, grateful part-writing, and the same expressive and melodious treatment of the solo voice. In those sections, notably that of the Unjust Condemnation, where the realistic element is predominant, the composer has manifested his ability to write with dramatic force and intensity as well as with lyric charm. In this respect the choral writing distinguished itself in comparison with that in the 'Holy City' and other of the composer's works. Mr. Gaul has not written new hymn tunes for the author's lyrics; the tunes selected are from among those in ordinary congregational use. Altogether considered, Mr. Gaul's new work will, undoubtedly, greatly enhance his already high reputation in the line of sacred composition."—Musical Standard.

"There are passages of surpassing beauty and brilliance. . . . From the opening bars to the finish there was not a dull moment."—Pontypool Free Press.

THE TEN VIRGINS A SACRED CANTATA

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"Will be heartily welcomed by all who love the art of music."—Newcastle Journal.

"The work will certainly go through Saxondom in the wake of its predecessors from the same pen."—London Daily Telegraph.

"Must attain popularity wherever heard, and will assuredly be placed among the foremost compositions of this kind by present-day writers . . . treated in a thoroughly artistic manner . . . a perfect wealth of melody and striking individuality of style."—Liverpool Daily Courier.

"Works which have placed him in the front rank of English composers—the 'Holy City,' 'Joan of Arc,' and 'The Ten Virgins.'"—Newcastle Daily Journal.

"The choral writing in 'The Ten Virgins' is alone something to be thankful for, and, as we have intimated, it is only one of the many musical virtues of the Cantata."—Leamington Chronicle.

"BOW AND BROMLEY INSTITUTE CHOIR.—The hall was overcrowded by an audience that was disposed to encore every other number of the work. That Mr. Gaul should have secured this undoubted popular success with a work far more contrapuntal than any of his former works, is a remarkable tribute to his power of welding science and beauty into one whole."—The Musical Times.

"The subject is an excellent one for a Cantata . . . a stronger work than 'Joan of Arc.' Melodious, vocal, and of moderate difficulty, and, like Mr. Gaul's earlier Cantatas, will be eagerly welcomed by societies in search of new works having these characteristics."—Newcastle Daily Leader.

"That 'The Ten Virgins' is a much finer work than the everywhere favourite 'Holy City' we have no doubt whatever. Mr. Gaul has aimed at fine outline and telling colouring, and all that he has aimed at he has achieved."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

JOAN OF ARC AN HISTORICAL CANTATA

FOR THREE SOLO VOICES, CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"Few cantatas are as rich in chaste melodies, charming choruses, and exquisite orchestration as Alfred R. Gaul's 'Joan of Arc,' performed for the first time in Plymouth by the Vocal Association in the Guildhall."—The Western News.

"Must enhance the high reputation of its composer."—Liverpool Courier.

"The inspiration of a highly-refined musician. . . . The Cantata even a more masterly and beautiful work than 'The Holy City.'"—Huddersfield Examiner.

"No more charming Cantata than 'Joan of Arc' could have been chosen. It abounds in delicious music. There is not a tedious note in it."—Newcastle-on-Tyne Daily Chronicle.

"Gives the listener a vivid and realistic impression, its attractiveness being continuous instead of spasmodic."—Bradford Observer.

"The Exeter Oratorio Society last night achieved a brilliant success, and it may safely be said, without fear of exaggeration, that never before have they performed a work more satisfactory to themselves or more interesting to the audience than 'Joan of Arc.'"—Western Times.

"One of the most delightful concerts ever given by the South Shields Choral Society was that of last evening, when the principal piece was 'Joan of Arc.' We cannot speak too highly of Mr. Gaul's work, which is of the most interesting description."—The Shields Daily News.

Price, paper cover, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s.; scarlet cloth, 4s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Vocal parts, each 1s.; Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

THE WORDS BY

THOMAS MOORE

THE MUSIC BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.

String Parts, 7s. 6d.: Wind Parts and Full Score, MS.

THE TIMES.

Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's delightful suite, with its vivid orchestral idiom, its rapid turns of poetic expression, its humour and its gaiety, demands readiness from a chorus, rhythmic energy and skill in chromatic passages, as well as a general lightness of handling.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

It certainly possesses not a little charm, as in the song to Rosa, much grace and delicacy, as in the chorus "The Fairy Boat," humour, as in the dolorous female chorus "Love and Hymen," and poetry, as in the very different number bearing the title "The Watchman." Moreover, the hand of Mr. Coleridge-Taylor is as clearly to be observed in several numbers, as in "Hiawatha," so far its composer's masterpiece. Mr. Coleridge-Taylor, and those who helped him to the genuine success he achieved, had good cause to be pleased with themselves, since the reception was a particularly cordial one, and, I may add, was well deserved.

MORNING POST.

There is variety and imagination in the lines which give an impulse to the qualities of melody and picturesqueness which Mr. Coleridge-Taylor knows so well how to express. They do not fail him in this instance. He provides in the six numbers, divided between the chorus and the baritone solo, every evidence of his ability to write tunelessly, and with a certain individuality which gives his music distinction. The choral writing shows excellent workmanship, and its effect is consequently unflinching. In the orchestral colouring there is plenty of contrast. Now and again the colour is laid on rather heavily for a piece of this texture, but it helps to increase the contrast. The composer shows a happy appreciation of the delicacy of the poem and reproduces it successfully. The number for female voices only, "Love had a Fever," is an example of his most felicitous treatment. The Watchman verse is set in a fanciful fashion, with choral accompaniment to the utterances of the lingering lover interspersed with the warnings by the Watchman of the passing hours. The finale, "What shall we dance?" leaves that question very little in doubt, as the setting is irresistibly rhythmic and delightfully tuneful. No work that Mr. Coleridge-Taylor has produced recently has shown so many features that constitute popularity, and the Suite, with its equal distribution of interest between chorus, orchestra, and soloist, is likely to win for its composer a fresh lease of public approval.

STANDARD.

It was greeted with great enthusiasm, and the composer, who personally directed his work, met with a flattering reception. The suite consists of six settings of verses by Moore, each possessing the character of a distinct tone-picture. For the most part, full use is made of the force of orchestra, chorus, and soloist, but the fifth number is purely vocal in treatment, and it was in this that a very striking effect was produced by a chime accompaniment. The last movement, "Say, what shall we dance?" was a brilliant example of dance music of a lively Spanish character.

YORKSHIRE POST.

The music is romantic and elegant, and characteristic of the composer. The second number, named "The Fairy Boat," seemed rather too heavily scored for the subject, dealing with the fleeting joys and hopes of youth. But perhaps this impression was owing to the want of lighter rendering. This was succeeded by a charming setting for the chorus of "To Rose," a graceful dirge on the death of Love. The fourth movement, which has for text "Love and Hymen," is not so spontaneous as it might be. It is really a duet for soprano and alto, and requires a good deal of finish in singing to make it effective. The next number, called "The Watchman," has humorous touches. A lover bids good-bye to his sweetheart in such long-drawn-out ecstasy as to last from midnight to past three a.m., the watchman giving out the passing hours, and the chorus echoing his warnings. The concluding number is a gay and spirited setting of "Say, what shall we dance?"

For a century or more the vast majority of English children have been brought up in total ignorance of the racial and traditional folk-music of their own country. It is significant that, during that period, the musical taste of the educated classes has become more and more cosmopolitan, while that of the lower classes, at any rate in the towns, has been degraded to the level of the unlovely song of the street. Obviously the remedy is to restore the English folk-song to those to whom it belongs by right of inheritance.

Fortunately it still is possible to recover the songs themselves; indeed, many collectors have been and are engaged upon this necessary and useful work. The next step is to select the best of these, to arrange and publish them in a suitable and inexpensive form, and so place them within the reach of the teachers of primary and secondary schools throughout the country. That is the purpose of this Series, of which these songs collected in Somerset are the first instalment.

"A thoughtful and temperate essay."—The Spectator.
"A clear-headed and effective statement of the case for Debussy and the new order of things, and may be cordially recommended to the musical reader."—Birmingham Post.

"Earnestly and ably written."—The Scotsman.
"Ceaseless modulation and shifting tonality do not make for popularity in the widest sense, but the cultured musicians of this un-musical country are finding in Debussy's music a flexibility and felicity as well as a sheer beauty of harmonic utterance that fascinates and haunts. . . . Mr. Daly's little book is frankly appreciative, but it supports the case for Debussy with close reasoning, set down in terms that will appeal to the large class of intelligent music lovers. That it will command a wide circle of readers we do not doubt, for the interest aroused by M. Debussy's recent visit to London will be further enhanced by his appearance in Edinburgh."—Aberdeen Free Press.

The Competition Festival Record

No. 7.

CAPE COLONY.

THE school competitions continue to be a feature of the encouragement given to school music teaching. Recent numbers of the Education Gazette, which is the official organ of the Education Department, record three events of this kind.

At Port Elizabeth, on September 18, a competition for a silver shield, presented by the Town Council, was held in the Town Hall. Only two choirs sang. Each choir sang Dr. Walford Davies's trio "The shepherd," and an own-choice trio. St. Paul's (Mrs. E. Wright) is said to have displayed excellent tone, the voices being strong and flexible. A very high standard was reached in "The shepherd." The own-choice piece was Hatton's "Now let us make the welkin ring" (s.s.c.). It was started too slowly, but the choir hurried at the words "A merry roundelay," and afterwards the correct tempo was established. As in the first song, the parts were balanced and voices spirited. In the unison sight-test the phrase: proved an awkward stumbling block, and there was a strong inclination to sing the difficult interval t fs as t se, but otherwise the choir was good. [Ought these unusual "imperfect" method passages to be given in children's sight-tests?—ED.] The two-part sight-tests presented no difficulty, and a high mark was gained.

Russell Road (Mr. T. H. McClelland).—The soft singing of this choir was much enjoyed, the six opening bars of each verse of "The shepherd" being beyond criticism. There was a tendency to clip certain words such as "praise," and the choir became uneven and shrill in attempting the loud passages. The own-choice piece, Stainer's "Now the golden morn" (s.s.c.), was very tastefully sung, to the delight of the audience, but lack of strength was noticed in all f and ff passages. The unison sight-test was taken about M. 80, whereas it was marked M. 54. The interval t fs was successfully taken, but the other errors of the first choir were made as well as two additional mistakes in tune and one in time. The two-part test was well sung to laa, but the first attempt to sing the syllables proved disastrous owing to the altos persistently following half-a-bar behind the trebles for nearly two scores. The tonality of the trebles was most pleasing.

St. Paul's School Choir was declared the winner. The Superintendent-General of Education gave book prizes to each member of this choir, and a medal to the conductor.

Prizes for ear-training were also given by the Department to May James and Florence Fisher, of St. Paul's School, and Norah Booth and Johanna Fieggen, of Russell Road School, who were judged to be the best of their respective choirs. Mr. D. M. Whyte, Mr. J. W. Goldsbrough and Mr. F. Farrington, Departmental Inspectors, were the adjudicators.

A competition for the districts of Colesberg, Hanover, Middelburg and Steynsburg was held at various dates, terminating with September 22. The following public schools were represented, each choir being heard in its own town, to avoid travelling long distances:

Naanupoort Public School (Mr. R. B. Smith).
Hanover Public School (Miss E. S. v.d. Merwe).
Middelburg Public School (Miss A. S. Keet).
Steynsburg Public School (Miss F. E. Wormald).

The prescribed song was Hatton's "The sailor's song" (s.s.c.). Mr. F. Farrington adjudicated. The following are passages from his report:

NAAUWPOORT.—A well-trained choir. The prescribed song was only moderately sung. The selected song was Fletcher's "Harvest home" (s.c.), which was delightfully sung, and calls for no criticism. The unison sight-test was admirably sung, but a fall in pitch was noticed. In the two-part test, weakness was shown in the fifth bar only.

HANOVER.—This choir suffered by comparison with the others. Good material was noticed, but insufficient training had been received. Attack, phrasing and balance of parts were weak generally, but the rallentando passage in the prescribed song was creditably sung. Thompson's "Night hymn at sea" (s.s.c.) was selected. The humming introduction was omitted, and thus the effect was marred. Six errors in time were noticed in the unison sight-test. The two-part test was much better, quite a good attempt being made.

MIDDELBURG.—A very strong choir, but lacking finish. The prescribed song had been carefully studied, the balance of parts being particularly good, but expression only fair. Bishop's "Sleep, gentle lady" (s.c.) gave much pleasure to the listeners, but this might have been greater had the choir not shown reluctance to sing the piano passages softly. In sight-singing the choir was fairly strong, but mistakes were made at the first reading.

STEYNSBURG.—A very well-trained choir, but wanting somewhat in balance, the alto voices being too thin. The prescribed song was sung with taste and expression. The selected song was Stevens' "Blow, blow, thou winter wind" (s.c.), the rendering being excellent. A poor start was made in the unison sight-test, and the choir wavered somewhat in singing to laa. The two-part test was perfectly sung, the altos proving their true value for the first time.

The shield was awarded to the Steynsburg Choir.

Prizes for ear-training will be awarded to two children from each School.

PUBLIC SCHOOL CHOIR COMPETITION.

The third yearly contest between the schools in Britstown, Hopetown and Philipstown was held on November 18, 20, and 23. The competition aroused considerable local interest. The Mayor, Mr. P. S. Cilliers, presided over a large audience in the schoolroom at Britstown, Mr. J. A. v. S. D'Oliveira, R.M., at Hopetown, and Mr. J. G. Rose Innes, A.R.M., at Petrusville.

The prescribed song was Callcott's "Merry it is now in the good greenwood," and the selected items were:

"The angel" (Rubinstein): Britstown (Mr. P. J. Luckhoff).
"The morning is glowing" (Donizetti): Hopetown (Mr. T. A. Anderson).
"Sleep, gentle lady" (Bishop): Petrusville (Mr. A. L. Botha).

Mr. Arthur Lee, Departmental Instructor, acted as adjudicator. The following are extracts from his report:

BRITSTOWN.—The rendering of "Merry it is now in the good greenwood" was a really fine performance. Full marks were given for general accuracy, rests, words, and pitch. The tone was good, and the choristers sang with well-opened mouths. There might have been more variation of force and tempo. As an unaccompanied duet, Rubinstein's "Angel" was not a good selection. The piano passages were only fair, and the choir fell in pitch. The sight-reading was highly creditable. A few choristers tripped with certain octave marks in the first reading of the two-part test, but in every other respect the reading was thoroughly satisfactory. The time and rhythm of the unison tests were unsteady, and there was a slight fall in pitch, mismanagement of breath being responsible for both.

HOPETOWN.—This choir consisted of mixed voices. Non-observance of rests and fall in pitch were the chief defects. "The morning is glowing" was sung with pleasing effect. The voices blended well, the parts were sung correctly, and there was no fall in pitch. A quicker tempo would have been an improvement. The sight-tests were read more fluently than at the two preceding contests. The notation of time no longer gives trouble, but the singing to lat is still weak. It is only fair to state that Mr. Anderson entered on his present charge at the beginning of this quarter.

PETRUSVILLE.—The outstanding features of this choir were style and general finish. Much was made of the words. The variations of force and time showed considerable intelligence. The voices blended well, and, while the tone was not so full and round as that produced by the Britstown choir, the piano singing was much superior. "Sleep, gentle lady" was handled most delicately. The crescendo passages were developed with arresting effect, and the diminuendo close brought down to the faintest whisper. Each piece was sung unaccompanied. In the prescribed song there was a slight fall. The sight-reading was excellent. The few slips with octave marks made by the altos in the first reading were not repeated. The time was firm in both pieces.

The award of the challenge shield for 1908-9 is made in favour of the Public School of Petrusville. The usual prizes were presented to the teacher and the members of the choir. Prizes for ear-tests were won by six children.

CHESTER.

December 26.

At the twentieth Christmas Eisteddfod Mr. Harry Evans was the adjudicator. The winning choirs were Buckley Musical Choir (Mr. David Hayes) in the mixed-voice competition, and Warrington Apollo (Mr. Harry Berrey) in the male-voice competition. Mr. J. M. Bagillt (tenor) and Miss K. P. Buckley (contralto) were winners in the solo-singing contests.

DOLGELLEY.

January 1.

The thirty-sixth annual Eisteddfod was an all-round success, and in point of entries it was a record one. The adjudicators were Mr. J. C. Clarke (of Southport) and Mr. Wilfred Jones. The following were the winners:

Second choral (mixed), Prysor Choir (Trawsfynydd).

In the evening a concert was given by the Idris Choral Society, under the conductorship of Mr. O. O. Roberts. The programme included "Sleepers, wake" (Bach) and "The Revenge" (Stanford).

MIDDLESBROUGH.

January 1 and 2.

The Cleveland and Durham Eisteddfod festival was held at Middlesbrough with great success. There were over one hundred vocal soloists and about seventy solo instrumentalists. The juvenile solo-singing test was "Thou art passed," a song describing the gradual fading away of a little sister:

Ah! our hearts were sad and heavy
As we watched thee day by day;
Saw thy cheeks grow paler, paler,
Saw thee fading fast away.

Thirty-four children sang these doleful words. What good can be expected by asking young children to practise and perform in public—thirty-nine times—such words as these? The tests in the adult solo-singing classes were:

Bass. "Hybrias the Cretan" (Elliott).
Contralto. "What is life without thee" (Chafaro) (Gluck).
Tenor. "Adelaide" (Beethoven).
Soprano. "From mighty kings" (Handel).

In the choral classes the tests, entries, and results were as follows:

Mr. Dan Price adjudicated the vocal classes. In the course of his awards he congratulated the committee on the very happy choice they had made in the selection of the test-pieces generally.

"Welshmen in England," he remarked, "are giving a lead to Welshmen in Wales. They are selecting pretty pieces to work upon, and after all it is the preparation which is of chief value."

WORKINGTON.

WHARFEDALE (ILKLEY).

April 29, 30, and May 1.

The syllabus of this festival is now issued. We regret to note that Mr. A. Aitken Crawshaw is no longer one of the officials; owing to business engagements elsewhere he has been compelled to withdraw. It was chiefly owing to Mr. Crawshaw's initiative, faith and works that the festival was established in 1907. But the new syllabus shows no signs of falling off. Every detail exhibits thought and careful judgment. Four new open classes are announced. These are for (a) choir boys' solo singing; (b) pianoforte solo; (c) contralto solo; (d) tenor solo, and the former junior classes are systematically sub-divided. Classes for the performance of folk-songs (not necessarily newly-discovered) are also announced. Altogether there are forty-one classes in the syllabus. The choral music includes the following music by well-known composers :

These nineteen pieces provide a richly varied programme. The songs and other pieces are chosen with corresponding eclecticism. Dr. Sinclair is announced as the sole adjudicator. We are afraid he will not have much time to make the acquaintance of the beauties of Ilkley.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

TENTERDEN STREET, HANOVER SQUARE.

INSTITUTED, 1822.

INCORPORATED BY ROYAL CHARTER, 1830.

Patron: HIS MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND STRATHEARN, K.G.

PRINCIPAL—SIR ALEXANDER CAMPBELL MACKENZIE, Mus.D., LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.A.M.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC offers to students of both sexes (whether amateur or professional) a thorough training in all branches of music under the most able and distinguished Professors. In addition to receiving individual lessons in the various branches of the Curriculum, students have the advantage of attending the Orchestral, Choral, Chamber Music Classes, and the weekly Lectures on music and musicians. Evidence of progress is given at the Fortnightly and Public Concerts and by periodical Operatic and Dramatic Performances.

There are three Terms in the Academic year—viz., the Michaelmas Term, from Michaelmas to Christmas; the Lent Term, from early in January to Easter; and the Midsummer Term, from early in May until the end of July.

The Fee for the ordinary curriculum is 11 Guineas per Term.

A large number of Scholarships and Prizes are founded and are competed for periodically.

Students who show special merit and ability receive the distinction of being elected by the Directors Associates of the Institution, and are thereby entitled to the use after their names of the initials A.R.A.M. Students who distinguish themselves in the musical profession after leaving the Institution may be elected by the Directors Fellows of the Royal Academy of Music, and are thereupon entitled to the use after their names of the initials F.R.A.M.

Subscribers have the privilege of attending the Lectures and Public Concerts and of introducing friends in proportion to the amount of their subscriptions.

An examination of persons trained independently of the Academy is held twice a year—viz., during the Summer and Christmas vacations—successful candidates at which are elected Associates of the Academy, and are thereupon entitled to the use after their names of the initials L.R.A.M. The syllabus is issued annually at Easter. Last day for entry for the Summer Examination, June 30; for the Christmas Examination, October 31.

An examination of persons engaged in the Training of Children's Voices is held in September and during the Christmas Vacation, and a certificate will be granted to successful candidates.

Prospectus, entry form, and all further information may be obtained on application.

F. W. RENAUT, Secretary.

of muscle is indispensable for producing good tone on the pianoforte, and is natural to those in good health. It is destroyed by long Keyboard practice, which hardens the touch, but the Macdonald Smith Exercises restore it readily and all technical 'drudgery' is rendered unnecessary to Students of the System. Mere elasticity of muscle should not be confounded with rapidity and independence of control, points of much greater importance save in the matter of tone-production, but also imparted by this System to all healthy players.

MR. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

'How's your backbone?' This vertebrate question was addressed by Charles Darwin—the centenary of whose birth was celebrated last month—to his college friend the late John Maurice Herbert. Was the interrogation of a scientific nature? No; it was prompted by a musical experience. How so? The two undergraduates were listening to the rendering of a beautiful anthem in King's College Chapel, Cambridge. At one particular point in the anthem, Darwin was thrilled by a strain of solemn music, and he wondered if his sensations were shared by his companion. The trained musician is perhaps less sensitive to such thrills than one who, like Darwin, was 'unmusical.' In listening to music his critical faculties are apt to repress the vibrations of the heart-strings of his emotions, with the result that he may derive less pure enjoyment from listening to music than the less technically equipped amateur. There are, however, moments in the life of a musician when he experiences in no small degree the Darwinian 'backbone' thrill. And what if it be accompanied by 'a lump in the throat'? The present writer vividly recalls one such experience when listening to the first performance of 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast,' Longfellow's poem, as set to music by the gifted composer who forms the subject of this biographical sketch.

Samuel Coleridge-Taylor was born at 15, Theobalds Road, Holborn, on August 15, 1875. His father was a native of Sierra Leone, on the West coast of Africa, and a doctor by profession; his mother was an Englishwoman. 'Neither of my parents was particularly musical,' he says, 'but my father interested himself in the instrument named colangee, known on the West coast of Africa. When I was about a year old my mother removed to Croydon, and there I have since lived for thirty-two years. My first teacher in music was my maternal grandfather, Mr. Benjamin Holman, who gave me some lessons on the violin when I was quite a child. I afterwards became a violin pupil of Mr. Joseph Beckwith, who might be able to tell you something about my early days.' In response to our request, Mr. Beckwith has kindly supplied the following information concerning his now distinguished pupil. He writes:

I first saw Coleridge-Taylor playing at marbles, holding a very small-sized violin in one hand and his marbles in the other. He was then about six years old. I was giving a lesson at the time at a house in the Waddon New Road, Croydon, and on looking out of the window I saw the boy, was so struck with his appearance—a well-dressed, curly-headed, little dark boy—that I invited him into the house and placed a copy of some simple violin duets before him, some of which he read perfectly in time and tune. His grandfather had been giving him lessons. I was so taken with the boy that I gave him lessons on the violin and in music generally. He was under my tuition for about seven years. During that time he was in great demand for At Homes, Soirées, &c., when he used, very prettily, to play the little solos I taught him. At one of my pupils' concerts he was so small that I had to stand him on some boxes that he might be seen by the audience above the ferns. At that time he also had a beautiful soprano voice, and always took the solos in the anthems at, I think, St. Mary's Church, Addiscombe. Mr. Coleridge-Taylor has never forgotten me, and we are now very great friends. He taught my son—A. R. C. Beckwith, and an ex-Scholar of the Royal College of Music—harmony for two years, and he has made him Leader of the Handel Society Orchestra, of which Coleridge-Taylor is the conductor.

In relating his life-story, Mr. Coleridge-Taylor naturally speaks in terms of great gratitude in regard to his guardian-friend and benefactor, Colonel Herbert A. Walters, V.D. (late commanding the 4th Battalion 'The Queen's' Regiment). In response to our request, Colonel Walters has contributed the following interesting account of the boyhood of his young friend, whose welfare he has so much at heart. Colonel Walters says:

COLERIDGE-TAYLOR AS A BOY.

(From a photograph kindly lent by Mr. Joseph Beckwith.)

Perhaps I may claim to have 'discovered' Coleridge-Taylor when he was about nine years old. He was then at the British School, Croydon, where the boys were well taught, and received excellent elementary musical instruction in the tonic sol-fa system. In the course of conversation one day with Mr. Drage, the headmaster, he mentioned the fact that he had a little boy of colour in the school, who seemed to be very quick at music. I said I should like to see him, and shortly afterwards arranged to do so. I was much struck with the boy's intelligence and bright, though shy manner. Shortly afterwards, I took him into the choir of St. George's Presbyterian Church, Croydon, of which I was the honorary choir-master. From that time I took young Taylor under my special care, and used to have him up to my house in order to teach him some simple theory of music, voice production and solo singing. He was a most delightful pupil, quick, eager and with a wonderful ear. I then practically became his guardian, and looked after him until he came of age. He developed a beautiful voice, and became solo boy of the choir.

When I left the Presbyterian Church to attend the parish church of St. Mary Magdalene, Addiscombe—of which Mr. J. H. Wallis was and is still the organist and choir-master—I was asked to take up the training of the boys' voices. Some of my boys from St. George's—Coleridge-Taylor, of course, among them—wanted to come with me. This was soon arranged, and it is in connection with St. Mary's, Addiscombe, that Coleridge-Taylor will best be remembered by Croydon people as a chorister, for long after his voice broke he continued in the choir as an alto singer. He was very popular with the other boys, and used to take all the solos in the anthems until his upper notes began to get shaky. Both at St. George's and at St. Mary's he used to sing at the annual choir concerts, and occasionally went with me to take the solos at special services at other churches.

I must mention that for some years he had been taking lessons on the violin from a local teacher, Mr. Joseph Beckwith, under whose careful tuition he made excellent progress. He had taken to the violin quite early, and by the time he was twelve or thirteen played brilliantly. His violin solos were always a great feature at our choir concerts and local entertainments.

After he left school I decided, with his mother's consent, upon a musical career for him, feeling quite sure in my own mind that he would make his mark. After a long and encouraging talk with my dear old friend Sir George Grove, he was entered as a student at the Royal College of Music in September, 1890, taking the violin as 'first study.' Although he found himself among a crowd of clever young musicians from all parts of the country, he soon attracted attention, and in 1893 succeeded in winning an open scholarship for composition.

I must go back a little, however, to say that in the summer of 1892 I received a letter from Sir George asking me to lunch with him at the College, as he wanted to have a chat with me about my ward's future. He then told me he felt sure that the boy's true bent was composition, that he showed signs of distinct ability and originality in that direction, and Sir George finally advised me to let him take up composition as leading study. Coleridge-Taylor had at this time written one or two short and simple anthems and part-songs, all very charming in style and smooth in the part-writing. Dr. (now Sir George) Martin was so pleased with one of the anthems I showed him that he immediately had it sung at St. Paul's Cathedral.

On October 4, 1892, Sir George Grove wrote me: 'I have arranged with Dr. Stanford to take Taylor with composition as his "first study." Both Dr. Gladstone and Dr. Stanford were much pleased with the anthems, which, I think, show a great deal of feeling and aptness for that style of work. I have talked the matter over with Mr. Holmes, and he thinks it will be really best for him to drop the violin and take pianoforte for second study, and to work rather harder at it than he does at present.'

I need say little of the rest of Coleridge-Taylor's College career, except that I shall always feel deeply grateful for the great kindness shown to my protégé by Sir George Grove and Sir Charles Stanford. It is unnecessary to say anything of the splendid teaching he received from Sir Charles (composition), Sir Frederick Bridge (counterpoint), Mr. Algernon Ashton (pianoforte), Mr. Henry Holmes (violin), Dr. W. G. Alcock (organ), and other professors. I have all his College reports. On that for Easter term, 1893, Sir George Grove wrote: 'Now you are a scholar I shall look for a great advance. You are now before the world.' And at the foot of his last report (1897) Sir Hubert Parry wrote: 'We shall be very sorry to lose Mr. Coleridge-Taylor. His career at the College has been honourable and distinguished in a high degree.'

Amongst his very earliest attempts at composition were a set of hymn tunes—two of which are really little gems in their way, and worthy of inclusion in new collections—and a Te Deum which he sent me as a present in 1890. Although the Te Deum naturally contained several mistakes in harmony, the setting is admirably conceived and might, with some little 'editing,' become immensely popular if published.

To the above interesting account contributed by Colonel Walters, must be added the fact that he most generously paid the entire expenses—fees at the Royal College of Music and incidentals—attending the musical education of his protégé.

It was during his choristership at St. George's Presbyterian Church, Croydon, that Master Coleridge-Taylor made his first appearance before a London audience, and in the capacity of a solo-vocalist! This was at a Presbyterian meeting held in Exeter Hall on June 18, 1888, when he sang Gounod's 'There is a green hill far away' in such a manner as to make a wonderful impression upon the audience. As already stated in Colonel Walters's notes, Coleridge-Taylor, as a boy aged fifteen, became, in September, 1890, a student at the Royal College of Music, taking the violin as his principal study. In 1893 he obtained, by open competition, a composition scholarship, which covered the usual tenure of three years; at the end of that time it was renewed for another year, thus he remained a student at the Royal College for seven years.

Previous to obtaining the scholarship he had composed some anthems. In this respect he followed the example of Sullivan, who began his creative career as a composer of church music. It was in January, 1892, when in his seventeenth year, that Coleridge-Taylor obtained the dignity of print when his anthem 'In Thee, O Lord' was issued by Messrs. Novello. In that year four other anthems were issued by the same publishers:

The Lord is my strength (Easter).

Lift up your heads (short festival anthem).

O ye that love the Lord.

Break forth into joy (Christmas).

The last named was dedicated to Colonel Walters 'with respect and affection, by his former pupil.' In the year that he obtained his scholarship—on October 9, 1893—he gave a concert of chamber music at Croydon, when the programme included his Pianoforte quintet in G minor. His progress as a composition student at the Royal College of Music was very rapid, as the columns of The Musical Times bear ample testimony. Here are some of the works, with dates of performance, given at the students' concerts, taken from the columns of this journal :

Nonet in F minor for pianoforte, strings and wind. July 5, 1894.

Zara's ear-rings (from Lockhart's Spanish Ballads), for soprano and orchestra. February 6, 1895.

Five Fantasiestücke for string quartet. March 13, 1895.

Quintet for clarinet and strings. July 10, 1895.

Two pieces (Lament and Merrymaking) for violin and pianoforte, published as Op. 9. January 22, 1896.

Symphony in A minor. March 6, 1896.

String quartet in D minor. June 25, 1896.

Legend, from Concertstück for violin and orchestra. February 13, 1897.

In a notice of the first of these performances, The Musical Times said (August, 1894) :

Of two concerts of chamber music given during the past month by the pupils of this Institution, the first, on the 5th ult., was particularly distinguished by the production of a Nonet in F minor for pianoforte, strings, and wind, by S. Coleridge-Taylor, a pupil and scholar. It is quite unnecessary to find fault with Mr. Taylor's ambition, both because experience will soon correct that failing and because there is such striking merit in his work as furnishes an excellent excuse. The whole Nonet is most interesting, its themes are fresh and vigorous, and their treatment proves that the writer has learned to compose with freedom and to treat with skill. The Scherzo is unquestionably the most striking movement, and few would guess it to be the work of one still a student. We shall look for further work from Mr. Taylor with great interest.

Joachim was so pleased with the Clarinet quintet that he led a performance of it at Berlin in 1897. Twice (in 1895 and 1896) during the period of his scholarship Coleridge-Taylor won the Lesley Alexander prize of £10 for composition. On June 5, 1897, the year that he left the College, he gave a concert at the Salle Erard, the programme consisting entirely of his own compositions. In this connection The Musical Times may again be quoted :

Admirers of 'national' music should have flocked to the Salle Erard on the 5th ult., when that remarkable young composer, Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor, who, as our readers know, is of partly African descent, gave a concert. The programme consisted of nine new songs, some pieces for violin and pianoforte ('Hiawathan sketches'), and five Fantasiestücke for string quartet, all of his own composition, interspersed with recitations by the gifted young negro poet, Mr. Paul Dunbar. We cannot find space to do more than generally express our astonishment at a composer barely out of his teens who produces work after work showing remarkable originality in almost every bar. Mr. Taylor, while still a student, reflects neither his teacher's nor anybody else's music, such a case being, perhaps, without precedent in the history of our art. That the element of beauty, as we understand it, seems as yet somewhat dormant in his music need not be insisted upon; for the young composer will doubtless develop in that as in other respects.

After leaving the Royal College of Music, Mr. Coleridge-Taylor accepted the post of violin teacher at the Croydon Conservatoire of Music. But his true vocation was composition. The first time, as a composer, that he made his appeal to the public was his appearance at the Gloucester Musical Festival of 1898. At the Wednesday evening concert—September 14—his Orchestral ballade in A minor (Op. 33) was produced under his own direction, and at its conclusion the young composer-conductor received a well-merited ovation. Grove introduced Coleridge-Taylor to Manns, who, always ready to further the interests of native composers, promptly included the Ballade in the programme of a Crystal Palace concert—that of November 4, 1898—when the brilliant work was again conducted by the composer.

On Friday evening, November 11, 1898, an eagerly expectant audience assembled in the Concert Hall of the Royal College of Music, attracted thither by the first performance of 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast,' a work dedicated to Sir George Grove 'as a slight token of sincerest affection, respect, and admiration.'

In reply to the request for some information concerning the composition of his masterpiece, Mr. Coleridge-Taylor tells us that Longfellow's poem appealed to his fancy as a boy, not by reason of its musical potentialities, but on account of its 'funny names.' Previous to setting the words to music, the poem had inspired his 'Hiawathan sketches' (Op. 16) for violin and pianoforte. 'The writing of the music of the cantata,' he says, 'came to me quite naturally, and I did not feel handicapped by the supposed monotony of the poem. I derived great help and much encouragement from my friend Mr. A. J. Jaeger, whose criticisms and suggestions were of the greatest value to me. Sir Arthur Sullivan was present at the performance. He was then in a very poor state of health, and had previously said to me "I am always an ill man, but if I have to be carried I shall come to the concert," and he did. The students sang and played the work splendidly, and Sir Charles Stanford, to whom I owe so much, took great pains in securing a good performance.'

The success of 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast' was not only immediate and incontestable, but the work has retained its popularity in an almost unprecedented degree. It has even been performed at Constantinople! The 'Wedding-feast' was followed by 'The Death of Minnehaha' (produced at the North Staffordshire Festival, Hanley, October 26, 1899), and the Trilogy was completed by 'The departure of Minnehaha,' the entire work being performed by the Royal Choral Society at the Royal Albert Hall on March 22, 1900. Since then the 'Song of Hiawatha,' either in its complete or sectional form, has made its way to the ends of the earth, delighting choralists and audiences whenever and wherever it is performed. To enlarge upon the creative activities of our composer is unnecessary: the long list of compositions given at the end of this article testifies alike to his industry and versatility. Special mention must be made of the music—overture, entr'actes, and incidental—which he has specially composed for the four plays written by Mr. Stephen Phillips, viz., Herod, 1900; Ulysses, 1903; Nero, 1906; and Faust, 1908. 'All these,' he says, 'have been produced at His Majesty's Theatre with Beerbohm Tree, and I am immensely indebted to him for the innumerable suggestions as to the stage possibilities he has given me. I scarcely know any man I admire more. The orchestra, under Adolf Schmid, is like a little symphony orchestra. I am now hard at work,' he adds, 'scoring my opera Thelma, founded on a Norwegian subject, which I hope will be produced during this year.'

Leaving for the moment the creative side of the life-work of Coleridge-Taylor, reference may be made to his active participation in music. For seven years—1900 to 1907—he conducted the Rochester Choral Society. In 1904 and 1906 he paid visits to America, where he and his music were well received. After the festival held in Convention Hall, Washington, he was fêted and presented with a massive silver loving-cup, upon the three panels of which are the following inscriptions:

A TOKEN OF LOVE AND ESTEEM

to Samuel Coleridge-Taylor, of London, England, in appreciation of his achievements in the realms of music. Presented by the S. Coleridge-Taylor Choral Society of Washington, D.C., to their distinguished guest on the occasion of his first visit to America to conduct 'Hiawatha' and 'Songs of Slavery.' November 16, 17 and 18, 1904.
'It is well for us, O brother,
That you come so far to see us.'

At the close of the reception, the choir sang, to the tune of the British National Anthem, the following Ode, specially written by Mr. Arthur Gray, secretary of the Society :

O thou illustrious one,
Whose genius as the sun
    Illumes our race ;
'Twas love that brought thee here
To fill our heart with cheer,
And may our love sincere
    Repay thy grace !
Thy music, wondrous sweet,
With beauties rare replete,
    Charms every heart ;
Though praises we have won,
Our work has but begun ;
We'll study on and on,
    Each one his part.
As meeting brought its cheer,
So parting brings its tear,
    Its grief and pain ;
And when the ocean wide
Shall bear thee on its tide,
May winds propitious guide
    Thee home again !
Though earthly joys must end,
And friend must part with friend,
    Yet Love abides.
Our hearts where mem'ries dwell
Would fain their story tell,
But, speechless, beat farewell,
    A fond farewell !

Mr. Coleridge-Taylor was the first person of colour to give a concert in Mendelssohn Hall, New York ; and the New England Conservatory, Boston, placed their Hall at his disposal. He spent an afternoon in Longfellow's study, and he is the possessor of the unique Peace Pipe Bag, and the owner of a piece of Zuni Indian Pottery. During his first visit to America President Roosevelt gave him a signed photograph of himself. An interesting American 'appreciation' of Mr. Coleridge-Taylor is from the pen of Dr. Booker T. Washington, who, in his preface to the 'Twenty-four Negro melodies, transcribed for the pianoforte' (Op. 60), says :

Mr. Coleridge-Taylor has written much, has achieved much. His work, moreover, possesses not only charm and power but distinction, the individual note. The genuineness, depth and intensity of his feeling, coupled with his masterly technique, spontaneity, and ability to think in his own way, explain the force of the appeal his compositions make. Another element in the persuasiveness of his music lies in its naturalness, the directness of its appeal, the use of simple and expressive melodic themes, a happy freedom from the artificial. These traits, employed in the freedom of modern musical speech, coupled with emotional power and supported by ample technical resources, beget an utterance quick to evoke response.

As conductor of the Handel Society during the past four years the subject of this sketch has done excellent work, and the performances have been much improved. He takes a very warm and practical interest in the String-Players Club, at Croydon, which he himself founded in 1906.

Asked as to the origin and activities of this organization, he says : ' I was giving orchestral concerts which resulted in heavy financial losses, so the idea struck me to form a Club consisting exclusively of players on stringed instruments, who would give concerts. This has been a great success, artistically as well as from the money point of view. Our present strength is forty-one players, distributed thus : 1st violins, 12 ; 2nd violins, 13 ; violas, 5 ; violoncellos, 7 ; and double-basses, 4. There is no subscription, but each member has to guarantee the sale of five shillings' worth of tickets for each concert. Each applicant for membership has to undergo a stringent (no pun is intended) examination before being admitted to the Club. The prices of admission to the concerts, which are held in the Public Hall, Croydon, are 1s. and 6d. At the first concert only 150 persons attended ; but now we are crowded out by audiences who listen to the music with rapt attention, and follow the performances to the very last note with keen enjoyment and intelligent appreciation. We have a repertoire of some forty pieces, ancient and modern, some as long as symphonies and all of them written for string orchestra, as I do not allow arrangements. Relief to the programmes is afforded by a solo vocalist or pianist. The members of the String-Players Club are intensely keen : they are efficient players, possess good instruments, and spare no pains, by private practice and combined rehearsals, to make the concerts successful in every way.'

In recent years the services of Mr. Coleridge-Taylor have been in request as an adjudicator at musical competition festivals. In this connection it is interesting to hear his views on the educational value of these rapidly-extending music-makings : ' Apart from their purely musical interest, there can be no doubt that competition musical festivals greatly help to improve technical excellence in singing. I do not think that we could hear the very difficult eight-part music of Cornelius, for instance, sung better than at these competitions. Moreover, their value in helping audiences to form a correct estimate as to the merits of both the actual music and the rendering of it, can scarcely be overestimated.'

As to his composing methods, he says that while he writes very rapidly, transmitting his thoughts to paper as fast as they well up within him, he re-writes and revises what he has written even twenty times before he is satisfied. ' I have found my violin-playing most valuable,' he says, ' in scoring for the orchestra. The only lesson I ever had in orchestration was a curious though severe one. I had composed, at the Royal College of Music, a Ballade which Sir Charles Stanford told me to orchestrate, and he would rehearse it with the College orchestra so that I might hear how it sounded. This I did, and copied out the parts myself. When the piece was played it sounded awful, but I could not have had a better lesson in how not to do it. I have every reason to be satisfied and grateful for the reception accorded to my compositions, both at home and abroad, and friends—like the late Sir George Grove, Colonel Walters, and Sir Charles Stanford—have been very kind and helpful to me. And I must not forget to mention that my wife—née Jessie F. Walmisley, whom I married on December 30, 1899—is not only the honorary-secretary of the String-Players Club, but is of great assistance to me in all my work.' Mrs. Coleridge-Taylor is a daughter of Colonel Walmisley, himself a cousin of the late Thomas Attwood Walmisley.

Asked to mention one of the most interesting things in his experience, Mr. Coleridge-Taylor says he thinks it was an incident in his sojourn under the hospitable roof of the late Mr. G. H. Johnstone, of Birmingham, when Dr. Richter played the Wedding March from 'Lohengrin' on the pianola!

THE EVOLUTION OF CLEF SIGNATURES.

(SECOND ARTICLE.)*

How did the sign which indicates the C clef assume its present shape? In the first place it must be mentioned that in the present day the sign has more than one variant, according to the German or the English custom, and even both of these have undergone changes in modern times. The usual English shape in type-printed music is thus or , whereas the German form is thus with a more pronounced lower lip. In both instances the line of the staff, of course, passes through the centre of the sign. It requires a considerable stretch of imagination to discover in these signs any resemblance to the original letter C, which indicated the particular line of the staff for the note, middle C; but nevertheless the gradual growth of these signs can be traced step by step. The reader must please accept a little of the early history of the notation of music to thoroughly understand the details I wish to place before him. It is quite unnecessary to say that the notation of European music originated in the Church, and that the whole cultivated art of music was surrounded by an ecclesiastical atmosphere for a very long period. We have every reason to believe that the songs of the people were as tuneful, and equally great in compass and variety as they were in later ages, but as the text of the song itself was seldom deemed worthy of transmission to paper, it is quite unlikely that in early days the more difficult feat of putting secular music into a recognized notation was ever attempted. 'Sumer is i cumen in' is an almost solitary example. Tradition passed onward both words and music, and on the whole more satisfactorily than the imperfect notation of monkish days. The Church, however, had a more serious interest in notation than the professional gleeman or minstrel, for the musical portion of the Church service could not exist in the happy-go-lucky manner as could ale-house songs. The Church had to conform to decrees from Rome, from whence no doubt teachers were sent from monastery to monastery in order to give instruction in methods of singing and chanting, and teach the latest manner of writing musical notation; for certainly something more tangible than singing by ear was a necessity. This necessity gave rise to a system of signs called 'neumes,' which, consisting of dots and pen marks, established an inadequate code, rather more in the nature of hints than definite indications of intervals and time. From neumes may be traced our present-day crotchets, quavers, etc. These neumes were placed over the words to be vocalised, and their position, higher or lower as the case might be, indicated the pitch of the note, while variety in the shape of the note stood for time speed.

It was a happy thought of some scribe to draw above the words of the chant a line, upon which, or under or over it, could be placed the neumes. This was the birth of staff notation. This line began to be recognised as that which indicated the pitch of the note middle C. Once the idea of a line became accepted as a part of musical notation, it is quite easy to imagine that other lines, indicating a fifth above or below the note C, would naturally suggest themselves. It is said that at first the C line was coloured yellow, and the other two lines, F and G, coloured red.

In due course the intermediate staff lines were added, and even many more until, in order to avoid confusion, the great staff was divided, and at a later date the middle C line was omitted. In the 13th century a staff of five and six lines was almost universal, though it is stated that a neume notation without lines was still employed in Germany. At the above-mentioned period the staff lines were of one colour, red or black according to the scheme of the book in which the music was written. Upon the C line a capital C was placed and, so far as my own observation goes, the F signature came into use at a very much later date, and the G sign even much later still, for certainly it is not greatly in evidence before the early part of the 16th century. When the Virginal came into fashion, music for that instrument was generally noted on two six-line staves, bass and treble, and the middle C line is repeated in each set.

Consideration may now be given to present-day distortion of the original C and F signs. In their first period they were always as neatly and as plainly written as might be. English handwriting however has witnessed many changes, one of these being that the original graceful curve of the C became of a rigid, Gothic character and assumed so square a form that all semblance vanished. In order to avoid conflict with the C sign, which indicated common (or quadruple) time, the clef C was turned backward, and careless transcription and ignorance of its meaning gradually brought the C signature into the form in which we now know it. The same evolution also took place in the F signature, and those who care to trace these transformations may do so by examining manuscripts of different periods at the Bodleian or British Museum libraries.

Dealing with the C signature first, it will be observed that it is fairly plainly written in such 13th century music as has survived. A good example is to be seen in 'Sumer is i cumen in' (circa 1240-50), available in facsimile in many works. The notes are written on a six-line staff, the B flat is marked at the beginning of each staff, and the whole is by no means difficult to translate.

From the subjoined examples it will be observed that after the upper and lower curves of the C had been thickened, they were split up, and four single lines were attached to an upright stroke standing for the two thick strokes. In order not to interfere with the C sign indicating common time, this clef sign was frequently turned backwards. The four short horizontal strokes now touched the upright line, which, running from top to bottom of this page, closed the end of the staff (see Fig. 6). Thus was evolved the form used in type-printed music during the 17th and 18th centuries (see example, Fig. 7). From these it is easy to see printed from plates, easily identified as a resultant from the earlier engraved styles. Another variety in type-printed music of the 17th and 18th centuries was curiously like the letter S (see Fig. 12). In connection with my first article on the evolution of the G clef signature, I have just observed an

FRANK KIDSON.

Occasional Notes.

Sir Alexander Mackenzie delivered two very interesting and instructive lectures on Mendelssohn at the Royal Institution on February 6 and 13. On the second occasion he paid the following just tribute to the composer, the centenary of whose birth was celebrated last month, in the following words: 'Mendelssohn's influence, which was little short of magnetic upon English music and musicians, has often been discussed and, rightly or wrongly, has often been deplored in later years. So extreme a case of all-dominating influence is, in the very nature of things, not likely to occur again, certainly not for so prolonged a period. Whatever else may have taken their place, the aggressively imitative results of the Mendelssohn cult have some time ago disappeared; but in a singing and oratorio-loving country such as ours his mark cannot easily be rubbed out. The composer wrote most devoutly, in the spirit of his day. There is certainly no mysticism nor obscurity in 'Elijah,' but great dramatic power combined with much simple faith. Probably in those directly-appealing qualities lie the secrets of its staying power; and I fail to see that its continued hold upon the people obstructs the progress of other more recent works, which one honestly hopes will stand the test of time with equal success.'

'From first to last,' Sir Alexander went on to say, 'Mendelssohn was under the spell of unbounded enthusiasm for his art. Admit all his limitations, and there remains an extraordinary heritage of splendid accomplishment, full of indisputable originality, colour, and atmosphere, together with an invention which was nothing less than a revelation in his day, and might very well serve again as a model of disciplined symmetry, artistic restraint, and delicate feeling and fancy at some future period. I venture to think that Mendelssohn has been subjected to the severest and most searching trial that could be applied to the enduring qualities of any composer's art; for it is hardly possible to name another with whose creations the world has been on such familiar and intimate terms. None have been beaten so thin by constant use. Who could fairly say that their genuine admiration for Mendelssohn's great masterpieces has been lessened, or their pleasure diminished, by frequent hearing? Not I, for one.'

Music forms the text of the peroration to the Majority Report of the Poor Law Commission. Here are the words:

'Land of Hope and Glory' is a popular and patriotic lyric sung each year with rapture by thousands of voices. The enthusiasm is partly evoked by the beauty of the idea itself, but more by the belief that Great Britain does, above other countries, merit this eulogium, and that the conditions in existence here are such that the fulfilment of hope and the achievement of glory are more open to the individual than in other and less favoured lands.

That music should find its way into one of the most important Government Blue Books ever issued, is a most gratifying and encouraging sign of the times. Now that the power of music has been officially recognized in so remarkable a manner, it is to be hoped that public bodies may be more induced to show their practical sympathy towards an art that is so rich in its potentialities for brightening and refining the lives of the people.

Mendelssohn's 'Spring Song' (No. 30 of the 'Songs without words') is not only one of his best-known compositions, but he wrote it during one of his visits to England. As stated in our last issue (p. 88), the house on Denmark Hill, Camberwell, where on June 1, 1842, he noted down the 'Song,' has been demolished, but its delightful grounds now form a part of Ruskin Park. It was a happy thought of the Misses Deneke, desirous of commemorating the composition of the 'Spring Song,' to offer to place a sundial on the spot where he wrote this dainty pianoforte piece. They put themselves into communication with the London County Council; the offer was accepted, and the memorial is now in position. The sundial is of terra-cotta surmounted by a brass plate which bears this inscription:

Here stood the house where Mendelssohn wrote the Spring Song. 1842.

Could there be a more appropriate memorial of Mendelssohn's sunny nature than a sundial?

The Birmingham Musical Festival will be held on October 5, 6, 7 and 8. Although the details of the programme are still unsettled, the novelties at present arranged are two: Part III. of Professor Granville Bantock's 'Omar Khayyâm—of which Part I. was produced at the last festival (1906) and Part II. at the Cardiff festival of 1907—and 'A song at midnight' for chorus and orchestra, composed by Mr. Rutland Boughton. The following choral works will also be included in the scheme: Elijah, Dream of Gerontius, Stabat Mater (Dvorák), Mass in C, No. 4 (Cherubini), and Judas Maccabæus, the last-named oratorio superseding the Messiah. Dr. Richter retains his accustomed place as conductor of the festival, and, as on the last two occasions, Mr. R. H. Wilson will discharge the important duties of chorus-master.

Professor Dr. Albert Kopfermann, librarian of the Royal Library, Berlin, has adopted an exceptional and most appropriate method of celebrating the Mendelssohn centenary by editing and publishing two hitherto unknown humorous part-songs for male voices, composed by the master. These are respectively entitled 'Musikantenprügelei' (Musicians' quarrel—literally, pummeling) and 'Der weise Diogenes' (The wise Diogenes). As the first is dated 'Rotterdam, April 23, 1833,' Mendelssohn doubtless composed this jeu d'esprit while waiting for the steamer to convey him to London, as he arrived here on the 26th of that month. The second, a canon, is dated 'February 11, 1833.' The words of the two pieces are probably by Mendelssohn himself; if so, they show the composer at his best as a humorist. They are arranged as two-part choruses for tenors and basses, who are diametrically opposed to each other, with the result that the pieces produce many comic yet, musically, most effective situations. It is to be hoped that these interesting Mendelssohn novelties, published by C. F. W. Siegel's Musikhandlung, Leipzig, will become available for English male-voice choirs.

Professor Arthur Nikisch will conduct, for the first time in England, Elgar's new Symphony at the Philharmonic Society's concert on May 13. This event, the first performance of the work by the Society, will be anticipated with special interest.

Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. will very shortly issue a critical edition with explanatory notes of 'Beethoven's Letters,' translated into English by Mr. J. S. Shedlock, who also contributes the preface. The explanatory notes have been supplied by Dr. Alf. Chr. Kalischer, and the book will contain a photogravure frontispiece, many interesting portraits, facsimiles of music hitherto unpublished, &c. Of special interest to admirers of Beethoven—and who can estimate their number?—is the fact that the forthcoming publication will be the first complete English edition of Beethoven's Letters. Moreover, it will contain over 1,100 letters and notes, whereas two former collections, published in 1865-1867 respectively, contained only 733 of these characteristic communications of the mighty master. In addition to notes by the German editor, others have been contributed by Mr. Shedlock, who has long been acknowledged as a great authority on Beethoven in this country.

Dr. Ludwig Wüllner, perhaps the greatest living interpreter of German Lieder, has persistently been informed by the Press that he has no voice. He is therefore boldly advertising himself throughout his American tour as a 'singer without a voice.' His success, remarkable even for this uniformly successful artist, may to a certain extent be due to this clever and effective use of adverse criticism. Anyhow, it disarms the critics and those music-lovers who might otherwise expect to be regaled with a display of the vocal art at its best.

The genial and versatile writer of the 'Music and Art' column in the Yorkshire Post has discovered an edible connection between Wagner and Yorkshire, a county which, in a Wagnerian sense, must now be regarded as the land of Ham. But we will let him relate his discovery in his own words.

I have long been seeking for some sign of a connection between Wagner and Yorkshire, and have at last found one—in a most unexpected quarter. In 1877, when he was not entirely unknown in Yorkshire—for had not the 'Tannhäuser' March been heard at a Leeds Festival three years before?—he was in London for the Festival held in the Albert Hall, and on his return to Bayreuth he wrote to his host, the late Mr. Dannreuther, complaining that he missed the sense of comfort and well-being which he had derived from partaking of the 'Yorkshire Ham' which he had enjoyed at Dannreuther's breakfast-table, that, as he was engaged in composition, this consolation was indispensable, and therefore he must commission his friend to despatch him some. Later in the same letter he says, 'I have quite enough to do with my new little opera, to which I day by day—in the absence of the Yorkshire ham—can add only a bar or two. The prelude, however, is completed. If you will only visit us, I will play it to you. It sounds very nice!' The 'little opera' ('Singpiel') as he playfully styles it, was 'Parsifal.' Dannreuther seems to have fulfilled his commission, but the first 'Yorkman' (so in the text, but no doubt a misinterpretation of Wagner's writing 'York ham') was spoilt by the cook's ignorance of the foreign delicacy. But, presuming that subsequent efforts were more successful, we may, perhaps, congratulate ourselves that Yorkshire contributed something to the composition of Wagner's latest work, and if the connection between 'Parsifal' and Pig should seem rather far-fetched—well, so was the ham when it reached Bayreuth.

Had the above discovery appeared in a journal north of the Tweed, we should have classed it as a specimen of pawky humour.

A Tonika-Do-Bund (Tonic Sol-fa League), the first of its kind in Germany, was founded at Hannover on January 17. The event will most likely exercise considerable influence upon the development of choral-singing in schools and elsewhere, for the tonic sol-fa method has lately made many converts in the Fatherland, both among musicians and amateurs. It is now taught in many high schools. In addition to Hannover, Berlin, Brunswick, Cassel, Hildesheim, Rostock, Stettin and other towns contain apostles eager to teach the new, so far as Germany is concerned, musical gospel. The objects of the recently-formed League are the exchange of views and experiences of members, the acquisition of Tonika-Do literature, the instituting of courses of instruction, examinations, and so on. Fräulein Agnes Hundoegger is the first president of the League.

As a contribution to the history of the Grenadier Guards Band (the First Regiment of Foot Guards), the following extract will be read with interest. It is taken from the London Evening Post of Tuesday, April 11, to Thursday, April 13, 1749, and is reprinted, without comment, verbatim et literatim:

We are inform'd that on Sunday last the ENGLISH Band of Musick, belonging to the First Regiment of Foot Guards, commanded by his Royal Highness the Duke of Cumberland, receiv'd their Dismission, to make Room for a Band of Germans, who mounted Guard on Monday last.

In connection with the celebration of the Mendelssohn centenary, a new monument has been erected over the composer's grave in the Dreifaltigkeits Cemetery, Berlin. It takes the form of a tall cross in white marble, bearing in letters of gold the name of the master, in addition to the dates of his birth and death. On February 3 it was almost hidden under a profusion of wreaths sent from all parts of Germany and other German-speaking countries, and even from places so distant as New York and Boston.

Brighton is a place where one naturally expects to be brightened up, therefore it is not surprising that even the journalistic enterprise of the place contributes towards that lightheartedness which the Queen of watering-places exercises upon the mental apparatus of its visitors. Proof thereof is furnished by an extract from the Brighton Herald of February 6, which reads thus:

THE HARMONIC AND MENDELSSOHN.

People have been asking why the Sacred Harmonic Society did not join in the celebration of the Mendelssohn Centenary at their concert on Thursday, but instead performed 'Israel in Egypt.' Perhaps the inquirers had forgotten that in his 'Elijah' Mendelssohn enjoins us to 'Hear ye, Israel.' This is just what the audience did. So Mendelssohn was not forgotten.

In a notice of the 'Israel in Egypt' performance facetiously referred to above, the musical critic of the Brighton Standard and Fashionable Visitors' List waxed eloquent. He said:

The only difference between the energy of Art and the energy of Nature is the amenability of the former to human control. Mr. Robert Taylor, as usual, set the flood in motion on Thursday night. He shaped its capacious channels and guided the flow of its broad, distended current. He let it roar and rage and swirl and batter to its heart's content—at the proper time.

Should any mountains require moving, or little seas drying up, no doubt Mr. Robert Taylor will be glad to receive orders, as he may be relied upon to carry out all such trifling operations with promptness and dispatch.

Next month we hope to give an illustrated article on Carlisle Cathedral.

LADY ORGANISTS, AND ONE IN PARTICULAR—MISS ELLEN DAY.

The organ is an instrument more closely connected with the sterner than with the gentler sex. From a physical point of view there is just cause for the association, but from the religious aspect there would seem to be just cause for a musically-gifted woman to hold the office of church organist. There must be countless instances of ladies who are devoutly and efficiently discharging the duties of organist in churches and chapels up and down the country, indeed, there are no fewer than thirteen lady organists of as many Protestant cathedrals in Ireland. Many a clergyman finds in his wife, or daughter, or school-mistress a valued lay-helper as the 'chief-musician' of his village church, and even in towns the lady organist is not unknown as an efficient colleague to vicar or minister.

There were lady-organists, even solo performers, in Handel's day or within a few months of his death. At the opening of the Great Music Room, Dean Street, Soho, on January 18, 1760, 'Judas Maccabæus' was performed, and 'Between the first and second Act a Concerto on the Organ by Miss Frederick,' so the newspaper advertisements state. This lady, Miss Cassandra Frederick, was then a girl of some sixteen summers, as on April 10, 1749, she appeared at the Haymarket Theatre as a prodigy harpsichord player, 'aged 5½ years, a scholar of Paradies.' On March 11, 1760, at the Dean Street Room, at a performance of the 'Messiah, composed by the late George Frederic Handel Esq.' (as the advertisements record), Miss Frederick played between the 1st and 2nd Acts an organ concerto, newly composed by Signor Paradies, her master. This work was probably that published by Welcker, of Gerrard Street, Soho, entitled

A Favorite | Concerto | for the | Organ | or |
Harpichord | with instrumental parts | composed
by | Domenico Paradies.

N.B. This is the only Concerto ever Composed by him.

The 'N.B.' information may have been true at the time, but there are concertos, in manuscript, by Paradies at the Fitzwilliam Museum, Cambridge. That, however, by the way. At the concert above referred to 'Extraordinary Tickets' were to be obtained 'at the Office in Thrift-street.' Miss Frederick—on one occasion announced as 'Signora Frederick'—was also a singer. At a concert given in March, 1760, by the violoncellist Sipurini, the advertisements somewhat enigmatically state 'The vocal part by Miss Frederick and a gentleman.' Another lady organist at this time was a Miss Davis, who appeared at the Dean Street Room on February 15, 1760, in the threefold capacity of solo organist, vocalist, and flautist!

It is not difficult to recall the names of some distinguished lady organists of the past. First, in regard to technical attainment, is Miss Elizabeth Surling (Mrs. F. A. Bridge), who, seventy years ago, was one of the first in this country to play some of the great fugues of Bach. The Mounsey sisters are not unknown to fame: the elder (Mrs. Bartholomew) was for nearly fifty-four years (playing at the age of seventy-five) organist of St. Vedast, Foster Lane, at the back of the General Post Office; while her sister, Miss Elizabeth Mounsey, held the organistship of St. Peter's, Cornhill, for forty-eight years and had the honour of being hostess to Mendelssohn on the two occasions that he played on the organ in that old City church. To the longevity record can be added Mrs. Partridge (died October 7, 1890), who was organist of Brixham Parish Church for fifty years and six months. In the forties of the last century a lady bearing the ecclesiastical name of Cope was organist of St. Saviour's Church, Southwark (now the cathedral), and about the same time Miss Kate Loder (Lady Thompson) officiated in a similar capacity at St. Peter's, Vere Street. The last report of the Royal College of Organists shows that there are a considerable number of ladies—Fellows, Associates, and Members—on the roll of that institution.

To the oft-asked question, Is organ playing incompatible with a good touch on the pianoforte? an answer is furnished in the long and distinguished career of the venerable lady who forms the chief theme of this article. Miss Ellen Day was born in London on March 3, 1828. She received her first lessons in music from her father, William Day, a violinist of repute, and for many years leader of the orchestra at Drury Lane Theatre. She afterwards studied under Henry Westrop, Eduard Schulz, and Mrs. Balfe. She made her first appearance in public as an eight-year old prodigy just seventy-three years ago! The occasion was one of the Lenten Concerts given at Drury Lane Theatre, and the date, March 18, 1836. The playbill, preserved at the British Museum, of this music-making shows that a gargantuan feast of music was provided on that particular fast-day (Friday) in Lent. In addition to a selection from Handel's 'Solomon' and a portion of Neukomm's 'Mount Sinai' (for the first time in London), Beethoven's 'Battle' and Haydn's 'Farewell' symphonies were performed. Bochsa conducted; Mori led the orchestra, of which Lindley and Dragonetti and the élite of the orchestral world formed a part; and the vocalists included Mrs. Bishop, Messrs. Balfe, Braham, and Hobbs, the last-named being the father-in-law of Dr. W. H. Cummings. The playbill states that 'The performance will take place in a splendid and spacious orchestra erected on the stage, which will be fitted up as the interior of York Minster on the occasion of the late celebrated musical festival.'

an orchestral accompaniment to it, and here is the actual score. I may add that I was so small that I stood to play my piece, and I walked to the extreme ends of the keyboard when the passages were beyond the reach of my little arms.' So successful was the child's first appearance that she was engaged to play a week later, at the last of the series of Lenten concerts, the playbill for March 25, 1836, stating that :

At the end of the second part, the interesting and highly-gifted Miss Day, whose extraordinary performance last Friday was listened to with astonishment and delight, will repeat Czerny's Fantasia on the piano-forte.

In those days prodigies were not boomed by concert agents as they are now, and therefore Miss Day had to make her name unaided by the puff preliminary. She soon, however, attracted the attention of the critics, judging from the following notice of her second performance :

She was enthusiastically applauded, and is, for her years, the most extraordinary performer we ever heard. Her touch combines firmness and delicacy, and her execution rapidity and precision. Her strength is equal in both hands, and the neatness and crispness of her whole performance elicited the warmest plaudits from the band, as well as the audience. (Morning Post, March 26, 1836.)

Two years later another wonder-child astonished musical London in the person of Teresa Milanollo, the violinist, aged eight years. She and Miss Day, aged nine years, gave a concert at the Hanover Square Rooms on June 9, 1838. On that occasion 'Mr. Strauss (of Vienna) kindly consented to assist the concert with his celebrated Band.' The two juvenile performers, Ellen and Teresa, united in 'a grand concertante duet,' by Benedict and De Beriot, 'Recollections of Sonnambula' and the nine-year-old pianist played a 'grand Concert-Stück' by Blahetka, 'performed at the Philharmonic Concert by the Authoress.' In a notice of the concert the Musical World said :

Miss Day, as far as her little hands will permit, is quite up to anything which the difficulties of modern pianoforte music can demand of her . . . The little Day, who stood at the instrument, went through the whole with marvellous spirit; and her steady performance and truth of expression reflect the highest credit on her master.

On September 25 of the same year she took part in a concert given by a Mr. T. Baker, at the Public Rooms, Windsor, being announced as :

Miss Day, the unrivalled infant prodigy, aged nine years, whose extraordinary performances has (sic) elicited the most enthusiastic applause in the musical world this season, will play on the pianoforte a Fantasia by Thalberg.

Two days later the child-pianist was 'commanded' to play before the youthful Queen Victoria, then aged eighteen, and who had occupied the Throne for three months. So unexpected, and at such short notice was the summons, that Caley, the Windsor dress-maker, had to make a proper court frock for Miss Ellen in one day. The Berkshire Chronicle and

MONS. JULLIEN, IN 1842.

The little lady pianist was announced thus : 'At the end of the second part Miss Day will perform Czerny's Grand Fantasia on the Piano Forte (her first appearance).' When Miss Day, in her cosy dining-room, hands us the age-stained and much worn copy of the piece that she actually studied for her début seventy-three years ago, we remark, 'But this is Hüntén's Alexis air, not by Czerny!' 'Yes,' she laughingly replies, 'but as Czerny was better known than Hüntén, his name was substituted for that of the actual composer. My master, Mr. Westrop, somewhat elaborated the piece for the occasion, and furnished

Bucks and Windsor Herald recorded this important event in the child's career :

Miss Day had the honour of performing on the pianoforte before her Majesty at the Castle on Thursday. The pieces chosen were Hummel's Rondo in A, and a Fantasia of Doehler's. With such brilliancy and taste did this gifted child (only ten years of age) execute these different pieces as to give infinite delight to the whole of the Royal party. Her Majesty was graciously pleased to express her admiration, and to confirm it by a very liberal present.

This was copied by The Times and other London newspapers, and Lady Portman, Lady-in-waiting to Queen Victoria, wrote to Mr. Day that 'The Queen expressed much gratification at the talent displayed by his daughter when she had the Honor of performing on the Piano Forte before Her Majesty.'

In the spring of 1840 Miss Day gave a series of four concerts at the Hanover Square Rooms, and, with her brother John—to whom reference will subsequently be made—she appeared at Jullien's concerts in London and the provinces during the forties. She recalls Jullien's peculiarities and get-up—his gorgeous shirt front, his curls, &c. (See the illustration on the opposite page.) At the end of 1843 Miss Day and her brother went to Brussels, where they appeared with great success. Master Day remained behind in the Belgian capital in order to study under De Beriot. Shortly after her return to London, the gifted pianist received the following little note, which we give in facsimile :

Mr. F. Mendelssohn Dostohly presents his Compliments to Miss Ellen Day & will feel much obliged if Miss Day will favor him with her visit on Saturday next 29th June at ½ past 12 o'clock

4 Hobart Place Eaton Square June 27th

At the time appointed she found her way to 4, Hobart Place, opposite St. Peter's Church, Eaton Square, the only house, by the way, now standing at which Mendelssohn stayed during his visits to London. She played to the kind-hearted composer his G minor Concerto and Weber's A flat Sonata. In the latter piece he detected a wrong note, and showed his youthful visitor where it had occurred; he referred to her tightness of wrist, and said that if ever she came to Leipzig he would help her in any way he could. She had previously played to Liszt during one of his visits to this country, when he lodged at Erard's business remises in Great Marlborough Street. Later on, in 1848, the year before his death, she played to Chopin. He then had rooms in 4, St. James's Place, overlooking the Green Park, for which he paid 'four and a-half guineas a week, inclusive of bed, coals, &c.' Miss Day recalls that 'Chopin came into the room looking like a mere shadow and walking in a limp way. I played to him, as I did to Mendelssohn, a movement from Weber's A flat Sonata, and then he played to me his own lovely Nocturne in E flat.' There are very few lady organists who can say that they have played in private to Chopin, Liszt and Mendelssohn!

At the first concert which Miss Day and her brother jointly gave—Hanover Square Rooms, June 16, 1846—Maurer's Quartet for four violins was played by Sivori, Sainton, Willy, and Master Day, and Miss Day and Vincent Wallace played a pianoforte duet composed by Wallace. From this time forth both these young artists were held in great esteem for their interpretive gifts and pleasant personality. Not only as a solo pianist did Miss Day obtain distinction, but in performances of concerted music—the chamber concerts given by the late Mr. Dando, at Crosby Hall, for instance—did she show her ripe musicianship. Even now, when completing her eighty-first year, she plays with unerring skill, a lovely touch, and an amazing vigour which many a girl student might envy. In listening to Miss Day's brilliant rendering of Chopin's Ballade in G minor, it is almost impossible to realize that she made her first appearance seventy-three years ago. Of her it may truly be said that her hand has not lost its cunning.

Miss Day's long career of forty-five years as an organist can be briefly told. The only organ lessons she ever received were a few from James Coward, organist of the Crystal Palace. In 1864 she became organist of St. Matthew's Church, Westminster, and since the year 1882 she has held a similar appointment at Christ Church, Victoria Street, Westminster. Every Sunday finds Miss Ellen Day at her post, although she has by eleven years outspanned the threescore years and ten age-limit of the Psalmist. The cry 'too old at forty' should not be taken too seriously with such an example of longevity as Miss Day affords. Her wonderful vitality is in harmony with her great gifts, and her genial disposition is in keeping with her bright outlook upon life. In the full possession of all her faculties, and held in high esteem, the chief musician of Christ Church, Westminster, is a fine type of a lady organist, one in whom skilled musicianship and devout feeling are most happily blended. May the hand of Time deal gently with her as the years pass on.

No account of Miss Day would be complete without further reference to her brother, John Day (1830-1895). After having pursued his studies under De Beriot at Brussels, he made his first important appearance at the Philharmonic concert of June 23, 1845, when he played the Adagio and Rondo from De Beriot's Violin concerto in B minor. In the same year he made a great success as the solo violinist at the Norwich Musical Festival, and was a great request at all important musical events. In 1847 he joined Queen Victoria's private band, of which, at his death, he was the senior member.

As an organist Mr. Day held appointments at New Upton Church, Slough (1853), old Upton Church, and, from 1859 to 1869, All Saints' Church, Fulham.

For the greater part of his life his chief hobby was the making of violins after the models of the great artificers, these models being considered by competent judges almost equal to the originals. The above portrait of Mr. Day shows him stroking a pet pigeon, of which he was very fond.

Church and Organ Music.

THE ORGAN IN WESTMINSTER ABBEY.

The organ in the stately fane of Westminster is of historic if not national interest, by reason of the sacred edifice through the fretted aisles and vaulted roof of which the tones of the instrument reverberate with such impressive effect. Therefore it is with pleasure we record that the instrument has recently been greatly improved, whereby it has become worthy of its surroundings.

A series of re-opening recitals were given between February 15 and 20, by the following six distinguished organists: Sir Frederick Bridge, organist of the Abbey; Sir Walter Parratt, organist of St. George's Chapel, Windsor; Dr. W. G. Alcock, organist of the Chapels Royal and assistant-organist of Westminster Abbey; Mr. T. Tertius Noble, organist of York Minster; Dr. A. L. Peace, organist of St. George's Hall, Liverpool; and Dr. Basil Harwood, organist of Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford.

The following historical and other information was printed in each of the recital programmes, and is reprinted verbatim et literatim:

A small portion of the present organ dates back to 1694. In this year Father Smith undertook to add four stops to the organ then in the Abbey. The agreement is signed by the Precentor and the Organist, Henry Purcell.

Two of these stops are happily still in use—the stopped diapason (now in the solo organ) and the nason flute in the choir organ.

The organ in Purcell's time stood on the north side of the choir. In 1730 an organ was erected on the screen by Schrider and Jordan, and no doubt the organ then existing in the Abbey was incorporated in this instrument. At any rate, Father Smith's stops were included.

The new organ was presented by His Majesty King George II. after the Coronation, and the following Chapter orders referring to it are of some interest:

- 6th April, 1728. Ordered that the new organ given by His Majesty to this Church be erected over the entrance to the Choir.
- 25th May, 1728. Ordered that Mr. Schrider's articles for a new organ be now sealed.
- 21st Oct., 1730. Ordered that the old organ loft be taken down and that the Treasurer dispose thereof.
- 7th Nov., 1730. Ordered that the Treasurer pay Mr. Schrider in full for the new organ, a report being this day made to the Chapter that the same is finished according to the agreement.

The organ was opened on August 1, 1730, by Mr. Robinson, the Abbey organist, the anthem being Purcell's 'O give thanks.'

Various additions were made from time to time, until in 1846-47 the organ was greatly enlarged by Messrs. Hill & Son, and the greater part of the instrument was moved from the centre of the screen and placed on the north and south side.

In 1868 a 'solo' manual was added, two new stops, an open diapason and tuba, being inserted.

In 1871 four new stops were added—given by the Rt. Hon. G. Cavendish-Bentinck, an 'Old Westminster.'

In 1884 the organ was rebuilt and the north and south portions raised considerably. The splendid cases were not then erected, but in 1896 the north side—the outcome of the Purcell Commemoration—was added as a memorial to this great Abbey organist. The case on the south side was added at the expense of the Dean and Chapter some years later. The casing in the south aisle was given as a memorial to Mr. A. D. Clarke, the donor of the celestial organ, by his sister-in-law, Miss Beare.

In 1895 the celestial organ was added. This organ is in the triforium of the south transept, immediately above Handel's monument. It is connected with the manuals (on the screen) by an electric cable, and contains sixteen speaking stops and necessary couplers.

The organ has now been completely renovated, new tubular action and a new console being part of the work.

Most of the stops have been re-voiced, and the whole organ brought up to date by Messrs. Hill & Son. A large open diapason has also been added to the great organ.

The instrument now consists of seventy-seven stops, these being distributed over five manuals and pedal board. There are the necessary couplers, pistons, &c., and the wind is supplied by a gas engine.

The foregoing information was to some extent supplemented by the illustrated articles on Westminster Abbey which appeared in The Musical Times of April, May and June, 1907. We venture to point out that the 'Mr. Robinson' who opened the organ in 1730 was the composer of the well-known double chant in E flat bearing his name. Dr. Ben Cooke, his successor in the organistship of the Abbey, credited Robinson with the composition of Bach's great Prelude and Fugue in C! When pedal pipes—thirteen in number, GG to gamut G, and of unison pitch—were first added to the instrument, probably in 1771, Dr. Cooke composed his well-known Service in G in connection with that important event, probably in order to 'show off' the new and novel acquisition.

Subjoined are the programmes of the first three recitals :

'THERE'S A FRIEND FOR LITTLE CHILDREN.'

Countless hymns have been written for the use of children. In many instances the poetry is as poor as the sentiment is silly. It is not an easy thing to write a children's hymn that will express great thoughts in simple language. That it can be done the lyrics of Mrs. Alexander and others bear testimony. One golden example is the hymn 'There's a Friend for little children,' which has just attained its jubilee. The author of these beautiful verses, Mr. Albert Midlane, was born on January 23, 1825, at Newport, Isle of Wight, where he has lived his long life of eighty-four years. He began versifying at the age of six! As a child, instead of listening to the sermon, he used to look through the index of the hymn-book for the names of the authors, little thinking that he should ever write hymns himself. Hymn-writing has been his life-long hobby. In the intervals of his business—that of an ironmonger at Newport—he has written some six hundred hymns.

None of Mr. Midlane's hymns have achieved such world-wide fame as 'There's a Friend for little children,' which is one of the most popular children's hymns in the English language. It was written on February 7, 1859, and first obtained the dignity of print in December, 1859, when it appeared in an obscure little monthly magazine called 'Good news for the little ones.' Now no hymnal, whatever its denomination, would be considered complete without this hymn. In its original form it is headed 'Above the bright blue sky,' together with verses 9 and 10 from I. Corinthians ii.—'Eye hath not seen,' &c. The verses of the hymn then differed from the order in which we now know them. The initial lines were (1) There's a rest, (2) home, (3) Friend, (4) crown, (5) song, and (6) robe, these words being emphasised by the use of italics. Most people will be in accord with the Rev. Dr. Julian, editor of the 'Dictionary of Hymnology,' in his opinion that 'The re-arrangement produces a better sequence in the order of the stanzas, and gives greater unity to the hymn.'

The tune 'In Memoriam,' by Sir John Stainer, to which Mr. Midlane's hymn is so often sung, has an interesting history. The story, evidently derived from first-hand information, is thus told in 'The Music of the Church Hymnary' by Messrs. William Cowan and James Love: 'The committee engaged on the music of "Hymns Ancient and Modern" (enlarged edition, 1875) were meeting at the Langham Hotel, London, and when the hymn came up for consideration it was found that though they had several tunes before them, none were considered satisfactory. It was suggested that a new tune might be written by one of the committee, and the Rev. Sir Henry Baker [the chairman] proposed that Sir John Stainer should retire to his (Sir Henry's) bedroom, and try what he could do. Sir John complied with the suggestion, and in a very short time returned with the present tune, which was at once adopted.' The tune, which first appeared in 'Hymns Ancient and Modern' (1875), was named 'In Memoriam' in connection with the death of Sir John's little son, Frederick Henry Stainer, who died on December 30, 1874. The composer was wise in writing his melodious and, to him, pathetic strain as a unison tune and within the compass of an octave, with E flat as the highest note. The tune should not be sung too quickly, or both music and words will be spoilt, and the concluding two lines of the last verse naturally suggest a much slower speed in order to give full significance to the prayer which forms the peroration of this supremely beautiful hymn. The tune is an ideal one for children, and the singing of it has given untold joy to numberless boys and girls in church, school and home.

ST. JOHN'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.

The following interesting selection of music was performed in the Chapel of the College on Sunday evening, February 21, under the direction of the organist, Mr. Cyril B. Rootham, with Mr. Ronald Hurry at the organ :

|                                                                                |             |

| Soloists—MR. HAYDN INWARDS and MR. F. RICARD.                                  |             |
| 'Vesperae de Confessore,' for solo voices, chorus, orchestra and organ .. .. . | Mozart.     |
| Soloists—THE CHAPEL CHOIR.                                                     |             |

The 'Vesperae de Confessore' is the second of two Sunday Vespers written by Mozart. Composed in the year 1780, when Mozart was twenty-four years of age, it is scored for solo voices, chorus, organ, first and second violins, basses, trumpets and drums. Each of the six movements is complete in itself, and ends with the Doxology. The treatment of the Gloria Patri in each case is distinctive, though it is closely linked with the rest of the movement by being set to the music that forms the principal subject of each Psalm. The variety of appropriate and expressive musical renderings of which these words are capable in the hands of so versatile a composer as Mozart, is surprising. The first of the Vespers was performed in St. John's Chapel in 1906.

MEDELSSOHN AND BACH'S LITTLE E MINOR
PRELUDE AND FUGUE.

As an echo of the Mendelssohn Centenary of last month, attention may be recalled to an incident connected with Mendelssohn's organ performances during his second visit to London, in 1832, and its interesting sequel. The little note in which Thomas Attwood invited Vincent Novello to hear the distinguished visitor play some Bach pieces on the organ in St. Paul's Cathedral we give in facsimile, a form which will serve the additional purpose of correcting two misprints in the copy which appeared in our last month's issue, p. 96 :

Sunday May

Dear Novello, -

Bach which he proposes

T. P. Attwood

One of the Bach pieces played by Mendelssohn on that occasion was the little E minor Prelude and Fugue. Novello was so struck with its beauty—and no wonder—that he asked Mendelssohn to furnish him with a transcript of the work. In a letter written (in English) from his lodgings in Great Portland Street, and dated May 6, 1832, Mendelssohn replied to Novello's request as follows :

As soon as I have a free moment I will try to write for you the fugue in E [minor], but I cannot promise whether I shall succeed, as I fear I do not recollect exactly the distribution of parts in some passages. However, I will try it, and if I do not recollect it, get you a copy from Germany, where it must now be published in a collection of organ pieces.

Believe me, my dear Sir,

Yours very truly,

FELIX MENDELSSOHN BARTHOLDY.*

As a matter of fact the little E minor Prelude and Fugue had not been published at that time, either in Germany or anywhere else. As soon as Vincent Novello received the transcript from his young friend, he published the work in his 'Select Organ Pieces,' No. 42, with the following interesting note attached thereto :

For this extremely rare specimen of Sebastian Bach's extraordinary musical genius, the Editor is indebted to the obliging politeness of his kind friend Mendelssohn Bartholdy, who frequently played it to him, from memory, at the time when there was no copy of the manuscript to be obtained in England. During his visit to Germany this year (1833), Mr. Mendelssohn was so kind as to procure a copy, and very obligingly allowed a transcript of it to be made for the Editor of this work, who had so often expressed his admiration of the composition. The writer of the present note gladly avails himself of this opportunity of expressing his best acknowledgments to a gentleman whom he considers one of the greatest ornaments of the musical art in the present age, for this as well as for other gratifying proofs of his liberal and friendly sentiments towards him.

At the beginning of the Prelude, Novello states 'From a MS. never before published,' and at the end of the Fugue he adds a little note of appreciation which reads: 'For originality of subject, masterly treatment of it, refined taste, and pathetic expression, this exquisite Fugue has probably never been exceeded, even by Sebastian Bach himself.—V. N.'

Thus it will be seen that one of Bach's most precious gems among the jewels of his organ music was first published in England. The text in Novello's edition differs slightly from other printed versions. The extent of these variants organists will find pleasure in discovering for themselves.

It is seldom that organists of churches are remembered in the testamentary depositions of the clergymen under whom they discharge their ecclesiastical duties. Such a rare instance is furnished by the will of the Rev. Arthur Gilbert Girdlestone, late vicar of All Saints' Church, Brixton Hill, who has bequeathed the sum of £10 each to his organist, verger, blower, and pew-opener.

THE OXFORD HYMN BOOK.

Compiled by the Dean of Christ Church, Dr. Strong, and the Lady Margaret Professor of Divinity, Dr. Sanday, with the co-operation of Miss Mary Church and the Rev. James M. Thompson, Fellow and Dean of Magdalen College, 'The Oxford Hymn Book' (the Clarendon Press) is, by inference, primarily intended for use at Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford, and at College chapels in the same University city. It contains only 350 hymns, of which nineteen are in the Latin tongue. Typographically the book has a quaint and old-world interest in that the music fount is based upon that of Peter de Walpergen, cut in Oxford about 1683. Attention is called in the preface to the 'heads of the Walpergen notes,' which 'are of two different shapes—spade-head or pointed, here used for the alto and bass; and club-shape without point, here used for the soprano and tenor. The tails of the notes also vary in position: those for the spade-heads being in the centre, and those for the club-heads being at the side.' If this distinction between 'spade-heads' and 'club-heads' will conduce to a more accurate rendering of the tunes, well and good. But a hymnal is for practical use, and although the book is beautifully printed it is open to question whether the enforced reduced size of the Walpergen music-fount will be found satisfactory, e.g., No. 161, especially when it is borne in mind that organ desks are placed at some considerable distance from the player.

* This letter is preserved in the British Museum, Add. MS. 11,730, f. 127. Although Mendelssohn has dated it 'May 6,' the post-mark date is 'May 5, 1832.'

The editing of the music has been undertaken by Dr. Basil Harwood, organist of Christ Church Cathedral, who has efficiently discharged his duties within the 'academic' lines of the compilation. Dr. Harwood has also contributed some good tunes to the book, and the Dean of Christ Church gives proof of his creative musicianship in five tunes. Large use has been made of 'the fine tunes and harmonizations of S. S. Wesley,' taken from the 'European Psalmist,' and some of the harmonizations of Dr. E. J. Hopkins have been adopted. It is a pity that the old mistake of the double suspension in line six of Mendelssohn's tune associated with 'Hark! the herald angels sing' should be repeated; and it seems strange that a hymn of praise like Lyte's 'Praise the Lord, His glories show' (No. 277) should be assigned to a minor tune. Of the eight hymns for children, Gamlett's tune 'Irby' is given in four-part harmony instead of in its original unison form.

Reference may be made to one or two features of historical interest, especially as so much attention is now given to that aspect of hymn-tunes. It causes some surprise to find that the source of 'St. Theodolph' ('All glory, laud, and honour') is given as 'adapted from "Sellenger's Round," 1580,' by William Byrd. There is a contradiction in regard to the origin of 'St. Anne.' In one place (No. 132) it is given as 'Mr. Denby in Barber's Psalm Tunes (1687), founded on Henry Lawes' 136th Psalm in Sandys' Paraphrase (1636)'; later in the book (No. 273)—where the key, melody, and harmony are different!—the authorship of the tune is assigned to 'William Croft (1678-1727). The original melody and Bass from "A Supplement to the New Version," 6th Edition (1708).' In both instances, however, the tune in the index is assigned to 'Dr. Croft,' without any reference to that unknown person, 'Mr. Denby.' The 'Mr. Denby' myth, as the composer of 'St. Anne,' was destroyed by the late Major Crawford many years ago. Like 'St. Anne,' the tune 'Bedford' has been favoured with a double appearance, in one instance in its original triple rhythm and the other in the 'tinkered' (quadruple) version of William Gardiner, the Leicester stocking-maker. The date, 1699, assigned to Matthew Wilkins's 'Book of Psalmody' is too early.

Lastly, 'The Oxford Hymn Book' does not contain a single tune by Stainer.

PRESENTATION TO DR. KENDRICK PYNE.

At the Consistory Court, Manchester Cathedral, on February 9, a meeting was held in order to pay a tribute to Dr. James Kendrick Pyne in connection with his retirement from the organistship. The tribute took the tangible form of a handsome case of silver plate, a cheque, and an illuminated address. The opening sentence of the address sounded the keynote of the occasion in these words:

TO JAMES KENDRICK PYNE, ESQ., MUS.D., F.S.A.

Your retirement from the post of Organist of Manchester Cathedral, which you have occupied with great distinction for the long period of thirty-two years, is an event of so much importance in the history of that ancient foundation that it calls for some suitable recognition.

The Dean (Bishop Welldon), in making the presentation on behalf of the subscribers, addressing Dr. Pyne, said: 'I am anxious that those who are present at this meeting and, if possible, those outside it, should understand the exact nature of the presentation now to be made. It is in no sense an expression, an adequate expression, of the feeling which the city of Manchester entertains towards you; it is rather the gift of a few personal friends who are attached to you, who for a longer or shorter time, many for a long time, have appreciated your services in the cathedral. To me you have always been so kind in my short life in Manchester that I cannot offer you this tribute of respect without something of intimate feeling. The office which you have held in the cathedral is one of which it is difficult to over-estimate the importance. On the music of the services held here a great part of their reverence depends, and I think I may claim that you have borne a large part in sustaining the services at their present high level.'

Dr. Pyne, in replying to the kind remarks of the Dean, and in thanking the subscribers for their handsome tokens of regard, made a characteristic speech. He began by saying that since his duties commenced thirty-two years ago, he had seen out every member of the College. He recalled the mania for the restoration of the cathedral, which was very trying. For years the building was almost unfit to conduct services in, and it resembled a builder's repository. It was impossible then to say with the sweet singer 'How lovely are Thy dwellings,' but rather, with Jacob, 'How dreadful is this place.' The climax came when at the end of the restoration a huge partition was placed between the nave and the choir. The organist could not hear a single sound of the singing. Nevertheless all went well until one unfortunate morning. He had begun the Te Deum with some considerable pomp, when a chorister shrieked in his ear, 'For gracious sake, sir, stop; the Dean's in the middle of the First Lesson.'

Dr. Pyne went on to say that the restorations were of a lengthy and dilatory nature and not pursued with much activity, so much so, indeed, that Dean Oakley facetiously remarked 'the restorations were conducted by the architect, two men, a boy, and a halfpenny dip.' In spite of all those drawbacks—the dim religious light and the dust-laden atmosphere—the gentlemen of the choir and the boys behaved like Trojans, and sang lustily and with a good courage. The public had little conception of the labour and expense involved in keeping up the services. The performances of the choir amounted to something like 730 a year, not counting rehearsals, and they sang very, very difficult music. There were no mellifluous echoes in Manchester Cathedral to augment the quantity of sound or to increase the purity or beauty of it, as in many churches. 'Everything is heard exactly as it is,' he said. 'Often have I wished that my choir could be heard under such improved conditions as, say, at St. Paul's Cathedral, where the most ordinary vocalists sound like seraphs.' As illustrative of the great musical influence of Manchester Cathedral, Dr. Pyne mentioned that from the organ loft many pupils had proceeded to distinguished positions in England, America, Canada, New Zealand and other places. 'The little boys are occasionally trying,' he added, 'but somehow I have missed them very much since I have left them.' Dr. Pyne will continue to retain his other appointments in Manchester—the Corporation organistship, with its weekly recitals in the Town Hall; Dean of the Faculty of Music and Lecturer on Music at Victoria University; and professor of the organ at the Manchester Royal College of Music.

SPECIAL SERVICES.

The Feast of the Conversion of St. Paul (Evensong) was worthily celebrated at St. Paul's Cathedral by the customary performance of a large portion of Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul,' to the accompaniment of a full orchestra. Steggall's fine festival setting, in C, of the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis was also sung. In the regrettable absence, through illness, of Sir George Martin, Mr. Charles Macpherson, the sub-organist, proved an efficient conductor, and Mr. Charles G. Marchant officiated at the organ.

Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater,' in its English version ('At the foot of the Cross'), was sung at the oratorio service on Sunday afternoon, February 7, at Brixton Church, under the direction of Mr. Douglas Redman, organist and choirmaster. The accompaniments were played by a full professional orchestra (led by Mr. F. Weist-Hill), and Mr. Welton Hickin was at the organ.

Mendelssohn's 42nd Psalm and 'Hymn of Praise' were sung by the Shalford Choral Society in the Parish Church, Godalming, assisted by a small orchestra, on February 3. Mr. Boxall was the leader of the orchestra, Mr. Harris presided at the organ, and Miss Beatrice Clarke conducted.

At St. Paul's Chapel, Trinity Parish, New York—a building erected in 1766, the Mendelssohn centenary was celebrated at a special service on February 2, when 'Lauda Sion' (Praise Jehovah) was sung with orchestral and organ accompaniment. Mr. Edmund Jaques, organist of the chapel, conducted, and Mr. Moritz Schwarz, assistant-organist of Trinity Church, was at the organ. The congregation numbered 1,296 persons. On March 2, at a similar mid-day service, which lasts from noon to 1 o'clock, the church cantata, 'The darkest hour,' by Mr. Harold Moore, is to receive its first performance in America.

At West Croydon Congregational Church on February 17, the thirteenth choral festival of the Surrey Congregational Union was held. Selections were sung from Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' by the combined choir of over two hundred voices. Mr. Leonard H. Snow conducted, and Mr. J. E. Leah, organist of Guildford Congregational Church, rendered excellent service at the organ. An eloquent address on the true inwardness of music as an aid to devotion, given by the Rev. Thomas Stephens, of New Malden, was much appreciated alike by choir and congregation. The fine church was crowded to its utmost capacity.

MENDELSSOHN CENTENARY SERVICES.

At Winchester Cathedral the anthems sung included 'Rejoice, O ye people,' 'Why rage fiercely the heathen?' and 'Judge me, O God' (all eight parts) were sung, and the whole of the six Sonatas and three Preludes and Fugues for the organ were played by Dr. Prendergast, the cathedral organist, and his assistant, Mr. H. R. Eady.

The whole of the music on Sunday evening, January 31, at Red Hall Church, Audenshaw, was by Mendelssohn, the selection including Psalms 95 and 43, and the second and third movements of the 'Hymn of Praise' symphony.

'Elijah' was performed, on February 3, at the Woodford Union Church, under the direction of the organist and choirmaster, Mr. Sydney Trick, with Mr. T. H. Goodwin at the organ. The choir numbered 150 voices.

At the monthly musical service on Sunday evening, January 31, at Cliff Town Church, Westcliff-on-Sea, Mr. J. R. Griffiths, the organist and choirmaster, played movements from the second and fifth Organ sonatas, and the choir sang 'Hear my prayer.'

A proposal has been set on foot to place a memorial of Dr. S. S. Wesley in Winchester Cathedral, of which he was organist from 1849 to 1865. 'It was during that period,' according to the circular announcing the project, 'and for the performance of his famous Winchester choir, that many of those anthems and services were written which have placed him in the very front rank of composers of church music.' Subscriptions, limited to one guinea, may be sent to Archdeacon Fearon, Mr. R. G. K. Wrench and Mr. Fred. Bowker (treasurer), all of Winchester.

CATHEDRAL CHURCH OF ST. PAUL, MALTA.

On the Eve of the Feast of the Conversion of St. Paul—Sunday, January 24—the 'Conversion' section of Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' was sung under the direction of Mr. W. S. Robinson, organist of the cathedral. On Wednesday, February 3, a special service was held 'In loving memory of Felix Mendelssohn Bartholdy,' when selections from 'St. Paul' and 'Elijah' were sung, and the 'Hymn of Praise' symphony and the War March of the Priests ('Athalie') were played. The Rev. J. Blackbourne conducted on the latter occasion. Both services were highly appreciated by the large congregations who attended them.

CHOIR BENEVOLENT FUND.

The fifty-seventh annual report of the Choir Benevolent Fund furnishes proof of the highly prosperous financial position of this excellent organization. The quinquennial valuation made during the past year shows that, after providing for all possible claims, there is a surplus of over seven hundred pounds, notwithstanding the fact that a reserve of £1,500 has been made to enable the Society to grant pensions. Moreover, the Committee of Management are now in a position to increase the payments made at the death of members. This and the general prosperity of the Society is a matter upon which the members and the indefatigable secretary, Mr. W. A. Frost, are to be warmly congratulated. The only matter for regret is that there are still many members of cathedral and collegiate choirs who fail to realize the valuable benefits provided, at a cost within the means of all, by this admirable Fund.

Dr. Walter G. Alcock on February 16 displayed the resources of a three-manual organ which Messrs. J. W. Walker & Sons have built for the American Episcopal Cathedral, Manila, Philippine Islands. The instrument, the gift of Mrs. Sears, of Mass., U.S.A., has been specially constructed for the trying climate of Manila, which is very humid. The recital took place at the factory of Messrs. Walker.

An attractive booklet has been issued in connection with the reconstruction of the organ, by Messrs. William Hill & Son, in St. Mary's Church, The Boltons. In addition to the annotated programmes of the re-opening recitals, the publication contains views of the organ and photographs of the late vicar, the Rev. W. T. du Boulay, and the organist, Mr. R. Meyrick Roberts.

A novelty in hymnals, to be called 'The Fellowship Hymn Book,' is shortly to be issued. It is intended for the use of the Pleasant Sunday Afternoon Brotherhoods, Adult Schools, and similar meetings for men. The collection will include a considerable number of new hymns of a virile type, and expressive of the love of home. The tune-book is scarcely less original, as, in addition to the inclusion of a considerable number of tunes specially written by well-known musicians, a number of folk-song melodies will find a place in the selection. Mr. Edwin Dalton, of Aldersgate Street, and Messrs. Headley Brothers, of Bishopsgate Street, are the joint publishers of 'The Fellowship Hymn Book.'

Memorabilia, 1908, is an interesting pamphlet which gives 'A short account of the work and doings of All Saints' Church Choir, Monkwearmouth, Advent, 1907, to Advent, 1908.' In sending us the pamphlet, Mr. Ernest W. Moore, the organist and choirmaster of the church, says: 'It is compiled in order to sustain the interest of choir members, young and old.' He adds, 'Choir work should not be self glory, but a help and a stimulus to make choristers live noble lives—a stepping-stone to the formation of men of character.' Such ideals are worthy of all emulation.

Reviews.

Ode to a nightingale. For baritone solo, chorus and orchestra. Words by Keats. Music by Dr. Ernest Walker.

Milton, thou should'st be living. For baritone solo, chorus, orchestra of strings, and organ. Words by Wordsworth. Music by Gerald Bullivant.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

In Keats's beautiful Ode, Dr. Walker has found a congenial medium for intimate expression, and his setting contains much that is delicate, picturesque and highly characteristic of the composer's thoughtful style. The contemplative mood of the poem is reproduced in the music, which is continuous, repetitions of the words being avoided with almost Wagnerian rigour. The interest is varied by alternation and combination of solo and chorus. Some very effective passages occur in the choral writing, which is smooth and flowing, while it is modern in texture. The work will well serve to interest and display the skill of experienced choirs. The ending where the choir sings the words 'Fled is that music:—Do I wake or sleep?' unaccompanied, is novel and striking. Only a singer of responsive temperament will do justice to the baritone solo portions, which comprise nearly half the work.

Mr. Bullivant's short setting of Wordsworth's sonnet should find favour through its broad and genial melodious character. The spirit of the composition as a whole is more in accordance with the words:

'So didst thou travel on life's common way
In cheerful godliness'

occurring near the end, than with the despondent tone of the opening lines. We could pay no higher compliment to the instrumental introduction than to say that it recalls the style of Parry's 'Blest pair of Sirens,' although there is of course no suggestion of plagiarism. The solo portion is not exacting, and the choral parts are well within the scope of any choir with sufficient resources to give effect to the grandiose style of the work.

[The above reviews supersede those which, owing to a typographical accident, appeared incorrectly in our last issue, p. 102.]

Memorials of two sisters: Susanna and Catherine Winkworth. Edited by their niece, Margaret J. Shaen. With two portraits.

[Longmans, Green & Co.]

More than thirty years have passed since the death of the younger of the gifted sisters forming the subject-matter of this deeply interesting and well-compiled volume. No undue haste, therefore, can be charged against those who could furnish the material for the biography of Catherine, the better known of the pair, and the translator par excellence of German hymns into the English language. Would any English hymnal be considered complete without an infusion of those sacred poems of the Fatherland in Miss Catherine Winkworth's translations? But although she is best known by these admirable renderings into our vernacular, the volume is rich in a life—all too short though it was: she died at the age of fifty-one—full of interest and charged with high ideals and permeated with a desire to do good in every way. Her letters are charming. There is one, written in 1857, in which she gives a graphic description of Beethoven's Choral symphony, played under Hallé at Manchester. She says, it begins with 'striving after joy. There are lovely little bits like innocent childish happiness, long crescendos beginning in struggle and ending in exultation, then bits of intense longing and passionate despair—all mingled together in a most fitful, chaotic manner, like many lives; but it ends sadly.' Her descriptions of the remaining movements are equally poetic and discriminating. Much information is given of the co-operation with her of Sterndale Bennett and Otto Goldschmidt in preparing the music of the 'Chorale Book for England.' Indeed, there is much valuable matter in these readable pages that might be quoted. One extract must be given because of its importance from a translation point of view: 'A hymn that sounds popular and homelike in its own language must sound so in ours if it is to be really available for devotional purposes, and it seems to me allowable for this object to make such alterations in the metre as lie in the different nature of the language.' These are wise words, even of wider application than to hymns, and should be laid to heart by translators who too often sacrifice sense to literalness. The correspondence of the Misses Winkworth reflects their attractive personality, and Miss Shaen has linked the letters to the life-story of her aunts in a manner which merits the warmest commendation.

SONGS.

Songs from the highway (Book I.). By Ernest Austin.
[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Mr. Austin is well known as an apostle of modernism. In his case the tendency manifests itself in the form of indefinite tonality and rhythm. 'Love's tragedy,' for instance, which is the second of his six 'Songs from the highway,' is practically unbarred, and the accentuation is left to the discrimination of the singer, with whom it is to be hoped the accompanist will be in sympathy. The opening lines of this song, 'Plunged in grief, with straining heart and flooded eyes, moans the young girl by the body of her lover,' and the title, 'O sad day,' of another, will suffice to show that Mr. Austin pays some court to the prevailing taste for gloom in music. In these, as well as in two other songs of a less lachrymose character, the composer is his own author, in which capacity he takes more naturally to prose than to verse. 'In April,' of which the words are by Emanuel Giebel, is noteworthy in that the vocal part is in one key throughout. It is a bright song with an interesting accompaniment. That Mr. Austin's new volume does not lack variety is self evident.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

Allegro (Op. 64, No. 1). By Cyril Scott.
Prelude. By Ethel Barns.
Impromptu. By Cecil Hazlehurst.
The gate of memory. By Emerson Whitthorne.
[Elkin & Co.]

Among modern harmonic effects those of Mr. Cyril Scott have the virtue of a flavour of their own, though people of academical leanings may find them an acquired taste. In his 'Allegro' Mr. Scott shows an anxiety to extend the conventional limits of the key, and in other respects provides his admirers with something to think over.

In her short 'Prelude,' Miss Barns secures an imposing effect; the hands that execute the piece should have a good command of the keyboard, and the power to play full chords readily.

Mr. Hazlehurst's 'Impromptu' is of moderate technical difficulty, and contains two engaging and widely contrasted melodies that make their appearance in many keys.

Mr. Whitthorne's piece of pianoforte programme-music is a record of his impression of Rossetti's picture from which the title is borrowed. Its appropriateness as a musical delineation need not enter into the consideration of its abstract merits. The interest is chiefly harmonic, and the executive demands are moderate.

Brahms. By H. C. Colles. The Music of the Masters series.

[John Lane.]

Mr. Colles has the rare gift of writing lucidly on technical subjects. In perusing the pages of this handy little volume, one is struck by the breadth of view of the author in analysing the works of Brahms. It is obvious that he is an admirer of the master, else he would not have given such whole-hearted study to his works as is proved by this book; yet Mr. Colles does not assume a partisan attitude, but sets forth the result of his Brahmsian studies in a manner which calls for unqualified praise. An example of his attractive style is furnished in the following extract referring to the third movement of the first Symphony: 'The Allegretto has for principal theme a light-hearted little tune played by the wind over a pizzicato bass. This fragment will recall to those who have heard it its freshness, like to a mild spring day. There are tributary themes which add new incident and ever-changing interest; all is living and moving, yet nothing strenuous or earnest, though in the central episode (worked in with the music of the first part in the coda), there is a touch of mystery like a cloud passing across the face of the sun.' A stray sharp appears to have found its way into the music-type example on p. 84.

CHORAL MUSIC.

The Fakenham Ghost. Cantata for soprano solo, chorus and orchestra. Poem by Robert Bloomfield. Music by Bertram Luard-Selby.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

It was with this little cantata that Mr. Luard-Selby won the prize in the recent competition of the Association of Musical Festivals. Bright music allied to humorous words will never cease to appeal to choralists and their audiences, therefore this latest addition to the category should become a favourite piece, especially as it has more purely artistic virtues than humorous descriptive choral works are wont to possess. The ghost is a stray ass's foal that, for company, follows a benighted ancient dame on her trudge over the moor. The eight lines that solve the mystery of the apparition and its pattering footsteps are cast in the form of a short and easy solo that might very well be sung by all the sopranos of a choir. The music never fails to suit the words, and melodic and rhythmic invention sustain the interest throughout. Extreme chromatic changes are avoided, and choralists will find little difficulty in tackling their parts.

The Organist's Christian Year. Edited by Charles William Pearce.

[The Vincent Music Publishing Company, Ltd.]

This well got-up volume is as attractive from its handsome appearance as by its Kebleic title. It claims to provide 'a series of useful voluntaries (original and selected) appropriate for use on each Sunday.' The preface states that 'An attempt has been made to meet the requirements of "all sorts and conditions" of organists, by selecting pieces mostly [the italics are Dr. Pearce's] of an easy character, so that this book can be taken up and played from without much (if any) previous preparation.' Apart from the danger of putting a premium upon laziness, we doubt if the rank and file of organists could efficiently perform most of these pieces without 'previous preparation,' and even some considerable practice. The pedal part is very much in evidence throughout, and Dr. Pearce has a penchant for double pedals, a stretching of the legs which may be overdone. Some of the selections are peculiarly happy, such as an ingenious postlude, by the editor, on the tune 'Helmsley,' for a Sunday in Advent, and an arrangement of 'I know that my Redeemer liveth' as a Communion voluntary on Easter Day; but the appropriation of Handel's operatic overture 'Giustino' (not 'Guistino,' as printed) to Septuagesima Sunday is not quite so obvious—at least, to a reviewer who is, perhaps, less ecclesiastically minded than Dr. Pearce.

Ode on Time (Op. 27). Poem by Milton. Set to music for baritone solo, chorus and orchestra, by Dr. H. Walford Davies.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Everything that comes from the composer of 'Everyman' has claims upon the attention of musicians. In attempting the formidable task of composing music powerful enough to be associated with Milton's impressive poem, Dr. Davies has once again justified confidence in his powers of insight and expression. The poem is big and serious, although it has its note of joy, and deals as it were with great issues. It forms, therefore, a fit text for the austere and broad style of the composer.

The work is a short one, occupying about ten minutes performance. The baritone solo is sometimes detached and sometimes immersed in the chorus. It is stated that the solo may be sung by a small semi-chorus of baritones. The choral portions, while not presenting great difficulties, call for experienced singers. The dynamical changes are often very striking. A great climax at the words :

' Truth, and Peace, and Love, shall ever shine
About the supreme throne
Of Him to whose happy-making sight alone
When once our heavenly-guided soul shall climb—' is one of the fine points of the work, and the majestic close :

' . . . we shall for ever sit Triumphing over Death and Chance and thee, O Time.'

is a splendid, jubilant peroration that seems to call for the sonority of thousands of executants.

SONGS BY BRAHMS.

Five Songs (Op. 19). For soprano or tenor.

Nine Songs (Op. 32). Two volumes.

English versions by W. G. Rothery.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

It is greatly to be hoped that the provision of the singable and poetic English versions by Mr. W. G. Rothery will increase the vogue of Brahms's songs, which are less often heard than they should be.

The first group (Op. 19) contains 'The kiss' (Der Kuss), 'Parting' (Scheiden und Meiden), 'Parted' (In der Ferne), 'The blacksmith' (Der Schmied), and 'An Æolian harp' (An eine Aeolsharfe). The first four named are very simple and diatonic, and generally within the powers of amateurs. The touching words of 'An eine Aeolsharfe' are by Möricke, and have impelled the composer to one of his best efforts. The setting will test the mettle of experienced singers. The accompaniment is a thing of beauty in itself. We commend the song to the attention of competition committees on the look out for a beautiful and searching test.

The nine songs forming Op. 32 comprise, in the first volume: In the night (In der Nacht), I promised thee (Nicht mehr zu dir zu gehen), Amid the gloomy woods (Ich schleich' umher betrübt und stumm), O where? (Wo ist er nun?); and in the second volume: Vain is thy power (Wehe, so willst du), You say my heart deceived me (Du sprichst, das ich mich täuschte), Smiles about thy lips are straying (Bitteres zu sagen denkst du), No more we twain go forth a-maying (So stehn wir, ich und meine Weide), Thou art my queen (Wie bist du, meine Königin). This group may be described as fairly simple and melodious for art songs, and they afford ample scope for interpretation. Their compass is within the powers of average voices; only once or twice do they go beyond the treble staff. One of the most elaborate and expressive is 'In the night,' while one of the simplest, 'Amid the gloomy woods,' illustrates the composer's fondness for the flat sixth of the key.

Obituary.

PROFESSOR HAUSMANN.

Chamber music has sustained a great loss by the sudden death of PROFESSOR ROBERT HAUSMANN, at Vienna, on January 19. Born at Rottleberode, in the Harz, on August 13, 1852, he successively studied the violoncello under Theodore and Wilhelm Müller, the latter master at the Berlin Hochschule at its foundation in 1869. At the urgent request of Joachim, Piatti took the young man as a pupil, and after he had held the appointment of violoncellist in the private quartet of Graf Hochberg, he became second professor of the violoncello at the Hochschule. Professor Hausmann was well known and highly esteemed in England as the violoncellist of the Joachim Quartet, which he joined in 1879. His playing was characterized by great power, yet always tempered with artistic restraint, and as a classical interpreter of chamber music, no less than by his influence as a teacher, Robert Hausmann was an artist of the highest rank. To his ripe musicianship were united a most attractive personality, and his geniality of manner, no less than his courteous bearing, won for him the respect and esteem of many music-loving friends in England.

EDOUARD FÉTIS.

M. EDOUARD FÉTIS, son of the famous Fétis of the 'Biographie universelle des musiciens,' died at Brussels on January 31 at the age of ninety-seven. He was librarian of the Bibliothèque Royale, and to a certain extent carried on his father's work by publishing a number of books, such as 'Les Musiciens Belges,' and sundry volumes on the artistic treasures of the Belgian museums. He became music and art critic for the Indépendance Belge in 1836, and held that post till his death, his last musical criticism having dealt with the production of M. Dukas's opera 'Ariane et Barbe-Bleu' at the Théâtre de la Monnaie on January 2. This wonderful old man, the world's doyen of musical critics, died, not of senile decay, but as the result of a street accident, and in the full possession of all his faculties, within three years of becoming a centenarian!

MR. J. L. MOLLOY.

Mr. JAMES LYMON MOLLOY died on February 4 at Woolleys, Hambleden, Bucks, in his seventy-second year. The eldest son of Kedo Molloy, of Cornolore, King's County, Ireland, he was born there on August 19, 1837. He was called to the English bar in 1864, and music was his recreation. Between 1873 and 1903 he composed over one hundred songs, of which not a few attained extraordinary popularity—'Darby and Joan,' 'Love's old sweet song,' 'Thady O'Flinn,' 'The clang of the wooden shoon,' and 'The Vagabond.' Three operettas testified to his melodic gift: 'The student's frolic' (libretto by Arthur Sketchley), 'My aunt's secret,' and 'Very catching.' Mr. Molloy, who was a man of genial disposition, wrote an interesting book entitled 'Our Autumn holiday on French rivers.'

MADAME KLEEBERG.

MADAME CLOTILDE KLEEBERG, the well-known and generally appreciated pianist, died at Brussels on February 7. Born of German parents, in Paris, on June 27, 1866, she became a pupil of Madame Réty, and later of Madame Massart, at the Conservatoire, where, in 1877, she gained a 'first medal,' and in the following year the 'first prize' for pianoforte-playing. After having for some time studied under Madame Clara Schumann at Frankfurt, she started at the early age of twelve on her career as virtuoso, and met with great success in France, Belgium, England, Germany and Russia. She made her first appearance in England at Mr. Manns's benefit concert, Crystal Palace, June 9, 1883, when her beautiful touch and refined style were greatly admired.

MR. G. H. JOHNSTONE.

Birmingham could boast of no more warm-hearted or truer lover of music than GEORGE HOPE JOHNSTONE, whose death, at the age of sixty-eight, we much regret to record. Prominently identified with the public, social and philanthropic life of Birmingham for nearly forty years, Mr. Johnstone gave many of the best hours of his busy life to music and the furtherance of the art in Birmingham. Music was his great delight. At the age of ten he entered the choir of the Swedenborgian Church, Birmingham, and remained a chorister there for half-a-century. Owing to his interest in the church music, the choir became one of the best in the Midlands, and not a few distinguished vocalists and players, as personal friends of Mr. Johnstone, occasionally found their way into the singing-pew or organ loft. He had a fine music-room in his home at Headingley, Handsworth (where he died on February 13), and his further interest in art showed itself in a fine collection of paintings.

Mr. Johnstone's public musical work, always cheerfully and willingly rendered so long as his health permitted, was of an important and most useful nature. His zeal and interest in music afforded full play for his energies as chairman of the Institute of Music and President of the Amateur Orchestral Society. Moreover, he was connected with the Birmingham Musical Festivals for thirty years, and since 1882 he had been a prominent member of the Orchestral Committee. He was one of the founders of the Birmingham

Clef Club, a social organization which has fulfilled its object of providing a rendezvous for musical and intellectual intercourse.

At the funeral service held in Wretham Road Free Church, Handsworth, Sir Frederick Bridge and Mr. C. W. Perkins, together with Mr. G. H. Manton, the organist of the church, presided at the organ. The remains were afterwards cremated at the Crematorium, Perry Barr. Mr. Johnstone was one of that fine type of Englishmen who, successful in business, devote themselves heart and soul to the moral and intellectual welfare of those among whom their lot is cast.

MR. JOSHUA MARSHALL.

The death is recorded with regret of Mr. JOSHUA MARSHALL, founder of the well-known firm of Messrs. Joshua Marshall & Co., Limited, music sellers and pianoforte dealers of Huddersfield and elsewhere. Born at Southowram, near Halifax, on September 14, 1841, Mr. Marshall showed great aptitude for music at an early age, and as a boy of sixteen he was appointed organist of St. Patrick's Church, Huddersfield. He had a remarkably keen ear, and became an excellent pianist and accompanist. For many years his musical activities outside the management of his business embraced the conductorship of the Huddersfield Choral, Glee and Madrigal, and Orpheus Societies. During the organistship of the late Mr. Henry Parratt at the Parish Church, Huddersfield, Mr. Marshall discharged the duties of choirmaster and occasionally officiated as deputy organist. At one period of his career he was organist at Brunswick Street Free Wesleyan Church, and from 1882 to 1886 he was borough organist. As a composer he was favourably known by his beautiful setting of Longfellow's 'Stars of the summer night.' In addition to several hymn-tunes and a local patriotic song, 'Our Town, our Trade,' he composed a Litany (MS.), in use at Huddersfield Parish Church, and he made an arrangement of the quaint 'Holmfirth Anthem.' Mr. Marshall was held in great esteem by all who knew him, for he was one who combined in his personality musical gifts and a genial disposition. His death took place at his residence, 22, Portland Street, Huddersfield, on February 13.

MR. SILAS.

Frequenter of the British Museum Reading Room will miss one of its 'characters'—the little man with remarkable features and wearing a red fez. EDOUARD SILAS was his name, and he died on February 8, at 7, Comeragh Road, West Kensington. He was born at Amsterdam, August 22, 1837, and made his first public appearance there at the age of ten, after having studied under Neher, of the Court Orchestra at Mannheim. He then became a pianoforte pupil of Lacombe, in 1839, and of Kalkbrenner, at Paris, in 1842. Upon entering the Conservatoire he studied under Benoist (organ) and Halévy (composition), and in 1849 obtained the first-prize for organ playing. Since the year 1850 he made England his home. His first appearance here as a pianist was in the spring of 1853, at a concert of the Liverpool Philharmonic Society, and on May 21 following he played for the first time in London at one of John Ella's Musical Union matinées. The merits and demerits of his performances at that time were the subject of a little newspaper war in the Musical World of 1850. For many years Mr. Silas was organist of the Roman Catholic Chapel, Kingston-on-Thames, and in 1866 he secured the prize of the Belgian competition for sacred music by his Mass for four voices and organ.

A somewhat prolific and certainly a gifted composer, there can be placed to his credit an oratorio, 'Joash' (Norwich Musical Festival, 1863); a Symphony in A (Musical Society of London, April 22, 1863, and Crystal Palace, February 20, 1864); Pianoforte concerto in D minor; a Fantasia and an Elégie, both for pianoforte and orchestra (Crystal Palace, 1865 and 1873); three Mythological pieces for orchestra (Philharmonic concert, 1888); an English opera, 'Nitrocris,' overture and incidental music to 'Franchette'; a musical comedietta, 'Love's dilemma'; a Cantata; a Symphony in C, in addition to a large number of pianoforte and organ pieces, &c. He was also the author of an unpublished treatise on Musical Notation, and an Essay on a new method of Harmony. His organ music deserves greater attention than it receives, as for instance an Andante in D, with its stately middle section in B flat, and an Allegro moderato in F.

For many years he had a harmony class at the Guildhall School of Music and at the London Academy of Music. Mr. Silas had a pretty wit, and his store of stories seemed endless. An instance of the former occurred when he was walking with Sir George Martin through some of the narrow courts near St. Paul's, when he said, 'What a number of chromatic passages there are about here.'

MR. FREDERIC WEBER.

A familiar figure in London musical circles has been removed by the death of Mr. FREDERIC WEBER, which we regret to record, took place at his residence, 23, Highbury Grange, on February 16. Born in Württemberg, on November 5, 1819, Mr. Weber came to England in 1841, and eight years later he was appointed resident organist of the German Chapel Royal, St. James's Palace, an office he held with distinction for fifty-two years, until his retirement in 1901. He was the author of a 'Popular history of music from the earliest times,' 'The pianist's practical guide,' and 'Comprehensive counterpoint.' His last work, a treatise entitled 'Numeral notation, or An easy method of mastering harmony and counterpoint,' he had completed only a few weeks before his death in his ninetieth year. In later years his energy was mainly concentrated upon the realization of a wish that was ever present in his mind, viz., to increase the interest of the people in music and the history of the art, to help amateurs towards a more intellectual understanding of the music they played and heard. Mr. Weber was the recipient of the Jubilee medal, the Danish Order of Merit, together with the Prussian Orders of the Crown and of the Red Eagle, both of the fourth class.

Mr. JOHN EVANS, first musical adviser to the London School Board, from 1872 to 1892, died, we regret to record, at Clevedon, on February 9, aged eighty-seven years.

STRAUSS'S 'ELEKTRA.'

PRODUCED AT ROYAL OPERA HOUSE, DRESDEN.

Of the many suggested definitions of genius, probably none have pointed to the fact that one of its qualifications is, of necessity, a complete egotism. The man who would aspire to the title must exert his creative powers for himself alone, and, quite incidentally, for those who chance to think with him, entirely disregarding popularity, success, or pecuniary gain. On this account the offering of a prize for a work of art—be it music, poetry or plastic art—has but the faintest chance of bringing to light a masterpiece. Competition, whatever its merits in commerce, is not healthy in art, where the best work is done solely to satisfy the creator thereof.

It is particularly noticeable with Richard Strauss that his favourite line of work lies in the region of the perverse and unnatural. If this were obvious in 'Salome' it is equally so in 'Elektra.' True, the motives in the latter opera are more wholesome, according to English standards, than in the former. But the gloom and horror which pervade von Hofmannsthal's play are evidently the features which attracted the composer, and these features are what make one ask, Can such a work ever become popular? Will the man who goes to the theatre to be amused ever tolerate a drama possessing the solitary motive of revenge, a drama containing no love interest, no light relief, nothing but an hour-and-three-quarters of black hate? In a word, will 'Elektra' survive after its novelty has abated? Naturally, to answer for the general public is impossible, but for that comparatively small section of humanity who has an appreciation of what is true in art, an unqualified affirmative can be returned.

There have been given, up to the present time, three performances of 'Elektra,' at all of which the writer has been privileged to be present. This may, perhaps, qualify him to write with more assurance than those who have had to judge the work after the first representation. On each occasion the impression received has been the same: an overwhelming sense of the bigness of the latter part of the opera. The curtain descends leaving one, for a moment, stunned by the awful tragedy of Elektra's life. Taken separately, the earlier scenes contain much that is beautiful—two or three of the rare lyrical moments occur in the first half—and all is expressive; but they are detached scenes, wonderfully written and well contrasted. After the entrance of Orestes there is no break; it is one long crescendo of emotion until the fall of the curtain. It is noteworthy that the shape of the opera has been assisted by the judicious cuts and alterations that have been made in the text, but one wishes Strauss could have spared us a little more of the scene between Orestes and Elektra. Many very beautiful passages have been sacrificed in order that his climax might not be too protracted, and that the triumphant peroration at the close might assume due proportion.

It is impossible to write about Strauss without referring to the subject of his orchestration; but in reality many of his effects are so indescribable that words seem lacking to express the colours which he conjures up with his mammoth orchestra. It has been objected by theorists that the mere increase in numbers of orchestral instruments, the simple doubling of wood-wind or brass, can result in no new tone-colour; but if these objectors could hear the 'Agamemnon' theme which opens 'Elektra,' a simple chord of D minor scored for, inter alia, 7 trumpets and 8 horns, possibly their opinion might undergo some modification. The array of 8 clarinets (2 in B flat, 2 in A, 2 in F—basset-horns, bass, and high E flat), the largest number yet employed in an operatic score, fully justifies its existence by the use the composer makes of these beautiful instruments; but the value of the hekelphone, another of Strauss's innovations, is more doubtful. This is a species of tenor oboe with a tone not unlike a bassoon, and its superiority to that instrument is not yet proved. The percussion department looks, on paper, most formidable; but it is used with commendable restraint. The only innovation is described in the score as 'eine Rute'—a rod. Its use is noticeable in the opening scene, where sharp blows, as of a cane striking the edge of a table, generally occurring on unaccented parts of the bar, lend a suggestion of roughness and brutality to the orchestration. Another interesting feature is the employment of the 5th to 8th horn-players for 2 B flat and 2 F tubas, during certain scenes, a device which was originated by Wagner but is not always carried out in performance. These instruments, in Strauss's hands, are responsible for some of his most original effects. In one place he uses them, muted, in combination with a piccolo, and succeeds in producing a result less like music than anything he has done before. It is an undoubted fact that his extreme discords are only rendered endurable to the ear by the manner in which they are presented. Thus, one of his harmonic devices is to present chords of two totally different keys simultaneously. The effect, for example, of this played upon the pianoforte is simply excruciating, but with the B minor chord sustained by wood-wind and the F minor tremolo on a harp, the effect is nothing worse than startling:

Again, the theme that accompanies Elektra's isolation from human intercourse sounds, indeed, wild and distraught on stringed instruments, but not as painful as one would expect from such a chord:

But at Elektra's recognition of Orestes, it is only the extreme intensity and complexity of her emotions that permit one to endure full brass with six trumpets on such chords as these :

It is only just to say that such dissonances are strictly reserved for situations where the emotional stress renders it necessary, and there are many beautiful harmonic effects—yes, and melodic also—in the quieter parts.

It is in his gift of characterization that Strauss's genius is so remarkably shown. It matters not what material he is utilizing, he can mould it into the very soul of the character he is portraying, he can make it typify the subtlest emotion. As an example: no two works could show more complete contrast of character than 'Salome' and 'Elektra,' yet if we dissect and compare their component parts we shall find, as is only to be expected, many similar phrases occurring in both. Thus the rhythm of Agamemnon's theme :

a favourite one with Strauss, absolutely pervades 'Salome' :

yet the two in no way suggest one another. Further, in Orestes' scene occurs the phrase identical with one of Salome's blandishments :

yet their identity never strikes the listener, so different in mood are the two works. Nor can one fail to admire the way Strauss makes the greatest possible use of the womanliness of Chrysothemis to obtain contrast. Her character affords the one opportunity for softness and gentleness, and the exhilaration of her first scene with her sister, although (or perhaps, because) it verges on the commonplace, is like a spot of sunlight breaking through the murky atmosphere of the rest of the drama.

It is with some relief that we fail to discover in 'Elektra' any trace of those methods usually associated with the French impressionists—methods which consist chiefly of melodic phrases constructed on the tonal scale and harmonic progressions founded on the same basis. This style has become such a trick at the hands of Debussy and his imitators that what little novelty it once possessed is quite worn out. That Strauss has on occasion trended thither is well known—most of 'Herod's' music is on a tonal scale—but happily, despite its chromatic dissonances, 'Elektra' has throughout a perfectly diatonic basis for its harmony, and it is undoubtedly to this fact that it owes its strength and nobility.

The first performance on January 25 was a veritable triumph for all concerned. Not a hitch of any sort was observable to mar the presentation of this remarkable work. Herr Schuch led his orchestra through the maze of complexities with an assurance that made one gasp. He possesses the ideal conductor's temperament: a perfect ear and a fine feeling for climax, backed up by long years of experience. Of the singers, the honours undoubtedly fall to Frau Krull, whose performance in the exacting part of Elektra is deserving of the highest praise. From her first entrance to the fall of the curtain she is continuously the centre of interest, and her powerful realization of the character keeps her at a high tension throughout. Frau Schumann-Heink, the Klytemnestra at the first performance, though not ideal, was distinctly superior to Frau Chavanne who has played it since. Fraulein Siems, as Chrysothemis, displayed the possession of a voice of rare qualities, and the smaller parts were likewise adequately sustained.

PAUL CORDER.

THE NEW ENGLISH OPERA 'THE ANGELUS.'

FIRST PERFORMANCE.

The first production of a new opera by an English composer during the grand opera season at Covent Garden was such an uncommon event, that there is no cause for wonder that it roused great interest in critical circles if not amongst the opera-going public, most of whom must, unfortunately, be classed as unbelievers in native art. The origin of the new work and an account of its composer were given in The Musical Times in February, 1908. It is, therefore, only necessary now to recall the main facts. A few years ago, Messrs. Ricordi offered a prize of £500 for an original opera by a British-born composer. Fifty-two libretti were received, twenty-nine were set to music, and in the end the prize was awarded to 'The Angelus,' a romantic opera composed by Dr. E. W. Naylor, of Emmanuel College, Cambridge, to the libretto of Mr. Wilfrid Thornely, of Trinity Hall, Cambridge. After considerable delay and some public discussion, the new work was brought to a hearing at Covent Garden on January 27. It may be said at once that on the part of the Covent Garden management no pains were spared to secure an adequate performance of the opera. Band, principals, chorus, and all concerned, including the conductor, Mr. Percy Pitt, laboured con amore. The work, therefore, had every possible chance of success. That the audience was not large was no doubt chiefly owing to the fact that the night was unusually dismal and foggy.

The story of the opera turns upon the discovery by an old monk (Tunstall) of the whereabouts of a herb from which an elixir of life can be distilled. He has an unholy desire to avail himself of his discovery, but is warned by the Angel of Death and by departed spirits of the awful consequences that will ensue. He abandons his intention, and imparts his dread secret to a young novice, Francis, who eagerly undertakes the pilgrimage to the distant land where the precious herb is to be found. In a tragic scene Death then claims Tunstall. On his journey Francis arrives at a village green on a festival day. Beatrice, the queen of the revels, has the privilege of choosing a consort for the day. Francis, of course, is the chosen one, and the acquaintance thus begun ripens into passionate love. After vows have been exchanged, Francis continues his journey and promises to return with the elixir that will make them both immortal. He arrives at a temple guarded by nymphs, and eventually seizes the herb. Meantime, Beatrice, fearing that her lover has deserted her, is broken-hearted and on the point of death. Francis then arrives and hurriedly brews the elixir, and just as he is about to convey the precious draught to the lips of Beatrice the Angel of Death once more appears and claims her. Francis, in an agony of despair, now seeks to destroy his own life, but Death forces him to drink the elixir that dooms him to the earthly immortality he sought and would now escape.

It will be seen from this brief sketch of the story that there are some strong situations in the drama it unfolds. Its actual text, however, cannot be freely commended. The dialogue is sometimes strangely matter-of-fact, and intrusive moralising again and again hinders the action and leads up to anti-climaxes. The cast was as follows :

An opinion as to the value of Dr. Naylor's music depends upon the sympathies and standpoint of a critic. Judged by the standards set up by the great operas—which are the survivals of the fittest—it must be admitted that the new opera displays some weak conception, and that the treatment not infrequently verges on the commonplace. But, on the other hand, it may be claimed fairly that as the conditions of the competition were that a lyric opera should be submitted, the result should not be pitted against masterpieces of other schools. Whatever faults or shortcomings are urged against 'The Angelus,' it is obvious to a judicial critic that it contains some excellent music, and that in places—notably in the first love duet between Francis and Beatrice, the scene at the temple with the nymphs, and the thrilling situation where Beatrice dies—it is clear that Dr. Naylor possesses considerable dramatic power which, if developed by experience and not crushed by harsh criticism, may some day enable him to achieve much greater things than 'The Angelus.' English opera is at present a fragile growth, and needs more nurture and sympathy than chilling blasts.

As we have already stated, the work was admirably performed, and it must also be recorded that the audience, fit though few, was ready to recognize with something approaching enthusiasm the best features of the work.

MR. MACLEAN'S 'THE ANNUNCIATION.'

The concert given by the London Symphony Orchestra on February 15 brought forward a new choral work of important dimensions, namely, 'The Annunciation': Bible scenes set to music for soprano, mezzo-soprano, tenor and bass soli, chorus and orchestra, composed by Mr. Alexander Morvaren Maclean. The new oratorio—as we presume it must be classed—was performed under the most advantageous circumstances, inasmuch as Dr. Coward's famous Sheffield Musical Union formed the chorus, and the soloists were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. Gervase Elwes and Mr. Robert Burnett and, moreover, the composer was the conductor.

Mr. Maclean is not unknown to fame. Three operas from his pen—'The King's prize' (produced by the London Academy of Music at the Royalty Theatre in 1904); 'Petrucio' (produced at Covent Garden by the Moody-Manners Company in 1895); and 'Die Liebesgeige' (produced at Mayence in 1906)—can certainly be placed to his credit. Whether Mr. Maclean has at once succeeded in finding an appropriate idiom for oratorio or sacred drama is somewhat doubtful. It would seem rather that his operatic training has too strongly dominated his style. The subject of the 'Annunciation' demands lofty treatment and artistic restraint. It is easy to give Mr. Maclean credit for much originality and power to vivify by strong colours and sudden contrasts, but there are probably many who will find the colours too glaring for such a solemn subject. He is able to work up orchestral and choral forces to powerful climaxes which, however are sometimes not obviously congruous. Some of the choral passages, especially as sung by the Sheffield singers, were highly dramatic and exciting as music, and there were often charming touches of varied orchestration that left one wistful for more. Mr. Maclean's use of the leit motif is ingenious, and throughout the work considerable technical skill is displayed. The chant form employed in several places for the chorus had a peculiar and striking effect. On the whole the work was interesting, because of its novelty; but on a second hearing that which by some was considered as shortcomings might appear in a better light. Mr. Maclean proved himself to be an exceptionally good conductor, and it is no wonder that, as we are informed, his achievements in this respect called forth the commendation of Dr. Richter, the master-conductor.

A fine performance of Beethoven's Choral symphony, conducted by Dr. Richter, occupied the remainder of the concert. The soloists already named took part, and the chorus sang their best.

DVORÁK'S 'STABAT MATER' AT THE ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

The performance of Dvorák's choral masterpiece given on February 28 by the Royal Choral Society, under the direction of Sir Frederick Bridge, fitly draws attention to a work that has not been heard in recent years so often as its great merits deserve. Dvorák is well-known as the composer of a buoyant 'New World' Symphony and other instrumental works of a popular character in which the spirit of his nationality is reflected so fluently and truly, while the more solid side of his genius is apt to be passed over. His true ideals and gifts as a musician of the highest culture are nowhere better exemplified than in his 'Stabat Mater.' At its first performance in England (in 1883) this beautiful work won an instant success. The revelation of new possibilities in sacred music, the proof that pure lyrical beauty and deep devotional sentiment were compatible, and the earnestness of purpose that characterises every page of the work, became a theme for wonder and admiration.

While by no means revolutionary in his methods, Dvorák wrote sincerely in the style and forms that suited his individuality. He divided the Latin hymn into ten numbers, each reflecting a single mood or portraying a single situation. The music reproduces the underlying mood of each number, but is otherwise absolute and disregards the changes of feeling that occur line by line. The interest is upheld throughout by felicitous thematic invention, masterly choral writing, picturesque orchestration and striking—though never uncouth—harmonies that sound original even after the developments of twenty years. The first three numbers, 'Stabat mater dolorosa,' 'Quis est homo' and 'Eia, mater' are divided between chorus and solo quartet. The sorrowful mood and minor key of these sections and the ensuing bass solo, 'Fac ut ardeat,' give way in the chorus 'Tui nati vulnerati' to a graceful, flowing melodic style in a major key. Open simplicity and directness of appeal distinguish the tenor solo and chorus 'Fac me vere,' succeeded by a tender mood in the chorus 'Virgo, virginum præclara' and the duet 'Fac ut portem.' A quaint and almost old-fashioned alto solo, 'Inflammatu et accensus,' leads to the final quartet and chorus 'Quando corpus morietur,' in which material from the first number is employed to build up a striking fugato. An elaborate and vigorous Amen rises to a fine climax and dies down finally to a pianissimo. Viewed as a whole, the work commences in a sorrowful vein, to which uncertainty, hope and confidence succeed. The mood of the music is always congruous, its workmanship unerring, and its strength of character evident on every page.

The Royal Choral Society were roused by Dvorák's great work to one of their best efforts. Their singing exhibited unusual interest, and there was obvious endeavour to realise the composer's meaning. Considering the great size of the choir, the light and shade of their performance was highly creditable. The soloists were Miss Alys Bateman, Madame Clara Butt, Mr. Lloyd Chandos and Mr. Kennerley Rumford.

The concert also included the first performance by the Society of Sir Frederick Bridge's masterly setting of 'Rock of Ages,' in which Mr. Kennerley Rumford sang the baritone solo.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The relations between the Philharmonic Society and Mendelssohn were very pleasant, not to say intimate, during the seventeen years which covered the composer's ten visits to England. He made his first public appearance in this country at the Society's concert of May 25, 1829, and gave that magnificent performance of Beethoven's G major Concerto and partly conducted the concert of April 26, 1847, almost within six months of his premature and lamented death. During the intervening years he conducted six entire concerts and played at several others, and it would be rash to guess how many times his name has appeared in the Society's programmes since he first visited these shores. Moreover, for the Philharmonic Society, Mendelssohn composed his Italian symphony, the Hebrides and the Trumpet overtures, and he specially orchestrated the Scherzo from his Octet, which replaced the Minuet and Trio of the C minor Symphony which introduced him to an English audience eighty years ago. What more befitting the centenary of the composer's birth than that the programme of the concert on February 2 should mainly be drawn from the works of Felix Mendelssohn Bartholdy?

The performance opened with the 'Midsummer night's dream' overture, that fairylike composition which is as delightful in its poetic charm as it is wonderful for the composition of a boy of seventeen. To have omitted the Scotch symphony would have laid the Directors open to reproach; but the enjoyment we have hitherto derived from repeated performances of the work during nearly forty years was marred by the excessive speed at which the Scherzo was taken by the conductor on this occasion. If the movement had been played by the excellent orchestra without a conductor, how much more the intentions of the composer might have been realised. M. Raoul Pugno scarcely maintained his reputation by his interpretations of the G minor Concerto and three short unaccompanied pieces—Nos. 3 and 34 of the 'Songs without words' and the dainty Capriccio in E minor (Op. 16), the last named suggested by a creeping plant which Mendelssohn saw in Wales during his visit to Coed-du in 1829.

The novelty of this concert—given at Queen's Hall and conducted by M. Camille Chevillard (of Paris)—was an Orchestral Ballad, No. 3, entitled 'Grey Galloway,' by Mr. J. B. McEwen. According to the official analyst the piece is 'a musical reflection of ideas engendered by the physical characteristics and historical associations of the district lying in the extreme south-west corner of Scotland.' As in most modern works by the younger school of British composers, the Ballad shows skill in orchestral colouring, and it is not without a backbone of that virility and ruggedness characteristic of the scenery and associations of Grey Galloway. The composer was called to the platform at the conclusion of his Ballad and warmly applauded. It should be recorded that the programme-book contained a supplement portrait of Mendelssohn, after C. Jäger; an 'appreciation' of the composer by Mr. F. Gilbert Webb; and a 'Summary of works by Mendelssohn performed by the Philharmonic Society,' compiled by Mr. Myles B. Foster, one of the directors.

The chief interest of the concert on February 18 centred in the re-appearance in England of Signor Luigi Mancinelli. As conductor of the evening's music he received a very hearty welcome, and his effective 'Cleopatra' overture found a place in the programme. Other attractive features of this music-making were Mr. Arthur Hervey's genial tone-poem 'Summer,' successfully produced at the Cardiff festival of 1907, conducted by the composer, and the eminently satisfactory performances of Mr. Godowsky in Chopin's Pianoforte concerto in F minor and in two pieces by Brahms. The symphony was the ever-welcome C minor of Beethoven, finely played under Signor Mancinelli's baton, while Goldmark's Prelude to Act II. of 'Die Königin von Saba' opened an enjoyable concert.

QUEEN'S HALL ORCHESTRA.

The following interesting programme attracted and delighted a large audience at Queen's Hall on January 30:

|                                          |                    |
|------------------------------------------|--------------------|
| Fantastic poem—The Pierrot of the minute | Granville Bantock. |
| (Conducted by the Composer.)             |                    |
| Variations on a theme of Haydn           | Brahms.            |
| Symphony No. 41, in C (Jupiter)          | Mozart.            |
| Pianoforte concerto (Emperor)            | Beethoven.         |
| Capriccio Espagnole                      | Rimsky-Korsakov.   |

Mr. Granville Bantock's work, which was performed for the first time at the Worcester Festival in 1908, grows greatly in estimation on closer acquaintance. The phantasy was inspired by the late Ernest Dowson's fascinating poem describing the loves of a Pierrot and a moon-maiden, and the music quite marvellously reflects its delicacy and whimsicality. Mr. Bantock pours out ideas with a prodigality almost tantalizing: charming themes and blends of orchestral colour fitting to and fro like phantoms. No doubt Mr. Wood will find it worth while to add this piece to the repertory of his orchestra, and permit us to hear it again and again. Madame Carrefio gave a splendid performance of the concerto. She displayed all those qualities which have placed her in the front rank of the world's pianists. Mozart's Symphony was played to perfection: the pace at which the last movement was taken was exceptional, but nevertheless details were perfectly clear. Mr. Henry J. Wood conducted all the programme, except the opening piece.

MENDELSSOHN CENTENARY CONCERT.

On this commemorative occasion—February 3, at Queen's Hall—the opening and closing numbers of the programme (by Mendelssohn) were separated by Elgar's new Symphony, when the last-named work was performed for the first time under the baton of Mr. Henry J. Wood. His reading of the Symphony was more virtuosic than those of Dr. Richter and the composer, and the Adagio movement was literally 'linked sweetness long drawn out'; still it was interesting. The band played admirably in the Symphony and in the 'Midsummer night's dream' overture which opened the afternoon's music.

The concert concluded with the 'Hymn of Praise,' the choral portion of which was sustained by the Sheffield Amateur Musical Society. This organization, the oldest of the kind in Sheffield, has never before performed away from its native heath, and expectation ran high as to the choral capabilities of its members. Unfortunately most of the 'Hymn of Praise' was taken so rapidly that it would be unfair to judge these well-trained choralists by this their first visit to London. 'All that are out of breath' would seem to have been the most appropriate words for the motor-car speed at which some of the choruses were sung—a speed whereby it was almost impossible to articulate the words with any approach to distinctness. But in the unaccompanied chorale, 'Let all men praise the Lord,' these Sheffield singers gave evidence of what they can do in regard to beauty of tone and refined choral-singing. We look forward to hearing them in their own city, under the direction of their chorus-master and the assistant-conductor of the Society, Mr. J. A. Rodgers, a much esteemed musician of Sheffield and the musical critic of the Sheffield Daily Telegraph. The soloists were Mrs. Henry J. Wood, Miss Edith Miller and Mr. Gervase Elwes. A novel and attractive feature of the programme-book consisted of views of the house in Great Portland Street in which Mendelssohn lodged during four of his visits to London, and of the Argyll Rooms, Regent Street, where in 1829 he made his first appearance in this country.

The concert given on February 13 calls for special notice, inasmuch as M. Jean Sibelius, the Finnish composer, conducted two of his most important tone-poems, 'En Saga' and 'Finlandia.' The first-named is a long work, and displays the composer in a serious mood. The thematic material is not striking, but the colour and unexpectedness of the orchestration and the eerie treatment fascinate the attention and send the mind romancing. The strings are much divided, and the timpani are not employed—a reticence not usual with modern composers. We are not told what story the poem translates into music, but anyone with a poetic temperament can weave one for himself. 'Finlandia' we are more familiar with, and it is only necessary to state that its unquestionable beauties were finely brought out under the composer's direction.

A ready welcome was extended to a Suite by Rameau, from his music to 'Castor and Pollux.' It consisted of five movements, and presented much charm by way of melody and, what we venture to call, natural harmony. Other items in the programme were the original version of the Introduction to Act 3 of 'Tannhäuser' and Dvorák's Concerto in B minor for violoncello, which was very attractively played by Hugo Becker. Mr. Henry J. Wood conducted all except the Sibelius pieces.

THE LONDON TRIO AND BRITISH PHANTASIES.

Since the demise of the Monday and Saturday Popular Concerts, London amateurs of chamber music have to rely upon local organizations for the public performance of concerted music, and amongst them the London Trio is one of those most firmly established in artistic favour. Madame Amina Goodwin, Signor Simonetti and Mr. Whitehouse have now played together for many years, and as all of them are excellent artists a perfect ensemble is the result. But not content with the adequate performance of the great masterpieces written for the pianoforte and two stringed instruments, they have this season had the enterprise to undertake the performance of the three so-called Phantasia trios, prize compositions in the 'Cobbett' competition of the Worshipful Society of Musicians.

At their latest concert, given at Aeolian Hall on January 26, the London Trio performed the Phantasia composed by Mr. John Ireland, a pupil of Sir Charles V. Stanford, to whom it is dedicated. The work is characterized by extreme brilliancy and strenuousness, and is rich in musicianship. Although in one continuous movement, it has four well-defined sections corresponding with those of an extended sonata movement, marked as follows: (1) In tempo moderato (statement of principal and subsidiary themes); (2) Meno mosso quasi andantino (middle section); (3) Tempo primo (recapitulation); (4) Vivace e giocosissimo (Coda). At the conclusion of the performance the composer was twice recalled, and considering that the programme included Brahms's monumental Trio in B (new edition), it was a triumph for British chamber music.

At the concert given by the London Trio at Æolian Hall on November 24—inadvertently omitted to be noticed in these columns—there was produced a prize Phantasie by Mr. James Friskin. Laid out in five sections, the Phantasie opens with (1) a passage in E minor for the violoncello, conceived in a vein of melancholy to which the violin responds in similar mood. This initial figure dominates a work which, even in the (2) Allegro molto in B minor which follows, retains a dirge-like character, tinged by the Highland sentiment which is a characteristic of Mr. Friskin's compositions. The next section (3), an Adagio in E major, is of considerable beauty, followed by a resumption of the (4) Allegro molto in A minor. Later on the strings are muted, and, after some modulations, the work concludes with a remarkable Coda (5), the last bars of which consist of a chord in E minor sustained by the violin for several bars until the violoncello arrives with a pizzicato chord and brings down the curtain upon this little drama. For a Phantasie, in the full acceptance of the term, the work is, we think, too sombre, but it will prove attractive to lovers of the reflective in music.

London Concerts.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

A Sonata in D minor for violin and pianoforte, by Mr. Morton Stephenson, formed the only composition by a student at the chamber concert of the Royal Academy of Music, on February 15, at Queen's Hall. This lucid and ably written work was well performed by Miss Elsie Owen and Miss Mary Burgess. Spohr's double quartet in E minor for strings (Op. 87) was an interesting feature of the programme. The excellent pianoforte playing of Master Vivian Langrish in Chopin's Ballade in A flat, and the refined vocalization of Miss May Horton, in Liszt's 'Die Lorelei,' testified to the good training that is being given at Tenterden Street. The two versions of Mendelssohn's 'Lift thine eyes' (Elijah)—duet (as originally written) and trio—were also sung.

LONDON CHORAL SOCIETY.

Mr. Arthur Fagge and his forces were on their mettle in commemorating the Mendelssohn centenary. The choir surpassed themselves in the oratorio of 'Elijah,' performed at Queen's Hall on February 3, the hundredth anniversary of the composer's birth. No less noteworthy was the co-operation of Sir Charles Santley, who, in spite of being a septuagenarian, still remains unapproachable in his interpretation of the music assigned to the Prophet. The other principal soloists were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Gwladys Roberts and Mr. Cynlais Gibbs, while the following lent their aid in the subsidiary parts—Miss Minnie Waugh, Miss Amy Sissons, Messrs. B. Franklin Taylor, John Prout and William Waite, and the part of the Youth was sung by Master Brian Williams. To say that the London Symphony Orchestra were engaged is tantamount to admitting that the overture and the accompaniments were played to perfection. The performance left nothing to be desired as a worthy tribute to a composer whose masterpiece has given pleasure to numbers untold.

The St. George's Glee Union celebrated the Mendelssohn centenary, at the Caxton Hall, on February 5, with a very appropriate and well-chosen programme for which Mr. Joseph Monday, the able conductor of the Society, was responsible. It included the 42nd Psalm ('Judge me, O God'), 'Hear my prayer,' and 'Athalie.' The solo vocalists were Miss Ethel Wood, Miss Irene Marriott, Miss Palgrave-Turner and Mr. Julien Henry, Miss Ethel Humphreys reciting the verses in 'Athalie' effectively. The excellent singing of the choir reflected much credit on the conductor, Mr. Monday.

AMATEUR ORCHESTRAL SOCIETIES.

The second concert of the Royal Amateur Orchestral Society, given at Queen's Hall on January 27 by this enterprising body since Mr. Arthur W. Payne undertook the conductorship, attracted a large audience. The chief items in the programme were:

|                           |           |            |
|---------------------------|-----------|------------|
| Symphony in C minor       | . . . . . | Beethoven. |
| Violin concerto in E flat | . . . . . | Mozart.    |

|                                            |           |               |
|--------------------------------------------|-----------|---------------|
| Introduction to Act 3, 'Die Meistersinger' | . . . . . | Wagner.       |
| Ballet-suite—'Céphale et Procris'          | . . . . . | Grétry-Mottl. |
| Overture—'The Hebrides'                    | . . . . . | Mendelssohn.  |
| March from 'La Reine de Saba'              | . . . . . | Gounod.       |

In firmness and strength of character the playing of the orchestra was fully equal to the demands made by the Symphony, while due restraint and delicacy were observed in the orchestral accompaniment to the Concerto. In interpreting the solo violin part, Miss Evangeline Anthony showed a refined sense and true Mozartian style. The vocal soloists of the occasion were Miss Violet Elliott and Mr. Philip Simmons. As was to be expected, Mr. Arthur W. Payne conducted with conspicuous ability.

At the concert of the Strolling Players' Amateur Orchestral Society, on February 4, at Queen's Hall, the programme included Mendelssohn's 'Scotch' Symphony and 'Hebrides' Overture, admirably played by the orchestra under Mr. Joseph Ivimey. Hubay's second Violin concerto, the solo part played by his gifted pupil, Joska Szigati, was an attractive feature of the evening's music. Miss Clara Evelyn and Mr. Franklin Clive were the vocalists.

Mendelssohn—in his 'Hebrides' overture, Violin concerto (soloist, Miss Vera French), and 'To the Sons of Art' (males voices)—dominated the programme of the seventy-second concert of the Stock Exchange Orchestral and Choral Society, at Queen's Hall, on February 10. A setting of Goethe's 'My Goddess,' for baritone solo (Mr. Charles W. Clark), male chorus and orchestra, by Mr. Max Laistner, was an interesting novelty. This 'Choral Poem' proved to be an agreeable and melodious work, if not very original. Mr. Allen Gill conducted with his usual alertness. On this occasion the Stock Exchange Choir (conductor, Mr. Munro Davison) were reinforced by the Lothbury Male-Voice Choir (conductor, Mr. E. B. Evison).

The Hampstead Conservatoire Orchestral Society gave a very artistic programme at the Conservatoire on February 16. The concert opened with a Sinfonietta for strings (Op. 34), by M. Benoit Holländer, a very interesting and attractive composition which was played with much spirit. The orchestra—of which the string section only performed—was heard to even better effect in Bach's Violin concerto in E major, the solo part of which was ably played by Miss Dorothy Bridson. Much delicacy of treatment was shown in 'Ase's death' from the 'Peer Gynt' Suite, and in Tchaikovsky's Serenade for strings (Op. 48). Mr. René Ortmans, the conductor, is to be congratulated on the standard of excellence to which he has trained his orchestra.

Handel's 'Acis and Galatea' was capably performed by the Handel Society at the People's Palace, Whitechapel, on February 13, to the great delight of an East-end audience. Choir and orchestra did full justice to the music, and sang and played as though their hearts were in it. Between the parts Mr. E. G. Croager played Handel's first Organ concerto with good effect, and Mr. Coleridge-Taylor ably led his forces in the master's melodious strains. Mr. Arthur Balfour, a true-hearted Handelian, was present at the performance, although he had only arrived from Biarritz two hours previously.

The London Sunday School Choir gave another of their attractive concerts at the Royal Albert Hall on February 20, with gratifying success. The choir, numbering 1,000 voices, sang splendidly in various choruses and anthems under the baton of Mr. Whiteman, and the Sunday School Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Wesley Hammet, also took part. The soloists were Miss Ada Bednall, Miss Edna Thornton, and Mr. Ben Davies, while Mr. Horace G. Holmes and Mrs. Mary Layton officiated at the organ and pianoforte respectively.

The concert of the Marion Scott Quartet—Æolian Hall, January 29—was of special interest, as it was the second of two concerts devoted to British chamber music. Two Phantasy Trios, respectively composed by Mr. James Friskin and Mr. Frank Bridge, were performed by this artistic combination of players on stringed instruments. The programme included the first performance of a String quartet, 'In Memoriam,' in C minor (MS.), by Dr. Walford Davies. Composed in 1895, the work, notwithstanding the slight revision it has undergone, hardly shows Dr. Davies at his best. Pleasant variety was afforded by the four-part songs contributed by the Folk-Song Quartet.

Most successful and encouraging to the young artists was the pianoforte and vocal recital given by Miss Ivy and Miss Valerie Parkin, at Bechstein Hall, on January 26. The daughters of the Editor of the Sheffield Daily Telegraph, these talented sisters gave ample proof of their natural musical gifts and excellent training, in Grieg's Pianoforte sonata in E (Op. 7), some Chopin pieces, and an 'Intermezzo en Octaves' by Leschetitzky. Miss Ivy Parkin was most successful, and her sister, Miss Valerie Parkin, made a favourable impression by her pleasing voice and excellent phrasing. We shall look forward to hearing these Sheffield young ladies on some future occasion.

The London Chamber Concert Association is a new organization founded by Miss Hannah Bryan 'for the regular performance of concerted music for wind instruments, strings, and pianoforte.' They gave the first of six interesting concerts at the Victoria Rooms, Royal Palace Hotel, Kensington, on February 13, with much artistic success. The programme included a Quintet in D for flute, oboe, violin, violoncello and pianoforte, by J. Christian Bach (the English Bach), and a Chaconne for strings by Henry Purcell. At the second concert, on February 20, a Quartet for oboe, viola, bassoon and violoncello, by F. H. Graaf (1727-1795), and a Duo for two flutes, by Haydn, were brought forward. Miss M. Bryan, 22, Talgarth Mansions, West Kensington, is the honorary secretary of the Association, which merits full encouragement and support.

At their concert at Bechstein Hall on February 17, the Nora Clench Quartet further increased their indebtedness to the Russian composer, Serge Ivanovitch Tanéïew, by introducing to an English audience his String quartet in B flat (Op. 19). This proved in all respects a more ambitious essay than the composer's previous efforts in the direction of chamber-music, although it showed here and there a want of the mastery of method necessary for compositions of an advanced nature. Haydn's Quartet in G (Op. 64) and Brahms's Pianoforte quintet in F minor (Op. 34) were also in the programme. The playing represented a high standard of excellence throughout. Miss Nora Clench, Miss Lucy Stone and Miss Cecilia Gates played, as usual, the first and second violin and viola parts, and, in the absence of Miss May Makle, Miss Edith Evans was the violoncellist. The pianoforte part of Brahms's Quintet was executed by Mrs. Sigismund Goetze.

The violin recital given by Mr. Philip Cathie at St. James's Hall on February 10, had considerable interest for the concert-goer. Veracini's Sonata in E minor for violin and pianoforte is an admirable and charming specimen of its class, and it was sympathetically interpreted by Mr. Cathie and his accompanist. Max Bruch's Scottish Fantasia provided a sharp contrast, and served to display the soloist's skill and dramatic fire. Compositions by Mr. Cathie himself also figured in the programme, in which Miss Betty Grylls took part as a vocalist. The formidable task of playing accompaniments throughout the evening was achieved in a highly efficient manner by Mr. Harold Brooke.

The Richmond Philharmonic Society gave a concert at the Castle Hotel Rooms on January 26, when Dvorák's 'Te Deum' and Goring Thomas's 'Swan and the skylark' were the chief features of the programme, which also included Beethoven's 'Fidelio' overture, Mozart's Symphony in D and two Slavonic Dances by Dvorák. The solo vocalists were Miss Barwell-Holbrook, Miss Mary Casson, Mr. Henry Turnpenney and Mr. Graham Smart. The orchestra was led by Miss Mary Noverre, and Dr. C. F. Jolley conducted.

The Dulwich Philharmonic Society gave a performance of 'Elijah' at the Crystal Palace, on January 30, under the direction of Mr. Arthur Fagge. The singing of the choir was excellent, displaying much breadth of effect. The principal solo vocalists were Madame Mary Conly, Miss Amy Sissons, Mr. B. Franklin Taylor and Mr. Thorpe Bates, who were supported in the smaller parts by Miss Fanny Goldsbrough, Miss Dorothy Fagge, Miss Jessie Smerdon, Mr. J. S. Ladbrook and Mr. Llewellyn Evans. Mr. C. H. Kemping was at the organ.

The Twickenham Philharmonic Society gave an excellent performance of Elgar's 'King Olaf' on February 10, under the conductorship of Mr. Arthur Cowen, whose painstaking efforts in training the choir were fully acknowledged by the audience. The orchestra also did excellent service, and a satisfactory trio of vocalists was provided in Miss Ethel Lister, Mr. James Horncastle and Mr. Stewart Gardner. Mendelssohn's 'Ruy Blas' overture and Schubert's ballet music from 'Rosamunde' were also played by the orchestra.

Mendelssohn's 'Midsummer night's dream' overture opened the concert of the Crystal Palace Orchestral Society on February 13. To this commemorative piece succeeded Elgar's 'King Olaf,' which received an admirable rendering under the experienced and careful direction of Mr. Walter W. Hedgcock. The soloists were Miss Ethel Wood, Mr. Gwilym Richards, and Mr. Julien Henry, with Mr. Fred. W. Holloway at the organ. The choral portion of 'King Olaf' was dramatically sung by the Crystal Palace Choir.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

Vienna, February 15, 1909.

On January 20, the Conzertverein brought forward the new Symphony by Edward Elgar. Viennese music-lovers looked forward to the work with eagerness, and listened to it with the closest attention, since the composer had given them proof of his mastery before, especially with his interesting Variations for orchestra. They welcomed the new Symphony with much applause, especially after the Adagio, with its Coda dying away in impressive stillness. Elgar's extremely clever hand, and his splendid orchestration, were fully recognized. Due honour was paid to the memory of Mendelssohn by all important musical societies in Vienna, especially by the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde, whose performance of 'Elijah' evoked the greatest enthusiasm, and proved in no uncertain fashion that the magic of Mendelssohnian Romanticism will not fade for a long time yet.

At the Court Opera, Auber's 'Domino noir' was resuscitated in a production which Direktor von Weingartner had prepared with the greatest care, and which he conducted himself. The sympathies which were extended to this work blossoming anew in all its freshness, would have been still greater had the interpreter of the leading part, Fräulein Kurz, infused more humour into the acting of her otherwise matchless performance. The Volksoper added to its repertoire 'Old Heidelberg,' musical scenes after the student-drama by Meyer-Förster, composed by Signor Ubaldo Pacchierotti. The well-known sentimental story did not fail to make its usual impression, even in this new guise, and as some old and well-known student-songs are cleverly used in the music and contrasted with strong, modern operatic effects, the performance, at which the composer was present, was brilliantly successful. Whether the new opera, which was excellently performed, will prove a lasting addition to the repertoire, it is of course impossible to say at this juncture.

RICHARD VON PERGER.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Midland Gleemen gave an interesting concert in the large Lecture Theatre of the Midland Institute on January 28, in aid of the funds of the St. John Ambulance Brigade, Birmingham Corps. The chief feature of the programme was Cherubini's Requiem Mass No. 2, in D minor, for men's voices, said to be the first entire performance of the work in this country. Mr. William Sewell, of the Oratory, conducted a well-trained choir and orchestra. The whole performance was impressive, enhanced by the sonorous quality of the voices, excellent realisation of light and shade, and purity of intonation. The second part of the programme included Mendelssohn's 'Athalie' overture, Tchaikovsky's 'Elegy for strings,' and a quaint 'Valse triste' by Sibelius. The choir gave a powerful rendering of Gernsheim's short cantata 'Salamis,' and unaccompanied part-songs by Walford Davies, Elgar and Dudley Buck. Miss Lucie Rosenberg was the solo vocalist. The second of a series of four Subscription Concerts organized by the Clifton Quintet took place at the Queen's College on January 26. This admirably constituted body of excellent performers has had the advantage of considerable experience in ensemble playing, and each member is an efficient performer on the instrument of his choice. The programme included Tchaikovsky's String quartet in F (Op. 22), played by Mr. Maurice Alexander, Mr. Hubert Hunt, Mr. Ernest Lane and Mr. Percy Lewis, and César Franck's Pianoforte quintet in F minor, the pianoforte part being taken by Mr. Herbert Parsons, who also gave a fine performance of Chopin's Fantaisie in F minor (Op. 49). Mr. Hubert Hunt introduced the 'Corrente a la Francese' and the Vivace from Lécclair's Violin sonata in E flat, and Miss Evelyn Wynne was heard to advantage in Grieg's 'Ich liebe Dich' and Brahms's 'Eine ewige Liebe,' to which she imparted the requisite colour and temperament. She also submitted a song-cycle entitled 'Songs of the seasons,' composed and accompanied by Miss Mabel Bourne.

The Birmingham Choral and Orchestral Association successfully revived John Francis Barnett's cantata 'The ancient mariner' at their popular Saturday night concert on January 30, in the Town Hall. Originally written for our festival of 1867, it has successfully stood the test of time. The performance was ably conducted by Mr. Joseph H. Adams, who secured an excellent reading from choir and orchestra. The principals included Miss Elsie Cobill, Miss Eunice Fowles, Mr. Sam Hempall and Mr. Herbert Parker.

The Mendelssohn Centenary celebrations in Birmingham were practically restricted to two musical events, on February 3. In the afternoon of that day the unfinished oratorio 'Christus' was sung at Birmingham Cathedral, under the direction of the organist, Mr. Edwin Stephenson. In the evening, at the Town Hall, the City Choral Society performed the 'Hymn of Praise' and the unfinished opera 'Loreley,' the instrumental portion of the programme comprising the Violin concerto, well rendered by Miss Kitty Buckley, and the 'Fingal's Cave' overture. Mr. T. W. North conducted the choral works, and Mr. J. C. Hock the instrumental items. The principals were Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Marie Rowe and Mr. J. Alban Cohen.

The Birmingham Choral Union again chose Handel's 'Samson' for the programme of their popular Saturday night concert at the Town Hall on February 13, under the conductorship of Mr. Thomas Facer. The choral portion of the oratorio is perfectly familiar to the choir, and the chief soloists were Madame Aston, Madame Nellie Pritchard, Mr. Ernest Pike and Mr. James Coleman. Mr. C. W. Perkins occupied his usual place at the organ.

The Birmingham Symphony Orchestra gave their second popular orchestral concert of the present season at the Town Hall on February 6. Tchaikovsky was principally drawn upon, the programme including the 'Capriccio Italien,' 'Theme and variations' from the third Suite, the Scherzo and Finale from the fourth Symphony, and the 'Elegie' from the Serenade for strings. Mr. H. Lyell Taylor was specially engaged to conduct, and completely succeeded in rousing the enthusiasm of the audience. Dr. Herbert Brewer, of Gloucester Cathedral, conducted three of his own pieces: 'Auf Wiedersehen,' and the two short pieces respectively entitled 'Age' and 'Youth.' These pleasing and dainty compositions were excellently given. A young lady violinist, Miss Muriel Pickup, essayed two movements of Max Bruch's G minor Concerto, and Saint-Saëns's 'Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso' with fair success.

The Birmingham Concerts Society's music-makings are much better attended this season than formerly. Zimbalist was the soloist at the concert at the Town Hall on February 2, and gave a truly noble performance of Beethoven's Violin concerto, under Mr. George Halford's baton. Of special interest to Birmingham was the first performance here of Elgar's Symphony, which Mr. George Halford has been preparing for some time past, and which was heard at the Society's concert on February 16.

In anticipation of the much looked for event, a large and critical audience was present who followed with keen interest the gradual development of this master-work in English music. Considering the enormous difficulties of such a complex score, the orchestra realised an impressive reading, distinguished by nuances of tone-colour and technical skill rarely associated with the first performance of a new work. Each movement was enthusiastically received, and at the close of the performance conductor and orchestra were the recipients of quite an ovation. M. Alexandre Siloti gave a glorious rendering of Tchaikovsky's Pianoforte concerto in B flat minor and Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue.

Mr. Max Mossel's third drawing-room concert of the current series was held in the Grosvenor Room of the Grand Hotel on February 11, the principal attraction being Miss Tilly Koenen. Professor Ivan Mossel, of Amsterdam, an accomplished violoncellist, and Madame Marie Fromm, pianist, also appeared. Recitals were given by Mr. Harold Bauer (pianist) at the Masonic Hall on January 21, assisted by Miss Mary Adele Case (vocalist), and by Mr. Arthur Cooke (pianist), assisted by Madame Carrie Siviter (vocalist), at the Midland Institute on January 23. Both these artists have recently been added to the teaching staff of the School of Music.

The Clifton Quintet gave their third performance of the seventh season on February 4 at the Victoria Rooms, in the presence of a numerous audience. The executants were Messrs. Herbert Parsons (pianoforte), Maurice Alexander and Hubert Hunt (violins), Ernest Lane (viola), and Percy Lewis (violoncello). Brahms's Pianoforte quartet in C minor (Op. 60) and Dvořák's String quartet in G (Op. 106) were well performed; Messrs. Parsons and Alexander gratified the audience by their fine interpretation of César Franck's Sonata in A, for pianoforte and violin; and Mr. Parsons played Debussy's 'L'isle joyeuse' so acceptably that he had to give an extra piece.

The Mendelssohn centenary has been celebrated by special performances of his works. At the first of the Saturday Popular Concerts, held at the Victoria Rooms on February 6, the Society of Instrumentalists, aided by some local professional players under the direction of Mr. George Riseley, interpreted several of the master's compositions, Mr. Harold Bernard being leader. The 'Meeresstille' overture, the Violin concerto (soloist, Mr. Hans Wessely), the G minor Pianoforte concerto (soloist, Mr. Norman Sprankling), the Andante movement from the 'Scotch' symphony, and the 'Son and Stranger' overture were all carefully rendered. Miss Gertrude Winchester gave with acceptance some of Mendelssohn's songs.

On February 10 a concert was given at Colston Hall in aid of the Sunday evening services held in that building. The vocalists were Miss Eva Longbottom, Miss Gertrude Winchester, Mr. Harry Morgan and Mr. Nelson Jackson. Miss Marjorie Evans contributed violin solos, and Mr. George Riseley was at the organ. The audience fully appreciated the excellent manner in which the different features of the performance were presented.

There were two concerts at Colston Hall on February 11, at which Mr. Riseley played the whole of Mendelssohn's published organ music. The vocalists were the Misses Pauline and Ethel Hook, whose efforts were also confined to the same composer's music.

On February 13 the Bristol Choral Society gave a Mendelsohn concert in Colston Hall which attracted a large audience. The choir numbered 450 voices, and the band seventy performers, with Mr. Arthur W. Payne leader and Mr. G. Herbert Riseley at the organ. The works performed were the 'Hymn of Praise,' 'Hear my prayer' and the 'Walpurgis Night.' The soloists were Miss Mabel Manson, Miss Gertrude Winchester, Mr. Alfred Heather and Mr. Robert Chignell. Under the direction of Mr. George Riseley, impressive interpretations were given of the above works, and the hearers frequently manifested their appreciation.

The first for the season of the chamber concerts for young students was held on February 17 at the Victoria Rooms. The players were Miss Averil Woodward and Miss Ida Home (violin), Miss Gladys Home (viola), Miss Rosa Button (violin-cello) and Miss May Thomas (pianoforte). Mrs. E. T. Daniell was the vocalist. A quartet of Haydn and other compositions were creditably given, and previous to the performance Miss Rosa Button gave some analytical remarks of an interesting and educational nature.

A large audience was attracted to Colston Hall on February 18, when the Bristol Royal Orpheus Society celebrated their Ladies' Night. Under the able direction of Mr. George Riseley, an interesting programme was presented. The pieces in which the choir had not before been heard were Elgar's 'After many a dusty mile' and 'Feasting, I watch,' Sir Frederick Bridge's 'With thee, sweet hope,' and Julian Otto's 'The gongs are beating.' Sir Frederick Bridge conducted his composition as well as his humorous glee 'Bold Turpin,' and he experienced a hearty reception. Mr. C. Lee Williams was also present, and conducted the rendering of his 'Peace' and 'Song of the pedlar,' which were likewise received with enthusiasm. Among the principal contributions to the programme were 'Love's slumber song' (S. E. Lovatt), 'The phantom host' (Hegar), and 'Italian salad' (Genér). Mr. Lloyd Chandos was soloist in several of the pieces, and his singing evoked much applause.

The Ladies' Night of the Weston-super-Mare Orpheus Society was held on January 28 at Knightstone Pavilion, under the direction of Mr. Edward Cook, of Bristol. The choir numbered forty-four voices, including a few chorals from Bristol, and the result of the performance was highly gratifying, a programme of favourite pieces being carefully rendered. Among the specially interesting works presented were 'Peace' and 'Lost time' (C. Lee Williams), Elgar's 'Whether I find thee' and 'Feasting, I watch with westward looking eyes,' 'Love's slumber song' (S. E. Lovatt), and 'Strike the lyre' (T. Cooke). There was a good attendance, and some of the choral pieces were re-demanded.

The Philharmonic Society, under the conductorship of Mr. Charles G. Marchant, gave a Mendelssohn Centenary concert on February 3. The programme included the Te Deum and Jubilate from the Service in A (specially orchestrated for the occasion by the conductor), the unaccompanied Psalm 'Judge me, O God,' 'Hear my prayer' (soloist, Miss Emilie Martyn), 'Dona nobis pacem,' 'Hear ye, Israel' (sung by Miss Alice Rafter), 'Be thou faithful unto death' (sung by Mr. Alfred Heather), and the 'Hymn of Praise,' in which the soloists were Miss Alice Rafter, Miss Goodbody and Mr. Alfred Heather. The small orchestra was led by Mr. Arthur Darley.

On February 11 the Dublin Orchestral Society gave its first concert for the season, when the programme included Mendelssohn's 'Hebrides' overture and the G minor Pianoforte concerto. The solo part in the latter work was magnificently played by Dr. Esposito, conductor of the orchestra, and M. Octave Grisard occupied the conductor's place. Wagner's 'Siegfried Idyll' and Brahms's Symphony in D completed the programme.

At the Royal Dublin Society, since the Christmas holidays the principal recitals have been given by the Wessely Quartet—their first appearance here—and they made a very favourable impression, the Nora Clench Quartet, Miss Fanny Davies and Madame Carrefio (pianoforte recitals). Few, if any but herself, in the very crowded room knew that Madame Carrefio had once before played in Dublin—in the old Theatre Royal, at a concert given by Madame Tietjens.

At a concert given by the Moody-Manners Company in the Theatre Royal, for the Messina disaster, a sum of upwards of £340 was secured; and at a Sunday Orchestral Concert, at which several of the artists of the Moody-Manners Company assisted, a sum of 100 guineas was realized; at both concerts all the artists gave their services, and all advertising and printing was done without charge.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At the tenth of the orchestral concerts given by Messrs. Paterson in the McEwan Hall on January 26, Mr. Peter Raabe took the place of Dr. Cowen as conductor. The programme included Beethoven's 'Eroica' symphony, Strauss's tone-poem 'Tod und Verklärung,' and Mozart's 'Serenade.' At the eleventh concert, on February 1, Dr. Cowen conducted splendid performances of Mendelssohn's 'Scotch' symphony and César Franck's symphonic poem 'The wild huntsman.' The soloist was Madame Carrefio, who won numerous recalls for her musically interpretations of Tchaikovsky's Pianoforte concerto (No. 1, in B flat minor) and Dr. Cowen's Concerto in B flat. Dr. Cowen conducted at the twelfth and last of the series, given on February 10. The orchestral numbers comprised Brahms's 'Academic' overture, the Overture to 'The Meistersingers,' Schumann's Symphony (No. 2, in C), Elgar's suite 'The wand of youth' (Op. 1a), and a Suite by Glazounow. The vocalist was Miss Tilly Koenen, who charmed the audience with her singing of Gluck's 'Che farò,' the 'Sapphische ode' of Brahms, and Schubert's 'Die Allmacht.' Mr. Scott Jupp accompanied.

The third of the University Historical Concerts, given in the Music Class Room on January 27, was devoted to an exposition of 'Latest tendencies in song,' the vocalist being Miss Mary Münchhoff. The programme contained examples by Liszt, Alexander Ritter, Peter Cornelius, Richard Strauss, Max Reger, Claude Debussy and Hugo Wolf. Mr. Edgar Barratt, in addition to discharging the duties of accompanist, played two groups of pianoforte solos.

The second of the Edinburgh Amateur Orchestral Society's concerts (conductor, Mr. T. H. Collinson) was given in the Music Hall on February 11, on which occasion the players had the co-operation of the Choral Union. The programme included Mackenzie's 'Cotter's Saturday night' and the 'Polonaise' from Glinka's opera 'Life for the Czár,' the purely orchestral pieces being Mendelssohn's 'Calm sea' overture, a selection from Tchaikovsky's 'Sleeping beauty' suite, the 'Karelia' Suite of Sibelius, and Mackenzie's 'Britannia' overture.

At his third chamber concert, given in the Freemasons' Hall on February 13, Mr. Ernst Denhof had the assistance of the Munich String Quartet (Professors Theodor Kilian, Georg Knauer, Ludwig Vollnhals, and Heinrich Kiefer) and Miss Tilly Koenen (vocalist). The concerted music comprised Mozart's Quartet in E flat, Beethoven's beautiful 'Serenade in D,' for violin, viola, and violoncello (Op. 8), and Schumann's Quintet. The Munich Quartet, an exceptionally fine body of players, had to respond to recalls after each appearance. Miss Tilly Koenen gave unbounded pleasure by her renderings of songs by Schubert, Schumann, Hugo Wolf and Richard Strauss. Mr. Scott Jupp accompanied.

Mr. P. Tas, the able conductor of the Duke of Devonshire's private orchestra at Eastbourne, has been honoured with and has accepted an invitation from Mons. F. de Léry, musical director of the popular concerts at the Théâtre Marigny, Paris, to conduct the Sunday concert there on March 14.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The increased interest in this season's choral concerts was evidenced by the crowded audiences at the performance of Berlioz's 'Faust' on January 26, and 'The Dream of Gerontius' on February 9. The 'Faust' concert showed the tenor and bass sections of the Choral Union at their very best, but all through the concert the vocal music was a constant delight. The soloists—Miss Elizabeth Burgess and Messrs. Lloyd Chandos, Hamilton Harris and Charles Victor—sang their parts exceedingly well, Mr. Victor meriting a special word of praise for his excellent singing in the part of Mephistopheles. The members of the Choral Union have always been most successful in singing Elgar's great choral works, and in this, their fourth performance of 'The Dream of Gerontius,' they excelled themselves. The rendering of the choral portion at the end of Part I. would have been perfect had it not been marred by the too strenuous pianissimo of the violins. 'Praise to the Holiest' was given with impressive effect; but it was in the Demons' chorus—sung with marvellous realism, especially by the tenors and basses—that Dr. Coward's distinctive reading of Elgar's noble work was most noticeable. The exacting tenor solo music was sung by Mr. Gervase Elwes with a dignity and feeling worthy of all praise, and the other soloists, Miss Alice Lakin and Mr. Thorpe Bates, also sang their parts with much acceptance. In the accompaniments the Scottish Orchestra had a grateful task, and Mr. J. E. Hodgson played the organ part with judgment and good effect.

At the thirteenth classical concert, on February 2, Madame Carrefio was the solo pianist, and in Chopin's first Pianoforte concerto had full scope for displaying her splendid virtuosity. No less successfully did she play the solo part in Cowen's Concertstück for pianoforte and orchestra. César Franck's symphonic poem 'Le chasseur maudit' proved to be one of the most attractive novelties we have had this season, and a charming performance of the 'Scotch' symphony worthily marked the Mendelssohn centenary. The Choral and Orchestral Union's season was brought to a close by the annual plébiscite concert on February 13. The programme on this occasion included Strauss's 'Also sprach Zarathustra' (the third performance this season), Beethoven's fifth Symphony, and the overture to 'Tannhäuser,' the last two works being somewhat of the nature of hardy annuals.

Under the enterprising direction of Mr. W. T. Hoeck, the Greenock Choral Union gave a very creditable performance of Brahms's 'German Requiem' on February 8. The somewhat trying choral music was sung with considerable effect, the opening and closing parts of the work being specially well done. The soloists were Mrs. August Hyllested and Mr. John Mackenzie, and the Scottish Orchestra supplied the accompaniments.

On February 11 a most enjoyable concert was given by the Glasgow Glee and Madrigal Society, ably conducted by Mr. B. W. Hartley. A well-chosen programme—which included four madrigals from 'The triumphs of Oriana' and some pieces by Purcell, Mendelssohn and Brahms—was sung by Mr. Hartley's well-balanced choir with fine tone, careful phrasing, and much expression. Miss Gertrude Haworth contributed some vocal solos.

Lansdowne Church Musical Association gave a highly successful performance of Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' the singing being marked by great freshness and vigour, and in Sullivan's 'O gladsome light' and 'God sent His messenger,' the choir sang with a finish and expression highly creditable to Mr. J. E. Hodgson, the organist of the church, who conducted the performance. The soloists were Misses Rana Taggart and Bella Smith, and Mr. William Burrows. A section of the Scottish Orchestra played the instrumental part with some effect, Mr. Cowan, as organist, doing good service in the choral numbers.

The students of the Athenæum School of Music presented a very interesting programme at their annual concert on February 18. A feature of the evening's music was the fine playing of the students' orchestra (Mr. Henri Verbrugghen, conductor), in Beethoven's seventh Symphony, the overture to 'Oberon,' and Beethoven's Choral Fantasia. In the last-named work, Miss Ailie Cullen, as solo pianist, was associated with the Athenæum Choral Society. Beethoven's Terzetto for solo soprano, tenor, and bass, with orchestral accompaniment, was also given, for the first time in Glasgow, and the Choral Society, under Mr. Alfred Heap, sang Parry's 'Blest pair of Sirens.' Altogether the concert afforded proof of the soundness of the musical work carried on in the school.

MUSIC IN GLOUCESTER AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Gloucester Choral Society's concert on February 3 commemorated the Mendelssohn centenary by an excellent performance of 'St. Paul.' Under the direction of Dr. A. Herbert Brewer the choruses were sung with taste and precision. The soloists were Madame le Mar, Miss Jessie King, Mr. Albert Watson and Mr. Hugh Peyton. The band was led by Mr. W. H. Reed, and Mr. A. P. Porter rendered good service at the organ.

The concert given by the Cheltenham Philharmonic Society in the Town Hall on February 17, under the capable and energetic direction of Mr. C. J. Phillips, was both musically and in attendance a great success. The chief attraction was the presence of M. Jean Sibelius, who conducted his tone-poem 'Finlandia,' and the characteristic orchestral pieces 'Valse Triste' and 'Varsang' (Spring song). The band, numbering upwards of seventy performers, gave renderings of these pieces which extorted admiration from the celebrated Finnish composer; and under the direction of Mr. Phillips the players gave capital performances of the 'Meistersinger' Overture, Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony and Sinigaglia's 'Danze Piemontese.' The vocalist was Mr. John McCormack, and the concert was one of the best given by the Society.

The Gloucestershire Orchestral Society, conductor Dr. A. Herbert Brewer, gave their annual concert at the Shire Hall on February 22 with much success. The programme included Mozart's 'Jupiter' symphony, the Prelude to 'Lohengrin,' Brahms's Hungarian Dances, Dr. Brewer's 'Age and Youth' suite and a Suite for strings composed by Mr. W. H. Reed, the leader of the band. Miss Edith Clegg was the solo vocalist. The band, composed almost entirely of amateurs (the majority ladies), numbered over 100 performers.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At Mr. Ernst Schiever's chamber concert on January 23, Joseph Holbrooke's String quartet in D (Op. 17), 'A Fantasie,' was played, and proved an example of the composer's marked individual style. Mr. Horatio Connell was agreeably heard in nine songs, of which six were by Schumann. The concert concluded with Schubert's Quintet in C (Op. 163), in which Mr. Carl Fuchs, as second violoncellist, joined the resident quartet. At the Philharmonic Society's concert on January 26, M. Tamini created a furore by his singing, and Miss Marie Hall was pleasurably heard in Mendelssohn's Violin concerto. Dr. Cowen also conducted Schumann's Symphony in C and the prelude to the third act of Mackenzie's 'The Troubadour.' Dr. Walford Davies's madrigal 'Weep you no more, sad fountains' was an interesting contribution by the choir to the programme. The ninth concert, on February 9, was mainly choral. Mozart's motet 'Glory, honour, praise,' Brahms's 'Song of Destiny,' Schubert's 'The Lord is my Shepherd' (for female voices), and Mendelssohn's 'To the sons of Art' (male voices) were finely sung, and the orchestra played Sibelius's 'Finlandia' and Glazounow's sparkling Suite de ballet, 'Les ruses d'amour.' Miss Tilly Koenen was very successful in her songs.

In connection with the newly-formed Music Lectures Association, under the auspices of the Society for University Extension in Liverpool, Mr. Ernest Newman delivered the first of a course of lectures on January 22, his subject being 'César Franck and the modern French school of composers.' It was an interesting and instructive discourse, as was the second lecture on February 5, when Mr. Newman critically examined Elgar's new Symphony. The lecturer has come to the conclusion that the symphony of the future must be written in one movement.

Mr. Douglas Miller, a young Liverpool pianist and pupil of M. Godowsky, made a highly-promising début on February 3, when he played the 'Waldstein' sonata, Grieg's 'Ballade,' Chopin's 'Fantaisie Impromptu,' and other pieces, in which he displayed a keen artistic temperament and advanced technical skill. Examples of his compositions were also favourably received, including a clever Romance for the left-hand alone, and several songs in which Madame Louise Dale was a skilful interpreter. Madame Charlotte Davies admirably accompanied the remaining vocal items.

The news that Mr. Granville Bantock, owing to the claims of his work in Birmingham, must of necessity sever his connection with the Liverpool Orchestral Society, occasions no surprise but very general regret, especially by those who know his personal attraction as well as musical gifts.

A Symphony by Hugo Kaun was played by the Societa Armonica on January 30. It is a work of apparent musicianship, but not of special thematic interest. Lalo's Violoncello concerto was cleverly played by Mr. Van Damme, and Mr. Lloyd Moore sang with acceptance in songs by Dr. Lyon, Cyril Scott and Liza Lehmann. Conducted by Mr. Akeroyd, the large orchestra—which includes many ladies—gave a good account of Tchaikovsky's 'Romeo and Juliet' overture and Liszt's Rhapsody No. 2.

Mr. Laurence Atkinson's third chamber concert was given in the Birkenhead Town Hall on January 27, when M. Zacharewitsch played Tartini's 'Devil's trill' sonata and other violin solos, ably accompanied by Mr. Walter Bridson. The vocalists were Miss Laura Evans and Mr. Roland Jackson, both of whom were appreciatively heard. The fourth and final concert was given on February 17, when the Brodsky String Quartet were heard in Beethoven's C minor Quartet and Dvorák's Terzetto for two violins and viola. The vocalists were Miss Lily Court and Mr. Bernard Knowles, with Mr. Walter Bridson at the pianoforte.

An interesting item in the Sunday Society's orchestral programme on January 24 was a Violin concerto recently written by the veteran local violinist Mr. Henry Lawson, who has reached the age of eighty-four with faculties unimpaired. The concerto was ably played by Mr. John Lawson, the conductor of the Society's orchestra, and afterwards the composer, who was present, was the recipient of hearty congratulations from the crowded audience in St. George's Hall.

Mr. William Willis gave a dignified and virile performance of the 'Appassionata sonata' at his pianoforte recital in St. George's Hall on February 10, and in Schumann's 'Carneval,' Chopin's 'Berceuse,' and Liszt's 'Campanella,' he further displayed obvious qualities of a first-rate pianist. Songs were pleasantly and expressively sung by Mr. Theodore Byard, and Mr. Percy Kahn accompanied.

Lady Hallé made a welcome appearance at the Symphony Orchestra's concert in the Sun Hall on February 1, when she played Mendelssohn's Violin concerto with all her renowned art and skill. Madame Carreño appeared at these interesting concerts on February 15, when she played Tchaikovsky's Pianoforte concerto in B flat minor.

At the concert of the Orchestral Society on February 14, Mr. Fritz Cassirer, of Berlin, conducted three items—the 'Der Freischütz' overture, Saint-Saëns's Violoncello concerto (solo by Mr. W. Hatton), and Schubert's 'Unfinished' symphony, of which he secured a delicate and expressive performance. Mr. Granville Bantock assumed the baton in Dvorák's interesting symphonic variations, and Miss Emily Breare made a favourable impression by her artistic singing, especially in 'Solvejg's song.'

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Part I. of Mr. Granville Bantock's 'Omar Khayyám' was performed for the second time at the Hallé Concerts on January 21, and the composer had a hearty reception on appearing to conduct his work. The solo vocalists were Miss Sarah Andrew, Mr. John Coates and Mr. Herbert Brown. The Haydn centenary was regarded, if not quite adequately, at the following concert on January 28. The Symphony No. 7 of the Salomon set was admirably rendered under Mr. Franz Beidler's conductorship; Mr. Carl Fuchs played the Violoncello concerto in D; and Miss Agnes Nicholls sang the air 'With verdure clad.' The concert closed with Liszt's symphonic poem 'Mazeppa.' The performance of 'Judas Maccabæus' at the concert of February 4 yielded a triumph for the human voice in the fine interpretative singing of the choir, of whom Mr. R. H. Wilson, the chorus-master, who conducted, has every reason to be proud. The soloists were Madame Mary Conly, Madame Annie Radford, Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. John Coates, and Sir Charles Santley—the efforts of the last-named being stirring in the extreme. The outstanding feature of the concert of February 11, conducted by Mr. Beidler was provided in the violin-playing of Dr. Brodsky's pupil, Mr. Arthur Catterall. He made Goldmark's Concerto a shapely thing, technique and expression being alike admirable. The orchestral numbers included Schumann's Symphony, in D minor, No. 4.

Dr. Richter having completed his engagements in London, was welcomed back to the conductorship of the Hallé concert of February 18. The programme was cosmopolitan to a degree—Bach's 'Brandenburg' Concerto No. 5, in D, arranged by Siloti, Beethoven's 'Pastoral' Symphony, the paraphrase for pianoforte and orchestra of Liszt's 'Danse Macabre,' Dvorák's 'Othello' Overture, and Elgar's Introduction and Allegro for strings. Mr. Siloti played the solo part in the Concerto and in the Liszt paraphrase, subduing the tone of the instrument to quite harpsichord proportions in the former, and playing with brilliance and with appropriate power of tone in the latter.

At the Gentlemen's Concerts, Lady Hallé and Mr. Leonard Borwick gave an afternoon recital on February 3. For her solo Lady Hallé repeated the little Violin suite of Johann Baptist Neruda; and Mr. Borwick played again his own arrangement for the pianoforte of Bach's Fugue in G minor. Together the sympathetic artists delighted us with Schumann's Sonata in D minor (Op. 121), Mozart's Sonata in E flat (Peters, No. 16), and three of the Brahms-Joachim Hungarian dances. Madame Sadler-Fogg sang with great acceptance.

At the Brodsky Quartet concert on January 27 a new Pianoforte trio by Mr. Edward Isaacs was performed, with the composer at the pianoforte. Like his Concerto, the Trio indicates a genuine instinct for instrumental expression. Brahms's Quartet in C minor (Op. 51, No. 1), and Beethoven's in C sharp minor (Op. 138) completed the programme. Mr. Max Mayer, at his concert on January 25, was joined by Dr. Brodsky in a delightful performance of Beethoven's sonatas—in A (Op. 12, No. 2), in E flat (Op. 12, No. 3), in A (Op. 30, No. 1), and in G (Op. 30, No. 3). The Munich Quartet—Messrs. Theodor Kilian, Georg Knauer, Ludwig Vollnhals and Heinrich Kiefer—were heard here for the first time at the Schiller-Anstalt concert of February 6. For technical brilliance and precision, the playing of these professors of the Munich Royal Academy of Music could not well be surpassed. The programme consisted of Mozart's Quartet in E flat, Sgambati's in D flat (Op. 17), and Beethoven's in E flat (Op. 74). The programme of the concert of the Edith Robinson Quartet on February 1 contained Dr. Ernest Walker's Quintet for pianoforte and strings, in A; Mozart's Quartet in E flat, played afterwards at the Schiller-Anstalt; and Schumann's Quartet in A (Op. 41, No. 3). Dr. Walker was at the pianoforte for his Quintet, the performance of which (for the first time here) excited much interest in musical circles. Miss Edith McCullagh, who made well-sung contributions to the programme, is a sister of two of the very able Quartet—Miss Isabel McCullagh (second violin) and Miss Mary McCullagh (violoncello).

The date of the performance of Elgar's Symphony by the Southport Philharmonic Society, has been changed from March 5 to March 12.

Mr. Brand Lane's subscription concert of January 30 was practically surrendered to his Philharmonic Choir, who, to the great delight of the subscribers, sang through the historical gamut of part-writing from Richard Edwards's 'In going to my lonely bed' to Granville Bantock's 'Awake, awake!' the original selections being multiplied by encores. The singing of Miss Marie Brema and the violin playing of Mr. Louis Peckskai added to the enjoyment of the evening. The choir reaped further honours at the following concert, on February 13, its work on this occasion being supplementary to that of Miss Esta D'Argo, Miss Phyllis Lett and Mr. Robert Burnett (vocalists) and Miss Ethel Bird (pianoforte).

At the Promenade Concert of January 23 Miss Naylor-Carne appeared in the double capacity of solo pianist and solo violinist, illustrating her considerable, if not mature, powers in each through the medium of Tchaikovsky. There were several novelties in the programme of the concert of February 6—a Suite de Ballet, arranged by Saint-Saëns from Rameau's 'Platée'; a Concertstück for bassoon and orchestra, by Mr. A. Wichtl and played by Mr. A. Schieder, both members of the Hallé Orchestra; the second and third movements of a Concerto for the harp, by Professor Zabel, of St. Petersburg, Mr. Charles Collier being the soloist; and Elgar's 'Wand of Youth' suite (No. 2) for orchestra.

The double centenary of the year was celebrated at Darlington by the inclusion in the programme of the Choral and Orchestral Society on January 27 of Mendelssohn's 'Hebrides' overture and Violin concerto—the latter played artistically by Miss Nora Thompson—and Haydn's 'Pauken' symphony. Other features of a successful concert were Wagner's 'Siegfried Idyll' and Rutland Boughton's 'Folk-song variations' on 'Barkshire Tragedy' and 'King Arthur.' Madame Amy Dewhurst was the solo vocalist, and Mr. T. Henderson conducted with skill.

At the Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union concert on February 4, Mendelssohn's 'Scotch' symphony was played by the Scottish Orchestra, and the major portion of the evening was devoted to the first performance here of Verdi's 'Requiem.' Excellent though the rendering was—and the chorus gave a fine exhibition of its powers—the characteristic treatment of the solemn theme, here dramatic, there sentimental, and again startling, while it perhaps pleased the audience, did not impress or move them. The quartet of soloists was Madame Dolores, Miss Yelland and Messrs. Brearley and Parker. Dr. Coward conducted.

One of the chief features of the concert of the Middlesbrough Musical Union on February 17 was Bach's Concerto in D, No. 5, for pianoforte, flute, violin and string orchestra. A refined and artistic interpretation was given by Messrs. Leonard Borwick, A. W. Arlton and Louis Peckskai in the solo portions. Brahms's pianoforte and violin sonata in D minor (Op. 108) and two Handel choruses formed part of the programme. Mr. N. Kilburn conducted.

The Hanley Glee and Madrigal Society gave a miscellaneous programme in the Victoria Hall, Hanley, on February 11. Many of the choral items were unaccompanied, and consisted of the Easter Hymn, Soldiers' Chorus, Students' Latin Song, and Chorus of Gnomes and Sylphs, all from Berlioz's 'Faust'; Elgar's part-songs 'Lullaby,' 'Dance,' and 'Feasting I watch'; and Cowen's 'Boat song.' Refinement and delicacy rather than power were the distinguishing features of the performance. Relief was afforded in vocal items contributed by Miss N. Shirley (soprano), Miss Alice Latham (contralto) and Mr. A. E. Shenton (tenor). Messrs. E. Hammond and Mr. W. T. Bonner played some solos on the organ and pianoforte respectively, and Mr. John James conducted.

The Newcastle Male-Voice Choir gave a concert in the Town Hall, Newcastle-under-Lyme, on February 4, and attracted an enthusiastic audience. The choir has recently made great progress under the baton of its excellent conductor, Mr. S. E. Lovatt. Miss Evangeline Florence (soprano) and Mr. Sydney Brooks (violoncello) contributed some solos.

MUSIC IN NORWICH AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Norwich Philharmonic Society gave its 124th concert at St. Andrew's Hall on February 4, and this being the day after the centenary of the birth of Mendelssohn, the programme was almost entirely confined to the works of that master. Miss Fanny Davies played the solo part in the Pianoforte concerto in G minor, and, as solos, Prelude in B flat, 'Song without words' in F, and Scherzo in E minor. The orchestra also contributed to the programme the 'Midsummer Night's Dream' and 'Ruy Blas' overtures and the 'Italian' Symphony, which also included three 16th century madrigals, sung by the Norwich Cathedral choir with charming effect. The concert was under the conductorship of Dr. Bates, who is to be congratulated on its success.

A most interesting orchestral concert was given by Mr. Arthur Bent at the Assembly Rooms, Theatre Square, Norwich, on February 11. The orchestra, numbering thirty-six performers, including several ladies, played with admirable precision and taste Grieg's 'Holberg' suite (Op. 40) and a Suite by Glazounow. Mrs. Norman O'Neill was the solo pianist in two dances for pianoforte and orchestra by Claude Debussy; she also played a group of pieces by Scarlatti, Rameau, Chopin and Cyril Scott, that by the last-named composer being encored. The vocalist, Miss Edith L. John, was heard to advantage in songs by Brahms and Edward German, Miss Ethel White being the accompanist. Mr. Arthur Bent played three 18th century violin pieces by Fiocco. The whole concert was most successful and attracted a large audience.

The Melton Mowbray Choral Society gave a concert on January 28 for the benefit of the Italian Earthquake Fund, when Bennett's 'May Queen' was performed. The solos were ably rendered by Miss Eva Rich, Mr. J. Reed and Mr. Charles Keywood. Mr. Warner conducted. The Choral Society at Market Rasen on the same night gave Mendelssohn's 'Walpurgis Night' and Stanford's 'Revenge.' Mrs. and Mr. W. H. Thompson and Mr. Honeyman were efficient soloists, and Mr. T. W. Dunkerton conducted.

On February 10, Brahms's 'Requiem' and selections from 'Tannhäuser' were given by the Loughborough Choral Society. The band and choir of 200 performers were ably conducted by Mr. Frank Storer, and the solos were artistically given by Miss Lucy Rosenberg and Mr. Montague Borwell.

The performance on February 11 of Brahms's 'Requiem' and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' by the Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society was perhaps not quite up to their usual standard. The soloists were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Madame Jennie Bentley, Mr. Gervase Elwes and Mr. Dalton Baker. Mr. Allen Gill conducted.

Mr. Woolley's Choral Society gave a very effective concert of unaccompanied choral music on February 16. The programme included Walford Davies's 'England's pleasant land,' Hathaway's 'Justice,' Elgar's 'Evening scene,' Bantock's 'Awake, awake!' and Brahms's 'Night watch,' all these pieces being most carefully rendered. Miss Lizzie Parsons proved an excellent pianist, and vocal solos were ably contributed by the Misses Hilda Richards, Lilian Clayton and Ethel Hentsch, and Messrs. Gilbert Summers, F. Searson, P. Veney and E. Fisher.

Nottingham music-lovers had an opportunity of hearing Godowski at the Subscription Concert on February 17. His masterly technique was evidenced in pieces by Chopin, Rameau, Brahms and Liszt. Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Lane Wilson and Mr. Hugo Becker—all established favourites here—also contributed to the enjoyment of the concert.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Owing to many members of the Sheffield Musical Union having been in Canada in November, the winter concert of this organization was postponed until the end of January, when a repeat performance of 'The Dream of Gerontius' attracted a large audience. The versatility of Dr. Coward's splendid body of singers and their tonal marvels in every direction—volume, control and colour—were effectively displayed in Elgar's vivid strains. The 'Praise to the Holiest' section in particular was magnificently sung, and the men's voices in the closing scene realised exactly the searching penitence of the lines 'Lord, Thou hast been our refuge.' The orchestra was the best which has so far been heard at the Society's concerts. Dr. Coward also directed performances of two short new choral works—'Hymn to the night' (Bernard Scholtz) and 'Devotion' (Carl André). Both are slight in texture, and their simplicity and poverty of ideas seemed to be intensified by comparison with the inspired music which had just been heard. The soloists were Miss Gertrude Lonsdale, Mr. Henry Brearley and Mr. Robert Charlesworth.

The final meeting of the Sheffield Festival Choir took place, on the invitation of the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress, at the Town Hall on February 8. Mr. Henry J. Wood was present, and in the course of an interesting address appealed to the Festival authorities to preserve the lofty character of the programmes and not to lower the art standard for the sake of making profits. There is little fear of any set back, despite the fact that the recent music-making resulted in a loss of £195. During the evening a handsome silver bowl was presented to Mr. T. Walter Hall, chairman of the committee, in recognition of his valuable services in the direction affairs.

The musical competition movement has reached Sheffield, and for a fortnight the Montgomery Hall was the venue of some very interesting and educationally valuable contests organized by the Sheffield Sunday School Union. There were 2,000 competitors. Mr. J. A. Rodgers was the adjudicator in all the musical sections. The principal trophy, a challenge shield open to all choirs, presented by Alderman Eaton, was won by the Sheffield Tabernacle Choir (conductor, Mr. W. H. Dawn), the test-pieces being Mendelssohn's 'Judge me, O God' and Elgar's 'O happy eyes.'

The remaining music of the month has mainly consisted of a number of oratorio and cantata performances by church and suburban choirs, the most notable being those given by the Penistone Choral Society (conductor, Mr. J. Cooper), when Elgar's 'The Banner of St. George' was performed; the Victoria Hall Choral Society (conductor, Mr. H. C. Jackson), 'The Messiah'; St. Barnabas Church Choir, 'The Creation'; St. Mary's Church Choir, 'Hymn of Praise'; Heeley Church Philharmonic, 'Hymn of Praise'; Zion Church Union, Attercliffe, Coward's 'Story of Bethany.'

At the fifth concert of the Chamber Music Society, Mr. G. Ellenberger, Mr. Collin Smith and Mr. Henrich played, with excellent ensemble and interpretative skill, trios by Beethoven (Op. 70, No. 1, in D) and Schumann (Op. 63, in D minor). Mr. Ellenberger and Mr. Henrich were heard in Brahms's Sonata for violin and pianoforte in G (Op. 78). Artistic and successful recitals have also been given during the month by Mrs. J. W. Ibberson (contralto) and Miss Adelaide Dodgson (pianoforte); Miss Dorothy Peck (pianoforte) and Mr. John Peck (violin); and Messrs. Byard (baritone) and Willis (pianoforte). Mr. Godowsky played at the fourth of Messrs. Wilson, Peck and Company's subscription concerts.

LEEDS.

The future of the Municipal Orchestra is just now a topic of some interest at Leeds. The excellent fortnightly orchestral concerts that have been given during the winter season under the ægis of the corporation naturally do not pay their way at prices ranging from 1s. 6d. to 2s., and a deficit has to be made up out of public moneys. Last year this sum amounted to nearly £300, this year it is expected to be about £200. Without being too sanguine, one might anticipate that this deficit would tend to grow smaller as the concerts are better known and appreciated, and in any case £200 is not an extravagant subsidy for a town which has nearly 500,000 inhabitants. But it is no use to talk to a Yorkshireman about the claims of Art when his pocket is in question; and as Leeds is just now suffering from a severe fit of economy, it is announced that all help from the Corporation will be cut off, and, as a prominent Alderman declared, with apparent relish, the concerts 'will have to go, lock, stock, and barrel.' So now, just after the orchestra has been brought to a high state of efficiency by Mr. Fricker, and one has pointed to it as an indication that Leeds was not quite steeped in materialism, its existence is to be imperilled for the sake of saving the ratepayers something like one-thirtieth of a penny in the pound! The efficiency of the orchestra was very satisfactorily proved when, for the first time, it was engaged for one of the orchestral concerts of the subscription series on January 27, at which Mr. Fricker conducted performances of Dvorák's 'New World' symphony, Wagner's 'Siegfried Idyll,' and Mendelssohn's 'Ruy Blas' overture, that deserve to be styled highly-finished and refined. The 'Walpurgis Night,' in which the Philharmonic chorus appeared, was also included as a tribute to the composer's centenary, and as the soloists, Miss Effie Martyn, Mr. W. Parker, and Mr. Marsden Williams, were all local, the concert may be styled a purely home-made affair, and all the more satisfactory on this account. On January 30 the Municipal concert included Dvorák's Symphony in G; Liszt's version, for pianoforte (Mr. Noel Bell) and orchestra, of Schubert's 'Wanderer' Fantasia; Saint-Saëns's 'Rouet d'Omphale'; and Tchaikovsky's 'Marche Slave'; while by way of a novelty, the prelude from the music which Dr. Bairstow, organist of the Leeds Parish Church, wrote for the Pevensey Pageant, was included. The vocalist, Mr. H. Brearley, gave Dr. Brewer's cycle of 'Pastorals,' first heard at the Leeds festival of 1907.

On February 13 the programme was intended to commemorate Mendelssohn's centenary, and included the 'Scotch' symphony, the Violin concerto (Miss Alice Simpkin), the 'Fingal's cave' overture, and the Capriccio in B (Op. 22), for pianoforte (Mr. Harold Mason) and orchestra, together with Elgar's second 'Wand of youth' suite and some pieces from Berlioz's 'Faust.' I have given the details of these programmes, which are typical ones, in order to demonstrate the character of these concerts, and to show that they are not mere entertainments, but have an educational side such as should make them worthy of recognition and support by any enlightened community. The orchestra numbers sixty professional musicians; the season's concerts are ten in number; the prices I have already mentioned; so it will be seen that they are run on economical lines, and a subsidy of £200 should not be considered extravagant.

On February 10 the Leeds Choral Union gave a performance of Elgar's 'King Olaf' which was of great merit—excellent, indeed, as regards the chorus, while the playing of the orchestra (of local musicians) deserves high praise, especially in view of the difficulties of the brilliant and complex score. The principals were Mrs. Henry J. Wood, Mr. Brearley and Mr. H. Gooud, and Dr. Coward conducted.

On January 25 Mr. Alex. Cohen, a local violinist, gave a most interesting chamber concert of music by Richard Strauss, including the early String quartet in A, the Pianoforte quartet in C minor, and the Violin Sonata in E flat, together with some songs expressively sung by Miss Grainger-Kerr. On the following day Mr. Edgar Haddock (violin) and Mr. Willibald Richter (pianoforte) devoted half the programme of a 'Musical evening' to Dvorák, and the pianist, a very finished artist, played the whole of Schumann's 'Kinderscenen' and Grieg's Ballade Variations. Our two local quartet parties have not been idle. On February 3 the Leeds Bohemians gave Schumann's A minor quartet, Franck's noble and individual work in D, and a Mozart quartet; and on February 17 the Rasch Quartet performed quartets by Beethoven in F minor (Op. 95), and Godard in A. On February 10 Mr. Rawdon Briggs came with his Manchester Quartet, and introduced works by Brahms in C minor and Haydn, with a short Fantasia in two movements by Dr. Ernest Walker.

The Leeds Parish Church has since the times of Dr. Hook and Dr. Wesley been famed for its music, and on February 11 the efficiency of the members of its strong choir was shown in its annual concert, which, given under Dr. Bairstow's direction, was interesting as well as popularly successful. On January 23 Dr. Bairstow gave the second of two organ recitals on the fine organ, which owes much of its quality to the famous Schulze. He had as his associate Mr. F. Holt, whose solos on oboe and cor anglais gave variety to the excellent programmes. Another form of parish church activity in musical matters deserves a word of mention here, for though of a much more humble character, it was of exceptional interest, and furnished a model which might well be copied elsewhere. Some ladies who busy themselves with some of the missions connected with the parish church—a parish, be it remembered, which includes the worst slums in Leeds—have for some time been teaching a number of the very poorest children Morris dances, folk-songs, and traditional 'singing games,' and on February 8 they gave a little unpretentious entertainment. The result was quaint and pleasing; but the charm lay in the thought of the value to these little waifs in undergoing a kindly discipline in being brought into contact with such wholesome, pure music, and generally in being raised out of their sordid surroundings.

On February 9 the Leeds Symphony Society, an amateur organization which Mr. Arthur Grimshaw conducts, gave a concert. Beethoven's first Symphony and Mendelssohn's 'Fingal's Cave' overture were included in the programme. The vocalist was Miss Margaret Cooke. A pianoforte recital on February 16, by Mr. Leopold Schultz, a promising young pianist, and a vocal recital on February 18, by Miss Pattie Hornsley, a gifted and artistic singer, deserve brief mention.

BRADFORD.

The chief event at Bradford has been the first performance in that town of Bach's B minor Mass, which took place on February 12. Dr. Cowen conducted, and the principals were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Gervase Elwes and Mr. Herbert Brown—a quartet of soloists which it would be hard to beat. The chorus was that of the Bradford Festival Choral Society, and the Hallé Orchestra was engaged for the occasion, so no pains had been spared to do justice to this great work. The performance was one of all-round excellence, and the thoughtfulness and dignity of Dr. Cowen's reading deserve hearty recognition. The playing of the obbligati was excellent, and Mr. Paersch (horn) and Mr. Rawdon Briggs (violin) were particularly happy in their respective parts.

The Bradford Permanent Orchestra gave one of its concerts on January 23, when Mr. Allen Gill directed a capital performance of Liszt's Pianoforte concerto in E flat, the solo part being very brilliantly and incisively played by Miss Vera Margolies. The rest of the programme was designed to illustrate French and English music, so we had among other things the Carnival Romain of Berlioz, one of Stanford's very happily designed and sympathetically treated Irish Rhapsodies, a pleasing little 'tone-poem' by J. C. Ames, entitled 'The dying swan,' and Cowen's dainty 'Yellow jasmine.' The concert on February 20 was expressly styled a 'popular' one, and Haydn's 'Farewell' symphony, 'with effects,' helped to sustain this character, while the presence in the programme of Beethoven's great 'Leonora' overture, of Mendelssohn's 'Midsummer night's dream' overture, and of two of Brahms's Hungarian dances, showed that popularity is not always inconsistent with the highest excellence. On January 22 Mr. Augustus Mayhew, a young Bradford pianist, gave his first recital, and made a favourable impression by his good technique and musical feeling in a representative programme of pieces by Beethoven, Chopin, Liszt, and other composers.

OTHER TOWNS.

The Hull Symphony Orchestra, happy in the coincidence that one of its concerts fell on the Mendelssohn Centenary, devoted all its programme to that composer. The 'Scotch' Symphony—which seems by general consent to be regarded as his representative orchestral work—was played under Mr. Wallerstein, who obeyed the composer's direction in giving it without the customary breaks between the movements. The 'Ruy Blas' overture and the G minor Pianoforte concerto (soloist, Miss Foster) were the other pieces, and Mr. Martin Harvey, who happened to be at Hull during this week, gave a judicious, non-committal little address, and read Shelley's Ode to music. On February 17, Dvorák's 'New World' symphony was well done, and works new to Hull were introduced in Mozart's 'Petits Riens' ballet music, and Massenet's showy 'Scènes Napolitaines.'

On January 26 the Hull Vocal Society gave its second concert of the season under Dr. E. H. Smith's direction, the programme being a miscellaneous one. The Janssen Subscription concert on February 8 took the form of a pianoforte recital by Mr. Gottfried Galston, Miss Münchhoff being the vocalist.

The Middlesbrough Musical Union, of which Mr. Kilburn is the conductor, gave a concert on February 17 of a mixed nature, but highly interesting. A Brahms Sonata for pianoforte and violin was played by Messrs. Leonard Borwick and Louis Pecskaï, and with the aid of a string orchestra and flute (Mr. Arlom) Bach's 'Brandenburg' Concerto in D was given.

The last of the Wakefield Chamber Concerts for the present season took place on January 28. The pianist was Miss Kathleen Chabot, whose playing displayed great neatness and refinement, and the vocalist, Mr. Alan McWhirter, who sang groups of Somerset and Irish folk-songs and old English songs very sympathetically. The Subscription Concert at Huddersfield on February 2 introduced the precocious young pianist, Ernst Lengyel, who showed wonderful artistic perception in the 'Waldstein' sonata, but was naturally better suited in Mendelssohn's 'Variations sérieuses,' which he rendered charmingly. Dr. Brodsky played the famous 'Trillo del Diavolo,' and the vocalists were Miss Münchhoff, Miss Mildred Jones and Mr. Thorpe Bates. The local Philharmonic orchestra, on February 6, gave a concert, the programme of which was decided by a plébiscite and included the 'Oberon' and 'Rienzi' overtures, but nothing else that was of any distinction. Mr. Arthur Pearson conducted.

Miss Scarth Dixon gave a pleasing vocal recital at York on January 22; and on February 1 the Scarborough Philharmonic Society, under Dr. Ely, gave a miscellaneous concert, in which Mr. Plunket Greene was the leading figure.

Foreign Notes.

AACHEN (AIX LA CHAPELLE).

Dr. Richard Strauss and Prof. Max Schillings have been secured as conductors of a number of works at the Lower Rhine Festival to be held at Whitsuntide. Prof. E. Schwickerath, the Municipal Musikdirektor, will be responsible for the greater part of the programme.—Sir Edward Elgar's 'Enigma' Variations were played for the first time here at the Fourth Kurhaus Concert, and greatly appreciated.

ANTWERP.

Professor Heinrich Zöllner's latest orchestral work, 'Waldphantasie' (Forest fantasia), after a poem by Turgenieff, was produced here at a Charity Concert at the Flemish Opera and enthusiastically received.

BERGAMO.

A young composer hitherto unknown to fame, Signor Dante Lari, had considerable success with an opera, 'Jela,' recently produced here. The libretto is founded on Poushkin's novel 'The Prisoner of the Caucasus.'

BERLIN.

To honour the memory of Mendelssohn and in connection with the centenary of the master's birth, Prof. Arthur Nikisch performed the 'Scotch' symphony and the usual orchestral selection from the 'Midsummer night's dream' music at the seventh Philharmonic concert on January 25. With the same object in view, the Singakademie, under Prof. Georg Schumann, revived 'Elijah' on January 29, and the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde, reinforced by the Stern'sche Gesangverein, gave 'St. Paul' in the Kaiser Wilhelm Memorial Church on February 3, with Herr Oskar Fried as conductor. The Philharmonic choir, directed by Prof. S. Ochs, chose 'The First Walpurgis Night,' which in Germany is generally considered the freshest of all Mendelssohn's choral works, and the one most likely to defy time and fashion.—At the third Panzner concert, on January 25, a new symphonic poem, 'Hero and Leander,' by Paul Ertel, was produced and enthusiastically received. It is a highly-effective composition, but, like so many similar productions, lacking in individuality.—At a concert given by the Philharmonic Choir in aid of the victims of the South Italian earthquake, a new piece for chorus (8 parts) and orchestra by Oscar von Chelius was produced. The composer is a cavalry colonel on the active list of the German army, but his work, written in memory of the late wife of the Regent of Brunswick, shows that he is a sound and gifted musician. He has taken Fr. Hebbel's fine poem 'Requiem' for his text.—The Blüthner Orchestra has unanimously chosen Prof. Karl Panzner conductor of next season's series of eight orchestral concerts in the Blüthnersaal.—The novelty at the eighth Philharmonic concert, under Prof. Arthur Nikisch, was Leone Sinigaglia's overture to Goldoni's 'Le baruffe chiozzotte.' The charming work delighted the audience. Prof. Nikisch also conducted Haydn's 'Bear' Symphony and Strauss's 'Heldenleben.'—At a concert of his own, Prof. Henri Marteau set himself the tremendous task of playing Max Reger's new Violin concerto, conducted by the composer, and Brahms's Concerto in D. The soloist as well as Prof. Reger were much applauded, though this Op. 101 of the young master's occupies, without pauses, sixty-five minutes in performance; unfortunately it has little to charm or uplift an audience.—A mixed choir of some thirty Dutch peasants from the village of Wognum sang for the first time beyond the confines of their native country at a concert given in the Bechsteinsaal on February 1, and delighted critics and public alike with their unaffected but very expressive singing of a number of Dutch national airs, and pieces by Bach, Mozart, Gounod, César Franck, Bortniansky, Wambach and Wierts. The perfect intonation of these fresh, unspoiled voices was especially noticed. Mr. Willem Saal, the conductor of the 'Jacob Kwast Choir,' as it is styled after its founder, is a farmer, but an enthusiastic amateur musician of the best type. Three concerts in all were given.—Dr. Strauss's 'Elektra' was on February 15 performed for the first time in the German capital and enthusiastically received by a brilliant audience. Frau Paichinger, the Elektra, as well as the composer, were called before the curtain no fewer than ten times. Herr Leo Blech conducted a splendid performance.

BRUSSELS.

M. Henry Février's opera 'Monna Vanna' was performed for the first time at the Théâtre Royal de la Monnaie on January 27, only fifteen days after its production at the Paris Opéra. With Madame Pacary and MM. Bourbon and Verdier in the chief rôles, the performance was one of rare excellence. After the last rehearsal the directors of the theatre proposed and the composer agreed, to omit the Prison scene which Maeterlinck had specially written for this operatic version of his famous drama, and which was duly performed at the Paris Opéra.—The first concert conducted by M. Edgar Tinel at the Conservatoire, in his new capacity of director of that institution, was devoted to Beethoven's 'Eroica' Symphony and a number of compositions by M. Tinel's predecessor, the late F. A. Gevaert, including the cantata 'Jacques Van Artevelde.'—At the third Popular Concert, given on February 14 at the Théâtre de la Monnaie, a new symphonic poem, 'Werther,' by M. Victor Vreuls was produced and well received.

BUDAPEST.

At a concert given by the Vienna 'Tonkünstler Orchester,' the Pianoforte concerto of Mr. Frederick Delius was performed. The solo part was played by Herr Theodor Szántó.

COLOGNE.

It has been decided to hold another opera festival at the Municipal Opera House between June 10 and 29 next. The works selected are Wagner's 'Meistersinger,' Hermann Goetz's 'Taming of the shrew,' Mozart's 'Figaro,' Beethoven's 'Fidelio,' and R. Strauss's 'Elektra.' Of the last-named, two performances will be given.

DÜSSELDORF.

A new symphony by Count Hochberg was recently produced here.

FRANKFORT-ON-MAIN.

Dr. Richard Strauss's 'Elektra' was performed for the first time at the Municipal Opera House on February 6, twelve days after its production at Dresden.—Liszt's rarely-heard oratorio 'Christus' was performed in a somewhat curtailed version by the Rühlscher Gesangverein, under Prof. E. Schwickerath, of Aachen. It is thirty years since the work was heard in Frankfort.

HAMBURG.

At a Popular Symphony concert under the direction of Herr José Eibenschütz, a new 'Symphonic Ballade' by a local musician, Herr Robert Müller Hartmann, was produced and met with much success.

LEIPZIG.

Remembering what Leipzig owes to the genius of Mendelssohn, it would have been the basest ingratitude if the former centre of Continental musical life had not exerted itself to honour the master's memory in connection with the centenary of his birth. But Leipzig did her duty nobly and thoroughly. Between January 30 and February 4, festival performances of Mendelssohn's works were given before enthusiastic audiences as follows: at the Riedel Verein's concert were heard the eight-part psalm 'Judge me, O God,' the three motets for female voices and organ, songs and organ pieces; at the Royal Teachers' Seminary the programme included the motets 'Hear my prayer' and 'Jauchzet dem Herrn alle Welt,' mixed-choir and male-voice part-songs, the 'Festgesang an die Künstler,' the 'Variations sérieuses' for pianoforte, &c.; the Bohemian String Quartet was responsible for a fine performance of the D minor Trio (Op. 49); the pupils' orchestra of the Royal Conservatoire played the overture 'Calm sea and prosperous voyage,' the Violin and G minor Pianoforte concertos, while other students were heard in some songs, arias and duets, and Prof. Dr. Arthur Seidl dwelt on the importance of the day in an impressive oration. At the theatre 'A Midsummer night's dream' was given, with that wonderful music without which a performance of the play, even though it be Shakespeare's, is now almost unthinkable. Fräulein Helene Staegemann sang at her vocal recital sixteen of the master's most beautiful songs, exquisitely accompanied by Prof. Dr. Max Reger. Finally, 'St. Paul' was performed on February 3 at the crowded Albert Hall, by the Singakademie, accompanied by the string band of the 107th Infantry Regiment; while on the following evening this memorable festival week was crowned by a superb performance of 'Elijah' by the Gewandhaus choir and orchestra, under Prof. Arthur Nikisch. An additional festival glamour was lent to this occasion by placing a marble bust of the master in the hall, decorating with wreaths his medallion portrait affixed in the balcony railing, and especially by the recital of an inspiring prologue written by Rudolf von Gottschall. There can be no doubt that justice was done by Leipzig to the memory of the great man who founded her world-famous conservatoire, and worked and died within her precincts.

At the fourteenth Gewandhaus concert, Prof. Arthur Nikisch produced a new overture by Richard Wetz, bearing the title of 'Kleist,' after the highly-gifted German poet, author of some of the best dramas in German literature, who ended his young life by suicide. Herr Wetz's solemn and impressive work was very favourably received.

On February 11, at the seventeenth Gewandhaus concert, Prof. Nikisch conducted the first performance in Germany of Sir Edward Elgar's Symphony. He secured a magnificent rendering, and there could be no doubt that he was in fullest sympathy with the music, which evidently suits him—'liegt ihm,' as the Germans quaintly put it. The work made a 'hit, a palpable hit'; it was indeed a 'durchschlagender Erfolg,' as a leading musician of Leipzig writes.

MOSCOW.

At the concerts of the Imperial Russian Musical Society two important novelties have lately been produced, viz., a Symphony—the second—by A. Goedicke, having as motto and programme Faust's great monologue commencing

Des Lebens Pulseschlagen frisch lebendig in Goethe's masterpiece, and a symphonic poem 'Sister Beatrice' (after Maeterlinck), by Th. Babek. Both works display qualities that lift them above the average, the Symphony especially containing passages of real grandeur.

NEW YORK.

Richard Strauss's 'Salome' has been duly performed at the Manhattan Opera House, and without any protest from shocked shareholders! The performance, with Miss Mary Garden as the delectable heroine, M. Dufranne as a most impressive Jochanaan, M. Delmores as Herod, and Signor Campanini as conductor, was masterly in every respect, and the audience were most enthusiastic. It would appear as if the Metropolitan Opera House, by its withdrawal of the work after last year's single performance, had made a most handsome present to its rival, the Manhattan.

NICE.

The late P. de Sarasate's last composition, 'Le Rêve' (Op. 53), was produced here, on January 18, by the violinist Miss Marianne Eissler, to whom the piece is dedicated.—On February 9 a new opera, 'Quo vadis?' founded on Henry Sienkiewicz's famous novel and composed by M. Jean Nougues, was produced here with genuine success.

PARIS.

At the Lamoureux concert of January 24 a set of 'Variations plaisantes sur un thème grave,' for orchestra and harp obligato, and composed by M. Roger Ducasse, was produced.—'Hernani,' a five-act opera by M. Henri Hirschmann, was produced at the Théâtre Lyrique (Gaité) on January 25, without however making any remarkable impression.—Liszt's orchestral masterpiece, the 'Faust' symphony, was splendidly performed at the first concert of the Association des Concerts Hasselmans, in the Salle Gaveau, on January 27. Three new pieces for orchestra, by M. Florent Schmitt, and bearing the collective title of 'Musique en plein air,' were produced on the same occasion and pleased the audience.—The Schola Cantorum gave an excellent concert performance of Weber's 'Euryanthe' on January 29. M. Vincent d'Indy conducted, and infused some of his enthusiasm for the great German Romanticist into the forces under his control.—In the absence of M. Chevillard, M. Vincent d'Indy conducted the Lamoureux concert of January 31, and brought forward a highly interesting selection from his own 'reconstitution' of Monteverde's 'Orpheus,' dating from 1607. The pieces performed were the overture, a prelude for five trombones, another for harps, and the plaint of Orpheus at the gates of Hades.—A new symphony by M. Albert Roussel, entitled 'The Forest,' was produced at the Lamoureux concert of February 7, also conducted by M. d'Indy. The work, which is programme-music of a somewhat undistinguished type, was well received.

PITTSBURG, U.S.A.

A new symphony, bearing the title 'In der Natur,' and composed by Herr Emil Paur, conductor of the Pittsburg Symphony concerts, was produced here on January 15, and excited the greatest enthusiasm.

ZÜRICH.

This intellectual and commercial capital of Switzerland has not been behind the great German towns in doing honour to the memory of Mendelssohn, a three days' festival devoted to the master's choral, orchestral and chamber works having been attended by the greatest success. Prof. Philip Wolfrum, of Heidelberg, lectured on the master's life and work. Similar festival concerts were held in many other Swiss towns, chiefly of course in the German-speaking northern and eastern portions of the Republic.

The 'Musical Directory' for 1909 has been issued, as of yore, by Messrs. Rudall, Carte & Co. It would be impossible to over-estimate the value and importance of this annual publication; as a book of reference it is indispensable.

Two most successful concerts were given in Massey Hall, Toronto, by the National Chorus of Toronto, on January 18 and 19, under the direction of Dr. Albert Ham. The first concert was devoted entirely to works of British composers. A notable event was the performance of Elgar's Symphony, which was magnificently interpreted by the New York Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of Mr. Walter Damrosch. The principal choral works performed were Bridge's 'Flag of England' and Cowen's 'He giveth His beloved sleep.' Several unaccompanied pieces by Leslie, Elgar and Lee Williams were beautifully sung. At the second concert a portion of the programme was devoted to works by Mendelssohn, in honour of the centenary of the composer's birth. The 'Scotch' symphony and 'Thanks be to God' (Elijah) were the special features. Hamish MacCunn's cantata, 'Lord Ullin's daughter,' was also performed with great success. The splendid quality of tone and excellent phrasing of the choir, so conspicuously displayed in the unaccompanied works by Bortnianski, Gounod and Pearsall, stamped it as being an organization of which Canadians may justly feel exceedingly proud.

At Devonshire Park, Eastbourne, on February 20, the Duke of Devonshire's Private Orchestra (conductor, Mr. P. Tas) gave a special concert of which the main feature was Elgar's Symphony, conducted by Dr. Richter, who made a special visit to Eastbourne for that purpose. The orchestra—augmented for the occasion by members of the London Symphony Orchestra—gave a very fine performance of the work, and the enthusiasm of the audience, numbering at least 2,000 persons, was so great that the distinguished conductor was recalled four times. The programme included the overtures 'Fingal's Cave,' 'Leonore' (No. 3) and the 'Meistersingers.'

Mr. Henry Davey delivered an interesting and thoughtful lecture before the Sussex section of the Incorporated Society of Musicians at Brighton, on February 6, taking for his subject 'What is musical taste?' Mr. Davey afterwards gave a short address on Mendelssohn, in which, while he (the lecturer) admitted that Mendelssohn was over-valued during a generation after his death, yet now there is far too strong a tendency to undervalue him.

A Mendelssohn Centenary concert was given at the City Temple on January 28, under the direction of the organist, Mr. A. J. Hawkins. The 'Hymn of Praise' and 'Athalie' were performed, the soloists being Miss Maude Willby, Miss Irene Marriott, Miss May Hayden, Miss Ada Hawkins, and Mr. Ernest Penfold. Mr. Thomas J. Crawford was at the organ, and the lines in 'Athalie' were excellently recited by Miss Ellen Bowick.

Mr. R. R. Terry read a paper before the Musical Association on February 16, taking as his subject 'The music of the Byzantine liturgy.'

'The programme will again consist entirely of works by British composers.' Such is a specially interesting feature of the announcement of the concert to be given by Mr. Edward Mason's choir at Queen's Hall on March 16. On that occasion Mr. Rutland Boughton's symphonic poem for chorus and orchestra, 'The skeleton in armour,' will be produced, although it was composed so far back as 1898! First performances in London will be given of Mr. Edgar L. Bainton's 'The Blessed Damozel' and Mr. Arthur M. Goodhart's 'The Spanish Armada.' May all success attend this patriotic enterprise.

Mr. Thomas Dunhill announces a third series of three chamber concerts to be given at Steinway Hall on the evenings of March 5, 12 and 19. The interesting programmes, largely made up of works by young native composers, include Mr. Dunhill's own Pianoforte quartet in B minor (Op. 16), to be played at the first concert, and a new Sonata for pianoforte and violin (Op. 27) on the second evening. The third programme will bring with it a new String quartet in D by Mr. Montague Phillips.

The Macfarren Scholarship at the Royal Academy of Music will be competed for at the end of April. It is open to British-born subjects between the ages of fifteen and twenty-one years, and is awarded for promise in music composition. Full particulars may be obtained from the Secretary.

Answers to Correspondents.

While we are most anxious to answer questions to the best of our ability, we cannot undertake to send replies by post, nor can we give the names of teachers or concert-agents.

S. E. B.—The tune 'Agapé' (No. 718 in the 'Methodist Hymn Book') is one of Six Litanies composed for the choir of the Roman Catholic Church, Farm Street, London, by George Herbert, an accomplished amateur who died rather recently. It became popular through being tacked on, as a kind of refrain (Kyrie Eleison, &c.) to a song by Claribel, entitled 'Children's voices.' The other tune you mention—'Crucifixion,' by A. Cnophius, No. 158 in the same book—we regret to be unable to trace. Perhaps some of our readers can furnish some information as to its source.

B. L.—The whereabouts of the organist you name is unfortunately unknown to us. Why not write to the vicar of the church at which he held the organistship from 1900-1906? An interesting memoir of Dr Zechariah Buck, organist of Norwich Cathedral, was published by Messrs. Jarrold & Sons in 1899. While we are most desirous of giving all the information in our power in this column, we are afraid that the line must be drawn at finding out the relatives of the departed Bishop and Dean you mention, nor can we suggest where they (the relatives) are to be found.

V. F.—While we sympathise with you in your 'pecuniary circumstances,' we regret that we cannot suggest any means of turning into money the 'twenty-five pieces—including six fugues (three-part), four sonatas (for orchestra), and little inventions for viols, four hymns, &c.,' which you have written 'since October last'—except by submitting them to music publishers. It is very doubtful, however, if the result would be the improvement of your 'financial position,' but there would be no harm in trying.

A. M.—You cannot do better than follow so experienced and well-informed an authority on phrasing in pianoforte playing as Mr. Franklin Taylor. That 'every phrase should be divided [do you not mean ended?] by playing the last note slightly staccato' is a cut-and-dried way of phrasing which, in its perfection should, like other things in music, be subtle and therefore not too obvious.

INQUIRER.—We regret that we have not space to give the history of 'Salve! festa dies.' You will find references thereto in Dr. Julian's 'Dictionary of Hymnology,' new edition, pp. 644, 988, 1139, 1697 and 1710. The Rev. J. Baden Powell's setting of the words (English version) is very popular, and can be sung as an anthem.

W. W. H.—You are rather young—thirteen and a-half years old—to begin to earn your living as a violoncellist. Better stay at school a little longer and at the same time continue the practice of the instrument of your choice. The very encouraging newspaper report you send us refers to you as a 'protégé' instead of a 'prodigy'!

J. B.—That you feel your throat 'quite hoarse and stuffed' is an indication of something being wrong with your vocal apparatus. Had you not better consult a medical man, one whose speciality is the throat? In the meantime you are wise in resting your voice.

B. W. A.—There seems no reason why the control of your tongue in singing should be affected by your bugle performances. Some people have considerable difficulty in keeping the tongue down, but practice works wonders in this as in other respects.

J. A. D.—Laurent de Rillé's male-voice part-songs 'The Crusaders' and 'Martyrs of the Arena' are published by Messrs. Novello. The other piece you name we cannot trace.

CHORALE.—You will find some useful exercises for choral sight-reading (staff-notation) in Novello's School Songs, Nos. 21, 42, and 69. See also Sir John Stainer's 'Choral Society Vocalisation' primer.

G. F. M.—Most of the compositions of Guillaume Lekeu (1870-1894) are published by Baudoux, of Paris, and Muraille, of Liège, but they can be obtained through Messrs. Novello.

SCOTIA.—You will find valuable hints on the use of the pianoforte pedals in Mr. Franklin Taylor's 'Technique and Expression in Pianoforte-playing,' pp. 73-83.

H. A. C.—In the absence of any qualifications as 'valuers,' we regret we are unable to say how much the connection you refer to 'may be considered worth.'

G. M.—As you are a lady, is it really necessary that you should neutralise the charms of your ordinary habiliments by donning an academic cap and gown?

ZEUS.—Professor Dr. Max Reger now resides at Leipzig, and he would probably not have any objection to giving lessons on the organ.

A LOVER OF BACH.—Dr. Baumgart's pamphlet on Bach's 'Phœbus and Pan' is out of print.

A few questions are held over.

For a century or more the vast majority of English children have been brought up in total ignorance of the racial and traditional folk-music of their own country. It is significant that, during that period, the musical taste of the educated classes has become more and more cosmopolitan, while that of the lower classes, at any rate in the towns, has been degraded to the level of the unlovely song of the street. Obviously the remedy is to restore the English folk-song to those to whom it belongs by right of inheritance.

Fortunately it still is possible to recover the songs themselves; indeed, many collectors have been and are engaged upon this necessary and useful work. The next step is to select the best of these, to arrange and publish them in a suitable and inexpensive form, and so place them within the reach of the teachers of primary and secondary schools throughout the country. That is the purpose of this Series, of which these songs collected in Somerset are the first instalment.

NEW SACRED SONG FOR LENT.

THE NAZARENE

WORDS AND MUSIC BY
JOSEPH H. ADAMS.

I stood on the hill of Calvary
As the sun was sinking low,
And thought of all the wondrous things
That happened long ago.
And as in contemplation
I gazed upon the scene,
I saw the Saviour of the world,
The gentle Nazarene;
I thought of His compassion,
His love for sinful men;
I thought of dark Gethsemane,
And all He suffered then:
I saw Him in the judgment hall
In robes of shame arrayed,
And love and grief welled in my heart,
And kneeling there I prayed:—
"O loving Saviour, by Thy bitter anguish,
By all Thy love for our sinful race,
Grant Life Eternal, O Lord Supernal,
Hear us in Heaven Thy dwelling-place."

I saw Him hanging on the cross,
I heard Him as He cried
For pardon for His enemies
Who mocked Him as He died.
And on the Resurrection morn
I saw the Saviour rise
Victorious over Death and Hell,
Triumphant in the skies:
And then, enthroned over all
(How changed was the scene),
As King of kings, and Lord of lords,
I saw the Nazarene
Surrounded by a glorious host,
Who praise Him and adore;
And in Eternal Majesty
He reigns for evermore.

"O loving Saviour, by Thy bitter anguish,
By all Thy love for our sinful race,
Grant Life Eternal, O Lord Supernal,
Hear us in Heaven Thy dwelling-place."

ALFRED R. GAUL'S PASSION SERVICE

FOR THE SEASON OF
LENT AND GOOD FRIDAY.

"Scholarly writing, combined with unmistakable talent, and eminently adapted to the purpose for which it was written and composed. The work will probably be largely used, and Mr. Gaul has to be congratulated upon another success."—Sheffield Independent.

"The course of sacred events connected with the Passion is laid out by the writer so as to form a series of six distinct 'scenes.' The subjects of these divisions, each occupied with a particular stage of the Mystery, are respectively: 'The Traitor at the Table,' 'The Denial,' 'The Condemnation before Pilate,' 'The Mockery on Calvary,' 'The Shadow of Death,' and 'The Holy Sepulchre.' The style of the composition resembles generally that of Mr. Gaul's previous writings—the same effective, grateful part-writing, and the same expressive and melodious treatment of the solo voice. In those sections, notably that of the Unjust Condemnation, where the realistic element is predominant, the composer has manifested his ability to write with dramatic force and intensity as well as with lyric charm. In this respect the choral writing distinguished itself in comparison with that in the 'Holy City' and other of the composer's works. Mr. Gaul has not written new hymn tunes for the author's lyrics; the tunes selected are from among those in ordinary congregational use. Altogether considered, Mr. Gaul's new work will, undoubtedly, greatly enhance his already high reputation in the line of sacred composition."—Musical Standard.

Price, paper cover, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s.; scarlet cloth, 4s.
Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

The loan of Parts for a limited Orchestra—namely, Strings, 2 Flutes, 2 Clarinets, 2 Cornets, Bass Trombone or Euphonium, and Kettledrums, may be had on application to the COMPOSER, Gillott Lodge, Edgbaston.

THE PRINCE OF PEACE A SACRED CANTATA FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE WORDS SELECTED FROM HOLY SCRIPTURE AND THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY ALFRED R. GAUL.

"No man knows better than Mr. Gaul how to write for voices. . . . Throughout the work we have spontaneity, elegance, attractiveness, in short, a never-ending charm."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

"Is indeed a work of a very unusual character. . . . Worthy the study of choral societies of every grade."—North Staffordshire Sentinel.

"There are passages of surpassing beauty and brilliance. . . . From the opening bars to the finish there was not a dull moment."—Pontypool Free Press.

"Admirably written for the voice, enhanced by charm of rhythm and picturesque accompaniments."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

Vocal Score, paper cover, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s.; scarlet cloth, 4s.

ISRAEL IN THE WILDERNESS A SACRED CANTATA

FOR THREE SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

LYRICS BY JETTY VOGEL

THE SCRIPTURAL TEXTS SELECTED AND THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"Mr. Gaul's work is another proof of his practical wisdom as well as of his ability as a composer. . . . We welcome 'Israel in the Wilderness' as one of those works which foster the love and induce the practice of music amongst the people."—Musical Standard.

"The various solo and choral movements display Mr. Gaul's facility for the composition of genuine, effective music: clear in purpose, melodious, vigorous, and expressive by turns, and constructed by an experienced thinker and worker."—Musical News.

The Cantata contains all the elements of popularity, and it was excellently performed under the composer's direction, and very warmly received."—Standard.

"Mr. Gaul's music is exactly what is required for large choral gatherings, for it is effective without presenting any overwhelming difficulties. The part-writing is excellent. . . . Melodious throughout."—Daily News.

"Without being unduly difficult, it is indisputably effective."—London Figaro.

"At the close of the work, portions of which were loudly applauded, Mr. Gaul, who conducted, was warmly complimented on a Cantata which is likely to become quite as great a favourite with choral societies as 'The Holy City' and others of his compositions."—Daily Chronicle.

"Altogether worthy of the composer of that amazingly popular work, 'The Holy City.'"—The Referee.

"Characterized by the same refinement as that of Mr. Gaul's extremely successful work 'The Holy City.'"—The Athenæum.

"Musically and excellent, and not too difficult to imperil its popularity."—Musical Opinion.

"One of the most musically, melodious, and well-conceived works of its popular composer."—School of Music Review.

"Mr. Gaul is a felicitous composer, and the work under consideration is one of his happiest and most scholarly writings."—New York Press.

LESSONS

HARMONIZING MELODIES

BY

CUTHBERT HARRIS.

BOOK II. (STAGES III. AND IV.)

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

PREFACE.

This Primer is in direct continuation of Book I., and may be used so soon as the elementary principles there dealt with have been mastered.

Modulation plays so important a part in the harmonization of the large majority of melodies, that it was found necessary to deal with it at considerable length.

In the harmonization of melodies of an elaborate and florid type, most students at first experience considerable difficulty in distinguishing between which notes should be treated as harmony and which as passing-notes, &c. The plan of eliminating the ornamental elements, thus reducing florid passages to their skeleton form, is used as being the clearest and most methodical way of dealing with this difficult part of the subject.

No attempt has been made in these pages to reach the most advanced stage. But the method employed will, it is hoped, give the student an insight into the foundation principles applicable in the harmonization of simple vocal melodies and also instrumental melodies of the most advanced type.

Useful information and illustrations in the subject will also be found in Chapter III. of the author's "Examination Questions, and How to Work Them." Primer No 70.

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

CH. GOUNOD.

A Selection for Concert Performance

JOHN POINTER.

In this Selection most of the best-known passages of Gounod's masterpiece are comprised. The Soldiers' Chorus, a large part of the Garden Scene, and most of the Kermesse Act have been arranged, together with other excerpts, in such a sequence as to afford the best effect of variety and contrast; and by reason of this treatment the absence of scenery and action is not detrimental, as it is in a concert performance of the whole opera.

BON-BON SUITE

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

THE TIMES.

Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's delightful suite, with its vivid orchestral idiom, its rapid turns of poetic expression, its humour and its gaiety, demands readiness from a chorus, rhythmic energy and skill in chromatic passages, as well as a general lightness of handling.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

It certainly possesses not a little charm, as in the song to Rosa, much grace and delicacy, as in the chorus "The Fairy Boat," humour, as in the dolorous female chorus "Love and Hymen," and poetry, as in the very different number bearing the title "The Watchman." Moreover, the hand of Mr. Coleridge-Taylor is as clearly to be observed in several numbers, as in "Hiawatha," so far its composer's masterpiece. Mr. Coleridge-Taylor, and those who helped him to the genuine success he achieved, had good cause to be pleased with themselves, since the reception was a particularly cordial one, and, I may add, was well deserved.

MORNING POST.

There is variety and imagination in the lines which give an impulse to the qualities of melody and picturesqueness which Mr. Coleridge-Taylor knows so well how to express. They do not fail him in this instance. He provides in the six numbers, divided between the chorus and the baritone solo, every evidence of his ability to write tunefully, and with a certain individuality which gives his music distinction. The choral writing shows excellent workmanship, and its effect is consequently unflinching. In the orchestral colouring there is plenty of contrast. Now and again the colour is laid on rather heavily for a piece of this texture, but it helps to increase the contrast. The composer shows a happy appreciation of the delicacy of the poem and reproduces it successfully. The number for female voices only, "Love had a Fever," is an example of his most felicitous treatment. The Watchman verse is set in a fanciful fashion, with choral accompaniment to the utterances of the lingering lover interspersed with the warnings by the Watchman of the passing hours. The finale, "What shall we dance?" leaves that question very little in doubt, as the setting is irresistibly rhythmic and delightfully tuneful. No work that Mr. Coleridge-Taylor has produced recently has shown so many features that constitute popularity, and the Suite, with its equal distribution of interest between chorus, orchestra, and soloist, is likely to win for its composer a fresh lease of public approval.

STANDARD.

It was greeted with great enthusiasm, and the composer, who personally directed his work, met with a flattering reception. The suite consists of six settings of verses by Moore, each possessing the character of a distinct tone-picture. For the most part, full use is made of the force of orchestra, chorus, and soloist, but the fifth number is purely vocal in treatment, and it was in this that a very striking effect was produced by a chime accompaniment. The last movement, "Say, what shall we dance?" was a brilliant example of dance music of a lively Spanish character.

YORKSHIRE POST.

The music is romantic and elegant, and characteristic of the composer. The second number, named "The Fairy Boat," seemed rather too heavily scored for the subject, dealing with the fleeting joys and hopes of youth. But perhaps this impression was owing to the want of lighter rendering. This was succeeded by a charming setting for the chorus of "To Rosa," a graceful dirge on the death of Love. The fourth movement, which has for text "Love and Hymen," is not so spontaneous as it might be. It is really a duet for soprano and alto, and requires a good deal of finish in singing to make it effective. The next number, called "The Watchman," has humorous touches. A lover bids good-bye to his sweetheart in such long-drawn-out ecstasy as to last from midnight to past three a.m., the watchman giving out the passing hours, and the chorus echoing his warnings. The concluding number is a gay and spirited setting of "Say, what shall we dance?"

SECTION A.—TECHNICAL PRACTICE. IN SIX BOOKS.

The foundation of "A Modern School for the Violin" is laid by means of a series of Six Books dealing exclusively with the important subject of DAILY TECHNICAL PRACTICE. The First Book of Technical Practice (Book 1A) is limited to the 1st Position; the Second Book (2A) to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the Third Book (3A) to the first five Positions; and so on. Bowings and other technical devices are introduced in a similarly progressive manner throughout. Each Book of Technical Practice is divided into "Lessons" (or Chapters), and each Lesson contains a number of repeating Exercises on some definite point of Violin Technique—as Fingering, Bowing, &c., with the needful explanations. Included in each Book will be found a complete set of Scales and Arpeggi, arranged according to the particular stage of advancement reached.

Taken as a whole, this Section is intended to facilitate, and to insist on, a thorough, steady, and continuous progress in the mastery of the Instrument, this being the only possible means of preparing the groundwork for artistic achievement with all its lasting delights.

SECTION B.—STUDIES. IN SIX BOOKS.

Section B is formed of a series of original and selected Studies, in Six Books. Each Book of Studies (Section B) is carefully co-ordinated, in respect of difficulty and range of subject, with the correspondingly numbered Book of Technical Practice (Section A). Thus the First Book of Studies (1B) is written in the 1st Position; the Second Book (2B) in the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the 3rd Book (3B) in all Positions up to and including the 5th; and so on. It should further be explained that the two Sections are designed to complement one another, and that the "School" must be practised, not in single Books of Technical Practice and Studies alternately, but in pairs. Thus, Books 1A and 1B are to be taken concurrently, then Books 2A and 2B, 3A and 3B, and so on, and the appropriate pairs are now issued bound together in cloth (see Cloth Bindings below).

HE LONDON CLARION MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

February 6.

Competitive festivals in connection with the "Clarion" have been held in Lancashire and Yorkshire for some years past. The first to be held in London took place at the Caxton Hall on February 6. The feature of this occasion was the instrumental and vocal solos section, which was more extensive than in any of the similar clarion festivals. Between eighty and ninety entries were attracted by these classes. Four choirs entered in the choral competition, in which the test-piece was Edward German's "Who is Sylvia?" Woolwich Pioneer Labour Choir (Mr. J. P. Hicks) were first, and the N.W. London Socialist Choir (Mr. Armitage) were second. It is proposed at present to hold a festival every two years.

PRESTON.

FEBRUARY 18, 19, 20.

This is one of the best managed and most enterprising of the Northern festivals. The music chosen for the tests is always of the highest class, and therefore the scheme is rigorously educational. There is no attempt to court popularity by abandoning high ideals. But, while acknowledgment is due to the promoters for their courage and far-sightedness, it may be well for them to consider more attentively the capacities of a stratum of potential competitors who are unable to attempt the very difficult tests imposed in some of the classes, and who certainly should be comprehended in a scheme designed to stimulate the inefficient as well as to reward the efficient. These remarks apply more especially to the solo-singing classes. It is perfectly true that these classes attract many singers with remarkable gifts able to give adequate performances of the pieces named below. A good proportion of the competitors are practically well-equipped professionals, who enter the lists in the hope of securing a distinction that will help them in their career. But there must be many humbler amateurs who deserve encouragement.

In the choral classes the tests were more varied in difficulty. The highest classes had to submit to tests of unusual severity. Here there seems to be no reasonable alternative. Such pieces exist, and they are meant to be sung, and choirs of the most superb character are able to conquer their extraordinary difficulty, and to yield to auditors a rare sensation and experience of the marvellously expressive possibilities of the human voice in combination. The greatly gratifying fact is that so many choralists possess the technical capacity and the temperament demanded.

Last year the schools, as it were let loose on the children's day, were permitted by the school authorities to attend the festival literally in thousands as auditors or competitors. This year, owing to various causes, there were fewer competitors and smaller audiences, but the quality of the performances showed no signs of going back. There were much charming singing and exhibitions of skilful training. By next year a reorganization in this department will, it is believed, result in a great expansion of the educational influence of the festival in the schools.

The test in the open church choir class deserves special mention. It was Mendelssohn's eight-part anthem, "My God, O why hast Thou forsaken Me?" This fine unaccompanied choral piece was beautifully sung by two choirs, and it created a deep impression. It was new to the great majority of listeners, and its reception proved that in order to provide something by way of novelty that will be fully appreciated by singers and audience it is not always necessary to have brand-new modern music. This anthem is one that could be made much of by Welsh choirs. We strongly recommend it to Eisteddfodau committees.

The choral adjudicators were Dr. W. G. McNaught and Mr. Dan Price. Mr. J. E. Adkins attended to the choral sight-singing and organ-playing, and Mr. A. E. Bartle judged the pianoforte classes.

Much of the musical success of the festival was owing to Mr. Adkins, who was mainly responsible for the selection of test-pieces, and who ably conducted all the combined choir singing at the evening concert. The business arrangements under Mr. D. Dawson, the secretary, worked with happy smoothness. Dr. R. C. Brown, the deeply-respected senior medical practitioner in the town, is the President of the festival.

The principal results in all classes are given below:

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

GREAT CENTRAL HALL, LONDON, S.E.
March 6.

A solo-singing competition is announced under the direction of Mr. Granville Humphreys. Competitors are to be allowed to choose their own songs and the audience will judge by ballot. If the entries are too numerous a competent adjudicator will sort out. It is rather a pity this arrangement cannot very well be reversed.

THE ST. CECILIA SINGING COMPETITION.

May 17 and 18.

The St. Cecilia singing competition for working girls was founded in 1900, and had for its aims the desire:—

- (1) To help and encourage such clubs as were too diffident, or were unable for some other reason, to enter any of the competitions already in existence;
- (2) To encourage sight-singing (thereby doing away with the useless habit of learning songs by ear);
- (3) To foster the love of good music in the girls' homes as well as in their clubs.

It will be seen from this that the key-note of the Society is encouragement, and it is felt that its aims have been justified by the annual increase in the numbers of competing clubs.

The test-pieces chosen for this year's competitions are:—

INTERMEDIATE DIVISION (first day).

"Garland of songs," National and Folk-songs connected for consecutive performance. Set II.

Two-part, "Doubt not thy Father's care" Elgar.

Three-part round, "To Isabell" Dorothy Blunt.

ADVANCED DIVISION (second day).

Three-part, "Sister, awake" ... Ernest Walker.

Four-part ("A litany" ... W. Y. Hurlstone.

(S.S.A.A.) ("You stole my love" ... Macfarren.

In each division obligatory sight-singing tests (from either notation) are imposed. The competitions will take place in the Passmore Edwards Settlement, Tavistock Place. Challenge pictures are awarded as prizes.

CHERBOURG, FRANCE.

August 8 and 9.

The Times states: We are informed that the Fêtes Committee of Cherbourg are organizing for August 8 and 9 next, under the auspices of the town, an international band contest and musical festival in which all the musical societies, both vocal and instrumental, of France are invited to take part. The board of examiners will be chosen from the most distinguished men of the musical world, and prizes amounting to over £600, consisting of money, objects of art, medals, &c., are offered.

SPILSBY.

There will be no musical competitions at Spilsby this year, but it is hoped that they will be held again in the Spring of 1910.

SYDNEY.

We are informed of two great Eisteddfodau announced to be held respectively on February 13 to 20, and April 5 to 13. The former event is to take place in one of Sydney's suburbs, and there was every indication of success when our information left Sydney. The secretary, Mr. Charles Goodman, states that he is endeavouring to arrange for the publication of a paper to be called "The Australian Eisteddfod Times and Competition Gazette." The April event is on a grand scale. The prizes offered total up to £1,000.

PIANO STUDENTS

are often distressed at the slowness of their progress in Sight-Playing. Their progress is slow because they are not working upon scientific lines—upon a "system" worthy of the name.

Mere knowledge of the relations between notes and keys is not sufficient. Sight-Playing is an act of the fingers and arms, and a true system should establish an automatic connection between musical symbols and muscular actions. This is what does in a remarkably short time, thanks to the application of certain fundamental scientific principles.

THE EHREMYER SYSTEM OF

My BOOKLET, sent POST FREE on application, will give you full explanations. The Fee for the Complete Three Months' Course of Six Fortnightly Lessons is £3 3s. (By instalments if preferred.)

Certainty of Results,
Saving of Time and Labour, Simplicity—

are the advantages which I claim for my System.

EXTRACTS FROM PUPILS' REPORTS AFTER THIRD LESSON:

"I received the test, and found no difficulty in reading off the chords. I may say it is quite a pleasure to take up new music to read to what it was before I commenced the System."

Great Bookham.

E. J. B.

"Am happy to tell you I have much improved already in sight-playing—am surprised at the improvement myself. The chords at the beginning confused me sometimes, but now come quite naturally."

PIANISTS AND PRACTICE.

"PRACTICE MAKES PERFECT," WHEN

PRACTICE is PERFECT.

It is not perfect unless laws of Nature are understood and obeyed. When a saw is blunt you sharpen it, but not by sawing. Neither can the ordinary pianist perfect his hands and arms by keyboard work. The only sound way to do so is by the special method discovered by Mr. Macdonald Smith. This is true physiological "practice" which "makes perfect," and soon leads to the disappearance of every technical difficulty. The splendid results of the well-known System "From Brain to Keyboard" are described by pupils in "Light on Pianoforte Playing," which may be had free by post on application.

DR. CHARLES HARRISS.

Twenty-six years ago there stood on the deck of the s.s. Alaska, then the greyhound of the Atlantic, a youth on his way to seek fame and fortune in Greater Britain beyond the seas. He was just passing out of his teens, and stood there friendless and anxious for the future. As the shores of the mother country were gradually lost to view he realised his loneliness. He had been appointed organist of a church at Ottawa, and was crossing the Atlantic in order to take up the duties appertaining to that office. 'Where is Ottawa?' he enquired of a fellow-voyager standing by his side. 'Ask that man,' was the reply, pointing to a passenger next to him. The result of that enquiry at once removed the dreariness of isolation, and in a moment the young musician seemed to receive an inspiration as to the possibilities that lay before him in the land whither he was going. Those fellow-travellers were Charles H. Macintosh, M.P., Mayor of Ottawa, and Sir Sandford Fleming, of Ottawa, two of Canada's grand old men, both of whom became the staunch friends of the youthful Englishman. Little did he think that within twenty-six years he would take a choir of 200 voices from Sheffield across the ocean to sing in the principalities of the Dominion of Canada, but 'there's a divinity that shapes our ends, rough-hew them how we will.' The youth who in the year 1882 set his face towards the great North West, forms the subject of this biographical sketch.

Charles Albert Edwin Harriss was born in London, 'within the sound of Bow Bells,' on December 16, 1862. He received his first lessons in music from his father, the late Edwin Harriss, organist of St. Mark's Church, Wrexham, who during the latter part of his life practised his profession at Hastings. At the age of twelve he became a chorister of St. Michael's College, Tenbury, founded by the Rev. Sir Frederick A. Gore Ouseley, and of which Sir Frederick was then Warden. In response to our request for information on this point, the present Warden (the Rev. John Hampton) writes: 'Harriss came here in February, 1875, and left in July, 1877, when his voice broke. I remember his advent and that he had a good, strong, useful voice, and was most enthusiastic and diligent. He was a most agreeable fellow whom it was a pleasure to teach. He takes a great pleasure in visiting his old school and we are all delighted to see him.'

'EARNSCLIFFE,' OTTAWA.

THE RESIDENCE OF DR. AND MRS. CHARLES HARRISS.

After holding an assistant-organistship at Reading for about a year, Harriss was appointed organist of the parish church, Welshpool, and private organist to the Earl Powis. The church appointment is duly recorded in the Musical Times of November, 1880. He was then nineteen years of age. After two years' strenuous work at Welshpool, he was the successful candidate of sixty aspirants who competed for the organistship of the church of St. Alban the Martyr, Ottawa. This post had been temporarily held until Harriss's arrival by Oliver King, then pianist to Princess Louise, at Government House. He well remembers playing to Sir Frederick Ouseley on the organ in Hereford Cathedral. Ouseley had been extemporising in his inimitable manner, when he asked his old chorister to improvise on a theme. 'Oh! Sir, I can't, after you.' But with that never-failing courage which is one of his greatest characteristics, Harriss did his best, with the result that Ouseley's word settled the competition and sealed the Canadian fate of the Tenbury boy. He left England in December, 1882, for Ottawa, via New York, when the incident on board the Alaska above referred to took place.

His first Sunday evening at Ottawa was passed under the hospitable roof of Sir John Macdonald, Premier of Canada. Lady Macdonald—afterwards Baroness Macdonald of Earncliffe, the first Colonial peeress ever created—was from the first his kindest friend in Canada, and it is one of those curious yet pleasurable ironies of fate that Dr. and Mrs. Harriss's home is to-day that same beautiful Earncliffe from which Lady Macdonald derived her title. Another good friend was the Hon. Charles Macintosh, the member for Ottawa, afterwards Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Territories, and the octogenarian Sir Sandford Fleming, whose warm friendship he has fully enjoyed during the whole of his residence, now twenty-six years, in the Dominion. The first organ recital given by Dr. Harriss in Canada was honoured by the presence of the Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne), wife of the Governor-General.

After having held the organistship of St. Alban the Martyr, Ottawa, for ten months, the subject of this sketch was, in November, 1883, appointed organist and rector chori of Christ Church Cathedral, Montreal. There he found himself in the Dominion's Metropolis with nothing to rely upon but his own resources of musicianship and indomitable perseverance. In order to augment his income he gave lessons at Point St. Charles to the sons and daughters of mechanics who were engaged in the shops of the Grand Trunk Railway, until he was able to obtain a city practice, by no means easy of attainment in those days. As he could not afford to take a holiday in the summer of 1884, he composed his first work, 'Daniel before the King,' a sacred dramatic cantata, of which he also compiled the libretto. Six years elapsed, however, before the cantata was performed, when it was given by the Montreal Philharmonic Society in 1890. At Montreal Cathedral he did splendid work with his choir of seventy-five voices. Clerical despotism, however, had such dire results that, after three years (in 1886), Dr. Harriss transferred his services to the Church of St. James the Apostle, of which he remained 'chief musician' for nine years, during which time this church became celebrated for its cathedral services, setting a standard which most other churches adopted. That was his last organ appointment. In this connection it should be recorded that he achieved great success as a solo organist, not only all over Canada, but especially in the United States, where he gave recitals in various cities between Boston and San Francisco. Further mention must be made of his work among the working folk of Point St. Charles in an extract from the Musical Times of March, 1887, which speaks for itself:

MONTREAL.—Sir Sterndale Bennett's sacred cantata 'The Woman of Samaria' was given for the first time in Canada, under the directorship of Mr. Charles A. E. Harriss, on the 15th ult. It is surprising that amongst the many choral societies in the Dominion this well-known work should have been so long passed over, and its performance, therefore, reflects much credit upon the Point St. Charles Choral Union, which is a new organization, consisting for the most part of working hands from the Grand Trunk Terminus. The cantata was rendered in a highly satisfactory manner, with a chorus of 100 voices, soloists and orchestra and before a very large audience.

So far we have referred to what in medical parlance may be termed the 'general practitioner' period of Dr. Harriss's career. Before treating of his 'specialist' achievements, it may be convenient to point to his record as a creative musician. His cantata, 'Daniel before the King,' has already been mentioned. This was followed by numerous songs and anthems, in addition to compositions for the pianoforte and organ, published by Schirmer & Co., New York; Oliver Ditson & Co., New York and Boston; Boosey & Co., New York; Suckling & Co., Toronto; and Whaley, Royce & Co., Toronto. And here it may be mentioned that the head of the Schirmer firm invited Dr. Harriss to reside in New York, but Canada had the first place in the affections of the Montreal organist, and he declined the proposal. 'Torquil,' a lyric opera was performed under the composer's direction at Montreal, Ottawa, and Toronto in May, 1900, in aid of the fund founded by His Excellency Lord Minto for the benefit of Canadian soldiers in the South African war. Portions of this opera were to have been performed 'by command' before the Prince and Princess of Wales, at Ottawa during the visit of Their Royal Highnesses to the capital of the Dominion in September, 1901, but the disastrous burning of the Opera House that week caused the cancellation of the performance.

A 'Festival Mass' was produced at Montreal across the frontier, on Christmas Eve, 1901. For the special service held in Christ Church Cathedral, Ottawa, at the time of the funeral of Queen Victoria (January 22, 1901), he composed a funeral anthem, 'I heard a voice from heaven'

A year later (1902), to commemorate the death of the Queen, his Mass was sung in the Basilica, Ottawa, in the presence of perhaps the most representative gathering of worshippers ever assembled in any sacred edifice in the Dominion.

'The Admiral,' a comic opera, belongs to the year 1902. To this succeeded the 'Coronation Mass Edward VII.,' dedicated, by gracious permission, to Queen Alexandra, and bearing its designation by gracious permission of the King. His Choric Idyl 'Pan' was composed for the farewell State concert tendered to Their Excellencies the Earl and Countess of Minto on their departure from the Capital, November 15, 1904. For the Montreal Philharmonic Society—which he founded and directed in 1906—he composed, in 1907, his effective choral setting of Kingsley's pathetic poem 'The Sands of Dee.'

We now come to what may be termed the Imperialistic-musical side of Dr. Charles Harriss's strenuous life. As far back as the year 1884, when he was a young man of twenty-three years of age, he ventured to write to Lord Melgund, military secretary to Lord Lansdowne, then Governor-General of Canada, asking that music should find an acknowledged place in the curriculum of McGill University. As may be imagined, the answer to that request, while sympathetic, was that there were other needed things that would possibly be more to the advantage of the country than music. Nothing daunted, however, the young man steadily kept in view his great ideal, contributing his quota to placing Canada musically on a high level of excellence and developing the artistic resources of the country, and above all making music a powerful factor in furthering the great idea of the Imperialistic propaganda of the art, by establishing what may be described as 'musical reciprocity' between the Dominion and the mother country. Fortune favours the brave, and Dr. Harriss, one of the most warm-hearted of patriots and a true philanthropist by nature, has spared neither effort, time, nor expense in working out the salvation of music in the land of his adoption, and fructifying the seeds of his reciprocal propaganda as applied to music—his life-work in fact, whole-hearted, sincere, and eminently practical.

What are the results so far? In 1903 he organized the first cycle of Musical Festivals in the Dominion of Canada, extending from ocean to ocean. Sir Alexander Mackenzie, principal of the Royal Academy of Music, conducted the performances, in which 4,000 Canadian singers took part. The music performed was entirely by British composers, and that the festivals—lasting five weeks—were a great success the columns of this and many other journals abundantly testified. The dreams of 1884 came true twenty years later, when Dr. Harriss organized and became honorary director of the McGill University Conservatorium of Music, a post he held with distinction until September, 1907. The building was declared opened in 1904 by His Excellency Lord Minto, this being one of his last acts in his official capacity of Governor-General previous to his departure from the Dominion. Last year Dr. Harriss induced Sir Frederick Bridge, organist of Westminster Abbey, to lecture on English Church music in the chief cities of the Dominion, and to demonstrate, through the aid of native choirs, the potentialities of that rich store of sacred music which is our peculiar and precious heritage. Success here again attended this 'musical reciprocity' propaganda. And then, as if seeking other worlds to conquer, the subject of this sketch invited a choir of 200 voices from Sheffield, to visit Canada under the skilful direction of Dr. Henry Coward, in order to afford Canadians proof of the choral achievements of the mother country. It was a bold venture to take this large number of choralists across the Atlantic, but Dr. Harriss is a firm believer in the power of sentiment, and the word 'difficulty' finds no place in his vocabulary.

In further developing his 'musical reciprocity' platform, Dr. Harriss has visited England three years in succession in order to give Empire Concerts in London. The first of these, a British-Canadian Festival, took place at Queen's Hall, June 27, 1906, and was honoured by the presence of the King and the Princess Louise (Duchess of Argyll). On that occasion his Choric Idyl 'Pan' was performed, at the conclusion of which the composer had the great honour of being commanded to His Majesty's presence. On April 16, 1907, he conducted his 'Coronation Mass, Edward VII.' at the concert given by the London Symphony Orchestra in honour of the Premiers of the Empire attending the Colonial Conference. The second Empire Concert was given, also at Queen's Hall, on May 24, 1907, in aid of the Victoria League and Empire Education funds, and on May 23, 1908, the Albert Hall was crowded at the third Empire Concert, when the enterprising Canadian musician's 'The Sands of Dee' was sung. He will again direct the Empire Concert at the Royal Albert Hall in May next, after which he will proceed to Cape Town, South Africa, upon the invitation of the municipal authorities as the guest-conductor of the Cape Town musical festivals to be held there in July.

Dr. Harriss was created a Doctor of Music by the Archbishop of Canterbury (Dr. Davidson) in 1905, and was elected an honorary member of the Royal Academy of Music in the same year. He is a Liveryman of the Worshipful Company of Musicians; an honorary life member of the Royal Society of Musicians; a life member of the Union of Graduates in Music; a member of the Musical Association; a member of the Society of British Composers; and a member of the Savage Club. In Canada he conducts the State concerts at the Capital. He is the director of the Associated Board Examinations (Royal Academy of Music and Royal College of Music); adviser throughout the Dominion for the Royal College of Organists; and a member of the executive committee governing Earl Grey's Musical and Dramatic Competition annually held in the Dominion, at which talent from all parts of Canada compete.

In the year 1897 Dr. Harriss married Mrs. Ella Beatty Shoenberger, of Scarlet Oaks, Cincinnati, a Canadian lady whose generous help and practical sympathy play no small part in the work of his life.

A man of boundless energy, unflinching courage, and strenuous go-a-headness, Dr. Harriss, with his genial optimism, carries all before him. He verily lives up to the injunction of the Preacher, 'Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might,' whether it be the great work of his life, the furtherance of the art of music in his adopted country, or in shouldering his rifle in quest of big game up the Saskatchewan river, or handling his gun at York Lodge, Poplar Point. Asked as to the tenets of his creed in regard to reciprocity in music between the mother country and the daughter dominion, Dr. Harriss says: 'As I see it, this reciprocity in music affords the greatest scope and the speediest goal for the development of our overseas musical resources. We Canadians are a people by no manner of means lost to the finer senses of things that matter. Rather, indeed, are we a people much exercised in cultivating the finer senses, proof of which is exemplified to-day throughout the whole Dominion in music here, music there, and in the making of music everywhere.'

CARLISLE CATHEDRAL.

One of the charms of English cathedrals is their infinite variety. Not a few of these stately structures are overwhelming in their magnificence. If, on the other hand, there are some that have fewer claims to architectural splendour, they possess compensating features of special interest—it may be historical, ecclesiastical, or musical, or a combination of all three—which give them the hall-mark of distinction. The less imposing cathedrals, due to the fact of their restricted dimensions, have an advantage over the vaster and more imposing edifices, in that the mind of the visitor becomes more concentrated upon matters of detail which often yield fruitful results. Are any such subtleties to be found in this, the mother-church of the Border City? We shall see.

The history of Carlisle Cathedral can be briefly told. In the year 1092, Walter—a rich Norman priest who had been made Governor of the town by William Rufus—began to build the church. It was to be dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary, and to be in connection with a college of secular canons. As Walter did not live to see the consummation of his handiwork, Henry I. took upon himself the completion of the building. Moreover, the King changed the foundation to a house of Augustinians, the only cathedral in Christendom thus established. When, in 1133, Henry founded the See of Carlisle and the priory church became the cathedral, he placed upon the altar the famous 'cornu eburneum,' now, unfortunately, lost. In this connection—the presentation of a horn instead of a written document as proof of the grant of tithes—Samuel Jefferson, in his 'History and antiquities of Carlisle,' says: 'The ceremony of investiture with a horn is very ancient, and was in use before there were any written charters. We read of Ulf, a Danish prince, who gave all his lands to the church of York; and the form of endowment was this: he brought the horn out of which he usually drank, and before the high altar kneeling devoutly drank the wine, and by that ceremony enfeoffed the church with all his lands and revenues.'

Of the Norman building only two bays of the nave, some portions of the transepts, and piers of the central tower now remain. The rebuilding of the choir occupied forty-two years—those were leisurely times—from 1250 to 1292. In the latter year this new choir was partially destroyed by fire, and its rebuilding covered a period of 103 years, 1292 to 1395. Exactly a hundred years later a second conflagration damaged the north transept. This was restored, and the central tower built between 1400 and 1419. Further disaster attended the cathedral when, at the capture of the city in 1645, the Parliamentary troops demolished part of the nave in order to repair the fortifications. This serious depletion of the venerable fane has never been made good. At the middle of last century the building was in a shocking condition, but the careful restorations of Mr. Ewan Christian, begun in 1853, have changed 'a great wilde country church' into a stately cathedral. At the Reformation the dedication was changed to that of the Holy and undivided Trinity.

The truncated nave, originally 260 feet in length, is now only 39 feet long, thus it has somewhat the appearance of an ante-chapel to the choir. But its circumscribed area space is partly atoned for by the massive circular pillars, 6 feet in diameter, supporting strong-girt semicircular arches. The photograph on p. 234 shows that the arches near the tower have been partially distorted, caused by the sinking of the tower piers owing to faulty foundations. The stained glass in the large north window of the nave is in memory of the five children of Dean (afterwards Archbishop) Tait; they all died of scarlet fever within the space of five weeks, March 6 to April 9, 1858. Previous to the year 1870 the nave was walled off from the choir, and used as the parish church of St. Mary. Here Sir Walter Scott led to the altar his bride, Miss Charlotte Carpenter, on Christmas Eve, 1797.

Upon entering the choir the visitor will behold the glory of Carlisle Cathedral—its gorgeous east window, the finest in the world! No wonder that the citizens are proud of this precious possession. As has been said: 'Its upper part exhibits the most beautiful and perfect design for window tracery in the world. All the parts are in such just harmony the one to the other—the whole is so absolutely appropriate and at the same time so artistically elegant—that it stands quite alone, even among windows of its own age.' High praise indeed; but who, on beholding this exquisite poem in glass, will question the truth of this appreciation? Rich in colour and artistic in design are the two compartments in this nine-light window, in height 51 feet, in width 26 feet. Its upper portion contains beautiful old coloured glass of the time of Richard II., and has for its subject the Session of Our Lord in Judgment, ecclesiologically called 'A Doom.' Mr. T. Francis Bumpus thus describes it.*

'In the quatrefoil at the apex of the window is the Saviour seated as the Supreme Judge, His head surrounded by the cruciform nimbus, and His feet resting upon the rainbow, and showing the stigmata. One hand is elevated, as though saying to the procession of the blessed to the Palace of Heaven in the tracery to the left of the spectator, "Venite benedicite!" while the other is pointing downwards to the right as if addressing the unhappy who are being thrust down to the place of punishment, "Discedite a me maledicti!"

'In the group to the left of the Saviour, the Heavenly Jerusalem is represented with its towers and pavilions. St. Peter stands in the gateway, clad in white, at his feet flowing the River of Life, and, that we may have no doubt that it is a river, it is depicted as full of little fish. All the figures in the procession are naked; they are of all ages and both sexes, and the faces show marked individuality. The antithesis to this happy picture shows the place of punishment, the red glare of which draws attention to the quatrefoil in which it is placed. The tortures indicated are of the most active kind: figures hanging on gibbets, other wretches being boiled in cauldrons, burnt, turned on a spit while a green devil looks on, and in one corner a puce-coloured devil is torturing a woman with a huge fork. The rest of this portion of the tracery is occupied with the representation of the general resurrection elaborately worked out.

* The Cathedrals of England and Wales. By T. Francis Bumpus. Third Series, p. 135. London; T. Werner Laurie. 1,06.

Some of the figures rising from the dead are kings and ecclesiastics of high rank, and there can be no doubt that many of them are portraits.'

The lower part of this lovely east window was originally a 'Jesse,' which suffered destruction at the Reformation. For more than three hundred years the whole of the nine lights were of plain glass. In 1861 the present colouration, representing events in the life of Our Lord, was inserted as a memorial to Bishop Percy, who died in 1856.

The view of the west end of the choir (see the photograph below) is less attractive than that of the east. What is the reason for this awryness nave, it is not concentric with the choir roof, hence the lopsidedness of the choir arch as seen from the choir itself. This enlarged rebuilding of the choir in 1292 also furnishes the anomaly of the south choir aisle having a Norman arch, while the north choir aisle is entered through a beautiful late 13th century arch of the Decorated period.

The choir, of eight bays and 134 feet in length, takes very high rank among English cathedrals. It has this peculiarity, that the arches are Early English 'of the Pointed style in all the purity of its first period' (13th century), and that the pillars supporting them are Decorated of the 14th century.

of the tower arch? In about the year 1250 the clergy became dissatisfied with the smallness of the choir. A new one on a much larger scale was therefore projected. As any extension on the south side of the church was precluded by the conventual buildings, the necessary width had to be obtained on the north side, with the result that the choir is 12 feet broader than the nave, and thus the tower is not more than two-thirds the width of the choir. Therefore, while the choir arch is symmetrically placed as regards the roof of the tunic. As his head is closely wrapped up and his countenance has a very woebegone expression, he appears to be suffering from a cold. He is sitting over a fire, holding his boot upside down as if draining the water from it, while he holds up one foot to catch the heat from the fireplace, which is very skilfully carved. The scene is changed for the month of June. Here we find a horseman; in his right hand is a hawk, in his left he holds a bunch of roses. The design includes some half-human figures and men playing musical instruments. This capital, by-the-way, is more elaborately carved than any of the others.

This combination of styles is due to the arches having escaped the fire of 1292, while the falling burning timbers destroyed the Early English columns. As Mr. Bumpus says: 'This explains the (at first sight) strange spectacle of Early English arches resting on Decorated pillars.' The carvings of the capitals are unique, at all events as regards England. Twelve of them quaintly and graphically represent the domestic and agricultural occupations of the months of the year. For instance, February: A man is depicted wearing a loose

Like the east window, the roof of the choir of Carlisle Cathedral is unique. It dates from circa 1350, is of oak, waggon-headed in design, and semicircular in all its parts. Judging from the hammer-beams, it would seem as if the builders originally intended to construct an open-timber roof, similar to that in Westminster Hall; in any case these now ornamental hammer-beams were allowed to remain. It seems incomprehensible that, in the year 1764, a plaster ceiling was put up, which hid this fine timber roof from view! This whitewashed excrescence was fortunately removed in 1856. A faithful restoration of the original was then made, except that the scheme of colouring—red and green upon white—was not copied. Instead thereof, Owen Jones suggested a background of blue plentifully ornamented with golden stars. It is recorded that when Dean Close first beheld this constellation decoration, he solemnly exclaimed, 'O my stars,!'

The stalls are remarkably fine, if they do not rank among the finest in England. Of black oak and occupying the three western bays of the choir, they date from the time of Bishop Strickland, early in the 15th century. The beauty and richness of the tabernacle work is worthy of all praise—'like a whole wood, say a thicket of old hawthorn, with its topmost branches spared, slowly transformed into stalls.' The pillars supporting the canopies bear traces of having been burnt, by weary monks who dropped off to sleep in the midst of their interminable devotions while holding a lighted candle in their hands. The misereres are of the usual grotesque designs, e.g., a dragon swallowing a man; a pelican in its act of piety; a man with two eagles plucking at his beard; a mermaid, and so on. A specimen of this monkish jocularità is given in the previous column. At the back of the stalls are some curious paintings ascribed to Prior Gondibour (circa 1484). They depict scenes from the monkish legends of St. Anthony the Hermit, St. Cuthbert, and St. Augustine. There are also pictures of the twelve Apostles with the words which, according to tradition, each one contributed to the Apostles' Creed. These paintings were whitewashed at the time of the Reformation, but they are now restored, as far as possible, to their original condition.

Another point in which Carlisle Cathedral is peculiar, if not unique: the north side is Decani and the south Cantoris. The reason for this is obvious. When Æthelwulf, prior of Carlisle, was consecrated first Bishop of Carlisle, he retained the prior's stall on the south side. Thus it is that at Carlisle the Bishop has a stall as well as a throne. The sub-prior was made prior, and kept the sub-prior's stall.

Other interesting features of the choir are the stately arcade, dating from 1292; the Salkeld wooden screen on the north side, a splendid piece of Renaissance work erected in 1545 by Lancelot Salkeld, the last prior and first Dean of the cathedral; the grave, in the centre of the choir, of Bishop Bell (died 1495), upon the blue slab of which is a fine brass with the figure of a bishop robed, and with mitre and gloves. The latest addition consists of some finely-carved choir-stalls, designed by Sir Charles Nicholson and presented in memory of the late Canon Chalker by his wife. One leaves this superb choir with regret, for, allowing for the unsymmetrical appearance of the western arch, it contains many beauties upon which the eye feasts with delight. To sum up this part of our subject, Carlisle Cathedral 'constitutes quite an epitome of English architecture from the 12th to the 15th centuries.'

The bells are six in number. The oldest, dated 1396, is inscribed:

In : voce : sum : munda : maria ;
sonando : secunda.

Another bell, dated 1608, has the words:

Jesus be our speed.

A third bell, dated 1657, contains the following admonition:

I warne you how your time doth pass away.
Serve God therefore while life doth last and say
Gloria in excelsis Deo.

The Fraternity, or Refectory, situated on the south side and separated from the cathedral, is the only remaining portion of the conventual buildings. Dating from about A.D. 1350, it was rebuilt by Prior Gondibour about the year 1500. In its restored form this noble apartment—79 by 27 feet—serves the double purpose of Chapter House and Cathedral Library. At the upper end of the room cut out of the south wall, is the little nook where one of the monks used to read to his fellows in order to improve their morals while they partook of their daily fare. The Fraternity has a very fine Decorated crypt, with groined roof, the only crypt at Carlisle. Carefully preserved in a glass case are two mediæval copes of rich colour and handsome workmanship.

Before considering the strictly musical part of our subject, mention may be made of some of the distinguished ecclesiastics, past and present, connected with the cathedral. Of the bishops, Samuel Goodenough, holder of the See from 1808 to 1827, preached a sermon before the House of Lords in 1809, which gave rise to the following epigram :

'Tis well enough that Goodenough
Before the Lords could preach,
But, sure enough, full bad enough
Are those he has to teach.

Like other prelates of those 'good old times,' Bishop Goodenough looked well after the interests of his family. During his episcopate he appointed three of his sons prebendaries of the cathedral! One of these well-provided-for clerics was the Rev. Robert Philip Goodenough, composer of a double chant which appears in most collections. The Deans of Carlisle include Francis Atterbury (1704), the controversialist and afterwards Bishop of Rochester and Dean of Westminster (the two appointments then went together); Thomas Percy (1778), afterwards Bishop of Dromore, and author of the 'Reliques of ancient English poetry,' probably the most eminent of Carlisle's deans; Archibald Campbell Tait (appointed in 1849), afterwards Archbishop of Canterbury, to whom reference has already been made; and the celebrated Francis Close, who reigned from 1856 to 1881. The present Dean is the Very Rev. William Barker, formerly rector of St. Marylebone. William Paley, author of the 'Evidences of Christianity,' was Archdeacon of Carlisle from 1782 to his death in 1805; his remains are interred in the cathedral. Coming to later times, mention must be made, for it is his just due, of that gifted poet and historian, the late Rev. Dr. Richard Watson Dixon (1833-1900), a former assistant minor canon, honorary librarian, and honorary canon of the cathedral, and second master of Carlisle Grammar School. The present Chapter consists of Archdeacon Prescott, Chancellor of the Diocese, well known for his writings on the cathedral; the Bishop of Barrow-in-Furness (Canon Ware); Canon Bower, held in repute for his archæological researches; and Canon Phillips, formerly Archdeacon of Barrow-in-Furness.

The earliest known mention of an organ in Carlisle Cathedral is in the Inventory of November, 1571, where one of the 'Items' is: 'One pair of organnes.' Perchance this instrument may have been the one heard by the three officers of Norwich who visited the city during their 'short survey of 26 counties' in 1634. Here is their record: 'We repayrd to the Cathedrall, where there is nothing soe fayre and stately as those wee had seene, but more like a great wilde country church. The Organs, and voices did well agree, the one being like a shrill Bagpipe, the other like the Scottish Tone.' Not very complimentary, perhaps, but probably true.

This bagpipe organ may have remained in the cathedral until 1684, when Dean Thomas Smith presented a new instrument, and 'the old organ was given by the Dean and Chapter to the said Lord Bishopp [of Carlisle], who freely bestowed it upon the Corporation of Appleby, in that Church.' Dean Smith's organ cost the large sum, in those days, of £200. It was first used on April 6, 1684, when Archdeacon William Nicolson (afterwards Bishop of the diocese) preached. His diary thus records the event: 'Geprediget zu Carlile über 2 Chron. 29, 27. The first time ye new organ was played on, being highly approved on by Mr. Griggs and Mr. Palmer, ye Organists of Newcastle and Durham.'

Who was the builder of this old organ? The late Dr. E. J. Hopkins, in his manuscript book of organ specifications (now in the possession of the present writer), assigns its manufacture to Father Smith; but this needs confirmation, which, unfortunately, the Chapter Minutes fail to furnish. Dr. Hopkins gives the following as the specification of this Smith-given, if not Smith-built organ of the 17th century:

Having apparently done duty for upwards of 120 years, this one-manual organ was replaced by a new instrument built by John Avery, as the following entry in the Chapter Minutes of 1804 duly records :

JOHN AVERY. (Signed) ISAAC MILNER.
Witness—JOHN TILLOTSON. W. SHEEPSHANKS.

This organ,—begun by Avery, and the last instrument built by him—opened on Easter Sunday, 1806, and completed by Elliot in 1808, was placed in the centre of the screen. The choir organ—of very small size and containing no pipe longer than four feet—was placed in the projection above the entrance to the choir, and behind the player; but it was entirely cased in and the front pipes did not show. In June, 1834, under the direction of Richard Ingham, then organist, the organ was ordered to be thoroughly repaired, and additional pipes supplied. At this time an octave and a-half of pedal pipes were added, and a Venetian swell was put in by Davis, of Liverpool.

This Avery organ (of which an illustration appears opposite) was the G compass instrument which Mr. (now Dr.) H. E. Ford found when he entered upon the duties of organist in 1842. He had to wait fourteen years before a new organ was erected by Father Willis in 1856. This effective three-manual organ contained 11 stops on the Great, 11 on the Swell, 6 on the Choir, and 7 on the Pedal, in addition to 5 couplers and the usual accessories, including 6 pistons to the Great and Pedal organs, and 6 to the Swell organ. The new instrument was opened by Dr. Ford on Sunday, June 22, 1856, for which occasion a Service in D was composed by W. T. Best, a native of Carlisle, who, in conjunction with Dr. Ford, had drawn up the specification of this Willis organ. In 1875 various additions and alterations were made which included a 32-feet Open diapason on the Pedal, and a large-scaled Open diapason on the Great. Eighteen years later the organ was again renovated and fitted with Willis air-pumps driven by a gas-engine. Thus the organ remained until 1907. At that time the mechanism had become so worn out as to be unreliable, and it was found necessary to undertake a complete renovation of the instrument. Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson, then acting-organist, at once set about raising funds for the entire rebuilding and enlargement of the organ. The sum appealed for (£2,000) to meet the estimate of the builders having been obtained, the work was undertaken by Messrs. Harrison & Harrison, of Durham, and the organ was re-opened on December 10, 1907, when a special service was held at Evensong, followed by a recital given by Sir Walter Parratt.*

The following is the specification of the present instrument :

The draw-stop jambs are at an angle of 45 degrees to the key-boards, and fitted with ivory bushes. The stop-handles have solid ivory heads, the speaking-stops being lettered in black, and the couplers, &c. (indicated above by italics), in red. The latter are grouped with the speaking-stops of the departments they augment. The Swell to Great draws on both jambs. The combination pistons have solid ivory heads.

The builders' latest system of tubular pneumatics is applied to the whole mechanism of the organ, except the manual to pedal coupling action, which is mechanical.

The 'Willis' air-pumps have been retained, and are driven by a new electric motor.

The Statutes of the cathedral relating to the choir are as follows:

26. Of the Choristers and their Master.

We appoint and ordain, that, by the election and designation of the Dean and Chapter, or (in his absence) of the Vice-Dean and Chapter, there shall be in our aforesaid

Church six Choristers, boys of tender age, and with sonorous voices and apt at chanting, who shall attend, minister, and chant in the Choir. To instruct these and to imbue them with modesty of behaviour as well as skilfulness in singing, we will, moreover, that (besides the four clerks before named) one shall be elected by the Dean and Chapter, or (in the absence of the Dean) by the Vice-Dean and Chapter, who shall be of honest reputation, correct life, skilful in chanting and playing the organ, who shall studiously occupy himself in teaching the boys in playing the organ at the proper time, and in chanting the Divine Offices. But, if he shall be found negligent or idle in teaching, after a third warning, let him be deposed from office. Which said Master of the Choristers shall also be put upon oath faithfully to discharge his office in his own person.

With regard to the Carlisle choristers of former days, Miss Maria Hackett, writing nearly a century ago, said: 'They have for several years been greatly neglected . . . but there is good reason to hope that their school will soon advance in credit and usefulness.' Half-a-century ago the discipline of the choir school was not above reproach, for in the attendance book of 1858 we find a note, added—no doubt surreptitiously—in a childish handwriting, to the effect that

One boy refused to lie over the desk to get the cane from Mr. — but had a fight with him and injured his nose and gave him a black eye he will probably be expelled (sic).

Such an assault lends credence to a line in the quatrain on Carlisle attributed to Dean Swift:

Here godless boys God's glories squall.

An ex-chorister of the cathedral, Mr. J. W. Brown—who, during a membership of thirty-six years, has been successively treasurer and president of the Carlisle Choral Society—read an interesting paper two years ago on 'Chorister life in the early sixties,' which records some of the pranks of the boys in his day. An unknown versifier wrote on the panel of the outer door of the rehearsal room the following premature epitaph upon him:

Here lies the body of dear little Brown,
 Like the setting sun his life went down;
 He laid aside his chorister gown
 For better robes and a heavenly crown!

Even minor canons were not models of exemplary conduct in bygone days. In November, 1704, two of the minor canons 'misbehaved themselves in the vestry by kicking, boxing, and by words abusing' one another, and were suspended in consequence and made to apologise.

To return to the choristers. They number twenty-two, including six probationers, and receive a good education in the choir school at the hands of the master, the Rev. Henry Dams, M.A., who is also Precentor of the cathedral. The walls of their school rooms, formerly those of the Grammar School, are adorned with pictures, &c., kindly provided by Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson during the period of his acting-organistship. During Mr. Dams's mastership of the choir school there has been a marked improvement in the culture and tone of the boys. His method of training and discipline is such that they have no difficulty, on leaving the choir, in securing good appointments promising success in their after life. To a stranger, their reverent behaviour in church is most noticeable, and this is frequently commented upon by visitors. The choristers occupy two rows of seats on either side of the choir; this arrangement is a great improvement upon the former plan, as it brings the Decani and Cantoris sides nearer to each other, for it must be remembered that Carlisle Cathedral has the widest choir in England.

Carlisle has been fortunate in its lay-clerks: indeed the Border City cathedral has become a stepping-stone to appointments of greater scope and influence. Since Mr. Dams became Precentor, some eight years ago, lay-clerks have gone from Carlisle to the cathedrals of Durham (2), Gloucester, Salisbury, Exeter, and Southwell. The late Mr. Thomas Hunt, of Windsor, father of be as catholic as possible in their selection. All schools of composition are represented in them, especial care being taken to keep in constant use the classics which form the basis of all that is best in English Church music. There are few weeks in the year in which specimens from every century since the Reformation will not be found, and every endeavour is made to keep the due proportion. Here, as in everything appertaining to the music of the cathedral, Mr. Dams discharges his duties of Precentor in the right spirit and with an earnest desire for the reverent and efficient rendering of the music and the maintenance of the best cathedral traditions.

Lastly, the organists. Thomas Sowthick was probably the first organist formally appointed after the foundation of the Dean and Chapter. A decree was made December 21, 1578, that Robert James, a singing man, should assist the choir with

Mr. Hubert Hunt, organist of Bristol Cathedral, and Mr. George May, of St. Paul's Cathedral, were former lay-clerks of Carlisle, as was also Mr. James Naylor, father of the late Dr. John Naylor, organist of York Minster, grandfather of Dr. E. W. Naylor, organist of Emmanuel College, Cambridge, and maternal grandfather of Mr. Hubert Hunt foresaid. The senior lay-clerk (retired) is Mr. William Metcalfe, composer of the popular setting of 'D'ye ken John Peel?'

The music library of the cathedral is carefully reserved under the watchful care of the Precentor (Mr. Dams). It is of considerable size, numbering upwards of 350 bound volumes, besides a considerable quantity of sheet music. The services each week are systematically arranged so as to 'musical songs and plaing of the Orgins,' he to have five marks during his life, and after the death of Thomas Sowthick, master of the choristers, to hold the said office with the fee of £9 15s. Therefore it seems that, in 1578, Thomas Sowthick had become old and required assistance in his duties as organist and master of the choristers, and that he died nine years afterwards. After the death of Sowthick, the holders of the office between 1587 and 1644 were successively Robert James, James Pearson, and Robert Dalton; the last-named occurs in the roll-call of 1630, and continues at intervals until 1644, the last roll-call before the Rebellion.

The name of John How occurs in 1665, the first roll-call extant after the Restoration

'On September 26, 1692, at 9 in the forenoon, Mr. John How was solemnly admonished because as Organist he had for several years past neglected to attend the duties of his office. On September 27, 1692, John How, Petty Canon and Organist of the Cathedral, being sensible of his inabilities through age and other infirmities, to attend the duties of the said two places, did voluntarily and freely resign the said Offices.' It should be noted that at this time the duties of 'Petty Canon' were sometimes discharged by laymen. A certain John How was Mayor of Carlisle in 1683, but as there are known to have been other residents of the same name, it is not clear that they can be identified. On November 25, 1693, Mr. Timothy How was admitted Organist and Petty Canon, having first signed a statement that he acknowledged his father Mr. John How senior, had been justly and reasonably displaced for his disrespectful carriage to Christopher Musgrave Esqr. Member of Parliament, and promised never to be guilty of the like offence.

Abraham Dobinson and Charles Pick were the chief musicians in succession between 1734 and 1781. Mr. Pick was followed by Thomas Greator, afterwards organist of Westminster Abbey and conductor of the Concerts of Antient Music.

For the long period of forty-eight years the organistship was held by one Thomas Hill. Concerning this chief musician there is an entry in the Chapter Minutes of June, 1817, which reads thus: 'Mr. Thomas Hill the organist was reprimanded for Tipling (sic) and frequenting the Cockpit. As he had very often been admonished on the same account, he was distinctly informed that, if in future he should be found to offend again in any one instance either as to being present tipling in an Alehouse or at the Cockpit he would be dismissed without further enquiry, at the same time he was fined in the sum of five guineas to be applied to Charitable purposes.' On the same occasion 'Pattinson, the Porter, was fined 3 guineas for a like offence and the rest of the singing men were solemnly warned against such practices.'

Thomas Hill was succeeded by James Ingham, to whom followed for one year (1841-2) James Stimpson, afterwards organist of Birmingham Town Hall and chorus master of the Birmingham Musical Festival. In the latter capacity he trained the chorus for the production of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' in 1846; he also adapted the solo and chorus, for female voices, in Spohr's Calvary, 'Though all Thy friends prove faithless,' to the metrical version of Psalm xlii., 'As pants the hart for cooling streams,' and re-arranged the music for mixed voices.

In 1842, upon the resignation of Mr. Stimpson, Mr. (now Dr.) H. E. Ford was appointed organist, a post which he still titularly holds, though he has not discharged the active duties since December, 1902. A tenure of office so long and honourable—sixty-one (nominally sixty-seven) years—calls for special notice, which will be found in the Church and Organ Music section on p. 243.

From January, 1903, to June, 1904, Mr. E. G. Mercer was acting-organist of the cathedral. To him succeeded Mr. Sydney Hugo Nicholson, now organist of Manchester Cathedral. During the four years that he held the post of acting-organist Mr. Nicholson left his mark on the services in no uncertain degree. A gifted and cultured musician, the possessor of a genial personality, he had the felicity to impregnate others with his own enthusiasm. His skill in carrying through the rebuilding of the organ, to which reference has already been made, is an instance of the good work Mr. Nicholson did during his brief régime at Carlisle. That he holds sane and healthy views on church music is proved by the excellent paper he read at the Church Congress, held at

Barrow-in-Furness, in October, 1906, on 'The place and limitations of music in public worship,' when he said, in the concluding words of his discourse:

The function of music in public worship is first of all to be an act of worship, and, secondly, to be an aid to worship. Its place is spiritual, its limitations are human. Like the other arts, it is only contributory, and should never be allowed to become the central feature of worship. We do not want the tyranny of the organ and choir, nor do we want the tyranny of the congregation; but we do want the efficiency of both. Music must be strictly limited on the one hand by the capacity of the performers, and on the other by the receptive power of the listeners. Granted this, we are justified in making this high claim for the art—the more and better music that we have, the more will our service gain in artistic beauty and spiritual reality.

Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson has kindly contributed the following reminiscences of the city in which he passed so many happy hours and upon which his fine musicianship exercised a most beneficent influence. He writes :

My impressions of Carlisle are primarily those of most cordial and pleasant intercourse with all with whom I was brought into contact in my work. Carlisle is of course not a great musical centre, but I think that its reputation of being an unmusical place is quite unfair. The Competitive Musical Festival has worked wonders in cultivating a musical taste in the city and district, and I know of no place where more beautiful singing of children can be heard, and where finer results are obtained from the working classes, than in the 'girls and lads in business' competitions.

Moreover, musical taste cannot be at a low ebb in a city where a yearly performance of Bach's 'Passion music' will fill the cathedral from end to end. I must add that Carlisle Cathedral has two musical assets of the greatest possible value—perfect acoustic properties and a superb organ. The four years I spent there were, I think, the happiest of my life.

Mr. Theodore Walrond, M.A., the present acting-organist and master of the choristers of Carlisle Cathedral, was born at Glasgow, on December 5, 1872. He was educated at Rugby School (1885 to 1891), where he received music lessons from the late Mr. Edwin Edwards and from his successor, Mr. Basil Johnson. In 1891 he went to Balliol College, Oxford, and studied for the ordinary Arts degree. He had some lessons in organ-playing and theory from Mr. (now Dr.) Basil Harwood, and learned a good deal of church music by attending week-day services, especially at the cathedral. He came much under the influence of the University Musical Union and its moving spirit, the Rev. Dr. John Mee; and his name appeared frequently upon its programmes during his Oxford career. After taking his B.A. degree in 1895, Mr. Walrond became music master successively at various schools, and finally at Giggleswick School, where he remained from 1899 to 1905. In 1904 he took the Fellowship diploma of the Royal College of Organists. Wishing to associate himself more definitely with church work, he came to Carlisle in January, 1906, as organist of St. Cuthbert's Church and assistant to his old schoolfellow, Mr. Sydney Nicholson. Upon Mr. Nicholson's departure from Carlisle, Mr. Walrond was elected his successor as acting organist and master of the choristers, the duties of which he faithfully discharges with artistic restraint and reverent feeling. He also does active work as Secretary and Chorus Master of the Carlisle and District Musical Festival.

For valued help in the preparation of this article, the writer is indebted to Dr. H. E. Ford, the Rev. Precentor Dams, Mr. Theodore Walrond, and Mr. D. H. Windeler, Dean's vergers.

Occasional Notes.

The famous Mendelssohn Choir of Toronto have been winning fresh laurels by three miscellaneous concerts they gave in Chicago, in association with the Theodore Thomas Orchestra, which attracted record audiences. The critics waxed enthusiastic upon the singing of the Toronto choralists. Here is an extract in proof thereof :

The Mendelssohn Choir abundantly justified every laudatory opinion expressed by musicians of all calibers and persuasions. It is a unique organization under the uncanny direction of a man who knows his art to the smallest finesses. As one musician of world-wide reputation said last evening: 'I have heard the best choirs of Europe and America and I have never heard anything that equalled this work to-night.'

At home, in Toronto, the Mendelssohn Choir are held in the highest regard. At the five concerts they gave during February, the Massey Music Hall was sold out five times to its entire capacity, and His Excellency the Governor-General attended two of the performances. It certainly cannot be said of Dr. Vogt 'a prophet is not without honour, save in his own country, and in his own house.'

The choral works that have been performed by the Mendelssohn Choir during the past season have been Elgar's 'Caractacus'; portions of Bach's B minor Mass; Hugo Wolf's 'Mad Fire Rider'; selections from 'Die Meistersinger'; excerpts from Elgar's 'King Olaf'; and the same composer's 'Bavarian Highlands' Suite. In addition to the foregoing, the Choir have sung many unaccompanied choruses, motets, &c., by the following composers: Brahms, Gounod, Grieg, Lotti, Mendelssohn, Palestrina, Percy Pitt, and Tchaikovsky. Therefore no charge of non-eclecticism can be laid against Mr. Vogt and his excellent colleagues in choral-song. In regard to the admirable interpretations of the Choir, the Chicago critic may again be quoted :

It seemed like a mellow blending of soft sunset tints, like an ever-changing, ever-softening aurora in tone. The long, slow crescendos, the smooth pianissimos suggested nothing of the mechanics of choral art; they seemed as spontaneous as the very music itself. The slow sweep of the phrases held no threat of unexpected dynamic effect. Repose breathed through every bar, and that repose was not a suggestion of repression, but of absolute poise. The climaxes were not lacking. Yet when they came, they were climaxes that seemed to well up out of an exhaustless reserve. Those long, slow crescendos, were crowned by fortes as marvellous as the pianissimos. It is that old, threadbare simile of the ocean's swell again—no fussing, no holding in leash for one grand outburst, but a tide of wonderful power.

Should not the Mendelssohn Choir of Toronto pay a visit to England? Whatever the answer to this question may be, of one thing we can assure them, that this well-equipped body of singers would receive a very hearty welcome in the old country.

Mr. Felix Moscheles delivered a deeply interesting lecture at his studio, Elm Park Road, Chelsea, on February 24, the subject of his discourse being 'My godfather, Felix Mendelssohn, as I remember him.' On that centenary-celebration occasion there were exhibited the autographs of the 'Songs without words' (Book 1), the 'Hebrides' overture (full score), and the Cradle Song (Op. 47, No. 6), which Mendelssohn composed specially for his godson, in addition to many other artistic relics in Mr. Moscheles's possession.

From the University Conservatorium of Music, Melbourne, we have received various prospectuses and other papers referring to the good work done in that part of Greater Britain. The director, Professor Franklin Peterson, in his report says :

I have peculiar pleasure in reporting that the year just closing has seen the realisation of three ambitions which for some time have occupied much of my thought and energy. It is difficult to say whether the adoption of normal pitch, the registration of music teachers, or the new conservatorium building is the most important for the cause of music in Victoria and in its official centre of education.

He gives details of the movement for the adoption of 'normal pitch,' which is now adhered to by all Government institutions, by the Education Department, and by the best secondary schools in Victoria. The Registration of Teachers Act is now in active operation in Victoria, and a very comprehensive scheme of examination is shown in the syllabus prepared by the University Examinations in Music Board, whose certificate is accepted by the Registration Board as in itself sufficient. The local examinations in music conducted jointly by the Universities of Melbourne and Adelaide operate in four of the Australasian States, and their progress and appreciation in Victoria is remarkably shown by an increase in the last six years from 480 to over 1,600 candidates. The profits of the scheme are devoted to musical education in the State and for providing bursaries and exhibitions. The character of the work done in the Conservatorium itself is shown by the programme of the annual concert given before a large audience in the Town Hall, Melbourne, in December last, which included the 'Magic Flute' overture ; Pianoforte concertos (portions of) by Beethoven (in G), Schumann, Brahms (in B flat) and Grieg ; the Allegro from the Concerto for two violins (Bach) ; two movements from Haydn's String quartet ; Schumann's Pianoforte sonata in G minor ; a movement from a sonata for pianoforte and violin (Beethoven) ; and a selection of the best classical songs. All the foregoing record, of something attempted, something done, forms matter for congratulation to Professor Franklin Peterson.

'Die Meistersinger' is generally regarded as one of the most attractive of Wagner's operas, by reason of its human subject and musical interest. But this opinion was certainly not held by John Ruskin. He heard the opera at one of its earliest performances in England, in the year 1882, and attacked the work with extraordinary vehemence. Here is his comment upon the performance, as given in the recently-published letters of Ruskin :

Of all the bête, clumsy, blundering, boggling, baboon-headed stuff I ever saw on a human stage, that thing last night beat—as far as the story and acting went—and of all the affected, sapless, soulless, beginningless, endless, topless, bottomless, topsiturviest, tuneless, scrannelpiest, tongs and boniest, doggrel of sounds I ever endured the deadliness of, that eternity of nothing was the deadliest, as far as its sound went. I never was so relieved, so far as I can remember, in my life, by the stopping of any sound, not excepting railroad whistles, as I was by the cessation of the cobbler's bellowing ; even the serenader's caricatured twangle was a rest after it. As for the great 'Lied,' I never made out where it began or where it ended, except by the fellow's coming off the horse block.

'Scrannelpiest' is an adjective that would have rejoiced the hearts of the anti-Wagnerians of half-a-century ago.

'The King's Musick' is a volume of some 500 pages, containing 'A transcript of records relating to music and musicians from the years 1460 to 1700.' The material for this valuable publication has been unearthed from the rich stores of the Record Office. The carrying through of the book is due to the Rev. H. C. De Lafontaine, who has had the valuable co-operation of Miss Stainer in bringing the task to a successful issue. In his preface to the book, Mr. De Lafontaine says : 'It seems to me that the work cannot be without effect on our musical history ; it opens out many possibilities for the musical historian, and gives indeed at times curious sidelights on the doings at Court and in the town during the Tudor and Stuart reigns.' 'The King's Musick,' which is dedicated to Queen Alexandra, will be issued by Messrs. Novello during the present month, and the information contained therein is sure to be instructive and of historical value in regard to the music of olden times.

Mr. Eric William Gritton, to whom the Mendelssohn Scholarship was awarded on February 26, is the son of Mr. J. W. Gritton, of Reigate, where he was born on May 9, 1889. He was formerly a chorister at King's College, Cambridge, where he not only charmed all hearers by the beauty of his voice, but frequently presided at the organ in the absence of Dr. Mann. In 1905 he won an organ Scholarship at the Royal College of Music, where he had a distinguished career, winning the Sullivan Prize for Composition in March, 1908, and frequently taking part in the College concerts. He is organist of St. Matthew's Church, Redhill, and is a Fellow of the Royal College of Organists. The future career of Mr. Gritton will be watched with interest ; in the meantime he is to be warmly congratulated upon having obtained this great prize in English music. There were sixteen candidates for the scholarship, including one lady.

Bach is rapidly coming to his own, even in Presbyterian churches in Scotland ! Only a few years ago, instrumental music in those sanctuaries was anathema to the Scotch people. At Edinburgh, on one evening last month (March 2), Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion was sung at St. George's Parish Church, under the direction of Mr. Henry Hartley, with Mr. John Hartley at the organ ; and in the Church Hall of North Morningside United Free Church, the organist, Mr. A. Scott Jupp, gave an interesting and well-illustrated lecture on the great Cantor. At Broughton Place United Free Church, Bach's 'St. John' Passion was announced to be given, on March 25, with orchestral accompaniment, under the direction of the organist, Dr. W. B. Ross, and the minister of the church—the Rev. James M. Black, a most eloquent preacher—was announced as 'chairman.' In no part of the Empire has church music, even within certain limitations, made such progress in recent years as in Scotland, where there are excellent organs, organists, and choirs, and appreciative congregations.

At one of the Dresden rehearsals for Dr. Richard Strauss's 'Elektra,' a fireman carrying a lantern was busying himself in the back rows of the orchestra. Annoyed at the disturbance this caused, Generalmusikdirektor Von Schuch stopped the orchestra, and turning to the composer called out, 'What business has this fellow with his lantern ?' Whereupon Dr. Strauss said, 'Leave the man alone, he is only trying to find an honest common chord.' Thus the rehearsal was suspended without that common chord.

Dr. W. H. Cummings gave fresh proof of his antiquarian zeal and love of research in the paper he read before the Musical Association on March 16. The subject of his discourse was Dr. John Blow, concerning whom the lecturer was able to furnish fresh biographical information. As Blow's father and mother resided at Newark-on-Trent, and their son John was baptized in the parish church there on February 23, 1648, Dr. Cummings maintains that Blow was born at Newark, and that probably he first saw the light on February 21 or 22. Thus it would seem that there exists no authority for stating that North Collingham, a village near Newark, was the birthplace of Dr. Blow. Previous to his becoming one of the Children of the Chapel Royal, London, in 1660, he learned music at the Song-School, Newark, studying there under John Hinton. With regard to Blow's Canterbury degree of doctor of music, Dr. Cummings was able to supply definite information. He inspected the faculty book at Lambeth Palace and found that it contained the very unusual entry of a place after the name of the recipient of the degree—'John Blow of Newark.' The degree was conferred on December 10, 1677. It is additionally interesting to know that, on the following day, the Rev. James Clifford, of anthem-book fame, was created a doctor of divinity. Not the least attractive feature of Dr. Cummings's instructive paper was the excellent selection of music, by Dr. Blow, performed on that occasion. The illustrations included a sonata for two violins, violoncello and organ, copied from a fine manuscript volume in the British Museum. A remarkable duologue for soprano and bass, entitled 'Orpheus and Euridice' made a great impression, being remarkable for its vigour and realism. Three songs, the 'Self banished,' 'Undaunted love,' and 'True constancy' were also given as specimens of genuine, beautiful English melody. Mr. Norman Cummings played the organ parts on the pianoforte; and as solo, a 'Vers for ye organ'—Almand, Corant, and Saraband, all extracted from a rare six-lined manuscript, written by Dr. Croft for Gostling, Purcell's renowned bass singer. The last-named work forms part of the lecturer's private collection.

Manchester is in a state of musical unrest in connection with conductorship changes that are pending. The committee of the Hallé Concerts have officially declared that 'Dr. Richter has not resigned his position as conductor of the Hallé Concerts, and he will again conduct a number of concerts next season in Manchester and other towns. Negotiations have been opened with Messrs. Max Fiedler, Felix Mottl, Arthur Nikisch, Felix Weingartner and Henry J. Wood with a view to their occupying the conductor's desk during the absences of Dr. Richter.' The directors of the Gentlemen's Concerts in a printed circular state that, 'As Dr. Richter will not be available for these concerts next season, the directors have much pleasure in announcing that they have invited Mr. Henry J. Wood to conduct the orchestral concerts.'

Foreign newspapers continue to maintain their reputation for the mis-spelling of English names. One of the latest, if not one of the choicest, specimens is from a musical journal published across the Channel, commenting upon the death of James Lyman Molloy:

L'un des plus réputés, Sames Nyman Mollon, vient de mourir après Sullivan et Hatton. Parmi les modernes, à part quelques exceptions, on ne trouve plus cette affectation d'archaïsme qui faisait le charme des Kerry Baucés et du Love's old Song de Molloy. C'est une tendance qui disparaît après tant d'autres.

Lieut. Dr. Williams, Bandmaster of the Grenadier Guards, delivered an admirable lecture on a little known theme, under the auspices of the Royal College of Organists, at the Royal College of Music on March 20. The subject of his discourse was 'Scoring for a military band,' which he treated in a manner that was as practical as it was instructive. It would be impossible, without doing Dr. Williams an injustice, to give even an epitome of his lecture, so exhaustively did he treat the various points of its subject-matter. We must therefore be content with giving the peroration of this thoughtful and informing discourse. 'Military band scoring,' said Dr. Williams, 'is only just beyond its tentative stage, and it will progress slowly until it is taken in hand by a school of well-taught and fully-equipped composers. Most transcriptions from orchestral scores must be regarded as purely conjectural. But were good composers to give us their writings at first hand—thoughts expressed in military band idiom by the authors themselves—the possibilities might be endless. Under such conditions, what new effects and divers combinations may we not hope for, things perhaps undreamt of!'

Dr. Williams went on to say that 'It must be the sincere wish of every earnest student of this branch of our art that its principles may become better understood and more widely diffused among those whose other musical qualifications are such that we might reasonably look to them for the production of artworks composed for military bands. Up to the present time the subject has been unaccountably neglected. Serious and educated musicians appear to regard it as being beneath their notice. But we must not forget that whatever changes have taken place in the musical taste of the masses during the past twenty years are due, in a large measure—nay, almost entirely—to wind-band music of the better class. Beyond all question we of the military bands are the educators of the people in this matter.' At the close of the lecture the band of the Grenadier Guards played, in their inimitable manner—tone, phrasing, and expression to perfection—Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony, conducted by Dr. Williams.

Mr. George Henschel made a welcome re-appearance in England on February 23, when he gave one of his artistic and enjoyable vocal recitals at Bechstein Hall. As the biographical sketch of this gifted and versatile musician which appeared in the Musical Times of March, 1900, records, Mr. Henschel made his first public appearance at the age of ten, when he sang the solo of Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer' at a concert given at Breslau, his native city. Although it is thirty-two years since Mr. Henschel first charmed an English audience, his voice has lost none of its cunning, whether regarded from the vocal or dramatic point of view of interpretation. This was splendidly demonstrated in a group of Schubert's songs, from which Mr. Henschel gave a wonderful rendering of 'Das Wandern,' from the Müllerlieder, the singer accompanying himself to perfection, playing the mill-wheel figure with rare poetic feeling and technical skill. Singers and accompanists may learn most valuable lessons from such a true and well-equipped artist as Mr. Henschel. His great gifts as an orchestral conductor should not be allowed to remain idle, and a no less hearty welcome would be accorded to him were he again to resume the baton in this country of which he is now naturalized.

The charm of variety entered very largely into the celebrations of the Mendelssohn centenary. At a Church Guild north of the Tweed it is reported that among the illustrations given in connection with a lecture on Mendelssohn, 'Mr.— rendered on the ocarina "O, Rest in the Lord," and with Mr.— took part in two clarinet and ocarina duets, "I would that the Love" and "The May Bells and the Flowers." That 'the meeting proved a most delightful one' admits of no doubt. What a golden opportunity for the ocarina at that Guild galaxy of talent.

Madame Carreño, one of the most gifted of present-day pianists, in the course of an interview reported in the Standard, said: 'My motto in life was given to me by Liszt—"Be true to your own self. Copy no one. Follow no one. Be true to your own talents."'

In the programme of a sacred concert recently given in a Yorkshire theatre occurs the following 'solo':

'Revenge to Mother's Cries' . . . Handel.

HANDEL'S LAST DAYS.

One hundred and fifty years have come and gone since George Frederick Handel paid the debt of nature, and his remains found their fitting resting-place among the illustrious dead in Westminster Abbey. Although he was seventy-four years of age at the time of his death, the composer of the 'Messiah' died literally in harness. On Friday, April 6 (1759), he conducted the last of a series of his oratorio performances; eight days later, on Saturday, April 14, his spirit had fled. As Handel's biographers do not very fully record his last days, it occurred to us to search the newspapers of the time, with the result that a certain amount of fresh information has thereby been gleaned, which we gladly place before our readers.

The first extract is from the Whitehall Evening Post of Thursday, April 5, to Saturday, April 7, 1759, and reads thus:

Last Night ended the celebrated Mr. Handel's Oratorios for this Season, and the great Encouragement they have received is a sufficient Proof of their superior merit. He began with Solomon, which was exhibited twice; Susanna once; Sampson three Times; Judas Maccabæus twice; and the Messiah three times.

And this day Mr. Handel proposed setting out for Bath, to try the Benefit of the Waters; having been for some Time past in a bad State of Health.

The same journal of April 10-12 gives the following information concerning the fatal illness of the great composer:

Mr. Handel, who was in Hopes to have set out for Bath last Saturday, has continued so ill, that he could not undertake the Journey.

The Gazetteer and London Daily Advertiser of April 13 prematurely announced Handel's death in this laconic form:

Yesterday morning died George-Frederick Handel, Esq.

The London Chronicle of April 14-17 corrects the above announcement in the following terms:

By the death of Mr. Handel, who died at his house in Brook-street, Grosvenor-square, on Saturday (and not before) a considerable pension reverts to the crown. We hear he will be buried in the burial-ground at the Foundling Hospital near to Captain Coram.

The date of death—Saturday, April 14, confirmed by the Public Advertiser of April 16:

Last Saturday and not before died at his Brook-street, Grosvenor-square, that eminent Musick, George Frederick Handel, Esq.

The Gazetteer of April 16 made some report of its premature announcement of the death by the following account of the composer's last days:

Saturday morning, a little before eight o'clock (between 70 and 80 years of age) the deservedly George Frederick Handell (sic), Esq. When he came from the Messiah on Friday se'nnight, he took ill and has never rose from it since; and it was with difficulty he attended his Oratorios at all, having been in a very bad state of health for some time before they were performed.

We must now pass on to the funeral. It may have been the original intention of Handel in the burial-ground of the Hospital, of which he was a Governor, his remains, as everyone knows, were interred in Westminster Abbey. What music was sung on that occasion? Handel's biographers supply an answer to the question; indeed, Mr. Rockstro says: 'Of the music sung we have not, unfortunately, succeeded in finding any record.' Mr. Rockstro did not, 'unfortunately,' search the newspaper files at the British Museum, which would have found the following interesting notice in the Public Advertiser of Friday, April 17, 1759, which, we believe, is now reprinted for the first time:

This Evening the Remains of Mr. Handel will be interred in Westminster-Abbey. The Gentlemen of his Majesty's Chapels Royal, as well as the Choirs of St. Peter's [the Abbey] will attend the Solemn Interment. Dr. Croft's Funeral Anthem.

This, of course, does not tell us very much about the funeral, but it tells us something to know that Croft's sublime Anthem was sung and that choirs of the Chapels Royal and the Choir of Paul's Cathedral were united with the Abbey Choir on that solemn occasion.

The funeral took place, at Westminster Abbey, on Friday, April 20, 1759, at 8 o'clock in the evening. Although it was in the nature of a private funeral, a great concourse of people attended to pay their last tribute of respect to the composer of the 'Messiah.' The London Chronicle of April 21 records the event:

On Friday night the remains of the late Mr. Handel were deposited at the foot of the duke of Argyll's monument in Westminster-Abbey; the Bishop, Prebends, and whole Choir attended, to pay the last honours to his memory; and it is computed there were not fewer than 100 persons present on this occasion.

'The Bishop' (of Rochester), Dr. Zachary Pearce, who, by inference, officiated at the funeral, was then Dean of Westminster in that age of pluralities and non-residence.

There is no accounting for the various spellings of names in former times; so in the case of Handel, in the Burial Register of Westminster Abbey, his interment is thus recorded:

George Frederick Handal Esqr. was buried in the South Cross of the Abbey.

Further information—now, we believe, made available for the first time—is furnished from the Burial Book kept by the Clerk of the Works, which has been searched specially for the purpose of this article. Here is the entry:

No. 14. George Frederick Handal Esqr. Died at his house in Brook-street, Grosvenor-square, on Saturday, April 14, 1759 in the 76th year of his Age; and was Buried

Dean on ye 20; in the South Cross; 8 feet from the Duke of Argyle's Iron Railes; 7 feet from his Coffin; which is Lead: N.B. There may be made very good graves on his Right and Left by Digging up a Foundation of an old Staircase; Room at the feet: Mr. Gordin. U.T. [i.e., Undertaker].

'Room at the feet!' How little could the Clerk of the Works at that time have realised that this space would be kept vacant for 111 years, and then receive the remains of England's greatest novelist, Charles Dickens! Yes, both Handel and Dickens rest together among the illustrious dead in Poets' Corner, and when the grave of the novelist was dug in 1870, the red velvet of Handel's coffin became visible.

The following lines, which appeared in the Gazetteer and London Daily Advertiser of April 17, 1759, may fitly conclude these notes on 'Handel's last days':

ON GEORGE FREDERICK HANDEL, ESQ.
who performed in his celebrated Oratorio of Messiah, on the 6th, and dyed the 14th Instant.

To melt the soul, to captivate the ear,
(Angels his melody might deign to hear)
T' anticipate on Earth the joys of Heaven,
Was Handel's task; to him the pow'r was given!
Ah! when he late attuned Messiah's praise,
With sounds celestial, with melodious lays;
A last farewell his languid looks express,
And thus methinks th' enraptur'd crowd address.
"Adieu, my dearest friends! and also you,
"Joint sons of sacred harmony, adieu!
"Apollo, whispering, prompts me to retire,
"And bids me join the bright seraphic choir!
"O for Elijah's car," great Handel cry'd;
Messiah heard his voice—and Handel dy'd.

The Elijah reference in the penultimate line of the above is extremely interesting.

Church and Organ Music.

DR. H. E. FORD:
THE DOYEN OF CATHEDRAL ORGANISTS.

Longevity and cathedral life seem to go hand in hand. The Dean of St. Paul's is now a nonagenarian, and Canon Dickson, of Ely, has overstepped the Psalmist's age-limit by sixteen years. Instances could be given of long periods of service rendered by cathedral organists—James Hesletine, of Durham, for instance—but it is more than probable that Dr. Ford, of Carlisle, beats the record.

Henry Edmund Ford was born at Warlingham, near Croydon, on August 6, 1821. At that time Beethoven, Schubert and Weber were living; Mendelssohn, Schumann and Wagner were boys, aged respectively twelve, thirteen, and eight; and Brahms was yet unborn! Dr. Ford's parents were not particularly musical, though his father played the violin a little for his own amusement. Master Henry went to school at both Chatham and Rochester. At the former school he was fag to William Jenner, better known as Sir William Jenner, Bart., one of the physicians of Queen Victoria. A former boy at the same school was Charles Dickens. At about the age of ten, Ford became a chorister of Rochester Cathedral. Thus he forms one of that remarkable sextet of Rochester boys who became cathedral organists—Armes (Durham), the brothers Bridge (Westminster and Chester), Crowe (Ripon), Ford (Carlisle), and Wood (Exeter). The organist of Rochester at that time was Ralph Banks, a pupil of Thomas Ebdon, of Durham. Banks was also a violoncello player. At the end of his choristership Ford became articled pupil-assistant to his master, Banks, and in addition to discharging deputy duty at Rochester Cathedral he held the organistship of Gillingham Church, Kent.

A great change in the life of the subject of this sketch occurred in the year 1842, when he was appointed organist of Carlisle Cathedral. Thus he has held that office—with distinction, we may add—for the long period of sixty-seven years, though since the end of 1902 he has not actively discharged the duties. The Musical World of February 10, 1842, thus graciously recorded the appointment:

ROCHESTER.—We have the pleasure to state that Mr. H. E. Ford, pupil and deputy of the late Mr. Banks, organist of Rochester Cathedral, has been appointed organist of Carlisle Cathedral.

DR. H. E. FORD.

ORGANIST OF CARLISLE CATHEDRAL.

(Photograph by Messrs. B. Scott & Son, Carlisle.)

Over the tea-cups in his cosy dining-room, Dr. Ford tell us: 'I was only twenty at the time of my appointment here. I had "put in" for Rochester on the death of Banks, but J. L. Hopkins obtained the post. I was also "in" for Exeter, as successor to Wesley, but I accepted the offer from Carlisle, and here I have been ever since—sixty-seven years! I well remember my journey north in the month of February, 1842. At that time the railway from London did not come beyond Lancaster. I started from London at 8 o'clock at night and arrived at Lancaster at eight the next morning—230 miles in twelve hours! Then I had to cover the remaining seventy miles by coach—a long and tedious journey over Shap Fell—and I arrived at Carlisle at three o'clock in the afternoon, seventeen hours after I had left London; now the journey can be done under six hours. Soon after my arrival I went to the cathedral expecting to hear the afternoon service, but I was disappointed to find that it had already taken place. When I came here (in 1842) the interior of the cathedral was whitewashed throughout. There was no heating or lighting except by candles. The exquisitely carved capitals of the pillars were so filled up with whitewash as to be scarcely discernible, and the superb east window was so dilapidated and insecure that it was quite surprising that it had so long withstood the force of the fierce east winds. I have seen the coming and going of nine deans and six bishops. When I first came here the dean and all the canons also held livings elsewhere—my first Dean, Hodgson, for instance, who was also rector of St. George's, Hanover Square, London—so that only one canon was in residence, and the Dean occupied the deanery for two or three months in the year.

Although the outlook was very gloomy when the young organist began his duties at Carlisle—especially as he had a sharp attack of typhus soon after his arrival—he set to work in order to improve the music both in the cathedral and in the city. His name appears in Mainzer's Musical Times, the precursor of this journal, of October 1, 1842, where it is stated, under Carlisle, that 'the organist of the cathedral, Mr. Ford, has expressed his readiness to commence a class,' that is on the Mainzer method of teaching to sing. A fortnight later the same journal records that 'amongst the most important [classes] are the classes at Carlisle, which are just commenced by Mr. H. E. Ford, organist of the cathedral'; and a little later, December 23, 1843, we read:

CARLISLE.—Here the class under Mr. Ford is going on prosperously. Mr. F. is about commencing a large children's class, in which several hundreds of youths from various schools are to be united.

It was at these Mainzerian classes—'Singing for the million,' as they were called—that Dr. Ford first made the acquaintance of his present devoted wife, whom he married in 1876.

If longevity is 'catching,' Dr. Ford soon caught it, for the Musical World of November 24, 1842, records the contagion occasion in the following words:

CARLISLE, Nov. 19.

Last evening the choristers of this cathedral had a supper at the Old Queen's Head in this city. The evening was spent in a pleasant and agreeable manner, by their singing a number of glees and songs, but the greatest musical treat was the singing of Purcell's beautiful duet, 'Jolly Bacchus,' by two of our veteran musicians, viz., Mr. Hill, and Mr. T. Caldwell, whose united ages amounted to 160 years. They sang the duet in a style that would have pleased Purcell himself had he been present.

In reply to our enquiry as to the present state of music in Carlisle compared with what it was in 1842, Dr. Ford says: 'There were no musical societies of any kind when I first came to Carlisle. I soon tried to remedy this, and founded a Philharmonic Society, also a Glee and Madrigal Society; but for want of public support these gradually died out. It was such uphill and disappointing work, as there were then no instrumentalists of any attainments, and it is amusing to remember that until that time such a thing as a conductor with a baton had never been known. I also gave annual concerts, and in so doing I availed myself of the best of the various tourist parties travelling through the provinces. But these were generally very losing speculations. For many years I had Sir Charles Hallé with Madame Neruda (Lady Hallé) to give one of their recitals here. At the present time there is a great deal of music going on in Carlisle. Besides the cathedral services there are a Philharmonic Society—of which I was for many years president—a good choral society, an orchestral society, the Cumberland Orchestra, various vocal societies, and, of late years, a Carlisle and District Musical Festival. So, to a certain extent, I think, I paved the way for this improved condition. With regard to the cathedral services, when I came here I may say that there were no rehearsals of the choir. Of course I at once instituted a weekly practice of the whole choir. The choir then consisted of eight lay-clerks and eight boys; the lay-clerks only attended the service on alternate weeks, i.e., four at a time, but the whole number were present on Sundays.'

'Please tell us about the Willis organ you introduced at the cathedral fifty years ago,' we ask the veteran organist. 'The organ at the cathedral at Carlisle I found to be a very small one built by Avery. It was more of a chamber organ than a cathedral organ, but very pleasing in tone. I tried for several years to have it enlarged or get a new one, but it was not until Dean Tait's time that I induced the Dean and Chapter to help me in obtaining a new and larger instrument. They headed the subscription list with £300, and also gave me the old instrument of Avery's to go as part-payment for a new organ, and I undertook to get what was necessary to purchase a new instrument by public subscription. The late celebrated Mr. W. T. Best—who was a native of Carlisle, but then holding an appointment at Liverpool—and myself drew up a specification and entrusted the building of it to Willis. It cost altogether from £1,400 to £1,500, and was a remarkably beautiful instrument. The original estimate was £1,050, but an iron girder found to be necessary for support, and some additional stops, brought the cost up to the amount stated above. The organ has recently been enlarged with entirely modern action by Harrison, of Durham. I opened the Willis organ on June 22, 1856.' The specification of the renovated and enlarged organ is given on p. 235.

Dr. Ford's cathedral interests—and these have ever found a very warm corner in his heart—include the compilation of 'A collection of the words of anthems as used in the Cathedral Church of Carlisle, compiled and arranged by H. E. Ford, organist.' The first edition appeared in 1845. Dr. Ford has composed a few services and anthems for use in Carlisle Cathedral.

In 1891 Dr. Ford received the degree of Doctor of Music, honoris causâ, from the Archbishop of Canterbury (Dr. Benson). The petition to the Archbishop was signed by Sir John Stainer, Sir Frederick Bridge, Sir George Elvey, Dr. Armes, Dr. E. G. Monk and Dr. Harford Lloyd, in addition to the Dean and Chapter of Carlisle. On the occasion of his jubilee as organist of Carlisle Cathedral, Dr. Ford was presented—on March 23, 1892—with a handsome testimonial subscribed for by the citizens of Carlisle, friends, and former pupils. The gifts were a salver, punch bowl, a tea kettle (with spirit-lamp and stand), all of solid silver, and a handsome Algerian onyx marble clock. The salver bears the following inscription:

Presented with a purse of one hundred guineas, by friends and former pupils, to Henry Edmund Ford, Esq., Mus. Doc., Cantuar., in commemoration of his jubilee as organist of Carlisle Cathedral, and in recognition of his services in promoting the culture of music in Cumberland during the last fifty years. 1892.

Although Dr. Ford has recently experienced the grip of the influenza fiend, he bears his eighty-seven years with wonderful vigour. May old Father Time deal gently with the doyen of cathedral organists in the eventide of his long and useful life.

ALBERT MIDLANE.

Last month, in connection with its jubilee, we gave some particulars of the hymn 'There's a Friend for little children,' together with some references to its gifted author, Mr. Albert Midlane. Almost at the very hour when a copy of the March issue of this journal addressed to Mr. Midlane reached his residence—Forest Villa, Newport, Isle of Wight—the veteran hymn-writer passed away. He died on February 27, after a few days' illness, at the age of eighty-four. One of the latest of his many versifyings were some lines on the birth of his widely-known and oft-sung hymn, of which we give the first and last stanzas:—

Just fifty years ago I sought
A quiet hour of rest,
To pen the thought which all the day
Had kindled in my breast.

From that sweet hour, extending still,
It wings its flight on high,
And many tongues now swell the song—
'Above the bright blue sky.'

Of Albert Midlane it may truly be said 'He being dead, yet speaketh.'

FREE CHURCH MUSICIANS' UNION.

This new Society has been established for the social and musical welfare of all Free Church musicians and for the improvement of Free Church music generally. Although only inaugurated at a meeting held in London last October, 130 members have already been enrolled, and when the various centres are established in different parts of the country this number is sure to be largely increased. The first general meeting and public conference was held at Swansea on March 10. On that occasion addresses were given by the President, Dr. Orlando Mansfield, on 'The aims and purposes of the Union,' Dr. F. N. Abernethy on 'Organ accompaniment,' and Mr. T. Facer (Birmingham) on 'Our musical heritage.' At a meeting of the general council, Dr. Abernethy was chosen President for 1910, and the following were elected as Vice-Presidents: Dr. Henry Coward, Dr. T. Keighley, Mr. Josiah Booth, and Mr. E. Minsball. The treasurer is Mr. J. E. Leah (Guildford); and the secretary, Mr. H. F. Nicholls, of Newport, Monmouthshire, will be pleased to furnish any information as to membership, aims, &c., of a Society to which all good wishes are offered for its success.

LONDON WESLEYAN METHODIST CHOIR UNION.

This excellent organization, founded on the lines of the Diocesan Choral Unions, held its eighth festival service at Wesley's Chapel, City Road, on March 15. Although held in the evening, the 'Order of Service for Morning Prayer' was adopted. The music included Psalm ciii. (chanted), Sullivan's Te Deum and Jubilate in D, Mendelssohn's 'As the hart pants' (Psalm xlii.) for the anthem, and Stainer's Sevenfold Amen, in addition to several hymns.

Mr. A. Furze conducted the united choirs, and Mr. C. F. Warner, organist of the historic City Road Chapel, presided at the organ. The sermon was preached by the President of the Conference (the Rev. J. Scott Lidgett), a very rousing tribute, on the part of the higher powers—that be, the service of praise in Wesleyan churches.

The annual conversazione of the Association of North London Presbyterian Choirs was held in the Lecture Hall of Ark Church, Highbury, on March 6. Dr. Walford Davies, as the guest of the evening, gave an interesting and instructive address to the choirs.

LINCOLN'S INN CHAPEL.

Mr. Reginald Steggall, worthy son of a worthy sire, in his capacity of organist of Lincoln's Inn Chapel, continues to maintain the interest and efficiency of the special services held from time to time on Sunday afternoons in that legal sanctuary. During the past nine years performances have been given there, under Mr. Steggall's direction, of the following oratorios: Redemption and Mors et Vita, Gounod (1899); German Requiem, Brahms (1900, 1902, 1906, 1907, and 1908); Job, Parry (1903); Light of Life, Elgar (1904, probably its first performance in London, certainly the first in a London church); The Apostles, Elgar (1905 and 1907); and The Kingdom, Elgar (1907). The three Elgar works and Parry's 'Job' have only been performed in London, in the concert room, therefore this fact invests the record with additional interest.

On Sunday afternoon, March 21, Brahms's German 'Requiem' was sung for the sixth time at Lincoln's Inn and with all its wonted impressiveness. Mr. Steggall ably accompanies these oratorios on the organ, and, with the possible exception of an extra bass or tenor voice the works are sung by the choir of the Chapel.

PRESBYTERIAN MUSIC IN BELFAST.

News comes from Belfast of a proposed Presbyterian Musical Festival, to be held in Ulster Hall on Friday, May 7. We learn that the organists and choirmasters of between thirty and forty of the churches in the Belfast Presbytery—representing about 1,000 voices—have decided for the festival to be in the nature of 'a typical praise service, consisting of psalms, hymns and anthems, with Scripture readings, and an address appropriate to the occasion.' Furthermore, it is most gratifying to know that 'the Moderator of the General Assembly is taking a deep interest in this new departure.' The C. P. A. Monthly Magazine for March (published by the Governing Body of the Central Presbyterian Association, Belfast), from which we have obtained the above information, says:

The main objects of this scheme are to form a bond of union between the organists and choirmasters of our churches, and to stimulate the cultivation of higher ideals in the matter of the service of praise in the sanctuary. It is confidently believed that this effort to create a greater interest in the praise portion of public worship will have the warm sympathy and support of our Presbyterian people.

May all success attend so commendable an effort to improve church music in the Presbyterian Churches of Belfast.

Special musical services are given monthly on Sunday evenings at Trinity Episcopal Church, San Francisco. On January 31, Part I., and on February 28, Part II. of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' were sung by the voluntary choir of the church under the able direction of the organist, Mr. Louis H. Eaton. During the eight years which Mr. Eaton has held the organistship he has brought the music of the church to a high state of efficiency, it being acknowledged as the best on the Pacific coast. Therefore it is not surprising to learn that the services are always largely attended.

An impressive Lenten service was held at Tonbridge Parish Church on Tuesday evening, March 16. The music sung on that occasion included Dr. Brewer's cantata 'Emmas,' Mendelssohn's 'As the hart pants' (first chorus), Dr. Hathaway's chorus 'Among the trees,' in addition to Liddle's 'Abide with me' and Mendelssohn's 'If with all your hearts.' Band and choir numbered one hundred performers, and Dr. J. W. G. Hathaway, organist of the church, conducted. The service was opened and closed by a hymn in which the congregation, numbering upwards of 700 people, heartily joined. At all such services it is only right that the congregation should be allowed to take a part.

AN ENGLISH ORGAN FOR MANILLA.

It speaks well for English organ-building that, although the import duty will increase the cost of the instrument by £300, the order for a new organ for the American Episcopal Cathedral, Manilla, has been given to an English firm. When listening to various organs in this country, the Bishop (the Right Rev. C. H. Brent) was so struck with the diapason tone and general effectiveness of the organ in St. Margaret's Church, Westminster, that he decided at all costs to entrust the building of the Manilla organ to Messrs. J. W. Walker & Sons.

This instrument, upon which Dr. W. G. Alcock recently gave a recital at the builders' factory, is the gift of Mrs. Sears, of Mass., U.S.A., and has cost something like £2,000. It consists of three manuals and twenty-seven sounding stops.

As the climate of Manilla is exceptionally hot and humid, very special constructive precautions have been necessary. For instance, the woodwork of the organ consists almost entirely of mahogany, and any other woods used have been poisoned to render them immune to the attack of white ants. All the leather work throughout has been poisoned in order to ward off voracious insects, musically or non-musically inclined. Wherever possible the use of glue has been avoided. Even the manual soundboards have no glue in their construction, but are framed up and bolted and screwed together; moreover, the most vital parts are made in sections so as to become detachable and to allow of easy repair. All wood pipes have been made with dry joints, the pipes being screwed together on leather. The Bourdons (16 feet), and all stopped basses of 8-feet tone are of metal.

In order to keep the action work as simple as possible, tracker action has been used, with split pallets to lighten the touch; and the large 16 and 8 feet basses have been placed on separate soundboards and supplied with a simple form of tubular-pneumatic action, in order to relieve both touch and demand of wind on the manual soundboards. The Pedal action is tubular-pneumatic.

This organ, now on its way to the Philippine Islands, is the fourth cathedral organ built for the Far East by Messrs. Walker, the others being: Singapore Cathedral, Shanghai Cathedral, and Hong-Kong Cathedral; besides smaller instruments at Shanghai and Canton sent out in 1903 and 1904 respectively.

Messrs. J. W. Walker & Sons have recently been commissioned by H. M. The King to build a very beautiful new three-manual organ for Sandringham Church, Norfolk, to replace the small two-manual instrument erected by them nearly thirty years ago.

A selection from 'Judas Maccabæus' was sung in the church of St. Lawrence, Ramsgate, on March 18. The augmented choir numbered about sixty voices, and the accompaniments were played by a small orchestra. Dr. T. Haigh presided at the organ, and Mr. G. Farrant conducted.

Gounod's 'Redemption' was given with orchestral accompaniment at St. Mary Redcliff Church, Bristol, on March 20, and attracted a large congregation. Mr. R. T. Morgan was at the organ, and Mr. F. W. Hek, organist of Bedminster Parish Church, conducted.

At the opening of the new four-manual organ, built by Messrs. Harrison & Harrison, of Durham, in St. Mary's Church, Stafford, on February 23, Sir Walter Parratt played the following selection of music:

Mr. Alfred Hollins attracted a large congregation in St. Agnes' Church, Liverpool, on the occasion of the re-opening of the organ recently rebuilt and enlarged by Messrs. Rushworth of that city. Features of the programme were Best's Fantasia and Fugue on old English psalm-tunes, Faulkes's Theme and Variations in G, and the recitalist's own Andante in D and Concert Rondo, in addition to a masterly improvisation on the hymn-tune 'St. Agnes.'

A new chamber organ, built by Mr. John H. Compton, of Nottingham, for the residence of Professor Dicksee, at Haverstock Hill, was opened on March 6 by Mr. W. Wolstenholme, who performed an attractive selection of music, including several of his own compositions, Bach's 'Fugue à la Gigue' and Mendelssohn's fourth Organ sonata.

The printed list of music sung during the year 1908 by the choir of St. George's Church, Montreal, bears testimony to the ability of the choir no less than to the eclecticism and good-taste of the organist and choirmaster of the church, Mr. Percival J. Iilsley.

'Organ Chit-Chat' is the title of a little brochure, consisting of some thirty pages, compiled by Mr. George J. Simmonds and published by the Musical News Syndicate.

Reviews.

Analysis of the Evolution of Musical Form. By Margaret H. Glyn.

[Longmans, Green & Co.]

In some respects this thoughtful volume is a continuation of Miss Glyn's 'Rhythmic Conception of Music.' At the outset it is, perhaps, hardly necessary to say that individual students will probably differ from some of the conclusions herein so clearly set forth; but there is abundant evidence of care in research and inference, and in whatever points the theories that are promulgated go against one's convictions, the book will at once command respect and attention. A careful perusal of these well-written pages will certainly open the eyes of many whose musical studies are confined to the ordinary text-books.

In order to get at the root of musical form, Miss Glyn not only makes excursions into the complex region of Eastern music, but dips into the well of English folk-song. She makes many pertinent statements regarding the cramping of musical form by preconceived and narrow rules, and from her very strongly expressed Introduction some of her conclusions may be quoted. 'The English musician,' she says, 'is still in the pre-Darwinian stage. Like those who believed the world to have been created 4004 B.C., he dates his art from the early centuries of our era, and all time previous to that is a blank to him.' Again, 'The educational need of the day is for a thoughtful, intellectual presentment of the growth of musical form. . . . Musicians have quietly accepted the theory of mediæval origin, oblivious to the monstrous impossibility of developing the natural out of the artificial; and so the practice of the composers of music is almost wholly at variance with the theory of it as taught in the schools. . . . Melody is ignored, harmony made foolish by isolation, "thematic development" is a vague nuddle, and strict counterpoint burdens the mind with the amber of the Middle Ages.'

Miss Glyn has enlightened ideas upon rhythm. She insists that we should 'see to it that our rhythm feeling and our imaginative hearing take the lead, else we shall put the cart before the horse and repeat the old mistake. We can show the evolution of music in the past, but it is imagination that will find the road of the future. And the musical imagination is "rhythmical"—it does not exist apart from rhythm. A rhythmically uncultured nation cannot be actually "musical," whatever may be its potential capacity for music. For this reason a musically gifted people will always be found to have associated dancing with its music, for dancing is an even greater stimulant of rhythmic feeling than is music, especially with the young. It may be said that no national music can long exist without national dance, and it is evident that the Puritan movement in England, by killing the dance, dealt a heavy blow at the national music. . . . In the sixteenth century English music was in the forefront of the nations. This was the first great conventional era of the art, but no independent development on national lines has ever taken place in England. It is yet to come.' The foregoing extracts undoubtedly prove that the author has 'ideas' which she fearlessly and plainly states.

In support of her theories she burrows into musical history, and by dwelling largely on the music of India, China and Japan, sets forth many interesting points of comparison in regard to scales and general treatment of melody and harmony. It is part of her plan to show the reader by these comparative studies that there is so much more in music than the average composer takes into account, and that it is good to have fuller knowledge of the naturally evolved music, whether of the East or that of which our own English folk-music is composed.

The appendix to the volume is well furnished with interesting musical examples culled from many sources, and in it is an interesting 'Analysis of tune-outline in English folk-song,' in addition to several other sections with which the thoughtful reader will be glad to become acquainted.

The book is a vigorous expression of the author's ideas, which are decidedly original, and if these ideas do not commend themselves in full to all thinkers—original ideas seldom do—they are well worth considering either for acceptance or refutation.

The skeleton in armour. A symphonic poem for chorus and orchestra. Words by Longfellow. Music by Rutland Boughton.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

'The skeleton in armour' is a Viking who appears and relates the story of his abduction of a maiden and his escape from the pursuit of Hildebrand, the Prince, her father. The maiden dies, and the phantom relates:

'Clad in my warlike gear,
 Fell I upon my spear,
 Oh, death was grateful!'

An awesome and portentous instrumental opening prepares us for the entry of the spectre. In a short chorus of considerable interest the beholder asks:

'Speak! speak! thou fearful guest

. . . With thy fleshless palms
 Stretched, as if asking alms,
 Why dost thou haunt me?'

The skeleton, speaking through the medium of the chorus, then tells his story. There are many changes of tempo and style to suit the varying moods of the poem. A grim effect is secured by a sforzando descending augmented 4th, followed by a sudden pianissimo to the words:

'Many the souls that sped,
 Many the hearts that bled,
 By our stern orders.'

Other points of interest are the powerful orchestral passage that depicts the Viking's suing for the maiden's hand in the presence of her father, to the astonishment of the bystanders, and the vivid pictorial climax on the words

'Death! was the helmsman's hail,
 Death without quarter!'

when, after the abduction, pursuer and pursued meet on the ocean.

The first aim of Mr. Rutland Boughton's choral writing is to provide interest in every part, the occasions being few when the lower voices form merely an accompaniment. The continuous flow of the part-writing disguises the rigid stanza-form of the narrative, and with its frequent modulations eliminates all monotony. The serious mood of the music rightly excludes a 'tuneful' style, but effective themes or figures often occur in association with various shades of feeling in the poem. They appear chiefly in the orchestral part, while the skilfully woven choral part-writing continues its course simultaneously. Choralists will find that the apparent chromatic difficulties of their parts are smoothed over by the flow and eminently vocal nature of the writing.

Reminiscences of my life. By Charles Santley.

[Sir Isaac Pitman & Sons, Ltd.]

The breeziness which characterizes Sir Charles Santley's temperament is reflected in this readable and informing volume. One can fancy the veteran singer seated by the fireside in his favourite arm-chair recounting with unaffected frankness and evident enjoyment the incidents in his long and honourable career. He is not even averse to telling a story against himself. It is well-known that tenor vocalists bewail the little they have to do in Mendelssohn's 'Elijah.' On the occasion of a performance of the oratorio, as the exponent par excellence of the title-rôle was leaving the orchestra of Albert Hall, a nice-looking old lady, accompanied by a young man, emerged from the entrance to the area. 'I heard their conversation,' he says, 'without listening, as they were speaking at full voice. The young man said, "Well, dear, what did you think of it?" "My dear," she replied, "it was delightful, really. I enjoyed it very much." "Was it not a wonderfully fine performance?" continued the gentleman. "It was, indeed," said the pleasant old lady; "there was only one drawback: in my opinion, there was too much of Elijah and too little of Mr. Edward Lloyd."

There is, however, much in this attractive volume that calls for serious consideration. Sir Charles does not spare the public for their lack of artistic taste; and he speaks in no uncertain tones of the low standard of singing now in vogue. He says:

Ambition to reach the top of the artistic ladder seems to have slept or died out. The rage for money-making by ballad concerts and royalty accounts has ousted the desire to succeed in opera, which ought to be the aim of every singer, and without which no singer can claim the title of perfect artiste. Some few earnest, gifted students have attained eminence as concert singers, and many more might have been added to their number but for the lack of knowledge of the rudiments of their art, for which not they, but the ignorance of the greater number of those who profess to teach, and the carelessness of the few who, with patience and proper attention, might teach, are alone responsible.

These reminiscences cover a wide field of interests—biographical, travel, friendships, &c.—the volume being crowded with readable matter from cover to cover. Sir Charles pays a worthy tribute to his friend and comrade in song, Sims Reeves, and in so doing refutes the baseless insinuations against the character of that great artist. The book is one to be read rather than quoted from, because it would be difficult to stop making extracts, nor would it be fair to do so. Its attractiveness is increased by several illustrations, including a beautiful portrait of Sir Charles Santley's mother and a lifelike presentment of the great singer himself. There are also two facsimiles of sketches by Mendelssohn, one of them being a pencil drawing of Ludgate Hill, made by the composer of 'Elijah' during his visit to London in 1832.

Truth. For mezzo-soprano. Words by Ben Jonson. Music by Victor G. Booth.

Six little songs. For contralto voice. Composed by N. Hodgkinson. [Novello & Co., Ltd.]

In the opinion of many authorities, Mr. Bantock has claims to be considered the foremost of English song-writers. In any case his reputation is greatly enhanced by these fresh examples from his pen. The pianoforte part takes an equal share in the effect with the voice part, not by means of elaborate figuration, but rather by expressive phrases and telling harmonies that speak in much subtler terms. 'The wild flower's song' is a tone-poem in miniature; it has three short contrasted sections, each conveying a different mood in the words. The final chord is an interesting one. 'Love's secret' is made noteworthy by the musical representation of a sigh. 'In a myrtle shade' is eloquent and effective in every bar. These songs require a high voice.

Mr. Davis's 'Good-night' is less ambitious in design. The composer is content to reproduce in the music the regular accentuation of Shelley's lines, a process which enables him to be frankly melodious. An optional violoncello obbligato is provided, which adds to the tunefulness of the song. The composition is dedicated to and has been sung by Madame Melba.

'Truth,' by Mr. Booth, gives every opportunity for an expressive style of singing. It is by no means difficult either for singer or accompanist, but has nevertheless considerable emotional significance.

The six little songs by Mrs. Hodgkinson are of the sort that will appeal to children, whether as singers or listeners. The words are in one instance by the composer and the remainder by Christina Rossetti. Both voice and pianoforte parts are easy.

A lost love. And so I made a Villanelle. By Cyril Scott.

Love's mission. Love's retreat. By Cecil Hazlehurst.

Bonny Blue-cap. By Julius Harrison. [Elkin & Co.]

The two examples from Mr. Cyril Scott's pen are highly characteristic. The dainty melody and clever rhythmic accompaniment of 'And so I made a Villanelle' should ensure popularity.

Mr. Hazlehurst's songs exemplify the better-class ballad: the conventional vein of sentiment flows through them strongly. Alternative endings, the one ff and the other ff are supplied in 'Love's mission.'

'Bonny Blue-cap,' composed by Mr. Julius Harrison, is a rousing setting of Sir Walter Scott's words, in which the controversial topic of trans-Tweedian superiority is liable to rouse dispute.

A Sea-spell. Words by D. G. Rossetti. Composed by Hubert Bath.

Three songs for a medium voice. Poems by Heinrich Heine. English translations by the composer. Composed by Louis Arthur Hamand. [Breitkopf & Härtel.]

Coast scenes. Four lyrics for medium voice. Words and music by Louis Arthur Hamand. [Augener & Co.]

The modernism of Mr. Hubert Bath finds its most natural outlet in the expression of mysticism. He is therefore well qualified to provide a musical setting to Rossetti's words. Apart from an unwonted strength of character, 'A Sea-spell' shows all the characteristics of Mr. Bath's music. The harmonic scheme is as eerie and ambiguous as the most advanced modern could wish.

The two sets of songs by Dr. Hamand contain much more that is picturesque and interesting. The flowing independence of the pianoforte part is an important feature. For instance, the accompaniment to 'Eine Liebesbotschaft,' one of the Heine songs, is self-contained and would make an effective little pianoforte piece if played alone. The melodic rhythms and harmonies are varied with great skill throughout these little compositions, which deserve to become popular.

August Manns and the Saturday Concerts. A memoir and a retrospect. By H. Saxe Wyndham.

[The Walter Scott Publishing Company.]

Non-creative musicians—conductors, instrumentalists, and singers—are at a disadvantage compared with some composers, in that they pass away and are more or less soon forgotten. Therefore it is desirable that eminent practical musicians, such as August Manns was, should be biographically honoured in a permanent form. The life of Manns was so closely and honourably identified with the Crystal Palace and its music that it is impossible to think of the man without the place where he acquired well-merited fame. Mr. Saxe Wyndham has, however, obtained access to an autobiographical sketch found among the distinguished conductor's papers at his death. This, with the aid of the biographical sketch of Manns which appeared in the issue of the Musical Times of March, 1898, and the splendid record of the Saturday Concerts, furnish ample material for the life-story of August Manns.

The book records a strenuous and art-loving life, not without its ups and downs, but animated with earnestness of purpose in the cause of music, and especially, let us add, of the music of his adopted country; for this the name of August Manns will long be held in grateful remembrance. Some of the letters here printed are very interesting. One—written in his seventy-seventh year—is to Sir Hubert Parry, in which he quotes the following poem as an incentive to the students of the Royal College of Music:

THE FOUR P'S.

Patience, Perseverance,
Prudence and Pluck,

They who practise these shall always have luck;

Those who neglect them,
Whatever they be,

Shall never succeed on land or on sea.

The somewhat common sensitiveness of executive artists to criticism was not absent from the temperament of the Crystal Palace conductor. In this connection is printed a highly characteristic letter of Mr. Bernard Shaw, whom, as musical critic of the Star in 1888, Manns endeavoured to take to task for an unfavourable notice of a Saturday concert. With what success, the reader is referred to Mr. Saxe Wyndham's book.

It is a pity that the proofs of this volume were not more carefully read. We have always thought that Leamington was in Warwickshire, not in Worcestershire; Tannhäuser is persistently printed Tannhauser; the omission of commas on p. 3 (note) makes nonsense of some of the names; Chorley is credited with being The Times critic, instead of the Athenæum; and the quotation on p. 166 is erroneously attributed to Sir George Grove instead to Mr. Joseph Bennett. To issue a book of this kind without an index is nothing short of a literary sin. The memoir is not without some good points, but it should undergo careful revision before a second edition appears. The various portraits of Sir August Manns are an attractive feature of the volume.

VIOLIN MUSIC.

A Modern School for the Violin. By August Wilhelmj and James Brown. Book 6B. (Sixth Book of Studies.)
30 Caprices pour le violon seul. Par John Chits.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Messrs. Wilhelmj and Brown's 'A Modern School for the Violin' is brought to a conclusion with the Sixth Book of Studies. This, the last section, presents four advanced studies in extensions, firmness of stopping, double stopping and octaves, and concludes with Bach's 'Chaconne' in D minor, admirably edited, with copious notes on the method of practising it.

In a final criticism of the completed 'Modern School,' one cannot refrain from expressing high praise for the inception and carrying out of this great work—by far the most exhaustive of its kind. Starting with the very best principles for acquiring a perfect knowledge of the rudimentary art of violin playing, the student is carried systematically and carefully through every difficulty, until he finally arrives at the most advanced stage of technical and artistic skill to which any 'school' can legitimately carry him. Throughout the whole of their work the authors have conscientiously adhered to the two cardinal principles laid down in their initial preface: 'To present the simple before the complex,' and 'To teach one thing at a time.'

Mr. Louis Zimmermann states in a short preface to '30 Caprices for the violin,' by the talented Dutch violinist, John Chits, that they furnish excellent material for study. Not only do they contain much that is useful for the right arm, but they are also fine, original pieces written with excellent musical taste. We can cordially endorse this statement. Only violinists of advanced ability can attack these grand studies, for they deal almost entirely with such difficulties as are met with in concertos and elaborate concert solos. One of the great pianists of the last century invariably played through every morning some fifty of Cramer's studies to 'prepare' himself for an evening concert performance. By analogy these caprices by Chits can be confidently recommended as an excellent preparation for a violinist; but their technical difficulties are as far in advance of those of Cramer for the pianoforte as, say, the Tchaikovsky Violin concerto is to one by Mozart.

Seven Scottish airs. Arranged by G. von Holst. No. 28 of Novello's Albums for pianoforte and stringed instruments.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Mr. Gustav von Holst has skilfully arranged seven Scottish airs as a Quintet for pianoforte and strings. The setting should find favour in school circles where there are string orchestras. With the exception of 'Auld lang syne,' which effectively concludes the whole, the chosen tunes are well away from the beaten track, and include such gems of melody as 'My love's in Germany,' 'O how could ye gang, lassie,' &c. The string parts present no special difficulties.

FOLK-SONGS.

Eighteen folk-songs from Somerset (School-song edition). Collected and arranged by Cecil J. Sharp.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

The growing popularity of these examples of native airs is a gratifying reward for the labours of Mr. Sharp and his fellow enthusiasts. Eighteen of the Somerset songs are now issued in separate numbers, in a cheap and handy form, as well as in albums. 'I'm seventeen come Sunday,' 'The keys of Canterbury,' 'O no, John,' and several others in this collection will need no introduction. The artistic nature of Mr. Sharp's accompaniments is well known.

BACH CHOIR.

The length of the programme brought forward by the Bach Choir at Queen's Hall on March 2, has been unofficially attributed to a laudable desire to save trouble and expense by giving two concerts on the same evening! The two cantatas were performed, 'Wachet, betet' and 'Der zufriedengestellte Aeolus,' do not reveal Bach at his best, as they contain a minimum of choral music. An eight-part choral motet might therefore with advantage have been substituted for one of these works. Besides paying homage to their master, the Society made it their duty to celebrate three centenaries. The death of Haydn and the birth of Tennyson in 1809 were commemorated by the performance of a new choral overture entitled 'Ave atque vale' (Op. 114), by Sir Charles Stanford, composed as a tribute to famous men 'such as sought out musical tunes, and set forth verses in writing.' The quotation is from Ecclesiasticus xliiii. and xliv., which forms the text of the work. Except in the above words there was little direct reference to Tennyson, but the connection of the music with Haydn's name was made clear by frequent reminiscences of the well-known Austrian National Hymn. The overture represents Sir Charles Stanford in his happiest vein, and possesses qualities that should ensure frequent performance. The Bach Choir's contribution to the Mendelssohn celebrations, though somewhat belated, was one of the most worthy that has been offered, as it took form in a performance of the 'Walpurgis night.' Mr. William Higley was the soloist in Mendelssohn's cantata. Others who took part in the concert as solo singers were Mrs. Henry J. Wood, Mrs. George Swinton, Mr. Charles Child and Mr. Francis Harford. Dr. H. P. Allen conducted. Included in the programme were Brahms's Variations on a theme by Haydn.

MR. BEECHAM'S CONCERTS.

That Mr. Beecham, so soon after his separation from the New Symphony Orchestra, should be able to command the services of another first-rate orchestra is a significant tribute to the executive resources of the metropolis. The boldness and breadth of his schemes deserve the heartiest recognition, and it may be hoped that the general public will soon realise that these concerts deserve their enthusiastic support.

At the first concert—given at Queen's Hall on February 22—the programme proved to be of great interest. It opened with Berlioz's 'Carnaval Romain' overture, which was splendidly played. A 'symphonic impression'—as it was styled in the programme—'In the Fen country,' by Dr. Vaughan Williams, was performed for the first time, and is a highly creditable product of the composer's thoughtful and imaginative attainments. It is a meditative and moody composition relieved by a fine, strong climax, which, if not of obvious significance, is at least fully interesting as absolute music.

A striking item in the programme was the cantata, if such it may be called, entitled 'Sea drift,' for baritone solo, chorus and orchestra, by Frederick Delius. This highly original and characteristic setting of Walt Whitman's sadly beautiful poem was performed at last year's Sheffield festival. On that occasion it was received dubiously, mainly, we venture to say, because its apparent formlessness and strange choral and orchestral idioms did not square with the preconceived ideas of the audience. For our own part we found that the consistency of style and feeling that pervade the work left a general impression of organic unity and form. This feeling was deepened by the finely sympathetic interpretation given under Mr. Beecham, who conducted the whole work from memory. Mr. Frederic Austin sang with great feeling the difficult, and not very vocal, solo portions. The choir was the North Staffordshire District Choral Society (conductor, Mr. James Whewall). This is one of the best choirs in the country. Sweet blendfulness rather than voluminous sonority is the speciality of its tone. The concert concluded with an impressive performance of Berlioz's Te Deum for three choirs, orchestra and organ. This fine work admirably suited both the orchestral and choral resources. The brass instruments were relatively perhaps too much in evidence, and the 'third choir'—the music for which is in unison, and which was intended by the composer for children's voices—was not strong enough. It is strange that this product of Berlioz's genius is not more often performed.

At the concert given on March 15, the most attractive feature was the performance of the symphonic poem 'Jour d'Été à la Montagne' (Op. 61), by Vincent d'Indy. This remarkable work, dated 1905, consists of three sections, respectively entitled, Aurore, Jour, Soir. The poetic basis of the music was suggested by passages from 'Les Heures de la Montagne,' a prose poem by Roger de Pampelonne. In the first movement the strings are divided into twenty parts, and the effects obtained by this and other means are remarkably original and fascinating. The high colour and buoyancy of the second movement maintain the interest thus excited, and the suggestively picturesque third movement rounds off the day with many novel and beautiful effects. It is not possible in this brief notice to deal at all adequately with so notable a work of the extreme modern French school. We must be contented with the record of a general impression that this is a composition displaying great originality and much beauty of a new kind. Mr. Beecham conducted with conspicuous skill and decision, and Mr. Harold L. Brooke efficiently played the slight pianoforte part somewhat singularly introduced into the score. Another comparatively new work brought forward was Mr. Frederic Austin's Rhapsody for orchestra, entitled 'Spring.' This bright and well-scored piece was first performed by Mr. Henry J. Wood's Orchestra in 1907, and it fully deserved resuscitation. A fine performance of the 'Meistersinger' overture opened the concert, and Signor Tamini was the vocalist.

LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Dr. Richter conducted the concert at Queen's Hall on March 1. The programme was as follows:

|                                     |                              |             |
|-------------------------------------|------------------------------|-------------|

|                                     | MR. CHARLES W. CLARK.        |             |
| Tone-poem .. ..                     | 'Don Juan' .. ..             | Strauss.    |
| Eroica Symphony .. ..               | .. ..                        | Beethoven.  |

Mr. Bell's new work is a setting of a poem by Rosamund Marriott Watson, founded on an Eskimo legend. The story is told of a flock of seagulls who are changed into fair young women, one of whom is taken to wife by the narrator, who promises never again to kill a seagull. A time of stress, however, arrives and he forgets his promise. His wife and children become gulls and fly away, and the husband is left alone to bewail his loss. This is a story that gives ample scope to the modern composer. Of the opportunity afforded for a descriptive musical seascape, Mr. Bell has fully availed himself, and his gift for picturesque orchestration has stood him in good stead. The emotions of the narrator, however, are less happily portrayed, and the composer hardly shows the same skill in writing for the voice as in scoring for the orchestra. The work, however, is a distinct advance in freedom of expression, and its individuality and technical mastery place Mr. Bell in a high position among young English composers. The orchestra played this and the other modern works on the programme with less than their customary brilliance. There was a suggestion of insufficient rehearsal. This should be carefully guarded against.

On March 22, Dr. Richter made his last appearance at these concerts for the present season. Not the least attractive feature of the programme was Sir Hubert Parry's Variations for orchestra on an original theme, a composition full of strength and vitality and characteristic of the composer's style, but revealing nothing in common with modern extravagancies. Mr. Leonard Borwick played Mozart's G major Pianoforte concerto.

Elgar's Symphony is finding its way to the Antipodes. A performance of the work is announced for June next, to be given by the Sydney Orchestral Society, under the direction of Herr Slapoffski.

M. CLAUDE DEBUSSY.

The Debussy cult is making great progress in this country. It has reached that interesting stage when many people who are really desperately bewildered, affect to perceive beauties and wonderful meanings that have probably entirely escaped the attention of the composer. But there is no mistaking the depth and width of the influence Debussy is exerting on the art. His music may be classed as nebulous, fragile, diaphanous, and so on, but one cannot resist the languor of the hazy atmosphere with which it envelopes and mesmerises the listener. What one appears to miss is the attribute of strength and grip and clearness of purpose. It is nearly always veiled suggestion and an appeal to imaginativeness.

At the concert given by the Queen's Hall Orchestra on February 27, M. Claude Debussy conducted two of his most important compositions, namely: the three Nocturnes for orchestra, entitled respectively (1) 'Nuages' (2) 'Fêtes' (3) 'Sirènes,' which were first issued in 1890 and were now performed for the first time in England, and the well-known prelude 'L'Après-midi d'un Faune.' The poetic basis of the first movement, being 'the unchanging aspect of the sky, and the slow, solemn movement of the clouds dissolving in grey tints lightly touched with white,' is exactly fitted for the display of Debussy's peculiar genius. 'Fêtes' has a higher intensity of tone, and exhibits the composer's fine sense of rhythm and colour. In 'Sirènes' a choir of female voices is introduced. There is in this movement much subtle charm and highly-refined delicacy. The chorus is treated rather as an addition to the orchestral colour. The voices murmur melodious passages to the syllable 'Ah.' On this occasion the singing, which was undertaken by the ladies of Mr. Smallwood Metcalfe's Choir, was far too loud relatively. The performance of the work on the whole was a good one, although there were some hesitations. In the second movement disaster seemed imminent, and M. Debussy was disposed to stop, but the band went on resolutely and happily recovered. The audience, whether for sympathy or satisfaction, encored the movement, and it was performed for the second time with great success.

Fine performances were given of Beethoven's 'Coriolanus' overture and of Wagner's 'Trauermarsch,' under Mr. Henry J. Wood, and M. Henri Marteau played very impressively Brahms's Violin concerto.

HERR ROSENTHAL'S REAPPEARANCE.

The concert given by the Queen's Hall Symphony Orchestra on March 13 was distinguished by the reappearance of Herr Moritz Rosenthal, who had not been heard in London for nine years. In spite of his long absence and the formidable list of great pianists who have gained the public ear in the interval, the name of Rosenthal remained one to conjure with, and it is no wonder that a large audience assembled to hear a pianist who was practically a newcomer. They found that the magic of the name that attracted them was even surpassed by the potent magic of his playing. Of no other artist can it be said with any semblance of truth that he combines all the virtues and avoids all the vices of piano-forte-playing. Herr Rosenthal played Chopin's Concerto in E minor and Liszt's Concerto in E flat in a manner that needs no comment. Besides supplying the accompaniments to these works, Mr. Henry J. Wood's orchestra was heard in Beethoven's C minor Symphony and the Introduction to the third act of 'Tristan.'

On March 17, Herr Rosenthal's powers were exhibited under conditions that allowed greater intimacy between player and audience, when he gave a pianoforte recital at Queen's Hall. The programme included the Carnival of Schumann and the B minor Sonata of Chopin, and in other pieces the pianist found ample scope for his extraordinary virtuosity.

The accounts of the Norwich Musical Festival held in October last show a credit balance of £286 11s. 6d. Except in 1866—when the festival was attended by the present King and Queen (then Prince and Princess of Wales)—the gross receipts at last year's festival have not been exceeded during the past eighty years.

MR. EDWARD MASON'S CHOIR.

The principal object of this new organization is to produce 'new works by the young composers,' presumably British. Very well was this excellent purpose fulfilled at the concert given at Queen's Hall on March 16. At present the choir, numbering ninety-eight voices, is hardly strong enough to give great effect to works accompanied by a modern orchestra, but exhibits good tone and training. It may be hoped that the musical success so far achieved will bring many accessions to Mr. Mason's choral ranks. The programme was a varied one. Cowen's genial setting of 'John Gilpin' was followed by Charles Wood's picturesque song 'Ethiopia saluting the colours,' sung by Mr. Frederic Austin. A more ambitious performance was that of the cantata—we tremble to use this old-fashioned word—setting of 'The Blessed Damsel,' for mezzo-soprano and baritone soli, chorus and orchestra, by Edgar L. Bainton. There is obvious earnestness and endeavour to realise atmosphere in Mr. Bainton's music, but the treatment on the whole invites monotony, or at least it assumes a power of sustained attention to low tints that few, including ourselves, can claim to possess. The soloists were Miss Katherine Vincent, the possessor of a pleasing voice and an attractive style, and Mr. Frederic Austin. A novelty was the 'Symphonic poem' for chorus and orchestra, 'The skeleton in armour,' by Rutland Boughton, a composer who has made his name familiar by his music, his critical comments, and as conductor of a flourishing Birmingham society. In his highly descriptive setting of Longfellow's grim poem, Mr. Boughton displays considerable power to write effectively for chorus and orchestra. He indulges in many strange devices, but they always have interest and application to the situation. Some of the climaxes are very dramatic, and prove that he can feel strongly in terms of music. The performance was a fair one, but the lack of balance of choral and orchestral tone was sometimes conspicuous.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Hérolf's opera, 'Le Pré aux Clercs,' which was last heard in England at Covent Garden in 1880, was performed by the students in the theatre of the School on March 4, 5 and 6. The work was well chosen as being melodious, gratefully written for the voices, and in every respect suitable for presentation by students, while the opera is not without interest to musicians. The plot deals with Queen Margaret of Valois, wife of Henry of Navarre and sister of the King of France, and is agreeably intricate and melodramatic, with a happy termination in two marriages. The chief parts were taken by Miss Lilian Allen, Miss Ethel Elmes, Miss Pansy Hooper, Mr. Alfred Steed, Mr. Eldon Dacre, Mr. Harold Lopresti and Mr. Arthur Gourlay, who achieved, on the whole, better success as vocalists than as actors. The choruses and dances were effectively executed, and in supplying accompaniments the School Orchestra did their work well. The performances were directed by Mr. Richard H. Walthew.

QUEEN'S HALL ORCHESTRA.

If all performances of 'Elijah' were as excellent as that given at Queen's Hall on Ash Wednesday (February 24) there would be less said about the degenerate style of the work. Mr. Henry J. Wood's reading showed all the individuality artistic purpose and careful preparation that characterise his interpretations of important masterpieces, and in the choral portions he was admirably seconded by the quick responsiveness of the Leeds Choral Union, whose singing reflects the whole-hearted methods of their trainer Dr. Henry Coward. The orchestral part was perfectly executed by Mr. Wood's own forces, and the solo music was undertaken by distinguished artists. Especially noteworthy was Mr. Thorpe Bates's conception of the rôle of the Prophet, which he may almost be said to have re-created. Mrs. Wood, Miss Dilys Jones and Mr. Walter Hynd sustained their reputations, and the second quartet consisted of Miss Eva Rich, Miss Amy Skerritt, Mr. William Burrow and Mr. Walter Scott.

London Concerts.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

Royal Choral Society signalled Ash Wednesday (March 24) by a performance of Elgar's 'The Dream of Gerontius,' a work that in its devotional spirit was highly fitting to the occasion. The choral and orchestral parts were well executed, although many of the details of the latter were necessarily lost. But the design of the Albert Hall added not a little grotesqueness of the Demons' chorus by sending echoes from all sides. The solo music was in the hands of Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. Gervase Elwes and Dalton Baker. Sir Frederick Bridge conducted.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

concert given at Queen's Hall on March 3, the features were the first appearance in England of Walter, of Vienna, as a conductor, and the performance of the overture to Miss Ethel M. Smyth's opera 'The Peckers.' Mr. Walter proved his ability by securing interpretations of Schumann's Symphony in B flat, and of his 'Leonora' Overture (No. 3). His speciality as a conductor on this occasion was a feeling for climax and accented rhythm. Miss Smyth's picturesque and well-scored overture, also admirably directed by Herr Sauer, made a great impression. Herr Sauer played Beethoven's Pianoforte concerto in E flat and Liszt's 'Ricordanza' (Liszt), and 'Allegro de Chopin'.

ORIANA MADRIGAL SOCIETY.

Oriana Madrigal Society gave a concert at Portman Rooms on March 23, under the direction of Mr. C. Kennedy. The programme was drawn entirely from music of the English school, and contained madrigals by Bateson, Kirbye, Pilkington and Marson. The attitude of the audience showed that the revival of this school of music is spreading. The soloist was Miss Hilda de Angelis. The other soloists assisted in various 'Ayres,' songs and rounds by Medlicott, Mrs. Scott, Miss Ethel Duthoit, Mr. L. Rogers and Mr. F. Williams. The singing was smooth and refined, and in the style of the music. It could have been improved on the side by a better balance of parts, which an increased membership would secure.

LONDON CHAMBER CONCERT ASSOCIATION.

London Chamber Concert Association gave a series of concerts given by this excellent organization at the Palace Hotel, Kensington, has now been in progress since the beginning of the season. The chief place of programmes is given to chamber music in which wind instruments take part. On March 6 the selection was devoted to new works of this description. There were a Trio for clarinet, violoncello and pianoforte (Op. 20), by Vincent d'Indy; a Quintet for flute, violin, viola and cello, by J. Brandts-Buys, in four movements, illustrative sentences from the New Testament; and smaller pieces for flute, stringed instrument and pianoforte by Gabriel Fauré and H. Rabaud. The works brought forward on March 20 were also new to the public. In a Quartet for horn, bassoon and pianoforte (Op. 6), by Mr. Charles Krumpholtz, the composer played the pianoforte part. A Quintet (Op. 77), by Max Reger, was included in the programme, and a Quintet for oboe, violin, viola, violoncello and pianoforte by Th. Dubois.

Charles Gardner gave a lecture-recital on 'The life of William Sterndale Bennett,' at Queen's Hall, Harley Street, on March 10.

SOCIÉTÉ DES CONCERTS FRANÇAIS.

The concert given by this excellent Society at Bechstein Hall, on February 26, was devoted to the works of Claude Debussy. The most important items were the first Quartet for strings and the Dances 'Sacrée' and 'Profane' for the chromatic harp and small string band. The former work was admirably performed by M.M. Willaume, Morel, Maçon and Feuillard. The music exhibits the composer's great originality and peculiar idioms. The Dances are less easy to understand on one hearing. At least it can be said that they held the attention if they did not at once excite admiration. The harp part was beautifully played by Madame L. Wurmser-Delcourt, and the other parts were also well sustained. M. Ricardo Viñes played six pianoforte solos with fine technique and expression, and nine songs were sung with considerable temperament by Mlle. Hélène M. Luquiens.

THE NEW SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The first concert of this organization under its new conductor, Mr. Landon Ronald, at the Queen's Hall on March 10, was looked forward to with unusual interest and drew a large audience. The overture to 'Oberon' and Tchaikovsky's Symphony (No. 5) were splendidly performed, and Miss Irene Scharrer played successfully Saint-Saëns's Pianoforte concerto in G minor. The novelty brought forward was an orchestral piece entitled 'François Villon,' by Mr. William Wallace, which was conducted by the composer. This work displayed much elegant fancy and not a little originality. Sometimes the purpose seemed vague, but the interest was nearly always constant. We hope to have another experience of this work.

The second of Mr. Theodore Byard's series of concerts at Bechstein Hall on March 11, derived interest from the inclusion of a new work by Señor Albeniz, a composer who is said to be the most remarkable representative of the new French school, but who claims to have nothing in common with Debussy, Vincent d'Indy, Dukas or Ravel. The latter claim was substantiated by his new work, a suite of six pianoforte pieces entitled 'Iberia,' intended for musical pictures of various localities in Spain. Señor Albeniz's music revealed many virtues, one of the foremost being a successful employment of airs of Spanish origin or character. Mr. Byard's contribution to the programme included Borodine's 'La princesse endormie,' Castillon's 'Le Semeur,' a song-cycle, 'Échoes,' by Mr. Landon Ronald, and songs by Schubert and Eric Wolff. Such a selection offered a varied field for the exercise of the remarkable power of characterization and interpretative methods which have placed Mr. Byard in the front rank of English vocalists.

On February 25, at the Salle Erard, Mr. Joseph Holbrooke again ventured upon a chamber concert for which the greater part of the programme was supplied by his own works. The three Sextets—two for strings and pianoforte and one for strings alone—that were performed are characteristic examples of the peculiar idiom and remarkable resource of the concert-giver's genius. Owing to an injury to Mr. Holbrooke's hand the pianoforte parts were undertaken by Mr. George Boyle. The programme included the 'Three blind mice' variations for pianoforte duet; and songs composed by Mr. Holbrooke and others were sung by Miss Lydia Stace.

The London String Quartet gave a concert at Aeolian Hall on March 22. Three charming Idylls for string quartet by Frank Bridge and Beethoven's E flat Quartet (Op. 74) were included in the programme, and the interpretations given by the instrumentalists raised the hope that their association would be permanent and their success lasting. The proceedings were diversified with recitations given by Miss Lena Ashwell to pianoforte accompaniments composed and played by Mr. Stanley Hawley.

MR. THOMAS DUNHILL.

In giving three chamber concerts at Steinway Hall on March 5, 12 and 19, Mr. Thomas Dunhill was actuated by a laudable desire of bringing to the public notice examples of British chamber music. He was justified in including two works of his own in the scheme, for they showed qualities of ripe musicianship and inventive power. They were a Quartet for pianoforte and strings (Op. 16), played at the first concert by the composer and members of the Grimson Quartet, and a Sonata for violin and pianoforte (Op. 27), played at the second concert by Mr. Charles Schilsky and Mr. Dunhill. Other meritorious works that were performed at these concerts were Mr. John Ireland's Fantasia Trio, variations and fugue on an Irish theme for two pianofortes by Mr. Norman O'Neill, Mrs. Bredt-Verne's Fantasia Trio, and quartets by Mr. Montague Phillips and the late W. Y. Hurlstone. Mr. Dunhill's exertions deserve every form of encouragement, and it is to be hoped that they will rouse more widespread interest on future occasions.

Herr Fritz Kreisler's reappearance, after long absence from London, at Queen's Hall on March 5 attracted a large audience. His programme represented the works of some little-known violin composers of the old school, such as Pugnani, Martini, Lolli, Franœour, and included a well-conceived 'Introduction and Scherzo-caprice' for violin alone, written by Herr Kreisler himself.

Count Heinrich von Wesdehlen made a successful début as a pianist at Æolian Hall on February 25. He applied himself to familiar works, choosing César Franck's Prelude, Choral et Fugue as his chief number. His playing was distinguished by its decision, clearness of texture and expression without sentimentality.

Suburban Concerts.

The Alexandra Palace Choral Society gave a performance of Gounod's 'Redemption' on February 27, in which they lived up to their reputation as one of the most efficient choral bodies in London. The character of religious music has changed since Gounod's time, but it is clear that this work retains a firm hold on popular appreciation. The bass solos that play so important a part were admirably interpreted by Mr. Robert Radford. Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Maud Wright and Mr. James Davis also took part as soloists. Mr. Allen Gill conducted with his usual resourcefulness.

The Dulwich Philharmonic Society may be congratulated on the prominence given to the works of British composers in their programme on February 27, at the Crystal Palace. The programme included Dr. Esposito's prize cantata 'Deirdre,' in which the solo parts were worthily sustained by Miss Julia Caroli, Mr. Harold Wilde and Mr. Thorpe Bates; and a selection of old sea chanties arranged by John Bradford and Arthur Fagge. The choir sang really admirably, showing the results of careful training by their conductor, Mr. Arthur Fagge. The orchestra gave a satisfactory account of the Masquerade music from Sullivan's 'Merchant of Venice,' an 'Indian march' by Hyslop, and a set of Russian dances by Granville Bantock. A selection from Tennyson's 'Maud' song-cycle, by Dr. Arthur Somervell, excellently sung by Mr. Thorpe Bates, should not pass unnoticed.

The Goldsmiths' College Musical Society, New Cross, gave a concert on March 11, when the chief feature of the programme was Stanford's 'The Revenge.' The choir also sang 'Full fathom five' by D. J. Wood and Mendelssohn's 'Come, with torches,' and the orchestra played Schubert's

'Rosamunde' overture and three of Cowen's English songs. The choir also took part in Rheinberger's Concerto for orchestra, the solo part being played by Dr. F. H. W. The conductors were Dr. R. T. White and Dr. Miss Gwendoline Rook and Miss G. M. Beecham, who were solo vocalists.

The Hampstead Conservatoire Choral Society, conducted by Mr. Paul Graener, gave a concert on March 12. The programme included Grieg's 'Autumn storm of innocence' (female voices), by H. Walford Rossini's 'Stabat Mater.' The choir was assisted by the excellent Hampstead Conservatoire Orchestra, conducted by Mr. René Ortman's (conductor), and an able quartet of vocalists was provided by Mrs. Frank Monahan, Miss Blanche Newcombe, Mr. Gwynne Davies and Miss Waite.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT)

Vienna, March 1.

The novelty at the last Philharmonic concert was the 'Symphonic Prologue' by Max Reger. This and exceedingly clever composer has of late years won a great reputation, and for this reason it is to be regretted that the new work, of which the proportion to the interest of its subject-matter is not won only slight success. The remaining new programme were received with enthusiasm, and v. Weingartner ended his season's duties as complete triumph.

The Konzertverein and the Tonkünstlerverein formed two symphonies by Gustav Mahler with success. Among violin virtuosi, Eugene Ysaÿe is having given three concerts in quick succession and winning unparalleled success with an extremely strangely coloured performance of the Brahms. Bronislaw Huberman's recitals were also successful, quite recently the American violinist, Francis M. recognition by his extremely brilliant playing. Pianists, Emil Sauer, Moritz Rosenthal, Alfred Leopold Godowsky appeared successfully. The has meanwhile been made director of the piano of the Imperial Academy of Music. The Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde has given a performance of Berlioz's symphony, 'Romeo and Juliet,' for the first time in entirety.

At the Hofoper the preparations for the first performance here of Richard Strauss's 'Elektra' have been put into management to the utmost. The Volksoper has had success with Richard Heuberger's opera 'Baudouin' drawing full houses. Interesting was the performance of Rousseau's 'Le devin du village,' which took place of curtain-raiser before the 'Fledermaus' at the Soubrette Theatre. The delicate and clever music was pleasing, and made us wish that the larger works of the composer also would more frequently revive equally in the old style.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT)

Two chamber concerts were given on January 25, at Queen's College, or University, designated. On the first occasion the quartet consisted of Mr. Montagu Nathan's Quartet (Messrs. Nathan, Drake and Kordy), Miss Florence Nixon (soprano), Mr. Sawyer (pianoforte); and at the second performance were Mr. Henry Verbrugghen (violin), Miss and Miss Renouf (vocalist). The Philharmonic third concert on February 5 was of a character, at which Elgar's 'Cockaigne' overture was only item that need be mentioned, as having for the first time in Belfast. The vocalists were Madame Kirkby Lunn and Mr. Arthur Royd, and M. Zacharewitsch was the violinist.

The Philharmonic Society's season was brought to a close on March 12, when Beethoven's great Mass in D was performed in a very creditable style. This very difficult work had been most diligently prepared under Dr. F. Koeller, and the result must have been most gratifying to him and his excellent choir. The soloists were Miss Eleanor Felix, Miss Annie Grew, Mr. Hector Lightfoot and Mr. John Saville. The exquisite violin obbligato to the Benedictus was most artistically and sympathetically played by Miss Isabel Leetham, of Manchester. The second part of the concert included Cowen's cantata 'John Gilpin.'

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Clifton Quintet gave its third chamber concert at Queen's College on February 23. The programme included Dvorák's String quartet in G (Op. 106), Brahms's Pianoforte quartet in A (Op. 26), César Franck's Sonata for pianoforte and violin in A, and two pianoforte solos by Liszt, the Etude de Concert in F minor and the 'Gnomonreigen,' all of which were admirably rendered.

At the Birmingham Festival Choral Society's concert on February 25, the chief attraction was Elgar's 'King Olaf.' The work was listened to with great interest, especially as, under the careful beat of Dr. Sinclair, the rendering was marked by poignant realisation of tone-colour, attack, and intelligent dramatic delivery. The choir sang magnificently and the orchestra has rarely played better. The soloists were Madame Gleeson-White, Mr. John Coates and Mr. Frederic Austin. The second part of the concert opened with a delightful performance of Elgar's orchestral suite 'The wand of youth,' No. 2, heard here for the first time. The work pleased immensely, and a section had to be repeated. The concert terminated with a fine interpretation of Parry's 'Blest pair of Sirens.'

The Victoria Male Choir's annual concert was given in the Town Hall on March 6, under Mr. W. E. Robinson, who has succeeded the late Mr. John Northwood as conductor of the choir. The well-rendered part-songs included Walford Davies's 'Hymn before action,' Leon Paliard's 'The voice of the torrent,' Mendelssohn's 'Fair Semele's high-born son,' Bantock's 'Marching along,' 'Give a rouse,' and 'Boot and saddle,' Elgar's 'The reveille,' and German's 'O peaceful night.' The solo vocalists were Madame Aston, Madame Marguerite Gell, and Mr. Lewys James.

The Midland Musical Society gave a performance of Elgar's 'The black knight,' on February 27. The programme included the third act of 'Lohengrin,' in which the principal parts were well sustained by Miss Nellie Finch, Mr. Joseph Reed and Mr. Harry Dowing. Miss Marjorie Sotham played some pianoforte solos, and Mr. A. J. Cotton conducted.

Mr. Arthur Nikisch conducted the London Symphony Orchestra at the Harrison concert on March 8, and gave a magnificent reading of Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony. The last Max Mossel drawing-room concert of the season was given at the Grosvenor Room, Grand Hotel, on March 11, the attraction being the appearance of Mrs. Henry J. Wood, accompanied on the pianoforte by Mr. Henry J. Wood. The Max Mossel String Quartet, led by Miss Muriel Warwood, played a String quartet by Borodin, and one by Schubert, with perfect unanimity and refined tone-colour.

Dr. Cowen conducted the concert of the Birmingham Concerts Society on March 2, when he secured fine performances of Schumann's Symphony in D minor, and of his own second set of 'Old English Dances.' The solo pianist was Leopold Godowsky, who played Beethoven's G major Concerto. The last concert organized by this Society for this season was given in the Town Hall on March 16, under Mr. George Halford's conductorship. Sir Charles Santley was the vocalist, and the symphony was Tchaikovsky's 'Pathétique,' excellently played by the orchestra.

The Birmingham Choral and Orchestral Association gave a concert-version of Edward German's sparkling opera 'Merrie England,' in the Town Hall, on March 13, under

Mr. Joseph H. Adams's direction. The work pleased enormously, and the whole concert has to be recorded as a great artistic achievement.

The second concert of accompanied and unaccompanied choral music, specially arranged for this season by the New Choral Society, was given in the Town Hall on March 18, under Mr. Rutland Boughton's conductorship. The selection included Bach's motet 'Praise the Lord,' Walford Davies's 'Hymn before action' (male voices), Bantock's 'The Tyger' (eight parts), Edgar Bainton's 'The miracle,' and H. Ormond Anderton's 'To Autumn' (female voices). The choir still needs strengthening in the tenor department in order to secure a better tone-balance, the chief feature of this organization being the splendid timbre of the sopranos. The conductor was represented by two songs, 'The dead Christ' and 'To freedom,' sung by Madame Marie Brema. Mr. Willy Read, the solo violinist, gave a virile interpretation of Bach's 'Chaconne.'

The Moseley Choral Society gave a Mendelssohn concert at the Moseley and Balsall Heath Institute on March 18, under the able conductorship of Mr. W. Berridge Hicks. A good performance was given of the 'Hymn of praise' and 'Loreley,' the solos being well sung by Madame Laura Taylor, Master Wilfred Hudson and Mr. J. Alban Cohen. The orchestra and choir, numbering 120 performers, realised an excellent ensemble. Miss Emmeline Miles played the Pianoforte concerto in G minor with technical ability, and was artistically accompanied by the orchestra.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL AND BATH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Bristol Symphony Orchestra gave their second concert of the second season at the Victoria Rooms on March 3, under the direction of Mr. Arthur H. Peppin, music master at Clifton College. The principal work performed was Beethoven's eighth Symphony, which was excellently interpreted and evoked great applause from the large audience. An admirable rendering was also afforded of Max Bruch's Violin concerto in G minor, the soloist being Mr. Otto Milani. The programme also included Schubert's 'Rosamunde' Overture and Grieg's Symphonic Dances (Op. 64). The vocalist was Madame Marie Alexander, who sang 'Mon cœur s'ouvre à ta voix,' from 'Samson et Dalila,' and 'My heart is weary,' from Goring Thomas's 'Nadeshda.'

On March 10, the Bristol Temperance Choral Society gave their twenty-eighth annual concert in the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association. The first part consisted of a performance of Roland Revell's operetta 'The outlaw's wooing,' the principal vocalists being Miss Kate Cherry, Mr. Robert Courtney and Mr. Alfred de Manby. The choir numbered about 100 voices, and the conductor was Mr. F. Stone.

The Clifton Quintet gave their fourth concert for the season at the Victoria Rooms on March 11, and afforded gratification to a numerous audience. The performers were Messrs. Herbert Parsons (pianoforte), Maurice Alexander and Hubert Hunt (violins), Ernest Lane (viola), and Percy Lewis (violoncello). Beethoven's Quartet in F minor (Op. 95) and Brahms's Pianoforte quintet in F minor (Op. 34) were finely rendered. Mr. Parsons played Debussy's 'Children's corner,' and Mr. Maurice Alexander contributed Tchaikovsky's Meditation (Op. 42), and a Scherzo in A, by Mr. R. O. Beachcroft, of Clifton College. The latter, a sportive composition, so delighted the hearers that it had to be repeated. Mr. Arthur Walenn contributed some songs with much charm.

There was a large attendance at the Victoria Rooms on March 13, when the last for the season of Mr. George Riseley's Popular Concerts was given. The orchestra was composed of the Bristol Society of Instrumentalists, and several local professional players. Saint-Saëns's Concerto in G minor was performed, with Miss Mildred Pritchard at the pianoforte, and the other instrumental features of the concert were Beethoven's Overture 'Leonora No. 3,' the 'Der Freischütz' Overture, the Introduction to Acts I. and III. of 'Lohengrin,' and German's 'Nell Gwyn' dances, all of which were well rendered. The vocalists were Mrs. Archbold and Mr. R. H. Byers, whose songs were well received, Mr. G. Herbert Riseley being the accompanist. The concert was directed by Mr. George Riseley with his accustomed ability.

The Avonmouth Choral Society, on March 19, gave a performance of Haydn's 'Creation' in Shirehampton Public Hall. The soloists were Miss Elizabeth Morgan and Messrs. F. G. Board and F. C. Preston, both of Bristol Cathedral. The choir numbered sixty voices, and the band comprised several members of the Bristol Symphony Orchestra, with Mr. Hubert Hunt as leader. Mr. W. Powell conducted a creditable rendering of the oratorio, which was listened to with interest by a large audience.

BATH.

The Bath Orpheus Glee Society gave their annual concert in the Assembly Rooms on February 22, assisted by Miss Betty Booker, vocalist, and Mr. J. W. Duns, violinist. The part-music performed included Cooke's 'Strike the lyre,' Pearsall's 'The river spirits' song' (madrigal), Moellendorff's 'A spring shower,' Lovatt's 'Slumber song,' Dr. G. W. Naylor's dramatic chorus, 'The charge of the Light Brigade,' Laurent de Rille's 'The retreat,' two folk-songs, Kücken's 'Twilight is darkening,' and finally, in honour of the Mendelssohn centenary, his 'Hunting song' and 'Students' parting song.' Under the able conductorship of Mr. Henry J. Davis, the Society fully sustained its reputation.

Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' was performed by the joint choral unions of Bathgate and Armadale, at Armadale on March 10, and at Bathgate on March 17. At the former concert the principal vocalists were Miss Nellie Speedie, Mrs. Marion Christie, Mr. John Jamieson and Mr. Walter Harvey, who on the second occasion were replaced by Miss Ethel Lister, Miss Annie Johnston, Mr. James Davis and Mr. Albert Garcia. Both performances were conducted by Mr. Hugh Somerville, to whom great credit is due for the intelligent manner in which the choruses were rendered.

MUSIC AT CAMBRIDGE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The principal event of the term was the performance by the University Musical Society of Bach's 'Passion' Music (St. Matthew) on March 9, if we may disagree with the leading University Journal, which assigns this honour to the visit of a popular ballad singer! Great thought had evidently been devoted to the presentation of the work, and the rendering was very impressive, although perforce given in the Guildhall. Notwithstanding that the performance lasted nearly three hours, very few of the audience left before the end. All the soloists were good, notably Mr. Francis Harford and Mr. Joseph Reed, and the choir were excellent, especially in showing considerable dramatic characterization in the various utterances assigned to them. Dr. Alan Gray conducted.

Other interesting concerts have been the three Wednesday Chamber concerts given by the Brussels Quartet, Mr. Leonard Borwick, and Miss Edith Clegg, and another led by Mr. Haydn Inwards which included Mozart's Divertimento for four strings and two horns, supposed to have been played only once before in England. Also the Symphony concert on February 16, when Saint-Saëns's 'Danse Macabre' and Schumann's Symphony in B flat were the chief items.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Dublin Orchestral Society gave its second concert for the season on March 11, when Dr. Esposito conducted the following programme: Beethoven's 'Coriolan' overture, Mendelssohn's Canzonetta (Op. 12), Elgar's 'Enigma' Variations, and Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' Symphony. Special interest was excited in the Elgar Variations, as it was the first performance, and a very good one, of this important work by the Society. The large and appreciative audience included His Excellency The Earl of Aberdeen.

On March 12 the annual distribution, by His Excellency the Earl of Aberdeen, of prizes to the students of the Royal Irish Academy of Music was held in the Royal University. At the subsequent concert the orchestra, under Dr. Jozé, played the 'Freischütz,' 'Oberon' and 'Fra Diavolo' overtures. The solo vocalists were Miss E. Jackson-Jones, Miss Adelaide Ward, Miss Gladys Jacob, Miss Winifred Allen and Mr. Thomas J. Collins. The solo instrumentalists were Miss Bertha Dowse and Miss Bessie O'Hart Bourke (violinists), Miss Lilian Dowse and Miss Dora Alton (violincellists), Miss Sophie Vance and Miss Gertrude Cuolahan (pianists), and Miss Elinor Scott (organist), in addition to the usual organ recital given by pupils before the distribution of prizes.

The Leinster School of Music gave a performance on March 16, with orchestral accompaniment, of Cowen's 'The Rose Maiden,' under the conductorship of the Principal, Mr. S. Myerscough. The solos were well sung by Miss Evelyn Duffy, Miss Daisy Buckley, Miss Eva Biggart, Mr. W. H. Jones and Mr. T. V. Shellard. Miss Madalene Mooney played Mendelssohn's Violin concerto in the first part of the programme.

On March 6, Miss Nora Thomson (violinist) and Miss Madeleine Macken (soprano vocalist) gave a concert at which Dr. Brodsky conducted an orchestra which played the 'Don Giovanni' and 'Der Freischütz' overtures and the accompaniment to Mendelssohn's Concerto played by Miss Nora Thomson. Dr. Brodsky and Miss Nora Thomson played Bach's Concerto in D minor with orchestral accompaniment, the orchestra being conducted by M. Octave Grisard.

The Royal Dublin Society Chamber Music Recitals were concluded for the season on March 1 with an organ recital by Mr. Alfred Hollins, who played Bach's Prelude and Fugue in B minor and Böllmann's 'Suite Gothique' and other pieces in his usual attractive and artistic style.

The Feis Ceoil or Irish Musical Festival has been fixed to take place during the week beginning May 17. Mr. Joseph O'Mara, who is at present fulfilling a five years' engagement in the United States, is coming to adjudicate in the solo-singing competitions.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At the fifth of Mr. Simpson's classical concerts, on March 1, the programme consisted exclusively of works by Mr. Claude Debussy, and comprised examples of his songs, pianoforte compositions, and chamber music. Through illness the composer was unfortunately unable to be present, but all the artists who appeared had had the advantage of studying their music under his personal direction. The sixth concert, on March 6, consisted of a highly appreciated pianoforte recital by Mr. Emil Sauer.

In the Music Hall, on February 23, Mr. Kirkhope's choir (conductor, Mr. John Kirkhope), supported by a full orchestra led by Mr. Henri Verbrugghen, gave a splendid performance of Handel's 'Israel in Egypt.' The choir amply sustained their reputation for high-class work, the singing being excellent throughout; but special mention must be made of the exceptionally fine renderings of the 'Hailstone' chorus, 'He sent a thick darkness,' and 'The horse and his rider.' The soloists were Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Maie Thom, Miss Gertrude Lonsdale and Mr. John Coates.

An interesting lecture on J. S. Bach was delivered by Mr. A. Scott Jupp in the hall of North Morningside Church on March 2. This was followed by a musical programme of quite unusual merit, the performers being Miss Pearl Jupp, Miss Meta Sonntag and Mr. A. Scott Jupp (pianists), Miss Anita Howden and Mr. George Campbell (vocalists), and Mr. Winram (violinist).

The annual concert of the University Musical Society, conductor, Mr. J. A. Moonie, was given in the McEwan Hall on March 5. The choral works performed comprised Stanford's 'Last post,' Bishop's serenade 'Oh, by rivers,' Fanning's 'Vagabonds,' Cliffe's 'Ode to the north-east wind,' and a musically setting, by Mr. Moonie, for four voices, of 'Gaudeamus igitur.' In view of the fact that the personnel of the Society must necessarily change to a considerable extent each year, the conductor and the members are to be congratulated upon the high standard of excellence which is annually attained in performances of the choir. Songs were contributed by Miss Jean Waterston; and Miss Chrystal, accompanied by Miss Mabel Barrons, played Handel's Sonata in D major for violin and pianoforte. The accompaniments to the choral works were provided by an orchestra led by Mr. Siegl, and the organ was safe in the hands of Mr. T. H. Collinson.

The last of the four Historical Concerts, which are given annually in the University Music Class Room under the direction of Professor Niecks, was held on March 10. The programme was devoted to an exposition of choral works by three early English composers—William Byrd, Orlando Gibbons and Henry Purcell. The illustrations, some of rare beauty and charm, were delightfully performed by a section of Mr. Moonie's choir, conducted by Mr. J. A. Moonie. The organ accompaniments to the Purcell music were played by Mr. Matthew Shirlaw.

The Philharmonic Society, ably conducted by Dr. W. B. Ross, gave their annual concert in Queen's Hall on March 10. The singing of the choir in both the works performed—Mackenzie's 'Jason' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast'—afforded evidence of much careful study and training. The soloists were Miss Sara Maconochie, Mr. Alfred Young and Mr. Ashbridge Miller.

A concert in aid of the fund for the unemployed, and under the patronage of the Lord Provost and members of the Distress Committee, was given in the McEwan Hall on March 12. The programme included meritorious performances by the Grosvenor Orchestra (conductor, Mr. G. W. Crawford); part-songs by the Edinburgh Select Choir, a small but cultured body of singers conducted by Mr. George Short; and songs by Miss Bertha Bird, a brilliant soprano with a phenomenal range of voice, and Mr. Robert Anthony, a promising young baritone.

The Choral Union (conductor, Mr. T. H. Collinson) gave its annual concert in the Music Hall on March 1. Stanford's 'The Revenge' and Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' constituted the programme. The choir has perhaps never appeared to greater advantage than on this occasion. Quality of tone, degree of attention to phrasing, and balance of parts were alike admirable, the singing of the choral numbers 'O gladsome Light,' 'The night is calm,' and the epilogue 'God sent His messenger,' in the 'Golden Legend,' being really fine performances. The soloists were Madame Mary Conly, Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. Walter Hyde and Mr. Thorpe Bates. A full orchestra, led by Mr. Dambmann, supplied the accompaniments.

The Southern Choral Association (conductor, Mr. E. W. Winning) gave a very successful concert in the Livingstone Hall on March 19, at which the principal work on the programme, Elgar's 'The banner of St. George,' received an eminently satisfactory rendering, one that reflected great credit upon all concerned. Supported by the male-voices of the choir, Mr. George Campbell—a baritone who possesses a fine voice and highly-cultivated method—sang Stanford's 'Songs of the sea' in finished style and with rare dramatic insight.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Under the auspices of the Pollokshields Philharmonic Society, the Verbrugghen Quartet (Messrs. H. Verbrugghen, G. Magrath, D. E. Nichols, and J. Messes) gave a series of chamber concerts on February 22, March 1 and 8. In addition to quartets by Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, and Schumann, Bach's Concerto (No. 2) in E, for solo violin, was reproduced in its original setting, viz., with accompaniment for five violins, viola, bass, and harpsichord. A somewhat unique feature at each concert were the introductory remarks contributed by Mr. Verbrugghen on the history and form of the works to be played, thereby giving to the performances an enhanced interest and educational value.

The second of the Bach Choir's chamber concerts took place on March 4, and was in all respects an unalloyed treat. The programme included a Trio for flute, violin and pianoforte, artistically played by Messrs. A. Halstead, H. Verbrugghen and P. E. Halstead; a Sonata for flute and pianoforte; Concerto for two violins and orchestra; and a rendering of 'The Peasants' Cantata' by the Bach Choir, under Mr. J. M. Diack, with Miss Rana Taggart and Mr. Walter Harvey as soloists. On the lines of the Verbrugghen concerts mentioned above, Mr. J. B. McEwan gave a short address on Bach's Chamber Music.

The University Choral Society, under Mr. A. M. Henderson, gave a very meritorious concert on March 9, when Brewer's 'Sir Patrick Spens' was brought to a first hearing in Glasgow. In that composition, and in a well-chosen selection of motets and part-songs, the choir showed a distinct advance on its former appearances both with respect to balance of parts and quality of tone, their singing being marked by considerable refinement and intelligence. Miss Margaret Horne was the solo violinist; and in a cycle of songs by Schumann, Mr. Horatio Connell proved himself a vocalist of great distinction. Mr. Henderson added to his duties as conductor those of solo pianist, and Mr. W. Forsyth played the accompaniments very successfully.

The Young Men's Christian Association Choir, ably conducted by Mr. R. L. Reid, gave a successful performance of Handel's 'Samson' on March 15. The choral numbers were sung with great spirit and good attack, to the accompaniments of Mr. W. H. Cole's orchestra, with Mr. J. E. Hodgson as organist, and the soloists—Misses E. Willox and A. Picken, and Messrs. J. F. S. Adams and Walter Harvey—did well in their respective parts.

To those whose tastes lie in the direction of unaccompanied choral singing, the annual concert of the Glasgow Orpheus Choir on March 18, offered a veritable feast. The great artistic success of this young choir is due not so much to its personnel as to the esprit de corps of its members and the unmistakable gifts as a choir trainer of Mr. Hugh S. Robertson, the conductor. In a programme consisting of no fewer than seventeen concerted numbers, ranging in point of variety and difficulty from the old 'repeating' psalm-tune 'Orlington' to Joseph Holbrooke's choral song 'Footsteps of angels,' the choir sang—almost entirely from memory—with charming finish and point. Vocal solos were contributed by Miss Antonia Dolores, Mr. Herbert Brown, and Masters Brian Williams and Alfred Darling, and the accompanists were Messrs. A. J. Lancashire and Gilbert Esplin.

The Glasgow Amateur Orchestral Society, conducted by Mr. W. T. Hoek, gave their second concert on March 19, when the programme included Mozart's 'Parisian' symphony, the overture to Gluck's 'Iphigenia in Aulis,' and Beethoven's fifth Pianoforte concerto (soloist, Mr. Wilfrid Senior). The playing of the orchestra, especially the string section, was marked by great brilliance, and the excellent ensemble furnished proof of careful rehearsal and thorough familiarity with the music performed. Mr. Walter Harvey's vocal solos lent variety to the programme.

Mr. Golan E. Hooles' choir gave a successful concert on March 22, the chief feature of the programme being Parts 1 and 2 of Haydn's 'Creation,' sung with good effect to the organ accompaniment of Mr. J. E. Hodgson. Of suburban music-makings the following deserve to be recorded: Cambuslang Choral Society (Mr. J. M. Diack, conductor), concert performance of Gounod's 'Faust'; Clydebank Choral Union (Mr. W. J. Clapperton, conductor), Haydn's 'Spring' and Parry's 'The Pied Piper of Hamelin'; Vale of Leven Choral Society (Mr. W. J. Clapperton, conductor), Handel's 'Acis and Galatea'; Coatbridge Choral Union (Mr. W. J. Clapperton, conductor), Haydn's 'Spring' and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' with full orchestral accompaniment.

Miss Thérèse Annie Harper died, we regret to record, at Dublin, on March 17, after a very short illness, in her forty-eighth year. She was the youngest daughter of the late Mr. Edmund B. Harper, a member of the well-known family of musicians of that name, and formerly a professor of repute in the Irish capital. Her mother (née Marianne Lincoln) was a distinguished vocalist, who sang with success at the Gewandhaus, Leipzig, during the Mendelssohn régime, and in this country.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

In view of Mr. Granville Bantock's unavoidable resignation as conductor of the Orchestral Society, the closing concerts of this season acquired an added interest. His great services to the Society and to English composers were alluded to in terms of eulogy in a speech made by Mr. Michell, honorary secretary of the Society, at the Gentlemen's Concert on February 27, and although Mr. Bantock's progressive policy in musical matters may not always have commended itself to the entire body of the Society's subscribers, there is no doubt that he is personally regarded with an esteem which borders upon affection. The programme on this occasion included Bach's Quadruple Concerto for violin, oboe, trumpet and flute, which were respectively well-played by Messrs. Akeroyd, Reynolds, Valk and Needham. Mr. Bantock conducted Debussy's 'Petite Suite,' and Mr. Fritz Cassirer, of Berlin, conducted Wolf's 'Italian Serenade' (solo viola, Mr. J. Nicholls) and Beethoven's second Symphony. The vocalist was Mr. Lloyd Moore, a local tenor with a sweet voice and artistic method. Dr. Lyon's pretty song 'Sunrise' was especially well received.

The Orchestral Society's closing concert on March 13 proved a memorable affair on account of the association of the orchestra with the Welsh Choral Union, conducted by Mr. Harry Evans, a collaboration which had the happiest results instrumentally and chorally in the performances of Mr. Bantock's highly original chorus with orchestra, 'Sea Wanderers' and Bach's cantata 'Sleepers, wake.' The splendid body of Welsh chorists, under Mr. Harry Evans, gained fresh laurels by the courage and enthusiasm with which they attacked and generally overcame the formidable difficulties of Mr. Bantock's work. It was conducted con amore by Mr. Harry Evans, and the composer was called to the platform. The first part of the programme included Sibelius's 'Finlandia' and Elgar's lullaby 'In Hammersbach.' Mr. Granville Bantock afterwards conducted an interesting performance (with Mr. Harry Evans as organist) of Bach's cantata 'Sleepers, wake,' in which the vocal solos were entrusted to Miss Florence Lee, Mr. David Ellis and Mr. Arthur Weber.

Mr. Ernest Newman has continued his lectures at the University, the subject on February 19 being Strauss's 'Till Eulenspiegel' and 'Tod und Verklärung,' while on March 5 his discourse was a retrospect of these two works with remarks on the later application of the principles employed. Mr. Newman's subject on March 12 was Mr. Granville Bantock's 'Omar Khayyam, and 'Sea Wanderers,' which he said technically were among the finest works of modern musicians.

The tenth concert of the Philharmonic Society took place on February 23, when Dr. Cowen conducted an augmented orchestra in Strauss's 'Till Eulenspiegel,' Beethoven's 'Eroica' symphony, Wagner's prelude to the third Act and Dance of Apprentices from 'Die Meistersinger,' and Berlioz's 'Apotheosis March.' The vocalist was Madame Frease-Green, and the choir had their single opportunity in Elgar's Spanish serenade 'Stars of the Summer night.'

The programme of the eleventh Philharmonic Concert on March 9 included the symphonic suite 'Scheherazade' (Rimsky-Korsakoff) and the 'Variations on a Rococo theme' for violoncello solo and orchestra (Tchaikovsky), played by Mr. Carl Fuchs. A new orchestral work, 'The Maid of Astolat,' by Mr. J. D. Davis, was also favourably heard on this occasion. Mozart's Symphonic Concertante (first movement) afforded opportunities to Mr. Rawdon Briggs (solo violin) and Mr. S. Speelman (solo viola). The vocalist was Madame Elena Gerhardt, whose pianoforte accompaniments were well played by Mr. Richard Epstein, and the choir was agreeably heard in Dr. Charles Wood's impressive part-song 'Nights of Music.'

The twenty-fifth annual concert of the Liverpool Cymric Vocal Union on March 6 deserves a special line of recognition, as does also the enthusiasm and devotion which has kept this fine body of male voices in corporate existence for so many years. Under the direction of Mr. J. T. Jones, Félicien David's symphonic ode 'The Desert' was chorally well sung, the spoken lines being effectively recited by Miss Marie Raynor. The vocal solos were sustained by Miss Amy Evans and Mr. Thomas Thomas, while the orchestra was led by Mr. John Lawson.

César Franck's Pianoforte quintet was performed at the Schiever concert on February 20, and another interesting work heard on the same occasion was Max Reger's 'Suite in the olden style' for violin and pianoforte. This was well played by Mr. Schiever, with Mr. Egon Petri at the pianoforte. Schumann's String quartet in A (Op. 41, No. 3) completed the interesting scheme.

The closing concert of the series was given on March 20, when Madame Marguerite Stilwell collaborated with the strings in Georg Schumann's Pianoforte quintet in E minor, and other works. The concert worthily closed a series which has been especially interesting on account of the diversity of the programmes.

Elgar's new Symphony had an enthusiastic reception in Liverpool at its first performance on February 26, conducted by Dr. Hans Richter. The interest which had been aroused was shown by the large audience, one of the largest ever assembled at a Richter concert. The music was heard with profound attention and made an evident impression. The remainder of the notable programme included Bach's third 'Brandenburg' Concerto for strings alone, Beethoven's overture 'Coriolan' and Strauss's 'Tod und Verklärung.'

An unusually large audience greeted Sir Charles V. Stanford and Mr. Plunket Greene at the Symphony Orchestra concert in the Sun Hall on March 15. The occasion was the performance of the 'Irish' Symphony, conducted by the composer, whose arrangement and orchestration of the Irish songs sung so admirably by Mr. Greene were also a potent attraction. Miss Llewella Davies, as solo pianist in Grieg's Pianoforte concerto in A minor, played very cleverly.

The West Kirby Choral Society gave a performance of Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' on March 8, in which the vocal principals were Miss Emily Breare, Miss Mabel Braine, Mr. David Ellis and Mr. Horatio Connell. The singing of the choir was on the whole very creditable. Dr. W. B. Brierley, who conducted, is to be congratulated on the result of his labours, and also for reviving Dvorák's beautiful music. A new song by Dr. Brierley, with orchestral accompaniment, 'Tis night, the evening shadows deepen,' was a feature of the second part as sung by Mr. Connell.

The Warrington Musical Society gave a performance of Gounod's trilogy 'The Redemption,' on March 18, conducted by Mr. F. H. Crossley. The orchestra and chorus numbered 200 performers, and the vocal principals were Miss Marie Houghton, Miss Dorothy Truslove, Madame Lily Fairhurst, Mr. Cynlais Gibbs and Mr. Robert Burnett. The boys of the Warrington Parish Church choir formed the 'celestial choir,' the orchestra being led by Mr. R. H. Pearson, with Mr. W. H. Payton as organist. The work was generally well performed, and there was an appreciative audience.

An interesting and well-attended recital was that given by Mr. Josef Greene, a young pianist of merit and promise, on March 19. He had the co-operation of Miss Marie Raynor, an excellent reciter, and of Mr. John Lawson, whose violin playing gave great pleasure.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Mendelssohn Centenary was further remembered at the Hallé Concert of February 25, when the 'Hymn of Praise,' and Brahms's 'Requiem' were performed. The soloists were Miss Perceval Allen, Madame Annie Walker, Mr. Webster Millar and Mr. Herbert Brown. At the second performance of the Elgar Symphony on March 4, Dr. Richter threw a great deal of fresh interesting light upon the work. Mr. Pablo Casals, the solo violoncellist, played Dvorák's B minor Concerto (Op. 104) with a fine, singing quality of tone. An excellent rendering was given of Mendelssohn's 'Athalie' overture. At the twentieth and last concert, on March 11, the programme was devoted entirely to Wagner. With the valued co-operation of Miss Agnes Nicholls, Mr. Walter Hyde and Mr. Robert Radford, Dr. Richter was able to secure a splendid concert performance of the first Act of 'Die Walküre.' It is officially announced that, as substitutes for Dr. Richter during his absences next season, negotiations are in progress with Messrs. Felix Weingartner, Felix Mottl, Arthur Nikisch, Henry J. Wood, and Max Fiedler, each of whom, it is hoped, will conduct one or more concerts.

At the extra Hallé concert of March 18, given annually on behalf of the Orchestra Pension Fund, a masterly rendering was given of Brahms's Violin concerto by Mr. Arthur Catterall. The orchestral selections were the 'Pathetic' symphony, Bach's overture (Suite) for flutes and strings, and the 'Ride of the Valkyries.' Dr. Richter was greeted with special enthusiasm.

Dr. Brodsky conducted at the Gentlemen's Concerts on March 1. One of the most gifted of his pupils—Naum Blinder, a Russian musician—much distinguished himself in a performance of Max Bruch's Violin concerto in G minor. Mendelssohn was honoured again in the most robustly eloquent reading of the 'Scotch' symphony we have heard for many a long day. The final concert, on March 15, took the form of a Pianoforte recital by Mr. Ernst Lengyel von Bagota, the selections interspersed with part-songs and choral numbers rendered by a choir rehearsed and conducted by Mr. R. H. Wilson, chorus-master of the Hallé Concerts. The programme stated that Mr. Henry J. Wood had been invited to conduct next season's orchestral concerts.

At the Brodsky Quartet concert of February 24, Mr. Arthur Catterall was at the second violin desk in place of Mr. Rawdon Briggs. The programme contained Bach's Sonata in E major for violin and pianoforte, Beethoven's String quartet in C (Op. 59, No. 3), and Tchaikovsky's Pianoforte trio in A minor (Op. 50). Mr. Siloti was at the pianoforte.

A triumph of ensemble playing characterized the last concert of the Brodsky Quartet on March 17. The programme contained Smetana's 'Aus mein Leben' quartet; Beethoven's Pianoforte trio in D (Op. 70, No. 1); and Brahms's Sextet in G (Op. 36). Mr. Egon Petri was at the pianoforte in the Trio; and Mr. Alfred Barker and Mr. Leo Smith, both of the Hallé Orchestra, joined the Brodsky Quartet as second viola and second violoncello respectively in the performance of the Sextet.

At Mr. Brand Lane's concluding Subscription concert on February 27, Mr. Godowsky played some Chopin pieces, Miss Marie du Chastain contributed violin solos, and Miss Amy Castles and Mr. Dalton Baker were the vocalists. The choir sang admirably. There is considerable attractiveness in the orchestral suite by Mr. J. H. Foulds, entitled 'Holiday Sketches,' played at the Promenade concerts on February 20, the third movement, 'Evening in the Odenwald,' especially showing genuine poetic feeling. Mr. Arthur Catterall played De Beriot's Violin concerto, No. 7, and the 'Ballade and Polonaise' by Vieuxtemps. Mrs. Margaret Booth was the vocalist. At the concert of March 6, Mendelssohn's 'Midsummer Night's Dream' music was given, and the Canzonetta from the composer's first quartet was played by all the strings. Miss Ellen Arban, a former student at our College of Music, meritoriously played the first movement of Beethoven's Pianoforte concerto in C minor, a Caprice by Arensky, and the Schubert-Liszt Valse-Caprice, No. 6. Mr. Alfred Heather was the vocalist.

The 'Italian' symphony brought a fresh tribute to the genius of Mendelssohn at the concert of March 20, an interesting feature of which was the performance by members of the orchestra of the Andante con Variazioni movement of Beethoven's Septet. Miss Phyllis Lett was the vocalist.

Indisposition unfortunately prevented Mr. Claude Debussy from being present at the French concert on March 2. His compositions filled the programme. Mr. Ricardo Vinès performed two groups of pianoforte pieces, entitled respectively 'Impressions,' and 'Images,' and Mlle. Helene Luquiens sang nine songs. Two 'Dances' served to introduce the chromatic harp, played by Madame Farmer-Delcourt; and there was an interesting performance of the G minor String quartet, which the Edith Robinson quartet had already introduced to a Manchester audience. Mr. Vincent D'Indy was able to fulfil his promise to take part in the following concert on March 8. His 'Poème des Fontaines' and César Franck's 'Prelude, Choral and Allegro' were remarkably well played by Mlle. Blanche Lévy; and the same criticism applies to a violoncello solo—played by Mr. Fernand Pollain.

MUSIC IN NEWCASTLE AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Elgar's 'The Kingdom' was given for the first time in Sunderland on February 26, when the Sunderland Philharmonic Society and the Leeds Symphony Orchestra united their forces. The choir sang throughout with refinement and intelligence, under the skilful and experienced direction of Mr. N. Kilburn, who had evidently spared no pains in the preparation of the work, infusing into the choral and orchestral forces under his control his own enthusiasm and zeal for a reverent and artistic performance. A highly capable quartet of solo vocalists was provided in Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Webster Millar and Mr. Herbert Brown. The successful carrying out of so ambitious an enterprise on the part of Mr. Kilburn and his loyal followers deserves the warmest commendation.

No more appropriate work could have been chosen for Dr. Richter's farewell to Newcastle on February 24, than Beethoven's Choral Symphony. The performance was a memorable one in every respect. The Hallé Orchestra was at its very best, and the choral portions were sung with splendid verve and precision by the Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union who, on this occasion, celebrated their twenty-first season by an extra concert. Other orchestral items were Smetana's 'Lustspiel' overture, Wagner's 'Siegfried Idyll' and Brahms's 'Academic' festival overture. Under the direction of Dr. Coward, conductor of the Choral Union, the choir sang Bach's fine motet 'Sing ye to the Lord.'

The Postal Telegraph Choral Society gave a performance of unaccompanied music on February 26, ranging from old English madrigals and ballets to Bantock's 'The Tyger' and Boughton's 'Young Herchard' folk-song variations. The choir showed an improved appreciation of this class of work. Pianoforte trios by Arensky and Tchaikovsky were played by the conductor, Mr. Edgar L. Bainton, and Messrs. Perry and Schott.

The Amateur Vocal Society (conductor, Mr. J. E. Jeffries) performed Mendelssohn's 'Athaliae' on March 4, with organ and strings. Subscribers to the Harrison concerts met with a disappointment on March 12. Owing to difficulties in engaging the Town Hall, the Palace Theatre was taken for an afternoon, and the effect of the London Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Arthur Nikisch, was utterly ruined.

On March 16 the Armstrong College Choral Society gave its annual concert. The chief works were Beethoven's Mass in C and Vaughan Williams's 'Toward the unknown region.'

The fifth annual concert of the South Shields Orchestral Society, on March 17, presented an excellent programme, which was rendered with care and much attention to detail. Haydn's Symphony in C, Schubert's 'Tragic' symphony, and overtures by Mozart and Mendelssohn were the principal features. Mr. A. Adams conducted.

On March 18 and 19, two country societies on Tyneside gave their concerts—the Hexham Orchestral (conductor, Mr. N. Robson) and the Stocksfield Choral (conductor, Mr. N. Walker); the latter performed Parry's 'Ode on St. Cecilia's Day.'

MUSIC IN NORTH STAFFORDSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Newcastle-under-Lyme Philharmonic Society added their contribution to the Mendelssohn Centenary by a performance of 'Elijah' on February 28. There was a band and chorus of 150, and the interpretation throughout was excellent. Miss Lily Jeffrey, Miss Myra Dixon, Mr. John Needham and Mr. Joseph Lycett were the principals, and in some of the concerted numbers valuable assistance was rendered by Mrs. Mellor, Mrs. Shuttlebottom, Mr. S. Thompson and Mr. Ernest Butterworth, members of the choir. A small but efficient amateur orchestra played the accompaniments. Miss Farmer was the organist, and Mr. John Cope conducted.

In view of the fact that in March, 1910, the various Pottery towns will become absorbed into the city of Stoke-on-Trent, the musical societies of the district are showing an equal readiness to adapt themselves to the change. The Hanley Glee and Madrigal Society (conductor, Mr. John James), which has borne its honoured name for twenty-five years, announces that after March, 1910, it will become the 'Stoke-on-Trent City Choral Union.' The excellent Burslem Amateur Operatic Society (conductor, Mr. Frank Bennett) is to be known in the future as the 'Stoke-on-Trent Operatic Society.'

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society's orchestral concert on March 4 was memorable on account of its being the occasion of the first performance in Nottingham of Elgar's Symphony. Considering the difficulties of the work, and the fact that a large portion of the orchestra are amateur players, the results were most praiseworthy, and Mr. Allen Gill is to be heartily congratulated on the result. The programme included 'Finlandia' (Sibelius), and the 'Rienzi' and 'Hansel and Gretel' overtures. The vocalist was Mr. Thorpe Bates, whose singing was enthusiastically received.

The Long Eaton Choral Society performed Smart's 'Bride of Dunkerron' on March 9. The soloists were Miss Ethel Lister, Mr. James Davis and Mr. Charles Knowles. Mr. J. S. Derbyshire ably conducted.

On February 25 Miss Augustine Bisiaux gave her annual chamber concert, at which she played violin solos by Bach, Schumann and Wieniawski and took part in Rheinberger's Quartet in E flat (Op. 38).

A very interesting lecture on 'Sibelius and the modern Finnish school' was given at Loughboro Town Hall on March 13, by Mr. T. Henderson, of Darlington. Of the vocal and instrumental illustrations given on that occasion, special mention must be made of Miss Cantelo's pianoforte solos, which were admirably rendered.

The choir of St. Mary's, Nottingham, rendered selections from Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion music on March 18, under the direction of Mr. F. Dunnill, with Mr. Wyatt at the organ, when the noticeable feature was the unaccompanied singing by the choir. The Beeston (Nottingham) Choral Society gave Handel's 'Samson' on March 19, when the solos were ably rendered by Madame Wilson-Moulds, Madame Ethel Edgar, Mr. Kingston and Mr. Downing.

MUSIC IN OXFORD.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The first performance of the term took place in the Town Hall on January 28, when an excellent orchestral concert was given under the auspices of the Musical Club. On this occasion Dr. Allen's string band was supplemented by wind-instrument players from the London Symphony Orchestra. The chief features of the programme were Haydn's Symphony in E flat, and Beethoven's Pianoforte concerto in C minor, with Miss Fanny Davies as the soloist.

In the same building, on February 9, Herr Backhaus, assisted by Madame Ella Russell and Mr. Plunket Greene, gave an enjoyable concert. Three days later (February 12), in the Assembly Room of the Town Hall, Mr. Harold Bauer gave a recital at which he displayed his remarkable technique. At the Town Hall, on February 25, another excellent concert was jointly given by Madame Carreño and Miss Marie Brema. Curiously enough, as at Mr. Bauer's recital, the chief pianoforte solo was Beethoven's 'Appassionata' Sonata, and the differences in the rendering of the two performers were very instructive. Miss Brema's singing of Schubert's 'Erl-king' was beyond all praise.

The last concert of the term was given on March 4 in the Town Hall by the combined forces of the Choral and Philharmonic Societies and the Bach Choir, under the able conductorship of Dr. Allen. Dr. R. Vaughan Williams's cantata 'Toward the unknown region' and Brahms's 'Triumphlied' (Op. 55) were performed. The former work certainly needed more rehearsal, on account of its tonal difficulties and weird-like character. The 'Triumphlied' received a better rendering, and the broad, almost Handel-like strains with which the latter portion of this beautiful work abounds evidently proved very grateful to the choir. A capital rendering of the 'Eroica' symphony afforded welcome relief to the vocal pieces.

On March 10, in the Sheldonian Theatre, the professor of music, Sir Walter Parratt, gave his terminal lecture to an appreciative audience, his subject being 'English Psalmody since the Reformation.' The illustrations were well given by a small contingent of the Choral Society, under Dr. Allen's direction. The lecturer said a good hymn-tune was by no means an easy thing to write, and that in many collections it would be found that the hymns and tunes were not always in sympathy with each other. In concluding his discourse Sir Walter invited the audience to rise and sing the first verse of 'When I survey the wondrous Cross.'

The Assembly Room was crowded on March 12 in order to hear a very interesting lecture on English Folk-Music by Mr. Cecil J. Sharp. This well-known authority lucidly explained the history of folk-song, its origin and development. Many charming examples of the species were given, and Mr. Kimber, of Headington, and his pupils gave graceful illustrations of the old Morris dances and jigs.

At the New Theatre, Aristophanes's 'Frogs' was performed for a week, beginning on February 17, by the Oxford University Dramatic Society. To this charming old-world play Sir Hubert Parry wrote most delightful music for its first performance here in 1892. This was again used, with a few slight additions, on the present occasion, and the clever music again gave proof of its wonted charm. The overture sounded as merry as ever, while the rollicking first chorus, βερεχεχεεε χααζ χααζ (Brekekekex koax koax) was even more funny and amusing than before. Again the charming lilt of the obbligato accompaniment to the chorus Χωρῶμεν ἐς πολυπόροισ ('Now haste we to the flowery meads') was a real delight to listen to. No wonder that the genial composer received a well-merited ovation on Tuesday night. The chorus singers were admirably trained by Dr. Allen, who, with Sir Hubert Parry, shared the duties of conducting. The whole performance was a great success for the O.U.D.S.

We must not conclude this necessarily brief sketch without mentioning two recitals given in the Town Hall by blind organists, the first given on February 4 by Mr. W. H. Warrilow, organist of St. Barnabas Church here, and the second, on March 8, by Mr. W. Wolstenholme. Both gentlemen showed perfect command over the instrument, and their performances were greatly enjoyed.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The neighbouring towns of Rotherham and Doncaster have fixed upon a scheme of choral co-operation which in practice makes for efficiency and economy. Both possessing a choral society of similar size, and conducted by Mr. T. Brameld, they arranged a joint concert of the same work in each town, with identical orchestra and soloists. The audiences benefit by hearing a large chorus and in other respects the method is of great advantage. Two years ago 'The Apostles' was so given, with striking artistic results. Last month the experiment was repeated with Berlioz's 'Faust.' Under so excellent a choir-train as Mr. Brameld, the opportunities for virtuoso choralists which Berlioz's showy work affords, especially in respect of variety and characterization, were fully seized and an exceptionally brilliant and interesting performance was secured. The orchestra, largely made up of local players, included several amateurs. They played on the whole very creditably, the March and the Dance of Sylph being admirably performed. Mr. Charles Tree was sardonic and vocally equipped Mephistopheles, and the other parts were well sung by Miss Verrinder, Mr. Gwily Richards and Mr. R. Crawshaw (Brander).

Among other interesting concerts during the past month the following are deserving of mention: Cowen's 'The Rosemaiden', by the Mexbro' Choral Society, conducted by Mr. W. J. Dickie; Cuthbert Nunn's cantata 'Everyman at St. Peter's (Abbeydale) Church, where Mr. C. E. Horns is doing excellent work; 'Elijah' by the Penistone Choral Society, under the enthusiastic direction of Mr. J. Cooper.

and a concert recital of 'Maritana,' by the Sheffield Choral Union, a keen and hardworking Society which has taken a fresh lease of life and vigour under its new conductor, Mr. Horace Reynolds.

An enjoyable concert was given before the Sheffield Chamber Music Society on March 9, by Miss Helene Dolmetsch, with whom was associated Mr. Arthur Catterall (violin) and Mr. Edward Isaacs (pianoforte) in a Sonata by Telemann.

MUSIC IN SOUTHPORT.

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)

Southport has maintained its enterprise in matters musical by a performance of Elgar's Symphony, a result due to the enthusiasm of Mr. A. W. Speed for all that is best in music. The work was given at the second Subscription Concert of the Southport and Birkdale Philharmonic Society, on March 12, at which the orchestra and choir numbered some 170 performers. Under the able direction of Mr. W. Speed, the orchestra—largely composed of members of the Hallé Orchestra, and supplemented by local amateurs—undoubtedly achieved a notable performance of this extremely difficult symphony. A wonderfully fine balance of tone characterized the interpretation, and at the end of each movement the audience were not slow to show their appreciation, both of the work itself and of the admirable rendering it received. The remaining orchestral pieces were the 'Meistersinger' overture, and Wallace's symphonic poem 'The Passing of Beatrice,' both of which were performed in a highly effective manner.

The singing of Mr. Speed's choir always gives pleasure. On this occasion they gave an excellent rendering of Dr. Brewer's bright and breezy choral ballad, for baritone solo and chorus, 'Sir Patrick Spens.' Dr. Charles Harriss's choral ballad 'The Sands of Dee' was also sung, and proved to be a highly picturesque work of simple pathos. The choir were heard to no less advantage in Jackson's unaccompanied part-song 'Sisters of the sea'; indeed, in whatever these well-trained chorallists undertook to do, they acquitted themselves in a most praiseworthy manner.

Mr. Charlesworth, a fine artist with a fine voice, achieved great success in Wallace's 'Freebooter' songs. The heartiest congratulations are due to Mr. Speed upon the able manner in which he conducted one of the best concerts given in Southport. He so infused his forces with his own enthusiasm and artistic feeling that he obtained from all concerned the best possible results.

ELGAR'S 'THE KINGDOM' AT SWANSEA.

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)

The St. Paul's Choral Society successfully carried out an ambitious programme at the Albert Hall, Swansea, on March 15, when they produced Sir Edward Elgar's fine oratorio. The result justified the attempt, and 'report speaks goldenly' of the performance. It was apparent throughout that great care had been taken in preparation, and that the choir were fully imbued with the religious spirit necessary to a proper appreciation of the work. Much credit is due to the conductor, Mr. Harry Williams, not only for his training of the choir but for the command with which he held his forces, both choral and orchestral, in hand. The solo vocalists, also very able, were Miss Perceval Allen, Miss Gwladys Roberts, Mr. Alfred Heather and Mr. Llewellyn Bowen, who deserves commendation for successfully undertaking, at a few hours' notice, to replace Mr. David Hughes in the part of St. Peter. The oratorio was preceded by Elgar's 'Pomp and circumstance' march.

MUSIC IN WORCESTER.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

The programme of the Worcester Festival Choral Society's concert on February 23 consisted of Mackenzie's 'Dream of Jubal,' and Elgar's Symphony. As the Symphony was given for the first time in the composer's native city, the occasion may well be regarded as a red-letter day in the annals of the Worcester Society. Sir Alexander Mackenzie's fantasia is in itself no mean undertaking, but when to that are added the difficulties of Elgar's Symphony, played by an orchestra only partly professional, it will be admitted that the entirely successful result was one that calls for congratulations to all concerned. The 'Dream of Jubal' once more commanded attention and interest, the delicate accompaniments to the recitation being specially admired, while the choir displayed excellent tone and precision of attack, the Gloria, Hero's March, Funeral March and Invocation being excellent examples of spirited and expressive singing. It was quite evident that a firm hand had directed the training of the choir, and infused into its members the varying spirit of the work. Much disappointment was felt at the absence, owing to illness, of Sir Alexander Mackenzie, who had promised to conduct his 'Dream of Jubal'; but the intimate acquaintance with the score displayed by Mr. Ivor Atkins enabled him to give an excellent and satisfying performance. The solo vocalists were Miss Ida Kahn and Mr. Cynlais Gibbs, assisted in the quartet by Miss Newton and the Rev. A. L. Griffiths, while Mr. Charles Fry once more resumed his original position as reciter of Mr. Bennett's poetic lines.

Sir Edward Elgar's Symphony fully taxed the powers of the orchestra; but here again Mr. Atkins's thorough knowledge of the score produced a most satisfactory result, the difficulties being grappled with successfully and many of the inner beauties of the work being cleverly revealed. It was not to be expected that the audience would at once grasp the full significance of such a masterpiece, but the brilliancy of the Scherzo and the superlative beauty of the Adagio made as usual their instant appeal, while the final movement with its series of climaxes brought the work to a triumphant conclusion, resulting in an ovation by the crowded and fashionable audience to the conductor and his forces. Such a performance goes far to show that, given a clever conductor capable of infusing enthusiasm into the members of his orchestra, the Symphony is within the possibilities of efficient amateur orchestral Societies.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

LEEDS.

A month ago I referred to the parlous position of the Leeds Municipal concerts, from which, in the interests of 'economy,' it was proposed to withdraw the subsidy of something under £200. The present state of affairs, according to a statement made at the last concert, is that this policy will be persisted in, but that a voluntary committee will be formed to run the concerts next season, and to be responsible for any deficit, while the Corporation may possibly graciously permit the Town Hall to be used free of charge for the purpose. This is by no means a merely formal concession, for an Alderman, who is a leader in this crusade of mean economies, when interviewed on the subject, complained that, beyond the actual loss incurred by the concerts, 'we have had to give them the free use of the Town Hall, which has involved considerable additional cost to the ratepayers, and has interfered with the possibility of the hall being let on remunerative terms for other purposes.' So the Corporation may perhaps nobly forego the occasional few pounds which might be earned by letting the hall, and permit it to be used for this distinctively educational purpose, which, it seems, is not worth the expenditure of something like a thirtieth of a penny in the pound on the rates.

The Municipal concert on February 27 gave prominence to Tchaikovsky, whose fourth Symphony, 'Francesca da Rimini' fantasia and 'Casse Noisette' suite were given with the most praiseworthy finish of detail, under Mr. Fricker's direction. Mr. Havergal Brian's 'English Suite,' first heard at these concerts two years ago, was repeated, and the prelude to the third act of 'Tristan' proved more effective than might be imagined, the melancholy solo for the cor anglais being very artistically played by Mr. F. Holt. Mr. Gordon Heller was the vocalist. The series ended on March 20 with a 'Wagner programme,' which experience has always shown to be a safe attraction. The fine 'Faust' overture and two extracts from the 'Götterdämmerung' had the advantage of being less hackneyed than most 'Wagner selections,' and Mr. Marsden Williams gave a creditable performance of the splendid 'Wotan's Abschied.' Contemporary composers were represented by Debussy ('L'après-midi d'un Faune') and Sibelius ('Finlandia'), so that we had a very characteristic programme of modern music, and one illustrating well the educational value of these concerts.

The popularity of Wagner's music was again shown on March 3, when the Subscription Concert was given up to it, and an exceptionally large audience was the result. Dr. Richter conducted a performance of the whole of the first Act of 'Die Walküre,' which in more than one respect can seldom have been surpassed. His own share, and that of the Hallé Orchestra, requires no description, and the cast of soloists—Miss Agnes Nicholls, Mr. Walter Hyde, and Mr. Robert Radford, all of whom have taken part in the recent Covent Garden performances—was of surpassing excellence.

The month has been distinguished by some interesting chamber concerts. First in date came a Debussy concert on February 25, at which the composer's recent 'Danses' for harp (Madame Wurmser-Delcourt) and strings were given, while the expert Parisian Quartet played Debussy's String quartet (Op. 10), Mr. Ricardo Vinès gave a series of the composer's remarkably individual pianoforte pieces, and Mlle. Luquiens sang a number of songs.

On March 8 the quartet party of which Mr. Rawdon Briggs, leader of the Hallé Orchestra, is the principal, came to Leeds, and in a very different line showed artistic qualities comparable with those of the Parisian party. Beethoven's noble Posthumous Quartet in A minor (Op. 132) and Brahms's beautiful String quintet in F (Op. 88) were charmingly played, with great technical finish, balance of parts, and warm yet refined feeling. Two days later, on March 10, the Leeds Bohemian Concerts brought their season to a close with a programme that had for its central feature Stanford's recent Quartet in G minor (Op. 99), which bears date October, 1906, and is still in MS. It is, as a matter of course, well-written, showing a thorough appreciation of the qualities and limitations of the string quartet, and is besides very gracious, fresh and attractive music, the first and second movements being delightfully spontaneous and genial. Coupled with it were Beethoven's early Quartet in D (Op. 18) and Dvorák's in F (Op. 96). A week later the last of the Rasch Quartet's concerts, on March 18, took place, the programme including Sinding's Quartet in A minor (Op. 70), and Schubert's delightful 'Trout' Quintet, the pianist in the latter being Mr. H. Percy Richardson.

On March 17 the London Symphony Orchestra paid a visit to Leeds, and under Mr. Arthur Nikisch gave a work with which his name is peculiarly associated, Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony, the warmth and brilliant virtuosity of the performance being quite phenomenal. On February 23, Mr. Louis Pecskaï gave a recital at one of the Leeds Musical evenings, and showed a very decided advance in his art by his masterly playing of a varied programme, including Handel's Sonata in A, Bach's Chaconne, and Max Bruch's G minor concerto. He owed not a little to the very sympathetic playing of his colleague at the pianoforte, Mr. Herbert Johnson.

BRADFORD.

On March 5, at the last of the Bradford Subscription Concerts, Elgar's Symphony was given for the first time in Yorkshire. Under Dr. Richter's direction the Hallé Orchestra played the work finely, and the power and distinction of the music were made very apparent, as well as the beauty of its finely-wrought details. The Symphony certainly improves with knowledge, and one cannot but rejoice that the composer has at last turned his attention to the highest type of art, and one moreover in which he can express himself with peculiar eloquence. May it soon find a successor! At this concert Mr. Pablo Casals gave a most artistic and sensitive reading of the solo part in Dvorák's Violoncello concerto, and Dr. Richter conducted a very sympathetic performance of the 'Siegfried Idyll.' On March 13 the Bradford Permanent Orchestra ended its season with a 'plébiscite' programme, which included the 'Peer Gynt' Suite (No. 1), 'Flying Dutchman' overture, German's 'Henry VIII.' dances, 'Finlandia,' 'Meistersinger' overture, 'Unfinished' Symphony, and Gounod's 'Marche Militaire' (named in the order of the voting). On the whole it must be pronounced a choice creditable to the taste of the subscribers, though the list submitted to them was one of fairly uniform excellence. Mr. Herbert Johnson played the solo part in Schumann's Pianoforte concerto in thoroughly musicianly style, and refrained from making it a mere piece of virtuosity, and Miss Phyllis Lett was the vocalist. Mr. Allen Gill conducted with his accustomed care and energy. On March 2 the Bradford Old Choral Society gave 'Elijah,' under Mr. E. J. Pickles, the principals being Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Cecile Vicars, Messrs. H. Turnpenney and Mr. Herbert Brown. The chorus sang with exceptional vigour and enthusiasm. On March 18 the London Symphony Orchestra, under Mr. Nikisch, appeared at one of the Harrison concerts, repeating the programme it had given at Leeds the evening before.

OTHER TOWNS.

At the Huddersfield Subscription Concert on March 2, Mr. Henry J. Wood appeared with the Queen's Hall Orchestra, in a programme which was full of bonnes bouches, Mozart's brief and brilliant 'Haffner' Symphony being the chief thing, while Debussy's 'L'après-midi d'un Faune' and the air and variations from Tchaikovsky's Suite in G were remarkable for their finish and effectiveness. On March 5 the Huddersfield Choral Society gave, under Dr. Coward's direction, Handel's 'Israel in Egypt,' a work which suits this powerful chorus admirably. The soloists were Miss Perceval Allen, Miss Gertrude Lonsdale and Mr. Harold Wilde.

At Halifax the Orchestral Society, of which Mr. Van Dyk is the conductor, gave Beethoven's eighth Symphony on March 4, in a fashion very creditable to a body chiefly amateur in its composition. Massenet's 'Scènes Pittoresques' and the 'Euryanthe' overture were also satisfactorily played, and a very promising young singer was introduced in Miss Florence S. Taylor, who has a natural style of great charm. On March 11 the Halifax Choral Society gave a most interesting programme of three important works by living British composers—Stanford's 'Stabat Mater,' Elgar's 'Enigma' variations, and Parry's 'Pied Piper.' The soloists, Madame Conly, Miss Dilys Jones, Mr. Webster Millar and Mr. Dalton Baker, were thoroughly efficient, and the choir sang artistically. In the Variations the excellence of the orchestra of local professionals reflected credit upon the players, and upon the conductor, Mr. F. de G. English. Handel's genial Organ concerto in B flat, with Mr. H. E. Illingworth as the soloist, was another feature of this excellent programme. On March 3 the Keighley Orchestral Society, conducted by Mr. J. B. Summerscales, gave Mozart's 'Jupiter' symphony, and some compositions by Mendelssohn and Berlioz, Miss Edith Evans being the vocalist. 'St. Paul' was the work chosen by the Keighley Musical Union for its concert on March 16, the soloists being Miss Emily Breare, Miss May Peters, Mr. Joseph Reed and Mr. Francis Harford. Mr. Summerscales conducted.

The Morley Choral Society, on March 10, gave one of the best Mendelssohn programmes of any that have been arranged in connection with his centenary. His vocal music was represented by the strong and masculine Psalm 'When Israel out of Egypt came,' the 'Loreley' finale, and some part-songs; his orchestral works by the 'Midsummer Night's Dream' overture, a portion of the 'Italian' Symphony, the Violin concerto (soloist, Miss Lily Simms), and the 'Capriccio Brillante' for pianoforte (Mr. Laurence Bunter) and orchestra. This may be styled a really model programme, and it was more than satisfactorily carried out under Mr. Fricker's able direction.

On the same day the Cleckheaton Philharmonic essayed a revival of Benedict's 'St. Peter,' which, though not of profound interest in itself, served as the material for some good choral singing under Mr. W. H. Wright's direction. The principals were Miss Gwladys Edwards, Miss Lucy Nuttall, Mr. Wilfrid Hudson and Mr. James Pearson.

The York Symphony Orchestra, of which Mr. T. Tertius Noble is the conductor, gave a Mendelssohn programme on March 15, including the 'Italian' Symphony, the Violin concerto (soloist, Mr. Percy Sharman), and the 'Hebrides' overture, which were played with much brightness and enthusiasm.

At Hull, the Symphony Orchestra under Mr. Wallerstein gave the last concert of its regular season on March 3, to which an extra 'benefit' concert for the orchestra was added on March 24. On the former occasion the first three movements of Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony and his taking 'Capriccio Italien' were played, together with Wagner's 'Flying Dutchman' overture, and Prelude to the third Act of 'Die Meistersinger.' Mr. Wallerstein conducted, making the most of the material at his disposal, and it was satisfactory to learn that, instead of a deficit of £200, the season has nearly paid its way. On March 5 the Hull Harmonic Society, under Mr. Walter Porter, gave the first and second parts of the 'Creation,' Miss Edith Evans, Mr. Joseph Reid, and Mr. Robert Radford being the soloists.

The Hull Philharmonic Society, on March 12, gave an exceptionally interesting concert. Save for a tendency to hurry the tempi which detracted from the clearness and dignity of the music, Brahms's second Symphony was most creditably performed under Mr. J. W. Hudson's direction, and the 'Parsifal' prelude, Saint-Saëns's Introduction to 'Le Deluge' (the violin solo very pleasingly played by Miss Evelyn Alexander) and three well-written characteristic dances by the conductor, were among the more striking features of the programme. Mr. Albert Garcia proved a most delightful vocalist.

Foreign Notes.

BARMEN-ELBERFELD.

Richard Strauss's 'Elektra' met with a most enthusiastic reception at its first performance here, given at the local Stadttheater. The same remarks apply to the first performance of the work at Barmen's twin town of Elberfeld.

BERLIN.

At the third concert of the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde, under Oskar Fried, no fewer than four works were performed, all novelties, as far as Berlin was concerned. They were a 'Symphonic Fantasia' by the Swiss composer Volkmar Andreae, a 'Totenmarsch' for male-voice chorus and orchestra by Siegmund Hausegger, a Symphony in C sharp minor by Wladimir Metzl, and the conductor's own 'Erntelied' for male-voice choir and orchestra.—At a concert given by the Berlin Teachers' Choral Society, the two recently-published humorous male-voice part-songs 'Der Weise Diogenes' and 'Musikantenprügelei,' by Mendelssohn, were produced and delighted the audience.—The Spanish violinist Joan Manén produced a symphony bearing the title 'Nova-Catalonia,' of his own composition, at a concert given by him in the Blüthnersaal on March 3.—The Städtischer Gesangverein of Aachen, numbering 400 members, which enjoys the reputation of being the foremost a cappella choir in the Rhineland, gave a concert in the Blüthnersaal at which they sang Bach's motet 'Jesu, meine Freude,' the 'Beatitudes' from Liszt's oratorio 'Christus,' several part-songs by Brahms, and three old English madrigals by Dowland, Benet and Thomas Morley. The performances, in every respect beyond criticism, delighted the astonished audience, who overwhelmed the singers and their excellent conductor, Professor Eberhard Schwickerath, with enthusiastic applause.—The programme of the last concert of the Philharmonic Choir, on March 15, was devoted exclusively to Bach, and included the cantatas 'Herr, gehe nicht in's Gericht,' 'Mein Liebster Jesus ist verloren,' the air 'Vergnügte Ruh,' beliebte Seelenlust' (from the cantata No. 170), and the Magnificat in D. The performances under Professor S. Ochs, and with Professor Max Seiffert at the pianoforte as interpreter of the figured bass, were admirable in every respect.

BREMEN.

The Philharmonic Society, at an extraordinary meeting of the directors, appointed Kapellmeister Ernst Wendel, of Königberg, as conductor, in place of Professor Karl Panzner, who goes to Düsseldorf as successor to Professor Julius Butts.

BOSTON.

M. Paderewski's first Symphony in B minor (Op. 24) was produced here by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Max Fiedler, and enthusiastically received.

BRUSSELS.

M. Edgar Tinel's sacred opera 'Katharina' (Sainte-Catherine d'Alexandrie) was produced with great success at the Théâtre Royal de la Monnaie on February 27. The work is a mixture of opera and oratorio, and though containing many beauties, it would seem doubtful whether such a strange combination of art styles is likely to ensure lasting success.

COLOGNE.

Professor Max Reger's latest work, a 'Symphonic prologue' for orchestra, was produced at the ninth Gürzenich concert. Although the composer was present, and Fritz Steinbach conducted a splendid performance, there was hardly any applause and even that met with opposition.

CONSTANTINOPLE.

The first National Conservatoire of Music has just been opened here. The institution is under the patronage of Prince Siadeddin, the son of the late Sultan Murad.

DORTMUND.

An elaborate musical festival, consisting of five recitals and concerts, was held on March 20-22 in connection with the dedication of a new organ, erected in the Reinoldi Kirche. The programmes, chiefly devoted to works by J. S. Bach, included church cantatas, concertos, suites, sonatas, &c.; but compositions by the sons of Bach, also by Handel, Max Reger, Liszt and Widor were included. The new instrument, which has been built by Messrs. Walcker, of Ludwigsburg, is the largest in Western Germany.

DRESDEN.

At one of the Royal Orchestra's Symphony concerts, Hofkapellmeister Hagen produced a valuable novelty in the shape of a set of twelve Variations on an original theme, by Hofkapellmeister Wilhelm Berger, of Weimar. The Finale, an elaborate fugue, commences with a kind of funeral dirge, which has a pathetic history. Herr Berger had just commenced the Finale with a recitative passage for the clarinet, when he heard of the sudden death of his friend, the famous clarinettist, Richard Mühlfeld, a member of his own orchestra. So he silenced the clarinet and wrote the aforesaid dirge, laid out, at first, for Mühlfeld's colleagues of the wood-wind department (without clarinet), and subsequently for the full orchestra, before proceeding with the fugue which brings the work to a brilliant conclusion.

ERFURT.

Anton Bruckner's rarely-played sixth Symphony was brought to a hearing at the fourth subscription concert of the Musikverein, under Kapellmeister Richard Wetz, and enthusiastically received.

GIESSEN.

The local Akademischer Gesang Verein held a musical festival on February 14-18, to celebrate the ninetieth anniversary of its foundation. The programme included Beethoven's Mass in D and Schumann's 'Manfred.'

KARLSRUHE.

Leo Blech's new one-act comic opera 'Versiegelt' was greatly appreciated at its first performance here, given at the Court Opera House.

LEIPSIK.

The Students' Choir, 'Sängerschaft Arion,' conducted by Dr. Paul Klengel, sang Elgar's male-voice part-songs to words from the Greek anthology, at their 'winter concert,' and were very successful with this 'novelty' as it was for Leipsic. 'Elgar has enriched male-voice choir literature with truly noble gifts,' wrote one of the leading German critics.—At a Mendelssohn Festival concert given by the Leipziger Männerchor, the recently-published humorous part-songs 'Der Weise Diogenes' and 'Musikantenprügelei' were performed, and received with much laughter and applause.

LEMBERG.

'Boleslav Smiaty' (Boleslav the bold) is the title of a new three-act opera, produced here on February 11. The composer, Ludomir Rozycki, who was born at Warsaw in 1883, conducted his first opera, and by an excellent performance helped the work to a decided success.

MADRID.

'Hesperia' is the title of a new Spanish opera recently produced here. The libretto, which deals with events of the time of the Roman invasion of the Iberian Peninsula, is the work of Oliva Brindmann, while the composer is Lamote de Grignon, conductor of the Wagner orchestra, and president of the Philharmonic Society of Barcelona.

PARIS.

A new symphony by M. Marcel Labay, his second, was produced with much success at the Lamoureux concert of February 14. At the Colonne concert of February 28 a new 'Andante symphonique' by M. Paul Pierné was produced, as well as an 'Overture, Bourrée Recitatif et Air et Minuet vif,' by M. Roger Ducasse. Both novelties met with a friendly reception.—At the Opéra Comique a new work, entitled 'Solange,' by M. Gaston Salvayre, was produced on March 10. In a communication recently addressed to the Press, the Directors of the Opéra Comique informed the public that in 'Solange' they were about to present a real opéra comique, such as our mothers and grandmothers knew. Thus forewarned, critics and public abstained from applying a standard of criticism set up by the ultra-modern works produced within recent years. They enjoyed the good things provided by the composer, and thoroughly appreciated a melodious and wholly charming work.—A three-act play in verse, entitled 'Beethoven,' was produced at the Odéon on March 8 and received with much enthusiasm. In addition to the master himself, the poet, M. René Fauchois, has included among his characters Giulietta Giucciardi, Bettina Brentano, Schindler, the poet Von Arnim, the Archduke Rudolph, Beethoven's brothers and many others. The action commences after the battle of Wagram, in 1808, and ends with the master's death.

PRAGUE.

At the German Theatre Hans Pfitzner's opera 'Die Rose vom Liebesgarten' was performed for the first time, without, however, making the impression which might have been expected from this ripest work of one of Germany's leading musicians. The performance was excellent.

SCHWERIN.

Siegfried Wagner's new opera, 'Kobold,' was very warmly received on its production here at the Court Theatre. The performance, conducted by Hofkapellmeister Willibald Kähler, was excellent, and the poet-composer was enthusiastically fêted.

STRASSBURG.

Hermann Goetz's delightful opera 'The taming of the Shrew' has been very successfully revived at the local Municipal Theatre. A first-rate performance was secured by the conductor, Herr H. Gorters.

Arrangements are in active preparation for the visit to Paris of a choir of girls selected from secondary schools, in order to perform at a concert to be given in the French capital under distinguished patronage on May 14. The English choir is to sing the trios by Elgar, 'The snow' and 'Fly, singing bird,' and some national songs, and it will unite with a representative French school girls' choir in singing two French pieces, 'La légende de frère Jacques' (E. Paladilhe) and a three-part fugue on the word 'Alleluia,' specially composed by Ch. Lenepveu. The Colonne Orchestra will assist, and Mr. Norman O'Neill will conduct. In the circular issued by the French organizers the hope is expressed that in 1910 a French girls' choir will visit London. Full particulars can be obtained from Miss Cecilia Hill, Wentworth Hall, Mill Hill, London, N.W.

Performances of the 'Messiah' are of such common occurrence that it is quite impossible to chronicle them in our overcrowded columns. An exception must, however, be made in regard to the performance of Handel's masterpiece given by the Windsor and Walkerville Choral Society in the Central Methodist Church, Windsor, Ontario, on January 21. When the energetic conductor, Mr. H. Whorlow Bull, began to rehearse the 'Messiah' in September last, not more than half-a-dozen members of the Society had ever previously sung the work, and scarcely a dozen had heard it rendered! Therefore Mr. Bull had an almost superhuman task in preparing the oratorio for performance. But by diligent perseverance on the part of the choir and their enthusiastic leader, the performance proved to be in every respect a most satisfactory one. The audience, which numbered between 700 and 800 people, listened most attentively and with evident appreciation of the music and its interpretation, and although the concert occupied nearly three hours, very few of the listeners left before the final Amen had been sung. The orchestra was led by Mr. Hugo Kalsow, and Miss Irene Whittaker presided at the organ. In addition to the exacting task of conducting the oratorio Mr. Bull sang all the bass solos, the other soloists being Mrs. Roy Arthur Littlefield, Miss Winifred Parker and Mr. Thornton D. Urquhart. It is always pleasant to record musical doings in the Far West, especially those of such an earnest nature as the performance given by the Windsor and Walkerville Society.

M. Pierre Tas, conductor of the Duke of Devonshire's private orchestra at Eastbourne, met with great success in Paris on March 14. On that occasion he conducted M. Fernand de Léry's fine orchestra at the Théâtre Marigny, Champs-Élysées, in performances of Dvorák's New World Symphony, the Prelude to Gerontius (Elgar), the Finlandia Suite (Sibelius), and Liszt's second Rhapsody. No fewer than 1,786 tickets were sold for this concert, and at its conclusion M. Tas was called to the platform no less than four times to acknowledge the plaudits of the huge audience. The Comedia, in an appreciative notice of the concert, thus referred to the Eastbourne conductor: 'Il fut preuve d'un grand savoir, et, par sa façon remarquable d'enlever ses musiciens, soulever, a plusieurs reprises, l'enthousiasme unanime du public.'

At the nineteenth symphony concert by the Duke of Devonshire's private Orchestra, at Devonshire Park, Eastbourne, on March 18, the programme included the Finlandia Suite, by Sibelius, and Dvorák's From the New World symphony, conducted by M. Pierre Tas; also Dr. J. W. G. Hathaway's prelude In Te Domine speravi, given for the first time in its rearranged form for full (small) orchestra, and his suite (Op. 19), Songs of the Swiss mountains, both works being conducted by the composer.
